That is like having a healing of cancer, without the cancer going away. It was necessary for this disturbance to stop, it was out of order. And you finally arrived at a point, where going through a metaphysical process of seeing this correctly, was released, in favor of what was really appropriate. Which was the call to the management, to let them know they needed to bring this to a stop. Then congruence occurred.

It is important for all of you to understand, that arriving at a point of spiritual clarity, does not mean saying yes to everything and then not being bothered by what you have said yes to.

Spiritual clarity, indeed, unconditional love, involves arriving at a point of clarity and includes the use of discernment. Discernment, that allows you to separate the tares from the wheat. Even though in the parable, the tares and the wheat were allowed to grow side by side, discernment was still utilized, and there was a point at which the tares were separated from the wheat. That did not constitute judgment against the tares. It constituted a simple act of intelligence, that allowed the wheat when it was young and would be disturbed by the removal of the tares, to grow until it was ready to be harvested, at which time, if they were disturbed, the full growth of the wheat would not be lost.

Discernment is different from judgment. I have said, that all of you have the capacity to recognize Truth. Well, if you have the capacity to recognize Truth, you then have the capacity to recognize whatever is pretending to be true, but is not. That does not constitute judgment. It constitutes clarity, that allows your actions to be effective and reasonable. And so, you know when to say no, and you know when to say yes. You know when to stay home, and you know when to go out. You know if, indeed, it is necessary to pay a particular bill today, when you seem not to have all the money necessary to pay all the bills. And whether it is appropriate to pay for it next Monday.

It is possible for you to distinguish what is appropriate, so that you may be in your right place, at the right time, doing the right thing, that identifies fulfillment of purpose. And that necessarily means, not being somewhere, and not doing that thing, at another time. That is discernment. That is clarity. To become the expression of unconditional love, does not mean becoming a doormat for all of the egos in the world. For all of those, who still see themselves as egos. You do not end up judging them, but you end up discerning what is real and what is not. What needs to be joined with, and what needs not to be joined with.

And so, last night you came to the end of your rope. And suddenly did the real and genuine thing that needed to be done. You registered what is called a complaint. But, what you did was, you registered self-respect and said, “this does not coincide with an expression of self-respect, and I do not join with it. I do not tolerate it, period.”

QUESTION: Just as a short follow up, Raj. Do I engage in too much of this metaphysical practice, and hesitate too often in doing just what you've indicated I should have done, sooner than I did?

ANSWER: Not particularly, no.

ANSWER: The time has come. I have enjoyed being with you. We have, together been a great deal of illumination for each other, and to the degree, that more willingness to give permission to experience clearer views of reality right where you are, has occurred this weekend, it has lessened the density of the dreaming, of the distraction, that those who do not have their attention on the Kingdom of Heaven, have suffered from. I appreciate your being with me, and I have enjoyed being with you. That's the end of this comment.

Gathering In Princeville, HI –1991

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

OPENING: Good morning. Welcome to yourself. Because all that you see is some aspect of the infinitude of your Being. And all that you will hear is some aspect of the infinitude of your Being. And when you go back home to your own residences you will be experiencing some aspect of the infinitude of your Being.

From the very beginning of the development of this workshop, I insisted upon having the workshop in this room. It is the most expensive room that a workshop has been held in. And Paul knew full well and good that we had held a workshop here two years ago in a tent that only cost $250 for the weekend. He was very well aware that there was no need to have great expense in order to have a gathering of meaning and of fulfillment. And so he asked why? Why were we to do it this way, which seemed to him to be more difficult, financially speaking? And I said, “Because it is as good a part of the Kingdom of Heaven as any other part of the Kingdom of Heaven.”

You are in the Kingdom of Heaven. And when you go back home you will be in the Kingdom of Heaven, because there is nothing else available for you to experience—there is nothing other than Reality available for you to experience. We could end the workshop right now. But we will spend additional time, if you will, elaborating on that simple, ultimate, profound fact. Because at this point all of you need language—words to express that simple fact. And not all of you have a familiarity with that fact that you may embellish to help you relinquish all of the confidences you have that you are not in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and indeed there is a material world and universe that you must deal with before you can get to the Kingdom of Heaven.

And so all of you, whether you are consciously on your walk, consciously on your spiritual path of Awakening, all of you are in need of experiencing life more truly.

Now, this means that you must let go of the concept—and it is just a concept—you must let go of the concept that you are in a less desirable place having to one way or another earn your way to the place you all want to be. Which literally is a place without strife, without care, without concern, without suffering—that’s a negative way of putting it. What you want is a place where you are experiencing peace, where you are unconcerned, where you are not constantly thrown into experiences that create self-doubt.

Now, for those of you who have heard what I have said in the past, there are some things I will repeat this weekend, because they need to be heard over and over again. And one of them is that at this very instant all of you are sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinched up saying, “I cannot see the perfection.” But it isn’t because you are in an unreal place, it is because you don’t have your eyes open. And you are not looking, because the assumption has been made that there is nothing Heavenly to see where you are—that Reality isn’t truly available to you yet.

It isn’t that it isn’t available, it is that you are not giving yourself permission to see, because you think there is nothing to see. And you also, for one of a million reasons, do not feel worthy of experiencing it yet, because you have been convinced that you must go through struggle and strife and must earn the right to experience Heaven, to experience union with the Father, to experience the Father’s point of view. I am telling you that that concept is utterly false.

I am here to remind you in as many ways as it is needed that the only thing confronting you is the Kingdom of Heaven, the only thing confronting you is Reality, and the Father’s point of view is your Birthright to be experiencing. There is no legitimate call for delay.

Now, there is a book, Graduation, The End Of Illusions. Well, I’m going to tell you something, don’t get hung-up on graduating. Don’t get hung-up on the pomp and circumstance, the cap and gown, the sheep skin and diploma. Get the hell out of school! And do it by beginning to realize that because it is your Birthright to experience everything that you are experiencing from God’s point of view, it is already available to you, it is already your birthright. You don’t have to earn it. You don’t have to work to get to it.

Oh, I know many of you say, “Well, I’ve left the church. I’m not into obedience’s and rituals to earn my way.” But you know what? You have—most of you—traded the religious obedience’s for getting your mind straight, thinking clear correct thoughts, because you think that your thinking is responsible for the world you see.

And so now you are going through mental disciplines—mental obedience’s—in order to begin to discipline your thought well enough to deserve the influx of the perception of truth and Reality—and you’re still caught in process. And so you’re still working your way through. There is no justification for you to feel better than those who are still caught in religious observances and obedience’s. You are still caught in the ethic of effort, except now it is a mental discipline.

No one by virtue of their thinking is creating anything except distortions in the perception of the only thing there is available to perceive: Reality—the presence of God being the Movement of Creation that is called the conscious experience of Being, which looks like this. The infinity of which you do not yet have available to you, because you are thinking that all that you see is not the Kingdom of Heaven, that you are tiny and stuck in the middle of it and are working out your salvation.

What a wonderful thing to realize that everything that you are observing is Reality, either clearly seen or seen in a distorted fashion, but that nevertheless it is Reality that you are seeing. Do you see how that awareness helps you to more clearly place yourself in a context of being divine, not having to work into the Kingdom of Heaven off in the clouds or after death? And can you see how that fact helps you to invoke (if I may use that word) curiosity, where you had felt that curiosity was useless?

You see, you are not behind the point of perfection or advancing toward it, you are at that point and you must understand yourself there from. You are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, you are at that point and you must understand yourself there from. But there are some of you who love the advancement, and the struggle, and the overcoming. What I am saying is too easy.

But I will tell you something. What you mean is that what I am saying takes away from your ego the opportunity to take credit for arriving in the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, because I'm saying you're already there. It is the use of your ego, by means of your thinking, that you blind yourself to being smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Those who want struggle and process will not hear what I am saying and will not glean from it the experience of relief that is available to all of you at this very instant if you can dare to let go of the valuing of your processes.

“How do I improve myself,” you say. Well, you do it by letting go and just loving yourself. Why do you want to improve yourself? Because you have been convinced that you are less than the best, and whether you have left the church or not, you embrace and embody and express the idea that you are sinners.

That is a harsh farce that has been laid upon mankind and held in its face, in its nose. And you are not sinners and you were not born in sin. You are, everyone of you at this very instant, the direct expression of the Life Principle, the infinite Mind, the Father/Mother/God. At this very instant you are nothing less than that.

Now, have you come here to learn from a master, a great teacher? Because if you have and you don't realize the meaninglessness of that idea, you will go away with some wonderful stimulating ideas, but you will not go away with a clearer, truer sense of who you are and who I am. Beware of teachers. Not because teachers are dangerous, but because your projection of your concept of what a teacher is and who you must be as not being a teacher, creates a distance that isn't real and causes you to feel separate in the presence of the opportunity to experience unity.

I am your brother. We are family. And I don't happen to have a dense, stupid family to relate to. I have equals who cannot truly be anything less than I am, because we are all nothing more and nothing less than the direct expression of the Father/God, the Mother/God, the Life Principle. In other words, each of us truly at this very instant is the experience of consciousness that is the infinite Mind that is God, being the Movement of Mind that constitutes conscious awareness, which experiences its conscious Being as ideas, which are perfectly tangible to the mind that is experiencing them. That is what each of us is, not independent from each other, but in absolute unity.

And so, as we move through this weekend I want you to understand that you are not here to think. You're not here to get some good metaphysical treats and triggers that will stimulate you further in your awakening process; but rather imagine that the last day of school is out, and that we're going to have a party. We are going to enjoy being together experiencing communion—family in its truest sense.

I will tell you something. What promotes your so-called process of awakening is your realization that you are not alone and your willingness to let yourself be with, not be with something, but be in a state of witness, of not holding yourself apart. Don't make me greater than you or you will create a distorted perception. Not only of me but of yourself.

And I will tell you something else. I am not going to brow beat you, like an older brother, into your enlightenment. I am simply going to be with you in confirmation of who you really Are. And I am very glad to be with you in this fashion, at this time. And I look forward to the time when everyone of you will be able to enjoy being together without any sense of separateness at all—no sense of difference.

Paul is very unhappy at sitting so much higher than you, because he is aware of the fact that the difference of position implies what should not be implied. But it is for the comfort of your necks that he is where you do not have to crane to see him.

Now Paul greeted and welcomed you to Hawaii; I am going to welcome you to the Kingdom of Heaven, because that is where we are all the time—Reality is what is confronting you all the time. And we have always been together, even when you have been dreaming by means of your incorrect, unclear thinking that you are in a place that is not Heaven, where Reality is not available for you to experience until you have deserved it.

QUESTION: What can I do in order to receive more of my answers from within. And how can I be sure that the answers are true and from the Higher Self. Will I be able to get answers instantly without going into a twenty minute meditation, or not?

ANSWER: I will tell you first of all—and this is for everyone—when you listen, do not make any requirement for what is heard to be true. To the degree that you make requirements, you are expressing faithlessness, doubt, and you are not truly yielding into that place where the knowing can occur. You will be on guard.

In the beginning, in the first few weeks that Paul and I were conversing, he wanted to hear four or five words before he would repeat the first one into the microphone so as to not look foolish if the answer was wrong.

It is necessary to be unconditionally listening, and when you are making a requirement of any kind you are in a state of self-protection. Self-protection is defense. And defense definitely blocks your willingness to hear. It is willfulness, not willingness. The more trust you allow, the more you can depend upon the answer being heard truly.

I will tell you that the answer will always be exactly what you need in terms of your clarification and Awakening. What happens is that when self-protection, doubt, distrust come into play, you are blocking, and what you hear is likely not to be what is being said.

Waking up is literally a practice of trust. It is well for you to ask and to allow whatever “comes through” to come through. You can analyze it to death afterwards—and you will. But be unconditional in the listening. As a result of listening unconditionally and benefiting from what you hear your trust will increase, and then you will be more able to listen unconditionally with less feeling of need to protect yourself.

I will tell you something, it is only one who is Awake, one who is totally enlightened who can communicate with you when you are listening within. Those who are not Awake are as bound as you are by their limitations, their three-dimensional frame of reference. And so, you’ll only be hearing, ever, one of two things—either it will be your ego or it will be true guidance.

Now there is a difference and there is a measuring stick that you can use to tell the difference between your ego and your Being, with a capital “B”. When you are truly listening unconditionally, there will be peace in the area of your solar plexus. But when your ego is what is being experienced, there will always be an uneasiness in the area of your solar plexus. Some of you will experience that sensation in the chest area, but for the most part it is felt in the area of the solar plexus.

I will tell you, when you come unguarded into communion with your guidance—with your guide—you will experience peace, and there will be no distorting presence present. When you begin to do this you can tell your ego that it will have its chance when you are through listening. And then you dare to be unconditional and make no requirements whatsoever upon what is heard.

I will tell you something, you don't really know what you need to hear. And you don't really know what is true, that's why you are having problems and are asking questions. And what is true is going to require you to be open beyond the level of the problem, else all that you will hear is what you already know, and that hasn't solved the problem for anyone yet.

And so you must be willing to hear whatever is said if you want to hear something beyond your habitual thinking that is keeping you in "the human condition." So it may sound unintelligent to say, "don't require what you hear to be the truth." But you see, I am not saying let it be a lie, I am saying, don't be defended in the process—be unconditional in the process. Because you can't, as it has been said, solve a problem from the level of the problem.

Why else would trust be absolutely essential to waking up if it weren't for the fact that you are having to be willing to operate at a level beyond your habitual thinking structures, a level that you are not apparently familiar with. You have confidences in what you are already familiar with—no trust is needed there.

So, understand that trust means listening, being conscious unconditionally. And in that state of unconditional listening you will hear most perfectly. And what you will hear will move you out of your ignorance.

QUESTION: This is another version of the same question, and so thank you for asking that. I am able to wake up in the morning and say I'm listening, and then I find incredible chatter going on in my head—and I'm not listening at all. Also I see a great deal of sparkle in front of my eyes continuously, which is my defense to seeing and listening perhaps. I would like to be in that clear space where I'm able to listen. I request reflection on that.

ANSWER: I am going to suggest that you, when you notice the chattering going on, begin to breathe and give your attention to the bridge of your nose and the sensation of the air there, and let go of the chatter. Simply gently bring your attention to the bridge of your nose. Breathe slowly and deeply. If the chattering continues, let it, but give your attention to the bridge of your nose. Do not concentrate on it! Do not tense up! Do not try to block the chatter! Simply withdraw your center of attention from it and give it to the sensation at the bridge of your nose.

QUESTION: This is interesting that the questions that have been raised already certainly feed right into a problem of mine. I feel I am not a good meditator. I can't keep my mind quiet that long.

ANSWER: That is because you value thinking so much.

QUESTION: That's right. And I seem to be stuck in that. What I have done is, when I was initiated into Sugroot one of the gifts that we received was the ability to cause testing—you ask a question to get a “yes” or “no.” If I have succeeded in tuning into the Holy Spirit, my hands go to my heart involuntarily, and then I ask my questions, and I get “yes” or I get “no.” And I let that guide me. I think I really do relax into the true answer and try to be in neutral. So where do I go from here?

ANSWER: You use that as your starting point. That is connection. That is communion. I encourage you one of these days to ask a “yes—no” question: “Do you ever have more to say to me than `yes` or `no`?”

Now, the great value of the point you have arrived at is that, in being able to hear the “yes” or the “no”—the affirmation or denial—causes you to experience your connection. And so I encourage you to begin a session, if you will, of dialoging with three or four “yes” or “no” questions and then ask an open-ended question. But don't make it too profound a question. Don't ask it, “what is truth?” Because then you will tense up, feeling that you are unprepared for what the answer really would be, and you don't remain unconditionally listening.

Hearing or experiencing the “yes” or the “no” helps you in the same way that when you call a friend and they answer and say, “hello,” you know that the connection has occurred and now you can talk. If they pick up the phone and do not say anything, you do not know what is happening; you do not know if the connection has been made; you do not know if dialog can occur.

So the essential steps have taken place with you. I just encourage you to be open to more than a “yes” or “no.” And it will come. And it will come, because the reason you have guidance is because there is something you need to know, and there is someone who wants to share it with you.

Again, you are not alone. And you are not required to lift yourself up by your boot straps all by yourself. In fact you cannot do it. You cannot experience an illusion alone, and you cannot experience Reality alone. You experience illusion by joining with another in agreement that is at odds with Reality; thus, creating a special relationship that causes all experience then to be deluded—a distorted perception of, again, the only thing going on that is available for you to experience, which is Reality.

If you want to wake up you must withdraw yourself from this mutual agreement with an ego and join with that which is Awake—the Holy Spirit, the Father, your guide or any of the Awakened Brotherhood. This joining constitutes a holy relationship in which the communion illuminates Reality to you.

You see, if you are not experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven, it is because you have your eyes squinched up. You are in a state of self-protection and denial. But Reality remains what It Is, and who you divinely are remains what It Is. And the incongruence of this little, puny, thinking you with her eyes squinched up is met by Reality—because that’s the only thing confronting her—and that confrontation is experienced as a demand by you, but as a gift from Reality as it is. And that gift insists and insinuates itself into your tight thoughts and thinking processes.

So the communion is going to occur come hell or high water. And if you are experiencing the slightest curiosity to experience that communion, it means you are being less conditional, less resistant, less self-protected, and that facilitates that union.

And so, as you open up I encourage you to trust the nature of Being, or the nature of Existence itself—Existence with a capital “E”—because you are bound to experience that connection which will illuminate who you truly Are, to you, more clearly.

It seems unnatural to you to not be thinking. But that’s only because thinking is a well-established habit. It is not natural to you. Thinking is not natural to any of you. You use thinking to substitute for Knowing, capital “K” Knowing, which is what you experience when you are not claiming a mind separate from the only Mind there is—the infinite Mind that is God. But if you have turned your back, so to speak, on that Mind, then you have to fill the emptiness with something—and so you fill it with thinking. But it is not natural to you.

At the bottom line, it is one of the illusions that you will give up. In fact, if thinking is given up, you won’t be able to find an ego.

QUESTION: I won’t know what to do with myself.

ANSWER: Thank God!

I will tell you something. In the absence of knowing what to do with yourself, you will find yourself caught in the Movement of Life. And you will be busy doing, if you will, you will be busy being the active presence of Life, except it won’t be you being the active presence of Life at odds with Life itself. You will be an absolutely congruent Movement with Life Itself. And you won’t feel separate from it. You will stand on the threshold of “Behold, I make all things new.” That is the dictum of the Movement of God. God never stops to repeat Himself. God is absolutely original, always. And you will stand at the threshold of the conscious experience of forever originality, and it will not be dull or boring.

And the you that you think you are right now may not know what to do with itself then, but the you that you truly are will, if I may put it this way, huff and puff to keep up with the originality of God—the originality of the Movement of your essential Self. And life will be vital and interesting without the aspect of fear or self-doubt.

I'm going to put it this way—it will include being absolutely appropriate. Do you think I am helping you.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: I am not. I am treating you like someone who doesn't need help. I am treating you as the divine one that you Are. And I will not agree with you if you want me to think that you are helpless. If I join with you in that, I confirm helplessness. So I am appropriate. And I am not appropriate from the level of your limitation. I am not appropriate from the level of your ego. I will not cater to your ego. It doesn't exist to cater to.

And so I relate to you directly, capital "S" Spirit to capital "S" Spirit. More accurately, I am being capital "S" Spirit with you—and there is no difference. You hear my words with your ears and your ego is picking them up and tasting them like a morsel on the tongue. But I will tell you that aside from that which is inconsequential, you and I are communing, are experiencing union at deeper levels of your Being.

I am doing this with all of you, because all of us are one. And there is no way for us to be having a teacher/student relationship. I will tell you that there's no way for us to have a relationship. And the sooner that begins to dawn on your thought, the sooner you will find realization being triggered.

You don't want to be a helper; you want to be the transparency for truth; you want to be that place where God is being and nothing else is claiming to be. That is what helps. It is the light that shines in the darkness and uncovers the fact that darkness is absent. It doesn't help the darkness.

You have developed concepts of what it means to be spiritual in the world. But what you define the world to be is not what the world is. And so, to be of help is going to mean something different from what you currently think it means. It might mean you dancing in the middle of the street, on the sidewalk, in the midst of everybody else trudging to work. And being that presence that causes those who are caught in their maze and their habits to say, "Wow, maybe I can be as crazy as she is. Maybe I do not have to confine myself to my well-established habit. She certainly looks happy, and she's not hurting herself and she's not hurting me. I haven't felt happiness of the sort that shines in her face."

Your dancing and being irrelevant to what is going on around you may be the specific thing that triggers that one to let go of the bondage's of his definitions of what is appropriate and how life has to be lived—creating a crack in his ego and allowing influx to occur.

You see how unconditional you all have to let yourself become. Everyone tries so hard to let the influx of enlightenment become channeled into specific little boxes constituted of already existing definitions of life, when it's going to blow the boxes sky high, because that limitation is unjustified. You really have to open up.

QUESTION: Hello my Brother and my beautiful friend. I'm so thrilled to be in this part of the Kingdom. Thank you for being with me on this long journey. And I'm so grateful for all of the beautiful gifts I've been receiving. All I really want to know is more of who I really am, and whether I've been doing the right thing with the healing work. And thank you for sending Dorothy to me when I was feeling doubtful and not trusting.

ANSWER: You are welcome. You, as I indicated earlier, are always gifted by Reality. You see, you are Whole, you are not an isolated part of infinity. You are that consciousness, that conscious experience of being that is the infinity in which all conscious experience is occurring.

And as I said, when any of you are dallying with the ego and enjoying the excitement and threat of its sense of things, the rest of what you infinitely Are continues to be what it infinitely Is. And as I said, constantly insinuates itself into your limited frame of reference that you are consciously, and even conscientiously, engaging in. And so Reality, which is the Wholeness of you, is constantly gifting you with Itself—and in the making of the gift, reminds you of who you Are.

So how do you receive more? By being willing to receive more. And how do you express willingness to receive the more of you that is present? Literally, as it says in the Bible, by going within, into your closet and praying unto the Father which is in secret, which is in the silence. What is the silence? The silence in the absence of thinking. The silence is the absence of a personal agenda of your own.

Well, as was said earlier, "I don't know what I would do with myself if I wasn't doing these things." Well, one of the things that automatically happens when you go into the silence is that you become very curious. You become interested because nothing is going on. In the absence of all of your conscientious busyness; in the absence of your definition of what you ought to do and what you oughtn't do; in the absence of that, you're still conscious. And so there is a natural inquisitiveness. But it is not an inquisitiveness about something in particular. You become alive consciously. And that is when the gift that is always being given has the chance to register with you.

Now, the healing work you are doing is excellent. In fact, when you stop and think about it it involves exactly what I have said just now. You are right on track. But remember, when I say you are right on track I don't mean like a railroad track, where you are going from here to there. Because truly, the only distance you are traversing in your process of Awakening is the distance from here to here. Remember that; because all of you conceptualize the distance as distance in time, rather than literally the distance between the back of your eye lid and the front of your eye lid and the simple opening of your eyes.

If you are sitting quietly, contemplatively with your eyes closed, and the cat jumps up on the sink and knocks a dish off and there is a loud bang, what do you do? Well you're immediately curious and you open your eyes.

Again—and you're going to hear me say this over and over this weekend—the process of Awakening is not a process of mental learning, it is not a process of mental obedience, it is not even a process of physical obedience, it is a matter of giving that permission to become curious in the absence of thought—which is the equivalent of opening your eyes. It is that circumstance or environment in which revelation can be experienced.

Revealing... isn't that what happens when you open your eyes. It is an uncovering of what is already there. And again, this is another part of the theme: You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it; you are at that point and must understand yourselves there from. Revelation—divine revelation—uncovers what already is and always has been.

You have all already arrived, because you only ever left Home—with a capital "H"—Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven, in your imagination. And so the trek that all of you have been on is an imaginary trek.

And I am encouraging you to leave your imaginative process and let in God, let in your Self, let in the experience of Reality right now, because there's no other time to do it. And there's no process you must go through other than saying, "Yes, I'm curious. And when I look at my brother I am not going to assume that he is the bastard I always thought he was." Or the woman, and believed that she is the uncooperative (and I won't use that word) wench that you thought she was—that you were positive she was. And you will not convict yourself and imprison yourself by virtue of your conviction that he and she are what you thought they were according to the definitions you developed. Then the revelation can occur—the uncovering of what has been there all along. And what does it amount to? The falling of the scales from your eyes. Because not only they, but you have been in the Kingdom of Heaven being the Christ that you Are, the Real One that you Are, the whole time.

You convict and condemn yourself and your brothers and sisters by assuming that your current definition of them is true, and you never bring curiosity into play. Except you, when you are doing the healing work, do release your concepts, and you do allow yourself to be in that place of not knowing anything but the energy you are willing to let through you. And that causes revelation. Where? In you. And then your world, your patient, reflects back to you your clarity.

Now, what has happened here is that your clarity has caused a release of any mutual agreement you and that person had engaged in as to who they were and as to who you are. Your resulting clarification caused a shift of allegiance from the mutual definitions that you each had about each other to a new level, where your experience of them was less colored because of the revelation that had occurred within you. That caused you, as in every case of healing, to join with them at the level of what they divinely Are; thus providing them with greater ease in experiencing the revelation within themselves.

If they are yet unwilling to let that uncovering occur consciously in them, they will seem not to be healed—and that will not be your responsibility. But when healing occurs it is because someone let revelation occur. And the revelation lifted that one's perception to a clearer level of reality, which thus caused, I will say, the mutuality between the two of you to no longer be at a level of ego to ego.

And so the special relationship gets broken; then the joining—because there's always union—the joining occurs at the level of the divine perception. And that allows the one who was physically ill to more gracefully yield to the divine view, and discover himself or herself healed. Why? Because they deserved it, because they had earned it, because they had suffered long enough, and by the grace of God they were freed from their suffering? No! Rather it is because someone dared—and it started with the healer—to be quiet, to let go of the preconceptions and to become curious.

As I said, when you are not thinking, there is a spontaneous and automatic curiosity that occurs. It doesn't have to be generated. You don't have to do curiosity.

You can understand it this way—although this is not an accurate description: When one is bored, one becomes fidgety, curious, wanting something to happen, there is an aliveness there of the mind. Being in the silence isn't boring, but it isn't interesting either, and so curiosity develops, and revelation occurs and clarity is experienced. Mind you, all of this happens without a single thought process to it—no reasoning, no giving of definitions, no coming to conclusions, just simply Knowing. That is why the process of Awakening is called “Journey without distance.”

I want you not to leave this workshop without knowing that there literally isn't any place to go, there is no distance to traverse. You are already Here, with a capital "H". You are already Home. And it's time to wake up. It's time to no longer dally in the process of becoming deserving.

It is time to release your brother and sister, whether they look like mothers and fathers, or sons and daughters, or brothers and sisters, they are your brothers and sisters. It's time to let them off the hook by releasing your definitions of them that you project upon them and by means of which you hold them to their ignorance, or an attempt to enforce their imprisonment in your perception of them. That is love. Love is forgiveness and forgiveness is the withdrawing of judgment against. Again, "forgiveness is the withdrawing of judgment against."

Now, I know you were nervous about asking your question, but aren't you glad you asked it.

QUESTION: In your opening remarks you made several references to the church, which I hadn't noted before in your talks. But what do you mean by the church?

ANSWER: Any and all religious systems which one tends to blindly serve and to which one looks for the authority for their thinking, for their concepts, for their means of defining their world, rather than daring to be quiet enough and attentive enough and curious enough to discover the world for themselves.

The world is benign; I will tell you, the world is benign. It is the direct expression of God. But when you hold this world and universe to be material, to be of that which has no connection to God, when you hold it to be a level of experience that one must wake up out of into the spiritual life, you hold the Kingdom of Heaven in contempt.

Your attitude is an attack, because you are judging it negatively. You are treating it as though it is incompatible with you and with what is Real, you are denying it and you are attempting to rise above it. That is attack. That is not love. And you project your negative perception on it, and it colors every perception you have of it. And it seems to reflect back to you your negative perception, which seems to justify your judgment, and it calls for you to continue to even more firmly hold it in contempt.

I will say this: there is not one single religion on the face of your globe that does not hold your planet in contempt. I will tell you also, that one of the reasons I am speaking in this fashion, at this time, is because the one single document that is present on the face of your planet that could have helped move one beyond the act of holding your planet in contempt—and that document is A Course In Miracles—is beginning to buckle and become interpreted as a continuing justification of holding your world and universe and body in contempt. And that is not its message. And if it becomes buried in that concept, just as all other revelatory religious teachings have, then we will have to have another book. And I am not lazy, I am not unwilling to give another book, but why?

It is religious thought that maintains duality as though it were a fact, and keeps you busy denying unreality and affirming reality which keeps one in a state of denying his world, denying his body, denying his sexuality, denying himself the experience of fun, because there is so much work to be done to overcome everything that is wrong with you. And the joy of life is not being experienced. The perfection of body, the perfection and beauty of union—and I do mean that sexually and in every other way—is being lost.

And you are not being able to be defenseless in the presence of your world and defenseless in the presence of each other. Again, defenseless meaning—not engaging in judging against. All of you are carrying on a tired tradition of mortality. And it's time to stop!

QUESTION: My question is about love. And I don't know where to begin, but well, I'll begin with myself. There are times that I'm really convinced that I love myself and then I lose it, and I notice how I mistreat myself.

ANSWER: You never do that except when you are feeling vulnerable and become defensive. And you see, you cannot be defensive only against things out there. If you are defensive it colors everything you are observing. You are holding yourself separate. And that is unfair to you, because that increases your sense of vulnerability, which increases your frustration, which increases your anger, and naturally you are going to blame yourself as well as anything else that happens to be handy. Why? Because there is something in you that knows that the suffering that you are experiencing is not legitimate. And rather than realizing that the whole situation, the whole dynamic is false, you attack things, yourself included.

What you need to be in touch with more clearly is not the need to find a scapegoat, but the need to find that the feeling you are having, that suffering is not legitimate for you. The need is to find that that is the truth so you can simply release the defensiveness. You won't even begin to play the game of duality and of contest and of friction if you neglect to go into an attack mode and you feel the illegitimacy of the suffering, and you say "Yes, that's right! I don't even have to play into this. I don't have to become reactive. This isn't my problem."

The only time you ever move into an attack mode is when you are feeling vulnerable and become defensive—put your shields up and lock yourself into a prison that separates you from your opportunity to experience your unity with everything.

If the apparent threat that causes you to feel vulnerable is an illegitimate, unjustifiable threat, you simply are not called upon to respond. And there is your freedom. If you don't need to be defended, then no defense is called for. And that is the simple answer, the simple solution that everyone overlooks because, as I said, this negative definition of yourself and your world causes you automatically not to feel innocent. And then whatever shit comes your way is certainly deserved. Not really, but by definition it does.

You see, every single one of you is at every instant innocent, unless you join in a mutual agreement with another ego and you agree to be guilty and you agree to hold each other to your guiltiness. And what is due someone guilty? That still doesn't make you guilty. It still doesn't affect your innocence. But as long as the two of you join in this mutual delusion you will, as you have, put yourself through hell and suffer and feel that it is justified.

You will not allow yourself to feel good. You will not allow yourself to have fun. And you will work like the devil to get this other one, that you have joined in mutual agreement, to arrive at a point where he or she will say, "Yes, yes, you deserve a little good." And then you'll say, "Okay." And then YOU will let yourself feel a little bit of good.

You see, it is you who cuts off the flow of good, it is you who ignores it, and then it is you who lets yourself experience some of it. It is never anyone else. And all the time that you are going through this dance of the human condition, you in your innocence stand innocent. And this whole dance is irrelevant. And all of you are simply at the threshold of discovering that it is irrelevant, which when it registers with you will allow you to experience the curiosity I am talking about—which is the act of giving yourself permission to experience Reality, to experience your good, your joy.

All of you are giving the word. And your word is either opening you up to the gift that the infinity of you is presenting to the tininess of you, or it is blocking it. But you see, that no matter what you are doing, it isn't changing Reality, which is the only thing that is going on here. It isn't changing who you Are, and it isn't changing the Kingdom of Heaven. But you're having this exciting, fearful, stimulating, depressing illusion—delusion—daydream if you will, that is distracting you from the direct experience of Reality and of your Self.

QUESTION: I'm curious about something. This past week I have felt like weeping. Maybe somebody will say something or I'll just suddenly feel like weeping. And sometimes I do and then....

ANSWER: But mostly you avoid it if you can, because you feel that you will lose control, and you don't want to be out of control. And you are not alone in this. But I will tell you something. Everybody tries not to cry, but when you do, when anyone does, you connect with your Soul—not with a small “s”, capital “S” Soul—you connect with your capacity to feel the depth and breadth of Being. And it is not a negative experience. But the ego defines it as a negative experience, because the ego can’t get control of things.

Why do you think it is that when you have had a good cry you feel relieved and refreshed? I will tell you, it is not because physical tension has been released. It is because you have stopped being PROUD, you have become humble. Humility is flexibility as opposed to rigidity. It is that ability to flow. It is that ability to sense your validity without your having to proudly and with dignity be a responsible and intelligent and reasonable entity. When you connect with yourself you cannot help but feel good. Please continue...

QUESTION: It isn’t sadness that I feel, but I think what you’ve told me explains what is taking place. At the same time I will have also experienced, maybe a couple of times throughout that time, where I felt something bubbling up in me that was just joyful. And nothing outside me took place, it was just joyful. And I thought ‘Oh, that’s the way it should feel all the time.’ And it doesn’t.

ANSWER: Let’s leave off those last couple of words. That is the way it should feel all the time. Now, I do not mean to shove those last few words under the carpet. But the tendency is to take those last few words and say, “As a result, there is no point in enjoying this moment, and it is not a reasonable expectation that life will feel like that all the time.”

Now, joy will very often bring tears. And the tears very often will have the same physical sensation that you associate with sadness—but it is really joy. The point of it is, let this form of loss of control occur without defending yourself against it. All of you are far more capable of feeling than you can imagine.

I mean that you can look at any object in this room, or any mundane object such as a pencil, let us say a broken pencil or let us say a ball-point pen that doesn’t work anymore—something that you would determine to be useless—you have the capacity to look at it and experience it with deep meaning, with deep feeling. Why? Because if it exists at all, it exists as the presence of God. It exists as the expression of meaning. And no human process of thinking can create an experience, or what I will call an object that has meaning.

If you are constantly confronted with Reality, then you must necessarily be constantly confronted by divinity, whether it looks like a fingernail, or a pencil, or a sock, or a strand of hair, or wallpaper, or a doorknob, or a piece of glass, even if it is wavery glass. Something is going on everywhere that you are experiencing some thing. And the something that is going on is the Movement of God, period.

And so you say, “Well, what about a gun?” Something is going on there. But I will tell you that when through illumination and revelation you experience the clearer meaning of it, it will have no polarized, dualistic aspect to it. And you will see what it really is and you will experience its Real meaning. You must learn not to use what appear to be the exceptions to the rule as justification for throwing the rule out of the window. Either God Is All, or God is not.

That fact should set all of you into a state of curiosity to see the God in a thing, which will necessarily require that you release your pre-existing definitions of that thing.

That is why the very first lesson in A Course In Miracles says, “Nothing that I see means anything.” Wow! Where does that leave you? It can either leave you in a constant state of denial of everything, or it can move you into a space of great curiosity. You’re in the void. You are apparently in a place where nothing has any meaning. Well, that’s why it’s the first lesson, because it moves you into that place where you can’t sit still too long, you cannot be inattentive and uncurious.

But if you are willing to allow for the fact that nothing that you see means what you think it means, you open yourself up to that uncovering to what it really means, without coloring it with your preconceptions.

QUESTION: Thank you for a lot of the answers that I have heard already that pertain to what’s been on my mind. But if you could say anything more about helping, in particular, someone who defines himself as severely depressed!

ANSWER: This calls for you to decide what you are going to serve. Severe depression, when it is presented to you as a state of being, is almost hypnotic in its draw causing you, forcing you to have to make a choice whether to yield into it emotionally (I am not going to say feelingly, because when I use the word feeling it’s always associated with Soul with a capital “S”). But you are forced to make a choice as to whether to yield into that emotionally, or whether you are going to not sacrifice whatever degree of clarity and joy and freedom from depression that you are experiencing.

The ploy of depression is very difficult to deal with. It almost requires that you respond as though you’re insensitive. It is not that you are insensitive, but that is part of the dynamic of the ploy of depression. And I will tell you something: Depression is always a ploy. It is always a manipulation.

Now is it unkind of me to say that? Is it insensitive of me to say that? Or is it utterly wise for me to be speaking the truth clearly? And is it utterly wise for you or anyone else to be very clear on this, so that you can make your choice wisely—to not sacrifice whatever degree of joy and peace and well-being you’re experiencing.

Now, why not let the one who is depressed have the responsibility of joining you in feeling good, because you really don't care to do the reverse.

I will tell you something else. No one will waste a moment being depressed when they're all alone. So the depression is all for you, or all for whoever will respond to it. You say, "Well, I know people who have sat in their apartment and have not associated with people and they have been depressed for months, perhaps even years."

But I will tell you that there is a plot—it is being done for others. So that perhaps at the end of five years, or ten years, or twenty years, they will be able to say, "You see what your insensitivity has caused? It has caused me to waste my life."

Now I am aware that what I am saying is intelligent and reasonable, but very difficult to practice because of the nature of the ploy and the guilt trip that is laid upon those who cannot appreciate the depression and the suffering associated with it.

But I'm going to have to ask you again. Is there any justification truly for you to turn down your light? Is there any justification for you going through the uncomfortable effort of sacrificing your joy in order to commiserate with and help cajole the one who is depressed out of his depression?

You see, the depression is for the means of control. The one who is depressed does not want help out of it, because that one is getting a benefit from it. It is a benefit of holding someone else accountable—shifting responsibility. Why? For malicious purposes of holding the other one. Where? In a state of misery. Again, we have this mutual agreement, or the attempt to have mutual agreement of egos that stands in opposition to what is really true about them. And are you going to play that game? Or are you going to withdraw, leaving the manipulative one alone in that place where that one cannot long justify continuing to be depressed, because there's no one to impress?

So, how do you help? By being the light. As I said earlier—dancing on the sidewalk, being irrelevant to the ploy. Again, so that perhaps that one will have the opportunity to say, "Maybe I can be irrelevant too." This really means not being relevant to pre-existing concepts and pre-existing agreements to be ignorant. You see what I mean? Do you see what I mean?

QUESTION: I see what you mean. I do. Thank you.

ANSWER: It may not be easy to do, but it is essential that you do it. In effect, it says, "Come join me in joy, it is available. If you don't want it, that's all right with me. But I cannot come and join you." Oh-h-h and then comes the clincher: "If you are going to be so insensitive, I will kill myself. Life is not worth living with such behavior as you're presenting toward me."

More manipulation. We are talking brass-tacks. We are talking about something that I know is hard. But is it easy to be the puppet of unreasonableness and malicious intent? That's hell!

You are here to be the gift of you. You are not here to be the absence of the gift of you so that someone else can feel good in his misery, and exist in an ongoing state of attack upon you, with seemingly full justification and no call for examining whether or not a different point of view might be essential, all because you are going to keep your lip zipped and not be the joy and not be the light, which would make a demand on that poor manipulative soul.

You know why I am being unequivocal and hard here? Because the ploy of depression is malicious, unkind, manipulative and does not have your best interest at heart. The clearer you can become with that fact, the sooner you can release yourself from a feeling of guilt at not joining this other one in his or her misery. And the sooner you can be that clarity, which will place the demand on that other one to examine his or her motives. And as a result of that, perhaps grow and wake up.

“Well, I don't know if I want to be that involved. That's going to be work.” But again, the suffering that comes from being the puppet of that kind of manipulation isn't easy either. If you want to help, be clear. And be clear about yourself—be honest, not devious. If you're being honest you will not be manipulative, and you won't join with the one who that is manipulative.

You see again, I am not helping you. You sit in effect in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with a little pea-sized concept of who you are. And you are sitting right there, a body of Light, the Christ—I mean at this very instant. You don't need any help, you need a friend who will reflect back to you who you Are, so that you might become more curious about who you Are, than you are committed to your little pea-sized concept of yourself.

But your concept of yourself isn't changing who you Are. And so I don't need to change you from something that you think you are into something that you Are, I simply need to talk to you like the one that you Are.

So don't talk to this depressed one as though this one is a depressed one. Talk to this one as though he or she is fundamentally intelligent. And the fact is that someone who uses depression as a ploy is very, very structured and self-disciplined, is far from unintelligent and far from incapable of making a shift. And that one is consciously choosing the technique he or she is using. And it takes work to keep straight all the aspects of the manipulation so that nobody becomes confused. So start treating this one as though he or she is really intelligent, not deserving of any pity on your part, whatsoever.

So what if this one really does point a gun into his or her mouth and pull the trigger? Oh dear, you will have to live with it the rest of your life. That's what the message says—"you will have to live with this for the rest of your life." Another invitation to join in the special relationship: a mutual agreement to act at odds with Reality and believe that you have your own private world which requires suffering because, of course, you're both guilty.

You can say "Bullshit! Point the gun in your throat and pull the trigger. You'll still be the Christ. You'll still be in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. You will still have the same opportunity to wake up that you have at this moment. And I am not going to join you in this irrelevant folderol. And no, I won't feel guilty, because I know it is not my responsibility to prove anything to you. It's only my responsibility to be the presence of the Christ that I am, and let you choose to be either who you Are, or who you think you are, and provide yourself with whatever experiences exquisitely and succinctly put you at the threshold of discovering who you Are."

You see how special relationships work? They suck you in through guilt, almost always as an expression of a desire for help. To come into a mutual agreement that doesn't acknowledge God; because the two of you look to each other for the elements of the agreement, instead of listening within, deeply, so that what we might call the elements of Reality, the elements of God can be recognized and taken as that which defines the two of you.

Now I talked at some length here, because this is a significant issue and you need to understand that you can be the presence of Love, with a capital "L", the presence of Truth, the presence of Principle and not cater to the manipulative ploy of the ego, and feel clear, innocent, good, intelligent and wise. If you don't know that you can, then you are likely to succumb to the emotional draw of the dynamic of depression.

Anyone in this room who claims depression as a condition they are dealing with, I have just introduced you to yourself. And I would encourage you to ask yourselves why you are withholding from yourself the conscious experience of being loving. It's too high a price to pay for the potential benefit of the manipulation. Because your capacity to feel love, your capacity to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, your capacity to feel good is too great a thing to throw over for the so-called satisfaction of getting even. Because that satisfaction will never come. The ego is lying to you when it says you will get a marvelous payoff. All the time you are waiting for that payoff, you are suffering from the absence of your conscious experience of being loving and feeling your gentleness and your wholeness and your joy.

The ego is a liar and the father of it—the father of the lie. And if you will dare to look at this squarely, you will find in it your release from an unjustifiable imprisonment in depression and misery. Now I will give all of you a chance to breathe.

QUESTION: I want to know how I’m doing as far as trying to relate the Course to the people who come into my arena. And probably get some help or assistance as how to explain this to people. Like: “Where are you going?” “Oh, to Kauai.” “What are you going to do?” “Talk to Jesus.” Not that I haven’t said that, and I’m really thrilled to be here, believe me, but so that people don’t go, “She’s gone!” Anything on that?

ANSWER: No further explanation is needed. Let that peak their curiosity. Let that have the opportunity to register with them as a valid statement. Also be willing to let it register with them as a statement of an uncentered, unrealistic, stupid girl—meaning you. In other words, dare to just be as honest as you can be. And if someone else is having a problem, let them do the work. Don’t try to take on the effort of explaining and justifying and helping them come to some degree of peace within themselves. You be at peace with yourself, live your life, don’t get into games of secrecy or of, let’s say, keeping your mouth shut so as not to make waves. There need to be some waves. There needs to be that which triggers new perspectives. Don’t arrogantly be yourself, as though you are going to make a point or show somebody something. Just be and be simply.

And when you get back and they say, “Well, how was your talk with Jesus?” You can simply speak from your heart about how it was for you—and let it go at that. And go about your business.

QUESTION: What is my business?

ANSWER: Being You. Attending to the details of your life with as great a centered perspective as possible, with as little emotional reaction as possible. It is attending to life as it is happening, without letting it be biased by old habits and preconceptions. In other words, engaging in life innocently.

This is really important. Because it doesn’t matter what the specific thing is that you are doing, it matters that you are not doing it as a defense against life, it matters that you are not doing it as a means of creating a role for yourself—which is nothing more than a sense of identity, rather than identity itself. It matters that you engage in life with curiosity, with openness and with a sense that whatever it is that is confronting you is God, and not something different from God that is characteristic of a lifetime, or a place called a material universe. It means living each moment with freshness, not as though it were a test that you could pass or fail. It means setting aside an agenda of your own, and paying attention to the agenda of life itself, trusting that it is not going to be incongruent with your fulfillment.

Because if it is all God, it is not polarized, and therefore it does not call for defense on your part.

Now, you must understand that if you are flowing with life, that if you are not attempting to enforce an agenda of your own and that if you are not attempting to coerce the elements of your life to fit into a concept you have of what is appropriate, it is important for you to understand that this does not mean a loss of the ability to discern between what is illusory and what is Real. Until you are Awake, you must be able to separate the tares from the wheat, as the story goes.

Separating the tares from the wheat is a matter of discernment and not judgment. Therefore, it is not an act of defense; it is as simple as being able to tell the difference between apples and oranges. In fact, in this day it would be better if that parable referred to apples and oranges, because tares and wheat do suggest opposites—the good and the bad. The simple fact is that the tares aren't wheat, and therefore they do not provide that which is nourishing—but tares in themselves are not evil or bad.

And so you do not become devoid of discernment just because you are willing to yield into the Movement of Life and observe what it is, instead of attempting to make everything conform to your personal agenda. It does not mean becoming stupid. It doesn't mean becoming a cloud-nine-metaphysician, pie-in-the-sky and cotton candy.

It means truly being as Real and as practical as I was being during the last answer. For this one to be a helper and join with the one depressed, that is being unrealistic, that is being cloud-nine, that is being unconnected, that is not practicing discernment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: You can tell your friends that the lady next to you is not only coming all the way to Kauai to listen to Jesus, but after that—on Jesus' encouragement—going on to hunt for fairies in Ireland.

ANSWER: Indeed, a highly respected woman in her community.

QUESTION: Licensed psychologist. I've been told by Raj and Jerimiah and others have been told, that we have an affinity for working with the elemental Kingdom, nature spirits, the fairies. And I've been meeting other people who have been told the same thing that I have, and I find not only that they are sane, but they're utterly delightful people to work with and be with. So I'd just kind of like a progress report, Raj, on what I'm doing.

ANSWER: Indeed, you are doing excellently. And the arena in which you are doing excellently is that of giving yourself permission to be curious about that which your ego calls unreasonable. You are giving yourself permission to move beyond reason. And indeed, yielding to the Kingdom of Heaven that you are in the middle of does require allowing yourself to move beyond reason.

Reason requires all of you to operate on the basis of memory: definitions that have already been arrived at and a process of coming to conclusions that do not allow for that which lies outside of your already existing experience. If you rely upon reason, you will indefinitely remain trapped in your current ignorance. This again is why the element of trust is essential to waking up. It is essential to the experience of revelation. Indeed, this world is full of more than you have dreamed of. It is full of Heaven.

And what is currently being referred to as the elementals, the nature spirits, etc., these are not fantasies of the imagination. Everything is in communion with everything else. Everything is conscious, even a stone. Everything is able to communicate its meaning to everything else. And its meaning is that which was set into motion and continues to be set into motion by the Movement of God, called Creation. And so each thing that exists has the means of communicating the meaning of itself that is derived from the Movement of God.

This trip that you are about to make is going to be a surprising trip for you, in that you will experience moving further into the unreasonable than you thought you would—which is what you desire.

I appreciate your asking this particular question, because so many will find upon the hearing of the question and the answer that I have given, justification for being a little bit more unreasonable themselves without judging themselves and without resisting opening up.

QUESTION: I'm having lots of confusion about my employment. And I feel that I need to change my job and possibly my whole environment. I have a feeling sometimes that I have made myself a trap, feeling burdened with things. If you could shed a little light on that, I would appreciate it.

ANSWER: I will tell you something. Even when you are moving forward without a great deal of resistance—let's put it this way—even when you are moving forward with willingness, because the forward movement always brings you into greater clarity than you previously had, at the moment that clarity dawns on you you will also be aware of the confinement that you had been in. And the tendency sometimes is to immediately define yourself as having been really pretty stupid to have put up with that. And thus, the experience of clarification that uncovered the unreasonableness of where you were before the clarification occurred gets turned against you. And instead of rejoicing at the clarification and the forward movement, you end up kicking yourself for having spent time being ignorant.

Now, I encourage you to not indulge in that. You are feeling movement, perhaps a sense of pressure of movement toward greater expansiveness or change. That is the pressure of your Being. I'm going to put it this way—that is the way you are feeling the insinuation of the gift of your infinity into the current tininess of your point of view.

Now, don't jump to conclusions as to what the next step is going to be. Welcome the energy or the feeling of pressure and become curious, but don't think. You must think in order to jump to conclusions. But the insinuation of the infinity of your Being, with a capital "B", is bringing with it the clarification that you would try to jump to through a process of thinking. So be calm, be patient, and treat this like the birth of a child. Don't waste your time trying to force it, it will engage you in the coming forth. And any attempt that you put forth to bring it forth will wear you out.

There is a Movement. Allow it. Flow with it. Be at peace with it. And don't try to manipulate it so that it will occur a little bit faster. It's God unfolding! And can you push God? You can wear yourself out trying to, when the need is really for quiet, attentive, unconditional curiosity. And I don't care if your ego wants to know what it is faster than God is unfolding it. The unfoldment of Life, the Movement of Creation is flawless. And if you will dare to allow it to be what it is, it will be the most enjoyable "transition" or reconfiguration that you have ever experienced.

And I will not say anything more specific than that, because that is where your attention needs to be. Not on what is coming, but on yielding to and flowing with it as it comes, if I may put it that way.

QUESTION: Last night we spoke and I made a statement that I had absolutely no idea what I'm going to do. And that is still happening.

ANSWER: How are you tolerating it?

QUESTION: I thought I was doing real well. Every morning part of my prayers to the Holy Spirit is to just show me God's Will for me. And the other part is to help me remove the blocks and the fears that are stopping me from seeing this world and everyone in it as they Really Are. And I would have to say that my life was going along very smoothly.

Well, not too long ago, all of a sudden, out of the blue, I was given an opportunity for a position with a corporation in another state. And I looked at the opportunity and I said, "Oh God, not there!" And so I think, "Well, this can't be real. I mean, I don't want to go there." And so I went into the silence and asked, "Is this for me?" Well, I get a "yes" and a "no," and both of them feel the same. So I put myself in a complete circle here. I'm going, "Well, if this is where I'm supposed to be, why don't I want to be there?" So from your perspective maybe you could break down this circle in some language that I could understand?

ANSWER: When you get what are apparently conflicting answers, obviously wisdom says, “Don’t act yet.” What is appropriate is to continue to be curious. What is also appropriate is to become even quieter. What is needed is for you not to indulge in the idea that there is a deadline, and therefore you must come to a conclusion without taking time to be clear enough to hear a consistent answer. And then listen. In other words—continue to listen.

If you limited yourself to what you liked and what you could understand, there would never be any growth, because you would always stay within your comfort zone. And your comfort zone is constituted of that with which you are already familiar.

The only reason every single one of you isn’t wide Awake at this moment is because it requires you to go beyond your comfort zone.

It is difficult to embrace your good, because your good goes beyond what you are familiar with. And you do not have much trust at the moment in that which is beyond what you are familiar with, because you have been conditioned to believe that you live a polarized existence. Therefore, what you are not familiar with may be positive or negative, constructive or destructive, happifying or unpleasant. And so who’s going to risk the chance of moving into the unknown?

This is why it is so important to learn to listen, to learn to inquire and expect an answer, because it is what helps you move across the threshold beyond your comfort zone. The only reason you aren’t experiencing all of this as the Kingdom of Heaven is because you are defended against it, because your conditioning says there is no such thing as an unpolarized, indivisible, infinite expression of perfection.

Now, continue to lean into the capital “K” Knowing that is there, about what to do. There are times when I will tell you “yes” or “no” to a question of this sort. But at this moment the answer is not what you have need of. What you have need of is practicing—persisting in listening—with a greater degree of peace and less urgency being indulged in.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. As you were saying in your opening comment this morning about our addiction to thinking and figuring out, I was listening and agreeing and thinking how wonderful it was. And you started handing around the mic and I was busy figuring out what questions I was going to ask. And I was into it for awhile before I realized what I was doing, only because it didn’t feel very good. It’s very hard to give up not doing that. So I thought, “Well, what’s the worst that could happen? I can get the mic and not have a question.” Which is kind of what’s happening.

But actually what I’m a little bit curious about is the time when I made a decision to incarnate on this planet. And I’m curious to know how clearly was I seeing? And if I was still seeing only from a three-dimensional frame of reference, how wise was my decision to incarnate? Did I come here with specific things to accomplish or do? And wouldn't the really wise decision be simply to Awaken and Ascend in this lifetime? And hopefully that's the decision I was making when I made the decision to incarnate. But I wonder if you could maybe comment on that for me?

ANSWER: As it happens that was the case—that was your intent in this incarnation. Understand that the decision to incarnate is basically yours, but it is always accompanied with guidance. You might say that you had guidance counselors, such as school counselors, who help you set up the curriculum of your education, knowing what you have need of that you, at the moment, do not know that you need.

But ultimately, your decision to incarnate again is yours, even though it is an ignorant choice. And you are not corrected for having the desire. Because, after all, your ignorant choice or your choice for ignorance of who you are is going on in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And you are the Christ. Therefore, no serious mistake can be made.

Now, why aren't you told that it is an ignorant choice? Because the decision to dissociate yourself from the Kingdom of Heaven is a choice that must be reversed by you for your own reasons. Now I used those words very carefully—"the choice to dissociate yourself from the Kingdom of Heaven." It really means the choice to dissociate yourself from your infinity, from the wholeness of your Being as a conscious experience. And so a dissociation mentally, you might say, occurs in which part of you in your Totality is being denied in favor of a part of you that is then treated as though IT were the whole.

Now, everyone is very close to waking up. But not everyone is close to being conscious that they are going to wake up. As it happens you are close to being conscious of it. And so it became part of your choice in this incarnation to incarnate and awaken while incarnated. And indeed, you are indulging in nothing significantly that would impede that happening. And so I will simply say that you are on target.

QUESTION: I have a strong interest in materials and art forms. And I'd like to ask if Devin is the right person to work with me in the fulfillment of this interest?

ANSWER: This is likely to be a temporary relationship, but a full one. It is not likely to be a relationship over a period of years. But I will tell you that it would be a shame to miss the association that you will have.

QUESTION: You mentioned about stone being conscious, having consciousness and meaning. I love to carve stone, and I would like to know how to feel or to become one with the consciousness or meaning of the stone.

ANSWER: I have said before that the most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your Being. Not through space. That is the way egos relate. But right through the center of your Being is communion. And so you be still and embrace the stone. Much as you already do. And you feel within yourself; not as a matter of being sensitive to the stone, but as a matter of being at peace and congruent and at one within and as yourself. And then the meaning will emerge. This truly is not different from what you already know.

QUESTION: When I talked with you, I asked about a job that you had said was coming up soon, most likely before the first of June. And you also mentioned a relationship that you said was likely to happen within 7 to 10 days. Neither of these has happened. I'm going to ask you to help me to understand the reason for the delay. Is there a change? What really is going on?

ANSWER: There is no change. The gentleman we were speaking of is still the gentleman. The job we were speaking of is still the job. And although it is a test of your faith, I must say that both of them are still imminent. And I am not using the word "imminent" in a universal sense that doesn't relate to your sense of imminent. I mean, indeed, that it can happen at any moment.

It is important for you to know that there is nothing in you resisting it or blocking it. You are not unwilling to experience it. What you must understand is that it is inappropriate to look for fault here—which is really what one asks for when they want to know the reason why something hasn't happened that guidance has indicated would happen. Was the guidance incorrect? Was the listener mishearing? Is the listener blocking the unfoldment, etc.?

What you must do here is to be willing to stay in the state of innocent, unconditional curiosity, not cluttered with self-doubt, nor doubt in guidance. There is no three-dimensional example I can give you in order to help you have, shall I say, an unconditional grasp of what is happening here. Because, literally, nothing is inhibiting it. And I am not teasing you, nor am I, shall I say, stretching you or increasing your patience by telling you that it is imminent and unchanged, even though I have told you that before and it has not happened.

QUESTION: I have a beautiful experience with my three year old grandson. But there's something going on in our relationship that I have a sense that if I understood better it would help me to understand myself better. And when you opened our meeting today with "welcome to yourself," it came to me: "Wow, Ryan is here for me in a way that I don't understand yet."

He is a little boy that is so full of life, and I have the joy of living in the same household with him. And there are times in our relationship when he is crazy to be with me, and there are other times when he will say, “Go away.” But he says it in a way that makes me think, “Oh, what’s in me that’s bringing forth this kind of expression?” And I had no intention of even mentioning this subject until this morning. But it came to me that I should speak to you about our relationship, Ryan’s and mine. Could you give me more enlightenment about what it’s about?

ANSWER: It is truly about freedom in the relationship. It is truly about not having a co-dependent relationship where each of you is playing on each other’s needs. I encourage you to delight in this youngster’s forthrightness and freedom to express exactly what he is feeling, without self-doubt. He does not express himself in a hateful way when he says, “Go away.” He simply, easily, in so many words says, “I want to be by myself. I want to do my thing. I don’t want to be with you at the moment grandma.” And he does not feel the need to cushion the news.

I encourage you not to allow a special relationship to develop with him. I encourage you not to allow a sense of need and need fulfilled to develop. I encourage you to be able to be with him or not be with him as a whole-souled woman—yourself—recognizing another whole-souled individuality, himself. And on the basis of that wholeness, be able to move together and apart without giving SPECIAL meaning to it. Because without SPECIAL meaning there will be a freedom and a joy and a fullness to the relationship. And neither one of you will begin to develop a need to be independent of each other and begin to push each other away.

Now, there is another point in your question that we need to address. As everyone is becoming more and more metaphysically enlightened, and the concept that we create our own experience has taken hold, you put yourself in the position of having to take responsibility for the results, for the events that occur in your life. And thus, anything good that happens is to your credit, and anything judged by you to be bad that happens is to your discredit. And you do not have the perspective to see that what is happening might be happening because there is a God, and you’re not responsible for it at all.

It is inappropriate to always take everything that happens back to yourself as though you were the cause. And it is an absolute requirement that whatever you experience be referred back to God. Why? Because if it is referred back to God (in your mind)--Who is indivisible and therefore undivided, Who is single of purpose, and Who withholds nothing of what He is from His Movement that is called Creation—you then are in a position to experience the revelation that I spoke of earlier: the uncovering of that which has been going on all along.

You see, though, that if you always refer everything back to yourself as that which is responsible for what is happening, you are not going to be able to get back to the indivisible, undivided, unpolarized Source of perfection that will move you through the appearance into the clarification that is needed.

In other words, you will not have the means to get beyond the three-dimensional frame of reference. You will not be able to get beyond whatever your preconceptions and mindsets are. Therefore, you will not be able to find freedom, even though you may have thousands of other individuals who agree that this is spiritually more advanced than what was practiced fifty, a hundred, or three hundred years ago—and which, therefore, is a worthy effort put forth by you.

If God isn't being it, it isn't happening except in the imagination. And to try to find the way in which you are responsible for every little thing that happens, usurps God—puts you as the author of Life. of your life—and you are not. It makes you responsible. It sets you up for being guilty and having to pay the price of your guilt. And it keeps you bound in your ignorance.

And I am not speaking just to you, I am speaking to everyone. Your spiritual path does not take you into blame, guilt and the paying of a penalty. It leads you out of, it helps you move through and beyond these dynamics of special relationships—which guilt is inseparable from, and personal responsibility is inseparable from.

Now this is a very hard thing for many to hear. Because if God is responsible for everything and you are not, and you have been gaining your sense of worth from your accomplishments, then if you cannot claim they are your accomplishments, you don't have any way of crediting yourself or feeling worthwhile. And that becomes a very difficult thing to do. And so everybody clamors for a sense of authority. Even authority over one's problems.

The tiny personal sense of yourself as a little mind living on the surface of a big planet in the universe—that concept of yourself can be the environment in which revelation or the uncovering of who you really are can occur.

Don't refer everything back to yourself. Refer everything back to the Father. And then the clear true perspective about it all, as the Father is being it, will become available to you, and you will not go through a period of paying a penalty. And there is something else that will occur: God's point of view will become available to you as your point of view—and that's called being Awake.

And so you will not be minus an experience of fulfillment. The Movement of God will be experienced by you as the movement of you, because you aren't holding yourself apart from God. But that of you which used to be able to claim credit, whether it was for the bad things or the good things, will not be claiming credit. And you will not be experiencing that kind of worth, because that was a conceptual worth and not an experiential worth.

And when God's point of view is being experienced by you as your point of view, there is never any doubt about your worth, because it is felt. It is a worth that cannot be taken away from you, because you are not taking yourself away from God and holding yourself apart as a separate entity.

So you will exchange a sense of worth that is worthless for the experience of worth that is Eternal, but it is an experience of worth that you cannot claim credit for. That is what makes it difficult to embrace as valuable—it is your ego that wants to be able to take credit. Your Being doesn't need to take credit, because It isn't holding Itself apart. And so the fullness and wholeness of God is experienced as the fullness and wholeness of you.

Now, the issue here is not whether or not you are experiencing the fullness and wholeness of you that is the presence of God. The issue here is this practice of referring everything that happens back to you and claiming authorship of it as a personal, private, little mind. It must stop with all of you. The only thing you ever seem to create is a misperception of something Real. But you never ever create anything unreal.

And we will be going into that more as the weekend progresses. But this will give you something to contemplate—not think about.

FOLLOW UP ANSWER: I would like to address two points relative to things that were said yesterday. The first is relative to the statement that you must all understand: You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it; you are at that point and must understand yourself there from. Now why is it important to understand that? It is important because it gives you a new measuring stick. It gives you a measuring stick that is more practical and more transformational than your, what I'm going to call, poor thought models—your concepts, your conditions, your conclusions that you have arrived at through limited perception.

If you begin to consciously embrace the idea (which is really a Fact, with a capital "F") that you are not working toward perfection, but that you are at this very instant the manifestation, the expression of perfection, then when you find yourself thinking or believing things about yourself that are incongruent with this measuring stick of perfection, you have a basis for doubting your preconception, and a basis for letting it go in preference to being curious to grasp the meaning of yourself on the basis of divine present perfection.

You will question your spiritual trek. You will question the validity of obedience's being practiced. You will question anything that posits your perfection somewhere off in the future. And you will, as I said, have a basis for beginning to be curious to perceive your present divine perfection.

Now in a like manner, I said yesterday that instead of referring everything that happens in your experience back to yourself, as though you were the author and creator of it, whether it was bad or good, that you were to refer everything back to the Father. It did not mean, instead of blaming yourself, blame God. It meant to take whatever the circumstance that confronts you that is distressing as well as any circumstance that confronts you that is most pleasing and fulfilling, and referring it back to God—the nature of Whom is indivisibility, perfection, unconflictedness, absolute integrity. Because, as I said, if anything is going on at all it is God, or it is a distorted perception of God that you are engaging in. But the event, whether you are distorting it by means of misperception or not, is unchangeably God.

The reason for referring everything back to God is because here you have an absolute measuring stick, against which you may measure what you are observing. And if what you are observing is incongruent with the measuring stick of perfection, you may know that there is a misperception present. You may then engage your curiosity to see the perfection without engaging your reactions to your misperception.

The reason for referring everything back to God, rather than back to yourself is, because at the moment your sense of yourself is one of being conflicted. And so the measuring stick that you use doesn't give you the means of getting beyond the conflicted perception of your world that is distressing you.

So you refer everything back to the divine measuring stick, which will invalidate that which is illusory in your perception and allow you to get past it. And you will experience an inner shift, a transformational shift of perception, that will reveal to you, uncover to you, the perfection that has to be going on in order for you to have a misperception at all.

The reason for referring everything back to the Father is so that you may become free of the misperception and the distress associated with it. It is not so that you can have a scapegoat. There are many who do view God through a conflicted perception and see God as loving and wrathful. And that is only representative of the ignorant vantage point from which God is being viewed.

QUESTION: I guess the first thing I'd like to do is extend my personal feeling of gratitude for your presence this weekend, and our ability to be here.

ANSWER: I am grateful for your presence also. We are together, and in our togetherness there is this weekend to experience. Continue.

QUESTION: My question deals with situations that have happened at different times in my life that I can interpret as betrayal. And what I find in each of those situations is that the aftereffect is that I question my discernment and my trust, and I close down a part of myself because of that. And what I would like to do is find within myself that which is attracting the situation that allows the betrayal to occur.

ANSWER: Oh, why don't you try to find that in yourself which doesn't allow the betrayal to occur and be finished with it?

QUESTION: Great, that sounds much better.

ANSWER: Let me say this. You are talking about trust, but you are talking about trust in an inappropriate fashion. Trust doesn't mean being in a situation where it is then appropriate for you to become unconscious. You are speaking of trusting someone so that you do not have to continue to be conscious, continue to be alert. You are saying that you want to be in such a safe situation that you can let down, and in effect not pay attention. That is not trust, that is stupidity. And everyone does it. So I am not picking on you.

Everyone looks for that point in their experience where everything is so secure that there is no further call to pay attention. It is like looking forward to graduating—finishing school—so that you can feel that you have arrived at a point of completion and never have to be in an attitude where you are engaged by life and moved in an expansive fashion by it. And you can settle down and just be—except that really means just “sog” in that point at which you have arrived.

Now I will tell you something. Until all of you are Totally Awake, you are all untrustworthy. Because the ego is still functioning. And so do not look at your fellow man, who is coming from an ego place, and assume that any of them are trustworthy. Now that may sound like a negative statement, a put-down. But I am stating a fact. Not even you are trustworthy at the moment, because you are not free of your ego. You cannot really trust yourself, with a small “s”, because it is ego bound.

Now where does that leave you? It leaves you at a point of finding the value of not trusting your present sense of yourself; and in that void, having the courage to listen beyond your present sense of yourself for guidance. This listening beyond can be a listening to your capital “S” Self, or listening to your guide, or listening to the Holy Spirit—or that which has been called the Voice for Truth.

Waking up is a process of abandoning the sense of self that you have all developed and believe is you, which is very confined and circumscribed—it is what we have called the ego—and leaning into, throwing your anchor into the infinity of your Being, into your capital “S” Self. And to this end you do have the Holy Spirit and you do have your guides to help reinforce the trust that it does take to do that.

Now there is another way of putting this that is easier to grasp, and it is described as becoming centered—being in that place within yourself where there is utter peace, because you have escaped the surface reactive ego level of your mind.

I said yesterday, that the most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your Being. It is right through that place of peace in you that is in every single one of you, constantly, if you will but take time to feel it. From there you have available to you the divine perspective.

So what do you do if you are not going to trust your fellow man? You are going to go within and connect with your fellow man from that centered place. You see, you cannot truly connect with each other through space, because you are not truly separated, even though the experience of space seems to prove that you are separated.

But when you practice being still, going within, becoming centered and then experiencing your world from that centered place, you know how to be appropriate with your fellow man. And then your “relationship” with your fellow man will be transformational, healing, fulfilling. Because it isn’t a relationship, it is communion. It is experiencing the oneness of us all—the oneness of you and the one you are “relating to.”

Now I’m making a distinction here between communion with your fellow man and relating. Because relating is something that must be done through space, and it must occur through mutual agreement of egos. And that is why I said yesterday, that ultimately and truly we do not have a relationship, because we are one. One must hold oneself separate from a thing in order to establish a relationship with it.

You and I are one. Not just in this fashion, but when you are all alone we are together. When you are all alone, you and all of the Brotherhood are together. And when one is Awake, not blinded by his finite tiny sense of self, one experiences this union of the Brotherhood consciously—all the time.

You see, when you have trusted, you have given your power away. You have said, “I trust you so completely that I no longer have to pay attention for myself, and I trust that you will do what is appropriate with me and nothing else.” In the future don’t trust like that. Don’t find a situation or a circumstance or a relationship where you can shut down and become unconscious—in other words, no longer pay attention.

But you say, “That sounds like being on guard, and being on guard is defensive and defense is attack.” And that is not what I am saying. I am not saying remain conscious because if you don’t this hostile world will hurt you. I am saying: don’t engage in unconsciousness, because if you are unconscious you do not have the opportunity to experience Reality. You also lose the full experience of your Being as Consciousness, as that infinite Conscious Awareness in which all of the Movement of Creation is going on, and in which that experience is available to you, as you.

As you wake up, you are going to be more and more conscious than you have ever been before. You will also be more and more at peace, but that will not mean being less aware.

So be with your fellow man from your center, fully conscious from your center, and relate from your center; not paying attention to this other one and bouncing off of him, and finding out where you stand by reflection from him, so that then you may calculate what you will do based upon what that one is reflecting back to you. Simply, to the very best of your ability, be with that person from your center. And be sensitive to what you are feeling within yourself in the peace of your being.

Some of you are afraid that if you get in touch with the peace of your Being, you will not care about anything, and you will let anything occur. And you will be as though you are on a drug trip, where if the building you were in were on fire, you would watch it in all of its glory, not recognizing there was a need for you to leave the room.

Indeed, when you are centered, you can hear the word “no” as well as the word “yes.” Discernment, that I spoke of yesterday, is available without emotion attached to it. And thus, you are able to tell apples from oranges, the tares from the wheat. You can make distinctions without judgment. And so you will feel what is appropriate and what is not, without emotion, but with clarity and with peace. Without emotional response you will be able to easily say “no” from the tips of your toes as a simple expression of clarity. Or you’ll be able to say “yes” from the tip of your toes with clarity. And thus, because you will continue to be conscious, you will not be misused, because you will be being appropriate.

And I will tell you something. Whether the one you are with is interested in approaching life in the manner I have just described to you, he or she will find themselves enjoying being with you, because you are so clear and there are no games apparent—there is nothing underhanded or secret. They know where you stand, and because of that they can let down their defenses. And so relationships, in which even one of the partners is coming from his or her center, become fuller and more meaningful relationships.

And it is only in, I’m going to say, the unusual cases, where the one who is not coming from a centered place is so insistent upon being a manipulative ego, that that one will vacate the “relationship,” because you are unavailable for playing games, and that is the only way that one wants to relate. But it is only in the unusual case that your being centered would seem to foul up a relationship. And really what it will do is establish for you the impossibility of being in a relationship where there cannot be growth and joy.

QUESTION: There was a person renting a house of mine, who had given every indication they were choosing to buy it. And intuitively what I felt towards the end of July was that that was not going to happen. This person was a very dear friend and had been for a long time. And their response was very negative, very manipulative. And then what came out of it was the fact that they had purchased another house, and they were leaving.

I listened to my intuition. But the feeling that doesn't work inside of me is the place where I feel myself shutting down somewhat. I feel the place where I'm shutting down a part of me, because of this, or because of similar situations. And I don't want to do that for anyone. I mean no one or nothing is worth that to me.

And in hearing what you're saying, I understand in terms of coming from your center. I can do that. I just got off the phone with this person, and I felt that I cleared it as much on that level of communication, withholding the aspect of communion beneath it.

ANSWER: Your ego is throwing a little temper tantrum. You, with a capital "Y", had an immediate recognition that your knowing or intuition had been correct. The news confirmed to you your oneness with what was really unfolding.

QUESTION: I was disappointed.

ANSWER: Your ego was disappointed. Your capital "S" Self recognized unity in the experience of your intuition that you had had, which meant that you were not confronted with a surprise at all. But your ego, that which is in a special relationship with other egos, is saying: "this one needs to be held to a point of principle or a point of fairness, justice is called for." And if you don't recognize this as a subtle ploy of the ego to disengage you from your recognition of unity, then you will get sucked into reaction for a while.

You must recognize that the ego can never enforce what it suggests, and you must also recognize that all the ego ever does is suggest. It whispers in your ear: "You have justification, righteous justification for being indignant. And this one needs to know what he has done to you." It whispers it like a hypnotist. I am not calling hypnotists into question here. I am pointing out the fact that the ego can only employ suggestion, and the rest of it is up to you. And you can refuse to validate the suggestion, and thereby remain free of becoming influenced, so that you are not able to function from your right mind.

And that is what is happening here. You are at this moment provided with the choice to validate the suggestion, or invalidate it and go forward with the confirmation that you have had—that your knowing is accurate. And, therefore, if you continue to stay in touch with it, you will not be confronted with shocking disturbing surprises. Disturbing in the sense that it happens and you have no preparation for it.

FOLLOW UP ANSWER: I would like to take a moment to elaborate on a point. Everyone who is consciously on their spiritual path talks about and looks forward to experiences of enlightenment and transformation. But because of the intellectual foundation upon which they approach their spiritual path, enlightenment and transformation tends to be conceptualized as “Ah-ha” experiences.

In other words, experiences of intellectual realization of ideas fitting together in a new way, as though always the transformation will be a rearrangement of ideas, rather than an actually new experience of self. As a result, when an actually new experience of self begins to emerge, one is likely to feel as though he or she is going crazy. It is unexpected, because it has nothing to do with logic, or ideas fitting together in a new way, because it truly is an experience.

Now a few moments ago I said you cannot afford to trust yourself. And yet, in the past I have said that every single one of you has the capacity, the inherent capacity to recognize Truth. And I have said, dare to trust yourself. And, of course, everyone looks for inconsistencies, usually as a basis for disqualifying the source. And I do not want you to get sidetracked.

Now, as one indeed begins to find value in becoming still, going within—being there thought-less as pure Conscious Awareness—and begins to simply be attentive and finds that indeed there is an influx of Awareness—not thoughts, not anything that is a product of reasoning or intellect—and begins to find that the knowing or Awareness that is occurring is valid and valuable, one is confronted with apparently two different ways of being conscious.

One being the spontaneous habitual way of consciousness that everyone employs everyday in living their life. “Oh, I need a dozen eggs.” Boom—pop down to the store, get a dozen eggs, come back home. You’ve done it a thousand times. Why check in with guidance? Certainly you can do that little thing yourself. And you get back home and find out that you don’t have the bread that you need for the french toast that you got the eggs for. And you realize if you had stopped a moment and quietly paid attention, you could have saved yourself an extra trip.

Now the point is that once you find that there is another experience of being aware that is impeccable, you’re faced with having to make a choice between which mode of being conscious you are going to employ. The one that is impeccable doesn’t feel like you, and the one that is full of faults is the only one you have known as you. And so, if you’re going to make what seems to be an obviously intelligent choice and choose for the impeccable, it seems as though you are invalidating the you that you thought that you always were. And this is confusing, demoralizing to your ego to say the least, and at times difficult.

But waking up really means change—not just a whole collection of new ideas to manipulate and play with and use to gauge your way through life. It really means experiencing the infiniteness of you directly—first hand—as your new experience of you. As this happens, you arrive at a point where you have to begin to conscientiously choose not to act without listening. You begin to have to choose not to employ the method of being aware that you have employed all your life which has given you your sense of identity. And you need to begin to employ the impeccable centered approach, even though it doesn't feel like you yet.

Now I am bringing this out so that as each of you arrives at that experience, you will not react simply because you didn't expect this to happen, you simply expected new ideas in your mental toy box.

Again, when you come to this place of choice, you have to choose not to rely on your old approach, your old sense of self. And it truly ends up being a choice not to trust what you have been trusting was you, all your life and trusting into something that is a direct experience of yours that doesn't yet feel like it fits you. So you will trust yourself, with a capital "S"—that impeccable knowing that is and always has been yours.

And you will withdraw your investment of trust in your best judgments, your best thinking, your best concepts, your most revered spiritual themes and ideas. You will give up your spiritual toy box of ideas, or shall I say, toy box of spiritual ideas. And you will abandon it for the direct experience of your spirituality, which is a very intimate, inseparable experience of you, which I have called Knowing, with a capital "K".

QUESTION: I have a confession, I am confused.

ANSWER: Would you come into the booth here?

QUESTION: And I know I'm so sure the only one here who feels this way. But my question...

ANSWER: You are that special?

QUESTION: My question concerns money and abundance. And I have a job currently, but I would prefer to be engaged in more of my creative interest. I find that I feel like I'm blocking the energy to do this, and not accessing my full potential. And I believe you have already answered my question, but maybe you could add a little bit more to it.

ANSWER: It is a very simple lesson that seems very difficult give yourself permission to have more. It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. In other words, the Father in His infinite Movement of Self-expression withholds nothing of what He is from His Self-expression. Every single thing the Father creates embodies all that He is. And the only reason any of you are not experiencing infinite abundance is because you are not giving yourself permission to experience it. You are justifying less: “I can’t get a good enough job. The economy is bad right now. Nobody wants what I have in this location. There is an economic slump.”

But I will tell you something. If somebody forced your abundance on you, you would say, “Not so fast, not so fast.” Or you would sit in the middle of it and argue about it. “What do I do with it. Now I’ve got more responsibility. I don’t feel comfortable with this. I like it, but I feel very uneasy. This is not my natural habitat. This is not normal to me. I am not easy with it.”

Now I have said this before and I will say it again: You have exactly as much and exactly as little as you give yourself permission to have. And there is never any leeway in it. You never have a little bit more than you give permission for, and you never have a little bit less than you give permission for. You have exactly as much as you can justify having.

Now this is why you have need of a better measuring stick than your prior experience or your best concept. You allow most precisely just as much of your good as you can justify having—just as much as you will give yourself permission to have.

I am pushing your limits this weekend. I am telling you that you are more than you believe you are. Not to turn you into something that you’ve never been, but to unfold as a fact in your experience that you all have been more than what you think you are, but which you have not given yourself permission to experience, because it doesn’t fit within your limited beliefs.

If you are the expression of God—which is what we are going to use as the new measuring stick—then the experience of your life is inevitably infinite, abundant, full of creative expressive ideas. But as long as you say, “Well, I just have two hands and two feet, and there’s only so much I can do, and there are only a certain number of hours in the day, and I need a certain amount of sleep, and they only pay this much, etc., etc.” You can see how you stack the cards against you. And you believe what you are saying.

I’m going to encourage you all, from this day forward, to make this acknowledgment: “It is the Father’s good pleasure to give me the Kingdom. It is my Birthright, and I am curious to experience it.” That is the way you give permission. What does this do? It lifts the responsibility off of the shoulders of this one that has only two hands and two feet and a certain number of hours in the day, and on and on. And it opens you up to greater potential based on the infiniteness of God and the nature of God, and the fact that you as His expression embody all that He/She Is. And realize that the manifestation of your abundance doesn't have to make sense. It doesn't have to come to you in an absolutely orderly way: you punch in at 8, you punch out at 5, you get $8 an hour, therefore, you have $64 that you can earn in a day—unless you get overtime, or unless there's a God, where infinity is not only the possibility but the actuality.

You have exactly as much and as little as you can justify having. That is the simplicity of it. And I suppose we could go on at length and become very metaphysical and logical, and give you systems and processes by which you could evoke out of the etheric substance of the universe more of what you conceive your abundance to be. But you will have to go to another workshop for that, and probably waste your money, and lose some of your abundance.

There really is a God, and you really are the direct and full expression of God, embodying all that God Is. That's really the truth at this moment. And so begin to be curious to watch the Father unfold the fullness of fulfillment for you.

The ego argues very subtly. And it says, "I don't know if I can accept unlimited abundance as a gift. I don't know if I can accept unlimited abundance that I haven't earned, because then I can't take credit for it, and then I won't know who I am and then I won't know who's receiving the abundance and all of my definitions of myself and my self-respect will be gone. And that will be hell. My abundance won't be satisfying my ego. Is that good? Oh, all of this is too confusing. Let me go to a workshop where I can evoke it out of the ethers, because at least then I can feel that I am responsible and that I have authored something that does meet my need, and then I can feel good about myself."

As you wake up, you have to let go of that which you can justify and embrace your unjustifiable good. Your ego has to justify everything in order to take credit and provide a sense of worth to itself. But if you are the Daughter or the Son of the King, and all that the King is and has is yours by Birthright, where does it fit in for you to be running around earning your little bit of good and feeling as though you are really somebody because you made it for yourself.

Being divine is unreasonable. It just is. And it is already the fact. And so I encourage all of you as a "daily practice" to acknowledge: "It is the Father's good pleasure to give me the Kingdom, and I am curious to see how it is going to appear. I am curious to see it appear in my experience." Because that curiosity is the way you begin to give permission. And all of the arguments against your really being able to have it are the way you withhold permission. Requiring it to come in a reasonable way is the way you block yourself from having it. And allowing it to come in a totally unreasonable way is the way you give permission for it to happen.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I encourage you to have fun with this. Don't turn it into another work ethic.

QUESTION: Yes it is morning, and it's had its moments of fun. I feel as though the question may be irrelevant, because you've done a pretty good job of supporting me facing my discomfort at the moment.

ANSWER: You're comfort that goes beyond your concept of comfort.

QUESTION: Truly. I'm not sure I like how unreasonable it's looking to me at the moment.

ANSWER: Reasonable will simply keep you a little bit longer in your comfortable prison. Continue...

QUESTION: Yesterday I found out that the lovely big house that my family and I are breaking the lease on, or changing our agreement on, has been rented. It's been a beautiful manifestation and actually the tenant is going to come in and take it pretty quickly. And it means that I need to find a new space to be, whether that's a tent or a house.

And yesterday I thought I surrendered pretty well, and I asked that the appropriate space be shown to me, for me and my family to live. May it happen easily and gently. And I got home last night from spending the day here and having an entertaining evening, and there was a message on my answering machine from the broker who actually handled the house that we are coming out of, saying that there was a place available.

This morning when I called her to find out about seeing the house before coming here, I found myself feeling as if perhaps it would be a unique experience to trust guidance, to just trust the manifestation in my life, that I in fact was getting the Kingdom of Heaven, that my curiosity was peaked to perhaps experience that differently this morning. And there was this little part of me who really wanted to see it before I came over here and find out if it was really the place, so that I could just relax into the day, you know have it all covered.

And I got over there and saw the house and freaked out. It's too close to the road, it's a congested neighborhood, it's blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. And it's as if I manifest exactly the quandary that I had been anticipating in not trusting my guidance, to just trust Spirit.

And as you answered the previous question, and as you spoke upon our return from break, I find myself tremendously curious about the Kingdom of Heaven being right in front of me, being right where I am. And I look right now back across the street at these beautiful people, that I don't even know. And I feel a little afraid to surrender to it. If that is the Kingdom of Heaven, to surrender my concepts that the house that was perfect was a little bit bigger, or more spacious, or if their furniture wasn't so tacky, and just accept that this was in fact the very answer and the guidance that I'd asked for. And look, just love it, love myself, and love these beautiful people.

ANSWER: You will not find out until you go ahead and act on the basis of your inner guidance and your trust. And that is when you find the experience of the integrity of you listening and hearing guidance and the integrity of the guidance heard.

As I said earlier this year to someone else, you must be willing to give up the concept of fulfillment for fulfillment itself.

Now, Reality isn't static. Therefore, when you yield to the Movement of Fulfillment, you do not become locked into something absolutely unchanging. You lock yourself into a Movement that could be described as going from fulfillment to fulfillment to fulfillment. Because, indeed, the Movement of Creation is one of "Behold I make all things new." And that is a Movement, you could say, of—I'm not going to say renewing—a Movement of newing. It isn't a renewing of something old, it isn't a redoing of something old, it is the ever original unprecedented expression of life.

And so as you yield into the Movement of Fulfillment, know that you are yielding into a forever Movement. And so that which meets the need at this moment—without your being out on the street for an hour—does not have to be treated as that which you will have to be stuck with for eternity.

And so lighten up a little bit. And embrace what unfolds that meets the need, while not neglecting to continue to listen and be attentive as the Movement of Fulfillment continues.

All of you must not be too sure that your concept of good is right. When you are willing to let go of your concept of good, you become susceptible to the experience of Good, with a capital "G", that will necessarily move you off an old basis of perception, giving you new eyes and a new experience of self, and a clearer experience of not only your divinity but the divinity of the place where you are, disclosing to you more clearly that, indeed, you are in the Kingdom of Heaven needing only to un-squint your eyes.

Indeed, the process of trust and the process of yielding is unnerving and scary. It is utterly simple, but because it involves trusting into something that is not yourself as the authorizer, and because from within the ego's frame of reference you live in a polarized existence, this trusting into something you have no authority over may well be a trusting into God knows what—something negative, something destructive, etc.

There's only one thing ever confronting you, as I said yesterday. And trusting is the means of giving permission to more clearly discern the one and only thing that is ever confronting you: the Kingdom of Heaven—Reality—creation that God is the Source of. And so you feel vulnerable and uneasy. This is the time to continue to listen. It is your ego that feels uneasy, because it doesn't have anything to grab hold of to secure itself with.

Great, this is excellent. But you—and I'm not referring to your ego—you have the capacity, even though the ego is scrambling for handholds, you have the capacity to continue to listen to guidance. You have the capacity to use God, the nature of God, as the measuring stick of the truth about your experience, no matter how your ego is defining it. And you have the ability to act in a manner that is congruent with your guidance, and you might say, test the waters of the Kingdom of Heaven so that you can get the confirmation of its reality.

Now I will remind you once again, because it is an important point for you. Be willing to give up the concept of fulfillment for fulfillment itself. And be willing to acknowledge that you don't know what fulfillment itself might really be.

QUESTION: I have a feeling of an expanded vision that is living in me now. And I wanted to allow that vision, expression, and experience it in my daily life. And I would like you to speak to that. And I have a curiosity that this expanded vision has a relationship with “Point of Power” being published.

ANSWER: First of all, this is not something that is now abiding in you that wasn't abiding in you before. I want for you to imagine a spotlight shining a circle of light on an otherwise dark stage. Or what we might call an otherwise dark Kingdom of Heaven. And you are in the center of the spotlight. As you begin to yield, as you begin to become centered, as you begin to let go of the exercise of authoritative control, the spotlight—the circle of light—begins to enlarge spontaneously, so that more of what is on the stage, more of what is in the Kingdom of Heaven, more of what is embraced within the Allness that is you registers or becomes visible.

Always your expansion, always what you call growth that brings you into new awareness, which seems to evoke or evolve new awareness, is simply uncovering the infinity of you that has always been present. That is why we can say that you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing towards it; you are at that point and you must understand yourself there from.

And so how do you understand yourself? Not through an intellectual process of putting ideas together in a new way, but rather by becoming quiet and gentle within and with and as yourself.

Very few understand the significant and profound meaning of the statement that you are when you pray to go into your closet and pray to your Father, the infinity of what you are, which is in secret. In other words, which is in the absence of the chatter of your thinking. It is in this centering, relaxing, invulnerable place of you that the light that you are, the circle of light, can expand, because you are not maintaining your defenses. And thinking is a defense. That statement is a radical statement, especially for metaphysicians. It is the truth and you are ready to hear the truth.

I will tell you that at this point the value of your thinking is that through it and the use of logic you can arrive at a conclusion that is so conclusive as to the Allness of God that you can abandon thinking. You can abandon the security of your clear correct thinking—that you thought was going to be your salvation—and yield into your center, which then allows the spotlight to enlarge. Which is another way of saying that is the way revelation occurs.

Indeed, this will be reflected in the unfoldment of the book, but it is not relative to the book exclusively. It has a larger scope. Let what will happen with the book happen. Don't let it become the focal point. Let the centering and the trusting and the silence become the focal point, so that the circle may increase and reveal even more of the infinity of you, which is identical with the infinity of the Kingdom of Heaven—Reality.

Please understand that when I use the words Kingdom of Heaven, I am not talking about a religious concept. I am talking about the undistorted conscious experience of Reality—the undistorted conscious experience of the ongoing Movement of Creation that God is being. That is what the Kingdom of Heaven meant in the first place.

The Kingdom of Heaven is You experiencing your Right Mind; you experiencing the mind of God because you are not claiming a right to any other mind. It means in the most practical of terms, pure sanity. And graduation means your release from the institution of life constituted of your ego concepts. And so I want to make very clear that when I speak of the Kingdom of Heaven I am not speaking of something idealistic, or off in the future, or off in the distance, or in another dimension.

You are experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven the consciousness of reality, in a distorted manner. And what you are releasing is the distorted perception of all that you are already experiencing. And so here and now is the where and the when of the Kingdom of Heaven that awaits you, awaits your giving permission to experience it, because you are ready to say, “I am not going to mess around with more process, process of Awakening; process of earning the right to be Awake; process of overcoming my sinfulness.

You're right on target. Continue to allow.

QUESTION: I wanted to ask you about the Star Child family. We arrived on the Island to live in community and did. And then we wanted to expand that vision, and we wanted a piece of land for more people. And that has dissolved, or is going into another form. And I just wanted to ask you if there is still a desire in the area for us to live on that piece of land together. And I just wanted to know if you see what stage of development we are in?

ANSWER: You are literally at a point of letting go of all attempts to control it into manifestation. You are all at a point of being able to more consciously allow it to move itself into manifestation, which is an essential part of the integration of the family. Integration meaning: the coming into focus of the inherent integrity—natural, unforced integrity of the family.

The family is going through a process of unstructured unification. It is moving out of an attempt to create a structured unity. And so the family is in transition. The family is in the midst of revelation. And it is inappropriate for those in the family to consider abandoning it. There is still movement and there is still purpose and there is still fulfillment coming forth.

QUESTION: Can you tell me where I'm at in my level of attunement? And talk with me about the healing work that I'm doing?

ANSWER: At the moment relative to the attunement, as you put it, you are on a plateau. You have recently, within the last two years, yielded into a much deeper level of attunement, a significant abandonment of attempts to be in charge. Congruence has increased during that period tremendously. Now you are going through a period in which all of this is jelling, I'm going to say, congealing. It is a period of time in which the growth, as it were, is being fully incorporated, so that you are becoming very much at ease with it before more forward movement, in terms of even greater alignment, occurs.

Over the next three or four months you are likely at times to find your ego becoming demanding and impatient—let's get on with the show, let's have a little movement. And I encourage you to notice it, let it jabber, but don't pick up on it.

It is like the soup, where the kids in the commercial say, "Mom, is it soup yet?" You could say, your ego says, "Is it fulfillment yet? If it isn't, hurry it up." But when the soup is soup, it's soup. And when the fulfillment is fulfilled, it is fulfilled, and more Movement will follow.

Now, in what specific respect do you have questions about your healing work?

QUESTION: Is it appropriate to do that kind of work with other people now?

ANSWER: Absolutely, yes.

QUESTION: I wanted to ask for you to share your experience and viewpoint of what divine communion and commitment in regards to marriage is, and how it pertains to us in these changing times?

ANSWER: It is very hard to have divine commitment when you are not experiencing yourself as divine. But it is important for you to know that what is called a marriage commitment is a great—a significant—asset in terms of each one's Awakening. Why? Because a commitment to marriage is a commitment to not being alone. Whether the intent to join is divine or not, the intent to join puts you in an arena, if you will, which some people might term a cauldron, but an arena in which growth can most easily occur.

It is the arena in which selflessness is called into play, whether it is given or not. It is the place where love is continuously given the opportunity to come into play. And I am not speaking of physical love, and I am not speaking of human concepts of love, I am speaking of love as the willingness to recognize that which is Real in your partner—Real with a capital "R".

Marriage is not essential to Awakening, but it comes close to being essential. I do not mean that those who are not married are at a disadvantage. But it is much easier if one is single to escape involvement.

Now I have said that you don't get into the Kingdom of Heaven in groups, you get in individually. But it is also impossible to get into the Kingdom of Heaven without joining, without relinquishing an insistence upon independence, isolation and self-sufficiency.

Marriage provides this environment, just as does a jail cell or a hospital ward, anywhere where there's the opportunity to be with another over an extended period of time, where it becomes almost impossible to continue to act without consideration for another.

Now, there is much talk about holy relationships, and that it is desirable in all cases to have a holy relationship rather than a special relationship, but especially in marriages. As I said, it is hard to have a divine commitment when you don't feel divine. It is hard to have a holy relationship when you don't feel holy.

And so I will tell you, that essential to the establishment of a holy relationship is the necessity of learning to pay attention within, learning to be still enough to open up to the guidance of your Self, or the Holy Spirit, or your guide, because that is the holy relationship that will disclose to you your holiness, which will in turn provide you with an inescapable realization that the holiness that you are experiencing about yourself is the fact about your partner, or anyone else you experience.

The confirmation of your partner's holiness will not come from your partner, but from your direct experience of your holiness. This is a very important thing to understand. If you understand that, you will not look to your partner for confirmation of his holiness, nor will you push your partner to behave in a more holy manner. Because that is not where the confirmation of his holiness that will mean something to you will come from. It comes as a direct and spontaneous result of an inner experience of your holiness. And that can only be provided to you by another who is aware of his or her holiness.

And at the present time you are limited to your guide, the Holy Spirit, the Father, or your capital “S” Self for that disclosure. Then when you have that experience, that undeniable, unchangeable confirmation of your partner’s holiness directly from the experience of your own, the manner in which you treat your partner will be altered radically. And that will provide the environment in which he can discern his holiness, because you are treating him as he divinely is; not from an ego standpoint, but from the standpoint of your actual experience of your holiness.

Now it does not matter that your experience of your holiness may not be permanent. You may feel it unequivocally, but you may not be able to sustain it. It will not matter. It is like having a revelation as opposed to an inconsequential night dream. The night dream you will forget, but the revelation and how it felt and what it was about will never leave you.

And although you may have moments here and there, as a result of your inner connection of your holiness, even though they may not be continuous, you will find that they will sustain you in your ability to approach your partner or your fellow man as the holy one that he or she is. And as a result of that, be an agent for transformational change in their life, or at the least, a really delightful woman to be with.

QUESTION: The other day I was riding down the road, and everything was going really smooth that day. I noticed that I still had some tension in my body and thought, “I can let that go now, because everything is unfolding wonderfully today.” Within a minute, I passed someone on horseback and watched them being thrown from a horse onto the asphalt. And I stopped the car and got out and came to the assistance of this person, who was in what I judged to be a life or death situation. It was unsettling to me. And the ambulance came and took the person away and medivaced them to brain surgery.

As I reflected on that, questions came up around, “what was that all about?” And I’m curious as to the lessons regarding that incident.

ANSWER: You will have to continue to pay attention in order to find out about the lessons uniquely relative to you and this incident.

I want to come back to what you said about what happened just prior to this incident. You realized that you could let go of some tension, because you were having a good day. And I will suggest to you that you have the cart before the horse. You let go of the tension because it is incongruent with the nature of your being, and you will not find it reflected back to you in your day.

Before calling Lazarus forth from the grave, I thanked God. I did this so that everyone might know that you thank God before you have that which justifies gratitude. You express gratitude FIRST, because that is the nature of Real Being. And then you have nothing to obscure it.

Now, I'm not suggesting that you set yourself up here for this experience that was distressing. I am expressing a principle, if you will. If you are clear, if you are centered, if you are in a state of gratitude, it does not necessarily mean that you will not find someone else in your experience needing the blessing of being around someone expressing gratitude.

Yesterday we spoke about this idea of referring everything back to yourself—if you're having a negative experience, you must be creating the negative experience. Well, following that line of reasoning, it might be a good idea for us to break for lunch so I can find out what I have done to deserve the company of those who are ignorant—the company of those who insist that they are not my equal, that they are not at this instant the direct expression of the Father, that they are not in the Kingdom of Heaven when we are all sitting here together and it is absolutely obvious to anyone who will open their eyes.

QUESTION: You created it.

ANSWER: That is an interesting thought. No, I did not create it. The Father created all of us here in the Kingdom of Heaven. I did not create the fact that you are choosing to dream a dream. And I did not create the fact that the dream is being treated as though it is Reality. And you know what? It doesn't really matter whether you did either, because the fact is that we're all sitting here right in the Kingdom of Heaven, we are all the Sons and Daughters of God, we are all at this moment embodying all that God expressed of Himself as us—all that God is expressing of Himself/Herself as us.

You know what? Every moment simply calls for the Being of love. And no matter how the ego interprets that call, it is still just the call for love. And you were there that day to be the answer to the call for love. You were there to be the fulfillment of the need. But you did not create the accident. You were the evidence of the simultaneity of the question and the answer, the need and the fulfillment of the need.

And that will give all of you something to contemplate, not think about, between now and the end of the lunch break.

QUESTION: I want to ask about being an artist.

ANSWER: How can you ask about being an artist? How can you ask about a movement that occurs within you that you are not personally responsible for, and that you find yourself having to yield to, just as a mother has to yield to the delivery of her child. It is best not to ask questions, but to allow it to happen.

Now, I am going to let you ask your question, but I want you to not get hung up on an intellectual assessment or concept of the movement of creativity, because the movement of creativity is always nonconceptual. It is, as I said earlier this morning, completely unreasonable.

Now there is such a thing as reason, and there are such things as ideas, but they are there to serve, to express the Movement of Creation as it has been experienced—they come afterwards. Everyone tries to think originally in order to manifest in an original creative way, but this is the cart before the horse again. One allows herself into the experience of the Movement of Creation that constitutes being an artist, and afterwards finds words and ideas to give voice to the experience of being the Movement of Art. I do want to hear your question.

QUESTION: Well, it's more of a little collection of things that have bothered me. And I understand what you're saying. I've felt a loss of confidence for sometime. And it seems clear that I'm not selling the things that I make. And I'm wondering if I should view what I do then as a gift, or the natural expression of being myself, and not get involved with it as a business thing.

ANSWER: Before we move on: Can you imagine God being the Movement of Creation called the universe, waiting for a buyer to come along?

QUESTION: No.

ANSWER: Indeed. Although you live in somewhat perverse times, there are few women who would bear a child so she could sell it. The Movement of Creation is itself self-fulfilling. It is always a gift. Otherwise you are a craftsman and not an artist.

Now you are confused and distressed because you are standing back from the Movement that moves in you, and you are assessing it, evaluating it. And when you are disconnected from the Movement of your essential Being, you cannot help but be confused and frustrated. It is like a light that is unplugged from the wall: it cannot fulfill its function and it cannot experience the fulfillment of fulfilling its function.

I know that the world attempts to turn everything into a profit, but a true artist doesn't join that method of operating. I'm going to tell you something else. When you finally let go and just connect with the Movement within you, and be the Movement because there is no other choice that you care to energize, you will find your fulfillment in all of its aspects manifesting, including your abundance.

And remember, as I said earlier, not to limit your abundance to a particular action, such as punching a time clock, or accomplishing a certain task. "It is the Father's good pleasure to give me the Kingdom, and I am curious to see that manifest." And while you are curious to see that manifest, go ahead and be the Movement that comes forth as the self-expression of you that is art. Continue.

QUESTION: Could you be maybe a little clearer about why I disconnect from that Movement, which I experience myself as doing?

ANSWER: Because you become self-conscious. You begin to think about how another is going to view or appreciate or interpret or value or not value your work. You see, your work isn't the thing that ends up on the canvas, you work is Being the Movement, with the recognition that you truly have no other choice available to you, because nothing else constitutes the essential you—Being with integrity.

When Paul gets self-conscious he tenses up, it becomes difficult for him to hear me. And if he were to indulge in self-consciousness, you would find the workshop coming to a stop. There is nothing other for him to do that is of value at this moment besides being in that place where hearing can occur, because he has found that that constitutes the fulfillment of his Being. And because it truly constitutes the fulfillment of his Being, it is transformational, meaningful and fulfilling for everyone else as well.

He also finds that there are not those in his experience who do not value what is happening because their point of growth is somewhere else. And likewise when you will dare to be out from the Movement of You, without caring what anyone thinks, you will find those in your experience who will value the gift of you and you will be able to say, "Oh, I sold five paintings." But is the selling of five paintings what has happened? Or is it the manifestation of a choice on your part to be congruent with you, and letting the chips fall where they may. And as a result of that congruence, finding that your world is unified as well. And there are those in your experience for whom your being is meaningful.

QUESTION: Raj, I feel like I went out of congruence maybe ten years ago. That this was a natural thing I did until...

ANSWER: You feel as though that is the only time in the last fifteen years that you went out of congruence?

QUESTION: I don't understand.

ANSWER: I mean that you go in and out of congruence constantly. And I'm going to say, "So what!" What matters is that the desire is there to be congruent. And it will be much easier for you to get into and feel that congruence if you will say, "To hell with what anyone else thinks. There is something in me that moves and feels congruent, and I am going to allow myself to be in alignment with it no matter what anyone thinks. Because when I do I feel good."

You can go out of congruence twenty times a month and you can come into congruence twenty times a month. Don't make a mountain out of a mole hill. Just make the choice for congruence more often than you make the choice for incongruence.

Now, I interrupted you, what were you going to say about going out of congruence ten years ago?

QUESTION: I don't want to bore everybody.

ANSWER: I assure you this is not boring for everyone.

QUESTION: It seems from the time I was a little girl, art was a very natural, beautiful thing for me to do, and I had that sense of congruence, of connection with a higher force. And then I'm maybe in the last ten years, approximately, it feels like it left me—that's my perception. I obviously counted on that and it's been very disappointing.

ANSWER: It hasn't gone anywhere. It is just that you have begun to feel that you must answer to other people's opinions. And you have paid more attention to that, but that connection is there. And I will tell you a very simple fact: The connection has been expressed in your work, but your preoccupation with what others think has not allowed you to see it as clearly as others can see it.

QUESTION: Do you feel I should be open to new forms other than painting—that that's a good direction?

ANSWER: That is like a woman about to deliver saying, "Do you think I should be open to having a boy if it's not a girl?"

QUESTION: Okay, I get it.

ANSWER: If it's coming, it's coming! Whatever it is, whatever the form is! And so, yes, you had better be willing to be open to the movement of creativity and not have a preconception as to what it has to be.

QUESTION: Okay, I would have brought you one of the new forms, but it cracked in the firing.

ANSWER: When a child tries to get from the couch to the coffee table without holding on and falls down, he tries again. No big deal. Try again.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Don't be so serious. The Movement of Creation is a Movement of Joy, the Movement of that which is unreasonable, therefore, the Movement of the unexpected. Lighten up. Okay.

QUESTION: This experience that I had with coming across the threshold into this place of apparent ignorance, when I was being the Father's smile, we spoke about, and you assured me it was an experience of Reality that was as real.

There's a part I would like your reflection on. I was being that infinitude, but I seem to also be carrying something. And that something felt like the light—a bolt of light that Mary and then Mitraya showed me to walk on. And then you later said that they represented the love and the balance that they were giving to the earth. But what was the meaning of that experience, when I was the infinitude of the smile of the Father, what was the meaning of my also having this something?

ANSWER: The meaning of it was your Birthright. Indeed, when all of you, shall I say, departed from your full conscious experience of being the Mind of God, and explored the possibility of being a separated mind, you did indeed bring with you your Birthright, because it was not hidden from you yet. You brought the light with you, which gave you courage, if I may put it that way, to dally with the ego, to play with a sense of independence.

And as I have said, moving away from Home was easy, because there was no self-doubt. Whereas as you go back Home it seems to be hard, because you are doing it from a frame of reference in which doubt is a fundamental factor.

Since moving away, and becoming preoccupied with the sense of limitation, you have forgotten the Birthright that you brought with you. You have been too distracted from it. And so it is as though the light went out, even though it did not.

The answer to your question is that the light you brought with you was your Birthright. And this is true of everyone of you. And your Birthright is still with you and is still lit—still beaming, still radiating. But in your busyness, in your distraction by the sense of limitation, you do not notice it.

QUESTION: When you say you are what you do, and what you do comes out of what you are, I felt that Movement that I was not making a decision—as you expressed yesterday with someone about their reincarnation—it just felt like the Movement. It didn't seem to have anything that felt like making a choice. It just seemed to be the Movement. So where would the movement of ignorance—like we are what we do, and what we do comes out of what we are—where is the ignorance there? I mean there is no ignorance. What trick then... Do you know what I'm getting at?

ANSWER: Most all of you are sitting in this room with your eyes open. If you close your eyes, you become experientially ignorant of the appearance of things in the room. It does not mean that you are an ignorant entity. But as long as you are not looking, you do not see.

Indeed, what has been called the fall, which is nothing more than a movement into a limited experience of infinity, is or was a choice. And what all of you must understand is that it was not a sin to make the choice anymore than it is a sin to close your eyes and not experience what this room looks like at this moment.

But if you neglected to open your eyes up for the rest of your life, you would find life more difficult than you had with your eyes open. And you could become preoccupied with the difficulty as compared to earlier in your life. And learning how to deal with the difficulties you run into when your eyes are closed, rather than opening your eyes up, can become a distraction to the realization that all you have to do is open your eyes.

And that is all that this three-dimensional frame of reference, this limited sense of the Kingdom of Heaven amounts to. It doesn't amount to a sin. It simply amounts to a simple fact of ignorance—you are temporarily ignoring the Wholeness of your Being. And in the distraction, you have forgotten that all you have to do is open your eyes. You have forgotten that all you have to do is give permission and feel the desire to experience and know your Self and Reality truly, without all the folderol of processes and obedience's, etc.

How many of you have been very sleepy and you are watching the TV and you blink your eyes, except you only do half a blink. And suddenly you find that you are asleep, your eyes went to close and open and they didn't make it open. It is as though you are caught halfway through a blink. There's nothing wrong with it. Therefore, there is no penalty to be paid for it.

I cannot explain the fall any more simply than that. It is probably the most accurate definition that has been expressed in the world to date, that the fall of man amounts to half a blink. And now those of the Brotherhood who are caught in the half a blink are about to open their eyes and finish the blink.

QUESTION: That one called Mitraya, when he came over into this place he was the infinitude of the Father's smile, wasn't he?

ANSWER: Oh indeed, but his coming here didn't constitute a blink at all.

QUESTION: Right, well what's the difference? How did he keep his eyes open?

ANSWER: I will tell you that he did not go through a birth process to be here.

QUESTION: So I had the experience of releasing the illusion of birth from my mother, you know, like last year. Is that like making up for these little things we do here, that kind of cover the fact that you don't have to do these things?

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: And then you said to me recently, I'm a lot closer than I think, a lot closer than I imagine. So throwing thinking and imagining out, what is it?

ANSWER: Throwing those out, there is no way for me to define it to you, except that you are closer than you think. Therefore, let there be curiosity without impatience. Curiosity without impatience constitutes balance, equilibrium, evenness—the condition necessary to slip through the little gap into the full realization of your Being.

QUESTION: Thank you, thank Spirit and myself for being present, and this opportunity. Somewhere along the line after this half a blink, and I'm here now, I'm wondering about something practical that I can kind of focus on to take with me now in a way that I can understand dealing with my situation, dealing with my energy.

It's very frustrating from a personal perspective of not having much energy day after day, week after week, and it's been going on for quite some time. And along with that, my enthusiasm for life, my passion for life has been kind of dampened. And I'm just not very passionate and I'm not excited about starting another job, a new job, which I'm beginning next week. And this energy affects my situation in a sense that it's just an effort to move the body through time and space. And it's difficult to follow my guidance in a sense. So if you have anything you could share with me? Thank you for being present.

ANSWER: You are being weaned from determined accomplishment. You are being brought back into equilibrium. There is not a single thing wrong with you. You would not do this voluntarily.

Do you realize that the very word “yielding” means involuntary movement—unauthorized movement, the absence of will, the absence of control. It is not that you do not have energy, it is just that, you might say, the energy of your Being is no longer continuing to allow you to subject it to inappropriate use. It is still there, but you cannot muster it up to abuse yourself with. You cannot gather enough of it together to continue to create the illusion that you are in charge.

Now when this point of development comes, your ego goes crazy. But at the same time, there is always a clear sense of a you, separate from this ego that is going crazy, that feels wonderful. Is this not correct?

QUESTION: Well, y-e-s-s.

ANSWER: Y-e-s-s. It is the ego that gave the little negative lilt to the delivery of that very clear answer.

It is just that it is hard to trust this very clear feeling that doesn't make sense. At least it doesn't make sense from the standpoint of your old conditioning. I mentioned earlier, that awakening constitutes a real shift at an experiential level in your experience of yourself. And it isn't just a rearrangement of ideas or a new package of updated ideas. You are going through a shift of experience of yourself.

Those who have been used to being clear-cut authorizers of their experience find this point of development very unpleasant. And it is not recognized to be a point of development, but rather is defined to be a problem. This is exactly what is meant by the phrase, “entertaining angels unawares.”

When you are confronted by a point of growth that brings you into greater equilibrium with your Real Selfhood, and you find yourself unable to perpetuate the illusion of yourself and that which has been false about it, it is seldom recognized as a point of development. In the absence of being the successful authority over your experience, you will have the opportunity to come into a more permanent experience of equilibrium, a more permanent experience of your substance—the substantiality of you, a clearer experience of your invulnerability. And you will discover that you are no longer experiencing attachment to everything as though you needed it (everything) to give you definition.

To one who has exhibited the habit of gaining definition from the things in his experience, this feels like a loss of worth. It feels like abandoning yourself to a place where there will never be an opportunity again to experience worth the way you have always experienced it in the past. And that feels like a very dire circumstance or place to be in.

And every single one of you will come to this point of having to abandon—never to recover again—the sense of a tiny, separated entity being in authority over something for the purpose of demonstrating worth. Know that this point of development will be arrived at and that it is your salvation, rather than your crucifixion. Because in the absence of being the authorizer of your experience, an authorizer who gains worth by demonstrating the authority successfully, you will find experientially your Worth, with a capital “W”. And as I said earlier: When that happens, it discloses to you the capital “W” Worth of everyone else. Because it is inescapably clear to you, for no reason, that this is absolutely true about everyone else as well.

Now, you are going to have to endure this point of development. It is not something to escape from. And I encourage you as you endure it—which really means as you abide with it willingly—as you do this, stay in touch with the part of you that has emerged that feels the utter rightness of it, even though you cannot justify it intellectually in terms that your ego used to use to define what was reasonable and intelligent.

I do not mean to imply to everyone, by what I am saying, that you are all headed for difficulty. What I mean to convey to you is, that there are indeed going to be real intrinsic, intimate shifts that will constitute a changing of your experience of your identity.

If you are not expecting that, but you are expecting a new package of intellectual toys, you are likely to misinterpret, misunderstand, what is happening.

And you will call out the regiment of ideas of self-protection to send in to deal with this disruptive upsetting of the status quo of your identity.

And because this point of development is a point of development, it will not be squelched by the regalia of metaphysical attack forces, and it will feel like a struggle, and it will feel intense, and all of it will be unnecessary.

I will tell you one thing: You are not just hearing what I am saying with your ears, you are hearing it with your Being. And every single one of you in this room, and every single one who happens to hear a tape recording of what is happening right now, will remember what I have just said when this development begins to occur. And it will save all of you some time, because you will not decide to bring your clear correct thinking into play to battle against that which is actually, shall I say, raising you from the dead—raising you out of ignorance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I first wanted to say thank you for the responses to many of the questions today that touched me. My question right now is to touch with a state that I found myself in sometimes before I'm sleeping or in meditation, where I find myself coming out of—it's like waking, but I'm already awake—out of an altered life, another style of living, where I'm a player, a person in a place involved in relationship with people around me. And it's as if I go into that place, I become that existence, and then something clicks for me and I'm back here—in this body, in this mind, in this Being. And it feels as though I'm living in a Heaven; an option almost to live here or live there, when this is occurring. It's not something I bring upon myself in a conscious way. Could you tell me something about this?

And one more thing about the experience is that I'm in affluence. There's a feel of true abundance and fullness in that living.

ANSWER: I will tell you that it is all imaginative poppycock. When Paul gets up in the morning he has learned not to pay too much attention to himself, not to take himself too seriously until he is awake. And I am going to encourage you to do the same thing.

This is pure imagination, no matter how valuable or valid or desirable it seems. Notice it, but do not become too curious about it. The point is to wake up, so that you are able to function reasonably well in your ignorance during your normal waking hours. I mean by that, the ignorance of the three-dimensional frame of reference as opposed to the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being that constitutes being Awake.

This experience does not constitute a state of illumination.

QUESTION: So in this waking state, this three-dimensional, this state here now of me and my body, there seems to be a continual experience to look to being Awakened—Awake. And I understand that meditation assists in this process of coming Awake.

ANSWER: It is as though it helps to clear the cobwebs away that distort your perception of everything that you see, causing the fourth-dimension to be three-dimensional only.

Now, this gives me an opportunity to say something else. If indeed you are being confronted by the Kingdom of Heaven or Reality at all times, it means that you are being confronted by the fourth-dimension at all times. It means that you are in the fourth-dimension at this very instant, but you are only allowing three of the four dimensions to register with you.

Everything you see is a fourth-dimensional presence. And that is why it is important to have a curiosity to allow yourself to feel the meaning of any three-dimensional object. Not so that you can get a sense of its three-dimensionality, but rather so that you might open up to the actual present meaning of its fourth-dimensionality, its divine intent, or reason for being what it is.

So remember that waking up does not mean waking up out of all this; it means waking up into what it truly is—waking up into what it truly means. What is the meaning that has found expression as this glass? And what is the meaning that has found expression as the water? It has fourth-dimensional meaning. It is an expression of the infinite creativity of the Father. Therefore, it is some aspect of the infinitude of your Being and, ultimately, it is some aspect of the creativity of you, because you really aren't separate from the Movement of Creation that God Is.

This twilight zone that you experience between sleep and being humanly awake implies a different place or different dimension in which to be more truly Awake. And I will not allow that to pass without commenting, so that you might understand that here and now is the fourth-dimension, and here and now is the place to experience it fourth-dimensionally. And it is a true perception of this glass that it is your Birthright to experience. That is the purpose.

It is not that there is a divine idea standing some place behind this physical manifestation. And that that divine idea that stands behind it is what you need to connect with. It's this glass. It's this water. It's this hand holding the glass. It's all of us experiencing the attention that is being given to this glass. All of this is fourth-dimensional Reality occurring, even though, at the moment, you are seeing it in a limited three-dimensional fashion.

So be cautious, be alert in the sense of not being distracted by the suggestion that there are truly alternative experiences of Reality—alternate dimensions that you can slip into.

I will tell you something: The only available dimension for you to slip into, other than the fourth, is the second, where there is an even greater experience of limitation, because then you only have length and width—you have no height, no depth. And it is not a natural inclination to move from the third into the second. Why? Because the third has already scared you so much, that you are unwilling. You will not even move into the fourth without some encouragement. And none of us are encouraging you to go into the second.

There was a general realization that occurred in this group in the last ten minutes. And from our standpoint, the light of you is displaying a greater rousing out of your slumber—movement has occurred, more concentrated movement has occurred in your process of Awakening in the last ten minutes. I share that to confirm the feeling of it that some of you ARE experiencing, and also to encourage those of you who are not really feeling it yet, to know that it has happened.

QUESTION: Only a moment ago it seems I shared with you a number of experiences with our “space brothers.” Well, I had asked if I had been aboard one of the ships. And you had shared with me that I had had an experience of a conscious movement. I wonder if you could share with me their culture? What are they doing at this time? And their plans for mankind?

ANSWER: Your very question expresses the lack of unity consciousness which I am helping this weekend to diminish. You see, the ego divides that which is One, that which is Whole, up into parts. And so you have this group and that group, this culture, that culture, that intent and purpose as opposed to that intent and purpose. And it does this add infinitum.

Those that you speak of as the “space brothers” are part of the Brotherhood. Do not think just three-dimensionally here, as though they are “space brothers” from another part of the three-dimensional galaxy or universe. They are Awake. They are not here for ego purposes. They are gathering, just as others gather, humanly speaking, for an event, whether it be a rock concert, or a Fourth of July display. It is a gathering for an event that is anticipated, because it is known to be going to happen.

Mankind is Awakening. And what I mean by that is those seemingly trapped in the three-dimensional frame of reference are about to experience their release. Not that their captors are going to come and unlock the doors, but literally because each of you is going to go and rattle the door and discover that it was never locked.

You must understand that those who are experiencing the three-dimensional frame of reference are not just those who are, in popular terms, incarnated upon your planet at this time. Those who have passed on, but who have not Awakened, are still experiencing a three-dimensional perception of the fourth-dimension.

And all who are not Awake are in a process of waking up, because there are no longer enough sleeping to join in mutual agreement about their dreams to maintain the distorted perception any longer. There is not enough mutual agreement present for the limited perception of things to continue. That is why there is a breaking up of the dream, if you will. That is why there is more and more evidence of not being able to be the clear-cut authority over your experience. And it is happening to those on your planet to one degree or another. No one is excluded from it. And it is happening to those that you would say have passed on, who are yet to Awaken fully.

Those that you call the “space brothers” are here, you might say, to observe first hand; and also to act in support of this Movement of Awakening, by—for lack of better words—providing their presence energetically. There have been a number of instances over the last fifteen years, in which—for lack of better words—your planet has been layered or banded with energy of love, which is, of course, an integrating energy, a harmonizing energy, thus making it easier for all of you to give permission. Of course, love is noncoercive and so it cannot impel you to do anything.

Every single one of you must wake up for your own reasons, because you are feeling a Movement and a desire within you. No one can just willy-nilly move you into enlightenment. But support is being provided. It is preferable for you to think of the “space brothers” as members of the Brotherhood, which is the truth, rather than aliens or creatures from other parts of the universe, because they are not.

An image that would have somewhat relevant meaning for you would be that of a football game, where you go and sit in the bleachers around the field because the field, is where the activity is going to be. What you would call “ships” are literally parked on a grid in space around your planet, eager to see the show. Why? Not for amusement, but because, you see, you are part of the Brotherhood also.

And as long as you have been asleep and dreaming dreams and holding yourself apart from the conscious experience of your unity with the whole of the Brotherhood, the whole of the Brotherhood has not been experiencing its wholeness consciously.

And so where you would say that in your process of Awakening you are coming Home, they are awaiting the reuniting, the conscious reuniting. Now you might say, “Well, if they are experiencing themselves as the infinity in which all of Creation is occurring and all of Creation is some aspect of the infinitude of their Being, then they are experiencing every aspect of infinity fully. There is no need for them to have ships, there is no need for them to be on bleachers, or in parking spots in your galaxy.”

But not only are you and everyone of the Brotherhood universal, you are also specific; therefore, it is possible for you to be specifically located at the same time that you are universally “located.” You are universal having specific identity, because the Father in His Self-expression cannot express unspecifically, nebulously, vaguely. And even though you are universal and experience universally when you are fully Awake, you are still specific and experience specifically when you are Awake.

The only thing is that one does not choose to experience specifically for personal reasons, for personal gain, for effect, or for any of the other ego reasons that egos do things. And so those who are here in your vicinity are here because it fulfills purpose, identifying God’s purpose. And as I said, they have been providing energy and, may I say, the mental environment in which it is easier for all of you to wake up. There are others of the Brotherhood who are engaged in fulfillment of the Father’s purpose elsewhere regarding other things.

But I will tell you this: All of the Brotherhood that is Awake, whether they are specifically located in your area, or experiencing your area from the infinite vantage point, all eyes are on you and those who are Awakening, because all look forward to experiencing the Whole of the Brotherhood consciously experiencing its Wholeness. And there is great support and encouragement of love that undergirds every step of Awakening that any of you are willing to engage in.

You see, not only are there not enough dreamers to support the ongoing illusion of a dream, but there are more who are Awake joining with you at the level of your divinity—at the level of what you Really are—in support of your Awakening. It is therefore inevitable that you will wake up.

And I will take this moment to say once again: No one will be left out, because there is no outside of the Kingdom of Heaven for anyone to be. So let us forget about this nonsense of a hundred and forty-four thousand being taken up and the rest left behind to sort of sog in their, well, I’m going to say, righteous anger at being left behind. You are not alone. In every way that you can imagine you are not alone.

QUESTION: I was wondering if you could shed a little light on the subject of dreaming for me—while sleeping? And if we should give our dreams any type of credibility in our lives, or if not, what purpose do they serve?

ANSWER: Dreams are always the result of something else. Dreams are the result of the release of physical tension. They are also the result of what you might call the processing of new data that you have experienced during the day. And also what you might call little “ah-ha” experiences, such as you experience when you find a piece of the puzzle fits here, you say, “Ah!” You put something together. When that kind of assimilation occurs, there is a streaming of images. When a release of physical tension occurs, there is a streaming of images. The real event is not the dream, but the assimilation or the release of physical tension.

I know that there is much dream work that is done, but I do not encourage investing a great deal of energy in it. It is not wrong. Indeed, it can be turned to your advantage; but for the most part it ends up being nothing more than an amusing side trip into psychology that I do not encourage anyone to waste their time doing. I cannot put it more simply than that.

QUESTION: I would like to know when it will start to become easier?

ANSWER: I understand your question. There is a point at which the practice of trust will not seem to be so demanding, and will not seem to bring fear into play; when the practice of trust will not feel as though it is putting you in a vulnerable place.

Part of the problem, as I said earlier today, is that the word “ease” has really meant being able to be less conscious. And being more conscious has meant more work.

As I said, you all go through your day feeling quite confident in doing the grocery shopping, or driving to the post office, or jotting off a letter to someone, without even wondering if it fits into the divine pattern, or whether it identifies fulfillment of purpose. And so no one engages in listening beyond what they are spontaneously motivated to do by circumstances. No one does anything consciously—with a conscious embrace of the whole—so that there is available to you the experience of unity.

And so what seems not easy is the fact that you are insisting upon being more conscious which really is easier and more natural, but which your conditioning labels as work. It gets easier when you realize that it isn’t going to get easier.

QUESTION: Thanks a lot.

ANSWER: That can easily be misunderstood. It gets easier when you yield to being more conscious. It gets easier when you are not holding out in the back of your mind for a time when you’re going to be able to sit back, lay back and not pay attention.

You see, when that happens you will feel your integrity more clearly, in exactly the same way, figuratively speaking, that a youngster feels his integrity more clearly, or her integrity more clearly when he or she moves out of his parents, home and becomes, I’m going to say, self-responsible. In other words, where he is not leaning upon and depending upon his parents for his well-being. He cannot just sit back, lay back and say, “Mom will take care of it, Dad will take care of it. I don’t need to concern myself with it.” He moves out and embraces, usually, with great willingness the added attentiveness, the added conscious awareness that is called for, and experiences himself emancipated from a state of dependence. And that feels good.

Now, the child who is not loaded with confidence, and who for whatever reason is experiencing a great deal of self-doubt, when that time of emancipation comes, experiences it as a potential burden that he may not be able to bear. Therefore, at that point of development there is a great fear. And he does not willingly embrace it. And to the degree that he resists it because it appears to be too much work, rather than an expression of Birthright, he will deny himself that experience of emancipation, that clearer sense of integrity that comes from not being dependent.

Now am I really being inconsistent here? You must understand that to be independent or emancipated does not mean separated. I will tell you that: the United States and England could not experience themselves in relationship or with respected unity until they were distinctly themselves. And therefore, a Declaration of Independence was essential. Until that happened they could not come together with equality, because there was what you could call a co-dependency that existed until the Declaration of Independence was expressed and embodied.

So to not be dependent does not mean to be separate. It is not until there is independence that there can be union, because there is not present that which is equal. And that which is not equal cannot find congruence.

You cannot find and experience your unity with me until you discover that you are like me, which seems to suggest that you are separate from me.

Now bear with me here. Right now each of you wants union or unity with the other; but you will not be able to be truly one with your brother until you discover your divinity, which then discloses his divinity, which then demonstrates to you experientially that you are One, that you are equal and that, therefore, you need have no defense. That is the way it works.

None of you are used to being that Awake. And on top of that, you thought when you got to be twenty-one you would have it made. Now you not only have learned that when you got to be twenty-one nothing special happened, you are now being told that there is growing up to do beyond even the growing up you thought there was—that there is further to go. And then you also find out that I am telling you that the further there is for you to go involves never coming to an end. And your prior concept suggests that there is a lot of work to do.

And so you ask, “When is it going to become easier?” It is going to become easier when you yield to the inevitable and experience your integrity, which will constitute an experience of your power, or what I will call, eternal energy—energy to be you fully without any wear and tear.

When does it get easier? When you say, “What the hell, I’m not going back.” And you commit for your own internal reasons to moving forward. Then it will become easier. And you will learn to engage in the movement more gracefully, and you won’t wonder when the movement will be over. And a new experience of normal will develop.

Now, you are so conditioned to think in terms of accomplishing that you are hearing what I am saying as endless effort or more work than you bargained for. It doesn’t sound particularly inspiring. You must understand that waking up is going to happen because of what you already divinely Are, and work isn’t part of it. It is only from your limited ego-oriented frame of reference at the moment, that what I am describing could seem to sound like work.

The you you perceive yourself to be in a dream that you are having at night can’t possibly wake up the you that is lying in bed. But the alarm clock in your room can. It doesn’t address the you you perceive yourself to be in the dream, it addresses the one who is lying on the bed having the dream. You might say that it addresses the Real You.

Well, the Real You, divinely speaking, is cutting through the validations of the dream, because we’re all in the process of the reunification of the Brotherhood of man being totally Awake, and there aren’t enough to continue the dream. So it will become easier for you instantly if you all recognize the inevitability of change. Not just change of the evolutionary sort, but change in the divine sort, where a new sense of identity lifts you out of an evolutionary sense of self.

It is happening; and if you recognize that it is happening and that you are waking up in the Kingdom of Heaven where you have been all along, you will, as I said, become more curious, which is another way of saying, more enlivened consciously. And it will not feel like work, because it is you coming back into your Right Mind, and therefore your right motivation and energy.

Now I have said all of this so that you may have a most grounded and practical sense of what is happening. So that if it seems effortful, you will not assume that you are off track. And so that you will, as I said earlier, pay attention to the part of you that is unmoved by the ego’s misunderstanding of what is going on, and knows that there is something wonderfully all right about the uneasiness, and so that you will persist as the shift of the sense of yourself actually, experientially occurs.

I tell you so that you may have the courage to yield, rather than to resist. And the reason I can encourage you to do it is because there is no illusion going on, there is no polarity as a fact; therefore, you cannot be putting yourself in jeopardy by practicing trust—trust that carries you beyond your concept of fulfillment and allows you into the experience of fulfillment itself.

As I said, it will become easier when you realize that it isn't going to get easier. It gets gooder.

QUESTION: I'm kind of curious as to what is going to happen. I had a couple of questions and now I'm not sure they're appropriate, so I need to take a minute here to see what is appropriate.

ANSWER: That is fine.

QUESTION: What comes up is that my connection with you or anyone has to do with my celebration for life. If I'm going to keep knowing that from moment to moment I can't help but keep tuning in and listening and appreciating what's always been here. And Heaven has always been here. And it's just the experiencing me that's opening into that experience and knowing how truly wonderful it is. And that's more important than anything else.

ANSWER: What is telling you that? What would make you feel that that is more important than anything else?

QUESTION: Who I am.

ANSWER: How do you know that is what it is?

QUESTION: I don't have any doubt about it. It's the fact that there is no doubt; that there's a certainty that all is well.

ANSWER: Indeed, that certainty does not come from reasoning, but from a deep connectedness and a trust in that deep connectedness.

Now, what I want you to understand is, that that isn't the last step but, the first step. Because it is that conviction that indeed allows you, with gratitude, to be curious so that the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven can replace the confidence or the knowing that it must be here, and that what you are experiencing is some part of it.

What I want all of you to know is, that it is not enough to look at that which is beautiful and even that which is ugly—according to your current perception of things—and say, “This is the Kingdom of Heaven.” Because until you see the wall paper in this room, or the leaves on the trees, and experience the substance of them as Living Love, radiating Love that you are feeling loved by, and until there is the experience of the fact that that Love which is loving you is the love that you are as well, and that there is unity, not separateness, to the infinite variety of expression that you are experiencing, you are not yet experiencing the meaning of the words the Kingdom of Heaven—that is not all there is to experience.

This experience of all form being Living Love is also an experience of it being light—illumination type of Light. The Living Love is Light illuminating, radiating, and I am going to say, exposing the presence of God; which when you are experiencing it, constitutes the exposing of the presence of you because you are inseparable from God.

And so the experience of unity that you will have will not be just an intellectual idea that all of this is the Kingdom of Heaven, but a direct experience of it from the standpoint of God's experience of it. And so there awaits you more than just an appreciation that your fellow man is the Christ, and that everything that you see is a part of the Kingdom of Heaven. That is an idea still.

Your conviction that the acknowledgment of that is essential; and your commitment to gratefully embrace it as such is the first step. The commitment you are bringing to that willingness is indeed going to make—and I do not like using this word here—your process of Awakening more graceful and more enjoyable, because doubt will not be creating strain.

that which is ugly—according to your current perception of things—and say, “This is the Kingdom of Heaven.” Because until you see the wall paper in this room, or the leaves on the trees, and experience the substance of them as Living Love, radiating Love that you are feeling loved by, and until there is the experience of the fact that that Love which is loving you is the love that you Are as well, and that there is unity, not separateness, to the infinite variety of expression that you are experiencing, you are not yet experiencing the meaning of the words the Kingdom of Heaven—that is not all there is to experience.

This experience of all form being Living Love is also an experience of it being light—illumination type of Light. The Living Love is Light illuminating, radiating, and I am going to say, exposing the presence of God; which when you are experiencing it, constitutes the exposing of the presence of you because you are inseparable from God.

And so the experience of unity that you will have will not be just an intellectual idea that all of this is the Kingdom of Heaven, but a direct experience of it from the standpoint of God's experience of it. And so there awaits you more than just an appreciation that your fellow man is the Christ, and that everything that you see is a part of the Kingdom of Heaven. That is an idea still.

Your conviction that the acknowledgment of that is essential; and your commitment to gratefully embrace it as such is the first step. The commitment you are bringing to that willingness is indeed going to make—and I do not like using this word here—your process of Awakening more graceful and more enjoyable, because doubt will not be creating strain.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. Thank you for being with us here today. I have a question about a consciousness called “Master Teacher.” My question is: Is this an Awakened consciousness, and will I be moving to live with him, moving my home to live with him in the near future?

ANSWER: If I tell you that he is Awake, what will that mean to you? If he tells you that he is Awake, what does that mean to you? If I tell you that I am Awake, what does that mean to you?

I will speak for myself: I am Awake. But at the bottom line it doesn't matter to any of you whether I am or not, because you can't prove it. The only thing that matters is, that what you hear is supporting your definite conscious experience of waking up—whatever those words mean to you.

What I am saying is supporting your clearer embrace and experience of your integrity, because it helps you to conceive of the possibility that you really are at this instant divine and that you have the inherent capacity to experience it for yourself. And it gives you nerve to explore it; a willingness to embrace it that, in very practical terms benefits you in terms of promoting your clarity within yourself to yourself. And if Master Teacher does that, if Ramtha does that, if Lazaris does that, if I do that, if that is your experience of us, then embrace us.

But I am not going to give you his credentials. And if I give you mine, which I have, they are still relatively meaningless because who can prove it. So let's not fool ourselves and get caught up in irrelevant folderol. I say that with love.

QUESTION: I have another question. It has to do with the process of sitting in the quiet, and to enter into a state of non-thought. It seems like it is a stream of thinking or a stream of thoughts that go by, and I would like a little more elaboration on non-thought, on that place that you've been talking about.

ANSWER: It is a place beyond that level of the streaming of thoughts that you are describing. Depending upon whether or not you seem to experience becoming centered as a sinking beneath the surface reactive ego level, or rising above the reactive ego level, regardless of which way you seem to experience the movement, the fact is that you will always find that you move through a layer or band, as it were, of chatter—of streaming of thoughts.

This is—for lack of better words—a way marker. It can tell you that you are further away from the ego reactive level and relatively close to that centered place. Do not react to it, notice it and stay with your willing intent to become centered. You will move through that level coming out the other side and find yourself very quickly—for lack of better words—shifting into that recognizable state of centeredness.

This is not unique to you. And you can use it like a child uses a landmark on a long trip that is taken often, that tells him that they are getting close to their destination, even though he has no real sense of distances.

What I am saying does not apply only to you, and everyone else can use that layer of chatter or streaming of thoughts as a way marker. Simply let it be, do not care what the thoughts are and gently keep your intent upon the centering process.

QUESTION: My question is about realizing that I am the fulfillment of the need to serve my Self, with a capital “S”, versus serving the fulfillment of my little “s” self, that when I am experiencing pleasure, is the pleasure that I am feeling coming from the Higher Self big “S”, or a manipulation of the lower self ego telling me that it is the Higher Self? Am I being disillusioned by my lower self of what true pleasure is when I experience it in my body? And if in either case, why would I choose unpleasurable, fearful ordeals to go through, when really I’m trying to get to a pleasurable place?

ANSWER: Whenever you pick ordeals, it is because you are in some way justifying the ordeal, because there is a pay-off that will give you pleasure. Even if the pay-off is getting even, or extracting justice. That is why you would choose an ordeal, because there is a pay-off—in all cases.

Generally speaking, pleasure is that which gives strokes to the ego. That is the case until one arrives at a connection with himself, divinely speaking, at which time the experience of pleasure—if I may put it this way—takes on added and new dimension: dimension that is absent of fear, anxiety, distrust and the thrill of those three elements.

Now not any one of you is totally caught in ego dynamics. No one of you is a total ego. If you take the infinity of what you are and draw a small circle in the middle of it, or let us say, a sphere in the middle of it, the sphere that you create encloses some portion of the infinity of you. The sphere represents ego structures, beliefs. It is a thin sphere, a thin-shelled sphere. What is enclosed by this sphere seems to be governed by and defined by this sphere; and yet, the volume that is inside the sphere is the self-same presence as that which is infinitely present outside the sphere.

So there is always present in the you that thinks it is an ego belief structure—an ego self—there is always present in that, the divineness of what you Are. And that is why we can say that you never forget Home. And there is always that present within the ego spherical structure that remembers and is capable of desiring Home, even though Home seems to be unavailable to you because it is blocked off by the spherical ego structures.

You choose for that which gives the ego strokes (which is always a false sense of pleasure) until you begin to recognize the longing of the essential Self that you Are, part of which is embraced, encased within those ego structures. And then you begin to have an unreasonable desire for more, or something different, something more valid, something more real than those ego structures suggest you are.

And then what you define as pleasure begins to be different from what your ego had defined pleasure to be. Then that of your infinity, which is embraced within the ego structures, begins to be more consciously in alignment with that of what you infinitely are beyond the sphere.

So now what is inside the ego structures and that which is outside the ego structures is much more consciously congruent. And it causes a weakening, a thinning, if you will, of the ego structures so that it begins to be possible for penetration of the ego structures to occur, and for that of you which is divine within the structure to experience union with that of you which is infinitely beyond the ego structures. And that is called an experience of illumination, inspiration or revelation that spurs you on further in terms of your yielding to that of you which is beyond the limits of ego structures.

That is it in a nut shell—an ego shell.

QUESTION: That the shell is dissolved, is that what I am hearing?

ANSWER: When the shell is dissolved you will be experiencing yourself infinitely. You will have the conscious experience of everyone of the Brotherhood and your unity with them. You will experience everything—wall paper, chairs, wood, finger nails, etc., as constituted of Living Love that is Light that illuminates the universe. It will be a different experience from what you are having at this instant. No, it is not dissolved at this moment, but it is getting very thin and penetrations are occurring that are bolstering your apparent courage to continue further.

Don't take these images literally. The purpose of the image of the sphere is simply to describe that which encloses something seeming to separate it from something else. It should be conceived to be a structure like Japanese paper that is used in Shoji screens—very, very thin, easily penetrable. It represents the same thing I described yesterday as the eyelid being the distance between being asleep and being Awake—very little.

And the shell is constituted of nothing more than beliefs which you are already aware are intangible. And so the image is simply a means of conveying to you that all of what you are is present, and the only thing that seems to divide it is something insubstantial, which a little bit of willingness from within the belief structures will penetrate.

QUESTION: Raj, I was the last speaker last night, and I have a question on the answer that you have given me. And that is that there are times when I am sleeping and then I become conscious, but I don't open my eyes. And I feel like there is this overwhelming presence that I feel like is taking over my entire body, and I cannot breathe and then I feel like my heart is racing. And I feel that I need to literally pull myself out of whatever energy has me. It has happened so often that many times I say to myself: "Let go, let go, go into it, let it take you, let it take you." And I cannot do it.

And I wanted to know if at that time, based on the answer that you gave me yesterday, is that my ego holding on and not allowing me to go into spirit at that point, or is that something else?

ANSWER: Indeed, that is what it is. And the unwillingness of the ego is what you are experiencing as that which has hold of you. What you are feeling the inclination to move into is not what has hold of you. I'm going to put it this way: you are at a point of letting go of structure. I do not mean by that the structure of the body. I mean by that the ego structures that we spoke about yesterday that confine you.

Literally it is like a chick that is ready to expand beyond what the egg can contain. And so at that point the chick feels confined as though what had been supporting and nurturing it is becoming its enemy, its imprisonment.

So understand that it is not something outside of you which is getting hold of you, it is something that has had hold of you all along. But because you were not in a mode of release, of expansion, of yielding to unfoldment beyond the confines of the ego structures, you did not feel the confinement.

Let me assure you that the result of yielding into the movement of capital "B" Being, the movement of your essential self, the result of that will never be death—but as has been said, "will be eternal life." What do those words "eternal life" mean? They don't mean endless life, they mean life incapable of embracing the suggestion of an experience unlike it. It is life without any other option available to you, even as a thought.

The ego suggests, always, that if you yield into God, or if you yield into your Infiniteness, you will sacrifice all of this—you will sacrifice your identity, you will sacrifice those you love. But the only thing that will be sacrificed are the ego structures.

And that is the reason the ego directs you with lies, telling you that you will lose everything that has meaning for you. It does it so as to save its skin. It knows that when you yield into your essential Infinity you will not value or validate the ego any longer and it will seem to die, it will disappear from your conscious experience of yourself. So it says, "You will die. You will lose. It will cost you." And it does this to hold you within its confines.

So what has hold of you is not something larger than you, taking you over. It is the tininess of you that has been present, which you are at a point of expanding beyond. You remember that I said you cannot deal with the problem from the level of the problem? Well, as you allow yourself to embrace whatever is beyond the level of the problem, you will come to a threshold where the problem does seem aggravated and more confining, because you are at the point of violating that limit. And you simply need to persist, embracing that which is beyond the level of the problem, so that the larger perspective becomes yours, and you are able to see that the problem is not a problem—is not a dead-end—but what you might call a wall with a door in it. But until you get right up to the wall you cannot see that there is a door, an unlocked door that you can pass right through.

Do not be afraid of this: I have said before that the gate or doorway to the Kingdom of Heaven is surrounded by gargoyles. This is figuratively speaking, of course. The ego projects these fearsome images upon the gateway, you might say, the threshold of your Awakening, and it scares you. It comes up with its trump cards, you might say, in the game of illusion to keep you confined within your ignorance.

That is why you have help available to you. The Holy Spirit turns this to your advantage when you are willing to dishonor the images, the frightening images the ego presents to you that you will lose yourself; you will lose your sanity; you will become not respectable; you will be crazy; you will lose everything that has meaning, everything will go to pot. It has an endless list.

But you have your capital “S” Self, you have the Holy Spirit, you have the Father, you have your guidance, all standing in ready support the moment you express the slightest willingness to dishonor the limit that you have been conditioned to believe is real. That is why the joining is so important. That is why it is essential to the Awakening process to sacrifice the insistence upon being alone, self-sufficient, self-responsible, needing no other.

Do not be afraid of this experience. My having told you this will not necessarily allow you to yield into it totally the next time it happens, but don’t fret yourself about it. You will continue to have the opportunity and you will finally say, “Yes.”

QUESTION: You have said that relationships are the crucible to Awakening. My question or curiosity is about our relationship to our bodies, and understanding them more as light, the light that they are, rather than what we’ve always known up to now as density. And then, furthermore, how that figures in to or touches upon human sexuality.

ANSWER: First of all you cannot have a relationship with that which is inseparable from you. Therefore, you cannot have a relationship with your body.

The reason the concept of a relationship with one's body occurs is because it appears when someone passes on that the essence of them leaves the body and so it appears that they are two separate things.

Now, when you look at the sun or a bright light and then you take your eyes away, the image remains in your range of vision until it fades. Literally, when someone passes on, what you end up disposing of is the afterimage left in your eyes, because no one has ever left that which identifies them. No one has ever left the visibility and tangibility of their Individuality behind or anywhere. Not anyone who has passed on has experienced a loss of body.

And just as the afterimage of the sun fades because the sun is no longer there to support the image, the body that you bury fades—you say it decomposes. But it fades because there is no longer present in your range of vision that which supports the image. The reason being, that that one has simply moved beyond the limit that you are conditioned to allow yourself to experience. It is that simple.

I will tell you something: This room is not just filled with those of you whom you can see. It is a glorious assemblage, if I may put it that way, of all of you and your guides and those who stand in support of your Awakening with your guides, and the illumination of them, and truly the illumination of you at this instant. Because even though you are experiencing yourself in a limited fashion, you are present in your full glory. The illumination of us all is magnificent.

And all are present for you to see if, as I have been saying, you simply stop squinting your eyes. And as I said, the means of doing that is becoming simply curious—delightfully curious—as a child is curious. Don't work at it. Let there be a willingness to experience it if it happens. That's a good start.

Your body is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality. Your Individuality is the direct expression of the Father/Mother/God. It is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly.

Now I have said this before, but it bears repeating: There is no such thing as unexpressed God; therefore, there cannot be invisible God. Therefore, there cannot be invisible you. Your body is the visibility of you. And because you are the Individuality that is the direct expression of God, from whom God has withheld nothing of what He/She Is, your body's intent to identify you perfectly is the intent to identify God perfectly.

Therefore, you cannot have a relationship with your body, because you are not something separate from it. You did not come into it at the moment of conception, you brought it with you through a doorway, you might say, called conception. As you begin to understand that your body is You identified—and I am saying You, with a capital "Y"—the divine You that I have been describing—you will realize that your body is incapable of acting at odds with you.

That which is single, that which is indivisible, cannot be polarized. That which is divisible is polarized, and that which is divisible can only exist in relationship. If your body is incapable of acting at odds with you, because it is You, with a capital “Y”, then that realization eradicates the fear you have that your body can act at odds with you. And in the absence of that fear, you no longer feel called upon to protect yourself against your body.

Do you see how inconsistent it is to distrust, be angry with, or protect yourself against something that is you? Can you see how unintelligent that is? How incongruent that is? And it sets up a state of mind that is in conflict, but it is an insane, unreasonable belief. In the absence of the conflict of a defended stance, you experience peace. And in that peace you find your body embodying You, with a capital “Y”—the presence of God that You/It is. And you say you have experienced a healing.

Beware if you think that the healing was the result of your thought, or your metaphysical work, or your clear correct thinking. It is the result of the fact that it never was divided and that it always has been incapable of acting at odds with you. And when the dissonance of your fear and self-protection were set aside, you were then able to experience it as it is.

Now, I am not going to speak at any length about human sexuality. I would rather direct your attention to what I will hesitantly refer to as divine sexuality: The experience you have when you are not seeing yourself as a mind inhabiting a body that is different from it, being an ego on the face of your planet in relationship with other egos on the face of your planet. Rather I’m going to speak in terms of the capital “Y” You that you are, the body that is the visibility of the You with a capital “Y” that you are, and the undistorted, unconflicted experience of communion, rather than communication or relationship.

Being—existing—is going to be always an experience, which means it is always going to feel like something. It is never going to occur and not be noticed by you.

Human sexuality is an attempt to experience union. It is an attempt, through space, to break down the sense of separation that is inherent in the ego’s frame of reference—what I have referred to as the three-dimensional frame of reference. As you allow human sexuality to be exalted in the awareness that you are divine, and that your body is the visibility of this divine Individuality that you are—just as you let your body be exalted by the realization that it cannot act at odds with you and the exaltation you call healing—you will find that the experience of togetherness, humanly speaking, will be subsumed or consumed—totally embraced—in the experience of communion, Oneness.

Defenselessness will be what is characteristic of the experience. Performance will be absent from the experience. Self-consciousness will be absent from the experience. And the attempt to convey something, with the potential for failing at conveying it, will be absent. And in the gentleness and the peace of this experience, joy that goes beyond any orgasmic experience you have ever had, will be what you will experience.

The joy, the nature of which is peace: those two words do go together in the divine experience. It will not be excitement, it will be calm all-consuming joy. It will be joy without any edge of fear.

Now, as I said yesterday, each of you, all of us are at one in the same time universal and specific. And I indicated that the specific visibility and tangibility of all of us is what you call the body. And the universe—the wholeness of the Creation of God—is the infinity of us. And we experience in our Awakened state the wholeness fully, but we also experience it specifically.

Those who are Awake do not engage in copulation. It is really a limited way of experiencing unity. I will tell you that when bodies of light pass through each other there is an exquisite and profound experience. It is experience of unity specifically, that all of us are always experiencing universally—infinity. I cannot convey the experience to you more completely than that.

What all of you look for in human sexuality is the experience of union. It is your best attempt at escaping being alone, of escaping the seemingly inescapable sense of being isolated. The motivation is indeed a challenge to the belief that you are isolated and alone. But since you are attempting to do it through space, through communication, you continue to substantiate the sense of isolation.

The only way to get past or beyond the sense of isolation is through communion. And communion only happens from the very center of you—that place that all of you reach when you meditate. Because it is in that center of your conscious experience of being consciousness that the actual wholeness, the actual indivisible and undivided wholeness of Creation is present to be experienced.

Now I'm not suggesting that you all become celibate and go into a cave and meditate so as to enjoy each other more fully. But I am suggesting that when you are intimate with each other, you stop trying to be a performer of an act that is supposed to be meaningful, wherein it is your responsibility to communicate or convey something to another to let them know that they are loved to prove to them that they are loved, and to prove to yourself that you are capable of being a good lover.

I encourage you to allow yourself to be at peace and to give up the idea of trying to be something effective and meaningful. I encourage you to approach your partner without judgment, but rather with love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R”, in your partner, that which is the Christ. And don’t tell me that it will make it impossible for you to make love to somebody who is the Christ, as though making love were inconsistent with divinity.

The recognition that your partner is the Christ is the acknowledgment that your partner is someone you need not be defended against. It is a way for you to give permission to yourselves, to let yourself be undefended, receptive to your partner. It is a way of letting your partner in. Forget about this religious perception of Christhood as being ultimately pure and therefore unlike you—a status that is unreachable. Christhood is utter simplicity. Christhood is utter humility, utter self-acceptance—being at peace with yourself at this moment and at any given moment without judgment being held in reserve in case you goof; and without holding judgment in reserve relative to your partner in case they goof.

We could go on for quite a while on this subject, but I have conveyed the fundamental idea.

QUESTION: I Thank you.

ANSWER: Have good sex. You are welcome.

Is it not amazing to you that as you open up to revelation, as you open up to that which is beyond your ego concepts, you do it with expectations. Is it not amazing that you find yourself having very definite ideas about what ought to happen. Already there are some of you here who are forgetting what we spoke about the first morning and the second day, that we are not here to get a bunch of new metaphysical toys; that I’m not here to give you a fix, a thrill, a spiritual ride, but rather we are here to be together.

The meaning is to be together with: it is an experience of inclusiveness, it is an experience of family. We could all be together in silence. But it fulfills purpose for us to share in this fashion. Again, what is shared is not the point, it is the gathering, if you will, it is the being together with.

Many of you notice that I am repeating things that I have said before in other gatherings, and there is an impatience to get on to something new. But you see, I am not here to get on to anything. I am here to be together with you. We are here to be together with ourselves. We are here to be together in a new way, a new way that contributes to spontaneous relaxation into the clearer perception of who you are, who we are.

I’m not speaking to the world today. I am together with all of you. And I am saying what is appropriate for us together. And I am not saying anything that I seemed to have said before in the way I said it before, because we have never been together before here today. Have we?

Again, recognize the fact that there is a tendency to open up to the larger spiritual view, as you might put it, and it is done with an agenda being provided for that larger spiritual view to conform to. Do you see that your very specific expectation as to what the spiritual experience is going to be constitutes a bias, that you insert between you and the experience of revelation—and it constitutes a block. It doesn't constitute willingness. It doesn't constitute a yielding. It doesn't constitute unconditionality.

How on earth can you open to the unknown when you are looking for the known to be reflected in it? What you want and need to find reflected in it is what is Real.

We are not here to glean metaphysical morsels to roll around on our tongue, to add a little spice to life. We're here for a new experience of being ourselves and a new experience of our world as it Really Is.

I want to point out something else as well. When you have an agenda of your own relative to revelation, you are not able to be present with the revelation on its terms. And likewise, when you are relating to someone else and you have an agenda of your own relative to them, you are not truly able to be present with them. And so the value and the meaning of the experience is lost.

How do you be a teacher to someone else? By having no agenda, whatsoever—being unconditionally present from your center, being with, being inclusive, letting in that other. And in that state of defenselessness, finding yourself being able to be perfectly appropriate being the flow of the Movement of Creation that God is being right then and there, and watching the clarity of that expression emerge, rather than an ongoing experience of communication, separation, relationship and the stress of it.

I'm being with you. And we are all being appropriate together. And getting a fix, a hype, a stimulation, intellectually, is not the point. You need to realize that the ego would indeed have you search for something more and more stimulating. Of course, it means stimulating intellectually, with grand new wonderful ideas that keep you from feeling bored.

But the originality of you arises not out of stimulation, not out of excitement, not out of fantastic tidbits of intellectual, spiritual stimulation, but rather from the humble peace of your Being that allows you to be so present with that you are spontaneously in the flow of the Movement that God is Being, the Movement that your Individuality is being and the Individuality you are with is being.

You be a teacher by simply being, not being some thing in particular. You be a teacher by simply being you, and from that point being with every other one and everything.

So be careful of your own agendas. Let there be a curiosity to know what the Father's agenda is, because that is what is confronting you at all times. And I will tell you that the Father's agenda is always more meaningful and fulfilling than your best thought out spiritual agenda.

QUESTION: My question has been asked, I'm sure, and you've given the answer, I'm sure, many times. However, I feel sort of like the donkey whose attention has now been gotten, and that's as far as it goes. For example, yesterday when you said that in the last ten minutes, we shifted or made some sort of quantum leap or whatever the term you used was, and I thought, "Shit, missed it again." And I've been trying to formulate an intelligent question, writing things down, but with no meaningful result. So that's my non-question.

ANSWER: The shift occurred with everyone, whether it registered consciously or not. And it will surface and register with you. You did not miss it.

Always stay with the Movement, the Movement you feel within yourself. Understand that you do not need to be in any particular way. In order to fulfill a prerequisite for enlightenment. When you listen for guidance, your questions do not have to be perfect. And it is not an imposition, it does not constitute an unpleasantness to those of us who are working with all of you, to have you ask the same question over and over again.

If that is where the Movement is in you, then that is where your attention needs to be given, and that is where you need to continue to be curious. It is only your conditioning that says that you should have gotten it the first time, or the tenth, or the thousandth time. It doesn't matter. If you haven't gotten it and you deserve to get it, then the only thing that is appropriate is to continue to do that which causes you to be in a state of receipt—a willingness to embrace. And you do that by means of your questions, your desire to know.

There is no formality that is required in working with those who stand with you as teachers or guides. There is no obedient respect that you must present yourselves with. The only thing that is required is for you to allow yourself to be genuinely you, totally honest.

Paul does not call me Jesus, because he finds that he cannot be genuine: he becomes awkward, he clams up, he has this conditioned feeling that he must somehow be free of problems before approaching me. And that is why we use the name Rajpur; because then he can swear at me, he can express his frustration, and I will say, be real, come to me exactly as he is experiencing himself to be at that moment. Of course, then that allows us to get down to brass tacks immediately, because we do not have to cut through this etiquette crap.

The ego keeps all of you in falsehood. It keeps all of you from being genuine, because you had better be a certain way in order to deserve what I have been telling you is already your Birthright. You're already part of the Brotherhood, all of you. You are already constituting members of the Brotherhood, if I may put it that way. The idea that you need to do anything to deserve it is ridiculous. And until you will allow yourself to be genuinely where you are and express yourself genuinely, all you are doing is providing irrelevant garbage that both you and I and your guides must cut through before we can get down to fundamentals.

And so I encourage you to present yourselves to your guidance, present yourselves to the Holy Spirit, present yourselves to the Father by means of inquiry, by means of desire to know without any false sense of a need to be something in particular that is different from who you are experiencing yourself to be at the moment, and with feelings that are different than you're actually feeling at the moment. Thank you for your non-question.

QUESTION: My question is a little bit different from what other people are asking you. About 2000 years ago when Jesus was living, human population was only one million, that's the estimation by the scientist. Now we have about five billion people living on this earth. And the scientists are even expecting it's going to increase to twenty billion by the year 2050. What is the purpose for us? And I really wonder why we have to keep increasing ourselves and killing each other, what other beings never do. I don't think other beings ever increase their numbers that quickly. Who are we and what is the purpose?

ANSWER: I will tell you at the bottom line it is all ego oriented. It is an expression of authority, it is an expression of arrogance, it is an attempt to leave one's mark on the world; and indeed, it involves not being sensitive to the whole, because man is arrogant enough to think that he has no need to take anything else into consideration.

It is thought that the dawn of conscience took place some time ago in history, but the dawn of Conscience, with a capital "C", is literally beginning only now. Man has not seen himself as being part of the whole, and therefore has conducted himself in insensitive ways. It is a humiliating thing to mankind to think that he might have to fit in. That is where the arrogance is.

Mankind is at a point of the demand for maturity, much like a nineteen year old finds himself or herself in, where there is a call for greater sensitivity and less willfulness, less action without thought about its effect. There is a natural harmony to life, even three-dimensionally speaking, which comes into play when arrogance is released, when there is a willingness to be with the world, not apart from it or above it—this is the joining, this is the communion.

You see, we have been talking about communion, and the tendency is to think that it is communion with that which is divine—like inner guidance. But I have been expressing the fact that that communion is to be experienced relative to this glass, and relative to the wall paper, and relative to each other, all of you in this room. That's being with, not holding yourselves apart—that is communion.

Now it happens that this dawn of Conscience, with a capital "C", meaning divine Conscience, is happening at almost the same time in which mankind as a whole is Awakening from illusion. And so there is not going to be a long period of time after the dawn of Conscience and the embodying of it, the living of it in the world, there will not be a long period of time for man to enjoy that level of maturity, because mankind is awakening out of the linear development and growth patterns that are inherent in identifying one's self as a body in a material world, living out a process of evolution.

You are quite correct that it is not natural for this great growth of population. Now the estimates at this time, as you stated them, are indeed the best estimates. But that degree of growth is not going to occur, because during the next twenty years there is going to be such radical spiritual regeneration occurring on your planet that this releasing of arrogance and this willingness to be present with is going to take precedence. A willingness to be part of and be sensitive to the whole will begin to dominate. And I share that with you as an interesting piece of information.

QUESTION: I'd like to take this time to express my happiness, my gratitude for the opportunity to be present in this sharing. And I'd also like to thank all who made it a part for me to attend this gathering.

My question has to do with "The Lord's Prayer." And would you please tell us the true original meaning of the words and please in a break down format of the phrases of the "Lord's Prayer."

ANSWER: First of all you must understand that a prayer is only reasonable and meaningful in a frame of reference that has as its primary characteristic the sense of separation. And a prayer is always an unconscious desire for the return of the experience of unity when disunity is what is being experienced.

"Our Father who art in Heaven." Well, that's a good start, because one is reaching outside of his present sense of things. It is an acknowledgment that there is something more than one's present sense of things. That is the beginning of what I have been calling curiosity. Until there is an interest in something beyond one's present experience, one simply exists in it unconscious of any choice and simply endures whatever he is experiencing and calls it fate.

"Our Father who art in Heaven," meaning: some place more real, some place happier, some place different from what I am experiencing. The first line of "The Lord's Prayer" is like the first lesson in the Course—"Nothing that I see means anything." The first line of "The Lord's Prayer" says, "What I am experiencing is not so dominate in my life that it hasn't occurred to me that there is something more."

"Hallowed be Thy name." That is an expression of honor, an acknowledgment of the divinity of that to which the pray-er is reaching out. In so many words it says, "I do not know who you are that I am praying to, but I do honor you as being that which I need not be afraid."

"Thy Kingdom come." "I desire to experience your point of view. I don't know what it is, but I desire to experience it, because I am no longer absolutely addicted to my current sense of things. And I am willing to have something penetrate it. I am willing for the light that you must be to penetrate the darkness I seem to be experiencing."

"Thy will be done." I will tell you something: That is not, I'm going to put this way, that has not been the last line of "The Lord's Prayer." But in the present time it is. "Thy will be done"—not mine.

In another channeled work called Science And Health, which is not generally thought of as a channeled work, there is an interpretation of that line that is given that says, "Enable us to know as in Heaven so on earth, God—Good—is supreme."

Now "Thy will be done" is a relinquishment of any personal agenda, a relinquishment of willfulness, a relinquishment of arrogance, a relinquishment of dependence upon one's own best judgment. It is the ultimate invitation for the conscious experience of Reality undistorted by any personal private sense of self. It is the invitation for the sovereignty of God to fill the individual pray-er with that divine awareness that God Is, and that divine mind that constitutes the pray-er's real mind.

"Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed by thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done." That statement practiced would cause no pray-er to be further present to finish the rest of the prayer.

When I first shared this prayer, no one was ready to finish the prayer there, or comprehend that that is the ultimate end. And just as I am being with you today, I was being with them then, in perfect appropriateness.

This first part of the prayer acknowledges that which is desired, the nature of that which it is desired from, and, to whatever limited degree, a willingness to stand in an attitude of receipt. But it was necessary because of the ignorance of the true nature of God to continue the prayer in a relative rather than an absolute manner—relative to the human condition. Because it was thought that God was a wrathful God, capable of love and hate, who could dish out catastrophe and disaster and famine and poverty, etc. And the people needed a new language that expressed a new concept of God more closely approximating the Reality of God.

“Give us this day our daily bread.” The very first word of that sentence was mind blowing, if you will. “Give us this day our daily bread.” Meet our need, our very human need, through a gift. It doesn’t say, “give me the opportunity to earn my daily bread.” “Give us this day our daily bread.” Initially that was an almost unfathomable concept of God—very transformational, in terms of Conscious Awareness.

Again, it was a matter of not only understanding God in a new way, but expressing again a willingness to stand in receipt of what now I would call your Birthright—their birthright. They deserved their daily bread just because they existed, because of what they divinely are.

“And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.” Ah, here was a little bit more conscience being introduced. In other words, as the pray-er was willing to forgive his brother, he should be forgiven of the Father—that love is reflected in love, that indeed one cannot expect to be forgiven of the Father without forgiving in return, relative to one’s fellow man, that they really are not two different things. It made it clear that one could not move into relationship with the Father and get the goodies and leave one’s fellow man out in the cold, because that isn’t the nature of Reality.

“And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.” Lead us not into evil, but deliver us from evil. This was a correction of the wrathful and hateful and spiteful concept of God. It allowed the people to more easily release this polarized sense of God. Obviously, only a God that is single of purpose—indivisible—could have the inclination and love and kindness to not lead one into harm.

Again, that was a new concept of God and was more deeply moving to those who heard the prayer than it is to you today; because, generally speaking, there is a more positive concept of God today than there was then. You see, “give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. Lead us not into temptation,” humanly speaking, “but deliver us from evil”—deliver us from temptation, deliver us from the whispered suggestions of the ego—that’s the temptation, the hypnotic suggestion.

These phrases all have reference to the human experience from which the pray-er is wanting release.

“For thine is the kingdom,” not mine. And therefore, my agendas are meaningless, and my agendas are not what I’m interested in. “And the power.” Thine is the power. These are powerful words. “Thine is the power.” I don’t have any power of my own.

You have heard the words, “I of myself can do nothing.” “If you have seen me, you have seen the Father.” If you have seen each other, you have seen the Father. It wasn’t just me. Thine is power. These words allowed for great Movement to occur, great calling into question of the idea or concept of personal power. As I said the other day, the ability to just get up and willy-nilly go to the store and get a dozen eggs because you've done it, and why would you need to see whether it fit in or was appropriate. You certainly could accomplish it without catastrophe.

“For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory.” Not just for a few minutes, but forever. These last phrases refer everything back to the Father, as I have been saying in the last couple of days. This prayer, if it is halfway embraced, halfway willingly treated as though the words really meant something, brings into play, spontaneously, the curiosity that weakens the ego structures enough to allow for the penetration of truth to occur.

I would encourage all of you, presently, to finish the prayer at the line “Thy will be done.” This is an essential aspect of graduation, of Awakening. It is the equivalent of the last lesson in A Course In Miracles, which in effect says, “I will make no decisions by myself. I will forever listen for Thy voice. I will not lean unto mine own understanding. I want to Know, with a capital “K”, and I will listen.”

In this more distilled form, it will indeed draw greater reaction from your egos. It will not like you consciously reminding yourself, “Thy Will, not mine be done.” But in this more distilled form it will indeed promote more rapid and even more graceful transformation and Awakening: you all coming back into your right Mind, with a capital “M”, you all finding your eyelids fluttering open so that you may see the Kingdom of Heaven right in front of you.

Do not say the prayer as though it is a string of words, the rehearsal of which will do the trick. But dare to believe that the words really mean something and that what they mean will be the undoing of the ego structures that incarcerate you in a totally insane and false sense of yourself, causing your release.

QUESTION: It's wonderful being with you again. And I'm so grateful for this gathering. It certainly was worth coming for all the way from where I was. What I would like to know is what I need to know at this particular moment.

ANSWER: What you need to know is that you are right where you are supposed to be. I mean by that, when you are in the other part of the Kingdom of Heaven—the part you have come from, and you are there—to consciously embrace the awareness that it is the Kingdom of Heaven.

I will tell you this: The likelihood is that you will not be able to stay there indefinitely acknowledging it as the Kingdom of Heaven, but your presence there and your conscious acknowledgment of it as that is being the leaven that leavens the whole lump. It will become obvious to you when it is time to leave. And it will be important for you not to insist upon over staying your welcome in the name of truth, or in the name of healing.

There is a point at which the catalyst is removed from that which it is creating ferment or change. And so when it becomes obvious to you that it is no longer appropriate to be there, say, “Thank you, I am glad that I have been able to be the presence of appropriateness, and I am ready and I am willing to go now where it is appropriate for me to be in order to identify fulfillment of purpose. What is your Will Father?”

QUESTION: I’ve recently returned from living eight years in Egypt. And I’m still uncertain of the real purpose of the great Pyramid. Also my studies say that in 1998 there will be information discovered hidden in the paw of the Sphinx, for the world. And in my studies it states that Jesus actually did his initiation in Heliopolis and afterwards spent three days in the great Pyramid.

Could you clarify this information for me, these concepts I’ve had? And also am I through in Egypt, or do I still have something to complete there?

ANSWER: Yes, your work is complete and you can sigh a sigh of relief and let there be unconditional curiosity about the present and about what is now going to identify fulfillment of purpose for you.

As regards my experience, it is still not appropriate for me to make any comment about the unaccounted for period of my life. That time will come, but it is not yet.

ANSWER: I am going to say one more thing to the last questioner. Avoid carrying forward with you, what I will call, an umbrella of your memory of the last eight years and its focus. You have emerged from that stage of your life. Do not let there be a sense of that purpose carried forward with you because it is so familiar.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. Sometimes when he gives answers there are images. And it’s as though this period of eight years, the imagery of it is like a tunnel. No meaning is given as to the tunnel, but the point is that you’ve emerged from this period. And in coming out of the tunnel, you’ve come out into the sunshine.

But if you carry with you, in the sense of contemplating what your experience has been and so on, it will be like extending the tunnel, or carrying an umbrella that doesn’t allow you to stand freely in the sunlight, to feel it. So the sense of it is, don’t carry that forward. Leave yourself free to stand in the light now.

QUESTION: I have a great curiosity about how I came to this beautiful Island. I arrived here two years ago. I did not really want to come. I had no specific interest in coming to this Island. Not knowing anybody or knowing anything about this Island, I came here because I had this nagging little voice in me saying, “go to Hawaii.” And finally I packed a little bag and even made steps to where I would go from here to have an exciting trip. And I arrived here with a little bag and well, that’s two years ago. I stayed ever since. This is home.

What I would like to know is was it me who created the need to come to Hawaii straight from Europe, not knowing anything about this Island? Was it need within me that I create that maybe out of past life experiences. Or was it the strings of this beautiful glorious Island that called me? I heard the stories from other people that this Island calls people. And if yes, why?

ANSWER: I’m going to put it this way: Wherever the flower of you is blossoming, there you will be called to come. It is very simple you see. If you will imagine a tulip bulb, you put it in the ground. It appears to you that the bulb is all there is, but you know that that’s not all there is to the meaning of the bulb. There is a plant and there is a flower, and fourth-dimensionally speaking it is all present—the seed, the plant, the blossom and the seed—it is all present simultaneously. You plant the seed and you water it and a shoot begins to peak above the ground.

What is happening? What is happening is that the flower is calling the plant up to where the blossom of it is going to occur. That is the best way I can express the fourth-dimensional ever presence of the whole idea of the flower in three-dimensional terms. You experience the presence of the wholeness of it in a linear fashion in time. Where the flower is blossoming, if it is eleven inches above the ground is where it will call forth the plant to come. If it is ten inches above the ground that is where it will call it to, not eleven inches.

And so the unfoldment of your fulfillment of purpose, shall I say, pulls you to where your fulfillment is occurring. This Island has no capacity of itself to call you or anyone else. But this Island as some aspect of the infinitude of your being, and you bring yourselves together to be that point where fulfillment of purpose is identified. You could just as easily say, three-dimensionally speaking, that you drew the Island to you, even though visually speaking it appeared that you were the one that moved. The point is that it is a movement of fulfillment of purpose.

Now if your fulfillment of purpose, if the blossoming of the flower of your Being were to occur in Tulsa Oklahoma, that is where you would have found yourself to have been drawn. You would find yourself just as unquestionably moving toward that spot.

Do you see why it is so important to yield to the Movement of God, rather than have your own agenda? Because if the tulip bulb said, “I deserve to blossom here at ten inches, and I am not going any further,” it would have a problem. And you would likely find that the plant began to take on a distorted shape, until it finally said “UNCLE” and let go into its natural inevitable fullness.

This Island has no capacity to draw anyone to it, but the Movement of your Being has unquestionable, unchallengeable ability to configure All That Is in the way that perfectly identifies the fulfillment of purpose ordained by the Father in the Movement of Creation that the Father is Being that looks like you. You yielded with much faith.

And you like Susan and Paul find yourself going through a process of detoxification: the release of old junk, old habits, old concepts, and especially old limitations of control. And this is wonderful, even though at times your egos interpret it as most uncomfortable.

QUESTION: I wish to thank you for a lesson you gave me a couple of years ago, about coming before the fences defenseless. And I feel that now. And I acknowledge that. A couple of years ago, in one of these seminars, I asked a question and your answer to me was to come upon the fences that I create, defenseless. And I now know what that feels like and I have a glimpse to the future and the present without the fences.

ANSWER: You will also find that there will be some future fences that you will need to violate. But because of your experience, it will be easier for you to violate them—be disobedient to their intent to hold you in—more gracefully.

Do not be surprised to find that there are subtler forms of defense, that are now available to you to have the pleasure of violating because the grosser forms of defense have been moved through.

QUESTION: I came to you with a question that you keep answering in many forms. I’m at the point of understanding the essence of it, but I still must ask the question.

There is a piece of land that has opened itself for a place of healing in the North Shore, where we can gather and allow wholeness to exist in our sharingness, with the intentions of opening the doorway to the fourth-dimension, and keeping it open with each other’s intentions of sharing and love. And I just would like to know if there is a future that you can give me on this?

ANSWER: I will tell you that as with the tulip bulb and the unfoldment in a linear fashion of that which is already whole, this Center needs to be paid attention to in terms of the present movement, without concern about its destination. It is imperative for you and those you are associated with to stay with the feeling, to stay with the service, to stay with the being with, that I have been speaking of.

I have not come into this gathering for the purpose of accomplishing any end goal, only for the purpose of being with—of being in communion and being utterly appropriate in the process, so that all of us may experience the feel of utter appropriateness that has no secondary purpose to it, that has no purpose beyond the utter perfection of presence. If you indulge in attempting to peg every step with a clear-cut concept of what the end product will be, you will not be present with the Movement of it as it is unfolding at the moment, and you will not be able to be appropriate.

You cannot afford to have an agenda, especially an agenda that is called a timetable. You have had ultimate evidence this weekend that in spite of Paul's attempts to have an agenda, to start on time, to quit on time, that either the lights have not worked, or water has spilled into the video recorder, or the doors were locked, or the table had been moved, etc.

There is something other than human will unfolding the Movement of Life. And likewise, there is something other than human will unfolding the Movement that you are feeling as the unfolding development of a Center.

So I would encourage you to simply remain attentive in that place where this experience of Movement is occurring, and listen, listen, listen. Do not assume that acts are called for until, as a result of listening and not figuring out, it is obvious to you that a step needs to be taken. And do not jump to conclusions. Do not have a sense of what a Healing Center ought to be.

If a Healing Center is a point of the influx of the presence of the Father through a crack in the ego structures, and the influx of the Father is going to move everyone beyond ego structures, then you have no idea what the original, the constantly original form of what this Healing Center will be.

But you say, "Well, a Healing Center is traditionally this and that, and we are adding 'New Age' this and that and the other thing, and we are being very contemporary and we are listening." If you are being contemporary, you are not listening. Dare to be open enough to have that which is utterly original come forth. What will be utterly original will also be utterly simple, just as our being with each other is fundamentally simple.

I will tell you something: A year from now you may not remember exactly what we talked about, but you will remember being with each other, all of us. And you will remember the feel and the meaning of the feeling of being with. And that will modify the way you live with your others in your "natural habitats"—your home bases.

Remember, when you have a concept of how a thing ought to be, you are not free to experience what it is. And the less preconception you have, the more possible it is for you to experience something utterly original.

What you want is the presence of God—the illumination of the light of God—which at the moment you couldn't possibly describe to me. But you know what? You and everyone else has the capacity to bring into play the curiosity necessary to create the crack in the ego structures that allows the light, that you do not yet comprehend, to penetrate. And then you will comprehend it by virtue of experience.

You see what I'm doing? I'm encouraging all of you to dare to be full, open consciousness, unconditional in that openness, providing no sieve through which the light must come to conform to some preconception you are holding.

Now I am certainly not scolding you or challenging you in any way. What I am doing is describing the manner in which to most effectively allow this Center to unfold itself in a most original way, and in a way that is most graceful for you and those with you in this endeavor.

Above all don't be impatient. Do not operate on the basis of a deadline. As the saying goes: "Infinite patience brings immediate results." Impatience is willfulness. It blocks the immediate direct experience of the ultimate that is present at this instant to be experienced—the ultimate of you, the ultimate of your world, which is really the presence of the Christ and the presence of the Kingdom of Heaven, whether it looks like Honalei Bay, or Saudi Arabia, or mainland United States, or wherever.

QUESTION: Raj, this morning you again talked about God, the wrathful God, the God of duality, a God of opposites...

ANSWER: Oh, let us be very clear, I spoke of the belief of a wrathful God.

QUESTION: Yes, I felt that theme very much ties into this question. The concern of obsession or possession of negative entities seems to be identified by several helping professionals today as a root cause in schizophrenia or multiple personalities or other mental disorders. Now in the last few months my being is drawing in several of such persons with such difficulties, and I am fully aware how this is facilitated for my growth and for my learning.

I'm very interested, Raj, in what you might say on this particular subject. And how I might strengthen my own individual model that really desires to see the wholeness or the individual perfection and divinity in each of these persons and their disease.

ANSWER: Multiple personalities is a situation where there is self-denial, and what is called dissociation—the inability of the individual to be self-accepting and, therefore, in a conscious aggressive state of self-rejection.

Now, let me ask all of you this: In your choice to dally with the ego, to, well, you call it play around, but muck around in a sense of limitation that causes your experience to be a deluded one—what do you suppose has happened to the rest of the infinitude of you? Absolutely nothing. It still is present, functioning fully, while this little part of you says, “No, it’s not going on. I am all there is. I am the totality of me.”

And as a result of this state of self-rejection by this little tiny part of you, the rest of you seems to be unavailable to you. And in the case of multiple personalities, the individuality cannot get rid of any part of itself. And so the parts that it is rejecting remain present, incapable of connecting with, communicating with, or experiencing union with the other parts of itself.

Paul was worried in the beginning when we began to talk, that indeed he was experiencing multiple personality or schizophrenia. But the fact is that he and I are able to communicate with each other, and our communication has continued to be dialog. Whereas in the case of multiple personalities, once connection occurs and the two personalities seem to be able to recognize that the other exists, healing of the dichotomy begins to happen and they soon begin to be unable to talk with each other, because the two parts are not holding themselves apart.

This is not the case when you are in touch with your guidance, because your guidance is with another who is an Individuality in his or her own right. And channeling is not a mental illness. Communion with your divine guidance is not a mental illness.

Now, what has come to be called possession by evil spirits, demons or whatever, is an expression of ignorance on the part of those who are assessing the situation. The behavior expressed, and called by the name possession, is an extreme form of aggressive, anti-social willfulness—not by a possessor of the individual, but by the individual himself or herself—done in such an outrageous fashion that it makes it difficult for those around that individual to feel the right to demand better behavior; thus, an outrageous definition of the behavior seems reasonable.

Now let us be very clear on this point, else many of you will find it unreasonable to open up to guidance. Those who are suffering from a limited frame of reference, those who are suffering from an ego frame of reference are absolutely blocked; blocked from communicating or connecting with another, in the sense of communion. Communication is absolutely required when one is operating from the three-dimensional frame of reference—the ego frame of reference.

When I say communication, I mean that which starts at one point in space, travels through space, connects with another point in space and, hopefully, occurs in a way that causes the recognition of what the two have mutually come to define as a meaningful thing. Communication requires space, it occurs in space, it is the means used to overcome space while still remaining within space.

Communion does not move from one place to another. Communion is the experience of infinity, from infinity—not a point in infinity. Communion is the experience of oneness. Therefore, when you open up to your guide, when you open up to the Holy Spirit, when you open up to me or the Father, you are not engaging in communication. You are opening yourself up to and allowing for the experience of communion—union, unity, oneness, indivisibility. And only those who are Awake experiencing that union without distortion of any kind are able to respond to and connect with you. Those who are still asleep are as blocked as you are in terms of connecting.

Therefore, when you open up, you cannot possibly open up to the “dark forces” or evil, and become subject to it and consumed by it. And if you know someone who seems to have done that, it is someone who has finally found a justifiable means to become aggressively anti-social in a manner that they think they can get away with, and they are taking advantage of the opportunity.

It is impossible to channel evil. It is impossible to be the conduit for evil, because all there is to evil is the discomfort you feel from being out of sync with your Self, with a capital “S”. And all that you could say evil amounts to is a misguided intent to hold on to that discomfort, because the ego has suggested to you that there will be a pay off. But you see, that doesn’t constitute a presence, it constitutes a misunderstanding.

There isn’t a power that is evil. There is simply a misperception of the only power and presence there is, which is God—good, love. It is ignorance that would interpret irresponsible action as possession, of being possessed by an evil spirit. The same call for conscious self-responsibility is needed there, as there is with one who is depressed, or anyone who is using a dissonant experience as a means of gaining a benefit. And that includes illness of all sort. Whatever illness you are experiencing, you are justifying because there is a benefit to it.

Not one of you does anything for no good reason, ever. It always seems to you as though there is a good reason for it. Many times your illnesses are justified because you don’t think that you have the right not to experience it; then you must experience it and develop a justification for it, develop a benefit: “Ah, it is exalting my Soul like Job. And so I will agree with it to get the benefit.” There is not the clear-cut, instantaneous awareness that it is illegitimate because it is incongruent with God, and is therefore incongruent with you, and that means that there is no justification for it whatsoever, and therefore you will not justify it.

What is called possession is an extreme example of self-irresponsible action that is being engaged in because that one thinks he or she can successfully get away with it. And as long as everyone has a superstitious belief about it, that one will be able to pull the wool over everyone else's eyes and will continue in that behavior until something else comes along that seems even more interesting.

QUESTION: There have been many simultaneous experiences going on with me the last six months, that I think are related. So I would like to tell you what they are and then I'll ask my question.

The first one is that I'm experiencing within myself what I'm describing as an apparent inner integration. It's like I experience you, me, my guide, the truth, whatever, just kind of all glomming together here somehow. I don't ask questions a lot, but there's a sense of knowing. It's like I want to listen inside. I've always had difficulty meditating. But what's happening now is that it seems like instantly I move into a place of stillness.

The second thing is that I am so aware of bodies, like all the bodies in this room and I feel that the bodies are separating me from the life within those bodies.

The third thing is that my great desire and constant attention, and what feels to me to be the greatest truth for me at the moment, is to live in the present moment. And it's easier for me to do that. It also requires a lot of attention. I need to be alert, because my old pattern is just to fade away and watch what's going on in the present moment, which is very safe.

And the fourth thing is that there is something about staying in the moment, coming from the highest point of integrity, being with others, that I would like to see introduced into teacher training. Which would have the focus of a recognition of the self, so that the teacher or the parent or whoever would be relating with their students from the place of self, instead of personality.

And the almost last one is that right now my body with the surgery and everything is demanding so much of my attention. And I don't know how clear I am with what's true, because of this experience. And I don't know what the meaning is either. I'm just kind of bumbling along with my body hoping it's all going to work out.

And the last thing is that with all this other stuff that's going on there seems to be an apparent expansion in professional opportunities for me, which at my time of life seems absolutely backwards, but maybe it's better late than never.

So my question is how do these experiences relate? And what is the truth of my present experience of myself? And do you have any words of wisdom for me?

ANSWER: Indeed, they are all connected and there is a correlation. This experience of the silence, this experience of the oneness of you and of your guide and of me, etc., where there is not the distinctness that you used to feel so definitely, is a development of your capacity to be clear.

Indeed, as you open up and are willing to be sensitive in the void, in the silence within you, you do begin to feel the unity of all things without losing the clear experience of the, I'm going to say, infinite diversity of the infinite expression of God called Creation. Therefore, as you move into the silence and you allow yourself to be present in it and you just pay attention, you will experience everything minus the sense of separateness.

When Paul is conversing with me, or when, as he is doing at this moment, relaying what I am saying, he does not experience a distinctness between the two of us. And yet, he has not lost the awareness that he is himself and that I am myself. But there is not a distinction between us; we are at once the same and at once not the same.

As illumination fills each one of you and you begin to experience the glass, as I said yesterday, or the wall paper as the living love that it is, you experience it as the love that is not different from you, even though you seem to be in one spot observing it in another spot. And there is no confusion whatsoever about the absolute unity, the absolute oneness of you observing and the things that you are observing. So you are coming into a fuller experience of infinity, in which there is nothing but the experience of unity.

Now that experience is what is being reflected relative to the other questions you asked, and why there is a good feeling, and why there is opportunity now. You say better late than never, but let us suppose that you have another 500 years of life ahead of you, it is really not so late in the game, is it? In fact, it is early on. It is a matter of perspective and the measuring stick you are using. And I have been encouraging all of you to throw your personal measuring sticks out of the window and refer everything back to the Father as the measuring stick, which is infinite and ultimately continuously original. The integrity of your being is what is unfolding more consciously with you here.

Now, you say you are very conscious of the other bodies in the room, but they seem to be standing in the way of your experience of the light that is there. Well I will tell you that you have your attention right where it needs to be, because right where those bodies are that you are so very aware of, is the light. They are not standing in the way of the light and you certainly would not see the light that is there if you decided to look out at the mountains. You would have the opportunity to see the light there, but not in the bodies in this room, because that is not where you are looking.

Now what I mean to say here is, that your very definite awareness of the bodies in this room is not an inappropriate place for your attention to be. And now that your attention is there, let there be this curiosity to see the light. It is flooding from every single one of these “bodies” that you see, and it is the light of the energy of their individuality which is the direct presence of God expressed and embodied, just as yours is.

And so it’s there to be present and you’re looking in the right place. Now just be allowingly curious. It’s like your attention has been gotten and it is placed where it needs to be, now be ready for delightful surprises.

Now as regards to your body—be willing to be with it, be sensitive to it, be present with it. Do not be short with it. Do not be impatient with it. It isn’t something different from you. Lovingly be present with it, sensitive to what it needs. In being with it gently and lovingly, you will find the healing from the surgery and the reoperation and the regeneration occurring with harmony.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I’d like to ask one follow-up question. In the kind of mental image work that I do, it is a process of seeing a picture which is the teacher, and being aware of yourself seeing the picture. And I’ve had the sense that this experience is one of the things that has been helping me to stay in the present moment. Is that correct?

ANSWER: You are quite correct.

QUESTION: So then it would be correct for me to continue teaching others how to do this?

ANSWER: Oh, indeed, yes.

QUESTION: My swelling does not seem to be getting any smaller. Am I subconsciously blocking the healing team from doing their job? And if so, how am I going to overcome it?

ANSWER: There is a subtle feeling that it will be difficult for this swelling to subside rapidly. I encourage you to enjoy the idea that infinity is the possibility that anything can happen. Simply be willing to embrace that, and that will allow the healing that the healing team is engaged in to occur more rapidly.

QUESTION: As you were dictating your new book to Paul, you asked him to be in constant contact with you. In fact, for awhile he was to check in with you once a minute, if I remember. Will you expand on this some as to how this works in our everyday daily stuff—you know, the mundane things. If we check in with our guides and everything, won’t we get too dependent on them, with such things as washing clothes, doing dishes, going to the store, washing the dog, that kind of thing?

ANSWER: How much do you enjoy being alone?

QUESTION: Good question.

ANSWER: Is it not nice to have a companion? Someone to keep company with while you are attending to what needs to be done? You enjoy having your dog to keep you company.

QUESTION: Yes, that's true.

QUESTION: No, not at all.

ANSWER: It is excellent for you all to know that you are not alone, and the way to do that is to consciously embrace, or as I have said, be with. Not only that, the one with whom you are choosing to be with is one whose very presence and nature inspires within you the ability to attend to what needs to be done with greater ease and with less unnecessary effort.

This word dependent is a tricky word, at least the ego can make it a difficult one to understand clearly. As I said to Paul, if one is blind it is wise to allow oneself to be led. If one is blind, how great a benefit is it to be alone? How great a benefit is it to be independent, especially if, when you do allow yourself to become dependent, you are becoming dependent upon one who is going to help you to see. If you are not seeing the truth, where is the wisdom in holding yourself separate and apart from one who can disclose the truth to you so that you can see it for yourself. It is foolishness to try to be independently stupid—independently ignorant. What is the pay off in that?

Now many of you are visiting this Island for the first time. Many of you have traveled to foreign cities, and either you can hunt and peck your way through that new environment hoping to somehow catch a glimpse of everything that it is possible for you to see in a short amount of time, or you can get on a tour bus, or you can hire a guide who knows how to get there quickly and easily for the least amount of money and you can see the most in the amount of time that you have. By becoming dependent you enrich yourself by leaning on one who can help you be more fully, more efficiently, if I may put it that way.

What would you say if your eight year old child came home from school and said, "Mom, I'm going to quit school and explore life myself." You would say, "Oh, no you're not. You're going to stay in school and you're going to rely upon your teachers to help you learn the maximum with the least amount of wasted motion. Expressing your independence at this point will create more problems for you than good."

Your whole problem—and I'm not just speaking to you but to everyone—your whole problem is a result of claiming independence from that which you are one with—God. And what you have been left with has been called the human condition.

How happy are you? How good do you feel? How many feel that you are feeling the wholeness and the fullness and the infinite potential of life—now, here, today? If indeed, the only way that you can re-access your fulfillment is by relinquishing the independence that has deprived you of the fulfillment, then you tell me just how dirty a word dependence really is.

The key to Awakening is joining, being with, sacrificing the independence which your ego said promised you fulfillment and which has not. I and my Father are One. You and your Father are One. If you have seen me, you have seen the Father. If I have seen you, I have seen the Father. But how many of you want me to see you and not the Father.

Paul is having difficulty with this point himself, although he is slowly relinquishing it. He is reluctant to sacrifice the self called Paul. He wants you to look at him and see him. And you want people to look at you and see you. And the belief is that if you do not insist upon being a presence as a private, puny little ego, you will not lose your experience of identity, but you will lose the ability to take credit for anything that happens as a puny little ego presence.

Paul is feeling that to be a great sacrifice, even though he knows not one of you would have shown up for a workshop that he gave. And even though he knows that what has been happening this weekend has been the expression of himself, because there is no doubt in his mind that he and I are One, although distinctly individual. But it is difficult for him to dare to be the presence of appropriateness that is transforming once five thirty comes this afternoon. And he is looking forward to coming to the banquet tonight as Paul. And then he will ask all of you, “How was the workshop?” when he was being the workshop.

The word dependence suggests being in a lesser position, being less than the potential. But truly when you begin to say, “Thy Will, not mine be done,” you release yourself from the tininess of your imprisonment in limitation, and you do come into the fuller experience of who you Are. You don’t just come into a fuller experience of the one you are leaning on, who stands not in support of himself or herself, but in support of your conscious realization of who you Are.

How wonderful for a gymnast to have a teacher who can be there to provide the support in that place of indecision and doubt that has caused the landing to be wrong so far, so that in that moment of support—at the moment of doubt—the feeling can be gotten for the way to do it correctly and land solidly.

The teacher, your guide, is there to uncover who you are in your total potential, if I may put it that way. And it is only foolish to become dependent upon that teacher if you don’t want to know your Self—with a capital “S”—better.

You are not becoming dependent upon one unscrupulous, because the only one who can possibly, truly, really connect with you is one who is Awake, and is not self-seeking, and has no sense of a self needing to be promoted. The teacher doesn't promote the teacher, the teacher promotes the student to the student. You might say sells you on yourself—illuminates your capacity to you by helping you to get the feel for it.

Remember it is the desire to be alone and separated that constitutes the problem which you are trying to solve by moving forward on your spiritual path of Awakening. And now you have arrived at a point where you stand at the threshold of communion and the ego says, "Oops, you're sacrificing your integrity by becoming dependent." When what is really happening is you are at a point of sacrificing your ego, because you are willing to be in union with Reality. The ego always turns things around a hundred and eighty degrees and it says, "Being in your Right Mind is insanity. Being congruent with the Father is irresponsible. Being congruent with the human beliefs is intelligent."

You know what? You never do anything alone. You're always joined with something, and at the moment you are joined with your egos. You're leaning on your ego sense of things and you are listening closely to what your egos say. So let's just shift the dependence, and let's not get caught up on a loss of independence. How great is your freedom while you dally with the ego? Pretty damn limited, and not very comfortable in a Soul-satisfying way.

So let's just shift from dependence upon the ego frame of reference to dependence upon divine guidance. Be in communion with the Father so completely that the Father is what is shining through. Tell me, as you look here does there appear to be an automaton here, a robot—something cold, calculated, mechanical? Or is your experience of me and Paul one of warmth and love and meaning and genuineness, the epitome of being with? Is this such an awful evidence of dependence? No, it is a greater experience of the meaning of Life, with a capital "L", that inspires confidence, that this experience of joining is your birthright is available to you, is experienceable by you and you don't have to earn it. Therefore, let us squelch this idea that dependence is a long four letter word.

For the moment we could simply say that you are going to be the puppet of something. Are you going to be the puppet of the ego or are you going to be the puppet of the Father? And if you are going to be the puppet of the Father, if you are going to let God be God, then you are going to find yourself uncovered to yourself in your absolute divinity and fulfillment. And if your emancipation from illusion and emergence into the disclosure of your divine wholeness can only be arrived at through becoming dependent, then embrace dependence. And realize that as you do it you do not sacrifice your intelligence, you do not sacrifice yourself. Paul can stop at any moment here.

PAUL: I can.

ANSWER: Paul can stop at any moment here, he has not lost his integrity. Engaging in communion, engaging in joining does not cause you to lose your integrity. You are not giving your power away. And so you do not need to be afraid to at least experiment with going through your day with a conscious sense of companioning with one who is divine, who you will come to find knows that he is companioning with one who is divine called you. And by virtue of the interchange with one having that sort of clarity, you will begin to get the feel for embodying, embracing, incorporating and being the divinity that you Are.

Self-sufficiency as a tiny little presence on the face of your planet has been drummed into you as a great virtue, and therefore it seems like a great sacrifice of integrity to really let someone else in. And yet love appears on many of your postage stamps, and love is promoted in the churches, love is promoted by your psychologists. It is recognized to be fundamental. And what is love? Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything.

And the willingness to recognize that which is Real involves becoming defenseless enough to let in the experience of that one or that thing. Joining with—not holding oneself apart—not being so damned independent, that all that you have left is a space to break down by means of communication, rather than the experience of communion.

Now I am not scolding you, I am giving you a pep talk.

QUESTION: I'm going to make this real short. Could you please clarify for me the last eighteen hours of my life?

ANSWER: You weren't listening were you? You simply went straight into reaction. And I will tie this in with the earlier question. How good did it feel to be independent? It was hard work, it wore you out, you didn't feel your integrity, you didn't feel your congruence with life and it was scary. But when you listen, when you join with, when you are willing to be with instead of be alone, you do not feel any of those things no matter what the circumstance might be that would have otherwise triggered reaction. And the attempt to cope with it from your so-called wonderful capacity to be a stupid little ego.

It always costs you to not listen, to not check in. If you check in, you have your peace from which to look at the situation; not so that you can figure it out, but so that you have a focal point about which to hear. When any of you chooses to listen, to be defenseless and unconditionally open, it does not mean that you will be told to do everything that your world requests of you. You will not say yes to suffering, because you are unconditional. You will not say yes to and cooperate with a lack of principle, because you are so darned centered that you could care less.

When you are in your peace, you are in your clarity, and as I said, you can distinguish the apples from the oranges, the tares from the wheat, what will work from what will not work, what is appropriate from what is not appropriate. And the discernment, the clarity will be minus emotion. But as was also said earlier, there will be the experience of the truth of it that embodies conviction, not willfulness, but simple absolute clarity that is unquestionable.

Listening and being unconditional will never put you at the mercy of the unprincipled acts of others in your experience. That is very important for you to understand.

I know the ego suggests that there is great satisfaction in losing your cool and running the gamut of emotionalism. But you know, don't you, today, that all it did was exhaust you and all there was to it was misery. That is the cost of independence.

What has happened this weekend is the result of utter dependence, of Paul not having an agenda of his own to carry out in his own right. Except I will tell you no one is twisting his arm to do this. It does identify his fulfillment. And it is by his choice. And it is because he has found that it does feel good.

It feels better than what we have come to call his being “bumbling Paul”—the one who doesn't listen, but acts on the basis of acquired intelligence—if it could be called that; an acquired ability to function somewhat reasonably well under circumstances which he doesn't understand at all because he hasn't bothered to check in with God to see what God is doing, or check in with his Being, with a capital “B”, to see what it is infinitely unfolding, so that he might be congruent with it and thus embody it, which embodies that which is fulfilling and meaningful for everyone and everything with which he comes in contact.

So that accounts for the last eighteen hours. You didn't listen, did you? That's okay, I still love you. All you did was resist the experience of your peace. But it was still present, and it didn't change who you divinely Are. And although you are likely to do it again, you are not likely to do it for quite as long. Because I promise you this experience today is going to stick with you as your learning, and as your increased clarity. And you simply won't indulge in it quite so intensely, thus you will emerge from it sooner, and still you will be loved.

And there will be no penalty forthcoming for having done it, there will only be the suffering accompanying it, which isn't being laid upon you by anything other than your resistance to listening—your insistence upon acting spontaneously based upon your conditioned thinking and your feeling that you have a right to express yourself, instead of your Self, with a capital “S”. So you had a little fun the last eighteen hours self-expressing.

I mentioned yesterday, that in the process of Awakening it is as though you become split in two, because you discover that there are two choices available to you of being aware. One that is at peace, one that is secure and sure, not because of any intellectual conclusion, but because there is a groundedness in the very essence of yourself, which is God. And then there is the you you have thought you have been your whole life, where you never even realized that there was a groundedness in you to experience.

You will all flip-flop back and forth as you emerge into an inner recognition of why it is you would choose for this experience of self that is grounded. And you must have a way to appreciate the flip-flopping so that you will not simply indulge in criticizing yourself for not being able to be consistent, which is what the ego will tell you you ought to be able to do. And it will tell you that to frustrate you so that you will lose your peace and forget to connect with it.

The way you can appreciate it is to realize that there was a time when the only experience you had available to you was the ungrounded experience. And the fact that there is a flip-flopping occurring means that the apparent stability and durability of your ignorant experience of yourself is breaking up, is weakening and is unable to sustain itself in a continuous fashion. And, therefore, the flip-flopping is a concrete demonstration of your progress.

And then when the ego says, "See, you can't do it. See, you lost it. You have no right to be happy." You can say, "Oh, yes I do. Because at least I'm not stuck with you constantly. And I am aware that I have a choice, which you did not tell me. And whether I flip-flop or not, I am going to persist."

Now I will tell you also from an experiential standpoint: This flip-flopping gives you the opportunity to experience an almost simultaneous experience of the tares and the wheat, the apples and the oranges. Because one moment you will be in your peace, and the next moment (as You were) you will have lost it. And because there was not a gradual transition, you have the ability to notice the difference between the two as an experience. And this becomes very valuable, because it makes it easier for you to make the choice because the feeling is there.

It is obvious how much more desirable it is to be dependent, to be listening, to be yielding into being with. And it is also obvious that when you vacate that, sacrifice it, you suffer and you feel that. And because they stand side by side and you are not having to remember an experience of peace from five years back, it is that much easier to abandon the reactivity. And right in the middle of your suffering choose for your peace and give your attention to it, and not validate the justification for your self-righteous indignation, that in the final analysis hurts you so much.

And so the flip-flopping can be used as the basis for more easily making the choice for your peace, even when your habitual justification for self-righteousness and anger still seems relatively valid. And again, the fact that flip-flopping is occurring is the concrete proof, concrete experiential proof that you are no longer trapped in the ego frame of reference only. These are things to rejoice about.

It is like a child learning to walk who tries and falls, and tries and falls, and tries and succeeds, and tries and falls. Sooner or later the successes outnumber the failures, because the child is getting the feeling for walking—for a new experience of himself.

So value the experience and when the ego uses it to discourage you from accessing your greater capacity to be aware divinely, you can say, “Get thee behind me.” You know what that meant? “Get out of my sight. I do not choose to give you my attention.” That’s all it meant, and that’s all it takes.

The final word of this three day workshop is: The one thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. How do you overcome the ego? You disregard it. That is the one thing it cannot defend itself against. And if you are going to be disregarding the ego, what will you be doing instead? Obviously paying attention; being curious; giving permission for revelation; letting in, being defenseless against; being the presence of Love.

Again, the one thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. When you are listening within you are disregarding the ego. That is the loop hole in the realm of illusion—the little gap through which you slip into your Right Mind and the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven and the Christ that each of you is.

And we are all looking forward to your conscious discovery that we are all playing together in the Kingdom of Heaven at this very instant; that we are all being with each other. Just try to begin to open your eyes.

It has been good being with you.

PAUL: Okay. That was him. Oh, it has been good being with you. And for those of you who are coming to the banquet tonight, I promise you I won’t ask you how the workshop was.

Well, it’s been wonderful. And what’s really been neat is to have this happen in our new home territory. It’s added something. I don’t know it makes me feel more here, even though we will be doing workshops other places, it’s changed my sense of here in a very wonderful way. So I thank you all. Thank you.

Gathering In Boston, Massachusetts –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: There is, indeed, one thing I want to say. And that is: That whether or not you are Catholic, or whether you are a Christian Scientist, or a student of A Course In Miracles, or a Methodist, or a Mohammedan, you are first and last Brothers and Sisters. And any spiritual course of, shall I say, study or training, should be helping you to be better Brothers and Sisters. Not better Catholics, not better students of the Course, not better Christian Scientists, not better Methodists; better Brothers and Sisters. If you will remember this, you will keep your perspective. And you will know where the attention and where the actions are that are to be valued. And your studies will not become a means of separating you, one from another.

At the bottom line: There's one thing to learn. And that is to Love. And I will tell you what Love is: Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real—with a capital "R"—in each and everything, which means in EACH and everyone that you discover or find to be in your experience in your world. The willingness to see beyond whatever ego presentation that other one might be sending in your direction. Love is the willingness to find God in your fellow man. But you know something? If you can't find the God in you, you can't dare to find God in your fellow man, else you will feel one down.

And you know, in the process of awakening, all you are doing is arriving at a point where you can find the equality of you and your brother, in the context of the Allness of God, which necessarily means, in the context of your both being Divine. It is letting go of the self-definition that is less than the direct expression of God, called you; that allows you to release your brother and sister from that very same definition. In releasing yourself, you release your brother, because you will find that you will not want to be alone in your Divinity.

And you know, when you are willing to embrace the fact of your Divinity, and then acknowledge it in your brother, that constitutes joining; which is the exact opposite of the one single element that has kept all of you in trouble for so long. That one element is the distinct intent to be separate and individual, different from, unique, to everything else.

You are not going to find your Real originality until you stop trying to be different, and better, and further up-front, further ahead of the crowd. And when you abandon that challenge, you will begin to find yourself feeling so utterly safe, that you can dare to be original. And originality will begin to emerge out of your peace. And your originality will never take away from anyone else And it also will not control anyone else, and there will be harmony.

And so, as we proceed through this weekend, this time together, we are always going to be speaking in the context of Love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. And if nothing else, you will be able to go home with a better sense of my perspective of our equality. And it will not be quite as easy for you to insist that you are not worthy to eat the crumbs that fall from His [the Father's] table, but rather that as the full and complete direct expression of God, it is your birthright to be experiencing God's point of view, and not a lesser more limited point of view, because you are some sinner.

I will tell you now that I am grateful to be with you this weekend. More than that, I want you to know that indeed I am always with you, and am always available; if you will just stop justifying a sense of difference about yourself, that makes you either unworthy or somehow incapable of experiencing my presence directly within yourself. The only reason it doesn't happen is because you have said, in one way or another, it is unreasonable for me to expect it to happen. And your word is all that blocks it, I assure you.

QUESTION: My question concerns something that we spoke about in our private conversations and that was about my ability to generate some income. And you had stated at that time, that in November, this past November, would be a time that that would be possible for me. And I think I have been paying attention but November has gone by and I'm still in a place where I still can't see that happening. And I'm also really extended myself beyond what I have before as far as financially goes. And so, I'm concerned about that. So, if you can say anything about that, I would appreciate it.

ANSWER: Indeed you are in spite of your extension, not in a dangerously vulnerable position. Now, indeed, you opened a door in your life. You engaged in a larger embrace of yourself, I'm going to say aspects of yourself that you were not willing to enthusiastically embrace. And as a result of your fearlessness and your willingness to open the door, there has been some significant growth that has been occurring, which employment would have blocked or made more difficult. And so, there is perfect order here, because you are coming into a place of greater inner balance, because of greater inner embrace of yourself more totally. And so, there was a reconfiguration that occurred, altering the November date, so that this stabilizing and yes, grounding growth that you were willing to embrace could occur.

Now, you are, from my vantage point, much healthier because you are embracing more of what you wholly are. The ground work has been laid for the employment that we spoke of to come into view now. And indeed within the next 90 days, you are likely to find this aspect of your experience opening up. I encourage you to give permission for it now. And above all I encourage you to continue to embrace your guiltlessness.

I will tell you and I will tell all of you something: The more willing you are to embrace who you are—WHO you experience yourself to be totally—without rejecting it; the healthier you become, the more balanced you become, the less justification you have for hiding from the Truth and the more you are able to give permission for your fulfillment of purpose to come to view. It is a simple thing.

If you are feeling guilty, you will be reluctant to ask to know what the truth is, because your conditioning will cause you to assume that the truth will convict you of the thing that you are feeling guilty about. But you must remember that the revelation of truth, the direct revelation of truth within you always does one thing only, it uncovers your absolute innocence, because you never were anything less than the Son or Daughter of God. That's the only Truth that can be revealed to you. And that unconvicts you. And in the absence of a sense of guilt, you are able to begin then to enthusiastically say "YES" to God, "fill me up with all Thou art. I no longer have the justification I use to think I had for denying my good, for denying my birthright." That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: The Course talks about being still and going Home. And in your book Graduation you're constantly saying "stop thinking" and "listen." I have a great deal of difficulty in trying to "stop thinking" and in turning off the many thoughts that run through my head to enable me just be quiet and listen. How may I and anyone else who wants to do this, improve that procedure?

ANSWER: It is a good question. Understand that you are not called upon to somehow, magically cease thinking forever more. I will tell you that for all of you to learn how to meditate is a very effective means of more rapidly being able to be still for longer than a moment or two. And indeed, because of the simplicity and the thoughtless nature of Transcendental Meditation, I encourage those of you who are having difficulty and do not know an effective means of meditating, to learn it. It is not necessary for you to become involved with the Maharishi's teachings. It is only necessary for you to learn the technique. That is not the only means, but it is a very effective one.

Now, on an on-going daily basis, there is one thing that you can easily do and that is that you can, on an on-going basis, assume that there is a different way to see whatever it is you are seeing. And not have such a strong conviction that your perception of a thing, is what it is. And if you are able to practice this—you might call it doubt about what you are seeing—and you will become curious so that no matter what you are doing you just say in your mind, “Is this appropriate or not? Is this the time or not? Should I do it now or should I do it later?” etc.

If you will begin to express curiosity as though, indeed, there is another way to see what I am seeing, that will bring into play the act of listening. You may not be able to listen very long before interjecting some of your own thinking. But you will begin to break the habit of absolute confidence in your point of view, so that a new point of view can register with you.

Now, it is perfectly workable for you to engage in self-hypnosis, relaxation techniques, or soaking in a hot tub in order to relax and become more still in your mind. For those of you who tend, as the questioner is, to be constantly thinking and for whom a word or a visualization simply contributes to on-going thinking, you can just sit down in a comfortable chair, one which does not have a high back, so that you must hold your head erect and simply take a few moments to stretch and relax your body, so that you know that there is no place in it that you are really holding tense. And then breath through your nose comfortably, at whatever rate comes naturally. Do not try to breath slowly, you will run out of oxygen and breath faster. So just be with yourself at the rate of speed of breathing that you find yourself at at that moment. And then simply pay attention to the bridge of your nose and the sensation of the air as it passes there. You can pay attention at the point of the nostrils, wherever you most easily feel the sensation of the air as you inhale and exhale. And just let your attention rest on the sensation. Do not concentrate on it. Just pay attention to it.

And if you find yourself thinking, you’ll never notice when the thinking starts, but when you realize that you’re thinking and you have forgotten to pay attention to the sensation, gently bring your attention back to the sensation. And please don’t get upset with yourself for your short attention span.

The very nature of meditation is to bring about a clearer experience of peace, physically and mentally. As you relax and your body releases tension, there is almost unavoidably a streaming of thoughts that occurs. And so, when you are meditating, and you find yourself thinking a lot initially, it is because the meditation is working. And you should not jump to the conclusion that you are too much in your head and, therefore, a poor meditator, and give up, when indeed the practice is working. It may take you two, three weeks, a month, before you have an experience of quietness that you can identify as a reasonable span of time in which no thinking was occurring. But then that will increase. So give yourself time.

Now, why would one bother to go through all of this? I will tell you, that it is for more than just lowering your blood pressure, because even if you do not immediately experience an absence of thinking, you will within just a few days begin to notice that, generally speaking, you are more at peace. And specifically at the end of any period of meditation, even in the beginning, when you open your eyes you will find that you were in a more peaceful state than you thought you were while you had your eyes closed.

Now, we are not talking about a peace that is just an alternative to anxiety. We are not talking about peace that is just the absence of jangled nerves. Indeed, there is what could be measured as physical relaxation. But the experience of peace that meditation brings you to, is more than just a peaceful body. The peace is the very nature and substance of your Being. And so, the peace that you experience when you are meditating, when you are becoming still, is really constituted of one of your first direct experiences of your Self, with a capital "S," of your essential Being.

Now you know why it's important, because it is the beginning of getting to know thy Self. In biblical terms, it is what is meant by going into your closet to that within place and praying to the Father, which is in secret. The word "secret" means really, silence, going within and praying to being with the Father, which is in silence.

"The bridegroom cometh when ye think not." In other words, the revelation and experience of your Christhood comes when you are not thinking. That is why it is valuable. It is not because I am trying to turn you all into East Indians or get you to change your religion or philosophy.

I am here to confirm to you that your basic philosophy is true and you need to trust it more. You are the direct expression of God. And God is Infinite Intelligence and the Father has withheld nothing of what He is from His Self-expression, therefore, you must be Infinite Intelligence. You must be the All Knowing Presence that God Is, because God did not create something different from Himself. The expression of God must be God expressed. And Waking Up, coming Home, means coming back into your Right Mind, your natural unalterable Sanity; your ability to experience everything from God's point of view.

So you have two things to help you. One: A specific period of time in which you are purposely intending to become still; so that you might begin to have the experience of being conscious without thinking, fully conscious, fully capable of being and responding to life without thinking. And the other is: To have a general on-going curiosity based upon a premise that there must be another way to see what I am seeing; so that you do not just mechanically move forward in your confidence that you comprehend what a thing is, or how a situation ought to be dealt with. That curiosity brings you to the point of listening, if you're half way on the ball. And listening is the way you open the door to revelation.

Now, lets take just a moment here. So many of you are caught up in grand religious concepts about very simple words, like revelation. Indeed, Paul shared with you that in the beginning when I first spoke to him, there were none of the connotations of some truly spiritual event occurring. Very simply, revelation is the dawning in your thought of how to be utterly appropriate; whether you are choosing between two things at the grocery store, whether you are working out a problem with your wife or husband, whether you are driving the car to an unfamiliar place, etc. Revelation is the dawning in your thought as to how to be utterly appropriate, so that the Divine harmony of Being and the unity of life might be experience, here and now.

As I said, your study of any spiritual path can really only have one goal, and that is not to be a better student of that path, but to be a better brother and sister. Likewise, your process of awakening will not cause you to become more and more incongruent with your world and your fellow man. You will become more congruent and more valuable, because there will be more intelligence and more love being expressed by you, that allows everyone to be less defensive with you. And so, where you are going to see the Kingdom of Heaven unfold in front of your eyes, is right here. What will fall away, is not the world and universe, but the scales in your eyes. And the scales are constituted of your preconceptions, your mindsets, your convictions about what things are, who people are, who they cannot possibly be, etc. And your thinking reinforces your mindsets, and imprisons you in them.

The only thing you will loose, is the ignorance that causes you not to see the Kingdom of Heaven, right here, right now. If God fills all space, where is there room for some other creation, some alternative creation? Where could sinners possibly be exiled to, if there is no outside to God? And so, if indeed you are sinners, you must be sinners in the middle of the Presence of God. There is an inconsistency there, because God is indivisible and, therefore, undivided. And therefore, God's constituting Presence that fills all space, must be the only thing right there where you're sitting. And that's what we're waking up to, who you Divinely are and always have been and are at this moment.

Now watch how your conditioned thinking argues, "it's a nice idea, but what about this; if I am Divine, how come I don't feel that way"? That's not a genuine question. It's a justification for not believing. The moment you say, "maybe there is a different way to feel than the way I am feeling," then you are expressing curiosity and opening the door for a new feeling that more closely approximates your birthright.

The giving permission is the way you open the door for an experience. And the experience will be so clear to you, that then instead of using your words to form questions that are really blocks to your experience to your Divinity, your words will follow an experience of your Divinity and you will be hard put to continue to express in words, the Divinity of you, that you are experiencing and about which you have no doubt, because it's not a head trip, it is an experience.

So, we are here in a process of giving permission to experience one's Divinity. Still consistent with the premise of Love; the willingness to recognize that which is Real, capital “R” Real, in each and everything. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a three part question for you and they’re not related. One, who is Woldara? Two, what happens to the soul after the body expires?

PAUL: After the what?

QUESTION: After the body expires as we know it. And three, where have all the squid gone? Namely the Loliginidae Pealeii species along the East Coast.

PAUL: I’m sorry, this is me Paul. I didn’t understand the third...

QUESTION: The third question is: Where have all the squid gone, the Loiginidae Pealeii, that inhabit the East Coast of this country. They seem to have disappeared. Do I need to repeat any of the questions now?

PAUL: No, indeed. Okay, this is me Paul. Sometimes he answers questions with images rather than words. The image relative to the squid is that they have gone into deeper locations to escape pollution or something that’s in the water that is not compatible with them. But he says they are far from extinct.

ANSWER: I am going to refrain from answering the first part of your question. The second part though, you must all understand that your soul is not like your body, it doesn’t have limits. You could most accurately say that Soul, with a capital “S,” is Minds, with a capital “M,” capacity to sense the meanings that it—Mind—expresses. In other words, Soul is Minds sensing capacity. It is your capacity to feel the meaning of God’s Creation. It cannot go anywhere, because it is omnipresent. This means then, that there is far more of infinity for you to be having the direct experience of, than you are currently experiencing. Your Soul does not inhabit your body, just as your mind does not inhabit your body, just as your love does not inhabit your body. Your Soul goes nowhere, because it is everywhere. This means that, all of what you are is always present. What you have yet to discover is that, all of what you are is always available to you as a conscious experience, even though you may not be paying attention.

Now, If there was a very bright light in your sky at night, let us say a vehicle of some sort, capable of moving at light speed, at a very fast speed. And you stood there gazing at it fixedly, while it was there and then it very suddenly departed. You would continue to seem to see it. In other words, there would be an after-image in your eyes, even though it had departed, even though it had gone beyond your present capacity to perceive it.

And what all of you must understand, is that you have been misunderstanding what happens at this point, that you call death. What happens is that the individual has moved beyond your present capacity to perceive him or her. And what is left for you to apparently deal with, is what we could call the after-image left in your eyes. In fact, the reason it seems to decay, is the very same reason that the after-image in your eyes of a bright light decays; because there is not the original light present to reinforce the image.

Now, this is, of course, a very simplistic way of explaining it, but it more clearly expresses the truth and helps you to understand that you are never bodiless. And what I mean by that, is that you are never not identified. You are never not identifiable, anymore than God is ever unidentifiable. I have said it before, that God unexpressed is a nonexistent God. There cannot be God without the infinite manifestation or experience of the Presence of God. Therefore, there cannot be YOU without the identifiable experience of your Presence.

No one abandons a body in that instant that you call death. The one who has passed on finds himself or herself as totally identified as before hand, except that whatever seemed to cause the death, if it were a disease or injury; is no longer present, because that one has the inescapable proof that the disease didn't kill them. And that realization causes the immediate release of fear of the disease and the manifestations of the fear, called disease, have not a leg to stand upon and the evidences of it disappear.

This is an important point to understand, because if you think that there can be a separation between Individuality and that which identifies it, called body; then you will not honor the body and you will also never really become curious to see what the body really is, if indeed it is the visibility and tangibility of an absolutely Divine Presence, called You. And if you don't become curious about it, you will not experience the revelation of it. You will not experience the scales falling from your eyes that cause you to have a distorted perception of your body or of your world. You will tend to neglect the body. You will tend to neglect the world. And there are even those in the name of spiritual growth, who can't wait to drop the body. Now that would be suicide, because if indeed you could annihilate the visibility and tangibility of God's Self-expression, you would do yourself in, as well as God. So be careful, when you want to rise above this world, or rise above your body, because that ultimately constitutes an act of self-denial, it also constitutes, what the Course calls, an attack on God.

Now, for some of you who are students of the Course, what I have just said creates a dilemma, because the Course says the body is an illusion and the world is an illusion. Again, there cannot be unmanifest God. God being Infinite, must be Infinitely Identified. And that Infinite Identification is what is meant by the word Creation.

Now, the solution to this dilemma comes with the very first lesson in the Course, "Nothing that I see means anything." Do not read that statement as though it says, "everything is meaningless." The purpose of that lesson is to cause you to release your convictions about what a thing is. It is to promote your willingness to abandon whatever your current definition of a thing is; whether it is your body, or your toe, or a leaf, or the planet, or the universe. Why? so that you may then become curious. “If it isn’t what I think it is, what is it?” That’s when you begin to listen, is when you say, “what is it”? And this is when your Soul comes into play. This is when your capacity to feel the meaning of God’s Creation becomes activated within you, while at the same time permission is being given to receive the experience.

If you are misperceiving something and you are believing your misperception and you are believing that it constitutes the whole truth about a thing, then all you are seeing is your perception of that thing. And your confidence that that perception is the totality of it’s Reality, does indeed constitute a deluded perception at what we could call an illusion, because you are not open to the Movement of the Identification, or the visibility of that thing, and thus you are not seeing it. It is as though you have taken a photograph of a river and you are saying, that is the river, while the river continues to move and be an action, a movement.

A concept about a thing is like a photograph, it is a freeze-dried image. But you say, “that’s not reasonable, I can’t do that.” Well, I would ask you to look at a family member who you are having difficulty with, and you tell me whether, on the spot, right now, you can release them from your conviction about they’re unchangeableness? How willing are you to let by-gones be by-gones? How willing are you to truly expect that maybe they will behave in a more enjoyable manner? You’ve got them freeze-dried!

Now, let me ask you something else, if somebody has you freeze-dried and they are constantly approaching you based upon their attitude, their unchanging attitude about you that is not complimentary; how easy is it for you to be defenseless and loving with them? For how many of you is it not difficult to get angry, because they are not seeing you. And then tell me this, if you express the anger, doesn’t it confirm to them that their point of view is correct, and that you’re still unpleasant to be with? And so, everyone locks everyone else into a freeze-dried picture, and acts toward them on the basis of the picture, and you aren’t in touch with the real living, moving, changing, growing Individuality that is there.

That is just a small illustration of the fact that your convictions about what a thing is, meaning your world and your body and your universe, stands in the way of your experiencing what it Truly Is. And if you think that the freeze-dried picture is the Real thing, and that’s what your holding to, then you are holding to something that is an illusion. The thing of which the picture is a picture, is Real and Eternal.

That’s why it is so essential for there to be curiosity, right here! Right now! right where you are, about the things you are confronted with every day. There really is only one thing present for you to see and experience, and that is the Presence and Movement of God, called the Kingdom of Heaven—for lack of better words.

Why should we call it the Kingdom of Heaven? Because that helps you not settle for the current concept of a material world. If you will label your world and universe as the Kingdom of Heaven and you will honor that choice of words, you will either have to frustrate yourself or create frustration within yourself, by continuing to treat it as though it is not the Kingdom of Heaven; or you will have to bring into play curiosity, to see where the divinity of it is.

And so, I'm using the words to promote a curiosity, where most everyone tends not to be curious at all, because they've got it pretty well pegged, pegged well enough to function fairly well. And after all, the point is to get everything pegged so you can sit back and enjoy life; which means, not have to learn anymore, not have to adjust, not have to grow.

You and your fellow man are the Christ. And the world and universe is the Kingdom of Heaven. And waking up is the result of a willingness in you to see past your definitions and other people's definitions, and see the essential Son and Daughter of God everywhere you look. But it won't happen until the curiosity is there. And until the curiosity is there, there isn't really Love. The saying is that, "curiosity killed the cat," but I guarantee you, your curiosity will wake you up and save your life, from ignorance and the effects of ignorance.

There is more that could be said, but that covers your question for the moment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well I'm going to be curious again. In a guided meditation at a gathering similar to this one, we were told to ask for our spiritual name. And for the first time, I think, I heard it. I still doubt it, but it was very clear at the moment that I heard the word "Eisha." It was so nice and I was very excited, but then when you go out and you go for lunch, and you say did hear it or did I make it up. I'm curious, I want it to be real. And I would like to know what it means.

ANSWER: You heard correctly. Now, you might think I am avoiding the second part of your question, but I am not. YOU are what it means. It doesn't have a definition that is of any usefulness. The name expresses your nature, your Individuality, not your ego, but your Individuality.

It is a hard thing for you to comprehend at the moment, but God is Infinitely Individualized. And each of you, you could say is an Individualization. But your sense right now, of Infinite Individualization is that something whole has been transformed into many parts, when the fact is that, that which is whole is wholly embodied in each of you. You can grasp slightly the possibility and the meaning of this, if you do identify yourself as Conscious Awareness, which you have experienced no limits to. All of you can conceive that you are Infinite Conscious Presence, without losing the sense that you are you and your neighbor is your neighbor.

The fact is, that even when you wake up and you have no other perspective or point of view than the Father's point of view, you will still also experience yourself individually. You will not be swallowed up in God and not be individualized. You will have to take my word for that, the experience of it will prove it to you, but you will have to wait for that.

Eisha is a name that expresses the individualization that you are, which is not identical with any other Individuality, but at the same time is identical. I do not say that to be confusing, that is the clearest way I can express a nondimensional fact. The more you let yourself into the conscious experience of who you Divinely Are, the more you will understand the name. And to put it very simply, if you become familiar with the name and some meaning it is suppose to have, you are likely to obscure yourself from yourself just as much as knowing my name and having concepts about it has obscured me from you, because it has caused you to feel less than, different from and unworthy by comparison with me. And I am here now to correct that misperception, so that you labor under it no longer. And I'm not just speaking to you.

I cannot afford not to be repetitious on this point. Even your advertisers on Wall Street know that you must hear a new commercial many times before you will remember it. And so I am happy to provide you with the opportunity to remember.

The words that "I am the only begotten Son of the Father," is incorrect. I am the Son begotten only of the Father, just as you are the Sons and Daughters who are begotten only of the Father. And you know what that means? It means you aren't truly begotten by your human parents and you are not begotten by your egos either. You are begotten only of the Father. You have only one Source. You have only one Cause. Not multiple sources. There is nothing that sets us apart, in fact. In the imagination, you seem to have been able to set yourself apart by virtue of beliefs; that place me above you and you below me; and I am the sinless and you are the sinful.

I'm going to tell you something: Primarily the sense of inequality, the sense of sinfulness has been a male chauvinist precept, because you were what? born of woman! and full of trouble. There hasn't truly been any religious basis for that statement, much less a Real one. It's time to free yourself from that shit!

Last weekend in Orlando, I said that there should be a bumper sticker that says, "The Christ is not a wimp." It is not unchristly to speak directly and meaningfully and really as the Christ. So don't be afraid of words. And use any words when they express a truth and do not hurt anyone. There's not a better word I could have used there than shit, because there is nothing else that you would rather have less to do with. (Laughter)

We are brothers and sisters. We are nothing more and nothing less than the direct expression of an indivisible and therefore undivided God, who therefore cannot be conflicted. Which means, that it is your absolute unvarying birthright to be unconflicted. And there is therefore no real justification for continuing to be conflicted, or conflict yourself with false beliefs. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: I have a question that has to do with dealing with my human emotions of anger and sadness and frustration. In the past I haven't always expressed these feelings, because I have wanted to always be loving. And someone advised me that I need to express these feelings, yet I don't want to get all caught up in them. So I'm looking for a way of somehow balancing, I know that's not who I am, but I don't want to deny those feelings. And so when I'm angry I don't want to attack someone, yet at the same time I don't want to pretend I'm not angry. So can you address how I deal with these emotions, I call negative, but I don't want to do that either? So how do I include it all?

ANSWER: You provide yourself with an environment in which the anger can be expressed and hurt neither yourself nor anyone else. And I would encourage you to find, what you would call a therapist or a counselor, who is not steeped in Freudian psychology. One who can help facilitate your expression and release of the anger and frustration, so that you can leave it behind you, not delve into it and get stuck in it.

Anger is squelched love. Hate is squelched love. And so you must unsquelch it. And when you do it, it is as though what comes up is anger; but in letting it flow, the underlying love that it is your birthright to be feeling and expressing can come forth, washing away the cork that has bottled it. That is what I would suggest that you do. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: We're experiencing in our country a lot of chaos and disintegration it seems...

ANSWER: Glory hallelujah...

QUESTION: And it doesn't seem that we have enlightened, conscious leadership. So I'm wondering what as a people we can do about that, and what as an individual I could do to contribute or assist in that?

ANSWER: Literally be ready to roll up your shirt sleeves and participate in the change, not the change that is NEEDED, because that is a preconceived change. Be ready to roll up your sleeves and participate in the change that is occurring. Don't try to plan it, you will have trouble keeping up with it, as it is. Why? because no man is in charge of it.

No man, no political group, no country, was responsible for the fall of the Berlin wall. No man, no institution, no country, was responsible for the dissolving of communism in the communist block.

"An idea who's time has come," is here, but it isn't a conceptual idea. People are beginning to feel. And as with the last question, there is junk sitting on top of what they are feeling. The junk is the repression of what has been felt. And it is what has surfaced in Los Angeles, recently. And it has seemed alarming. But why would you be alarmed, because something that needs to be looked at is no longer being successfully covered up with a false sense of peace? All of you must begin to trust your fundamental innocence and therefore your fundamental integrity.

Everyone says, a true democracy in your country would be dangerous, because if everyone had an equal vote, there are so many of you who are politically and otherwise ignorant, that your vote would tend to pull everybody down. Wake up, that's the beginning of dictatorship. And what you are asking for is half a dictatorship. At the present time, your system in your country is half dictatorial, because you have a representative group who does the voting for the masses.

It isn't going to work, because waking up is happening. In other words, the uncovering of the conscious experience of each one's divinity is happening. And it is happening, because there are more who are awake than there are who are asleep. And thus, there are not enough joined together in a false perception of things, to allow it to be reinforced and so the misperceptions, the ignorance's, are beginning to crumble. And that which is essentially Divine about each one of you is being felt in his or her humanity.

And again, we're coming back to this fact that before you are a Protestant, or a Catholic, or a Jew, or an American, or a Russian, or a South African; you are brothers and sisters. And so, the Divinity of each of you and of everyone on this planet, is beginning to emerge spontaneously at the level of each one's humanity. I will warn you right now, that it is going to mean being more involved and not letting Washington do it.

You are watching a revolution in your world and although there are some pockets of diehards, if I may put it that way, who are resisting the healing and are shooting at each other and generally not reflecting the unfolding harmony. There is, nevertheless, a revolution occurring that is not destroying everyone in the process.

Don't be so arrogant as to assume that the United States is the fore runner, because the United States is dragging it's heels. Who is the United States? You.

And so, when I am talking about becoming still and going within and connecting with who you Divinely Are, as an experience, rather than an intellectual explanation, so that you might spontaneously know of your brother's Divinity; I'm not just talking about getting into the Kingdom of Heaven. I'm talking about all of you getting into the Kingdom of Heaven and recognizing that here is the Kingdom of Heaven, even though it isn't the total extent of the Kingdom of Heaven.

And so, as I have been sharing, there really is going to be change. It isn't just going to be a new intellectual perception. Your innocence awaits your experience of it. Your experience of it is going to involve the arising within you of feelings, and I'm not talking about emotional reactions, I'm talking about SOUL responding to what is Real. And there will be such joy, and there will be love. But you know what else? There will be a spontaneous conviction, not an intellectual one, a conviction born of experience, that will cause you to be willing to go to the ends of the universe to express your love for your brother.

Unity, does not mean harmony of an infinite number of isolated units, that somehow are not conflicting with each other. Harmony is the conscious experience of oneness, that involves your willingness to be in total participation with every other individuality that exists, with absolute defenselessness and therefore without fear. But you know what? It's going to start in very real ways, right here in River City, right here in Boston, right here in Philadelphia, right here in Los Angeles, right here in Russia, etc., with Real people. You. Me.

Now, if you want to be truly idealistic, be realistic, so that you don't forget that your idealism must relate to where you are; not only must it relate to where you are, it is going to. Having the conscious experience of being Divine is going to be very different from your experience at this instant. The way that will exhume from you will be incredible and very different from what you are experience of it, at this moment.

But more than anything, is this willingness to walk the extra mile, the willingness to go out of your way in uncovering your brothers Divinity and treating your brother and sister on the basis of their Divinity that you perceive to be there, because you have let yourself into the conscious experience of your own Divinity.

Don't call peace, the result of escaping from the call for change. Be willing to be with, to be present with your brother and to be present with the situation where transformation is occurring, with that active desire to experience what is Real, right there. If you have a loved one who is apparently on a death bed, you find yourself willing to be there for and with that one. Be willing to be there for and with all of your fellow men, because that is what will allow for graceful transformation for everyone.

I am not meaning to make transformation sound like hard work. But if it is misunderstood and if it is resisted it will feel laborious. It doesn't need to be. It won't be, if all of you will be constantly curious. If something is happening, it has to be the Movement of God perceived clearly or through a glass darkly, but it cannot be anything else. And so, the call is for letting go of the biases and the preconceptions and the mindsets that cause the Presence of God to be seen through a glass darkly. Right where a problem seems to be going on, right there must be the Presence of God misperceived. So, right there, let us desire to get past the misperception into the true experience of it. That desire is what always heals the misperception and the effect of the misperception. Remember that.

You are likely by the end of the day tomorrow, to be sick and tired of the word curiosity. But hopefully you will have heard it enough times to remember it. And hopefully remember it with kindness and fondness. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to know what my next step is in healing my incest experience as a child, if there needs to be a next step?

ANSWER: Literally, I'm going to put it this way, you are in the last stages. You are at the point of forgiveness. And forgiveness is, you willing to disengage from judgment, from practicing judgment that keeps you conflicted. You cannot change what has happened. You cannot change what someone else has done. You can release yourself from guilt. These things you have done for the most part. And the time is upon you to release it as an issue. The time is upon you to engage in, what I will call, a little bit of self-discipline. So that, when the ego suggests to you, when the little voice whispers in your ear, that there is still justification for some hurt and still justification for some demand for justice, you may tell it to "shut up," that you are not willing to engage in employing your mind in that way any longer, because you have your life to get on with.

You have done a great deal of work. It is not appropriate for you to go on endlessly working this issue. There is a time when you must realize, that it is finished and claim your freedom from the issue itself. And literally, this is where you are.

Now, just as with releasing any other ego habit, it is when you come to the end that it seems as though you have the most difficulty, because it is at this point where you realize that there is a certain satisfaction that has come from a feeling of self-righteous indignation. And it is like giving up a drug and realizing that you will never have a "hit" from it again.

Mind you, I am not implying that there was never any reason for being upset. But along with a real reason for being upset, there has been a certain satisfaction that has come from asserting your integrity. And as I said, there comes a time when you must let even that assertion of your integrity go, so that you may move forward in your integrity without having to actively claim it. That is where you are. And I have to say bravo to you.

And like any other "student" who has completed college and is at the point of graduation, I am saying, "take your diploma and get the hell out of school." I say that lovingly, but firmly. Don't hang around the campus. It is time for you to enjoy the fruits of your labor. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is: What I'm trying to express is that, I'm trying to heal a relationship that I have with my sister-in-law. I don't seem to get any peace with it. And recently I've seen a therapist about it and the suggestion was to make space for yourself and to distance. And basically what I'm asking for is some peace with this relationship. And if you have any suggestions, because it is definitely a freeze-dried situation in both ways. And yet there are so many mixed feelings. It's so jumbled, I can't seem to sort it out. And it feels almost like some form of mental illness on my part. And I wondered what you thought about continuing with the therapy as a means for healing it? And it is difficult for me to explain it well, but I would like healing.

ANSWER: I understand. I do understand. I am going to confirm the advice of your therapist. It is important for you to have some space, so that you might find out that indeed you are not mentally off balance. The relationship is such that it calls upon you to invalidate yourself, which is totally inappropriate. I'm not saying that your sister is supposed to be invalidated. What I am saying is that it is important for you to be feeling your integrity rather than having it called into question.

Now, I encourage you to stay with your therapist, not because you are mentally off balance, but because you need the wise and simple confirmation of your sanity that your therapist is able to give you, and which you will more easily be able to recognize when you stop trying to convince your sister of something she is unwilling to embrace.

Now, you must understand that the practice of love, is not a means of controlling anything. It does indeed, provide an environment in which revelation, or change, or transformation can occur most easily. But as each one of you know, until you are willing to change, change will not occur, no matter how surrounded you are by those who are loving you and those who are supporting you in your clearer awareness of your wholeness and your well-being and your integrity.

Now, you just Be Love. Keep some distance, so that you may remain clear. You can love from a distance. And I encourage you to wait until she approaches you.

I know every one of you has someone in your life that you would like to be able to help, with whatever clarity you have arrived at, at this point in your life. And it seems to you that something that has meant something to you, ought to have meaning for someone else. And that what you have learned ought to empower you to make positive changes occur. But it does not work that way. Revelation of Truth does not give you power over anything. But it does allow you to have a degree of clarity within you that brings forth your experience of peace, which allows you therefore to be a more benign presence—Benign, meaning nonthreatening. And when you are not trying to change anyone, you are perceived as safe. And when someone perceives themselves to be safe, they can let down their defenses.

Give your sister space and give yourself space, indeed. And in the space that you provide yourself, you will have an opportunity to find out that you have always been balanced mentally.

I would go quite insane, literally, if I thought that because I was the direct expression of God I ought to be able to heal every single one of you of your ignorance, at this moment, whether you wanted to be healed or not. And the reason I would drive myself crazy, is because I can't do it. Now, some of you think that anyone who is empowered by the Holy Spirit, anyone who is awake, anyone who is consciously the Son of God; ought to be able to override something illusory, called the ego.

Well I'll tell you something: The ego is so illusory, that nothing can be done to it. It isn't your ego that has power, it is that in you which is essentially Divine, empowering a false belief that you are harboring. And the minute you withdraw your investment of energy in a belief, or in what you would call the ego, you will find the ignorance, the distortion of your perception yielding to the clear perception of reality. You are the Sons and Daughters of God and I cannot override you. In other words, I cannot enforce your good upon you. At the bottom line, if you are not experiencing your good and your fulfillment, it is because of a decision you have made. And until you unmake that decision, by power of your own everlasting authority, you cannot hear truly of the good that I would share with you.

Now I'm going to put it a different way that you might not have thought about. I cannot inflict your good upon you. I cannot override your free will. You cannot override each others free will. And as soon as all of you recognize that, you will become more self-responsible. And you will stop waiting for me or someone else to change you. And in that realization you will feel immediately empowered, less able to interpret yourself to yourself as a victim. And you will be able to more conscientiously embrace your birthright as the Son or the Daughter of God.

Now, although I cannot change you, I can be and am present at all times, standing in conscious and conscientious support of your clarity. The gift of my undistorted perception of you is constantly being provided to you, not only by me but by all of the brotherhood who are awake. In order to receive it, you are going to have to let it in. In order to let it in, you are going to have to become defenseless. In order to become defenseless, you are going to have to let go of your convictions as to what things are and how things work. And you know what? I don't hold the key to the door. You do! I don't have access to the switch that makes your decisions. You do! No one else in your family or your world is able to get to that switch.

And most of you who are "helpers," have not yet become clear on the fact, that you don't have access to the switch. And you do frustrate yourselves with attempting to make changes that it is not in your power to make. Those of you who have gotten the idea, those of you who are "helpers," and I am speaking of psychiatrist, and psychologist and therapists; do not engage in attempting to be the healer, but you empower the ones you are working with by telling them that they indeed have the power, as I am doing right now with you. This empowers that one and relieves you as the helper from a false sense of responsibility and the frustration that comes from not being able to carry out that responsibility.

Now, indeed, give yourself space and wait until your sister has indicated a readiness to be open to a new relationship, by coming forward to you and saying, “can we talk.” And do not labor longer under the idea that you by virtue of your love ought to be able to make a change, even if it isn’t wanted. It is not appropriate for you to be suffering from a sense of failure, when there is no possibility of success, because the power isn’t in your hands. And I want you to be happy, genuinely, truly and appropriately happy.

A post script: This does not constitute abandoning your sister. It simply means that you are becoming wise and expressing and living the wisdom. It is not necessary for you to maintain a freeze-dried picture of her. But it is also not necessary for you to go in and try to break up the freeze-dried picture. And so, even though you withdraw from the arena of attempting to make change, it does not mean that you must have a negative picture of her. You can still recognize the fundamental truth of her Being.

And there is something else you can do too: You can entrust her to the Father; you can entrust her to the Holy Spirit; you can even entrust her to her guide. She is not helpless! She is not without help! You know what happens when you do that? It means that you see her as being worthy of God’s Love. And that constitutes a joining with her, at the level of the Truth about her and that does strengthen her, even if you do not see her, even if you do not write to her, even if you do not talk to her on the phone. Be at peace. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello guys.

ANSWER: Indeed, there are not only a lot of you here; there are a lot of us here.

QUESTION: That’s wonderful. Well, I have a couple of things. First is: Through the healing that I’m doing these days, I have discovered that something I have been doing since very early in my life was, lifting out of my body, energetically. And I’ve been trying to focus on being more grounded lately. And I’m wondering if you can share any insights on appropriate ways to do this.

And the second thing was: Sometimes I’m at a mental level I know that this is an ego thing and so forth, but I end up finding myself trying to conform to projections that I make about others perceptions of me, at any given encounter. And I’m looking for a way out of that trap.

ANSWER: I will tell you that, the only way out of that trap, is to be looking to a different source than others expectations or your best judgment as to what their expectations might be. You need to have a source that is more original.

Obviously, your projections will have to be based upon past experience or memory. That means that it is impossible then for your behavior to be original. And as long as it is not original, it means that everyone around you is deprived of the gift you have to give, which is to be that angle—not the best word, but it works—the best angle of expression of the Father’s will. You are here. You exist. You experience existence because you are the direct expression of the Father; not identical, as I said earlier, with any other individual expression, even though you cannot be unidentical. Therefore, the specific expression of you is essential to the whole, if I may put it that way.

Therefore, I encourage you to withdraw your attention from what others say they expect of you. And I encourage you to withdraw your investment of energy in what you project they expect of you. And I dare you, I challenge you to start listening deeper within yourself and know that what you are feeling for is something you will recognize as that which you love. In other words, you will feel perfectly congruent with it. It will feel like fulfillment of purpose to you. And then begin to let it flow and let the chips fall where they may.

Well, I’m going to put it this way: If Paul came in here today and decided that he was going to answer your question and everyone else’s question based upon his memory, rather than listening at the edge of the unknown; he quite possibly could speak in a stimulating fashion; but not for long, because he would constantly be gauging his answers on everyone’s responses. And slowly he would give up his allegiance to his memory and would begin to serve the nods, or the frowns, or the shakes of the heads, or the tears, or the joy. And where initially he might have sounded stimulating, he would become boring, because you would not get from him anything that your behavior didn’t allow for. And you wouldn’t come back tomorrow and I wouldn’t blame you.

That which is real, that which is meaningful, that which is original, that which not only fits but promotes inspiration and insight and revelation, comes from your willingness to stand at the edge of the unknown in you, so that you might watch and feel the coming forth of the expression of God, that you are the embodiment of.

Now if you have, and you have, if you have developed an agreement with those you deal with, whereby you will respond in certain ways to them and they know that they can expect you to behave in a certain way; and that, in effect, they have a certain amount of control over you; if, indeed, this kind of mutual agreement to do a limiting dance with each other has occurred; then if you begin to listen to a different place and you begin to be a clearer expression of the originality of you, O-o-o-oh it is going to elicit some negative response, because you didn’t tell them you were not playing the game anymore. You didn’t tell them that you were not going to dance anymore. And you had an agreement! And you know what? You're going to have to say, "tough luck, find someone else to dance with."

Now, just for the sake of clarity here: To not be doing the dance anymore, does not mean it is an act of independence and separation. Actually, to dance the dance with them, according to a mutual agreement for behavior that the two of you have come to, that has constituted withdrawal and separation from what you Divinely Are; you could ultimately say, it has constituted a withdrawal from God. And a decision to stand by yourself—meaning separate from God—and with someone else, on the basis of a mutual agreement as to "appropriate behavior," but that appropriate behavior does not involve being connected with yourself. And so, you have lost the originality; ALL of you have, to the degree that you have this mutual agreement with someone else. And in terms of the Course, that mutual agreement with someone else to something that does not in anyway relate to the Father's will, constitutes a special relationship.

That is what a special relationship is: An agreement to accept a certain thing as truth without checking in first to see what Truth is. And the mutual agreement to validate something that doesn't relate to Truth; in other words, an illusion, is what constitutes a special relationship. You break the special relationship and gain your freedom, by listening, giving your attention to a different place.

Now, all of you have had a good feeling about untying the umbilical cord or cutting the umbilical cord. I want you to have that same kind of positive feeling when it comes to breaking off a special relationship; a mutual agreement to behave in a certain way, where both parties get a certain amount of satisfaction and peace, while still not being connected with their essential Divinity. And you break the special relationship by establishing contact, you might say, with your essential Being, or by establishing a relationship with your guide, or me, or the Holy Spirit, or the Father, because you can count on it. If you are listening to the Holy spirit, it will not cater, it will not cater to any lingering ego self-definitions. And it will promote your being original, rather than repetitive mannerisms and thoughts that arise out of your memory.

And there are those of you in the group, aside from the gentleman I'm speaking to, who know I am speaking to them also. The originality of your Being is bound to come forth, because it is the Movement of God, right there where you are. And as long as one is engaged in a special relationship, which doesn't take God into account, one cannot be comfortable because one is not taking oneself into account. And you cannot be in a state of self-denial and be comfortable.

There is a real simple answer to your question, stop doing it! just stop doing it! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: What about how I subconsciously tend to lift out of my body and now become more focused on grounding but I am looking for other ways of doing that.

ANSWER: This sort of popping out that occurs, does not occur as a result of peace or of being grounded, but more as an intense expression of, for lack of better words, energeticness. I encourage you REALLY to feel for your peace, because that is what will, I'm going to say, anchor you and keep you where you need to be in order to be effective. Certainly, I do not want you to find another form of energeticness to try to overcome this form of energeticness. The answer is simpler and less effortful than what you have been doing. Try it! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is: I've been working with a couple of guides for quite a while and every once in a while I feel a switch from one guide to another. I can perceive the entity, or whatever, right next to me, whether it's a guide or my higher self. And right now I'm feeling a switch from one peaceful, loving, secure entity to another. And I was wondering what's actually going on? I have more trust in it, because it's happened before. I have more faith that I can be secure in that. And I just wanted clarification on that.

And my other question is: Someone mentioned about changing names or finding their name, and I keep coming up with within myself a name that I've always had an attraction for. And I'm wondering what's that all about? And my oldest daughter came to me last week and said she wanted to change her middle name to the same name. And I'm just curious about those two things.

ANSWER: As regards the name, I encourage you to listen further, and let there be the conscious intent to have no preference whatsoever. There is further clarification for you in this respect and it is not appropriate for me to comment further about it.

What was the first part of your question about?

QUESTION: My guide or higher self. I believe it's a guide switching from one, I feel like I'm changing channels.

ANSWER: I understand. Although you have only one guide, and for lack of better words, I will say specifically assigned to you. There are others working with you in conjunction with your guide. I do encourage you to allow this shift to occur. I also want you to know that you do not need to be hesitant to ask challenging questions or to say, "why is this happening? Why is this switch occurring? What purpose does it serve?" Do not feel that you are being too nosy.

Again, practice curiosity so that you might have a clearer picture. And enjoy the proof of the fact that there's more than one with you. And this is true of everyone else as well. But you are speaking of having the experience of more than one standing with you on behalf of your awakening.

Now, I'm going to encourage all of you not to value understanding quite as much as you do. (Laughter) I cannot say this too often: You cannot understand your way, you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. You will feel your way in, not gropingly like a blind person, but you will feel your way into the full conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven with your Soul. Even more accurately, you will feel your way into the full conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven AS Soul.

Understanding is something you require when you need to be in control; plain, pure and simple. And if you are in control you cannot possibly be yielding to the Father's will. Again, let's steer clear of grand religious definitions of words such as, yielding to the Father's will. Your will, when it is not covered over by your belief systems, is the Father's will. And ultimately, when you are yielding to the Father's will, you are coming home into your right Mind and your true conscious experience of your ability to have an intent.

And so, you are coming back into your Sanity when you are yielding to the Father's will, meaning that you are not any longer choosing to have a point of view different from the Father's but matching some cohorts point of view, with whom you have decided to join in a special relationship.

If you will allow yourself to be in the not-knowing place without any intent of understanding anything by virtue of the conscious use of logic or thinking, you will find revelation occurring, you will find yourself beginning to know things. And because of the knowing reflects the all knowing mind of God, it will be understandable but the understanding will not have been arrived at through logic or reasoning. And then when you express yourself from your knowing, everyone around you will say, "what wisdom he has. What wisdom she has. How clear I feel when I am around him or her. I love being with him or her." And you will have respect, but not because you have earned it, by understanding anything through an intellectual process. You value your thinking and your ability to reason, as though that was what identified you and gave you value. And that is where you tend to agree with one another and hold each other to that activity of good clear correct thinking and reasoning.

God is all Knowing. And it is the word "Knowing" that needs to be stressed, and not the word "all." True God Knows everything, but it comes from being All Knowing. The Conscious experience of Knowing is God Being or God being God is a Movement of Knowing without any thinking associated with it.

Now, the statement, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free," takes on new meaning. It isn't what you know that sets you free, it is letting yourself into that place where revelation can occur and you find yourself knowing something, that what you know sets you free. What sets you free is the Movement of God in your consciousness, not a movement in your consciousness, whereby you arrive at a conclusion and can make a decision that everyone else can applaud.

I will tell you something: You don't know what truth is until you listen for it. The Movement of God is best expressed in the words, "Behold, I make all things new." It is a Movement of making all things new, therefore, what was revealed to you yesterday must be listened for again, today.

Do not listen and then think out of habit, that you must accumulate what you have heard and store it away for further use; because your ability to be appropriate, your ability to be congruent, your ability to embody the Movement of God requires you to be listening in the moment in which God is Being; which is always the moment of conscious experience that is occurring now.

Do you realize that that means you don't have to accumulate skill at living life. You only have to, let us say, develop skill at paying attention in the moment and then knowing how to be appropriate in the moment, will be automatic. That does mean entrusting yourself into the moment. It is a most gratifying and fulfilling experience. So, be careful, as I said, not to value your understanding too highly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I want to know if you can make any comments about this energy that seems to be stuck in my throat and seems to have something to do with integrating my emotional side. It's been with me for a couple of years. And I don't know if I need to say anymore about it.

ANSWER: No, indeed. Who are you trying to save by not expressing yourself? You do not have to answer that. You are sitting on your own feelings. You are sitting on your self in order to shield someone from you. And you cannot do it and feel comfortable. Actually, you know who this one is. But I will tell you that this ONE is just being used as an excuse by you for not simply going ahead and being you.

Paul understands, because there are times that he tries to protect people from me. (Laughter) But you see, you cannot engage in that action for very long without depleting yourself, without being uncomfortable. You need to love yourself enough to stop justifying squelching yourself. All you are protecting anybody from is something quite wonderful. And I'm not trying to butter you up, I'm telling you the truth. And you must stop.

The only reason this gathering is occurring is because Paul is willing to be present and throw caution to the wind and let the chips fall where they may. It pays off, because it is, indeed, all of your thinking and your judgment inside your head, that provides the blocks to the meaningful expression of the presence that you are. And so, instead of protecting everyone, you are depriving everyone. You aren't really doing them a service. You know, whenever any of you try to avoid making waves for someone else, you are depriving them of the Movement that they can get hold of to move, to grow, to feel the fullness of life.

Do you realize that you can't do anything without affecting everyone, even doing nothing affects them; it means that someone is one car length closer to home, or one person closer to the cashier.

Let it all hang out. And don't feel that you must let it out perfectly. The more you entrust yourself to the movement of letting it out, the more perfect and more beautiful what comes out will be. And I will tell you something else: You can go around and check out with some psychics, or with some others who are channeling, perhaps in hopes of finding a more complex explanation, but don't waste your time avoiding simply letting it all hang out. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Please tell me all about the Holy Spirit. Lately in my life, I have a need for Him, and I'd like to know a lot more about Him. Thank you.

ANSWER: I am sorry to disappoint you, but the Holy Spirit is a her, (lots of laughter) ...and a Him. You're going to be glad you asked.

The Holy Spirit is your Divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. If you are the Daughter of God, or you are the Son of God—if you are, in other words, the direct expression of the Father/Mother God—then where on earth do you think the infinity of You goes, or has gone, while you have explored an experience of limitation? It can't go anywhere! It's infinite. And so, while you ignore It in favor of exploring a limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, It remains and It is called the Holy Spirit.

When you reaccess your Divinity and you are no longer holding yourself apart from the Father with your own private, personal vantage-point or perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, there will no longer be a thing referred to as the Holy Spirit. There will be the Father and the Son, or the Father and the Daughter. There will be the Father in action that constitutes the Son or Daughter, and there will not be a Trinity. And, in fact, the two-ness of the Father and Son will not be referred to, either, because in all cases the Son or the Daughter—as you currently perceive it—will be experienced to be identical [to the Father].

Why do you suppose that the Holy Spirit is able to turn your every experience to your advantage when you turn things over to It? Because in turning it over to the Holy Spirit, you are turning your present sense of yourself over to what you Are already, infinitely speaking. And it is a giving permission for congruence to occur. And when congruence occurs, clarity occurs and your misperception goes out the window and you say, "I have an improved experience," or what the Course refers to as a "happy dream" instead of an unhappy dream.

What do you think Pentecost was? I will tell you at the bottom line, it was a day of great grief. A day of such grief on the part of my disciples, that you could say they abandoned all hope. In other words, they were not exercising their own free will. They did not feel personally competent. And in giving up, you might say, on being competent, they became receptive to the Holy Spirit, which filled them. In other words, that which they Divinely were filled who they seemed to be, humanly speaking, and everything that they did began to have meaning.

I had said to them, “If you have seen me, you have seen the Father,” and they had the experience of being that. When you—or any of you—give permission, give the invitation to be filled with the Holy Spirit, you are inviting the conscious experience of connection with your Self in Its Totality. And because your Self is the Presence of the Movement of God, It is then the Father Who is there and everything that you are being takes on meaning. So that you are even heard by those in other languages, than the one with which you speak, or you could also say that you are heard on different levels than just the intellectual level.

Waking up is indeed a matter of letting in the Totality of You, letting in the Holy Spirit, which, once reestablished as the Presence of You, discloses the Presence of the Daughter of God or the Son of God—the Christ.

Do you know what? The Presence of the Christ in the world is not going to stand out like a sore thumb. It is going to be like here, today. Simple, to-the-point, relevant, but transformational. And you may not realize how transformational until the middle of next week, or a month from now, when you realize that you are responding to something in an entirely different fashion than you used to. And you will say, “Oh, my goodness! Something happened. I’ve changed. I’ve grown.”

You don’t see the Christ because you are looking for something too other-worldly. You must remember, THIS IS the Kingdom of Heaven, and all of you are the direct expression of God. And so, it is the here and the now, and all of you who are experiencing the here and the now, that will be uncovered in your Divine reality, which means that everything about who and what you are, and what this world is, will be enhanced, not wiped out. Healed, you might say. But again, it’s a matter of the scales falling from your eyes. It’s True perception, replacing misperception.

Now, there were women here who were glad to hear that the Holy Spirit is a her. Men! Be grateful that the Holy Spirit is a Her. And women, be glad to know that the Holy Spirit is a Him, because Him and Her are embodied in each one of you.

Remember, the Holy Spirit is your Divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. Now you know even more firmly what the advantage is to going within and connecting with your Real Self. Not only are you going to experience the Presence of God as the constituting Presence of your Being, but you are going to connect with the Holy Spirit, which is your True Identity. And so, the experience is going to be very relevant to you. It won’t be a head trip. It’s going to be a very grounded, real, and meaningful experience of you.

It has nothing to do with theology, nothing to do with theories. It has to do with the Reality of you and the Reality of the world. And, as I have said, the Reality of it will begin to register with you when you are willing to say, “Nothing that I see means anything.” “Nothing that I see means what I currently think it means.” That constitutes the chink in the wall, that lets the new perception in.

So, each one of you has the experience of Pentecost with you at every moment, ready to in-fill you the moment you give permission and express enough curiosity to move into the not-knowing place—not-knowing, humanly speaking.

Now you can use the experience of the disciples to confirm for you your experience of Pentecost. And I want to say one other thing. The in-filling of the Holy Spirit may come through such an expression of joy that it will not come out in recognizable words, but is that what is happening today, here? Is what I am saying unintelligible? So “far out” as to be weird?

You can expect reunion of you with your Self—or the Holy Spirit—to cause you to be more recognizably intelligent and more real and more congruent with that which is meaningful in your world.

I will tell you, that we are not disembodied spirits, floating around in the nebulousness of some spiritual Kingdom of Heaven, speaking in tongues and just having an emotional “hit.”

I said that you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, but I did say also, that when you let revelation occur, you WILL understand! And understanding is not nebulous and it’s not unintelligible. So, as you invite the in-filling of the Holy Spirit, as you invite the experience of the Wholeness of You, you need not be afraid that they will put you away, because you have become so weird and irrelevant that you frighten everybody to death. It IS important to know that, because such illogical reasons as, “I will sound like a fool” are used as justification for not inviting in the experience of your Divinity. And another illogical justification is, “Well, if I wake up, I will be translated into the Kingdom of Heaven and I will not be able to be with my family. WHY would I want to wake up?”

Waking up will not separate you from that which is Real. And everyone in your family and everyone in your community is as Real as you are. There are a lot of ignorant justifications that everyone is using for not becoming clear, for not waking up!

There was a time when a member of Paul’s family went through a stage of being afraid of flying. There was a point at which it was necessary to take a trip. And this person asked me, “What will happen if I don’t go?” And I said, “You will miss the opportunity to see the face of God.” And she said, “That’s exactly what I’m afraid will happen.” This person went and there was a marvelous healing in the process and indeed this person was able to experience God in every aspect of the trip and it was beautiful. And that one did not lose the ability to be with and enjoy the company of her family. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is: I've read a lot of spiritual things from spiritual people and there seems to be an ultimate morality. And I'm wondering if you can speak on this in terms of especially in the Bible and Jesus putting forth all these rules and regulations in order to enter the Kingdom of Heaven and many other spiritual teachers speaking...

ANSWER: O-o-o-oh I didn't give a lot of rules.

QUESTION: O-o-o-oh, well, they wrote a lot down. (Much laughter) I don't know.

ANSWER: I gave what you could call, two rules: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and mind and soul, and your brother as yourself." And that was what we've been talking about all of the day, today. Learning to go within, into the silence, so that the peace of your Being might be experienced by you as an actual experience of your Divinity. Out of that experience of your Divinity comes the spontaneous and simultaneous realization that this Divine One that you are, is what each of your brothers and sisters would find if they went within and listened also. And that realization within you, forever will CHANGE the way in which you approach and treat your fellow man, because again, it is an understanding that isn't logical or intellectual, but it is an absolute awareness.

And so, to find God in the experience of yourself, spontaneously precipitates an event that you could have interpreted as a second rule or a second commandment, "Love your brother as yourself." You will not be able to avoid it. And so, you could say—and I'm going to be cautious here—you could say that instead of rules, I was giving a formula for waking up; for being able to be the Presence of Love that does truly characterize you.

So, it isn't complicated. And there isn't any morality in it. You do not do this to get gold stars or to receive the favor of God, because you are already the Daughter of God and the Son of God, from whom the Father has withheld nothing of what He is. And so your blessing is whole. And you do not need a divine dispensation. You only need to dare to embrace what is already true of you.

Morality... and ethics, etc., are the best rules human beings can come up with to maintain a decent and humane behavior; decent enough and humane enough to allow for survival to occur with some reasonable amount of peace. But when you experience who you are within and in that experience find that you know what your brother and sister really is, you cannot help but be the Presence of transformational and clarifying Love; you cannot help but be immaculately appropriate, manifesting harmony. And there will be no call for a practice of certain behavior patterns that express a definition of morality. Your very Presence will in itself be healing, not because you are trying to be, but because in that state of mind you cannot help but be.

Until such time as you have, all of you, until such time as you have this experience of your Divinity, that I have described; then I do suggest, that you do unto others as you would have them do unto you. Or put another way, don't do what you don't like. Mind you, I didn't say do whatever you want; I said don't do what you don't like. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I guess I don't have a particular question. But my husband and I have seemed to come to a decision, where we'd like to make ourselves available to God to bring another child into the world. And I was wondering if you had any comments on this? It seems that the comments we've got from completely different questions today seem to have brought us to the realization. But I'm just wondering something specifically from you on this.

ANSWER: That is the best first step you could take. Now, just love each other. Certainly don't work at it. I cannot give you better advice than that. And there is nothing more appropriate that you can do. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In the last year or so I've had a lot of emotional growth and changes in my life. And I've been wrestling with the darker side of my personality. And in the last four days something shifted and I would like to know what it is?

ANSWER: "The darker side of your personality." Let us be careful what words we incarcerate ourselves with. There is no darker side of your personality. There is just your essential Identity and a sense of yourself, called the ego. The ego is a limited sense of selfhood, which you have arrived at through the use of incomplete information and the help of those of varying degrees of ignorance around you. And you have all conspired together to agree to this limited sense of yourself, which we have called the ego.

There is not a dark side to you. There is not an evil side to you. And you cannot possibly be in a struggle. The only tension that you can experience, is the tension created by resisting your Divinity. And the only reason you would resist your Divinity, is because you think from your limited perspective that your Divinity is your enemy. That's the only reason. It is not an intelligent reason, but it is reasonable, considering the information you are using. In other words, you are always only experiencing what you Divinely are, comfortably or uncomfortably.

Again, there is no evil presence any more than there is an actual measurable presence, called darkness. It is simply the absence of light. Light is measurable; it is a presence; it is an energy. Darkness is not an energy; it is not a presence that can be measured. If you speak of the dark side of your personality, your very choice of words seems to give personality and vitality to this supposed dark side, and you can carry it further and indeed feel that there can be an actual tug-of-war, a real conflict, when there can't. But your belief builds and further supports this personification of what is nothing more than a limited definition of yourself—just a definition. And you get yourself into more and more trouble.

The shift you have referred to, that has happened this last week, involves a spontaneous release of some belief structures that has made room for a clearer experience of your already existing, I'm going to say, Integrity. And so, there has been a feeling of stability and less feeling of vulnerability, which you have interpreted as more confidence and there has, therefore, been more peace. And indeed, this is excellent and it will pave the way for further shifting. And I will tell you also that when doubts occur relative to this shifting that you have experienced, the doubts will not hook you as significantly and, therefore, you will not tend to backslide. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello to Raj and his entourage. For only a relatively short while has my dream been a happy one. Mostly I don't feel motivated to do anything and I am not happy and I don't feel my integrity; that's the hardest. What besides loving myself do I need to do to do something, anything, and to feel my own integrity and innocence?

ANSWER: I encourage you to find others who's innocence you can reflect back to them. It is very hard to feel one's integrity while one is all alone, when one is not engaged in an active relationship. I encourage you to find ways to extend yourself to others, not for the purpose of changing them, but for the purpose of being the active reflection of love, the active reflection of innocence. Your integrity is intact. I simply encourage you to uncover it, by engaging with others. In other words, give what you would like to experience.

Now, there is something else you need to do: You need to acknowledge what you are already doing. You need to be careful not to minimize the love that you are being, as though it's unimportant; so that you do not cause yourself to feel as though you are not being enough. You are like many people who are very loving and who do for others, but you look at yourself like a half-empty glass, instead of a half-full glass. And as a result, you always feel as though you're coming up short, when you're coming up at least half-full.

You need to acknowledge the good that you are doing and the love that you are being. What you honor, becomes magnified in you. And when the suggestion whispers in your ear, that you are not being as effective as you ought to be, or as you could be; I want you to start saying, "maybe I'm not, but what I am doing is Real. And I honor IT, and I'm going to continue."

So you have two tasks here. One is: To be self-aware enough to acknowledge when you are being love. And the other is: To give yourself more opportunity to be with others and reflect back to them their innocence and their integrity. That's the end of the answer.

PAUL: May I ask, are you a member of "A Course In Miracles" group?

QUESTION: I certainly am sir, since 1976.

PAUL: Yes, okay. That was along with what Raj was saying, there was the picture that you are in a group. And that in many ways you are in that group, already doing the things that he said. And you simply need to give yourself some credit. And not always be so caring about everyone else, that you are ignoring what you're doing and then feeling bad, because it doesn't seem to you like you're doing anything.

QUESTION: What you are saying is, stop judging me. Thank you.

ANSWER: Indeed, you are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. I find it hard to ignore some history that I've had and some belief that I've built up about my history, when it comes to finding some employment that is fulfilling and fun and enlivening and also supports me. And I feel like I've looked at this a number of times and sometimes I've talked to you about it. On one hand, I actually feel some loosening up happening within myself and I have an inclination that something is coming and it's not far. I guess I want some advice, some insight on: The belief says, "it will never happen," and I know that that's a lie. And yet I don't have evidence to prove otherwise.

I know what it is. One thought that I have is, that when I seem to find something and it looks like, "Oh there's something that I'm interested in," and I feel some energy about; that I find that I go and get excited about it and I think, "yea that would be something I would like to pursue." I have in the past found that I lose my enthusiasm for doing it before it comes anywhere near fruition. And so, I just keep slogging along because the juice is gone, the energy is gone. And I feel that I have done that with a number of things. So, now I notice the timidity, even when I see something that interest me, I feel like, "oh well, I wonder how long this enthusiasm will last"? I think you get the picture.

ANSWER: Indeed. There is another way of interpreting this than as faithlessness. You have been going through a process of weaning, a weaning away from a very definite should system, especially relative to being an adult male; ah, a responsible adult male. And in that weaning it has indeed seemed as though you have lost a lot of definable structure that could be called ca-a-re-e-e-er (career). You have been being emancipated from what had been a very strong should system, within you. And indeed, the process hasn't been half bad, even though you have fussed about it all along the way.

Now, indeed, the feeling you are having, that it is almost over, that something is on the verge of taking form, is correct. And when it happens, it will not in any way meet the old criteria of being a responsible adult male. It will not meet the coerced definition that you were trying to embody. And yet, you will appear to be quiet stable, secure and respectable. You have needed this emancipation. And although you have fussed all along the way, you have not dug in your heels. And you will look back on this and you will say, “you know, it happened in a relatively short period of time, considering my overall life. And it happened with a degree of gracefulness, that I’m very pleased with.” That’s what you will be able to say. And then you will wonder why you fussed about it. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: So many things have been written about what they call the “White Brotherhood,” some people call them the “Masters of Wisdom,” some people call them the “hierarchy.” And all those things seem to be very romanticized, very contradictory with all those writings. I would like to hear your opinion about that. If you could share some light about that community, if we can call it that way.

ANSWER: I’m sorry, that I do not have any opinions to share with you. Opinions arise out of ignorance. (Laughter) Again, you will find in your spiritual growth or development, that the clearer you become; the more relative, the more grounded, the more simple things are. What has been called the “Great White Brotherhood” or just the “White Brotherhood,” etc., is indeed a romanticized notion. But there is a reason for the notion existing. The reason is, that there is something Real, which I will call the Brotherhood of Man, embracing brothers and sisters, the family of Man with a capital “M,” the Whole Infinite direct expression of the Father, called the Sons and Daughters of God.

Now, whenever you hear of hierarchies, you may know that you are hearing about something formulated by the ego. Harmony fourth-dimensionally speaking or Really speaking, with a capital “R,” is not the result of levels of control or authority; nor is it a result of cooperation between entities. Harmony is the evidence of an indivisible and undivided First Cause or God, which means an indivisible and undivided manifestation or expression of that God. Harmony simply means the beautiful, unerring, orderly Movement of God, Infinitely.

Now, of the Brotherhood of Man, the Sons and Daughters of God, the family of Man; there are those who are Totally Awake and there are those who are, shall I say, still dallying with the ego, still dreaming dreams and defining them as reality. And you must be careful here, because there may be a tendency to say that those who are awake are better than those who are asleep. And the ego will use that as a means for creating conflict and shame and self-doubt, if indeed you are not one of the ones who is awake. The ego would not have you be awake, because it would cease to exist, but it will say, “shame on you for not being awake.”

The sense of difference is what I am engaged in nullifying and it is what I ask all of you to be unwilling to validate or energize. You could say, that it is like equalizing the pressure on both sides of that which seems to cause a sense of separation, because obviously if that of you in your limited sense of yourself comes into a state of self-appreciation and love, that it’s true of the part of you that is called the Holy Spirit—the disowned part of you that is the Holy Spirit—that equality, that equivalency is what undoes the seeming boundary that separates you from your conscious experience of your Divinity.

I must say this again, every single one of you no matter how engrossed you might seem to be in an ignorant perception; every single one of you has the inherent capacity to recognize Truth. And so, I encourage you when you read these various materials, to read them and then listen deeply within yourself; and rather than thinking about them and becoming confused, feel for the Truth of what you are reading. And if you get no sense of Truth from it, trust that inner feeling and set it down and leave it alone. Somewhere along the line each one of you has to begin to trust your inherent capacity to recognize Truth, because that is what will confirm to you its dependability and give you courage to trust even further into the unknown, as your ego would put it; that which will allow you to trust further into the Holy Spirit, your disowned or ignored Divinity.

So don't be afraid to read. Don't be afraid to be exposed to ideas that are foreign to you, but don't embrace those ideas until you have, as I said, taken them within and measured them against your ability to recognize Truth. And this way you will never give your power away and you will never be able to be abused by "unscrupulous spiritual teachers," as crazy as that sounds. This is very important. There is no need to be confused, you do not have to embrace and abide with that which is confusing. And if you stay in your best unconfused state, it will be that much easier to discern and recognize what is Truth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi Raj. For the last several years I've been studying The Course In Miracles and using it for my relationship with my daughter, who hadn't spoken to me for ten years. And the past year there seems to be some small openings in her relationship with me and some connection. I was wondering if I was doing everything I could and how that's going to turn out, if it's going to improve at all?

ANSWER: Indeed, I will put it this way, you are right on target. And your sense of progress is not imagined it is real. And yes, reunion will occur. It is not likely to be for another three years, but you can manage that. And I credit you with not letting yourself be overcome with impatience, in light of the fact, that you have indeed been doing what was appropriate and knew it. It is so easy when one knows he or she is doing the right thing, to then feel that there is justification for impatience, when there are not results as soon as you would like them. All that does is take your peace away from you. It doesn't speed anything up.

"Infinite patience brings immediate results," the Course says. Why? because in the absence of impatience—which is really what infinite patience means—in the absence of impatience you are in your peace and it is that much easier to be the presence of love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything.

She has needed to grow up. She has needed some experience with life in order to release some of her, I'm going to say, youthful exuberant self-righteousness. And you have had enough grace to allow for this, even though it hurt you to not have the kind of relationship which you know is desirable. For lack of better words, I will say, it will pay off.

ANSWER: I am going to end the day today, by pointing out to you; that every single one of you moves forward, awkwardly, without confidence and no one is an expert at it. And so, everyone feels like a fool in the process, in some ways it is humiliating. But you don't have to do it perfectly. You cannot do it with confidence, because you are emerging back Home, from a place of perceived lack. And that is why with every single one of you there is an assigned Individuality, who can stand just in front of where you are and say, "I love you. You are safe. You can move forward the one millimeter that you dare to, or the inch, or the foot."

I want you to be aware that no matter how tiny the yielding is, no matter how faithless your act of faith is, there is rejoicing and encouragement given. If you don't go away today with any other thing that you remember, I want you to remember that you do not have to do it alone. Your willingness to recognize that which is Real in yourself and in your world, is fully supported, even though your conditioning says, that it is an idiotic proposition, a useless one.

I have enjoyed being with you and look forward to being with you tomorrow.

QUESTION: I am on a leading edge and I'm having great difficulty with it. And I would like some suggestion from you as how to work through it and possibly about how long it will take.

ANSWER: Succumb to it. Why are you on your leading edge? Is it really because some event in the world took place, or did the event in your world take place, because you were ready to move on and for you to remain longer where you had been, would have been inconsistent. It is absolutely necessary for you to realize that there is a different way to look at this and then be willing to. And it is also absolutely necessary for you to see that the event that has caused your distress is an integral part of the orderliness of your expansion.

If you are going to leave the loss of your job outside of God's domain, as though it were an event that could happen on the basis of world conditions—I mean by that, economics—or on the basis of ignorant ego dynamics in your work place, then you will not be able to help but feel as though you are a victim. But you are not a victim, because there isn't one aspect of this that has happened outside of the omnipresence of God and therefore it must truly identify your growth.

You think it is forcing your growth at a time when you ought not to have to grow. But your growth happens and then the evidence of it appears. For example:

As you were growing up, you grew and you found out you had grown, because your shoes became uncomfortable and you said, "Ow, I need to get a new pair of shoes." The old pair of shoes are no longer supportive and comfortable. They didn't become tight because you did something wrong, they became tight because something right was happening. And you have been moved out of what you had thought was comfortable, but which could not contain you. Why? because growing was already happening.

Now, Paul did not expect his job description to change this past February and you did not expect your job description to change. In other words, both of you thought you had some job security, but Being never stops to repeat Itself, Being with a capital "B." And Being is constantly making all things new. And so, you cannot afford to hold on to what was. If you do, if Paul does, you will become frustrated and angry and uncomfortable.

Now, I know this is a very trite example, but when Lot's wife looked back, she turned to salt. And it is absolutely essential for you and everyone else and Paul, to be willing to have the "forward look." You would only feel self-righteously upset at what has happened, if you thought it was the result of local human circumstances. I will tell you, God was behind it. And I am very well aware, that you can and you even have had moments of being angry at God, and that's all right. But don't waste too much time shaking your fist at the Heavens. If you are looking up in anger and frustration, you will not be able to see the fulfillment that is right in front of you, in the process of identifying Itself to you.

Now, I'm going to encourage you to, as I said in the beginning, succumb to this. In other words, accept this point of departure that you find yourself at. You thought you had arrived, as in an airport, at your destination; at least an airport where you would be able to stay for a number of years; a job activity that would be secure. And you have found that instead of that, your next plane is leaving momentarily and you are saying, "NO, I deserve a rest. I deserve not to have to be alert and alive to continuing unfoldment of my fulfillment." There was a mindset there, an expectation of settled in security.

Now, you are not the only one in this boat. And I do not mean the others in your company who also find themselves looking for work; I mean, indeed, everyone in this room and everyone on this planet. You see, awakening is occurring everywhere, not just on the face of your planet, but all of those who to your sense who have passed on, who are not yet awake, are also on the threshold of awakening. And it is happening spontaneously. In other words, it is happening less and less as a matter of conscious choice. And the reason is, that there are fewer and fewer of those who are joined IN a mutual agreement as to the reality of a false sense of reality.

And so, all of you in a sense, are going to find yourself displaced. And that is not something to fear, although you can choose to fear it. You will be displaced from your definite sense of being limited, of being subject to sin, disease and death. You are going to be displaced from your sense of being mortal and sinful. You are going to be displaced from ignorance of who you Are. And it's going to happen whether you want it or not.

Oh, the ego doesn't like that. And that is specifically the problem you are experiencing relative to your loss of your job. Your ego doesn't like not having been in charge of leaving that job, and it does not like not being in charge of what is coming next. That really is what succumbing to the Father's will means; yielding to the Movement of God that you really already Are, each one of you.

It is insulting not to be able to take credit for what is happening to you. And you know what? What is really insulting, is to have marvelous things happen to you, that you cannot take credit for. Your very experience of being conscious, of experiencing life, is something that not a single one of you is responsible for. Therefore, life existing is a gift. Your conditioning says, take this gift of consciousness and use it to accomplish something; and that's where the trouble starts.

The first chapter of Genesis, in your Bible, says that "God created everything and saw everything that He had made and verily, it was very Good." Verily, God recognized Himself in it; and it was finished, it was complete, it was whole. Then comes the allegory of Adam and Eve, who find themselves experiencing this expression of wholeness, and they say, "Oh, we've got things to do. We need to decide what all of this is, and name it. And we need to do things with it. We've got the cows, and we can get them together and make more cows, and take care of the herd. And we can till the soil, and then we can feel really good about what we're doing, and develop a sense of who we are, by virtue of what we do with all of this." And in effect, they go about duplicating, from their point of view, what God has already finished, instead of being the on going conscious experience of what God is Being.

Waking up is abandoning a private, tiny, personal sense of goals that are engaged in, in order to have a feeling of accomplishment, so that this little tiny separated sense of self can feel good about itself by virtue of it's accomplishments. Now because, with every single one of you, that is the way you identify yourself; succumbing to, or yielding to the already whole and complete Movement of God without adding anything to it; is a very humiliating experience; because in effect, you are abandoning your current but very definite sense of who you are and what makes you a valid presence.

If there is a lot of pride present, if there is a lot of self-confidence, if there is a lot of self-satisfaction, all based on what you do and how well you do it and how other people see you; this process of abandoning your sense of identity is very humiliating, it is uncomfortable, it is not easy. That isn't the way it's set up, it doesn't have to be uncomfortable, but it tends to be if you don't realize that there is something beyond your present sense of yourself that is a more fulfilling conscious experience of Being, than the one you currently are practicing.

For those of you who are familiar with A Course In Miracles, and the Teachers Manual, you are aware that the first indicator, the first identifier of a teacher of God—which is another way of identifying the Son of God or Daughter of God—is trust. Now, literally, this is addressed to those who are still sleeping and dreaming a dream and thinking the dream is real. Trust is essential, because in order for you to come into the full stature of who you divinely are, you must abandon your present sense of who you are; your roles, your position, your sense of stature relative to someone else. You cannot depend upon your conditioned thinking.

There is a difference between trust and confidence and most often what you call trust, is a practice of confidence. Understand, that confidence is a willingness to commit to something that you are already familiar with. That's what confidence is. Trust is a willingness to commit yourself to the unknown; that's why it is such a big word. And that's why it comes first.

Now, I told you yesterday, not to value your understanding too much and also don't value your reason too much, at least not when it comes to your growth, your spiritual growth or your process of awakening. But that doesn't mean it is not valuable. Any truly valuable religious teaching helps to express in thousands of different ways, the Allness of God and the nature of God as Love. Why? so that you who do value reasoning and thinking highly, might have a context in which you can arrive at such a clear conviction as to the Allness of God, that you can dare to abandon your present sense of yourself and trust into God, trust into the unknown.

Paul was not willing to let go of his best thinking and his best judgments and his metaphysically correct thoughts, because they had worked very well for him. And he had been taught, that this was where it was at; that his clearer and clearer perception of truth, his clearer and clearer reasoning about truth, would be that which thinking would bring about his ascension, his awakening. He would never have connected with me if his, clear and correct as it was, hadn't failed him. And yet, it was essential for that to happen, just as it has been essential for you to loose your job. So that your very high level of self-confidence, with a small "s," might become more obviously less desirable and less trustworthy, less of a place to place your confidence.

And so, as to promote your succumbing—meaning, giving up your best concepts of what is right—and opening up, becoming defenseless against the Father's will, which is truly your will when you are in your Right Mind, when you are not confused. To the ego it feels like catastrophe, it is disastrous, it is humiliating.

But imagine if you will, a little canoe on a big river and you have a paddle and the current is strong, you can wear yourself out trying to fight the current, but you will not overcome it. And you can say, “Oh, I want to go where the river is going, but I want to go my way. I want to be a little bit closer to the shore. I want the movement to be a little slower.” And what happens? You paddle real hard and you work up a sweat and it is hard and you feel good about how well you have dealt with the current. And you get over where the current is a little bit slower and while you’re there, you notice this beautiful sandy beach and verdant fields and beautiful mountains and you say, “Wow, I’d like to stay here awhile. I’d like to step out of the boat.”

Now, the river represents the Movement of God, which I have referred to as the movement of your capital “B” Being. The more you exert willfulness, determination to not be where the current would take you, the more you are at odds with your essential Being, the more you are at odds with the Movement of Life.

Now, Life itself comes along and grabs your paddle away from you; and some of you complain at the inconsiderateness of life, and some of you get the message and rejoice, because you find your peace in yielding to the current of the river. Some of you have fashioned anchors, so that you are safe but not subject to the unknown, because the river can’t carry you where you can’t see. And I am coming along, and I am saying, “Cut the anchor. Throw away the paddle.” And indeed in your case, if life has grabbed the paddle away from you, I say, “don’t try to recover it. Don’t waste your energy paddling with your hands. Lay back in your canoe and watch what the Father unfolds.”

This is very important. Everyday, you and everyone else need to get up in the morning and acknowledge, that if anything is going on at all, it must truly be God Moving—Being the Movement of Creation. Do not think that creation occurred seventy-five million years ago and that life is just a perpetual motion machine that God set into motion way back when. God is alive and well and Creation is occurring at this very moment. If anything is going on at all, it must necessarily be that Movement of Creation.

And so, every single one of you must dare to look at the circumstances or experiences that seem to be not in your best interest and not representative of a Loving and Omnipresent God. And you must be willing to say, “there must be another way to look at this.” You must be willing to say, “Nothing that I see means what I am currently interpreting it to mean.” And then you must dare to become curious as to where God is in it and where the evidence of a loving, intelligent, indivisible and therefore unconflicted God is.

I understand that, that is not what your egos will agree with. But you must be unwilling to agree with the way your ego sees it, or you will never see beyond it. If you listen to what your ego says, you will in effect, fashion a new paddle or wear your arms out trying to take control again. And the fulfillment that it is your birthright to be experiencing, visibly and tangibly, will seem not to be there for you.

Frustration comes from a sense of powerlessness. And powerlessness promotes a sense of incompetence. And to feel incompetent is intolerable. But what you are feeling is the incompetence of the ego. And you must let the ego be incompetent and not follow its advice and struggle to assert its competence again, BECAUSE it is only in the presence of the ego's incompetence, it is only in the presence of not feeling competent yourself; and having your needs met, that you really have the opportunity to discover that there really is a God running things, in a manner that constitutes your security.

For six months Paul was unemployed, when he decided that he'd rather do it his way and seek employment, when I had pointed out to him that his appropriate activity was to allow others to ask questions of me. For six months his needs were met, but not by his own hand.

Now, it is one thing if your needs are met for a week or two. You can thank God and after the week or two is over and things are stable again, you can slip back into feeling responsible yourself and credit yourself with your intelligent handling of your life, and never learn a thing. You will thank God for the fact that your need was temporarily met, but of course, you know that that couldn't go on forever; so at the bottom line, you are thanking God for the luck of it.

But if your needs are met for six months and you cannot take credit for it, there is no way you can see that as a fluke, as a mere happenstance, that happened to bless you. And it becomes clear to you that all of your life, when you have "been in charge," and you have raised your family and you have paid the bills and you have gone to work everyday and you have behaved in an appropriate manner and have created a life for yourself and your children, that everyone else will look at and say is excellent and that you will look at and feel proud of.

There comes a point when after having your needs met for six months, not of your hand, that you realize that all that you thought you were being responsible for; was like preparing a second meal, on top of the first meal, a useless overlay of effort and sense of accomplishment and pride. It becomes obvious that all of that was superfluous, because God was already preparing a table for you, wholly and completely and it didn't need to be duplicated by you.

And I am speaking to all of you, but I am also speaking to the one who asked the question. How humiliating that discovery can be, or how relieving that discovery can be. You know why you struggle, all of you? Because you don't think there really is a God, even though you profess that you believe in God.

To not be able to claim authorship and responsibility for the good you have in your life and to find that your good continues to unfold for you, even at a pace that causes you to huff and puff to keep up with it; that discovery constitutes for each one of you such a clear experience of the fact that there is a God, that FEAR no longer functions or operates in you, if you are willing to succumb to the already complete expression of wholeness that God is Being, in and as You and your life.

Oh, you say, this is too radical! Well, I will tell you, you do not have to jump off the deep end. If life hasn't grabbed the paddle away from you, you can take the paddle and set it in the canoe with you, handy if you need it. And have a little bit of security in the sense that if you choose to, you can take charge again and you can explore the experience gently.

Now, we must come back to this fundamental point. If the paddle has been unceremoniously grabbed from your hands, it is not because you have done something wrong. And if you seem not to be able to get control of the situation, it is not because you have become truly incompetent. But, it is because, as a part of your spiritual maturing process, you have arrived at a size, if you will, in which the old garments of your identity are no longer comfortable, and no longer fit, have split at the seams and there isn't enough to them to keep them attached to you. Why? Because you have grown, not gotten fat. But you have grown into a greater stature of your inherently Divine Being.

Now, to a certain degree, you are enjoying a little temper tantrum. It's all right, it relieves tension, it doesn't phase God. And your fulfillment that you, from the center of your Being, are growing into is continuing to occur. And what will make it easier, is if you will stop kicking against the pricks, if you will stop kicking against the pressuring of your Divinity to wake up, to be more conscious of that which more closely identifies your fulfillment of purpose.

If you take a glass and you invert it and you put it down in a tub of water, the water will not fill up the glass, the air that is inside the glass will form a bubble, or become a bubble underneath the surface of the water. Now, I want you to imagine, that if the glass were turned over while still under the water and the bubble did not float out of it, but remained there, and we called this bubble of air, the hot air of your ego thinking and you understand that in this humiliating experience that is going on, the necessity is to not generate this hot air. And you slowly yield, you become less willful and the volume of the bubble decreases. What happens? Slowly the water around it begins to go down into the glass. And when you finally give up being mad at God, when you finally give up thinking that you have an alternative, when you finally give up thinking that you ought to be able to do something about this as your puny little self; the hot air disappears entirely. And what has happened? You have been, if you are the glass, infilled with the water. You will be infilled by the Holy Spirit, which yesterday I shared with you, was your Divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego.

And so, this awful thing called failure at being an ego, IS in reverse, the letting in of who you Divinely Are. And when the succumbing is allowed, you are at the point of revelation. You are at the point where your life, literally will reconfigure in front of your eyes as an obviously excellent thing.

Every single one of you has at one time or another arrived at a threshold of humiliation and ultimately transformation. What I have described here, is really not unknown to any of you in this room. The degree of it may vary, but you understand the truth of what I am saying. And it is important for you to understand, that if in the process of boundary breaking, that you are going through, it seems to be very hard work, you cannot afford to say, "I must have done something very wrong." You must dare to acknowledge that you couldn't be having this experience, if growth were not occurring.

For the one who's shoe has become too small, because the foot has grown too big; it would be very foolish to take tape and bind the foot up to try to keep it small, so that the discomfort of the shoe could be avoided.

And so, you must be willing to look on the other side of the coin, if you will. And you must be willing to say, "Hum, my ego would have no justification for being upset, unless something that was undoing it, something that was truly threatening to it, was actively present." And what is the only thing that can threaten your ego? It's the dawning awareness of your Divinity in your consciousness. It's the Movement of what you Divinely Are, that uncovers the fallacy, the illusory nature of this acquired sense of yourself, that we are calling an ego. It means, that the Presence of God must be moving in a way that is uncovering what is purely illusory in your conscious experience.

This is wonderful! And so, you must say, "okay, I'm going to let my ego do it's little jig, do it's contortions and it's fantastic attempts to get my attention, but I rather am going to give my attention to the Movement of God that must be occurring in my life, right here, else my ego wouldn't be making a sound. I am going to become curious. I am going to assume that the Movement of something absolutely unconflicted, absolutely harmonious and utterly fulfilling, is asserting Itself in my life, and it really is my Divinity pressuring me to acknowledge it."

Don't waste your time hooking into how bad things look, or the egos suggestion that this wouldn't have happened if you had been more responsible. The threshold of awakening is the abandonment of all of your conditioned thinking about who you are and what the world and universe is, which is indeed, not a happy place for the ego. But it is the place, as I said, where the bubble of hot air diminishes. And as it diminishes, the infilling or revealing of the clearer experience of the Christ that you are, occurs. And so, it is a most valuable threshold that you are on in that moment of despair and apparent misery, at least, as far as the ego is concerned.

I am going to finish the answer to this question, by reminding you, that you do not stand in this apparently vulnerable and humiliating place alone. You are companioned with, by those who support you, not your ego; by those who support the Divine One that you Are and strengthen it by joining with it, so that indeed, it becomes easier for you to make the shift gracefully.

Again, I do not say this so that you might feel that waking up is going to be very difficult. I say it, so that if because of resistance's of one kind or another, you do experience it as difficult, you will not be able to just say, "Life is hell." There will be something in you that will say, "there must be a different way to look at this. And in spite of what I have been conditioned to think, which is that I must become reactive and do everything I can to get control again." You will not be able to forget that something else is called for, yielding further because there is something beyond the disastrousness and the humiliation of the pressure of your Divinity, as it is defined by your ego. And you will not see it as the dead-end that it seems to be, but rather as an unjust fence that it is not appropriate for you to be bound by, but rather is appropriate to be violated, jumped over, moved through.

At least now you know if you do come up against such an uncomfortable experience, that there is another side to it, that everything around you is geared to have you access and move into. It is just that life is not conforming to your current limited sense of what fulfillment is. And you are being required by your very essential, capital "B" Being, to become free of the limitation that you are currently experiencing.

If as a result of what I have shared with you today, you are able to quickly redefine the humiliating experience of loss and failure, not as an indicator of your incompetence, but rather as an undoing of a sense of competence that wasn't connected with the Divinity of you. And that the end result of this dissolving competence, that wasn't real, you will access the direct experience of your real competence as the Sons and Daughters of God. You will approach the experience with a "forward look" and some degree of intent to move through it, that you would not otherwise of had, period.

Now, I cannot relieve you of your "predicament," because if I did or if I could, I would simply help you avoid a new and bigger pair of shoes, a closer approximation of fulfillment of purpose. It would be like a bud, still encased in the green leaves, which is feeling the tightness of it's surroundings, because it's center is pushing forward saying, "would you apply a little bit of glue to the leaves, so they won't come apart as easily and help me become comfortable in my tininess." And I cannot do that and would not do that, because it is not meant to forever be a bud, it is meant to open up and show it's face. And that is all that is happening.

The pressure of your Divinity is not something to be relieved of, but yielded to. I also know that, in spite of the complaining and the inner kicking and screaming, you are yielding. I am confirming to you that that is the intelligent thing. And I am simply saying, do it all the way, go the distance, as it has been said.

QUESTION: For the past ten to twelve years I've gone through a cycle that is on and off. It can run two weeks into several months, where the number seven becomes highly prevalent in my life. The majority of times, just as I'm moving about, doing whatever I happen to be doing, it comes up on the clock. And for a long time I just laughed about it and felt as though it was coincidence. After it disappeared and came back several months later, and then I found that years have gone by and it's continuing to do that. When it's happening I have a distinct sense that there's something that I'm suppose to be very aware of. This happens throughout the day, I can wake up in the middle of the night and it's on the clock. And I'm just curious as to whether you can explain to me what this is about? Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I am sorry I can't give you a grand answer. It is just something to be aware of. It is just something to be with, when it happens. You are, along with everyone else, conditioned to be doers. If there is an insight that occurs, you immediately think you must do something with it, instead of abide with it. If a question arises, you think you must do something with it. In other words, figure out the answer. I have shared before, that a question is always just the leading edge of an answer, come into view; the leading edge of greater clarity, come into view. And you feel the nudge of that clarity and become curious and form a question. "What if such-and-such?"

If you will not try to figure out the answer, but will abide with the question, you will find the answer that it really is, coming further into what you would call your range of vision and you will find the answer disclosing itself to you in it's perfect timing. Just abide with the awareness that sevens seem to be coming up in your experience. Just abide with it.

What you are watching always is the Movement of God. And if you are willing to be still with that Movement, you will find It disclosing Itself. As it does disclose Itself, you may well find yourself knowing that you need to do something, simply because it's appropriate, but not because you have been given a task to accomplish.

You may find yourself at some time feeling that you are going to be moving, or that something is going to happen. And the tendency will be to think "Oh, God is giving me a clue. I had better get onto this thing and do it." But God has not revealed to you something, so that you can take the ball and run with it. It is just the leading edge of the awareness of what God is Being, what your capital "B" Being is unfolding. And the call is for you to abide with it, observe it, be with it, without a goal around it; so that your attention is with it, as what is coming presents itself.

Now, as an aside but somewhat connected, I want all of you to understand that if you decide to listen for inner guidance, it does not mean that you will have to go on the road as Paul is doing. So, do not be afraid to listen, as though it is going to uproot you. This has not uprooted Paul nor his family. And the guidance that you get by abiding in the silence within you and listening, will always be congruent with you and those around you. That does not mean that everyone around you will always be utterly happy with you. But aside from their personal sense of how a thing ought to be, your appropriateness as a result of your listening for guidance, will never hurt any of them.

All of you must learn to, shall I say, listen and follow. Not because you are dumb sheep, but because as you wake up you reaccess that part of your infinity that you have disowned, ignored. And so, what you are letting yourself back into is something that you are ignorant of at the moment; and that is why there is a guide, that is why there is a way-shower, that is why there is a companion to encourage you when you are taking steps into what feels to you to be a void.

So, just notice the sevens when they come up and don't wonder what has gone wrong when they don't come up. Observe and be with the experience. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I just what to comment on how grateful for your presence in our lives. My question is: One of my anchors, that I can't ever sort of get out of the mud; is the on going issues with, what to eat, how to eat, food issues, body issues, all this stuff drives me nuts. I expect years working on it and I keep thinking, my image of where I should be is past this stuff by now, and it just keeps rolling back. I would love a little guidance around this. Thanks.

ANSWER: Two things. You have dealt with diets, but I want you to go on a diet of love for your body. Do not treat it so mechanically. I want you to embrace it with appreciation and love. Specifically, I want you to be willing to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R," right there where your body is. And I want you to do it for no good reason. I want you to do it just because.

Secondly, I want you to understand something about your body. I indicated yesterday, that what you see, is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality, because your individuality cannot exist and be unexpressed—meaning it cannot exist and be unexperienceable. The visibility and tangibility of your Individuality has a Divine Intent. It is to identify the Presence of God, right where you are. That intent to render you experienceable, you might say, was set into being by God. And that is why your identification of your Individuality is as eternal as your Individuality, even though your current materialistic perception of it, is distorted and false.

Now, you have an "understandable" reason for loving your body. Love it for its Divine Intent to identify the Presence of your Individuality. How does it intend to identify it? Perfectly.

I want you to have a sense of yielding control of your body, to your body. Do not see it as something that you must beat into submission or into shape, by means of stringent diet and exercise. If your body has a Divine Intent to identify your Presence perfectly, then let it do it. Let it do it! It knows how!

There needs to be a little more confidence in your body's innate ability to be what it was intended to be, perfectly. As long as you treat it as though it is a temporary housing for your Soul, that is of the Earth, earthy, temporary and so on; made of that which really is not of God; you must come to the ultimate conclusion, that it really can operate or function at odds with your well-being. And on the basis of that incorrect conclusion, you will see it as something you must protect yourself against, by taking control of it. And when you attempt to take control of it, because it is not really your ally, you have taken a stance that is antagonistic. And you cannot be comfortable when you are taking such an inconsistent position. And because you are constantly attempting to make it be what it is already it's intent to be, you create tension that you experience physically. And it seems to prove to you that there is a need for control, and so you try even harder.

Now, the only thing I will say as far as diet is concerned is, that your body is not appropriately a digester of meat. You are not a sinner if you have a hamburger, but it is more difficult for your body to digest. I do not encourage all of you to become fanatic vegetarians, but if you will stay at the end of the scale where you are eating fish, instead of poultry or red meat, you will find your body functioning more smoothly and more naturally.

I am not going to even get into the appropriateness, or inappropriateness, or the moral issue of killing another animal. The point is that your body is not designed to digest meat. And so, it is more kind, more loving and more consistent with the way things are, for you to get your food value from things other than meat.

I encourage you to drop, not the weight on your body or its shape, but the burden of trying to control it into submission to your best concept of how it ought to be. When I say, that it is the intent of your body to identify your presence perfectly, that means with perfect symmetry, balance and poise.

We could talk at some length, but that answers your question and it covers what needs to be said today, in this setting. Relax and entrust your body to its already existing Divine Intent to identify your Presence perfectly. Honor it with that acknowledgment and you will see things begin to change in a manner that you will call beautiful. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I've read in your first book about the Mitreya and Christ images that you spoke of, also about the door and the army, as it were, the followers of the leader that exist. I'm a member of the Baha'i faith and I am experiencing the teachings of the Baha'ullah, which is the manifestation of God, for this age, that the B'ahi's believe in. And I was wondering if you experience the spirit of Baha'ullah in the next plane of existence? I'm sure you do.

ANSWER: Oh, indeed, I do, yes. You know what, I've said it since the beginning, that the message will get through like the early pony express. The message will get through. The message of the Divinity of mankind and that which will promote the willingness to release the commitments to your confidences that you understand what everything is, will be expressed in language of individual expression throughout your world.

Indeed, there is available in print, documentation of the expressions as you see them and it is a bothersome thing to you that you can't find absolute consistency, which causes you to question whether any of what you are reading is what it seems to say it is. You must understand that even at this moment, with this particular group, I am accommodating your present frame of reference and the contexts in which you experience life, the context with which you interpret what you are experiencing. And so, I am not speaking in absolute terms. And I am not saying here today, exactly what I might say tomorrow to you, or to another group, because you will have grown and another group will be in a different space than you are.

So, do not fret because you do not find absolute consistency in what is said. Read what is said, take it within and measure it against your deepest level of knowing, to see whether it is congruent with you and if it is not, set it aside. And recognize that no judgment is called for, just a recognition that this is not for you.

I have not made reference to an army, but there is the lot of us, you might say, who are Awake, who as I said before, cannot stand in a coercive position. We can only be like the dog lover, who sees a frightened and scared, hungry dog; who wants love, needs food, needs attention, but is afraid to trust enough to come close enough to be loved. And we can be so totally benign, so totally unthreatening, that you are willing to abandon some of the confidences that bind you and allow you to come forward a little bit more in terms of your embracing the Totality of what you are and always have been. If you had a thousand dog lovers, all simply being the benign invitation to those scared dogs, you could not call them an army. They know better than to approach the dogs, because the dogs will back off and it will be that much longer before the dogs will relax and feel safe enough to move forward themselves.

As I said, there are more who are Awake than are asleep. And so, there is this wonderful support that is constantly being actively provided. The invitation to come forth, like the invitation to the flower to uncover itself and open itself up fulling, that invitation is constantly being made. And you are invited to feel for it, so that you might experience the support that is lovingly available to you and given at every moment. You will not be controlled back into the Kingdom of Heaven. You will be invited to open up your eyes, so that you can discover that you are already there and never left.

Oh, indeed, there is a Movement afoot around your globe and where all of those are, who have passed on, who are not incarnated again. It is a Movement of invitation, not a movement of coercion. And you may remain ignorant as long as you want, because it doesn't change who you Are. And it does not cause you to loose your birthright. And because it doesn't, none of us are frightened for your well-being. That you are not experiencing Reality clearly at this moment, is because a choice has been made to have an alternate perception of it, which you are perfectly allowed to do without judgment. And when you choose to set aside that alternate perception, you will be welcomed back with the place you never left.

It is because you never left and it is because your misperception in your belief and it's truth, does not effect Reality, that you cannot possibly be a sinner, working your way back through obedience's into a state of grace with God. That is where the ego has you hooked, but it is a lie. The minute you realize that there isn't really a process to coming back Home, no practices, no obedience's, no earning of a worthiness to be let back in; your whole approach to being in any given day will be very different. And in the absence of the self-criticism and judgment, that all of you practice to one degree or another, will be a joy and a curiosity that I have spoken of that opens the door and allows for spontaneous waking up.

And so, there is a Movement afoot, but not a movement that is being forced upon you. You are part of the Movement. The Movement is in you and It is also experienced universally. And as your density becomes less dense, the whole becomes less dense and it's easier for everyone.

There was a time, just a little over a hundred and fifty years ago, when what you are hearing today could not be said, simply because the willingness to hear it was not present yet. And indeed, I am able to say today, in one of these gatherings, what I was not able to say three years ago. And the reason is, because I have said it and it has been heard and it has registered, it has lessened the density for everyone. And thus, for those of you who have come to one of these gatherings for the first time this weekend, you are already able to hear what I am saying, without ever having heard anything I said before. Every little bit of the lessening of the density of individual thought lessens the density for all of the brotherhood who are still sleeping, still not accessing their totally clear, conscious experience of being the Presence of that Mind, which is God.

You know, even if you can't remember at the end of the day what we have talked about, the Movement has occurred. And at the end of the day, everyone on your planet will be less dense than this morning. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well, a good friend has challenged me about my analytic mind. And two things happened with that. One is, I went into a place of feeling shame and humiliation, which is very hard for me to get out of when someone I respect and honor disapproves of me, or is angry at me, or doesn't like something I'm doing. It's very hard for me to get out of that place of shame. And even if I ask help from God, I stay stuck in it.

And the other is, I know you spoke of understanding yesterday and I've always used my understanding of my well-developed mind to make me feel safe. And I'm become very aware of wanting to let that go now for the first time ever and it's very hard to do that, especially when I get into a very bad space, that's hard to pull out of.

ANSWER: I understand. Again, there is a need to keep our feet on the ground, so that we don't become airy, fairy, cloud nine metaphysicians. Never abandon whatever level of common sense or intelligence you have arrived at, until you have something that is better. If indeed, you are very analytical, if indeed any of you have arrived at a point of expression of intelligence that is reasonable and logical and the result of good analysis, do not on the basis of what I have said abandon it suddenly and irrevocably, or indeed you will become raving idiots. And you certainly will scare anybody who was beginning to think that waking up was good to do.

So, your ability to analyze, your ability to reason, your ability to use logic; can be used in your best interest, if you are using it to confirm to yourself that God is so completely All, that you are safe enough to take a short period of time—such as twenty minutes or an hour—to let go of all of your thinking and reasoning and analysis and listen, with the expectation of hearing guidance, hearing the uncovering of Truth to you.

You can take it a step at a time, if you understand that your ability to analyze, reason, use logic and come to conclusions is not the ultimate step, but a means of getting to the ultimate step, then you will not become bound by it. And you will not think that it is the gold star in your evolution. It can be used appropriately, to get to the point where you can set it aside. That is its real value. So, you do not have to undermine your present sense of dignity and integrity just because you are a highly skilled intellectual. Value it, because it is what will help you take the step of setting it aside.

None of you is going to wake up in the twinkling of eye, because I will tell you, that it would be like Paul experiencing himself as Paul, and if he became totally awake in an instant, it would be like becoming George. And who knows who George is? There will be what I will call, a continuity of identity, even though the identity seems to be transformed as the false sense or details of identity are let go of. If it happened instantaneously, it would be like a break of continuity, therefore, a break of identity and that would not identify the Truth and it wouldn't be loving.

So, I want you to understand, that you look at a thing and you say, "what I am looking at doesn't mean what I think it means." And in saying that, you undo the confidence you have in it, so that you can become curious. But you don't totally abandon the old meaning until the newer meaning is revealed. And then in the clarity of that newer meaning, you simply will not hold on to the discrepancy that you now see was present in your prior perception. There is order, even in your process of abandoning illusion. And this is very important to understand.

Now, you have indicated a clarity that is present now, that there is something beyond thinking and there is an emerging desire to have that experience. You are now beginning to feel what is so clear to this one who commented about your being analytical. And this one who said it, is not the only one for whom your analytical mind is obvious.

It is not necessary for you to be embarrassed. And shortly, the day will come when you will be able to say to this one, “boy, you were sure right.” And you will have the opportunity to find out that this one was not really being critical, but reflecting to you that there was a different way to experience things than the highly analytical and logical way you were utilizing. I assure you that the comment was not made with critical judgment, but rather as an unbiased feedback of an opportunity for another way of looking at it. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’ve been aware of a couple things as I’ve started to experience enlightenment. And one is that, I’ve never felt safe being in my body or really even being in this world. I’ve never felt a sense of safety or trust. And it’s held me back, I feel a lot, from crossing over a line where I can experience more than just thoughts, where I can put some of what I feel into action. I feel it slows me down and I can tend to repeat patterns and not really find an answer. I can repeat things.

I’m not sure exactly what my question is, other than it’s something I feel a lot and I’ve felt for many years and I’ve never been able to move out of it. I often come back to it, this lack of safety or trust in myself and being in this world.

ANSWER: Indeed, and you do not get a lot of feedback from your world that stands in support of it, or in support of your body. And even when you do, those who speak affirmatively about it, seem to be in the minority. And all you have to do is to turn on the TV to have proof that their affirmative viewpoint is not what is happening. And this is a shame.

I’m not going to dwell on this. But I want you to realize—and this is not true only of the United States—but I want you to realize that what you see on the news has been selected for your viewing; and although it is not consciously chosen to keep you ignorant, it is chosen in order to make profits and that is the first order of responsibility, rather than the presentation of that which allows you to have truly the most balanced perspective.

You have in the past felt indignant and sorry for the poor Russians who were fed propaganda, which simply meant that they were spoon-fed certain knowledge while other knowledge was withheld. And I would like all of you to consider when the last time was that you heard of something going on in South America or Mexico or Australia? If you will stop and think about it, it is as though the Southern hemisphere does not exist. And so, to that degree, you are getting biased information, or what you could call propaganda. In other words, your viewpoint is being slanted by the significant withholding of information. The reason you don't hear about it is because very little is going on there that relates to the United States, which really means there is very little going on there that is affects the United States economically.

Now, in response to your question, you have a biased perspective because you lack the nourishment and support of a positive and affirmative grasp of your world and your body. And that is one of the reasons that in these workshops or gatherings I am taking time to give you that kind of information, so that you do have something to, I'm going to say, rehearse in your mind. You do have words and concepts that are intelligent and which allow you to think in a new way about your body and about the world.

The suggestion is that everyone is conceived in sin. Do you know why? Because the body was involved. On that basis, how could anyone not feel creepy and crawly in their skin? How could anybody honor it, the body? And then, when the world is treated as though it is something that started from a big bang, that has nothing to do with Divine Universal Intelligence; how could you feel safe in something that happened by pure chance. If indeed, chance is the governing factor, then you are not safe at any moment. Now, what I think you should find interesting is, that in spite of this, you still have an experience of the existence of something having integrity, yourself; because you do not lump yourself in with this body and world and universe, as being questionable or invalid. You see yourself as something that is valid, that's out of its right place.

I say this to you so that you will realize that you do recognize the Presence of something Real that you validate. So you have a foundation from which to develop trust and to access peace and security.

Now, there are two things you can do. The first thing you can do is, to learn a specific form of meditation. The reason being, that what I have referred to as the surface reactive ego level of perception can be—depending upon how it seems to you—risen above or you can sink beneath it; out of that turbulence into the experience of your peace—which I explained yesterday, is not just an absence of anxiety, but is a direct experience of the very substance of your essential being—it is usually the very first direct experience of your Divine Self that any of you have.

In that experience, you find your experience of vulnerability to be totally absent, even if nothing in the world has changed. You also feel at Home, that's the best way I can put it into words. In the discovery that those two experiences are available to you, no matter what is going on around you, you become freed from what is going on around you, and you no longer look around you and judge the possibility of your being secure according to what you see. And you no longer say, “how can I experience peace in the midst of this turmoil,” because you know from the experience that it is available to you and is not dependent upon what is around you.

That’s the first step in your emancipation. That’s the first step in your ability to not be upset by what you see. And that is what begins to open the door to a shift in perception that allows you to increasingly feel that security when you are not meditating and are engaged in your daily activities, where your world will seem to begin to reflect back to you that it is on your side.

The second thing that you can do is, you can ask for help. You can within yourself ask the Holy Spirit, or God, or me, or any form of Divine help that is out there, to help reinforce and substantiate your ability to perceive your world as your ally, as something you do not have to be defended against. And you can even ask that in addition to that experience, there be help in providing an understanding, an explanation that you can rely upon, as to why you do not need to be afraid of your world.

This is not something you have to tackle all by yourself, even if you cannot hear a response from your guide in words, or a response from the Holy Spirit. You can watch with expectation to see reconfiguration, changes occur around you. Where you begin to find things apparently, for no reason at all, beginning to identify more harmony, more active evidences of cooperation—these are not the best words; but evidences of the fact that your world is not really there to operate independent of your fulfillment. And the same thing applies to your body, as I mentioned earlier.

I encourage you to do these two things, because they will promote a break through. A break through that will not involve for you greater stress in the process, but a release of the stress that you have been feeling for so long.

And the last thing I will convey to you is, that it is your birthright to experience your safety, right here. It is your birthright to experience your health, right here. And it is not arrogant or unreasonable for you to expect to experience it. That’s the end of the answer.

*QUESTION: Wait a minute here...

ANSWER: I’m going to interrupt you for a moment. And I’m going to say this to everyone. In this gathering, as well as anytime that you express a desire for help from your guidance, don’t try to be perfect in your expression of your desire. If it comes out like gobbily-goop and it is not orderly and it is not logical and it is not proper English; none of us care. Because I’ll tell you, that we’re not even really listening to the words that come out of your mouth, but the meanings you are feeling and trying to put into words. So, continue and if it is not perfectly put, that’s marvelous, it’s all right.

*QUESTION: I have two questions, one is pertaining to school. The desire has been removed and I don't know why. If it's fear...

ANSWER: The desire for what?

QUESTION: To study. It's not there. And I don't know if its fear of failure, the desire is just not there. And two: I have...

PAUL: Just a moment, this is me Paul. Are you currently a student? Okay, continue.

QUESTION: Yes. If I'm suppose to be in school, I would like to know if the direction I'm heading in is mediation and if that's the correct place to head. And two: I have several addictions that are preoccupying my life for quite awhile. And I don't understand why the pattern keeps, it's about the only thing that keeps unfolding in my life, is these two particular patterns.

ANSWER: So that others might relate to you, would you share the nature of the two addictions?

QUESTION: Cigarettes and coffee and I feel or have given myself the belief that they affect my skin.

ANSWER: Well, let's handle that first. Let's become free of the belief that they affect your skin. Let's get a clearer sense of their inability to have physical effects upon your body. Let's deal with that before you attempt to set aside the cigarettes and coffee. Let's become less charged about those two habits.

You see the more charged you are about it, the more conflicted you are within yourself. And the more conflicted you are, the more compulsive will be your "addition." When the need is, to come to a place of peace in which there is no element to fuel compulsiveness, or the reaching for anything that will seem to supply you with a peace that you don't seem to have.

Oh, I hear someone saying, "how can you say that? It is well known that cigarettes cause cancer and that cigarettes do such-and-such. And Raj, haven't I even read some place where you told Paul that smoking will keep him from experiencing the finer levels of conscious awareness?"

I will tell you that this question arises out of a conflicted sense of what this world is and what this body is; the space time continuum I referred to as the third-dimensional frame of reference.

You know what? Cause does not lie in the three-dimensional frame of reference, it lies in what I have referred to as the fourth-dimension, which is another valid way of referring to the Kingdom of Heaven. The fourth-dimension, or the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of being, is the experience of consciousness without any distortion present whatsoever, which means that you are having the conscious experience of everything through God's eyes, if I may put it that way.

It is the Movement of God which is always fourth-dimensional that is rendered visible and tangible three-dimensionally. But the cause does not reside in the three-dimensional frame of reference, which means that cigarettes do not cause cancer, overeating does not cause over weight, one part of your world cannot kill another part of your world, etc.

Now, I know that flies right in the face of your common sense. But, the belief, that cause does lie in the three-dimensional frame of reference, is part of the mutual agreement to be ignorant, or to have a point of view based upon partial information, that two or more of you agree to call truth. If indeed, cigarettes, or carcinogens, or anything else caused cancer, then no matter how much realization you had, it couldn't be changed, there would never be healing.

If genes are responsible for a deformation in your body, you could never experience a correction of that deformation. And there would be no reason for such a word as "healing." It is because the Cause of your body does not reside in the three-dimensional frame of reference, but is the Intent of God expressed at every given moment, that you can experience healing, including regeneration of congenital defects, which are the things you least expect to experience healing of. It is because there is a God that operates beyond the three-dimensional frame of reference, that YOU can arrive at a point of discovering that you are not a three-dimensional entity either; and wake up to what I will call the fourth-dimensional Reality of You, RIGHT HERE and find yourself in the Kingdom of Heaven, as the Christ.

I wouldn't even be wasting my time sharing any of what I had shared with you this weekend so far, if indeed, cause lay in the three-dimensional frame of reference. Everything that I have been saying has been based on the fourth-dimensional Reality of Being. Another way you could say that is, the Divine Reality of Being, and the fact that that conscious experience of Being is your birthright. I wouldn't be saying anything at all if there weren't really a way out of the incarceration of your current ignorance. And the only way there could be a way out is if there is something beyond it. And the reason you can get out of it is, because what is beyond your current sense of limitation is your Home, is the territory of your freedom of Being and this limitation you are experiencing is not. We're talking about, you could say, blowing the limits sky high.

It is as though you are standing in a privy and even the little silhouetted moon hole is too high for you to see out, so that it is hard for you to imagine that there is anything beyond the confines of this "SHIT-HOUSE of an experience." And you might imagine that there are little leather straps, like handles, on the four walls and you are in there with your arms through it, holding your shit-house together, for fear of losing what little sense of security you have. And in effect, I am encouraging you to let go of the walls, because they will fall down and you will be able to see infinitely, in all directions and have the opportunity to experience and explore and be without confinement. And you could say, the inside of the privy is the three-dimensional frame of reference. And indeed, that space inside the privy is a valid part of the infinity that's available to you, it's just the walls that are invalid. So, everything is happening fourth-dimensionally.

Now, I have shared this in another workshop but I cannot make you wait until the tapes are available so that you may hear it. For those of you who are familiar with the Course, you have heard of level confusion. And right now we are talking with respect to level confusion, fourth-dimension, third-dimension, second, etc. And I am going to share with you an explanation that will give you a hint of the meaning of level confusion.

Imagine if you will, that it is early morning, you have been asleep all night and your mother, husband, wife, daughter, somebody comes into the bedroom, puts their hand on your shoulder and shakes you and says, your name, "it's time to get up." And you're in the middle of a dream. And in the dream, someone standing next to you, puts their hand on your shoulder and says, "it's time to wake up." That is level confusion. The event is occurring outside of the scope of your dream, but it becomes interpreted as something happening within the dream. Now the one who comes into the bedroom and shakes your shoulder is functioning, we will say, fourth-dimensionally; and you in your dream are having a three-dimensional experience. And that fourth-dimensional action is interpreted as something originating in the dream.

Well I'll tell you something, conception does not occur because of any innate power of a sperm, or receptivity of an egg. It happens because the Movement of God is occurring. And the identification of that Movement must be manifest, it must appear as something. So, even your physical existence doesn't stem from a three-dimensional source. And it is because it is a fourth-dimensional Movement and the manifestation of it, called you, is the manifestation of a fourth-dimensional presence's or actuality that you, who have come to a conclusion that you are a character in a dream, with limitations; can have the opportunity to be nudged awake and experience release from the limitations, which are not true about you. Which is what we're talking about.

And because your body is, indeed, the visibility and tangibility of a fourth-dimensional Movement of God and, therefore, does not have it's origins, physically speaking or three-dimensionally speaking, only because of that, can you experience spontaneous remission of a disease or the correction of a vision problem, which you say is hereditary; because your mother and your grandmother and your great grand father and Joe and Henry and Sibyl way back, all had the same problem. The reason you can, at any point, experience release from a physical limitation is, because your body at every moment, is originating in the thought of God, fourth-dimensionally.

I'm going to ask you a question, and this is specifically for students of the Course, who because of the wording of the Course and the current interpretation of it, have come to a point of conviction that the body is an illusion. Why would I have ever healed an illusion? Why would I restore sight to the blind, or a withered arm? Wouldn't the healing of illusion mean the arm and the eye-balls disappeared? The healing would have to be the uncovering of the absence of that which isn't real. Let's be reasonable here. But the withered arm was restored to the fullness the same as the other, and the eyes that were blind could see. Why? because the natural condition of both had their actuality of Source fourth-dimensionally; and not as a result of a birth defect, a three-dimensional cause. And why? because that Individuality was the Christ also and it's his birthright to experience his perfection in all respects, just as it is with you.

Waking up is the result of the penetration of Reality, fourth-dimensional Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven; through the characteristics of unconsciousness or limited awareness, which we have referred to as dreaming. Thus, causing the walls of your confinement to fall and disclose to you, that which has always infinitely been present and that which has always infinitely been the territory of your Being, for you to enjoy.

You need to have a new vantage point, a new context. Everybody, you might say, wants to get out of the confinement. What will work here is, as I said, letting go of the walls. In letting go of them, so that they fall, it lets in the infinity. There is less sense of effort and of necessary accomplishment attached to that, than somehow fighting your way out of confinement.

The illustration of the privy, is an excellent one, the one with the straps, whereby you hold yourself in a secure and "comfortable" place, because Reality has not provided walls. And Reality is not keeping you out of Itself.

And again, as I said, you're going to get tired of this word. The element of curiosity is what justifies letting go of what you call security, the four walls of the confinement that causes you to be miserable, but at the same time gives you what you would call, a reasonable experience of security.

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, except for school.

ANSWER: You're right where you need to be. And in effect, you are like a piano student, a student who loves the piano, who runs into a dry spell, where it seems not enjoyable and not worth pursuing. But, I encourage you to persist here, because the aliveness to it will return. It will not be a drudge for you and it would be a sad mistake to abandon your schooling. And I am going to encourage you, by telling you that you are in exactly the right field. And you will do very well, and you will be very much needed.

QUESTION: I'd like to preface my question. I just want to say how happy we are and joyful and privileged, I think to have you hear to teach us. And thank you.

ANSWER: The saying is, "when the student is ready, the teacher appears."

QUESTION: I also feel that the Course teaches us that we are the “light of the world.” And I hope and pray that everyone can leave here with that understanding today.

ANSWER: Then let your light shine.

QUESTION: My question is: Would you please inform us about the consequences of global warming and what action is needed to abate it.

ANSWER: I am not going to scare any of you into being intelligent. I will inspire you into it, provide the ground work for it and encourage the motivation within you.

But I’m going to tell you something: Healing is occurring. Awakening is occurring. And more than anything at this point, what you are referring to as global warming and the holes in the ozone layer are, rather than threats to your existence; actual, shall I say, physical reminders that you are part of a whole. And that your seemingly inconsequential actions, such as putting hair spray on your hair, indeed, involve everyone. And that you literally cannot act in the most minute way, without everyone being involved.

You are being reminded that it is not insulting to be part of a whole. It is not insulting to not stand out. It is not insulting to be different. And that indeed, when you do not hold yourself apart from others, indeed, when you do not hold yourself apart from your essential Self, you do not disappear into obscurity, and you do not become unknown, your Presence becomes more meaningful, transformational, healing.

You could say that the global warming and the holes in the ozone, are helping you all to value this world; and become active participants, I’m going to say, cooperators, not co-operators, but those who find willingly where they fit in.

Everyone thinks of fitting into slots, fitting into little boxes, that is not what I am talking about. When you find where you fit in, you will begin to grasp and experience that you fit in infinitely. And fitting in does not mean confinement, but what I am going call, infinite originality, but it is not an infinite originality which will ever be in conflict with the whole. And that is where the joy of Being, the joy of existing, the joy of Being Consciousness, comes in.

I will also tell you, that there is no point on my expounding on the consequences of global warming, because you are not going to have consequences, because everyone is going to begin to be more responsible and fit in with love.

Waking up is what you might call, a movement of healing. It certainly is a movement of revealing the Truth about you, the Truth about body, the Truth about planet, the Truth about universe. The holes will close up, not because you have been threatened, but because your capacity to be a part of something, your capacity to be present with something is going to be more enlivened than it already is. And that willingness to be an active part of unity will be reflected always, around your globe.

And so, fear is not needed. But paying attention to the emerging feeling of the appropriateness and the wonderfulness and the fulfillment of unity, will occur and will heal.

I know all of you wish that someone would give you a swift kick in the pants once in a while, to get you moving, so that you will do what you already want to do anyway. But that isn't the way it's going to work. It's going to work, because a desire is emerging from within you and you are recognizing it and you will recognize it more completely and you will do what is appropriate, because you want to, for your reasons.

Don't play into the drama of the crape hangers, who will attempt to scare you into being and behaving intelligently, being intelligent and behaving intelligently. That is not the mode now. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a question for a friend that wasn't able to be here. Is that okay?

ANSWER: It is, indeed.

QUESTION: She has had a chronic illness for about five years. And she talks regularly with her guide and wanted me to ask you also, why can't she seem to heal herself? And she is also writing a channeled book that she would like to know how that is going to turn out, too?

ANSWER: The reason she can't heal herself, is because she can't heal herself. In other words, she must let the healing in. It isn't some skill she must have in order to experience the healing. It is that she must give permission for the healing to occur. She must give permission for the already existing intent of her body to identify her perfectly, to do what it intends to do. There is a very strong sense of personal responsibility for the healing, as though she must grow and become equal to it; and as though in some way it is up to her thinking. And I encourage you to take back to her, the news that she doesn't have to do anything except give permission. Give permission.

It is not appropriate for me to answer relative to the book, because the completing of it must be done without expectation. It is necessary for her to stay with what is unfolding at the moment. Any answer would be a distraction from that. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question concerns my biological father. He left this plane about eight years ago. Our relationship was extremely stormy. I was wondering if he's aware of me and what I'm about and does he approve? That's my question.

ANSWER: I understand. Yes and yes. He's not always aware of you, because indeed, he is about the business of waking up himself. And to tell you the truth, that holds more interest for him than what you are or are not doing. And he has forgiven you.

Again, remember that forgiveness is the withdrawal of judgment. And so, he is no longer judging you whether truly or falsely and, therefore, he is free of conflict of any kind relative to you within himself. I thought you would like to know. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I guess as I've sat here over the weekend I've tried to ask a question, I think of a question to ask. And I guess what the last year of my life is certainly been what I think is turmoil, but evidently a change in the right direction. I believe that completely, although sometimes I get caught up in my ego.

I can't help not think of the question of family right now and the importance of family in our lives. It seems, at least, from my own perspective, I see a lot of broken families. I guess the question I'm trying to come up with here is, what is the effect of that have on us? That and also, I'd like to throw out the question of what marriage is?

ANSWER: What is the question?

QUESTION: I guess the question I am asking is in relation to is shedding light on what family is, period? And what marriage is, from your perspective?

ANSWER: In all respects, relationships are the crucible of awakening; whether with spouses, or parents, or children. They are the refiner's fire. Why? because in a relationship it is almost impossible to be isolated and alone. And it therefore, constantly provides the opportunity to join, not joining in mutual agreement as to the truth of a lie, but joining in a conscious awareness of each others fundamental Divinity and the desire to see that emerge more and more clearly.

If one is in a relationship from an ego standpoint, then I will tell you, that this is what is really experienced as the refiner's fire. You see, you must remember that no two Individualities, in any relationship, are ever anything less than the Presence of the Christ. And so, always present there, in the relationship, is the fullness of your Being or their Being. And whether they are consciously aware of it or not, the fullness of their Being is constantly weakening or undermining their beloved ego structures. And in spite of themselves they manage to create—using the term advisedly—create opportunities for the falsity and the valuelessness of the ego to be uncovered.

If one is identifying as an ego, when the presence of the wholeness of what each partner in the relationship is, when the ego structures are undermined by this wholeness, it provides the opportunity for—what the Course calls—a holy relationship to emerge. But if one is holding on to his or her ego sense, it is seen as attack. The Christ says, “behold, I stand at the door and knock.” And you, inside the door, call the constable to come and get rid of the intruder.

I encourage all of you to be willing to look again when you think you are being attacked, when you think you are being insulted, on the sheer chance that perhaps this other one, whom you know so well and whom you are positive is functioning as an ego; might just happen to be, even involuntarily, expressing the motive of the wholeness of himself or herself; that might actually be providing you with the alternative to respond from your Being, rather than continuing the game of a mutual agreement of egos.

If someone loosing their job, can be experiencing the threshold of enlightenment and expansion, and there is a different way to look at what is happening from the standpoint of the pressure of his Divinity; then it might just be that your confidence in the egoness of your partner, or your mother, or your father, or your children, is a misperception of a Movement of Divinity, that is undermining your cherished ego.

I have not said this before, you are the first one’s to hear this. I say this so you will know it is something to pay attention to, to contemplate and to allow it to grow in your thought. And if you will contemplate it, it will be transformational to you, because it is a penetration of fourth-dimensional fact, into the level of human experience at this moment. And you do not have to experience any level confusion about it.

Relationships are the opportunity to invite the realization of the fourth-dimensional actuality, the Christhood of the individual you are in a relationship with, whether that individual identifies himself or herself that way or not. This is very important, very valuable. “why, he’s ignorant of his divinity, how could he possibly be expressing anything of value to me, and vice versa. Listen to the hatred with which she says it. She’s just pissed off. This isn’t a Divine Movement.” Not true! None of you have ever stopped being the Christ. And each one of you is either seeing the Christ clearly or through a glass darkly. But what is happening there is the Christ. What is happening right where you are is the Christ.

How do you release a special relationship? By not continuing the mutual agreement to treat each other as a couple of ignoramuses, who couldn’t possibly have any value for each other in terms of your enlightenment, except in a rather perverse way. As though, the only way it could be turned to your advantage is by the grace of the Holy Spirit. Thank God for the Holy Spirit, because which it takes to wake you up, couldn’t possibly be coming from one or the other of the two of you.

I am exaggerating somewhat. The point is, that very seldom do you function in a relationship with an actual vital curiosity to see the evidence of the Christ in your partner. And that’s what’s called for. That’s the way you break the mutual agreement to be ignorant and that is the way in which the veil, the illusion of ignorance is lifted.

Family is very important. Relationships are essential, because they are the means of breaking the habit of an arrogant isolated private sense of self, that doesn't represent the truth of you and deprives you of your peace and your joy and the conscious experience of your wholeness.

Families have been called the cement of society. Brotherhood is the cement of the unity of the infinite expression of God; we could say brotherhood/sisterhood, because I am not meaning to leave anyone out. I thank you for your question.

QUESTION: I have a two part question. There is a lot of change in my life in the last few months especially. A relationship of the last two and a half years is coming to an end or changing form. And there's been a lot of learning, a very deep love and yet we know that we cannot be together. I'd like to know about this, if there is anything that I am missing, any lessons that I am missing? That's the first part of my question.

ANSWER: I will answer that at this point. There is really nothing that you are missing. And you are, indeed, learning to yield to intelligence; and in doing it without significant resistance, you are finding that intelligence blesses everyone involved. Continue.

QUESTION: The second part is, my work is also changing. And I want to know if I'm able to do and to contribute in the world, without returning to school, or if I must do this?

ANSWER: Unquestionably yes, you can, without returning to school. And I encourage you to give your attention in that direction, if you will. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I guess I want to know, just basically, how I'm doing? When you were in Charlotte, I had a lot of questions. And since then I've experience a great shift. There's been a whole lot of peace in my life, more than I've ever experienced. I've been a little bit concerned that I seem to have lost some desire for the meditation, because I just felt so peaceful, after Charlotte. And I would like to have that back again, I guess is what I am saying. And also at one point...

ANSWER: You would like to have what back?

QUESTION: You know, having the meditation two times a day, as you had prescribed a while back. And the other things is: I feel that a while back, I had contact with my guide and I used to hear words and I was putting it on tape and I would listen to it and I was really moved by what I heard. And then it came to a point, where I would ask questions and I wasn't getting the answers that I wanted and so I shut down. I just kind of blocked. I didn't want to ask anymore. I stopped the communication completely.

And so now, what I do, I realize my guide is still with me, and I just call her name and I feel the sense of peace, but I won't allow my guide to speak. I think that's happening. I think that's what I'm doing. I'm not allowing my guide to speak. And I just wondered if my guides name is my own, because that's what I've been calling my guide? That's it.

ANSWER: The answer to your last question, is yes, confusing as it might be at times.

Now, it has been said that mankind is a creature of habit. It is this practice and this belief that must be broken. And if I say that it is well, or wise, or appropriate to meditate twice a day, it does not constitute a law for you to abide by, whether you feel like it or not. If something is said, it is not to be taken as law, that you must abide by, without ever again being sensitive to what is appropriate at any given moment.

Indeed, you have been feeling peace and there is not a need, there is not any significant benefit, at the present time, for you to meditate. Be sensitive in the moment you are in, so that you may know what is appropriate in the moment that you are in.

Now, when you feel the need, the desire and the willingness to meditate; resume your meditation. Not as a habit, to do indefinitely, because you need to continue to be conscious, so as to know what is appropriate two weeks from that time.

Just be aware, that it is characteristic of the ego to lock things into place, so that you can feel that everything is dependable and you can go further to sleep without danger. It is when things aren't dependable, that you must be conscious. And it is when you are conscious, that you can have the experience of being aware. And waking up means being ever more aware, than you have ever been before.

And so, don't try to wrap things up in neat little packages, so you don't have to be quite as conscious and you can relax and be less alive. What you need to do, what you are all confronted with, is the opportunity to learn how to relax, on the move; and feel your security in the Movement of God, in the Movement of your Being.

PAUL: This is me Paul. What was the other part of your question?

QUESTION: I wanted to know how I was doing. And I asked a question about my guide, just experiencing my guidance as a feeling of peace more than any real answers.

And I wanted to ask one other part here. All I ever want to do mostly is listen to the Raj tapes. And, I mean I'm here, and I never wanted to be a follower, and I don't feel really like a follower, but it's kind of strange that, I mean this is brand new for me to do something like this.

ANSWER: I will not let you become a "groupie." I promise you!

See, I want you to be perfectly honest with yourself, you do not want your guide to say what you want to hear. That is a waste of time. But there is something you are not giving yourself the freedom to do and that is, ARGUE. I assure you that you will be more willing to hear what your guide has to say, if you have permission to disagree and bitch and complain and argue, until the point has been made ultimately clear to you and, therefore, acceptable and meaningful to you. This is a very important point.

None of you are to become obedient little servants of Divine guidance. You are not to become “yes men” and “yes women.” And ultimately your guides will not allow that. Paul tried it. There was a point at which he did become impressed with my being Jesus. And he became a nice little “yes man.” Now, if I had told him to stop, if I said, “here is what you are doing, stop”; at that point he would have continued to be a nice little “yes man,” and he would have stopped, because I said to. That would not have constituted learning, that would not have constituted clarity. And so, I proceeded to give him some impossible things to do. (Laughter) And did he ever try to do them. And he finally arrived at a point of real honesty, except he called it frustration. And he asked me “what would happen if I refused to do this, because I just can’t do it”? And I said, “nothing.” And so he said, “Okay, I’m not going to do it.” And I said, “good!” He had given his power away at first, and at this point he took it back, and then I explained to him what had happened.

You see, I am not here, your guides are not there with each of you to have followers. We are not here for you to serve or honor with self-disregard on your part. It is not we who need to wake up, it is you. And to allow you to be wonderful servants no matter how pure our motives and acts are, doesn’t constitute your coming into the clear awareness of who you Divinely are. And that’s the point, that you each come into a full awareness of who you are. Why? For your reasons, not because you have had wonderful guidance that says to do it.

And so, ask for the guidance and if you don’t like the guidance or it seems unreasonable, question it, question it, question it. And if you doubt what is going on, ask “why are you saying this”? If you just simply stop asking question, you remove yourself from the opportunity for your clarity to emerge.

Paul is very wise not to call me Jesus, because as he said, he can’t be real with Jesus. He needs to be real, and you need to be real. And you need to offer your objections. You aren’t just being contrary, you are honestly saying, “I cannot grasp the reasonableness of what you are saying.” And the only reason you would say, “I cannot grasp the reasonableness of it,” is because you want to know if there is some reasonableness there somewhere. You must be real. You must express yourselves as really as you are able to at the moment.

So, don’t be reluctant to challenge the guidance, if it doesn’t make sense to you. And understand that there will be many times when the guidance will not make sense, simply because the word “sense,”—the meaning of the word “sense”—is derived from your ego and what it has determined sense to be. And the guidance you are getting, or that you will get, is going to go beyond what your ego calls “sense.”

If you do not ask for more clarification, directly, or through the use of argument, or frustration; you will not have the opportunity yet, to get beyond the ego’s sense of sense into greater clarity, that provides a new level of what makes sense, that frees you somewhat from your ignorance. Don’t be afraid to ask, “what if I refuse to do what you say”? Sometimes it literally won’t make any difference if you don’t do what is said, and at other times it will make a difference; and you will be told.

Please understand, I have said this before, whenever I repeat myself, it is because it bares repeating. Your guidance is not some universal answering machine. Fundamentally, your guidance is a teacher, an illuminator of that of which you have been ignorant. And the illumination of that which you have been ignoring, is the reason for the guidance being provided. Therefore, always underlying every experience of guidance, is the intent to move you out of the ignorance that is currently imprisoning you; the sense of limitation that is totally inconsistent with a Son or Daughter of God, the Christ.

And so, by hook or by crook, we will do what promotes your growth, whether your asking the question is a means of avoiding growth or not. And indeed, many of the questions you will ask, will be attempts to get confirmation of your point of view, rather than a real desire to know what the Truth is. And that is okay. I say that, so that you may understand that not all of your questions will be real questions. Nevertheless, we will always take advantage of your real questions and your attempts to further establish your biased point of view; and we will turn them to your advantage. And you will grow.

Not any of you have to grow uncomfortably. And we never calculate how you ought to grow. No learning is ever set up for you, that is in itself strenuous. The only thing that ever makes it strenuous, is the resistance you bring to it.

Start having what I am going to call, some good tussles with your guide. Be that real, disagree, argue. Out of it will come clarity, because even if you are upset, it will not throw your guide for a curve. And your guide will not lose her balance, or her perspective. And clarity will come through to you and you will find yourself in a new space.

I say this, because your reason for not asking questions, is because you thought you simply had to ask, hear the answer and take it. That would’ve been you becoming a good “yes woman,” if you had taken it. And I am saying, do not cut off the conversation, object. And keep the dialog going, because when the sense of what is being said to you is grasped, it will be obvious to you that that is the optimum choice. And it will reflect your integrity and you will be able to make commitment to it, for your reasons.

And thus, your innate strength of character—not ego—but strength of character, will be what is moving forward and it will feel good to do it. If you act, however, in obedience with what you hear, without it connecting with you, in you; so that the willingness to commit to it arises with conviction, then your act becomes a farce, the action you take of obedience becomes meaningless. And we simply have to step back, recognize what will promote your learning, with connectedness and commitment from within you and promote that. We will never abandon you.

I want you to know that Paul has sworn off on me, on more than one occasion, sometimes rudely. And indeed, has gone for days without talking with me, because he was so angry with what I had told him. It is okay. And always, when he decided to address me again, I was there for him and we continued forward.

Etiquette is a terrible thing. Etiquette is constituted of rules for people who do not trust being genuine. And that's what gets your goat in hoity-toity restaurants. Appropriately so. That's the end of the answer.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is that time. I would share with you that the time we have spent together has been one in which you all have been wonderfully defenseless.

PAUL: This is me Paul. He is giving a picture of a porcupine without any quills.

ANSWER: And the communion has been Soul satisfying. Thank you for being with me. And I'm going to say something else, because I want to say it directly to you. You are going to hear it on other tapes, because I have said it to other groups.

I am glad to have been with you. And I am glad that you have been conscious of my being with you. And I say this, so that you might leave here and realize that I am just as really with you, when Paul is not around. And I just as really desire for you to experience me consciously, directly. And if you will remember this and be a little bit curious and you reach out, it is highly likely that without too much process, you will be able to experience me as clearly as you are experiencing me right now, through Paul. You don't have to want to talk with me if you don't want to. But what I want you to know is that the connection is there, the opportunity is there, you are my brothers and my sisters, we are equals; and I would enjoy experiencing our equality consciously.

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: As you are Jesus I'd just like confirmation that as Jesus you're also Buddha and you're also Mohammed and Abraham.

ANSWER: I cannot confirm that, because it is not the truth. All of us at the point of incarnation were different individualities. Each of us fulfilled purpose. And fulfilled it, I will say, for different groups of people. We have not become merged, as it were, into one individuality. Nor were we all different incarnations of the same individuality. That is the simple truth.

And if you have a "yes, but," I would love to hear it.

QUESTION: (I could not hear this question, she was not using the microphone.)

ANSWER: Indeed to the degree that we, and to the degree that you allow the Holy Spirit to find expression through you, then indeed we are meaningful—transformationally, meaningful.

Now, you must understand that the Holy Spirit is your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. This is true of every single individuality who is not Awake at this moment, not spiritually self-realized, if I may use those words. As each of you begins to allow yourself to connect with the Holy Spirit, what you are in fact doing is letting who you divinely Are, as the presence of God, find expression right where you are, so it is no longer blocked by a concerted effort to express a different mind from the Father's.

The ego does not like to hear this—but there is only one presence, and that is the presence of God infinitely individualized, infinitely self-expressed. And what you must understand is that when God is infinitely individualized or expressed, God does not become less. And the infinite expression of God is not an infinite expression of (not good English but) lessnesses. In other words, a whole bunch of expressions that are themselves less than the original. This is not possible to conceive of conceptually.

The fact is that you are the presence of all that God is. Every single one of you in this room is all of God in expression. You do not experience the infinity of who you are or what you are, because you have this private, personal, little sense of yourself, which you are all in one way or another engaged in maintaining, defending, supporting, etc.

As each of you yields to the Holy Spirit, which you conceive to be a part of the Trinity and as infinite as the Father, you are, in fact, yielding back into the divine one that you are, which is claiming no presence other than the presence of God and which, therefore, is truly constituted of God.

You get the picture? Indeed, it will become clearer as we proceed through this weekend.

The simple fact is that God is both universal and specific, simultaneously. His Creation is also universal and specific, simultaneously. Because His expression—His creation—is Himself in the act of being All That Is.

Now you start from a limited perception of everything and a tiny sense of yourself, and while you hold to this you also remain infinite. You identify with the visibility and tangibility of you, forgetting the universality of you. That means, forgetting yourself as Consciousness—that unlimited, unboundaried mind in which all conscious experience of things is going on.

And so while you are dissociated from that infinite self-awareness that you Are, it must be called something—and it is called the Holy Spirit. And as long as you hold yourselves to be the Sons of God, separate from God, with a private mind of your own different from the Father's Mind, then there must be God and the Son and the Holy Spirit.

Now this gives you in your current limited perception of things an avenue out, if you will—a means of penetrating the boundary of limitation that seems to be so real to you. And so when you lean into or begin to rely upon the Holy Spirit, you become less defensive; the ego boundaries become weaker, and what you might call the infinite penetration of truth can occur, which is your connection with the Holy Spirit.

As you nurture that relationship with the Holy Spirit, and as you begin to be in more consistent communion with the Holy Spirit, you will be infilled with the clear perception of that which is Real—the less distorted perception of that which is Real. And you will begin to learn of yourself as the infinite One that you Are. You will begin to experience yourself less as a body, and more as that Awareness in which the experience of body is going on.

In other words, you are provided with a means of transition. And the more heavily you rely upon the Holy Spirit, the more consistently you join with it, the more the sense of isolated separateness begins to weaken. And there is opportunity for even greater influx of the experience of yourself in, what I'm going to call, your divine aspect. Eventually you will find yourself actually becoming reluctant to rely upon your limited, separate sense of self, because you will have acquired a background of experience of the infinitude of you, and the greater harmony and joy and peace that accompanies this new and larger self awareness.

Ultimately there comes a point where you are faced with the opportunity—although it might be perceived as a demand—to let go entirely of the tiny sense of yourself and make a commitment to the infinite One that you Are. Because tininess will no longer feel natural to you, but will indeed feel like a tight shoe. It will be easier to let go of the sense of your identity that had meant so much to you; because at that point in your experience, it will be obviously limited and uncomfortable, and therefore not desirable.

Then when one ultimately makes that commitment to let the Holy Spirit be the only presence there is right where you are, you come into your original sanity as the Sons and Daughters of God. And there is no longer a Trinity, there is God and God's expression, and it's all You.

Now I want to be careful here; because at the moment, the only way you can perceive that or conceive of it is as though the tiny you that you are becomes an infinite separated you that could be called the presence of God. But the fact is that there is not any sense of separation from God in that Awakened state. You are still clearly you, but there is no imaginative description of you that you hold to be your identity. You then experience yourself as the Movement of God, and this is the only sense in which being co-creators with God means anything. It isn't a you separate from God cooperating with God in the act of Creation. It is you having no experience other than the experience God is having of being the Movement of Creation.

Now I am going to let it set there for the time being. It is a good start, but we do not need to dig too deep, too quickly.

QUESTION: How do you distinguish Raj's voice from your own?

PAUL: This is me Paul. Are you asking Paul that question?

QUESTION: Yes. How do you, Paul, distinguish Raj's voice from your own? The COURSE talks about being unable to see or hear the Holy Spirit.

PAUL: It feels different. Usually when I'm speaking there's a certain amount of nervousness, there's an absence of peace, generally speaking. When he is speaking, when the words are coming, there is meaning that goes beyond anything that is present when I'm speaking from what I would call my everyday place or sense of things. It is quite—what's the word I want... see also I can't find words—it's quite pronounced, the difference is, internally.

QUESTION: Is it like a different vibration?

PAUL: It's like it's bigger, it's like when I talk, the sense of who's talking is like one among many. When he is speaking, it's just all embracing. I don't know how to answer it better than that. But there's definite...

QUESTION: So Raj is talking to you with your own thoughts, but you can distinguish his thought form from your own interference?

PAUL: Absolutely!

QUESTION: So it takes time to notice the difference. That's experience isn't it?

PAUL: Especially in the beginning. In the beginning it actually took about three months for me to be able to distinguish a qualitative difference. And prior to that time the sheer intelligence of what he was saying kept me going. But experientially it took about three months before I could feel a difference.

QUESTION: Let me be more specific. I think my real question is, how do I distinguish between the two? I can describe my process to date, but I'm now seeing you being so precise in your distinguishing between the two. And I would like some of that.

PAUL: Shall we let Raj answer the question?

QUESTION: Yeah, that's who I'm asking.

ANSWER: It is a combination of two things: First, the element of trust. And second, practice, practice, practice! Except I do not mean that in the sense of exercise. I could say, do it, do it, do it. Meaning, be in that place where the communication is being experienced as frequently as you are able to. It is like learning how to ride a bicycle or fly a plane—the more times you do it the more comfortable you become with it, the more secure you become with it; and indeed, the more the difference between your voice and your guide's voice will become, the more clear the difference will become.

Now I do not mean that in a sense of separation, but I do mean it in the sense that you can clearly know that you are dealing with another individuality who is as real in his or her own right as you are.

Now I do not mean to be confusing here, because I'm aware that many of you question the use of the word his and her. But the fact is that you will experience your guidance as being either masculine or feminine. And it will be for a very specific reason. That being, that it will be what you will resist the least. It will be perfect for you. But the fact is that the one who is guiding you is not experiencing half of wholeness. We will not go into that at this time.

At the bottom line what keeps the line of communication fuzzy is the practice of doubt. Doubt fades as trust increases and as familiarity grows relative to listening and hearing guidance.

Now I want all of you to know that you cannot pester us, you cannot bug us, you cannot take advantage of us. And you may speak with us endlessly about anything you wish to, and it will not be an imposition upon us. So do not feel that you must be proper and only occupy so much of our time. Because I will tell you something: The periods in which you are not talking with us are periods in which you are unconscious of us; therefore, they are periods in which our Brotherhood is not being experienced, when an ever-present conscious awareness of each other is what constitutes normalcy.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask for help and guidance on a career situation that I'm experiencing at the moment. I would like to be in alignment with God's Will and to allow myself to unfold accordingly. I have had two choices that are available to me. One is a computing technician that would involve teaching. The other is psychology. I used to be a psychologist and now I have an opportunity to go back to it. Can you give me any guidance on how to proceed at this time.

ANSWER: Indeed going back would be returning to a hope that is still within you, which was very present when you were in that field. And you have indeed moved beyond it, I will say, you have grown beyond it. And you would find it not fulfilling—a fond hope, but not one that could be realized. I encourage you not to waste the time that it will take to find that out.

This other avenue with the computing is, indeed, the appropriate direction to take. However, I want you to understand that this work that you are specifically considering will only be a stepping stone. And so I encourage you to approach it with full intent, but with an understanding that it will not become your niche, or the place where you will settle into. I tell you this so that you will allow yourself fully into this work, and at the same time have your eyes open and attentive for what is to follow. It will be important for you not to develop blinders, where you are fully intent upon what you are doing with the computing.

PAUL: This is me Paul. There is an image here of you being in a room, and there's a doorway and then there's a room and then on the far wall of that room there's another doorway with a room beyond it. And it's like when you go through this doorway, it's like realize there's another doorway beyond, and that room is not the one where you are going to settle in and call it home.

Oh, also, he's telling you this so that you will know that this doorway into the computing is the appropriate one from the room that you're in.

QUESTION: Raj knows about my relationship with my mother over a very long period. During the last two years we have become closer together, and I have been able to express my true love for her and this has been reciprocated.

She has now been in a nursing home for fourteen months, and I have this problem with my perception of her body—she is slowly deteriorating. She has senile dementia. And my sister and I get very upset when we go and see her, because this body is there for us and so we know that perhaps it shouldn't be, according to A Course In Miracles, that maybe she is content.

But quite often we get from her an anger, which is quite insupportable for us. Can I have some help to obtain some peace of mind on this particular issue?

ANSWER: You must know what you are able to do and what you are not able to do, so that you will not labor and suffer from the attempt to do what you cannot do.

Now, she is responsible for the manner in which she is experiencing her body, just as you and everyone else are responsible for the way in which you are experiencing yours. The more limited your vision, the more limited your experience of your body. Not because it is limited, but because you only perceive what you are willing to embrace.

Now the simple fact is that you do not have access to the switch of her decision-making process, relative to the manner in which she is going to define herself and her body. She alone does. And although that makes you feel helpless and it makes you feel sad because you care so much for her, you must understand that you can do nothing about it, and you have no responsibility to do something about it. And therefore, in not doing anything about it, you are guilty of nothing.

Now, that is not the end of the story, because there is something you can do. In spite of appearances, physically and mentally, she is all there. She—who she divinely is—can never for a moment stop being less than the full expression of God.

Therefore, although you are not able to clearly communicate, and although you are not in a position where you could, let us say, educate her, and perhaps help her give permission to have a new perception, you are able, from that place in you that knows you are divine, to acknowledge that she is also. You can acknowledge the fact that she is totally present. And you can acknowledge the fact that that which renders her visible and tangible to conscious experience—meaning her body—still has the intent to identify the presence of her individuality perfectly.

In other words, you cannot afford to look at her body and say, “It is deteriorating. It is expressing less and less of what I know her to be, but it is an illusion, and so it is of no consequence. I am worrying about something that is irrelevant, even though my ego says it isn’t.” I’m saying that you cannot afford to take that attitude. Right where that body is, right there, is an individuality. There also seems to be an ego overlaying it, but there is an individuality there, and that individuality is the direct expression of God.

In other words, it is the presence of the infinite Mind, the infinite Intelligence, the infinite Movement of Creation that God Is. The only thing is that she doesn’t realize that that is who and what she is. But you are able to have that degree of clarity yourself to acknowledge it.

Now what happens when you do that? And what happens with any of you when you adopt a different attitude to someone that you are relating to, and the difference in the attitude has to do with acknowledging what is the actual truth about them—the divine truth about them? What it does is, that you join with them at the level of what they divinely Are and who they divinely Are. There is a joining that occurs, because they are fully present in their divinity, even if they have obscured it from their own view.

There is a flip side to this: When you look and you believe what you see, instead of what you know to be the truth, and you begin to react, that is ego. And you join with that one at the level of her ego and apparently strengthen it. Which is exactly what you do not want to do, because it confirms what I will call her conviction. And I mean the word conviction in both ways, she has a conviction about herself and she is convicted by her conviction.

When you join with her at the level of who she divinely is, by acknowledging the truth about her and remaining free of reaction, you provide the environment in which she can make a new decision. That is all that you can do. All you can do is provide the environment in which a new decision can be made. That is all I can do with you.

Now I realize that there is something in you that gets indignant at the indignity of what she seems to be going through. Well I will tell you something: Translate that indignity into a conscious acknowledgment of what is true about her, rather than letting it get translated into frustration and anger. Let it get translated into love rather than hate. That is what you can do. And seeing her cannot stop you from doing it; it can prompt you to do it even more committedly, with even deeper love.

I also want all of you to understand that love is not a divine means of control. Love her because she deserves it because of who and what she is. Don't love her to try to coerce her into a new decision about herself. If you do that, you are not expressing love, you are expressing control, and control is attack. It say "you are incapable of perceiving yourself clearly, you are incapable of making a true decision about yourself, and therefore I will enforce upon you your good because it's clear to me what your good is." That is attack. It denies the very first thing I said, which is—to acknowledge or recognize that all of who she is, divinely speaking, is there.

If all that she divinely is is present, then necessarily her divine intelligence and divine perception is present, and you want to join with that in confirmation of it; you do it in the acknowledgment of its presence, which is love. Love is the recognition of that which is Real in each and everything. And if you are choosing to recognize what is unreal and then attempt to do something about it, you haven't started with love. You haven't started with that element that is truly and powerfully transformational.

So do understand what you are capable of and what you are not. Not so that you will recognize some limitation you have, but so that the ego cannot screw you over by suggesting to you that you are capable of doing something that you aren't capable of doing, and thus imprisoning you in frustration and guilt. You must know what you can do and do it, and having done it stand in your peace. That's the key. Anything else will leave you standing in frustration, guilt, self-depreciation, in other words—conflict.

It is a hard thing to hear, but you must let her do what she will with her switch relative to her decision making. You know something? And I am repeating myself from other occasions, but, “A mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still.” Each one must make his or her own decisions that get him or her back into the Kingdom of Heaven, else that one will not feel that he or she is rightly there. No one can override your power of decision. It is impossible. But we can provide an environment in which you, for your own reasons, can make a decision that is new—that more clearly identifies who you divinely Are. And that is what you must do for her as well.

I cannot override your free will, the Father cannot override your free will. As was mentioned earlier, you alone can decide to set free will aside, and by doing so, come into a new perception in which there is less distortion—more harmony, more beauty, more peace, more joy. You reserve the right to make your own decisions and so does she. And you would feel imposed upon if your word were overridden, instead of you giving a new word. And you would rightly resist it.

I have covered a lot of territory in my answer to you. I encourage you to abide with the answer and contemplate it, because it will relieve you of the false sense of responsibility. It will also make way for you to do something truly helpful, that will leave you in your peace.

QUESTION: First of all what I would like to ask you for is a clear mind, but I'm a bit confused. I tend to do a lot of things in life, study, but never finish them. And if I do, I don't apply them. I keep running from one thing to the other, and still I can't see my goal. Is there anything you want me to do?

Sometimes you do use me for healing, and yet part of me does not become a healer and part of me wants to. And I try to counsel people, and I do it and then I don't want to. And please can you guide me, what is my goal in this life? I'm tired of changing and jumping from one thing to the other. I really get angry sometimes with you too.

ANSWER: Oh, indeed, and you are not the only one.

Now you have this conceptual sense of orderliness and purpose and how it all works. But in many ways you are like a woman who needs to prepare dinner and goes to the grocery store and can't manage to stay in one aisle too long before she must go over here and get that, and go over here and get that. Stop judging it.

I will tell you that you do not have a sense that there is a meal that is being prepared. And so you just see yourself in the grocery store going from this aisle to that aisle to the other aisle, and not having much consistency in any one of the aisles. You have not been wasting your time, you have not been negligent by not making a career out of each little thing you have found of interest to you. And so I encourage you to relax.

I encourage you to be more allowing of the spontaneous manner in which you are living your life. I also encourage you to stop caring so much about what other people think. They tend to play into your own inclination to become orderly and stick to a project and have a little perseverance. You have all of these words, definitions, meanings, and you lay them on you. And then when your life doesn't conform to them, you have only one alternative, and that is to believe that you are a will-of-the-wisp.

Now a surgeon, in order to perform his office, must have many tools. He does not have to use all of them for every operation, but he must know how to use all of them so that when an occasion calls for one of them, he knows how to use it deftly and properly. Your "jumping around" has been a matter of collecting the proper tools—the experiences that will allow you to bring them forth as needed.

But you know what? Unlike the surgeon who would gain an appointment in a hospital, you will find your utilization of the tools or experiences that you have acquired being utilized in everyday life. So on one occasion where there is one need, you will utilize your experience there. And at a later time in the day under other circumstances, you will bring another into play. You are not going to end up being able to hang out a shingle with a single word on it stating what you do. And you will not arrive at a point where you will be at rest because "you know who you are," because you have that definition.

If you want a definition, we could say, you are an angel. You are one who is in the right place, at the right time, with the right thing. In other words, you are truly a grounded human being who has great humanity—humaneness. And your divinity shines through in it, and everyone else recognizes that about you. But you tend to sluff it off as unimportant, because you haven't managed to abide by the protocols and structures that you carry around with you in your mind. And so you fret yourself unnecessarily.

Again, I encourage you to relax and give yourself permission to be in the spontaneous way that you are. And then you will begin to enjoy yourself as much as everyone else enjoys you.

QUESTION: This will probably be a confused question, because I'm confused.

I spent a lot of my life depressed, and feeling I was in the wrong place doing the wrong thing. And if only I could be in the right place doing the right thing then I'd be contributing to humanity and I'd be happy. And I've come a long way from there to actually realizing that I can choose to be happy. What I'm aware of is how I used to create depression to avoid doing what I should be doing. Now I seem to be creating being busy to avoid being creative, for one thing. I seem to spend hours tidying the flat, it never seems to be tidy. And so I seem to have this terrifically strong inbuilt program to sabotage myself, which I'm fighting against all the time. I would like you to respond to that.

ANSWER: First of all, I would encourage you not to see yourself as so special, by virtue of your negativity, that you are worthy of undo self-criticism. The simple fact is, that what you have expressed is what absolutely everyone is engaged in to one degree or another. And either all of you can be miserable because of it, or you can say, "Ce la vi." Now that's not all you need to say. But if you do not choose to see yourself as being so special by virtue of your negativity, or your acts of denial of your fulfillment, then you have two choices. You can either be bored, because you're engaging in negativity or denial of your good, but it is not cause for self-depreciation. Or you can do the thing that will happen spontaneously. And that is begin to explore your potential.

Now I will tell you that mankind as a whole has spent centuries kicking himself around the block for being ignorant, or for being guilty, or for any reason that the imagination might be able to come up with. And in that act of busyness, the busyness of laying guilt trips on oneself, one never finds himself or herself having the time to become curious to anticipate something, and to have a joyful feeling in that process.

So what if you continue to clean your house unnecessarily, but you can no longer criticize yourself for it? The pay-off won't be there. And I will tell you something: you would begin to neglect to clean up your apartment quite as often. And you will get out—and I'm not going to tell you what you will do—you will begin to move, you will begin to explore, you will have free time on your hands. Because first of all, you will have become bored with cleaning your house and not being able to criticize yourself for it. And you will have also, by virtue of that, stopped cleaning your house as often.

You see, you, like dogs chasing their tails, get a mindset going. And you usually use that mindset as a means for self-depreciation, for finding out what is wrong with you so that you might improve yourself. Except that you never find an end to finding out what is wrong with you. And that is because the ego, or your conditioned sense of yourself, has an unending list of things that are wrong.

In fact, the ego keeps you busy (usually throughout your lives) improving yourself, because there is a fundamental premise that has been accepted that you are flawed. Whether you want to call yourself a sinner, whether you want to call yourself just a human being, whether you want to say that you are living a life that could be described as “the human condition”—you have an unending list of justifications for self-improvement. But the self-improvement that you have sought hasn’t given you joy. And the reason is that the premise for seeking it is that there is something innately flawed about you.

There is a need for a new point of view. That point of view could be expressed best this way: You are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing towards it; you are at that point and must understand yourself there from.

Now I’m going to put it a different way. Some of you have heard this before, but it bears repeating. It is as though all of you are lying on grassy knolls in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven having a dream, and believing that the dream is what is real. But the point is that where you are while you are having the dream is in the Kingdom of Heaven. The dream is being experienced from Home. And therefore, all of your attempts to improve yourselves, so as to become worthy of going Home, have been a false goal, because you’re doing the dreaming from Home.

That is why I am speaking to you in this way. That is why you have A Course In Miracles; because you need to be reminded of where you are while you’re having your dream, while you’re having your illusion, if I may put it that way. That is why going Home is called a “journey without distance.”

You must begin to dare, right as you go through your day—your everyday, nitty-gritty, daily experiences of work and home and family and streets and automobiles and traffic, etc.—you must be willing to start right where you are and begin to have a curiosity. “If I’m in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, if the Kingdom of Heaven is all that can possibly be confronting me and I’m just not seeing it clearly, then what must really be going on here that looks like this or looks like that?”

Once that curiosity begins to stir in you, you begin to practice love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. And so then you begin to look at your fellow man with a curiosity to see the Christ there. Not your traditional concept of Christ, but the literal presence of God here and now. And you will begin to look at your trees, and you will begin to look at everything with a curiosity as to what its real meaning might be. That curiosity is a giving of permission to yourself to have a new point of view. And when you give yourself permission to have a new point of view, what are you doing? You are relinquishing your commitment to your old point of view. And when you release that commitment movement can begin, and insight and revelation can occur.

Now again, for centuries mankind has been hung up on his or her guilt, and has engaged in self-punishment of one sort or another as the pay-off—except that the ego never lets you off the hook. And it's unending. So let's not make such a big deal out of what it is you do wrong, or how self-destructive you are.

Just as you decided to be happy rather than figuring out how not to be depressed, you can choose to be curious about the truth about you rather than remaining preoccupied with what is wrong with you, and going through great tests of self-improvement. You will find that the key to your release lies in not condemning yourself, not judging yourself for excessive house cleaning. Once that slap in the face, so to speak, that brings you to your senses and makes you feel good in a negative way, once that pay-off of self-criticism isn't there, it will become utterly monotonous to clean so much. And you will find yourself naturally gravitating to other activities which you will find will be expansive.

QUESTION: You just might be interested to know that my surname is Knill, which means dweller on a knoll.

ANSWER: Indeed. Remember that!

QUESTION: I learned recently that earlier this century Rudolph Shtiener suggested that Lazarus and John the Beloved were one in the same person. There was no documentary evidence for this, but since the finding of the Nagamadi Library, I believe there has been some sort of evidence that this was so. And another suggestion has been that the raising of Lazarus was symbolic within an initiation, and that as a result of that initiation Lazarus became John the Beloved. Now as a principal in that particular episode, would you comment on that please?

ANSWER: Lazarus never incarnated again. Indeed, he Awoke, fully, shortly after what you would call his final passing. He has been quite at work in facilitating and promoting the Awakening process that mankind is even now engaged in. No indeed, he did not incarnate again, and was not John the Beloved.

QUESTION: This is another confused question.

ANSWER: Don't any of you ever hesitate to ask confused questions. If you were clear, you wouldn't have any questions.

QUESTION: It's a simple question, but maybe it's got a hidden meaning, I don't know. I've experienced a lot of death recently, in particular, my sister. And I was with her at her death and I wonder something else: how was her passing? Did she pass over peacefully and how is she now?

ANSWER: Oh, I will tell you that passing is always easy, it is the resistance to it that is difficult.

Indeed, she is fine and actively moving forward in terms of her own growth. And I say that because that it is not always the case. There are some who, for one reason or another, shall I say, take a respite, a period of time in which they wait before continuing on. Some of them to simply experience what it feels like not to be in pain any longer. Various reasons. They are never withheld from moving on, it is always a matter of choice. And so I do not want you to think when I speak of a delay, that it refers to an enforced delay, or a penalty.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. He's not saying anything, but he's conveying a lot of joy and a lot of liveliness. Not like dancing, but sort of like dancing. A fullness of activity that is full of joy. She is well.

QUESTION: I would like to ask you why there are so many ways of healing? I went to Mexico last month, and I was with a group with healers, and they use mantras in healing. But I know that healing can be done also just with love without saying anything. So I'm a bit confused, because I know that there are many, many kinds of healing. So I ask why?

ANSWER: At the bottom line every single one of you and every single individual that exists, knows that sickness is illegitimate. This is the reason everyone, in one way or another, reaches out for healing.

Now, at the bottom line of all healing is love. Even if it is from a frustrated nurse who attends to you with a certain briskness. At the bottom line she is there because she must give her capacity to care, she must give her love.

Now there are so many different sorts of healing processes, because so many of you have very unique ways of giving permission for the love to be received. You say it must come in this way and not that way, or from this direction and not that direction, it must coincide with your current belief system, etc., etc., etc.

And so all of your individual backgrounds provide what you could call a sieve, through which love must come in order for you to say, "Yes, I recognize it as love and I embrace it." And then the moment you do embrace it, you are healed. Even those of you who experience healing but experience it slowly, there is something in your mindset that says for example that you would rather make ground slowly but solidly, rather than fast and brief.

All of you give permission to experience your divinity in degrees, and with peculiar biases. But you know what? Divine Love doesn't care. And so it meets you in language of your present perception. Some of you say, “I must have a doctor.” And another will say, “No, I do not want a doctor, I want a naturopath who also believes in homeopathy and is a vegetarian.”

It is so easy. Everyone thinks that a prayer is a request, but real prayer is saying, “Yes.” It is saying “yes” to what God is giving you, because you are the child of God. And as it has been said, “The Father has withheld nothing of what He is from His self-expression.” And so prayer really isn’t asking for more, it is saying “yes” to the more that you have said “no” to in the past. Everyone says “yes” in different languages, with different biases, etc.

Now there was one other point. You say “yes” you are willing to receive, you want to receive, but you are still blocked against the actual receipt, the actual acknowledgment of it, the commitment to the freedom that you desire—the freedom from the pain, or the freedom from the disease. So be sure that when you ask, when you say, “I want, I desire,” be sure that you are willing to say, “I will receive. I will let it in. I will let it change me.” Even friends and family can parade around you with gifts, but if you are not willing to hold out your hand to receive it, you will feel lack. And so there must be a willingness to receive.

Now that brings us to another point, doesn’t it? In order to receive, you have to interact. You cannot be alone. And your sister-in-law happens to be one of the ones walking around you with a gift, and you say, “Oh boy, if I take the gift from her I’m going to have to have her over for tea, or I will have to become more involved with her.” And so you say, “No. I want the gift, but I don’t want what goes along with the gift.” And what goes along with the gift is not being alone. See, a joining occurs. That is why there is healing. The disease is always the manifestation of an attempt to be isolated—a self-made man, a self-made woman, independent (meaning not dependent) because, of course, dependency is a dirty word.

Indeed, when joining occurs, independence fades. And that is what does not set well with the ego; because the ego has worked hard to become self-sufficient, needing nothing. Remember that what you lose when you are willing to receive is the experience of being alone.

QUESTION: Is healing the best service that you can do?

ANSWER: Loving is the best service you can do, and healing will always be the result, whether you seem to be actively engaged in a healing practice or not.

QUESTION: I wondered if you could explain to me how people who have never heard the human voice and haven’t spoken a word, how do you communicate with them? This is people who are deaf.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. Are you asking how Raj communicates with them?

ANSWER: The same way I am communicating with Paul, with meanings, what you could call feelings. Remember, that one's mind is still present.

I'm very glad you asked this question, because it allows me more easily to broach this subject. This subject being—don't be so sure you are understanding me through your ears. Don't be so sure it is what you are hearing that constitutes the communion. I am indeed connecting with each one of you, we will say, on many levels, not just the level of the intellect. In fact, I will tell you that, for the most part, my words are distracting your ego while you and I connect. How do I connect with them? Through the heart, just as I do with anyone else.

QUESTION: In my career I've experienced a great number of barriers of different kinds. And at the moment I'm becoming interested in a spiritual approach to architecture. And yet, I'm wondering are these barriers there for a very good reason, that this is not where I belong? And if that's the case, I need some guidance on which of the possible avenues I could follow that would be most appropriate.

ANSWER: You are experiencing barriers because you are out of sync, trying to move or act too quickly or too late. It is not that you are being barred from something that you should not connect with. It is rather that you are being called upon to listen more deeply for the appropriate timing.

You tend to think you know, based on your past experience, how things will work—how this will work, or how that will work. And the moment you think you know how a thing works, you stop paying attention—all of you do. You become a little bit more unconscious. In fact, that's why all of you like to get things pegged down. Once you understand them, you don't have to pay as much attention. You can be a little bit more unconscious and relax.

I will tell you that what you are experiencing here is simply a call for being more in touch, being more consistently alert, so that you might be right with the Movement as it moves. And so that you will not anticipate it and move too soon. It's not a punishment. It's not something that occurs as a penalty. It's just a matter of being a little bit out of sync, and it's a call for, as I said, more patiently listening for the feel of the movement, and not moving until you feel that Movement, shall I say, authorizing your actions.

Is there a yes, but?

QUESTION: One of the things I have been conscious of is not trying to jump, not moving randomly from where I think I am now, and instead waiting for an answer. And one of the things I'm finding is I'm moving forward as a person, but I haven't been gaining any clarity. Well in a sense I'm not jumping on this question, but I don't feel that I'm moving, that I'm gaining any clarity yet.

ANSWER: Again, I encourage you to let go even more. And when I say let go even more, I mean become less intense about it. In effect, that is the equivalent of going more deeply into your sensitivity to appropriate action. If you listen and you hear nothing, relax even more. You could say, listen more softly as opposed to listening more intensely. Let there be more trust.

And you know what? I want all of you to realize that life is not a test, and your experiences are not tests, and you are not going to be judged. Although your fellow man seems to hold you to dates and deadlines, you can learn to value being in your peace and listening deeply. In fact, the more insistent the circumstance seems to become, calling for a deadline or timeliness, the more you can learn to recognize that as a call for perfect peace—well let's not say perfect peace, but significant peace.

In other words, you are conditioned to respond with intensity, but you can learn to respond with less and less intensity and more and more peace. And in that you will find yourself knowing what to do more quickly. So you do not need to react to intensity and impatience from those around you.

You see, as you begin to value your peace more and more, and you meditate and so on, you then begin to see the intensity of the world as a distraction, and you'll begin to defend yourself against it in the name of your peace, as an evidence of your dedication. But that undoes your peace. And you can learn, when something is more intense than usual, to take a deep breath. And as you exhale let out (consciously release—let go of) any sense of tension that might have accrued.

It only takes a moment to do that. And no one need even notice that you've done it. And you can say, "I choose to be still and listen." And if you will do it without a sense of urgency, you will find yourself very quickly having the answer. The answer may be "don't do a thing." But you will have heard it, and you will recognize it, and you will be able to act on it.

QUESTION: I hope you like my new rainbow hat. My question is about relationships with men. I'm a bit confused. It seems that men stay for awhile, or maybe that I pick men who just stay for a short time. And the level of intimacy is fairly superficial. My question is am I avoiding something or am I being true to myself?

ANSWER: I'm going to tell you that since putting on your new hat, since letting some joy in, you are going to find new men new kinds of men approaching you. You will be attractive to different men than those who were attracted to you in the past. Again, the necessity is to attend to keeping the new hat on and, in this case, letting the relationships unfold themselves. Don't go out and try to trap someone new. I encourage you to tend to your joy and your guiltlessness, and allow a relationship to come to view.

Allow, allow, allow! This is a key word for all of you. Learn to let. Let the Holy Spirit in. Allow the Father's Will to register with you. Let your fulfillment unfold itself to you. Listen, so that you may learn to be present with it as it unfolds. But realize that your fulfillment is not dependent upon your personal exercise of control. And I am speaking to all of you at this point.

Your experience of fulfillment is your Birthright, because it is the Father's Will for you. It is that simple. If you want to experience your fulfillment, pay attention, let it register with you, and then flow with it. It sounds too simple, but it is the truth. And those who have in the past embraced that simplicity, have indeed found their life blossoming.

There is a peculiar characteristic to this experience though, and that is that you cannot take credit for it. And that is one reason most people don't allow; because in order to be respectable they must be able to take credit for it, they must be able to explain how it came to be their experience. And if it wasn't at their hand then they probably didn't deserve it, it was a fluke. When the fact is that it was divinely natural.

You know, there really is a God. And it really isn't all up to you. And so I encourage all of you to contemplate. Don't work over, don't reason out, but just contemplate. Abide with the word allow. Just let it rest in your mind. You will find when you do this that embroidery will begin, and the meaning of that word will begin to disclose itself to you even more and more. If you learn to abide with things and just pay attention, those things will become magnified, because you are not so busy providing the definition and meanings yourself.

QUESTION: So if you're going to follow a guide, then I think you need to be discerning; you want to have a degree of confidence in that guide. Now when the guide says things that are a bit extreme, very unusual, then I think there is a tendency to feel that that guide isn't a good one. And sometimes if that guide misunderstands you, that may reduce their credibility factor.

ANSWER: I will interrupt to say, that one's guide will never misunderstand you, it will always be the other way around. Continue.

QUESTION: Now I've been concerned about the status of Raj's credibility. I've listened to you Raj, a great deal. And sometimes it does seem that you do say things that are a little bit off the wall for me, and then your credibility does go down considerably.

But sometimes it does seem that you've misunderstood certain questions. Like there was one today about the Beloved disciple, John. What he meant by that, was Lazarus the same person as John the Evangelist, but it seems that you thought that he was talking about a reincarnation of Lazarus as John, the much later, different person.

Personally I would like to know that you have some understanding of me, or something that you might say to me that would increase your credibility. I would say that I've been a Christian, I've believed in Christ, I've believed in Jesus for a long time. And I've actually more than believed, I've felt a relationship with Jesus. I've known him. And sometimes when I listen to Raj, I think this is Jesus. Other times I am very uncertain.

So I'm really asking Raj if he has anything to say to me that is particularly meaningful to me, that will help me in listening to him more intensely, and so that my perception of the world will change, and I will respond more appropriately.

Also, could he succinctly say what a belief is, I mean very succinctly say what exactly a belief is about. If he can remember to, perhaps at the end.

ANSWER: I will be very frank with you, what you are referring to as credibility is most often dependent upon the perspicacity with which the listener is listening.

You are indeed correct that when one hears guidance that seems off the wall, one does have to use discernment. One is never to override one's own integrity. But of necessity, when one is teaching, one must lead one beyond his or her current limits. And that necessarily will mean taking that one beyond what that one defines as reasonable. When that happens, it becomes necessary for the one who has inquired to inquire further, so as to make sense out of what seems not to be sensible.

The necessity is to continue to inquire until the clarity has been arrived at that makes what has been said reasonable. And then one is able to take action, or take a step with confidence because it does indeed make sense, whereas it had not in the beginning.

Not a single one of you would be wise to do or embrace what has been said in guidance unquestioningly. Because I promise you that the guidance that will be received will take you beyond your present sense of reasonability. But if you are not to sacrifice your integrity in the process, you must of necessity ask more questions until the unreasonable does make sense.

I will not at this point do anything to increase my credibility with you. And I will be glad to answer the last part of your question as to what a belief is. A belief is a concept, or explanation of something, without a real connection with the meaning of that thing. It is not knowing, which is the result of a direct connectedness with a thing.

QUESTION: I would like to ask a personal question about how my being is unfolding. During this last year I've taken a year off work in order to assimilate many things that I've learned over the past years. Now that I've looked at all those things I'm really not sure what's happening to me, or what's going to happen next, or how my being needs to unfold next. And if you could give me some guidance on that. And also, whether you could tell me the meaning of many precognitive dreams that I've been having within the last few years?

ANSWER: Indeed you have used this time well. There has been a great deal of integration, most of which you are not consciously aware of the benefit of yet, but nevertheless the integration has occurred. You are very likely over the next nine months, and most definitely you will within the next twelve months, begin to be very conscious of the new position you are now in as a result of the integration.

I do want to point out that your Being—when I use the word Being and I say your Being, I am meaning that essential Self that is the presence of God, right there where you are—your essential Being cannot develop or grow. And I want you to remember that, because you are not growing into a new stature. You are in a process of uncovering the stature that has been yours all along.

PAUL: Okay, this is me Paul. He wants me to share that in one of the gatherings we've done in the last month and a half, he likened you (or any of us) and The Course In Miracles to a strip tease dancer who comes out on the stage surrounded with balloons, and she has a little thing on her finger with which she can pop them. And that the Course is like the thorn or whatever it is she uses to pop it, and the Course pops our ego's balloons that cover us up, and in the process uncover the Self that never did have to improve.

ANSWER: Very literally what I encourage you to do is to take time to be still for the specific purpose of connecting with what you love. What is it you love? Don't try to figure it out. Be still; desire to feel and know experientially what it is you love, and then let it come, let it rise. And if it does not happen in the first sitting, or in the second or third week, persist gently, persist patiently. Because what you love, once it has surfaced, you will find will be that which can be brought into manifestation as an activity in your daily life or your world.

Now I am not refraining from telling you to tease you. I am refraining from telling you what it is because it is an integral part of your growth, your uncovering for you to listen, to lean into the awareness of what it is you love. And if I were to tell you, you would say, "You're right." And yet, not having listened for it yourself will weaken the process of its emergence and the strength of its manifestation. So I am very specifically guiding you relative to your fulfillment here.

Indeed this period of integration is coming to a close and there is going to be new movement, new activity in the world. And your sense that it is coming to a close is correct. I confirm that to you.

QUESTION: I've found for a long time I block; I'm feeling trapped in a job that I am not finding fulfillment in, but not finding a way to move towards a work I want to do in psycho-therapy, or to go into a spiritual community, such as Findhorn. I feel I've been at this block for quite a time trying various methods. Your guidance on this would be appreciated.

ANSWER: There are two things you need to do. The first is you need to say "Yes!" to the unfolding of the new thing. And the second thing you need to do is to stop telling yourself all the reasons you cannot do it—you know why it cannot happen. Now I encourage you to start asking within, "How can it happen?"

I will tell you that there was a point in Paul's life where his car broke down. And I told him it was time to get a new car. And he was on a workshop trip. He knew that he had no funds at home, and that the funds at hand were just what was needed to keep moving. And so when I told him it was time to get a new car, it sounded ridiculous to him—off the wall, if you will. I told him at eight o'clock in the morning when he took his car into the agency for possible repair, and he argued with me until two in the afternoon. It wasn't until then that he finally said, "Okay Raj, you say we are going to drive out of this agency with a new car this afternoon. You must see how it is going to be done. Would you enlighten me?" And so I did. And he did.

The point was that he was so convinced of how it couldn't happen, that he did not allow himself to realize the very simple way in which it could happen. And this is what you are faced with. You know why it cannot happen, and so you are constantly saying, "no." And you are doing it with your energy, you are doing it with your emotions. Now say, "Yes," and then let there be curiosity as to how it can happen.

I will tell you that the only thing blocking you is your conviction that there is no way. That is all there is; and there is no substance to a conviction, is there? I mean, it is not a brick wall. It is an idea, and you can embrace a new idea. Don't battle the block. Just be willing to embrace a new idea: "How can it happen?" And if your ego speaks up and says, "I don't know how it can happen." You say, "I wasn't talking to you. I am inviting an answer from a place of a larger perspective." And then expect an answer. And I encourage you to do this and have a certain degree of fun with it, don't turn it into work.

QUESTION: My car broke down this week, and I was sure it had something to do with my situation.

QUESTION: I'm so sensitive to energies, and I became very aware of the energies of the days of the week, which are connected with the planets through observing the Sabbath day—the Jewish Sabbath day, which is Saturday. And in one sense I got a lot of blessing out of it, and I learned a lot of things about myself. But also it seems to have got me into sort of a grip.

A lot of days now I'm wondering what particular energy of the seven days of the week should I really be tuning into, if any. Because they all have certain powerful influences in my life which I am aware of. It can be as simple as the pen that I'm using to write a letter with, or a crystal. If you understand the question, and if you can give me some guidance on this, I would appreciate it.

ANSWER: I'm not going to answer this question in a manner that everyone else will understand, but in a manner that you will. I encourage you to abide with the energy of Thursday.

QUESTION: I would like to ask Raj a question about dyslexia, because my life is highly involved with children and adults with dyslexia. I'm wondering about the increase of incidences where children are finding it incredibly difficult to learn to read and write, and the lack of awareness and understanding that they're experiencing from their parents and teachers. And sort of how I can best help; because it seems that I only use a little bit of my skill at one time, instead of incorporating all my skills all the time with them.

ANSWER: I understand your feeling, but what I want you to be aware of is the value of the skills that you are using—the meaningfulness it has for those you are working with. Don't quibble about the fact that you are not able to bring all of them into play. Be ever so grateful that you are being able to bring some of them into play.

I encourage all of you to find as many occasions for gratitude as you can, even if they seem to be a lot of little places when you would love to have a lot of big places. Gratitude is an act of love and an expression of joy. And when you express gratitude you, shall I say, lay the groundwork for having more to be grateful for.

Now one of the primary needs today is an increased awareness of the problem called dyslexia. You might say that the consciousness needs to be raised in awareness of the problem, so that it can be attended to sooner in the child's life.

And if you truly want to do that which is effective, I would encourage you to begin to channel some of your energy into raising the conscious awareness of the needs around dyslexia in your community. I know that you want to work with individuals on a one to one basis, but you also have the ability to express yourself that is very valuable in increasing the awareness of the problem, so that there is enough conscious awareness of it to elicit support for dealing with it.

Gathering In Charlotte, NC –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good Morning. I am surprised as we went around the room that no one said that they were from the Kingdom of Heaven and that it looks like Charlotte. (Laughter)

In the process of awakening—awakening to your true identity—you are going to be constantly engaged in retranslating everything from your best assessment of what it is, to what it really is. You block your perception of Reality by being sure of what a thing is and then no longer being curious about it. Thus, you close the door to greater and greater clarification as to the actual Divinity of that thing or that one.

And so, indeed, whether you live in Charlotte or New York—no matter where you live—when you go back home, start acknowledging that this is the Kingdom of Heaven and it looks like Charlotte, it looks like New York or Hawaii or wherever. Because, in this way, you will begin to be able to open up the action of curiosity again and thus get past your best definition of the moment as to what Charlotte or New York or your brother or you sister.

I am with you always but it is a pleasure to be with you and have you be conscious that I am with you. And I would like you all to practice being conscious of my presence even after Paul leaves so that your curiosity, your unlocking of the door of your communication with me and with the Holy Spirit may continue, not dependent upon Paul's presence.

QUESTION: Thank you. I am surprised to be first. I wasn't expecting that.

ANSWER: You raised your hand...

QUESTION: Yes, I did. Again, thank you very much for being here. The first thing that I want to say is that I feel very full this morning and I am very grateful for that. My question is a very personal one, a very practical one, in that I am seeking direction, what to do in my career. I feel very ready to take a break and want to know if that is appropriate and if it is not appropriate then please tell me what else I can do.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is most appropriate for you to take a break. When you do and even before you do, I want you to have a clear sense of the fact that you do not live in a material world, a conflicted and hostile environment.

Now, the Course indicates that the Holy Spirit takes every circumstance and turns it to your advantage. Why do you suppose that is? It isn't because of any great kindness or beneficence of the Holy Spirit that it picks you out to have your circumstance turned to your advantage rather than your disadvantage. It is because you are already existing in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and, therefore, there isn't really a disadvantageous experience for you to be freed from. There is a misperception that it is your birthright not to be experiencing. It is your birthright not to have your clear experience of Reality covered up by a misperception. The reason every circumstance you experience can be turned to your advantage is because every circumstance IS an advantageous circumstance and it doesn't require magic on the part of the Holy Spirit to turn something not of God into something that is of God.

This means then, that you can dare to get up each morning and approach your day with an expectation of experiencing fulfillment, with an expectation of everything in your world conspiring on your behalf relative to your fulfillment. And this is what I want you to do from this moment on, relative to your career. I want you to assume that circumstances will conspire in favor of the identification of your fulfillment. That will be a change!

What I want you to realize as we discuss this, this morning, is that your expectation otherwise, your expectation that things will not conspire on your behalf is the way you set up a defense within yourself against experiencing your fulfillment. You give a word, you have an expectation, you are committed to that expectation. And, it is not one of everything reconfiguring to identify your fulfillment of purpose. And, your expressed doubt causes you not to pay attention. And I am not singling you out here. This does apply to everyone, but it does relate.

If, indeed, there is only one thing for you to be confronted by and that is the Kingdom of Heaven, then that is what is confronting you at every moment. And it is for that reason that your perception can dissolve and you can apparently watch your world reconfigure in front of your eyes and begin to concretely manifest that which you recognize as fulfillment. I want you to start nurturing this sense of your world and of yourself—that its function is to identify the movement of God in the most practical of terms, the most relevant of terms—and, therefore, it behooves you to be curious to see IT rather than what you so definitely believe is likely to happen based upon your memory, which, of course, is just the recording of prior limited perceptions that you have embraced, energized and demonstrated for yourself.

Now, if you are going to take this break for relief and for opening, then do it in an open fashion and don't fret your way through it. Don't carry your old habit forward with you, else you will simply be on break waiting for relief from it. You're on the right track. I simply want you to embrace it fully and with joy and with expectation of clarification of the clearer and clearer experience of Reality and your fulfillment.

What is the nature of the movement of God? God moves. That movement of God is the movement of mind. It is, therefore, the movement of ideas, the coming forth of ideas and the conscious experience of those ideas. Inherent in that movement of Mind is Self-recognition.

The Bible says that for seven days God moved and on the seventh day—and this is allegorical but it is to express a timeless, eternal truth. “On the seventh day God saw everything that he had made and behold, it was very good.” Now you tell me whether that experience of it being “very good” is an impartial and unmoved experience. No, it is a recognition that embodies joy. It is meaningful. In other words, it was more than “Oh Hum, that’s all right.”

Self-recognition, the recognition of one’s Self in his or her experience reflects or embodies the movement of God and it is not a meaningless movement and it is not dull or boring. Fulfillment is a meaningful experience and that act of Self-recognition that is inseparable from the movement of God is your birthright to be experiencing. You are to be experiencing fulfillment and there is no way for you to be unmoved by it. It is going to feel like something and it is going to feel good. Don’t be afraid to feel good. And don’t be surprised when you connect with, what I am going to call, deeper levels of your Divinity that you will feel good. Do not assume that this good feeling is ego, that it needs to be squelched and brought back to a dull evenness.

Enjoy what is coming and embrace it with the expectation of every thing conspiring on your behalf for the identification of your fulfillment.

QUESTION: I’d like to know what will happen with our business? What shall we do about it? Keep it or sell it? It is not sustaining us and it had us in crisis for quite some time.

ANSWER: It is like the shell that a chick is now finding confining because it is getting too big for it. It has been time to move on and you have been dedicated to the arena that you have been operating in for some time. If you value the shell, or shall I say, if the chick values the shell too much for the security that it has provided, it will create very cramped quarters and a great deal of discomfort, because it is now time for that security to be discarded for a larger arena of life, a greater experience of fulfillment than that which could be embraced by the shell.

So, I encourage you not to feel as though you are abandoning a dear friend or that you are abandoning your stability or that you are abandoning a responsibility that you had come to identify with yourself. Because, I will tell you something: You will take your Self with you wherever you go. And the ability to express and embody intelligence will remain with you whether you are operating in this particular arena, called your business or not. It is time to move on. And it is time to not carry forward any sense of guilt for abandoning it.

I encourage both of you to rejoice in this experience of accessing freedom that goes beyond the limits that used to provide you your best sense of freedom. And I will tell you something else: It is an insidious and malicious ego suggestion that you are too old to expand and “take on” something new. You can’t take on something new because the something new comes from within you and moves out. You can’t take it on your back. And if you deny this expansion that is occurring because you are the direct expression of a current and living God in this moment. If you deny that, you will be denying the movement of God. You will be denying your experience of fulfillment.

I will tell you that this is the way everyone walks themselves into their own grave. They begin to say, “The movement of God is not something I can bear any longer, because I am not the presence of God, I am just a body with limits.” And you see, that the only limit that is being imposed is the word they are giving, because the movement is present. The expansion is present. I’m going to get very practical here, your recognition of the simple fact that the business isn’t working any more, IS the very presence of divine intelligence that says, “Don’t beat a dead horse, get a new one!” Get a new one when you are 65, and get a new one when you are 75, and get a new one when you are 85, and get a new one when you are 200.

Everyone kills themselves by stopping living. “Well, I’m over the hill.” Everyone says, “It is downhill from now on, and when I look around at everyone, indeed, it is.” But you are looking around at everyone who’s giving this same word to themselves and demonstrating their belief. Don’t do it anymore. Everyone says, “Well, it would be nice if I had a role model.” Unfortunately, you don’t. At least not a current one. You have had a handful of examples of those who did not die, but they are not current examples. But, just because you don’t have a current role model to inspire you doesn’t mean that you must necessarily, stupidly, follow the herd and do and believe what everyone else is doing and believing.

And so I encourage you to let this shell go and stretch a little and open your eyes so that you might see the larger arena of your Being that is available for you to function in, and the ongoing manifestation of fulfillment, that it is your birthright to be experiencing. And along with the specific unfolding of your next steps, you will also have begun to live your life in a new way, that does not embrace and, therefore, embody, running down, dying.

And so I encourage you to have fun with this expansion. The chick says, “How can this be expansion? It is too damn tight! I can hardly move. I can hardly breathe. I don’t even have enough room to get leverage.” And yet, you know from experience that once it cracks the shell, it has a whole world to run around and fly in. And so you know it is expansion. The movement of Being never stops, therefore, “Behold, I make all things new” is the one and only unchanging, unalterable fact that you have confronting you, so get with it. Be willing to flow with “Behold, I make all things new.” And then ask, “What is the Father’s Will for me, that involves continuing expansion and growth and, therefore, expanding experience of fulfillment?” If you are going to experience more, you must become alive to more, sensitive to it and embrace it.

Paul got up this morning and went outside and sat down and noticed the beauty of the light coming through the leaves of these trees that are hundreds of years old and noticed that all of the elements that he had enjoyed in Hawaii are present here. The birds singing, the sunshine, the green leaves, life. And then he noticed that there was something present here that is not present in Hawaii, and that is the sounds of commerce or the sounds of traffic in such volumes that it does, indeed, create, you might say, a quiet roar, that is not present, simply because there are not as many cars on Kuai.

The point is that you mask the nature of the Kingdom of Heaven with your busyness but you are in the Kingdom of Heaven, nevertheless. And if you will remember to pay attention to it, you will begin to notice it right where you are. And the more you notice it and appreciate it, the more you will be loving it. The more you love it, the more you will find it emphasized, the more you will take steps to see that what is really beautiful and what is really of value is embodied more fully and not covered up with your busyness. You can have commerce without masking the nature of the Kingdom of Heaven. And you can have the clarity of the Mind of God if you don’t mask it with your beliefs and your convictions as to what is true—including the belief that you are over the hill and that it is too late to do something new. That is one of the mental busynesses that imprison all of you and cause you not to crack the egg.

It may scare the hell out of your ego to let go. But, I promise you that what is on the other side of the shell of your ego’s beliefs is your fulfillment and the practical embodiment of the allness of God, right where you are. And so, I encourage you to dare to move forward with some confidence and some expectation and a great deal of curiosity. Because, your curiosity as to the good of God, is what gives you permission to move beyond your ego conditioning and its very definite sense of limitation. So have fun with this in spite of your ego and your conditioning.

QUESTION: As I’ve gotten more involved with spiritual growth materials for the last several years, my teaching that I do at the University has changed. And I’ve been getting into more conflicts with colleagues and other people, that say maybe I shouldn’t be teaching these things or incorporating them. And, I guess I’d like to know some next steps in terms of getting along with them, in terms of my teaching. Some have suggested I go somewhere else and do these things.

Another question: In the past I've not been good on maintenance kind of work. I'm not a cleaner. We've always had conflicts at my house, my son is neater than I am. He says I should ask Jesus if I should clean my house, (laughter) and we'll let the answer settle our years of conflict. I'm really glad he is here with me. He's been real skeptical about what I've been over the years and where I am going.

ANSWER: You are fortunate that he is neat. (Laughter)

QUESTION: I could stop there. I have another question. I have been getting some value out of channeling from Samuel. I have been attending that group and I thought you could speak to that at some point.

ANSWER: I certainly did not mean to imply that valuable information is not available through what is called trance channeling. It is important to know, however, that communion with divine guidance does not require a trance.

Now, you must understand that God is the greatest maker of waves there is, the greatest unsettler of the status quo. That is what the movement of creation is. In fact it is only those who are looking at the movement of creation through the lens of the human condition, who think that the maintaining of the status quo is what it's all about.

Now, you are an educator. Educate your peers! Do not set them somewhere off in an unimportant vague space and see them as a disturbance that you ought not to have to deal with. If you are delighted to introduce that which is new into your relationship with your students, include your peers in that classification of students. And find it worthy of your time to be that transparency with them that you don't hesitate to be with your students. There is absolutely no reason not to be the presence of clarity that stimulates growth and opening for your peers. Love them as much as you love "your students." Don't assume that because they are educators they already ought to know better than to hold to the old. You give your students the benefit of the doubt. Give your peers the benefit of the doubt as well.

Above all, do not stop being a maker of waves. Let me clarify one thing, however. The only way you can truly be of value as a maker of waves, is when you and your ego are doing nothing, and the wave making is coming from your Being, is coming from your listening and Knowing deeply—Knowing, with a capital "K." You tend, when you are confronted by your peers, to become defensive and you abandon the centered Knowing place that you gladly bring into play with your students. And, that is where you make the mistake. Don't abandon that place and don't withdraw your love, meaning your willingness to recognize that which is real in your peers. Don't say, "In this setting, I will be a teacher, and in this setting I will not."

Paul has difficulty because the time is here for him not to switch back and forth from his Knowing to his traditional thinking processes. Intellectually, he understands that he is making a choice for being the presence of wisdom, being the presence of Truth, truly being the presence of joy, for being what I have referred to as “the sidekick,” “bumbling Paul,” “the ignorant one.” And I say that with love but NOT with much tolerance.

And it is important for all of you to know that that which is divine is not tolerant of the ignorance that is inseparable from the ego and its insistence upon a partial point of view that it insists is total. But it is that unwillingness to join with you or with Paul at the level of your ignorance, that provides the power, the motivation to expand. It inspires expansion. And you must be this same kind of teacher, that one who inspires expansion with your peers. Your ego says, “They are teachers, I shouldn’t have to teach teachers.” Which means you expect that you should have some time off from being that which is inspiring and reserve that just for certain groups of people, called your students or certain parts of that group called, interested students.

It is this dividing off of the world that you must stop and it is the dividing of yourself, into being on target and off target with an equal right to both, that must come to a stop. Let your inspiration flow for your peers. And if you have to write a paper, an exposition of your ideas in language that they can comprehend, do it. Do what works. And, again, do not assume that it is your duty and your task, a desirable thing for you to go to these lengths with your students, but not with other groups of people. Be willing in all cases to be the presence of wisdom and Truth that inspires the accessing of greater freedom for everyone. It is you who will divide your world up into those who will listen and those who won’t. And it is you who will govern yourself according to the definition you have evolved.

But, the fact is that if there is anyone on the face of this planet who is drawing a breath, there is a Mind there that is not enjoying its limitation, no matter how hard it fights for it. And so, you are always confronted with one who is truly, genuinely interested in not being imprisoned. You always have a willing listener. But you must be willing to be present to that one on his terms. And what I mean by that is, in the language of his present perception.

Do you think that in these gatherings, there will only be those who want to hear what I have to say? Do you think that there will not be those who will want to challenge or has a bone to pick with Jesus? One who might seem from the outset to be antagonistic? But, you see, I will be there for that one. I will be there with that one, undefended, and thus, demonstrate to that one that his defendedness—that is coming out as a challenge—is unnecessary. And that he or she can dare to be as undefended as I am and, thereby, find release from the imprisonment of that inner conflict.

Be present with your fellow man. Every defense, as you are becoming familiar, is a request for love. It’s the truth about you. And it is the truth about everyone else. And either you, with your ego, can bounce off of their ego, joining with them at the level of egohood and strengthening it—which is called the human condition—or you can dare to be the presence of love. Be with that one, listening deeply within yourself for how to be the love that triggers reconfiguration, makes it safe and comfortable for that other one to abandon his defense and thus, be an agent for change. Not because you want to be a changer, but because you want to be the presence of Mind that is You in your right Mind, who is not expressing insanity and, thereby, does not support ongoing insanity in those around you.

Now, the ego can take some satisfaction that you, in the name of righteousness and truth are standing out in a crowd and in that sense, being important. The more connected with Truth you are, the more you will fit in, the less you will be experienced by others as being separate and apart. And, because there is that “withness,” that absence of defensiveness, you will inspire in them their willingness to dare to be defenseless also.

Now, you are not unfamiliar with what I have said. It is clear to you that this is the truth relative to your students. I am saying, embrace your peers likewise. And don’t be afraid to be the specific expression of clarity that, shall I say, meets those criteria. Because, if you are able to intelligently express what you are Knowing, they will be less afraid of it. And their ability to be curious will be awakened and you will have companion explorers.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj for being here. I have a very specific health question. In 1984, I received a prosthetic heart valve, aortic valve. Recently, my doctor has told me that around the valve it is leaking and it needs to be replaced. I have recognized this physical condition to be a gift, calling me to open my heart and I have realized that to the degree to which I am able to do that, to open my heart to relatedness and to love in this world, the physical opening, the second time, will not be necessary. I know this at a deep level of my Being. There are times, however, when this knowing is not constant and I fall into fear. Raj, I need some help with this. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are trying to know the Truth. I mean by that, that you are trying to know what you think the Truth is, so as, to avoid what you think is not the Truth. As long as you have Truth and a presence that is not truth, you are still functioning from within the ego’s frame of reference. Because, the fact is, that when you listen without preconceiving what Truth is, you will find the Truth revealed to you. And because it has been revealed, you will Know it. And that Truth will not ever stand against something else that is not the Truth, because it simply is, the fact. It simply is that which expresses the Father’s Will. There is no other will than the Father’s Will for the Father’s Will to be exercised against.

Now, indeed, the attention that you had been having to give to your heart, both physically and in the sense of becoming more defenseless and more loving, is representative of your growth. But, let us be careful not to become so spiritual that we neglect a simple physical need. I am going to tell you, that it is within the divine order of things for the Father's purpose and not for any less infinite purpose that you might have, for this procedure to be done, without fear, in much the same way that you would clip your fingernails or get rid of a hangnail.

I am going to ask you something. I know what the human belief is, but where does the surgeon get the intelligence to perform his work. And how could you actually say that this particular activity is un-God-like or less than the ultimate? It would have to be a word of your giving that does not arise out of listening and Knowing—Knowing that which is revealed to you in spite of your beliefs. Now, what I am saying specifically for you, is not something that I could say specifically for everyone under every circumstance. And so, for those of you in the room, and those who might be listening to the audio tape, this particular answer does not apply across the board in every instance.

Be willing to have this taken care of with a surgeon. That is the simplicity of it. And, it does embody and express the will of the Father which identifies the fulfillment of purpose for you. And, I'll be perfectly blunt with you, death does not constitute fulfillment of purpose for anyone at any time. And therefore, it cannot be said that God's purpose for you might require your leaving here. And that this might just be the way it happens.

QUESTION: I feel like I am being moved from where I live. And I think I'm going to move to Taluride, Colorado, and I am sort of comfortable with this and excited about it. And I would like some reassurance that this is a good move.

My question, however, relates to the life style I feel could be happening. I don't know what direction to take. Should I continue with the financial arrangement I have with my parents or should I move toward becoming financially independent and finding a job? The issue may not be money, per se, but taking complete responsibility for my life and how do I do that? Thank you.

ANSWER: This is an excellent question. "Take complete responsibility for your life?" Do you have that option available to you? (Laughter) But there is, somewhere in there, a kernel of truth. Rather than looking at it as taking full responsibility for yourself, I would encourage you to become familiar with the word "sovereignty." Which means not being dependent upon someone else. And, indeed, I would encourage you to embrace whatever manifests, not being dependent upon someone else. And I am making a fine distinction here between, not being dependent and being independent. To be independent is most often construed to mean, being separate and apart, with no particular line of connection. Whereas, to not be dependent upon another, leaves lines of communication open and leaves it possible for sharing to occur—involvement.

In the Western world, independence has been harmful, because everyone says, "But mother, I'd rather do it myself" or "But father, I'd rather do it myself." In fact, that is the whole ego trip, isn't it? Father with a capital "F," "But Father I'd rather do it myself.” And the human condition is what one ends up with, when one severs the ties, so to speak, with the Father. So, what you want is to not be independent. What you want is to be sovereign. To be able to experience your Wholeness and that which identifies It. But not that which separates you from everything else, because once you are separated, you cannot feel whole.

Indeed, by the end of the year, you are likely to find yourself functioning in a manner that expresses less dependence, and that will involve a move. But, what I want you to give your focus to, is not kicking away from anything, not gaining your independence, but rather connecting with the movement of your Being; which will elicit and evoke, what I am going to call, demonstrations of your sovereignty—your ability to be without having to get permission to be. I encourage you to look forward to the rest of this year with a sense that there is emerging in your life, a clearer manifestation of your sovereignty, of your Wholeness, and a sense of being in tune with everything. It is a period of time in which reconfiguration and transformation will occur. But don't try to become responsible for it. Be willing to say, “Father, Thy will be done. I think I know what my fulfillment involves but I'm not about to get hung up on it. What does it really involve?”

And, as I indicated earlier, have the attitude that your world will conspire on your behalf for the purpose of identifying your fulfillment of purpose. It will be six or seven months of wonderful discoveries. I am not going to say that it will stop at the end of the year, but it will be enough for you to be willing to embrace what is coming during the next seven months.

I want you also to understand that the movement of God is a peaceful movement and the only thing that ever makes it seem strenuous is when there is a great intent to do something yourself or to be responsible yourself for what is happening. And thus, allow movement to occur that is not inspired by God but rather by your best sense of what is good for you. And, when you are at odds with the unfolding of your fulfillment, the unfolding of your fulfillment becomes strenuous. Remember, the movement of God is not strenuous, and difficulty and hardship is not a necessary part of growth. I say that so that you might include in your curiosity a desire to see this happen gracefully.

(My question) QUESTION: Hi. Good morning. I was going to ask you about some books you mentioned in some other tapes, about “Urantia” and, of course, “A Course In Miracles” and some...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you just for a moment, just to make a point of clarification here. I would not generally encourage everyone to read the Urantia book. The Urantia book is a bridge for Theosophists—out of Theosophy. (Laughter) An important work but not one that serves to trigger growth for everyone. Please continue...

QUESTION: I did enjoy the part about your life (Jesus) though. But anyway, I was questioning about five little volumes of books called “Life and Teachings of the Masters of the Far East.” In them, you were mentioned quite often, in that they met and spoke with you (Jesus). And I’m wondering how...

ANSWER: That is true. It is still a valuable set of books, but I must remind you that no matter what book you are reading, its value lies in the degree to which it confirms for you, that it is a valuable thing not to be so sure that you understand what everything means. It is valuable, insofar, as it confirms to you a natural integrity of your Being that you can dare to trust. It is valuable, insofar, as it confirms to you that you have the inherent capacity to recognize Truth and encourages you to depend upon it—meaning, your inherent capacity to recognize Truth.

QUESTION: I have one more little part of this. Also, in some of your tapes you mentioned that there was no one on earth at the moment who was Awake, Totally Awake.

ANSWER: No, that is not correct. There are two at the present time, both of whom are not making their presence publicly known. One is Miatreya as introduced by Benjamin Creme, and the other, as I have said before, is apparently an itinerant traveler in the Himalayas. That is all there is at the present time.

QUESTION: How open can I be?

ANSWER: Indeed, no limit is placed upon you.

QUESTION: Okay. I’ve been finding that all my life I’ve been open and friendly. I was raised as a Christian Scientist by my mother under the teachings that you gave to Mary Baker Eddy...

ANSWER: Do not blame me for interpretations. (Laughter)

QUESTION: In your book, “Science and Health,” we are taught as students of Christian Science, that “The man that I see is the man that I am.” I have attempted to express this in all of my understandings of the people around me. And I think, in my immaturity, what I have done is that I have come across a stumbling block where in the Bible it says, “do not cast your pearls before swine,” and then your teaching to the disciples to “Love your neighbor as yourself,” and then “love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul and mind.” How do I know the swine from the neighbor? And what do I do with the swine?

ANSWER: Part of your difficulty—which is not because you are truly confused—comes from the fact that in some ways you practice the misquote that you just made. The statement does not say, “Love your fellow man and then love God.” It says “Love the Lord your God with all of your heart, mind and soul, AND your neighbor as yourself.” Now, that order is very important. And, indeed, when you take the time to become still and to go within and pray to the Father, meaning abide with the Father, in secret, in the silence of your Being, where there is no ego chatter going on. When you go within, a most wonderful thing happens, you begin to experience the presence of God. But, you also find that you are not separate from that experience. In fact, it becomes difficult to know what of the experience is God, and what of it is you. Because the sense of there being an experiencer of the presence of God, begins to disappear and yet your experience of identity is unaltered. As you have this experience of God in the silence of your Being and you begin to realize that you are directly connected with your Self, which is inseparable from the Father, a whole new Self awareness begins to emerge.

Now, this does not happen overnight or in the course of one meditation or one period of being silent. But, as you do this regularly and that centered place within you where there is no chatter of the mind is being experienced, you have the opportunity to become more and more familiar with the nature of your Being. First of all, the peace that you are experiencing is not just an alternate to tension. The peace you are experiencing is itself the very nature of your Being and constitutes a direct experience of your Being. It's more than just absence of tension. Now, as you begin to be open and let the experience disclose to you the nature of You, realization occurs. And, part and parcel of the realization is, my God, this is true of everybody, because I know I am not special. And, you see, when that happens, your behavior toward your fellow man will change.

The second part of the commandment is spontaneous when the first part is practiced. You cannot help but love your fellow man as yourself when you have the clearer experience of yourself, by virtue of having set aside your conditioned, reactive, surface level ego thinking and moved into the silence of your Being.

Now, unfortunately, the statement that you are seeing who you are, is very often taken as an indictment against you and everyone indulges in this. Everyone looks at the half-empty glass instead of the half-full glass. To recognize that you are seeing in your fellow man only as much of your own Divinity as you are able to see about yourself, has one value and one value only. And that is, that you will not convict your fellow man based on your perception of him and you will attend to what needs to be attended to. Which is, filling the glass up a little bit fuller.

The purpose is not to indict yourself, convict yourself, and then pay the penalty, in the name of righteousness and truth. There is no need for martyrs. You learned that you were the child of God, that you were the infinite manifestation of infinite Mind. But, one of the things that does not generally get brought into the foreground, is the statement that "All is Mind, from the rolling of worlds in the most subtle ether, to a potato patch." And, generally speaking, the same error is made in the interpretation of Christian Science that is beginning to be made relative to "A Course In Miracles". And that is an unwillingness to acknowledge that “All is Mind or God, from the rolling of worlds in the most subtle ether, to a potato patch.” And the world is being treated as a pure illusion, that has no element of Truth to it, whatsoever. But there cannot be a pure illusion. There can only be a distorted perception of that which is Real. I will say, a distorted perception of a potato patch that says, “it’s nothing but clods of dirt and a vegetable that is needed for sustenance for an obviously not eternal entity.”

Now, how are you going to find the Christ in the swine that’s standing in front of you? How are you going to find the Christ in the swine that’s looking at the person in front of you?

QUESTION: How do you know he’s a swine?

ANSWER: Indeed, you may count on one thing, until you are totally Awake, you are experiencing everything in a limited way; yourself, your world, your fellow man. Now, that fact has been expressed by me as a form of insanity. And, indeed, you can take that which must be treated as a truth, as an indictment against you. But if you have written two plus two equals five and I do not come to you and say, “Five is not the correct answer,” you will not look further, you will not recheck your calculation. And so, you must know that five is not the right answer. Why? Because there must be a right answer. And once you know that five is not it, your curiosity will be brought into play again and the door will open for clarification.

And so, we may use whatever negative words you can imagine to describe yourself or the one who is standing in front of you. Because, indeed, you cannot look at your fellow man and see the undistorted Christ there, if you are not experiencing the undistorted Christ of yourself. But that simply means, become curious to experience the Christ that you Are.

Every single one of you has simply been talked into a false sense of identity, as something less than my equal, something less than my brother, something that is not worthy to eat even the crumbs that fall from God’s table. This is crap. It is expressive of the maliciousness of the ego, or what Mary Baker Eddy referred to as “malicious animal magnetism”—a magnetic or hypnotic coercion of the mind to believe that which is not true, as though it were true, which establishes a state of insanity and calls it normal.

Now, here is the answer, and I said it earlier. There is only one thing that confronts you, that is the presence of God, called the Kingdom of Heaven, or the Movement of Creation. Now, it doesn’t really matter why it is you are looking at it and saying, “It’s just Charlotte” or “It’s just me, a human being.” This isn’t just Charlotte. But, you know what, somebody needs to come along and say to you, “Is this Heaven?”—as in the movie “Field of Dreams.” So that there is something in you that triggers a willingness to say, “Maybe it isn’t just Charlotte. Maybe I’m not just a mortal. Maybe I’m not just a sinner. Maybe I’m not just an organism that sprang out of chaos by chance.” It doesn’t matter how it is you arrived at a false definition. This is very important. It does not matter how it is that you have arrived at a false definition of everything. What matters is the awareness that it is a false definition of something Real. Because, as long as that fact is relatively clear in your mind, you cannot help but experience curiosity to see what it really is and to let out the “stops,” so to speak.

What is it that keeps you finite? What is it that keeps you limited? It is your unwillingness to conceive of the possibility that Reality is what is confronting you. That there is more confronting you than you are embracing. That, indeed, at this very moment you may very well be as immortal and divine as I am, without one single bit of difference. That, indeed, the Totality of what You Are may be absolutely present at this instant, even if you are so preoccupied with the human condition that you aren't noticing it. And that, indeed, you don't have some ladder to climb, to achieve it. You simply have to become curious enough to open up to it. That's the way you get to the Christ of You, and, thereby, to the Christ of your fellow man that, indeed, evidences itself as healing.

Now, when “Science and Health” was being dictated, if you will, and, indeed, Mrs. Eddy spoke of herself as a scribe under orders—although it has not been interpreted in the way I am speaking of it at the moment. When it was being dictated, it necessarily had to be given in the third person and so there is a statement, “Jesus beheld in science,” meaning the undistorted perception of Reality—Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, where sinning mortal man appeared. To whom? To mortals—to those looking through the lens of the ego. And this correct view of man, healed the sick.

Indeed, Waking up is a matter of letting go of the false conditioning that constitutes a belief system that distorts your perception of the only thing there is to experience, which is the omnipresence of God being all there is of you and everything else.

Now, for those who may end up listening to the tapes of this particular workshop, you may find a repetition, but it is essential. You must understand that you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it. You are at that point, and you must understand yourself therefrom.

Now, this is a modification of a statement from Science and Health. It states for today more clearly the real meaning. The absolutely necessary element of your awakening comes out of your willingness to conceive the possibility that you are not struggling your way up some ladder. That you are not in a process of moving lifetime after lifetime through a process of refining your soul, so that you might become worthy of remembering who you Are or become worthy of God by his Grace, blessing you. You must understand that what you are experiencing now is Reality, although seen through a glass, darkly. And, you are already and only, the direct expression of the Father and, therefore, the Christ, whether you are experiencing it through a mind, darkly. And, that you are, indeed, like a person sleeping on a bed, having a dream, seeming to suffer the constraints of an imagination of the dream, and needing only to somehow wrench yourself out of the dream, so that you might find you were never in it. And what was going on never happened, because the Real You was asleep on the bed, in a room, in a house, in a city on this planet, etc.

As I've said before, all of you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinched up saying, "I cannot see the perfection." And then the ego would have you improve the imperfect, instead of open your eyes and acknowledge what is already the fact—your Divinity and Reality are already the fact. And, the element that helps get you out of the dream is Love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, in each and every one, yourself included. That is how you get past the one that your present perception defines as a swine standing in front of you.

I have a little more to say but we are going to break at this point.

ANSWER: Now, there are just a couple of things I wish to say in addition to what I have already said. I said that the answer was Love. What I want all of you to understand is that being the presence of Love does not require you to abandon being intelligent. That may sound like an obvious statement, but in practice, many of you in your attempt to be unconditionally loving, abandon intelligence and remain in a situation where you are being abused, in the name of love, in the name of being there for another for purposes of his healing.

I think that you all ought to be just as wise as a nurse who, if he or she is confronted with a patient who is wild, does not say, "that's all right sweetheart. I don't mind that you just gave me a bloody nose or cracked a rib." No. The patient is restrained with straps, so that in the presence of the restraint, reason might be able to be reintroduced.

Now, simply be aware that in your process of awakening, in your process of spiritual growth, you will not at any point be required to sacrifice your intelligence. And until your current common sense is replaced with a new level of common sense, which still expresses ultimate intelligence, do not let go of your current level of common sense.

Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real and honor it, and no longer honor that which isn't real. Now, as I said, until you are awake, you are utilizing a limited sense of yourself and a limited sense of whoever is confronting you. And so, in order to move through the current illusory perceptions, one must relate to one's fellow man or woman with a constant willingness to listen more deeply than the level of appearances or the level of conditioned thinking. Because, indeed, sometimes that swineish element that needs to be seen through, will be presented by your fellow man and at other times it will be presented as you, and you will need the guidance to get beyond both.

I have said before, that relationships are the crucible of awakening. They are that in which what is non-essential is separated from that which is. And the only thing that is nonessential is that which is imaginary—not real. But, as you go through this process of relating to another and being stretched, if you will, by the relationship—listen and at the same time be unwilling to sacrifice intelligence. Then, you will not end up being used or abused and you will not involuntarily join with another at the level of illusion and substantiate it. This is very important. Waking up does not put you at the mercy of illusion. It is down to earth. It is practical. It will relate to where you are, because where you are is the Kingdom of Heaven. And, to watch your material world and universe—as you currently define it—be translated into the spiritual original that it is and always has been, will occur and can occur only when you are paying attention where Reality is going on.

So your spiritual path will be relevant to everything you are already aware of. Your past experience of being aware of where you are, seems to have gotten you stuck in where you are, but only because you didn't realize there was something else to be seen beside your current definition of where you are.

Start looking for God right here and right in your fellow man and right in you. And be curious. And, the fact is you will begin to say “no” where “no” needs to be said. And you will begin to say “yes” where “yes” needs to be said. And, the “no's” and the “yes's” will not always come in the places that your former mindset thought they ought to be. But in order not to become confused as those shifts occur, you need to listen and to trust, as I said earlier, that everything will conspire to uncover to you your Divinity. Everything will conspire to reveal your fulfillment of purpose according to God's measure of fulfillment of purpose.

QUESTION: I guess it's time to do it. I started off this morning with a question and since I've been in here I have written more on my sheet here, so I don't know what form this is going to take. I have four questions combined, I think. I have some major concerns right now and one is career. Another is whether to have children or not, and my marriage and being comfortable with myself or feeling comfortable being a black female.

Is this the right time for me to have children? I've had moments when I've felt that I should and it's never been lasting enough for me to really pursue it. And also, I have been a teacher for 17 years and for ten years I've not wanted to teach and I've not had enough energy in that direction as far as to move in another direction.

The other concern in being a black female, is for a while now, I guess about ten years, I've been involved in a lot of activity which always put me in a minority. I'm always the only one. And, I feel like I've been able to deal with it in a lot of ways, but I feel like I've been coping, really, more than anything, because there is always that underlying feeling that I am not really accepted and I think that comes from just totally not accepting myself.

ANSWER: Do you have an option to being a black female? (Laughter)

QUESTION: No. Please don't embarrass me. (More laughter)

ANSWER: I fully understand the depth of the meaning behind your comment about being a black female. But that is not the problem. The problem is viewing being anything from the ego's vantage point. I would wager to say, that there is not a single white person in this room who is comfortable with himself or herself. It is important to know that, so that your uneasiness with yourself, black or white, does not become what you recognize to be the problem itself.

Now, I can give you a bigger problem that may cause you to be very grateful that you're only dealing with the one you've talked about. How about being a black female Christ, really, today? What about being a white female or male Christ today; where you come out of the closet, where you do not covertly embrace your divinity. The world needs you as a black female who loves herself. You do have a meaningful place relative to everyone's becoming comfortable and at peace with everyone else. Where there is not fear and distrust from man to man and woman to woman, woman to man, man to woman, and race to race and nation to nation; just because there is variety.

Now none of you will come to a point of feeling comfortable with yourself as an ego. The ego cannot be comfortable. It must be uncomfortable in order to justify its existence. If it does not have something to overcome, there is no reason for its existence and everyone would spontaneously slip back into the conscious experience of his or her Divinity and the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven. So, you truly are not going to be able to find your peace as a black female or a white female. You are only going to find your peace when you dare to become humble, when you dare to become genuinely you. And, you aren't a color and you aren't a body and you are not a role. You are the presence of Mind, which is one of the first things you discover when you do take time to go within, into the silence, into your center.

The shift of consciousness called awakening, is the shift from identification with the body, to identification with and as consciousness—Mind. So, it doesn't matter the color, the size, the shape, the height of a body. You create an artificial problem for yourself by identifying your uneasiness with yourself, with your color. And so, instead of becoming comfortable with your color, let's just become comfortable.

All of you know from experience—and yet you neglect to look squarely at it—that your discomfort comes from a fundamental belief that you must please others. And then you become the puppet of their belief systems. It doesn't matter whether you're black and you think that white people are overbearing and dominating. Black people have mothers and fathers who fill that same role, as do white people.

And, at the bottom line, one either becomes miserable in that state of attempting to equal another's expectations of you, or you finally arrive at a point of giving up and unfortunately that giving up is usually defined as failure; when what it really is, is that you have become sick and tired of being someone or something other than simply you. And if you are able to survive the so called failure and abide in that place of not measuring up to anyone's expectations and not giving a damn about it, you begin to find that a huge weight has slipped away from you. And that in the peace, in the absence of guilt for not living up to another's expectation, you begin to be filled with the originality of You, and I will say it this way, the originality of the Father that is embodied and expressed and identifiable as you. And then, the gift of you begins to be made and the presence of the infinity of God is no longer obscured from your brothers, from the world. But it is a hard thing sometimes to move through that apparent point of failure. And if one resents not being able to live up to impossible expectation, one can seem not to get beyond it into his or her freedom, that it is his or her birthright to be experiencing.

Now, there will never be a right time to have a child. There never was for anyone who ever had one. You are not likely to give yourself permission within the next year, to allow a child to come into your experience. But God is on your side, on the side of your fulfillment and you are very likely to find that in spite of your unwillingness, you will conceive.

The movement of God is uncontrollable. You cannot be in charge of it. The great fear that all of you have is that if you let go of control, chaos will follow. But, the fact is that if you truly let go, if you are truly willing and you yield, order beyond your present sense of order will emerge and fulfillment beyond your present sense of fulfillment will come forth. That is not to say that having children is not demanding at times.

But I will tell you one thing: All of you who allow yourselves to let God work in your life and appear as the coming forth of a family, have found that your awareness of your capacity to love has been extended many times beyond what you thought your capacity was. And, if you had your choice and had control, you never would have found out what the extent and the depth and the breadth of your capacity to love was. And, that would have been a loss. I'm not meaning that you would be stubborn and that's why you would not conceive in the next year. But, you attempt to be very intelligent about it, too intelligent about it.

Every idea includes within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment. And so if you are willing to let an idea come forth, an idea in the Mind of God and you will not take on personal responsibility for it, you will find that everything will be present for the identity of its fulfillment. And it will be a joy for you. I'm not going to tell you to try and do something you cannot do. And it is not wrong for you to be overly intelligent over the next year. If anything, your being overly intelligent and conceiving anyway, will provide you with a tangible proof of the fact that there is an order beyond the order you can create. And when you experience the joy of this little one in your experience, you will be less inclined to enforce your sense of order upon your life and you will be more able with feeling, to say, “Thy will be done.”

You are in some ways too afraid of that which you are not in charge of ahead of time. And so you do not give permission for the full experience of the flow of your Being and the fulfillment that it would bring. I would encourage you to believe that there is a God and then, from time to time, dare to risk the chance that there is a God by letting something happen that is out of your control. Be curious for that which goes beyond your sense of order yet still manifests order. This will allow you to experience some joy with growth.

I’m going to mention this a number of times this weekend, I know already. All of you need to let some fun in, relative to your life and relative to your spiritual growth. Your healing and transformation is not something you are personally responsible for, by virtue of your clear correct thinking. I will tell you something: The purpose of being able to think clearly and correctly, whether it is metaphysically or spiritually, is to get you to the point where you are so convinced of the fact that God is All, that you can dare to let go of the reins. The correct use of your thinking is to use it together with reason, to arrive at a point where you can dare to explore the possibility that the order in your life isn’t dependent upon your clear thinking. This is another way of saying that the only right use of will is to choose not to use it and yield instead.

You see, whatever distortion of perception of the Kingdom of Heaven you are currently experiencing, is the result of an exercise of will, self-assertion—self-assertion that occurs without ever checking in with Reality to see what is appropriate. Therefore, the step back into the undistorted perception of Reality, must come as your very own decision to abandon the exercise of will. A very important point, almost too simple, but true, nevertheless. This is why you have help, help from those who are already Awake. Brothers and sisters who are already Awake, who can say to you, “yes, you can let go of a little bit more of your ego. It will be all right. You will be safe. I will be here with you and after you have done it and are scared to death, I will still be with you and you will know that everything is all right, that you are still safe.”

I have said before, that the Holy Spirit—which all of you tend to think of as part of the Trinity that will be forever eternal—is your divinity held in trust, while you dally with the ego, while you explore ego-ness, while you are exploring a limited frame of reference. The totality of what you are cannot stop being the totality of what you are. So, that of your Self that you are not paying attention to, remains total and intact—an unseparated part of you—which is your Divine infinite Knowing, as well as your inseparable conscious experience of God’s perspective. And so, it forever abides with you and because in spite of your belief, you are Whole, that Wholeness of you insinuates Itself and pressures Itself into the limits of your finite frame of reference, penetrating it at times, throwing your ego for a loop and disclosing to you a clearer experience of what you Divinely Are. When you are not actively resisting It, but reach out to the Holy Spirit, you are withdrawing your investment of energy in your temporary finite ego sense of things—it weakens. And, the penetration of your Self in its Wholeness occurs, moving across the boundary of your limited belief structures and registering with you in your tiny sense of yourself. You can either resist the Holy Spirit and experience its penetration, you might say by “force,” or you can invite the experience of it by reaching out to it.

Now, if you do that and you experience an influx of enlightenment or clarification, you might be inclined to say, “Well, if you answered me then, if you connected with me then, why didn’t you do it sooner?” It is because you didn’t reach out. It is because you were maintaining, energizing, substantiating your separated sense of yourself and not inquiring, not being curious.

Now, the Trinity is not an eternal fact. It is the way of expressing a wholeness to those who are engaged in a limited perception of themselves. The Father and you are One and that One is God. But, if you are holding yourself apart from God, if you are insisting upon being a body, an organism, a result of chance, in a physical world that has nothing to do with a God, then the oneness of you and God seems to be unavailable to you. So, then how can we describe what is left? Well, we must describe it as God and the Christ, and the Holy Spirit. Does that make sense? Why would I describe an apparent state of ignorance called “a separated sense of being or of being man” the Christ?

Well, you must understand that when you are no longer claiming a mind separate from God and a will separate from the Fathers, we will no longer talk about the Christ and we will no longer talk about the Holy Spirit because we will all be engaged in the conscious experience of the Movement of Creation, the Movement of Mind, the Movement of the infinite Mind that is God. So, if that Oneness or Wholeness is altered by the practice of a sense of separation, it immediately becomes translatable into three elements—the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. But, that division into a Trinity only seems to be experiencable because someone is claiming a mind, a being separate from the Father. Why is this? Because your Wholeness, the Wholeness of God, cannot be altered and the deep inner Knowing of this fact must be accounted for, even though it seems to be inconsistent with your best ignorant state of mind. And so, there is the truth about God’s Self-expression called, “man.” And there is the truth about what that man is, as the expression of God, called “His Wholeness,” which includes not only his limited ego sense of himself but the infinite One that he or she is, as well, which we call the Holy Spirit held in trust while one experiences the fun-house or mad-house of limited perception.

Now, just as all of you can go to an amusement park and go through a house of horrors without penalty, without judgment upon you, likewise, you can engage in a partial sense of the infinite Movement of God without becoming a sinner, without engaging in an action that God would judge. From God's point of view, not one of you is engaged in anything judgeable. It is only when you are viewing the presence of God through a limited perception of things—an ego vantage point—that you can feel guilty for what you see. And, therefore, the judgment that all of you are awakening from, is the judgment of your own and other's egos—not the judgment of the Father.

So, the answer is, "Love yourself." The answer is to learn to choose for your peace and then pay attention to your experience of yourself while you are experiencing the peace—whether you are a black person at peace, whether you are a white person at peace, whether you are a man at peace, whether you are a woman at peace. Because all of these connotations have some derogatory definitions. Women are abused. Men are arrogant, abusive. Blacks and women are second class citizens. Whites and males are superior. But white males and even black males are imprisoned in their finite sense of superiority, just as women and blacks generally are imprisoned in the sense of being second class citizens, and it is all bullshit. And everyone needs to become free, and it will happen when you dare to give up and take off the mask of trying to fit someone else's expectations. And then being at peace with yourself—act out from yourself. And the originality of God will begin to emerge in you and supply to you each, a joy that will be added to the peace you are experiencing and will be part of what you will extend into your world and the world will change and more closely identifying what it really is.

I realize I have talked at some length here, but it is important for you to understand this point, so that you do not labor under a false sense of what the problem is. It isn't being black or female or white or male or gay or straight or tall or short, thin or fat. Because, I tell you, if you could all see each other at this moment with nothing blocking your view, you would see incredible beauty without there even being any change in height or weight or color or anything else.

Truly begin to be curious to see and be the Christ. And know that this does not mean measuring up to whatever your concept of me has been, but that it is something far simpler and far more effortless. It takes a great deal of effort to maintain a mask that you don't truly feel any affinity with. Each one of you already is effortlessly perfect. And if all of you could let out a sigh of relief down to the tips of your toes, and if everyone of you gave up any sense of having to live up to anything, you would begin to find the light of you filling you and spilling over into your world.

As I said last weekend, the Movement of God, the Movement of Creation “makes waves” for that which was already created. Being yourself is going to constitute an extension of meaning into the world which, because it arises out of the Father, will not be in conflict with anything. But, which will keep things on the move, if you will. You are here to make a difference. You are not here to hide in a closet. You are here to make the specific gift of originality that the Father is expressing of Himself and which looks like you and looks like me.

It is time to stop laboring under the idea that you are here to not make waves for anyone else. And experience the joy of being the movement that is meaningful in the world which doesn't create conflict.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'd like to ask one more question if that's okay. Is there a direction I need to be looking in career-wise? I've had several things on my mind as far as which direction to go in but there doesn't seem to be enough energy behind it to continue moving in that direction. I guess I want to know if it's premature or maybe I'm just not appreciating enough where I am and that's where I really need to stay, or...

ANSWER: All of the above. The only appropriate next step is to be curious and not try to figure out the answer. Abide in an attitude of interest and curiosity. And, don't be afraid to ask, specifically, “Do I need this answer now?” And don't be afraid to listen to the answer if it is “No.” Above all, I encourage you not to take a step until you feel the energy for it. Do not take a step because your best judgment says “Yes.” Don't take a step until you feel it from a much deeper place. You can dare to trust your essential Being and although the ego would scare you into relying upon your best intellectual reasoning, I assure you that your Being is unerringly accurate regarding the steps to take and that will emerge in your awareness a feeling. You will feel the rightness of it and you will feel the motivation for it. And, I am going to cautiously use the word, “passion” for it. Then take the step.

Right now what is appropriate for you is to continue listening and do not be fooled into thinking that you must arrive at an intellectual conclusion quickly. God does not present your opportunities to you like a last chance salesman.

QUESTION: Thank you. Hello Paul, and Raj. I feel like my question, as I was listening to the previous answer, the question I have been sort of toying with has been growing bigger or clearer or whatever. I have a sense of that my step of what I need to learn right now is something everybody calls “manifesting” which has to do with your thoughts creating your reality and becoming consciously responsible for your thoughts and for your reality. I get a lot of conflict because it seems very different to me from what you just talked about. It seems like me trying to take control, visualize something and make it happen as opposed to flowing with something. And I guess I'm really unclear, these techniques or whatever, I'm really unclear as to what to do. Thank you.

ANSWER: This is a wonderful question. Wonderful because the understanding of the answer is so important. Everyone has the cart before the horse. They think in order to know, instead of Knowing in order to know what to think. Everyone thinks in order to come to conclusions, instead of listening for the conclusion. And then using thinking to give expression to what you already know. Until your thinking is reflecting Knowing, until your thinking is reflecting Truth, until your thinking is reflecting the Will of the Father; any use that the thinking is put to, will constitute what I am going to call a barrage of static, that covers up the Father's will and, therefore, covers up your experience of your fulfillment.

When it comes to manifesting, it is very easy to say, "It is the Father's Will for me to have everything. Therefore, I want a Cadillac and I want a swimming pool and I want a tennis court and I want a two and a half million dollar home, with maid, so that I can experience peace and luxury and all the good that it is the Father planned for me to have." Well, where did that come from? Where did those concepts of what is good come from? Did they come from listening, from being still within yourself and listening for the movement of God within you that identifies your fulfillment, or did it come from concepts that you have acquired from observations of others as you grew up, from beliefs and concepts that your parents handed down to you, about what it was your right to have, etc.?

If you use your thinking to get what you believe to be your birthright and you never check in with your Being to find out what your birthright actually is, then any achievement of those things that you experience, will simply create or densify your ongoing ignorance of your birthright. And it doesn't constitute a spiritual or Divine activity at all.

On the other hand, as I've indicated earlier, if you are willing to become still and go in to the silence, if you are willing not to have anything to do with your best judgments, and you desire to know of the Holy Spirit—which is really your Divinity that is held in trust while you are dallying with a limited sense of things—if you do this, that which does identify your Wholeness will arise from the depths of You. And it will truly represent the Truth about You. Because that emergence is a connectedness with the Wholeness of You. You will experience what you would call revelation. It's a revealing of the Wholeness of you that is already the fact. Then you may have to think in order to find ways to express this Knowing to another. You may have to think in order to give expression to it in terms of actions. But, your doing will embody the Truth of You, the fulfillment of You that you Knew first before you thought a single thought. Then your thinking will ultimately cause you to flow with the movement of fulfillment that you have discerned as a result of being still. And you will have that which identifies your fulfillment. In other words, you will have the manifestation. This is true manifesting. But, you see what the difference is? It is that you are listening for the movement of God in you and letting God be the movement that is manifest where you are nothing more than a facilitator of it, you could say, by virtue of not being in the way of it.

Ooh, but this is not very satisfying to the ego. What good is something you can't take credit for? How can you be sure that it is really yours and that you really have demonstrated it? You have to be able to claim ownership to the demonstration so that you can get credit for it and, thereby, somehow have respect from others. I will tell you something: If Paul were sitting here right now, speaking from his best thinking, you would not invite him back. (Laughter) And he is quite aware of what I am saying and it does not bother him. Literally, because over the past ten years he has arrived at a point where he's willing no longer to fool himself into think that his best thinking and his best judgments are really valuable. He is choosing to express intelligence by not leaning—in Biblical terms—unto his own understanding. When you are willing to forfeit being able to take credit for anything, you will be the presence of that which is most worthy of credit. You will be the presence of that which is most meaningful. And although you will not have the so-called satisfaction of being able to say, "I am responsible for it," you will also have the undeniable experience of not being in any way separate from it. And so, where you get your satisfaction from will change. After all, how great is it to be able to take credit for that which is utterly useless?

The true meaning of each of you will come forth and be experienced by you as being inseparable from you, when you yield to the Holy Spirit, when you yield to your Self, which ultimately does mean yielding to God by claiming no right to any other mind or any other perception different from the undistorted viewpoint of the Father.

QUESTION: Could I just ask for a clarification of something you said this morning?

ANSWER: You may, indeed.

QUESTION: The question had to do with fully awakened ones, that there were two people. I realized that I am confused because what are these degrees of awakening, and am I correct that you were saying over and over that we could awaken any moment we choose? I guess what I am saying is, "Are people waking up?" And, what is the difference between that and being fully awakened?

ANSWER: There are two individualities, for your clarification here, on the face of your globe who are Totally Awake. They were not born into this experience on the face of your globe but you could say simply teleported. They are here in support of and ready to substantiate by their physical presence, the process of awakening that is occurring on your globe and elsewhere. They are not the only two individualities who are totally awake. There are more of the Brotherhood of man who are awake than there are those still dreaming dreams. They are not incarnated at this time. It is those who are not incarnated at this time but who are Totally Awake who are standing in direct support of each one of you, as you begin to consciously participate in your awakening process. These have been referred to as guides or as guardian angels, etc. These Individualities are always Totally Awake. Because others, who are still not awake, even though they are not incarnated, are as blocked from you as you are from each other, in terms of what we could call telepathic communication or communion.

Those—and this is important for all of you to know—who have passed on, who are not awake are incapable of communicating with you or registering with you in any way, except under what we could call special conditions, when permission is given for a connection to occur, which is always in support of your illumination, your clarification and almost always occurs shortly after someone near to you has passed on.

There are instances where communion with that one can occur, to release you from grief and to provide you with a confirming experience of the eternality of life. If you open up to that which is beyond your present sense of things, there is no way you can become vulnerable to “spirits who are ignorant.” And anyone who has had an experience of an “ignorant spirit” has been the beneficiary of their own fabulous imagination and nothing beyond it.

The limitations of the ego vantage are, you might say, absolute for everyone “enjoying an ego frame of reference.” And, only those can register with you—as I am at this moment—by virtue of being so Totally Awake that there is nothing present in myself or any of your guides that could impinge upon and react to the ego elements that you bring into play even when you are seeking your spiritual growth.

QUESTION: First of all, I am glad to be here. I’ve walked these streets many times, listening to your tapes, and they have meant a lot to me. I’m a musician and have been on and off for about thirty years as an avocation. And I need some clarification about the role of music in my life. A lot of the songs I write, I feel, are just my ego getting out of the way and the song coming through. I’d like some direction on that.

The other part is, I have a contract on my desk for a song and I’m not sure about the terms of the contract, whether it is appropriate to do this or not right now. So, any help you could give me would be appreciated.

ANSWER: Although you may be expressing it, living it, as an avocation, in your heart, it is your vocation. And it is appropriate for you to be allowing it expression, without requiring it to be your vocation. Because, it ends up truly being a gift. It is also giving you experience of being out from your center.

This contract as it stands, is perfect. Do not make more out of it than it is. And do not become sidetracked from letting the music flow. And above all, do not begin to feel a personal sense of responsibility to make the gift on demand. When you begin to feel a sense of pressure, I encourage you to recognize it as a call for yielding more, rather than a call for more control. You will find this piece of music appearing much more rapidly than you are used to, in a much more finished form from the outset. And again, remember to have fun with it.

If however you allow a sense of personal responsibility for personal creativity to creep into the picture with a sense of deadline, the fun will disappear most rapidly.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. Welcome. Thank you for reaffirming several times today, that I am a Princess. My question is, I would like you to take an inventory for me of that which is valueless in bringing forth my awareness of Reality and what is valuable in my being aware of my Reality?

ANSWER: Well your greatest liabilities, the greatest impedances to your awakening are your thinking, and your thinking, and your thinking. Everything else follows thinking such as doubt and fear, guilt. Everyone thinks guilt is visceral but it is cerebral. No one feels guilt that is unjustifiable in their mind. If, indeed, it is unjustifiable, they laugh it off. It is the same with fear. All of you have been taught to rely heavily on your thinking and your ability to reason. But, again, as I indicated earlier, your ability to think and reason are there to help you get to a point where there is such a conviction in the Allness of God that you are able to stop thinking—and listen. Be open to, receptive to, and able to yield to the influx of revelation that will resolve your problems. And so, I could have gone on with a list of things such as doubt and fear and guilt, but they all stem from thinking, which is the absence of listening. Therefore, your greatest asset is to listen.

Now, I indicated earlier not to abandon your common sense, until it has been replaced with something beyond it and something that is intelligent. No one is required to operate according to blind faith. So, you might say, that in one hand you keep your common sense, and in the other hand you open yourself up to that which is beyond your common sense; until the hand which is open to that beyond your common sense is filled with something that is as reasonable, but perhaps more radical, more unlimited than your old common sense. And then you can release the old common sense and have a hand free to move beyond your newest experience of common sense.

Now, if I said to you, “Here is a piece of paper and a pen, I want you to write down a mathematical problem that an answer cannot be arrived to.” You would know better than to even try that, because you know that there is no mathematical exercise that cannot be completed. Now you call mathematical exercises, problems. Well, likewise, what you call life's experiences or life problems, are never without an answer. And so, the reason you listen, is to hear the answer that proves the problem to be no problem. And so, an attitude of opening up to and yielding to an answer that must necessarily be there if there is a problem there, is the way you get beyond the ignorance of the answer, to the answer itself.

Now the answer isn't there just because, mechanically speaking, there has to be an answer. The answer is there because there is a God. In other words, because there is an intelligence embracing and governing everything that exists and the manifestation or expression of that intelligence is available to every single one of you to experience. And I encourage all of you to begin your day, each day, with a curiosity. And a willingness to have the Father show you or to have the Holy Spirit show you the Divine order of that day, with the uncovering of orderliness, where you would otherwise expect to find chaos.

It has been said that it is only special people who get a special dispensation from God in the form of parking places in front of the store or the building you are going into. This is not true. It is part of the orderliness, that there is perfect harmony and minimal exercise of effort. And so, you can expect to see the face of God or the hand of God or the evidence of God in every little detail of your day, if you will not assume that it is a day of ego dynamics alone. "This is the day the Lord hath made. Be glad, give thanks, rejoice." These are the words of a hymn.

It is well to start out the day with an acknowledgment of God. Especially if your are understanding that the acknowledgment of God must, therefore, be an acknowledgment of that which constitutes your presence. Then you understand why there must be a connection between the good that God is infinitely being and your specific day. That, then, gives you justification for expecting to see evidence of flawless harmony and of transformational experiences with your fellow man and unexpected good.

Your greatest asset is curiosity that is not squelched by doubt, unreasonable expectation of good—not because you have been a good girl and deserve it, but because God Is and that is All That Is and, therefore, there cannot be anything present to obscure it.

Don't get too gung ho about lists. Lists tend to make your good reasonable. And at this point, what is reasonable is what you can already conceive. And what you need is good that goes beyond your present conception because that is what will be transcriptionally. God doesn't unfold your good according to your current limits, but always infinitely. So you need to approach your good with a little bit more unreasonable expectation, what you could call a miracle, that which goes beyond your present concept, penetrating your present sense of things and moving you to a larger perception spontaneously.

QUESTION: I feel the need for some guidance with our seventeen year old daughter. Maybe I haven't been listening strong enough.

ANSWER: For the sake of those who are here, would you share some of the specifics that you would like guidance on?

QUESTION: Okay. She has been leaving home since she was about 13 and a half. She is gone right now. She has a hard time dealing with parenting maybe. She seems to be interested in primarily older fellows, not a lot older than she, but the one she is presently interested in is about 25 and she's 17.

ANSWER: You know the old saying, "You can lead a horse to water but you can't make it drink." The situation you are dealing with here is not because of neglect on your part. Intelligence has been expressed in your home, but there has been a demand for a biased perspective of intelligence. In effect, someone else, namely your daughter, wants to be the parent, wants to provide the rules, wants to run the show and she can't and you know it, but you play into her suggestion that you are guilty of not doing your part appropriately. You must stop playing into that. You must, in so many words, stand your ground.

It is your home. She is a temporary guest in it for the period of time during which she arrives at a point of emancipation and sovereignty. It is not appropriate for her to be able to dictate anything whatsoever about your home and how it is to be lived in.

Now, it is not an easy thing to do, but you must give her the right to express her independent willfulness. That doesn't mean you have to agree with it. It simply means, don't spin your wheels trying to get her to change. Don't wear yourselves out trying to figure out how to get her to drink the water that you have shown her is there. You must recognize that you have done your part. An intelligent home life is present for her. And then, if she chooses not to be in it, don't fight with her, because she will win.

Ah, but the feeling is, "She's my daughter. How can she be so unlike me?" And that is a hooker if you are not careful. She is an individual just as you are, with for lack of better words, many lifetimes of experiences. In other words, she didn't come into existence 17 years ago out of nothing, with no life experience. So, she is not an extension of you. She is an extension of the Father/Mother God, who is either clearly aware of who she is or ignorant of who she is. And here, behavior now is not expressing the circumstances in which she grew up, but the life choices that she has been making for a "much longer period of time." And it is not fair for you to unwittingly take the blame for something that she has been having difficulty learning for three lifetimes.

Now, I will tell you that her awkward and strenuous movement through her teenage years is likely to be met with breakthrough, in terms of this learning that she has been engaged in for three lifetimes. She is not likely to suffer any disastrous experience and, in fact, if you were able to force her to be in the place that you know is best for her, it would tend to delay this breakthrough. The essential thing for you to know at this time is, that you are not personally responsible through failure of any kind on your part, for her distressed and distressing experience from your point of view. Stand with her when she is expressing intelligence as you understand intelligence at this time. And do not stand with her, when she is not expressing intelligence. And don't let her words and her behavior cause you to doubt, whether you know what is intelligent or not.

QUESTION: I would like to say that a lot of the time I feel very grateful, not of any specific thing, just grateful. But I have been having some experiences that I would like to ask you about. I don't know how to describe this, except to say that sometime when I'm talking to somebody, I have an impression of someone connected to them. I get an impression of what this person looks like, or an event that is about to take place in that person's life. And I just wondered what that was, and what is it for?

ANSWER: It is, what I will call, an experience of spontaneous Knowing. You see, in the Mind of God there is no ignorance of any, shall I say, point in the infinity of what God is. All that God is, to the most minute detail, is consciously embraced as a conscious experience all at once. You as the direct expression of the Father, you as the embodiment of this infinite Mind that is infinitely conscious, have available to you Knowing about absolutely everything in the Universe. All of what you are, divinely speaking, at this instant is present and available for you to experience. What you have been experiencing are what we could call spontaneous breakthroughs or penetrations of some aspect of this infinite, ever-present Knowing that is yours to be experienced. Many times it is for no purpose other than the experience of it. Just as a sunset does not call for you to take an action of any sort. More than anything, when you have these experiences, I would encourage you to embrace them as moments of illumination, as a demonstration, you might say, of the Knowing that you are capable of infinitely. They are little failures of your ego to obscure your infinite Knowing. And if you will look at it this way, you will rejoice at these experiences, and not assume that they have a significance other than as indicators of your awakening, your process of awakening.

I will tell you, that when there is a call for action you will unmistakably know to act. But if that unmistakable awareness is not there, just notice that "there's another crack in my ego. Here is another experience of its weakening presence."

QUESTION: I raised my hand in order that I might Know, be curious. But before, I want to thank you for the Course, and how it changed from a method of thinking for me, to an experience. And everything changed. Thank you.

ANSWER: Indeed. That is the whole point. Because everyone has seen education as an intellectual process. This set of books called a Course, has been treated as though it is an intellectual process of learning spiritual facts to be remembered and drawn upon and practiced, rather than allowing the words, shall I say, to be undefined? As though it were a system of ideas. And letting the exposure to them elicit an experience. And to promote an experience. Ultimately, it is an experience of joining. The exact opposite of the ego's intent to be separate, and self-sufficient by the means of intellectual processes. And you got the idea. Not the idea as an intellectual thing, but the idea as an experience. And, indeed, that is when the miracles begin to be experienced, substantially. Please continue.

QUESTION: I don't know that I have a specific question.

ANSWER: Pay attention for a moment. It is a somewhat frivolous question, from your point of view.

QUESTION: Trivial even?

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: Is it appropriate that I should be in my own business, that I should be on my own?

ANSWER: Absolutely. Don't try to figure out how, just give permission for it and the how of it will unfold. If you are not able to give permission first, don't take the steps yet, else you will try to do it "from your head." And you deserve to have a partner. You deserve to do it with the Holy Spirit—that infinite aspect of you that has been held in trust while you try to go it alone.

Giving permission doesn't have to be "serious." In fact I would encourage you to give permission with a certain care-free light-heartedness. Because whether you do it light-heartedly or with great intensity, it amounts to the same thing. And one is a lot more enjoyable than the other. I encourage you to say "YES!" and then be curious as to how the Father is going to unfold it.

QUESTION: First of all Raj, thank you very much for all that you have meant to me. The first encounter with you was an encounter with Love itself and I have been forever changed as a result. And that is what moves me about you and these encounters at the workshops and tapes and everything, and the Course too. My question is, I want to be like that; to be the presence of Love for everyone I meet, all the time. So if you have any suggestions, guidance in that direction for me, I appreciate it. And the second part is...

ANSWER: Let us take it one step at a time. You are already being that. (Applauds) Just don't stop. And don't labor under a false idea that you must do it better, else you will bring an unnatural intensity to it and the quality of gift that is inherent in the Love that you already are, will fade out of the picture. The ego always suggests to everybody on their spiritual path that they must do it better.

And if you buy into it, you will begin to be a doer of Love or a doer of your spirituality, instead of just being it. And I do not want you to become side-tracked because of a belief that you aren't doing it well enough. Now, the second part of your question.

QUESTION: The second part is, for the last two months or so, I have had great difficulty with being still, listening. I appreciate if you can help me with that. Give me some guidance on that—Why?

ANSWER: When the spirit moves you, the spirit moves you. It is not appropriate for you to assume that the movement or the activity you are feeling is truly a distraction. There is reconfiguration occurring within you. It will settle down. In other words, it will become better embodied, incorporated into you, you might say. And then there will be a period of time in which it seems to you that you are experiencing your quietness. But do not try to squelch this busyness; it is not an ego busyness. Say “thank you” and allow it. And do not try to figure out what it is that is happening. It will disclose itself to you. Do not stop taking the time to be quiet. Simply don't be distressed that the depth of the quiet doesn't seem to be as great as it has been in the past.

QUESTION: I would like to ask you if you could translate for me, what is the Reality of what's going on in my life, right now, currently, which seems to—right now my attention is occupied around two situations. One is that I'm temporarily living with my mother, again, and she appears to need physical attention twenty-four hours a day. She has a feeling and I have a feeling that this isn't what was meant to be, but this is the pattern we're falling into.

And the second situation involves my daughter, who is twelve, who is living with her father and she's gotten herself “a serious illness” and the environment she lives in “actively supports the illness.” I say that in quotes, too, not that they know what they're doing but the medical attention she's getting and the environment she lives in seems to get its self-worth from perpetuating the illness. And she herself has asked me, she has said as much, that she knows that she's gotten herself into “a fix,” as she put it, and right now she said, she's in so deep she doesn't know how to get out of it. So she's appealed to me for help. She would like a Miracle, to be cured, instead of the surgery that's planned for her. What I would like to ask you is, could you, as you say, translate this into what's really going on here in relation to me?

ANSWER: We have two examples of co-dependency, or attempts to establish co-dependency, which it is absolutely inappropriate for you to align yourself with. If, indeed, you are going to be in the same proximity with your mother, let it be so that you might provide aid in her getting help of the physical nature that is needed from someone other than you, who can continue to provide the help after you leave. But do not let an enduring helper-helpee relationship develop between the two of you. You are not the appropriate one to be providing it.

Now, with your daughter, you must entrust her to her Divinity. In other words, you must acknowledge that she cannot get outside of her Divinity. She cannot get outside of the opportunity the Holy Spirit has to turn this circumstance to her advantage. And you stay out of it otherwise. If you attempt to get into it, you will find yourself caught in the same manipulative circumstance that she and her father's new family have created. And this is not appropriate for you either. She is not at the point where there is a willingness to disengage from it. And although you say it is not by conscious choice, a conscious choice is being made. Leave it alone. That does not constitute abandoning her. Do not get personally involved and consciously entrust her to her Divinity. Consciously give her over to the Holy Spirit everyday.

QUESTION: May I ask you what do I say to her when she asks me for help?

ANSWER: Be very straight with her and tell her that there is nothing you can do personally, except to ask the healing team, to ask her guardian angels, to watch over her, and to promote a healing. And then, having stated that, encourage her, in the context of help being given to her of this sort, to give permission for the healing to occur. Don't get any more complicated than that.

QUESTION: Are you conveying to me that she's not ready to give up the illness yet?

ANSWER: That is quite correct. Nor is she ready to give up the, let's say, contributing circumstances. And if you were to become involved at a reasoning level with her, you would become entrapped. It truly requires the help of the Holy Spirit, who sees the way in, you might say, while avoiding the traps that are set.

QUESTION: My question involves the Course and the fact that it tells us to teach. And I have trouble finding the words to teach with.

ANSWER: Good! (Laughter) I am going to give you a phrase to use as a guideline: Teach by Being. Teach by Being. Feel. Feel the Meaning. And in feeling it, you will find words to express, because you will know what the words are supposed to address.

The point is to be in touch with the experience before you try to put words to it. You cannot just be "a teacher," because then you'll ask, "what does a teacher do? What is a teacher supposed to do?" And you will try to approach it through your reasoning and your thinking and you might even get out some books to find out what, historically speaking, teachers did to fulfill their role, with descriptions of what qualifies a teacher, etc. What qualifies you to teach the Course, what qualifies you to teach Love, is to feel it and express what you are feeling. And it has very little to do with thinking or fulfilling a concept or a role.

You want to know something? You already teach by Being, but you also are laboring under the idea that perhaps you ought to learn more about teaching techniques. Because you care so much about the Course that you want to teach it well. The only thing that will qualify you to teach it, is to feel it. And the only way to feel it, is to be open to its meaning yourself. And then do the very simple thing of conveying what you feel. And already when you do that it is most meaningful to those with whom you are working, or with whom you are sharing.

Don't take something so utterly simple and make it complicated. And keep up the good work.

MORNING OF SECOND DAY:

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: You have welcomed us to Charlotte and I welcome you to the Kingdom of Heaven. But I want it clearly understood that they are both in the same place. Before we begin this morning, I want all of you to know that there are at least twice as many individualities in this room as there appear to be. Because your guides, your guardian angel, is with you wherever you are. The illumination in this room is infinite. The light of the Mind of your guides and the light of the Mind of you is, I will say, ultra-radiant. And I say this to you, so that we might begin the day with at least the clear idea that, even though it looks like you are in Charlotte, you are in the Kingdom of Heaven. And you are the Divine one that you Are and always have been. And not only that, you are companioned with by those who are consciously aware of their Divinity. Those whose task it is, if I may put it that way, those whose pleasure it is to stand with you constantly, to serve you in your Awakening. To serve you in support of and in substantiation of your Divinity, as you begin to consciously reach out for a direct experience of it. And so this is a marvelous company that you and we constitute. It is very important for you to know that you are not alone.

Why? Not to protect you. Not to keep you safe. But because your ego centered sense of self is insistent upon being, not only separate, but competent in that separateness. And the great need is for that sense of separateness to be abandoned, in favor of "being with." In favor of companionship. In favor of being joined. Because it is in the act of joining that you slip over the little gap or slip through the little gap that constitutes the artificial sense of separation and allows you to remember who you Are. This is why relationships are the crucible of Awakening. Because it is in relationship, rather than in isolation, that the opportunity to remember Home is available to you.

So, you understand that you are primed for waking up and all the elements, all the ingredients are present. And they are always present. This is not a special morning. We embrace you and you embrace us, whether you are aware of it or not, because we are one. And we rejoice with you this morning.

QUESTION: I have a two-fold question. I'm getting ready to put my house up for sale and also my financial situation has been stressful for the last couple of years. Do you see that coming to an end, and me selling and moving to something a little more within my price range?

ANSWER: Indeed! And it will not take very long for this to occur. Now instead of thinking in terms of moving into a circumstance that is more consistent with your situation, as though you are opting for less than what you have, I encourage you to see that movement is always forward movement. And, therefore, you are moving into that situation which more closely approximates the identification of fulfillment for you. In this way you will embrace it, as the evidence of God appearing in your life, rather than an evidence of "accommodating lack," and slowly sinking into it. And thus your mindset will remain optimistic and your curiosity to experience your ongoing fulfillment will remain active and vital. And you will not begin to accumulate a feeling of somehow being slowly abandoned, to God knows what. In other words, this is not a down-hill movement. It is a continuing unfoldment of that which identifies your fulfillment. It needs to be embraced with eagerness.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. There was like a picture and a feel behind the answer as he was giving it that the house would probably sell before the end of summer. And he said it would not be a protracted situation.

QUESTION: I have a situation that is somewhat ongoing in my life, which I've been trying to deal with and trying to live with and not deal with and accept. And regardless of that it continues to be a major issue for me. Which is that I seem to be unable to either get into or stay in an ongoing relationship in a romantic nature. And I wonder if that is something that I ought not to be in. Or if there is some part of me that is trying to keep that away from me. And I'm pretty much confused about it. Do you have any insight about it?

ANSWER: The problem is a fear of yielding into a relationship. A fear that if, indeed, you, I'm going to use the word "succumb" to the Meaning of a relationship, that you are likely to be hurt—used. There is a low level of trust and therefore there is, I'm going to call an active but quiet defense against it. You must understand that you can have the door open and still not admit anyone. To unlock the door, to open it wide, to put out the welcome mat does not mean that you are obligated to let every Tom, Dick and Harry through the door. If however you have the door securely locked and bolted you don't even have the opportunity to say "yes" or "no." You are afraid that if you are willing to open up, that you will be steam-rollered, that you will somehow not have enough practical integrity available to you to express and demand the expression of intelligence. And this is false.

Truly all of you must understand that to be unconditionally loving does not mean to become stupid! Love separate from intelligence is not love. Just as intelligence separate from love is unintelligent.

Now as I said yesterday, when you give permission for your good to unfold, when you give permission for your fulfillment to manifest, your world conspires to identify your fulfillment. In other words, you could say it conspires for you, on your behalf, not against you. And when that element of trust is allowed and when it is brought into play, order is what begins to manifest in your life, not chaos.

Indeed, when you are willing to risk the chance that there is really a God and yield into the movement of God, rather than depending upon your own best ability to be in control, the ego suggests to you that you are being unintelligent and that the result will be chaos. I have said before that the doorway to the Kingdom of Heaven is surrounded by gargoyles, scary frightening gargoyles, placed there you might say by the ego. And the gargoyles are your fears, which the ego has instilled in you and promoted. And the ego does this for ITS self-protection, not in your best interest at all, because it suggests to you that the very move that would cause you to remember Home and access your capacity to be aware Divinely is going to be your destruction. This is why trust is the essential element of waking up!

The ego is a bully. And you know what? All it can ever do is suggest. It can't back up its suggestions. It makes its malicious suggestions and each of you energize those suggestions and bring to it the force, you might say, that makes those suggestions seem to be valid.

Now, I encourage you to dare to express some trust. I encourage you to be willing to yield into a relationship. I encourage you to be less defensive, while at the same time remembering that just because you are willing to receive does not mean that you have to sacrifice being intelligent. It does not mean that you must lose the capacity of discernment as to what is appropriate and what is not. Discernment not only does not involve fear, it cannot involve fear. And therefore discernment is never a defense.

If you have prepared a dish for dinner and you forgot to put some salt on it when you were preparing it, you will look and you will see the salt and the pepper and you will discern that it is not the pepper you want and you will pick up the salt. It does not require fear to do that. And to have that discernment, where you can tell the difference between salt and pepper, that does not constitute a defense, its just understanding.

And so, I do encourage you to open the door and put the welcome mat out, realizing that you have always the ability to discern what is appropriate to allow over the threshold. And to realize that you always have the option to ask what has come over the threshold to go back over the threshold. Expressing trust, being willing to yield into a relationship does not put you at the mercy of something outside of your intelligence.

QUESTION: I've been working on how to formulate this question, and I guess I'll just go with it, with what I have so far...

ANSWER: I would not have picked you if you were not ready. Sufficiently ready.

QUESTION: I work as a therapist, and I've talked to you once before about this, and I feel like I've been greatly influenced in my work by my understanding about the nature of Reality and healing and the Course In Miracles and my own guides and that has come into my work in such a way that's been very, until lets say a year ago, extremely gratifying and rewarding. I would look forward to these sessions and I felt honored by the people who were just sent to talk to me. And I felt gratified by the results that I saw people getting and generally still do.

And yet, in the last year, I've had first one, then two, then three and then four people come back—having left me and seen other therapists—who now claim I have damaged them in some way—I have hurt them, I was unprofessional, unethical—something that I did was “too involved.” The major criticism is that I was, in a sense, not keeping the boundaries of a therapist—too much interested in them as people. When I look back over it, I knew all the time I was doing it, that I wasn't doing it perfect and I was making mistakes, but I had this belief—and it seems naive now, even though I want to still believe it—that I can make mistakes and I'm hoping the Holy Spirit will kind of clean up after me.

I'm learning as I'm going, but looking back, its like “that wasn't so cool” and I thought I was listening to guidance, when maybe I was just listening to my co-dependent ego, I don't know. And maybe its a manifestation of my own fears, like the gargoyles that I've energized or something, but its scaring me to death.

The miracle for me is that I do have plenty of times that I'm still very present with clients and present to my family and in the experience of love and knowing that nothing is wrong and that I'm interested and curious to see how this scenario is going to work out. The thing that I don't understand is, there are a lot of decisions I have to make now about how much to let lawyers say, how much contrition I have to say before the Board and stuff like this.

This has gotten to be what to the ego would seem very serious. Its almost like, when I'm in the experience of love and perfection, I don't worry about any of this stuff. I'm in the present. I play with my kids. I have a great time. I'm very happy with the work that I continue to do, but I'm very uncomfortable with the place I'm in now, because I'm not quite there to be fully trusting, moment to moment. I'm very happy here, and for the most part, if people say how are you doing I say "no complaints."

But if I go home and there's a subpoena at the door, some sheriff is going to say I have to account for this or something else, I can't even stop the visceral reaction, I'm sick for hours. I snap out of it, but I'm sick again. And its just shaken me, in such a way that, while intellectually I know I'm fine, my moment to moment experience just depends on where you catch me, I guess, at a certain period of time. I'm still so grateful for my therapy, because it seems to be the only time I can get out of the way and just be present to my clients and what's going on in their lives. And I'm willing to admit that, okay, I've made mistakes, maybe I shouldn't have told people that I loved them, but I was experiencing that and I thought that was therapeutic at the time and maybe it wasn't, maybe it confused them, I don't know.

But I want to be in a place where I know this Truth more deeply, so I really can play this thing out, and have my peace of mind along the way, as opposed to "Yeah, well, it almost killed me, but thank God it's over." So I'd like some help with that and I'd also like to know, this has been going on for years, now—a year and a half—and it hasn't even gotten to trial, hasn't even gotten to review, but its coming down to that. The part of me that's scared doesn't feel like, I may forgo my intelligence because of my fears or play into what other egos say I did wrong or something like that. You got the picture. Thanks.

ANSWER: Indeed, the key is your willingness to commit to following through. Following through with your choice to be the presence of love. To be present with your clients. To answer to the voice within. The reason you feel good when you are working with your clients is because you have, at that time, made a commitment to be centered, to come from your center, to reach them through your center. And you are being congruent with your Self.

Now, this situation is identical to the situation all of you are in, because all of you, in one way or another, have this same scenario to deal with.

Now, specifically you are in a process of being weaned from "the system,"—the status quo. The way in which everybody has agreed to function, whether it's intelligent or not. Your greatest fear comes from the suggestion that you will be excommunicated from the system. And that would be the greatest blessing that could ever occur to you. All of you are faced with the opportunity to discover that if you are excommunicated from the system—whatever your system is, whatever system you identify with—that if you are excommunicated from it or you abandon it, that you will not find any integrity right where you are.

Because each of your systems are part of what you use to identify your integrity. You use the system to prove to yourself that you have integrity, because everybody agrees with you in your particular group or system. And because you have used it to substantiate a sense of integrity, you are afraid that without it you will find that you have none. This is a difficult shift to make, because of that very suggestion. But if you will dare to make it, you will find that your integrity is intact, because it never had anything to do with anybody else's opinion or judgment about you.

You are not free when you are dependent upon everybody else or the system to verify for you that you have integrity. You are a prisoner of the system. You do not have a direct experience of integrity. And so you have this illusion of having integrity, which there is such mutual agreement about, that it feels as though it's real.

You have a Board. And the mutual agreement is that you must answer to that Board. And that Board can render a decision that can ruin your life. Someone else has a mother fulfilling that role, or a father, or a wife, or a husband. The real necessity here is for you to examine whether you want to continue to work within the system or whether you want to dare to risk the chance that you will find that you have integrity that others will recognize and feel, who also are not interested in working within the system. Not because they are rebels, but because the system isn't meeting the need, and isn't addressing the real issues of humanity, of humaneness, of genuineness and realness.

Each one of you who makes a commitment to your Knowing will find, indeed, that movement will occur in your life and that movement will begin to render clear to you what is of value and what isn't. And, at times, this poses a problem, because you will become aware of some things that have no value, that have had prime value for you before you started listening. And those things of prime value will almost always bear directly on your sense of your own integrity.

And so, it will feel to you as though abandoning those "valuable" things will constitute abandoning of your integrity. And that is where the ego hooks you and slows you down. And this is when Listening is even more imperative. This is when companioning consciously with your inner guidance is imperative.

The only thing is, that at those points when there is fear present, there is not the impetus, the motivation to listen, because it seems more imperative to feel the fear. As though feeling the fear is the way in which you will protect yourself. It is the way in which you will remain alert to the threat. It isn't the threat you need to be alert to, it's the solution to the threat that you need to be alert to. But that isn't what you are feeling when the ego is suggesting to you that connecting with your peace will promote chaos, because you are not paying attention to the enemy. Well, that's darn right! You're not paying attention to the enemy and the enemy is the ego, who is whispering in your ear, suggesting to you that you must remain "on defense."

You are going through redemption, and that which is not of value is falling away. But because it is what you thought was of value and what was essential you are trying to put it back on and save a little bit of it, enough to continue to have the respect of those who are so ignorant that they do not want you to be the Christ, because it upsets the status quo, it upsets the system. Then I will tell you, ultimately, because it heals.

You are in the middle of transformation, don't be afraid of it. And do listen and do pay attention to the obvious fact that when you are listening, you are not in a state of fear and you are also not unconscious. You are not in a state of fear and you are able to be clear and responsive to your world. But not on the terms of the system that you are outgrowing—the shell or security that no longer serves you.

Now, I cannot tell you to make the commitment, no one can. You and I know that you have made the commitment and that you are going to follow through come hell or high water. I cannot guarantee you that it will be smooth. But I will tell you this, if you will dare to listen as you have been, and if you will dare to commit to listening, it will be smoother and smoother and smoother. And as you begin to realize that aspects of the system that supported you now stand in the way of your continued growth and your developing congruence with your Being, you will feel the congruence, you will feel the peace, you will feel the strength, you will feel the integrity that was there before any Board ever gave you status. And that will constitute freedom to be genuine. Freedom to truly be of value.

I understand fully that you feel the right to whine. And it's okay, but don't become a professional whiner.

QUESTION: Raj, the way things are going right now, when there was only one person or two people, I was able to say “They're being ridiculous.” But with as many people as are now saying, “this wasn't right, you shouldn't have done this,” my advice has been from my supervisor and my lawyer, “look, lets try to make a deal. Go to the board, tell them you'll rehabilitate yourself and you'll be a good boy from now on and you'll take courses and somehow not step across those boundaries and stay within the ethical guidelines of your profession.” And that's kind of like where its going. Trying to cut the loses, on some level.

I remember once I talked with you and you said, “Look, if they take your license away, that's one thing, but don't give it to them, you don't have to flip it on the desk or something.” But from what you're telling me, its almost like, I think the only thing that's stopping me is the fear that I will not be—I'm embarrassed to admit this, but it's true—provided for in the same sense that I'm provided for now, in my standard of living, being a licensed psychologist. If I really knew that I would be taken care of and that I wouldn't have to walk around with the onus of being a "defrocked" psychologist and have my mind beating me to death with that, I'd do it. Because I still believe in what I was doing with these people, including the mistakes I made as part of what my growth and their growth was all about.

ANSWER: So, how much does it take, or how little does it take for you to sell your soul, for security? What you must understand is that this is your ego talking right now, and not you. Because you Know what you are going to do at the bottom line and it is not consistent with what just came out of your mouth. And so, there is whining going on here, a rehearsal of drama, if you will. Its all right, but it really doesn't express YOU.

QUESTION: You mean it's the ego that wants to make a deal?

ANSWER: It is the ego that wants to make a problem out of deal-making, or out of any of this process. Now, do whatever seems appropriate under the circumstances. I mean by that, make a deal, but don't believe the deal you're making! "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and render unto God the things that are God. Speak to be heard of men, think to be heard of God."

As I did say, don't give your license away. There is no requirement for you to admit disobedience or fault when you know there was none. I'm going to modify that slightly, there is no need to admit fault and believe it, although it may be necessary to say it, to satisfy the system. And allow your most graceful exit from any further domination by the system.

And to make this perfectly relevant to everyone, the ego frame of reference is also a system, that all of you who are in a process of consciously awakening, are abandoning. And the system and your valuing of it, will seem to throw road blocks up in your way. And you can either whine and complain about them or you can see their presence as an opportunity to see them for the valueless thing they are and withdraw your investment of energy and trust in them.

A special relationship is a mutual agreement of two or more, in a belief or idea that never had its origin in the Mind of God. And it is, indeed, addictive and freeing yourself from the addiction is not always comfortable, because it feels as though it is the death of you or the death of everything meaningful. But until the drug is abandoned, you don't have the opportunity to know what being clear means, as an experience.

Awakening, waking up, spiritual transformation that is Real spiritual transformation, is, indeed, a withdrawal from an addiction. An addiction to an investment of belief in mutually agreed upon fantasy. And because all of you have arrived at a sense of yourself from these mutual agreements, it feels like you are sacrificing your identity, when, in fact, you are regaining it.

What you are going to do, what you have been insisting upon doing seems absolutely idiotic to your ego, to your conditioned thinking. But there is a part of you that knows the Truth and insists upon being the presence of love without paraphernalia. Without the paraphernalia of a system. It's the system that NEEDS to be penetrated by Reality and it is love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and every thing—which does the penetrating. And it will upset the system. Part of the unevenness of the movement of transformation that you are experiencing is caused by wavering on your part—vacillating.

Once you arrive at your peace about it, you will find the unevenness coming at you from your world also evening out. That is why I suggested that you not get hung up on whining. Don't become a professional whiner. Make a commitment to your peace. To the degree that you squelch or do not energize the tendency to whine, you are learning. And you are having the experience of transformation. And it is not essential for it to be strenuous. But if it is, indeed, you must say, "I am glad the transformation is happening. At least I'm not stuck in a false sense of security, in which my integrity hasn't even been clear to me, the integrity of me that exists regardless of any mutual agreement with others."

Everybody wants to wake up. Everybody really does want to be clear. But not if they have to change! Embrace the transformation that necessarily follows a commitment to your Divinity. Because it is "a process" of becoming free of addiction to that which perverts your perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, causing it to look like something other than it is. And the key element, the key element that causes the distortion is the thoughtless, mutual agreement with a brother upon a definition of what a thing is, without being connected to the Father to see what it's meaning Really Is.

Now, I do not mean to be getting heavy here, but one must understand the realities of awakening and not cringe when a situation arises that requires that you listen even more deeply, so that you might access the fuller and fuller True meaning of everything. If the desire is there, it is not coming from your ego, even if your desire seems to be overwhelmed by ego dynamics—the gargoyles I mentioned. That part of you that desires to Be Love, in spite of your conditioning, will be met by the Holy Spirit, by your guide, with full support and encouragement, if you will listen, instead of spontaneously moving into a state of reaction to the gargoyle.

Someone who is on withdrawal from drugs sees not only harmless pink elephants, but demons. And what is the immediate response? "Give me another fix." Because that one knows that the fix will get rid of the demon. But the fix will leave the individual unconscious—not in his right mind. And so the commitment to Sanity, the commitment to clarity must dare to go beyond the demons, the gargoyles, the fears that are unique to you, which the ego shamelessly thrusts in your way to scare you out of your commitment.

Now, I know that this sounds like a war and what will keep you clear, so that you do not become overwhelmed, is the fact that the ego is an impostor. As I have said before, it is a bastard. What I mean by that is that it has no source. It has no point of origin. It is itself an imagined presence and, therefore, it can only seem to function, as that which suggests catastrophe.

You cannot have a war without two presence's. And that which can only suggest, is powerless. You see what happens is, that that of you which is Divine, which cannot be gotten rid of, but the full meaning of which you cannot comprehend at the moment, because you are utilizing a limited frame of reference to understand everything. That of you which is Divine is power. And the ego makes a suggestion and you with the full vitality of what you Divinely are, energize!--you provide the energy. And YOU seem to give the illusion all the substance it has. You give the suggestion all the reality it ever seems to have. And even when you do that, it still doesn't have reality, but you are hypnotized, by virtue of your agreement with the suggestion, and you do not seem to have any other choice available, but to believe the thing that you have energized. But the illusion was never anything other than a distorted perception of Reality. So it was still Reality, being Reality. Reality the presence of God, wasn't altered only your perception of it.

Many of you have been drunk enough at times to misinterpret a bush or a tree or something else and you know that you literally "saw" something other than the tree. You would say it was an actual experience and you could describe to somebody else the other thing you saw. That's all there is to a misperception of Reality. A false interpretation, experienced as though it were actual and validated by you.

Now the system that you are in a process of disengaging from—and that is the fact—that you know, but you are only letting into your experience ever so slowly, this emancipation from the system is the movement and action of your Divinity, transforming your humanity. Causing your humanity to become more genuine, with less mutual agreement to believe illusions are real.

All of you: don't be afraid of transformation. And realize that, indeed, when you give permission for your fulfillment, as the Divine one that you are, to manifest, there is going to be movement and change that will need to be consciously and conscientiously embraced. And know that in many instances the ego will be hard at work throwing up demons, as in a fun-house ride, to give you a thrill and a scare, to stop you in your tracks. But remember that the demon it throws up is a suggestion of a demon, no different from a hypnotist saying, "You have an apple stuck to your nose, that you cannot get off."

And so, there is no war, even though it may feel like it. And if you will let the ego do its little dance and throw up whatever it wishes to try to entice you back into ignorance and unconsciousness, let it do it. But keep your focus on your desire to be conscious as the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being, which is a way of describing God's view of everything. If you will persist in that and not energize the ego's dance, you will find the illusion of chaos, of impending doom, yielding to an unfolding clarification of your integrity and the joy of functioning meaningfully without a system to back you up. A system constituted of mutual agreements. And remember, we are talking about a joyful thing here.

QUESTION: When I think about peace on a world level, my judgment always comes in. Does peace only come on an inner level, or is there such a thing as world peace on an outer level?

ANSWER: The distinction between the two is not real. It is a convention of thinking, a mutual agreement to describe the indivisible conscious experience of Being as inner and outer. The only reason you look at anyone else in this room or the room itself and say it is an outer experience, is because you believe that when you point at your body, you are pointing at yourself and when you point at the room or someone in the room, it is not you. That is a perception, not an experience.

I am going to answer your question dualistically at this moment. Absolutely there is such a thing as outer peace, world peace, manifest peace that is an obvious and indisputable experience, no matter where you go on the globe.

When a miracle occurs, what does that mean? What happens? Is it just that you have arrived at a point where you are no longer disturbed, but you are still sick? Is it where you are experiencing bliss in the midst of ugliness? No.

There is a story about a child with one of these puzzles, that has a picture on both sides. And on one side of the puzzle there is a picture of the world and on the other side there is—a simple stick picture—of a man. And the child puts together the picture of the man and carries it into the kitchen to show his mom. And when he holds it up, the side that's toward her is the picture of the world that appears very complex. And she is overwhelmed at his brilliance! When in actuality he put together a very simple picture. The point of the story is: That when you get your man straight, you have your world straight. When you become clear, your world will be clear. You will experience physical regeneration, what you call healing. You will experience harmony on your freeways, yes, even freeways can be experienced as absolutely beautiful movement of harmony and unity.

Not just that you are having what has been called “a trip” from a drug that makes the ugly beautiful. But an experience of beauty wherein beauty truly replaces ugliness. And this is why it is so very important not to demean your world by misunderstanding the statement, “Nothing that I see means anything.” Or to just flatly say, “This is all an illusion.” Because, if you do not grasp any deeper meaning than the surface meaning of those words, you will be able to have an insane belief—that you can be in bliss with no evidence of it. That there can be an experience of harmony with no evidence of it. That you can be the Son or Daughter of God and be ravaged with a disease that is deforming your body. That you can express or be and feel love, and slap your children, or beat your husband, or knock the neighbor kid off the porch. Because, of course, its all illusion. The experience is what's real. That is insanity. And to practice insanity in the name of enlightenment is absolutely unintelligent.

So yes, the answer is there is such a thing as real world peace. World peace that could be recorded on film, and be recognized by a Being from any place in your planet as the evidence of harmony and order.

“Nothing that I see means anything”—the first lesson in the Course. Hell, why read the rest of the Course? Isn't it one of the things you see! (Laughter) What happens when you do that lesson? You become frustrated, every single one of you. (Here Raj pretends to be someone trying to practice this lesson) “Nothing that I see means anything... well... Nothing that I see means anything...! Nothing that I see means anything? I'm losing track here... Nothing that I see means anything... I did it!... That doesn't make sense... Nothing can mean nothing. Nothing can have no meaning.”

That lesson is meant to un-rut you. That lesson is meant to cause you to at least call into question your confidence as to what a thing means. But you are incapable of arriving at a point of looking at a thing and truly experiencing it as meaningless. That lesson is meant to be disorienting to you.

What happens when you become disoriented? You grasp for something secure. The great value of that lesson is that it, indeed, causes you to consider the possibility that maybe everything you are looking at is meaningless. In whatever degree of sincerity you bring to making that statement, you weaken your inner resolve as to your understanding of a thing. But if you managed to use such great self-control that everything could be left meaningless, you would be depressed. And you would be miserable. And your ego just might be able to find some value in the misery, by stating that it in some way is exalting your soul. But that is not the point. The point is that in your unsettledness there is an involuntary reach for something meaningful. And because you are not holding your current definition of everything so strongly in mind, you are in a position to experience revelation. You are in a position of vulnerability, of insecurity in which penetration of your current frame of reference can occur by the Holy Spirit. And the closer approximation of what a thing really is, in its Divinity, can begin to register with you.

I said yesterday, that the only thing you are ever confronted by, is the only thing that is going on—the Kingdom of Heaven, the presence and action of the movement of God. And you are either seeing it clearly or through a glass darkly.

Whichever way you are seeing it, it is one and the same thing, the only thing available to you to experience—Reality. If you think that it is a material world, if you think that it started from a big bang and God had nothing to do with it, if you think that in fact there is actually anything material in existence right here where you see all things, you are experiencing an illusion. An illusion. The better word is a delusion about something Real. I cannot say this strongly enough. Because if you don't get it, you miss the point of the Course and you will use the Course to deny the world. And if you succeed in denying the world, you are denying the visibility and tangibility of the movement of God. And, therefore, your intent to deny the world for your "spiritual growth," is an attack of God. And there cannot be spiritual growth in that.

There had better be evidence, as you put it, outer evidence of world peace. And there had better be evidence of healing. There had better be what has been referred to as "the happy dream." Now I have used the words "a closer approximation of Reality," which, indeed, makes it sound as though there are states and stages to awakening. The simple fact is that you only let in a little bit of Reality at a time, because, as I said, the ego provides a smoke-screen of gargoyles, that suggest to you that your further movement in the direction of your awakening is going to be experienced as total breakdown and chaos in your world and within you.

Not one of you can observe the events of the last eighteen months on your planet and not rejoice at the incredible, monumental changes that have occurred. Not the least of which is the fact, that when the Soviet Union abandoned communism, abandoned its stance as enemy, fully ninety-five percent of the people on your planet released the definition of enemy that was directed toward the Soviet Union and took a radical stand of embrace and support. That is more of the miracle than the abandonment of communism that occurred. And there is a grand lesson in it that I want all of you to be aware of: Enemies are substantiated by those who stand against them.

Your enemy can be your husband, your enemy can be your child, your enemy can be your parent, your boss, your job, the system, etc. And, indeed, all of you need to observe to what degree you hold them in that definition and treat them as enemy and do not let them off the hook, by virtue of your ugly definition, keeping them constantly in a state of defense, because you are misapprehending them.

Enemies don't exist all by themselves. The mutual agreement, called a special relationship, is the means by which all of you keep each other held in prison. "I can't trust you till you change. You are not dependable. You're untrustworthy. I can't love you when you behave like that." These are all ways that you impress each other with your lack of integrity. Everyone puts the onus on the enemy to change, before "I will change."

In effect the Soviet Union did that. It was hard for them to do it. It was ingratiating to them, humiliating to them. Because, indeed, they had to pay attention to what the signs of peace were. And then practice them consciously and express them verbally. They had to give all of the right signs to the Western world that met the criteria of the Western world, so that the Western world could say, "We agree, you are not an enemy."

It can be done that way. All of you who are under attack from one source or another, who have historically rebelled against such definitions being laid upon you and by virtue of your rebellion, have seemed to support the theory that you are an enemy, can choose to become aware of what the signs of harmony and peace and love are and express them, in order to get the approval or the new definition of brother, from your fellow man. Or, you can all begin to love and I cannot repeat this definition too often, it is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R,” in each and everything or each and everyone.

You can withdraw judgment. You can withdraw the false definition to which you hold your fellow man. And you can begin to become curious as to what is Real there. That withdrawal of judgment is called forgiveness. It is the refusal to be a conflicted presence in front of someone else—one full of judgment and self-righteousness.

World peace is not going to come through any political movement. It is going to come through individuals like everyone of you being more connected with their Being, and their genuine simplicity, and their willingness to be Real, instead of trying to live up to the expectations of others. So that which is really valuable in each one of you begins to spill out and be expressed in the world without concern for how its going to be received. Because I will tell you something: The genuineness, the simple, humble, unpretentious, unmasked genuineness of you is like a symphony of such great harmony that it touches everyone where they feel—not where they think and react.

Love is the leaven that leavens the whole lump. It does not take very much yeast in proportion to the mass of dough for your loaf of bread to raise that loaf of bread to surprising proportions. Something that you are not aware of is, that there is an awakening going on around your globe, whether anyone has ever heard of the Course or not, whether people are even believing in God or not. And it is arising as a yearning. Life itself is dishing out the first lesson of the Course. And there is a yearning arising, a reaching for something beyond what is being experienced, with an unreasonable conviction that there is something beyond it. And mind you, so that you are utterly clear, that simply means beyond whatever the current definitions are that you are giving to everything.

There isn't anything beyond the Kingdom of Heaven that this All Is, but there is something beyond the agreed upon definitions as to what everything is. And you know what's happening? In the humility that is inseparable from that insecurity, that sort of inner void where you're not so sure of the meaning of everything, there is a connection as I said yesterday, that is felt within you, where you really feel your realness, and in feeling it, you discover that you are more than what you had defined yourself to be. And, as I said, there is the inescapable realization that this is true of every other individual who exists. This is what is happening around your globe, although it is not reaching the news media. And everyone is keeping it somewhat quiet because it feels very radical. And there is still a tendency for everybody not to upset anybody else, even with good news!

You're going to find transformation occurring quite rapidly. Because movement is occurring at the most essential level of each individuality. You see, if realization occurs within you and that realization about yourself, that simultaneously is a realization about every other individual. Since that is the fundamental first steps of the movement, it must necessarily be a movement of unification that was not the result of a plan at all, but is the visibility of the inseparable unity of everything that has always been from the beginning.

I suppose you could say we have a plan. But it is a plan for you simply to be conscious of what is True. And since what is True is already True, there aren't steps to get to it. And so there isn't that kind of a plan. Our plan is more like walking up behind a student in a classroom who is day-dreaming and tapping him on the shoulder so that he wakes up, and becomes conscious of where he is, and what's happening. There's no process to it. It isn't really a process of education or learning. It's simply a matter of (snaps his finger) doing that which causes you to pay attention, instead of unconsciously, dreamily, floating along in a false sense of security that has come from a mutual agreement as to what everything is, that means you don't have to pay attention.

Now, I have indicated that from an inner level, from a level of individual experience of who you Divinely are, you find yourself inseparably joined with everyone else. This can't help but become manifest or visible in the world, because everyone will begin treating everyone else differently. Not by mutual agreement through space and negotiations, but just because in the realization of the Truth of things, there is no longer any justification for doing it the old way. That's why you don't need to learn every jot and tittle of "A Course In Miracles" or any other Holy book. You don't need to be able to diagram the sentences! You don't need to understand why the first chapter relates to the third chapter and the eighth chapter and how it all ties together to bring about something. Don't marvel at order—the book was not planned!

The natural spontaneous expression of Being is always beautiful and orderly and it can seem to have structure. But I will tell you something: You have out here beautiful trees. What a waste of time it is to take a scalpel or a knife or a pick and try to understand the tree instead of sitting in its shade and enjoying its beauty and the birds that are singing in it, and experiencing its utter harmony with the rest of the environment and the undeniable proof of the existence of Divine intelligence that you can Know, without dissecting it.

It is well for all of you to become aware of your brothers, whether black or white or Asian or Indian, whether German or Jew or Japanese. And to become familiar with the culture of each. Because, if you will do this, you will provide yourself with the opportunity to find out that they are just like you. And at the bottom line, every single one of them, every single one of all of you, desires to experience, humanity. You desire to experience that which is humane. And that which is human has nothing to do with laws on books that enforce decency.

That which is humane is that which is spontaneously, thoughtlessly, loving. That expresses care and sensitivity, not sensitivity to ego structures that must be met, but sensitivity to the fact that, who one is relating to is Real, and meaningful—the Son of God, the Daughter of God, the presence of God expressed. Not because the one in front of you is God, but because nothing other than Love is appropriate. Nothing else means anything. Every single person on this planet knows what love feels like. And when it is there, without an ulterior motive, the other one feels utterly safe, not feeling a requirement for a mask to hide behind.

And so, that one lets down and lets forth what he is and his love for humaneness and meaningfulness and, indeed, recording instruments, cameras, etc., that might be recording what is happening, would show a transformation occurring—visible tangible manifestations of peace.

Don't waste your energy trying to establish peace through political processes. Political processes are necessarily nationalistic and they operate within the context of law, which is the result of reason that has nothing to do with the heart.

You live in a portion of your country in which the foundations of the country were established. And they were established by people who were in touch with themselves and in touch with the value of humanity, of humaneness. And in the beginning the laws relative to the formation of this country were expressions of the valuing of humanity and were not for purposes of control. Do you realize that your laws constitute an attack on your citizens? In effect they say you are stupid dolts, who would not naturally be orderly if there were no law to keep you in line. Protection is always attack. Again, the leaven that leavens the whole lump is Love. Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, starting with yourself.

You are not here today because you are the metaphysical intelligentsia, who happened to have stumbled on a great work, called "A Course In Miracles". You are here, like anyone else in utter humble simplicity—this is the way in which you are really here—because there is a yearning that you are feeling within yourself that caused you to pick up a book and discover one called "A Course In Miracles". It isn't the Course that is the key factor, it's the yearning within you that says, "there is something more than this." The very same thing that Helen (Schucman, transcriber and receiver of "A Course In Miracles") said, "there must be something more than this." She wasn't any different from you. But she paid attention to the feeling and she never got hung up on the books! Pay attention to that and then the books will serve to illuminate your feeling, and the glow in you will grow.

The world will change anyway. But it can be more smooth and more graceful if you know what's happening and flow with it.

QUESTION: About three days ago I retired from a position that I held for twenty years, maybe one that had held me for twenty years. I was going to wait until you came to ask before I retired, but I felt it couldn't wait, so I guess what I need is a confirmation that that's the right thing to do. I mean I jumped out of the airplane and should I have done that? (laughter) Do you have any advice for the future for me? I'm worried that I may or may not have enough money to do what I want to do. I don't know, I hope that my focus will continue to be music, but maybe it won't. I don't want to withdraw and I think that's all I can think to ask you about.

ANSWER: If you have jumped out of the plane, the only thing left to you to do is to learn how to fly. What I mean to convey by that is, be totally ready to embrace that which is new and which may be radically different from anything you have done before. I am not saying that you will not do anything like what you have done before, I am saying that you are at a threshold wherein significant change can occur and I am encouraging you to be open to it. Be in this place with great curiosity and interest. Understanding again, that your world will conspire to identify your fulfillment of purpose, if you don't waste your time being overwhelmed by fear or doubt.

Indeed, if you had asked me before this last week, I would have told you "Yes, do it." When you are traveling and you have stop-overs, or lay-overs in an airport, you come to what you could call your first destination, which is, really, your next point of departure. And so it is important for you to understand that where you are right now that seems to have been a destination, an ending point, is just a new point of departure for an ongoing, uninterrupted experience of fulfillment of purpose.

No, this job didn't hold you. You were right where you were supposed to be and you did not overstay your welcome. Unfortunately, and this is especially true in the Western world, everyone grows up so as to arrive at a destination where they may then enjoy the rest of their life. It is unfortunate because life does not stop. And so when one arrives at a point that one interprets as a place of completion, they have the rude shock of finding out that they are distracted by further calls for change. And they wonder what they did wrong. Why they are not able to retire. Why they are not able to settle down without further demands—like "they" did, whoever "they" are. There is less opportunity these days to become unconscious, where you do not need to pay attention constantly, and be alive constantly.

Those who are engaged as you are in a conscious desire to wake up, will find a constant opportunity, which generally speaking, will be experienced as a favorable thing—the constant opportunity to discover something new. And the delight of childhood will return to you in your adulthood—it never was supposed to leave you. And so, you continue to stand at the threshold of, “Behold, I make all things new.” And I encourage you to stand there with delight and with curiosity.

QUESTION: There is one subject that touches all of us. I think because we all have different fears. And I see people all wanting the same thing, what is best for mankind. But they think they’re on different side of the fence. That is the subject of abortion. I really do see that everyone wants what is best, but they’re not agreeing on what action people should take. I see it as something that is different in every case and that will to choose varies according to the circumstance. Could you talk about that?

ANSWER: The problem regarding this subject is very simply the fact that so few people consider Life to be Divine and, therefore, to be honored and revered as the presence of God in action.

I’m going to answer it this way: As the awareness of the omnipresence and omnipotence of God emerges once again in the heart of mankind, this issue will, indeed, begin to soften. I mean by that, that the reactions and the strong feelings will begin to yield to the gentle awareness of the Divinity of Life and the reverence for it that is appropriate.

It is only in the face of the belief that bodies make bodies, that a decision to terminate that body could seem to be justifiable. It reflects a certain starvation of the Soul that has occurring as all of you have been coerced, you might say, by the scientific establishment and the medical establishment to believe that this is just a mechanistic universe and that there is no active Divine presence to be known or experienced or felt.

Now, I am aware that I will sound like the Pope. But in all cases, it is desirable to allow a pregnancy to come to full term unless it would threaten the life of the mother. And the simple fact is that in the Divine order of things you as women are not required to sacrifice your life for the birth of a new child.

Now, very practically speaking, whether it pleases anyone’s ego or not. If life were believed and understood and felt to be, the direct expression of a current and living God, and if you felt the Divinity of yourself as the direct expression of God, you would find yourselves inclined to honor yourselves more than you do. And you would find yourselves less inclined to cater to other people’s expectations, or other people’s concepts, and you would be more on the ball. You would be a truer and more original representation or manifestation of God. You would not find it possible to blame anything for anything, or pass the buck. And you would handle yourselves more responsibly.

And just as you would find a parking space in front of the destination that you need to accomplish something in, you would also find yourself not in the place where rape or abuse or lack could manifest itself. In your self-respect based upon an inner feeling of your Divinity, you would find yourself, without effort, exactly where you needed to be in order to experience fulfillment of purpose. And you would not be in the place where a victimizer was looking for a victim. And thus you would not play into the dance, by being the partner called the victim. The simple fact is, that if you knew you couldn't pass the buck, you would more consciously be where an unwanted pregnancy couldn't occur.

Now, there is much discussion about when a fetus becomes a human being—when the Soul enters the body. This very concept arises out of an ignorance of what we've been discussing for the last couple of days. The simple fact is, that you cannot exist and not be identified. There cannot just be God. There must be God and the infinite manifestation of God, or put another way, there must be God the infinite Divine Mind or Intelligence, which Moves. That movement is the Movement of Consciousness, as I said yesterday. And that Movement of Consciousness is experienced by Mind, and Mind/God recognizes Himself. And the recognition is a recognition of that which has substance, that which is recognizable—what I have referred to as visibility and tangibility. The ideas of Mind or God, are perfectly tangible to that Mind. Therefore, just as there cannot be God without the conscious experience of Himself, called visibility and tangibility of the ideas embraced by Mind. There cannot be You without that which identifies your presence, which I to a limited degree touched on this morning when I suggested that your concept of inside and outside is just that, a concept. It is all a unity.

Now, therefore, it is impossible for you to be bodiless. For eternity it is impossible for you to be bodiless. Therefore, if at any moment there is anything visible about you, your identity, your Soul, your Spirit, shall I say the Soul that you Are, the Spirit that you Are, the Life that you Are, the Mind that you Are, the Truth that you Are, and so on, is what is embodied or rendered visible.

To a limited dimensional creature, your coming through a doorway might cause you to appear to be very funny, because at first there might just be the tip of your nose that shows. And a hand that seems to have no relationship whatsoever with the other part that first appears. But you know that your whole body is in the process of going through the door, not in bits and pieces and not strange and odd looking.

And the fact that a fetus appears to be a growth of matter, going through stages which have been undignifiably described as going from the lower life forms—through fish and mammal and so on—the fact that it looks like that doesn't mean that's what is happening. Because the point of entry into your frame of reference of another individuality, is an entry of a Whole Individual, with a visibility and tangibility that Wholly identifies him or her. All of that Individual is present if there is any perceptible part of that Individual present. The Soul cannot be separated from the body and, indeed, when you pass on you find that your body is intact and with you, while everyone else is burying the after-image that is left in their eyes and they are thinking that this is your body.

Some of you at this moment are thirty-four years old in this room, and I think that this is as good a time as any to abort your life. (Laughter) I know you don't agree. And you are correct. This Whole-Souled Individuality who is complete in every respect, that is scientifically and knowledgeably—and I am being facetious here—defined as a “fetus” and not an Individuality at all, yet, disagrees also with a judgment that it is appropriate to abort its life.

Part of the difficulty around this issue is that it is easier to abort this life form than it is to shoulder the guilt for the pregnancy having occurred. And I understand this. But you would not have as much difficulty if you realize that there are no two persons on the face of this planet that can create a baby. You can put sperms and eggs together, but without the act of God, there will be no conception. Nothing happens that God isn't Being. Again the resolution of this difficulty will come naturally and with ease, with gentleness, as life is put back in the context of God. Then you will have to listen in a new way.

If you have conceived and you are not able to take care of the child, if you have conceived, and your family has grown and you simply are not able to conceive of the possibility of raising another family, let the pregnancy come to term and deliver, and put the child out for adoption. There are other alternatives beside killing that child that are humane. And I will guarantee you of this, very often a child who is conceived into an environment where it is unable to be cared for, is, shall I say, finding access to the individuals who are supposed to be his parents, when those two individuals have not been listening and have not taken the steps necessary for conception to occur.

I tell you that there is no chance that occurs anywhere in infinity. And children who are with adoptive parents, are with the ones they are supposed to be with. Please dare to begin to grasp the all-inclusiveness, the omnipotence of God and the fact that not one thing ever happens outside of the direction of God. And if you seem to be experiencing something other than that, it is because you have super-imposed a belief structure upon it that is not allowing you to be in the flow of the Movement of God.

Now, does this mean that if you have had an abortion or if you have insisted upon a girlfriend having an abortion, that you have committed a sin that you are guilty of? No. Life is not a test. And it is not set up for you to lose or win. Again, you are confronted by the only thing that is going on—the Kingdom of Heaven.

Belief structures, belief systems that have caused you to believe that it is not the Kingdom of Heaven, that have caused you to feel separate from It, separate from your Brother, separate from your own integrity, have not changed what you Divinely Are, and they have not changed what the World Divinely Is.

And if, indeed, you have succumbed to a distorting mindset, those who are awake understand that it is perfectly reasonable that you are feeling the way you are feeling, even though it is an illusion. This means that no judgment is called for, no matter what erratic or unkind acts you engage in. Because, if you knew better you would do better. And always where you are, whether it is in jail, or whether it is in a drunken heap in the gutter, or whether it is in a state of misery in the middle of abundance, Love is all that is called for. Compassion is what is given, because the only thing in front of you to do, really, is to desire to know beyond your present sense of knowing. So that you are no longer imposed upon by ignorance.

So if there has been an abortion, or even after hearing what I have said and perhaps even recognizing the utter truth of it, you find yourself forced by circumstances, you might say, you find yourself unable to be consistent with what I have just said, you may know that what follows does not condemn you.

And that you just still have the opportunity to be perfectly consistent with the reverence for Life, and the acknowledgment of the presence of God in any pregnancy that occurs. And perhaps more trust that will allow you, if you become pregnant again and it is unwanted, to allow it to come to term, so that you may observe the manner in which fulfillment of purpose for this new individual can take place and you can rejoice in it and with it.

Pro-choice is an ego concept. You have not heard me, relative to anything at all this weekend, promote pro-choice. I am promoting pro-listening, if you will. So that you might find yourself so congruent, so in harmony with your Being—which is the presence of God—that your every act expresses God and is, therefore, experienced by everyone in your world as humane, benign, and transcriptionally.

Again, the one element that confuses this whole issue is the belief that you are just organisms, when you are not. And the recognition that you are not, places a benediction on the whole human race and provides the circumstances and the environment in which your exaltation can occur and this issue can disappear.

QUESTION: First I want to thank you for the profound wisdom and Truth that we've had the opportunity to listen to today.

I and some others are about to ask the Universe to provide us with the means of manifesting prosperity. And we were told the date for this to happen to us. And you know how we are going to use these monies? And our question is, when?

ANSWER: There is only one answer: "Infinite patience brings immediate results." And you must drop the sense of time and simply be true to the desire that you are feeling and abide with it. Because every desire that does not come from the ego—in fact the ego can only have "wants"—every desire that you have, literally, holds within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment. And that is why you learn to abide with the desire, rather than attempting to create its fulfillment. To feel a desire does not mean that you have been charged with a responsibility to make it come to pass. It simply means that you have allowed the leading edge of a Movement of God to register with you, and because it is a Movement of God and because it is meaningful, it feels like something.

Well when something feels like something, it is your ego's habit to take the ball and run with it yourself. When what is called for is to abide with the feeling—feel it. It is the presence of God in You. Be the observer, be conscious of it and stay with it while it brings forth its fulfillment of purpose. Then you will not shift into time and have to wait.

Just as a thread in a tapestry surfaces only every so often because that is where the Divine design is illuminated, even so, what you would call the “timing” of the manifestation of fulfillment of purpose, occurs precisely and perfectly, so that the Movement of God is identified flawlessly.

So abide with the desire and do not practice impatience. Your attitude in all cases and in this case, must be, “Thy will, not mine be done. Not my best reasoning, not my best judgment, but Thy will be done.” Hang in there.

QUESTION: Thank you. Its wonderful to be with you Brother. And you know what I've been going through already, but I appreciate the fact that Spirit has shown me so fast how I am to be used. When I've asked how I should be used, in the last thirty days about six cancer patients come into my life. And I'm trying to find the humor in that they are very diverse in their belief systems, so its really a nice challenge for me.

ANSWER: It is wonderful for you to have these ones to “be with.” Remember that the key is in the joining. In the uninhibited, unpremeditated genuine willingness to be, what I am going to call very human with them. And I'm not using the word human there as a state of ignorance. At the bottom line, to be human means to be, as I said, unpretentious, utterly genuine, from your heart.

QUESTION: Yes I feel that, and I know that's how I'm being used. I'm also wondering if there's a reason that they all have cancer. And if this is life-work that you would have me do, or...

ANSWER: I'm going to suggest that you take advantage of any excuse for being with another. Let the cancer be an excuse for being together. Do not let it be the focus. And also, do not try to “peg” your work, so that you can say, “this is what it is that I'm supposed to do.” It is very important for you to be utterly flexible, to be listening at all times. Because sometimes, when you are “being with” another, you will be hard as nails and you may not seem to be being a helper at all, even though you will know you are right on target. And another time you will be very gentle and patient with someone that your ego conditioning says is the one who is really screaming for a firm fist. Don't try to "peg" how to be the presence of God. Don't try to nail it down.

QUESTION: In the case of one of the people you brought to me, they have mentioned that when the end-time comes for them, they would like to over-medicate themselves—they're very fearful of the pain. Is there a message you would have her know?

ANSWER: Don't cross a bridge you haven't come to yet. Don't act in the now, with such confidence that there will be an end. I am not saying that, to create false hope. I am saying that, so that you may share with her the necessity of not predicting and, therefore, setting into motion a pattern that is inflexible and doesn't allow for a Miracle. Be very careful to stay with those who come with you in the Now.

QUESTION: I've had a hard time, as you can see. I've pecked through my shell and I found out that I had shell and two-thirds. And so I think many of us feel that way. I was adopted, and so you'll answer it was wonderful for me. But the first time I realized that, I let go of all the hate that I had all my life for the mother that let me go. And then the mother who raised me—like a tape you said one time—you said your mother always insisted on who you were. Well the lady who raised me, though we had drama, she always insisted that I was more than I knew.

I have done as you have suggested and I am at that gap. And I'm ready.

ANSWER: Then let go. You can't slip through it while your still trying. Go on...

QUESTION: We've had a relationship for a while, and we feel it is at exactly the right spot. Would you care to comment on the relationship for us, please?

ANSWER: Oh, indeed, you are at the right spot, but you will not be on it for long! I do not mean that you will then be on a wrong spot. But please understand that relationship is a movement that will require both of you to always be on your toes, always awake and alert with ever increasing opportunities to forgive. And, indeed, I want to stress the point, that forgiveness is not something you give to another. It is something that happens entirely within yourself and constitutes the abandonment of judgment. Judgment always comes into play as self-protection, to keep you from growing, to keep you from having to change, to keep you from experiencing your greater capacity to be aware. And if you will take advantage of each opportunity to not engage in judgment, and, thereby, forgive the circumstance, you will have the ongoing opportunity to experience revelation, wherein the true meaning of the circumstance, the God presence of the circumstance can register with you together.

QUESTION: Could you talk about guides and our relationship to our guides?

ANSWER: If you have a little brother, it is clear to you that you are the same, one with the other. But to him, you will appear to be as a god, as someone to look up to, as someone to revere, as someone to honor, as someone to learn from and be like, if you're halfway friendly with him. And, indeed, you can be there knowing that you are both the same and help him to realize that he already is just like you, to help him grow into a fuller appreciation of himself. Because in his standing in awe of you, he is asserting his lesser selfhood, you might say. Which you know isn't true at all.

And so your relationship with your guide is like a brother or a sister, because, indeed, your guide could well be female. Your guide is perfectly matched to you, this is true of everyone. Your guide is perfectly matched to you, so that there is the greatest ease with which you can dare to trust. So that there is the greatest ease with which you can feel safe. Because that is the environment in which revelation can occur. And I will tell you that in your experience with your guides you will learn how to be with your fellow man and woman. So that you can, with heart, dare to be that one who does not express judgment, but unending love, and who will not be afraid to say no, when it is called for, without judgment.

In your relationship with your guide, you will learn how to be in relationship Divinely, at a deep level of inner experience that will provide you with the guts to be that way with your fellow man. At the moment of conception, your guide is assigned to you. There is no law giver saying, "you go there and you go to him, and you go to her." You could say that it happens by a law of natural selection. There is a natural gravitation of that which harmoniously fits together. And that is the Divine order of things. This is true with everyone. And then your guide abides with you most attentively, looking forward to that time when you will reach out. Your guide cannot inflict his Divinity upon you—force it upon you. He or she must wait until you reach out, until there is a real, genuine desire. Nevertheless, no matter how many years it takes, there is uninterrupted, constant attentiveness to you.

And as I told Paul, the moment you become aware that you have a guide, or the moment you reach out, there is great rejoicing. And your guide immediately begins to work with you, from the other side of whatever blocks connection, to clear away the rubbish, you might say, that blocks it. And so even if you sit down and open up to communion and nothing seems to be happening, you may know that, indeed, there is great activity going on and that you are not alone in your reaching out.

It is very helpful in the beginning for you to meditate, to become as still as possible, because you are used to functioning on the ragged edge of the ego, which is quite dynamic. And, indeed, the voice of your guidance is like the "still small voice of God,” that you have heard of. And so, it is much easier to hear, initially, when you have managed to become still within yourself and the chatter of thinking is not going on. I am saying that it is easier to do it that way. Sometimes, individuals have the wonderful experience of being in an unguarded moment when your guide can say, “Hi” and you hear it. And that accomplishes the breakthrough that allows for more conversation.

Become still, that’s the first step. Every time you want to talk with your guide or establish contact, every time you sit down the first step is, become still. Don’t become so centered that you are in a state of bliss and forget to want to talk with your guide. Just become still, and then, one time only, express your desire in your mind for your guide to speak to you. And then, be still again—Listen. Simply abide in a state of curiosity and attentiveness, with no impatience. Let the attitude be “Thy Will be done.” Let your guide approach you in the way he or she knows has the best chance of registering with you, in a way that you will not turn away from or miss.

First step: Become still. Second step: Express your desire to have communication. Step three: Listen. And the most important step, the fourth is: Expect an answer. You can ask and you can listen ‘till you are blue in the face and if you do not expect an answer, you will not hear it.

You do not have to take lessons in getting in touch with your guide. There is no course you can take. There are no books that you need to get from the library, even though there are books there, I would encourage you not to read them. Because what we are talking about is something so utterly natural that it was established for you at the moment of conception. Why? Because the birth process and the, shall I say, sudden input of sensory data, is so sensually delightful, that one becomes preoccupied with understanding it—and forgets. And your guide is there to help you remember. So you have had an ally all along. And the whole intent of the establishment of this relationship has been to serve you in your awakening.

Now, there is a fine point here that I have never spoken about before, that I will share with you. People who are not presently incarnated, who are not yet totally awake, have guides. In other words, when you pass on, if, indeed, you do—because there is increasing, daily increasing likelihood of none of you passing on—IF you pass on, you find that guidance is still available to you uninterruptedly. Still supporting you in your awakening from the illusion of life and afterlife.

Now, I encourage you to practice these four steps. I encourage you to know that it is assured of success, because that is what the relationship was designed for. And I encourage you to let it happen.

Now, there is something that many people do when they are listening for guidance and that is, that they try to get so much out of the way and to have their mind so clear, so smooth, without a ripple of a thought in it, that there is no possibility for a conscious experience of communication. And so, you must allow movement to occur, even though because it has occurred, you can't be sure that it isn't you making it up. You are going to have to let the movement occur and risk the chance that it might be something other than you. And, indeed, it will not be completely clear to you that it is not you, somehow creatively making it up. For some period of time, perhaps as long as from three to four months, even though what you hear will be so helpful and so very different from anything you have ever come up with before.

How do you improve communication? By engaging in it. And how do you get past the doubts that will crop up now and then? You trust more. You lean into the listening more, instead of practicing doubt. And you hang in there, until, what I will call the line of communication has been secured, established in an absence of fear in you and then you will be able to hear, no matter how much your ego is kicking up. And it will not be necessary for you to become still in order to say, "Hi," and get a response. The time will come when you can be in the middle of an ego attack and still hear your guide. This comes from doing it, doing it, doing it. Logging hours, as it were, like a student pilot. It is also invaluable for you to write down everything you hear, even if it seems to be nonsense.

PAUL: Okay, and this is me Paul. He is reminding me of someone who had been talking with Raj and he had gotten in touch with his guide. And frequently during the first few weeks sometimes when he would be talking to his guide, all of a sudden, it would just be like he'd hear "2... 21... 93... 7..." just numbers. And then his guide would resume talking. And he finally said, "what's going on? Why are you doing this?" And his guide said, "I'm just giving you practice at listening unconditionally, listening without an expectation of what ought to be coming." So it doesn't matter whether it doesn't make sense, or it isn't what you thought it would be or ought to be. Write it down.

ANSWER: Now, I have said that you are bound to succeed, because that is what the relationship was established for. I want to ask you: If one of the lessons in the Course says, "Today I will make no decisions by myself," obviously you are going to be in touch with someone. You are going to be in communion, in relationship with someone and that lesson is there to remind you that you are not here to make decisions on your own. You are not here for the purpose of continuing to be separate and isolate, independent and authoritarian. And so that is another confirmation for you, that it is justifiable to become still, to desire to be in touch with guidance, to listen and to expect an answer.

The last thing I will share with you in this respect, is you don't have to be worthy in order for your guide to speak with you. You only have to say, "H-e-l-l-o-o-o-o." You are not used to being with someone who is unconditionally loving. You are not used to being with someone who will love you when you are at your rottenest. And when you are feeling the worst and reaching out because you feel the need not to be alone, you are not really expectant of an answer, because you do not feel worthy. You do not have to measure up to any standard in order to ask and hear an answer. Your motives don't even have to be lofty.

PAUL: This is me again. He wants me to bring out that my youngest daughter, when she got in touch with her guide, her reason for doing it was so she would have help on a spelling bee. (Laughter) Someone asks, "How did she do?" The amazing thing was, that she lost and was not upset. At that point in her life, she was a terrible loser. And so, we knew she was really in touch with her guide, because she lost and did not feel at a loss because of it, and came home telling us what her guide had said and how happy she was and it was amazing.

QUESTION: Could you help me understand how best to be a bridge between myself and my spiritual beliefs and the group that I speak to, that calls me, "mom," most of whom have a very fundamental Christian belief. And how important is it for me to study the Bible?

ANSWER: Don't be afraid of the Bible. It is a wonderful book to become familiar with, one which you will find will stand in support of your ongoing spiritual growth. It is not outmoded. Read it with "spiritual insight." And encourage your group to read it that way also.

Now, if you have picked up the newspaper and you have discovered that there is a new movie in town, you do not hesitate to share the delightful news with your group, do you? I encourage you to share ideas that delight you, and share them as though they were delightful, for the consideration of those in your group, but not as though they must embrace them—agree with them—not as though you must make them understand it. The more delightfully you present something, the more palatable it is for everyone.

Truly everyone is not bound by conditioning, and everyone is interested in that which reflects intelligence. And so share not only what is delightful to you, but share the fact that it IS delightful to you. This helps teach them that they can be delighted with what they learn. In fact, I will tell you that the more familiar you become with the Bible, the more you will be able to substantiate in terms that they are already familiar with: That God is a loving God; and that God is their Father; and that I AM the example for them; that they should look at their brother and see the Father in their brother, or their sister; that life is Divine. That is what the Bible conveys. And it is not necessary for you to home in on the hellfire and brimstone that can be found there.

What they need support in is an understanding that God is love. And therefore, the nature of life is love. There are ways to express everything that I have said this weekend and use the Bible as the basis for it. More than anything, don't see them as your enemy. As I said earlier, don't see them as that which will resist anything you have to say, else you will approach them as though they will be resistant, and they will feel it, and they will be uncomfortable, and they will meet you from where they perceive you to be coming. Whereas if you express ideas with delight, just as you would any other good news, and you let it lay, without trying to back it up or enforce it or knock it into their heads, you will find them remembering what you have said. It will pop up in conversation later, even if at the moment it doesn't seem to you that they have heard you, or that it has registered with them.

Fundamentalist students of the Bible also know what love feels like. So be the presence of love, and be real with them. It does not require particular sets of spiritual words. What it requires is a simple and genuine sensitivity that allows you to be present with them, and express the Truth in a way that allows them to feel touched, because there was no hidden agenda to what you were saying. And it is being touched that people want to feel. It is not a sense of difference that they want to feel.

QUESTION: Most of my questions have been answered, all the good ones, by other people, but I have one that I call...

ANSWER: One from the bottom of the barrel?

QUESTION: Yes, its trivial and left-over but I also feel the desire to ask. I'm at school and for a long time I thought I knew what I wanted and it involves going back to grad school and now I've been offered a job doing something that I never considered doing. I can't decide how I feel about it, I'm not getting a feeling. I'd like to know what I'm interested in.

ANSWER: It is most appropriate for you to take the job. And I encourage you to take it with the awareness that you could work on that job for a year and then go to grad school. That taking the job does not lock you out of your opportunity to further your education. I will tell you also, that your experience on this job will be extremely valuable to you, in helping to focus for you, just exactly what you want to do in graduate school. And so, it is in perfect order for you to take a break from school and take this job.

QUESTION: Boy, I'm really excited...

ANSWER: Your question is from the top of the barrel. (Laughter)

QUESTION: All my questions have been answered too. But, I just wanted to say hello to you, and thank you for coming into my life, when I really needed you and when I felt so alone. And I want to thank you for your sense of humor, cause you've made me laugh an awful lot. And I sure do appreciate that.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: But I'm wondering, the past couple of days...

ANSWER: May I interrupt for just a moment? It is important for all of you to know that that which is Divine and that which is Real, is not somber and "R-e-li-g-i-o-u-s,” where you can only whisper discreetly. Life is full of joy. And when I have pointed out that when you go within, your first experience of connectedness with what you Divinely Are is peace. The fact is that once you become familiar with that experience of peace, there begins to well up out of it, joy of such depth and such height, that you will be amazed. And this will be also, an experience of direct connection with your essential Being. And, therefore, with what God Is. So when you think you’re getting a little bit too happy with your spiritual growth, and your ego says, “cut it out, this is unspiritual,” tell it to go fly a kite, and laugh. Please continue...

QUESTION: Well, that was my problem! (Laughter) I’ve been cruising along, having a great time, feeling so peaceful and happy. And then the last couple of days my ego has caused some very heavy duty doubts. And I’ve been real unhappy, because of the doubts, about everything. About you, about this Course, about everything. So I guess I just say, “I’m not going to listen to you—ego”?

ANSWER: Yes. That is what you say. Sometimes you do have to tell the ego to shut up and then immediately give your attention to something else.

QUESTION: Do you have to do that, a lot? (Laughter)

ANSWER: It all depends on how feisty your ego is. As you remember, there was a point where I had to say, “Get thee behind me, Satan.” That was the vernacular of the day for the ego—for the devil. Yes, you can learn to enjoy putting the ego in its place, which is always second place, out of sight, not in your range of vision, because you don’t care to give it your attention. Learn to enjoy saying NO to the ego. And be alert, don’t be one who practices doubt. Doubt undermines your peace and does not contribute to your ability to be clear. Peace does contribute to your ability to be clear. So, do what is intelligent, don’t practice doubt.

The ego suggests to you that doubt is justifiable and a worthy thing to invest energy in. But you don’t have to agree with that suggestion, you don’t have to invite it in and entertain it in your mind. You can make the conscious choice for your peace. And you know what? You can be so irreverent as to choose for your peace and then ask whether there is any value in the Course. You can choose for your peace where your clarity is available to you and ask whether you need to read the lesson today. You can choose for your peace where your clarity is available to you and ask if whether there is anything wrong, because you aren’t feeling inclined to pick up the Course. And if you get an answer that says there is nothing wrong with it at all, dare to trust it.

There is something more dependable than the Course. There is something more dependable than anything outside of you. And that is, as I said yesterday, that included within you is an inherent capacity to recognize Truth. And if you lean on that and desire to know it, then you don’t have to “believe” in the Course, or “believe” in the Bible, or “believe” in any concept of God. Because you are leaning into that one dependable thing in you, which is your capacity to recognize Truth, is what will reveal God and your Divinity to you. It is already in you.

All of these things are here to substantiate what you will find to be True, if you go within and pay attention. You are the focal point. Your conscious experience of being divine, your being awake, is the focal point. You’re not here to serve a Course or a minister. You’re not even here to serve the Christ—I mean by that the Christ that I am. You’re here to discover that you Are the Christ. You’re here to discover that you are the direct, unalterable, indivisible expression of God. You’re here to discover it as an experience, so that you can be the presence and expression of it, serving no one outside of you.

The paradox of this is, that as you are in the process of Awakening, you seem to have to reach to something outside of you, because you identify yourself so completely with your current concepts of being a body and a limited mind, that is a result of “zinging electrons on neural pathways,” instead of conscious awareness or mind in which the experience of body is going on. Because of this, you have to reach outside of your present sense of things, so that you may join with one who is Awake and thus experience the support of the enlightened point of view that helps you take steps that would otherwise be scary, because you can’t see where that next step will take you, because it goes beyond your limited frame of reference.

When you go within and desire to know the Truth, you are automatically joining with that which is beyond your present sense of things. You are joining with the Holy Spirit, which I pointed out yesterday, was your Divine Being, held in trust while you dally with the ego, or a limited frame of reference. And when you connect with the Holy Spirit—the divineness of you—you are connecting with the Divinity of everyone. You are connecting with the Father, you are connecting with your True Identity and you access the Father’s point of view, which causes you to remember that that is your point of view! And you Wake Up.

I cannot stress strongly enough, the value of insecurity. Don’t protect yourselves so completely that you don’t let yourself into the insecurity of the “not-knowing” place. The place wherein you are willing to concede that maybe, everything that you see doesn’t mean anything that you thought it meant. It is not a valuable place to be stuck in. It is a valuable place that serves as a threshold to discovery and enlightenment, as to the True meaning of everything. And that threshold is within you. It’s called the centered place. To the ego, it is a place of great insecurity, but when you are experiencing it, it is a place of great stability, which initially is empty and that is why it seems so utterly peaceful. But that apparent emptiness is already filled with your Knowing. It is already filled with God’s point of view that is YOUR point of view, Truly. And it is full of discovery. It is full of revelation. All the practice of doubt does is keep you tied up in knots, so that you don't access the peace and, therefore, you don't access the joy. And you don't connect with your brothers and the Real meaning of All That Is—and I am meaning there, the world, the visibility and tangibility.

It is time for all of you to begin to discover the joy of everything you have been experiencing. And remember, a spiritual quest is a process of emerging into that which is ever more and more natural to you. It is coming Home. It is coming into that Awareness of Yourself that you have been used to, forever. Like the Prodigal Son, his home was his birthright. And the abundance was natural, but he said, "I'd rather have some of my own experiences. I'd rather take a look at all of this from a little bit different viewpoint than my Father's viewpoint." And there were challenges to it that he had never encountered before, because his needs had been met. And it satisfied his ego, because it gave him something to work for. Isn't that marvelous? And so he worked, he struggled and he managed to create within himself a whole ethic of thinking, that said, "It's worth it. I am finally having an experience that my Father didn't provide me with. I am becoming someone." And in all of this, he forgot his birthright. And because the strenuousness of survival was so great, it was seldom that he had a moment to remember the ease and the ever-present evidence of love that had always been there. Until things got so difficult, that he, as the saying now goes, got sick and tired of being sick and tired, and decided to head for home. Decided to stop practicing doubt. Doubt that maybe the Allness of his Home of his Father's gift was not ALL there was, that there was something more.

When you return Home, it seems like hard work, because you are coming from a frame of reference in which doubt is a staple of your daily diet. I am going to continue, because although you know the story, it needs to be heard, it needs to sink in. When the son was yet a long way off, but was on his way Home, his Father came out to meet him. This is what the Course means when it says, "God takes the last step." All you need is the little willingness to not be so sure that your definition of everything is the correct one. All there needs to be is a little bit of doubt in your expression of faithlessness. That is the only appropriate place for doubt to be practiced, relative to your own faithlessness. And when that little bit of doubt comes into play, you begin to remember. How? By virtue of the yearning I spoke of. A yearning, which, if you abide with it, will elicit clarification, because it makes you reach out beyond your present definitions, which constitute your current imprisonments. And the Father meets you. Why? Because the Father and All that the Father Is, meaning the Kingdom of Heaven, is what has been right in front of your face all along. And the moment you begin to get the tiniest crack in your eyelids, in comes the experience of what was there all along.

So remember, there is in you an inviolable capacity to recognize Truth. Lean into it and rely upon it and let the Course substantiate what you find there in

you. And let what I say, substantiate what is there in you. And if you hear anything from me, or if you read anything in the Course that does not substantiate what you find there in you, then disregard us. Therein lies your safety and your integrity and you will never give your power away. And you will Wake Up.

ANSWER: Well in two minutes I turn back into a pumpkin, and so we'll quite now while I may exit gracefully. Thank you all. It's been a marvelous stay for us, and I hope you'll want us to come back sometime.

Gathering In Dublin, Ireland –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENT: Good morning. I actually am not going to make an opening statement, because what will transpire with the questions and answers will make it clear why we are all here together. I will say this, you are not here to listen to me, we are here to be together.

What I will say will arise out of what you ask, and literally, what you will ask will arise out of what I will say, because this is a single event, an event of unity. And that is what I want to have clear from the outset.

I am here because you are here, just as you are here because I am here. And more than anything you are here because you have needs, you have questions, you have curiosities, that you feel are worth getting the answers to. And so, we will all of us together look at them and share in what emerges. I am most happy to be with you in this fashion this weekend.

QUESTION: I would like to improve my memory, for facts, faces and details. For some years now just can't do any.

ANSWER: I'm going to tell you to do two things that might seem contradictory. One of them is, I'm going to suggest that you get some little clear empty capsules, in which you could put a quarter of a teaspoon of allspice, and take that once a day. You might say that this is a bit of folklore, but the fact is that you will find improvement occurring, relative to your memory.

Now, secondly, I am going to suggest to you that it is well for you not to make a thing of great value out of your memory. Because unfortunately, the memory, one's ability to remember, becomes a means of holding one's world to what it was. And this is most detrimental when it comes to the people you deal with, because everyone is growing but you remember how they were last. And if they were particularly unpleasant, or if they were particularly insensitive, or if they were particularly stupid, in your opinion, that is the way you will approach them and you will tend to hold them to that, until they prove by new behavior that your memory of them is not a valid assessment of who they are.

Now, that is just at a social level, but there is a deeper level at which you will find it valuable to release your memory. And that is with respect to the definition of yourself that you have accumulated over the period of this life time. Because your memory of who you are, becomes a conviction about who you are. And you say "I am this, and I am not that. I can do this, and I cannot do that. I am what I am, and I cannot be different." And so, you become imprisoned, all of you do, become imprisoned by your definition of yourself, and your definition is maintained by your memory alone.

In terms of this lifetime you can therefore see, that an experience in your childhood where your teacher says, “You’re no good at math, never try to do anything with math,” sets a tone of ignorance about math for you the rest of your life, and you hold yourself to it and never explore your actual potential for grasping it. But there is an even a deeper and more important level of memory that needs to be abandoned, that has to do with, what has now become your ignorance of your Divinity, and your birthright as the direct expression of the First Cause, the Life Force, if you will, the infinite Intelligence that expresses Itself as all that you see, including you.

You see, the sense of personality that develops, and that you identify as you, and which you feel is an absolute definition of you, becomes the means by which you deny yourself access to the conscious experience of who and what you Divinely Are. And as a result, you live out this life as the definition of yourself that you have developed, and it holds you in a state of ignorance, that it is not your birthright to experience. In other words, the conviction as to who you are, begins to convict you and hold you imprisoned, so that you never bring into play curiosity that would carry you beyond your definition.

Now, you say, what on earth does all of this have to do with my not being able to remember so-and-so’s name. Part of your definition of yourself at the moment is, that you cannot remember. And also, part of your active definition of yourself is that it would be valuable to you if you could remember, and therefore, you have yourself in a polarized situation, where you are in a bad place that you can’t do anything about, but you need to be in a better place.

As we proceed through this weekend, you will hear more about who you Divinely Are. And it will be my goal to trigger your capacity to give yourself permission to experience more of who you Divinely Are. And that giving of permission will begin to undo the conviction you have in your poor memory, and you will begin to relax, because the tension of the polarity will be reduced and you will begin to find that your capacity to know what you need to know will be with you at all times.

One of the things all of you must understand is that I am not going to sit here this weekend conceptualizing you as a bunch of egos, or as a bunch of bodies, or as a bunch of spiritual ignoramuses who I will educate out of your ignorance. I am not going to try to improve your faulty humanhood. I am not going to give you techniques to improve your skills to be a better ego, or a better limited personality, but rather to reveal to you most directly, that right now all you are suffering from is a limited definition of who you are, and not a limitation that is a fact.

You can never become less than what Life has expressed of Itself—and when I say the word Life, I mean it with a capital “L.” You might become distracted from the conscious experience of what this capital “L” Life has expressed right there where you are, but you can’t stop being what It is Being. And you may believe that you are less, and act in a limited fashion that doesn’t characterize you truly, but it never alters who you Truly Are.

And so, this is not a weekend of self-improvement. It is a weekend of uncovering that Self of you that never went anywhere, that does not need to be improved, but does need to be more consciously embraced through the use of curiosity and the willingness to give yourself permission to experience who you Are Truly. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Right at the moment I’m making a big of a change in my life. I’m getting married, and my family is separating from me. And I’m having a lot of conflict as to whether I’m doing the right thing...

PAUL: I’m sorry, this is me Paul. I didn’t understand at all, could you say it over again.

QUESTION: Right now I’m making a big change in my life. I’m getting married and my children are separating from me. And I’m having a lot of conflict within myself and I’d just like some guidance.

ANSWER: I’m going to give you a very wise piece of information, that will help provide perspective to you. How many of your children will sit with you and hold your hand and be with you when you are sixth-five or seventy years old? You do not have to answer that question. It would be very foolish for you to govern your life according to your children’s point of view. Your new husband will be there to hold your hand and be with you when you are sixty-five, when your children are, with greater maturity, actively engaged with their spouses and families, and who will at that time know where ones allegiance appropriately should be.

So you ask yourself, shall I not upset my children, and perhaps be alone when I am sixty-five, where they are too busy with their things to spend time with me? Or shall I take a step that is fulfilling to me, that lays the ground work for me to have someone there who is devoted to me, and with whom I can share my life? It truly is no more complicated than that.

I’m going to ask you also, whether or not for some reason it is inappropriate for offspring to have to make adjustments? And whether or not it is at all wise for you to provide them with a false sense that they are not to have to make adjustments, by not providing an experience that will create a need for adjustment? When the fact is that life itself, regardless of you, is going to provide them with the opportunity to learn flexibility and humility. Keep your perspective clear here.

I haven’t over simplified a thing. This is the nut of the matter. And congratulations. That’s the end of the answer.

ANSWER: I will add that, if you ask a question, and you get an answer, and you have a “yes, but”—does everybody know what I mean by “yes, but”?--we will allow a “yes, but,” a follow up question relative to the subject that was asked about first. But we will not open it up enough to go to another subject, and this way it will allow the maximum number of people to ask questions. Okay.

QUESTION: I feel somehow or another I am being blocked from knowing and doing what I’m really capable of. I wonder if you could help me with that?

ANSWER: I can tell you that it is a fact. You are indeed, but you are not the only one in that boat. What I’m going to tell you is, that the fact that you are feeling it, means that you are up at a boundary, you are not still a mile off or ten miles off, where you cannot even tell that a boundary is there, and therefore you’re not feeling blocked or limited.

When any of you arrives at a point of feeling limited or blocked, it is because you are in the presence of that which is blocking you. You all tend to interpret the feeling as though something has gone sour, as though you have done something wrong, as though you have come to a point where you have less opportunity than in the past. What I am telling you is that if you have a fence, and you are five miles away from it, you are not in a position to violate it, or ignore its intent to hold you in. But when you are pressed right up against it, you are in the ideal spot for violating it, because it is really present to move past.

And so, I encourage all of you, when you arrive at this point of development—because that is what it is—I encourage you to recognize it as a point of development, rather than a punishment, or rather than something that constitutes a legitimate inhibitor to your forward movement. You are there because it is a time in which you can become free of that limitation, by moving over it or through it. It is a time for rejoicing.

It does however mean, being willing to give up some of what you have been familiar with. It means that something that has been valuable to you so far, is no longer valuable to you, like the shell around a chick, or a pair of shoes around a twelve year old foot that inevitably gets too big for the shoe.

And so, the first step here for you, is to be willing to interpret what is happening differently, rather than saying there must be something self-destructive about me, and then trying to find out what it is. I encourage you to say, “there is something healthy about me. There is a growth that has occurred that has brought me to a point of a boundary, that at one point was useful, but which I must now abandon else it will confine me and cause me pain.” You must take it as a point of development. Then, you must be willing to embrace possibilities existing outside your present sense of who you are and what is appropriate for you. You can never solve a problem, from within the level of the problem.

Now, if your very Being has brought you to a point where you are experiencing a boundary, a limit, a feeling of stuckness or of being blocked, then it means—because there is ultimate intelligence to your being—that you are at a point of being capable of moving beyond the block. It means that it is time for you to access and experience what is on the other side of it, else you would not even know the block was there. And the means of violating that block, must also be present, because everything about your Being is primitively and ultimately intelligent. And therefore, you cannot have come to this point unprepared, unequipped or unable to move beyond it.

And this is where curiosity needs to come into play. If this fence is seven feet high and you cannot see beyond it, you might conceivable—like the people in Columbus' time—think that there is nothing on the other side, that if you vaulted over it you would plummet into nothing. But you see, there is more intelligence to Life than that, and therefore, there is more intelligence to your experience of life than that. And so, let there be a curiosity to climb the fence at least, and peek over, realizing that what you are looking for is something beyond what you have experienced, perhaps a different career opportunity, an activity that you have always wanted to engage in but never could justify.

The point is, first of all embrace the fact that intelligence is the underlying nature of your Being. And then be curious to discover the intelligence that must be beyond this blocked point in your forward movement. Then let go of the inclination to blame yourself for this block. You know, it doesn't really matter who built the fence, as long as you can climb it. It doesn't matter whether YOU built the fence. It doesn't matter if your ego built the fence. It doesn't matter whether your parents built the fence. Be like a kid again, and use those legs and arms to have fun violating the fence. The fact is that whenever you violated your parents instructions, you always learned something. And some of the learning was GREAT, wasn't it?

Curiosity—an aliveness to life that doesn't honor fences, or the builders of the fences. Are you really too old to explore and violate fences and have the spirit of exploration? No! Doing that isn't for kids, it's for ANYTHING that's half way alive. And if the curiosity is expressed, the other half will be enlivened.

You must be like water streaming forth from its source. What if it does trickle into a hole? And where it had been moving forward at a rapid rate, it is now getting nowhere? Don't fret about it. Just be the welling up that water is, and it will fill up the hole and it will continue on. And don't ask yourself—because it would be as foolish for the stream to do it—what did I do wrong when I was trickling three miles ago, that has brought upon me this karmic experience of not getting anywhere? The water doesn't care! It knows of its welling upness.

So let yourself off the hook. Because the self-criticism or the self-doubt that you are bringing into play, is absolutely inappropriate, a total waste of time and wastes your energy. And you have more energy available to you than you are currently experiencing. And I don't mean that in some Divine way, I mean it in the most matter-of-fact down-to-earth way. You are frittering off energy with concern as to what you are doing wrong or have done wrong that has created this block. The only thing that is present—the focal point—is bringing into play the curiosity again. That is the issue. And the daring to explore

I'm going to take a moment longer here. If all of you, if all of you will take time to just pay attention to your common sense, you will find yourself coming into, what I will define as, Divine Knowing. What is the nature of exploring? Isn't it always exposing yourself to that with which you have not had prior experience? You climbed the hill to see what was on the other side, because you had never seen what was on the other side before. You go into space to experience what you haven't experienced before.

Don't be frightened to explore, just because it's the "unknown." You have great experience of exploring the unknown as children, all of you. Even if your parents said, "don't play with the light socket," and you had no idea why, you had no means of comprehending why, one way or another you got experience, you explored.

One might say that's a negative experience. But the fact is, that all of you in both positive and negative ways have explored, and then you grew up. And you got a hold of a definition of everything to your satisfaction and you said, "now I don't have to explore anymore. Now, I can settle down, sit back on my laurels and enjoy life." Except, that like the child's foot, your foot, the foot of your Being doesn't stop getting bigger. And so, when the shoe begins to get a little tight, you say, "Oh, what am I doing wrong"? And you find the nearest psychic to tell you what you are doing wrong. And which lifetime the wrong doing came in.

When the fact is that you are at a threshold of discovery. You are at the crest of a hill. You are at a boundary that it is appropriate for you to go beyond, because you've grown. You get the point. Everyone is too ready to feel guilty for something. Stop it! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Good morning. I had an experience a few years ago of feeling hurt by somebody, and somebody that I had been very close to. And after that, just feeling very angry towards the person, and any time I would be with that person all the feelings would come up again, and it recurred for years and years. And two years ago, I decided that well the only thing I could really do for myself, was to try and separate from that person, and not try and remake that contact. And try and do something for me and, at least, I suppose try and make a break with the person. I suppose I'm wondering, you know, I'm finding difficulty with that, as well as it has actually helped things a lot for me. But now I'm finding that I'm wondering, is it right, or is it wrong, or am I denying myself a lot of joy through... basically by separating from somebody. Really how am I doing? That's what I'm asking.

ANSWER: If there is one thing that all of you go home with from this weekend, I hope it is an awareness that that which is spiritually valuable is not different from utter common sense. It is not something lofty and other-worldly, but something that connects with the heart and the soul of you, right where you are.

If you had sat down after the break, and a tack had appeared on your chair, and you didn't see it, and you sat down on it, you would have stood up immediately. And you would not have asked whether you did the spiritually correct thing. And unless you were particularly ungrounded as a human being, you would not have remained on it, wondering whether the pain was refining your Soul. And that maybe there might be some value in not standing up yet.

If you are with someone who insists on being a thorn...

PAUL: Just a moment... Okay, I'm going to interrupt here. He said something else. (Paul giggled here.) Actually what he said is, "If you are with someone who insists"... he doesn't do this very often, he doesn't use a word that I'm hesitant to use. But he said...

ANSWER: ...if you are with someone who insists upon being a prick. Then the only thing you can intelligently do, is to get out of the vicinity. "To thine own self be true. And it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." It is not selfishness to be true to, and embody your own integrity. It blesses everyone for you to genuinely present the one that you are, with integrity. It is not your task to change anyone. It is your task to BE the expression and embodiment of intelligence and love. And if that intelligence and love is not relative to you first, then it must follow, as the night the day thou must be false to every man.

Spirituality and the concepts around it, can involve very lofty, but unkind theories. This is not the age for martyrs. This is the time not to confirm to another his ignorance by not objecting to it, by not indicating that there is another way. This is not the time for sitting silently, while you are being abused, without saying "no," because your silence confirms the all rightness of the abusers behavior. And so, you are not being a friend, when your behavior confirms for another that his inappropriate behavior, isn't inappropriate.

Now, you do not have a situation where you kept your mouth shut and said nothing. But when you said something and there was not a recognition of the truth of it, and there was not a willingness to change, then you had only one choice. Remove yourself from the tack. That's wisdom. It's spiritually wise. You honored yourself. And you know what? You honored this other one. Because you said, "I cannot accept this behavior as natural and normal as thing to embrace without objection. You did not by your action try to change the other one, you left the call for change to arise in himself.

You did well. And now, I want you to acknowledge it within yourself, and let go of any sense of guilt for not somehow having unending unconditional love, that was able to tolerate abuse, and thereby, somehow perhaps effect a change. I'm going to ask you a question. How on earth can a change occur, when there's never any indication for a need for change, not even YOU change, if there's not a recognizable call for it.

You were right on target. I'm going to say acknowledge the integrity of your actions. And I'm going to tell you that it is appropriate for you to feel good about your being congruent with yourself. And now indeed, get on with your life, and don't drag your tail between your legs a moment longer. I say that most lovingly.

QUESTION: This is the utmost part. I feel that it wasn't actually somebody abusing me, but it was the way I reacted to a situation, that I'm tending to blame myself for it. It was my feelings, and it was the way I felt. And this person, who is not a he but a she, was just getting on with their own life, and it was my reaction which was my own stored up pain, or whatever.

ANSWER: I'm going to be very frank with you. You are lying to yourself. Not maliciously, but the simple fact is, that your reaction was appropriate. You do know what intelligence is. You do know what integrity is. But you have been put in a position, where it is suggested to you that your recognition of intelligence and integrity is just an opinion, perhaps one that is even old fashion, not modern, not taking into consideration the times in which you live. And that is bullshit!

I am giving you permission to acknowledge that the way you feel is indeed, intelligent and reflects integrity. And whether this other one recognizes it or not, is irrelevant. I cannot join you in your spending another moment calling your integrity into doubt. In frustration you have, I will say, gone beyond your simple recognition that what has integrity and what is intelligence, and indeed there was some reactiveness. But your fundamental response was full of integrity. And I want you to not be quite so willing to call it into question. This is very important. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: While I like my work and lot and enjoy what I'm doing, I'm wondering is my work enabling me to fulfill my purpose in life? And in particular, is my approach to my work helping me to achieve that?

ANSWER: Yes and yes. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It seems I have to let go of somebody that I felt I was guided to be with. And I have a lot of pain over that right now. I'd like to know what you have to say, please.

ANSWER: It is the big "Y" word, Yield. The call here is to yield to this change. Yield to it with as much trust as you can bring into play. Yielding to one's good isn't always recognizable as yielding to good. But you do recognize that this needs to be done. And you are willing. Let there be a willingness to have enough humility to yield to it without fretting and fussing about it. This will allow for the most graceful forward movement, with the least amount of remorse and resentment.

Again, we have a matter of coming up to a boundary. And indeed, Paul has had the experience of asking for guidance, and getting the guidance, and seeming to find that the guidance brings him up to an uncomfortable point of growth. And he says, “a hell of a good guidance is. I thought guidance was suppose to make me feel good, not give me problems.” But guidance is always that which promotes your growth. And whatever might be out there, that seems to inhibit that growth, will soon become uncovered by virtue of the growth. And it doesn’t mean that the guidance was poor guidance. It means that the guidance has worked, and the growth has occurred.

And then one must learn to yield gracefully to that which the growth is unfolding. Because what the growth is unfolding is fulfillment of purpose that simply goes beyond your present concept of fulfillment of purpose. And when it is gracefully yielded to, that fulfillment of purpose begins to register with you, and it’s always recognizable as fulfillment of purpose, even though it wasn’t what you expected, even though it might not be what you could have even imagined. But because there is this inherent integrity to Life, with a capital “L,” and therefore an inherent integrity to your experience of Life, with a capital “L,” you will always find that, rather than going into totally foreign territory, you have come closer to Home, with a capital “H,” and it’s recognizable, it’s rememberable, you might say, as what it is, even though it had been so far from your mind that you had no imagination of what it might be like.

Let there be a willingness to yield with humility, entrusting yourself to a Movement of your Being, that must necessarily embody dignity, integrity and fulfillment of purpose. And you will tend to slip into the experience of fulfillment of purpose more quickly, with less effort. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It’s taken me half my life, possibly, to get to this stage of enlightenment, and some hard times to go through as well. And I’m wondering does one have to go through these hard times? Or more precisely, do my children have to go through the same thing, or can they live in an enlightened way from a very early stage in their lives?

ANSWER: Struggle is not inherent in awakening. But when it is resisted, because one is holding on to what is familiar, it can’t help but be uncomfortable. You do not need to assume that it will have to be as rough for your children. But you must also realize that they come into this lifetime with their own ignorance’s, you might say, expressed as willfulness. And wherever they tend to be willful and unwilling to yield, they will find themselves running into difficulties and unpleasantness.

However, you have the opportunity to share with them a point of view different from the one you grew up with. And thus, you do not present to them a teaching, or a training, or a conditioning that would contribute to their suffering, of the sort that contributed to yours. And to whatever degree you are able to, shall I say, convey to them a willingness to be curious, as I have said this morning, a willingness to explore, and a willingness to not judge themselves when they do come up against limits, you will significantly reduce their encounters with the sort of distress you have experienced. That's the end of the answer.

ANSWER: I'm going to take a moment to discuss Love. And I'm going to define love as the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. Real, with a capital "R." The willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R," in each and everything. And of course, the necessity is to start with the closest thing, which is you.

Now, if you are going to be willing to recognize that which is Real—Divinely Real, flawlessly Real, the Presence of the Movement of God, or of the Life Principle, whatever you wish to call it—then you are going to honor yourself and act with integrity—as I have also discussed this morning. And you will look at your fellow man, whether it is a mate, or whether it is children, or a parent, and you will recognize that which is essentially Real in them, whether they seem to be expressing it or not. And when they are not expressing it, you will not stand in support of that expression. Now, that's a negative way of putting it, that's the negative approach.

The positive approach is, that in recognizing what is true of them you are able to give—in the case of the children, and in the case of a mate or anyone else—positive reinforcement of their capacity to be living without being in a state of reaction to life, but rather have a curiosity and an expectation that what will happen will identify fulfillment of purpose. I know that there are times when there is no way you can embrace what I have just said with any sense of reason at all. But the fact is, that if you are able to be in any circumstance whatsoever, and have a willingness to say, "the way I am experiencing it, does not represent the truth of it," then it becomes reasonable to have a desire to know what the truth of it is. And when I say that, I mean, what is God's truth of it, what is the Reality going on here that seems so utterly distorted?

That curiosity to see beyond the way it appears, is the willingness to recognize that which is Real. In your willingness to perceive beyond the appearances, you align yourself with truth, the conditioning that blocks it is temporarily weakened, because you are not responding to it, and the penetration of truth can occur. And you are able then to express those ideas which illuminate what could be called the solution to the problem, that everyone really is wanting to experience, because no one likes the distress of their ignorance, and you become a transformational presence.

And so, with your children you have the constant opportunity—when they are feeling bound, limited and frustrated—to reflect back to them without reaction, that they are the Presence of Intelligence, because that's what God is—you don't have to say that, but you can reflect back to them that they are the expression of Intelligence, that everything about their life—if they will take a half way reasonable look at it—will confirm to them that it is life affirming, and that it tends to function in an orderly manner naturally. As you express these ideas, they begin to approach their limits, in the way I have suggested that all of you approach yours, with more curiosity and more confidence that there is a life affirming and fulfillment identifying, likely result to it. And they will then begin to move more gracefully through their life. Why? Because you have reflected back to them something of what they truly are, rather than the helpless little physical organism that it looks to them like they are, that has all kinds of limitations.

So you see, love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything—not only doesn't join with, doesn't join in agreement with someone who is expressing their ignorance, it also has the capacity of inspiring an awareness of what is Real about them.

Now, this can get tricky, because you could come to the conclusion that I am talking out of both sides of my mouth, because now it sounds as though perhaps you might really be able to become responsible for someone else's growth or salvation. You must remember this statement, "a mind that's changed against it's will, is of the same opinion still." That is an unalterable fact. It is not your task to change someone else's mind. It's only your task to present the information that allows that other one to change his or her mind, when that one arrives at a point of willingness to do it.

And the sooner all of you recognize this, the sooner each of you will become self-responsible. And the sooner everyone else in your life will be put in a position of being self-responsible for themselves, which is the healthiest thing that could happen. Because when you withdraw from the game of control and manipulation, even for the great benefit of others, it means the others who have played the other half of the game, and have kept you busy being responsible, have the opportunity to become self-responsible and experience the joy and the freedom of it. And so, your withdrawal from the game is a blessing for everyone. If you stop taking care of someone else, as though they were unable to take care of themselves without your beneficent presence, they will feel that you have suddenly gained confidence in them. And you will be surprised to find out how quickly they become confident.

Everyone at one time or another asks, in the middle of a crisis, why does God let this happen? Why doesn't Jesus, in all of the power of his Sonship, wave his hand and wipe this out? I have told you this answer, "a mind that's changed against it's will, is of the same opinion still." And all of you are experiencing exactly what you are choosing to experience, either by insisting upon remaining ignorant of your birthright, or out of fear of a sense of overwhelming responsibility if you did acknowledge your birthright.

The one thing I cannot do and the one thing God cannot do, is change your mind against your will. And I do not labor under the misapprehension that somehow I ought to be able to do that, and therefore, I do not suffer a sense of inadequacy, when you ask for help, but insist upon your problem. Because you say that what the answer is, is not reasonable. It boggles your mind. It is too far out, or it is too simple.

What am I saying? I am trying to convey to you, join me. Treat your children, treat your mates, treat those in your experience the way I treat you. Don't take on a false sense of responsibility for them, and then frustrate yourself to the point of exhaustion when everything you do, accomplishes nothing. Recognize that just as it is with you, no one else is going to change their mind until they find their own reason for doing it. And then to the best of your ability, provide the inspiration or the information or the insight that helps allow for that shift of consciousness to occur, and leave the rest with them. As I said, that will be experienced by them as a vote of confidence in them.

Yes, yes, yes, there will be some diehards who will insist in reinstating the game, and not letting it go, and trying to hold you to your part of the role as the manipulator, the one who cajoles them into acquiescence. And if you withdraw, they may get really angry with you for not being there to play the game. But those are the diehards.

The majority of those you deal with, will feel your behavior as a vote of confidence in their ability, and they will take hold of the situation competently in the way that they could have all along, except that you had this little dance going on of manipulator and manipulated. And you got to the point where you danced the dance so well that you forgot that it was, I'm going to say, immoral to play those roles, and you both got into an involvement in whether the dance was a waltz, and how well and how gracefully did you do the dance, when you shouldn't have even been out on the floor.

I cannot become responsible for you, and you cannot become responsible for each other. But you can become so congruent with yourself, with who you Divinely Are, that you practice love, you recognize that which is Real in you. You have the experience of God with you, as the very Presence of you. And that illumines for you the fact that if it's true for scroungy little you, it must be true for scroungy little neighbor. And all of a sudden everyone who wasn't special is the Presence of God, except it's not an intellectual grasp of that fact, it's an experiential one. And then you begin to treat them as though that's true, which means you stop trying to take care of them. And because you aren't trying to take care of them, they don't have to protect themselves against your beneficent care. And they relax and communion begins to occur, and unity, and harmony, and fulfillment that's really felt.

I cannot stress this strongly enough this weekend, your divinity is to be found in your humanity. And that which is spiritually ultimately true, will be found in your simple common sense. Everybody is looking everywhere except the place where it is present to be found, which is right here and right where you are.

Don't worry we will explore this further, but right now it is time to fill your tummies.

QUESTION: I just need direction. I have a problem around relationships—male, female—and I have a lot of conflict at the moment. And the conflict brings up a lot of fear and the ego mind comes into play, I suppose it's a matter of not trusting myself. I get, you know, all my life as a child there's a lot of fear around, I blame myself for everybody, and I don't know if I'm still doing this in my adult life. But it's just caused me a lot of hurt in the moment.

ANSWER: Indeed, the difficulty is that you feel that you can somehow be responsible for another persons happiness or unhappiness. And mostly you feel that relative to other peoples unhappiness. Others have communicated to you that you have been responsible for their unhappiness. It was an inappropriate and unfair burden to be placed upon you. And in your childhood you had not the perspective and means by which to understand that each one is responsible for his or her own happiness.

You have brought with you the feeling that if there is any distress amongst those that you have a relationship with, it must be something you have done, or neglected to do. I encourage you to dare to drop that idea. You experience as much of your good as you will let into your experience. And this is true of everyone else. No one can truly hold you responsible for their misery, because their misery is a result of their limited perception. It is not a statement about you, but a statement about themselves. If you in your daily activities embrace your good, letting it in, you experience it, even if there are others around you whom you are not in a strong relationship with, are miserable. It is only when you get into a relationship, an alliance of some sort, that you begin to take on a feeling of guilt for their misery or distress.

Now, you need to free yourself, and you need to free them. You need to free yourself, by neglecting to take on the false sense of responsibility for their happiness. And you need to release them by doing that, so that they may take responsibility for the amount of good they will let into their experience. I will tell you something, most of the guilt that you take on, is a guilt that everyone else can see isn't yours, a responsibility that everyone else can see isn't yours.

And I'm going to encourage you to join the crowd and recognize yourself that it isn't yours. You want to be loving, but you think that being loving requires you to make the road smooth for others, and not to ruffle feathers, or to make waves. I'm sorry but if you are going to be the genuine expression of God that you are, you are going to be quite original. And in your originality you are likely to make waves for others, who have a particular confined concept of who you ought to be and how you ought to behave, so that no demand is made upon them. Don't deprive the world of you, of the gift of you, by wanting to make sure you don't upset anybody.

Relative to male, female relationships, I encourage you to take the first step of beginning to love yourself more, and to not be so quick to make an adverse judgment against yourself, or to feel that you must somehow be able to do better in order to make someone else happier. Again, this is not a selfishness. It is an expression of integrity that everyone is blessed by. Most of all you are blessed, because it lets you into your experience of peace. And when you are experiencing your peace, everyone else experiences you experiencing your peace.

In your daring to love yourself, in your daring to be patient with yourself, in your daring to give yourself the benefit of the doubt, you will find yourself relaxing greatly. And you will find yourself, shall I say, drawing into your experience, those who value that, and who will blend with you. When I say you will find yourself drawing this into your experience, I do not mean it in the sense of controlling it into your experience.

But tell me if a puppy comes up to you, and it's tail is wagging like mad, and it is panting and looking up at you with imploring eyes, doesn't it draw a friendly response from you into its experience, because it is so desirable. And when you are at peace? you are fully desirable and you will draw into your experience, without an coercion those who love that which is desirable and value it. So love, loving yourself is the first step. The peace that follows that is what sets into motion new relationships or transformations of relationships that you are in.

And again, if you realize that you are not here to make waves or not make waves for others, but to genuinely be you, you will find yourself being able to let go of this habit of taking responsibility and feeling guilty about how others are feeling. You are on the right track and I am simply confirming it for you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi, I just want to ask, I have an overactive thyroid gland and I want to ask how I'm sorting that out on my doing as I think I am.

PAUL: I'm sorry, this is me Paul. I didn't understand the very first thing you said.

QUESTION: I have an overactive thyroid gland.

PAUL: Okay, and the rest of the question is?

QUESTION: I want to know, am I clearing this block? Am I healing it? Do you understand?

PAUL: Yes.

ANSWER: The answer to your question is yes. And there is something specific that I want you to understand, and that is that you body has the intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. In spite of the fact, that it appears as though your body came into existence independent of you, and your Soul may have entered it to leave at a later time, the fact is your body is the visibility and tangibility of your presence. And your bodies intent, as I said, is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. Therefore, it is the intent of your thyroid to identify it's function perfectly.

Now, when one misunderstands the body, and begins to see it as some sort of organism that is temporarily hosting your Soul, it is inevitable that you will begin to question whether your body is a good host or not, to begin to doubt it, and to begin to feel that you must protect yourself against it. And then, in this state of aggression that you are in, because to protect yourself against your body is a form of attack, you create such tension, if you will, that indeed the function of the body seems to become distorted. And you say, "aha, it is my enemy, I was right. And now I will have to use one means or another, either physical or spiritual, to whip it into shape, to get it to behave properly." And this attitude I want you to change.

It is imperative for you to understand—and I will repeat it again—that it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. If you will begin to embrace that fact, and modify your attitude toward your body, so that it is in harmony with that fact, you will abandon the stance of attack. And the tension and distortion that comes from that stance will fade and you will begin to find the thyroid or any other function of your body beginning to identify perfection. You will call it a healing. But you see, it will not be the body that has been healed, but the mind, you might say, the awareness, in which a shift from defense to an attitude of love and honoring has occurred. That's where the healing is.

There is a great need to love the body for it's divine intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. In that attitude of love you will see your body manifesting greater and greater harmony of function. You are already on the right track, but what will seal it for you, what will make it gel for you in terms of healing is the realization that what you are doing is not coercing an uncooperative organism into obedience, so that you can live and function a little bit longer comfortably. The total healing will come when you truly embrace the fact that it is not the intent of your body to function at odds with you, and it is the attitude of distrust of the body and the fear that follows that distorts your experience of its proper functioning. This is an important thing to understand. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've been studying The Course In Miracles for about a year. And some days I feel very good, I feel I'm applying the techniques and that things are working very well. And other days nothing seems to go well, I seem to have lost the energy and drive and it doesn't seem to be working as it should be. Could you help me with that.

ANSWER: There are two things. One is: Your experience is much like a student of the piano, or of any other instrument, and some days there is a lot of enthusiasm for it, and other days one could care less about it. And there is a necessity for some self-discipline to keep at it, not to avoid a penalty, not to be disobedient, but as a practice of, I'm going to call it, on going intent. That is one aspect that is needed here. The other is, I'm going to encourage you and everyone else not to be so arrogant as to think you understand the Course or how it works. You literally, don't have enough information in order to know whether it is working or not.

Now, most of the effect of the study of the Course lies in the undoing of your ego. The ego which is your acquired personality, the acquired sense of self, that is based upon your reaction to your world and your world's response to you. The ego is a defense mechanism, therefore, it cannot be dealt with directly, because it will win. It knows how to defend itself perfectly. And so the Course triggers the weakening of the ego without the ego being brought into play, and therefore, for the most part you don't know when it is working, because if you were aware of it the ego would be aware of it.

And so I encourage you to trust the fact that I'm going to tell you now, that the Course functions whether you understand it or not and most often works when you don't understand it. Waking up is not an intellectual exercise by means of which you arrive at a clearer understanding that will promote your clarity. It is not intellectual understanding that will constitute the threshold of awakening. Do you want to know what it is? It is a spontaneous connection with your heart, that constitutes the threshold of awakening.

Everyone no matter where they are on the globe if they have experienced education of any kind tend to pick up the Course or any other spiritual process, and they think that it is an extension of the educational process. When in actuality it is a means by which your attention shifts from the intellect to the heart, from thinking to the level of experiencing. The Course is an amazing document, simply because it teaches without your learning anything.

Whether it seems like it is working or not, I encourage you to persist. Whether you feel energy for it or not, I encourage you to persist. It is like meditating. One meditates and one finds himself filled with thoughts, not quiet at all. And one says, "I am not a good meditator." And yet the meditation is working, and in the release of blocks in the body, in the release of these blocks of energy, there is accompanying images and thoughts. And so, when the images and thoughts come, you do not throw in the towel, you say, "Ah, it is working, I will come back to my point of focus in the meditation and let the thoughts go." The time will come when the meditation brings quietness, but in the initial stages it seems to bring about the exact opposite. And if you do not know that that is the effect of the meditation, you will say, "I give up."

Likewise, because the Course undoes the structures of the ego while the ego isn't looking, you are not going to be aware of the undoing, except as you discover that your perception has changed, even though you cannot pin point when it changed, and it is amazing to you that you have changed your mind. If indeed, awakening, if enlightenment is going to happen, it is going to lift you beyond your present sense of everything. And therefore, it is going to uncover a new perception of everything. And therefore, you are not going to be able, at any point, to anticipate what the new perception is, so that you may use it as a goal. That is also very important to understand.

And so working with the Course is not a process that is goal oriented, because there is no way to know the unknown before it is revealed. This is why trust is such a fundamental element of the Course, and such fundamental element of the process of enlightenment. If revelation is really revelation, it will be the uncovering of that which you knew not before. So how could you have a goal to achieve it? And yet there must be a means of providing the arena, or environment, or attitude in which the revelation of that which you have not known before can occur most gracefully and most easily. That arena, that dynamic is trust, trust coupled with desire, not desire for something known, but desire to experience the more of yourself that is present to be experienced, then you are presently experiencing. And then letting the influx of it occur.

So if you can even intellectually grasp that you have no way of knowing whether studying the Course is doing any good or not, you will at least be able to have enough curiosity to continue for a long enough duration that you might have the opportunity to discover that shifts of perception have occurred beyond your power of decision, that you could take credit for.

So, I encourage you to hang in there. And if it seems as though nothing is happening, and you want something to be happening, and you are feeling discouraged, recognize that that is so much tommy-rot, and persist. Let the miracle of it happen.

Something else I have said before, especially relative to A Course In Miracles, is that you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way in. Not as though you are blind, what I mean is, you will feel your way in, and feeling is a capacity of Soul. So, you will feel your way in with your Soul. And it won't be an intellectual head trip at all. Once this connection with your Soul and your experience of moving into the clarity that constitutes the undistorted perception of Reality, called the Kingdom of Heaven, you will then find yourself having marvelous new things to share with everyone. And then you will find yourself using your mind to find the means of expression for it.

But your mind will come into play after the fact, as it were, as a means of sharing revelation that has occurred, as a means of sharing what you have come to know directly as an experience. It will not be the sharing of what you have come to know through the process of reasoning, and thinking, and figuring out. Everyone has the cart before the horse. You think in order to know, but you need to feel in order to know, and then think in order to express what you know.

And so, if you think that doing the Course is going to be a means of heightening your mental skills to think clearly and come to more correct conclusions, you misunderstand the Course. And when that doesn't happen, you can end up with the feelings you were feeling, asking the question that you asked, because it feels as though nothing is happening that is meaningful. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm in a medical situation, where I'm in a life threatening condition and I have not a great deal of time to live, according to the doctors affirm. I was wondering, is there some field of energy, or is there some current of energy that is right under my nose—which I feel it is—and that I'm not tapping into? Is there something I'm not doing, or doing, that is preventing me from entering into that field of energy.

ANSWER: The answer is yes, there is a field of energy that you are not tapping into. It has been with you all along. The way you tap into it, is to ask it for help.

Now, it is not necessary to use the words to describe it that I am going to use. I am going to call it the Presence of the Holy Spirit, you may simply call it the Energy of Life that knows its indestructibility, and which knows that you are inseparable from it, even though you feel as though it may be separate from you.

The key here, is in the invitation to have the help of the clearer point of view, you might say. Instead of feeling that you are somehow personally responsible,—again, by virtue of some correct thinking process, or some precise turning of a combination on a combination lock—instead of thinking that and feeling a personal sense of responsibility, it is really essential for you to dare to let someone or something else in, which you can be in partnership with, but not in control of.

It is perhaps easiest to speak of this energy as the Holy Spirit, because most everyone's sense of the Holy Spirit is that it is an intelligent and loving presence that expresses only the will of God, and which therefore, must necessarily have your best interest at heart. Indeed, it is the intent of the Holy Spirit to uncover and disclose to you your absolute Divinity.

Physically speaking, you are doing everything that can be done, and you are doing it appropriately with a good attitude. Do not stop doing that, but make this invitation. And let there be a sense of really joining with the Holy Spirit that has the intent to uncover to you your perfection, your birthright, as the direct expression of God.

The key again, is to let go, abandon a sense of isolated self-confidence, or of an isolated responsibility to be personally responsible yourself. I cannot express strongly enough the fact that no matter how infinitely separated everything seems to be, it all expresses an indivisible unity of purpose that is the embodiment of, or manifestation of an indivisible Life Principle, or God. Therefore, absolutely everything that exists, exists for the identification of that unity, which necessarily means the identification of your health, of your perfection.

It is the sense of being isolated and separate from everything, that needs to yield to a willingness to join with something else. It is wonderful that your sense of this something to join with, is of that which is an energy, because energy to you does not have physical properties, it is more intangible more easily conceived to be infinite, unconfined. I am conveying to you, that if you will also embrace in your concept of it, the fact that it is love and that it is intelligent, and that it has an intent to reveal to you your perfection, you will embrace it more fully in its function. And in tandem with it, you will be able to let go of the private sense of responsibility for your healing.

Again, it is the joining, being in unity with something that is essential to the healing. And if you don't hear anything else this weekend other than the fact that it is absolutely and totally reasonable to expect complete healing, if you don't hear anything else but that and remember it, you will have remembered the thing that is key for you at this point. Any arguments that present themselves to you that say this is unjustifiable, unreasonable, merely expresses a poor outlook and nothing else. And a poor outlook can always be replaced with an improved one, one that again, provides the environment in which the shift of perception can occur that allows you to perceive your body functioning perfectly. There is nothing unreasonable whatsoever to the expectation of complete healing, no matter what the illness, or deformity, or injury might be.

I will also make very clear to you, that I am not presenting false hope. That would not be love. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I just wanted to ask you about experiences I have of depression and? as a result of...

PAUL: And what as a result?

QUESTION: As a result of getting over certain addictive behaviors, like drink and things. And just sort of to see, to try and get some answer of how to move on from sort of?

ANSWER: Please do not misunderstand my answer, I am not here to sell books, but there is a book I am going to recommend that you get hold of as quickly as possible. It is called, "A Return to Love," by Marianne Williamson. It was published within the last few months, in the States. You will find this extremely relieving, mind you I did not say extremely helpful. It isn't so much help in coping that you need, as it is relief from having something to cope with. And you will find this book significantly beneficial, in terms of promoting the spontaneous release of what is actually anger over having to sacrifice, when actually you are only sacrificing a dead weight, as it were, unnecessary baggage in your back-pack.

The real need is to look ahead and not back, not as a means of avoidance, but rather as a means of having your attention where your life is happening.

And there is one additional thing, it is perhaps the most important thing. You must realize that you do not have to do this alone, that you are surrounded by help. In this case, I am referring to guidance, I am referring to the active presence of the Holy Spirit, I am referring to the presence of your capital “S” Self, all of whom are standing with you, in terms of your release and relief. And literally, the uncovering of your joy to be alive. It is the sense of isolation—which is a false sense, no matter how real it seems—it is the sense of isolation which contributes to, shall I say, the justification for your depression.

And there is one very powerful point for you to understand. It is incorrectly thought, that depression is a physical phenomena. And I will tell you that it is absolutely mental. And that it will persist as long as you can find justification for it, and you find justification for it, by not finding justification for your joy. “There is no reason to feel good.” “I have no justification for it.” As you say those words, as you think those kinds of thoughts, you give the word as it were. And the word becomes in effect a law in your experience. A new word needs to be given, which says, “whether I know what it is or not, there is justification for my joy.” You see, you do not have to claim a position that you aren’t in. You do not have to say, “there is justification for my joy.” It is a more honest thing to say, “even though I don’t know what it is, there is justification for my joy.” This allows you to feel honest. But the making of the statement does allow something new to happen, it does allow a certain curiosity to become activated to experience this joy, that you have or feel no justification for.

Now, I encourage you each morning as you arise—and you may do this as many times throughout the day as you wish—but I encourage you in the morning when you arise, to consciously within yourself, acknowledge that you are not alone. Certainly it is reasonable to you to embrace the fact that your higher Self must be present, even if you’re not aware of it, because you are present. You may not be able to justify at this point the active presence of the Holy Spirit, but you can dare to assume that it might be, and embrace it. And say, “I embrace you both, and I ask you to help uncover my joy to me.”

To whatever degree you bring into your conscious awareness the idea that you are not alone, it will be more difficult to justify and substantiate depression. And by virtue of your invitation, which is a form of joining, you will find an influx of unjustifiable joy. I encourage you to practice this.

And I will tell you also, that even if you did not do this you would get past the depression. But there is no reason for you to move through it slowly or strenuously. And so, I encourage you to help facilitate its speedy demise, by the method I have just described. And again, don't forget to get hold of that book. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I just want to say how wonderful it is to be here today. And just going back to that last speaker, that book, "A Return to Love," I don't know if it's available here in Ireland, but I have a copy of it, and I certainly would love to pass it on to him.

And going back to me. I think I feel very much like I want to thank the Presence for a lot that has happened to me recently.

ANSWER: The Presence says, you are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'm just wondering now if I'll be able to cope with everything. I just feel as though there are a lot of changes coming in my life. And I just want to ask how I can receive more guidance? And if you could say something about listening?

ANSWER: You know the saying, "Birds of a feather flock together." Why do you suppose the Presence bothers to be with you at all, any of you? Because you are part of the Presence also. And as long as you are not consciously aware of It, the Presence, if you will—which could also be called the Brotherhood/Sisterhood, or even more appropriately, Family—is not in a position to experience Its Wholeness consciously, if part of Its infiniteness is not conscious of Itself, then part of the Whole is unavailable.

And so the Presence, the Family is constantly joined with the intent of reawakening in everyone who is dreaming dreams, their fully conscious capacity to experience Reality without distortion. And so, the Presence is with you, because you are the Presence also. This is so very important to understand, else you will assume that poor little insignificant you is somehow graced by some great giver of good, that you don't truly deserve. And if you do not feel that you truly deserve, you will not stand ready to receive in full. You get that!

So don't be overly thankful. In other words, don't be thankful from a place of unworthiness. Very important. Dare to be grateful, with a more conscious awareness that you are the Presence also, and your fully illuminated awareness of yourself as the Presence is the reason why it has been with you. In this way the scales come into balance, and confusion cannot last long.

How do you listen? Well, very easily, you don't talk and you don't think. If you aren't talking and you aren't thinking, you are listening. It really is that simple. If you aren't talking and your aren't thinking and you aren't asleep, then you are simply experiencing a state of awareness, of alertness, of attentiveness, that is listening. And when your listening has no goal to it, when no effort of will is brought into that simple attentiveness, something happens, an influx of awareness that goes beyond your conditioned thinking. It is inevitable! It is unavoidable!

Remember all of this is utterly simple. And you are not required to go beyond simple common sense. And the more you value simple common sense and come down to earth, and the more Real you are with yourself regarding spiritual matters, the more you will find the Divine interfacing with you, right here, and right now. And in that interface, transform you and your perception of your world.

There are four simple steps to connect with your guidance, no matter how many complex methods you might have read about.

The first step: Is become still, which you can do through meditation, or self-hypnosis relaxation techniques, anything that helps you to arrive at relative quietness. It does not have to be absolutely centered meditative state. So become still.

Second step: Mentally express the desire to have communion or communication with your guidance. Express that desire once at any given sitting, and then get on to the third step. Don't ask over and over, "are you there? Are you there? Would you say something? Please say something." Express the desire and shut up!

The third step: Is called, listen. Don't return to your mantra. Don't return to your self-hypnosis, relaxation technique. Just abide in the quiet you had reached before you expressed the desire for communication, and be attentive, nonwillfully, which means without impatience.

And the fourth part is: Expect an answer. I guarantee you that the moment you express the desire to know beyond your best thinking and you ask for help, the help is provided. There is always an immediate answer, whether you hear it or not. And together with the immediate answer, the Holy Spirit, or your guide, or I, work to remove that clutter which blocks the experience of the communication. So you may know that at any time you desire guidance it isn't really you on this side of the void banging your head against nothing all by yourself. You are immediately, actively joined with.

There is a statement in The Course In Miracles, "Infinite patience brings immediate results." Why? Because it is the absence of impatience—the willingness to be completely at peace in the moment you're in. And why does it bring immediate results to be fully in the moment you are in? Because that's where the Whole of Reality is present and available to be experienced. Fifty percent of it isn't back in the past, and forty-eight percent off in the future with one percent of it available in the moment. All of it is present in the moment of conscious experience that each of you is always experiencing. And the absence of impatience is that state of peace, in which everything is present and available to you. And you are not distracted from it by time, which impatience immediately puts you in. It puts you in time and its confinements.

I promise you it is not any more complicated than that. I will tell you also, that you don't have to become worthy of getting guidance. And your motives for getting guidance don't have to be lofty. The only prerequisite that exists is that you must have arrived at a point of expressing the desire. What happens when you express that desire? You abandon your self-sufficiency. You abandon your attempt to be self-governed. You abandon the attempt to be independent and separate. You must understand that when you do abandon your attempt to be separate, you do not sacrifice your integrity, you come into a fuller experience of it. And you do not open yourself up to "negative forces." You do not become vulnerable. You know when you become vulnerable? It's when you attempt to stand separate from everything in a state of denial from your Wholeness.

And so, your willingness to become still and express the desire and listen, expecting an answer, that is the means by which you rejoin your Family. And in that conscious intent, which you could call an alignment with Reality, the ego definitions and belief structures that have blinded you to who you are, are weakened, they begin to break down and penetration of them that can occur, which you call connection with the Holy Spirit, or your guide, or me, or God. But what it really is is you having the opportunity to experience the fact that you are the Presence, as well as the Presence that you have identified as the Presence with a capital "P." And in that equality you have the opportunity to experience the influx of your birthright as an experience, and not just a wonderful idea.

If there is a God—and I'm not suggesting that there isn't—but if there is a God and you are the direct expression of God, then you have always been the direct expression of God. You have, in other words, always been the ultimate, even when in your daydream you have imagined that you are less and you are striving to become more, and that there is a great deal of labor necessary before you can achieve it. Remember those are just ideas!

If a drunk on the street corner told you that you had to achieve it, you would dismiss it. When the church says it, you believe it. And you don't realize that from either source it is nothing more than an idea, which you may take within yourself and measure against your deepest level of knowing, and accept or reject, depending upon whether you feel it's real congruence or not.

If you adopt the idea that awakening is a process of becoming worthy, which must be accomplished by this means and this means and that means and that means, and that it will take a certain amount of time, and you believe it, you will act out your belief. And you will say, "I have done it for two months and therefore I can feel good about myself." And then you will say, "I have done it for two years, that is magnificent, I feel much better about myself," and so on. And by that method you do come closer or to a place where you will give a new word. In other words, you will provide, what I'm going to call a new belief. You will say, "I feel, because of my great effort that I am now worthy," and you will let in the experience of worthiness. The point is that the worthiness was yours all along, and that all the effort that was expended was unnecessary, except as a means of getting out of the belief that it was necessary.

Again, if there is a God and you are the direct expression of God, and if the direct expression of God is God expressed and not something different from God, then you are the ultimate right now and have been all along. And it is not essential for you to labor any longer under a lesser definition of yourself, that you must labor to rise above. Now that is a fact, it is flawless logic. And sometimes you can afford to use logic—that's c-a-n can afford to use logic—as a justification for letting go of your thinking processes, which you have engaged in to keep yourself safe, and risk the chance that God is all, and that you really are the direct expression of God at this instant, the ultimate.

So, let yourself into the silence within yourself. My instructions were, “go into your closet and pray unto the Father, which is in secret.” And that meant, pray to the Father which is in the silence. Pray to the ultimate of you that is the active Presence of God, which is available to you in the silence that occurs when you are not thinking or talking. Go into the silence so that God may fill you up with an illumination that uncovers your Divinity to you, and makes you a most wonderful and marvelous Presence in the world that is not unconscious of who it is. So that you become the place where God is visibly present.

Now, it is so easy to become spiritually irrelevant. And when I am using these words I am not talking about some other-worldly experience. I am talking about being the Presence of God right here in Dublin, right in your houses, in your relationships with each other. It is not “far out,” that is another word you give. You make it seem unattainable, because it never occurred to you that it was relevant to here and now.

And so, you haven't practiced your Divinity, I do not mean as an exercise, but as the simple expression of your presence here and now. How do you know how to be the Presence that you Are? Again, by becoming still, expressing the desire to be in communion with that which does see your Divinity and can help disclose it to you, listening, and expecting an answer. It is so relevant that you can listen to know what is appropriate when you are doing the grocery shopping, or cleaning up the garage. “What should I do first? Should I do it today?”

Listening can become delightful, when you realize that answers always simplify. If you seem to have thirteen choices and they all seem to be good, and you cannot decide which one is right, and your problem is one of confusion about the thirteen, if you will listen, the one that is appropriate will become clear, and the problem is gone because you can act with decisiveness. Very often you will not listen for guidance, because the problem is so complex you assume that the answer will have to be more than you can possibly understand, when the answer is always simplifying. Remember that! Answers are always simplifying.

And Divine guidance will always be relevant to where you are, and to the needs you are presently experiencing, even if two years from now you are much more spiritually advanced, and would never have occasion to ask the questions you are asking today. I will tell you something: Love meets you right where you are in the language of your present perception. It does not make you stand tall, or be more than you can be, before it blesses you.

I trust that I have made listening sound reasonably desirable. You are all conditioned to strive and struggle for your good. I want you to know that it is suppose to be fun! And encourage you to dare to engage in it with a light heart. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. And at the moment I feel drawn in a few different directions, as regards life's purpose. And I was wondering if you could help me get more centered on the purpose of my life. Thank you.

ANSWER: Indeed, I am going to encourage you to take the options you have available to you, the ones that are obvious to you at the moment. And in your minds eye list them,—if there are five, one, two, three, four, five—then in the quietness within you as you see these listed, ask for the three most appropriate ones, the three that are most on target for you, to be illuminated. That may for you, not mean that they will become brighter and stand out from the rest. It may simply mean that they begin to vibrate in your minds eye. The point is, that your desire to know will be responded to in a way that will be recognizable to you.

Now, indeed, you could ask which one is the appropriate one, but if you are not use to doing this sort of thing, that would perhaps be perceived by you as a more important question to have “the one” identified. And what if you goof? And so, you can not play games, but you can lighten up and be creative in your method of approaching an answer. If you ask for the three that are most appropriate, you know that this is not an ultimate question. And then you can ask which of the three is the least appropriate, least on target. And when that one becomes apparent to you, you can then ask of the remaining two, which one is most on target for me. In this way you will have eased into the final answer in a way that allows you to be comfortable, or become comfortable with the listening process.

In the beginning, I mean by this, the first three or four days of my conversations with Paul, we had a wonderful conversation on the first night. And then the second night he sat down and he wondered was that just a fluke, will it never ever happen again, etc. He was uptight, and he did something that was very helpful. He first of all asked a simple question that could be answered “yes” or “no,” instead of asking an open-ended question. Then after hearing the answer “yes” or “no,” which put him at ease, he then asked a question that—for lack of better words—he could provide the first part of the answer to. “Is it appropriate to do such-and-such?” And then he would provide the words, “It is-s-s...” and in his mind he would let it trail off, “it is-s-s...,” and then he would let me pick up by saying, “not appropriate, or appropriate.” By having that little activity in his mind, it helped him bridge his doubt, if you will, and did not make it such a serious silence that it immobilized him mentally. So, be creative in the way you approach your questions in the beginning.

Now, I am not going to tell you which of the options you ought to take. Because you are well at the point of being able to go through these steps that I have described and arrive at a clear perception of which is most appropriate for you. And it is an excellent time for you to begin to actually practice the trust necessary. You are ready. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’d like to know how to improve my financial situation at the moment. And I’d like some help with it.

ANSWER: This is not the answer you would like to hear, and this applies to every single one of you. This is an absolute fact. Each of you has exactly as much as you can justify having. exactly, not one penny more and not one penny less.

How can you have more? Find a way to begin to justify having more. You want to know something? It never is really a matter of not being able to justify more, it is that you consciously practice justifying less. You know why you can only have what you have? “I don’t have a good enough job. My salary isn’t good enough. I can’t get enough hours to work. I can’t find the job. The economy is terrible,” etc., etc., etc. And all of you lock yourself into the exact amount of abundance that you have.

And I chose that word on purpose, because even what you call lack is just a limited amount of your abundance. If you start thinking of it in terms of your abundance, either a little bit of your abundance, or more of your abundance; you will find it, at a gut level, justifiable to embrace more of your abundance. But if you begin to talk about lack, along with all your definitions of what lack is, you will begin to treat it as though it is a real thing that you must overcome, and which you probably will not be able to overcome, because it is a thing of such reality and such substance—albeit, a little bit of substance—that you are stuck. Stop using the word lack, start using the word abundance and be honest about it. “I am experiencing a very little bit of abundance.”

Mind you, I am not presenting little mind games here for you. At the bottom line, you have as much of the experience of who you Divinely are and as much of the experience of your birthright, as the Son or Daughter of God, as you give permission for. And therefore, your salvation truly lies in learning how to give permission. And if saying, “I live on a very little bit of abundance,” if you speak with that kind of honesty, you will do something about it, because it’s embarrassing, to only do with a little bit of abundance. It is obviously nonsensical. And so, you will embrace something that is more sensible, and you will say, “Why, why am I doing that? I am going to agree to embrace more of my abundance.”

Now, we spoke earlier about experiencing unreasonable joy. And I want to bring the use of the word unreasonable into play with the word abundance, “unreasonable abundance.”

God, in the Movement of Creation that He/She is, does not withhold any of what He/She is from that Self-expression, called Creation. Therefore, the Totality of what God Is is expressed and embodied. Therefore, if you are the embodiment of that Movement of Creation that God Is, all that God Is abides in you and is your birthright. And if nothing of infinity is withheld from God’s Self-expression, then infinity is your birthright. And the fact that you have your Source in God, is the only justification you need for embracing your abundance.

This means, that it will not be a reasonable abundance, one that you can say, “I put in thirty hours at work this week at five pounds an hour, therefore, my income can only be six times thirty pounds.” You will say, “I am very curious to see how the universe, or the Life Force, or God, or the Holy Spirit is going to manifest my abundance.” God is not limited by local conditions. Therefore, your experience of wealth or health is not confined or governed by local conditions, whether they’re economic or physical—what you would call physical.

This is not “pie in the sky” theory I am talking about. If you will begin to practice it, you will begin to find your needs being wonderfully met in an unreasonable way, Divinely reasonable, but humanly unreasonable. The necessity is, to give permission for you to experience your birthright, based not on your sense of a poor humanity, but based upon the Divinity of you, the Divine One that you Are.

What does this mean? It means that if indeed, you are working at a job that does not pay well, your opening up may be experienced by you as a promotion, or as a realization that it’s high time that you quit this job and get a new one that reflects more of your integrity, or it may mean that somebody comes to you with an offer, or god knows what? And I mean that in a positive sense.

The point is, to stop justifying the limitation based on your current human reasoning, and being willing to embrace unreasonable abundance, just as you would embrace unreasonable joy. Do you see what this does is, it brings you into a state of equilibrium within yourself, in which you are not energizing doubt and fear and self-protection. And in the absence of that, the penetration of what is true about you can occur in your awareness, registering with you as a shift of perception, and what the Course calls a happier dream, an improved dream that helps you arrive at the point where you are willing to wake up completely. I know where of I speak. And what I have told you here is not metaphysical gibberish or theory, it is very practical truth.

There was a point at which the clunker of a car that Paul and Susan were driving, quit on them. And they were on their way to a workshop. And they pulled into a car dealership to see about having it repaired. And at that time, I told them that it was time for them to get a new car. They had every penny to their name to make this trip, they were not in a position to buy a new car as far as they were concerned. But nevertheless, I told them that they would go home in a new car, and I pointed it out to them. It was eight o'clock in the morning and finally at two o'clock Paul stopped telling me why he couldn't get it, and decided to ask me how it was that I saw that he would get it. And so I told him. And it was simple. And he did go home in that car, that day.

Now, they got back home, and whenever they would walk past the living room window, they would look out at this car. And finally Susan asked Paul to ask me, why this car, meaning why such a nice car? And my answer to her was, "what level of poverty would you rather have established?"

It is a true point, each of you establishes your level of—I'm not going to call it lack—limited abundance. And if an opportunity for more really comes along, you will argue against it, especially if there is any lingering sense of unworthiness in you. You must grasp the fact that your affirmation of limitation, although it doesn't limit your Real abundance, absolutely limits your access of it.

Now, I do not tell you this so that you can kick yourself around the block for the next three weeks for your utter stupidity, but rather to convey to you that you are not the victim of circumstances, but of a word that you are giving, which you are giving because you are ignorant of the fact, that you have another choice. And I have shared with you what the other choice is, and so, you may know that you have full justification for practicing something new.

Ask yourself if you really would like a couple of million dollars. If you stop and think about it, you will realize that people will crawl out of the woodwork asking you if you could please help them in their dire circumstances. Do you want that? This is the way the thinking goes. You know that you would like to have abundance, but it's going to put you in a new circumstance. And do you want what goes along with it? I am not suggesting that you should not want it. But indeed, your expansion and growth will call for a new level of clarity, a new level of expressed integrity and it can feel good.

I say these things so that you might grasp more clearly just exactly how you justify not having more. "Too much responsibility. Well, I'll have to learn how to say no, I don't want to do that. I don't want to have to be a clear expression of Principle and Intelligence. I'd rather experience a little bit of abundance, at least I can handle it easily."

Literally, the only thing you need to do is to give permission and stop justifying less. It's time for every single one of you to begin to embrace your birthright, not only in terms of joy and financial abundance, but also in terms of the exalted or elevated or expanded experience of your integrity, and your ability to be the clear presence of intelligence, and more.

A Movement of Awakening is occurring around your globe and you are part of it. And I am encouraging all of you to dare to be curious about it, and embrace it, and let it lift you. And you can do this by releasing your current definition of who you are, and your current definition of what everything is, and practicing love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, Divinely Real.

And starting with yourself, loving yourself, recognizing that your body is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality, and that it's Intent is to identify you perfectly. And that your body and your world are the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of Creation, and are therefore present to identify unity rather than separateness. So that you no longer need to feel that you must protect yourself against your body and your world. And become curious about its Divine meaning. And in so many words, giving yourself permission to see beyond your present sense of everything.

Now, more and more of the Family, the Brotherhood and Sisterhood of God, are awakening, and there are fewer and fewer dreaming dreams and helping to hold together a limited perception of it all. Fewer and fewer available to substantiate misperceptions. This means that there is a spontaneous movement of awakening occurring. And if you did not know it, you could feel it as just an unsettling in the world, or in your individual lives. But I am telling you what is happening, so that you might not become defensive against it, because it is unsettling, but rather engage your curiosity with an awareness that the Movement must necessarily be expressing intelligence, and therefore, will be absolutely congruent with your well-being.

ANSWER: That in a nut-shell covers the essence of what we have discussed today. And I look forward together with you to explore what we will unfold tomorrow. I mean you and me, because as I said when we started today, this is an expression of unity. I have enjoyed being with you today.

QUESTION: For some time now I have been feeling unsettled, perhaps six months, with disrupted sleep patterns. And I've been wondering is my higher-self trying to tell me something, and am I being thick and not realizing what it is. I'm on leave of absence from my work. I feel perhaps I shouldn't be in Ireland, or in Dublin anyway, at the moment. Could I have some guidance on this please?

PAUL: This is me Paul. You say your on a leave of absence from your work?

QUESTION: Yes.

PAUL: Is that because of the disturbance?

QUESTION: No, no. That's been going on for a few years. I've been on leave for a few years.

PAUL: I see.

ANSWER: It is not that you are thick, it is rather that there is movement beginning that you are feeling. And the call is for you to bring a greater level of curiosity into play, not in order to force clarity, but in order to have your attention present where clarity is beginning to emerge.

Unsettling is the intelligent and constructive first step of change. If you wish to plant a field, you must plow it, you must unsettle it in order to prepare it for a productive yield. The tendency on everyone's part is to assume that that which is unsettling is something destructive. The reason being, that once you have gone through a period of education and you have arrived at certain grasp of what everything means, you expect to be able to settle down and not be unsettled again. And this is itself an ignorant expectation, because you never stop growing.

God the Life Force, Life Itself never stops, but continues to unfold itself anew. You must all learn to make friends with change. You've always had to deal with it, whether you thought you ought to have to or not. If you will make friends with it, embrace it as an intelligent and constructive part of your life, then instead of digging in your heels and resisting it and resenting it, your attitude will be receptive and you will be able to be curious.

Now, yesterday I shared the four steps for getting in touch with guidance. The first step being to become still. The second step being to express the desire for communion. The third being to listen. And the fourth being to expect an answer. Now, curiosity fits into the second step, it is the equivalent of the second step, the expression of a desire. Curiosity is a spontaneous unthought expression of desire to know something, even though you don't know what it is you want to know. Curiosity spontaneously occurs when unsettling begins. They are actually simultaneous.

Now what you must understand is—and I will express it in a different illustration—what you perceive to be a question, is the leading edge of an answer. You tend to think of a question as something entirely separate from an answer. But the reason that a question emerges in your mind, is because there is a movement of some sort, an unsettling of some sort in your mind that occurs. And you begin to say, “what is going on”? It is spontaneous.

Now, you have all been conditioned when you have a question, to then actively figure out the answer. Specifically answering your question, but relative to everyone else, if you will ask the question once, if you will feel the question once, and then simply become attentive with patience,—as I mentioned yesterday—without impatience, you will be present as the leading edge of the answer comes more fully into your range of vision, and you can see what the whole thing was that tickled your brain in the beginning, and caused you to feel a question, a sense of questioning.

Questions occur to you, you do not create them. They occur to you because a Movement is happening, a Movement that will inevitably be one of expansion or growth. The key is to learn to recognize that little tickling sensation that causes a question to occur in your mind, recognize it as the leading edge of a wholeness that is coming into view. And then, instead of trying to figure something out for yourself, be attentive and patient as the rest of it comes into view.

This Idea of perhaps not being in Dublin, is also something you have not come up with yourself. It is something that is revealing itself to you. And you feel the rightness of it, even though you cannot intellectually justify it completely. I encourage you to let this continue to present itself to you more clearly. It truly is not necessary for you to figure anything out here. And I encourage you to let this be an experiment, something that you are willing to explore the potential of, by not jumping to conclusions, and quietly, peacefully paying attention as the rest of the answer comes to view. Indeed, you already know much of what the conclusion will be. You are already feeling much of it, but you are not being able to say “yes” to it yet. Well, it is not necessary for you to say “yes” to it yet. When all of it has come into view, you will easily be able to say “yes” with full commitment to it.

What I am encouraging you to do, and everyone else, is dare to embrace the possibility that there is an inherent orderliness to your then lives that is governed by something which is absolutely intelligent and absolutely loving. And entrust yourself to the movement, without feeling that you must have absolute control over every single step of it. Now, that might seem to be a little bit scary. But I will tell you something: You do not all have to try this on a major issue in your life. You can start out with little things that are not life changing issues. And in this way begin to have the experience that allows you to relax because you find that it is truly dependable.

You have not been a slackard. You have not been procrastinating. You have not been avoiding anything. There has been wonderful order. You will find that the sleep patterns, the disturbance in your sleep patterns will diminish as you begin to embrace this unsettling as an intelligent and constructive thing that is happening. And you begin to nondefensively be curious about what it is, as you let it unfold itself, at its pace.

It doesn't matter what anyone else thinks about what you are doing or not doing. What is extremely important here, is for you to remain congruent with what you deeply feel is appropriate, as you continue to listen. You continue to listen, so that you might move with the Movement. I'm making a distinction here, between honoring what you deeply feel is appropriate, while you are listening for further understanding of what is appropriate, and doing what you feel is appropriate and not listening any further. When you do what you deeply feel is appropriate, and you are not open to further direction, then you become willful, and you become out of sync with the Movement of your fulfillment. And that doesn't work, and so it is uncomfortable.

I'm telling you that what you have been doing has been appropriate, I want you to honor that in yourself while you continue to listen, because the rest of it will unfold. The rest of it will reveal itself to you if you are paying attention. And then you will be on target, and there will be harmony that everyone will recognize. And those who may have been distressed in the process, will afterwards say, "I'm so glad you stuck to your guns and followed through." That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: For some time now I've been trying to get in touch with my inner guide. But I haven't succeeded yet. I wonder if my expectations get in the way. And in my meditations, I often see white blue dots, becoming bigger and smaller, continuous movements. I observe it, but I don't seem to be able to move beyond it.

ANSWER: I'm going to put it this way, if you have expectations they certainly do get in the way. I encourage you to the best of your ability, without a feeling that you must do it perfectly, to let go of expectations. Now, you can use the blue dots and the movement that you experience, as a distractions, if you will, from having expectations, by just abiding with the experience of the movement of the dots. Just let your goal, if you will, be to be at peace, having no goal whatsoever other than just being conscious.

Now, what I want you to remember is, that you guide is intent upon connecting with you. And so, this is not a private endeavor that you are engaged in, it is a mutual endeavor.

The other thing that I want you to do is, to allow movement in terms of communication to occur. I do not want you to try to be so perfectly still, that you can hear. Because in attempting to be perfectly still, you are not allowing anything to happen. And yet if you are going to experience the communication, you are going to have an experience, something is going to happen, there is going to be activity. Initially it is tricky, because you want to be sure that you're not getting in the way. But if you manage to keep everything so perfectly still, that you know you're not in the way, you also make it impossible for anything to happen.

And so, you are going to have to let the words form, even though you're not sure that it's not you forming them. You are going to have to let the words come, and risk the chance that it might not be you. And by virtue of allowing this, you will experience the connection and communion. And through doing it continually, on an on-going basis, it will become clear to you that it is not you making it up.

So, I encourage you to allow words to form, without trying to control them in any way, and without trying to control the situation in any way. Do your meditation and simply abide with the experience of the dots and the movement. Don't try to make sense out of them, just learn how to be present with them. Just learn how to be present in that meditative state. Everyone is so conditioned to get an intellectual grasp of everything. But when you are listening into your heart, or when you are listening into the void, when you are listening into the silence, you are allowing an experience of the heart or the Soul to occur, one which will mean something. But the meaning will not be given to it by your thinking, by shall I say your rational mind. The experience itself will be complete, and therefore you will know what it means, then you will use your rational mind to express what you know now to somebody else.

Again, remember that your guides intent is to connect with you also. And so, if you are not controlling anything in your meditation, you may know that failure is not inevitable, because you have a partner in this, who has the conscious intent to connect with you. Lighten up! Be easy about this, because it is utterly natural. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In one of your former workshops—I heard the tapes about that—you were speaking about The Course Of Miracles as being the only document that actually doesn't hold this planet in contempt. Now, I am following a discipline in a school for philosophy. And what we are working there with is, as far as I understand, is revealed scriptures, like the Upanishads and the Bhagavadgita. And working with that material, I find it also considers the Creation as perfect and complete, and life is very joyful and this planet and use of the body is very useful. So, I don't find that Creation is hold in contempt there. Could you elaborate on this subject please?

ANSWER: Indeed, ultimately all of the religions—and it was the religions as opposed to texts that I was referring to—all religions hold the world indeed to be the Creation of God, but ultimately it holds that man is a sinner, a flawed expression of God. Not that God created something flawed, but that the creation has become flawed. And that ultimately the goal is to unite with the Godhead and what has happened is, that everyone has assumed that God—because God is a Spirit—must be very different in nature from the world which is perceived to be matter. And so, the process of reuniting with the Father, has become a process of denying the world. And it is in this sense that the world is held in contempt.

Of course, the most damaging, the most deleterious aspect of this, is not that the world is interpreted to be material as opposed to spiritual, but the fact that conscious human individuality, you, are deemed to be flawed by nature almost. And that therefore, you exist in a state of unworthiness that you have nothing to say about.

You are like the sons and daughters of a King, who for whatever reason, have become separated from your father. And you are unaware of your birthright, and you think that you are inconsequential, and that you must earn your birthright. And that because you are not the son or daughter of the King, and therefore, are not part of the lineage, the Royal lineage, that you are always in a lesser position.

Again, something you can do nothing about, because you cannot revise your conception.

This attitude of unworthiness, I will guarantee you, is an acquired attitude. At birth not a single one of you experienced any sense of unworthiness. It has been taught to you.

Indeed.

QUESTION: Are you acquainted with the Vedantic tradition with Upanishads and...

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: As far as I know, as I sat in my question, we learn through those scriptures that we are perfect, that we are the Self. And in your answer so far, I hear you denying that.

ANSWER: No, you are quite correct that that is what it states. Now, again, it was not texts that I was referring to, it was religions. What is in texts and what is practiced by the people is not always the same thing. But again, let me clarify the fact that I did not say that the Course was the only book, the only text that dishonored the world, or denied it. I said that religions, there was no religions on the face of the planet, meaning no group of individuals who practiced oneness with the world—if I may put it that way—as the Presence of God. Do you understand my distinction?

QUESTION: Yes I do.

ANSWER: In that particular workshop, I was addressing the fact that many students of The Course In Miracles are beginning to interpret the words in the Course as a denial of the world. And I was making it very clear that this is a misinterpretation, and that if indeed it became crystallized as a belief embodied by the Course, then the transformational and exalting purpose of the Course would be lost in a habit that is centuries old. It was my purpose in bringing it out. It is very important for this tradition of denying the world, because it cannot possibly express Spirit truly, this cannot continue, because it is what inhibits everyone from waking up.

Now, again, I wish to reiterate, that awakening is something that is occurring. Those who have been embracing an illusion and treating it as though it were real, the numbers of them who have done that are dwindling, and there is not the strength present any longer to reinforce the dream. And so, around your globe and beyond it, those who have been experiencing ignorance as to the real nature of the world and of themselves, will find revelation beginning to spontaneous occur. And the purpose of the Course is to facilitate that, substantiate it and confirm it for those who have been feeling it, but haven't been able to find confirmation for it.

The more of you who know that a Movement is afoot, a Movement on a universal scale you might say, the more of you who know this will begin to look at events in a new way, with more curiosity and less resistance, and that will promote the graceful process of waking up, of experiencing enlightenment.

And I'm going to take a moment to touch on another issue. Those who have spent a lifetime engaged in disciplines of one sort or another, that were meant to lead to enlightenment, will perhaps have some difficulty when some young whipper-snapper who has put forth no effort whatsoever, wakes up right along side of you. The ego will tend to get in there and be huffy and puffy, that it's not fair.

The parable of the laborers where one starts at the beginning of the day and works throughout the day, and another one comes late in the afternoon and works perhaps an hour and a half. And at the end of the day they both get paid full wages, expresses this truth. Those who have worked the whole day, those who have devoted their life to a discipline that indeed does lead to enlightenment, those who have done this have been like the leaven that leavens the whole lump, that has broken up the ignorance, the dream, because you have withdrawn from the dream, on purpose. You have laid the ground work for it becoming more and more difficult for everyone to stay asleep. And so, indeed, it will seem as though there are those who have not paid their dues.

Thanks to everyone who did engage in the discipline, because they have lessened the density of the dream. And understand that although you may have worked very hard, and it had taken a great deal of conscious intent, the one who hasn't is as worthy of awakening effortlessly as you are worthy of awakening by virtue of the great effort put forth.

And I'm not singling you out, this applies to everyone, because in one way or another everyone has disciplined himself or herself to be responsible, or practice intelligence rather than unintelligence, and to practice love rather of hate and so on, in the face of many challenges. And your children will come along and wake up without ever having learned these very practical and wonderful things that have meant so much to you. It is important to understand this.

I bring this out because awakening is occurring, the process of awakening is occurring. And there are those of you in this room who will be actually faced with having to set aside the feeling of indignity at someone else making it without putting forth the effort that you have. And it will be a shame for you to get hung up on it, or to waste even two seconds feeling the unfairness of it, when you are awake and you should be enjoying it. And I am talking now about that point, or that experience of awakening, which you will not be alone in. At that moment you deserve to be able to embrace it without any resentment, because somebody else made it also without putting forth the effort. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Could you say a few words on the meaning of the death of Christ?

PAUL: The death of Christ you said?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: To put it into perspective, it was for me, an experience very much like what Paul is experiencing at this moment. It was a “suffer it to be so now” because it fulfills purpose, even though, for ME, it fulfilled no purpose. I mean that in the sense that it did not, shall I say, promote my growth or exalt me in any way. I was—and this is where the likeness is to Paul—I was allowing myself to be the place in which fulfillment of purpose was occurring. It was not meaningless for me, but the meaning came from the willingness to love enough to let that which fulfilled Divine purpose in penetrating human ignorance to occur.

I will be very frank with you. I was only on the cross for a very short time. Indeed, at the point that everyone else believed I went unconscious, I simply removed myself and stood on a nearby hill and watched, watched as everyone dealt with their perception of what was happening, and grew.

I remained separate, shall I say, from the body until about two hours before the stone was removed from the door of the sepulcher. When I “returned” to the body, there was what I will call an upgrading of the body, molecularly. In other words, the density with which I had held it—allowed it to be seen by everyone—was released, so that the body of light was unhidden. And in that surge of radiance, the imprint that everyone has questioned for so long on the Shroud of Turin, occurred on the fabric. It was not intentional. It is just what happens.

I remained there in this fully illuminated sepulcher—illuminated by the light that I was—I remained there for approximately two hours before I left. I want you to understand that for me the whole procedure was experienced in perfect peace. I also want all of you to understand that I never ever said, “My Father, why hast Thou forsaken me?” I was not in the state of ignorance that would have conceived such a question. Just as Paul is experiencing perfect peace as he engages in movements and expressing the words that I am sharing, I was also in perfect peace. You must understand, that if I really thought anyone could kill me, I would have died and there would have been no Resurrection and no Ascension.

It is very important for you all to understand this, because there is no one guilty of my death, because I did not die! There was not a moment in which I was unconscious, nor unconscious of myself. And even when I was apparently separate from the body which was on the cross, there was still present where I was, that which identified me, although you would have said it was rather intangible and spooky.

Now, I did say something very important, which to this day has not been grasped, and to this day I have not shared. I said, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.” That was not a statement absolving them from guilt, because they couldn’t do anything to me that they could be guilty of. When I said, “Forgive them for they know not what they do,” it meant, they don’t realize that they aren't doing anything. And I said, "Forgive them," so they could hear that they were innocent!

I will tell you a very sad thing. For two thousand years now, everyone has been feeling guilty for something that never happened. And everyone, in one way or another, whether it is in 1992 or whether it was in 1392, has been told that they carry, jointly, the burden for the death of the Son of God, another one of those things you can't do anything about, except feel bad. And that is what is sad, because it is an imposition on your natural joy. It is an illegitimate imposition upon your natural joy. It is a burden of guilt that is absolutely false. And it is time for everyone to put down this imagined burden of guilt, that they have been convinced of and dare to feel their joy.

Now, two thousand years ago it is a fact that the majority of the people were ignorant of God—more ignorant than in this day and age. Confusion prevailed. God's many—gods of the trees, and the rivers, and the rocks, and anything. This ignorance needed to be penetrated with the more universal comprehension of God, and God's nature as Love. And so, that is why I was here at that time.

And then there was something that needed to be taught, that could not be taught in words. What needed to be taught was that not only was everyone there, then, and everyone here, now, the Sons and Daughters of God, my Brothers and Sisters, my equals, but because we are the Sons and Daughters of God, we have only our inheritance from God, which is eternal life. But that cannot be taught.

So heavy was the belief of the physical nature of life, and the fact that there were only less than a handful of individualities, prior to my coming who had ascended, that a demonstration of the deathlessness of life was essential to penetrate the conviction with which everyone incarcerated themselves in a sense of physicality, and of a short duration of life, with nothing before it and nothing after it. And so, the crucifixion that never killed me, occurred.

It was essential for everyone to know that that body which they had looked at and seen as it was alive, was as dead as any other person's body who has died. And then, the Resurrection needed to occur, so that they could see that there was an order of Intelligence and life that went beyond their limited physical perception of it, and the tentativeness of life, the temporariness of it.

And then the Ascension served two purposes. It showed that it is quite possible to move from this place to another place without a vehicle, something that at the bottom line it is important for all of you to know, because if you are going to wake up before you pass on, how in the world are you going to leave this place? I am not really being facetious there. I mean what I am saying.

The other thing that it showed was that there was an order of Being that was presently invisible to everyone, that there truly is that which is beyond everyone's present perception of it. And this occurred as a teaching process, to teach something that could not be conveyed at an intellectual level. And so, the penetration of the truer concept of God, if you will, occurred. And when the penetration of God, when the penetration of Reality breaks through the human condition and the human perception of things, it is a revelation and it is never forgotten. And so, it set the tone for everyone to wake up. But then this sort of sad twist occurred, where everyone was made to feel guilty for this most marvelous illuminating penetration of Truth that had occurred in the human experience, except that it was defined as the crucifixion of the Son of God.

I am going to take this moment to stress another point. The words are not appropriately used when they say that, "I am the only begotten Son of the Father." I am begotten only of the Father, just as you are begotten only of the Father. You have no other source, no other real source. There is nothing about you that characterizes anything other than the Father. But if indeed, you believe that I am the only begotten Son of the Father, then indeed you cannot possibly be that. And then, if those of you who are not that, killed the only begotten Son of the Father, how more sinful could one be? This burdensome sense of guilt for what your forefathers did, must be released, because they never did it! I never died. I almost laughed when you asked me to speak about the death of Jesus, not critically, but in an amused sense.

I will tell you that the deepest reason for relinquishing the sense of guilt, is not so that you won't hurt as much, but because in letting go of it you begin to feel and express what is natural to you, that brings you into alignment with me, because you are embodying and energizing what is natural to both of us. And you could imagine it as the equalizing of the pressure on the inside and outside of an air-lock, or an equalizing of the water on the two sides of locks that ships go through.

And so, as you begin to allow yourself to embody, and embrace, and feel the joy of your Being without the guilt. It is as though that which was artificially low is able to come up to its natural place, which is equal with me, and equal with all of the rest of the Brotherhood and Sisterhood that is awake. And when that pressure or equilibrium has occurred, it is very easy for the last whisper of difference to dissolve, to be penetrated forever, so that you consciously join all of Us in our Brotherhood and Sisterhood.

But as long as any of you continue to carry a sense of guilt, and as long as you feel that I am the only begotten Son of the Father, therefore special and unreachable,--in terms of your being like me—you give a word to yourselves that serves as a law to you, that absolutely inhibits you from coming into the full experience of who you Divinely Are and never stopped being.

You must have the means to conceive of yourself as the Sons and Daughters of God, just like me. It does not constitute arrogance at all. It constitutes Sanity. And it is an insane belief to believe that you are less, and that you are by virtue of it, unworthy.

Please understand that the experience of awakening, of enlightenment, is truly going to mean change of the most marvelous nature. I'm not talking about egotistically excitingly satisfying, but rather, an experience of coming home into your right Mind, which you will recognize. And you will feel grounded, absolutely grounded. And when I use the word "grounded," I do not mean brought down, but I mean anchored in an eternal innocence and invulnerability, in which fear will forever be an irrational nonsensical idea, rather than a potential experience. Where Love will be the unavoidable experience, because when fear is absent, the Love that is the very substance of your Being is inescapably present and alive, and it's You.

When Paul learned from me that I was the author of the Course, and, therefore, the one known as Jesus, he was disappointed, because he felt that that identification of me would somehow narrow down those who would find what I was saying of value. Like now, only Christians would want to talk to me, where before, anyone would talk to me. But I told him that it was absolutely essential that this be known, because the present concept of me in the world, is such that it absolutely inhibits the penetration of Truth that will transform each of you by virtue of uncovering your Christhood. The great sense of difference, coupled with the feeling of guilt that has been laid on you, makes it impossible for you to even hear the idea, much less embrace it as a fact, that we are Brothers, equal and Sisters, equal. And until that is corrected, the reunion of the Brotherhood or the Family cannot occur. And so, I let him know that he had better be willing to let me do what needed to be done, and not shrink from it for whatever reason.

Now, I cannot control Paul, and it is not appropriate for me to do it. And so, you may know that his sitting here relaying to you what I am saying is even harder than yesterday, when all I asked him to do was say the word prick. It is more difficult for him, because indeed he feels that what I am speaking about is of more value than the word that was used yesterday, and more potentially transformational. He is not resisting it, as you can tell—because of the gentleness and the smoothness of his voice. He does express it with love.

What I am saying is, that it is time for all of us together, to come into the fuller conscious experience of our equality. I told my disciples, "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." And you can say to your fellow man, "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." In other words, that statement applies to you too, not just to me. And you can say to yourself, "If I have seen you, I have seen the Father."

If you will just begin to acknowledge that that might happen to be the truth, then instead of waiting for me to come in a cloud, you will begin to look for the Christ in the person sitting next to you. You will begin to be curious enough to look beyond surface appearances, and you will dare to look beneath conditioned responses. And that's what I described as Love yesterday—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything.

It is not necessary for the rest of you to go through crucifixion. Maybe your egos will have to be crucified, but only your ego will hurt. You, the Soul Presence that you Are, will rejoice at the uncovering that occurs. Resurrection though, none of you will miss, and Ascension.

Ascension... you coming back into your Right Mind. You coming back into your Sanity—your guiltless, sinless Sanity—where you recognize the guiltless sinless One, who for untold time, have walked around in tiny asylum rooms saying, “I am a sinner. I am guilty. I am unworthy.” And you pace in an endless circle, rehearsing your credentials, “I am a sinner. I am guilty. I am worthless.” You see, it is almost a catechism. It is most sad. Why? Because it's not the Truth! It is a belief! It is a simple misperception that is being believed!

And you know all of the rest of the Brotherhood, you might say, this is all sort of an allegory, all the rest of us are circled around the asylum, looking in through the windows as you do your, and we are saying, “Come out and play with us. Because until you do, we can't experience the wholeness of the Presence of the Brotherhood or Sisterhood or Family.”

And allegorically speaking, the interior of the asylum has been so musty and dusty, that even though you walked past windows in your endless repetition of your credentials, you didn't see that we were there. And now, there are too few inmates in the asylum to keep the valuing of the credentials alive. And everyone is beginning to be able to at least recognize that there is something going on outside the windows. And that is why we can talk today. But until you were ready to hear what I said today, I could not say it, because there had to be enough curiosity to look out.

I assure you the gentleman who asked the question was not a plant. I love you. And now let's go feed your stomachs.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would like guidance on where I am now, and perhaps if I should be setting up a business at this stage...

ANSWER: Setting up what?

QUESTION: A business at this stage, or if I should sell my house and get a smaller one?

ANSWER: Oh, I encourage you not to sell your house. It is very likely that within the next eighteen months you will be very happy that you have the space, because it will be being used, utilized.

Of course, I encourage you to listen to your guidance on that. I encourage you, as I do with everyone, to take what you hear from me back within yourself and measure it against your deepest knowing, and if it doesn't add up, toss it in the trash-can.

I would also encourage you to be ready to set up business, yes. Give permission for it to unfold, and do not take on a personal sense of responsibility for making it happen. Give permission so that it may begin to unfold itself. It is a much more delightful way to do things. Because you see, when you try to figure things out, when you try to make things happen, you very often try to take a step before the ground is there for you to step on. But when you allow it to unfold, the ground appears and it becomes obvious that the next step is safe. And in fact the more you trust into that, the faster the ground for the next step appears, and you will even find yourself huffing and puffing to keep up with that which you feel constantly secure about. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I would like to take a moment to address something that hasn't been asked aloud.

From this quarter or that quarter, one hears of the end of time, the Apocalypse, the end of the world, etc. It is not really the end of the world that I am wanting to address here. What I am wanting to address, is the belief that out of all of mankind only one hundred and forty-four thousand will be taken up, and the rest of you poor bastards... (Laughter)

Let me give a different perspective to this. Where are you when you are having a dream? You are comfortably in bed at home, as a general rule. And while you are having a dream about life, what I have referred to as a limited perception of life, you are having it at Home with a capital "H." In other words, if you are experiencing a dream, and if on top of it you are believing that the dream is real, so that you have no current conscious awareness of Home, with a capital "H," you are nevertheless having the dream at Home. So how could any of you be left out of the trip Home, if you never left Home?

It is as though every one of you were dozing on a grassy knoll in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, having a dream of limitation. I want you to understand this, because no one is going to pick and choose, and those who are "more exalted," or further along their spiritual path, will not get preferential treatment. Whether one is advanced or not, when the alarm clock goes off in the morning you wake up.

So, let us recognize the way in which this concept of only a hundred and forty-four thousand being taken up, ties in with and reinforces the concept of preexisting guilt, and pushes each one of you, in one way or another, into somewhat of a frenzy of activity to insure that somehow your guilt will be less so that you might get preferential treatment. And all of the time you are engaged in this, you cannot possibly have your attention available and present right where you are, where you can discover that you already are in the Kingdom of Heaven, and that you are already the Son or the Daughter of God. That in so many words, you are already chosen.

No one can be left out, because the fact is that no one left their Divine status, their Divine Being, except in a fit of imagination. That's what I wanted to share with you.

QUESTION: I just want to know if you could talk some of a thing about Atlantis?

PAUL: I sorry this is me Paul. Could you start over, I'm not hearing you over the speakers very well.

QUESTION: I was just wondering you could talk about Atlantis? There's been a lot of talk about Atlantis and the second coming.

ANSWER: There is not much that it is appropriate for me to say about Atlantis at the moment, other than the fact that it will indeed surface again. And it will surface in a manner that will not be disruptive to people or life. It will be a swift but nontraumatic movement that no one should be apprehensive about. And as I have already indicated, the records, which are still intact, that are there, will reveal what I have referred to as the "chain of scientific Being." And I really do mean by that, spiritually scientific Being, or spiritually Intelligent Being, and the fact that the continuity of it has been present for eons. At this time that is all that it is appropriate for me to share. It does not have any particular relationship to the second coming.

I want to make clear to you, that it is your awakening that constitutes the second coming. I already did it. And I am here to encourage you to do likewise. The second coming is your recognition of your Christhood. And literally, the first coming was everyone's recognition of mine, but the lesson in it was the revelation of yours, and the example of it that it provided, to give you the courage to embrace yours, also. I will be very frank with you, until you are consciously embracing your Christhood, your Sonship or Daughtership, my coming would cause you to shift your attention from your own awakening to what you would perceive as my grand Presence. And you would spontaneously and unavoidably give your power away.

And believe me, Paul has asked me to appear to him many times, not because I am the Christ, but because he would like proof that he is not crazy. But I will not appear to him either, until my Presence will not interfere with his own awakening.

Now, the second coming has already begun. Your awakening, mankind's awakening is in process at this moment, and has been for some years now. And what I will share with you is, that this Movement of Awakening is occurring at a much faster rate than, we even anticipated. And we are delighted and we encourage you

QUESTION: I have an abundance of questions.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Well two anyway. I've been short sighted since I was six, and I resent wearing spectacles. And I think now is the time that I am to cast them off, but I don't have the courage to do, so this is also linked to my next question. And how can I go about that?

ANSWER: First of all you must lay down the resentment. I encourage you to be grateful for the spectacles. I encourage you to be grateful that there is a means available to you to look and see, rather than feel a constant inadequacy, because without them you cannot see.

There is a story about a man, caught in a flood, who is climbed up to the peak of his roof, and the flood waters have risen to the point where they are about four feet below him. And he has sat there praying to God to save him, that if God will save him he will dedicate his life to God. And while he is sitting there, someone comes by in a row-boat and says, "come with me." And the man says no, "God is going to answer my prayer." And the man in the row-boat leaves. And later someone in a larger boat comes along and again offers help. And the man says, "no, I am waiting for God to save me." And finally when the water is too torrential for any boat a helicopter comes by and offers to pick him up. And you are beginning to get the picture. Again, he denies the help, and before long he is swept off of the roof and drowns and arrives at the "Pearly Gates" and is taken in for an audience with God, and says, "I told you that if you would save me, I would dedicate my life to you. Why didn't you save me?" And God looks at him and says, "but I sent the canoe, and I sent the boat and the helicopter."

Divine Love meets the human need right where you are. Take the presents of the glasses, as the evidence of Divine Love meeting your need at the moment, in language of form that you can understand and accept. In this state of gratitude, you are not engaged in anger either at God or at your body. And in that attitude of gratitude you do indeed lay the ground work for healing. It is indeed appropriate for you to expect healing, but in the mean time don't behave as though you are a deprived child, when the meet of your need has not come with signs and wonders, but in a simple form, a recognizable form, a most human form of the need being met. This applies to everyone.

Paul would not even be here today if he insisted that his communion with me be astounding, instead of utterly natural. Obviously if what I have said is true, and I guarantee you it is, there is a great deal for all of you to be grateful for. There is much that is going on in your everyday life, that evidences the meeting of your need, that demonstrates the Presence of God in your life, and is therefore justification for gratitude, that you are missing the benefit of because you think it's chance or it's just the way human life is. And so, you walk through your days missing the opportunities of discovering, of discerning just how loved you are, and the proof that you are not alone, and the fact that everything that you experience has the intent of identifying fulfillment of purpose for you.

Your conditioning, or what I would call the ego, suggests that if you are grateful for the spectacles you will be stuck with poor eyesight. That if you are not indignant about not being able to see clearly and having to wear spectacles, that nothing will change, that it takes the force of indignance to cause the Movement, or shall I say twists the arm of God to get his attention and give you healing. It is gratitude that does it.

There is a poem, a hymn, “A grateful heart, a garden is. Where there is always room for every lovely God-like grace to come to perfect bloom.” There’s where the relevance is, between that which is Divine and you. The grateful heart can only be in you, and it is the place where the will of the Father shines through. Gratitude is, you might say the entry point, the place where the will of the Father can penetrate. Peace is also, but I guarantee you that if you let yourself into your peace, you will also experience joy, which is inseparable from gratitude.

So, let’s drop the resentment. Be grateful for the glasses, although they may not be an ultimate form of perfect vision. And then remember as I said yesterday, that it is the intent of your body to identify the Presence of your Individuality perfectly. And when you withdraw from an attacking, or critical, or hateful stance relative to your body, there is nothing standing in the way, or covering up the intent of your body to identify you perfectly. And you will say, “I have had a healing.”

If you wish to go to Australia, you are very grateful that there are such things as planes. You do not look at planes as a very inefficient way of getting from here to there, as a very inefficient way of demonstrating your omnipresence. It is very awkward and very limiting. It is your birthright to be there instantaneously, which means you don’t even have to pack, because you can pop back home for whatever you might need and return.

But you see whenever you have your need met you are grateful. So, be grateful for the language of the present perception of your good while being open to the closer approximation of it. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. May I ask a second question?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: I’m unemployed, and I equally can’t see where I am going career-wise. And I’d like some help with that.

PAUL: You equally can c-a-n?

QUESTION: Can’t.

ANSWER: Paul is unemployed also. I say that on purpose. He does not have an employer that anyone can see, and no guaranteed paycheck, no specific hours that he must work, no relationship between the hours he works and what he earns, etc. But he is far from useless, or meaningless in the world. I am saying this so that you might be willing to conceive of the possibility that your real employment has nothing to do with an employer, and a time clock, and a paycheck.

I guarantee you that if you will begin to get in touch with yourself—deep inside of yourself, not your surface ego reactions—if you will begin to love yourself, if you will refrain from judging yourself, you will find a Movement beginning in you. It is actually a Movement that has been going on ceaselessly, it will seem to you as though it is beginning because you are letting it register with you.

What is your occupation? Your occupation is, to as clearly as possible, be the acknowledgment of God. To be that which acknowledges what is Real everywhere you go. To be the curiosity that I have been speaking about this weekend. To be that presence of mind that is willing to dare to assume that in all of the multiplicity of things that you see, it is absolutely expressive of an undivided single universal Life Principle or God. And that therefore, in all of the multiplicity of things, there is only one thing that is truly coming into expression, and that is the embodiment or manifestation of the unity of God.

What does that mean in layman's terms? It means, that everything conspires to identify harmony and fulfillment of purpose. I know that you can't walk down the street and have a friend say, "Oh, what are you doing these days"? "Oh, I'm being the acknowledgment of God." You can't say that, but you can do it, you can be it. And if someone says, "My goodness, I know you haven't got a job, how come you are so happy? How come you're not worried?" And you can say, "well, I'm not totally free of doubt, but you know, I've decided that I'm going to approach this time with an expectation that the world is my ally, and I'm watching for it to identify it's friendship, I'm watching for my good to unfold, rather than practicing doubt and expecting the worst." No one will laugh at you for that, in fact some of them will be envious. They will wish they had the nerve to try something like that.

Again, I am not avoiding answering your question specifically. What I am answering is the real problem. The real problem is, what do you do when you don't seem to have something you need? What do you do so that you are not feeling abandoned, lost, unloved? If you will approach your days with the attitude that I have described to you, you will indeed find your world reconfiguring and no longer seeming to identify lack of employment, or lack of your needs being met. And if you get the hang of it, if you get the feel of it, you will never again be concerned about not having a job. And when you have a job, you will not feel as though it is your salvation, because you will have learned that your salvation lies in learning to be in the flow of the Movement of God, or the Movement of Life.

You must understand that whenever I give what could be called a prediction, whenever I make reference to an event in the future, it is never absolute. But based upon all of the factors, and I mean all of the factors infinitely speaking at the present moment, it is highly unlikely that you will arrive at September 1st without being employed, in the sense that you used the word employment. I have described a new kind of employment for you that you can engage in whether you have a time clock to punch or not. That's the end of the answer.

PAUL: He says, "does our runner have a question"?

QUESTION: I have many, but I suppose I let them go, if there is one...

ANSWER: That was a truer than the first one. First you said, "I have many, but I let them go." Then you said, "I have many, but I suppose I let them go." Let's have it.

QUESTION: It's more or less...

ANSWER: It's exactly.

QUESTION: Why do I avoid meditation? Why do I avoid The Course In Miracles? I sort of brought some of them here, and I just dropped them, maybe I don't need them? I don't know.

ANSWER: Because you hate to be told what to do. As they would say, you are an arrogant son-of-a-bitch. And I say that in the Irish way, with love.

You know what? It's all right if you don't read the Course, and it's all right if you don't meditate, you will wake up anyway. Do you see what I'm doing? I am uncovering to you the fact that you're not guilty of anything. And truly the moment you realize that reading or not reading the Course is not cause for judgment either way, and not meditating is also not cause for judgment either way, then you are free to choose to read or choose to meditate just because you want to.

Mind you I am not answering you so as to coerce you gently or subtly or lovingly into doing something you do not want to do. I am conveying the absolute freedom that you exist in. and that therefore, meditating or not meditating, reading the Course or not reading the Course, is not a problem.

And so, if there is a day that you feel like meditating, because you simply feel like meditating, meditate and feel good. And on a day that you don't feel like meditating, don't meditate and feel good.

You are right not to like to do what you are told to do. But it is not appropriate for you to refrain from doing something you might really like to do, because you are engaged in defending yourself against the idea of coercion. You understand what I am saying. Lighten up on yourself.

If you want to start with the last lesson in the Course and work back to the beginning, do it that way. If you want to stay on one lesson for a week, instead of going on to the next one—because there's one a day—stay on it for a week. Lighten up.

The question was, "why don't I want to read the Course, and why don't I want to meditate"? The question, is the first step of an internal witch hunt. "What is this something in me that is self-destructive? What is this something in me that I need to feel guilty about?" It doesn't matter whether you read the book or not.

The whole idea that there is something in you, keeping you from doing what is good for you, is false.

Do you realize that the moment there is a genuine desire in you—or in any of you—to experience good beyond your present experience of it, that desire is the means by which you give permission for revelation to occur, whether you have a copy of the Course or not. Your relationship is with God, not a bunch of words, or a procedure.

Now, am I undercutting my own book? No, I am just trying to convey perspective here, because as I said the other day, it's all here to serve you.

Everything has the intent of identifying the Father's will, which is fulfillment of purpose, which you are going to experience as your fulfillment of purpose, and everyone of you is going to experience as your fulfillment of purpose, because it is all one.

And so the moment the desire is there to experience good beyond your present sense of it, the Father responds. Actually what happens is, the omnipresence of the Father can begin to spill in on you. That omnipresence and fullness that has always been there, can begin to spill in on you, because it is as though you have opened the doors, or opened the windows, by virtue of your desire. And indeed the spilling in may well appear to be the intent or desire to pick up the Course, and open it at random, or it may be a spontaneous influx of Knowing—I'm saying Knowing with a capital "K," not an intellectual one, but an experiential one—that is constituted of revelation.

Divine Love—another word for the Father's will for you—meets you right where you are, without your having to meet any prerequisites, other than desiring to experience it. So let go.

Whenever any of you begins to ask yourself, "what is wrong with me"? I encourage you to bite your tongue, and ask a new question. This is the most valuable question any of you could attend to, "what is right with me"?

I want you to notice, just pay attention to those two questions, and how you would feel as you ask them. If you say, "what is wrong with me," and you're seriously asking that question, you will expect there to be an answer. You will have no doubt that there is an answer to that question. You will ask it with confidence, that your desire/question will be answered.

But if you seriously genuinely ask the question, "what is there that is right about me," you will expect the answer to be a long time in coming, because record, after record, after record will have to be scanned to find the one or two that are there. "What is there that is right about me," usually evokes a spontaneous answer, "well, not much." And so, you don't actually expect an answer that would disclose true rightness about you. And so, you do not expect an answer, and that governs what you experience.

I really encourage all of you to begin to ask that question, “what is right with me,” instead of, “what is wrong with me.” And yes at the moment the answer to that question will always have to be a revelation. But you know what? There are a lot of us present to reveal it to you, we eagerly wait to reveal to you what is truly right about you, your innocence, the love that you are, the worthwhileness of you, the integrity of you, the immovable unchangeable Divineness of you, and I could go on, and we can go on and on, telling you about the rightness of you.

And you know what? You don’t need a book called A Course In Miracles, you don’t need a book called the Bible, you don’t need a church, you don’t need a Pope, you don’t need a pastor. Although all of them can be helpful, you do not need them in order to get the answer, “what is there that is right with me, right about me.” You don’t need them in order to experience revelation as to what each of you truly is, and what is absolutely appropriate for each of you.

The saying is, “what you appreciate, appreciates,” in other words, grows. What you value increases. And if you value an ignorant assessment of yourself, you can count on it, that assessment will increase. And if you value that which is right about you, your awareness of what is right about you will increase.

Now, I do want to be perfectly clear here. If you ask what is wrong with me, God will not answer. And therefore, any answer that comes forth will come from your ego, it will come from your conditioned thinking, it will come from this acquired definition of yourself, that I have called a personality. When you ask what is right about you, your ego will not answer, but God will. The ego is a liar. Two thousand years ago the ego was called the devil. And I said the devil is a liar, and the father of it—meaning the father of the lie. Therefore, nothing about the devil, nothing about the ego is trustworthy, it is incapable of telling the truth.

So again, lighten up, be your guiltless, unjudgable self. And in that freedom from guilt do what you feel like doing. That place is not an ego reactive place, that place is a place of peace and real freedom. And so, what you will find yourself wanting to do will identify your good. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I wanted to ask a question. Am I fulfilling my purpose in life as a financial consultant, number one? And I want to ask for guidance in some challenges I have in my business presently?

ANSWER: You are exactly where you belong. I would like you to formulate in words, the additional part of your question.

QUESTION: To look for guidance, and how I handle some of the challenges that I am experiencing in my business presently?

ANSWER: Really, as we have discussed this weekend, the key lies in listening, just listen more often, listen about anything under the sun that you have a curiosity about. And let there be, especially in your work, a listening for guidance in the context of wanting to truly be of service to those who come to you.

Now, the thing is that you do hear when you listen. And so, it is not so much getting over the hurdle of hearing, as much as it is, daring to trust what you hear. Please begin to practice trust.

And as I indicated earlier, it will be much easier if you will trust into little steps. Because as you find the little things that you have asked about, clarified for you, and you take the steps that are congruent with that guidance, you will acquire increased trust, and you will become familiar with the process. And then when there is something of major proportions, you will not become tied up in a ball, because the circumstance seems to be so important.

The real issue with you is daring to validate and trust what you hear. Just do it, don't think about it a lot. Just do it, do it, do it, lightly, lightly, lightly. The comfort will come. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've been studying the Course for some time, but particularly trying to take in what he says about love, and special relationships, and the holy relationship. And at times I feel very, very confused, just about my love being innocent, or I'm really not innocent. And trying to change what is a special relationship into something holy, and releasing my partner and trusting. And I feel really scared a lot of the time. And I'd like some guidance on that.

ANSWER: Let us say you are married to someone, you are in a relationship with someone, on an on-going basis. And in the process of being in this relationship, you observe this other one, and you come to the conclusion that he is a testy or difficult person to get along with. But it's workable, because he doesn't really override your integrity to a point where you feel violated.

And so, you have this sense of him as being a difficult person to be with, and you begin to treat him on the basis of that concept. And he, of course, has been living with you, and observes your behavior towards him, whether he feels it is correct or not, and he realizes that in order to stay in the relationship with you, he must have some sort of defense against your perception of him being a difficult person. And so, he begins to bring into play whatever keeps the relationship workable within the context of your concept of him.

Now, your behavior is based upon a perception of him, and his behavior towards you is based upon how you behave when you are coming from a concept of him. Do you see that neither one of you is really being real with each other. The relationship has become conceptual. The two of you have agreed to operate on the basis of pictures that you have of each other. That is a special relationship.

It is not that you are a human being, and he is a human being, and that makes it a special relationship, because as human beings you all are not obviously Divine. That is not what constitutes a special relationship.

Literally, a special relationship as The Course In Miracles uses that term, is a relationship in which two people join together in mutual agreement as to definitions of each other, and definitions about things in your mutual world, where in effect you are functioning in an ungrounded manner, a manner not connected with everything as it truly is.

You have grown up and have developed certain concepts of yourself. And this self you present the partner in your relationship. And your partner likewise has grown up and developed a concept of himself, a definition of himself, who he is, what kind of person he is, what he loves, what he doesn't like, etc. And he approaches you and presents this concept of himself.

The two of you agree as to those concepts, and you learn to bounce off of each others presentations of yourselves. That is a special relationship. It is a relationship in which you are not connected with the essence of each other, but a presentation or mask that has been created to identify you. It has been created by each of you. And you mutually agree, yes, that mask is who you are, this mask is who I am, when we try to get close it doesn't interfere to much. And so, on this basis of who we are presenting to each other, we will have a relationship and we will face life. That is a special relationship.

Now, the you that is standing there with the mask on, and the he that is standing there with his mask on, are real. It's only the masks which are artificial.

And the way the two of you change the special relationship into what the Course calls a holy relationship, is to learn to be still, to learn to go within and feel deeply into your essential Being, which is the Real you, which is the Divine you, and then be with the other one from that place. That is when you stop behaving on the basis of the mask you are wearing, and start behaving genuinely from who you Are. Because who you genuinely are is absolutely Divine. Who you Really are is God embodied. And God embodied is not something else called a human being. God embodied is God expressed and expressing.

And so, when you are learning how to be sensitive to your essential Being, and you are being congruent with It, and you Be in the world from that place, you are making the gift of you, which is the gift of the Presence of God. And that is the beginning of a holy relationship.

Now, essential to this shifting, from a special relationship to a holy relationship—in other words, from a false one to a Real one—is the practice of Love, that I described yesterday—the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R,” in each and everything, or you could say, in each other. That means looking beyond the mask that the other one is presenting to you. And it also means, looking beyond the conclusions that you have come to about that other one, as a result of a long enough relationship to get to know him.

You see, not only does the other one present a mask, present a sense of himself, but you also have a perception of him that you feel is a very definite and accurate assessment of who he is. And rather than responding to him, you are always responding to the him that you perceive him to be, on the basis of your conclusions about him.

So, the tendency is for him to reinforce the fact, that he is nothing more than the mask he presents. And the tendency is for you, or for anyone else in a relationship, to hold the other one to your acquired perception of him. The willingness to recognize that which is Real in each other, that constitutes the true meaning of love, is what cuts through both the mask that he presents to you, and the perception of him, that you hold between the two of you, and enforce by means of your behavior.

It's not really complicated. It is a shift from an artificial relationship, one in which the two of you are relating on the basis of protocols to a defenseless expression of genuineness with each other, period. The nature of the genuineness that you share comes to its fullest expression of truth, as you dare to embrace the fact, that if there is anything going on right there where you appear to be, it has to be God Being. And that any other interpretation of you, must necessarily be false, because it is at the least incomplete.

Self-appreciation based upon—we can start with a belief that you are Divine, because in the beginning you won't have a conviction of it because of your conditioning—that constitutes the giving of the gift of you that you are here for. You are not here to withhold the gift of you. You are not here to cater to anyone else's perception of you. And you are not here to be a concept of yourself that you have formulated. To the degree that you do not want to make waves, to the degree that you do not want to distress anyone, and so, you squelch yourself. You could say that you dim the light of the Presence of God, and the world is a little darker than it ought to be.

I want you now to go back to the Course and read what it has to say about holy relationships and special relationships, in light of the simpler way in which I have described it. And don't have an expectation that its meaning is going to be so lofty that it will be difficult for you to relate it to this very definite thing going on here on earth called your relationship. There is a great fear that has developed among students of the Course, that if they indeed dare to open up to a holy relationship, that somehow it will make them incompatible with their current spouse, or mate, or companion. That is a shame. Because at the bottom line, opening up to a holy relationship, means becoming more grounded in your essential Being right where you are.

True spirituality, as I said yesterday, finds expression in essentially human humanity, it finds expression in your humanity. Human beings, if I may put it this way, are the handy work of the Father, and the true marvelousness of your being human is yet to be discovered by you. And the discovery is happening. It is not a long way off. And that is why I have stressed the point, that where you are, and who you experience yourself to be at the moment as a human being, is exactly where the revelation of your Divinity is present to experience.

How many of you have felt threatened, awkward, uncomfortable with me this weekend? Every single one of you has felt the love. How is that? It's because you all know what love feels like. If you understand this, then you will not begin to act peculiar as you investigate your spirituality or Divinity. You will find that your behavior, and your attitudes, and what gets your attention, and what interests you, will become recognizably wonderful and meaningful to everyone around you. This is so important.

Peace on earth. How on earth could any of you have the experience of the real meaning of that phrase, "peace on earth," if all of you think that your spiritualization, your resurrection and ascension is going to make you other-worldly, and incongruent with the earth and your fellow man. Your energy will be going in the wrong direction. Peace on earth. Peace right here, right now, is the desirable—and I don't like this word—goal. It is where the attention needs to be, so that the ignorant relationship you have with your world and with each other, may be replaced with a very grounded, very real, very congruent experience of harmony and peace and joy with each other. That's the nature of a holy relationship.

Now, A Course In Miracles may be a course, but there is no final exam. It is not a test. And so, you do not need to engage in fear of failure. And just because you have found something which helps you to discover a way to be in the world with greater harmony and greater love, just because you have found something that has taught you about forgiveness—that you are able to practice in a way that is transforming to your experience—does not mean that you now have new reasons for feeling guilty. Perhaps more guilty than before, because now you have a truer answer, and if you don't accept it it indicates how much stupider you are, or that you truly have some self-destructive streak in you that would deny something so wonderful.

Remember the ego is not going to change its pattern of behavior or response just because you have found something that will release you from it. It's going to pull all of the same old tricks. And so, now that you've learned that there is something called a special relationship—nasty, nasty—and something else called a holy relationship—glory hallelujah—does not mean that you are walking a thinner line, and that there is justification for you to be afraid, because now you know the difference, that maybe you may not be making the choice between the two well.

So, enjoy the relationship you are in whether it's special or whether it's holy. And in the context of enjoying it for whatever meaning there is in it for you, that feels good, leave yourself open for improvement, so that it can grow. But don't use your awareness that there are two different sorts of relationships, don't use that as the basis for judging yourself, condemning yourself, and then enforcing a penalty upon yourself. Don't be afraid to live, just because you found the Course. Don't be afraid to be in a relationship, just because you have learned the difference between a holy relationship, and a special relationship, when all you've ever been in before is a special relationship. Just be glad that the difference has been revealed to you, because it means that you now have something available to you beyond what you have been experiencing. It isn't a relationship that you will grow out of, it is the ignorance about relationships that you will grow out of.

So, I have sat here this weekend and I have shared with you unyieldingly that you are Divine. And you could say, "that's wonderful, isn't it. That is very meaningful to me, but I have to go home and face my wife tonight, and the kids. And tomorrow I have to go to work, and my boss doesn't know about this Divinity crap. And so, I don't know if what I've heard, and what I've learned. I don't know if I can, let us say, bring it to bear upon my experience. In fact, I'm pretty sure that tomorrow I will probably act like an ignorant human being, not expressing any of the Divinity that I heard about, and began to feel might really be real."

Well, I haven't told you this so that you could go home tomorrow and have a problem, or gripe at the system, because it doesn't support your emerging awareness of your Divinity. I have told you something that maybe you didn't realize was quite as absolutely true as I have shared with you that it is. And so, theoretically, you have a greater potential for suffering tomorrow, than you did before you came Friday. You know, are you going to look at the half empty glass, or the half full glass?

Whether you are able to practice or bring into play the things that I have said, they have not been said so that you can feel worse than before, and the Course is not present so that you can feel worse than before. If you are beginning to feel guilty, because you have read the Course, and you do not feel capable of living up to what it means, then you have not understood the Course, and you might as well not have read it.

I'm specifically addressing your fear, relative to your relationship. Because after all, if you desire a holy relationship because you want to reflect God more fully and experience the joy of it, don't apply to that desire and your willingness to act upon that desire, don't apply to it a goad of guilt, because you will undermine your joy and you will bring stress to the relationship, and anyone observing you will rightfully come to the conclusion that you were better off before you read the Course, or before you experienced enlightenment, or some clarification.

So, when through whatever course of spiritual growth you might be employing, you become aware of a greater potential, just be grateful for the awareness of the greater potential, and give yourself the opportunity to expand into it and explore it. Every single one of you is going to explore new territory awkwardly, how can you have skill at something that is unfamiliar to you.

And so, as you desire to see your mate as the Christ, and as you are willing to release your mate from any lesser definition of him that you have held, you are going to slip up every now and then. And you are going to have to let that happen and let it be meaningless, and you are going to have to let that happen and not distract you from your on-going intent to see the Christ there, and to see the Christ in you.

Will you please all understand, that you cannot be kept out of the Kingdom of Heaven if you never left in the first place. And therefore, God can hold nothing over your head to get you to be who you Are. And therefore, this is not a test, and you cannot fail, even though your conscious return to your Right Mind will occur awkwardly.

There is one other thing that I will say, and then we will break. You are either seeing the Kingdom of Heaven through a glass darkly—in other words, in a distorted manner—or you are seeing the Kingdom of Heaven clearly. There is only one thing to see,—and I’m going to put it in nonreligious terms—you are either seeing Reality through a glass darkly, or you are seeing Reality clearly. This is very important to understand.

Whether you are seeing it clearly or not, there is only one thing to see. Again that means that you are already Home, you are already in the Kingdom of Heaven, or you are already in the experience of Reality, whether it is a clear experience or not.

As it happens, it is not a totally clear experience of it, because as you know, there are experiences of limitation that you seem to be experiencing. If you didn’t believe that the limitation was real, you wouldn’t see it. And so, you are emerging into clearer and clearer vision from a place that is unclear. And so, all of the awkwardness that is natural to a lack of clarity, is going to accompany you as you wake up.

And therefore, you are likely to always feel a little bit foolish, a little bit awkward, just like the first time you tried to ride a bike. But what did you say? You didn’t say, “I’m not going to learn how to ride the bike.” You said, “well, the bike is there, and I don’t know how to ride it, but it’s there, and I’m going to try.” And you fell down. But the bike was still there, and you still didn’t know how to ride it. And so, you said, “I’m going to try, again.” And each time you tried and fell, you got a little bit of the feel of what it means to have your balance. And because it was there, you tried. You didn’t say, “wow, I know why that bikes there. It’s there to show me what I can’t do.” You see what I mean?

So, when you have in your hands, in your mind the potential for illumination, the potential for revelation, and that which transforms you and your world, don’t see it as something that is telling you what you can’t do. Don’t see it as that which justifies, even more than before, how guilty you ought to feel.

See it as that which you don't know how to do yet, but it's there, and you're going to try again. And if something happens in the relationship, and you say, "oh boy, I'm really coming from my ego today, I might as well give up," don't say that. Don't say, "what's wrong with me that I can't stay with this longer"? You didn't do that when you were learning to ride a bike, and you fell down, thirty seconds, fifteen seconds, three seconds up on the bike, you couldn't stay with it longer. But it was there, the bike was there, and you didn't know how to do it, and so you tried again, a minute, two minutes, and then you got the feel of shifting your weight, and you didn't worry anymore. You got it.

So, be careful, don't use your spiritual path—or even more accurately—don't let the ego, don't let your conditioned limited thinking suggest to you that your opportunity for growth is more justification for fear of displeasing God. And if today you're a little bit more of an ego than you were yesterday, say, "okay, but my Divinity is still there, and I haven't got it yet, but I'm going for it. And I'm bound to do it awkwardly, because at the moment I don't know any better how to do it, but I'm trying. And so, I'm not going to judge myself, except to say, 'keep up the good work.'"

Now we'll break.

ANSWER: I have taken this time in silence, because I wanted to be with you quietly. We will not take anymore questions. But I want those of you who have questions that you did not get to ask, or questions that you did not hear the answer to, to know that I will very specifically be with you—not that I am ever absent from you—but I will be very specifically with you, to disclose, to share the clarity that you are looking for, not on every single question that you might have had, but on the most pertinent ones.

There is a method to my madness, that being that I'm inviting you to be more consciously attentive to the fact that I am present with you, so that you might have the direct experience.

Now, lest those of you who did ask questions feel left out, I will give each of you one question, which I will answer for you directly over the next ten days. Do not suppose that it will be hard. Do not suppose that it probably won't happen.

I want all of you to gently allow it to happen. I want you to realize that it can happen while you're driving the car, or it may happen at a time when you are specifically being quiet, so that you might hear. But I do not want you to focus all of your energy of listening into a period of twenty minutes, as though that is when you will hear it, and no other time, and therefore, you had best listen well. Be gentle about this. Be gentle and be at ease when you are listening for guidance at any time.

The very nature and substance of your Being is peace, it is always available to you, and you have the proof of it when you meditate. The peace that any of you experience when you are meditating, is not just an absence of fear and it is not just the absence of physical tension. The peace that you experience in a meditative state, is a direct experience of the substance or nature of your essential Being.

Your Being is always at peace. It is always at peace. It never changes, no matter what is going on. It is ever presently available to you. Your ego gets into fits of reaction at what is going on. And that seems quite justifiable when it is happening.

But what I want you to know is, that your Being, just simple little you at this very moment, the essence of your Being, is peace, and it is unruffled by anything that is going on. And when you choose to connect with it, by meditating or by becoming effectively still through any means, you discover the fact that it is present and unaffected. You realize that you are unaffected by anything that might be going on. And then if you listen from that peace, the clarity will be there for you, your deep knowing will be available to you. And ultimately, you might say, the objective is to open your eyes and engage with your world from that place of your peace.

But initially, that peace will seem to be temporary. The more regularly you choose to listen, the more regularly you desire to know and then shut up, so that you can hear, the more you will find the intervening periods when you are not listening, to be more peaceful. And you will find yourself functioning more efficiently, and sizing a situation up more quickly and more correctly, and your activities in the world will manifest and elicit more harmony.

Remember ask, ask, ask. And above all listen, listen, listen. So it is ask, listen, ask, listen, ask, listen. And do it with ease. It is absolutely no use to you for Paul to come to Ireland, and for you to sit with me in this fashion for a weekend and then be lost, until the next time he comes. This has not been entertainment, I mean by that, it has not been my intent to entertain you and then have you return home having had a delightful weekend, but not in a different place than you were before you came.

And so, I want you to know that indeed I am available to every single one of you. I always am! But I'm specifically available to you, relative to unfinished questions over the next ten days. And I will address you, and I will find a way to do it so that you will hear me. And I encourage you beyond those ten days to practice listening, so that you might hear. And you might experience the fact that you are not alone, that you are companioned with, with mighty companions, who are here to disclose to you your mightiness, not in terms of power, but in terms of the absolute experience of the fact that fear is not called for.

You will be amazed to find that when fear is absent, completely and totally absent, you will feel immutable, you will feel absolutely safe. In other words, you will exist without threat coexisting with you. That will be experience as such security that you will feel powerful, big, invulnerable. I cannot express it more clearly than that.

Each of you has your own guides, but I am always available to all of you. In the beginning Paul was a little bit selfish, and felt that everyone should go get their own guide, when he heard that I had had a few words to say with someone else. But I am here for everyone.

And it is my pleasure to stand a little bit ahead of where you are, and say, “come on, it’s safe. Come on, it’s safe. Let’s explore more of the infinity of your Being. Come on, it’s safe.” I will not stand behind you and push you into the unknown. I will stand a little bit ahead of you in the unknown, so that you may feel that it is reasonable to take a little step into it. And each of your guides will do exactly the same thing. In effect we are saying, again, “come out and play with us, it is safe.”

Gathering ACIM Conference –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

PAUL: Before we begin, I would just like to introduce myself—I'm Paul Tuttle. It's wonderful for all of us to have the chance to be together. It's nice to look around the room and see familiar faces and new faces. The first thing I want to say, is that what's going to happen here today is not special.

The Bible admonishes us to go into our closet and pray to the Father which is in secret. And Raj has indicated that the secret means the silence; that place where our thinking and the chattering of our minds and the reactions we have, are at least temporarily set aside, so that we're able to be in that place where we can hear the Father's Will, or hear the Truth, or the Voice for Truth.

I think that it's very important for us not to think that Helen Schucman was different from any of us. And that the real lesson that she expressed for all of us, was that if you listen, you hear the Truth. And we have over 2000 pages of beautiful expressions of Truth that are transformational. And those words are studied. But let's not forget that it isn't the words, but the act of listening; the act of saying and meaning; "Thy will be done." That is the point. So that each one of us could, if it was our fulfillment of purpose, write a book ourselves that expressed such beautiful truth that it was transformational.

In 1982, I was going through a crisis. I had never heard of the Course. None of my best thinking helped. The business I had got squeezed out of business, and it collapsed. And I had been raised in a metaphysical background. So, it was my life long belief that if I thought clearly and correctly that I could control the situation to the best interest of everybody. And I didn't think that it was arrogant or self-righteous to believe that. But the situation didn't yield to my best clear metaphysical treatment or thinking.

And so, I arrived at a point where I was so distraught that I decided to sit down and ask for help. Mind you, this took many months before I did such a simple thing. And I did this every night. I usually took about an hour. I would meditate for maybe ten minutes to become relatively quiet, and in effect, I was going into the closet without realizing that I was following a Biblical injunction. And then I was saying, "If there are guides and if I have one, will whoever it is please speak up?" And part of me was dead serious about it and part of me thought this was just evidence of stress.

I did this every night for about two weeks. At approximately the end of two weeks, this particular night, there was a flow of words in my mind that just came out of nowhere. They weren't calculated words and they were: "My name is Rajpur and I have been awaiting the right time to speak to you." I was let down. My immediate reaction was, I could have come up with a better opening statement than that. And I would have had some angels singing—something more profound than just a simple greeting. I nevertheless stayed with it, and ended up with, I believe it was about ten pages of typed material. And I won't go into that at this time,

I proceeded then frequently, I mean at least daily most of the time—if not more than once a day—to have a conversation. I had a lot of doubts about what was going on. I thought, "Oh, I've just reached a very creative part of myself that I've never tapped into before." And in some ways, I finally came to the point of realizing that even if that's what I had done, what I was hearing was so valuable that I wasn't going to stop.

And, it wasn't until about nine months later that somebody who we had shared what was going on with said, "Have you seen this before?" And she handed us a copy of the text of the Course. I said, "No." And she said, "Well take a look at it." So, over the next few days I glanced at it, and read randomly, and did come across parts of it that said or indicated that Jesus was the author of it.

And so, finally I said to Raj, "Who wrote this?" Meaning—really what I was meaning was—am I to believe that this really was authored by or dictated to Helen by Jesus. And his answer was: "I was the author of it." Which to me did not mean that "no," Jesus didn't author it, Raj did. It meant, that indeed Jesus had authored it and was the one with whom I had been speaking.

I had a momentary slight reaction of awe I guess, and then I thought, "No." I said, "Well, I know you." It was like in spite of all my concepts about Jesus and who he was, and who he would be, and so on. I had had nine months of daily experience with Raj, Jesus, and he wasn't at all like what I had been told Jesus would be. And so, I didn't have to get hung up on who I thought, or who I had been taught Jesus was, because I could continue talking to him who was very real to me.

And the reason that I still call him Raj, is because if I do talk to him as Jesus, which I've tried at times, I immediately become very artificial. And I don't want to bother him with certain things, and I don't want to be upset, I'd rather wait until I'm calm and cool and we can have an intelligent conversation, of course, then I don't need to talk to him.

Anyway, I found that it definitely blocked my connection. It blocked my ability to be real myself. And so, I have continued to call him Raj. And I did later find out that the word Rajpur in Sanskrit, in Hindi means a Place of the Prince—which I thought was very interesting. It still in many ways has the same meaning as the Son of God.

The most profound thing, I think for me, is the fact that he has always treated me as though I was just like him. And everyone else, in any of the workshops that we've had, he always treats everyone as though they are just like him. And he is truly brotherly. And in some ways this is disconcerting because I know I want, and I know other people have wanted somebody extremely other-worldly, or so spiritual as to really not be like us.

So, the main thing I wanted to convey, is that this is not out of the ordinary. And when we do go within to listen for the Voice for Truth, don't assume that you're not hearing it if it happens to be very down-to-earth, and very practical, and meets you right where you are.

The other thing is, that although Raj has agreed to finally call what we're doing conscious channeling, I don't think the word channeling is truly the appropriate word for it. My experience of it would be better described as communion. And if I happen to be relaying what I find myself knowing, as a result of listening, we could call that channeling, in the sense that it's being passed on to you. But if you're going to listen for guidance, I would prefer that you not call it channeling, but communion.

And I also want you to know that it is not necessary to go into a trance to be in communion with Divine guidance. Channeling is often done in trance. I don't want anybody to be confused. It is inconsistent for me, or at least I'm very grateful that the way this is happening with me, is that I don't become unconscious in order to become more conscious. It doesn't make sense.

So, that's all I would like to say. I want to take a minute more. Obviously Raj has something to say, because he gave a subject for the get together, and it will be followed with an opportunity for questions and answers.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good morning. Although I am always with you, whether you are aware of it or not, I am glad to be with you in this, shall I say, more conscious way this morning. And while we are apparently together here in this room, I want you to be aware that we are all together with everyone else in this conference. And we are all together with everyone on your globe. And we are all together with all the Sons and Daughters of God. And everyone of those who are totally awake, are totally conscious with you of everything that is going on this morning. I say this so that you may begin with a sense of being included, in a much larger scope than you ordinarily allow yourselves to think about.

Now, as long as this is the first session for all of you for this conference, let us start with the question: "What is A Course In Miracles?" And remember that you cannot ask what is A Course In Miracles without asking: "What is A Course In Miracles and me?" Because without you, there is no Course In Miracles. And without you, there are no miracles. This is very important, because it becomes very easy to think of the Course as something separate from you, which you can study and learn. That is your conditioning. Especially, the use of the term “course,” seems to specifically apply to an educational process, which you have always experienced as learning—the taking in of something separate and different from you.

I’m going to give you a different picture. You and the Course are like a strip tease dancer, who comes out on the stage surrounded with multicolored balloons with nothing on underneath. The dancer usually has somewhere on her hand a little thorn or prick that she can pop the balloons with. But in this case, it is the Course that is the prick—the trigger if you will—that pops the balloons of your ego; that obscures who you Really Are.

And you know what? It does it when you aren’t looking. It does it when you least expect it. “The bridegroom cometh when ye think not.” And both ways that that sentence can be interpreted are correct. The Christ of you penetrates your limited perception when you least expect it. And also when ye think not—when you are not thinking.

You will not think, or understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. You will feel your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. And I’m not talking about emotions, I’m talking about feelings. Feelings are Soul, with a capital “S”; sensing, Soul sensing. Sensing everything that you are experiencing—from your Soul. Emotions are ego reactions. They are the egos equivalent of feelings. And you know what they are reactions to? They are reactions to Reality, when it is inconsistent with the ego’s definition of how a thing ought to be, or what a thing is.

Miracles are not controlled by your thinking, nor by your understanding. I will tell you something: A MIRACLE happens and you understand. You do not understand and then experience a miracle. And a miracle happens when you are undefended. And so, this illustrates a most important point—thinking blocks miracles. In fact, thinking as you employ it, constitutes your defense against the conscious experience of Reality.

Now, I said thinking as you employ it. You employ it to attempt to get to an understanding of something. But, if you are willing, if you are truly willing to do what the Course says, and look at a thing and say, “What I see, does not mean anything.” If you are willing to set aside any meaning that you have given to it, you provide the opportunity for the experience of what it Divinely is to register with you. And then you will spontaneously and appropriately employ your thinking, to give a voice to what you have found yourself knowing—what you have found yourself understanding. But the understanding comes always as a revelation. And revelation occurs when ye think not.

Now, let’s be wise, I’m not saying for all of you to leave and be thoughtless. Until you’ve learned how to hear by virtue of listening, you had better think, because your current thinking constitutes your current common sense and without it, you would be behaving in a most unintelligent manner.

The point is, as frequently as you can, everyday, listen. Be willing to set aside your best judgments and your conditionings, and even your most spiritual concepts about how a thing ought to be. And ask God, “What is your point of view of this? What is really going on here?” The more you do this, the more you will hear experientially what you need to know. Then, your thinking and your expression will express what you find yourself knowing, and you will be a transformational Presence in your world, without even trying.

The Bible relates my healing of a blind man, who then went and showed everyone that he could see. And the priests asked, “How did this happen?” He said, “I don’t know. All I know is that whereas before I was blind, but now I can see.” This is the way the Course works. Don’t read it as though it is going to give you an understanding that will give you better control in your world, where you can be a conscious healer, where you are giving conscious direction to your Awakening, or to someone else’s Awakening. Read the Course and let it change you.

I’m going to encourage all of you to do something: Read the Course each time you pick it up, as though you had never read it before; as though you had never attended A Course In Miracles group meeting; as though you did not now have a large group of friends—or even a small group of friends—whom you could speak intelligently with about these things, and where you have all arrived at some mutual agreement and you feel safe with each other, etc. Read it as though you were picking it up for the first time.

Also, as you go through this conference, I encourage each of you to pretend that you brought a relative with you, who won’t have anything to do with the Course, but somehow you managed to get them to come with you and they’re sitting beside you. If that really happened, you would listen to everything that was said with an ear to how this individual would be hearing it. You would not slip into your comfortable, accumulated understandings of the Course. You would sort of simply flow unconsciously with the wonderful truths, and even the stimulating ideas that are expressed.

Your greatest asset when you picked up the Course for the first time, was that you had no preconception. And in reading it it threw you off balance. As you know, many sentences—not just paragraphs—but many sentences, are like an Alfred Hitchcock movie that has a little twist at the end. And you thought you knew where it was heading, and boom, it wasn’t, and you had to read it over, because you were surprised.

Don’t underestimate the value of being thrown off balance, because indeed, it is your ego that gets thrown off balance. And when it gets thrown off balance, your Divinity has the opportunity to register with you, because your ego's defense is weak at that moment.

I'm going to ask you, why do you want to understand a thing? At the bottom line, it is so that you will never have to consider it again, and can become unconscious about that particular thing. You can tuck it away, as having it under your belt, and never have to look at it as though there is anything else to be known about it. You want to understand so there is a sense of security, and security to the ego means sleep. It means, not being fully alert, so that you might have the opportunity to experience a thing through the eyes of God, which are truly your birthright to see with.

Now, what is this "ancient journey" that you have come to the end of without realizing it? It is the end of the journey of thinking, without asking God what is going on. You call it being an independent thinker. But I want to point out something to you. You cannot be an independent thinker alone and lose the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven. You must join with someone else who also has chosen to be an independent thinker. Except it's a little bit of a farce, because the two of you must agree on your independent thinking. And in agreeing to a definition of the Kingdom of Heaven (or of a part of the Kingdom of Heaven) that is not the same as the Father's Knowing of Himself in that thing, you create a sense of fantasy of separation from the Father, and a joining with the one that you have this mutual agreement with.

The moment that happens, you move into what I have referred to as the three-dimensional frame of reference. Not an evil place, not truly an illusion, but a limited perception of the only thing there is to perceive—the Kingdom of Heaven. It is limited by the fact that you have chosen to give your own definitions to it in tandem with someone else, other than the Father. And immediately you have time and space, and you are a tiny object in the middle of it. And so, instantly, eternity and infinity, which are truly an indivisible experience of the eternal Now, seems to be spread out on a time-line from an infinite past, to an infinite future. And you are working your way along that line. And so, immediately you have something ancient. The word "ancient" is meaningless, truly.

Now, why are you at the end of an "ancient journey" without realizing that you are at the end of it? Because you never ever left the Kingdom of Heaven. And you never stopped being the direct expression of God, even though you joined with another in a false definition of it all and seemed to lose the conscious experience of it. It is sort of satisfying to think that maybe you are at the end of an "ancient journey", like finally, maybe you've arrived.

But the reason you are at the end of an "ancient journey" is, because you never went on an "ancient journey." And at this moment and at every single moment of consciousness that you have experienced, you have been smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And you have been the Sons and Daughters of God, nothing less and nothing more. It is imperative that you begin to understand, that not only are you already at the destination you feel you have to work so hard to get to, but you never left. You are all the beloved Sons and Daughters of God, in whom God is well pleased, even if you are not particularly pleased with the dreams you have created for yourself in your exploration of independence.

So, how do you get off the wheel of history? How do you consciously end this “ancient journey”? You must withdraw from the special relationship. You must withdraw from the mutual agreement as to what a thing is, as to what everything is. Again, I encourage you, especially during this conference, to frequently say, “Nothing that I see means anything. Nothing that I hear means anything.” Why do you do that? Not because it’s all meaningless. No. But because, if you are willing to abandon your confidences as to what it all means, you leave yourself open to the penetration of God’s point of view into your awareness.

Most of you here, are feeling really good about the fact that for three and a half days you are going to be with people who think like you think. Well, what about the poor souls back at work, or in the neighborhood? And are any of you really different from them? And might not your tendency to feel good because you are with like minded people mean, that contrary to your expression of intent for being here, it might be nice not to have to be so conscious for a few days; not be in the place where you would have to be as active an expression of love; not be where anybody is going to make waves.

I will tell you something, love the waves. I’ve said it before—become a surfer. Stop wanting to be on the stable ground. Let yourself be with the Movement, that to you, doesn’t feel particularly stable. Value the instability, because God is a Movement. God is an infinite Movement of Creation. And the only stability there is to that Movement of Creation, is the absolute indivisibility of that which is moving, which means that the infinite aspects of that Movement will be perfectly orderly, because they express the harmony of the indivisibility of that which is moving; the purity of that which is moving.

I encourage all of you to be willing to abandon what you have termed security. Because again, your demand for security is the means you see, or which your ego sees, as the way not to have to be conscious. And waking up is about being conscious—in your Right Mind—experiencing your birthright as the infinite expression of the Mind that God Is, the infinite intelligence that God Is.

You have heard of God spoken of as All Knowing, and you have taken that to mean, Knowing everything. But I would like you to think of it differently from now on, all there is to God is knowing. And therefore, if you are the direct expression of this God that is nothing but knowing, you must be the presence of knowing. But you won't discover the experience of knowing until you stop thinking and start listening. And so, listen this weekend.

There's no one special here to hear. I mean by that, no one more special than you. The only thing that can possibly hear Truth, is the Christ of you; whether you are listening to me, whether you are listening to any other speaker this weekend, whether you are reading the Course, or even something else. It is the Christ of you that recognizes the Truth.

And when the Christ of you recognizes the Truth, because ego thinking hasn't gotten in the way, you are having an experience of being at one with the Father when He experiences everything that He has made. Except we're going to change that slightly—everything that He is making. And behold, it is very good. Behold, it is verily God, Himself. That statement is a statement of self-recognition. It is a statement of the operation of the infinite Mind of God. God Moves and God sees the Movement and recognizes Himself in It. And the Movement is a Movement of Intelligence, what you can best comprehend as the Movement of Mind. And the Mind that Moves and sees It's Movement and recognizes Itself in It, experiences Itself as tangibility and visibility, but no materiality associated with it. This is what it is your birthright to be experiencing at this moment, and throughout the weekend, and when you go home.

To look at a thing and discover the materiality of it, the non-mental, non-idealistic nature of it disappearing, so that everything begins to appear to you in fairer form, so that you are not seeing through a glass so darkly; this is the way you get off the wheel of history; this is the way you embody the fact that the "ancient journey" is over. And it is the way you discover the fact that you never went on it, as a fact.

Now, it's a simple fact that if you dare to listen, you must listen for something. And the very act of listening is the act of abdicating separateness. It is the way in which you join.

Now, read the words in the Course and let them justify letting go of them, even if for a moment, to practice what the Course says; and listen, and dare to hear. And then, you will find yourself in the first stage of being a teacher. You will suddenly find out what trust means, because doubts will come up all over the place. "Are you really hearing? Is this really trustworthy?"

And your ego will come in with plenty of arguments to tell you "this cannot possibly be the Voice for Truth. This can't be the Holy Spirit. This can't be the Christ. This can't be your Higher Self. This is just you fooling yourself." And you must weigh this, this is where the reality, the transformational aspects, the miracle of The Course In Miracles comes into play. Because at the bottom line, the value of the Course is there to help you arrive at such a conviction in the Allness of God, and of your fundamental Divinity, that you are willing to abandon your confidences in what you believe, and lean into—let go into—the underlying everlasting arms of the Father. Yield up your will, for the Will of the Father, which is your true will.

Again, the way you get off the wheel of history, the way you discover the fact that you are at the end of an “ancient journey,” is to stop thinking. Because it is by means of thinking that you join with another and arrive at a mutual agreement as to what a thing is; different from what the Father is Knowing about that thing.

This is what happened when each of you picked up the Course for the first time, or the second time, or the tenth time. Just remember, you don’t want to get the Course under your belt in a conceptual way. You want to relate to it as though it has something for you at the moment you open it, that may have nothing to do with anything you’ve ever seen in the Course before. Read it with fresh eyes. Read it with lack of confidence. Read it with vulnerability. In other words, read it as though you are really who you Are, instead of “a student of the Course.” Because the simple fact is, that until you are awake, you are experiencing a certain amount of misery and limitation and lack, and that is what makes you reach. It is what causes you to reach genuinely, rather than with a vested interest to get support for your private sense of what is right.

Don’t try to cover up your uneasiness with things, with platitudes from the Course, any more than from the Bible, or any other book. Feel where you are at any given moment. There will be a certain degree of insecurity to it. And it is because of that insecurity, that who you Divinely Are can penetrate the limits of your present point of view. Don’t read the Course to become strong; read the Course to become weak—weak in the ego.

Again, the reason the Course is there for you to read, is because aside from your intellect, it is able to trigger your Awakening, pop your balloons, leave you naked in front of everyone else, so that you might have the opportunity to hear everyone gasp; not because of how ridiculous you look, but because of how meaningful the Presence is that is there that had been covered up by all of the confidences of your ego. I cannot say that will give you something to think about, but be with it, abide with it, what we have considered together this morning. And let it move you; let it mature you.

And know that at any time that any of you wish to know the Truth, it is present with you; I am present with you; the Holy spirit is present with you; the Father is present with you. And many that you cannot imagine stand in support of you and will respond. And know something else, that you are waking up from a short dream right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. In other words, you’re already there. All that is required now, is a simple element of curiosity—not a long process of redemption.

QUESTION: I don’t have a question per se, but I just wanted to acknowledge that this morning is the first time that I’ve heard how simple it would be to get my own guidance, to just sit and listen and ask for it. I always thought that I had to take a course, or have a special gift, or do something unusual to do it. And I just want to thank you for letting me know that I can do it.

ANSWER: You are welcome. At the moment of what you call conception, a guide was assigned to you. You would not be allowed to go into a dark tunnel without someone who knows his way around or her way around, to be with you. And so, you have never been alone.

Now, I am going to very briefly give you four steps to get in touch with your guide.

The first step is: Become still. In other words, go into your closet.

The second step is: Express your desire for communication with your guide. And remember, be real. As Paul said, if he had a guide, and if I was there, would I please speak up. Express this desire once only, on any given occasion, when you are sitting down with a conscious intent to connect with your guide.

The third step is: Listen. Many of you will find you have a tendency to keep asking over and over, and over again, and not really becoming quiet. When you get to step three—listen. Let your attitude be towards your guide, “Thy will be done. I will defer to you, and what you know to be the best approach to me.”

The fourth step is: Expect an answer. You can sit and listen until you are blue in the face and you will hear nothing if you are not expecting an answer. Anyone who tells you it is more complicated than that, simply doesn’t know what they’re talking about.

QUESTION: For several years I’ve had a desire, a dream to start a personal growth, spiritual growth center. I have two pieces of property, 90 acres, 144 acres. And I struggle with this continually. It’s part of being afraid of commitment.

And I’m already teaching at the university, which I enjoy doing. And I’m afraid I’d get scattered and won’t do a good job. I also worry a lot about not having enough money about this. I’m already in debt, with mortgages, etc. And I’d like to do this without borrowing money—other people’s money. And I run into my fear of not having enough: greed; coming up with systems; of people paying membership fees; and am I not being spiritual. I’m carrying this baggage that getting money would not be a spiritual thing to be doing. So I’d like some guidance on that.

ANSWER: You want to do this. I encourage you to set aside what you want. I encourage you not to give a damn about what you want. The key, once again is to listen. On one occasion I shared with someone, that in spite of the statement, “with faith the size of a grain of mustard seed, you can move mountains,” the fact is that you can’t move a mountain that isn’t already moving.

The ego loves that statement, because it suggest that there is a power in your will—not yours only—everyone’s.

What you need to do is to listen so that you may be in the flow of the Movement of God, which necessarily must mean your experience of fulfillment of purpose. Then you only have to stay with the Movement of fulfillment of purpose, that the Father is Being, and experience your inseparability from it, and the fulfillment of purpose that is truly yours.

Now, you have this property. Keep this property. I want you to say, “I would like to have a center, when you say so Father. And I will wait for you to let me know when it is the right time. In the meantime, as I go to school, as I teach, as I take care of my son, as I do or do not keep my place in order, what is appropriate for me, because in my everyday activities I want to be the transparency for truth.” There is fulfillment beyond belief awaiting you, and all of you, in the most mundane of activities that you call worldly.

And each one of you is where love shines through and penetrates the human condition. The most difficult thing for the ego sense to accept is, that the only way you can help your fellow man, is right through the center of your own Being. The most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your own Being. If any of you at this moment feel connected with, it is because Paul is being from the center of his being. And although I am speaking, Paul is not nothing. He is being the willingness to be the Presence of Truth. Paul has abandoned caring what you think. He has from experience found that there is an extreme difference between caring for and about someone else and how they are feeling, and being truly loving, which is what he is being at this very moment. Because when he begins to care how the truth will be heard, when he begins to care what the truth is going to be, he finds himself becoming exhausted. And at the bottom line—so do all of you.

So, if you really want to care, if you really want to be a meaningful Presence in the world, forget about the world and get centered. And be in the world out from that place of knowing that occurs. And then your world will report back to you how wonderful you are. And you will say, “How wonderful I am? I wasn’t doing anything. I wasn’t trying to be something FOR YOU.” Then you will understand why I said to my disciples, “Why callest thou me good?”

So, be the place where the Father’s Will is expressed and you experience it as Knowing, with a capital “K”. And if a center unfolds, it unfolds. And if it doesn’t, it doesn’t. And which ever way it goes, it will perfectly express the Father’s Will. In the meantime, with or without the center, you at every moment of your day, hopefully, will be the Presence of Truth—that is the leaven that leavens the whole lump. Because I will tell you, each one of you, each one of you who dares to listen, rather than think on your own, is disengaging from the ego, weakening it thereby. You are withdrawing from the joining with another ego in a mutual agreement as to what things mean, and you are finding your already existing oneness with the Father, which is transformational strength. But it is one in which you no longer experience power in the way that you had from your ego's vantage point. But you cannot deny the fact that you are inseparable from what is happening. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In our ACIM study group, we were reading the text, and we had a question. The passage went something like this: That we can recognize that we are with Jesus or with the Holy Spirit according to two criteria; One is that we will feel no fear. And it's the second part that stumped us—when we meet someone, they will know immediately that we are in the Presence of the Holy Spirit.

ANSWER: "They will know the same peace you are experiencing."

QUESTION: And I guess the question that we had was, then why was Jesus crucified?

ANSWER: Because at that moment it was my task to be the one at peace, so that everyone else might have available to them the peace that passes understanding, as it has been put. I was setting the example. And it worked. If it hadn't worked, we wouldn't be sitting here today, and you would have no particular record of the existence of a man called Jesus.

Now, your question is a wonderful question. If you are experiencing your peace, it necessarily means that those around you will experience it also, without your saying a word. It means that it is not necessary for any of you to be able to talk the Course, in order for the transformation you are experiencing to be felt.

Again, everyone's desire to have someone to speak to—someone who is "speaking your language"—only means that if you succeed in finding those to be with, that you will not be in a position of having to be the active Presence of Love, the active Presence of Peace. There are too many separations; too many divorces; too many conflicts within families; because one who has discovered the Course and is so enthusiastic about it, feels blocked because they cannot talk about it. And the miracle is not about talk. The miracle is about changed perception, that you are not personally responsible for.

No one else has to even know you have the books. And you do not have to express a single phrase from the books in order to be a transformational presence, because you have chosen for your peace. When you choose for your peace and you abide in it, and you find less and less reason to abandon it to be reactive in the world, there are two things that will emerge out of that experience of peace—adding to its meaning as an experience. The first is, unreasonable joy. And the second is, love. And they don't really appear separately.

As a result of being still within yourself, you do experience peace, and what I need you to understand is that that peace is not just the absence of anxiety. It is a direct, a palpable experience of your Self, with a capital “S”. It is the nature and substance of your Being. And that experience of peace, is a real experience of your Divinity. You are touching your Self, you are experiencing your Self, with a capital “S”. Now you are, therefore, in an unconflicted state. And it feels good.

Oh yes, it is going to feel like something when you wake up. You will not be so even, so level, that there’s no experience of meaning and feeling. And you will feel the joy that is inseparable from the peace. And you will feel the love that is inseparable from the peace and the joy. As you begin to realize that you are having a Real experience, not just an alternative to anxiety, you begin to understand who you Are, without words and without concepts. You begin to know, and inseparable from that knowing about you, is the knowing that this is true about everyone else. And in that knowing, you can’t help but be different with everyone. And your words will change. But you will speak from your Being, you will speak from your heart—you won’t speak from a book.

And I’ve said it before, but I cannot say it too often: everyone is able to recognize love. It isn’t the words you want to be able to utter and express—it’s the love. And if you’ll be the love, and forget about the words, you’re not going to run into any great resistance; because everyone loves to be loved, especially when that love is coming from a deep place of recognition of Truth. Because you know what? You no longer feel inclined to join with another at the level of his ego beliefs. You join with that other at the level of what he Divinely is, which you know about, because you’ve had the experience of your Self, and the inescapable realization that everyone is just like you. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: I do feel the deep profound love for other people. But I often feel, and right now I’m going through deep profound loneliness, and a real need for touch. And I’m having a hard time letting go of that need.

ANSWER: Find someone to touch. Find someone to love. Do not look for someone who will touch you and love you. It is not the lack of being touched or loved by someone else that is hurting you. It is the fact that you are not letting your love flow. Your ego is wanting to strike a bargain. It says, “I will withhold love until I get some.” And you know what? If you agree with your ego, and you block the love that you are, you will hurt. And the ego will tell you that the description of that hurt, or the definition of that hurt, is loneliness. It will not tell you that it is because you are withholding the expression of the love that you are from everyone else. And it will keep you on a wild goose chase, running around everywhere, trying to find someone who will love you.

And yet, by virtue of your withholding the love that you are, you are in a state of defense with everyone else, and they will feel that. And that will cause them to want to stand back, because there is something in them that recognizes that leveraging and control is going on, and that constitutes dishonesty.

Mind you, you are not intending to be dishonest. But the ego is setting up a situation, which will necessarily result in failure. And it does it by misdirecting you.

I will tell all of you, if there is something you are not getting, it is that very thing that you are not giving. This is absolute fact—always it is the fact. And so, instead of looking for that one who will make you feel better, one be the that makes everyone feel better, by letting the love that you Are flow. And everyone that you are with will feel touched. And they will end up wanting to let you know. But the interesting thing is that then it won't matter to you, because that hurt that comes from withholding the love that you are, won't be there for the ego to identify as loneliness—or shall I say, misidentify as loneliness.

Why should you love, if no one else is being loving? Because it's your nature, and because it's your birthright to feel the congruence of you. It is your birthright to experience being at Home, with a capital "H", whether anyone else chooses to be loving or not. And are you going to sacrifice your opportunity to come Home—into the full conscious realization of your identity and your fulfillment of purpose—just because someone else is choosing not to?

You see, that is the way you join with a mutual agreement to have a different point of view than the Father's point of view. A mutual agreement to believe an illusion. And you must not join in that fashion. And you must join with the Father/Mother God by not blocking the Divine One that you Are. Then the Father/Mother flows unblocked into expression and penetrates the so-called human condition, and rouses the dormant understanding. And you feel your joy, and you feel the love that you are and everyone is blessed, because you have dared to choose to be congruent with your capital "S" Self.

Now, watch your ego. Because it will suggest to you that there is a certain justice here that needs to take place before it will be justifiable for you to be the Love that you Are. That there truly is some righteous purpose for withholding it a little bit longer. "It won't be fair," the ego will say to you, "for right, or happy you just to go ahead and be the Presence of Love." And you know the statement, "would you rather be"? It's not just a smart ass statement! It represents a simple, profound, life changing, transformational Truth.

Please remember, that the one most significant thing that keeps everyone from waking up is, that you all think that the answer is going to be as complex as you perceive the problem to be. And so, you are reluctant to embrace the answer—when always the answer simplifies. All of a sudden, out of a thousand apparently reasonable and wonderful choices, there's only one that is appropriate. How simple!

Everyone is familiar with the term, "the little gap." And it's like this little gap between here and there that must be bridged. But I am going to suggest to you, that it's more like a hole that has grease all around it. And if you would just let yourself get close to it, you would slip into it, and you would slip through the illusion into a conscious realization of Reality as It Is.

The concept of a bridge to the gap implies not only the effort of walking across it, but perhaps the effort of needing to build it. In other words, it implies work and effort. Whereas the image I have just shared with you, is something that happens if you lose your balance and have no control, and have no chance to exercise a will or effortfulness. If you are already in the Kingdom of Heaven, and if you are already the direct expression of God—the Presence of the Christ—then there is no labor to discovering it.

And as I said at the beginning: “The Bridegroom cometh when ye think not.” Now you must understand also, that I’m not the Bridegroom, you are. It is your Divine Selfhood that is going to be the second coming. I don’t need to do it again!

RAJ COMMENT: I have enjoyed being with all of you this morning. And I want all of you to know that there is no question, no problem, no situation too mundane, or too ridiculous, to come to me for the answer to. I’d much rather have you mumbling incoherently in your sleep, expressing the terror of your dream that isn’t even real, asking for help, than to have you continue in a sound sleep.

And you have no idea of the delight and the interest that is shown, when somebody begins to struggle and move as they rouse themselves from a dream. Nor do you have any idea of the support that is present. Even though you have no idea of the support that is present, you will more easily allow yourself to accept the support, if you will keep in mind, that you are already at your destination—because you never left. And that is why you are at the end of an “ancient journey,” one that never happened. Waking up is that realization. Not an intellectual realization of those words, but the experience of God Being All, right where you are, and Being the constituting Presence of You. Enjoy the conference.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good morning. Yesterday the question was asked if the sign of an Awakened One is the experience of perfect peace. And the fact that everyone around that One experiences perfect peace, how is it that the crucifixion could have happened? In other words, how could those around me not have experienced the peace and the gentleness of Love, and thereby have been unable to engage in the act that has come to be known as the crucifixion? It is a good question. But it illustrates what the Course calls level confusion.

How many of you understand what level confusion means? How many do not? Those of you who do, may be surprised to find that you do not, either. Level confusion is not something to have an intellectual concept of. And I’m going to share something at a more experiential level that will help you to know what it means, without yet being able to put it into words.

Many of you have had the experience of being asleep at night. And when you were children, your mother would call and say, “it’s time to get up.” And you were having a dream. And in the dream one of the characters is hollering, “it’s time to get up.” Or, somebody comes while you are sleeping and shakes your shoulder. And in the dream, the person standing next to you reaches up and puts his or her hand on your shoulder, and shakes it gently to get your attention. That is level confusion. Where an event that is happening at another level, is interpreted as an event Within another level. That is level confusion.

Now, this is very important, because it’s going to change the way you approach the rest of this conference as well as the way you approach your daily life, when you return to your homes. The Course and the voice for Truth, do not address you from the level of the dream, but from a level outside the dream, to rouse you to a different order of awareness.

If you are having a night dream, and you are in a righteous argument with someone, and indeed your mother or someone calls the Real you to wake up—is that going to create a feeling of satisfaction for the one arguing with you in the dream, if you are going to completely withdraw from the dream? No!

So, are you here as students of the Course to have a clearer perception to make everyone else be better or happier; or are you here to wake up to a different order of things? Really speaking, with a capital “R”, there are no such things as levels. But if you are caught in an experience of fantasy—which is what a dream is—then there do seem to be levels. Because Reality seems to be unavailable to you at that moment, and your dream has become the substitute for Reality. True, it is said, that as you begin to reach beyond your conditioned thinking, as you begin to desire to wake up and know the Truth, with a capital “T”, the unhappy dream begins to shift to a happy dream.

But that’s not the point. It is a “benny” you get; a “perk” you get. It is very easy, especially as one begins to study and embrace and attempt to embody the principles of the Course, to think that it’s purpose is to change everything for the better. And so, it can begin to be used as a means of control of the dream—which is not the point.

And so, indeed there are many Course In Miracles meetings that are far from peaceful and loving. And there are families, where non-Course members of the family, and Course members of the family, begin to experience strife. As though, the conveying of ideas and principles, and the use of particular language, is what constitutes embodying the Course. When the point is—the internal shift of awareness that causes you to feel less and less the need for defense so that you may be more genuinely you, and express the love that you find is indeed the substance of you, which almost no one in your world will object to.

Now, there is a necessity for me to be very precise, because in the use of the illustration of a dreamer in a night dream, and the fact that what is experienced is pure fantasy, and when you wake up the world of that fantasy disappears, that illustration cannot be used appropriately to give you a context in which to understand waking up. It is instead the daydream, such as you had when you were in school and the teacher was talking, and you were gazing out the window and were a thousand miles away—or imagining yourself out in the yard playing. Here, your fantasy is a modification of Reality, not a total substitute for it. In effect, the Course is the loud noise of the teacher getting your attention while you are daydreaming, so that your attention comes back to a proper perception of Reality, rather than the modified one that you have engaged in, as a means of escape from boredom.

It is important to understand this, because at this very instant there's only one thing going on—God—right here. And it looks like me, and it looks like you, and it looks like a building, and it looks like grass, and it looks like cows, it looks like a group, it looks like food, it looks like camaraderie, but it's all God. If God is, indeed, Omnipotent and Omnipresent, where is there room for another creation? There is none. Therefore, you are at all times confronted with Reality, with a capital "R". At all times, you are confronted with the Kingdom of Heaven, and you are either seeing it clearly or through a glass darkly.

Through the lens of the ego you have a misinterpretation of it, a misperception of it. And that is why the Course says, that ultimately, perception will disappear. Perception of what? Perception of the Kingdom of Heaven. You will no longer have a perception of it, you will Be the conscious experience of it. Any perception you have of it, must necessarily be biased, partial, incomplete.

Divinely speaking, you all have the capacity to imagine. But if you imagine and you join with another in that imagination—if another joins you in that imagination—now it is not imagination, it is misperception. And the bonding between the two of you, in the mutual agreement as to the reality of that misperception, is what constitutes a special relationship. You think that a special relationship is a word that describes every relationship you have, and especially the most important ones to you, the ones with your husbands, or wives, or children. The special relationship is the mutual agreement to treat a daydream as though it were real, and as though Reality were not going on at all.

Now, I picked the subject, the end of an "ancient journey," because that is what waking up is, and that is what the end of a special relationship is. I want to be very, very clear on something. The end of relationships with each other is not the embodiment of a holy relationship, is not the end of a special relationship. Be wise, because the ego will suggest to you that you are in a special relationship and you must get out, and that will be representative of your spiritual growth. The fundamental basis of the ego is, to not be in relationship at all, but to be independent, separate. "But Father, I'd rather do it myself. But Mother, I'd rather do it my way. I'd rather see things the way I want to see them."

I've said before that relationships are the crucible of Awakening. Why, and especially committed ones? Because that is where the greatest opportunity is to let down your defenses and be present with. How can you join, if you are not present with? Value your relationships. And know, that it is not a teaching, and it is not a language, it isn't verbiage that exalts a relationship, it's love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R”, in each and everything.

Relationships are essential to Awakening. They are essential to joining and yielding up the false sense of self-satisfying, separateness.

Now, you are here. You seem to be listening to me, and you are at this conference and you seem to be listening to a marvelous banquet of spiritual expressions of Truth. But all of you are listening to what you are seeing with, or listening with. And if you are listening with insight, you hear that which is insightful. And if you listen with defense, you hear that which justifies your sense of separateness. So, are you really listening to me, or are you listening to what you are listening with? And if you are listening to what you are listening with, are you not in a process of finding yourself in your world?

And so, can there really be those who are more enlightened than you, or more worthy of listening to than you? If you are hearing anything of value from them, it means you are listening from that place of value and are hearing yourself, and discovering the oneness of that which seemed to be separate.

I'm going to give you another way to think of “the journey without distance.” It happens that this statement comes from Christian Science literature, but truth is truth no matter where it appears. “You are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing towards it. You are at that point, and must understand yourself there from.”

This “ancient journey” is a journey that has happened while you have been the Christ—the direct expression of God. And it has happened smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. Because you as the Son or Daughter of God, and the Kingdom of Heaven, are the only things that are Real and truly available to be experienced.

And so, the journey has been a dream—fantasy—experienced right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. It has constituted an ignoring of the Kingdom of Heaven, and the energizing of a different perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, that you and someone else have agreed upon, so that you might have the experience of a different point of view from the Father's point of view. Which really means, a point of view different from what feels like Home to you. A point of view different from you feeling the congruence of you.

And you cannot have that different kind of feeling without, what I call, “garbage truck bells.” When a garbage truck is backing up and there is greater danger, there are bells that ring. And so, if you are going to indulge in a limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, which constitutes insanity, there will be bells; there will be what you will call fear, because it is not natural to you. And it is really, initially not fear, it is just a warning bell that says, “Don't linger too long in this limited perception. Get back Home.” Fear is not a punishment, anymore than the bell says something is wrong with this truck. It just means, be alert, because there is not enough clear vision for you to be safe.

And so, there is no penalty for having a partial private view, that is handed down by God. It’s just that when you are out of sync with your capital “S” Self, or what you Divinely Are, you are going to feel the uncomfortableness of not being in your natural place.

Now, if the only thing confronting you here and now and during this whole weekend, is the Kingdom of Heaven and God’s Truth—because there truly isn’t anything else Real happening—then, if you are willing to look at it with curiosity, to know God’s Truth, and if you even grasp a little bit the fact that the truth that you see is the truth that you are willing to listen with, and therefore it is a conscious experience of unity and perfect equality, then you provide yourself with the greatest opportunity for your perception to be cleared.

And the likelihood is, that you will go home beaming with great joy and great news for everyone else, about how marvelous this workshop, or this conference was. And what I want, is for you to go home and not neglect to be aware, that it was the wonderfulness of what you chose to listen with—it was the wonderfulness of you, that you are so happy to share with everyone else. And if you get that idea, if it registers with you deeply, you may well go home and say, “You know the conference itself was so-so, but my perception of it was marvelous. And I learned something. I learned to look with better eyes. And that’s the good news I have to share with all of you.” So, learn to look with new eyes. Learn to abandon the confidences you have in what the meaning of everything is, because at the present time they are definitions you have arrived at, without having asked God what the meaning is. Without saying, “what is God’s point of view here?” God’s point of view is your point of view, truly.

Now, the ego is a defense mechanism—nothing else. And it is superb as a defense mechanism. Don’t think that you can use the principles of the Course to overcome the ego, you can’t. But what is the one thing that the ego can’t defend itself against? Disregard.

So, how do you get off the wheel of history? How do you truly consciously experience the end of an “ancient journey,” that was not a journey at all, because you never left Home? You do it by turning your attention to some other source than your conditioned thinking. You join with the Holy Spirit. You join with the Father. You join with me. You reach out with curiosity.

The ego will be most happy if you will just stay in your nice little cell and be happy. The way you disengage from the ego is by reaching out to that which is different from it, and neglecting the ego. And because you have, for so long it seems, been incarcerated within the limits of the ego, it seems as though you are reaching out to something beyond yourself. And that doesn’t seem to be such a wise thing. And the ego will say, “be careful, you’re giving your power away.” It will use psychology against you. But there is no way, at the moment, for the reaching out to seem to be different from reaching out to that which is beyond you, because you are, at the moment, by definition, a circumscribed limited entity. That’s the ego’s perception, which you seem to believe is true of you. And that’s why trust is the fundamental point, because you must dare to trust.

What most of you think trust is, is confidence—something that you have confidence in. Confidence will not get you to wake up, because it will always be confidence in something you are already familiar with. Trust takes you beyond what you are familiar with. And therefore, it will always be, trust into the unknown. What you already know keeps you bound.

Now, what is the Holy Spirit? The Holy Spirit is your Divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. Therefore, when you are reaching out beyond the limits of the ego; when you are trusting into the unknown; when you are turning everything over to the Holy Spirit, so that it may turn your experience to your advantage, you are reaching out to and joining with that disowned part of you—the rest of the infinite of you—that you temporarily ignored while you had the exciting, thrilling, fearful experience of limitation. It is important to understand this, because it will reduce your fear. It will reduce the degree to which the ego can try to scare you out of waking up.

This is how you come to the end of the “ancient journey.” Some of you contemplated the title of this conference gathering, and discovered that the word “ancient” has warm, meaningful connotations; as though that which is ancient might be closer to the truth, that which is ancient is that which has endured and therefore, must have substance to it. Don’t value the ancient.

It isn’t the end of an “ancient journey,” it’s the end of a journey of ancientness. And what I mean by that is, when you sacrifice the infinite view, (God’s point of view, which is your birthright to be experiencing) when you sacrifice the infinite view, infinity immediately gets stretched out on a line—past to future and immediately there is history. Immediately Omnipresence becomes ancientness and infinite unending potential. But it’s a perception, a misperception of infinity; your capacity to be conscious wholly without limit of any kind.

And to consciously experience the infinite Movement of God as the Movement of You, not a little ego experiencing this infinite movement, but the You that you truly Are, experiencing your birthright to have the Mind of God, you might say.

God self-expressed is not man. God self-expressed is God, and if you want to call it man, and woman, and tree, and birds, and grass, etc., fine. But don’t get too hung up on the words you use to define it. The infinite manifestation of God is GOD expressed, not a different presence from the Father. And if God is the infinite Intelligence, the infinite Mind, and the Father has withheld nothing of what He is from His Self-expression called You, then you must be that infinite Mind. That infinite awareness must be your natural conscious experience of being conscious. Indeed, you are not a body, you are Mind, in which all conscious experience of form is going on. When you identify with a form, you lose your infinite perspective, and it seems to be material; not of God, capable of dying, etc.

I will tell you something to set the record straight: When you wake up, everything will not disappear. Your limited perception of it will be gone, and you will see it as it is, and you will not seem to be in the middle of it, or inside it. You will also not be preoccupied with it. Because as that conscious awareness or Mind, that is the Presence of God's Mind—you, your attention, your experience of your aliveness, your vitality, etc.—will be inseparable from the conscious experience of the Movement of Creation.

People talk about being co-creators with God. Co-hyphen-creator, implies two things cooperating and that is not what it will be. You will, by virtue of not claiming the right to your own private mind, find yourself to be the conscious experience of the Movement of Mind, that is God Being Creation. And the experience of that, will be where your attention will be; not on the specifics, not on the visibility and tangibility of that creation. Where you give your attention will be different, but everything will still be present except for the misperception of it.

Now, I am able to be conscious, right here in this room, without sacrificing my infinite awareness of every aspect of the Movement of God, which is infinite. Divine awareness is specific and universal simultaneously, and there is no way to explain that. But that will be your experience.

In order to get to that experience you must begin to value where you are, and you must begin to value each other, and you must not see the Course as that which helps you rise above such mundane things as human relationships. There isn't a single human being in this room—you are all Christ's. You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it.

So let go of the ethic of progress, and begin to, as you go through the the rest of this conference, see with fresh eyes, see with curiosity. "Nothing that I see means anything," means, "nothing that I see means what I think it means. And so I'm going through this conference with curiosity to discover the truer meaning, as it is being set into motion by the Movement of God."

Now, peace, when you allow yourself into it, by going into your closet and praying unto the Father which is in secret, which is in the silence, does not give you an alternate experience, an alternative to anxiety. It is not just another arena of emotion, it is a direct experience of your Being, of your Self, with a capital "S", your Being with a capital "B." It is a direct experience of God, and you cannot avoid being aware of the oneness of you and the Father. And when you allow yourself to experience this peace, the fact is that you will generally find a happier dream occurring. You are likely not to find the resistance that I did, or seemed to. But more important than that, is that you have allowed yourself into a new order of conscious experience in which you may have the opportunity to get to know yourself more truly. And in choosing for that truer experience of who you are, you get closer to the little gap. That place where all control is lost, and where you can easily slip through into your conscious experience of having a will that is not separate from the Father's—and wake up.

Curiosity is the active means by which you abandon your confidence in what you think a thing is. And when you abandon what you think a thing is, you are neglecting the ego. In being neglected and having no occasion for defense, because it is not being attacked, your connection with the disowned part of you, called the Holy Spirit, can occur spontaneously. Don't be curious about the here-after, be curious about the here-and-now, because here-and-now is where the opportunity to wake up exists, because it is the Kingdom of Heaven and you are the Christ.

The end of an "ancient journey" is over, because it never began, and that is why it is a "journey without distance."

It is good to be with you. I am going to say, it is good to be with you, knowing that you know I am with you. And indeed, I am always with you. You hear what you are listening with. Listen with new ears, and with an expectation of an answer. And that is the way you abandon the ego and end the journey.

QUESTION: Raj, I've been experiencing difficulty in my marriage. It seems to be like Allen Corn said, "you put something in the frig and you forget about it, and it just grows moss, and seems to be dying, and you have to throw it out." But I still want to be loyal to my husband, and have a commitment. But there just isn't any joy. I'd like direction or guidance. Thank you.

ANSWER: Don't be afraid to listen for the answer. Don't be afraid to listen for Truth. All of you, to one degree or another, are afraid to listen for the Truth, because you are so convinced that you are guilty, that you expect the statement of Truth to convict you in your guilt, rather than uncover your innocence. And so, you must remind yourselves often, that the Truth sets you free, that the Truth will always uncover your guiltlessness, along with your brothers guiltlessness. Then you will not be as afraid to listen for the Truth.

Now, as the saying goes, "you can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." And if there is a member of a relationship, of a partnership, who is for whatever reason unwilling to be an active, vital partner in the relationship, then you must acknowledge the fact that there is not a relationship.

In your particular case there is not equal vitality being brought to the relationship by the two of you. In fact, there is a definite barrier to it.

Now, I am going to be very blunt. Your husband has the right to be alone. Your husband has the right to not engage in a relationship with you. And you have a right to be in a relationship with someone where there will be communication and communion.

Sometimes you all do not want to listen to the Truth because it will tell you something you don't want to hear even though it will benefit everyone. And that is part of yielding to the Holy Spirit—"not my will, but Thine be done." You must dare to say those words. You must dare to listen for the Will that is beyond your present sense of will, which is all utilized—brought into play for the purpose of self-protection. The way you escape beyond the willfulness of the ego is to reach beyond "Thy will be done," and then listen. A sense of righteousness would keep you bound to the relationship, trying to make it work. And it is not appropriate for you to waste the rest of your life attempting to do something that someone else is not willing to participate in.

If that which is Divine is omnipotent, you would be inclined to say that it has the power to override human will, you would say that it has the power to heal in spite of the person's beliefs. It is not true. That is why the only path is one of yielding. Yielding what? Yielding to the Father's Will and yielding up one's own defensive willfulness, one's own act of self-protection, which is brought into play to maintain separateness.

I listen to pleading, beyond your comprehension for healing, and healing is not experienced in many cases. Why? First of all, the very state of limitation or ignorance that all of you are experiencing, is a choice that each of you made at some point. Why you did it is irrelevant. And the fact that you did it, does not mean you are guilty of anything. But as long as a conscious choice has been made not to listen, you cannot hear. You could say, that you have walked into your daydream as a result of a conscious choice. You were not rejected from the Kingdom of Heaven. And you are not being kept out. You are in it. And you are what you have always Divinely been. Therefore, because each of you, for whatever reason, decided to have a different experience of it, you each must decide to come Home.

The saying is, "a mind that's changed against its will, is of the same opinion still." If indeed, I could pick you up and carry you into the Kingdom of Heaven, and you did not have a clear sense of having gotten there by your choice, you would feel unworthy of being there, and would find ways to get out again, until you could walk in yourself. You must know when you come into the full comprehension of your Divine Being, that it really is your conscious experience of yourself, and not because someone helped you have something you weren't really deserving of. There is no way you can be a stranger in the Kingdom of Heaven. There is no way you can feel not at Home, when you are at Home, except in the fantastic sense that you are already doing it at this instant.

Love is not a means of controlling others into their good. Don't waste your time trying to do what can't be done. But don't make assumptions about what can or can't be done, either. Listen, ask, as you have just done, or listen within after having asked. Because I promise you, if you are willing to listen, setting aside your best judgments, your conditionings about what a real marriage is, or how a truly loving wife can lift her man out of the doldrums. Listen and let go of those, so that you might truly hear what the Divine Will is at the moment, and then dare to act. And you are likely to find that it is going to be an act, and an act, and an act. In other words, a series of actions that are going to require continuing to ask, especially if you are being led out of your own confining beliefs about what a marriage is and what a dutiful wife is.

He deserves fulfillment and you deserve fulfillment, and it is not appropriate for either one of you to define it for each other. Free him and free yourself. I am speaking specifically to you relative to your specific situation. That's the end of the answer.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS, DAY THREE: Good morning. We might as well end up with the big question. What is Truth? Is it something to be found in the Bible? Is it something to be found in the Course? Is it indeed, something to be found in words? No. Truth is always revealed, which means that Truth is always a revelation. That means that if any of you ever experience Truth, it will be because you have given permission for its revelation to occur in your own mind.

Truth is the experience of the penetration of Reality into your current, limited perception of things. It is never outside of you. And no one else can reveal it to you, not even me. Each of you must give permission to yourself to have the conscious experience of Truth. And when you have the conscious experience of Truth, you cannot treat it as though it is now a fact for you to put in your tool kit to use at a later time. Because the revelation of Truth is really your clear, undistorted awareness of what is Real, and how to be appropriate in the moment that the revelation is experienced. And a moment later, you could say, it is not Truth and you must listen again, so as to be able to be clear and appropriate in that moment.

If you collect what I have called the chicken-scratches of Truth and repeat and rehearse them, thinking that you are connecting with Truth, you are wrong. That does not mean it is invaluable. It is better for you to be reading the chicken-scratches of Truth, than to be reading crap. But the reason for reading the chicken-scratches is so that you might have an easier means of giving yourself permission to have the direct experience of it. Just as thinking the truth, is the best means you have to convince yourself of the Allness of God, completely enough, to allow yourself to abandon yourself to God.

Yield to the Father. Yield to the Father/Mother. In other words, you think clearly, intelligently, logically, etc., to so convince yourself of the Allness of God that you can abandon thinking. Because thinking is the act of defense against Knowing. Knowing is the experience, the conscious experience of Truth, that occurs when ye think not.

So, if you are allowing yourself to open up to that which is beyond your conditioning, that which is beyond your memory banks, that which is beyond your habits—if you are opening up to the penetration of truth—you are going to be transformed. And that is what all of you fear most. It is one thing to consider the fact that you may indeed be at the end of an “ancient journey,” (it may sound wonderful, and you may with all of your heart say that you want the journey to be over) but, in order for the journey to be over, you are going to have to allow yourself to be transformed by the renewing of your minds. That is not the way you experience being mindful at the moment, because your mindfulness is a rehash of everything that has been. Renewing means standing always at the threshold of the experience of revelation—the clearer perception of Reality.

And so, indeed, if I let you leave this weekend without conveying that not only are you at the end of an apparently “ancient journey,” because you never ever left Home and the journey never really happened, I would be remiss if I did not point out to you that you are going to have to dare to embrace a new experience of you as well as of your world. And that is going to be what you would call an altered state of consciousness, a really altered state, not an artificially induced one by drugs.

And I do want to take a moment here to make it very clear, that the use of drugs for the expansion of consciousness, is just another ego trick. Because you do not get beyond the ego limits through the use of drugs, you simply heighten the imagination. The danger of drugs is that they are misleading and one feels as though he or she is indeed experiencing a universal consciousness of things, and they are not. But because they think they are, they neglect to do the one essential thing to really have an expanded consciousness of things. So, there is no spiritual benefit from the use of drugs.

What is the one essential thing? The one essential thing is: To arrive at a point where you don't value your thinking. Where you are willing to set it aside, even for twenty minutes twice a day or once a day, in order to go within into your closet and be at peace. When you are at peace, you are abandoning the ego, not by trying to get rid of it, but by choosing differently from what it suggests you choose for. By disregarding it.

Don't be afraid of a new point of view. And don't think that you can wake up without having a new point of view. Waking up is not the same old you having extended ideas, having stimulating new ideas. It is you, learning how to listen and how to be in the flow of the Movement of your capital “B” Being, which is the flow of the Movement of God.

Yes, there really is a God. And yes, you really are truly the conscious experience that is God Being the Movement of Creation. But the experience of that is not available to you, when you are claiming a mind separate from God, that has a right to its own perspective. And as long as you are claiming a mind different from God, and even different from your mate and your fellow man, you are depriving yourself of the experience of being at Home, with a capital “H”. You deprive yourself of the experience of your invulnerability, your integrity, your peace, the love that you Are, the substantiality of you that is yours before you draw a breath, or lift a little finger.

I encourage all of you to be daring, to be explorers. And what do explorers explore? There’s only one thing they can explore—it’s the unknown.

The Holy Spirit is your Divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. And so, when you dare to disregard the ego, and lean into the silence of you and experience your peace, and discover that that peace is the very substance of your Being, and not just an alternative to anxiety—the alteration of consciousness is beginning to occur. The penetration of the truer experience of who you Divinely are, as the Presence of God, begins to be consciously available to you. Why? Because you are giving permission and being curious. And then Truth begins to penetrate your sense of limitation, and you find yourself knowing what to do, and what not to do.

It is really very simple. It really is very simple, but you have been conditioned to think that the truth is complicated, because the problems you perceive seem complicated.

You know what? Awakening is beginning to spontaneously occur, because there are more Awake than there are those who are asleep, which means that there are fewer and fewer joined in mutual agreement to dream. And therefore, the sense of the substantiality of the dream, is weakening. And therefore, it is becoming more and more difficult to find your illusions holding up and supporting you, and it seems like disaster. And you call on me to help to reinforce the illusion. And I smile and love you, and support the strengthening in you that is occurring of your conscious experience of your Divinity.

Now, humanly speaking, being at the end of the “ancient journey” seems difficult because it does constitute the abandoning of those things which you thought were extremely valuable. But those things which you thought were extremely valuable, were the things that helped to reinforce your security in the face of the vulnerability you have all felt—because you haven’t been consciously experiencing who you Are.

And so, you all have unimaginable support from those of us who are Awake. And I mean that you have support, in addition to the Reality that you never left, (which of course constitutes support of you) as your belief structures begin to no longer make the sense that they made to you in the past. You cannot fall. You cannot fail.

There aren't just a hundred and forty four thousand who are going to wake up (Laughter and applause) and be lifted up in the Kingdom of Heaven, because everyone of you as you sit in these chairs is in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. You never left. So, how could anyone be left behind? So you have support just by the very nature of the fact that you never left the Kingdom of Heaven. The fact that you never left, means you cannot fail at returning. (Laughter)

And as there are fewer and fewer to join with in a daydream, that constitutes a distracted perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, you will find yourself (in addition to the support provided by the fact that you never left the Kingdom of Heaven, and as you find it more and more difficult to maintain the daydream, and lose the sense of safety that you got from the daydream) having the conscientious, ever present, uninterrupted attention of not only the Holy Spirit, but of what we will call your guide. And I mean that in the sense that the Course uses the term guides. They have come, ("For they have come," text page 520, old book) read that section of the Course. You have that support to help you have courage to endure the collapse of your false sense of security, as you feel the emergence with your own integrity.

Whether any of you realize it consciously yet or not, there is a drive emerging from within you that constitutes the courage to see with new eyes, which your ego says is unreasonable and which many of your friends say is unreasonable. But your willingness to feel that, and stick to your guns, will bless those who say what you believe and what you're doing is unreasonable. When they say it is unreasonable, they mean, "I cannot find that to be reasonable for me." And what is unstated is, "please succeed, so that I can find it to be reasonable."

You know something? To be Awake does not make you other-worldly—it is going to make you more Real. It is going to make you more humane. Your Divinity will find expression in a greater humanity. That does not mean limitation. It will find expression in love. It will find expression in the support of that which demonstrates unity; that which demonstrates order without control; that which expresses intelligence without premeditation; that which everyone around you will feel as security, as benignness, as safety, even if they disagree with you.

"Let that mind be in you," it has been said, "which was also in me." And I said, "if you have seen me, you have seen the Father." And at this time, at this moment—and I am only being appropriate in this moment—if you have seen Paul, you have seen me, you have seen the Father, because Paul is standing as the door, and I am standing as the door, and the Father is what is uninhibitedly Being.

And what is finding expression is more than even Paul is hearing, and is even more than you are hearing. But each of you are hearing and experiencing the Movement of God with the best eyes you have available. And it happens that this morning all of you have generally better eyes than you do when you are at home. If you are hearing the Truth this morning, it means you are also standing as the door. So, we are all being the place this moment where God shines through. And when we allow that, we become illuminated and transformed.

And so, I am going to leave you this weekend with an encouragement not to look for the Truth in any book. Realize that the Truth that you see is the Truth that you are willing to look with. To the degree that you allow the penetration of Truth as revelation within you, you will see it in everything that you are looking at. And I encourage you to give permission. I tell you that it is safe, because you are only accessing the infinity of who you already have been. And you are accessing the clearer conscious experience of the Presence of God, which is the constituting Presence of You. And therefore, you are safe, even though your ego tells you, you are crazy.

Dare to trust into the Holy Spirit. Dare to trust into your capital “S” Self. But remember the capital “S” Self is not a taller version of the little “s” self. The capital “S” Self is You identifying with, and as Mind—Consciousness—instead of identifying with, and as body.

It is a shift from body identification, to Mind identification. And not one of you in this room has ever experienced a limit or boundary to your mind. Even in your ignorance, you have not experienced a concrete limit to your mind. And so, therefore, you have an experience of infiniteness to Mind, that helps you to understand your potential capacity—it is an actual capacity, but I will say your potential capacity—to have an infinite conscious experience of being conscious, and not just a physically limited experience of being conscious. You have and are in the middle of a marvelous Divine adventure. Let yourselves be changed.

One other last thing: If indeed, your Divinity more clearly and consciously experienced is going to be manifest as a greater humanity, then what you or your ego would call a radical departure from the status quo, is going to be even more intelligent than what the ego has told you is intelligent. And therefore, as you give permission, and you become curious to know the Truth about everything, it is not going to cause you to be erratic—incongruent—with everything around you. You will not become a disturbance that is threatening. You will become a disturbance that is transforming, without threat.

I mention this, because since you are emerging from an ego frame of reference, you will always have the ego with you until you have disregarded it totally. And it is likely to say, that Awakening sort of gives you carte blanche to be totally irrational and not have to account for yourself. anything goes! No, sir! The nature of Awakening and clarity is that more and more of the indivisibility of what God is finds expression and embodiment in you, as you. And therefore, you will be exquisitely in harmony with that which manifests love and peace on earth—between you and your fellow man, between you and your environment.

The minute you actually begin to walk around and say, “everything I’m experiencing is the Kingdom of Heaven seen clearly or through a glass darkly,” you will begin to treat your environment with the respect that is due it, and you will find healing, you will find transformation occurring. Why? Because you are seeing with better eyes. You are seeing with your inspiration. You are seeing with the infinite penetration of Truth that transforms you and discloses to you the Kingdom of Heaven, that was never ever altered by your misperceptions.

So, you do not need to be afraid of opening up and giving permission to lean into the unknown. Because the inevitable result will be recognizable as utter intelligence, and harmony that is not an enforced harmony, but an irrevocable unalterable harmony that doesn’t need to be protected.

And so, if you begin to open up, if you begin to give permission for the alteration of your consciousness, be assured that if you are experiencing something that seems irrational, you are not called upon to act upon it. Indeed, you are called upon to inquire further, so that you might have help in sorting out the ego projections that are being projected upon it. Ask, ask, ask, inquire, be curious. “What is the Meaning here?” capital “M” Meaning. And when you are able to see the utter intelligence of an apparently radically new point of view—then act in accordance with it. And it will bless everyone, and will not frighten them. You keep forgetting, that everyone knows what love feels like.

To you it appears as though I am looking at all of you here in a room—a body looking at other bodies. But I am looking at you in the Kingdom of Heaven, with God’s eyes, seeing you as God created you, and that is the fact of you at this very instant. Remember this: You are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, you are at that point, and must understand yourself there from. And how can you understand yourself there from? By allowing for the penetration of Truth that reveals who you are and who you always have been, and transforms who you thought you were, by the renewing of your mind.

I am talking about an actual experience of a new perception—an altered perception. I use that phrase, “altered perception,” advisedly. But you must be aware, that you will experience things a new. And that which is experiencing them, that you call you, will be a new You, to you, One without fear, One without doubt.

It’s time to wake up. And the means of doing it, is here, now. And there are not enough dreamers to keep you asleep.

I love you. And if you could see the light of you at this very moment, you would know that you love each other. And therefore, everyone is greatly loved by the whole Brotherhood. Look for it! Be receptive to it! Be willing to embody it with each other. And remember that it is suppose to be fun, because it is utterly natural to every single one of you.

Questions are the leading edges of answers. So, don't ever underestimate the value of a question that you have. It is not there to be judged; it is there to abide with. If a question is the leading edge of an answer and you did not create the question yourself, it means that your question is your first experience of an answer being revealed. Therefore, the fact that you have a question does not mean that it is now time for you to figure out the answer, but to stay with the question as it comes more fully into view, and you are able to experience the answer that you initially perceived to be a curiosity, a question.

So, there are no questions that are too silly. There are no questions to turn over to the Holy Spirit—meaning questions that you are not going to figure out the answers to yourself. There is no question that is a bother. There is no question that is inappropriate. So, give yourself permission to have the questions you have, even if they seem inane, ridiculous, mundane—irrelevant to spirituality. If you are experiencing a question at all, it is the leading edge of revelation. Value it and stay with it! And so, we are going to have some time for some answers to emerge that you will experience first as questions.

QUESTION: I'm a nurse in an intensive care unit and I see a great deal of suffering.

We had an instance recently where we had a patient with Aids. He was in the last stage, and he was dying. When this guy arrested, the nurse who was taking care of the patient had blood splashed in her eye, which means that she's at risk of developing Aids.

And I'm having a really hard time with that—for a lot of reasons. I just don't understand the whole situation really. I try to be fair to both people; the person who's dying, and the family who's dying, to give them every opportunity for them to get what they need. But on the other hand, fifteen or twenty people, however many people were in that room, were all exposed. And it wasn't... maybe it was their choice—one way or another.

So, the amount of suffering that I see at the bedside when people die, I don't understand.

ANSWER: It is very simple. Every death is a suicide. You could say, that it is a succumbing to the dream. Each one, in apparently unique ways, arrives at a point of giving up the struggle. However, it is a giving up and going under. In effect, we have been talking about giving up all morning. But not giving up and going under; not yielding to the sadness, the exhaustion, the effort that seems to be called for, in order to survive under a sense of limitation. We have been talking about giving up by yielding beyond, consciously yielding beyond, our current perceptions.

You cannot understand death, because it is a misperception, and it is not there to be understood. You could say, it is there to be seen through. Indeed, where you find yourself, puts upon you a great call to be out from the center of your Being. To be the love that finds the one who is giving up, and those around him or her to be guiltless. To realize that this one is indeed—the perfect expression of God, the Christ. And that his or her current perception of himself or herself, has no substance to it. It is an urgent call for love, an urgent call for not believing the illusion.

Now, you cannot see anything for anyone else. But I will tell you, that to the degree that you do not join with everyone there, in their sense of limitation which grieves them, you lighten the load. You are the leaven that leavens the whole lump. And you must ask yourself whether it is worth it to you to join with them in the miserableness of the whole thing, and be conflicted yourself, or whether it is more important to you to be the love that you are, and your best centered perspective, because that leaves you unconflicted and able to be appropriate under the circumstances. Appropriate under the circumstances may well mean, having unlimited compassion, and willingness to love and nurture the suffering sense, that they are experiencing. Because words will do no good—and lofty concepts will do no good. It is indeed, a call for being willing to be with them. But be with them from your peace. Be with them from your love.

Now, this associate, (and any others who seem to have been exposed) are not bodies. They are the conscious experience of Being, which is another way of describing the Movement of God embodied. They are the Christ. Entrust them to their Divinity to the best of your ability. And do not let your imagination run away with you, with definitions of how the body works, and what the laws of the function of the body are. Because the fact is, that what is there and appearing to be a body, a material body, is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of God. And there isn't anything material about it at all.

Hold that one in the purest awareness of who they are, that you are able to. Thus you do not join with them at the level of their fear, and you do join with them at the level of what they Divinely Are, and that is what becomes strengthened. And that is what makes it easier for them to shift from their fear to their self-conscious awareness of their integrity—their inviolable integrity.

You are there to be the light. And you know what? If you were a grocery store clerk, you would be there to be the light. Be the Presence of that which makes it easier for another to change his or her mind. But realize that it is not your responsibility to change it. I'm going to put it very simply—you do not have access to the switch—the decision making apparatus in another. So, do not labor under the false idea that you must somehow be able to, and have the obligation to, make someone else change their mind. All you can do is make it easier for them to do it. And that is love.

One last point: No matter what the name of the illness is, it is an illegitimate imposition upon a Christ. Remember that. No one, no matter what seems to have happened, deserves to be sick. It is really too easy to say, “Well, you created it for yourself.” If it’s an illegitimate imposition upon a Christ, it doesn’t matter whether they created it for themselves. They need to know that it is an illegitimate imposition; that they do not have to endure, they do not have to hold to themselves, because they’re guilty of something. They wouldn’t have, and none of you would create an uncomfortable situation for yourself, if you knew that you were the Christ, if you knew that you were the Sons and Daughters of God. If you did, you would know how inconsistent such an idea was—that you deserved to be punished and that you are required to act in an unloving way.

Every single person who you find yourself dealing with, every single person in a room or in a ward that you might pass by, be aware that what they are experiencing is an illegitimate imposition upon a Christ. What does illegitimate mean? It means something that doesn’t have a source. And if something is sourceless, it is substanceless. And if it lacks substance, it doesn’t have enough of what it takes to hold it together, except the faith—the energy that one brings to it. And if you knew it was illegitimate, you would stop bringing energy to it. You would stop having faith in it’s ongoingness. And your changed perception, would be recognizable as healing.

If those who are grieving knew better, they wouldn’t grieve. But since they don’t know better they do grieve, and the Father meets them right where they are. Not with what doesn’t meet their need, but with what is appropriate under the circumstance. And so, meet them with love. And although you might wish that you could do much more (because there’s so much more that you are aware of that you could share), if they wouldn’t understand it, don’t feel like a failure, because you couldn’t do it. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Love is enough.

And you know this, but sometimes you get tired. I mean physically tired. And it seems difficult to be clear. Sometimes the monumentalness of the things that confront you, distract you from your peace. It doesn’t mean you are in the wrong place, it means that you need to nurture yourself and get your rest and get your peace.

It is inappropriate for you to abandon—not you alone, I am speaking to everyone of you—it is inappropriate for you to abandon the places of stress and strife, because those places seem to be unresponsive to that which would correct it. You must be the Christ, and you must be the love where it seems least worthy of being given—“Else there will be no light brought to the darkness.” And you will not have the opportunity to find that the light doesn’t make the darkness clearer, it proves that it isn’t there. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’m looking inside for what question to ask and I feel like I’m asking Jesus what question to ask Jesus.

ANSWER: Do it anyway.

QUESTION: I want you to know that I love you with all my heart, all of it. And my question must be, how can I fulfill that expression of love more in the world? It always feels like it's not enough. And I want to go the distance—distanceless, distance—out of my love.

ANSWER: Let it flow. Let it go. Love it enough to let it go, to share it. It is the way you release yourself from your experience of not being enough. The love is enough! The love is enough! You know what? It's not up to you to decide how much that love is to accomplish. And if you will abide with it, instead of with its recipients, you will know, you will feel its enoughness. And you will be able to trust that that love, which is not originating with you personally, but is inseparable from you, knows exactly how to be that Presence which affords the greatest blessing. And so, trust the love; don't trust yourself. And entrust those you extend it to—to that Love, with a capital "L".

The sun shines, and someone chooses to stay indoors. Could it be the sun, if it felt it had a responsibility. Love—and you know this—love is not quantitative. And as I have said on occasion to others, relax, you don't realize the degree of the Presence of Love that you're already being. And it is the ego that would keep you on edge, by telling you that you have to become more. Just as it is the ego, which tells all of you, that you need a clearer Truth—a more potent Truth to have your healing. And it keeps you on edge, so that you don't just abide with the Truth itself, which is already sufficient. You see, that is the way you don't discover that the journey is over, because the ego tells you, there's one more thing to take care of. And you believe it!

Again, I have enjoyed being with you—with you being conscious of the fact that I am with you. Now, don't leave here thinking that Paul is the only means you have for being consciously in touch with me. Because we are One. And I am with you, directly. And when you say, "today I will make no decisions by myself,"—let me in. Let someone in. That's the way you begin to disregard the ego. Thank you.

Gathering In Lake Morey, Vermont –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

PAUL TUTTLE OPENING COMMENTS: I'm experiencing a lot of feelings tonight and I have not prepared anything to say. And so there are some things that I know I need to say. So I'm going to ask you to bear with me as I maybe awkwardly share them.

Some of you may not be aware that we live on the island of Kauai, in Hawaii, where hurricane Iniki just came through seven weeks ago, yesterday, and literally turned our lives upside down, and altered the face of the Island beyond recognition.

What I want to say is that, all of us have come to the gathering here this week from some experience of life, some context, some frame of reference that we're familiar with. And that frame of reference is either happening at the moment to express a reasonable amount of harmony, or an unreasonable amount of inharmony. But nevertheless, we have all arrived here trailing along behind us a mindset that colors the way we experience whatever's going on in the moment.

We will all get the most out of this week, if we are willing to set aside, or not emphasize the mindset or context that we're coming from. There's an old saying, "You can't solve a problem from the level of the problem." There's always a need somehow to stand and look at it from a larger standpoint than our current experience seems to allow us to do, cause it seems like our current experience requires us to be very focused in on whatever its characteristics are.

Now, you'll have to excuse me (here Paul got emotional) because personally I'm still very close to the experience of the hurricane, which in spite of the fact, that we went through it with a great deal of peace and ability to have a level head, it was still unsettling; it was still draining and so on. But I'm just going to be me.

A lot of you call and talked with Raj and you've just been you with Raj, and so turn-arounds fair play.

Whenever we pray, or whenever we seek council of someone, it's always a means that we're using to somehow step out of context of the problem, so that we can see it with a broader perspective. But there's something about the experience of a problem, that I don't think I could have come to the realization of without having had the problem—meaning having gone through the hurricane. In some ways I have known what I'm going to say, but not with the clarity that I can say it now.

When you're in the middle of a crisis, it doesn't matter whether you've been a member of A Course In Miracles group, or whether you've been a good church member, or doesn't even matter whether you can remember the things that you're supposed to have been able to remember, and it brings you to a place of honesty just within yourself.

If you sit for six hours with disaster occurring all around you, at least in my case it was like, "am I... do I really believe there's a God, or is this truly just some physical freak of a material world, that there is the planet, and there is us and so on?" Because everything that's happening around you says that it's all physical, and it's all destroyable, and all of this wonderful stuff about the perfection of Being, is bull shit. And so, I stood at a point where I could say, "yea, I'm making a commitment that there's no God, or I could make a commitment to whether or not there is a God."

Throughout the hurricane I was talking with Raj. There were times that I said to him, "Hey, if you are who you say you are; you stilled the waters when you and the disciples were out in the fishing boat. This is not helping anybody still the storm." And nothing happened. And I did that, and he responded to me as though he would, but the storm wasn't stilled and would even seem to get more intense.

And I stayed calm and I asked again two or three times. And finally when nothing happened that I perceived as improvement of the situation, I just caustically said to him, "Well, no wonder the people aren't getting their healings, it's like you're powerless." I was pissed off, I mean under the circumstances, because there were two or three times in spite of the ongoing peace that the four of us who were sitting in this bathroom were... we were experiencing peace, relatively speaking.

And there were two or three times where I lost my peace, and I was so positive that the roof was going to go off the house that every fiber of my being was just waiting for the sound of timbers breaking, or whatever the sounds would be like, I knew it would be... it's like I knew it would be something tremendous. And then it would last a couple of minutes, and I would catch myself and get back in my peace and stayed with Raj.

But there was a point at which I had to make a choice. And I think—I mean, this was my experience—but I think at the bottom line it's the same thing with every single one of us... there's a point at which you have to make a choice for peace or chaos. We have to make a choice for: Is there some divine Principle behind everything that we're seeing, or is it just purely a temporary apparently harmonious organization of chaos?"

And again, the reason I'm bringing all of this up is because it really has nothing to do with the books that we study or the groups that we belong to. That essential choice that all of us arrive at, whether we're in a dire crisis or a mild crisis, is like they say, something that happens between you and your Maker, or it's just becoming conscious of what your choice is, and having this honest experience of who you Are.

Now I don't mean for this to be a dramatic way of trying to make a point. It's just something that I needed to share with somebody, and so I'm sharing it.

How many people here are students of the Course? And how many are not? Okay.

What I would encourage all of you to do as you go through this week, this gathering, is to set aside what you study and what group you think you are part of, and be that individual who is there in that time or experience that calls for the honesty with yourself, because that's what's Real about us. And that's the point at which you know whether you think you're divine or not. And my experience is at that point, that I'm divine. And that's where our common ground is.

And as I said when I started, all of us have come here in a certain context in our own mind—the context of our experience. The saying is that we're creatures of habit, which is another way of saying that we're creatures of context. And if the context changes, we move to a new town. Or if the context changes, we quickly try to grasp the new context, and then we expect that context to persist so that we can relax and be comfortable, because there aren't any surprises. But the process of learning, the process of education is one of boundaries to be broken, of contexts not being honored, and as a result we have new contexts.

Many of us, or many people have had a context of traditional Christianity, Catholicism or any various church. And they have expected that context to persist and be the context for their whole life. And something happens, it seems to become limiting, and then when they finally have to break out of it they feel very guilty.

I wasn't a member of the Catholic Church, I was a member of the Christian Science Church. And when the time came I felt very guilty for stepping outside of the bounds. Until one day, somehow it dawned on me that there are more people in the world who weren't Christian Scientists who didn't give a shit whether I was in the church or not. Excuse me. After you've been through a hurricane you don't put on a front.

When I realized there were more people who didn't care one way or the other, I was able to let go of the feeling of guilt and pay attention to who I was and what I was feeling and what was of value to me and what was nurturing my ongoing growth.

I'm sure there are people who have picked up A Course In Miracles simply because they were at that kind of threshold. So what I want to convey is, if indeed the belief is that we are creatures of habit, or let's say, creatures of context, then one of the things that is likely to happen is that you are liable to take the Course and glom on to it because it is so wonderful and it is so nourishing to your continued expansion that you say, "Ah, now I have a new context, and I am going to become devoted to that context” just like you were a devoted member of the Catholic Church, or the Christian Science Church, or Women’s Club, or whatever.

But you know where the marvel of it was was in the transition, was in the place where you weren’t devoted to the old context, and you weren’t even sure there was a new context really to be had that would be identifiable. That’s where you were experiencing your freedom, and it’s important not to let go of that. It isn’t just a vestibule between cars, it’s the place to stay. Because if you realize that there were more people who could care less whether you are studying A Course In Miracles or not, than there are those who do care and would have a lot to say about whether you were studying it or not, you have the perspective not to be owned by a book, not to be owned by a teaching.

And this is very important. This is very important to me, and so I’m just sharing it. I’m sharing it so you know where I’m coming from.

We went to England this summer, and there were some individuals who were having difficulty letting themselves listen to Raj because they didn’t know where I fit into the picture. And when I say fit into the picture, they wanted to know where I stood relative to Ken Wapnick, Helen Schucman and in the hierarchy, so to speak. And once they knew that then they could perhaps go ahead and listen to Raj. So I’m letting everybody know like Mr. Stockdale said, in the Vice Presidential Debate, “Who am I? And why am I here?”

I was thinking about that the other day. And at the bottom line, I don’t know why I am here. And I’m hoping by Friday I’ll know why I’m here. Because being here is a miracle in itself. And I don’t understand it, with the hurricane and clean up and managing to leave right after that to come here. And I’m just being very honest with you.

Obviously I’m here because I value all of you, but I also value what Raj has to say. And obviously all of the things that I have shared with you, and the feelings are not the evidence of a stable, spiritual Being. And I’m looking forward to having some time this week, coming from a place of spiritual stability, because I do have to be willing to go there rather than value and hold on to the meaningful things that I’ve already shared, even whatever meaningfulness there was of the hurricane.

So I’m here, like you are, to have a chance to hear what Raj has to say, and be in that place where my balance is available to me. But which at times it seems valuable to me not to experience so that I can feel the richness of horror, and feel a little self-pity and hopefully get a little bit of nurturing.

For those of you who are new to a workshop and are not familiar with Raj and are not familiar with me and so on—my wife has asked me to be brief, she’s heard this story many times, she lived it, but I will be brief.

In 1981 I had a business in the Seattle area. And we arrived at a point where a person who I did work for wanted me to work exclusively for him. He became very controlling and domineering. And when I said, “no, I would not work only for him,” he said “well, then I’ll squeeze you out of business.” And he proceeded to do it. And there seemed to be nothing I could do about it.

I had three children who were early teenage years, and the same kind of expenses and responsibilities that all of us have. And things just went down the tubes.

And there was finally a point that a very good friend said, “Why don’t you go talk to this lady who does automatic writing.” Well, being raised in a Christian Science background, that kind of thing was not acceptable. But at that time, again, I was in dire enough straights that I thought it won’t hurt—and so we went.

To this day, as I said before, I don’t remember what it was she said to me, except that when she was through I said, “Where are you getting this information from?” And she said, “I’m getting it from my guides.” And I said, “Guides, what are guides?” And she said “Well, we all have guides and they’re available to help us deal with our problems.” And she implied that they were spiritual in nature, and not an occult sort of black magic thing.

And so I went home. And for another month I tried to cope personally with the situation, and couldn’t—I mean, things got worse. And so finally I decide that I would sit down—and I had practiced Transcendental Meditation for three years at that time—so I decided I would sit down and meditate and become very, very quiet, and then just simply say, “If I have a guide, and if you’re out there, will you please say something.” And then I would spend maybe another forty-five minutes just staying in the quietness of the meditation listening.

And so I did this every night for about two weeks faithfully, genuinely—as genuine as I could. I mean part of me did a tongue in cheek, because it was a strange thing for me to be doing. And finally at the end of two weeks I sort of gave an ultimatum, it was like, “Well, I have better things to do than this. So if you want to talk to me you’d better do it now.” And as I’ve said before, the only better thing I had to do was worry.

So nothing happened that night either, except that from somewhere I got a very clear awareness that my trying to strong arm the universe, was an expression of willfulness that would get in the way. And so the next night I came back and I was truly genuinely ready, and in so many words I said, “Hey, if this takes another year before I hear anything, I am going to continue because I need help.

And I didn’t hear anything that night or the next night, but on the third night there was just a—the only way I can put it is—there was a flow of thoughts through my mind, words, that said, “My name is Rajpur, and I’ve been awaiting the right time to speak to you.” And I literally almost laughed out-loud. And my feeling was, “Oh, yea.” And my second response, which was almost instantaneous was, “I could have come up with a better opening statement than that,” because it was so regular. I mean, like I said before, it would have been Charlton Heston’s voice, or the voice of God, it would have been recognizably not me, you know what I mean—to help me know that it was a real experience.

Anyway, that night I had sat down at the typewriter, because I can type about 100 words a minute. And I thought, if there was automatic writing maybe there's automatic typing. I was really getting nervy. And so since it wasn't coming as automatic writing, and he was speaking this way, I just proceeded to transcribe what he said, and ended up with about 10 pages of single spaced typing in which he shared some valuable information.

What I'll share right now is that I asked whether this was really him or whether I was making it up? And he said, "Both." And that was my first introduction to confusing answers. Except that he did proceed to say that he was providing the meaning and my mind was providing the words. And it was like, if I show you a picture of a door and you would say "door," but if I show it to someone in Mexico he'll say, "la puerta." And so the meaning is being conveyed, but my mind is providing the words. And he said the only thing that would limit our conversation would be the extent of my vocabulary. And I found through the years that he can manage to get around that, within reason.

So that was the way it began. About nine months later somebody handed me—at that time the Course was only in three volumes, and we gingerly let a few people know about Raj—and this person brought the text over of the Course and asked if we had ever seen it. And we said, "No." And she said, "Well, I'll leave it with you." And for the next three days or so I browsed through it and found places, references that made it obvious that the speaker was referring to himself in a way that could only be identified as Jesus, because the references were made to his life as Jesus.

So the other thing was that as I read it it was like, "Oh, I know this." Not meaning that I grasped everything that was in the book, but it spoke in the same way Raj had been speaking to me—it was like meeting an old friend, it wasn't unfamiliar.

So anyway, I finally asked him, "Who wrote this?" And his answer was, "I did." What I had meant was, should I believe that this really was authored by Jesus, or is it just another crack-pot thing that really sounds great.

And so when he said, "I did," it conveyed two things to me. One was that yes he wrote it and that he wasn't just Rajpur, he was Jesus. And my immediate response then was one of gratitude, but my gratitude was expressed in the words, "Well, I know you." It was like I had had nine months of relating to Raj, without any concepts about Jesus.

I seem to remember seeing an old television show, where some very wealthy man, nobody would relate to him in a real way because they just saw his position of power and wealth. So he dressed up like a bum and would go sit on a park bench, because people would then come and just relate to him as a human being without their preconceptions getting in the way. That was the feeling I had, if you're Jesus fine, but I know YOU, I know your nature, I know how we have related together.

So, I didn't get hung up on this statement that meant that he was Jesus. And I tried a few times to address him as Jesus, and really funny things happened in my mind, and I couldn't be genuine, I couldn't get perturbed with him, you can't get perturbed with Jesus—I can't. But I can get pissed off with Raj, if that's what I'm feeling. I mean, I'm using that word on purpose because I can even be crude with him, if that's what I'm feeling, and I'm not always hunky-dorey, cotton-candy, perfect.

So when I found out that I couldn't call him Jesus and continue to be real, I just decided I would continue to call him Raj, and he said that that was just fine.

Everything I am saying has a purpose tonight, as far as I'm concerned. I'm not rambling.

In ten years now of dealing on a daily basis with Raj, and all of the workshops that we have done, and all the people who have had private conversations with Raj, the thing that has stood out is the fact that he is never the focal point—I am, you are, whoever he's speaking to. And always the message is, you're my brother, you're my sister, we are alike. The cultivated sense of your being less equal, less worthy is false. And I am here to confirm to you that it is false, so that you don't labor under that idea and refuse to allow yourself to experience your Birthright.

You know what I'm trying to do tonight? I think that what I'm trying to do is to help all of us arrive at a point where we're not caught up in spiritual fantasy and a great high that—and pardon me if I offend anybody—but a great high, like some people feel when they see some gigantic crystal, and they're into crystals. I'm not being judgmental. But one of the things about going through the hurricane was that in the moment of honesty there's a clarity about who we Are that's experienced inescapably. And there's no spiritual high to it.

And so I come into this workshop from a context in which the great value of a grounded spirituality has become very clear to me. Not one that lifts us out of an experience, but one that we experienced in the middle of any experience that allows us to endure and persist.

If I'd been on a spiritual high, I might have been like the fellow in the Hotel who was drunk and leaned out a window said, "Look, the wind is holding me up." And he was out at an angle and the wind stopped and he fell and broke both of his legs. You understand what I'm saying? Our spirituality relates right here. And so at the risk of everybody thinking, "Well, we're sure starting this workshop with a downer. Boy, he sure didn't buoy me up." Somebody said earlier, you know the gathering tonight will be a tone setter. Yes! Fortunately for the rest of the week you only have to listen to Raj.

But if you understand, if you can approach this without valuing your context that you've come from too much, and without a spiritual fantasy high, "Oh, my God, we get to talk to Jesus," that attitude will not allow you to be real. It will not allow you to be upset with an answer that he gives you that is upsetting, because it pushes your limits and causes you to shift your perception, and then you will really be miserable.

But if we do start out with a willingness to realize that being and talking with Jesus may be hard, because it allows for spontaneous shift of perception that you didn't think would happen that spontaneously, and you would have liked to have it happen a little bit slower so you could do it gracefully. Then if that happens, you'll embrace it in a very real way. And you won't run out and say, "Boy, this was a shitty workshop. I don't know how anybody could have ever said it was any value going there."

I'm saying, come on let's all be real, let's find our divinity right in the middle of our humanity. When it comes down to the nitty-gritty, all of this spiritual crap isn't there. It isn't there in your mind. You're making life decisions. You are either going to give up the ghost, or you're going to say, "Even though everything is collapsing around me, I am going to persist in Being—I'm going to persist in Life." And we can have that kind of clarity without going through a hurricane, if we'll dare to just be Real.

Okay, I think I have said what I felt, and it's been my intent—it wasn't thought through—but the intent that I feel around what has been expressed was indeed to set a tone, or perhaps a new context in which we can approach these five days with Raj with enough humility to allow for the maximum amount of transformation. So that's my gift to you tonight.

Now, shall we see whether he has anything to say?

I will take a moment to let those of you who have not been to a workshop before and are not familiar: when one becomes still and listens for guidance one does not have to sacrifice his presence one does not have to go into a trance and have something happen that they're totally unconscious of. I have always felt that to be in a trance was like trying to become more spiritually conscious by becoming less conscious. And it doesn't make any sense.

To listen for guidance is really a very natural thing for all of us. It's just that we insist on saying everything ourselves and not really listening. I find that when I don't really want to hear, I'll ask the question over and over and over without a break, so that anyone answering can't get a word in edgewise.

So when I am relating to you what Raj has to say and I have my eyes closed, I only have them closed because at this point it's easier to listen without the distraction of nods, or shakes, or tears, or smiles, or whatever. But I have not gone into a trance. And whenever I'm speaking, I'll have my eyes open like this, unless he tells me to open my eyes, and one way or another I'll let you know that he's having me do it that way. So I want you to know that when I have my eyes closed, it's simply because it's easier to pay attention when he's speaking.

So let's just take a moment to be quiet.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. We're having a little argument because he wants me to tell you something, and I wanted him to talk. He wants me to share something that I didn't share.

For those of you who are not familiar with the Course, there is a lesson, one of the lessons in the Course which is sort of like a sentence, or it's like one or two sentences long, that you utilize throughout a given day. And it says, "Today I will make no decisions by myself," (old text, p.581; new text, p.625) which obviously means you're going to rely on something other than yourself, or in addition to yourself. And in terms of the Course, not making these decision by yourself means that you are asking the Holy Spirit for help, for guidance, so that a joint decision can be made, where you do not win and the Holy Spirit does, unless you happen to want the same thing the Holy Spirit is telling you is appropriate.

Because I've talked with so many people, because we've done so many workshops, I am aware that people very often have the idea that Paul's lucky because he's in touch with his guide, and not only that, his guide is Jesus—how lucky can you get. And they also sometimes feel that I must have a special talent. And all that does is make whoever's feeling that—whoever's thinking that—feel that they have less opportunity than I do to have the same experience. And there's an assumption that it's easy for me, as I said, because there's guidance.

Now, I encourage every single one of you everyday to—no matter what you're doing, whether you're grocery shopping, whether you're driving someplace and you have alternative routes that you can take—that you begin to ask under the simplest circumstances, the most uncharged circumstances, begin to ask, "Is this appropriate? Should I turn here? Where should I turn?"

In the beginning ask your questions so that you can get a "yes" or "no" answer because you'll allow that, because a longer answer might seem complicated and maybe you'll goof-up. And so do whatever makes it easiest. But, begin to ask as though maybe even the simplistic human thing you're doing might fit into a divine context and in traditional terms would say, "reflect the Father's Will," a divine order of things. And do it with curiosity, and do it with things that are not major.

Just because I get answers apparently easily does not mean I can digest the answers any better than any of you can. And he's constantly pushing my buttons. I mean, I don't need to grow in the areas that I'm comfortable, do I? And neither do any of you. And so I'll tell you that it's damn hard sometimes. And there are times that I've sworn off of him and I've said, "Don't call me, I'll call you."

But you know what? When the 11th of September came and the hurricane was starting, I was glad I wasn't asking guidance for the very first time in my whole life. Not that I don't think somebody who might have chosen that time to ask for the first time wouldn't have gotten it. But when he said to stay in the house rather than go to a very sturdy concrete and iron pillar reinforced building—when he said to stay in our house, instead of going someplace—I knew it was safe.

It wasn't easy advice for me to take, except that I have had ten years of having validations of his guidance. And when we asked him why, he said, "because the atmosphere in your home during this hurricane is going to be more nourishing than in the Hotel." I didn't give a shit about a nourishing atmosphere. I wanted steel and concrete. I mean it wasn't a comfortable answer. But we stayed. And as it happens, it was quite an experience, even though I was in touch with him and there was peace among all of us there, it was scary.

Now afterwards I was very curious to find out what happened at the Hotel that was structurally sound. Part of the roof was torn off, and the sprinkler system broke, and water flooded into the 11th floor causing it to collapse into the 10th floor, causing it to collapse into the 9th floor which was where the lobby was and everybody was in the ballroom one floor down. And nobody was very comfortable in that secure building.

And then, as I said, this fellow let the wind support him and after he had broken both of his legs he was brought into the ballroom where everybody was. And I don't know that he was screaming in pain, but I gather that it was a different kind of terror than what we experienced in our bathroom very quietly with only minor senses of experience of our home being violated—like windows exploding. And afterwards we were very glad to have been in the house, even though there was no way to know for a fact that that really would be a safe place to be.

Afterwards, when we had a chance to see the devastation on the island, because every square inch of the island was hit equally. And I found out that only two people had died. It was an incredible, it's an impossible thing that only two people could have died.

And I'm just telling you it may be my own accommodating my need to have a belief. But when I asked him, when I said, "you can still the waves and stuff, make the storm subside," I could believe that although the storm didn't subside maybe something had been done so that only two people died. And one of them was from a heart attack, not literally from flying timbers or anything else. That was a miracle.

So, I'm going to stop there. I just want everybody to know that you and I are all in the same boat when it comes to listening for guidance. And I don't have a special "in." And the thing that links us all together is, the degree to which anyone of us is truly being honest at that inner point where our context fails us, or our group, or our teaching, or whatever, and we're having to make that choice for truth, and find out what truth is for us.

So, if you think it's easy for me, then know that it's easy for you, even if that seems unreasonable at the moment. And don't make it hard for yourself by thinking, "it really is easier for Paul than it is for me." And then go ahead and dare to enjoy this aspect of being alive, where each day you do not make any decisions by yourself, and have the marvelous experience of finding out that you're not alone.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good evening. Paul can welcome you to Vermont, but I can welcome you to the Kingdom of Heaven, and they both occupy the same space. And I will tell you that during the coming week I will be encouraging you to give yourself permission to see Vermont, or New York, or New Jersey, or Florida, or Hawaii with new eyes. Because it is only the withholding of permission to see it in a new context that keeps you from seeing it more truly as it is.

Paul's point was well taken. If there's one thing all of you need to know it is that when you take a real close look at yourself you will find something essentially marvelous, and not something pitiable, or judgable, or condemnable. And so I will also be encouraging all of you to dare to give yourself permission to see your faultlessness, your guiltlessness. The fact that at the very core of your Being it is already—I'm going to put it this way—indelibly, substantially, a flawless expression of Integrity that gets its integrity from, shall I say, the divine powers that be, from the Source of divinity.

It is going to be an outstanding week, and that is not meant as a pep talk, it is a statement of fact. And indeed, if any of you, at any time, find yourself offended by what happens, sit with your offendedness for awhile. Go out and be alone and sit with your offendedness for awhile. But do something in addition to that, feel for what is underneath that reaction of indignity, because there's a jewel underneath it that's being covered up by your reaction.

Now I do not encourage you to expect a strenuous week in which 50 or 60 of you might be sitting on a rock outside feeling your indignity. But there is going to be Movement, there is going to be grounding, grounding in your divinity that is relevant to your world, and a loss of, what I'm going to call, spiritual irrelevancies. And I encourage you to at all times dare to be real with me. You can't really do much more to me than put me up on a cross, and we've done that. So I can take anything you can dish out in your process of arriving at a point of giving yourself permission to believe what you already believe.

Spiritual teachers are very often challenged so that the challenger can see whether or not the teacher can demonstrate the fact that his spirituality leaves him free of the very hooks that the challenger is providing. Why? Because the challenger already knows the answer, but can't embrace the answer one hundred percent, and wants a proof of the justification for embracing it.

Now, if you want to elicit from me whatever will allow you to give yourself permission in a gentler kinder way, we can do it that way too. But what I want to convey to you here is that you do not have to be nice to me. If you are awkward, or ungraceful, or down right obtuse in your process of arriving at a point of just believing what you believe—believing what you deeply believe—if you want to do it in an awkward way, we can do it that way and it is all right.

I will tell you that Paul is not too happy about what I'm saying, but at least you will not be asking him or challenging him. He wonders about sitting in the middle of tension.

What is love? Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything. At the bottom line each one of you wants to know whether there is truly justification for recognizing that which is Real, with a capital "R"—that which is divinely Real—in the middle of that which is unreasonable, unlovely, like a hurricane, a disaster, an accident, an illness, a difficult child, or sibling or parent.

Everyone wants to be able to give himself or herself the permission to do that, make a commitment to it, and simply be that way. Now let's dare, all of us, to be Real with each other during the next five days. And let's discuss what you find yourselves experiencing. And let's move through in the process of finding the diamond in the middle of the clod of dirt—that which is Real in you and of your capacity to love, to love the love that transforms the world.

Now you will hear me use words like that, "the love that transforms the world." You know what? Learn to listen to what I'm saying as though it's nitty-gritty, down-to-earth, and not some wonderful phrase. The ability to recognize what is Real in the middle of a problem, solves a problem, and transformation occurs because the tension and the difficulties associated with not having the answer have been alleviated.

So when you hear me speaking words or phrases that sound like grand phrases, be willing to look again to see in what way they are really grounded points that relate in the most practical manner to your everyday lives.

I'm going to tell you something: If grand ideas do not relate to your daily lives, they're worthless. The only thing is that many of you hear the words that express a grand idea, and you never anchor it where you are, you let it float in an intangible unrelated way in your mind, and therefore it never becomes translated into the language of everyday life.

Now I look forward to the next five days with you. I have helped set the tone also. And I do not want to distract you too much from what Paul shared from himself. Again, I welcome all of you. Good evening.

QUESTION: I hadn't prepared anything, but I have as a Catholic I had great doubts about Communion—Holy Communion. And I was wondering if you could talk to me about those doubts, which I have had for a long time? If you could give me any window where I am about that?

ANSWER: I would appreciate it, for the benefit of the others in the group, if you would share perhaps what form those doubts have taken.

QUESTION: I would be happy to understand that it was not a sacrifice being repeated, that it was a memory of what was done. I would be able to accept that. But I cannot accept that I am receiving the body of Christ, when I now believe that I am Christ.

ANSWER: Indeed. It was a ritual. It was a ritual which expressed in the best conceptual terms that those of limited enlightenment could bring into a form that would register with the people. It had to be expressed in a language that the people in the beginning could understand. And you must remember that in that day God was felt by many to be related to trees, and rocks, and animals, etc.

The concept of God was very primitive, and you might say, very tangible. God was not conceived to be the infinite divine intelligence or Mind in which the Movement of Creation occurred. It was very much like the American Indians, who saw the lake as the smile of the Great Spirit.

It was necessary, shall I say, it was the function of the church to keep alive the fundamental truth that I taught: that you are my brothers and sisters, that if you have seen me you have seen the Father, and therefore if you have seen each other you have seen the Father.

Communion is the experience of the integrity of you. And in that integrity is included everyone that you know and everything that you see. Because that integrity is itself the presence of the Father, ACTIVELY BEING the presence that looks like you.

Now mind you, what I am saying to you right now, in the way that I am saying it, could not have been said in those days. And so you can say that the meaning that I have just expressed had to be couched in terms that would keep the attention down through the ages in that place where the meaning of communion—that I have just shared—could blossom when it fell on fertile ground, when it fell on a mind undefended enough to get past the symbolism.

Truth is simple. It is fundamental. And that is why when all the folderol of your ego sense of yourself, and all the folderol of the churches, and all the folderol of your political systems and ideologists, etc., when all of those things fall away or all of those things are released, and it feels to you as though you have nothing meaningful to identify you, you find that right in the middle of that emptiness of what has really been nonsense is the fundamental truth of you: that you are the presence of God, which means that God is what is being, right there where you are.

Communion is the undefended experience of that. Communion is not a connection of two things. That is communication. Communion is the experience of the Oneness of Being, the nonplurality, the undividedness, the unpolarized nature of conscious existence in which you are no longer separated as an experience from anyone else or anything.

Sacrifice was common in the day that the tradition and ritual of the communion service was devised. Animals were sacrificed in honor of a god that was not understood, and therefore feared—whatever god that might be—because there was a desire on everyone’s part to believe that there was something more than just the physical world. And the desire was there because deeply imbedded in everyone at the most fundamental level lay the fact, lay the experience which was only a distant memory that they are the presence of God Being what God is Being.

Because it was so deeply hidden, and they would not give permission for themselves to experience it, a ritual was needed that would occur regularly as a reminder—to the extent that they could embrace it—of their connection with God, through me.

It was impossible for them to believe that they had a connection themselves. That which was of the spirit had to be so other-worldly that there was no natural connection. But they were able to conceive of a connection through an other-worldly presence, called the Son of God.

And so this ritual served to keep that connection alive until maturity could occur to the point where it could dawn in human consciousness that God was infinite Intelligence, the infinite Mind, which by virtue of its Movement is the Movement of Creation. And that because every single one of you is conscious, you might just happen to be Consciousness Itself, rather than just a physical organism that you have determined yourself to be by virtue of observing, and coming to conclusions while ignoring the fact that it was Consciousness which was doing the observing, giving the definitions and coming to the conclusions.

And so now it is indeed time to doubt, as you have been doubting. Because it is time to make a shift away from connecting to God through another, and beginning to open up to the direct experience of God by being willing to be humble enough, and genuine enough in your humanity that you discover its divinity.

You know what communion is? It is you not claiming a different viewpoint from what you find yourself KNOWING when you are deeply and humbly in touch with yourself. Communion can best be grasped at the moment by you as being a clear experience of your integrity—integrity, integratedness, nonfragmentedness, your indivisibleness, not one that you’ve created, but one that is there and obvious to you when you are not thinking in a disjointed manner. It is the experience of your strength, a strength that is there when you have abandoned the false stance of vulnerability.

Again, the ritual arose in a time in which men translated God into a very literal and tangible form. And so it made utter sense to them to think that indeed the wafer was transformed into my body, and that the wine was transformed into my blood. It did not seem gross to them, because it gave them a literal physical connection, as it were, and that was what had meaning.

For all of its apparent faults the church has served its most important function: That of keeping the awareness of God alive, and keeping “His Son” alive in the minds of people so that they might have a link that allowed them to not feel abandoned, or lost, or isolated.

There were comments last night that because of what Paul said in sharing himself, he seemed more real as a human being, and that meant to someone that if Paul could make it he could make it. That is the kind of connection that the ritual provided in more ignorant times.

But it is time to let go of the ritual. And it is time to honor the Awakening that is occurring in all of you, that you are not worthless and useless and guilty. But that you are indeed the active and vital presence of something essentially Real, and that something essentially Real is literally nothing other than the presence of the Movement of the Mind that is God being the only Mind there is right where each of you is. And because of that, you need not cover yourselves over with thoughts about yourself that demean you.

It was one thing to look at another human being, Jesus, and say, “He was born of a woman, but he’s the Son of God.” It’s one thing to do that, it’s another thing to make the connection of the meaning that if he is the Son of God so are you. That requires a willingness to embrace yourself differently, and to stop justifying your complaints and your justifications for suffering.

From your underdog status you perceive the claim that you are the Son or Daughter of God to be arrogant, even insane. But it is insane for you to deny that you are what you Are. But when you make the connection to the meaning that, if I having been born of a woman could be the Son of God, then you being born of a man and a woman are equally the Son or Daughter of God.

You see, that can be a very inspiring realization, or it can be a very frightening realization. After all, if you are something divine, which you perceive to be something very different from how you have defined yourself, there must be great responsibilities that come along with it. And, of course, some of those responsibilities will be to behave in a divine way, which you do not equate with Realness. And so in other words, you will have to begin to act in unreal ways. And most of you, at one time or another, have made some joke about sitting on a cloud, strumming a harp, in white robes for eternity. Indeed, that is not what it is about, and indeed that would be boring.

You tend to conceive of divinity as being unfulfilling, and in that way you justify delaying waking up and experiencing your divinity.

But I will tell you that the moment you all begin to be more genuine in your humanness, without trying to rise above it, the more you connect with your integrity, with humility; the more meaningful a presence you will find yourself to be in every transaction of your day, in every involvement you have with your neighbor, your friends, your relatives, your business associates.

And you know what? The more everyone will feel loved, even if love or an overt expression of it doesn't occur. And everyone will feel less need for defense. And as everyone becomes more undefended, they begin to be more genuine, and the fabric of relationships is enriched.

Now according to Christianity and according to A Course In Miracles you open to the experience of communion by desiring not to be alone, and desiring something of the Holy Spirit, or of the Father, and I will say, or of Me, and I will also say, or of your guidance. Whether it is the Father, whether it is me, whether it is your guide, or whether it is the Holy Spirit, we all serve the same function—we express the Father's Will. In other words, we are not expressing a will of our own. Therefore, our expression is the Father expressing Himself and nothing else.

It would seem that reaching out to the Holy Spirit is reaching outside of yourself, but that is only because of your limited definition and understanding of who and what you Are. All you are truly reaching outside of is your current definition of yourself. And your current definition of yourself doesn't embrace the totality of what you Are.

So when you step outside of this limited boundary of your self definition, you are really stepping into the more infinite presence of You, which as I have already said, is the active presence of God being All There Is of You. And so, indeed, there is a need to yield to that which seems at the moment to be beyond you, when in fact it's all You.

Dare to feel your desire not to be alone, and then understand that what you want is not to accumulate a mass of friends, but to connect with the wholeness of who you Are and what you Are so that you don't feel fragmented yourself. Because, when there are boundaries or cracks that seem to split you into pieces, that disintegration is uncomfortable, that lack of integration hurts, it is distressing.

I've said before, that the Holy Spirit is your capital "S" Self held in trust, while you dally with the ego—with a tiny separated sense of yourself—an experience that is available to everyone, even though it doesn't represent the truth of you. And so that is why you reach out to the Holy Spirit. Because that act of reaching and the willingness to yield to the guidance of the Holy Spirit means that you are abandoning your insistence on being separate.

Do you see? It isn't that you are choosing to defer to something else because you are so unworthy, and so puny, and so inconsequential that there can't possibly be anything dependable about you for you to hold on to. It is not because of that. It is because in reaching out you abandon your insistence upon being separate, and that breaks the illusion of separateness, and the fear and anguish and suffering that always accompany it.

You see this is all very practical. I am explaining this to you in words, but the doing of it is not an intellectual process.

You express the desire not to be alone. In other words, you express the desire to experience communion, which is an experience of unity where communication is an experience of separateness. And then you let go of all of the processes that you have brought into play to substantiate your separateness. You must let go of your defensiveness. You must let go of all of your means of self-protection. You must let go of the masks—the presentations that you make to the world of who you are.

Now this can all sound very complicated, when at an experiential level it is very simple. It happens for example when you meditate, when you become still, when you go into your closet and pray unto the Father which is in secret—which is in the silence of you.

You can't go looking around for this little defense and that little defense, and drop it in the trashbag. You will do that endlessly. You cannot go on an internal witch hunt to find all the ego uglinesses and irrelevancies. If you really want to know how you abandon all of those falsehoods, all of those irrelevancies, it is by not thinking. You have thought them all into existence. And you abandon thinking by becoming still. And then in that stillness, which at first feels empty, you begin to have, first of all, the experience of peace, and then you discover that that peace is the immovability of your Being.

What do I mean by that? I mean that your Being is absolutely infinite, and therefore incapable of moving, incapable of being tiny and therefore invulnerable. Your peace is the utter stability of your Being. It's not just the absence of anxiety. It is a direct experience of the very nature of your Being. And that experience is available to every single one of you at any moment that you stop thinking.

Well, I will tell you that there was a time when Paul thought that being conscious meant thinking, that thinking and being conscious were inseparable. You go to sleep, you do not think, you are unconscious. You are given ether, you become unconscious, you do not think. He thought that every waking moment was one in which thinking occurred, because he had not ever had any different experience of being conscious. And so what was he left with? He was left then with a need to think the best thoughts. Well, that is a terrible burden—it doesn't work ultimately.

I did not say when you pray go into a place where you are not distracted and think like hell, and think clearly, and concisely, and logically, and positively. You go into your closet, you go within into the silence and abandon thinking, and in abandoning thinking you discover that you have not abandoned being conscious. And you have the opportunity then to experience the fact that you are not conscious, you are Consciousness. You are that infinite—in other words, boundariless—Conscious Awareness of Being. That is what you Are.

And because you have not lost consciousness, and have experienced the fact that you are not what you are thinking, but you are that Conscious Awareness in which thinking can go on, that you can indeed not abandon that vantage point as you re-enter, if you will, your realm of daily activities. That experience of the unity of your Being, the integrity of it, the peace of it, the stability of it, the invulnerability of it, that is the vantage point of Being.

And to shift from identification with your definitions of yourself to that Conscious Awareness of existence, and be active in the world from that place, constitutes what has been spoken of as “a shift of perception.” That allows you to begin to experience your world minus the energy, the distorting effect of fear, in which you define your world as hostile and that you have to defend yourself against. If that isn’t attack, I don’t know what it is.

When you decide that your world is hostile and you must defend yourself against it, and it’s the Kingdom of Heaven, you are going to come up against inconsistencies between what it really is and your belief that it is hostile. And you’ll say, “Ouch! that hurts. Boy, it is a hostile world.” And you will come to a false conclusion, and you’ll defend yourself more.

Now, I don’t want to get too far afield from the question that was asked.

The point is that until mankind, let us say, arrived at a point of enough maturity to begin to embrace what I am sharing with you, there needed to be a means of keeping alive the fact that man is connected with God. And so that ritual was very important, because in a way it was very grounded for those two thousand years ago.

It allowed them, I’m going to say, to hold on to, or not violate various degrees of paganism, while yet serving as a bridge to help move them out of it. You cannot come along and speak to someone in a new language that they do not understand, in order to explain to them something that they do not understand. You must use language that they do understand, and use it in a way that triggers realization and moves them beyond what they understand. And then they can let go of the language that helped triggered the movement. And it’s time to let go of the language of that ritual, if you have arrived at the point of embracing your Christhood as a fact and daring to embody it yourself—to let it shine. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: I would like to ask, and it’s hard to come out of the head and into the heart to ask a question, but I’m struggling with this. There’s a sense of, in my finding my Christ Consciousness and becoming more and more aware of it than I am, there is a transition period that all of us are in at this point. What place do you feel, and could you just elaborate on this, that as we let go of the old and let go of the institutions that helped us to this point, and the communion that we try to feel. What does community—community I try to say it that way, it almost came that way—with each other, because we have to do our own work, I know that, but we also need each other to be with, I think.

I'd just like to ask you what does communion mean now for all of us as we go through in this transition state to another level, and as earth itself does this? We're all going through the ascension I believe at this point.

Thank you.

ANSWER: It is a good question.

Well, I know that it would be absolutely wonderful if you could find a group of people who are like minded, and you could all get yourselves a little plot of land and set up your communion. But that is like Paul was saying yesterday, a re-establishing of a context of familiarity in the guise of radical thinking and new meaning. It would have been very nice, Paul would have thought, to be able to teleport out of the zone of the hurricane and be in a place that was more consistent with his sense of what was harmonious, and orderly, and principled, etc.

I will tell you something: The Christ is not needed where everything is perfect. I will tell you that the Christ is what is there where everything is perfect. But the Christ is not needed where everything is perfect. And so this is where the practicality of things comes into play as you discover yourselves Awakening and finding your values changing and wanting a sense of communion of togetherness.

The first thing you have to do is to realize you don't have any alternative to what you are faced with. As long as you think you have an alternative, you will fudge, you will waffle—as you have heard the word lately—in your mind between that which is unavoidable, and some alternative that you think is possible.

And as you hover in that realm of indecision you keep yourself ungrounded and you say, “this is hell,” except that usually you will blame it on the circumstance that you think you have an alternative to. When the real culprit is the fact that you have decided yourself, according to your best judgment and your best concept as to how things ought to be, that there is an alternative.

Now the necessity is for persistence, for endurance, not in the sense of a test of how much you can take, but in the sense of being willing to make commitment to exactly what is going on. And in the midst of that, being the presence of the Christ—practicing love, practicing the willingness to recognize what is Real, with a capital “R”, right where there seems to be a lot of illusions going on.

It feels to the ego like failure to say there is no alternative to what I am experiencing—no escape route. I will tell you that the necessity is to be right where you are in your own community, and enduring as the presence of your experience of your integrity. That allows you to be the love that transforms your community into communion.

“But that takes so much love.” But you see the reason you would say, “it takes so much love,” is because you have already indulged in an alternative to the Reality of You. And you have said at some point, “I can look at myself as not being love itself. I can look at myself and see myself as someone who can be loving and hateful, or loving if I can get something for it, and unloving if I’m not going to get anything from that person.” And then “loving” becomes a tool to get with, a leveraging, a manipulation or control.

I cannot stress too strongly the fact that you all are by nature the infinite or endless presence of Love. And when you abandon the sense that, “this situation I’m confronted with is going to take more love than I’m capable of giving,” when you abandon that, and let the love begin to flow in whatever ways it can at the moment, you will begin to feel the integrity of your Being, that the love has an inexhaustible source and you will feel the strength of your Being. And as I said, your vulnerability will disappear. It simply won’t be there to be felt in any way. And the joy of you will be relit, fired up you might say, not as an emotional passion, but as the Substance of your Being. It will be recognizable to you as You.

So communioity must begin right where you are. Don’t become idealistic. As I’ve said before, let your idealism be translated into practical realism. We don’t need more groups of people separated from everyone else, trying to be leaders of the world.

It was amazing to hear Mr. Bush claim that the down fall of communism and the transformation in Russia was due to the efforts in the United States. I will tell you something, it happened because real people paid attention to their need and became honest enough to say, “This doesn’t work, and I’m going to be true to my need rather than my idealism. I am going to start expressing my humanity.” They came to that place of choice, and they listened deeply, and they realized they would do what worked rather than what they thought ought to work. And then it became relatively easy to shift their direction.

Indeed, the United States may have said, “You may choose to operate within the context of your group in a way that tyrannizes its people, but you cannot tyrannize us, and you cannot tyrannize the rest of the world.” But it was Real people being Real in their own right, in their own country, and discovering their value and their worth enough to take hold of the situation in a way that was nourishing to them, that caused the down fall of communism.

When they were willing to be Real with themselves, and not value their ideology more than their really simple, down-to-earth knowing about what is valuable, they were able to release themselves from being tyrannized. And although it has not sunk in completely, there are many in Russia who have realized that the tyranny was the tyranny of their own individual choice, and not something that came from a government. And that is empowering. That is what is freeing. And everyone else can learn from this.

If there is a community that exists, it is the community of the earth. And it is in that connection that the meaning of communion must be brought into play. Live it right in the work place that you're in, right in the neighborhood you're in, right in the Course In Miracles group you're in, right in the PTA you're in—whatever. And remember, remember, it doesn't have anything to do with spiritual words. "But I can't talk to the PTA about Raj, or I can't talk about love, or I can't talk about the Holy Spirit." No, you can't.

But you know what? You can be Real! You can be present yourself, because you dare to trust into that genuineness of you that is absolutely divine. And as I said, when you do that, others feel less need for defensiveness. And the less defensive they are, the more their masks fall away, and the more they have the courage to shift also to that same place that you are coming from and be more loving.

I cannot say this strongly enough. The only place you have is right where you are. Persist in your increasing capacity to be love. Love is usually recognizable as love if it's really love, and intelligence is usually recognizable as intelligence when it's really intelligence. And intelligence is divine. And so if you cannot speak spiritual words, speak intelligently. Because intelligence expressed resolves problems.

Persist, persist, persist, right where you are, in being from that which is Real in you. That is the answer. And if you think there is an alternative to it, well, please, don't think there is an alternative to it. Be the love that you are, even if the circumstances, even if your best judgment or assessment says it's going to take more love than you possibly have. Be the love, and feel the invigoration and strengthening of being the love that you Are. And you will discover that you have all the love that it takes, because it's the easiest thing in the world for you to be You—and then the world will change.

QUESTION: One of my questions that I have written down for when it was my turn, was about this situation that I find myself in. And I've been told by my guidance that is a place for me right now. And on one hand, healing work is opening up more and more to me. And on the other hand, I take care of an eight year old, whom I was nanny to when he was six months old. And now I'm back in his life every other week when he stays at one of his divorced parents house. And I'm presently... I've been told to live there. So at the end of that week I am so exhausted and stressed out and over worked.

And when you were answering this question about community or communion, I thought I could apply it to myself. But at the same time I feel discouraged, because this eight year old is a very disturbed little boy on one level, and very bright and veracious on another. I feel that I don't have enough resource for him. He's standing, and he feels he can do anything he wants. And if I suggest something else he calls his father at the restaurant. And I'm moving beyond that and just ignoring that.

But this child curses all the time, and he'll say, "go fuck yourself." And really things that are very upsetting to me. And I try to keep my center and say, "this is meaningless, it means nothing." But I feel that I have no control over the child, and I feel also that it's an opportunity for me to, again, try to let go of my false sense of control.

But how do I remain the presence of love when I occasionally spend a 14 hour or 11 hour day with him. And when his parents do not make him do the simplest things like brush his teeth, or take a shower, or wash his hands. I'm trying to let go of all of those things that maybe don't matter, but some things do matter.

And if I am a basket case at the end of the day, what good am I? And how can I be the presence of love in the face of this? Am I misplaced here?

ANSWER: It is not a matter of being misplaced or in the wrong place. You are construing love to be permissiveness.

QUESTION: I don't feel I have a choice.

ANSWER: Well, you're wrong. And you need to remind yourself of that fact as strongly as I just reminded you of it.

Now the first step toward communion is being in touch with yourself, and coming genuinely out from yourself without apology. Now to say do it without apology, might sound like I am saying that you can be a little bit abrasive or challenging. That isn't what I mean. When you do it without apology, you do it without a pre-existing sense of guilt.

When you speak without guilt, it allows others to hear you with less likelihood of challenge from them, because they hear a tone of authority that has authority because you have no fear, not because you are trying to be controlling.

Now you need to learn to say "no" without feeling guilty for it, because saying "no" is so completely congruent with what you feel is right, what you find to be right when you are in touch with yourself.

QUESTION: But there's another aspect of this that seems impossible, and that is, that this child's father allows him to do literally whatever he wants. And so I feel if I were able to say "no" from that place you're talking about, that he would do whatever he wants anyway. This child walks away from me on the street. I mean, he just literally does what he wants. And I've been told that there's purpose in me being with him, and I'm very bonded with him.

ANSWER: Yes, but you see, the purpose lies in the fact that you have something to offer which you are refraining from offering by deferring to the child and the child's father.

Now, you've got to pay more attention to what you are feeling. Communion is a result of something that has already happened, which is communion. And communion is your experience of your integrity, your nonfragmentedness. And so, this is a place for you to speak up, to just be yourself and say it how it is for you. And if the boy and the father both say, “no, we cannot agree with you,” then continue to be in touch with yourself, and do not defer to them and sacrifice the integrity from which you have spoken. And if in being in touch with your integrity, you find that you must leave—leave and stay with your peace and your integrity.

Now, this is very important for all of you, because what I am saying seems to fly in the face of her guidance, because her guidance says, “It is of value, and it is important for her to be with this child.” What do you do when you have listened for guidance and you pay attention within yourself to be in touch with your integrity, and your integrity seems to call for something not consistent with your guidance.

In this particular case you are likely to find that if you express your integrity, and you say “no” to his behavior and you say “no” to the father’s insistence upon allowing his child to be ungoverned and ungovernable and you walk away from the situation, you are likely to find that the father will recant and stand with you and begin to supply some of the direction to the child that needs to come from him, that stands in support of you. And then you will find that the relationship with the child can proceed in harmony, with what you know to be appropriate.

Sometimes you have to be principled in a way that interrupts something that your guidance said was appropriate in order for the fullness of what your guidance has given you to come forth.

The necessity is to persist in what? Communion first, because out of communion comes what we have been calling communionity. If you go for communionity first, you will try to relate to people, and you will abandon communion within you, and we’re back to communication, separation, and the attempt through communication to bring about harmony.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have a question about fear and nervousness. I’m wondering how to overcome this overwhelming sense of fear that I have, and feeling that everybody is better than I am, and to feel comfortable in whatever situation shows itself to me.

ANSWER: The first thing I want you to be willing to take a close look at and not just slough off in an off-handed way. To feel that everyone else is better than you, means you are special. Contrary to popular belief, the idea that someone else is better than you is an egotistical idea practiced by you or the one who is feeling less important. I’m not going to elaborate on that. I want you to be willing to consider its meaning, and let it unfold within you and elaborate itself within you.

Now, fear is a choice. It is unfortunate that fear is equated with instinct. Because it is equated with instinct, it is spontaneously validated by you and everyone else. But I will tell all of you something: You can instinctively know what is appropriate and what is inappropriate without fear. You do not have to experience fear in order to step out of the path of an on coming truck. All you have to do is be conscious, and you know to get out of the way.

Because fear is so closely associated, thinking wise, with instinct, then whenever any of you feel fear for no apparent reason, you say to yourself, “There must be something going on that I’m not aware of that is dangerous, therefore, I validate this fear that I am feeling, and I will continue to feel it or permit it to be present until I find out what its cause is.”

Please understand that you can perceive something that is out of order, you can recognize it with perfect ability from a place of peace. When you realize this and you do not validate the fear, you can make a simpler conscious choice to proceed in your peace, to discern or discover whatever might need to be known.

This is a very simple, but very important point: Fear is not essential to your functioning intelligently, or recognizing what you need to know, or recognizing what not to do. Intelligence is the essential element—not fear.

When fear grips you, when you have the physical sensations that you associate with fear, you can just say, “SHUT UP,” and give your attention to something else. You can say, “I don’t choose this method of being conscious to deal with any problem that might be there. I choose to deal with it from my peace, because from my peace I know I really can deal with it more efficiently than when I am wracked with fear.”

All of what I have just said does not need to be said out loud, but let it be the meaning behind your words, “shut up.” Fear IS a choice. Stop honoring it by attributing it to instinct, and stop validating it by attributing it to your puny, little, incompetent selfness that can’t really feel anything different because it is so inadequate.

It’s a choice. Don’t make that choice. That doesn’t mean that it will go away instantaneously and permanently because it’s a habit that you have employed. And so you will have to practice telling it to “shut up.” You will have to practice making a different choice.

I will tell you something: Half the people you feel inferior to, ninety percent of the people you feel inferior to could care less how you feel about them. In other words, ninety percent of the people are not trying to be better than you, because you’re not a significant part of their lives, you aren’t that great, you aren’t that important in their life for them to be better than you. Do you understand what I am saying? You are feeling inferior to them is a dance you are doing all by yourself.

And indeed, it’s a funny thing to do. If you saw someone out on the dance floor dancing by himself as though there were a partner there, you would think it peculiar. What I'm trying to convey here is that it is a funny thing to do, and what you are doing really is nothing.

Now, I do encourage you to meditate. I do encourage you to begin to regularly experience your peace, because that is another way that you find out that fear is not part of the essential you, but is characteristic of the surface reactive ego level, which you move out of as you move into your centeredness—your inner stability. Fear is not as characteristic of your being conscious as thinking was judged to be characteristic of Paul's being conscious by him. There is an alternative, and as I said, it is a choice.

Now when I said that feeling less worthy or less than everyone else is an egotistical thing, let's not adopt the ego's tendency to judge and say, "Oh boy, naughty, naughty, naughty. Oh, I'm being egotistical, that's the new dirty word." When I say to recognize that it is an egotistical thing, you will recognize that it therefore cannot be an expression of inferiority. And the stupidity, or silliness, or the meaninglessness of the feeling of inferiority can become obvious, and therefore easier for you to abandon, drop in the trash, leave behind you.

I can be here and say to you, "I love you," and you can be surrounded with love—and I will tell you that you are surrounded with love—but until you stop making the choice for fear, my saying it will not effect a transformation in your experience. And in fact, if the choice for fear has been made, and I say "I love you," you are likely to say, "I hear what you're saying but I don't feel it. Come on, give me a little more love, prove that your love is present." And what I'm saying is, don't make the world prove that it loves you, to prove to you that you are worthy.

Stop making the choice for your fear. Just stop making it. And start making a choice for your peace. I cannot say it more clearly than this. I cannot cut through the kernel of your difficulty in a better way than saying, "Really nobody gives a shit whether you are feeling unworthy." What hooks you is the belief that other people are seeing you as less than them, and that is insulting to you, it is saddening to you. And the premise of your belief is false. Nobody gives a shit whether you feel unworthy.

And the sadness and the feelings that follow your misperception that they care enough to think that you are less than them, that premise is what brings along additional misperceptions that make you feel more and more miserable. It doesn't mean that nobody out there loves you and cares, it just means that they have other things on their mind than whether you are inferior to them and whether they are superior to you.

If no one gives a shit whether you feel unworthy, and if you embrace that as a fact, it will begin to be unreasonable to you to feel unworthy. And then you'll just let it all hang out, and you'll just be whoever you are at the moment. And that's when the connection with you will begin, and that's when the integrity and honesty and substance of you will begin to be felt by you.

You see you are constantly deferring to what you perceive other peoples judgments of you to be, and then feeling bad about it. And you are driving yourself into a hole, and making yourself miserable. And it's all meaningless, it doesn't mean a thing.

I want to assure you that when you came into this hotel and specifically when you came into the room here, no one saw the neon lights flashing that said, inferior with arrows pointing right here—because there aren't any.

I want you to sit with what I have said. And you will have an opportunity for a rebuttal. At the bottom line what have I said? I've said you're okay, and all this other shit is bullshit—nothing.

You don't have to show anybody anything. You can forget about them and what you think they think. And you can begin to get in touch with what has meaning for you and you can begin to pursue it, whether anyone else thinks anything or not. And in that action begin to feel the freedom that has been yours all along. And that's the point. Ultimately, the point is for you to feel the freedom that has always really been yours. And all that I have said in response to your question has been said to reduce confusion, not overcome some problem that's real. That's the point. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I hope I can say this without too much trepidation, but you said to be honest.

You were answering a question before, and you referred to the fact that you were born of a woman, and therefore that would be an indication that we also having a birth, could attain the same thing you did. It seems to me though that from the very beginning your birth was special, it was unique, it was separate, it was different, it was a virgin birth. No one else had a virgin birth. And so everyone could say, "Well, gee, if I was born of a virgin, maybe I would attain the Kingdom of Heaven. But this guy's special." Could you comment on that please?

ANSWER: You must understand that what you would call the evolution of human consciousness, in which what mankind really is becomes more and more obvious to him and her, this evolution of consciousness is inevitable.

In other words, if you are for whatever reasons experiencing a limited experience or awareness of who you Are, you will inevitably have those experiences that will uncover the more of what you Are. Therefore, if you are divine and are not experiencing it, you will have events that would uncover your divinity to you. And because they uncover your divinity you are likely to call them divine events.

Therefore, it was inevitable that that which registered in human experience as the uncovering of their divinity, as that which could lead mankind to an awareness of his actual divinity, must occur. It was inevitable. It fulfilled prophesy. This was not some spur of the moment whim of God, if you will. It was inevitable. And it was inevitable that it happened in a way, as I have said before, that could registered with the mentality of the time—the mindsets, the contexts of the time.

The virgin birth had less to do with my divinity and more to do with what you would today call “Wall Street Policies”—PR, Promotion, that which gets your attention.

Divine things are utterly simple. They are what works. Prophecy had said that the Messiah would be born of a virgin. If I had popped into existence on the back of a burro, everyone would have said, “Nay, you’re not the one. This was not a virgin birth.” There is intelligence and consistency to the process by which all of you experience the triggers to your realization and embrace of what you divinely Are.

This book called A Course In Miracles, where do you think it came from? It appeared in human experience because there were those who were at a point of needing confirmation of what was unfolding within themselves, that they could not give themselves to embrace just because it was the truth, or it was intelligence.

The receivers of the books were those who elicited the books. What do they say, “When the student is ready the teacher appears.” When the students are ready the teacher appears in the language that it can be best recognized at the moment. Why? So that it can trigger the shifts in you that can allow you to let go of the language that triggered your movement.

And the language of the time was a virgin birth. But what was it that was being uncovered? It was the already existing divinity of mankind, his already existing, inseparable relationship with his Father God, the fact that guilt and separation was not natural was not each one’s Birthright. What was being uncovered was not my specialness.

So if you want to take this incident of a virgin birth and you want to give it special, unique attributes that allows you to define me as having special unique attributes, that makes me utterly different from you, and then you want to suffer the consequences of such a belief, go right ahead.

You get the point. Do you have a “yes, but”?

QUESTION: A little clarification please, but not a yes, but. I would like to ask you Raj, we’re talking about Christ, we’re talking about the Christ Consciousness. Okay, I’m assuming that we’re talking about Buddha, that we’re talking about Mohammed, that we’re talking about all the Beings that evolved to that place?

ANSWER: Absolutely.

QUESTION: Okay, I just needed to hear it. Because I'm hearing everything like focusing on the Course, which is fine and I'm comfortable with that as long as I can stay expanded with my thinking and my feelings. Okay?

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Indeed. I am speaking to this group of people, many of whom are students of the Course. And because it is easiest I will refer to language that is familiar to them, but I will also refer or use language that is familiar with those of you who are not students of the Course. And I am not trying to promote A Course In Miracles. I am promoting the individual conscious discovery of each one's divinity. That is what I am doing.

Indeed, to be the Christ Consciousness is to be the Buddha Consciousness, because there is only one experience of being Awake. There is only one experience of genuineness of the, let's say, honesty that Paul found himself connected with and was experiencing that he shared last night. The experience of peace is not a private possession owned by a particular individual, or by a particular sect, or particular religion.

Conscious human individuality is the presence of God, currently being misperceived and identified as a mortal. Waking up, whether it is through the study of Buddhism, or Christianity, or whatever, is the event—the Real event. And that is why it is important for you not to get hung-up on particular words, or particular books. You know why? So that you will begin to have the sense of a preexisting integrity that is present with you, as you apparently take faltering and dependent steps.

If you never really left the Kingdom of Heaven—Reality—except in your imagination, then the integrity that you are moving forward to, by virtue of your spiritual path, is accompanying you as you go on that spiritual path. And if you don't get sucked into a commitment to an allegiance to the path, it will be easier for you to remember and feel that that which is choosing the path is that which had integrity from the beginning. And you will not see yourself as the underdog. And you will move along the path with greater strength, because you will not be demeaning yourself along the way—and discouraging yourself.

You've heard these wonderful catch phrases like, "the wisdom you are seeking, is the wisdom you are seeking with," and so on. And these express a truth, they express a Real Truth. You must understand that that which causes you to reach for that which is beyond you, and that which causes you to reach for what is better, that which causes you to reach for a spiritual experience is that which is spiritual in you, shaking your shoulder and moving you to a clearer awareness of who you never stopped being.

Your present misperceptions cause you to feel incomplete, inadequate and tiny. And this tiny little inadequate thing must therefore struggle to get more of his good, and I will say, more of his spiritual good or her spiritual good. That's the way the motivation within you, to have what is better, is experienced. But this motivation comes from a faint, but direct memory of Home, of who you Are at this very instant. And so it is your already existing Christhood, your already existing Buddhahood, your already existing God Presence that is moving you to reach.

So even your apparently awkward movement along your spiritual path is motivated by your utter spirituality, your already existing simple, profound integrity. You say, "But I thought it came out of a feeling of need that I had because of my inadequacy." If you are reaching for your divinity, you are reaching for it from a recognition in you of your divinity. And so you are reaching for your divinity with the strength of your Real divinity, even though you are convinced that you are reaching for it because you are suffering a lack of divinity.

It is time for lunch.

PAUL: Okay at lunch somebody mentioned something, and Raj indicates that there needs to be a point of clarification on something that was said. And he's saying for me to make the point of clarification rather than him.

Earlier in one of the answers, he spoke about being genuine, "genuinely expressing yourself." And the question was brought up, does that mean that if I'm feeling angry, that I should genuinely express my anger?

And the thing is that when Raj speaks of being genuine, it means expressing yourself from that place of connectedness within yourself in which you are not experiencing ego reactions—you are expressing your clarity. And in that place you are not going to be experiencing anger, because there is integrity, or you are not fragmented, and therefore reactive.

So that doesn't mean however that in your connectedness you might not express yourself with great strength. He indicated that when he whipped the money-changers out of the temple, it wasn't in a fit of anger. It was an expression of utter clarity, and it was expressing something that needed to be expressed with clarity. But he didn't lose his temper and whip them out of the Temple.

So you may, as he say to you earlier, say no, you may express yourself very clearly in what might be interpreted as a strong and confronting way. But it will be something that happens out of your connectedness, not out of your fear, or not out of your state of reaction.

So when he speaks about being genuinely you, the word "genuine" means not a clear concise expression of your reactions—your ego reactions—but an expression of your connectedness with yourself, in which you're experiencing clarity out from your peace. Which doesn't mean you become a whimp, and let people walk all over you. Okay, he says, "yes."

QUESTION: Haloha Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I just wanted to get some clarification on this. You were speaking about... the questions were about the Virgin Birth and other things, that were about the form that people were willing to move in whatever time.

Now you said something a couple of years ago that's been coming back, and it seems to fit at this point. You said, "Trust in Truth is not the same as trust in joining." So the feeling was—this is what I'd like to ask you about, this is what you've been talking about—we're willing to trust some movement and that's called the truth. Which the virgin birth was a truth, and that blew everybody away, because it was unusual and so forth—it also would create problems for us now.

But if we're willing to move beyond all of this paraphernalia, these forms, and move into trust in joining, which, as you said, is not the same as trust in truth, then really what you're saying in this sense is that all truth that we are able to embrace at this point until we really join is an accommodation and therefore not complete. So we must move into trust in joining, because that's the thing we really Are. So would you say something about this connection?

ANSWER: You have expressed it beautifully, and there is no need for me to add to it. This is quite true. And for the time being, I would like for all the rest of you to just sort of meditate on, or allow the idea to abide with you that trust in truth is not the same as trust in joining.

I will add this one little piece. The ego frame of reference is the experience one has when one denies the wholeness of his Being in favor of a tiny, partial view of himself. It is a self imposed isolation. Joining is the abandonment of that isolated experience of self. When one abandons the isolated sense of oneself, one sacrifices his ability to experience existence as a point of authority in his world. That is why one does not willingly join. And that is why one tends to persist in the limited frame of reference, because it gives the thrill of a sense of personal authority, and it gives the false impression of accomplishment which you can personally take credit for.

We will leave it at that, keeping in mind that joining is the solution to life, let us say, it is the solution to what has been called the problem of Being. And we will leave it at that for now.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would like to have a broader perspective about physical manifestations of blocked bliss.

ANSWER: Why would you not want me to talk about the physical manifestations of unblocked bliss?

(This next question and answer were from a Newsletter.)

QUESTION: Because I feel that so many of us have blocked bliss in the form runs the gamut from nagging headaches to earaches to toothaches to arthritis to tightened muscles, all the way up to debilitating diseases. I have a wonderment about whether does it means anything or not, or is it like Freud said: “Sometimes a cigar is just a cigar”? (Laughter)

ANSWER: Just for a point of clarification—because all of the physical manifestations of blocked bliss which you mentioned were “body” manifestations—what about being caught in a traffic jam on the way to a business meeting that you are late for? What about running into red light after red light after red light, instead of being able to flow through? What about not being able to find a parking place that isn’t closer than three blocks from your destination, etc.? In other words, the evidences of blocked bliss are represented in your whole experience, and not just in what you would call personal physical manifestations relative to your body.

It is really very simple: Blocked bliss is a result of a very conscious act of not giving yourself permission to experience fulfillment. You each have your own reasons, you each have your own beliefs, and they all seem justifiable. Do you know what will uncover what those specific beliefs are the fastest? Beginning to give yourself permission to experience unreasonable good—in other words, if you will give yourself permission to experience good that you can’t justify.

Now, don’t begin to give yourself permission to experience unreasonable good so that you can find out what the blocks are. Do it so that you can have the experience of unjustifiable good! Then appreciate the fact that in the process, all of your conditioned arguments will tend to present themselves to you. When they do, disbelieve them. Don’t deal with them. Invalidate them!

Say, “O-o-o-h, so you’re one of the ways I have used to keep myself from experiencing unjustifiable good. Ah-h-h. Bye-bye.” You’re not going to fight it. You’re not going to try to talk it away. All you have to do is recognize that it is one of the silly nonsensical beliefs which you have utilized to justify withholding permission for unjustifiable good.

“It is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the kingdom.” What does that mean? It means that the Father withholds nothing of what He is—or, shall I say, the Father/Mother withholds nothing of what He/She is from His/Her Self-expression called you. Because that is the Fact, it is inevitable that each of you will arrive at a point where you no longer justify not experiencing the Wholeness of the Father which is expressed right where you are. That’s inevitable!

I’m going to tell you something: As Awakening generally occurs around your planet and there are fewer and fewer individuals joining with you in your beliefs of limitation, it is going to become harder and harder for you to maintain those limits, and you’re going to think that something has gone wrong because you are having to work so hard not to have your good.

As you all know, there is what is called a “work ethic.” I’m going to encourage all of you to begin to employ an “unjustifiable fulfillment ethic.”

The work ethic says, “You put forth effort and you will get an equivalent return. And if you have a product that is really super, you may get a return which is greater than the effort put forth.” But you are conditioned to believe that “you cannot have good that you have not earned.” That is a concept, not a fact!

Really speaking, does that mean that you can have infinite abundance and goof off? Do nothing? Can you just sit somewhere and expect abundance to find its way to you?

We must be careful as we answer that question, and so I’m going to answer it in two parts. The first part is that initially, as you are breaking out of this work ethic—by means of which you keep your good at a distance from you because you haven’t fulfilled your part of the bargain yet—you must say yes, that you can expect unjustifiable fulfillment to come to you just because you exist! You must do that in order to break the rut, the very deep rut that is firmly reinforced with your beliefs that you cannot have what you have not earned.

Now, what happens when you really do that? Well, your good begins to come to you. The only thing is, that it isn’t a “good” which is not related to you, like dollar bills—where you are one thing and the dollar bills are something else... although I am not saying that you will not have the dollar bills.

What happens is: You become enlivened with meaning in your life which has been absent, and you will begin to find yourself engaged in activity that identifies the meaningfulness of you. Associated with that, you will also find fulfillment occurring in ways that you are not at all personally responsible for. In other words, you will not be able to say, “Because I did this, that came into my experience.” So, you will not end up like some lazy person sitting idly in a rocking chair, uninvolved with life, with the riches of the world being brought to you.

The essential first step, though, is to give yourself permission to experience unreasonable or unjustifiable fulfillment just because it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. The Father, the Life-Principle, the infinite intelligence, is incapable of withholding from Its Self-expression the full embodiment of What It is. Therefore, if you exist, you must be the full embodiment of it, and if a leaf exists, it must be the full embodiment of the Father. And if an atom or energy pattern exists, it must be the full embodiment of the Father.

Blocked bliss is a result of a definition of yourself that you have arrived at which says, “I am not worthy,” or “I have no job,” or “I have a job, but it doesn’t pay well and there’s nothing else available,” or “the economy is bad.” Or, as is the case in a recession, “I’m over-qualified.” It doesn’t just have to be a sense of lack. One can be over-qualified for the jobs that are available. And so, you can suffer lack because you are too smart and because you are not smart enough.

Ultimately, throughout this time that we are going to be together, we will be talking about claiming your Birthright by identifying yourself correctly as the Son or Daughter of God—the expression of God from which God has withheld nothing of what He/She is. And how do you identify yourself properly? Well, not really by means of a long string of words that describe you as a divine being. Those long strings of words ARE helpful to give you a context in which you can dare to become still enough (because you feel safe enough) to go within (not keep your mind full of the chatter that makes you feel like you are intelligent) and experience in the stillness of you the essence of you.

The words are ultimately valuable because what they do is help you come to a point where you can conceive that when you get down to this essence of you, which is in the silence within you, it won't be a crummy nerd that really is unworthy, and where, as a result of your experiencing it directly, you will truly be convicted in your unworthiness.

You use the words to help bring you, through reason, to a point where you can dare to go into the quietness within you and experience what is there in spite of anything you think. In connecting with That, you begin to have a direct experience of Who you Are. Now begins the adventure of discovering what your Identity is, and that It is absolutely equivalent to every true expression that has been made about what God is.

There is a phrase I would like you to remember. It is not original with me. The phrase is: “Man is not God, but God is all there is to man.” This expresses a very important distinction, because if you say, “I am God,” ...if you say “Man is God,” then God will begin to be defined according to your present concept of what “man” is, and thus, because you are disintegrated, because you seem to be a conglomeration of polarized aspects, you will see God as polarized—both loving and wrathful.

Man is not God, but God is all there is to man. If you want to find out about God, you don't start with your present sense of yourself. You shut up all the definitions that provide you with a sense of yourself, and you do that by becoming still and going within, where you have the opportunity to find that there is already something there! Again, the first evidence of it is peace. The next evidence that emerges is joy. And the next evidence of it that emerges is love—just love that is unavoidably there. Not something you can turn on and turn off. It's just you!

Now that you have identified yourself on the basis of an experience, rather than a definition that has come from your thinking and your reasoning, you will find yourself feeling a movement. The first characteristic of that movement will be integrity, safety, invulnerability. They sound like three things, but as an experience, they are inseparable. And then movement similar to motivation will be felt, because you will have become meaningful to you, and life will seem to take on meaning. In this place, you will not bring up the justifications you have [in the past] for not experiencing your good. You will not bring into play the blocks to your bliss.

Let's be very clear on something: Bliss is utterly natural. Bliss is wonderful but not overwhelming.

You block your good by virtue of the definitions you have adopted and which you now employ relative to who you are. The gift of God—the not-withholding-anything-of-what-God-is that is constantly the nature and movement of your Being—insists upon being what It is. The moment you begin to give the slightest bit of permission for unreasonable good or unreasonable fulfillment to occur, you will have let a crack open in the door that allows an experience of that uninterrupted flow of fulfillment which it is your Birthright to be experiencing, and which does not have to be earned.

“Overly-simple,” you say? No. Just simple. However, your abundance, your unreasonable abundance, will cost you something. You will have to sacrifice the pleasure of being responsible for, of being able to take credit for your good. That is a real drug. The “hit” that you get from accomplishing something which you can take credit for feels like something you can't dare to let go of. You will have to sacrifice pride.

It is humiliating to be the beneficiary of an unqualified expression of unconditional love. It is humiliating to receive something you haven't earned. Why? Because it leaves you powerless. It leaves you without any sense of authority. You think that it means being the equivalent of a beggar. And so, in order to experience a reasonable amount of self-respect, you indulge in, you engage in, a work ethic, and you EARN your good.

You are like the sons or daughters of a king, whose birthright is royalty and wealth, who say, “But, I didn't earn this. Damn it, I'm going to go out and make it on my own so that I can have a sense of my own worthiness.” And so this one who is utterly wealthy and royal—we could say divine—goes out and behaves like a commoner, and struggles, ignoring his birthright of wealth and royalty that he cannot get rid of.

I will tell you something: As you truly begin to embrace yourself as a divine being, as a Son or Daughter of God, the direct expression of the infinite Mind, God—as the Christ, in other words—as you begin to do that, and as you begin to release your addiction to being responsible for your good so that you can take credit for it and, therefore, be respectable, you will, indeed, begin to find marvelous things happening for no reason.

Many of you have fun dabbling in your infinity and your unreasonable abundance by expecting to find a parking place, and finding it,...or having an open space in the traffic on the freeway so that you have flexibility and ease of changing lanes and getting where you need to without forcing an issue in high-speed traffic. You can't say that you “made it happen.” If you made it happen, you could explain to somebody else how to make it happen, and they could do it, too. But what do you have to say? You HAVE to say, “I was just open to it. I visualized it and I let it happen. I didn’t do it, but when i didn’t do it, it happened!”

Now, [sarcastically] this is great! If you have a whole lot of little instances like that, where you watch this truth in action, that is tolerable, because you still have other more major areas of your life where you are taking personal responsibility and you are getting the “hit” of success at your accomplishments. But, if you will embrace more, and you let more and more of your unreasonable good occur, there is going to come a day when it will be obvious to you that you have to make a choice and go all the way. That’s when you will find out just how much you love to be in charge, just how much it means to you what kind of a “hit” it gives, and a very gross clarity as to the degree of your depravity.

I’ll be very honest with you: You will find that you are hooked on self-destruction, that you are hooked on the denial of What you Are, and, therefore, you are hooked on the denial of God—all because of the importance of the “fix” of accomplishing something that you can take credit for. I am putting that in strong language—not to make a point, not to make an impression, but to state what is really the case. I’m just “saying it as it is.”

All the time that you are refusing to experience unreasonable good, you are maintaining and keeping strong your sense of your ego, and all of the good that you have created for yourself remains forever tenuous. You can lose it! And so, you have two things that go on: the pride in your accomplishments and a forever underlying abiding fear of losing it. This is what the prince or princess who has gone out into the world experiences. But, if they had stayed at home, they would have experienced their Birthright in its uninterrupted form, and they would have experienced themselves in their Wholeness.

The “high” of accomplishment and self-crediting for the accomplishment, is always polarized—always has opposites. And you never can really feel your integrity. You never can let down your guard. You never can let go of control, because control is the only way you have accomplished anything.

Thank God “waking up” isn’t up to you as you presently perceive yourselves!

Thank God that the integrity I spoke of earlier, the divinity that I spoke of earlier, which is forever present with you and is motivating your Awakening, is there!

Thank God that you cannot block out completely every last vestige of your memory of Who you Are, and Where you Are, and What everything Is.

Thank God that in your insistence upon your addiction to accomplishment and pride, you cannot totally block the experience of your integrity, you cannot block totally the conviction within yourself that it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, and that you do not have to earn, by efforting, every single bit of good...or any of your good.

Illusion, the dream of existence, is weakening because more people are Awakening and withdrawing the support for the beliefs that block bliss. There are more and more of you having the unreasonable conviction that you can give permission for unreasonable good or fulfillment, and you're daring to step out and test the waters of "the absence of control," testing the waters of yielding to your fulfillment, rather than trying to create it.

Blocked bliss...

Do you see that the prince or the princess have taken a conscious step away from their royalty and their birthright to say, "But, Father, I'd rather do it myself"? And that because of whatever comes of doing it themselves, they sacrifice their experience of their birthright and their experience of who they really are, and the fact that they are already whole without having to earn it?

It is important to know that you are experiencing ignorance as a result of conscious choice—not so that you can blame yourselves for it, but so that you may know that you have within yourselves what it takes to "go back Home," to know that you have enough authority to change your mind and to not continue to try to express by your actions in the world authority to mechanically duplicate what is already yours.

Like any addict, you can taper off slowly, with strength, and arrive at a point where you have not indulged in the drug for some period of time. But when you come to that point of making commitment to not being a drug user, and to never take the drug again, that is the test! in some ways it is easy to be off a drug if you think that you could have it in a pinch.

To let go of the limited self-appraisal and give yourselves permission to experience the good which is unalterably yours, and never again engage in the degree of control that allows you to accomplish something that you can take credit for ...that is the real kernel of Awakening, because it is at that point that you make commitment to not having a mind different from the Father's Mind. It is where you make commitment to not having a point of view different from the Father's View.

The thought is that that will constitute a total loss of identity. Do you want to know something? Your identity has forever been what it is, just like the prince and the princess. They are royalty. And they ARE wealthy—abundantly wealthy, just Because ...not because of what they do. And no matter how long they try to be a cobbler or a seamstress, or whatever, in the village at the base of the mountain where the castle is on the top, no matter how much they insist upon this identity that isn't their own, they have never stopped being who they are. Their identity and their nature and their character, and so on, haven't changed.

"But, the struggle is so satisfying!"

I encourage all of you to engage in the scary occupation of risking the chance that God is All, and giving yourself permission to experience unjustifiable good that you cannot take credit for, and then the bliss of the royalty of your Being will flow uninterruptibly and confirm to you Who you Are, and thus support you in your willingness to make a commitment to a “drug-free life”—an ego-free life.

Paul has been out of control for ten years, and at times every fiber of his being said, “This is so outrageous that I am insane to continue to make any commitment to it. Everything has to collapse.” And nothing has collapsed. Yet, he cannot take credit for anything that is happening at this moment—or HAS been happening—and yet he, as well as you, know(s) that he has also been inseparable from it. So, identity hasn’t been lost, although fear has been for the most part.

I have talked at some length about this on purpose. And the subject is likely to come up again before the end of our time together. I want you to contemplate what I have said. I want you to let the yes/but’s come up. and I want you to pursue this further, not the questioner specifically, but those of you in the group.

QUESTION: When I was in sixth grade, we had a story called, “God helps those…” Meaning, of course, “God helps those who help themselves.” And I remember we had a test and an extra credit question was, “What does this mean? What is your explanation for what this means?” I don’t remember what I said, I remember I got the five extra points. But in light of the instructions you gave us before, what does this old saying mean, in helping ourselves?

ANSWER: Those who cannot even grasp the idea of yielding to the Father, must account in some way for the fact that there is help available, if I might put it that way. The simple fact is that that saying came out of the same period where the statement, “Every day, in every way, I am getting better and better”—and the beginning stages of what you would call, practical metaphysical thought.

In so many words, it is arriving at a point where it is recognized that there is a relationship between your thoughts and your world. In learning that orderly thoughts elicits an orderly response from your world, you begin to learn that there is some fundamental integrity to the mind and the world.

As one begins to grasp this fact, it becomes easier to trust the idea that God is fundamental intelligence, which is not divided, not polarized—a dependable, reasonable God, rather than a loving and wrathful God, a capricious God, a God of chance.

If one is not able to yield to the Father’s Will, then one had better be using one’s best common sense. But that is not where we are now. And so that helpful bridge, that helpful stepping stone must be left behind because you are at a point of being able to grasp the idea of yielding to the Holy Spirit or yielding to the Father’s Will, by becoming so connected to your essential Being, that its trustworthiness is disclosed to you.

Earlier, I indicated that you will not end up sitting in a rocking chair waiting for the world to come to your doorstep, or for your good to come to your doorstep, where there is never any motivation, and there is never any activity that has meaning for you.

The thought is that if you drop the statement or its meaning of the statement, “God helps those who help themselves,” if you drop that as a basis for being, that you will somehow end up just being the inactive recipient of good—which is meaningless, and one could say irresponsible. It is only irresponsible because it is not responsive. And when you get connected with your essential being, you will be involved, you could say you will be responsive. You will be doing something. But what you will be doing will be the result of first having said, “Thy will, not mine be done.” Mind you, that statement practiced is the means by which you abandon separation, because it constitutes a joining.

The statement “God helps those who help themselves,” leaves the focus with you as an independent actor, who, if he helps himself intelligently, will get God’s support, and we’re back to “earning your good.”

But you must remember that at the time that statement came out it met the need, so that people did not become irresponsible—not responsive, not involved, not experiencing meaning. It expresses, what I’m going to call wisdom, with a small “w”, when one is not experiencing any connectedness with God, directly. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank You.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Thank you for your presence. I’ve been wanting to pass this on since three o’clock this morning. I’ve had a very emotional, nerve-racking night, and I came hear for a good time. I guess all the questions that I have I’d like to save. And I guess I want to ask you this. My ego—our conversations usually start like this on the telephone—has been doing a jig with me, and I’ve danced it, and I’ve danced it, and I’m tired of dancing.

I’ve been hanging on to Paul’s shirt tail for quite a long time, through the Graduation book when you advise him to just continue saying, “Are you there, are you there?” I’ve been doing it, and I don’t know if my guide is there. I could say, “Ooh, I can remember when you used to say this dramatic stuff and this emotional stuff, and things that I’ve read, and things that I’ve said.” I want to be calm, I want to have peace, I want that joy you talk about. God doesn’t that sound dramatic? I sound dramatic, I’d like to pass it on now.

ANSWER: I’m not going to let you off the hook that easily.

QUESTION: Aah, good, good! Well, I guess I'll start with the very simple one. Is my guide there? I don't hear a voice, I get feelings, as I said to you before.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I love that word.

ANSWER: And pay attention to that feeling. You see how easily one tends to look for a pattern. Paul hears me in very specific words, and the automatic assumption is that everyone else will hear their guidance just like Paul does. But the necessity is to go into the silence and listen without preconceptions. Most people do not carry the logic of their actions to its full extent. But if one were to assume that one would hear their guide, like Paul hears his guide, they would also assume that they will end up traveling around the world giving workshops.

What I mean to say here is, that when you go into your center and listen for guidance—expect the unexpected. Be willing to not have the faintest idea how the experience of guidance will be experienced by you. And then if you experience it by virtue of feelings, abide with that. Hang in there with it, because it will grow, and it will not be inarticulate just because there are not specific words.

Remember that I am registering, my presence is registering with Paul as meanings. Meanings do feel like something. Paul speaks at this moment with gentleness, because he is expressing the feeling of the meaning together with the words. You are experiencing, you are feeling meaning. And it is not like other experiences of feeling when you get a response from your guide.

Paul usually starts out a conversation with me by saying, “Good morning Raj, or good afternoon Raj, or good evening Raj.” And most of the time I respond by saying, “Good morning Paul, or good afternoon, or good evening Paul.” And then very often when Paul says, “Good evening Raj” and I say something else, he feels my presence and gives the same old words to it. He says or experiences the words, “Good evening Paul,” even though I may have said, “Yes, I am here.”

So you're not off the track. What I encourage you to do is to let the feeling that you are experiencing elicit words. Let words form in your mind that give expression to the feeling.

Now your ego is scared to death. This gathering is hazardous to its health. And there is that in you which is joyful because of what you know will be the nature of this gathering, and its congruence with who you really Are.

Decline to dance tonight. Show it your card that says, “All dances are taken. And that All of the dances are with me.” Then I encourage you also to relax—I'm going to say it this way, for lack of better words—relax into the energy of the group. Because even when you all go back to your rooms and seem to be separated by walls, you are all still here together embraced in the energy of “boundary breaking” and trust that you have brought with you, and it is safe to let go in a common awareness of unity. Let yourselves bask in, and rest in this unity. You are not alone. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are very welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj. Hello, everyone. I'd like to preface this question with an expression of my motivation and desire for wanting to attend this workshop, this gathering. I thought it would be a wonderful opportunity to truly join with people who I thought would be more likely to be undefended than many of the people I know. And that experience would be very supportive of my own movement.

In the five years that I've been listening to Raj and working with the tapes and materials, I've gotten real familiar with "Raj Speak" as I'll call it. And I love it, and I'm familiar with it, and it's a context that I enjoy. So there are sometimes where I know I've had enough of it, and there are other sources of inspiration and joining that are also appropriate for me.

And I registered for the workshop and I have the feeling—particularly because this was scheduled to be a five day residential gathering—I thought, "well, I wonder if the format's going to be the same, because I wonder how five days in questions of answers are going to play."

And my other thoughts was, Raj has always said the focus is on us, on each one of us claiming our Christhood and owning it, and daring to be it, and be that appropriate expression of love. And it's been my conscious intent the last couple years to experience that. And so I've wondered whether the format might be a little different, where maybe Raj wouldn't be the only one who was answering some of the people's questions. Because I truly... a lot of the time I consider him my brother and he is my equal. And I know I have success in assisting others—and I don't want to say that with like a big ego, "look at me," I want to compete with him. Because that's not it.

And so I've wondered about that. And this morning when the format was announced, there was a little bit of me that said I was disappointed. And I wondered if there were other people here that have experiences as Raj is giving the answer where they have an answer and they say, "Boy, I'd like to address that." So I wonder if other people have kind of had that experience.

I spoke with a gentleman at lunch, who shared with me how he had an answer for a "yes/but," but there really wasn't an opportunity to share that.

One of my thoughts in kind of looking at the questions and answers that have been covered already today, and being aware that there are people here who are new to Raj—working with him in this direct way, and perhaps lot's of us who have been working with him consciously and directly for quite sometime—I thought, "well, maybe we're doing it this way today, because for everybody who hasn't been too familiar with Raj, they need a day of 'Raj speak,' Raj 101."

But I still have this desire for things to break open a bit. And I can listen to the Raj tapes and you so very much express to us, ask any question and follow with the "yes/but's." But it's almost like there's still a little bit too much reverence, and there's still a little bit too much format, and proper context. And I just wonder if it's going to loosen up a little bit? So that's my question.

ANSWER: Thank you for not abiding habitually in context, and being willing to feel beyond a familiar context. It is WE here, not you and me. I do not sit here with an agenda other than, you could say, to be the light illuminating all the goodies that have escaped your attention so that you might be more grounded in Reality, and more grounded in your essential Being.

This group is indeed, shall I say, growing its own experience of our time together. Things can loosen up. But you are going to have to loosen it up. And if you want to have more interchange, if you want to have more discussion, if you even want to have time to be together as a group—during the assigned times of the sessions—to sort of hash over or express what is happening with you, as a result of what has been said, this is permissible.

You and I are not here to generate a set of tapes to send out to the world. We are here to explore with mutual support. So I do encourage you to think about what you want, and I encourage you to, shall I say, interrupt the pattern—if you have a desire for the pattern or the format to be different.

So I'm going to encourage you to be in touch with yourselves, and dare to do something novel or out of the ordinary—if that is what you are lead to do. And don't worry, intelligence is the fundamental of Being, and to be original will not create chaos. I will be with you the way you would like for me to be with you. So let us be together spontaneously.

We will nevertheless record, and so whoever is speaking, I would like for you to have the microphone, it will not truly curb spontaneity or naturalness. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. The key note there for me is joy, really wanting to allow people to fully express their joy and their joyining—joining.

QUESTION: I have a contrasting feeling about that. For the last year I have been discovering the person inside of me. And the comfort of being with a group of people who I know are seeking that divinity, does not mean so much of sharing and but listening and of observing myself, and the gentle nature that I feel from being around people in less loquacious ways.

Raj, my question in my search during this last year, and all of the wonderful things that I have discovered that makes me feel a part of the universe, and of the word "service" has emerged a number of times, and the feeling of service has emerged, and as I listen to definitions of service and exploring what it might mean and how I might be as a person in service. And incidentally, the Mother Theresa film this evening I feel... I have applied to the Peace Corp and this is a dream that I have had since 1962, to be a part of that.

And so my question to you is: if you see me in that role? And if I feel it's a logical extension and I would simply like some collaboration that you might give me on that path of service? And maybe if it's not the Peace Corp, it's something else. But I would like some direction about the meaning and your interpretation of being of service.

ANSWER: I will say first of all that it is a marvelously congruent next step for you.

Service... Servant... If you wish to serve your fellow man, you had better not try to serve your fellow man, else your fellow man will eat you up. You will sacrifice yourself. You will be what you serve. If you wish to be of service to your fellow man, you had better be in touch with what you Are.

I will soften that a little bit. If you wish to serve your fellow man, then I encourage you to desire to be in touch with your Self, with a capital "S". I encourage you to daily say, "Today I will make no decisions by myself." I encourage you to join, not with your fellow man whom you would serve, but to join with that ballast in you that keeps you in balance. And that ballast in you is the Holy Spirit (the disowned part of yourself that is held in trust, while you think that you are just an ego).

When you lean into, and depend upon, and yield to the Holy Spirit, you are integrating your limited sense of yourself with the wholeness of what you Are. And the wholeness of what you Are is not in anyway separate from everything else. And so in that experience of your wholeness you literally feel your oneness with everything. And without a false sense of separation that creates fear, there is the peaceful perspective of that which is utterly appropriate in your actions. And when you behave in the world from that place, everyone will say you have served them.

If you try to serve your fellow man without doing this, your fellow man will recognize your willingness to give your power away, and they will take charge of you, and you will be the puppet at the end of the strings that are attached to their fingers. And then you will say in all misery, "There must not be a God, because when I have decided to express love to my fellow man, I have just been used." That's because the fundamental, basic, initial, connectedness with your Being, and the joining with the Holy Spirit that that means, didn't occur first, providing the ballast or balance that allows you to be truly appropriate in transformational ways.

This might sound like a complicated task, or a big hurdle to be able to get over, and maybe it will take you more time to get over it than you have before you should tackle joining the Peace Corps. No. Join it, today, tomorrow, while you are in the groups. Be with your fellow man and woman with the desire to know what the Father's Will is, with a desire to have a perspective that is not based on what you perceive their needs to be, but based upon what you feel impelled by the Holy Spirit to do.

Your desire to participate in the Peace Corps, came as a result of listening. It is an evidence of emerging clarity. And so, it is appropriate for you to take that step. But just remember each step of the way, listen to the Holy Spirit.

Paul would become apparently utterly useless if he was really trying to help you, and if you became the focal point, and if he cared what you thought about his "help." But his attention is with me, and he is expressing what is unfolding in his conscious experience as a result of that listening. And then, you might say, that as a result of that you feel unity, you feel touched, you feel heard, you feel embraced, and you are likely to say that Paul is very helpful.

And yet as I said earlier, he has been out of control for ten years, and has no sense of having accomplished a task of being helpful. Because, if you want to know the truth, he doesn't even have any idea of why what I might be saying to you would be helpful. But it doesn't change the fact that he is experiencing meaningfulness within himself, and everyone else is experiencing meaningfulness, and therefore there is fulfillment—obvious fulfillment.

I have said it before and I will say it again: The most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your Being. So if you want to help your fellow man, go into that place in you where you can experience your divinity, and in that experience have the inescapable recognition that your experience of your divinity proves the divinity of your fellow man.

And then, just as with Mother Theresa, you may look at anyone in any apparent condition and see the Christ. And in seeing the Christ, be that act of love that I have described as the recognition of that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything—which is transformational, which is the leaven that leavens the whole lump.

Enjoy this new adventure, but don't become so excited with its novelty that you stop experiencing it from your best centered, connected place. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a follow up on that. There seems to be a conflict between being so self-centered, and then being interested in other people. And you described my problem very clearly in your answer to me.

ANSWER: That was a description of the solution.

QUESTION: Well, it's also the problem. All right I've written it down, so I'll review what you said as my solution. Thank you.

ANSWER: Indeed, you have illustrated a wonderful point. Everyone, at sometime or another, arrives at a point of saying in all frustration and despair, "I can't do this." And you judge yourself and you feel miserable and your words have stated the problem. And then in the moment of your deepest despair you realize that that statement is the answer—"I can't do this." And you feel the relief that you don't have to continue trying to do what you can't do.

The realization that you really can't do it is a revelation that you had been bound by your concepts to do something that it was not reasonable for you to do, and your conditioning continued to tell you that it was reasonable. And the moment you say, "I can't do it," and you feel the relief of it, your world that expected you to do it, or supported your belief that you ought to be able to do it, will reconfigure and no longer support your belief that you ought to be able to do it. And it will confirm that you cannot do it, and that the world doesn't expect you to do it.

It is a truth, "To thine own self be true, and it must"—it doesn't say it might or it ought to—"it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

What is the gift you have to give? What is the gift that any of you have to give? You exist. There is a reason for your existing. The reason for your existing is to make the gift of who you Are—the Individualized, but unlimited expression of God.

How can you make the gift of your Self if you don't know who you Are? It is selfish to make a gift when your hands are empty. It is selfish to ignore yourself for the sake of others and their perceived needs, which they will be most happy to convince you of and prove to you are real—for which there is no solution. They will be happy to convince you of that.

You know why it is selfish to serve others? Because in ignoring yourself you don't make the gift of you, and it would seem that some aspect of God is unexpressed. You are withholding God from expression when you are trying to be what someone else needs you to be. And yet, if you do care enough to be what the ego calls selfish and you do yield enough, you do sacrifice the masks and the misperceptions and the false definitions of yourself, and you do begin to feel who you essentially Are, which means to feel the presence of God.

Then what will happen where you are is the Movement of God. And it will be congruent and it will be transformational and everyone will say, "You have been most helpful. You have changed my life." And you will say, "But I didn't do anything. I don't know why you would say that. But I am very happy for you. And I thank you for loving me in your expression of gratitude."

The ego is a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync, that's why it's a liar and the father of the lie. It says the exact opposite of the truth. And it says to be loving you must extend yourself to others at your own expense. Martyrdom is the sign of great spirituality. That's the end of the answer.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS (FOLLOWING MORNING): Good morning. When Paul began Friday night, he used the phrase, “who am I, and what am I doing here?” And I’d like to take a moment to ask and answer the same question myself.

Who am I? I am the presence of the Father Self-expressing. This is very important to understand, because many of you know me as Jesus. And to you, Jesus is a personage, a very significant personage out of your past. And the tendency is for you to lay upon me, or overlay upon what I am, your sense of my personhood, which whether you know it or not, involves a sense of my being an ego. Because that is your current experience of personhood.

Now I did say to my disciples, “If you have seen me, you have seen the Father.” And that is what I have just said to you, as the answer to the question, who am I. I was Awake when I made that statement, and there was no ego present. The full impact of that did not register with my disciples. And the full impact of that has not registered with you.

But I encourage all of you to allow for the full meaning of that to register with you so that you do not involuntarily and reverently conceive of me as a personage, as a form or a body, but rather as that Conscious Awareness of Being which is claiming no perspective different from the Father’s recognition of Himself infinitely. And so if you want you could say that God is addressing you. And I want to ask, who is hearing God? Is it a bunch of persons, or is it God recognizing Himself/Herself? Is this not all God knowing Himself/Herself and looking like all of you and Paul and me—is this not all God? It is.

Indeed, the question was asked yesterday when the suggestion was made that the format change, and that perhaps you listen to guidance coming from various other directions—the question was asked—“Don’t they realize that this is Jesus? Why would they want to talk to anyone else when Jesus is here to be heard?”

And I do want to make a point clear: When there is a willingness to yield to the Father’s Will, when there is a willingness, as Paul said, to have no preference, when there is a willingness to go into the not-knowing place and be still, and with no preference or urging of any sort, allow the experience of being conscious to occur, you find yourself Knowing, with a capital “K”, you find yourself beginning to experience the clarity of the Father’s point of view that is utterly and absolutely appropriate to whatever the given situation is at the moment.

And the guidance (if you want to call it that) that is heard, the intelligent clarity that is experienced is God speaking, and God hearing God speaking, experiences the integrity of Being and everyone feels good.

And so, I am not more special than anyone else’s guide, because any guide that is speaking as a result of someone no longer claiming a private, separate point of view, is being the transparency for Truth—is being the transparency for the Father’s Self-expression. Right now, Paul is being the transparency and I am being the transparency, and therefore you are not listening to a personality of Jesus the Christ. You are listening to God expressing Himself, identifiable as Jesus—egoless Jesus, therefore, Jesus Christ, Christ Jesus, Christ Paul, and Christ You, hearing Yourself.

Because of your traditional teaching, if you have come from a Christian background, you have a spontaneous inclination to defer to me as though I were another person, but an exalted person. But I'm not an exalted person, I am the transparency for the Father's Will. I am allowing God to be All There Is right where I am, just as Paul is allowing God to be All There Is right where he is, even though to him it is experienced as hearing Me.

Now, Paul at various times—especially in the beginning—demanded (most honorably) that I appear to him so that he might have proof that this wasn't all his imagination. He did come to the realization that if indeed I did appear to him, his ego could explain it away as a hallucination, experienced by somebody who was going through the trauma of a collapsing business.

But that is not why I did not appear. I did not appear to him because it was imperative for him not to identify me as a figure, as a body, as a form, which would have led to a spontaneous conclusion in his mind that I was a person, rather than that Infinite Conscious Awareness that is absolutely devoid of self-will, and therefore does not in any way obscure the divine Love of the Father and the Father's experience of Himself infinitely and recognizing Himself and joying in the recognition.

You see, the tendency is to take everything personally, which means to take it in a very limited way. When John baptized me and the words were heard, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." It was interpreted as a benediction placed upon me, because I was special. What it did was, to disclose the joy and the love of the Father in his experience of Himself, that looks like You and Me. And so, that benediction is yours.

THE FATHER: You all are my beloved Sons and Daughters, in whom I am well pleased. Why? Because all I see in you is Me, because that's all there really is, in spite of all your imaginations to the contrary. And you are the only ones who hold limited and depreciating and demeaning concepts about yourselves. And it's all extraneous. It's all superfluous. It's all meaningless, because you cannot be anything but Me."

PAUL: This is me, Paul. That's not Jesus talking. That's very clearly—and it's the first time that's ever happened—it's very clearly the Father expressing Himself. I just wanted to let you know there was a shift that occurred there.

ANSWER: Now, this is Raj/the Father; Paul/Raj/the Father; You/Paul/Raj/the Father, being communion.

You see you must not only let lose of your definitions of personhood that you apply to yourself, you must let go of your definitions of personhood that you apply to me, so that you might begin to be able to appreciate yourself and me, not as body or form, but as that Infinite Conscious experience of Being as Consciousness or Mind, that perfectly reflects the Father, because it is the Father expressed and nothing less. And then you will not appreciate me, “as Jesus,” more than you appreciate your guide. And you will not appreciate me, “as Jesus,” more than you appreciate yourselves individually. And you will not appreciate me, “as Jesus,” more than you appreciate each other.

Now, the second question is, “why am I here”? And the answer is: Because I love you. And because it perfectly expresses the Father’s Will for us to be together in love—not in judgment—in love, at this time, in this way.

Now there is something else you need to know for balance and perspective, and that is, that I am with you always. Isn’t that heart warming [sarcastically]? For balance and perspective, understand that you are with me always and you are with each other always. You are not alone, because God isn’t separated into parts.

As long as you feel alone, the infinite unity of Being—or what you might call the omnipresence of God, which cannot be gotten rid of in spite of your belief of being alone—the infinite presence of God, the infinite presence of you is experienced as this tiny sense of yourself being embraced by infinite love. And it is appropriate for you indeed to reach out to, and be willing to be in receipt of that love that embraces you, because that is the way reintegration occurs—that is the way the ego boundaries that seem to separate you from your conscious experience of God’s point of view, is penetrated.

But you need to know something else. You are the ones, for whatever reason, who have built the wall called your ego, that causes the separation. And the only way that thin film of separation can be penetration, is when you make the invitation—when you express a new will, if you will—that says, “I do not want to be separate. I am exhausted from trying to maintain myself.”

You know what? It’s effortless to be whole. It takes a great deal of effort to be separate, to be a part of a whole, because you have to deny the majority of who you Are. Self denial is hard work. Why? Because God is All That Is right there, appearing to be you. So, you’re denying God. Now let’s be very clear: Is that a sin? Punishable? No, it’s just a lot of hard work. It’s wearing and tearing, but the ego likes a good challenge.

So if you don’t want to be alone, don’t work harder at being a better loner so that all the other loners might like you better and embrace you. Let someone in, by invitation. The invitation is your desire to share your space, if you will, a desire to be present with rather than separate from.

Now if you want to know how untrustworthy you as an ego are, then just think about how safe you feel about letting another ego into your space. You don’t do it with very many people, usually just a partner—and you very gingerly be together. That is why you are invited to desire to join with the Holy Spirit, because the Holy Spirit is expressing the Will of the Father, and has no ax to grind, has no little bias to apply to the expression of God to give it a little extra spin and vitality and make it stimulating.

And you can trust the Holy Spirit. You can trust me. You can trust the Father. The point is: make the invitation. Let your stance change to the desire to be present with, rather than separate from. When you express that desire to be present with, you create cracks, you might say, in the ego defenses that seem to prove that you are separate, and the influx of the Holy Spirit occurs.

And as I said yesterday, the Holy Spirit is your disowned Self, with a capital “S”, that is held in trust while you dally with the ego. Now it’s not held in trust in a divine bank deposit box. It is rather as though you have taken a part of the infinity of you as Consciousness, and have created a little sphere around a small portion of it, and you have said that everything inside this sphere is what you are, and there is nothing else. And all the while, the Infinity of what you are continues to be what is on the outside and the inside of this sphere of your belief structures.

That is why when you desire to companion with the Holy Spirit, when you commit to not being alone and you let in, you create cracks in the sphere and there is an experience of your wholeness—of your connectedness with that of you that has experienced itself within the sphere, and that of you that seems to have been unavailable to you but has forever been consciously Being the Presence of God outside the sphere. And when that connection occurs, you say you have experienced enlightenment or revelation—you have had a divine experience.

I will say it again: The Holy Spirit is your disowned divinity, your disowned Self held in trust—in other words, going on outside the sphere of your ego structures in spite of your ignoring it—while you dally with a limited perception of Yourself.

As long as you are holding yourself to a sense of personality—as an ego—you deny yourself the experience of your wholeness, and you deny yourself the experience of who your brother really is. Because you cannot conceive of your brother or sister as being more than what you are.

And so that is why I have begun today by saying who I am, and why I’m here, so that you will not misconstrue me, and hold both yourself and me in the confines of limits—as personality.

Now who said this to you? You said this to you. I could not say it if you were not ready to hear it. So you could say, we said it. As much will happen during the period of this gathering, as you are willing to let happen. I am here to reflect back to you, You. Why? Because God is all that’s going on. And God is All There Is to be reflected.

Now I am not here as the Son of God to teach you anything—you poor things. I could say I am here as a brother. I could say I am here as your friend. But more than that, I’m here because I’m You and You are Me. But you see, that still has a sense of separation to it. It expresses a closer approximation of the truth of it. But lets carry it all the way. I am here because you are here, you are here because I am here, because there's only one thing here and that is God—the infinite Movement of Consciousness experiencing Itself infinitely, and therefore with, what we can call, infinite diversity. But the diversity arises out of the infiniteness of the Source, and not out of the unique characteristics of, what would be called the part, the diversification.

Therefore, as you let go of a personal definition of yourself, a private separate personal reflection of the Father, and allow for the Father to be the only thing present right where you are—because that is the only thing that is really present—then what I will call the infinite texture of the infinite expression of God becomes fully illuminated, you might say, fully conscious as a unique aspect of the Whole that expresses nothing less than the Whole.

Indeed, if the brotherhood of man, the Sons and Daughters of God, in a totally Awakened state with everyone consciously experiencing his or her Birthright, the Brotherhood if it expressed itself would not be everyone saying the same thing with exactly the same inflection like a Gregorian chant. But everyone's clear undistorted expression of the Father—because they are letting the Father express Himself there where they are—everyone's expression, if you will, would constitute what you might call the music of the spheres, harmony. You can't have a single tone and have harmony, can you? It takes two tones to have harmony, or more.

Individuality is eternal, and it does not get swallowed up, it does not disappear as one yields personality up, sacrifices personality and succumbs to the Father's Will. The infinite Self-expression of God could be called God infinitely Individualized. But you must understand that the individualization is not a limited expression of God, but the full presence of God. And this you could say involves divine mathematics that cannot be explained rationally or logically, you have to feel for it.

Now self-sacrifice...

Self-sacrifice is an idea present in all major religions and all teachings, you might say, of those who have dared to step into the not-knowing place that Paul spoke of. It must be understood that the self that is sacrificed, refers to the collection of ego beliefs that you have brought together to form a definition of yourself through reasoning, through observation, through logic, whether it's good logic or bad. It is this conglomeration of assumptions and beliefs that must be abandoned.

The problem is that each of you thinks that is what constitutes you, and therefore to sacrifice or abandon it will mean going insane because you will have no identity left. And so you say, "Well, I want to live a little bit longer. I want to enjoy this world. I want to enjoy my family, etc. And so I'll wait until I'm not interested in what's going on before I'll sacrifice myself, and dissolve into some nondifferentiated unrecognized stuff."

It's beautifully summarized in a joke about a fellow who gets on a bus and sits down next to a priest. And as they're sitting there the priest starts talking about the glories of the afterlife and of being with Jesus and God and so on. Finally, having sat there, listening to the priest enraptured with his sense of the glories of the afterlife, this young man says, "Yes Father, yes Father, but do we have to talk about such an unpleasant subject?"

You are conditioned to interpret the sacrifice of self as the dissolution, the dissolving and the disappearing of any experience of self, and all that will be left will be God, whatever that might mean. And naturally you're going to put that off as far as you can. But the fact is that you have a means available to you—which we have already discussed—but you have a means available to you in which you can safely find that self-sacrifice, with a small "s", does not mean the giving up of the experience of Self, with a capital "S".

And that safe means is: becoming still. Do you know what becoming still means? It means not thinking. Thinking is a defense against and utterly blocks the experience of knowing who you Are. And knowing isn't an intellectual experience, but a direct experience that you find yourself having in the silence of your Being.

And in the silence of your Being you find the courage to make the invitation to the Holy Spirit, or to the Father, or to Me, or to the Awakened One who has been assigned to you—it happens, that you feel safe enough to express the desire to know what Truth really is. It allows you to have the desire to be present with.

You know what? The moment you genuinely become silent with no preference, you have decided not to be willful. And that in itself begins to weaken the ever so tentative, but seemingly substantial shell of your ego beliefs. And then when you dare to make the invitation to make no decisions by yourself, but to companion with the guidance of the Holy Spirit, you are primed for the influx of the experience of your Wholeness, the experience of your Knowing. And you just Know the Truth. You don't arrive at it through deduction. You experience the fact that you're divine.

You know what? It's not awesome, because it is utterly natural. But it is also undeniable and absolute. And you know it's irrevocable, even though you choose to temporarily abandon that experience and begin thinking about it, and once again identifying as a limited ego.

And when you Know that you are divine, (and I've said this before)--but you all have the experience when you do this—when you know, not think, but know that you are divine, you experience a revelation, you know that the so-and-so that lives next door to you is divine too.

And you know what happens? You're able to love the old so-and-so, not as an intellectual exercise, and you do not say, "my neighbor next door is divine." It's not something you say to make it true, it's something you Know (for lack of better words) from the tips of your toes. And when you have that experience you know what's happening? You're loving your neighbor, because the thinking that defines him otherwise isn't occurring, and the thinking that defines him otherwise is the only definition there is of hate.

So now you know who I am and why I'm here. And you also know who you are and why you are here. And you also know who's talking to you, and don't be fooled into thinking that it's me. And yet it is me, but it's not me and not you—it's not me to the exclusion of you. It's us unfolding, uncovering the unity of Being. It is us experiencing communion. And at the moment, because it expresses the Father's Will at the level of accommodation of a current three-dimensional frame of reference, it sounds like us experiencing communion is Paul flapping his mouth. But it is a singular, unfragmented, indivisible event that is happening here. It is the Oneness of us. And us says, "it feels good to be here."

QUESTION: I had an experience a while back that immediately afterwards I wanted to ask Raj about this. And it's directly related to what you were saying this morning. And just for the point of reference, for context, I'm not sure if I need to say this or why I'm saying it, but I had eaten a particular substance, mind altering substance. And I had the deepest experience I've ever had in my life.

I've had many experiences on my own of feeling connected to God and being one with the Godhead, being one with the Father, being the Christ. And this particular experience I felt like I went beyond that to actually being the Father—not being one with the Father. And I looked out from that place, and I saw nothing but myself. And it was ultimately, frightening to see that.

And from that place then, I preceded to do something that you were talking about last night, I preceded to choose my life, because I saw that as I contemplated it I saw that my only means of survival was to start to choose my life. And it became an actual physical experience, where I was out in the desert and the road disappeared, completely, literally, physically. And as I made the choice to choose my own life, the road would appear in front of me and I would drive on. And every time I would stop choosing my previous life the road would disappear and I would just be driving through the cactus.

And this went on all the way back to my house. Where I finally had to choose every single, subtle, nuance of my life exactly the way it was or I would not be able to live—was the feeling. Including the fact that the only thing that I could perceive that existed along with myself, was reverence for what I was still calling other beings.

But for the first time in my life I was in a place where I did not even see the existence of what is called love. And what I felt like I needed to do was, I needed to create love as a vehicle for my reverence for my fellow people. So I felt I had to recreate my life and I had to even create love so that I could come back and be with people.

But the question is, like it's more like just commenting on that in relationship to what you were saying this morning about not being lost in the Oneness. I did experience something that I didn't think was possible. Since I always heard you say that, and I'd always believed that I would still maintain my selfhood. I experienced not having a self anymore, and just being the Father and being totally frightened and needing to create the illusion the way it was, not because I was falling from something, but because I needed to escape from myself. So could you please comment about that?

ANSWER: Indeed, as I have said before, drugs are not mind-expanding. They function, if you will, entirely within existing ego structures.

Now you must remember that the self that is embraced by the sphere of ego structures—which is very tenuous and thin, even though it is seemingly substantial, as I said—the self that is contained within the sphere is the same self that is outside the sphere infinitely. Therefore, it is as though the sphere has captured a little bit of what you divinely Are.

That is why even in your distorted self-perception you recognize that you are worth something. That is why even within the imposed ignorance of your ego structures you remember Home, and you feel the desire to know the truth, and you feel the desire to violate the boundaries of the ego structures—even though you don't remember or know why you feel that.

The experience that you had of “being God,” was not an experience of union with God, but was rather a creatively drug induced experience of what the divine You remembers of the experience of unity.

This illustrates perfectly what I have referred to as the danger of using drugs. And I'm not referring to burned out brain cells and all of that. It is the danger of believing that you are having a genuine experience when you are not. And as a result of that, not engaging in having the Real experience.

There are flecks of truth in what you experienced. But one of the ways you can always tell whether you are experiencing an illusion is that there will always be polarities present. And whether you are, at any moment, during the experience of this illusion having a beautiful, wonderful experience, the opposite of it lurks. And that is not the case when you are having a Real experience of the penetration of the ego structures that allows you to truly experience unity with God, in which indeed you feel and recognize yourself in everything that you are experiencing.

If you are experiencing an illusion, it will always be polarized no matter which end of the polarity happens to be up at a given moment. And you may have a good trip with no negative, but I will tell you, that the negative was lurking—the negative was there to be had. And that is not the case in, what I will call, a Real experience of enlightenment.

Now we will not take time to pin point the flecks of truth that were there. The key thing that you need to remember is that the fear you felt is the factor that proves to you that it was not an experience of unity, even though there were elements of Reality that were present, that were drawn from unavailable memory. I mean by that, memory of that which is not normally consciously available to you. But it is from memory of that of you which is divine within the limits of the ego frame of reference—the belief structures that you utilize to define yourself at the moment.

You see, the very fact that you in your limited perception of yourself are divine allows for confusion to reign when you engage in the use of “recreational drugs.” And that is why you can seem to have experiences that approximate truth.

But you want to get beyond the limited memory of the experience of unity—even though if it is embellished or enhanced by drugs—what you want is the Real experience of integrity, in which there is no polarization, no fear. And even though the experience is—by comparison with what you are experiencing now—magnificent, awesome in its infiniteness, it will not be frightening. You will recognize your Self in it. And if your Self is the presence of indivisible God, then your experience of your infiniteness will be incapable of polarization—will be incapable of fear.

I’m just going to take a moment here before we break for lunch.

The ego thrives on the challenge of gaining control over that which doesn’t need to be controlled. And let us say, as time has passed, as the centuries have passed and everyone has become more and more educated, truly speaking, there has been less identification with the body. And one does not live by the sweat of his brow; he does not have to plow his field; he does not have to build his own house; he does not have to physically labor as he did two thousand, four thousand years ago.

As this has happened, and there has been more identification with mind than body, there has evolved what you call psychology. This evolution of psychology and even what you would call the Tao of physics, etc., expressing the mental nature of the physical universe has brought with it a shift from controlling your world physically to controlling your world mentally. And this has even been translated into religions, which by means of the true use of your mind, you can heal yourself, or you can demonstrate into your experience tennis courts, and swimming pools, and Cadillacs, or whatever your heart desires. Except it isn’t your heart, it’s your ego.

I’m going to encourage all of you to be leery of anything that promotes the idea that you can create your good, or that you can create your world, or that you do create your world. Because the very words express an authority that's purely imaginary. It is a manifestation of, what I will call, a more refined sense of ego. Control has simply shifted from the physical control of the physical world, to the mental control of it. And as long as one is trying to create one's world, what are you going to use for tools or blueprints? You are going to have to rely upon memory—your best current sense of something. And there is no creation in that at all, it's just a rearrangement of the same old stuff in new and satisfying ways. Satisfying why? Because it was your idea.

Now it is possible because as a shift of perception occurs there is unfamiliarity that happens, it is possible to be confused and not verbalize what you are experiencing well, you will verbalize it awkwardly. And as you begin to listen, as you begin to feel into the already existing Movement of Creation and you recognize it and you recognize it as You, but not a movement that you're figuring out, and you begin to flow with it because you feel the integrity of not acting at odds with it, your life indeed will begin to transform into what the Course calls "a happy dream."

And because you know it's happening as a result of something you did, even though it was letting go of your willfulness, you might in your awkward expression of what is happening say, "I'm creating a better life for myself."

I encourage you to be careful of linking the word "create" to yourself. Because you will always be susceptible of using your current sense of yourself as the definition of self that is doing the creating, rather than the capital "S" Self that you are—which is God Moving—that you will not have a true perspective of until you have totally abandoned the sense of a self that can be creative.

Strictly speaking, the only thing that any of you, as you presently experience yourself most of the time, the only thing any of you can create is a misunderstanding of what's going on. And you create the misunderstanding by not paying attention. You create it by abandoning paying attention and relying upon thinking and judgment. That's it in a nut shell.

QUESTION: My question deals with the last statement you made about the only thing we create is a misperception of our reality. As I understand it...

ANSWER: Not of your reality, but of Reality itself.

QUESTION: Yes of Reality itself.

ANSWER: You call your misperception Reality.

QUESTION: As I understand it, when we wake up, when we all graduate, we will not remember any of the dream for a number of reasons: That remembering is a thinking act and we will be Being, and remembering deals with the past and we will be in the now. And the Course says that when we wake up the entire ego system will disappear into the nothingness from which it came.

And so my question is: When we all graduate, when we all wake up, what will prevent us from making the same error that we originally made and starting this process all over again?

ANSWER: It is difficult for me to express this in a fully meaningful way with words, but I can come closest to it by expressing the reason that you will not do this again, as being spiritual maturity.

As a child you loved to play with toys. As a teenager you loved to play with girls. Your interests changed because of a process of maturity that is not consciously brought into play. As an adult you liked to play with and manipulate the world, not because you were taught really to put away childish things, but because it happens as a result of growth.

Now I understand that this implies that there was a certain spiritual immaturity that caused you all to indulge in the interesting experience of limited perception. And, of course, that isn't true. But this is the closest that I can come to explaining it.

You must understand that it is not an error to experience the forth-dimensional conscious experience of Being—which I guess you could call a four dimensional continuum—from any of the lesser dimensions, the third, second, or first. It is an experience that is available to all of you. And I would wager to say that fully seventy-five percent of the Brotherhood of man, the Sons and Daughters of God, have indulged, we will say, in an experience of the lesser dimensions. It does not constitute a disobedience. However, not everyone got caught in it.

To experience Reality in a limited fashion introduces polarity, which if you stay in it long enough becomes challenging and inviting. And ultimately, because of the invitation and the acceptance of the invitation, and the addictive nature of it, one can forget Home because there is a greater interest in the preoccupation with the challenge. But to engage in it does not constitute a disobedience. After all, all four dimensions do describe the constituting presence of what you infinitely Are.

It is only when you, as a result of engaging in a limited perception of yourself, forget your larger Self that you are deluded into believing that you are trapped. And that is what constitutes insanity—the belief that you are finite when you are infinite.

Now the Course says, an actual human or three-dimensional experience proves that when you become engaged in delight at the challenge of limitation, you are in an active state of denial of your infiniteness, which is the same thing as being in a state of denying God. And that is why the ego is described as an act of defense against God. But it isn't because the ego is real. It's because you have become misled by the nature of the limited frame of reference, and have at some point, actively chosen to engage with the apparent challenge or challenges that reflect the polarity of the limited frame of reference.

And as long as you are consciously accepting the challenge, you are bringing into play an act of will that causes you to be unable to give your attention to that place in you where you can reconnect consciously with your infinite nature, and thus graduate, if you will, back or forward into your Primitive natural estate.

Now one of the things that will happen when you wake up is that you will have consciously available to you what you in your Totality have been being during all of this time that you were viewing everything in a limited fashion. There will be restored to you, you might say, the true awareness of what has been happening to the divine You, which has been Being fully all the time that this little part of you has been claiming to be all there is of you.

I'm going to put it this way: The experience will not go to waste, even though it will be such obvious nonsense that you will not carry it around with you any further. And it is in that sense that I speak of a spiritual maturity.

Humanly speaking, it would be the same as saying, "I've had the experience. I don't need to do it again. I don't want to do it again." It won't be that conscious a flow of thoughts, and decision making won't be involved. It's just that you will be more attracted to girls than to toys, or more attracted to whatever than you were when you were attracted to girls. You just won't be interested anymore. That's the end of the answer.

PAUL: I don't know what to do because I don't want to slight the people who are next in line. Let me check with Raj, because we have three more follow-up questions.

He said we will take the follow-up questions.

QUESTION: I'm going to use my follow-up question as my question, not that I'm being a martyr, because I'm not, Raj has already answered my question.

My question has to do with what happened this morning, we were talking about everybody being one with each other, one with all things because there is nothing that is not God. And also was mentioned, all those people that did not buy into the illusion of duality, that didn't get caught in that. And I'm referring to the Ashtar Command and the Federation: how we relate to them talk to us about our oneness with them. And also if you could mention about the Photon Belt that supposedly we're going to be going through in the immediate future.

ANSWER: Probably, to the surprise of many of you, I am not going to deny the existence of Ashtar or the Ashtar Command. And it may stretch your imagination some or your credulity, to think that you might have to embrace those who are called the "space brothers," and not continue to call those who are listening to the "space brothers" kooks, and you perfectly normal listening to me.

I said earlier on, meaning a number of years ago in early gatherings, that the message will get through like the early "pony express." And it will get through in language of present awareness. And that obviously, the language of Awakening for an Australian Aborigine will be different from the language of Awakening for a scientist of the Western World.

And Paul always thought that the language that I meant, that the language for Australian Aborigines would have to necessarily be much more fundamental and simple, because of their necessarily limited degree of education. And when he went to Australia, he had the opportunity to discover that they were further along than the scientist of the Western World. And that more accommodation would have to be made to the Western mind, than to the Aboriginal mind.

Now there are those of you for whom there is a readier ability to listen and accept from what you would call, “space brothers,” because there is a strong sense of reasonableness to the idea that your universe is peopled with many beings other than yourselves.

Now this does not mean that Ashtar and the Ashtar Command, meaning that “body of individualities” under Ashtar’s Command, they are not people from other planets, they are part of the Brotherhood just like every single one of your guides and like myself, and like all of the Brotherhood who are Awake. They are Totally Awakened. And they do not need space ships to be wherever they want to be because they are aware of their omnipresence and thus can bring their focus of attention to any point in infinity by a shift of their attention. But they come to facilitate the Awakening of mankind in this part of your universe just as I do, but in a different form that registers easily and meaningfully to many of you.

Be willing to allow the messengers to appear in whatever form they appear and understand that they are accommodating the many various mindsets or frames of reference that all of you are in. And each of you pay attention to that which is meaningful to you. And if you hear inconsistencies, do not assume that these inconsistent “messages” cannot possibly represent an Awakened perspective, else there would be absolute consistency. Because the problem is that your ego mindsets are inconsistent.

A Course In Miracles is an accommodation. You listen through sieves. You sort out before a thing even arrives, anything that is arriving. And you would be amazed at how much artistry is required in order for us to get a non-dimensional truth through some of the crazy patterns of your sieves so that you end up hearing it half way as it was intended. I’m not complaining. If you knew, however, you would know how loved you are. And that is important.

Truly, at this time, in this setting, there is no need for me to address any of the other aspects of your question. I would just encourage all of you who might enjoy letting your imaginations run wild, that the idea of passing through a Photon Belt is not one which needs to cause you any concern. Indeed, if it did, I would be addressing it further.

You all need to know something: The one thing you all have in common, your one life saver if you will, is that because that which is encased within the sphere of ego structures is the divine You, just as that which is outside the sphere is the divine You, you forever have the capacity to recognize Truth.

Do you realize that this means you never need to give your power away? You never have to rely upon someone else telling you what the Truth is or that you should believe such-and-such a thing is the truth. It means that you have the ability to listen to anybody saying anything without fear, because you have the inherent capacity to recognize truth. And you need to begin to exercise that capacity.

And then whether someone says, “this message has come from the Ashtar Command,” or somebody else says, “this message has come from Raj,” or somebody says, “this came from somewhere else,” it will not be the apparent source that will be of interest to you. What will be of interest to you is that when you observe it or take it in, that you measure it against your deepest understanding of what truth is—your deepest feeling of the truth of it. And in this way your Integrity is left totally intact.

You don’t have to deny this one, and deny that one, and accept that one. That is stupid. Because the one that you say, “I don’t need to deny,” you are likely to listen to without paying attention. And in the absence of actually paying attention to the point where you are measuring what you hear against your deepest knowing of what truth is, you give your power away and lose your sense of your Integrity.

Why does everyone want to grow up? So that they can stop learning! So they can finally learn it all and relax and what? Not have to pay so much attention any more. Well, not paying attention is not being conscious. And in not paying attention you lose the experience of your Integrity and you do give your power away. And then you end up saying, “she’s using me. He’s using me. I’m being mistreated.” You have mistreated yourself.

So remember, each of you has the inherent capacity to recognize Truth. Practice that capacity! Stay conscious! And thus, keep alive to yourself your experience of your Integrity. And then you will not need to be afraid of anyone, or off-handedly discount anything. You will not be afraid to let anything new into your experience, even if it’s Ashtar the “space brothers.” That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: At the end of this mornings session you were referring to verbalizing awkwardly as you’re beginning to let go of willfulness. My question is, would you also possibly go through memory deficits during that time?

ANSWER: Indeed. I will tell you something: As you begin to listen within, freeing your mind up from thinking so that you are gathering the facts of Being from the direct experience of what you divinely Are, you disengage from memory. And this is very often defined as a problem, only because you have been conditioned to rely upon your memory as though you had no other resource available.

As you “progress,” you will find that you will prefer to always be at the point of Knowing, with a capital “K”. Because then you will always be absolutely congruent with what is really going on in the moment you are experiencing. And you will realize that you no longer need to remember anything. And then what you had defined as a problem, called a memory deficit, will be recognized to be part of your healing of being an ego. If you don’t recognize it and you call it a problem, you are likely to panic and leave the act of listening. And then you will seem to have a problem.

So the point is that as this begins to happen, stay at that place where Knowing occurs. Be willing to continue to stand in the void—in the not-knowing place. Not-knowing is spelled n-o-t hyphen small k-n-o-w-i-n-g. It means, not-knowing as an ego; not knowing as a collection of memories.

And when you are in the not-knowing place as an ego, you are in that place where capital “K” Knowing is experienced. And you have your first direct experience of what you divinely Are, the beginning experience of it. And if you insist upon remaining there or returning there as often as you can, you allow that experience of Knowing, with a capital “K”, Knowing yourself, to increase—to illuminate itself to you. That’s important. You will not be able to uncover it. You will not be able to ferret out, the various aspects and experiences of who you divinely Are. You must yield and let it reveal Itself to you. The only way you can invite something in is to open the door and let it come in.

And so you cannot be in charge of the revealing that will occur. You really can only let. And you let by not having any other agenda. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Okay, on this memory deficit thing... By the way greetings.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Does this apply to all memory deficits?

ANSWER: No, indeed.

QUESTION: Shoot! Okay.

ANSWER: Some memory deficits are simple additional experience of limitation that is characteristic of the ego frame of reference. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I know, I’m trying to figure out what you just said to me in case I have a follow-up to that. I think I have a question. Wait a minute, is what you just said to me that most memory deficits then are just problems with the ego?

ANSWER: Like any other apparent physical disease, which is simply a manifestation of the mental perception that you are a limited human mortal. Aside from that, when one does begin to listen, as I said, one disengages from the apparent level of thinking, and thus disengages from memory, and may experience a memory deficit. But that does not constitute an illness, but a health that goes beyond your present sense of health and illness. You would say that a healthy memory is good, when the fact is that Knowing and not memory is what constitutes real mental health.

QUESTION: Greetings, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: This is a follow-up having to do with the question about doing drugs. And also a couple other things. When Susan was describing the other day an experience that she had in a dream, and what it was like for her for the next five weeks, there was something very attractive and appealing about something that seems so cosmic, if you will.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Indeed. I've done drugs in the past and have realized lately that...

ANSWER: All of you do drugs. I do not mean just the drug store kind. The ego is a drug. Continue.

QUESTION: So I've done them in the past and have notices recently that there's been some desire in me to, let me say a recognition of the possibility that I want to check out with you, the possibility of being naturally intoxicated on Being, with a capital "B". Wondering if that's an appropriate thing that I'm feeling like that's a possibility, or is is something that is just something I'm adding from the ego level?

ANSWER: Life is way ahead of you. There's already a word for it. It's called bliss. Indeed, yes. Indeed, yes.

QUESTION: Is it possible to be there all the time?

ANSWER: What do you think we're talking about? Now, give yourself permission to have the experience now. Do not say in the bye-and-bye. Don't say, "Well I know I'm bound to have the experience, BUT I know it's going to take a little bit more growth."

For those of you who may not have heard this before: There is no prerequisite for getting in touch with your guide, except having arrived at a point where you desire to have the experience. And likewise, there is no prerequisite to experiencing bliss, except to have arrived at the point of desiring to experience it, and what? then letting it in.

Have any of you desired to teleport, and sit there with full intent and willingness to doing it, and then in the back of your mind say, "no," because you are afraid if you get there you won't be able to get back.

So, when you give permission for things, you very often withhold permission simultaneously. And then there are others of you who give permission, it begins to happen, you say, “not so fast. I can’t take too much of my good.”

Remember this: The only prerequisite to experiencing your bliss is to have arrived at a point where there is a desire to experience it, and then let it in. In other words, don’t say, “come on” and push away at the same time. You have to say, “come on” and then succumb to the influx—yield and succumb. Wonderful unpleasant words, but absolutely necessary to understand and embrace.

You are not yielding if you are saying “No.” You are not yielding, you are not providing admittance to the influx of the experience of your divinity if you want to control the inflow. And so you must succumb—sacrifice your willfulness.

It is only because of your currently limited perception of things, and your belief that the limitation is real, that you believe that anything else that might come in is likely not to be to your advantage, that it is likely to be as polarized as the lenses through which you are looking at everything. That is one of the reasons you want control as you let something in.

All of your spiritual paths are ultimately meant to help you arrive at a point through reason and, I will say love as well, where you can dare to trust that God is All to enough of a degree that you can dare to let go of control and let in willingly. Being on a spiritual path is not for the purpose of having a more exalted kind of control. That’s the end of the answer.

PAUL: Raj wants me to ask whether anyone is having difficulty with the way things are going at this moment, in that we are not seemingly going in an orderly fashion, but it’s sort of flowing organically. Is anyone having a problem with that?

QUESTION: (Someone is talking without a microphone.)

PAUL: If there’s one thing I know about Raj, he won’t lose focus. But I understand what you’re saying, yes. For the sake of those who will listen to the tape, the comment was made that there was a concern that the focus would get finer and finer and smaller and smaller. And just a moment... He says, “Indeed, I will not let that happen.”

ANSWER: You must understand that I am not being led by you. And that the Us, the unity that I mentioned earlier is unfolding the clarity that represents the growth and unfolding of everyone in this group, and I am here to reflect that back to you. I am here to reflect back to you what Us is Being. And Us is bigger than the sense of limited I that seems to be asking the questions.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. I hope that the person who was supposed to be next in line hasn’t been sitting feeling, a clutching feeling of, “What am I going to say when I get the microphone?” I hope she has been sitting here all morning and afternoon, and the microphone has never come to her, and she hasn’t gotten relief. (Laughter) Let’s continue.

QUESTION: First of all I want to thank Paul, and Raj, and Susan, and Christopher for being a part of our life. We're all so very grateful. Thank you.

Talking about wanting the Christ experience in our lives, I think we all want that, and I think I speak for everyone here. In wanting to be in touch with the Christ in my life, it's the most important thing for me. And I refer to a phrase you used before about strong arming the universe.

I feel like I'm right on a line: one side of me strong arming, telling them, "I want it, I want it now." And the other part is trying the "infinite patience that brings immediate results." And I go back and forth on these two... on the side of this same peak, wanting that peak experience and wanting it forever—like Marty said. And it seems so allusiveness, I get there—so close—and I'm not in touch with the Christ. I don't know his name, and I want to know it so much, and I want to be a part of it.

ANSWER: Or, or, or her name.

QUESTION: Or her, he or she. And I want that so much, and I'm trying not to be so willful. If you could help me and us with that I'd be so grateful.

ANSWER: You know the principle of homeopathy? The more attenuated a drug, in other words, the less of it that is present, the more potent its meaning or intent is. I'm not saying that is a true principle, but that is the principle of Homeopathy.

Now I will tell you a way in which that principle is true. When you really want something, when the desire is very strong, express the desire in a whisper. Express the desire with the greatest amount of gentleness that you can. You could say that the desire is most potent when it is said the most softly, because there is the least amount of strong-arming present. You cannot speak forcefully in a real whisper. You cannot speak forcefully and gently at the same time.

For those of you who watched the film of Mother Theresa last night, you saw this little tiny woman speak most softly but firmly. She expected to see a cease fire—there was a cease fire. She didn't go up and down the streets to the troops and say, "stop it!" She brought no force to it. When you are speaking gently, it is easy for the meaning of your self-expression to be, "Thy will, not mine be done."

Now, indeed, this is a technique, but it's one that you can grasp and you will find that it will feel good to express your desire without passion. O-o-o-o! Did I say the wrong word? I know the word passion is getting a lot of attention these days, in the sense that somehow as you grow, the meaning of life becomes a more passionate thing for you. And people are trying to once again live their life with passion as they hear that someone in the past used to live it. It's always been hearsay though.

The power is in the peace. The power is in the Presence—not the action—the Presence. And it is not because you have found a way to have a powerful desire that makes things happen. It is because in the peace of the Presence of You is where the Whole of you awaits you as your conscious experience, and it unfolds, you would say it manifests.

That's where you can become confused and think that you are creating something. But what happens is, you might say, as you move into the Peace of the Presence that you Are, and willfulness has been abandoned, the hooks that hold up the veil come lose, and the veil drops. And you say, "Wow! Look what I did!" But it was because you weren't doing anything, that it happened. Because you weren't doing anything as an author, or as an authority.

You want the veil to be lifted? Then be the Peace and the Presence that you Are. And let your desires be expressed ever so gently, ever so softly. You know what? You can whisper it, and then you can say it in your mind, without your lips, and then you can whisper it in your mind. You can get it real soft. And what do you do after you have expressed the desire? You let it in.

I've said before, but there are many of you who have not heard it, and you need to hear it. That every desire includes within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment. And it has been said that desire is prayer. And I have described desire like a sidecar to a motorcycle that is not attached to a motorcycle.

And I have said abide with the desire. And today I am saying abide with the desire gently, quietly. And if you can imagine abiding with the desire to mean sitting in this sidecar, which has no steering wheel, no brake, no accelerator. If you abide with the desire, then, because every desire includes within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment, you will find yourself at the destination of this sidecar, because you let the desire carry you to that point in which it is fulfilled.

Again, you can see that control and authority have nothing to do with the fulfillment of desire. So give up the idea that you can think yourself into your fulfillment, or that you can use your mind to create fulfillment. You use your mind long enough to whisper the desire once, and then abide with it, and give permission for it. And then watch the miracles happen. That's the end of the answer.

PAUL: During the break, I was mentioning to someone that from where I sit, so to speak, in this togetherness that's occurring, there's an entirely different feel with this group than I've ever experienced with any other that we've ever done. And the only way I can put it was, it is as though Raj knows that everyone is really hearing what he's saying.

Now here we talk about awkward verbalizing, what you find yourself knowing. Another way I could put it, is like perhaps communion, rather than communication is really happening. Another feeling I have that's right along with it, the way it feels it's like, this is going nowhere. In other words, we're not getting from point "A" to point "B", but we're Being it somehow.

This has a very different feeling from any other group that we've done, it's a very different that I'm expressing. It's like nothing is being accomplished, because it's like in the instant it's done. Do you understand what I mean?

So I am sharing with you what I'm experiencing in this dynamic. And there are two people who I have not prearranged this with, who are going to be surprised, who I'm going to ask to start out sharing what they have been experiencing. And the first one is David. And I'm specifically referring to what you were sharing out in the hall, plus anything else you do want to share.

DAVID: I knew this was going to happen. It's getting very timeless isn't it?

Well, it was pretty simple. I remarked to Paul this morning that it was as if in my experience everything that had come up for me in coming here was already taken care of.

I noticed that with what we were talking about, changing the format yesterday, I walked around and listened to lots of feelings that people were having. And this morning I watched Raj through Paul weave all of those things together seamlessly. And the image for me was like a master carpet maker who starts off with all this wool, and you watch this pattern emerge, and the pattern includes all of the colors. But it brings order to it in a way that you kind of suspected there was order there, but you had no idea the order was so inclusive—that everything that seemed so fragmented was a part of that whole. And when the wholeness came, it was this carpet that was complete.

And then the other thing, the thing that I just remarked to Paul about ten minutes ago, was that for me there was a sense that's different. It's very subtle. But it's very different for me.

It's as if my reliance on sensations, or sensuality, or eyes and ears and touch and the feeling of the environment has changed in this room somehow. And that what Raj is speaking is, coming somehow from the inside. And I'm feeling as if there is a stereo speaker here, and that's the left, and this is the right, or something. And I'm hearing it this way so that even in the breaks when we sit quiet, when we come back from breaks there's instruction that's given that's fine tuning my attention, to get me to be in the position to be aligned with the next thing that's about to happen so that I'm not sort of wavering.

So I don't know whether I expressed it. But it's very different than anything I've ever felt in a group before, and certainly a group this big.

PAUL: Thank you. And the other one is up here in the second row. Yes, you.

SHARING: You've heard the expression, "God'll get you?"

PAUL: I would like you to share what was the realization that was occurring while you were talking about the tendency... how you were listening and making it complex. Okay.

SHARING: Well, it was just that I was trying to listen so intently so that I would incorporate every word. And I found when I was writing a sentence, I missed the last five sentences. And when I would reread, all of a sudden I didn't know what the word "permission" meant, or "letting go" meant. Help, I don't know if this is what you want me to be saying?

PAUL: Yes, yes. The feeling was that you had found yourself listening so hard, that the words were escaping you.

SHARING: Yes, yes, yea, yea. And it's like in the bottom line I know, "keep it simple Eddie, keep it simple." And I've been trying so hard to keep it simple, that I've been missing it.

PAUL: These are the kind of things that Raj wants you to share if you've noticed something that's been happening with you, either in your process of listening, like obviously, the implication is, that she's not going to listen as hard now. And that's very important.

So does anyone else have anything they would... okay right here... And I just want to say, if you think it sounds stupid, anybody, if you think the thing sounds foolish to even say out loud—forget it. Everybody is likely to be able to relate to anything you say and it's likely to promote... it will be beneficial, that's the best way I can put it.

SHARING: Two things that I just observed over the past couple of days is that with the messages that I've been hearing about giving up control, it just pointed out that all the questions I have, have been how to control. And therefore, questions have become totally meaningless. Because I'm just going to sit here and ask how to control something, or how better to control something. And the answer is, don't! And so that shot down the whole list...

I'm standing here saying, "okay, I know the answer to that one. I just let go! And I know the answer to that one. Just let go!" So there.

And the other thing was that I noticed a lot of unexpected things have been happening. Encounters with people have been happening that I could never have predicted. Just because I'm kind of being very comfortable in being myself, in being something connected with something, and not being very self-conscious at all.

And I found myself having some conversations that have been absolutely, satisfying isn't the word, absolutely meaningful. And not really intending to have a meaningful conversation, or not really intending to or trying or anything, just kind of being somewhere and someone shows up. And it might even be someone that I would never have expected to have a conversation with, and starting into a conversation and all of a sudden this person saying, “Oh, thank you.” And I say, “what did I do?” And so that’s just two things that I noticed.

SHARING: Strange occurrence’s. In St. David’s, Pennsylvania, when Raj appeared, only having three hours sleep the night before I attended the session. And that day I was completely energized. I was not called upon to have my question answered, but that wasn’t necessary, because I was getting the answer within as Raj was talking about something else. And both answers were filtering through at the same time. So you could just imagine the high I was on and the energy I was feeling and expressing.

Here I can’t keep my head up. I seem to have enough sleep, and everything seems to go very well during the day and talking to others, but as soon as Raj starts to express himself my head seems to droop all the way down.

But along with that, something else is occurring—all thought stops. There is no thought that enters in at all. I mean the mind is completely empty. As an example of this, after the session was done this morning and we went in for lunch—I always get there first, I guess I’m the hungriest—I sat down at the table and I said to myself, “okay, what are you going to think about,” because my mind was completely blank. I mean like I would really like to know what’s going on.

SHARING: In another conversation around a meal, someone was saying that even though all these things that we’re hearing from Raj are extremely meaningful and helpful, what’s so important is not the words at all—it’s that sense of presencing. When I heard this woman who spoke last say, “I’m nodding off and I don’t have any thoughts,” well she is experiencing the Presence. And I guess, and I’m taking illuminous notes back here, but the most important thing for me that I’m sensing is the presencing that we’re experiencing with each other, and when it is focused here with Raj.

SHARING: I’ve been sitting here trying to figure out what the difference was. And maybe I can say it now that I’ve heard a few other people. When I was in the Kauai workshop, and you may remember, my question had to do with how separate I felt from everyone.

PAUL: You had the six part question, right?

QUESTION: Yea, right. And so I was sitting here this morning (or something, I don’t know) realizing that there was none of that here. And even in a Raj workshop, where I recognize that everybody is my friend and everything, I always have this sense of—it takes a long time, and sometimes I don’t even make that—to feel really one with everybody. And I have experienced feeling like everybody’s my family here. It’s incredible! But I didn’t have words for it until I started hearing a few other people speaking. And it’s really kind of mind blowing.

The other thing was that, when Raj is speaking... One thing that’s been going on with me is that: I’ve been having a lot of problems, because I have been getting to a place where I feel that my guide and I and the Holy Spirit and Raj, we're all One. In fact, I've had a couple of experiences that kind of confirmed that. So then I start telling myself I can't except that, because there's an ego fear in all this stuff.

But everything that was happening that Raj was saying, I kept... "Oh yea, I know that, I've known that for a long time." But it wasn't knowing it as thinking, it was feeling it in my body and I couldn't deny it anymore. It was like it was somehow a warp and woof kind of thing with me.

So then I realized, okay I guess the next thing is, I just got to keep telling myself that "I do know, I do know, I do know, I don't have to question it anymore." And all this stuff just flows by, like a river. I don't know what's going to happen next, but I feel wonderful. And I feel like you're all my friends. It's a lovely feeling.

SHARING: I don't know if I can put this into words, but I think it's important to try. Well, simply said, I guess it's the feeling that this whole business of waking up was something that I did put in the future before, something to reach for. And I'm scared because I feel like it's right here in front of me. It's something that's not safely in the distance anymore. (Laughter)

SHARING: I just want to thank you, Raj, for the wonderful creative way that you have of getting us out of our egos and out of our heads. And as one master to another, I want to thank you. And that's not coming from my ego, that's coming from a sense of joy and love for you.

Also I want to say that just as an example of the words that you use, like "abandonment" and "sacrifice," words that are very negative, you use them in a very positive sense, in a polarity sense that makes a person let go. You cannot stay in your ego when you're talking about words like this that have powerful meaning, and they mean the opposite. And you think, "Oh, my god, I can't keep up with this." And then you just let go, and you get it. And that is what I just want to acknowledge and appreciate here.

I've had to drop every agenda I've had. I get'em, I build'em, my computer goes into action. And as I walk toward a person my agenda is dropped, and I can just see that person. And that is such a gift. And I want to say thank you ALL for being me. And there was something else I had to be grateful for, but it's not coming so it isn't important.

And always in the past my ego has been worried that I wouldn't get my fair share. I've never really experienced that in here with your group. But my ego is really in a "Hah!" And it's wonderful to know that it's my biggest fear. And it's wonderful to have these things being revealed to me, even as I'm speaking right now. And so there is no way that I'm in any kind of time-warp, I'm just here and there is no time. And it is okay. And I don't know what all that means, but...

Does that mean anything at all, what I just said? A lot of people are shaking their heads! Anyway, thank you.

SHARING: Hi. I just wanted to share with you guys. One of the things that I know, for want of a better word, the gift of tears. And I'm probably going to be doing it right now pretty soon, because ever since I've been here, I sit down (I don't even put make-up under my eyes anymore) and the tears just go down. And what I came to understand is that's the presence. but I do and I finally owned it and I've been crying. And this morning was incredible, oh I had three handkerchiefs, I only had two handkerchiefs and there's a lot more time to go. It's real! I mean, it's from my soul and it's just my soul witnessing what's happened. And we're beautiful. Thank you.

SHARING: I really don't know what to say. Although I feel extremely grateful standing here in my feet. When I came in here and we established a routine for questions and answers, and after yesterday morning I sat here, and I really lost track of what I wanted to say. And I kept on hearing for my self that I already knew all of the answers, that's what I keep on hearing, over and over and over. And I feel like right now my trying to formulate any questions is just depriving me of my experience, period. And so my sense right now is what I felt in the day that I've been here absolute and complete unconditional love. I can't describe the feeling, I just can't do it. It just is.

So my sense is that I feel to be part of the group, that I have to ask a question, but I feel that it's really defeating the process for me. This is me, and that's what this is all about—to claim my Birthright here.

Earlier, right before the break you were talking about ego being our biggest drug, and I thought “well, hey this is a new group, this is “ego anonymous.” Thank you, I love everybody here.

PAUL: You just triggered something for me, that I've wondered, the fact that I ask Raj a question, and then I listen to him answer suggests that or seems to give me the experience that I am different from Raj, and I'm the unenlightened one. I'm the one that does not know, and he's the one that does know.

And I need to tell you that earlier on he did tell me that I could ask my Self, with a capital “S”, the same questions and get the answers. And I did that only once. Actually, I just simply addressed my Self at the moment by saying, “I'm really upset.” And the response was, “I'm not.” And it wasn't Raj talking. And there was a definite difference, because I knew that was Me—that's the only way I could put it. But it scared me, and I haven't done it again—that's ten years I haven't done it.

Now what I started to say is, that even if I was asking my Self and getting the answer, I would seem to be split—the ignorant me and the All Knowing me. And Raj said that I would finally arrive at a point where I would just neglect to ask the question, and then I would become the answer. And then the apparent split of me into a questioner and the omnipotent knower, or whatever you want to call it, that seeming split would disappear and that would be the real integration.

So anyway, when you were saying that, I was reminded and I just wanted to share it.

SHARING: I just wanted to ask Raj, if He came here by himself, or did he bring his massage team along? Because I feel like that's what's happening. Like this room is filled with angels?

PAUL/ANSWER: He says I am not alone. You would be amazed at how full this room is.

PAUL: That was for me an interesting experience, because that was him talking, but he had me keep my eyes open. So that was interesting.

SHARING: I feel a little upset now. And it must be just the ego pulling at me. But I've been listening to what everybody says. And at lunch time I had shared with someone that I was in a discussion with, that over the years, the workshops that I've gone to...it's been "Oh, wow," and "I've got to get every word, rah, rah, rah!" And I thought maybe I was just getting tired or something.

PAUL: Like tired of Raj?

SHARING: No, tired. I came to the workshop tired. I mean, usually after a workshop I'm exhausted. So I'm kind of staying tired. But anyway, I thought maybe it's that, but maybe I feel a little upset now because it's all of a sudden I'm kind of scared to let go of it.

But I was sitting here before the lunch break and it just occurred to me that it wasn't boring, and I didn't want to be any place else, but that it was no big deal. And I've heard other people kind of...I'm seeing now that it's going around. I mean I'm still taking some notes. Not that everything Raj says I've heard before, it's just familiar. But that's the only way I've felt. It's just no big deal, it's just no big deal anymore.

PAUL: Does that mean that it's not meaningful?

SHARING: No. No, I just remarked to somebody that isn't it interesting, it's like Raj is saying all these profound things but they don't sound profound. They just sound really normal, and like he's supposed to be saying it, and I'm supposed to hear it and I understand. Do you know what I mean? I'm not bored. And this other persons says at other workshops it's like, "Oh wow, Raj is going to speak." And I'm having trouble even getting a question, if I get a question what it's going to be. No big deal.

PAUL: He made somewhere along the line the remark that "being divine is as normal as apple pie."

SHARING: That's why maybe it's the ego that thinks it's such a big deal. And maybe it's supposed to just feel very ordinary and comfortable and familiar...

PAUL: One other word I didn't use to convey my experience of this workshop this far is that it is very smooth, like a pudding or a mousse. It doesn't have peaks and valleys, it doesn't have rough spots. The energy is so smooth, and yet it is an absolutely wonderful feeling, but it's not exciting.

SHARING: It is not exciting. And I'm wondering just now, does that mean that we may not have to keep doing this over and over again? Because when Raj had said to this person over hear that there's not a fear of once one Awakens of getting entrapped again, because it becomes uninteresting. My first reaction which I almost had to close my mouth, was I've been feeling that for awhile. I mean not that I don't want to do what I have to do while I'm here. But if I could leave this moment I would. I would just okay, I'll go to the light. That I just had this really strong feeling that I just don't ever want to have to do it again. And is that a negative feeling I'm feeling?

PAUL/ANSWER: He says absolutely not. The more normal this begins to feel to you the less spontaneous resistance you will bring to having the experience. It is the equivalent to giving permission. That which is normal is easy, and you don't make hard work out of being normal. This is excellent.

SHARING: But does that mean that we're not going to have to keep doing this over and over again? I mean are we getting any closer here?

ANSWER: Indeed. Indeed, yes.

SHARING: When I first heard that Raj was coming to this area, way back last spring or winter, I started thinking of questions, because I always seem to have a lot of questions. And I started writing them down, so I'd get them just the way I wanted, to learn what I wanted to learn. And I discovered when I was driving here the other day, that my guidance had pulled a very slick maneuver on me, and had me leave all the questions on my desk.

And one of the nice things about being hear is that I haven't missed them a bit. For one of the few times in my life I've been perfectly happy just to sit there and hear all the questions, and hear the answers and let them all roll around in my brain, without having to inject myself.

The other strong feeling that I have is, occasionally I lead a workshop, (it's A Course In Miracles workshop) and I like to ask people in the beginning to put down on a piece of paper what they hope to get from their study or involvement in A Course In Miracles. And they never have to turn them in or anything, it's just they write it down and put it in their pocket, and it kind of guides them during the workshop. And I always do the same thing too. And the first time I did it, I found that what I wrote down was, "I want to go Home. That's all I want, I want to go Home."

And the nice thing about today is I feel I'm on the train, it's moving out of the station, and I'm going Home and I have a lot of wonderful people who are going with me. Thank you.

SHARING: For me this has felt remarkably right on, that every answer speaks to me personally. And last night when the women suggested that we have a different format, my initial response was, “Oh no, I don’t want to hear from these people, I only want to hear from Raj.” And then after Susan said the wonderful thing she said, I changed my mind, “Wow, there may be some really great experiences available if we were to request them.”

And that got me in touch with thinking about what I want. And I’ve got just a wonderful list of wants. And then I came in here this morning, and you blow away all my wants, you know, I can’t have wants in my relationship with the Holy Spirit, it gets in the way. And then I come with these big wants and I have them and they are things like healing.

I understand what I have heard on an intellectual level, I’m not sure I’ve got it in my soul, but I feel close to that. And that maybe the rest of you are falling asleep because you didn’t need this, but I need this. This looks like exactly what I need.

PAUL: That reminds me of this feeling that seems present, that Raj knows that he is connecting with every single person here. It’s like even if you think you’re just close, from his vantage point, it’s like watching through his eyes, it’s like the connection is happening. Communication is giving way to communion. That’s the feel, and that’s what’s so very different, as I’m experiencing it in this gathering.

SHARING: Two things that I wanted to say. One was when David said that you heard Raj inside, I didn’t want to say that, because I was afraid it was my ego. But am I hearing you. I think I am.

ANSWER: Indeed, you are.

SHARING: I don’t know why I am crying.

ANSWER: It is joy.

SHARING: The shaking too?

ANSWER: It is release of tightness, tension, defensiveness.

SHARING: The other strange thing that happened to me, it was in the morning break (I shouldn’t say the other strange things, because the first thing wasn’t strange) I walked outside, because I found myself with no one standing in front of me—when someone’s in front of me I felt a need to go and talk with people and have wonderful experiences—but I went outside and I found my car in front of me. And I had this wonderful experience with my car. This may sound silly, but my car has been my car for ten years, and it’s locked and I don’t have the key—I mean, my key’s in my room, I didn’t have the key with me. And I went over to the car and put my hands on the window and I looked in, and I saw, like what I’ve been for the last ten years.

And it was such a wonderful experience. But somehow I feel I was away from who I was down here, looking in and loving what I saw, and just this wonderful different feeling that I’m having. And I just want to say thank you, because I know it’s part of everyone here that’s making this happen, and part of what I've been experiencing. And I told my husband—he was really nervous about my coming here—I said, “well, I may come home with a halo.” But then I trust that, well no, I'm coming to listen, and the questions, but the way this is evolving, its changing and it's wonderful, thank you.

MIGUEL: About two months ago, I woke up in the morning and he said to me (I lead an organized Course In Miracles study group) and he said, “Miguel, you always say it's so easy and so simple, but no matter how simple and how easy you say it is you'll always be wrong, because it's far, far simpler than that.” And he said, “When you finally get to the highest rung of this ladder of simplicity, you will still be far short of how simple it is.” And I have been sharing this with people, my friends.

And of course, I accept everything he says, and I believe it. But today, I mean here, since I came here I've been actually experiencing it. How simple...Oh, everyone has shared here, and how natural it is for us to be divine. We have the divine perspective all the time, that it is absolutely natural.

And through some encounters which I'm so grateful for, I'm beginning to feel like all the others...just gratitude. In fact, for a long time now all my other emotions have been replaced by gratitude. The only feeling that has been left is gratitude towards others.

But now even gratitude seems to be inadequate. And I don't know what I feel even, so I just sort of coming down and calling it gratitude. So I just want to say to everyone, I just want to say thank you for what all of us are together. Thank you.

SHARING: Hi, my name is Fran, and I'm glad to be here. I came here a question that I beat myself up over all week, or I mean for two days, well all last week before I came here thinking how stupid my question is.

My father died when I was three, and all my life I've never allowed myself to mourn it. And recently in therapy I started to let myself mourn this. And for some reason I haven't been able to completely let go of it. So I met this wonderful woman here, in the rooms the other day. And she talked to me a little bit, and I got in touch with my anger. And she says, “You're very angry.” And she suggested we could go outside and I could scream. Well, we never got around to going outside.

So today we walked outside, and it had nothing to do with working out my issues, we just wanted to get some fresh air. And then we walked and we enjoyed the beauty and we walked and we came back in, and then it dawned on me, “Oh, I was outside, I could have done my screaming.” And she said something about my rage. And I said, “What rage?” I don't know, the question seems irrelevant. I wanted to ask why he died. It just is gone. And I just feel like, “what rage?” I feel like I've been flying high today, all day, and I even forgot about all that crap.

And my new fear and my new question is (I just made up, by the way): When we all get together at the end of this week to go home, and we're streaming out of this hotel, is there going to be a whole big gang of egos waiting there to beat us up? Thank you.

PAUL/ANSWER: He says, "Only if you see them."

SHARING: I guess I wanted to take this opportunity, I didn't realize until today that I was so angry at Raj. And you're all probably think, "Oh my God, you can't be mad at Raj."

PAUL: Oh, I know you can.

SHARING: And I suppressed it, and I suppressed it. It's just for all the folks from my Miracles group, this has been a really bad year. And you know how God always says, "He doesn't give you anything more than He doesn't think you can handle?" Well, you are pushing your luck, Raj. By March I really thought he was pushing his luck, and I kept thinking, "I can't do this, I can't." And I tried to keep a positive attitude, I kept thinking, "Okay, my mom had a stroke, but it could have been so much worse."

And then we moved her to a rehab, and that day, (I was back and forth to New Jersey, I live in New Hampshire) and my younger sister and my grandmother were in this really bad car accident. And it seemed that at the time that the car accident occurred the visiting minister was praying with my mother and my father at the rehab hospital, saying, "pray for the family." Now we figured it out, it had to be almost the exact same time as the car accident, because Lisa really should have died.

And by the Spring, again it was like my mother was in for chest pain, my grandmother was in for...they found during the car accident...again I kept saying, "Well, if this didn't happen then they wouldn't have found out that my grandmother had an aneurysm." So they were able to fix that. And Lisa was fine. So by the Spring when my mother went back in with chest pains, and I'm praying to God all the time. And I started saying, "Thy Will, whatever Thy Will..." But it's like, "do Thy Will, but make sure it's not going to be too hard for me, because I can't handle too much more."

And then by the Springtime I wind up in the hospital in(?) which is was time ever in the hospital that I remember. As the girl was saying about her car, I remember sitting there praying, I was up in the corner and I'm looking down, I'm thinking, "You've really got yourself in a mess this time Chris. They're doing this, and this, and this to you." And I kept saying, "Please God, please." And I'm thinking, "It's a little too late now." And I thought, "Well, He's not listening anymore."

And today when you said that you loved us, you didn't say, "I love you all, except you Chris." Because I thought for sure you'd know how mad I was and you'd get back at me one more time. But I realized...I just kept thinking...my ego said, “See, you can’t do this. You can’t do this, you can’t handle this, and this is the God that you love so much.” And I’ve been really torn, and I didn’t realize how torn I was until today when you said how much you loved us.

And I’ve been in such a negative place lately, and I needed the slowness of your cadence. The way you speak and answer the questions because the first day or two I was thinking, “Come on hurry up and answer.” And then you’d take your time and people would take their time to answer the question. “Like, come on, hurry up. I need to know the answer to all these...”

So I just want to say, thanks Paul, thanks Raj, thanks everybody. And I guess God does know better, I guess you didn’t give anybody more than they didn’t think they could handle. But you almost pushed your luck in March, Raj. So I’m really glad for this workshop, because I knew that I would find some peace here. And I’m glad I found it Monday instead of waiting until Thursday. Because I sure thought I was going to have to wait until Thursday. Thanks again.

PAUL: Thank you. Anyone else?

SHARING: Every time I have a wonderful meditation it’s always to the theme of one of the children’s stories, like “Wizard of Oz” or “Snow White.” And someone talked about ascension and the image came that we’d all be like Mary Poppins with or without the umbrella popping in and out. Is that the way it is to be ascended? If you want to be?

PAUL: That’s me, Paul, laughing. I just can’t imagine myself in a skirt.

SHARING: I have one I can lend you. We can save you a lot...

PAUL: He says he would like you or someone to ask a question about ascension when we’re in a...

QUESTION: I would like to know can you explain so I understand what it is to be an ascended being? I saw myself as a Mary Poppins, when I can choose pop out being a spirit, pop in being a human. And I wasn’t happy and I come and sing a little song like Mary Poppins. Is that the way it is? Yea, that’s a question I thought.

ANSWER: I will only say this much at this point: Ascension will be what you will call the translation of your body of matter into the Body of Light. It will not involve lifting up into the sky. But what you might say, dissolving into the substance of capital “L” Love, which is Light. That doesn’t mean you’re going anywhere.

And at that moment, you will find to your perception, even if others have not yet ascended or Awakened, that you will see everyone else and everything else in or as it’s Body of Light. And love, that is it’s substance, will be recognizable to you as the love that is your substance.

And so, no, you will not pop in and out. You will be on a new basis, right here. But you will also be able to, “pop out,” teleport, whatever you want to call it, by the simple redirection of your attention to any other place. And it will be obvious to you as an experience that you have been in the Kingdom of Heaven all along. That's all that I will say at this moment.

SHARING: I don't know exactly how to say this, but I'm in a lot of turmoil, and I know I'm not the only one here. And my ego's having a real hard time. So in a way I feel like maybe I'm not experiencing this the way many of you are. I guess this is still "Raj 101" for me. And I'm grappling with taking in all this information and letting my ego benefit from it. And I'm glad we still have a few days left so I have more time to get there. I want it to happen soon. I'm tired of fighting.

ANSWER: I want you to know that if you will stop grasping for control, if you will let go, even though it feels like you will collapse in a heap, you will have the opportunity to find out that you are upheld. Not just in the love that is part of the unity of this group of which you are a part, but as I said earlier, this sphere of a thin shell of ego structures that makes the you that is inside of it feel small and in danger is embraced immediately on the other side of this thin shell of ego structures by You in your Infiniteness.

You know it's like a fraction of an inch that you will fall if you let go, a minuscule drop before you feel the integrity and substance and safety of You, right here, without ascending. It is safe for you to let go. And you will not go crazy.

I will tell you something else: Everyone feels as though they will go crazy if they let go of the last vestiges of control. But you know what? That's when you find out there is a God. Then you find out why you didn't have to hold yourself up all along. That's when you find out that you never were responsible for your life.

Do you know that Paul had to live nine months without employment and find out that he was taken care of, that his every need was met. I'm saying, it took nine months for him to get the idea that he wasn't personally responsible for his life and that there really was a God, even though he said he believed there was a God all his life. But he never would turn over responsibility for himself to God. And if he had been unemployed for a month and managed to survive, he would have said it was wonderful to see how his needs were met between the time when he was responsible for his life, and the time that he resumed being responsible for his life.

In other words, what he's saying is that it took nine months for him to realize that day by day the manna fell, and he hadn't been responsible for it, and he hadn't been responsible for it for so long that it couldn't have been a fluke that he was taken care of.

Now not everyone is as hard headed as Paul—was. And I encourage you to dare to let go. You are in a safe environment, humanly speaking here. But you are also in a safe environment, because you know what? You can't get outside of your very Being, and it is utterly divine. You can't become lost, because all there is is You, and you are Infinite.

I'm not using the word infinite in a grand sense. I'm meaning it in the sense that that which is infinite is immovable, it's substantial, it's safe. What can affect that which is infinite? What can there be outside of infinity to affect infinity? That's why you're safe. And the tiny sense of self that is fearful and feels a great need for self-control is a farce, a little network of nonsense that seems most real. It seems to be your very identity.

I will tell you something: Your ego is cracking up—cracking up, which your ego tells you is you going crazy. But really what it is, is the cracking up of a seeming you that seems to have a great deal of integrity, because you have such a monumental structure and complicated structure of ideas and beliefs about yourself that make it seem that there is a great deal of rigidity to you. I mean by that, that there is to your presence, that which cannot easily be broken apart. This is what is cracking up: the seeming integrity of the complexity of your beliefs about yourself are not being able to hold themselves together. And this is wonderful.

I encourage you again to let it fall apart. I encourage you to let go. Because as this sort of fabulous deck of cards of ego beliefs falls, it stops blocking you from experiencing the you that you really Are. You have the opportunity to do this and find yourself and be able to make the gift of this self to everyone else in the group with tears of joy.

Again, you are safe. If you will stop trying to solve the problem and give up, fail at solving the problem and coming to an understanding of it, you may feel utterly foolish and unwise, but you will find that in the absence of energizing the problem by trying to solve it it will itself dissolve and you will be left standing clear of the mask or overlay that that problem has put on you.

Again, you are safe. Again, in the unity of this group there is a unity of love in which you are inescapably embraced, besides being embraced in the Infinite presence of You that is utterly stable, secure, grounded and unchangeable.

I am very pleased that you have shared yourself with everyone else. You have let them in. That means that you are not alone, and you are being what we have been talking about. It is a gift that you have already given everyone else, and it is a gift that you have given yourself, because it is very scary when you hold yourself apart and alone. And it is very nurturing and secure when you let others in, and abandon your self-imposed isolation.

The healing of this problem is already accomplished. If it seems to come to view in slow-motion, rather than instantaneously, don't fret about it. Just let it unfold. Just let it emerge. You are beautiful.

This day has been perfect. Paul's sense of justice is not congruent with what is appropriate. There is a wholeness and a completeness today at this time. And where he wanted to insure that you were not short-changed and run over fifteen minutes. We will not beat a dead horse, or improve upon a perfect day by extending it unnecessarily when it is full already. I look forward to being with you again in this matter tomorrow morning at 9:30.

(Barbara, this also was transcribed by Paul, in a newsletter. So if you feel you want to make any changes, go right ahead.)

QUESTION: I didn't have a question yesterday. I saw so much miracles work. Today I do have a question. If you do not ask, you cannot receive. My question is: Raj, I love you. You have healed so many people. Would you please heal my ambulatory problem?

I know, "physician, heal thyself." You have to heal yourself. It's been working. It's been happening. But, I'd like the gracious, easy, strong ability to walk. That's my question.

ANSWER: That is your desire.

QUESTION: That is my desire.

ANSWER: We will experience the healing.

"Physician, heal thyself."

We must be careful. The word "physician" implies someone educated. The statement suggests that the healing is to be accomplished without outside help, doesn't it? Well, I will tell you something: Anything that any of you need to be healed of is a result of having claimed a separate self-sufficient standpoint from which to operate. And the solution to it comes through joining.

I used the phrase, yesterday, "desire is prayer." It's very important for you to understand that it's not enough just to sit there and feel a "want." When you express or feel a desire, do not let it be a private expression of "want." Desire it of something! That is why I have said, desire it of the Holy Spirit, or desire it of the Father, or desire it of me. Why? Because that is the way you break your isolation. That is the way you break the very thing that creates your sense of limited presence, of finiteness, tininess, et cetera.

Then, as I said—as with any desire—feel the desire, abide with it, give it permission to fulfill itself, and understand that you do not need to bring any intensity into the process in order to energize the desire. Every desire includes within itself everything necessary—not coming from you, not coming from the intensity that you bring to your desire—every desire includes within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment.

Now I'm going to touch on something else that we did not go into yesterday about desire, and that is that it is very important for you to dare to become still, to go within into the quietness of your being in order to find out what you desire, because when you feel the movement of your Being, it becomes easy to flow with. It becomes easy to flow with the movement of fulfillment that is already the movement of your Being. And when you feel that movement, and you feel the fact that it is yours, you naturally have the experience that you would call "desire for it."

You desire healing. This is excellent! It is your birthright not to be experiencing any limitation, whether it is mental or physical. So, feel the desire that you have expressed. Desire it, as you have in this case, of me, or of the Holy Spirit, so that you invite someone else into the healing process. That's the way you break the shell of your isolation. Then let the Holy Spirit, let the movement of your essential Being, uncover the perfection of you to you in form.

I'm going to tell you something: Healing is never a matter of coming to a point of peace with your problem, where it no longer distresses you but it's still there. That is not healing! Healing is the manifestation of obvious perfection...plain, pure, and simple! And that is your birthright.

So, what does the educated one—the physician—do to heal himself? He asks for help! He is educated enough to know that the problem is a self-imposed illegitimate sense of isolation, no matter what the specific form seems to be, and he breaks that false impositional sense of isolation by joining, by desiring of something flawless to have help.

The Course says that when you do this, the Holy Spirit turns to your advantage whatever your circumstance is that has been distressing. Now, why? Well, it's not a special favor to you. It's because in the act of joining, in that act of breaking this artificial imaginary sense of isolation, the Wholeness that has been the thing going on really all the time, can become obvious to you because you are no longer engaging in the act of insistence upon being alone which causes you to become oblivious to the Wholeness and perfection of you. That's why.

Healing is inevitable, just as waking up is inevitable. The conscious experience of the Allness of God is your inevitable "destination," if I may put it that way, because you cannot successfully imagine otherwise forever. So, we will experience the healing.

The questions come, "Just how much of a part do you play in this? What should you do every day? Should you think about this all the time? What do you have to do?"

Well, I'm going to make it very simple. Feel the desire, and turn the manifestation of it over to the Holy Spirit. Don't take on any aspect of the healing yourself, except in properly placing your attention in the act of joining, in the act of consciously "being with" the Father, the Holy Spirit, me—being aware that at all times during every day it's always us and never just you-battling-the-odds.

Hate is the defensive wall one builds in the act of isolating oneself. The act of joining is the act of Love. It has been said that "love is the royal way," and we talked about royalty the other day. Don't think of royalty in terms of queens and kings of countries. Think of royalty in the way that you do about "royal blue," or the deep purple velvet of royal robes, regardless of who those robes hang on. It's the feel of the richness of the texture of Being—your Being, the Being of God.

Love heals because in its presence the sense of separateness and isolation cannot stand. You cannot love nothing! If you are loving, you are loving something, which means you are not alone.

I have said before that love is “letting in.” Many of you are familiar with the saying, “Love is letting go of fear.” Another way of putting that is: “Love is letting in!” In the absence of fear there is no defense, nothing blocking your receipt of all of Yourself.

I encourage all of you to start paying attention to simple words like friendship, warmth, innocence, purity. None of you can even spontaneously think of a way to describe “complicated innocence.” These things which you call values—simple human values—are really things that describe the fundamental nature of being.

Everyone tries to learn psychological processes which they can use in order to relate successfully with each other. You go and take courses on learning how to fight in a partnership where both of you come out in a “win/win” situation. But, if you would instead explore the meaning, the feeling, the texture of friendship, and forget about these skills that you can get, you would cut through your problems faster.

You make the essence of living so complicated that it becomes almost impossible to easily do this truly unavoidable thing called living. You make it difficult to do something which, if you weren’t doing anything at all, would be happening anyway.

Do you know what? It is a point of wisdom to realize that any problem you are experiencing, you have created. But remember that yesterday I said, “the only thing you can truly create is misunderstanding!” This means that every single problem you have is nothing more than a misunderstanding. My point is that every single problem, whether it is diagnosed as cancer, or a mobility problem, or a relationship problem, or an injury—it doesn’t matter how it appears—is always the manifestation, or the visibility and tangibility, of a misunderstanding.

Misunderstandings aren’t hard to deal with because they are not objects. They are not fixed. They are not like concrete. Every one of you changes your mind many times a day. You start out to go to the bathroom and on the way you see something that needs to be done, and you do it! You can change your mind.

One of the lessons in the Course—and I bring these up not to promote the Course, but to express the truth of the idea—one of the lessons says, “There is another way to look at this.” You can change your mind. The way you see it, the way you are convinced it is, is never the only way to look at it. And so, if there is a misunderstanding, there is a way to change your mind, and the first step is to say or acknowledge, in whatever words come to you, “There is another way to look at this.”

In fact, there was a wonderful word used in the sixties: serendipity. It means, “the discovery of that for which you were not looking.” Not only can there be another way to look at it, you can have that other way of looking at it dawn on you even when you aren’t looking for it if you are not absolutely intent upon seeing something in an absolutely fixed way.

You do not have to look at your body in the absolutely fixed way that you have for sometime, with some degree of doubt as to whether you could actually experience a healing, even though intellectually and with some feeling you believe that you can. How about a serendipitous healing? One that happens when you aren’t expecting it?

There IS another way to look at this. There is another way to experience your body. And, do you know what? It’s not dependent upon tissues and cells acting according to some physical process, because what you see as the physical manifestation of a limitation is not what it is. It is a misunderstanding that has been accepted as “understanding”—something illusory that has been accepted as “real.” It’s a misunderstanding, and you can change your mind ...or your mind can be changed.

“Physician, heal thyself”—change your mind!

What’s the best way to change your mind? Well, if you start out with what you think your mind is, which is all memory, all you will be able to change to is another memory, and it will have to be another form of the same old thing.

So, how do you change your mind? You refuse to continue to believe that what you believe is the truth, and you desire to know the truth. You desire to know the truth of something other than your present sense of who and what you are by virtue of your particularly unique arrangement of ignorance’s, beliefs. You say, “Help. Help me know the truth. I join with my higher Self, or I join with the Holy Spirit”—and they’re the same thing—“I join with the Father. I let you in, and I listen for You to illuminate to me What I Am,...my perfection.”

Yesterday someone said, “God will get me for that.” And you hear other people say, “God will get you for that.” What an empty concept of God! What a meaningless concept of God. It’s a concept. It’s not the truth. God has withheld nothing of what He-She is from His-Her Self-expression. And what is God’s Self-expression? It’s not you. The Self-expression of God is God expressed.

I’m making a fine point here. God does not express Himself and end up with a vase that ISN’T God—something “different from the potter,” if you will. God expresses Himself—and, for the sake of brevity, I am not going to keep saying “He/She,” but know that I mean He/She, Father/ Mother. God expresses Himself, and the expression is the extension of God. You could imagine that God, in His Self-expression, became bigger. That Self-expression did not leave God there with something else separate from God which was God’s Self-expression.

God expresses Himself infinitely by means of extension, not separation. That is why it is said that you are created in the image and likeness of God,...because you must be the very presence of God and nothing else.

But, you all believe your eyes. Your five physical senses do not give you an uninterrupted, unbroken experience of the full spectrum of Being, and you take these little partial perceptions of infinity and they suggest to you that you are very small, in the middle of a very big infinity, and you are vulnerable, and you are separate, and you are different from everything else you are experiencing. But, you are the actual presence of Mind. You are the Awareness—what has been called “the observing Self”—in which all experience of conscious awareness is going on.

All of this is going on within you at this very moment. You are that conscious awareness in which all of this is being experienced. So, at this very moment, you have the capacity to grasp that you are Mind and not matter, that you are Mind and not body—and yet body is embraced within you as a conscious experience. “I am not a body. I am free to be as God created me.” (A Course In Miracles: Workbook, page 386.)

God, Self-expressed, must be experiencable, or there would be no such thing as conscious awareness. In order to be conscious, you must be conscious of something, and that’s what is meant when it says, “And God saw everything that He had made, and behold, it was very good.” “And God saw everything that He had made, and behold, it was, verily, God.”

God recognized Himself. But not only that, the recognition feels good because it is the experience of the indivisible integrity of Being.

Now, [sarcastically] isn’t that wonderful? What does that have to do with you? In has everything to do with you. The more you realize that the definition of God is the true definition of you the more you will be able to dare to let go of your limited sense of yourself, and the easier it will be for you to begin to disengage with identifying with the body as the body only. The more you realize that the definition of God is the true definition of you, the easier it will begin to be for you to recognize that you have been biasing your experience of life by identifying with the forms rather than identifying with the conscious awareness that you are, in which the conscious experience of forms is occurring.

You must understand that all the pieces of the puzzle are already on the table—all the pieces of the puzzle that bring Reality into bold relief and clarity. All the pieces of the puzzle are present in your experience at this very moment, and they will come into their truer perspective as you make a shift from identification with the body to identification with and as the conscious awareness—which you have been experiencing all along—in which all experiences of form are occurring.

The more you identify with form—in other words, the more you identify with and as the visibility and tangibility of the movement of the Mind of God—and the less you pay attention to yourself as the conscious awareness in which all of this is going on, the more you lose the experience of Who you Are. Then the forms that you have begun to identify with begin to become more dense—because you are losing your divine perspective. The more dense they become—because you have sacrificed the infinite view which is your Birthright—the more capable those forms seem to become of falling apart, becoming ill, not identifying your freedom. And so, sickness, sin, and death seem to come into play.

You could say that the Fall of Man is the shift from the infinite view—in which the visibility and the tangibility of the movement of Creation or the movement of God is going on—to identification with the visibility and tangibility of the movement of God. You could say that that is the definition of The Fall.

That is the shift from the Fourth-dimensional view to the third-dimensional view. It is in that movement that you begin to experience isolation and separation because you have sacrificed the experience of your unbounded infiniteness. How? By using that unbounded infiniteness to give a focus of attention which doesn't embrace the whole thing.

It is as though all the pieces of the puzzle are on the table and you have taken one from here, and one from here, and one from here, and you've said, "Let me see if I can put these together." And you have given your attention to just those three puzzle pieces, while all the rest of the pieces are there. But you are insistent! "There must be a way for them to fit together! They are part of the divine order of things. They are absolutely divine. Every piece must fit with every other piece. I'm going to make these fit come hell or high water." And hell comes!

This is very important. All of the pieces of the puzzle are always present, whether you are embracing them all or only a few. All of the elements of your divine Sanity are present with you at this very moment, but you are focusing your attention in a very narrow way. You focus it by identifying with form—whether it is your form that isn't functioning well, or whether it is the form of your partner who isn't functioning well, or whether it is the form of your world that doesn't seem to be functioning well.

You are neglecting to pay attention to that aspect of your divinity which is still absolutely present, and which is the conscious awareness that you are. You are still functioning as conscious awareness because without it you would be unconscious. That divinity of you IS functioning, and you are actually utilizing it! The only thing is that you've forgotten to identify with it!

You sit here, and you can turn around and look out the window, and you see the view, and it is beautiful. And you are totally unconscious of the fact that "eyes in your head" are looking. But they're there. You simply are not "paying attention to them," you could say. You take some clay on a potters wheel, or you take the food from your refrigerator, and you make something with it. The attention is on the shape that is taking form on the potters wheel or the dish that you are preparing for dinner. You're not paying any attention to your hands at all, and yet they are busy doing the preparation. Do you see what I mean? The hands are there, but you're not paying attention to them. Not paying attention to them does not get in the way of preparing the meal or throwing the pot.

In the same way, the divine Mind that you are, the infinite presence that you are, is operating, and you're not paying any attention to It. You are paying attention to that which is going on within It, and you are saying that the thing in It is what you are. That's the insanity!

As paradoxical as it may seem, you are "being insane" through the use of your Sanity, because your Sanity hasn't gone anywhere—just as your divinity hasn't gone anywhere. Figuratively speaking, another way of expressing this is, as I have said before: All of you are sitting right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinched up, saying, "I cannot see the perfection."

Right now, as conscious awareness, in which the infinite movement of Creation is occurring as your real Identity, you are saying, "I am one little aspect of this infinity." But, do you know what? You have to be what you divinely Are in order to have that misunderstanding and say, "That's me." Do you see that? That's why it doesn't have to take time to wake up—because your dream isn't going on in some place other than Reality, and your dream isn't creating another place called "Unreality." It's just a bias that you have brought to your process of paying attention. You're saying, "I want to pay attention to these three pieces and make them conform to my concept that because they are divine, they must fit in the way I want them to fit.

Mind you, it doesn't matter that you have this intent. It doesn't matter what the psychological implications are of somebody trying to make something incongruent fit. Your mind doesn't have to be "straightened out" so that you understand what destructive thing there is in you that would make you try to make incongruent things fit together.

Do you know what you could simply do? You could give up, and you could stand up from the table which the puzzle is on and have the opportunity just to discover that the whole puzzle is there, and have the realization that you could just put those pieces where they go.

Everybody is trying to fix themselves up. They're trying to fix up this sense of self which is identifying with body so that they are a better self identifying with body. Do you see what I mean? That's what psychology is all about. That's also what illness is about. I'm still talking about the same question that was asked. It all relates.

Now, the means by which you can easily stand up from the table so that your view takes in more of what is really going on, is the simple act of joining, the simple act of inviting something in, the practice of love. "Love is letting in."

Here is another example of overlooking the obvious. Paul had been speaking with me for fully six months before he had the “revelation” that he was experiencing a demonstration of the fact that there is no death—that he was experiencing it as a fact! Everything that we had been talking about had been so wonderfully important to him that he didn’t realize the obvious—that life is eternal.

Again—and I’m saying it over and over, because even Madison Avenue knows that you must see a commercial six times before you remember it, and that’s why you get a blitz when some new product comes out—the important point is this: All of the pieces of the puzzle are on the table. All of what you divinely are is present and functioning right where you are at this very instant. It’s not off in the future to be attained as a result of spiritual growth. All of the elements, all four dimensions, are functioning at this moment, and you are those four dimensions. You are that conscious awareness of Being—not of being something, but of the verb “be-ing”—you are the conscious experience of being in which the conscious experience of body and sunset and trees and chairs is occurring. All that needs to happen is a shift of emphasis of attention from body to conscious awareness or Mind—not as a thing, not as an object, but as that unavoidable presence of Mind that has been going on all along.

Many of you, I’m sure, have heard the very short story about the little fish that comes up to his Mommy and says, “Mommy, Mommy, I’ve heard that there’s water! Where is it?”

“Mommy, Mommy, Jesus told me that I am something called Awareness. Where can I go to experience it?” It has to be the fact in order for the question to be asked. But, if you get caught up in the question and try to solve the problem, you are distracted from the opportunity to step back from the question and be still, and in the silence have the experience. What happens in that experience is a shift from identification with body to identification as Awareness—boundariless conscious awareness. That is called stepping into the Void. It’s called “stepping into the Void” because your prior identification with body, and the insistence that it is you, has caused, as with the little fish, the awareness of this universal presence of water to seem not to be a presence of anything, because there’s no differentiation to it. It’s like the air. You don’t think about it. Unless there’s a wind, you do not have an ongoing alive conscious awareness of air.

As the shift to the conscious awareness of being consciousness occurs, the density of form lessens. The visibility and tangibility of the movement of Creation, of the movement of God, de-densifies, because your perspective becomes unbiased and the distorted experience of Reality becomes less distorted. You call that healing.

Now, let’s be very clear on something. Is it going to be necessary for you to totally wake up and ascend in order to experience the healing of this disability that you asked for? No. So, don't complicate it and provide a resistance to your healing by saying, "Boy, I just don't think I can do all that he said." I'm not saying all of this as "things for you to do" in order to have your healing. I am speaking generally, here, so as to help clear up everyone's misunderstanding. And literally so that you may know that it is not as hard as you thought it was going to be.

None of the puzzle pieces are missing! There are not puzzle pieces which have been set aside until you have deserved them. There are not some of the puzzle pieces which will be handed to you at the Pearly Gates so that you may say, "A-ha, I got it! I see it!" All of the puzzle pieces are present on the table, in you, right now, and they constitute the real you!

Now we are going to take a break. I'm going to ask that you don't do a lot of talking during this break. We're taking the break so there is time, you might say, for what I have said to just percolate. You don't have to sit stolidly in one place, unmovingly quiet. But let's not engage in chit-chat about other things. And we will resume shortly.

QUESTION: I hear what you're saying. I know what you're saying. But I don't feel it. I feel alone. I don't want to be alone. And yet I keep acting that way. I don't trust anyone. I don't trust myself. I'm not sure I even trust you. I don't know what to do. At this point I'd almost like a "double my ego back if satisfaction isn't guaranteed," because I'm going to need it, because there's not much left. And at the end of this week I have to go back and try to survive and function in what's left in the life that I've created this year. So, there it is.

ANSWER: Where are you getting the wherewithal to feel what you are feeling? I'm not expecting you to answer that. In this apparently lost place, in this apparently lonely place that you are experiencing, where are you getting the energy with which to experience it? In the confusion and the fear and the self-attack, how is it that you are able to be aware of it? It is because you at this very moment exist, you could say, for better or for worse—and at the moment it seems to be for the worst.

Now, I am going to be very frank with you. The only thing that is getting you into trouble is your thinking. The fact is, that you exist. The fact is, that you exist as awareness, as that which is aware of all these things. The fact is, that the energy with which you are able to define your predicament is the energy of Spirit used in this, I'll say, unproductive manner. But it is indeed the energy of Spirit, with a capital "S". It is the presence of God in you that you are using to define Reality poorly.

Again, all the elements of the healing of the situation are present, and you are even using them at this moment in order to define the problem, and in order to justify the idea that the problem is valid. In other words, all the elements of you in your total Sanity are being brought into play, in a way that appears to you to be a problem. And you use your thinking to prove to yourself that your misunderstanding is valid. You are looking to circumstances and things to validate you, and what validates you is that which is looking at the things.

Again, you are looking at things in order to validate yourself, when what validates you—that which constitutes the integrity of you—is the Conscious Awareness that you are with which you are looking at all of these things. This is another example of shifting from an awareness of yourself as Conscious Awareness, to forms—shifting your attention from yourself as mind to the forms—that of which you are aware.

Now, you are in a wonderful position right now, and your doubt can be turned to your advantage, because you are doubting things in which you had placed confidence inappropriately. It is inappropriate to place confidence in things out there. And all of you can seem to do it successfully to a certain point. But there does come a point of reckoning. And then those things that you had placed confidence in so that you could prove your worth by means of them, seem no longer to be available to prove your worth.

All of you think that is a horrible day, but it is a glorious day. Because when your faith is shaken, when your faith in something that your faith shouldn't have been placed in is shaken, it's the first stage of the beginning of clarity, it's the first stage of healing.

Now, I encourage you not to wait until everything is gone, and all that's left is you in your Integrity. I encourage you not to wait until that day to make that shift. Your Integrity is intact at this moment. It was intact before you gathered about you those things that proved your integrity and allowed you to say, "I have integrity." You had Integrity before you had the things.

This is a lesson every single one of you will learn, either difficultly or easily. To learn it difficultly is not a sin. It does not make you worse than the one who learns it easily. It just means that's the way it works for you. And the lesson, the learning, the realization that comes from it, is just as valuable, if not more valuable than it is to the one who learned it easily.

So, I want you to appreciate the dilemma, the difficulty, the uncomfortableness of what you're experiencing at the moment. Because it doesn't matter whether it's difficult. It matters that it is a point of revelation.

Until you dare to let in the fact that your Integrity just is, regardless of what you have or don't have, regardless of how many evidences of your Integrity there are in your experience, the moment you allow yourself to embrace that, your doubts will disappear, your fears will disappear, and you will experience your freedom. Because you will never again come into bondage to things or people or expectations or projections you make upon yourself as to what you must accomplish before you will say to yourself, "I'm worthy." You are just worthy, period. It's just the fact.

You have integrity just because. Like the kids say, “Mommy, why do birds fly”? “They just fly.” “But, why Mommy?” “Just because. I don’t know why, they just do just because.” You have integrity just because. Not because you can prove it. Not because you can explain it. Not because good things have happened. Not because you have all the signs that everybody else says shows that you have integrity. Not because you have all the signs that your father told you were the proof of your integrity, without which you couldn’t claim to have integrity.

You have integrity no matter what anyone else thinks, and you have integrity no matter what you think. And this is true of every single one of you. And you know what? You’re the only one who has to feel it. And you can dare to feel it for no good reason.

Now, you’re not sure whether to trust me, and that’s okay. Do you know what you’re saying? What you’re saying is, that you’re in charge of yourself, and I am not in charge of you. In this sense, that claim of your being the authority within yourself for what you believe, is correct. It is the first step of what is called, “claiming your power.” I’m going to change that to, “claiming your Presence.” And if you have the authority to say, “I don’t know whether I choose to believe you or not,” you are demonstrating the fact that you have the integrity, that out of the other side of your mouth you’re saying you do not have.

So I encourage you to trust yourself. I encourage you to acknowledge the unavoidable fact that you are present, even if you’re all alone in a closet, you are present there. And if you are present there, all of the integrity of you is present there. And the fact that you can make a choice to believe it or not is the proof that you have integrity. If you truly were unable to make the choice, if you truly were a bumbling mass of confusion, totally unable to make a choice as to whether to believe or not to believe a thing, then indeed the fact would be that you had no integrity.

Now, the choice is yours. And you can either express your Integrity in a way that is uncomfortable to you, or you can express your integrity in a way that is comfortable to you. What all of you need to know is, that you are either using or misusing your integrity. If you realize that, then you will know that the problem is not to regain your integrity, but to express it honestly, as a genuine expression, shall I say, of authority. Because in the moment that you honor yourself enough to be honest, you become undivided, unpolarized. And that apparent expression of authority changes into an undeniable expression of integrity or Presence that constitutes a strength that is not a power over anything, but is a strength that constitutes your invulnerability your utter safety.

What I want to convey to you is, that your strength is what is expressing itself right in the description of how miserable you are. I believe that you could quite angrily and loudly express very clearly just how frustrated you are. That is not the sign of one who lacks integrity, or strength, or the ability to express himself clearly. And there is nothing weak, or poor, or miserable about you that deserves pity or support to cajole you or finesse you into a different point of view.

I am saying that your very expression of weakness I see is an expression of strength. And I will not join you in what you are saying, but in the integrity of you that you are using in order to say it.

PAUL: That's me, Paul, laughing. There's a picture here of a closet door. You know how kids sometimes will put signs on their door that say, "Keep out." Okay, there's a closet door and you're inside a closet. The image is of the Hulk Hogan, or whatever his name is, you know, like this. And you're inside, this Hulk is inside massively strong. And outside, instead of saying "Keep out," there's the sign at a slant and it says, "Wimp." The sign is for everyone outside the closet who can't see you. But inside the closet you know full well and good that you are not a "wimp."

You are not, (and this is still me Paul, even though my eyes are closed) that you are there with great strength. So much strength in fact (and this is still me Paul talking, I just have my eyes closed cause I can pay attention to the feeling of it better) so strong in fact that anyone who might come to open the door to see what a "wimp" looks like, will be met by someone on the other side who is so strong, that the person on the outside can't get the door open to find out that there's a strong person inside.

ANSWER: This is Raj. I honor you for your strength. And so I say to you, let's cut the crap, come out and let us enjoy each other in our integrity. And when you leave this gathering and go home, go home with your integrity that is not dependent upon anyone else's opinion, or your old conditionings. And just be the strength that you are. And just keep on day after day cutting out the crap, and let the chips fall where they may.

Now I'm going to tell you something very important: As long as you think that it matters what other people think or what circumstances are, other people will recognize it, and they will let you know how you ought to be. But if you don't give a damn what anyone else thinks, then everyone else will recognize it, and they will either remain and be your friends, or they will go looking for someone else who wants to give their power away. Either way, you will end up having in your experience those who are also expressing integrity. And you will be amazed.

You're in the best spot you've ever been, because you stand at the point where break through can occur. You actually stand on the point where break through is occurring, you just haven't cracked open that closet door yet. Your hand is on the knob. And if you wait until tomorrow afternoon to open up the door, that is all right, but I do want you to know that there are those who are curious to see You, and not what you have told them you are.

I'm not going to try to convince you to open the door. Let's not waste anymore time this weekend getting mileage out of the "wimp" sign.

Someone I'm aware of, in the past week, was experiencing a lot of truly, seemingly, justifiable pain. And later in the day that person was laughing, and some comment was made about, it was nice to see them happy. And that person said in a sort of off-handed way, "Oh, when I'm not thinking about my problems, I am happy." There is a wonderful truth in there somewhere. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Just a clarification question. You've use the word "integrity" now for a few days. Every time you use the word, I interpret it to mean truth. Someone else thinks something else. Can you clear that up for us now?

ANSWER: Interestingly enough, that question was asked in the another workshop, and the person who asked it is in this workshop. And I would ask for her to tell you what the answer was that was given to her. "Her," is Susan Tuttle.

SUSAN: At the bottom line, it's what you have left when you're not trying to be anything in particular. And as Raj said it: When all the layers of crap get peeled away like an onion.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is that which is left when you are not trying to be anything in particular. I understand that one could say, "Well, that doesn't answer my question. That doesn't give me any understanding."

I am going to say more, but first I have to say something I have also said before: You will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. I want you to understand that you can't understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. (Laughter) You must feel your way in. That is why your spiritual growth cannot be an educational process as you think of educational processes. That is why our friend over here, yesterday, had to come to a point of realization that she must stop trying so hard to grasp everything that was being said.

Those of you who are trying to grasp everything that was being said so that you may take it home with you, so that you can get something out of it, are like squirrels who hide their nuts in the summer so that they can have them in the winter, except that unlike squirrels you can't find where you hid things. (Laughter)

In spite of what I've said just now, I will elaborate on the meaning of the word "integrity." You may best think of it in terms of structural integrity. Not wishing to cast any aspersion on any one, I will nevertheless suggest to you that there is a difference between the sound of a door on a Yugo automobile when it is slammed, and the sound of a Rolls Royce door when it is slammed. And the reason for the difference is, a difference in structural integrity. What does it mean? It means that a Rolls Royce structurally is tighter in its construction, more of a unit than a tin-ier car. The materials are more substantial.

So when I use the word "integrity," I want you to think in terms of that which has substance to it, that which is unified, incapable of being fragmented, and that which when experienced has the sound of unity—if I may put it that way. I'm using these symbols to elicit feelings about the word “integrity,” rather than intellectual definitions of it.

When you are not trying to be anything in particular, when you are not presenting a mask of any kind to anyone, you do not disappear, because you were never a mask or presentation. You stand present, and what you are indeed has integrity. I we’ll make a further refinement: It isn’t that you have integrity, it is that you are integrity. Integrity is the nature of you, indivisibility, soundness, invincibility.

And you know what? Inseparable from that is perfect peace. Conversely, if you are meditating and you experience your perfect peace, you are also experiencing your integrity—the integrity of your Being.

Whenever I use the word Being (whether I capitalize it or not) it is always a verb, never a noun. You are not a Being. You are Being. And your essential Being could be put, your essential Beingness.

My purpose for apparently giving you an explanation is not to give you an understanding of the word “integrity,” but to give you a feel for it. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: I one of the people who Paul wishes would get well, I know. And I think I am now, and I’d like confirmation of that, that all the cancer is gone from my body.

ANSWER: Indeed, you will find that the further evidence of healing will be just that, the remanifestation of your structural perfection—if I may put it that way—and no longer the removal of that which does not identify your physical perfection.

QUESTION: Thank you. As I was sitting and listening, or staying as conscious as I could this morning during your talk about healing, I was feeling that I have graduated in the sense that even though my ego gets really, really upset easily and quickly comes to the surface, that I have made a commitment now to, even though the fear comes up and it’s so big to let “Thy will be done” be the answer. And to ask for—quietly—for my desire and not try to control. And I would like confirmation. I would like you to graduate me.

ANSWER: Hand you your diploma?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: You will have to move across the platform to where the diploma is waiting for you, yourself. The commitment, the resolve that you have come to is what will provide the persistence in moving through all the way. I will put it this way: I await you at the dais to hand you your certificate. But I cannot walk the distance for you.

The commitment to follow through is a commitment to that divine One who is standing there apparently in an incomplete sense of her divinity, and therefore I do not need to do anything for you except to say “Come on. Come on. It’s okay.”

Now, I want there to be no misunderstanding. A commitment—and I’m speaking to all of you—a commitment to “Thy Will, not mine be done,” a commitment to that, cannot possibly include, “Thy Will be done, if it is Your Will for me to die, I am willing. If it is Your Will for me to live, I am willing. If it is Your Will for me to have cancer, I’ll have cancer. If it is Your Will for me to have the cancer disappear, I am willing.”

The Father’s Will is to be All. Because there cannot be anything outside of what the Father Is. And so the extension, the self-expression of the Father must necessarily be in character, if you will, it must necessarily identify what God Is. And God is indivisible, incapable of being divided, incapable of being polarized, incapable of inharmony. There you go, another aspect of integrity is Harmony.

So let us not be stupidly magnanimous and say, “If it is Your Will for me to go now, I’m willing. If it is Your Will for me to suffer, I am willing.”

The Will of God being indivisible must necessarily be the willing of perfection. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel that I am in a wonderful position right now, because I’m standing at the threshold of a door to the universe. I’ve got my hand on the knob. And at the point of revelation, as you said to someone. And my desire is to continue to release the process of processing...

ANSWER: Excellent...

QUESTION: ...which I have noticed myself doing an awful lot. And when I catch myself trying to process, I decide to release this, to allow the processing, to release it, and just release it and just stay in the Being, which to me is the ultimate way to just be. I don’t know what’s coming, but I know it’s good. I wonder if you could shed some more light on it for me?

ANSWER: Unfortunately, I cannot. When you stand at this threshold, you stand at the threshold of a divine adventure—the experience of the unknown becoming known. And if I told you, I would spoil the enjoyment of the Revelation that would be an experience. And I want you to experience every aspect of the experience of revelation that comes from standing at the threshold.

Now, one thing: You’ve got your hand on the door. You are desiring it. Give permission for it. Say “yes,” and let the saying of “yes” be accompanied with the willingness to become defenseless, so that it may flood in.

As I said yesterday, it is important for desire not to become held up as a result of a constant expression of desire—want, want, want. The desire must be expressed and released, leaving you abiding with the desire, but not desiring it. And then give permission for it to register with you in its fulfillment.

I say this to you, so that you do not inadvertently get hung up, because you haven't given permission. In other words, you haven't become open to and defenseless against the influx of the revelation.

I know that it would make it easier if you had just a little bit of an idea of what was coming. What would it make easier? Your willingness to say "yes." I will tell you something: You don't want to know all of the answer before you say "yes," because you are likely to say "no."

If on the occasion of my first conversation with Paul, I told him that he would be traveling around the world, addressing large groups of people, presenting or allowing me to present myself as Jesus, (laughter) there would have been no second conversation (laughter). In fact, if I had just simply told him I was Jesus, there would not have been a second conversation.

Your very Being—all of you—your very Being is Love, with a capital "L", the Presence of the Father/Mother. As you open up to it, and invite it in it will not overwhelm you. But you know what? Every single one of you, has to arrive at a point where you are so sick and tired of being sick and tired, that you are willing to risk the chance that if you let go of control, something other than disaster will happen. And then go ahead and let go of the control. If you don't do that, and as a result of having done it, have the experience of everything that is meaningful to you, you will not have that essential experience that proves to you that fear is baseless.

All of you must arrive at the point where you actually risk the chance that God is All. And there is no way for you to do it without engaging that element of risk. Do you understand, that without the element of risk trust is not called into play? If trust is not called into play, then what you are expressing is confidence. If trust is not coming into play because there is an apparent risk, then trust is not what you are practicing, it is confidence. And there is no way for any of you to confidently let go of control and feel that you will be all right.

I encourage all of you to dare to conceive that when you come to a point where trust is really required, that this is a wonderful place for you to be, even though you are defining it as a place of risk.

You would like a little clue as to what will happen so that the risk you feel you are placing yourself in will be diminished. But without it trust will not be called into play, you will not reach outside of yourself.

Your present sense of yourself is the only thing that is capable of feeling confident. You know what that means? That means that once you get used to and allow for the experience that feels risky, you will never do anything with confidence again. That does not mean that you will be in a constant state of anxiety. What it means is, that you will come to the place where there is pleasure and delight in actually forever standing at the place of not-knowing, ready to embrace what inevitably flows across.

The dictum of the Father is, (and another way of saying that is) the way things work is: “Behold, I make all things new.” God never stops to repeat himself. Now the only thing you can ever have confidence in is something that has already happened. So waking up is indeed going to mean a willingness to forever stand at the threshold of “Behold I make all things new,” never having a preview. That’s when life becomes truly vital—not scary—vital.

Because once you discover that standing in that place of risk means, standing at the point of the movement of Creation, and that it is forever unpolarized. And at the bottom line it is the movement of your Being, because you’re no longer claiming a Being separate from God. It becomes the joy of forever self-discovery, an experience of integrity, which is therefore utterly safe. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are very welcome.

QUESTION: Speaking of the end of the rope. Does that also mean something like: You’re at your end of the rope and you don’t care if the floor opens up and swallows you, or dragons come, or angels come, it doesn’t matter what happens next?

ANSWER: Always when you get to the end of your rope...

QUESTION: Always?

ANSWER: Always, always, always... Hush up! Always when you or anyone reaches the end of their rope, they have reached the end of their ego’s rope. And yes, You let go. And when you let go—you, because you are letting go from the last vestiges of your ego sense of things—it will seem to you that you are letting go into all kinds of potential, whether it is angels, or whether it is horrors of the most terrible kind. When you reach that point of giving in or giving up, of failing as an ego, you will not be able to have a confidence that disaster is not what is in front of you or below you—if you will. That is the place of risk.

Now, you can arrive at the end of your rope as a result of circumstances, or you can arrive at the end of your ego’s rope by simply meditating. A good thing to know. But either way succeeds in causing you to take the risk that is no risk at all. But you know what? We could talk for years, and I could do everything possible to convince you that you would be utterly safe in letting go of the rope and failing as an ego, but when you come to the moment of it it will take trust. Your knowing it may allow you to trust a little more gracefully, but it will not remove the necessity of that investment of trust.

For those of you who are students of the Course, why do you think the first part of the definition of a teacher of God is Trust? Really, because until you arrive at the point of risk and trust through it, you don't have anything to teach.

Oh, but you say, "Well, even if I haven't arrived at that dire circumstance of having to trust, I can still love"! If Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, then it must mean that you are going to be willing to see the Christ in your fellow man, who may not seem to be acting in a Christ-like way. And it will take trust.

QUESTION: May I speak?

ANSWER: You may. I grant you permission.

QUESTION: I accept and thank you. I want to ask: did I ever reach that place? I felt as if I did.

ANSWER: You have, yes.

QUESTION: I didn't like it.

ANSWER: No one does.

You see that's that place of honesty that Paul was referring to the first night. It's scary to be honest, because the honesty puts you on the line. It says, "Here I am, like it or not." It doesn't say it as a challenge. But it says, "Here I am. And that's all there is."

Everybody is so conditioned not to disclose himself or herself truly. And most of social encounters involve presenting something other than yourself well. That is what gains respect. Just to honestly be you is not something which elicits within you any meaning of respectability, because no one ever taught you that it was a good thing to do.

I will tell you something: Your freedom lies in that honesty. As I said earlier, if that honesty isn't there then you are owned by everyone else. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you kind sir, bless you(?)

ANSWER: You/you are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: If you trust enough to go beyond the pale...

ANSWER: The p-a-l-e?

QUESTION: Yes. Like I feel like I've done with some aspects of my life, and live with the excruciating of this place. Let's say, I'm going to take work, because relationships are like more important today, work is like I really don't care that much so I was willing to risk in this area. So I'm working on work first. So I'm in this place of this excruciating nothingness and I'm hanging out with it, right? Okay, so what I'm getting from what you've said and all integrating and getting in there and it's saying to me, "okay, now we see the question."

It's like I can live with the excruciation, but there's a lot of time on my hands. Excruciation you don't have to do anything, you just hang out with it. You can hang out in the desert, in your apartment, wherever—and just live with it, it gets familiar after awhile. But it's like, okay there's the next step, the next step is where I'm hung up. And so I can't formulate a question because I don't know what it is. All I know is that it's not so terrifying, I can handle that. Do you know what I'm trying to ask you?

ANSWER: Oh, indeed.

QUESTION: Would you tell me what it is first, what I'm trying to ask and then the answer?

ANSWER: It is the fact that the excruciation isn't over yet. That is why you don't know the next step.

QUESTION: Oh! Well let's just say that I get peace within the excruciation from time to time. It's great, I can feel that.

ANSWER: Indeed, you will. Why? Because, and I am going to change the word excruciation to humiliation.

QUESTION: Okay, but it feels like excruciation.

ANSWER: Humiliation is excruciating. It's insulting.

QUESTION: Yes, it's like yes, it can make you feel downright angry.

ANSWER: Exactly, we understand each other. I want you to understand something: Understanding it won't help you speed this up though. It is the ego which is humiliated. The end result of humiliation is humility. Because, what is left after the ego has been humiliated away is You being honestly You. And You are utterly humble. All of you, at the bottom line, are utterly humble.

Paul is being utterly humble at this moment. But he is not a wimp. He is not a meaningless presence. One could say that what happens where he is when he is being humble is magnificently powerful, and yet he is powerful without exercising any control, without any attempt to influence.

He is like an Indian woman who used to come and visit a white woman who was working on the reservation. And this white woman lived on the reservation as well. The Indian woman would come over, almost daily, where the white woman was knitting, or doing some hand-work of some sort that was her hobby. And they wouldn't really talk much. The Indian woman would just come and sit there on the porch, and then go home. She came and did this every day. And finally one day somebody asked the Indian woman why she did this. She said, "Because when I go there it's easier to like myself."

Remember in the breakdown of the ego it feels like your failure at being you, when all it is is the failure of that concept of yourself that you were trying to fulfill, or the failure of that concept that others had of you that you were trying to fulfill. And this is humiliating. If you allow the humiliation to become complete, You—the genuine You—expressing the honesty of your Being, will be what is left. The integrity of You that was there before you tried to be good, will be what is left, and humility will be the nature of that You.

Everyone says it is good to be humble. But you can't try to be humble. It's what's left when you've given up trying everything else.

"Infinite patience brings immediate results." So what I am saying is, don't try to get out of the excruciating—as you put it. The moment the willingness to fail totally has occurred, the minute you let go of the end of the rope you will know the next step. What you need to understand is that this apparently horrible process is really healing, is really an integral part of regaining your Sanity.

The words are "The way is straight and narrow and few there be that go in there at." The gate is that place where your ego can't get through. Only You will fit. But leaving your ego behind scares your ego shitless. Strong word, but it's a strong experience.

But I will tell you something: You have someone who is telling you ahead of time that this is the way it will be, and so you will more easily be able to recognize it for what it is, and not try to get rid of it.

QUESTION: I need to ask one tiny little thing here. Let's just say that I finish this process in this lifetime, and that I'm hanging out here—dah, dah, dah, dah, and I'm not excruciating....

ANSWER: You don't have as much time as you think. It's going to happen—I mean that in this way—it is going to happen long before the end of this lifetime. You don't have that much time left in this excruciation!

QUESTION: Okay, that's kind of what I wanted to hear. But then, Raj, that's not exactly what I want. I wanted to know what do you do after that, because that was my original question? Because I get feelings about how that feels. And that's when I really don't know what to do, because I don't have anything to do anything with. Okay? I don't know how to do that. I know how to do this, but I don't know how to do that.

ANSWER: I am going to save you a little bit of time—a little bit. You better learn to sit down in the middle of excruciating and stop trying to get out of it, if you want to get out of it faster. You had better stop denying the process of humiliation.

The process of humiliation is like a pencil with an eraser on it, and the eraser is being used to erase something, and the eraser slowly wears away and disappears—and the eraser is like the ego. The eraser is the equivalent of the ego. And if you want to cut short or speed up the process, you will end up with not all of the ego being humiliated away. You had better go ahead and feel what you are feeling.

Now, I am not saying that it is important or necessary to suffer, but I am saying that the simple and perhaps hard task to face is, that giving up the ego just simply isn't fun. And the fact that it isn't fun is no reason not to give it up. And if you know that it isn't fun, but that it means the regaining of your Sanity, then I guess I could say, be willing to persist in the therapy of letting go of it. And don't try to shorten your therapy or gloss over it. Don't wonder about what's coming next.

QUESTION: I can if I want to.

ANSWER: That's like going into therapy and instead of paying attention to what you're supposed to be doing, you're dreaming about what you're going to do on a date tomorrow night.

QUESTION: Exactly. That's the way the mind works, isn't it? Is that why the ego works?

ANSWER: It always distracts you from its self-destruction, of course.

QUESTION: Okay. Of course, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I know that you said there were no follow up questions, but I have a follow up question, which I shared with Paul during the break. Raj, you've talked a lot this afternoon about what sounds to me like the pain of waking up—the excruciation of waking up. And my experience of my life has been about waking up and it doesn't feel painful. That doesn't mean that it doesn't feel challenging, difficult sometimes, but it doesn't feel painful, that's not my sense of waking up. And I would like for you to comment about that.

ANSWER: Are you perhaps suggesting that there is another way to look at this?

QUESTION: Indeed!

ANSWER: The one single element that is the scariest to bring into play in the process of Awakening is actual trust. And every single individual must bring trust into play in order to let go of control. I will tell you this: Those will have the most excruciation, the most, shall I say, uncomfortable time, who bring into play the greatest amount of resistance to letting go of control. Indeed, pain or suffering is not inherent in waking up.

When the word excruciation was used, let me be clear, we were not talking about physical pain. It is what you might call emotional or mental anguish. It is felt by the ego as it finds that it can no longer make things work.

Now this is very important: You are not your ego. You and the ego are not one and the same thing. You are not an ego evolving into a divine Being. You are a divine Being, more properly, you are divine Being employing your mind to create images of yourselves which you call beliefs and definitions, and then believing those definitions, and acting on the basis of them. The apparently resulting you that is the expression of these beliefs is what is called the ego, but it isn't you.

Now, to the degree that any of you insist upon trying to maintain the ego sense of yourself when its efforts are not working, to the degree that you insist upon employing your ego when its efforts are not working, you will suffer.

Now I am not trying to be heavy handed here. But you know what I'm doing? I'm giving you the basis for being equal to your ego's strenuous efforts to survive when it's on its way out. I am speaking to you in such a way that will allow you, if indeed your experience turns out to be strenuous, I am helping give you the means that will allow you to face it more fearlessly. Because I am telling you that it is not something to be afraid of. I am telling you that it takes a willingness to persist right through it.

Now, I have shared with you that you have the means to shift your vantage point from your ego to your Being. But those who are especially controlling, those who have been especially manipulative and who have been highly successful at it, do not generally let go of that gladly, willingly or easily. And when the rough experience comes, you will need to know that it's not really the end of the world for you, and that you can indeed dare to give up a little bit sooner than you otherwise would have.

Your ego interprets its losing its ability to control as an ultimate challenge to be overcome, when the decision really needs to be made to give up.

There is something else that you need to know: You never come to this point, where the ego begins to fail, for no reason at all. There is a reason it happens. And the reason is: Because you are growing. It is because you are ready to embrace the clearer experience of who you divinely Are. And it is penetrating the ego circumstances and undermining them.

In other words, the divine You that you Are is, you might say, asserting Itself, and causing that which is false about you to be illustrated for its falsity, so that it will be easier for you not to want it any more. But if the ego takes this as the ultimate challenge and you assert it even more, then its utter powerlessness will be placed in front of you. And in its taking that on as a challenge, it is taking on something that it cannot succeed at, so the failure of it becomes absolute, if I may put it that way, and it becomes that much easier for you to arrive at a point of vacating the stance of an ego.

You must understand that if indeed it turns out to be strenuous, it is nevertheless a divine event of transformation, and because it is, you can dare to yield to it so that you might find what is left after the ego is gone is wonderful.

Waking up is not inherently uncomfortable, because it is utterly natural for you to be Awake. What you need to know is that if it is uncomfortable, it isn't because there's something wrong with you. It's because there's something more right with you, than what is wrong with you. And you need to know it so that you will have the courage (listen to this) so that you will have the courage to persist rather than check out. That you will stay in the humiliation, you will allow yourself to be totally humiliated and be willing to stand there and have the opportunity to discover that what is standing there is not a humiliated ego, but a humble divine Presence.

You must have the encouragement to know that if you follow through to the end of the ego, there will still be something left and not condemn yourself for what is happening.

If you are not willing to stand in the apparent misery of the circumstance, and you scramble to get away from it, you will delay your opportunity to experience the uncovered divine Being that you Are.

I am going to put it this way: Let us imagine that you are standing on a large stage. All the lights are off in the theater. No one is in the theater except you in the center of the stage. It is pitch black. Immediately overhead is a spotlight that is on you, but it is out. The spotlight is going to come on. But if you are running around trying to escape the darkness you will not be where your illuminated presence is going to be able to appear.

Do you understand that I am not meaning to convey to you anything fearful, rather, I am conveying to you and meaning to convey to you that when this point of development occurs, and if it isn't all candy and roses, it doesn't mean something is happening that you have to get away from. It doesn't mean that something is wrong with you. If simply means that this is what it is taking to undo a strong ego. Why is it happening? To uncover the essential divine You that you Are.

Paul came from a very intellectual, metaphysical background. He was very used, he thought, to being able to be in charge of his life for the good of his life through the use of clear, correct and divine thinking. He ended up being unemployed for nine months because everything had collapsed around him. His ego plans collapsed, and he could do nothing about it. (I mentioned this before.)

You could say that he was unemployed for nine months, because of his stubborn insistence on the idea that he, through his clear correct thinking, could bring his life back into order. It took that long for him to discover that in spite of his not being able to bring his life back into order, through his clear, correct thinking, his life hadn't stopped and his needs had not stopped being met, except that he wasn't able to take credit for it.

It took that long for him to recognize that something else was in charge, and decide for that, instead of continuing to try to be in charge himself. You could call that stubborn will, even though from his standpoint it was with high motive.

During the process he and his whole family lived in other people's houses, after fourteen years of raising a family in a totally respectable way—meaning, having a home of his own, not needing to lean on other people, etc. But he had reached the point in his spiritual maturity where he could not hang onto or carry forward any further this private, personal, beneficent control of his world. The circumstances were agonizing for him. There was nothing respectable about it.

And yet, throughout this period it became clearer and clearer to him that his integrity was intact, as I said this afternoon to someone else.

It will happen the way it will work. I mean by that, it will happen in the way that the result of Awakening will be accomplished, if I may put it that way. And so what I am conveying to you is that if indeed for you it seems to be strenuous, don't fight it. And don't run yourself down as though you're not doing it as well as someone else who seems to be having it easy.

Again, I must come back to the fact that ultimately the one single crucial element of this process is arriving at the point where the investment of trust is made in stepping into the unknown, in stepping into that place where control has been relinquished, where being in charge has been relinquished.

I want you not to be afraid of it, whether it seems to be strenuous or not. You have an advantage over Paul, Paul didn't have any one to tell him what I told you today. You will not go into it as ignorantly as Paul did. And you are likely to find that you will recognize the signs of your spiritual Awakening and dare to cooperate with it, rather than resist it. But if you do resist it, no matter how strenuous it gets, the event of transformation will occur. And if you know that, you will not be as reactive in the process, and it will not be as excruciating.

Again, it is so important not to be "airy-fairy" about your spiritual growth. And so that is why I speak to you bluntly about something that might seem unduly heavy. I do it so that those of you who have the extreme of the experience might know, from our having talked, that it's not the end of the world, and that you are equal to the experience, and to hang in there. Yes, that means hang in there with the process of failure that seems to be occurring, because all it is is the failure of the ego to continue to have control.

The question is, how long will you wait to let go of the end of the rope? The longer you wait the more uncomfortable it will be, but it won't change the fact that you're at the end of the rope. And there's something inevitable that will happen: You will let go.

Being at the end of your rope feels in itself like failure. And the tendency to judge yourself is great, as though that somehow will light a fire under you that will let you manage to scoot up the rope and get you where you ought to be. When the necessity is, to let go.

Another way I can say it is: It's an excellent thing to be at the end of your rope. Being at the end of your rope is not because you are at fault. Being at the end of your rope is not a circumstance to be judged, but to be paid attention to so that it can be obvious, so that it can become obvious to you that what is appropriate is letting go, not hanging on.

The amount of time I have taken for this may seem inordinately great, it may seem to have been a heavy handed thing, and a dark subject. But you know what? You need not to be ignorant of it, because it isn't that uncommon an experience.

And you need to know that there is another side to the experience, if indeed you are having it rough. And it's truly not appropriate to whimper and complain, and cry and whine because it's tough. But rather become equal to it, if I may put it that way, and live through it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you for the clarification.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

PAUL COMMENT: This is me, Paul. We actually only have about twelve minutes left, but Raj again this evening wants to open it up to all of you to express what may have been happening with you today, either positive or negative, so that there can be a sharing again. And there's part of me that thinks "Uh-oh, watch out you're going to begin to think there's a pattern and you're going to expect it tomorrow night and he'll say "no."

So I'll go first.

I mentioned earlier today that I would greatly enjoy hearing what anybody might think had been happening today, and then we broke—we ended. And I spent some time, I mean I was in the room for quite a while longer just being present with what was going on, and then all of a sudden it dawned on me instead of asking everybody else to tell me what was going on that I ought to just pay attention, for myself.

And I will report that I did just be quiet and pay attention, and there isn't a whole lot I can tell you. But I was very aware that the room was filled tremendous Love that was embracing everything but not directed at anything. It wasn't love that was being given, it was love that we were all being, and there wasn't a purpose to be gained from it. And the only thing that I can say is that maybe that's the feeling of communion. Nobody was being loving to make anybody feel a certain way, and it was just an incredible experience. And I don't know that there's more that can be described. That in itself is an experience that I have never experienced before. So I wanted to share that.

Is there anyone else that... [has anything they would like to share]?

SHARING: Raj, has expressed on many occasions the metaphor of pictures of the puzzle, and we listen and we experience ourselves with this puzzle. And he said none of the pieces are hidden, none of the pieces are up my sleeve or anyone's sleeve. But today while he was doing it he picked up two or three pieces of the puzzle and he played with them. And something happened in me. I realized he was being me, I saw him come off the cross, because he said, "Being on the cross is the human condition, you cannot get off the cross from the third-dimension. You must join and you get off the cross when you join."

And so I felt that he joined us, not by coming off the cross, but by picking up the pieces and playing with them until finally he put the pieces down. And we were with him, he was being with us. He wasn't asking us to get on the cross and come off it. You know what I'm saying? Something happened there that was indescribable. But that was communion. He was saying to us, “come and commune with me.” And proving by everything he was saying and being that he is communion with us and he showed us by playing with the pieces.

PAUL: Thank you.

SHARING: It's like hoping that you won't get the microphone, because everything you've said this afternoon, this last part kind of summed up what's going on with me. And I see that the pain is the resistance to giving up. And I see the risk. And then talking about the closet door, it feels for me like out there the wimp is all that stuff like stupid and all those words I use. And that the strength that it takes to hold the closet door closed is very painful. And I feel real scared, because it feels like... Actually I've used the pain to hold on to the controls, and I actually don't want to give it up and I can't hold on to it any longer. And thank you for summing it up for me.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

SHARING: I'm a runner, I run away, and I almost lived. And I'm here. I'm not only here, I'm here, I'm being here like every second I get to choose to be here and to have it be okay. It's like when I was giving birth and I wanted to leave. It was like, and I said this to Paul on the break, I said, one time I said, “you know of course that God is inevitable.” And It's like that birth was inevitable, and this birth is inevitable. And I think in this moment I'm still joining. And in that moment I get to let go and find out what's there.

I had a breakdown about twenty years ago, and that all came back for me, because that was going to happen when I let go. And my ego came up big time and it said, “you can't let go because you're going to dissolve.” That's what the ego... of course, it said that it was going to dissolve. And it told me, “Why? This is fearful, this is not where you need to be.” And I stayed. And what happened was, nothing, it just sort of, the ego wasn't there and it was things, it was just like a nothingness, and it was just an allness, and it was trust.

And waiting for this mic has been like waiting for(?), because my mind said, “I think I'm next, but not necessarily so.” And yet all the things that have happened have been the I that is we, it's been like my voice and our voice and it's been absolutely perfect. And this moment is. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

SHARING: I guess I really want to express my appreciation to Raj, because I've been getting in my way so much because I refuse to get out of my intellect. I'm just running myself ragged and keeping myself from growing. And today was so beautiful, because with this meditation time, it's like he first talked to us about the ego stepping out the intellect—it's not in the concepts, it's in the experience. I know he gave us the boost the energy and the impetus to be quiet and just be in the experience. And it was so beautiful, because once all the chatter stops then your on track, you're right there. And it was such an amazingly beautiful gift, I want to thank you for that. Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

SHARING: There's a real wonderful sense of joy in me. And I want to really share it, but the way I want to share it sounds like an egotistical thing, but I'm going to do it anyway. "I know I know." That's all.

SHARING: I've just had the most peaceful day that I ever remember having and feel real loving and I want to thank you and all of you. Thank you.

SHARING: When you said this morning that the Holy Spirit and the Father and you are here and available to us, it was almost like I was hit with a ton of bricks, because I realized for the first time that I had been rejecting Jesus as a guide. Because I was thinking that Jesus was an intercessor to God. And you made it so beautifully clear this week.

And I heard you in Florida and you said the same thing, but it didn't sink in. And that is that: Jesus is a loving older brother—not an intercessor—who is ever available. And when you closed your meeting in June, you said, "I will be here, even though Paul is going to go somewhere else." I thank you for this. I'm now going to try to be a good devoted sister, and work from there, and not be fragmented anymore. Thank you very much Paul.

PAUL: You're welcome.

SHARING: I'm an attorney by profession, and for a long time, and especially since I've been studying A Course In Miracles I've had a great deal of difficulty practicing law, and studying the Course. It seems to me that the law is a conglomeration of ego concepts of judgment, right versus wrong, good versus bad, fair versus unfair, equitable versus inequitable, I could go on and on. It's also an attack oriented system, you're an advisory. Your client wants you to win, but he wants the other client to lose. He's not interested in win/win.

And I thought to myself, "I really have to give up the practice of law." Although I said, "I don't know what to do. I'm not trained to do anything else. I don't have any way of supporting my family. The law has been very good to me financially. But I have to overcome the fear of just letting go, and trusting that I'll be shown the way.

And so I was going to ask Raj, is it's okay for me to give up the practice of law. And today I understood that my ego was working full time in distracting me. Because the issue for me is not to give up the law, the issue for me is to give up my investment in the way I'm perceiving the practice of law. And when I'm willing to do that then I will be able to go on. And I thank you.

SHARING: I guess this is more of a question. There's been a lot of talk about the end of the rope today. And for me—and I can identify with what you said—the end of the rope often means a venture into what seems like insanity. And I guess I'd just like to know if that's the ego's idea of insanity, or if it's... I mean it just seems so not okay to do that. I guess I'd like some clarification on that.

PAUL: I'm speaking as Paul, because when I was faced with having to let go, it felt like I was just becoming totally irrational. It's like I would go insane. But when I let go, what was there was peace. I mean it's like, when I really let go, the way it occurred was, it was like for a week or two I would keep saying, "I can't do anything, I can't do anything, I can't do anything." Which meant I was wanting to do something, but I couldn't do anything.

And then there was... something happened, I can't say I thought, "Oh, I'm going to give up." But something happened and I said the statement, "I can't do anything," and it was like instead of a statement of a problem it was a realization that it was the answer. "I can't do anything! If I can't do it, I can't do it. So I don't even have to try." All the sense that I had that I was supposed to be able to do something went right out the window, and it was like, "Oh, God I can relax." And I didn't go crazy, and it was immediately replaced with peace.

And in that peace... because I actually did this after I got in touch with Raj. I mean I got in touch with Raj when they were collapsing. They collapsed and talking to Raj didn't help a bit. They collapsed, and then I went through this process of trying to hold on and so on.

So then I think I had creditors calling and they can get really nasty, especially I would talk to them as though... I mean I really wanted to do my very best to get them a payment of some sort. And I would tell them, "I'll get something off to you right away," when I didn't have anything to get off to them right away. They sensed that I was lying and so they treated me as a liar and I mean they were rougher than ever, they get really rough.

The thing was, that it was like, "I can't do anything, I can't do anything, I've got to do something, and I can't do anything." And then this realization occurred that I couldn't do anything. I know it went through my mind that "you can't get blood out of a turnip." So if you can't get blood out of a turnip, you don't go to a turnip for blood. And if I can't do anything, I don't try to do anything. And I relaxed.

And it was very interesting, when the creditors called me after that and I was at peace, I actually told them I couldn't do anything. And they said, "Okay, but my supervisor requires me to put something on my card, and so I'll put down that you can't do anything, and I'll call you again in two weeks or a month." All of a sudden nobody nasty was on the other end of the phone. It was amazing.

So I didn't go crazy, the world didn't fall in, the police didn't take me off to jail for nonpayment of things, and all the rest of the stuff that I imagined would happen. And in that peace things were able to reconfigure, let's put it that way. And of course, I was talking to Raj at the time and I was getting guidance, but I was no longer trying to figure out ways to be in control.

SHARING: But what if you do go crazy? What if you do get taken away?
The worlds view of crazy.

PAUL: Cynthia, where are you? I would like you to share what you were saying about “spiritual emergency.”

CYNTHIA: I was just sharing with Paul today at lunch of some experiences I’ve had with other people. I haven’t had a spiritual emergency myself that I know of—it might have been many emergencies. But that when somebody reaches a point where it happens so fast that they can’t keep up with it often times there’s a break down—what looks like a break down to all of us, even to the person that it’s happening to. And it’s really a break through, if you can just go through it.

And I think there are probably other people in the room that have experienced it in a personal level that would have more to say about it than I would. I mean I kind of feel it, but I haven’t experienced it personally.

PAUL: You are saying what you’re saying from a background as a therapist right?

CYNTHIA: Right, but I’ve seen it happen with people, definitely. And I’ve seen people come through the other side. What happens is it’s a break through of the defenses, and you get in touch with another reality. And in that other reality great healing can take place. So if anybody else would like to speak of it from a personal level. I knew there was somebody here, but I didn’t want to call on you directly.

SHARING: I had a psychotic episode or spiritual emergency, as they call it in California—the rest of the country hasn’t caught up yet. I want to say that it’s very characteristic of a Shamotic experience too—the evolution of becoming a Shamin, unless Raj wants to correct me on that. It seems to be very characteristic of that experience.

I’m here to prove that there’s life after psychotic episode, after the spiritual emergency. Someone at lunch today said, “when did you start healing after the psychotic episode?” And I said, “the moment it started.”

I felt nothing for forty-four years—nothing—and knew it. And was intellectually killing myself to correct all these behaviors, and to find God. My search was for God. But I was searching out there in my left brain. That’s why I have the disease I have now, I basically burned out my left brain. But not enough yet though because I keep playing with the ego. It was for my family probably one of the most embarrassing things they’ve every experienced. But it’s not quite as embarrassing as being a person found naked lying in the snow ditch in 18 degree weather.

So it brought my family together and that was one of the purposes of doing that particular style of healing. And there was a tremendous relief in the episode. There was lots of spiritual stuff happening. And it wasn’t until someone—at that particular time I happened to be in twelve steps and I was on step eleven—and someone mentioned power, and I went into drastic fear. And that's why the episode got real bazaar as far as I'm concerned.

If I'd just gone through the emergency, and if I'd had a support system for the emergency like they have in California, for people who have been through it and understand it, and will let you go through the various stages versus trying to inject you with Thorazine to shut you up so you don't have anymore rage and don't experience what and who you are at that particular second and every second of the experience, it could have been a lot smoother.

But somebody mentioned in step eleven I would come into power, and my experience of power was oppression. And my personal experience of using what I thought was power was to oppress other people, and to get aggressive, and to beat you into the wall verbally if not close to physical to get my way, because that's what I learned. So I went into tremendous fear, because I didn't want to be there, I already knew I didn't want to do that.

I was guided through the whole thing. I got down on my knees in Waterberry Center in Vermont, an institution, which I swore I would never be in, and I work in institutions. I got down on the cement floor of an institution after I found out which shrink would be the best in Burlington—my attorneys were trying to get me out of there and telling me not to open up your mouth anymore or you're going to end up in here forever—and prayed, and just prayed and prayed and prayed and said, “give me the right shrink, give me the right shrink, if it's Your Will, if it's Your Will.”

And I got to the next place and was standing in the eating area and heard this man say, “Miss Humphrey.” And turned around and it was the shrink that I prayed for in the other institution and went, “Damn let's get busy.” I was ready cause I knew he was going to take care of me and respect me. Which he did. And while it's happening you're going, “SHIT why'd I have to do this one. I know I'm an extremist, but why'd I have to go this far?”

There are still these moments where there was nothing else to do but turn it over and go, “WOW, I could have been in there forever.” Some place in there I made a decision to heal. And unfortunately some people don't make that decision and stay there. And I'm very fortunate to have been one of the people that said, “I don't need this, I want to move on.” And there's life after the psychotic episode, there's life after the spiritual emergency.

I just keep going and boughting (?) at the ego and it's starting to come. I'm on the bus now as Ken Keeseey said in the sixties, you're either on the bus or you're off the bus. I was off the bus and I'm on now. And I'm starting to ride, instead of saying, “Hey let me push the damn thing.”

PAUL: I feel the need to say something. Another observation: This afternoon when I was experiencing all of this love, it was so very easy to feel that everything about all of us was divine, and that even everything about the room we were in was divine, which is the Truth. But at this point, at the same time we're also still human beings who have had psychotic episodes, or who have gone through excruciation, or this or that. And we will all leave here and we'll go home with people that we've not had an experience of divinity with, like we have here.

And while everyone has been talking so far, it dawned on me that what Raj had to say today, which seem to me to be stern and not really illuminative of our divinity, that he was saying, "Hey everybody, don't be afraid of the strenuousness that you might encounter when you go home. And don't be afraid of the experience of being human, and seemingly minus the very conscious experience of your divinity that you were experiencing today. There is not something wrong with you because you're not every moment consciously experiencing your divinity the way it was being experienced."

And so it's like maybe providing us with a balance that allows us not to be thrown by "being in the world," and perhaps being able, because of that, to carry forward with us into the world some of what we felt and managed to share.

Okay, that was because I was having my feelings about what Raj was doing and part of me was feeling like, "Man this is a bummer. I mean let's go back to this morning." But I'm getting a feeling for what I was experiencing today.

SHARING: I'm feeling rather strange at the moment, because I've been on both sides of the thorazine syringe, I've ordered them and I've gotten them. And I just wanted to share that this spiritual breakthrough or this healing experience is all very real and I'll try to quickly relate a story:

A few years ago when I was flying quite high manically and out of control, I ended up in Burlington in their crisis unit, and had some people assigned to keep me from leaving the unit—wonderful man, about thirty years old, in a security guard outfit—and we sort of played games for about an hour. I called my boss, and finally I was out for a cigarette, and I looked at him and I said, "Who are you?" He said, "I'm your guardian." I said, "Right, who are you really?" He gave me his name, "I'm your guardian." I said, "Like angel?" He said, "Yes." I said, "Okay, let's turn the clock back 1984. And I'm going to start and I'd like you to pick up any time you'd like."

And I'm testing, obviously. And I'm driving to my friends house, my marriage is breaking up and I'm mad as hell, and I just can't take it anymore. And somehow I put the pedal to the medal and I said the next bridge I see I'm planting this baby. And I turn the radio up full blast, put the accelerator down. And just as I'm beginning to be turning the wheel the dome light came on and the radio went off and I heard my inner voice say, "I decide the time." And I realized right now, tonight, that that was the moment of my letting go of the rope, or I let go of the wheel and the car came back on the road and with my pedal to the medal it slowed down to fifty-five and I went on.

What I wanted to share was the day with my friend there “the guardian,” I stopped with, “I was in my car driving,” and he said, “you were very angry, weren’t you?” And I said, “Yes.” And the(?) the rest of the story, right?”

The last part I want to share is that two weeks later, I was at my parents with my sister. She said, “Jeff I sensed something was dreadfully wrong at that time and I called Paul Tuttle to send out the “healing team.” Thank you Paul. Thank you Susan.

PAUL: Thank you for sharing that.

SHARING: Thank you. I just wanted to share this, it was in 1979, things were real bad. My two sons had been in a mental hospitals, my business collapsed, they were foreclosing on the house, my wife had filed for divorce, she had a job, but she had left. Everybody was blaming me for everything that went on. I was in this house which was under foreclosure, I had no job, and they robbed the house, whatever little bit was left. And I had very little money, I had hid a twenty dollar bill in a book up in my closet, and I went to the closet and the twenty dollars was still there.

And then it was kind of like a rebirth it was kind of like the end of the rope in a sense. But I looked at myself and I said, “I’m okay, there’s really nothing wrong with me.” But everybody’s lawyers were calling me and all this and everybody was blaming me, “oh, your this.” And the banks were calling, and there was no way out. But I said, “I’m okay.” I think it was the Holy Spirit had to come to me right then, and said that I was okay. Not that things haven’t been smooth ever since, but it was the start of the spiritual path, as someone says, “I get on the bus then,” that’s when I get on the bus. And the bus is going to be over sometime. Like Yogi says, “it ain’t over until it’s over.” But Raj says, “It’s going to be over sometime.” Thank you.

SHARING: This is in response to the question that Mary was asking. It’s a very mild form of sensing craziness. But I was a part of intentional community for ten years. And near the end of those ten years I just felt I was going crazy. And I approached one of the people who was a psychologist within our group, and I said, “I just feel I’m going crazy.” And he looked at me square in the eye and he said, “I work with crazy people, Glenda. I know what crazy is, if you want to come with me and look at what that is. But I think you’re terribly lonely.” And I just melted into tears. It was the truth and I knew it was the truth.

I’m in a marriage that is falling apart. And when Paul was describing, “I can’t, I can’t, I can’t”—I went into that marriage from, “I’m lonely” to “God, I’m lonely, and it shouldn’t be this way,” to “I’m lonely.” And when I got clear that I was lonely, I knew I could do something about it. And I knew what to do about it, it was very apparent. And it had to do with becoming less defensive, and letting people in. And that’s what I’ve experienced here. And that’s become a reality for me here. It's more real than what I have been experiencing. And I don't think that's going to change.

PAUL: Thank you.

SHARING: I feel I need to continue the theme of the experience I had was basically the same as how Paul explained it at the beginning of this circle, and share with other people that I was feeling a tremendous amount of love, which everybody I've looked at I know has experienced in different levels. And I've been to other workshops before where I've had similar experiences, and I go home, and I get sad.

I had an amazing experience this morning though where I knew I wasn't going to go home and be sad. I didn't know how I was going to do that, but I did know that I would need courage, I would need a lot of trust. And the courage and trust would be to approach the people that I thought before were unwilling or unable to give me the love that I felt I needed, and take the risk. Because I see it all here and I know, I see myself taking the risk. But I feel the results, and I thank you all for showing me that I can take the risk. And I will take the risk from now on.

SHARING: I want to say something about the experience of having one's life fall apart, which certainly can look like insanity or spiritual emergency. I think they used to call it sometimes, a nervous break down, it's not a clinical term, but they used to use that.

In my own experience my life was built around my marriage and my religion, and my search for God, which was religious. And I got my sense of value and worthwhileness from serving the people who served the function of the roles—husband, and father, and provider, and good Christian. And it came to the point where I could not live in the marriage, and that was a mutual changing of my ex-wife and I. It wasn't something either of us planned, it wasn't understood by either of us. But the ways that she treated me and the ways that I reacted at her being the active party, and me being the passive one. It just didn't work for either one of us anymore. And I came to the point where it just all fell apart.

This began, I think, before Paul's business fell apart, but it was certainly... I was living through it as he was living through his.

One of the experiences I had that impresses me, and now I understand even better why. I was standing in the kitchen and I was fixing a sandwich and I was not supporting my family. I didn't have children to be an absentee father, or to not support them. And I was fixing a sandwich and I really didn't understand why I was eating because the scripture would go through my mind, "He who will not work, let him also not eat." And my judgments on myself were so harsh, because I was failing at all my roles. I couldn't understand why I would be eating, something else was doing it. And there was a feeling which wasn't appreciated at the time it was just this wonderment, but now I understand much better it was a feeling of my value, of my integrity—there was the cause of my eating, you know my beliefs didn't make it seem proper.

After I came in touch with A Course In Miracles I used to sit on my bed and read a little bit, and then go into a meditative place and watch my mind spin, sort of like a whirlwind of dust particles or dirty fragments, sort of a gray whirl. Which pleased me very much, because I had already understood that I must be crazy, that the world didn't represent the level of anxiety that I was feeling. And my experience when I went into it didn't cooperate it, but I still couldn't not have it.

So the Course began to explain how the ego worked, it enlightened to me how my insanity worked. Ever since then, I told somebody at lunch, I've become a great component of both insanity and ignorance, because there nothing to be afraid of. And yet that's where the fear is predicated. The idea of becoming insane is nonsense, insanity is more or less where we find ourselves. Because this whole thing is insane.

So when we think, "I'm okay and the problem is you," or "they," or "the world," or "life in general," or even "me"—the problem is somewhere else and you believe it, that's as insane as it gets.

When you begin to say, "Wait a minute maybe I'm crazy, maybe the way I'm looking at things doesn't quite match—something." You can only see that from a position of greater sanity, because when you begin to see insanity and call it sanity, that's sanity. So I want to encourage everyone if you look a little bit insane, look a little more.

And if you notice that your ignorant, that there's something that you don't know, don't make it up and then spend your life trying to prove that you're right or make it true. Go ahead and not know, live with it. You can find out something valuable that way, something that you didn't know before.

It's been about ten, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, I don't know when this stuff starts, years since I went through that. And it was very painful going through, but I've come out now, and it's wonderful to be able to live with my not knowing and value it, and to value my ignorance so that I don't try to cure it or heal it, and I allow it to be the door to something valuable.

And when I had my testimony that the break down of the structure of a life to the point where you can't even support it is not something to be feared even though as Raj said everybody hates it. Me too. But it's worth it. And I believe we don't arrive at that point until some kind of inner selection process, where we arrive grown up enough to be willing to not support our version of insanity. And to go ahead and move through it. Thank you.

PAUL: Thank you.

SHARING: I had a chance not to share this, and I keep coming to the edge with it. So I guess I'm supposed to share this. It's about insanity. And I've never said this to anybody before. And I think the thing I have the greatest fear about is insanity. And it's only because I've seen it around me, because my mother is rather insane and my son is schizophrenic. And it's only because I allowed myself to be locked in an institution for ten days when I had a post-partem depression after my twins were born.

It was in an institution in Georgia, and I signed myself in because my psychologist husband said, "You're crazy, you've got to go in there." I got in there, and I'd realized what I'd done. I said, "My God, I'm in here and now I've got to go through the process of proving I'm sane."

I've never told this to anybody. I've told about an abortion, I've told my daughter was raped by five men. I've told everything. It wasn't as horrible as this. And I've never been able to speak of it because I'm a therapist, and I've got to be credible. And it's awful, it's a burden to have to be so damn credible all the time—and I don't need to be, I know that.

So I was in there, and I didn't get shock treatment, and I didn't get thorazine, because I prayed. And I realized why I was in there after I got in there: it was to heal and help the people that were going through that process and stand by them and talk to them under my breathe and say, "It's really okay, it's really okay."

But I was plotting and planning, and I was super sane and I got out in ten days. And once I got out believe me (she cackled)! The reason I got in there was I was going through a spiritual emergency. And my husband was terrified. And he was a psychologist and he couldn't handle super-bitch, who was stomping on things and dumping things out of drawers and raging. So that's what happened to me.

And when I got out though I became crafty, and I became watchful, and I became distrustful. And I said, "Never again will I every trust to the extent that I had done before." And I made a decision, but that decision was hurtful to me, because then it kept me from allowing the healing that was all around me to happen.

And so you see what happens with all of us? And don't you ever tell anybody about this, do you understand—ever. And I'm a therapist and it's okay. But my son sees UFO's, and he's locked up. And I'm seeing UFO's and little people, and I'm not locked up. And it doesn't matter, it's all insanity. It feels like it's insane if you try to figure it out. And so I quit trying. All I knew was to keep my mouth shut, a lot of the time. It depends on who you are talking with, I mean sharing with whether you keep your mouth shut or whether you can open it. So I feel very much a liar having said that. It won't be in the book I'm writing. And I will deny ever saying it, but I said it. Okay?

SHARING: You're talking about sanity and insanity, sure I was manic too. I've learned that it's fun to be insane. I don't claim anything but insanity. And I really haven't found a good definition of it. My friend and I just say, "define insanity." Look around you and see if you can define it. It's everywhere.

SHARING: I don't know what I'm really going to say except there are few people more that I know have made a visit to the hospital. And I would like for them to share. I would like to know how many have been there? I have! My greatest point of enlightenment was at twenty years old and four months in the snake pit.

I don't really want to go in that, but I would like to know how many have walked through the challenge of credibility. I think that is the ego's biggest block. And I think that all of our energy is spent in trying to maintain a sensible sense of self. And when we reach that point where that sense is nonsense, we take the world's definition that it must be insanity.

So I have excepted for many years the fact that I will never find out who I am. And that has released a great burden of personal responsibility for myself. I think it's a major breakthrough to stop worrying about who I am and my credibility. So anyway I sure hope to hear some more stories.

SHARING: My story is a little different, because yesterday when Raj came to us I was given the words, "I am living light." And it just made me feel totally indestructible. I mean, the visual that goes with that is so beautiful. I mean how can you do anything in any place or time that could somehow negatively effect the idea of being "living light." And when I went back to my room I just felt that everything was saying that to me. I looked out the window and the tree was saying "I am living light," and the lake said, "I am living light." And I felt a real sense of oneness with that.

SHARING: Well my experience today was very much like what Paul has said and what a lot of us have said about the quality of love. And I looked out also and felt like I was one and am one. And I've known that about with the trees and the water and the "smile of the Great Spirit" for quite awhile over the years as I would admit to other experiences.

But as time progressed, I knew that it was while Raj was talking about healing that I realized that healing was starting in me. I have many, many of me's inside, and there are many labels for that, which I don't need to put on it. And as I was leaving, after we had all been together somebody said to me, "Have you been healed?" And I said, "The process is occurring."

And for me, the parts of me that are very real for me, and that now many are identifying as a reality for some people, they've been real to me for a very long time. And they're alive, and some ways of treating this kind of a many people inside, there's some people that say they all merge, and there's some people who say they don't.

And I've known how it is for me: Each one's alive, each ones real, I am all of it. And today I sat before lunch watching the lake and "the smile of the Holy Spirit," and we all got reintroduced in a whole new way, because I could greet each one of these parts of me that are me, and I'm all of them, with a new awareness.

And I'm more whole and I'm in all those separate parts at the same time and for me the healing was a gift of that love among us and inside of me and the way it spills over into that water, and as I watched the pine tree out the window.

And I also took a moment to spontaneously go to my room and I brought—as I said to someone, an accumulation of many little altars in my home with me—and took the bag that's been with me the longest, and opened it up and went through the contents. And we all got reacquainted again—all those spiritual journey's, those moments of faith for me, and the voices from my native American guides, and all the other's I've met along this path.

So for me it's been a day of healing, and that love that we all experienced it's like it's all around and in me and here and I'm overjoyed. And I've through the end of the rope, I'm not sure how much I've let go of. But I certainly know now how much I love and it'll just make whatever the next end of the rope is easier to know. And I was so appreciative of the way that was shared today by Raj, about... just so you know. And now I think we all got a piece of "Just so you know."

And I'm so happy people have spoken about these spiritual emergencies, cause there are lots of us... I have many, many friends who walk around being in a spiritual emergency because they're just being that way alive every day. And it's like what you said about always being credible. We're credible and we know it, those of us who have other folks inside, but people out there have no idea what we're doing with keeping credible out there for them. So thanks for listening, and I'm really happy to be here.

SHARING: I don't know why this came to me just this moment to share, but about a week ago I participated in this really long, like two hour interview. It was part of a psychology study that Columbia University was doing. And as this woman on the other end of the phone was asking me these questions, it became so incredibly apparent how slight the distinctions between normality and abnormality were. How I had to lie to the answers to her questions most of the time to just get through the interview: Like do you hear voices that other people don't hear? Or do you ever see things that other people don't see? I don't know, just this whole list of question.

And it made me realize that the answers to normal or not normal were such a slight shift in perspective, just a slight shift, that yea, I'm okay. I'm okay and that makes me normal, and that makes my definition of what's normal okay.

SHARING: Well, I had probably my own breakdown back in the eighties, early eighties. And I didn't know at the time but I was deeply depressed, and I would have been hospitalized but I didn't have insurance. It really came down to that. And the guy I was seeing wanted to know if my parents would put the house up. And at that point I realized that I needed another option.

Well, it turns out that at that time, and for much of the time since I've been working as a psychiatric nurse. So I've certainly seen many people in a distressed condition. In fact there came a time when I realized there was nothing that I hadn't seen. When you work at anything long enough you seem to get a picture of anything that could possibly come your way. And that's what happened after awhile.

I never had a problem with the patience, but I always seemed to have difficulty with the staff and the institution. And I have felt for some time the feelings that the lawyer was suggesting about my work. And it's become increasingly difficult for me to work. So this right now is the end of my rope in some ways, because I have no where to work, or at least that's the way it appears to me.

I spent two months on a farm in New Jersey, working there because it was what came up—it was what my guide suggested. And then when I came back the hospital called and wanted to know if I would work again. And I really can't do that.

I just wanted to mention it, because I've been full cycle in so many different ways. I've been down deeply enough to be suicidal and to need hospitalization, and certainly I've seen other people who have collapsed and come through the system.

Last night was a very powerful experience, I had a very powerful healing last night, and I felt I dropped some baggage that I carried for a long time. But today I'd have to say that it has been one of those times when I felt like that there was some misery of the circumstances, even in this setting, even with all of these people I felt somewhat lost and uncertain.

I think at times that it has to do with this sense of not knowing what's next, and of not knowing when the answers or the suggestions are coming from guide, and when their coming from my ego in disguise.

Today I have to thank the group, there were many times when my ego would come up with a suggestion and I didn't know that that's where it was coming from. And there have been a couple of people and they probably don't know who they are, who have been able today to remind me of that.

PAUL: Thank you.

SHARING: Probably good I'm last, because I'm going to present a little different viewpoint: I come to you a happy man. I said if I weren't involved in A Course In Miracles I would probably feel guilty about this. Fortunately I got over that. I guess my cross is my normality. I feel so damn normal it's disgusting. And maybe that's what I have to breakthrough, I don't know. But I feel I'm going down the same rope with everybody else, and all our ropes are different, but it all comes down to the same thing: The leap of faith that you have to make at the end of the rope. And my feeling is I'm getting very close to it, and I feel very good about that.

And I do feel happy with my life. And I feel happy with today. I think today was just a wonderful experience. I've never felt quite the way I've felt this morning. It was just great. One of the things that it reminded me of was something that Raj said yesterday, and that was: "If you knew how many others were in this room with you, you would be astonished." And I asked Paul last night if it would be possible to ask Raj who was with us. And he said, "Why don't we try." Raj could you tell us?

ANSWER: I am going to keep you in suspense. I promise I will tell you tomorrow.

SHARING: Wonderful! Thank you.

QUESTION: This is not the question I prepared with. But I was one of the biggest ones that kept saying, "I wish you'd talk about ascension." So I'm asking if you please will do that, and would you preface that with the answer to last night's question about who all was there with us besides yourself.

ANSWER: Well, of course, every single one of your guides is also present here. And although this is not strictly speaking an accurate statement, they are standing present with you, just behind you.

Now, I must explain something: Those of the Brotherhood who are Awake stand in anticipation of the Awakening of those who are still in various stages of sleep and dreaming. And when there is a stirring occurring among those who are dreaming, there is a rejoicing that occurs, and what you could call, a gathering that occurs in readiness to welcome you Home. Not just to welcome you, but for those who are Awake to share in the fact of the increase of the conscious experience of their Wholeness.

Now, you must understand that since, what we will call the Brotherhood—the Sons and Daughters of God are One—if there is some part of the Brotherhood that is asleep, the Brotherhood as a Whole is not experiencing its Totality, in this sense: They are not able to enjoy your being conscious of your part in it.

And because of the stirrings that are occurring here, there are many who are gathered not only awaiting your recognition of them, but also standing in support of this fearful thing that you are in the process of doing, called waking up. Standing in support of it so that you might feel a level of comfort and safety that will allow you to say "Yes"—that will allow you to let go more.

Now, the room is illuminated with a light that is exceedingly bright, because the presence of You and the presence of those who are in attendance, the brightness of Us all is great. And the Light is Living Love.

Now, I'm changing the subject. Because the three-dimensional frame of reference is linear you all tend to think of progress as linear—moving from past to future, moving from ignorance to enlightenment. And so when you think of ascension, you think of moving in a straight line from here to somewhere else, except it's usually up. In your experience of linearity, which you call time, you will come to a point that is not the end of the line of time, but a point where right in the middle of the time line you fall through the middle of it—sink through the middle of it.

Imagine, if you will, that there is a thread moving through infinite space, and you are like ants walking along the thread, and the thread and its characteristics are what you consider to be the totality of life. If you were to fall off the thread, you would discover that you are in space. All of a sudden the infinity that this thread had been in the middle of would be what you would discover to be your environment. It has been said that eternity is not endless time, but if you take one second of time and snuff it out, that is eternity. When the thread disappears, infinity is what you experience.

You think of ascension as moving through space from the surface of your planet to... and you're not really sure about that part. But ascension is a different kind of movement. It is an inner shift of perception, what else? It is the shift we were talking about yesterday, from identification with the body to identification with and as the Conscious Awareness that you Are, in which the experience of body and universe is going on.

We were actually talking about ascension yesterday. It is a dissolving of your conviction that you are a body, in which the body doesn't disappear. And as the actual full conscious experience of being, Consciousness, replaces your conviction that you're nothing more than a tiny body, as I said, the reversal of what I described yesterday happens, and the body begins to become less dense. And the energy that it is begins once again to register with you as light—as nonorganic, visibility and tangibility of the Presence of God as God expressing Himself where you are.

Now, this may sound confusing, because it sounds like I'm saying you're still going to have a body. Well, indeed, you're going to be identified. It's just that you are not going to identify solely with this specificness of you, because All That Is, Infinity, Infinite Conscious Awareness, the Infinite Mind of God, will be what you now recognize and experience to be your identity.

God is at one and the same time universal and specific. And, therefore, you are universal and specific. God is not some infinite, nebulous, luminous cloud of love with no characteristics to It except Light and warmth, let us say, the warmth of Love. God is the universal Formless, capital "F" Formless, infinite Mind, which in order to be Mind, in order to be Conscious must be conscious of something. And because this Mind is infinite the only thing there is for It to be conscious of is Itself. And Its movement is the Movement of Being what It is and recognizing what It is.

Now, this description fits you also. But you see, the Mind that God Is moves, and the movement is the Movement of Consciousness, which is a movement of self-recognition, and God recognizes Himself but does not vacate that place of the formlessness just because He sees the infinite visibility and tangibility of what He perfectly Is.

When I have told you that it is important for you to go within and go to that not-knowing place—that place where you are not in control—I am describing, what I'm going to call, an equivalent of the formlessness of God, out of which the Movement of God moves and is recognized by God. You could say that in your process of Awakening, by virtue of going within to the edge of the void, is the equivalent of what God is Being.

Now, I want you to be careful here of my use of words, because there really isn't a you separate from God to do something that is the equivalent of what God is Being. But it is helpful for me to use the words because here's what happens: When you dare to go into the not-knowing place and abide there and live from there, you then experience the marvel of Knowing, with a capital "K", and experiencing, what I'm going to say, in a limited way being at the threshold of the Movement of Creation.

By virtue of your doing that more and more consistently until you arrive at a point where you are willing to commit to being every moment out from that place, it apparently moves you in your humanness to the place where your divinity can be consistently experienced by you.

Up to this point it still seems to be a limited human you doing a procedure, even though it is an uncontrolled and uncontrollable procedure. All that you can bring to this process is a willingness to do nothing besides the effortless act of being empty of your own beliefs and your own definitions about everything, and your own sense of having to maintain an identity to present to everyone else.

When you arrive at the point of commitment, commitment to be from this effortless place in the world, you could say that you come into such perfect alignment with what you divinely are that a shift occurs because there is nothing left from the standpoint of your private, tiny, little sense of self to claim a presence separate from the Father—which is being exactly the same thing.

And because you have come into such perfect alignment with what already Is, the sense of a separate you doing it, disappears forever. And You not having disappeared (mind you it's just a sense of being separate that disappears) you are flooded with all that God is being, the formless, being the not-knowing place, being the edge, so to speak, of the movement of "Behold I make all things new." It is only at this point that you can possibly be considered to be a co-creator with God. And the only reason you're a co-creator with God is because you have forsaken a stance separate from God—as something that can cooperate with God.

It is very important for you to understand that at every moment you are confronted only with the Kingdom of Heaven, no matter how you are biasing your experience of it with perceptions colored with your own personal definitions. Ascension is You, your present sense of yourself melting, you might say, losing its crystallized definitions. And in the happening of that, as it has been said, “All tears are wiped from your eyes. The scales fall from your eyes. The veil is lifted.” And you see the Kingdom of Heaven that’s going on right here, right now. And the Brotherhood, which is right here, right now, seen and unseen, will be perfectly obvious to you.

It’s important for you to understand this, because you are conditioned to believe that in this transformation of you, you will lose all of this, and so you postpone it until some day when you think you will have had your fill of it. The only thing is, that, whether you have a dream that lasts seventy years and then have another dream, called another lifetime, that lasted another number of years, just as you can have many dreams in a single night of sleep. The dreamer is still present in the Kingdom of Heaven. And the dream is still about the Kingdom of Heaven, because there isn’t anything else available to you. You are either experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven clearly or unclearly—but you’re never experiencing anything else.

The more you can abide with these things that I have been saying to you the easier it will be for you to allow the shift to occur, because you will see that there’s nothing to it. All of the pieces of the puzzle are out. All of the elements of You as you divinely Are are present and actually being experienced, even if you may be ignoring part of it because you have biased your attention and focused in on some limited area of the Totality of You.

As you begin to understand that all the ingredients for the “cake” are here, and you’re either utilizing them or you’re not, you will see that the idea or the belief that you can’t make a “cake” because you haven’t gotten the ingredients from the store yet, are false. And with no excuse for not making the “cake,” you’ll decide to make it sooner. All of the elements necessary for your Awakening are actively going on in you at this very moment.

Ascension is the experience of the realization of the Truth and the letting in of it, and the transformation of your experience of yourself back into what you actually always have been.

Ascension is not a movement through space to another place. Many of you will remember when cinemascope movies first came out. And as part of the illustration of how wonderful it was, the movie would start out with your standard small screen and then dramatically the camera would go to a large view, and then the screen would begin to expand. You could say there is a similar feeling—it is like you with your very tight body orientation. When I said you will melt, it’s like you will expand like the cinemascope screen, embracing everything and finding yourself in it, because the insistence on identifying yourself in a tiny way has been released.

Most of you here have experienced moments of illumination in which you felt your Oneness with everything. When that happened, everything did not dissolve into an indescribable, nebulous vapor of light. Everything was still what it was. I mean, everything was still there, everything was still distinctly what is was. And yet it wasn't what it had been, because now you felt You there.

It is difficult to truly convey this in words, but those of you who have had the experience know exactly what I mean. That was what I would call a glimpse of the universal Conscious experience of Being. It was still limited, but it was a glimpse of how you could be universal and specific at the same time—how you could be You and All at the same time. It is your birthright to be in that state and more, all the time.

In your transformation everything is transformed. Because your insistence on being tiny, which has caused you to feel small and vulnerable in a dangerous and hostile environment, has caused you, as I just said, to define your environment as hostile. And so, your every action is an attack on your environment, an attack by virtue of constant defense against what might happen. And in this way you have created a distorted experience of everything.

And then you know what's happened? You have stored those images and thoughts and feelings in your memory. And years of memory have gone by, and then you say, "I can remember when I was a boy, or I can remember when I was a teenager, etc., and the world was this way." Well, the world wasn't that way at all! The way it was was, it was the Kingdom of Heaven.

Your present attack on the world by virtue of your present defense against it, is supported by nothing Real. Your past is a past of images held in the memory, that were images that were already distorted. Historically speaking, "Such-and-such-a-thing happens, therefore, I can bet on it that it will happen today." And you reinforce the distortion.

You know what? All of you came for this week, all of you came as individuals from your own individual spheres of experience. And all of you looked forward to having the opportunity to ask at least one specific question relating to your distorted perception of life, except that you thought it was reality. And we could have gone through all five days of this gathering, we could have passed through the rows much faster, and you could have gotten wonderful answers specifically relating to a particular aspect of your distorted perception of life.

And like many other self-help workshops you would have gone home with some marvelous tools. And the next gathering we would have would probably be full of a multitude of people who you had told about these marvelous tools that helped you to live your dream better.

But it has been important, not because I say it's important and not because it's an agenda I have, it's important because even those who didn't have much of an idea of what they would encounter here, were prompted by their Soul to come, because there wasn't as much sludge covering it up. Meaning, there was enough clarity, enough low density to your belief structures to allow you to feel the desire to come to that place where real transformation could occur.

You don't need to know how to manipulate your world better. What you need is a clearer awareness that it really is the Kingdom of Heaven, and that your fellow man really is the Christ because you are the Christ. And you need to know how to move into that place where you can experience the Christ that you Are. And you need to hear it in the way that we have been talking about it, so that it indeed feels most natural right here and right now.

In the evening if you go into your room and turn on your TV it seems to present a different picture from what you are experiencing here. Notice that I said experiencing, not hearing about.

When you "go back out into the world," I encourage you to not watch the TV too much. Watch it enough to have an idea of what the dream is about, of what the dynamics are that clarity is needed about. Don't watch it so that you may slip into it and join the mainstream again. Watch it enough to know what you need to take to the threshold within yourself, and ask what is the Truth about this, and listen for Knowing that will not be drawn from your old conditionings.

The world does seem to reinforce the fact that God and the Kingdom of Heaven and Reality are in another place in another time—impossible here. One of the reasons this was a residential workshop was so that we might be able to enjoy an extended time together, in which to be on a new basis, be in an environment where the possibility that this is the Kingdom of Heaven could begin to feel maybe even reasonable, and maybe even natural. Because I will tell you something: That is what will heal the way in which you be in the world when the world is bombarding you with ideas to the contrary.

I want you to know something else: When you are at work, when you are at the office or wherever you are, and there are other people around you, I want you to remember that their guides are standing just behind them also. And, therefore, whether you're on a bus, whether you're in an office, whether you're in a library, whether you're in A Course In Miracles group, or a Sunday church service, the place you're in is illuminated, and it has nothing to do with it being a church. It has to do with the fact that divine beings are there, meaning each one of you together with each of your guides.

I say this to you so that you might have, let us say, a new context with which to be there. I want you to know that because this company of Individualities is present wherever Individualities are, then if in the midst of your daily activities you choose first to go within and listen for what is true, listen for what is appropriate and act upon it, if you do that, it is almost as though a cheer goes up, “Right on! Go for it!” from those of us who stand in support of that clarity, even though all the ones you can see might fumble a bit, or be a little bit surprised at the brilliance you’re suddenly expressing, the way somehow you are always managing to have the right answer or to do the right thing or to be like the lady on the Indian reservation who makes it easy for other people to like themselves better. You all have cheering sections when you are willing to be out from your divine Selfhood to the best of your ability.

Ascension could also be called Graduation. Heaven isn’t out there, up there—it is up there, but it is also right here. You see, as long as you think of Heaven as being up there or beyond death, you simply won’t look for it where you are. And this is the way the ego distracts you from waking up. And so, you are never paying attention where the opportunity for waking up from suffering can occur. You’re looking where it can’t occur. It cannot occur in the future. It can’t occur in another dimension that somehow, someday you will graduate to—because someday you’ll still be wherever you are, which will be here.

It’s my intent to make it easier for you, make it easy for you to let go and have your attention right where the opportunity to wake up is, which is always in the moment of conscious experience that you are experiencing.

All of you have thought of ascension as being lifted up into Heaven. It’s more like melting down into Heaven, relaxing into what already is, right here and right now by virtue of not being at odds with where you are because you have acquired definitions of it that are hostile.

You attack this world by seeing it differently than it is. And you attack it to keep yourself safe. Well, you’re safely asleep, you’re safely unconscious of Reality right in the middle of it. Unfortunately, that kind of safety is uncomfortable no matter how much you try to make yourself comfortable.

But as each one of you begins to bless your world by not referring to it in a polarized way, by refusing to speak of it as though it is all chance, you will find it seeming to become friendlier. You will find it beginning to cooperate with you. You will find wonderful things beginning to happen. Why? Because your defense will be lowered, and in the lowering of that defense you will be expressing love. And love given by you is reflected in love that comes back from your world—not because your world has changed, but because you are not eliciting a false experience by virtue of your own negative projection.

Ascension has been in process since the beginning of the gathering. For many of you ascension has been in progress before this gathering. And actually, because you will inevitably realize what you have been from the beginning, ascension has been in progress from the moment you first lost sight of who you were, because who you were has continued to be who you Are and has insistently been insinuating itself into your distorted perception, causing it to break down or causing you as your tiny sense of yourself to get busy and reinforce your illusion.

Now we spent a great deal of time yesterday afternoon apparently talking about the hard work involved. Because of who each one of you divinely is, because the Presence of God is the constituting presence of you at this moment, whether you're acknowledging it or not, and because that constituting presence of You that is God has never stopped being the constituting presence of you, that is the fact that has been insinuating itself into your experience and breaking down your ego structures. That is why as they break down and you insist upon holding on to them, you finally arrive at the end of your rope.

You see, it is what you have never stopped truly being that pressures you to that point that you call the end of your rope. It is because something is very Right with you (with a capital "R") that you find yourself at the end of a rope—at the end of a rope of a false sense of yourself that is limiting you and bound you. Your capital "S" Self, your essential capital "B" Being, causes your ego sense of yourself to fail, bringing your ego to the end of its rope. And when you let go of the rope, what do you fall into? You fall into the integrity that you Are that is effortless.

So here's the picture I want you to have: Underneath the end of the rope is You, with a capital "Y", and the hand that is pushing you down to the end of your rope is your own divine hand. That is why you must not be afraid of the distress that you may experience in the process of this breakdown. What is promoting the breakdown is what you divinely Are insisting upon penetrating your false imprisonment in illusion. And what it is making you give up into is You Consciously Aware of who you divinely Are. And so, it is a process "of ascension," of the revealing to you as an experience of who you Are.

And not one of you comes to the end of your rope, not one of you comes to a breakdown by chance. It's because breakthrough is possible. And if you don't get drugged by thorazine, and distracted from the process you will have breakthrough. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: With respect to this question I would like to request that the answer not be given immediately after I ask the question, because I'd like to make a comment concerning the question first.

My question is: What are the more significant misunderstandings or misperceptions concerning the materials in A Course In Miracles? And how can we correct those misunderstandings or misperceptions?

Before that question is answered, however, I would like to ask everyone in this room to help me with what I'm about to say. I'm very, very nervous, so bear with me.

I would like all of you to create an energy and I would like you to focus this energy at Paul's heart. And I would like it to be an energy of support.

And I would like it to be an energy of encouragement. And above all, I would like it to be an energy of love. And I'm going to take the liberty now of speaking for everyone in this group: Paul we love you very, very much, and we do not want you to ask Raj for the answer to my question, we want you to ask your Self—capital "S"—for the answer.

PAUL: This is me Paul. You do not want the answer from Raj, is that correct?

QUESTION: No, want the answer from your Self, with a capital "S".

PAUL: [long time coming] Don't just direct it toward my heart, (laughter) please embrace all of me.

I just heard someone whisper, "It's a hard one." Don't give those kinds of words to yourself when you are listening.

I will put it this way: The most common misperception of the Course is, that it IS about something. And it is read in order to find out what IT is about. It is not read the way a two year old picks up an autumn leaf off the ground and looks at it for the first time. It doesn't think what is IT about. The child may even put it in its mouth. The child just abides with it in all sorts of ways. This book needs to be read with unconditional delight, with unconditionalness.

The child playing with the leaf does not start a science of leaves, or a system of thought about it, but as a result of being with it his experience is expanded. You cannot read the Course without shifts of perception occurring, simply because exposure to truth resonates with you—with us. And that resonance constitutes a strengthening, a strengthening in the sense of a greater unity.

I'm wondering why I'm sitting here with my eyes closed talking like Raj. Thanks a lot. (Laughter)

QUESTION: You are welcome. (Laughter)

PAUL: The biggest misperception about it, as I experience it is, that it's something more than an example, as I said the first night, that it's something more than an example of what happens when you get out of the way and listen. When, as I understand Helen Schucman did, one arrives at a point where one is sick and tired of trying to be good, trying to be right, trying to do what you're suppose to do, and arrives at a point of, in so many words saying, "There must be another way." And you don't know what that way is, but you just know there has to be another way. That's coming to the end of your rope, that's one of the ways of expressing coming to the end of your rope.

Darn it! When I start talking, I start getting emotional.

The Course, from my experience of it, is extremely valuable. Raj has said, "do not read the Course," to me, because he wants me to be working with him. But he directs me to places in the Course from time to time, and from time to time I pick it up and will read it at random or there are what are call dessert cards that have one liners from the Course, and I'll sometimes pick one of those at the beginning of the day, and after sort of abiding with what it means, I will then go to the place in the Course where that line is from so that I can read the paragraph and see the context that it actually occurred in.

Actually I picked it up this morning, and I think there's something in it that I happened to turn to that I think I will probably shared with everybody at the breakfast on Friday morning. It was amazing.

You know what its valuable, because no matter who picks it up, no matter what point in their development they're at they will find something in it that addresses them at that moment. But it's not there to be studied as a science, it's not there to be studied as a teaching. It's there to be observed, you might say, and then you just allow what happens as a result of the observation to happen, and you go on your way. Like the child observes and experiences the leaf, and goes on to a bug, or a whatever.

The function of the Course—I'm not saying what the Course says its function is—my Self is saying: The function of the Course is to promote shifts of perception. The ego wants to understand something, and the Course doesn't address the ego. The Course addresses in each one of us the one you asked to talk this morning—the Real Us. And as a result of connecting with Us there, it helps undermine our egos, and helps us move out of our egos.

The marvelous thing about it is that this function occurs even if, as an ego, you're trying to study it, and acquire information and tools to live your life better, and love your fellow man better. All of that stuff goes on, but your Soul has been connected with. And because of the connection with your Soul you do better with your fellow man, and not because you know you're doing it.

The book is there because you're ready. The book comes into your experience because it reflects what you're ready for. It comes to you because you are ready to see what you are ready for. And you find in it what you already know, no matter that tomorrow there may be more that you're ready to know, and so you see more tomorrow. It isn't because it was designed to give you something and so it was stored in the book—it's in you.

And because the book is an expression of communion that came when Helen said, "there's got to be a better way," and didn't know what it was, and opened up, and just listened without figuring out the better way. Because of that there's an expression of simple clarity that anyone can recognize when it surfaces within them, and they need confirmation for it because they can't trust themselves totally yet.

So the biggest misperception is that the book is a teacher and not the person reading the book. Now, this isn't true only of the Course, it's true about any book that anybody designates to be a holy book of any sort. But the Course has much less distortion in it than most other books including the Bible. And the only reason the Bible has distortions in it, is because scribes added their own little things to it as copying and recopying was being done. And the Council at Nicaea made decisions about what would be there, or how it ought to be rephrased and so on.

So the biggest misconception about the Course is that the Truth is in it. The way you correct that mistake is by somehow arriving at a point where you can conceive of a possibility that it's all about you—not it—the book is all about you. Whatever is happening is all about you, including the book. And so when you pick up the book, the only thing you can find in it is yourself. And the more of yourself that you're letting register with you, the more you're going to find in the book. And it's going to seem as though somebody keeps sticking in new pages, even though it's the same words you read before, it's like you never read those words before.

Absolutely everyone who has read that book has seen it through the bias of his or her own peculiar mindsets, no matter how authoritative any of these people might seem to be. And I'm going to use Ken Wapniks name, for those of you who are not familiar with the Course it really doesn't matter. But people invest Ken with authority, because he was involved in the development of the book and continues to be an outspoken carrier of the good news, let's say. And I am positive that he would concur one hundred percent with what I'm saying right now. He reads it with his own biases, because he knows as well as all of us really know that there's no way to reading anything except through whatever our lens of perception is.

So don't give your power away to anybody, and I'm also positive that Ken does not want anyone to give their power away to him and see him as the one to be the definer of what the Course means. But just know that what he says is expressed through whatever degree of biases still present.

If you don't make the mistake of forgetting that you're seeing yourself in it, then you won't ever give your power away to anyone or to that book, or to what ultimately you think that book is saying. So you don't want to get hung up on what you think it's saying, because then that will be to you what the book is about, and now were dealing again with just the memory of the definition you gave it, and that is a hang-up. So the one who is reading it, is the one that's being read, I guess you could say it that way. And again, because the book came through when ego was out of the way, it becomes a pretty flawless mirror of the divine one who's reading it. That's the point. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. I just want to share with the group that the other day when you said that you accessed your Self with a capital "S" only once, I immediately heard that I must ask you a question and direct it to your Higher Self. I also immediately said, "That's insane. I can't do that to this guy. I'm going to put him on a hot seat. I love him. I'm going to embarrass him." But it wouldn't go away. And I'm a little emotional when I talk about this.

So I got the message, “Well, what will you ask him?” Because I’m a great invalidator, I analyze things to death. So I started to formulate how I was going to do it, and every time I would formulate it I would start to cry. And I got the message that the crying was the validation that it was an authentic request from wherever to do that. And that you were being pushed, and you’re going to continue to be pushed. And somehow, some way you’re going to have to get in touch with your capital “S” in anyway and in any shape that you can. And I’m very privileged that all of us were a part in whatever help that might have been to you.

PAUL: You’re welcome. Thank you.

(In jest, joking) Now that I know what this hand looks like pushing me to the end of my rope, I’m going to watch out for you. Also, Raj may do these workshops for free, but that little segment cost a thousand dollars. (Tremendous laughter)

QUESTION: I don’t really want to do this, or be here right now in this spot that I am feeling, but yet I do feel deeply something, and I do have a follow up question.

And before that I would just like to say, it’s very important to me. Again, the question was brought up, “who or what is Raj?” And when we access our Selves I am very concerned with the tendency of taking credit for authority for what we say when we’re in touch directly. So this is still an issue with me, concerning connecting with the Higher Self. We really are not in a fully awakened state, I feel, to take that step without an Awakened Brother. And I can’t help but feel deeply that for myself.

The second part of this is, I am addressing this to Raj/God. The second part is, “Raj do you have anything you would like to say around the misperceptions you’re finding happening with the Course?” Thank you.

ANSWER: As to who I really am, we did deal with that the other day. But I will answer it differently, in terms of my function with Paul, and in terms of the function of your guides relative to you.

I am, we are—meaning all of the guides—present to provide you with an alternative experience of being conscious, an alternative experience of being conscious and being able to function in the world from that alternative experience. Now it isn’t one of many alternative experiences. It’s really the only other choice there is. But when one reaches out to the Holy Spirit or one’s guide, one is reaching out to that which is being the perfect expression of the Father’s Will in such a way as to help secure you in your feeling of safety while you are not being in charge the way you have been, and the way that has helped you feel secure.

Your guides function with you has been described by Paul, because it was his realization of the similarity as being the same as an ice skating teacher. And if you are having trouble leaning into a curve as you go around the end of the rink, your skating teacher will come up to you, put his arm around your waist, bring your hip up against his and as you go around the curve he will lean and you will lean, because he has you pressed against his hip. And in having the experience of going around the curve and being able to feel what it feels like while you feel secure, you realize, “Oh, I can do that.” But as long as you felt sure you were going to fall flat on your face, and as long as you were insecure, you wouldn’t let yourself have the experience all by yourself.

Being in touch with your guidance is not the end. Being in touch with your guidance helps you get the feel for being without being in control. It gives you the experience at being without small “s” self-consciousness, which is the equivalent of fear. It still isn’t you skating by yourself, but it is that experience which allows you to do it over and over again with help until you finally find that the help is getting in the way of your additional freedom, and you fly on your own—but you fly securely from an egoless base. So that is who I am relative to Paul, and that is who your guides are relative to you.

Regarding my answer as to what the most common mistake is and the solution, it is not different from Paul’s. And Paul’s and my “answer” is not different from anyone else’s connected, centered, egoless answer. It is obvious. It just is the answer. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Before I ask my question, I want to share a really profound gratefulness to you Raj and those other beings who are here supporting this movement now and in the past and in the future. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You’ve talked a lot in the past few days about us as individualities undoing, waking up, moving through fear, or trauma, or excruciation. And my question moves from that to looking at our role as individualities in supporting others who are going through that process.

My husband and I have been standing vigil with a friend of ours who is dying of Aids. And in the process with him we have watched supportive of him going through the various stages of dying. And he is very fearful. He is not fearful so much, or says that he is not fearful of actually dying, but rather he is fearful of what will kill him—what illness he will get to precipitate his death. And in that he has also asked me for assistance in ending his life, should his suffering become too great.

So I would like for you to comment about what is my, our role when faced with situations like that—and for us this situation?

ANSWER: I cannot give you an absolute answer to that. I mean by that that I cannot give you an answer that could be applied in every instance that this kind of thing might come up.

The very first thing you must do, the very first thing anyone must do if they are presented with this situation is to very deeply and very honestly ask yourself whether or not it is appropriate to engage so closely with such a process. The answer is not always “yes” and the answer is not always “no.” But the answer will truly depend upon a genuine and honest assessment of whether or not you are up to it. You must honor yourself first, because if you do not you will adopt a dishonest position that will not be helpful to you or to the other person. And you are not to assume that if you are spiritually advanced the answer will always be “yes,” or that you certainly will be able to be closely involved with this process.

In some ways this is for the person who is helping—I do not mean helping end a life—but helping one who is in a process of seeming to experience his life coming to an end. This is very much like going through a hurricane. It is a crisis. It is a place where profound centeredness is needed. And if you think that it is highly unlikely that you will be able to come from that kind of a centered place, then in all loving kindness say, “no.”

Now I’ll tell you something else: Someone who is knowingly engaged in a process of dying understands honesty very well, and will appreciate the honesty that you express, and will not appreciate your taking a dishonest stance out of a sense of love. Your declining to be deeply involved will not be misunderstood.

This is a difficult subject to discuss, because everyone has very strong feelings and very strong beliefs about death. And as I said, a cut and dried absolute answer cannot be given. And so I will dance around it to help convey the essentials.

As I have said before, death is always a suicide, whether it seems to be the result of an accident, whether it seems to be the result of a disease, whether it seems to be a result of old age, whether it is called a peaceful passing on in one’s sleep, it represents a point in which one has given up. But this is different from letting go the end of the rope. Because letting go of the end of the rope... I will put it this way: If someone were on his death bed and let go the end of the rope, he would be healed.

This is very important to understand. Any circumstance, whether it is something that seems to call for death, or whether it is something that calls for quitting a job or any circumstance, when one gets to the end of his rope and lets go, it is because of an intent to consciously persist in being. But giving up and taking an action to end it, to escape the circumstance, is not the same thing.

If you are invited to assist in being with someone who is passing on, someone who is dying, if you feel inclined to be a facilitator—not in the sense of facilitating suicide through drugs or some other means—but one who is willing to sit with, be with, be present for one who is passing on, and you have checked within and you have found that you can honestly and genuinely do this, then truly your next question has to be, “What is going on here with this individual? Has this individual really made a committed decision that is finished, or is this one scared into dying, feeling hopeless and without any other choice but wishing there was a choice?”

I’m going to put it this way, and this may not sit well with some of you, because of your sense of what is right. If an individual has made a commitment to dying, nothing you can do will change it, because that one has the switch for the decision making in his grasp and it is unavailable to you.

Now, if an individual has done this, if this is indeed where this individual is, it is inappropriate for you to stand there, apparently with spiritual clarity, and try to convince him otherwise, and create for that one misery. What may not seem reasonable to you is, that I am saying that under that circumstance, that individual deserves to feel loved and allowed to be consistent with his decision—nurtured, comforted and supported.

A child comes into the house sobbing—heaving with his sobs. He’s been outside, he was unkind to someone and everyone jumped on him and he became overwhelmed with the reaction to his behavior and it threw his sense of self-confidence and his sense of his all rightness out of kilter. And he has come into the house, deeply off balance. And a parent can hear it in the nature of the sobs. It is not appropriate under those circumstances for the parent to say at that moment, “Well you asked for it.”

It is important first for the child to be embraced and to be provided with the experience which helps to reestablish in him his sense of his all rightness, so that the overwhelm circumstance can subside and be replaced with a sense of his integrity. And after things have calmed down and there is more rationality, the parent can talk with the child and explain what the elements were that occurred, so that the child can make another decision next time.

Now if in your deep inner listening you find that it is appropriate for this “threat of death” and it’s inevitability to be challenged, not that the individual is going to be challenged, but the belief structures that have hold of him, if I might put it that way, if they need to be challenged and that individual needs to be joined by someone who has the willingness to say, “there must be another way to look at this,” then you need to be ready to be that presence that joins with him and says, “There is another way to look at this. Together let’s look for it. Together let us anticipate that even if the doctor says you only have twenty four hours, you just might have more.”

And then together in that joining, you can reflect to him or her the perspective that will help improve perception, that will help allow for a shift of perception where that individual can release himself or herself from the belief structures that are crowding in.

Because it is a crisis circumstance, it requires a great degree of genuine honesty, on the part of the person who is standing there in service.

Just because I have said that there can be circumstances where compassion and support, rather than challenge of the “threat of death,” is appropriate, does not mean that death is not an illusion, does not mean that in some cases it is a real thing and in others cases it is not—it is always an illusion, just as birth is always an illusion. The fact that you seemed to experience birth doesn’t mean that you were born.

And most all of you are quite sure that you didn’t come here with a clean slate. Which means that not one of you really believes that you started out brand new at the point of birth and, therefore, it wasn’t birth, but shall I say, another point of arrival on an on-going journey, which isn’t a journey at all, but is just the uninterrupted eternal experience of Being.

Now, you have been asked a very serious question when you have been asked to facilitate directly or indirectly in the ending of one’s life on purpose by some act or action. This requires that you ask yourself the first question again, “Can I genuinely, honestly and with peace participate in this?” Sometimes the answer is “yes.”

But if you say “yes,” you must be very clear. You must have reached very deeply into yourself to find that you can do it with utter peace. If you do it flippantly, off-handedly, lightly, even if it was appropriate, you may find it difficult later. And a call for forgiving yourself, (I’m going to make this very clear) a call for forgiving your doubt that you did the right thing will have to come into play so that you become clear.

In all cases where help is given in terminating someone’s life, it must be actually done by the one who will pass on. Except in the case where someone is attached to equipment that is keeping them alive, and there literally is no one there to do it.

I will tell you something: The one who has arrived at a point of deciding for himself that it is time and it is right, that one can make an honest judgment, one for which he will not feel guilty and will not have to forgive himself.

You all really must understand something: God is Love, and Love does not call for pain. And Love doesn’t justify it under any circumstances. One has to be driven miles beyond their normal ability to cope with crisis to arrive at a point of making a decision to die. They do it because life being present is excruciating. They do it because there is no one around who can relieve them of the excruciation. God does not require one, Love does not require one to endlessly endure such an extreme of the illusion.

And there are those of you who have been raised in religions which teach that committing suicide is a sin that will cause you to be committed to hell forever. It is not true. God is holding you in his arms before you are even suffering, while you are suffering, and after you have finished suffering. You are innocent the whole time, and if you have not been able to grasp your innocence, if you have not been able to embrace it and embody it, God will does not stop loving you. And Love does not say, “your suffering is appropriate.”

Here is the same kind of a situation in a much milder form. There was a time when Paul had an abscessed tooth. He was practicing Christian Science at that time, and was knowing the truth, keeping his thoughts metaphysically clear and spiritually correct. And the pain grew and grew and grew and grew, until finally he was reduced to a heap on the floor, engulfed in tears because it hurt so much. And he did not want to go to a dentist, because he wanted to handle this spiritually.

And as though if he went to the dentist he would be sacrificing the experience of the fulfillment of his spiritual path. And he held out until it was unbearable, until he was almost exhausted from crying as well as the pain. And at three o'clock in the morning he called a dentist in the telephone book. Fortunately, he was not in a large city. And in this small town, the dentist said, “I'll meet you at my office in ten minutes.” And he went to the office and the dentist gave him a shot of novocaine and said, “Come back at nine o'clock in the morning.”

And Paul went out and got in the car, in the utter bliss of the absence of pain. And rather than thanking God for novocaine, and rather than thanking God for a dentist, he perceived that the peace no matter how it had come into his experience was the evidence of his being loved by God. And it demonstrated to him his right to be comfortable and not suffer.

For whatever reason one wants to think of, one can justify judging an act that seems to express less than some ultimate of appropriateness, even committing suicide. Mind you this whole conversation here, for clarity, is addressing working with the terminally ill. And we are not talking about situations where someone is committing suicide simply as a means of escape for, what we will call, a more whimsical reasons than a terminal illness. My answer would be different.

What would not be different would be, that the individual that commits suicide that has nothing to do with great pain or suffering associated with a terminal illness, is still also forever embraced. Because the fact is, that whatever reason seems to justify it is not truly judgeable. The individual is truly not judgeable—remains absolutely innocent. There are not something's you can really be guilty for, and other things that you are not guilty for. You cannot claim guiltlessness as the Course teaches in some instances and not in others. And therefore, you not only cannot hold yourself guilty for anything, you can't hold anyone else guilty for anything.

And again for perfect clarity, I have said that to help aid one in taking his own life refers only to one who is experiencing a terminal illness and is in great, great fear or pain. I'm being very precise, and I'm being very honest. And the answer is divinely real, and it translates the Father's Love into language appropriate to the situation that was asked about.

Please, all of you, let us not get hoity-toity, or self-righteous about spiritual correctness, because at the bottom line, spiritual correctness relates to your forever innocence, and your right not to suffer.

Stay well grounded. As I told Paul early on, keep your feet on the ground and your head not to far away. And then your spirituality will not become irrelevant to your humanity.

PAUL: I started out Saturday night being honest and I think I have fairly well continued to be honest with everyone and you're going to get some more honesty.

This is a very different workshop. For one thing I have been more involved than ever before, and then today I was asked to speak from my Being—that's very different. And where in prior workshops I never would express something I might be feeling, because nobody came to hear me, I feel prompted to say things at times and I'm doing it.

You know people say "Will you tell me how I can get in touch with my guide." And part of me says "sure," I'm very, very happy to share how, because it's so easy. And then another part of me says, "You don't know what you are asking for." Because, when you ask questions you're going to get answers, and the answers aren't going to cater to your personal preferences. And because the answers are always geared to your increased clarity, it is going to challenge your beliefs that you are very comfortable with, which makes you uncomfortable. And so, sometimes the process of asking for answers and getting answers that are truly helpful present a problem. But indeed the answers do move you through and beyond it, and you come out with clarity that you didn't have before that truly is a joy, it really is a joy to be in that released place.

My sense always in prior workshops has been that all of us have come, including me, because I never know what Raj is going to say. All of us have come to hear what Raj has to say, and I think that's one of the things that's been different. We all came for that reason here, but what he has said has moved all of us into a different space that doesn't seem to have a whole lot to do with what was said.

I've been sitting here now as each day has gone by thinking about when I get home and listen to the tapes it's going to be a brand new workshop to hear, because the words weren't what was happening this week for all of us. It's like he has put all of us in a position of a new way of experiencing things, he's put us into the experience, rather than the words and the ideas and how we can put them together to make ourselves feel happier.

All of this is leading up to something. Raj can talk about me and it doesn't bother me. Today right now I'm going to talk about me and it isn't going to bother me, that's something new. (Applause)

Without arrogance of any kind, I think it's important for everyone here to know exactly what I said about the Course earlier, that it is an example of something that happens when somebody listens. And the example, the presence of the Course should inspire everyone else to listen, more than it inspires them to study the Course.

When I ask Raj a question about a problem, I am being willing to look at the problem with fresh eyes, from an entirely different vantage point than my traditional one. It means I'm willing to face something that's uncomfortable for me from my peace, and be moved through it. When someone else asks a question, like the one that was just asked, it meant that I had to be willing to stay in my peace and walk through what for me was an uncomfortable subject, and not engage with my own personal feelings. Not only that, I didn't like what he said. It didn't match up with what I think is true.

I think—not the I that's speaking now—but ego Paul thinks that the power of God should be able to change anything to uncover it's perfection. And Raj has said over and over again to me, "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." And so you don't attempt to do what you can't do. And so you use your guidance to learn what you can do, so that you can do it, and what you can't do, so that you save yourself the pain of trying to do what you can't do. I understand his answer to the question. I understand it beautifully. I don't like it, but I understand it and I'm glad I know.

Now here's my point: I've sat here and done what every single one of you can do. You can dare to "walk through the valley of the shadow of death and fear no evil." There's nothing magic about it, it's utterly simple. All you have to do is really want to know and set aside all your arguments against it, by choosing, you don't argue against your arguments, you just choose to be in your peace. And we don't need to be afraid of our "valleys of the shadow of death," whatever they might be, because if we're willing to do this we will experience in our peace the clarity of the answer that releases the suffering or the uncomfortableness with it.

It seems to me from where I'm sitting that this gathering is being more of an experience and more of an example. And I'm willing to say, I hope everyone will go home feeling encouraged by the example to listen yourselves—I don't mean to sound somber, it's just this is the way when I am speaking and meaning what I'm saying, it's the way it's coming out—but I hope that. And it has nothing to do with my thinking I'm great and I want you to go and be like me. It's really that, from my experience, it's what really works, and I want for you to do what really works too, because it's wonderful.

Now the very last part of this is, that it was difficult to walk through that answer. And I need some rest. And I know that everybody would like to have the allotted time. (Applause) And the interesting thing is that I say it with a sense of without apology, and that's really a new thing for me. (Applause)

God willing we will start promptly at 9:30 tomorrow morning. I want nothing more than to be with you in the way that I've been with you all of these days, and so I will be here tomorrow. And I will be with you this evening also, but I just need time right now.

PAUL: The argument I was having with Raj while we were being quiet was that I have—actually since last night—felt something again moving in me that I knew I needed to let out. I first of all again asked him whether it was appropriate, and he said, “yes.” And I said, “can't we do it later?” And he said, “no.” “Are you sure?” “Yes.”

Yesterday we had—the one I've come to call my right hand—ask to do something out of the ordinary in a workshop, and that was for me to answer a question from my capital “S” Self, rather than getting the answer from Raj. Since then people have said would you share with us what that was like for you. And people have also shared various feelings of discomfort with the fact that it happened at all.

The first thing I would ask is—because this is the first thing I did—for those who might have felt uncomfortable, did you go within before you had a judgment and ask, “Is this appropriate?” And I want you also to notice, for those of you who had an opinion or a definite reaction, where did you get such a sudden, sure feeling about the appropriateness or inappropriateness of it, or what the motivation was on the part of the person that asked.

What I'm saying is, the ego is so fast that it can present instantaneously a reason, a backup reason and an hours worth of justifications. And they're all there at that very moment and you haven't had time to figure any of this out. And then, for those of you who did have a negative response, then you projected it on the person who asked the question, and you believed yourself. You get it? You could have asked, you could have simply hesitated a moment, and you could have gone within, and you could have just simply ask the question, “is this appropriate”?

Now, what I want you to know is that if it hadn't been appropriate, the answer would have been “no.” And there would not have been a reason, and a backup reason, and an hours worth of justifications. It would have been a simply, peaceful, clarity that it wasn't appropriate. When I asked, Raj said it was appropriate. And so then I proceeded.

This is the way we attack our fellow man, or this is the way we allow attack to happen, because it isn't really us, it's the ego. The one who hesitated a moment and ask, “is this appropriate,” is not the ego—it's You. And as long as there is someone present who can say, “is this appropriate,” it becomes very clear to you that you're not your ego. And that's a very helpful thing to know.

I don't think that what's coming forth is going to take a long time, but if it wasn't appropriate, Raj wouldn't have said to do it.

It was an interesting experience for me because I was already firmly connected with Raj, let's say, and in a very defenseless place—I was already in my peace. I heard the question and I didn't leave it—I didn't leave that peace.

The first thought that went through my mind because I wasn't going to be listening to Raj, I didn't know where to listen. And the first thought was, "I don't know the answer to that question," and "what if I get it wrong?" And Raj didn't say anything, but there was just the awareness present, "Of course, you don't know the answer. That's why you're asking. So just be present and attentive." And then it began to come.

And as you know I had to close my eyes, I think primarily because I had been in that mode already, and it came out the way it came out sounding sort of like Raj—the tone of Raj. And I wasn't paying attention to that I was really just allowing myself to be in that place where what was coming forth could come forth.

And as we went along it was like something was wrong. And afterwards I realized that it was like an actor that was saying his lines, like in a run through where all the actors are just gathered together in a room and saying, "Ummm this is a good cup of coffee." But the only thing that's happening is the lips are moving saying the words. It's like saying, "Ummm this is a good drink of water," instead of, "Ummm that's a good drink of water," where the whole thing was present.

And so then that's when I sort of got self-conscious, cause I realized that I can't go on doing it this way, cause this isn't it exactly. And I'm doing all of this process of paying attention and doing this like for the first time while everybody's watching. I really didn't get off track, but that was a fleeting thought. And I thought, "Hey I was asked, I'm just going to follow through however it happens." And so that's when I shifted, and opened my eyes up, and went on in a more connected way, a way that felt more like I and not just my mouth was expressing what was being expressed.

It was a very interesting experience. It was different from relaying what Raj is saying. And to use the illustration of the ice skating teacher, it was like going around the rink with no one to lean on. That experience of going around the rink without your teacher to lean on, is a much freer experience, because your teacher was holding you very close and there wasn't really freedom of movement.

But there was something missing, which made me wonder if something was wrong. And what was missing was that it wasn't being a shared experience, which it is when your teacher has his arm around you and has you right up against his hip. I mean you know you're not alone, that's a shared experience. The union, the togetherness was this way with us. But there was an emptiness there—that's what it felt like—I mean this friend wasn't there in the capacity that he had been there.

And so I felt like well maybe there's something wrong. Afterwards I realized, no, this is what it feels like when you are experiencing your capacity to skate without thinking or feeling that you're inadequate. And that's good. But it's new and I will probably have to do it more in order to begin to fully enjoy it, and then maybe wave to my teacher from across the rink, “I’m doing it, I’m doing it.”

So it was a wonderful experience, and was part of my growth, and whatever the reasons might have been for the question having been asked were not as important as the fact that it happened, and it was appropriate for me at the moment and evidently it was appropriate for everyone to share in it.

Now, I am aware on the basis of my experience of working with Raj, and my experience of making whatever degree of shift from ego dependence to dependence on God that I’ve made, that there’s something that everybody needs to know, because there’s a potential trap that I don’t want anyone to inadvertently get caught in because I neglected to share this.

There is a point that I arrived at, and that I now know that everyone has to arrive at where you must arrive at a point where you are disenchanted with your best thinking, disenchanted with your best sense of who you are.

Again, in a way it’s this place of coming to the end of your rope, whether it’s gracefully done or ungracefully done, because there must be a point where there is a willingness to make a committed reach outside of everything you know.

I was asked yesterday, after ten years of stepping out of the way in order to talk with Raj, to stay out of the way and speak from my Being. To think that you can step from a full-fledged ego space and connect with your Being—although it is possible—is not something that I would recommend to anyone. You reach outside of everything dependable, everything you thought was dependable in you. Because it’s only in that way that you make available to yourself a perspective that is beyond whatever your current perspective is, no matter how elegant or how really spiritual it might be.

And in making that connection and having that perspective supplied to you, and living with it for a period of time, that does allow you to become familiar with what it feels like. And you become educated through the experience of your teachers vision—your teachers perspective. You become familiar and comfortable with that perspective, and that’s when you can embrace it and shift so that you are skating on your own two skates, so to speak.

Here’s the trap I want you all to watch out for: Don’t try to connect with your Higher Self as a means of avoiding connecting with something that is, as far as you know, utterly divine. There is a capacity we all have to say, “I want to connect with my Higher Self,” because you feel it will be less foreign to you than your guide, whether it’s the Holy Spirit, or Jennifer, or Henry, or Leroy, or whoever, or Raj.

The statement was made, “I have trouble with Jesus, but if Paul can be in touch with his Higher Self then I know I can be in touch with my Higher Self.” And that sounds great. But you really want to connect with something that you know is absolutely divine, and it’s hard to believe that your Higher Self is totally divine—it really is. It’s hard to believe that anything connected with yourself is totally divine. You see what I’m saying?

It is egotistically satisfying to think about getting in touch with your Higher Self. But you see your Higher Self isn’t your possession. You’re the possession of your Higher Self. If you are going to get in touch with your Higher Self you’re going to have to yield to it as surely and as completely as you’re going to have to yield to Jesus, or Raj, or the Holy Spirit, or the Father. It’s not going to be one bit easier, I promise you.

So, sooner or later through suffering or voluntary willingness, all of us arrive at that point of reaching beyond anything that is available to us in our, what we would call, our normal frame of reference. Essential to Awakening is joining. If we don’t join we’re still, in one way or another, creating a sense of separateness and isolation.

So let’s not delay in that, let’s not put it off and let’s not perhaps create a delay by doing something supposedly simpler, by connecting with our Higher Self. Again, because until you’ve had some experience from the divine perspective, you will not believe that your Higher Self or anything about you can be totally divine. And so you will be relying on something that is still safer than connecting with something that’s truly divine. And it will extend your ignorance of your divinity. This is a very important point, and I felt that we couldn’t go further without making that clear.

QUESTION: When you were saying, “it’s hard to believe that any part of yourself could be divine,” I didn’t hear it, because what you’re really saying is hard to believe, because you can feel, you can experience it. Were you meaning to say that? Because it is impossible to believe that your divine, because belief is a thought, and it will never get in that place of joining. But were you meaning to say it’s impossible to think that you’re divine, because you can experience your Higher Self—remembrance of Home is that experience, whatever form it takes.

PAUL: That is correct. The experience of our divinity is available to us. From my own experience, it has only spontaneously occurred twice. But every time I talk with Raj I experience it.

I’m not going to sit here and read, but... Yes, here it is. I picked the Course up yesterday morning. It was the first time I had done it since we had arrived here, and this is what I opened up to. It is on page 290 [of the new text]. [Page 269 of the old text.]

“Let your mind wander not through darkened corridors, away from light’s center. You and your brother may choose to lead yourselves astray, but you can be brought together only by the (capital “G”) Guide appointed to you.”

I had never read that before. Raj has said on many occasions that at the moment of conception a guide is assigned to each one of us. He used the word assigned. And it was interesting the wording, I thought...

“You and your brother may choose to lead yourself astray, but you can be brought together only by the Guide appointed for you. He will surely lead you to where God and His Son await your recognition.”

Now I read that sentence this way:

“He (the guide appointed to you) will surely lead you to where God and His Son (meaning the Christ that you are) await your recognition. They (your Guide and God) are joined in giving you the gift of oneness, before which all separation vanishes. Unite with what you are.”

That can be misread. It’s like saying, unite with your Higher Self. The safest way to unite with what you are is to listen to the guidance, so that you get the feel of what divinity is like. And then you have some sense of who you are to unite with. Do you see what I mean?

“You cannot join with anything except reality. God’s glory and His Son’s (meaning your glory) belong to you in truth. They have no opposite, and nothing else can you bestow upon yourself.

There is no substitute for truth. And truth will make this plain to you as you are brought into the place where you must meet with truth. And there you must be led,”

This was such an essential... I mean I didn’t have this book before I reached out for help. And so I’m not saying the book is right because I did what it said. I did what it said and found the book, and I’m sharing with you my discovery that it confirms my experience.

To be led is so insulting. (Laughter) I mean it has been for me. I was raised to be a responsible adult, able to make my own decisions and take charge of my life. I was not supposed to be helpless. But if you’re going to let yourself be led, it implies that you are helpless.

Well, I said, either through suffering or willingness we are helpless. And we’re fooling ourselves all along, that when we are feeling successful at being a responsible person we’re fooling ourselves. And we can either say, “Maybe I do need help. Maybe what I think is right, isn’t right. And so I’m going to inquire.” And you can get hung up on, “well, that means I’m really nothing,” or you can get hung up on an act of curiosity. “Maybe this isn’t the most ideal. What is? Because I really would like to be on track.”

“There is no substitute for truth. And truth will make this plain to you as you are brought into the place where you must meet with truth (and that’s in that quietness of your Being). And there you must be led, through gentle understanding which can lead you nowhere else. Where God is, there are you. Such is the truth. Nothing can change the knowledge, given you by God, into unknowingness. Everything God created knows its Creator. For this is how creation is accomplished by the Creator and by His creations. In the holy meeting place are joined the Father and His creations, and the creations of His Son with Them together. There is one link that joins them all together, holding them in the oneness out of which creation happens.”

And as I read this I realized, “My God, this is what Raj has talking about this whole week.”

“The link with which the Father joins Himself to those He gives the power to create can never be dissolved. Heaven itself is union with all of creation, and with its one Creator. And Heaven remains the Will of God for you. Lay no gifts other than this upon your altars,”

And when I read that, it means like, don’t lay your spontaneous ego reactions and definitions of what’s going on, don’t lay them in the picture, don’t lay them on the altar also. Ask. “Is this appropriate? What’s really going on in that moment of hesitation before your ego goes wild?”

“Lay no gifts other than this upon your altars, for nothing can coexist with it. Here your little offerings are brought together with the gift of God,”

And when I read that today—and I just read it for the first time yesterday—the “little offering” is whatever puny little sense of self you’re bringing.

“Here your little offerings are brought together with the gift of God, and only what is worthy of the Father will be accepted by the Son, for whom it is intended. To whom God gives Himself, He IS given. Your little gifts will vanish on the altar, where He has placed His Own.”

So always be willing to start the process with whatever the puny little sense of you is. You might say, “Well, what are my ego reasons for wanting to get centered? Is this the valid me that wants to know the truth?” It doesn’t matter. Just take it. Just take the you that’s present that doesn’t know and wants to know, whether it’s undeserving or deserving in your opinion. Just take it to that place. You have to start with what you have. Because the fact is, that you take all of you, even your disowned divinity into that place, and in that place it gets uncovered.

Now, all of this is marvelous! (Laughter) I’m not going to read all of it, but I’m checking as I’m going along, and this is appropriate.

“Bringing the ego to God (bringing your little gift) is but to bring error to truth, where it stands corrected because it is the opposite of what it meets. It is undone because the contradiction can no longer stand. How long can contradiction stand when its impossible nature is clearly revealed?

(This is very important.) What disappears in light is not attacked. It merely vanishes because it is not true.”

You see, I’m not thinking here. What I am saying is expressing my experience. You must reach outside of all of your conditioned thinking, because in doing that and experiencing the influx of truth and guidance that occurs, it uncovers those aspects of you, or me, that are invalid. And it leaves that of us which is valid standing clear.

“Different realities are meaningless, for reality must be one.”

And you’ve heard a lot about, “well, we all create our own reality,” and you know it’s the divine nature of things for there to be as many realities as there are persons.

“Different realities are meaningless, for reality must be one. It cannot change with time or mood or chance. Its changelessness is what makes it real. This cannot be undone...”

Merely by being what it is, does truth release you from everything that it is not.”

That’s why you ask “What is the truth”? So many times it seems to me I have a thousand options, and usually most of them are bad, or ones I don’t like. But the point is it’s very confusing, because there are so many options. But there’s only one that’s right or totally appropriate under the circumstances. And when I approach it thinking that my problem is very complex and I ask “what do I need to know here,” the tendency is to think that the answer is going to be as complex as the problem, which makes me brace myself against the answer. And Raj finally said, “remember answers always simplify.” And there’s just going to be one thing that will come forth as the appropriate thing to know or do. And when I realized that, then I can relax and let the answer in more easily.

Now remember he was talking about when you express your desire to express it softly and then get down to a whisper?” This was amazing to me. I truly have not read this before yesterday.

“Merely by being what it is, does truth release you from everything that it is not. The Atonement is so gentle you need but whisper to it, and all its power will rush to your assistance and support. You are not frail with God beside you. Yet without Him you are nothing.”

One thought goes through my mind. When you hear the word God like this, in beautiful verbiage and so on, forget about all of your traditional Christian or other teachings about God. God is, let’s just work with the way Raj has been defining God. Okay? Which isn’t exactly the traditional picture.

“The Atonement offers you God. The gift that you refused is held by Him in you.”

Raj said, “The Holy Spirit is your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego.”

“The Holy Spirit holds it there for you. God has not left His altar, though His worshippers placed other gods upon it. (Our own concepts and beliefs and very rapid assumptions.) The temple still is holy, for the (capital “P”) Presence that dwells within it (which is us, you) IS holiness.

In the temple, holiness waits quietly for the return of them that love it. The Presence (with a capital “P”, our divinity) knows they will return (knows we will return) to purity and to grace.”

And this reminds me of what he was talking about yesterday, so lovingly, about even an individuality who commits suicide.

“The graciousness of God will take them gently in, and cover all their sense of pain and loss with the immortal assurance of their Father’s Love. Their fear of death will be replaced with joy of life. For God is Life, and they abide in Life.”

Now, this was just incredible to me. And this is to me, this is clearly what I’m doing whenever we’re having a workshop or people are talking with Raj individually.

“In this world you can become a spotless mirror, in which the holiness of your Creator shines forth from you to all around.”

Now this is why it’s so essential to arrive at a point where you’re so fed up with how poorly you’re doing, that you reach out to that which is beyond you, because that’s the only way there is the condition in which the divine can penetrate your, my, limited perception. And in going into the stillness within ourselves, and not being full of our own thinking that’s the way we make the mirror spotless. We call it the void. It’s just a clean mirror.

QUESTION: This has been bothering me ever since you started. But I just at the moment of saying “we” that trying to support you and what you’re saying and it seems that the simple crux of the matter is to, if I could ask you to not use the word “we.” Because that’s not my experience at all, not even in the slightest. I see that that’s an experience that seems to be expressed in the Course, and I see a lot of people nodding their heads “yes,” and it seems to be a collective experience along some people here.

My experience is that, this place you talk about, the Self, is a much scarier place to go to than guidance. And for me it’s a pit fall to ask for a guide, or ask for guidance—to me that is, for myself, me.

PAUL: Are you saying that to go to the Self is scarier than going for guidance?

QUESTION: It is, and that’s the place that I choose. And I have gone there. I’m not speaking from there now. I wouldn’t say I’ve ever spoken from that place since I’ve been here. But I have been with groups of people where that is the thought, and that seems to be with others and I know to be my conscious experience.

My conscious experience is of my total Self unified with my voice and my mind. And for me to look for guidance at that moment would be an absolutely taking me away from what I know of my Self. It would be what we were talking about very often of going outside ourselves and then the thought is the guidance would bring us back in touch. And my experience is that I am already in touch. I can already touch that place. And this losing touch to go outside myself to then get the message that I'm supposed to be back in touch with myself. I simply invite you to use the word "I" in this discussion.

PAUL: I will do my best to do that. As I said, there are some individuals who can skate around the end of the rink and lean into the turn without having somebody support them. And it is certainly possible to connect with ones Self directly, without going through a guide. I know that that's the truth.

But—and this is not a “but” to what you're saying. Okay, and because I was probably a very mentally structured ego presence, very deeply into control, I know what my pit falls were and for me the way this has unfolded has been perfect. And for me it was absolutely necessary to reach outside, because I had a very great habit of relying heavily upon myself.

“In this world you can become a spotless mirror, in which the holiness of your Creator shines forth from you to all around you. You can reflect Heaven here. Yet no reflections of the images of other gods must dim the mirror that would hold God's reflection in it. Earth can reflect Heaven or hell; God or the ego. You need but leave the mirror clean and clear of all the images of hidden darkness you have drawn upon it (in other words, your, my belief structures). God will shine upon it of Himself.

Reflections are seen in light. In darkness they are obscure, and their meaning seems to lie only in shifting interpretations, rather than in themselves. The reflection of God needs no interpretation. It is clear. Clean but the mirror, and the message that shines forth from what the mirror holds out for everyone to see, no one can fail to understand. It is the message that the Holy Spirit is holding to the mirror that is in him (meaning, in you or me). He recognizes it because he has been taught his need for it,”

I or you recognize it, because you have been taught either by suffering or willingness, your need for it. Okay, it says:

“He recognizes it because he has been taught his need for it, but knows not where to look to find it.”

Now I'm sorry I am interpreting this incorrectly here. We look for it, because we have been taught our need for it, but we don't know where to look to find it.

“Let him, then, (the seeker) see it in you and share it with you.”

That's if I'm going to interpret what's happening in these workshops, that's what's happening. I'm being in that place, that centered place without preferences, without my own ego desires.

“Could you but realize for a single instant the power of healing that the reflection of God, shining in you, can bring to all the world, you could not wait to make the mirror of your mind clean to receive the image of the holiness that heals the world.”

I’m skipping a little bit.

“The response of holiness to any form of error is always the same. There is no contradiction in what holiness calls forth. Its one response is healing, without regard for what is brought to it.”

It’s like no matter how ugly, awful, terrible, whatever.

“Those who have learned to offer only healing, because of the reflection of holiness in them, are ready at last for Heaven. There, holiness is not a reflection, but rather the actual condition of what was but reflected to them here. God is no image, and His creations, as part of Him, hold Him in them in truth. They do not merely reflect truth, for they are truth.”

My experience is that in going in the not-knowing place and being from there, there is an influx of that for which I am not personally responsible. There are things I find that I know that are absolutely true, they bare out to be true. And there’s no way that I from my limited sense could have known it.

In being in that place and becoming familiar with it, with the feel of it, with the sense of everyone that always accompanies the way... what feels to be like the way Raj sees everyone. It helps give me a feel.

And now I’m at the point where Raj, in Graduation, is saying, “Be with me every moment.” It’s like, “let my perspective be your perspective every moment, so that you get past this point of wanting to have time off to be just plain Paul, or bumbling Paul, where the last vestiges of little ego Paul have a chance to play before giving up the ghost.” Not so that I can just be a mouth piece for Raj, but so that I can get the experience of a committed, consistent experience of divine perspective, because that’s when I will “get it.” That’s what he says. That’s when I will “get it,” and will say, “Yea, I wouldn’t want to be anything other than the experience I am being at this moment, or the experience that’s being me.” That’s it.

Let’s just take a moment to be still here...

QUESTION: When you give up, then everything happens right?

ANSWER: Indeed. When you haven’t given up, you are blocking the happening.

QUESTION: I think that’s what happened to me this morning. I was walking down the stairs after I did the last reading and I had been awake most of the night, thinking, “Okay, I just want to hear you.” When I sit at the computer, I think I hear my guide, but when I’m just walking around I don’t. So I was awake most of the night listening and I didn’t hear anything.

And I got up this morning, did my reading, and I was recognizing that I spent the last nine months going to Raj workshops. That this was a Pilgrimage that I expected would really push me over the top. And in none of those workshops have I ever gotten the mic. This is the first time. But it was okay. Most of the time, a lot of the time I didn't have a question. Anyway, but I was just looking at that.

And then I recognized... I'm walking down the stairs and I thought, "I give up. I am just going to be who I am, when I am, however that is. And I'm not going to do all this reaching and striving and trying to listen and do all this stuff. I'm just going to play it the way it is." And it was something really deep inside of me that I felt and it felt good.

And then I was aware that this was exactly the same place that I was in when I was married, when my husband was getting really frustrated he wouldn't talk to me for several days at a time. And I would hurt so bad and try to get him to tell me what was going on so we could fix it. I know he was terribly upset this day, because it had been the third day now, and his answer to me was, "No I'm not going to talk about it, you can't do anything about it anyway." So I walked out of the room and I'm standing in the kitchen and it was just as clear as a bell, "You will never hurt me like that again." And he never did. It was just he couldn't touch me after that.

So I'm in the same position this morning in a different way, because it wasn't that I was hurting, it is just that I'm too tired, I couldn't do this anymore. And I know that I know. There are times when I know that I know. And I'm not going to go scratching around looking everywhere else for something.

But the question that I wanted to ask when I came and maybe it's still valid. One: Am I in the truth here Raj? And the other was that: I've been going through a strange thing, which is that I get in my car and I'm driving along and I get images—nothing hurts and nothing scary here—I just keep getting images of automobile accidents and mangled cars and people being hurt and all these things. And while that's happening I'm saying, "Cancel, cancel, cancel." I'm saying, "I do not choose that, forget it." And I'm not suffering.

And in this house that I'm living in, it has an attached garage. I haven't had a house with an attached garage for a long time. I open that door into that garage and it's dark, and I'm wondering if somebody's hiding there, if somebody has gotten into the... all of this stuff that never has been a fear for me or even a consideration. And it's still... it might be a little anxiety, but it still isn't horror or terror. And I just say this is a ridiculous kind of a thing.

And I'm wondering if this thing I'm experiencing is a way that I've been willing to experience it without experiencing it, so I can cancel it, and this has an effect on everything that's going on in the world. This is a way that I'm choosing for everyone, in other words. That thought came to me, I don't know if it's true or not. And I was willing to do it if it kept happening all the time.

ANSWER: It is not this complicated. The simple fact is that you are going through transition. Movement is occurring. Movement that you are not responsible for and Movement which is identifying fulfillment for you. And you are simply feeling or experiencing the egos discomfort with the fact that you are not giving it the opportunity to be in charge, and it is providing you with images to distract you by engaging your fear.

Instead of saying, "cancel, cancel, cancel," I encourage you just to say "shut up," not to the images, but to the ego, shutting up anything that it might dish out. And relax. And enjoy the Movement that you are very aware of being in the middle of. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: So this sense that I had walking down the stair today that just forget everything and just do it, be it, whatever I'm doing, I'm walking down the stairs right now. Is that the answer you just gave me?

ANSWER: That is correct, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I've the experience in connecting with my guide of I want to say great ease most of the time in that I must feel a partnership or a tremendous comfort in the feeling of not being alone, having this companionship with my guide. But I think in some ways it's not as easy for me to allow in people the way I do my guide. It feels like the most natural thing in the world to be with him. And I'm wondering if you could speak to that?

ANSWER: I encourage you to get close to people—which is another way of saying let them in. I'm going to say approach them with your guide's perspective available to you. Let both of you be with the people in your world. And ask for perspective to be given.

I will tell you that as long as you are consciously aware of being with your guide when you are with others, you will meet others with an already existing active experience of friendship occurring, and therefore of safety, which will allow you to be more relaxed.

Remember, love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything—each and everyone. I encourage you to practice a little bit of curiosity. If you are curious to see the Christ in your fellow man, you will naturally gravitate toward him or her. And they will feel your embrace and will respond defenselessly. And you will have confirmation of your safety.

As long as you are uncomfortable, then go with a friend to meet a new friend—meaning, go in the companionship with your guide as you meet someone new or get together with someone you already know. Instead of seeing your joining with another person as the focal point, with which you feel uneasy, join with your guide which is easy, and then together embrace this other one. That will take the oomph out of the apparent meeting of you and your friend—or you and someone new—the stress and the uneasiness.

I want you also to pay attention to how you feel about yourself when you are in communion with your guide. It illuminates you. And whatever you learn about yourself in that experience, is something that you have learn about everyone else. And that in itself will make everyone else seem much more desirable and approachable. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I been rehearsing my question all day long and now I don't even know what to ask, or all week long I should say. I just want to have a clarification about sort of the path I'm on. I have made a commitment to not act unless I feel it very deeply. And as a result, it feels like there's not been much activity. And it's been...

ANSWER: What you mean is, there hasn't been much irrelevant activity.

QUESTION: My ego says I should be promoting more work because money is not flowing. And the only direction I seem to get is to play. And then, of course, my ego acts up and says, "what are you going to do when you come to the end of the rope"?

ANSWER: You, of course, know now that you will let go. Abundance arises out of joy, not out of concern. Indeed, abiding with guidance is scary at times, because it flies right in the face of what you have been conditioned to believe is intelligence. You have been conditioned to believe that you must apply yourself, that you must be serious about a career, that you must make your money and that the last thing that you might experience in that process would be joy. It is believed that you work for your money and then you can spend your money on having fun. You must reverse the process.

QUESTION: That's what I've been doing.

ANSWER: Persist.

QUESTION: Could you tell me about me and my guide and how I'm doing and what I can do to deepen that relationship?

ANSWER: First of all your guide is not like a teacher in a public school. Your guide is not someone who is being paid to do a job. Your guide loves you. And your guide—and this is true of everyone—your guide is being with you, because there is nothing else that is more meaningful. And so I encourage you to conceive of your guide as not someone fulfilling a job or a role, but someone who is truly your friend.

QUESTION: But sometimes I feel guilty and I ask for his full attention.

ANSWER: How wonderful.

QUESTION: It's hard to ask for someone to be with you all the time.

ANSWER: It is easy for someone to be with you all the time. You cannot impose upon the Presence of Love. It is impossible, so ask, ask, ask.

QUESTION: And is it really him I'm hearing, when I'm communicating with him?

ANSWER: Absolutely, absolutely. If it weren't I would tell you. It is very difficult. It was very difficult for Paul to believe that I was there for him, and there for him, and there for him—endlessly there for him. Everyone's guide is endlessly there for you.

Now, I am endlessly there for all of you also. Paul does not have exclusive rights on me. In fact, when he found out that other people were talking with me, he reacted within himself and felt that they should get their own guides.

It is not an imposition for you to desire full communion, full companionship, the full presence and attention of your guide. It not only isn't inappropriate, it is absolutely essential, because that is the way in which you let yourself into the real nature of relationships.

And so, I encourage you to explore just how constantly close you can be, because your guide is eager to share with you the evidence of the fact that inseparable oneness is the nature of your relationship together. And that is the way you will become familiar with how it could be that way with everyone else. And that is what will melt down your defenses against being willing to be totally present with and for another, and another, and another, and another, and another. Just start out with one though.

QUESTION: May I ask one other quick question?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: When I meditate and get very deep I have often thought that that would be the best state to communicate with my guide. But when I get so deep I can't even think. What would you advise me?

ANSWER: To put it simply, only get half centered. Just get quiet enough to be able to hear easily. When you want, what I will call a full-fledged meditation, let that be an activity by itself. When you want to talk with your guide, meditate, but not completely, not clear through to "the end." And then start out from there. Ultimately you will find that you will be able to speak with your guide without meditating at all. But initially in the early stages, it makes it much easier to make the connection when you are not engaged in your daily activities or "normal thought processes." That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: It surprised me to get called on. I spent the last couple of minutes trying to formulate my question and found that I couldn't rehearse it. I wanted to ask about my relationships, marriage in general.

George and I get into some very crazy places I think from our... that feel to me like there coming from our expectations of what we think our relationships should be, definitions that we have of relationship that we're bringing to this. And we really need help through those crazy places. So I'm asking if you can guide us, or guide me there?

ANSWER: It is almost unavoidable for you not have preconceptions. I would encourage you to make this suggestion to your husband: that you would like him to agree to an experiment. That being, that to the best of your ability you both will approach each other as though you don't know each other, so that you might have the opportunity to get acquainted, so that you might bring to your encounters with each other a willingness to be present with each other whoever you might be.

This doesn't sound too spiritual or too metaphysical, and it indeed sounds reasonable. And you are likely to find him to be willing, although reluctantly to do this. You will find that—as he will—that you will have to let go of some of your convictions about how he will react.

You say in your mind that you have a history of experience with him that means that he's perfectly predictable, and he believes that you are perfectly predictable. And so you treat each other based upon that concept, and indeed you elicit such behavior from each other. And neither of you lets each other off the hook so that you may be original.

Now, you are not mismatched. You just need to know that you are looking at him through your mother's eyes. He is looking at you through his parent's eyes. And I made a distinction there on purpose. In other words, both of you have been taught what you ought to expect. And that is not your view, that is not your vision. And you know what? If you'll just pay attention to who is really there, if you will be willing to be present with whoever is really there, you will have the delight of discovery reenter your experience.

I am also going to suggest to you that you stop wanting from him. He is not there to make you complete. And when you want him to fulfill you, when you want him to make you feel safe, he cannot help but be uncomfortable.

Your safety lies in your already existing integrity—that we have been speaking about—an integrity that you have been feeling more than ever before, during this week. It is easy for you to imply that he is the one that substantiates your integrity—it is a habit.

When you go home, I want you not to abandon the experience of your integrity that is clearly yours—that you have been experiencing this week—in favor of making him responsible for it, because you believe that by virtue of making him responsible for it you create a relationship. You do not make a relationship by making someone else responsible for you. You make a relationship by being truly who you are in his presence, by presenting yourself uninhibitedly, asking for nothing—and vice versa.

The key here is, that when you make someone else responsible for you, you give him an obligation that it's impossible for him to meet. This creates tension, and promotes all the rest of the “soap opera.” But when you share without wanting, it allows him to relax—it allows the other in any relationship to relax—and feel freer to give of himself. And you say, “things are getting better.” And you feel loved, because both of you feel better about yourself, both of you are able to like yourself better in the company of the other. That's where the relationship is.

Now I have said this many times before: All of you recognize love. When it's there, you recognize it. It may not be easy for you to accept, but you do recognize it and you do like it.

As the woman over here said, she feels unwilling to avail herself of the attention of her guide to the full extent that her guide would be willing to be with her. It is not always easy to accept, embrace and embody the love that is given. But in the presence of it, you don't close off because it feels good.

And so, in your relationship and in the giving of the gift of you that isn't a presentation of a want, or a placing an obligation on him, he will feel that as love and he will like it and you will find him relaxing and opening up. And it will lay the ground work for what a relationship is really about.

I again, want to reaffirm that you are not mismatched. And breaking up is not the appropriate step to take, but to move through this opportunity for mutual growth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I want to thank you for the present of your presence. In the fifties I grew up in a beautiful background of twelve years with a parochial education taught by some incredible nuns. In this process of twelve years with the nuns, daily we were asked to pray for world peace, for the conversion of Russia.

And we would often be told the story of Fatima. That when Our Lady appeared to three children of Fatima, that a definite messages was given to those children. And that that messages was to be revealed in the year 1960.

My husband and I, who is now deceased, made a decision that we would be one couple to be wed in 1959. And during the process of my lifetime, I had many other friends who made similar decisions of wanting to complete what was happening in their life before 1960.

Now to the best of my knowledge that message has never been revealed. We have seen the conversion of Russia, but the message has not come forth. Can you shed any light to us on what that was all about? I thank you.

ANSWER: I can only say that it is still not yet time. It is not being withheld for religious bureaucratic reasons, or religious political reasons, it simply not appropriate. It is known that it is not appropriate and, therefore, it has not been made public. And that is truly all I can say about it at this moment.

The Movement that will make it possible or appropriate for it to be revealed is occurring in the Awakening, the stirrings, the rousings of spiritual awareness and motivation around your globe. And it will not be too long before it is disclosed. I simply encourage all of you to continue to be part of that stirring Movement. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have hesitated to ask this question because I'm not at all sure that it's germane to the work that's going on here, but I assume that since I have been called upon then it must be. And if the question itself isn't quite what is needed that Raj in his own inimitable way will find some way to make it around and tell us what he wants to tell us.

Actually I have two questions, but the second one I think will be a pretty short answer. My major question is, I have recently had an interesting thought and I haven't been able to follow it through myself, but it seems to me that a considerable amount of humanities problems may have to do with the great confusion between the concept of sexuality and sex. And I would like to have Raj's comments on that.

PAUL: This is me Paul. For the sake of everyone else can you express what you mean by the difference between sexuality and sex?

QUESTION: Well, I'm thinking specifically of sex as being a physical act. And sexuality to me is quite different from sex, and is more the enjoyment and appreciation of being male or female but is not directly tied into any physical sexual act. It seems to me the problem is that we do not enjoy our sexuality that because of the enormous emphasis on sex we've almost lost sight of what sexuality is.

ANSWER: It is not so much a separation between sex and sexuality as it is between mind and body, as though body were something quite separate from mind, as though mind is the spirit of you that is eternal and the body is just a temporary host for that which is meaningful and spiritual. And thus, because the body is considered to be, well, really not essential in any meaningful eternal terms, it is something that does not have much meaning—that does not serve as an expression of meaning—when it comes to sex or sexuality. It is thought to be not of the spiritual but of the body for the purpose of keeping the species alive. And so sexuality is expressed as being an instinct.

Please remember, that somewhere along the line somebody made these words up to express what? An idea that they had had. And yet you all study Freud, and you study the sciences, and you come up with a learning about “basic instinct,” as though it’s something quite beyond you, quite out of your control, just something you must live with and hopefully get control of. And so, as they say, you will not be governed by the seat of your pants.

And thus, the body is something to be used for reasons that are beyond your control, and therefore beyond your capacity to have it’s actions be an expression of love. And so, instead of saying, “the devil made me do it,” you don’t say this, but you think, “instinct made me do it. I copulate because it’s instinctive.” And then you try to be sure that instinct doesn’t cause you to copulate all the time. You don’t want to be governed by instinct. Well, it was just a thought. Instinct was just a thought—an idea that someone had.

There is an affirmation of life that everyone feels because life is vital. It isn’t passive. It isn’t inactive. You live and you are active in all respects, because movement is the nature of life, self-expression is the nature of life. Self-expression is the Movement of life that God is. And that is going to be obvious in His manifestation that looks like you.

Now it is really necessary for this distinction between mind and body to become less clear. It’s time for the boundary to dissolve, because your body is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality. As I have said, unexpressed God is no God, there must be the visibility and the tangibility. In other words, there must be a conscious experience of being conscious. And the Infinite Mind of God experiences the Infinite Movement of what It Is as conscious ideas. And those ideas, to the Mind of God, are visible and tangible, absolutely real, but not dense in the manner that you are currently experiencing them.

The less you identify with the body and the more you begin to identify as Conscious Being—as Life, Truth, Principle, Mind, Soul and Spirit and Love—you will then find that your actions will express Soul, and will express Love, will express tenderness, utter appropriateness that is exquisite, whether you are engaged in sexual activity or not. Don’t make sexuality or sex the focus of your attention, because that isn’t where the problem is.

You are Soul—your capacity to feel the nature of what God is Being. And as you begin to identify more and more with what God really is, as being the definition of what you are, and as you begin to or you allow yourself to experience that, then all the richness of Soul that you are will find expression in everything you do, including your sexual encounters or sharings with others. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I spent many years working up a concept, and I simply want to know if the concept is valid, and if it is valid what I'm supposed to be doing with it?

ANSWER: What is the concept?

QUESTION: I put a label of concept of interpersonal relationships, and the subheading would be special friendships. And it's just a definition of what I think would create the maximum best friendship, which would lead to the best relationship, which would lead two people on the path through their realization of God's love and truth.

ANSWER: I am sorry but it will never work from the standpoint of a concept. You will find in listening to me and in observing the way in which I work with all of you or with specific individuals, that the only time that concepts are used, is for the purpose of helping you give yourself permission to have an experience. Because the experience is where the opening is. The experience is where the Movement can begin.

Now, a concept of special friendships or of special anything will not promote a special anything. But connecting with your Self, as we have been talking about, by leaning into and desiring to experience your divine Self, the essential You, whatever you want to call it, and it becomes uncovered to you, and you embrace it and embody it, when and as that happens you become the embodiment of "a special friend." You will become that friend. But if you start out with a concept, you are liable to build structures of finer and finer concepts based upon that. And you will try to do what is "right" according to that superstructure of concepts, and you will have avoided entirely the inner experience of the divine You that will actually make you be in the world "that special friend," that Meaningful Presence. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Then I hear you saying then you can't prestructure. That you just have to move into it and be.

ANSWER: You cannot prestructure anything that means anything. The reason it means something is because it arose out of the Movement of the Mind of God, that is the Movement of Creation. "Gee whiz, well then, what am I here for," one might say? Well, you're here to get the tiny sense of you out of the way, so that you might find that you have no separate mind from the Mind of God that is being the ever original Movement of Creation, so that you might be the full Presence and embodiment of all that is meaningful, as in a relationship.

"Well," the ego says, "that's not very satisfying." But I will tell you, it is fulfillment beyond your wildest imagination. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This is not my original question I planned to ask. It just occurred to me that it's a question I've had for a long time. In the Bible, in Revelations somewhere it says something to the effect, "in the last days woe to them that are with," and as I remember it it said, "suck,"—s-u-c-k—which I assumed meant to women who were nursing small children. And I've always wondered if that's really what it meant.

And I have heard you say on some of the tapes that this is the last incarnation, and I got the feeling that there was forty more years before we were to get through with this Awakening. I guess I'm asking about the birth of children from this point on? I don't know how to put that into a question, but...

ANSWER: I understand. I will tell you all something: Forget about what you read. Those individualities who are coming into the picture at this time are—if we're going to compare—are by comparison with the past a most marvelous set of individualities.

Fully, I will say, eighty to eight-five percent of all children who will be born in the next twenty years will, shall I say, have stood in line for the purpose of coming into this lifetime to facilitate the Awakening process. I have mentioned before that this will prove most interesting to their parents. And it will be well for the parents to dare to be willing to learn from their children, and not attempt to hold them in a place of ignorance because they're supposed to be children.

I also want to set to rest some fears that have come up as a result of hearing that I have said that this is the last incarnation. It does not mean it will be the end of life, but it also does not mean that this is your last chance to wake up. The reason it will be the last incarnation is because everyone will have Awakened. And so whether your interested or not, whether you are preparing for it or not, it is going to happen.

It used to be that one had to apply himself or to have a very consistent conscious intent to Awaken in order to Awaken. But as I have said before, the number of those who are still dreaming is less than the number of those who are Awake. And those who are joined in dreams, who are joined in the dream of limitation and separateness and tininess, are not enough to hold the dream together by virtue of their mutual agreement to dream.

And so, there is spontaneous Awakening that is in process, and which I have referred to as stirrings of those who are asleep, a restlessness that those who are asleep are experiencing—a felt desire for something although they do not know what, a fidgetiness in their life. You must treat this feeling the same way a mother treats the first stirrings of the child within her womb, and become curious, and to be allowing, because this Awakening will literally rouse you from your dream.

It will feel to you as though you are having great support in the Movement of Awakening, when actually what it will amount to is, that it will be hard to stay asleep. You could say that you used to have to wrestle your way out of a nightmare, or wrestle your way out of your dream to rouse yourself, it took a great conscious intent. Now it takes far less. And in fact, it is happening with all of you, and it is happening with all who are not even aware that it is a potentiality at the moment. And so, as I have said before, you live in interesting times.

I will tell you that if there is a child who is nursing as the Awakening occurs, that child will be embraced, as well as the mother in the Awakening.

The Awakening means, each one's coming into the clear conscious experience of who they really are, and the clear conscious experience of Reality as it really is, and the awareness that it is all God, and it is all You. Not as though there are two separate things—God and You. But when I say it is all God, it is saying it's all You. But you will have the conscious experience of it from the infiniteness of God's point of view. You will not have the experience of it as a tiny viewer of it.

Remember that you will either Awaken as a result of willingness, or as a result of suffering that has coming from resistance to it. But the suffering isn't inherent in it.

I am here to tell you that you that you do not need to be afraid, and you do not need to resist. And I am suggesting that you start practicing nonresistance with little things. And understand that the context in which you deal with the little things and even the big things—which are really little things—the context of it is the Kingdom of Heaven. The context of it is that which you divinely Are, which infinitely embraces the tininess of what you think you are. And as I said, that which is pushing you to let go, is that which you divinely Are. And when you let go, that which you let yourself go into is that which you divinely Are. And you will come to see that the problem of being was a little bit of nonsense that seemed very real, that seemed to be going on in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. So do not be afraid of the end.

The Awakening process that is happening was and always has been known. And what was written in Revelation has become irrelevant. The details, the Apocalypse as it were, because as a whole those of the Brotherhood who are dreaming that they are asleep have not being as resistant as was likely. And the Awakening process is happening more rapidly and more gracefully. So you do not have to be afraid of the gnashing of teeth, the suffering, the catastrophes, etc.

And I'm here to tell you that it is inappropriate for you to embrace these, shall I say, new age predictions of catastrophe, of land masses falling into the ocean, of greater and greater danger.

If your body is the visibility and the tangibility of your Individuality, then all form must be the visibility and tangibility of God, and therefore incapable of reflecting anything unlike it's Source. Therefore, if what we would call the mass mind, or the accumulation of all of these apparent limited egos, is loosing its density, and if there is indeed a willing, more conscious embodying of one's divinity, then everyone's perception of the world is going to improve, and you are going to find the world manifesting more and more harmony, more and more perfection.

So when you hear these rumors, when you hear that you have to move inland so that you can have ocean front property in Idaho, do not energize that. And do not energize fear, if you cannot leave California, or you cannot leave some place that is supposedly going to be devastated. The process of Awakening, the process of experiencing clearer mental awareness means that what you are going to see would be called healing, the harmonizing of anything that has seemed to identify inharmony.

So do not feed into these suggestions with your fear. Do not even feed into them by saying, "even if they are awful, I am going to embrace them, because I know it means the end of everything unreal." Do not find any peculiar way of justifying inharmony. If healing meant that you were going to get worse, nobody would pray for healing.

So the end is not frightful. There will not be a Holocaust. There will not be Armageddon. It could be said that Aids is a pestilence that is a part of Armageddon. It is not. It simply represents the specific opportunity for the link between mind and matter, mind and form to be demonstrated as a fact.

The first healing of Aids, and every subsequent healing of Aids will be as a result of the relinquishment of guilt by the individual experiencing Aids. And once that is recognized and the healing occurs, and that one is able to share to those he knows who are suffering from Aids that it was the relinquishment of guilt, and the absolute evidence of no HIV virus is verified by physicians, it will be much easier for the next one to give up whatever guilt he is carrying or she is carrying with him or her.

And this will demonstrate irrefutably that the body is the visibility and tangibility of Individuality, which is entirely Mind. And that, therefore, that which is the visibility of Mind must be entirely mental also. That is going to be the key factor in releasing everyone from this very solid conviction that they live in a material universe made up of substance that has nothing to do with a divine Presence, or Spirit/God.

It's time for that connection to be made. It's time for the realization to occur. This will be a—there is no adequate word for it—most significant discovery, that will revolutionize existence, because it will promote with great rapidity the consummation of the process of Awakening.

So do not say that Aids is just one of the first steps of Armageddon. And do not fear, do not imagine what it must be going to be like and frighten yourselves with it. You see, you don't want to become sidetracked from staying on target, you don't want to be sidetracked from giving your attention to your center, your peace, that not-knowing place where truth can reveal itself. And fear will always distract you if you let it in and validate it, and then build it with your imagination of the worst.

There is a great deal of rejoicing at the most graceful way in which the last stages of Awakening are unfolding. And there is much support for each one of you as you begin to embrace it and let it in and embody it. In other words, live out from that self awareness, and treat your brothers and sisters out from that awareness of your divinity, that you experience as a fact.

Now you have not in the course of this five days been whipped up into a frenzy or a high of spirituality. But you have been helped to a place where you can more easily and spontaneously give yourselves permission to feel good, not excited, but good in a grounded way, and feel your love, and as a result feel the love that has no connotations of personality with it, a love that you have experienced together that is very different from your other experiences of being in groups of people.

At the bottom line, all that needs to happen is for you to find a way to give yourself permission to let down your masks.

And that is what I have been here to provide the environment or opportunity in which you could let down your masks and have a different order of experience, not only of yourselves but of where you are, at times a different order of experience of time. Not that time disappeared but that it fluctuated, so that a long time seemed like a short time, and a short time seemed like a long time.

When it begins to fluctuate, it becomes easier for you to see that it isn't real. I mean by that, that it isn't actually a measurable fact, just as your ego sense of yourself, which you think is so definite. When it begins to waver and you have a different order of experience of love with each other, it makes it easier to see that your ego sense, or your ego perception isn't really a fact. You see, when things begin to fluctuate, you know that the definiteness of a thing is coming apart.

If you have been ill for a long period of time, and then you get better and then you get worse, and then you get better and then you get worse, and then you get better and then you get worse, you know what that is saying? It isn't saying that you're doing something wrong, that maybe you were getting it right, but then you weren't, but then maybe you were, but maybe you weren't. It means that the definiteness of the problem is no longer definite. It means the problem is breaking up. It means that you are not energizing it enough to validate it consistently. And in the inconsistency you have the proof that it isn't a fact. And that can provide you with the encouragement to go ahead and let go of it all the way, because where you had thought it real, now its very ability proves that it isn't.

Lot's of things are going to begin to not be as dependable as they were. And the point is, don't become frightened about it, because the only thing that can become variable is something that wasn't real, but which you thought was. And, if it's breaking up, then encourage its total dissolving. Because when it dissolves, what is real will be standing there and you will recognize it. And you'll say, "It's just like me."

In other words, you will be able to recognize Home, you will be able to recognize Home, and you will remember what you see when you see it. It will be like you and you will be like it, because it is all what it really is.

It is almost as though the veil will get moth holes in it, and you'll see through it, and you won't see through it, and you'll see through it, and you won't see through it. But in the process you are having the increased ability to recognize the Kingdom of Heaven, to recognize what's Real, and that it is just like you—Real.

Many of you over the past year have known friends who have been having a real rough time, more so than a year before. And many of you are some of those friends. I will tell you, that this has been a year of cleansing, clearing out of garbage. And a lot of garbage has been your favorite garbage. If you are not careful, you will say it is circumstances out there that are responsible for my having to let go of some of my favorite garbage, because you think your garbage is wonderful, beautiful stuff and not garbage at all.

Now you can either say this is the beginning of the end in a negative way, or you can say it's the beginning of the end in a positive way. And you can begin to dare to take a look to see that it's really your very own integrity insinuating itself into your experience and uncovering what isn't of value for you. And therefore, you can anticipate, because it is not a negative force at work in your life, that there will be an end result of greater clarity, greater clarification of purpose, greater clarification of abundance.

You know what your biggest problem is? That you wanted to be in charge of the change. Well, You with a capital "Y", are in charge of it. And that's why whatever your disastrous circumstances are, or have been, are really to your advantage. And so when things seem to be being taken away from you, when you seem to be deprived more and more of things you have been able to depend on, instead of mourning its loss, I encourage you to see what this little hole in the veil of your perception has uncovered. Ask. "what is being uncovered here"?

There is no evil. There is no devil. There is either clarity or unclarity. And unclarity begets unclarity, and unclarity substantiates itself, increases itself, and it seems to prove that indeed there is some negative force, but it is just lack of clarity.

So now you have nothing to blame all of your problems on. And in fact, I am stating to you that blame is a useless and irrelevant thing, even blaming yourself. Instead of saying, "I must have done it, if nothing out there did it. I'm responsible. It's my fault." Say, "What is my capital "B" Being uncovering here"?. Because there isn't a single thing that happens by chance.

Many of you have decorated the veil with marvelously, intricately beautiful designs—creative artistry. “You mean I’ve got to let go of that”? And you’re asking to hold on to the veil. Let it get moth eaten. Let your wonderful creative design disappear so that you are not blind any longer. Don’t be afraid of waking up.

And as I’ve said before, don’t distract yourself from your own emerging conscious experience of your divinity by waiting for me to come in the clouds to take you up. Let us say that I came in the clouds and came down and stayed with you. O-o-o-oh! Well, then you’d be faced with having to go ahead and waking up because no one else is going to do it for you. You are the “Second Coming,” not me. You are the Christ who is to appear. And the time is at hand. And worst of all, it’s happening. It is happening!

Paul had the startling experience of finding his whole environment changed drastically in six hours. It was such a drastic change that it seemed not to be able to be embraced instantaneously. And you could say there was a period that followed in which he became acclimatized or adjusted to the change.

I want all of you to understand that your Awakening will seem to occur in slow motion, else there would seem to be a break in the constancy of your experience of identity. If it happened in the twinkling of an eye, it would be like being George this moment and Henry the next moment, and God knows who Henry is! That’s a Truth! God knows who Henry is, but Henry will not know who he is.

And so, there will seem to be a process to it in the sense of something occurring in time. And it will happen as rapidly as it can happen and have you not lose a continuity of the experience of identity, even though your identity is changing from the ego perception, called personality, to the divine experience of Individuality. It will happen as rapidly as it can without your losing the continuity. And the process is in process at this instant. And everyone is chosen.

So you no longer need to wonder if you are going to be left behind, while a hundred forty-four thousand are taken up in bliss. Everyone is involved. You are seeing the evidence of it around your globe in the radical changes in social order. And there is more to come. And it’s not coming because of the exercise of power of governments. Its happening because people are experiencing themselves deeply, and in the honesty of that experience they are saying, “We want what is humane, because we know what humaneness is, and it is now becoming more important to us than any ideology or teaching there is.” And the very love that constitutes the actual substance of every single Individuality is being embodied and changing social order and changing governments. It just seems as though you’re on this journey by yourselves. That’s the end of the answer.

RAJ COMMENTS: We have come to a very important point in this five day gathering. Now it’s your turn. I mean by that, that we have come to a time of sharing, a time for all of you to share with each other, a time to have the opportunity to say thank you to each other and share whatever you may have to share about the time we have spent together.

I know you were expecting and hoping to ask more questions, but it is essential, because you have been such a, shall I say, communified group. For the group to have the opportunity to, shall I say, say good bye to each other. Your expressions of anything that you have to share to the group will be an integral part of this whole closely held period of time that we have all had together.

And so I want all of you to take a few moments of silence, as I said, you may speak of anything that you wish, it does not all have to be good, but I would ask you to think in terms of what you have to be grateful for, not what you ought to be grateful for, but if you are able to share those things that you found yourselves spontaneously grateful for, it will be enriching for everyone.

This week has not just been about me and what I had to say, it was about you and what you experienced. And all of you deserve to have some idea of what you all contributed to. So we'll take perhaps two or three minutes to just be quiet while you do this, and then this time we will start in the front and move down, back and forth each row until we get to the back with no interruptions from me.

PAUL: Okay he says we're ready, we're ready. And he says, "Before you begin, I want to express my gratitude, and if you do not already know it, I love you."

SHARING: I really want to thank everyone. This has been such an incredible time for me. For me, it's like coming out of the closet. It's been such a beautiful bonus. It's like a grounding of the spiritual into the joy of what I love to do. And I had so much time to do what I love to do, which was a feeling of at-oneness with so many people. And it's such a beautiful, like, continuation of spiritual into physical. It's been totally wonderful and life transforming. And I want to thank you all for being a part of it. Thank you Raj.

SHARING: My heart is beating like a trip hammer. Every time Raj, you have said, "I love you," I've started to cry, so I figured you'd say that right before we [shared]. Before I came to this gathering I knew it was going to be special. It had to be, because it had never happened before. And I knew that it was going to be a really big step, not just that each of us was taking, but that we were taking for the Brotherhood—a big step forward.

On Sunday, Raj, you were talking about willfulness. And I like to break words down and look at the root of them. And I was thinking, all of us have struggled to rid ourselves of will, but here we are and all of us still have will. And before the cup can be filled it must be emptied. So it seemed to me that this was the time that the cup would be emptied, that we would empty ourselves so that the Holy Spirit could come in and fill our Being.

But I found that I was a little bit wrong. The Holy Spirit already is in our Being. It was another experience that we were to have together, and that experience was love. I have experienced love such as I never knew existed before. Three different times when Raj has been talking about love, I have practically dissolved into a pretzel over here.

Every morning when I've come down to breakfast, there has been such a feeling of joy, just seeing all of you. I never knew it could be like this. Everyone of you truly is my brother, my sister, myself. This is what the Awakening is, discovering that.

And yesterday I had a truly extraordinary experience, Raj had spoken of how the room was full of all our guides. I looked over and I guess you noticed because around every single one of you I saw a lavender glow. And even turned my head around over here to see, "Oh, my gosh every one of us." And then there was just a flash, just for an instant, I saw this room full of angels.

And then Raj, went ahead and talked about love. And that was the time I really truly wondered if there's enough Kleenex in the whole world to contain this. It was extraordinary. I feel that I've really come to a whole new understanding of the word love. And I believe that what we've been given here is an understanding so deep, that when we go out we're not going to lose it. We're going to take it home. And everyone of our Brothers and Sisters, as we look at them we will see these dear faces in which we have seen love as never before. And I thank you and I will carry you in my heart.

SHARER: A few days ago I put a sign up on the Bulletin Board saying, "I give great hugs." And I'm really glad I did that, I've gotten great hugs from everybody. If anybody's missing that I didn't get with, I'll be around until tomorrow.

One of the other things I've benefited from, I'd run my judgments and agenda when I'd go in, like whom I going to sit with at the meals and whatever crap would come up. And sometimes I'd get disappointed I didn't get to sit next to who I wanted. And I loosened up on that, just every meal, every sitting has just been great, whoever's been there, it's just been wonderful. And the humors been wonderful here. I love you all, thank you.

SHARER: I wish this was a chance of passing the mic.

PAUL: You can.

SHARER: Okay.

SHARER: I came here with two very important questions to me at the beginning. Then I went through a series of philosophical changes in my questions as the days went on. And things I thought were really deep and meaningful, and they were and they got answered, which put me back to my original two little self questions that didn't get answered, but maybe don't need to be answered. And the things that were answered, what you just said, and you just said, the feeling that we've gotten. And I've been through some traditional religious experiences with groups gathering and coming out on this high, and this high was not here, but this sense of peace. That I'm taking this time is maybe hopefully going to stay with me. It is going to stay with me. I'm learning standing here, you notice that? Because I haven't stopped. I just want to say thank you, and I wish there was a way that we could all keep in contact, I know we all feel probably like that. I wish I had everybody with me, I think I'm going to have everybody with me. Thank you.

SHARER: The word I was looking for I was thinking I was going to say this, was the humor. If I learned anything in here, it was a letting go and a permission to be just who I am without having to have a spiritual mumbo-jumbo, and this holier than thou, and always in meditation, and you know, you know? You know all of that garbage that goes along with what I thought was being on the path, and it's not at all. It's just a great, great ability to be who I am and enjoy it. And boy, have we enjoyed this time together, it's been such a privilege. I love you all. And I thank you.

SHARER: It's been a wonderful week. I thought because I didn't have any religious background at all that it would be very hard. And it has been hard for me to communicate with people who want to talk about religion. And I'm grateful that I never had any religion before. It's very easy for me, it's very natural. I know it. I have a license plate that says, "Remember." And it's so much easier now knowing that I don't have to go through forgetting all the stuff that I know you have learned. Thank you. Thank you all.

SHARER: I had a lot of religion. And one of the things I learned to do was, to define who my group was, who were the people that I belonged to, who were the one's that were safe to be with. And I left them five years ago and have not been with anybody as a group. And I've had a hard time discovering how to be with a group of people and love them the way I loved my group that was mine and that I felt safe in, although I don't believe like they do. And so, that's one of the things I've been doing here is, watching you love each other and knowing that you don't have a connection that comes from... Some of you have some connections, like the group of A Course In Miracles that are your own little group in A Course In Miracles and you sort of extend it to other Course In Miracles groups. But a lot of you don't have any of those connections and I have watched you be a member of the group and be willing to be open to anyone who just came by. And my experience is that anyone I came by was willing to be open with me, but I also am hiding a lot of the time. I had a wonderful time, and I think that I'm growing tremendously in this area of being able to define you as mine, and not beyond what belongs to me.

SHARER: Hi everybody. I wanted to pass the mic, but I also I am very, very grateful for this week. I realized this morning when I woke up and I couldn't fall back asleep, that there were things that I wanted for myself to feel and to change. And I thought that I had a particular picture of what that would look like. And what I realized this morning was that that picture was so small, compared to what I have received. That it's so much more beyond what I would have ever asked for myself. And instrumental in this was who I met up with and really had I felt so identical with a psychic kind of moods to me that I could forgive them in them and I could forgive them in me. I learned to see that we work here together, and I'm here and you're here. And I have this feeling, it's kind of like it feels like it's right here. And I feel like I've discovered the difference between Heaven and my own personal hell this week. And for that I am very grateful.

SHARER: Hi. As I said before, I came here not ever having heard of Raj, and not really ever hearing of A Course In Miracles, never having read the book or listened to any tapes. So I came with a totally clean slate. And I had this feeling before I came there was no anticipation, and no like sort of little bit nervousness, there was absolutely nothing, truly clean. And I must say that the slate has been filled with some words and feelings. But the one that stands out most, of course, is the right of love in everyone, every person. And I just looked in all these eyes and, "Oh there's one in that eye." And a big hug in like eyes like that. And there's this glow of feeling, truly it's like one community. And then I've had some people on the table there and gotten to know them more intimately. But it didn't matter, it's just all this big, big(?) word, it's just love for everyone. And Raj you are really a nice, nice, nice God. And you told me you just put everything so clearly. I've been on the path for quite a while and I take a little detour here and there and everywhere, and here a little bit of truth and another little bit of truth. But you kind of sort of brought it all together. It's wonderful.

And I would also like to ask a question: What is it always possible if this rose, this wonderful smell of roses, they would come and go and come and go. And it wasn't any person and I look up and see people and that was with them. But it would just come and go, and I'm just wondering, did you sprinkle rose water over the room?

ANSWER: No indeed, but it is one of the experiences of illumination. And when one is unguarded illumination occurs. And that is indeed one of the forms in which it is experienced.

SHARER: Well thank you. That was wonderful. We are all an illumined bunch you just glow. Thank you.

SHARER: I wouldn't be nervous if it wasn't for this machine. I am one of the people fortunate enough to have given birth a year and a half ago, to one of the babies that Raj was talking about. And I have a word for them, I call them cosmic little hoppers. And I had to leave him home with his dad to come here. I had mixed feelings about doing that, thinking that he is my teacher for unconditional love, and my daughter too, in a way that no one... I've never let anyone in before.

So I thought I would miss him a lot and that I would not be with him. And I was wrong, I'm with him and I didn't miss him at all. And he's not my only teacher for unconditional love at all, and it's not different. And my experience of the feeling has been really normal. I haven't been amazed, and usually I was amazed at how whatever anybody was and I'm not amazed at all. I'm humbled, and I'm totally in love with everyone here. So thank you. I love you(?)

Gathering In Overijse, Belgium –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

[This Gathering used a Language Interpreter. There were six tapes, but a lot of the time was spent as what Raj was saying was interpreted for the audience.]

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good afternoon. Although I am always with everyone, I am glad to be with you while you know I am with you. There is a Movement occurring in the world. A dream is breaking up. The dreamers are beginning to stir and stretch, and are just about to open their eyes. It is happening spontaneously. It is because this Movement is already occurring that I am with you in this fashion, so as to confirm to you what you either are not yet aware of, or are feeling but not understanding.

This is a very vital, sensitively conscious group of individuals. Even if you did not expect to be here today, it is not an accident that you are. These three days will be confirmation for you of Movement that you are experiencing. And what I want you to understand is, that what you are feeling is not simply the result of some psychological event in your brain.

Where do you suppose the dreamers are who are having a dream? Right in the middle of Reality—right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And you are all having a dream of three-dimensional, material humanhood, while in fact, you are absolutely divine.

Now, what I want to make clear here is that there are not really two places—Reality, and the fantasy place of your dream—there is just Reality, perceived clearly or unclearly. The unclear perception is what I refer to as the dream. When you have a biased or distorted perception of a thing and you think that that perception is real, you are experiencing a deluded awareness of something that is Real.

If you think your misperception is Reality, you are deluded. And that is what I am referring to as a dream. If you think that everything you are experiencing is a Real experience, there will not be present any curiosity. The great need, and the feelings arising in most of you is to see beyond your present sense of what you are seeing. If curiosity does not come into play, you will not open your eyes to, let us say, a new definition of everything you are familiar with.

Oh, you look at each other and you see a mother, daughter, brother, a friend, an enemy, etc.—when, in fact, the one who confronts you is the Son or Daughter of God, the direct expression of the First Cause. And because you are so confident that what you see there is just a human being, perhaps even a very difficult human being, you lock yourself into a relationship based upon a misperception. You do not release each other from it, but hold each other to it. And you never experience a reason for becoming curious to see whether there may be something more there.

The first lesson is, that I am the Christ and you are my brothers and sisters. Which means that we are all the direct expression of God, and therefore you are Christ's and I am your brother.

Your very definite conviction that I am the only begotten Son of the Father holds me in an unreal position above you, and holds you in a very unreal position beneath me. As long as this sense of difference is energized—believed—it is impossible for us to experience our equality as the offspring of God.

You hold me at a distance, and you hold yourself at a distance—a distance that does not actually exist—but which if it is believed will absolutely prohibit our coming into a realization of our Brotherhood and Sisterhood. And you will not be able to consciously embrace the experience of being the direct expression of God. And the illusion of inequality will persist. This sense of inequality is an illusion believed to be real. It has imprisoned all of you, whether you are religious or not.

This Movement I spoke of is indeed an uprising within you that does not allow you to easily continue in this disrespect for yourself that this belief of separateness or differentness has promoted. When you feel that something is going to change, when you feel that you cannot continue to be full of self-depreciation, it is because you are beginning to remember your Divinity.

Welcome the feeling, even though it seems to create disturbance. Indeed, it disturbs your fantasy, it disturbs the strong conviction you have had about your worthlessness, and you have been comfortable with your worthlessness. And to hear that you all are essentially Worthy, with a capital "W", requires a shift of consciousness within you—a willingness to embrace yourself more positively. And the inclination is to judge yourself as being arrogant.

I will tell you something: As you begin to embrace the essential Reality of yourself, you will not feel like a second-class citizen, you will feel your unchangeable integrity. And it will feel like strength; not strength over something, but a perfect safety in which defense is unnecessary. That is strength—power that doesn't need to be exercised.

And I will tell you that it will feel good. Your worth does not come from your accomplishments in enduring suffering, it comes from the realization of who you are, and that suffering is not essential. You do not have to earn your birthright, it was not ever taken away from you. And Awakening is the realization of that fact. A realization which dissolves any apparent necessity to earn your good, whether you have thought about it or not.

Not one of you really wants to have your good given to you. You would rather earn it, because in that way you can claim it as yours. What does that mean? It means that it is yours and not someone else's. But what you hold as yours can be taken away. Therefore, what you worked so hard to earn does not give you peace, because you must defend it.

You are going to have to dare to accept the gift of your integrity and your worth that is yours by birthright. What you acquire can be taken away, but what you are cannot. And that is where your safety and security and invulnerability lies. Do you know that it is not respectful for you to believe that you are unworthy of eating the crumbs that fall from God's table? That is so insulting, it does not honor you.

I am here this weekend to challenge your firm belief that you are unworthy, that you are unequal. And as I said, to confirm to you the Movement that you are feeling within yourselves, that it is no longer reasonable for you not to think well of yourself and that, indeed, not thinking well of yourself—which is called suffering—refines your Soul.

Your Soul is God in you. God is not tarnished, God in you is fully illuminated. You do not have a soul, you are Soul expressed—the presence of Soul. And God is Soul. Soul is God's capacity to feel the meaning of His Creation. You are God's self-expression from which He has withheld nothing of what He Is—from which She has withheld nothing of what She Is.

Therefore, the Soul that is you is the capacity to experience the meaning of All That Exists—by you. It is your capacity, you might say, to see as God sees. That is your birthright—ignorance of this is not.

I say this to you because you need to know that when these more positive thoughts about who you are begin to arise within you, it is difficult for you to believe, and you need a brother with the broader perspective to say to you, "Yes." Explore what you are feeling—abide with it, rather than being frightened by it. It is part of coming back into your Right Mind. You understand Right Mindedness? Yes, no? Yes.

We will talk about many things, but it is in this context that I have just shared with you that we will allow the answers to come forth. If the answers are listened for in the context of your current ignorance of the truth about you, there will be no enlightenment—no escape from the limits of your belief.

QUESTION: Raj, I have a very personal question. Is it possible to have your interpretation on the relationship I started one year and a half ago, with my friend Eric, considering the future?

ANSWER: I'm going to put it this way: It is a good relationship, but in order for it to endure, you are going to have to be willing to allow it to be lively, rambunctious, unsettled in a positive way. This is not going to be a sedate, laid back, quiet relationship. You must not try to get him to settle down. He will help you keep your foot out of the grave. Don't try to make him grow up and act like an old man. It is a call for you to dare to let go and have more vital fun. Give yourself permission. It is all right not to always be so proper.

QUESTION: Being a writer is for me the way I am closest to my very deep nature. When I reach automatic writing, I realize it is the best way for me to do it. So I would like to ask Raj how to make the technique automatic?

ANSWER: Let go, relax. There is no call for control on your part, and yet, you will find yourself moving your hand. Your primary curiosity is around experiencing greater ease; this comes from practice—from doing it, doing it, doing it. It is a matter of your increasing trust and trust comes from familiarity. Just continue doing it. It will get smoother and smoother.

You see what is called for is not greater technique, but less effortlessness. What makes it seem hard is that you think it is hard. The less effort you put into it, the easier it will become.

QUESTION: I am really concerned about—ever since I had two of my relationships break up in rapid succession about one year and a half ago—well, I have been without one. And although I sometimes feel balanced and joyful and that, I also experience limitations and frustrations. And I would like your comments on that.

ANSWER: There is an element here of getting even, of getting justice. You are pouting. You are not truly allowing a new relationship, so as to be able to say to the two prior individuals: “See how miserable you have made my life.” Now, this is not an overt act or thought, but you are mad. You think that you are reluctant to become vulnerable again, but you have not really said “yes.” You are controlling your state of isolation.

Now you must let go of those two relationships—let go of the hurt and anger. Stop behaving in a deprived manner. And then two things: Let in a new relationship—in other words, say, “Welcome.” And second: Give your love. What I am saying is not being said as a judgment, but as an observation that it will help you to look at. You are like an actor acting out the part of a spurned lover. And at times you are believing your act, even though you are doing it for someone else. It involved unnecessary paraphernalia that you need not be burdened with. Quit the act, and get on with letting in a relationship and giving your love. You deserve it.

QUESTION: Yes, I understand, but what about, will my situation continue for long?

ANSWER: I will put it this way: It will be almost impossible for you to arrive at the month of November and be alone.

Now, I want you to understand that it is the nature of your Being to bring forth and identify your fulfillment—that is the natural inclination, the natural Movement of your Being. Therefore, it is well for you to begin to anticipate the evidence of fulfillment. Do not, in your mind, make your fulfillment dependent upon circumstances. Your essential Being, which is the living Presence of God, has infinite resources with which to identify your fulfillment. Let that Movement occur by giving permission for it and expecting to see the evidence.

Do not, as they say, confuse reality with the facts—meaning the facts as you presently perceive them. Let a conviction begin to form in you as to the inevitability of your fulfillment. And this applies to everyone. Do not sit and argue against it and prove to yourself through your argument that it cannot happen.

QUESTION: What are the chances of my husband and I managing a spiritual path together?

ANSWER: What is the likelihood that the two of you will find a way to love each other and enjoy that loving? You do not need to answer. This means “the spiritual path” is often one of the most unkind labels that one could come up with, because it tends to separate, create differences that are not natural.

The truly spiritual path is one in which there develops within you a willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, in each and everyone. The spiritual path enhances one’s expression of his or her humanity. It allows unity to develop because it is such an expression of a naturalness.

You know what love feels like and your husband knows what love feels like. When you are around someone who sees the best in you, I’m going to say, when you are around someone who sees the ultimate or the Christ in you, it does not make you feel attacked; it does not make you feel estranged. It makes you feel good; it makes you feel embraced—included. It makes you feel as though you can put down your defenses. And in the absence of your defense, the one you are with feels safe to let down his defenses. And he is inspired to conceive of himself better. This is love. The practice of love is the spiritual path.

Do you have to speak the right language for your dog to love you? Do you need to be able to talk for hours about spiritual matters in order for your dog to feel loved? And yet, love expressed defenselessly between you and your mate is exactly what will promote transformation. To be on the spiritual path is to be more real in your simple humanity, which even your dog recognizes. Spirituality is not a conceptual thing, it is an experiential thing—something you feel.

I want all of you to understand that there is a difference between feeling and emotion. Feeling is Soul-sensing the meaning of God’s Creation. I will tell you that emotions are ego reaction when the Movement of God doesn’t honor the ego’s definitions of good. So, emotions are reactions, and feelings are the Soul-sensing of the meaning of God in your experience.

Stay out of your head, stay in touch with your feelings. Be in the world out from your feelings. Be with your husband from your feelings—not emotions—your feelings.

Now I am not describing “a spiritual path,” because as I said, love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. You cannot be curious and defensive at the same time. In order to be curious, you must be defenseless, and when you are defenseless you let in the meaning of things—you are interested in perceiving God everywhere you look. Including right where your husband is standing. Forget about obedience’s. Rules, lessons and steps do not constitute the spiritual path. It is not an over simplification to say, Love is the way.

There are many husbands who would love to have their wives come home from such a workshop and say, “Sweetheart I am not going to try to talk spiritual truths to you anymore, and I’m just going to start loving you.” They will not have any trouble understanding that, and will thank whoever the teacher of the group was.

What isn’t realized is that what I have described to you is utterly and profoundly transformational. No one realizes the power of the simplicity of Love.

QUESTION: I would like to know what my profession in life will be from now on. I fear in a way a change, but there’s some uncertainty. And I would like some clarification.

ANSWER: Yes, indeed, there is a change coming, but don’t be impatient, and do not assume that the feeling you have requires you to figure out what it will be. You have not created this feeling. What you are feeling is the leading edge of that which is new. Now be patient while the leading edge goes by and the clarification of what it is can register with you.

Everyone is very geared to thinking. Thinking is the solution to everything—it is believed. But I will tell you that not one insight, not one revelation was ever the result of thinking. This feeling that there is going to be a change is the leading edge of revelation. Let it finish revealing itself to you and know that the timing of its unfoldment will be perfect. And in the meantime, love the job that you have.

QUESTION: Yes, but I would like to know some more.

ANSWER: But you see this is part of your own growing process, and for me to give you specifics would weaken you—make you weak. There is a need at this time for you to trust; to trust into the Movement of your Being. You are already feeling it, but you must not be impatient. I am not avoiding answering you.

QUESTION: Raj, you know my intention to transfer to other people my experience as a consultant for the development of companies. What do you advise me to do to have this project the best possible way?

ANSWER: Two things: First, be fearless. And second; do not be concerned about how what you will say will sound to others. I will save you a great deal of stress by suggesting to you that from the beginning you provide your expertise without apology and without any attempt to prove yourself to anyone. Your expertise is highly valuable.

To not care how what you share is received will not constitute arrogance or insensitivity, but it will inhibit the possibility of argument. When it doesn't matter what someone else thinks about you, you are able to be genuine, unself-conscious and, therefore, not available for a tug-of-war (two teams pulling on a rope) where you are obliged to prove yourself.

Your clients will have spontaneous respect for you when it becomes apparent to them that you are not trying to get their respect, but, rather, are being the presence of wisdom—whether they like it or not. So again: be fearless, and don't try to prove yourself to anyone. You will do very well in this work.

I want you all to understand that I will never tell you something nice about yourself if it isn't true. I will not butter you up. I will not encourage you to have a false sense of confidence just so that you will feel good. And so when I say you will do very well, it is because you will, and because you have what it takes. Don't bother practicing self-doubt.

QUESTION: Six or seven years ago I got diabetes. And I have done the necessary changes in my personal life regarding that illness, but in spite of that the diabetes is still there. And so I would like to know the meaning of that illness in my life, for my mission.

ANSWER: No illusion—and I am calling illness an illusion—no illusion ever has Real meaning. You must understand that always the Holy Spirit can turn every situation to your advantage. And the reason is that the illusion is an illusion; therefore, the only thing, the only purpose an illusion can serve is to ultimately uncover the fact that it is an illusion. The Holy Spirit does not turn a situation to your advantage as an act of grace, or as a special favor to you or anyone else.

You see, it is your Birthright to be experiencing your perfection, because that is the fact about you. If you find value or meaning in a problem, you give it reality. It cannot disappear until its pure meaninglessness becomes apparent to you. Even though you may grow from the experience of a problem, the problem itself has no capacity to be of value to you.

The experience of a problem is an illegitimate imposition upon your Birthright, upon your conscious experience of your Birthright. It is never to be agreed with or tolerated as though it had some unique value for you. If you find value in it you will hold it to you. Fundamentally, you do not feel that it has value, but you are open-minded and willing to consider that maybe it does. And I wish to squelch that right now. I do not give my support to that kind of thinking.

Healing is what you must expect; it is what you must give permission for and then expect to see the evidence of. That was your original approach. It was appropriate, do not let go of it.

What is an illegitimate imposition? It is an imposition which has no real source. In this instance, it is an imaginative source. I know you say it is a physical manifestation; but I will tell you that you are standing at a point of discovering that your body is the visibility and tangibility of your individuality, and not just a physical organism that you are temporarily inhabiting.

Listen carefully: Unexpressed God is a nonexistent God; there cannot be God without the infinite expression of God. In exactly the same way, you cannot exist without the visible, tangible evidence of your existence. Therefore, you will never be unidentified or unidentifiable. Your individuality is truly the Presence of God in expression.

It is a healing fact that your body is rendering visible and tangible God's Presence. God is whole, complete, and as His expression you are whole and complete. Regardless of how it appears at the moment, that is the present fact about you. Therefore, it is inconsistent and unintelligent for you to adopt a theory that a manifestation of incompleteness is somehow valuable and meaningful. Do not validate or energize such an idea.

Your conditioning would have you believe that this physical problem is a manifestation of some flaw in your individuality and that becomes the justification for this disease. So you say, "Okay, I must deserve it," and you have no justification for a different point of view.

I am encouraging you to know that you began with the right concept and attitude, but your commitment to it has been weakened by the idea that somehow it has meaning for you. This is not true. I encourage you to return to your original stance—be steadfast with it. And I want you to know that with full commitment to that stance you will experience healing. What I have told you is divinely, absolutely reasonable.

We will be speaking further during these three days about healing.

QUESTION: Those last years I have been put in contact with my emotions. Through many experiences: the one being happy and the one being unhappy experiences. And I don't see clearly. I'm confused in all of that. Could Raj help me?

ANSWER: There is indeed a great deal of cleansing, of what you could call purification—a process of release—most valuable for you, even though it has felt unpleasant. Emotions are the means all of you use to block your feelings. And why do you do this? For two reasons. The first is as a defense against threat outside of yourself. And the second is to delay experiencing your Divinity.

That doesn't make sense does it? Why would you want to cover up your Divinity? I will tell you that the reason is because you think it will constitute a significant loss to experience your Divinity. There is a fear that it will involve responsibility. There is a fear that you will not fit in anymore. You even think that if you became suddenly, totally enlightened you would ascend and lose the experience of your family and your friends and even of this beautiful earth and universe.

Why would anyone want to wake up? That is why I began today sharing with you the fact that the spiritual path, that waking up, makes you more real, more relevant, more genuine, more recognizably lovable. As you have been willing to take a look at your emotions—even though I said they are illusory, just ego reactions—you allow Movement to occur. And when there is the flexibility of Movement, that which the emotion is covering is able to press that emotion out like a cork from a champagne bottle. And the feeling, the Soul-sensing that I spoke of, the Real thing is able to bubble forth—the love that was covered by hate is able to come forth; the peace that was covered by fear is able to come forth.

Now you want to have this experience more frequently. The way to do it is to desire to feel the feelings that are underlying your emotions. Your desire is an invitation to those feelings, which it is your Birthright to be experiencing. Do not be surprised when you do this if negative emotions seem to come up. The cork which is holding down your Soul capacity must come out. And while it is moving out, it will seem to get your attention. This is good. This is why at a moment of transformation a very negative feeling will seem to suddenly change into its opposite—a most desirable transformation.

Your corks are very little. They have very little substance now. The flow of the feelings that are yours to experience is very near the surface. I do want you to feel encouraged. Most of the hard work is over.

QUESTION: So in the professional field, I would like to know which direction to take Raj, as you said previously, to fulfill my purpose.

ANSWER: Indeed, this is a good question to end the day with, and everyone will be able to identify with it. To have a sense of purpose is to have an idea, a goal, something that you may intend to accomplish. You are familiar with this, you are comfortable with this, and you think it is essential to your experience of your fulfillment of purpose. But fulfillment of purpose, when I speak of it, is fulfillment of Purpose, with a capital “P”, and you don’t know what that is. Therefore, in order to find out what it is, you must yield up your exercise of control. This is not easy for any of you.

Now, I have referred to the word “listening”—meaning going within into the silence and being attentive. This is what Paul is doing at this moment. Whenever any of you go within into the silence, you abandon the control you exercise by thinking. You think in order to keep a sense of balance when you are not connected with your essential Self. This means that thinking itself is a defense.

Now, you can begin to let go of control by letting go of your thinking. And you can let go of your thinking by meditating, by going within into the silence. Please understand that when I say meditation, I do not necessarily mean a formal process, a system that is taught by anyone. It can be whatever works in terms of allowing you to become still.

You may use a mantra if you wish. You may use self-hypnosis relaxation techniques; you can even soak in a hot tub. The point is to take a specific period of time in which to let go and discover that you are not your thinking, but are that conscious awareness in which thinking goes on. This is a very practical first step in abandoning or relinquishing control. It is a safe way to do it. I mean by that not that there are dangerous ways to do it, but rather that this is a way you can do it in which you will not feel overwhelmed.

Fulfillment of purpose is what spontaneously happens when you are not in control. “But if I’m not in control how can I govern what will happen?” You cannot. The assumption is that chaos will result from not being in control. But the simple fact is, that when you go into the silence and listen without any goal, you are filled with clarity. And one of the things that becomes obvious to you in this experience is that this inflow of clarity is an experience of Self, with a capital “S”. And you find that the small “s” self, that wanted to be in control, is not that which will provide you with an awareness of your Real fulfillment.

There is a wonderful word—“yield” (“surrender”). When you surrender or yield, where do you find yourself? In the underlying, everlasting arms (or hands) of God, moved in the way that feels fulfilling. You see, you would like a specific answer: an occupation, a specific activity, as an indicator of your fulfillment of purpose. But God is a Movement, and therefore your fulfillment of purpose is a Movement that cannot be, let us say, trapped in a photograph. And so I am pointing out to you that the fulfillment of purpose that is yours will never be static.

What does this mean? It means that the answer to your question is easier than what you thought it would be, because you were looking for some ultimate final fulfillment to be identified. But you can begin at this moment to be willing to yield into an awareness of what is utterly appropriate for you, so that you will be home at the right time; so that you will take care of this or that perfectly, and thus find yourself so perfectly congruent with everything that you are able to feel the unity of everything with you, and that this unity of the Movement of everything is the experience of God and of your Real Identity.

You can, in the office, remember to call this person or to put new toner in the photocopier with perfect timeliness, and again feel the perfection of the place right where you are and the perfection of you relative to it all. In this way you may gently yield into what I am going to call the Godness of you—your divine Being.

And I will tell you something else: As you do this and begin to realize that the Kingdom of Heaven and harmony isn't somewhere off in the future, you will begin to feel peace in the midst of your activity, and a fearlessness that you haven't experienced before.

Fulfillment of purpose involves being perfectly you, at any given moment, in any circumstance. Again, I must stress that this is not a matter of mechanical orderliness, but rather a discovery of the Allness of God; and that there is not one single aspect of your experience that isn't some aspect of the infinite expression of God. Therefore, this experience of fitting in perfectly with everything awakens in you a more conscious awareness that God is alive now, Being the Movement of Creation now. And that your function is to be the conscious awareness of that Movement of God, and not just a conscious awareness of the orderliness of material things, including you as a material body.

I know it would have been nice to have had an amazing answer, but what I have told you is truly amazing and more reachable than what you imagined. And indeed, it is helpful because it does not cause your attention to be given in a place or time different from here and now, which would cause you to not pay attention right here where the Divinity of life is present and available to be experienced.

“Spiritual paths” tend to imply a means of getting somewhere that you are not already. And so the attention is never where the opportunity for the real discovery can occur. And so no one wakes up. Yet, your truly great teachers—the few of them that there are—tell you that it is the here and now that is important, and that love is the answer, and that your Divinity is to be found in your humanity. Which means that it is completely inappropriate to consider your humanity as a negative or limited thing.

When I said that “yield” and “surrender” were beautiful words, it was because when you yield and surrender you let down into your essential humanity. Your humanity is where your genuineness and your humility are, and from there your perception of your world and the way in which everyone else experiences you will be changed.

I am very glad you asked the question. And if you have a “yes, but,” we will attend to it first thing in the morning. And so you have all night to come up with one.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS, DAY TWO: Good morning. Yesterday I spoke of the difference between emotions and feelings and I would like to extend your understanding of this. It is important to understand that there is a difference between what I refer to as Individuality and personality. Personality is something that is acquired as you grow up. You form it on the basis of your interaction with the world—your perception of the world—and your relationships with other people. In other words, your personality is a response to everything outside of you. It is like a language of expression; it is not the only one there is, but you think that it is you.

Individuality is your essential Self, your essential Being. It is that which was present before you developed a personality. And what seems to escape everyone's awareness is the fact that this Individuality is absolutely divine. In other words, your Individuality is the Presence of God expressed. If you believe that your personality is what truly identifies you, and you are never open to an experience of yourself beyond that acquired and self-created personality, you are locked into what is, in the final analysis, not really you at all.

If you are unaware of a difference between personality and Individuality, you will not bring curiosity into play, and you will just exist without experiencing your full potential. One of the reasons I am speaking with you in this fashion is to arouse your curiosity about the more of you that is available for you to experience.

It is the personality that experiences emotions. Your Individuality—the Individuality that you are—is the Soul, with a capital “S”, that feels the meaning of what God is Being. For those of you who have investigated various spiritual paths, you have heard of experiencing nirvana, total enlightenment, unity with God. Indeed, this has found expression as a dissolving of you into God, as though you would be swallowed up in an infinite conscious experience of bliss, no longer experiencing Individuality. That can sound desirable, but “let's do it tomorrow. In the meantime, I will enjoy being separate from God and having a more interesting experience.”

That is a natural conclusion considering the concept of dissolving into unity with God. Unfortunately, the concept has not been well expressed, and this has caused confusion.

God is infinite Presence. This Presence is Mind. Mind in order to be Mind must be conscious. In order for it to be conscious, it must be conscious of something. If God is All There Is, then All There Is for this Mind to be conscious of is Itself. This is not as irrelevant as it might sound. The process of Mind being aware of Itself is a Movement, an action. And so, God being Mind experiences the Movement of Mind that It Is.

This is expressed in the first chapter of Genesis in the Bible. This is an allegory or parable: For six days the Movement of Mind occurred, and it looked like something—animals, plants, planet. “And on the seventh day God saw everything that He had made and Behold, it was very good.” That is an incorrect translation. It should say: “And God saw everything that He had made and Behold, it was verily God.”

In other words, God recognized Himself, period. This allegory expresses the Movement of Self-awareness—divine Self-awareness. This infinite Mind being One, and therefore not divided, did not go through a process of division in order to have an infinitely expressed manifestation or experience of Himself. Therefore, God is infinite and specific at the same time.

Each one of you is the expression of this infinite First Cause, this infinite undivided Movement of Mind, called God. And each of you, therefore, is best identified as Individuality. In English, the word Individuality means indivisible, even though those who speak English do not understand it that way.

Therefore, your essential Beingness is the Presence of God and not the presence of a personality. However, all of you have believed the personality that you have developed to be who you are. This personality seems to be separate and different from everything else.

The language of self-identification has, therefore, involved elements of defense: something which is totally foreign to the divine Individuality that you are that is not separate from anything. Part of your language of personality involves opposites, polarities. And thus you have become (and I say this most kindly) warmongers—a hunter who is a fighter who is ready for combat, not a fighter sitting back in a chair drinking a beer—a fighter on the alert.

This is called wisdom; it is called self-protection, but it is an attitude of defense. And an attitude of defense is an attitude of attack. You certainly are not projecting an attitude of welcome and embrace. It is an attitude of guilty until proven innocent.

Understand that I am not singling you out. I am describing the inherent characteristics of the meaning of the word personality.

When you approach your world and everything in it as though it is not its intent to be supportive of you, you are projecting a definition of enemy on it. Inevitably your world is not going to like that. Your spouse, your children, your family, your friends will resent the fact that you do not assume that they are fundamentally loving. And if they speak up and object to your attitude, you will say, “I was right, she attacked me.” That is what the personality says. And the personality says, “Ah, I must be even more alert and more defended.” And it becomes like a dog chasing its tail into negativity.

The only way out of this downward and tightening spiral of ignorance is to understand that Individuality and personality are different, and that one is Real and one is imaginary, and that it is essential to stop valuing and validating the imaginary.

Now I have not come here to sell you on, or to convince you that you must study A Course In Miracles. But the first lesson in the Course says, “Nothing that I see means anything.” That can be perceived to be a very depressing lesson. After all, you are supposed to say this over and over for a whole day, and actually say the tree that I see does not mean anything; the chair that I see does not mean anything; the person I see does not mean anything. Very depressing. For many of you that is reason enough to close the book and never read it again.

But what it means is—“Nothing that I see means what I think it means.” The statement is unequivocal, it is absolute. And the reason is, that it is very helpful for you to assume that your present definitions of everything are probably totally wrong. Now, if your definition is probably totally false, that is not depressing, because it allows for curiosity as to what its real meaning is to arise within you. There is value in the absoluteness of that statement, because it can help you to be willing to let go of your favorite definitions.

Some of your definitions of things have been arrived at through great struggle on your part, and therefore there is a little bit of ego attached to the definition—you are proud of the clarity you have brought yourself to. And there is a tendency to hold onto those things which give you a feeling of worth. It is difficult to let go of something that you have worked hard for, even if there is a clarity that goes beyond it and undoes it. That is why the statement, “Nothing that I see means anything,” is so absolute. It helps you get past, it helps you to release your favorite concepts, theories or beliefs.

Whether you ever read A Course In Miracles or not, your understanding of what I have explained so far will contribute to your escape from a language of self-identification and connect with the essential Self that you are, which is that infinite conscious awareness in which the concept of a personality has been experienced.

I realize that I am expressing all of this briefly, but it gives you a foundation for new realization. As each of you begins to acknowledge that you are defining everything that you are seeing, and that the definitions have arisen as a response to everything outside of you, and that, therefore, it is not as absolutely true as you thought it was, curiosity will be born in you. And you will say, “If it isn’t what I think it is. What is it?” And since I have told you that it is the visibility and tangibility of God, you will not be expecting a new definition that is materialistic. The new definition will necessarily have to reflect the indivisible, unpolarized expression of God.

Now not one of you knows at the moment what that will be like. And so there will have to be an element of trust that comes into play as you open up to this unknowable something. It is not that it is really unknowable, it is just that it is unknowable while you are still believing your definitions.

I also want to share with you the difference between trust and confidence. Confidence can only be had relative to something you have already experienced. Trust relates only to that which you have not yet experienced. Therefore, confidence—which most of you feel is trust—will always substantiate what has already been. Where trust promotes revelation—the penetration of your current perception of things by that which is beyond your current perception of things.

There is no other way to put this: Trust is scary—frightening—but only because you love the familiar, not because that which is unfamiliar is truly threatening. It is just that what is unfamiliar requires you to grow to change, and everyone values the comfort of laziness.

It is important to know that trust transcends the human experience. To be more specific, it transcends the level of experience of the personality and its definitions of all that is.

You see the key to waking up is not what you know, but the fact that you are the conscious awareness in which knowing occurs. As this begins to register in your mind, a shift begins to occur—a shift from (for lack of better words) being a human being to being a Conscious Being. In other words, a shift from body identification to Mind identification.

As you invite this shift of perception, you find the need to defend the body decreasing, and you cease energizing defense against your world. You begin to discover the infiniteness of you as Mind. I know it would be easier for you to understand if I were to say that you would have a clearer experience of yourself as a Mind, but that would be confusing. It suggests that you can have a mind here, and a mind here, and a mind here, and a mind here, etc.

You must come to an understanding that you are Mind that is infinite, because you are the direct expression of God, the infinite, indivisible Mind. As long as you can have a mind here and a mind here, there can be no unity, because there is separateness.

I am indeed trying to explain something not easy to understand; but you are grasping the meaning, and so I encourage you not to be confused by the words. As this shift of perception occurs, from body identification to Mind identification, you experience what you would call an influx of divine awareness—one absent of confusion; a clarity that you did not figure out; a clarity that, as I said yesterday, discloses the Divinity of everything that you are looking at and the Christhood of everyone you see.

It is a recognition that does not happen through space, but a knowing within you that is unchallengeable. This is the beginning of the experience of unity with God called nirvana or other names. You will find yourself being able to be absolutely, wonderfully, even artistically appropriate, whether you are typing or cooking or constructing or nursing a baby.

You cannot take this next statement as an absolute statement, but it will help you to understand. You will not stop doing all of the things that you have been doing, but you will do them with a conscious awareness that it is all God and, ultimately, that it is all you. Now the fact is that everyone of you will have this experience of it all being you and that you cannot intellectually grasp. The experience will explain itself.

Now I did say that you will do all of the things that you have been doing—that is not absolutely true. The things that you have done for self-protection, you will no longer do. The social behaviors you have engaged in so that others will not violate your definition of who you are, so that they will not defile your personality, will stop.

My reason for making the statement was so that you might understand that the experience of enlightenment and unity with God will not annihilate everything that you have known, and will not bring about such a radically new experience that it might be easy to believe that it would be better to remain ignorant.

QUESTION: I first want to say thank you for the words from this morning, because to me they came like a gift. And the question I want to ask is about my private life. For three years now I have put a lot of energy, too much energy, into my relationship with my boyfriend. And sometimes we have very good moments together, but at other times it is very horrible moments we have. Will our relationship continue, or should I leave? I would like to have some clarity on that.

ANSWER: All of you must remember that clarity resolves problems; but sometimes clarity calls for changes that do not match what you think you want. And then clarity seems to be as much of a problem as the problem.

I am lovingly going to speak to you, as it is said, like a Dutch uncle. You deserve to be in a relationship with—for lack of better words—a gentleman. It does not benefit you to have to train him. You said that you have lost confidence at times in this relationship, but that you have not lost confidence in yourself. I am going to suggest that you have lost confidence in yourself, and that it seems unreasonable to you to feel that you deserve to be with someone who is spontaneously and naturally sensitive to you—thoughtful of you—and who embraces you even when he is not with you, and whose primary desire is to make you happy. I am not describing a kind of man who is now extinct.

It is not appropriate for you to feel that you had better accept what you can get. It is essential for you to respect yourself enough and give yourself enough credit to say, “I desire and deserve the kind of relationship Raj has just described.”

Now am I judging this fellow? Should I not be expressing unconditional love and acceptance, no matter what? That isn't love, that's stupidity. Did I keep my mouth shut and allow the moneychangers to have their tables in front of the synagogue? No, indeed. What is inappropriate is inappropriate. And we could say here: what does not work does not work. If you have a round peg in a square hole, they do not go together. It is not a judgment against the hole or the peg to recognize that they are not congruent.

I am going to say something for everyone. Don't marry anyone and don't get into any relationship with the intent to bless your partner with the good you have for him or her. In other words, don't enter a relationship with the goal of changing the other person. If you want to be a therapist, get a license and make him pay. Is that unloving? No it is wisdom.

Therapy is not the purpose of a relationship. Education is not the purpose of a relationship. Your patience and willingness to help develop a capacity on his part to be more sensitive, thoughtful and attentive is not congruent—doesn't fit. It won't work. And the fact is that part of you knows that, but there is a thought there that says, "love conquers all." Interesting choice of words. Warlike isn't it?

Now, it is a noble thing to desire to be that place where transformational love can come forth and bless another, but it is well for the two people in a relationship to start out with a common language of the heart. This the two of you do not have.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. There is a picture of a board with round holes and square holes in it, and pieces of wood—dowel—that are round and square. And there is one square piece of wood that is purple, and you are trying to make this purple one go into a round hole.

This is still me, Paul. I don't know that the colors have any significance, but the board that has the holes in it is a bright lemon yellow. Now he is saying that it's not appropriate to keep trying to make these fit. And there are other pieces of wood that are round; and there are other colors, but none of the other ones are purple, and you like purple. It's almost as though it isn't the right piece of wood that matters, it's the color that matters.

ANSWER: This is Raj. There is an attachment to his personality—there are elements of it that are quite enjoyable. But again, the two of you are not congruent. The specific key to the resolution to this problem lies in your willingness to honor yourself more fully than you do. It is not arrogance, it is not a false sense of superiority for you to acknowledge within yourself that you deserve—that you merit (again for lack of better words)--being in a relationship with a gentleman—a gentle man. Not a wimp, not someone weak, but someone whose strength is expressed thoughtfully and tenderly and with commitment.

Now what does this mean? In very practical terms it means that your acknowledgment of this constitutes a giving of permission for such a person to come into your experience, because you are not maintaining a mental attitude about yourself that says you are not worth it, or that you are getting too old to be changing partners, or that you had better give up hope.

There are all kinds of arguments that you can use to inhibit your acknowledgment of your worth—your worthiness. When the arguments against your fulfilling relationship are stopped, and you give permission for one that does, that is what opens the door.

If you are the Presence of God, and your world is the Presence of God, then the moment you withdraw the arguments against your fulfillment and give permission for something new, you will find your world beginning to reconfigure, to identify your fulfillment. Why? Because the world is the Movement of God, which is the Movement of fulfillment and of Wholeness and the ability to embody the meaning that elicits the words: “Behold it is verily Myself—it’s good!”

Again, because this is good news and bad news, you must remember that the key is your remembering that you are worthy of the kind of relationship that I have been talking about. When you forget this, you stop trusting yourself and you become false, and you cannot be other than miserable when you are not connected to yourself. You are thinking too much about him, and not enough about yourself to remain connected and clear.

And in spite of what you think, if you are not connected and clear, even if you are being unconditionally loving and helpful, you are not being Real. And that is not a blessing for those you are with. You are here to express the integrity of God that you Are. And when you do, everyone is blessed, and therefore what I am describing is not selfishness, but real unselfishness.

QUESTION: This is the question I’m asking now, and I have been asking myself this question a long time. For two years I have the impression that I am living next to my life, so to speak. The person who was most important for me has no time to devote to me anymore. I’ve been through a lot of emotions, but today I am finding them quieting down and I am experiencing more peace. But actually, I still feel the feeling of attachment, and I don’t know how to untie the knot, and how things will happen in the future.

ANSWER: It is as though there has been a wound and the wound is healing, because it is the nature of things for wounds to heal. I say that so that you will not feel personally responsible for the healing.

I encourage you to be patient with yourself while this healing occurs and the hurt goes away, because it will. You are not creating the hurt, and therefore it is not up to you to correct it. If a mistake has not been made, no correction is called for. If you were unmoved by this disconnection, it would mean you were dead; it would mean that there had been no meaning in the relationship.

The distress—and I am not speaking of the pain, the hurt—the distress is caused by a feeling that you are somehow responsible or guilty for the disconnection. That is what is unnecessary. That distress is what is unnecessary. The wound that is healing expresses the fact that you are Love—Love, with a capital “L”—and that you are alive enough to recognize meaningfulness.

Perspective will return; a balance will come back and you will experience your peace uninterruptedly. You are adjusting and while adjustment occurs you must be patient, kindly patient with yourself. You are almost at the end of the healing. The rest of the healing will be more comfortable for you if you will stop trying to find out what you did wrong, and feeling guilty even though you haven’t found out what you did wrong. Again, no mistake occurred, and therefore no correction is called for. And there is no one to find at fault. You are innocent.

QUESTION: Raj, I would like to thank you for the very precious information that you have given to us already. My question, and I hope this is not too general, is that I feel that I am in a state of stagnation at the moment. I would like to experience life more fully. And I want to be confident with my mission, as far as I have a mission. What would you recommend for me to do, in my private life as well as in my professional life? Thank you heartfully.

ANSWER: Literally what you need to do is what is the hardest thing for you to do—stop! When you are in this position, the tendency is to try to get hold of things and make things happen. It feels as though you are stuck and you want to do everything you can to get unstuck. But what I'm going to encourage you to do is to be in that stuck place—without disliking it. In other words—give up, surrender into it. When you are feeling stuck, it is because you have arrived at a point where your personality cannot easily carry you further. And so what is called for is to stop trying from the level of your personality. It is time to relax and take a deep breath, even if it is a deep breath that lasts three months.

Again, in order to get beyond the limits of your memory, which is another way of saying getting beyond your personality, you must release the attempt to accomplish as a little mind. And so, when I say the answer is to surrender into the stuckness, I am suggesting that you yield into yourself as conscious awareness.

This means to yield into that place where you don't know anything, without fussing about not knowing anything. Embrace not knowing as a friend. This not-knowing place is the silence within you. And the silence within you is the threshold of what I will call new knowing; but it is only in that silence, that large emptiness or void, that there is room for something new to come in and fill you up.

Everyone avoids this place passionately. But if you allow yourself to embrace it and you experience the in-filling of insight and clarity, you will begin to find it more valuable than your best thinking, with which you are very comfortable. And the time will come when you will seek out the void in preference to your best thinking. It is a most wonderful place to be, this stuck place, even though your conditioning says it is awful.

It is very simple: When you come up to the limit of what your personality can do, there must be another side to that limit. It means, therefore, you are for the first time in that place where you can really access the other side, that place where you can access the unknown. If there is a wall and you are still ten feet away from it, there is no way for you to climb it. But if you have bumped your nose on the wall, you are in exactly the right spot to climb it. You are on the threshold of something new. Appreciate where you are, and be willing to abide in this not-knowing place with peace.

There is a phrase in A Course In Miracles which says, “Infinite patience brings immediate results.” If you will allow yourself to be stuck without impatience, the stuck place will get smaller.

Again, we have a problem similar to yesterday. I cannot share with you the specifics that are going to emerge out of the void, because you are at a point where the practice of trust must be brought into play. That is the specific next step for you. And what I want you to remember is that what you are trusting into is the more conscious realization of your oneness with everything. It, therefore, will not create distress for you, but rather a greater experience of integrity.

An automobile that has good structural integrity is one which when you slam the door, has a very solid sound. In other words, it is structurally unified and cannot rattle. And when I refer to your integrity, I am referring to an inner experience of yourself which is sound—solid—not ready to fall apart.

QUESTION: I’ve experienced difficulties financially over the last few years. And I’ve got a feeling that’s going to change drastically fairly quickly, but I don’t know yet how exactly. And also professionally I’m attracted towards a totally different one than the one that I can make some money just to live. I don’t know which direction to take professionally, and it’s bothering me a little bit—not much, but a little bit. I’d like to know more about it. I did try a year ago to go in a different direction, but it didn’t really work.

I feel I’m at a turning point in my life, but I’ve had that feeling for the last four years, and it looks a little bit long to me sometimes.

ANSWER: This also may not be what you are expecting to hear. It is important for you to find your security whether a change occurs or not. And it is essential for you not to look to a change for your security. In fact, if you make changes on the basis that the change will provide your security, you are likely not to do it with wisdom, because there will be an element of fear motivating you.

You know what? You are the Son of God and I know that that sounds like nothing more than a magnificent idea—wonderful, but not practical. I will tell all of you something: There is nothing more practical that any of you can do than be willing to dare to acknowledge that you are Sons and Daughters of God, and that the Father has withheld nothing of what He/She Is from what He/She has expressed as You.

Fulfillment is your birthright, and absolutely everything is intent upon identifying that fact—something none of you see because you are so busy trying to earn an equivalent of your Birthright. It isn’t just bliss that constitutes fulfillment, it is observing your every need being met in the most practical of human terms, right here and now.

It is the Father’s good pleasure to give you what? To give you the Kingdom. It is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom—not just one square foot of it. It does not say it is the Father's good pleasure to make you earn the Kingdom. But from the level of personality, you believe it does not belong to you. And from your impoverished, separated sense of yourself you work and struggle to claim what is already yours.

Now, because it is already yours, any shift in your approach to life that denies the necessity of earning your good, because it is your Birthright, provides the opportunity for you to experience your good unfolding just because, not for any reason.

As I said yesterday, it isn't necessarily satisfying, because part of one's sense of his or her integrity comes from the act of accomplishing, or getting that good. As I said, it can feel insulting to have something that you haven't earned, because it doesn't feed your ego. But a Son of God is not confused in that way and, indeed, would find it insulting to have to earn his good, because it would constitute a denial of his completeness.

Now, without changing a thing in your life, I encourage you to be open to, to be receptive to the manifestation of unreasonable good, the unfolding of that which is wonderful and which you were not responsible for, but which nevertheless comes to you. When this happens, it will prove the truth of what I am saying, and it will also illustrate to you that you do not as a fact have to earn your good—that you do not have to earn your fulfillment. When you experience this realization, you will begin to understand your invulnerability, and you will never again attribute your invulnerability to circumstances.

I want you all to understand that I am not avoiding answering your questions when I respond this way; but if I were to tell you a specific step to take and if, indeed, that step did generate security, you would not understand where your real security lay. And your security from the specific step would become one that you could potentially lose, and your initial joy over the new security would fade and you would say, "Thanks a lot Raj"—with sarcasm.

Now, does this mean that you will become lazy and do absolutely nothing except trust that your needs will be met? Absolutely not! I will tell you that the unfoldment for your good that you will not be responsible for, will keep you running to keep up with it—you will be busy flowing with it, rather than creating it. And since it is not a result of your skill or someone else's beneficence, you will not be afraid of losing the ongoing opportunity to keep up with your good. Peace will be yours as well as joy, because you will begin to know what real security is, and that it is not your personal responsibility to provide yourself or others.

I understand that this again involves the practice of trust. But if none of you begin to practice trust, you will not have the opportunity to learn how valuable it is. I am speaking to you of that which is utterly practical. These are not wonderful, spiritual, other-worldly ideas. It is the truth here. This is the good news.

We could say that the four years indicates that you are a slow learner, not because you are stupid, but because you were looking for a learning that did not violate the level of personality, when the learning involves stepping out of that level and into a new one. You believed that a new position, a new goal was what was needed—a three-dimensional one.

Again, all of you in one way or another imprison yourself in limitation that is illegitimate and you do it by giving a word. Like a King, you say, “My job doesn’t pay enough money; therefore, I am poor.” You say, “The economy is bad; therefore, I cannot expect more.” You say, “My wife or husband keeps me in such a state of despair that I cannot do this or that.” And your word is law to your experience.

You need to give a new word! You need to stop denying your Sonship and Daughtership. “It is my Father’s good pleasure to give me the Kingdom, regardless of the economy.” And then instead of saying, “Well, if it is the Father’s good pleasure to give me the Kingdom, where has it been for the last four years? You cannot be telling me the truth.”

But I have just told you that you have given a word in denial of that. And so I am saying give a new word. “It is the Father’s good pleasure to give me the Kingdom. And regardless of what has happened during the past four years, I am going to express curiosity rather than doubt—now. And I am going to give permission for my fulfillment to manifest itself, because that is what it does, because I am. I will tell you this is not egotism.

Once you see that your fulfillment is not dependent upon circumstances, and that circumstances naturally unfold that identify your fulfillment, regardless of you as a little tiny creator of things, you will find yourself busy without fear. And you will reach for a thing because you know to do it, and not because you think it will save you from disaster.

In other words, you will do it because you know that it is congruent with the Movement of fulfillment that God is being right there, and everybody else calls it you. Indeed, what I am telling you is not beyond you, is not too advanced for you. And I will tell you it is not even idealistic; it is absolutely realistic and relevant to where you are. All of you must understand that this is the only way the concrete evidence of God with us and that which is spiritual is not irrelevant to the here and now.

Then I’m going to tell you something else—all of you—I am not a universal answering machine. It is my function to disclose you to yourselves more clearly, with less distortion, so that you might come into the possession of your Birthright in your attitude about yourself. And so, although I do answer specific questions, I will never just do it at the expense of disclosing to you the truth about you that will ultimately wipe away the question itself.

QUESTION: I dreamt that I lost all my upper teeth. Someone told me the meaning of the dream was that someone close to me was going to die. Then I was told that my mother had been assassinated, in real life. They suspected my father to be the murderer. There is a lot of coincidence around that, but there's no proof. But then they found that the one who did the murder was a man with one leg.

Then my question is, what am I supposed to do? Is there something more I need to know about this? There is a lot of tension in me, because now my father wants everything for himself—the two houses, etc. And I want it to be fair. I could testify as a witness, and things might change for my father.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. Sometimes Raj answers questions in words and sometimes with pictures. And he's doing this with pictures—images—so I have to put it in my own words.

The picture is that your mother and father's relationship was very complicated. I don't know how this would translate, but in American the term "mind games," where people sort of play with each other's minds, usually not in a complimentary manner, and that this is the way his parents related. It is as though they were always in a contest leveraging for something. If the winning and the losing was even, then generally they were "happy." But when one won more often, then it was very tense. There was not a lot of love there. In other words, there was little love there for many years.

The divorce was the first wise step they took together. The picture is that your father is completely innocent of the crime, but because of the difficult and tense unfriendly nature of their relationship, it was easy to imagine that he did it. And circumstances were such that he did not have a clear alibi.

ANSWER: This is Raj. It is completely appropriate for you to hold him innocent in your mind, regardless of the fact that it is or seems to be so easy to accuse him. The simple fact is, that the things he has done wrong need to be forgiven by you so that you may find your peace. But this crime does not need to be forgiven by you, because he did not commit it. It is going to be important for you to arrive at a point where you can tell him that you do not believe that he is guilty. That will be important for him, even if he doesn't seem to express it by a changed attitude.

As far as the property is concerned—the land—keep your nose out of it. Do not involve yourself.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. The picture is: Whatever grief or happiness that is to come from the ownership of this property is for his father to deal with. That's the end of the answer. Is there a "yes, but"?

QUESTION: He inherits half of the property. This is so intertwined now. So how can Raj untie the knot?

PAUL: When Raj gave the answer there was an image of a can of worms. In the United States, people say, “well you don’t want to open a can of worms.” It’s like there are so many loose ends and they are crawling all over and it’s nothing but confusion. And when he said that whatever, I don’t remember the words, but whatever good or whatever troubles are associated with these houses or properties, it was like: let all of that confusion be his father’s. But not as a way of getting even, it’s not like doing something bad to his father. It’s rather that his father has the can of worms and it’s not worth it to you to take it away from him.

ANSWER: This is Raj. You do not need that kind of chaos. I told my disciples that when they went to a city where they were unwelcome, to leave the city and shake the dust from their feet. In other words, don’t carry forward with them any part of the city where they were unwanted. I am saying to you don’t pick up the can of worms and you won’t even have any mud to wash off your hands.

Now what I want you to understand is that your fulfillment and your ability to support what you value is a gift from your Real Father, meaning God. And no one can get it instead of you. This situation is difficult for you, because it is like a carrot dangled in front of your nose. It suggests that good is there for you, and because it seems so close, you become consumed with a desire to get it.

But it is like the carrot in front of the donkey: it will always be just out of reach. But your ability to value and support the meaningful things in your life is not connected to this carrot—this apparently reachable, potentially reachable wealth. So when I say leave it alone, I am not saying to be deprived, I am saving you the grief, the mess. That is what you really wanted to know.

QUESTION: I want to ask you... I believe that I have met you once in my life, under your loving aspect. Is it right?

ANSWER: It is indeed. It will happen again.

QUESTION: I have a double question. First we are trying to have a child, and we are having trouble conceiving. And so we have even tried to let go of the idea of having a child, which is very difficult to do. Up to now, the fact that we want a child made us take a lot of positive actions. Now I would like to take the next step to be more mature. And also how to open the channel—sometimes I have questions that I can connect with an inside voice.

ANSWER: Do not jump to conclusions to what I am going to say. What I am going to say is: give up trying to have a baby, but don’t give up making love. You are both capable of having a child. There has developed entirely too much tension and fear and even some self-doubt, and this has caused unnecessary difficulty in conceiving. And I am also going to ask you to ask for help, not of physicians or techniques, but of God. Not as a favor, but as a means of not trying to do this alone. It may be difficult to understand in all situations, but no child is conceived that is not, shall I say, authorized by the Father. Human beings cannot make babies.

The Movement of Creation is the Movement of God. And if the two of you are not trying to demonstrate some personal capacity to create a child and you love each other—without the burden of making a baby—and you invite God into that love, you will conceive. I hesitate to say it that way, because I do not want you to do it this way in order to have a baby. But I have explained it this way so that you might more easily do what I first said—stop trying to have a baby, but don't stop making love.

Ah! the question is: What if God doesn't want us to have a baby? If that were the case, I would not have instructed you as I did; I would have told you that.

What I want you to watch, what I want you to be alert for is the quickness and the ease which your fulfillment can be undermined by means of the giving of a word that denies your fulfillment. The conscious expression of doubt disallows the conscious giving of permission, creating what you would call stress—tension—and this disrupts the normal functions of the body and blocks conception. The solution is easy. Be grateful I have not given you fifty-two new positions in which to make love.

QUESTION: How do I get in touch with my guidance?

ANSWER: I am going to answer your question in a general and yet specific way. You are experiencing a definite sense of closeness to your guidance. The way in which to experience breakthrough is the same as for those who have never even thought of desiring to experience guidance. And so, I am going to share with you that there are four steps, and if you would like to get out pencil and paper I will go through these steps slowly.

Step One: Become still.

Step Two: Mentally express your desire for communion, communication.

Step Three: Listen.

Step Four: Expect an answer.

I am aware that there are many explanations of how to get in touch with your guide, and some of them are somewhat complicated. But it is no more complicated than the four steps that I have described.

Step One: Become still. You may do this through meditation, self-hypnosis relaxation techniques, lying in the shade under a tree, or soaking in a hot tub. Whatever works for you in order to become quiet within. Your peace does not have to be perfect. You do not have to have arrived at a point of perfect silence in your mind. When you are relatively quiet within, go to step two.

Step Two: Do not express the desire out loud. If indeed you have moved into a place of deep silence, the physical vibration of your voice will unsettle it. Even mentally speaking, I encourage you to express the desire softly. The more softly you express it, the less opportunity there is for self-assertion or control.

It is almost like Homeopathy, where the more diluted the drug the more potent it becomes. I am not saying that is true, but the principle is correct. The more softly you express the desire, the more substantial the desire is, because there is less willfulness to it. Always express this desire once only. And then immediately go to step three.

Step Three: Listen. Simply stay in whatever degree of silence you have arrived at with an attentive attitude. Do not mentally strain to hear, but gently be attentive and bring step four into play.

Step Four: Expect an answer. Your guidance has been intent upon connecting with you for as long as you have been giving your attention to your beliefs and definitions of yourself and everything you see. In other words, from the moment you became distracted from your Whole, or divine awareness, and gave your committed attention to a separated and tiny sense of yourself. Your Wholeness, your primitive or original Wholeness has remained present to connect with the tiny part of yourself that you are holding apart.

I have said before that the Holy Spirit is your divine Self held in trust while you have dallied with the ego. The moment you withdraw your investment of trust in the personality or ego sense of yourself, it becomes weaker and it becomes easier for the Holy Spirit, your divine Selfhood, to penetrate the personality and register with you.

Therefore, the moment you begin to consciously desire to be in touch with your guidance, whether it is with me, or the Holy Spirit, or your guide—all of whom perform the same function—you are met with a response that has the same goal. All of you are destined to experience this reunification of the Totality of your Self. I said to expect an answer, because if indeed you are not expecting an answer, you will not hear one, even though a response will be given.

Now I want you all to understand that you do not have to have arrived at a certain point of spiritual development in order to be worthy of such communion. You only have to have arrived at a point of being able to express the desire. Your motives don't even have to be lofty. We will use any excuse to speak with you.

I do want everyone to understand that you do not have to go through a trauma, as Paul did, in order to get in touch with your guide. And the only reason that is what happened with Paul is, that he was so absolutely confident in his own best thinking that it took a trauma for him to be willing to ask for help and listen. Struggle is not an inherent part of spiritual growth.

And so specifically in response to you, you only need to bring into play steps three and four. Be willing to take the time to listen. That which stands between and you and your guidance is very thin and insubstantial.

QUESTION: My question is when I'm able to hear something I feel good, because sometimes I really hear what he is saying. But I am afraid to be too pleased with myself because I can hear some things. I am afraid that I feel I am better than other people. My question is how to avoid this difficulty.

ANSWER: I will tell you first of all that the guidance you get will shrink your ego, it will not let you become arrogant. And I will also tell you that if you really became arrogant, it would get in the way of your hearing.

I want you to remember that, indeed, it does have a feeling to it—it does feel good. And it is not arrogance to feel joy. So go ahead and feel good. Feeling bad will also get in the way of hearing. Enjoy the communion; don't be afraid to enjoy it. The fact that it feels good means that it is not the ego—the personality. If it is the personality or ego, you will feel uneasy no matter how pleasing the answers. When you are connected with your guidance you will feel peace, whether the answers are the ones you want to hear or the ones you don't want to hear. So value the good feeling.

Some of the guidance that you will get will, I will say, require you to be willing to do what you are nervous to do. When I told Paul that it was going to come to pass that he would go to Europe, it was so unbelievable to him that he did not feel his peace, even though as I told him he did feel his peace. The communication occurred in peace, but afterwards his ego said, "Impossible! Unreasonable!" and suggested to Paul that he was under more stress than he thought he was.

Then coming to Europe and being where, as an English speaking person he was in the minority, he felt vulnerable and stupid when he couldn't even explain to someone what he wanted to eat. And yet it was appropriate for him to come and appropriate for him to become familiar and become at ease. But he couldn't do it without experience.

Guidance will promote your growth, and if you don't feel like growing you will interpret the guidance as distressing. But the guidance will be experienced with peace. You understand the distinction I am making here? When you are experiencing the guidance, it will feel good even if afterwards your thinking causes you to be uncomfortable with what you heard.

Keep up the good work and do not be afraid that you will go off the deep end and become an arrogant fool. You won't.

QUESTION: What exactly does being on the same frequency as Raj mean? And if this is so, who are Nicoli and Metra and does it have anything to do with the "laying on of hands?"

ANSWER: What does being on the same frequency with me mean? Well, it means that we can speak together, as we are doing right now. It means that we can speak together directly without seeming to involve Paul. But even more, I encourage you not to think in terms of frequency, but rather in terms of an experience of peace in which you are able to feel what is utterly natural to you, what is utterly natural to your Being, and in that, begin to remember Home—which means, begin to remember who you Really Are.

If you are listening to a radio and you are on the right frequency (this is especially true of short wave radios), you can still—because of atmospheric disturbance—experience a lot of static. It is important for all of you not to assume that you are not on the right frequency. But rather that you are—out of habit—so filled with your own thinking and your own best judgments that you cannot hear. When one becomes still, when one goes into one's closet and listens to the Father which is in secret, what does that mean? It means clearing out the static. It doesn't mean raising the frequency.

It is interesting that the human condition suggests that connecting with that which is divinely natural to you requires a raising of the energy, or an accomplishment of some sort—an expenditure of effort. But, of course, that is the nature of the ego. It is an achiever. And it always keeps you in a place of busyness and noise which does not allow you to experience your peace—that peace, in which it becomes possible for you to reconnect consciously with your Divinity that you have been experiencing unconsciously. It is very important for all of you to understand that waking up and experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven involves doing less and less and less.

That which is utterly natural to you must be something utterly easy. And I know the conditioned thinking would say, "Yes, but, supposing that I am very endarkened rather than enlightened, and I have years of beliefs piled on top of the awareness of who I truly am—perhaps even lifetimes of endarkenment—this must require great effort to overcome long-standing ignorance." Well, you see, you're too much into your head. That whole line of thinking is intellectual and it is about the intellect.

There is a lesson in the Course—“Today I will make no decisions by myself.” What that means is, today I will not value and validate the chatter of my own best thinking; I will not assume that I know anything to the point that I wouldn’t listen to know more.

Waking up is a shift from the head to the heart. Waking up is a shift from thinking to an experience—a heart-felt experience—that is available to you when you are choosing for your peace. And when the static is cleared away, when in the old days the antenna on your television was finally turned in the right direction the snow cleared on the screen, and the picture—which had always been fully and perfectly present to be received—was finally received. It didn’t require turning to a higher channel; it required coming into the simplicity of the already existing order of the transmission of the picture, and the ability of the television set to pick it up as it was being transmitted.

Because all of you are conditioned to strive and achieve, it seems automatic to assume that the process of Awakening is a process of achieving also. And so, you apply all of your learning about achieving to the process of Awakening and you miss the point. You let yourself into the Kingdom of Heaven. It has been said, “love is letting go of fear.” You could say, love is letting go. And then you could say, love is letting. And then you could say, because you are experiencing it, love is... and then you be love. But you don’t be love as an activity of accomplishing something. When you are backed off from the accomplishing, what’s left is love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, including each other.

I will refrain from answering the other part of your question at this time. It was the first part of your question that was most important for you and for everyone else.

QUESTION: My goal has been to reach my Higher Self. And I would like to know whether I am going about it in the right way for me, and if I will do it in this life-time?

ANSWER: You are your Higher Self, even though you seem not to be experiencing it consciously—you ARE your Higher Self. The words “reaching your Higher Self,” are simply words that help you recognize that you don’t want to be unconscious of it anymore. But the ultimate of you is sitting right there, right now. Your conditioned thinking doesn’t allow you to experience it. And the conditioned thinking of others does not allow them to perceive it.

I have said this before but I will say it again—you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it; you are at that point and must understand yourself there from. Again, the process of connecting with your Higher Self, the connection with the conscious experience of who you divinely Are—who you simply really are—takes less and less effort, less and less thinking, less and less rehearsal of your conditioned thinking, and more quiet willing listening: not willful, but willing listening.

You have had the experience of being exhausted from something that is going on, exhausted to the point of giving up. And when you have given up you have recognized something that you needed to know—clarity came. Why? Because you were not arrogant enough to think that you knew how things ought to be. You were too tired to continue to exercise that willfulness of confidence in what you believed was true. And in the absence of that confidence the truth itself was able to come forth and relieve you. It is the same way with connecting with your Higher Self.

Now, I would like all of you to find words that don't seem to express levels: Higher Self—lower self; higher frequency—lower frequency; higher motives—lower motives; a higher relationship and a lower relationship.

The only life there is is the one you're living. The only experience of consciousness is the one you are experiencing at this moment. Whether you are experiencing it with snow or static doesn't change the fact that you are experiencing Reality at this moment, and you are the divine One that you really Are at this moment. And Awakening is a matter of letting yourself into the experience of who and what you divinely are already, at this moment, and who you have always been, even though you have busied yourself with intellectual concepts about who you are without tapping into the direct inner experience of your Being.

Higher Self sounds like you have a little bit of a climb to engage in. And of course, your ego will come into the picture and it will tell you that the lower self that you are wanting to release is so low that indeed, it probably won't be this lifetime. And it's all—and you're going to have to accept my bluntness—it's all bullshit.

As an aside, I want to address this: That which is divine is not incapacitated from being real and meaningful by virtue of being divine. There are people who question whether I could be divine much less the Christ, if I say bullshit. Would you rather I said camel dung?

When you listen for guidance, understand that the guidance will come in the language of your present perception. And it happens that at the moment, the word bullshit is part of your language of perception, and means more than some other words.

And there is an additional reason—you can imprison yourself in your sense of loftiness and spirituality. You need to know that when you reach inside to connect with the divine guidance that is ever present with you, you can sit there and say, "I am so pissed off that I could scream." And you need to know that you can speak from where you are and not have to find the right words in order to be worthy of someone listening to you. You can be real from whatever level of realness you are currently experiencing. And we will not be offended.

You see, we are not trying to get you to behave divine. You won't behave in a divine manner until you dare to be humble enough to be genuine. And in your genuineness there is such a peace available to you that you feel your security—the security of your capital “B” Being, your divine security—and then you find yourself not experiencing the feelings that occasion words like “pissed off” and “that’s bullshit” and “this is a hell of a life,” “God damn it.”

If you can't be real from where you are at the moment, then you're lost. And if God cannot hear you, and if I cannot hear you, and if all of the Brotherhood who are Awake who stand in service to support you in your awakening—if you cannot be direct with them, you are lost. And the fact is that you are not lost. And it is very important for you to be genuine, to drop the masks of protocol and good manners. Good manners are bullshit. They are for others.

And I will tell you something: Most of your social contexts are a matter of being proper with others. And you know what happens? The originality of you gets lost in accommodating the rules that have been set up, growth slows down and everyone loses; because the originality of the expression of God is squelched by your learning how to not make waves for anyone else.

Understand this: The Movement of Creation makes waves for what has already been created—it undoes or modifies what has already been created. “Behold I make All things new.” If God was trying to be polite and not offend his most recent creation, creation would stop.

Everything is easier than you think it is. Be genuine. Value your peace. Realize that you are already on the ultimate level; you are already at the ultimate frequency. It is the static, the snow, the disturbance of all of your conditioned thinking that stands in the way of your experiencing Reality, experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven, experiencing the perfection and the harmony that it is your birthright to be experiencing right here on this planet—right here in this lifetime.

If you don't know that the ultimate is what is happening right now right where you are, then indeed you will think that it will happen in the by-and-by, that Awakening will occur someplace else. And you will not pay attention right where you are. And you will miss it, until you finally realize “it must be right here, or it's no place at all,” and begin to open up your eyes right here, right on the frequency you are on, right on the level you are on.

The Course talks about level confusion. It isn't because there really are levels that you can be confused about, because there is only God Being All. The levels are levels of conceptual misunderstanding, levels of interpretation of the one and only Reality there is for you to experience. But again, the ego conditioning has you used to going from first grade to second grade to third grade to fourth grade, up and up and up and up. And of course, if you don't get past the eighth grade and everybody goes up, where does that leave you? At the bottom of the heap. This is all conceptual crap!

As the lady said when introductions were being made, “I’m right here in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with my eyes all squinched up, saying ‘I cannot see the perfection.’” But the perfection is what’s going on. And the experience of being conscious is a true experience of Being. And so your Awakening and your experience of the Kingdom of Heaven will not remove you from where you are, because you’re already on the frequency and already at the ultimate level—the only level.

If you understand this point, you will engage your curiosity from this moment forward—curious to see the face of God; curious to see the Real meaning of everything you are perceiving, but without the limits of your perception and rather, experiencing it from God’s point of view. So, now you know that you have God’s point of view available to you at this moment. And it will be God’s point of view about everything you are seeing at this moment.

Life should be vitally interesting to you, because Life with a capital “L” is the only thing confronting you—it’s the only available experience. And if it is confronting you and nothing else is really confronting you, then engage your curiosity to see everything you are seeing in a new light. Your behavior will change—your behavior towards everything you see and your behavior to your fellow man. And there will be love in it; because you will not look at a thing and insist that this cannot be of God.

You will look at the murderer and you will say, “What I am believing that I am seeing cannot be the truth. Here is a direct expression of the Father—here is God embodied, God expressed—and I refuse to hold him to my limited perception of him as an awful person, unworthy of any recognition of value.” This is the way you begin—each of you—to undo the misperception. This is the way you initiate healing. This is the way you initiate transformation. It is called forgiveness.

And there is a point that all of you need to understand about forgiveness. Forgiveness isn’t saying, “I love you in spite of the horrible, dastardly, cruel thing you did.” Forgiveness is withdrawing judgment. Forgiveness isn’t something you give to someone else, it is an act within yourself of withdrawing judgment; and thus, releasing conflict within you, releasing that which keeps you polarized and tied up in knots, so that you are able to experience your peace which leads you to view your world without polarization, in an unconflicted manner.

It [forgiveness] is seeing the Son of God in your fellow man that releases you and your fellow man from historical definitions—“Two weeks ago you did this; a month ago you did it; five years ago you were doing it; you haven’t changed a bit.” And every time you say that you impress the other one with the fact that he has not changed and he is exactly what you think he is, and he is what he thinks he is, because everyone has told him about his history, which they say governs their definition of him in the present. And all of you in one way or another hold each other to your past concepts of each other.

Now Paul is wondering why I am talking about this, and what it has to do with the question that was asked. He can listen to the tapes later and find out.

QUESTION: Jesus I truly desire communion with you. And I think I'm a little bit aware of how vicious my ego is in fighting this attempt. And I am wondering if my desire for naps and sleep is an ego device to prevent this from happening. And my question is: Can I experience communion with you or be in the fourth-dimension with you while I am sleeping.

ANSWER: You can indeed. But do not seek sleep as the avenue of being in communion with me.

Now, you spoke of your ego being vicious; let us understand that this vicious ego has no teeth. If you were confronted by a snarling, angry, crazed dog that had no teeth in it's mouth, would you be frightened?

QUESTION: I don't think so.

ANSWER: Indeed, you must understand that the ego has no teeth. Always the ego functions by means of suggestion. It whispers in your ear—"You are in a terrible situation"; except you hear it as, "I am in a terrible situation." It says, "You cannot dare to feel your peace." That is a suggestion. Now how many of you would willingly put yourself at the beck and call of a hypnotist 24 hours a day—especially one who was not interested in serving your needs, but simply getting you to do whatever seemed appropriate to him? You would stand up on your hind feet and object strongly. So be willing to not value the suggestions of the ego as they present themselves to you.

The ego itself suggested to you that it was vicious. It suggests that it has teeth. The ego is a bastard. And I mean by that, truly it has no source—it has no Father. It is a purely imaginary thing. It is a figment of the imagination which has been used to explain the apparent ignorance that one is experiencing. And so, because words were found to describe it, everyone now treats it as though it's real.

And psychology has developed and has been built around this premise as a means of explaining ignorance. But interestingly enough, enlightenment is occurring with psychologists as well as everyone else. And it is beginning to dawn on them that psychology is (when appropriately practiced) a means of moving one out of ignorance, out of the very belief system that one is undivine; that one is nothing more than a bundle of neurosis and conditioned thinking. And the leading edges of psychology today are validating the very thing that is happening here today—listening. It is validating the essential core of the individuality beyond the memory and the conditioning.

And people who are hearing voices are being encouraged to listen—and I will say in Biblical terms—test the spirits to see if they are of God, rather than off-handedly denying them and identifying the experience as a neurotic experience.

All of the Brotherhood—in other words, the Total Self-expression of the Father, which for lack of better words we have called the Brotherhood of Man the Sisterhood of Man the Family of Mankind—claiming no separate Mind from the Father, experiences it's unity, it's communion. Communication is something that happens between separated entities who are not experiencing their Oneness.

But when the claim of a right to a personal point of view is released, and one connects with the Higher Self—the divine Intelligence that one is—one finds himself or herself in communion. You and I are already in communion. You and the person sitting next to you are already in communion. But again, as long as any of you are confident that you have a mind of your own that can do its own thinking, that must come up with its own conclusions in order to survive in the world that it sees from its ignorant stand point, you will not feel your connection with yourself nor your inseparable unity with your fellow man. And you will continue to engage in communication.

But the fact is that all the time you are engaged in communication, trying to connect with these separated entities around you, all of us are already inseparably One—in communion. And what seems to you to be a process of becoming still enough to hear, doesn't really mean that two disconnected things become suddenly connected, but the Oneness that has always been begins to register with you.

You will hear me bring out this point over and over this weekend: You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it; you are at that point and must understand yourself there from. I will say this in many different ways. Because if you realize that you have already arrived because you never really left because there was no other experience available to you but the one and only Presence of God, called the Movement of Creation, you will end this journey of Awakening. And We will all rejoice in our togetherness, in our unity.

QUESTION: I'm aware of great resistance, more and more aware of it each moment. I would appreciate your addressing that idea. And also, could I think in terms of my coming here today as an indication of my willingness to commune more with you?

ANSWER: I think that you could safely take your presence here today as an indication of your willingness—yes.

It is an interesting dilemma one finds oneself in as one begins not to trust her beliefs and conditionings. If one arrives at a point of being able to say, “maybe what I believe isn't true,” it puts one in an apparent state of vulnerability, because you depend upon your beliefs as to what is true to give you a sense of security. That is why everyone is so busy reinforcing and enforcing their beliefs and trying to get everyone else to agree to them, so that that one doesn't feel all alone.

Trust is an interesting experience. Most of you practice confidence and call it trust. But confidence must necessarily refer to something that you have already experienced. Where trust moves you into what you haven't experienced before.

That is a very important statement. When you dare to set aside what you believe to listen for what you have not heard before, to listen for that which goes beyond your present mindsets, that is when you are practicing trust.

Trust is always a matter of leaning into the unknown. Everyone wraps themselves up in the known—very securely. It becomes a straight jacket, but boy you feel secure; you know where you stand, but there is no freedom to Be. And so, as you open up—as you dare to trust—it does throw you into the experience of insecurity. And your ego tells you that that is the definite sign that you have become impractical, irrational and stupid. And it insists that you gather back around you what you know. This is why very few individualities have woken up.

So what happens? You dare to look at everything and say, “Nothing that I see means anything.” Which at the bottom line means, “Nothing that I see means what I think it means,” because you don’t know what it means, divinely speaking. That is what the waking up is all about—to come to that place where you experience everything from God’s point of view, which is your natural inherent point of view.

And so, you become curious enough to try to sense or see beyond your present sense of everything that puts you into the unknown, and you feel insecure. And what is called for is, instead of listening to the ego and moving back into the known, you inquire further—you listen further. Invariably when you begin to truly open up in this manner, you will find you have a companion with you—which has variously been known as guardian angel, the voice for Truth your guide, etc. Every single one of you has a companion, a guardian angel.

Don’t get hung up on words. You will find that there is a word that has meaning for you to denote this companion—the Holy Spirit. Don’t let language get in the way of the meaning of the experience of not being alone. And you have this companion because it is incredibly difficult to get beyond your present point of view if you are not companionship with someone who is beyond your present point of view—to say, “It’s safe. You can dare to trust in this instance where all of your conditioning says, you are vulnerable.”

And so, you learn to value being in the not-knowing place where you are not absolutely sure of anything, and you utilize that space to continue to be curious. This is not the easiest experience to have. But if you persist, you will find order coming into your life, order that you are not personally responsible for. It is the order that is set into motion by the Movement of God that causes the experience of Being that all of you are having. And it illuminates it for what it really is, because you have dared to set aside your commitment to your belief about what it is.

And so it is, in a way, a tight rope that you walk because you have to say, “I am willing not to trust my present perception of anything,” and at the same time you have to be willing to trust your capacity to recognize Truth beyond your present sense of it. That is why you have the Holy Spirit, and that is why you have a guide, or a guardian angel—one who sees to it that your sense of being abandoned by God does not get reinforcement.

Now, whether or not any of you are in touch with this companion—in terms of dialog—the communion is established and any thought you address to the Holy Spirit or your guide is heard and responded to. It is very important for you to know that this is not all up to you to struggle through without encouragement or support.

But do understand that at times you will be uneasy, because the Truth goes beyond your present limited sense of what truth must be. As a people, you have not become total wimps. But there is a need for the spirit of exploration to reassert itself, to arise in you.

Indeed, you have gotten all the way to the West Coast of your country and settled it and civilized it, and gotten into place orderliness' that doesn't require you to be curious any more. "Well, the only thing left to explore is space, and that's beyond our means, that's only going to be accomplished by the government, etc. How can I do that?"

But space is not the new frontier, the Kingdom of Heaven within you is. The Kingdom of Heaven that you're in right here on this planet is present to be explored, and it takes a willingness, a vitality, to put yourself in new positions and new experiences.

Anyone who set off in a Conestoga wagon to cross the country, not ever having traveled before, put themselves in a position of no security whatsoever—no home to come home to at night; no job to go to; no streets; no lights; whatever—and no old friends. And they struck out into new territory with fervor and vitality and curiosity, and with a sense of their capacity to do it and survive.

Now the difference here is, that as you embark on the new adventure of daring to look at everything to see God in it, and to become free of the distorted misperception of it that you have defined as reality, you will not become separated from everything that you have known. You will come into a greater experience of unity with everything, with less distortion overlaid upon it. And this is an important point to understand.

I will tell you that most people, although they talk about wanting to experience their divinity and their inseparableness from God, really don't want to experience that. Because the beliefs that have been promoted are that you will be taken up unto the Father, glory of glories. Who wants that? (Laughter) "We'll wait until we've fulfilled what we hope to experience with our family and our wives and our parents and our associates. Why would I want to sacrifice what is meaningful, to be taken up to the Father, with the Father? No, we'll do that tomorrow." But that is a belief.

As I said, you're already on the only frequency. And you're already in the only level there is; you're already in the only experience that is available to you.

Our unity is already established and we are already in communion, if you will but open up to the experience of it. And therefore, opening up to the experience of Reality cannot separate you from any of Reality.

And so, you do not need to be afraid of being taken up and having your family abandoned, and finding yourself alone without everything that has been meaningful. You see, the result of really Waking Up is to be so connected with the Real meaning of everything that you are experiencing, that your inseparableness becomes the indisputable fact within you—in which no loss occurs. It's only the loss of misperception. It's only the loss of ignorance. It's the loss of the inability to see the Kingdom of Heaven, and to experience everything as it is. Everything will become more Real than you can imagine, with no polarities associated with it, no conflict being produced by it.

But coming into this experience does require the practice of trust. And remember, trust is leaning into that which you have not experienced. And what you call trust, is always confidence in that which you have found to be true, even if you don't quite believe it yet.

Your freedom, the door to your cage, lies in the willingness to venture beyond the limits of the cage. And at the moment, your cage provides you with security—"Well, if I get out there, I'll have to find my own seeds. Nobody will change the paper on the bottom of my cage. It might not always be warm. I might have to hunt for water. Ah, but the delight of finding water in a blossom, or off a leaf in a tree high above the ground, and the freedom to flit from here to there."

Your birthright is freedom, freedom to experience all that expresses God, right here. And I'll tell you something: Don't wait for the rest of the world to change. Be the change, by daring to risk the chance that God Is All and engage in the practice of trust and lean into the unknown by moving into your peace.

You see, the early pioneers had rugged wilderness to move through to expand and explore. But you do not. The territory you will move through is the territory of your peace. It is in the absence of a conflicted mind that the experience of your indivisible safety, security and strength is present that gives you the nerve to trust further. And in the process of doing this, you begin to understand what you Are, not so much through words, but through feeling which you then will have to find words to put to, to express to others.

And there is an inseparable benefit that occurs along with this new experience of yourself and that is: You realize it's true about everyone else as well. And so, you begin to see your fellow man from this new found perspective of your own integrity, not an integrity in the world, not an integrity that has to do with recognition of others, but an integrity that exists before that—inherent in You. It feels like strength but not power. It is strength that doesn't need to be asserted because fear cannot assault it successfully. And so, everything you learn about yourself in this way, you learn about everyone else. And it becomes easier to withdraw judgment from your fellow man and forgive, or love.

Now I realize that it could sound as though I'm stuck on a theme here. Don't worry, expansion will occur as we go through this weekend. But I am setting a tone—we are setting a tone—because I am not coercing your questions into what I want to say. We are working together. We are being this gathering.

QUESTION: What is the purpose of a belief system that allows us to misperceive?

ANSWER: It is the belief system that causes the misperception; it is the distorting element.

Now, I think actually you are asking: Why can misperception occur in a fundamentally, unalterably, orderly universe?

The simple fact is that there are the three dimensions that you are familiar with plus one more, which we will refer to as the fourth-dimension. Each dimension starting with the first is embraced by each succeeding dimension—the first is embraced by the second, the first and second by the third, and the first three that you call the space-time continuum is embraced in the fourth-dimension.

Now, what is it that is capable of embracing the first three? I will tell you that it is not time, even though your scientist at the present time are judging it to be so. The fourth-dimension, that which embraces the other three, is Mind. You could put it this way—Mind is the Whole. The Movement of Mind is experienced by mind as that which is recognizable—you might say that which is experiencable.

The Movement of Mind—and when I'm using the word mind here, I am referring to it as that which is the divine Mind or God—the Movement of Mind is experienced by Mind, or the movement of God is experienced by God as the infinite conscious experience of Being, which you would call the universe and all that is there in—to use Biblical terms. The Movement of God or, shall I say, the aspect of the Movement of God that constitutes experience is perfectly tangible to the Mind which has formed it, perfectly tangible to God, even though the tangibility is the tangibility of ideas.

I do not want to get too esoteric here. The point is, that all that you see and all that you have not yet seen is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of the infinite divine Mind, called God. The visible, tangible aspect of it is what your scientists refer to as the first three dimensions.

Now, very simply, Mind is able to experience its Movement from the vantage point of Mind, which is fourth-dimensional, or from the vantage point of any of the dimensions. However, the moment one moves into the third-dimensional frame of reference—which is the one you seem to be confined to—one loses the conscious experience of the infinite Presence that he Is. It is not a disobedience, it is not a wrong doing to experience Reality from any of the lesser dimensions. The only thing is that one loses the perspective of one of the dimensions that has been, I'm going to say sacrificed, for the sake of having a different experience of Reality. Although you do not know how to do it you could experience Reality from the first or the second-dimension.

Now, the point is this: When one views Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven—whatever you want to call it—when one views Reality from one of the lesser vantage points, one is liable to begin to believe the limitation inherent in that perspective. And when one believes that what he is experiencing is the Totality of what is available to be experienced, one is then deluded.

Let me put it this way: If you put one hand over one eye and view everything, it will all appear to be flat—there will be no experience of three-dimensions, visually speaking. And if one were to continue to hold one's hand over his eye long enough, one would begin to forget that there was an experience of three-dimensions or of space and distance available. That belief, that what one was seeing in all of its flatness was “the way things are,”—that person would be experiencing a state of delusion.

Now, this does not constitute an act of disobedience, but it is a state of ignorance. It is not wrong, but it is not a true experience. When I say it is not wrong, I mean that it is not a punishable act. That is how it can be that there is misperception.

Now, the interesting thing is, that all the time that one is engaging in a limited perception of infinity, experiencing a limited sense of conscious awareness, there is a certain dissonance that occurs—called discomfort—because you are not “in your Right Mind.” And this dissonance is very much like the bells on your garbage trucks or large vehicles when they are in reverse and there is a certain danger present because of limited visibility—there is a bell that rings to warn those around. Likewise, there is an inner uneasiness, you might say, that reminds you you are not in your peace, you are not in your Right Mind.

Now the interesting thing is, that if one persists in remaining in this partial experience of Reality—if one stays for any length of time—the experience of limitation and the dissonance that accompanies it (which you now call fear) begins to imply that there is something to overcome so as to get rid of the fear. One then becomes engaged in tackling this thing called the human condition. And that is what keeps one sidetracked from accessing one's peace again and moving into that inner place where your Self, as Conscious Awareness, can register with you again in the experience of which everything that you are seeing can fall back into its true perspective.

The idea has been put forth as an explanation from within the limited experience of everything, that the loss of one's true experience of everything, the loss of the experience of one's infinity constituted a fall from grace—a disobedience that causes everyone who is in this experience to be a sinner who must, therefore, pay a penalty. Mind you, even though this has come down as religious dogma and with a certain voice of authority, it is still nothing more than an explanation that was arrived at through human reasoning. In other words, it did not represent a divine revelation of truth, but rather a limited explanation of an already existing experience of limitation. It is, therefore, faulty.

And that is why I have stressed the point this morning that all of you are already at the point of perfection and not advancing towards it. And you must begin to understand yourself there from. You are already in the Kingdom of Heaven. You are already what you have called the Christ. You are already—you never could have been anything other than—the direct Presence, the direct Embodiment of God, the infinite Mind. You are sinless. You are not the limited body that you think you are—that it appears to you that you are.

And I will tell you that the very process of becoming still—of going within, into the stillness within you—that very process, is the means by which you disidentify with the specific visibility and tangibility of you that you call your body, and begin to experience yourself as the All-embracing Conscious Awareness in which all that you experience is going on. This is the way you once again reaccess what I have referred to as the fourth-dimensional Conscious experience of Being. This is the way you Wake up.

And so, waking up is not the undoing of some great sin that has caused you to be fundamentally guilty. It is simply reaccessing your Sanity, your Whole view, your Wholeness. Everyone believes that he or she is working out his or her salvation. But your salvation was from the beginning, because you never fell from anywhere.

Right now Paul's eyes are closed and he cannot see anyone. This is a limitation, at the moment, that he is experiencing. It doesn't make him a sinner. It doesn't make him guilty of anything. It's, you might say, a simple mechanical thing. And the moment he opens his eyes he can see everything—no great process of becoming worthy of overcoming guilt, of paying a penalty.

I have said this before, but I will say it again because it is worth repeating: It is as though all of you are sitting in a prison cell, and the assumption is that the door is locked. And so, you never rattle the cage, so to speak, to find out that not only are you not locked in, but you aren't guilty of anything. The assumption is that because you are experiencing confinement, you must be guilty. And then you proceed within your jail cell to do your penance. And again, it's all bullshit! Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Partly it answers my question. But if you answered it I didn't understand what purpose the mind would have to view from the first or the second or the third-dimension, if it's true Reality is from the fourth-dimension. That's what I don't understand. What purpose would the mind have to view it from anything lesser than true Reality.

ANSWER: Simple inquisitiveness. I will say, that this is not the equivalent of the curiosity that killed the cat. This inquisitiveness does not truly have a penalty to it; but when one persists in the inquisitiveness, you might say, over stays his welcome, over stays the “time” in which one’s Sanity remains clearly available to one, then one seems to find himself trapped. And that is, you might say, the state in which all of you find yourselves.

But you see the great necessity, especially at this time, is for you to realize that the trap is not legitimate. It has become legitimized by virtue of faulty thinking. So everybody simply accepts it and says, “I have no other choice until by the grace of God, I am released.” But as I said, the door to the cell is not locked, you are already released. It is just that you have not dared to test your limits, or shall I say, to test your limitlessness.

Now, I say it is important at this “time,” because one of the elements that has held this mutually agreed upon sense of reality to endure, is the fact that everyone has joined together in agreement as to what reality is. And that agreement is based upon a mutually experienced ignorance.

Now, it happens that whereas there were once enough joined together in mutual agreement as to the reality of the misperception that maintained the misperception, there are now fewer asleep, fewer deluded, fewer joined in this misperception. And there are not enough joined to continue it.

That means that spontaneous Awakening is going to occur because the misperception is not receiving enough validation. There are more who are Awake than are asleep. You might say that they hold the preponderance of weight. And that is becoming the governing factor.

And so, you are finding signs of Awakening—stirrings occurring all around your globe. And the stirrings, because they are bringing one into that place of trust, the requirement of trust is creating a certain sense of vulnerability, insecurity and awkwardness. But if you will notice, the awkwardness is not ultimately reducing everything to chaos. The awkwardness is allowing for change to occur, reconfiguration to occur, not chaos. And you are finding great social change occurring, even though you wouldn’t want to be right in the middle of it yourself.

You can stand back and watch South Africa, and you can stand back and watch Russia, etc. And you can rejoice, because you see the excellence of what is happening. But you are at some distance from it. The actual willingness to be in the middle of reconfiguration, and trusting in the excellence of it without being able to stand back from it, is difficult.

Now, I’m not going to suggest that everyone on the face of your globe is going to have to go through the dynamic kind of reconfiguration that is going on in South Africa and Russia. But each of you in your own way will learn to trust and it will be awkward and at times uncomfortable, simply because you are so convinced in your current limited sense of potential for yourself and for the world.

But as I said, you each have a companion, whether you want to call it your guide or the Holy Spirit or the Father or me. You all are not alone to make this change, to experience this reconfiguration.

It's necessary for me also to once again reassure everyone that everyone is going to wake up, not just a hundred and forty-four thousand. No one can be left behind because no one is outside of God; even though there are times that everyone of you are convinced that there isn't a God, or that if there is there is no relationship between Him and you. The fact is that there is only the Movement of Creation that is the Movement of divine Intelligence that you call God, the First Cause, the indivisible and, therefore, undivided First Cause. Which means that the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of this God must also be indivisible and undivided, and, therefore, incapable of polarization or conflict.

Now, it is this unconflicted unity of conscious experience that requires the practice of trust to get into, because everyone is so convinced that life is polarized; in fact, it is justified to the point of saying that without polarity, there couldn't be movement. And I will tell you that it is polarity that seems to bring things to a halt.

You live in wonderful times. But you are going to have to practice curiosity and trust in order to experience these marvelous and interesting times with a certain degree of joy.

It is natural to be Awake. But it doesn't feel natural to be out of control, because from the vantage point of the three-dimensional frame of reference control must be exercised in order to bring order out of chaos. When that which is infinite and indivisible experiences Itself as tiny—this is quite an illusory experience, very unnatural.

But you have come to believe that it is utterly natural to be tiny, to be separated. It causes you to feel as though you are in the middle of a vastness that is different from you, that you must be on guard against, that you must bring under control so that it will not do you in. But all of this is because of the misperception that you are tiny, the misperception that you are a body, and that you are not the consciousness in which the experience of body is occurring.

And so, an essential part of Awakening is shifting from body identification to Consciousness or Mind identification. And I am speaking here of Consciousness as Awareness, not consciousness as a thinking process. That is an important distinction, because you need to get beyond your thinking processes.

From within the three-dimensional frame of reference everything is reversed. And so, you think in order to arrive at a point of knowing something (that's the process you utilize)--instead of listening so that you may find yourself knowing, and then thing to express what you know. And so we're talking about a shift from a finite identification to a infinite identification—body identification to mind identification.

Now, a very important question is: If you are not identifying as body, does that mean that body will disappear? Absolutely not. Because body and all form is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of Mind or God, it cannot disappear without God disappearing, without existence or Being disappearing. But when that shift of identification from body to mind is willingly and totally embraced, all of the misperceptions that accompanied identification with the body will disappear together with their effects.

The ego, or the limited frame of reference, has not created an alternate reality—a separate reality from the Movement of God. All it has done is create a misperception of the only thing that is present to be misperceived, which is the Allness of God Infinitely manifested. The ego—your conditioned thinking, in other words—has created for you a world of misperception of Reality. But there is not Reality over here, and then the creation of the ego over here. And you will not escape from the miscreation of the ego over here to Reality back over here.

You will simply cease to be like the woman in the mental institution, who is afraid to go outside because she knows that if she does she will attract all the planes in the sky to her and they will crash. You will not project onto a totally benign world elements that are purely imaginary, and then conduct your life in a confined manner where you say you are protecting everyone in those planes by staying inside the hospital. You are getting the idea.

QUESTION: My question is: Please discuss the death of the body.

ANSWER: Ah, wonderful question. The visibility and tangibility of your Individuality—the visibility and tangibility of you—is as eternal as you: It does not die and it cannot die. The simple fact is, that not one single Individuality (and I care not how many lifetimes you think you have lived) has had one millisecond of an interruption of an experience of body.

The simplest way I can put it is, that everyone else buries that of you which was the furthest they could follow you in your journey. But you find yourself experiencing uninterrupted identity, or body.

Now if in the process, you or anyone else was experiencing what is believed to be a life-threatening disease, and indeed one that ultimately “takes your life,” you will find that there will be a point—which everyone else will call your death—where you have moved through your fear of death and found yourself still present, and that the apparent cause of your death is no longer present. Because how can it stand if the realization has occurred to you that it couldn’t kill you and didn’t kill you.

If you find yourself having moved through that point of intense fear that everyone is calling death, and there you are, intact—an uninterrupted conscious experience of identity—how can the thing that occasioned the great fear still be fearful to you, when you know as an experiential fact that it couldn’t take away your life. It can’t! And so you will find that apparent illness gone. You will say,

“I have been healed,” except that it will be truly clear to you that it didn’t have any substance in the first place except in your imagination and, therefore, you weren’t really healed of anything.

Now it is not necessary to die in order to have that kind of realization. And that is where curiosity comes into play, that is where the willingness to say—“nothing that I see means anything” comes into play; “Nothing that I see means what I think it means. Then comes the trust to be willing to lean into the unknown.

In other words, to be willing to go into that inner place of peace where truth can reveal itself to you directly, as knowing. Not as a knowing arrived at through thinking, but a knowing arrived at because there’s nothing standing in the way of your direct experience of your essential substance as the Presence of God expressed. And so, you can have that healing now, not after that point of great fear—which ultimately you discover had no power over you at all.

There cannot be the death of the body anymore than there can be the death of Individuality. There cannot be an annihilation of the world any more than there can an annihilation of God. God and God’s infinite manifestation, God and the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of God called Creation are inseparable. But what you must understand is, that this visibility and tangibility—which is generally referred to as a material world, because it is made out of matter—is not matter, but idea experienced by Mind and, therefore, it is all absolutely spiritual.

Now there is a piece of knowledge which is generally available, and most all of you know it but you don’t understand its meaning. This piece of knowledge is: When matter has been looked at through an electron microscope—when it has been looked at through your finest instruments—it used to be thought that there were little billiard balls, little pieces of substance whirling around; those little pieces of substance are nothing more than a pattern of energy—little patterns of energy, moving—but never having substance in the sense of a material object. There is no other way to put it.

There are no building blocks that are not just energy pattern—pattern of energy—which has no density to it whatsoever. The fact that your scientists cannot find matter anywhere—and they have already disclosed that to the public—should have been the great release from the illusion of a material world to be overcome. And [it] should have been the “open sesame,” if you will, to a new apprehension of everything that you are seeing.

Energy is light of one frequency or another. And we will not talk about frequency. But energy is light, I’m going to say totally substanceless in the sense that you think of substance. This table that you hear a knocking from is substanceless as is the hand that is knocking on it. It is substanceless in the sense of it being matter, something totally unlike the divine Mind, God, totally unspiritual. It is not totally unspiritual.

The realization that this hand and this table are not matter but energy, held together by something, is what allows everyone to begin to say, “Maybe there’s a different way to perceive this.” And that’s when curiosity begins. That’s when you begin to rattle the jail door and discover that you are not locked into your present perception of what substance is, and what you are.

Now this table looks like it does; it does not look like a glass of water. But the glass of water looks like it does, and doesn’t look like a table. The visibility that you are seeing appears the way it is, because it is energy held together by Intent.

And I’m not speaking here of some intent that you could, through your limited thinking, bring into play. I’m talking about the Intent of God, or the Intent of the infinite Creative Mind that is inseparable from an Idea that the infinite Mind has. “Behold I make all things new,” in other words I’m going to say, conception unconfined occurs as the experience of revelation.

You just thought revelation was something that happened to poor humanity, but revelation is the Movement of Mind. The action of God is revelation—the revealing of that which is new. Mind experiences the revelation, and it has meaning and that meaning constitutes Intent. And that Intent is instantaneously reflected in energy pattern that Mind experiences as substance.

And so, the actual fact of it is that right now as you sit here, in the state of Philadelphia, on an apparently solid clod of earth called your planet, you Are the conscious experience of Mind experiencing its ideas as having substance, and there isn’t one bit of matter to it. And that could be the end of the workshop.

Now we are going to take a break. I’m going to ask you something on this break—do not talk to each other unless you are going to put into words whatever this answer has triggered with you. Do not worry, next break you can talk gibberish. But during this break, either be quiet with what is triggered in you, or talk about what is triggered within you.

QUESTION: Raj what you’ve just said to me, said that to see from fourth-dimension, to see from Reality is to see everything as my own self. And there is no difference, there is no a separation.

ANSWER: I’m going to interrupt you for just a moment. This is absolutely true. But be careful, because your definition of self—everyone’s definition of self relative to themselves—is so strongly identified with the body and with their experience of life that has been minus the infinite view, that it is rather easy to begin to think that we are creating our world. That this Self that is One with everything, is a projection of the self we have always thought we were.

It is true that everything you are seeing is your Self, but the only way that is true is if you are letting God’s point of view be your point of view. And you cannot experience God’s point of view until you are no longer claiming a mind of your own—as though you have a mind stuck inside your skull that is different from the mind of the person sitting next to you, or different from the Mind of God.

You see, if God is Infinite Mind, He did not create a bunch of little creatures with little minds. God expressed Himself as You; God expresses Himself/Herself as every single one of You; and God has withheld nothing of what He/She Is from His/Her Self-expression, called You—which means that You are the Presence of God. You are not the presence of something else that is the Creation of God.

You must understand that Creation is not the way you define it three-dimensionally. You have a musician who creates song, or a potter who creates a pot; and the pot is something separate from the potter that somehow embodies something of the vision and connectedness with reality of the potter.

God's Self expression is God expressed. And there isn't a separate thing called man or woman; there isn't a separate thing called Individuality. Individuality is the Whole Mind of God. That is what It Is. That is what you Are, and that is what each of you Are. That is why there is inseparable Oneness.

Now, it is a difficult thing to explain in words, because your words are used to describe the three-dimensional experience. But God as the One Infinite Presence, the One Infinite Mind, expresses Himself. And because God is Infinite, that expression is Infinite. And so, we can say that God expressing Himself is Infinitely Individualized.

Now that seems to suggest infinite number of Individualities that are different. But it is all the Infinite Presence of God embodied, but not embodied as separate entities. Therefore, you will forever be You, and I will forever be Me, and there will be Awareness of Individuality. But the only way you can say that all you are seeing is yourself, is if you are not indulging in the sense of a separate mind, and are letting—as the Bible says—that mind be in you, which was also in me. And that mind is God—God's point of view.

That is the way in which you will see everything as yourself. And as you do begin to have a clearer experience of it all being You, you may know that you are leaving the ego frame of reference and are having the clearer experience of God/You.

Now, please continue.

QUESTION: This gets to the question that I was leading up to—having to do with the Creation of the world, which is hotly debated and of course, among Course students. We normally hear that God Created the world, and what you're saying is, I, you, we created the world in that Total Unison.

But the Course also says that the ego made the world, and speaks of waking up as the world disappearing. And that is interpreted by many to mean that they must flash out of here, that they must get rid of bodies, that they must somehow ascend...

ANSWER: Before we get too much further, I will interrupt again.

It is more correct to say that God Created the world and the ego created a misperception of the world. As I indicated earlier, the definition of this table or this hand as being matter, as having originated out of a big bang of primordial cosmic debris or matter, is the misconception. But it is treated as though it is fact. And then behavior is based upon that fact, which isn't a fact at all—it is just a mutually agreed upon misperception of an idea held in the Mind of God. Please continue.

QUESTION: When the Course talks about what is valuable, it says to see it as only those things which are infinite are valuable and our Reality and, therefore, the physical world appears to be discounted—or in other words, anything that we can experience with the five senses.

And also the idea that the Course says, that you cannot see two worlds at the same time, which is interpreted by some to mean that to see Reality means that what we see as the physical world disappears.

ANSWER: What you see disappear is the physicalness of it, the materialness of it that I described. But there will not be a void left, because there was something there in the first place to be misperceived.

It is true you cannot see two worlds, and you are not now seeing two worlds. You are seeing the one and only Creation of God that exists clearly, or unclearly. Your belief that your unclear perception of the world is the one that is true is a delusion, a form of insanity. Because you are believing what is not true. But your insane perception is not the making of a separate world, it is just a distorted perception of the one and only world there is to be experienced.

The woman who will not leave the building—the institution that she is hospitalized in—because she does not want to wreak havoc for the planes and the people on the planes, will not finally emerge into a different world. She will emerge into the one that was there all along, but which she was misperceiving. But she will be minus the misperception and the fear occasioned by the misperception. She is not experiencing a different world. You are all only ever experiencing the One and only world, or Creation of God, that is happening.

Now, there is one other point that is important here and that is: Creation isn't something that happened—creation is what is happening. The world is not some huge perpetual motion machine, set in motion in an initial act of Creation. Your very existence at this moment is the result of, or the simultaneous evidence of the Living God, now. you are not a product of the past, not even “God's past.” Creation is always now. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I guess I'm still feeling a confusion. The Course seems to speak of three states—the world we see, the Real world, and then Waking Up where there is no world.

ANSWER: This literally describes the process of transition from insanity to sanity, from ignorance to full comprehension. First, there is a state of unenlightened ignorance—the three-dimensional frame of reference, the three-dimensional perception of the fourth-dimension, Reality. In this state what is experienced is accepted as reality, and is understood on the basis of its being all there is to understand. And one is just one of the many organisms on the face of a planet that occurred by chance and went through periods of evolution that have been described as the “survival of the fittest.” And that’s all there is to it.

And there are people on your planet, at this very time, who are living in that frame of mind—who have no concept whatsoever of there being a God, who embrace nothing beyond what they see. The saying is, “What you see is what you get.” Now, that is the ego frame of reference.

Then there is the penetration of this ignorance by Reality. This frame of reference I have described in the past as being like a Ping-Pong ball, a ball that is not solid but is a shell. And the sphere of the Ping-Pong ball encloses a little bit of the air of the world, and outside of the Ping-Pong ball is all of the rest of the air. And what is inside is the same as what is on the outside, except that there is this sphere that separates the inside from the outside.

This sphere is constituted of beliefs and conditioned thinking. It is what is called the ego. It is that which is intent upon maintaining its spherical embrace of part of the Totality, and the sense of identity it gets from having this tiny, separated bit of All That Is.

Because it is made up of beliefs and not Truth, and because it is simply a defense against the unity, and because it does not have its source in God—as I said earlier, it is a bastard—it does not have the substance necessary to maintain itself perfectly and thus there are times when holes develop. These are times when you usually feel miserable because you are not being able to maintain control over everything. And that is exactly when the opportunity is present for penetration to occur, and an experience of unity that is called revelation, or insight, or a feeling of union with something bigger than you. But also a union with something that is not really different from you.

Now, this penetration lifts one to the point of curiosity that I have been talking about. And that practice of curiosity takes up a certain amount of your energy and attention. And it is an energy, you might say, that is at odds with the ego’s intent to maintain the sphere. And so, the sphere weakens by virtue of the curiosity. And more insight occurs. And more experience of unity with that which is outside the sphere of your present concepts, and you begin to have an experience of union with the Whole—that’s when you begin to remember what I have called Home.

Now, you have the opportunity to begin to put into words the fact that you are Mind and not body. And that’s when the shift begins to occur—that’s when the imprisonment of the belief that you are a body begins to disintegrate. And that is when—as the Course puts it—the happy dream begins to be your experience, and increasingly be your experience. This is the second stage you could say—where we are not dealing with the world the ego made, or the misperception that the ego has created, which doesn't allow for anything other than itself and where one begins to recognize the Presence of God in everything—the world that God made.

But you are not here just to experience an improved world. You are here to make a transition yourself—as the book says, a graduation yourself—where you relinquish ultimately the sense of a private mind that can have its own ideas and its own perceptions separate and apart from God's point of view and God's Ideas. So you make a shift from body identification to mind identification. And then you must ultimately make a commitment, an irrevocable commitment through sheer willingness—not willfulness—through sheer willingness, to yield to the Father's Will.

Now, you see what that says, yield to the Father's Will. That means you must let the Father in. That is why it is stated that the Father takes the last step, because you let go of every last vestige of the sphere that separated all of what you Are—in other words, the Total Presence of God into an inside and an outside, and into a me and not me; into me as a person and God as something different; into me as a person different from you as a person.

Now for all practical purposes, yes, the world will disappear. Now don't jump to limited conclusions. Right now your sense of your world is based entirely upon your sense of yourself as a body. That is what creates the great misperception. The world and everything that truly exists will still exist, but you will not be using it for your own limited purposes, because you will not be continuing to experience yourself as a tiny mind with its own will.

What will get your attention will be entirely different. Whether you have a hangnail on your big toe or not, will be totally irrelevant, because your attention will be consumed with being a participant in the Movement of Creation and the joy of experiencing it occur as you, but not as you separate from God. And that is the sense in which all of us are co-creators. But you cannot be a co-creator when you are holding yourself apart and separate from God, and saying, "God is the Infinite Mind, and I have the mind that God gave me."

And so, it will all be here with a different purpose. And you won't wonder about how you're going to get through the traffic jam to work on time, or how to make traveling easier, or how to make society function better. But it will all still function flawlessly.

The trees will be trees, but you will be in communion with them. And the dolphins will be dolphins, and you will be in communion with them. And you will be in communion with everything; you will discover that not one thing is unintelligent, or of a lower classification of existence. You will find that dolphins do not want to be anything different from what they are, because they are absolutely infinitely perfect just as you are. I will carry this a step further, however, because neither the dolphins nor you will be identifying with the specific form, even though the specific form will exist.

Look at Paul and Susan: They are totally not responsible for what is happening. And here they are in Philadelphia. Something is happening, but they are flowing with the Movement of Being and they will move on. But they are not identifying with the specifics, they are identifying with the Movement. This is what happens as you begin to bring into play the element of trust and of listening. And this becomes compounded.

And so Paul and Susan can observe what they seem to be doing, and it is very interesting, never dull for a moment. And it is new, when sometimes they would like it to be just a little bit more of the old security.

But the moment any of you begin to listen beyond the limits of the sphere, when you begin to listen, it weakens the belief structures that formed the sphere—penetration can occur, the experience of unity with the Whole can be felt, and Movement begins, but not as a person, not as a little ego in charge anymore. And ultimately, you just give up on maintaining a private, little, separate, personal mind, because it does begin to be uncomfortable and hurt to not be in the flow. And you say, “okay,” and you let God be All There Is to You.

Then everything shifts in its perspective to the divine infinite view. And although you are utterly and completely conscious of every little detail of Creation, you are not preoccupied with any one aspect of it, because you are experiencing the profoundness of Creation Itself. And it’s not something different from you and you know you are at Home, not alone, but together with everyone else who is the very same thing, with whom you are in total communion.

The world does not serve any real purpose other than being the visibility and tangibility of the Presence of God which is the Presence of what you Truly Infinitely Are. But right now your perception of the world is based on how it can serve you in your finite perception of yourself. And all of those definitions will go out the window. And it means that you will see everything in a new light—that’s not just a play on words it’s the Truth—because every single form that is here is a pattern or form of Living Love, which is light.

And I have said it before, but I will say it again: When you are experiencing illumination—I’m not going to say perception, but reception of the Truth of everything—you will recognize everything here that appears to be static (even non-living, like plastic or wood made out of a tree), you will find it to be illuminated and illuminating. And you will feel loved by it, while at the same time experiencing the fact that the love that you are experiencing, is the Love that you Are. That world does not serve your tiny, limited purposes, but serves the Father’s Intent to identify the Movement of Creation.

So when you take that last step of giving up taking steps and yielding to the Father's Will—which means the Father can be fully present where you are, because you are not denying the Father—then the meaning of the world will change. And what had been your focal point in the past, will no longer be your focal point; because literally, you will be riding the crest of the wave of the Movement of Creation, unconcerned about how much foam there is, or how much turbulence there is and you will fly with the Movement. And that's what will be meaningful to you. That is the clearest I can put it.

What needs to be understood is that this process does not constitute a denial or an extinction of anything, except the misperceptions that have caused a distorted meaning, thus causing you to behave ignorantly and feel bound by your ignorance. The world disappearing means you're no longer identifying with picayunish little details and the attempts to control them, and have them reflect what you think reality ought to be. But rather, engaging in a new endeavor, which is to be inseparably present and identical with the Movement of Creation—the Conscious experience of Being—"Behold I make all things new."

When it says the world will disappear, it means you will no longer be putting the world to a use that serves your tiny perceptions of everything.

QUESTION: Well, I feel like somebody who signed up for simple math and I'm in a calculus class.

ANSWER: You came. And indeed, you knew that we would go beyond simple math. But I have not gone beyond you. Continue.

QUESTION: I'm looking for a way to form a question here. I almost feel like I have to just kind of blunder along with this question and see where it goes.

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you. I'm going to encourage all of you when you listen, when you feel a need to blunder, let yourself be awkward. There is no need to be polished. There is no need to inquire with dignity. Just get it out whatever way you can. Because, I will tell you, the one you are asking rejoices that you aren't being stifled by some ridiculous etiquette. Continue.

QUESTION: So, it feels to me that I want everything. And actually lately in my life it looks like I get neither deep experience of feeling centered and connected, nor do I feel like I get tremendous gratification through what looks like the exterior world.

I am very interested in things of the world. I do find myself interested in wanting to pursue them and yet there's a holding back inside of me, kind of a knowing that I know they can only lead me so far. And I also feel there's a holding back about going within myself.

ANSWER: And so, you are experiencing somewhat of a stasis or log jam: An inability to move and an insignificant desire to overcome it. Love yourself anyway. Allow yourself to be in that spot. You are not experiencing misery. And you cannot create something in yourself that isn't there yet.

I encourage you to ask your guide or the Holy Spirit—whether you hear an answer or not—to help promote the impulse for movement. And then, as at any other time, don't try to define when that impulse should be experienced, wait until the impulsion is felt.

It is like someone who is studying the Course and finds no impulsion to continue. Don't assume there is something wrong. Don't assume that the devil has gotten hold of you. And don't assume that there is something in you that procrastinates. That is a very tantalizing word in your life. It stimulates guilt and also a certain pride, because you cannot be controlled. Don't credit such a concept.

Allow yourself to be in the place where it seems as though movement is not occurring, and know that you are not guilty of anything, and wait for the movement to occur. Unless there is active resistance at play, this period where it seems as though there is no movement, is a period in which the prior growth is being incorporated and embodied, and is essential and orderly. And if somebody else says, "Oh, you're not in touch with your guide yet?" Or someone says, "You stopped in the middle of the lessons?" You say, "Yes! And I'll let you know when I go on to the next one."

There is a saying, "A mind that's changed against its will, is of the same opinion still." And you cannot be where you cannot be, or where you do not have a feeling for being. And so be where you are, and don't engage in judgment. And in the absence of judgment you will not create resistance to movement, and movement can occur gracefully when it is time.

Don't be a person who flagellates himself with guilt. You've heard the saying, "twenty lashes with a wet noodle." There are those who lash themselves with guilt; nothing serious, but enough to make it sting, and frequently enough to provide a sense of stimulation, as though something is going on in your life, when there is otherwise a certain degree of peace.

I know your question is genuine, but I also know that there is a part of you that savors the sting of guilt and thus, limply whips yourself with it. And it does bring in an element of stimulation that does nothing but disturb your well-deserved peace.

Is that a judgment? No, it's simply an observation. Because you have the perfect right to sting yourself with guilt if you want. We don't care, because we know it doesn't mean anything, even though you think it does.

And so, I am not chastising you, but simply being up front, straight and matter-of-fact. Abide in the peace, even though it feels like nothing is happening, because embodiment and incorporation of prior learning is occurring.

QUESTION: I'm glad for the confirmation that it's an incorporation of learning. It certainly gives me a greater sense of having patience.

ANSWER: No, greater sense of not indulging in impatience. Patience is a bore. Patience is hard work. But letting go of impatience accomplishes the real goal and leaves you in your peace. Continue.

QUESTION: It's been a long time since the end of my last relationship. And I was curious to know what's going on in that department? Why I'm waiting so long? I think I'm waiting to be perfect before I'm with someone else. That's my hunch.

ANSWER: The simple fact is, and it's another way of putting what you just said, you are not letting someone in. It doesn't matter whether you're waiting to be perfect or waiting to deserve it, or it doesn't matter the reason, you are simply neglecting to give permission. And if you will give permission, it will happen. I don't care what reason you give permission for it for, it is the giving of permission that opens the door.

And that is not a means of control, it is a means of relinquishing refusal to let in your fulfillment. And again, it's okay to say "no." And so, this is not another thing that you can sting yourself with; it is not another thing to feel guilty for. Realize that you simply, matter-of-factly have the choice to say "yes" or "no"—to be at odds with or congruent with your fulfillment. And one is not worthy of praise and the other worthy of criticism. But the moment you say "yes" you will be more comfortable, and you will experience more of your joy.

But don't judge the resistance as justification for penalty and get caught up in a side-trip. Just realize that you have the choice to say "yes" or "no." And say "yes" or "no," and live with your answer until you give another answer.

QUESTION: I would like to say that I'm thrilled to be here. And I wanted to know how to let go of the shame and the guilt that I sometimes put on myself? And I want to know how to go beyond my limitations, but still feel secure? And if I can let go of the fear and let God into my heart so I can further expand my spirituality? I just want to make sure I'm worth it.

ANSWER: Oh, you are worth it. At times you will not take my word for it, but it doesn't change the fact, and that's what I want you to remember. Even when you are practicing doubt, it doesn't change the fact that you are worth it.

Nothing in your heart tells you to indulge in shame and guilt—it's all in your head. And here is a situation where you are going to have to use—and I hesitate to use the words, but I'm going to—some self-discipline. I mean self-discipline in the sense of practicing intelligence and reason, rather than unintelligence and unreasonableness.

Pay attention to what you're feeling. When you are indulging in feelings of shame and guilt you are tight inside, you are not at peace. And the reason that you overcome or get rid of shame and guilt, is to relieve yourself of the conflict. And you don't have to get very religious about it. And you don't have to pray to God to take away your shame. It's all conditioned thinking. And it is the way the ego uses to keep you from your peace. It's as simple as that.

And so the solution is not some profound means of forgiving yourself, it's really a matter of neglecting to energize shame. And the way you neglect to energize shame, is to choose for your peace. And you are in ideal circumstances, because the means of effectively meditating and experiencing your peace—in spite of what might be going on that triggers your shame—is available to you, and embraced. No one will laugh at you, no one will ridicule you when you become at peace within yourself through meditation.

What has happened is, that you have settled down out of the surface reactive level of thought—of thinking. And you have come into that place where you can experience the substance of your Being. The substance of your Being is first experienced as peace. When you are in your peace, you are able to deal with whatever is going on without being reactive. Being in your peace does not incapacitate you; it does not make you incapable of functioning in the world, but it allows you to function with clarity.

So, the way you set aside shame and guilt—and this does not apply only to you, but to everyone—the way you get out of shame and guilt, or tension and fear etc., is to make the conscious choice to go within and come into your peace. Let yourself into your peace. That is when you are experiencing what is natural to you—to the divine You—even though your ego screams that what is natural under the circumstances is shame and guilt and sorrow.

The only time that that suggestion can seem valid to you, is when you are bouncing around on the surface, reactive level. But you can make a choice. All of you, at any moment can make a choice for your peace and move into it, where your perspective returns, your experience of your security is available to you; and the strength that I spoke of this morning, that isn't power, but an invulnerability that causes there to be nothing that can be truly threatening.

When the suggestions of shame and guilt come, you might just simply say, “'taint so, 'taint so.” Don't even get angry; don't say, “'taint so!” Don't give it that much energy—“'taint so, 'taint so.” And that will be very helpful to you when it seems perhaps difficult at the moment to meditate, you can practice the art of contrary thinking on your own behalf. When the ego whispers to you that shame is an appropriate feeling, you can say, “'Taint so, I've got important things to do.”

Don't make a big job out of it. The ego would love you to have a system and a process of forgiveness to go through, and keep you busy a while longer so that you don't simply make a choice for your peace.

I will tell you something: It is not going to be difficult for you to grow spiritually, because the fact is that you don't have any significant, deeply buried defenses against it. There's a natural spontaneous inclination within you to grow spiritually. And I'm going to say, instead of wondering how you can grow spiritually faster, that you're going to have to hang on to your hat. And I'm going to say, have fun and enjoy the ride.

PAUL: Okay, before we go to the first question this morning, Raj has said for me to share something with you.

Very often you hear people suggest that if you are going to open up to anything beyond your present frame of reference, that it's a good idea to protect yourself. And of course, this is based upon a fundamental, conflicted sense of life, and it's a projection of our seemingly natural idea that life is polarized and there's good and evil.

And so, I want you to understand that what I'm going to share now is not a means of protection that I use, but is instead a means of establishing an intent; it's a matter of becoming clear myself as to what my intent is before I start listening for guidance. As it happens, the first thing I'm going to share with you is something that I started saying at the very beginning when I was opening up to guidance, when my business was collapsing. And it was just something that came out of my mouth as just a real genuine expression of what my intent was for that period of time that I planned to be listening for guidance. These words are not words that anyone else has to use, your own words are good enough.

But I just want you to know while I was sitting here and being quiet, I was going through a little process. I don't always have time to do that. Sometimes I have to say, "Raj," and he says, "Yes," and I say, "What do we do here?" But the first thing I said was, "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of capital "B" Being." Which to me means the same thing as the Father's Will. And then I say, "Amen," and I just say that as a punctuation mark that says, that statement is clearly made, that is my intent, period. And I don't just say it each time, I don't rehearse it, I pay attention to its meaning. Because the first time I said it, it was emerging out of a feeling of meaning, and I wasn't repeating anything at that point.

The other, the second thing is a variation on what's called a daily prayer in the Christian Science religion. It serves my purposes well. And it says... it's supposed to be an elaboration of the line from the "Lord's Prayer" that says, "Thy Will be done." And it's, "Let the reign" (r-e-i-g-n)--and I sometimes use the word "sovereign" to indicate that it's a divine and absolute reign—"Let the reign of divine Truth, Life and Love be established in me, and rule out of me all self-will. And may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them."

And it wasn't until I began to incorporate the second part, that I realized that when it says, "and may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind," it means that this statement is embracing, it constitutes a joining, with everyone. I'm not saying, "and may Thy word through ME enrich the affections," but, "may Thy word directly enrich the affections of all mankind, as I am finding that it enriches me."

And so, where the Course talks about joining as an essential part of waking up, this prayer does identically the same thing. So, this is not done as protection, like encircling myself with white light. Raj says that any entities who might be harmful, who have passed on, are as incapable of connecting with us, let us say telepathically, as all of us are incapable of communicating with each other that way. And the only ones who can connect with us are those who are Awakened and ego-free. So we do not need to be afraid of evil spirits, or that we're opening up ourselves to anything that might be dangerous to us.

QUESTION: God bless you Raj, and I've thanked you a zillion times for your selflessness in helping us...

ANSWER: I was blessed by God before you said it. And I want you to know that you are blessed by God before YOU think you are. And it is on the basis of that acknowledgment/blessing of the Father that you have the grounds for claiming your divinity, right here and right now, without waiting for it in some distant future. Please continue.

QUESTION: I'm bowed over after that. Thank you, that wraps everything up. In my mundaneness...

ANSWER: Oh, we'll get to your question. But in your humanity is where your divinity is to be found. And so I want all of you to begin to reaccess and redefine the word mundane, because you all treat it as though it is somehow irrelevant from that which counts—something that must be attended to until you arrive at a point of enlightenment, where you have somehow risen above or escaped it. But it's right in the middle of your everyday, mundane affairs that the presence of clarity, the presence's of enlightenment, is available and is to be experienced.

So that when you are in the grocery store deciding between this item or that item, you may grasp the fact that that choice fits into the universal order of God's Being. The mundane is not something to be tolerated until you wake up—it's on the grocery shelf, it's in the experience of shopping in the grocery store that you are to experience your divinity; and the fact that what you take home in your cart that day reflects the divine order, the universal scheme of things. And that each item and the manner in which you went up and down each aisle, you might say, is part of the tapestry of Life with a capital "L".

Everyone needs to become aware of how totally embraced every aspect of your daily life IS in God. And so let us, indeed, talk about this wonderful mundaneness you want to ask about.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. I have an aside comment first. I wanted to tell everyone what happened before I had the opportunity to ask my question. I believe in talking to my guidance and I also talk to Raj, and I want to encourage all of you to talk to Raj, too. And so, Raj said to me, "You really want your question answered, don't you?" And I said, "Yes." And he said, “Open your heart.” And I’ve literally felt the expansion of my heart taking place. And then it was as if, now’s the time that you can ask your question.

I want to be totally spiritual. And I seem to have a terrible block to losing the weight that I carry around. And because of the weight and how I think and perceive, I put a tremendous amount of limitations upon myself. And I’d really like to release them all and set myself free. So I ask for your guidance in this area. Where is my block and what can I do?

ANSWER: First of all I want you to embrace your weight. First of all I want you to not judge it. I want you to—and please do not be offended by this—I want you to be like the dancing hippopotamuses in “Fantasia,” who were totally uninhibited and danced the light fantastic. Now would you expect a hippopotamus to lose weight and look like a burro?

Now, I am not saying that it is part of your natural form to be overweight. But I am saying that the judgment you are applying to it is unnecessary. If you will not limit yourself on the basis of your judgments about your weight, and if you will embrace it, and if you will have fun with it, you will not be giving permission for it to remain with you indefinitely. But in your lightness about it, whatever is not essential to the perfect expression of you will fall away. But to the degree that you resist it, and detest it, and hate it, you will hold it to you, because you are keeping yourself conflicted.

So, become light about it as you embrace it, and in the relinquishing of your judgment about it, it will fall away. That is very important to understand.

I also want you to understand that it is the intent of your body—in other words, this particular form, just as we were speaking of the form of the table yesterday—it is the intent (set into motion by the Father) of your body to identify the Presence of your Individuality perfectly.

And if you are engaged in hating your body or treating it as though it is nothing, treating it as though it is meaningless, you are in a state of attack on your body. And when you are in a state of attack, you introduce elements—ego elements—that are unnatural to you and inconsistent with the Reality of You and that which identifies you. As long as you are bringing those elements into play and energizing them, you block your ability to experience the divine fact of your body. And so you must, if you want to experience the wonderful symmetry and balance of your body, relinquish the judgment, the conflict, the attack on your body.

This is a very important thing to understand, especially for students of the Course—it applies to everyone, because there is not a soul on your planet who is not in one way or another attempting to rise above the (dirty word) material world, to attain spirituality. It has been stated that A Course In Miracles is the most radical volume present on the face of your globe. And indeed, I would have to agree with that.

But the idea of rising above your world is as old as the ego. And to deny the world and to deny your body is not a radical idea. And this is very important to understand. Because to the degree that you treat the body and the world as though it is nothing, as though it is meaningless, you are in a state of attack upon it. And attack is disrespect.

And you will experience the effects of disrespect on your body and on your world. And indeed, the raping of the land on your planet—in the Rain Forest and in other parts of the world, and the feeling that you are so important that you can pollute the atmosphere, that the world does not have to be treated with respect, you do not have to respect it because you are the dominant species—this is ego arrogance. And you are experiencing the effects of the disrespect. And it is absolutely inconsistent with the principles of the Course and it's absolutely inconsistent with Love to consciously practice disrespect for your body and for your world.

Now, what do you do with that? The first lesson in the Course says, “Nothing that I see means anything.” And it says: That is the fundamental premise upon which all of the rest of the lessons in the Course are built. Everyone thinks too much. If you would just practice that first lesson and not think about it, you would find something spontaneously happening. Because it is impossible for you to endure meaninglessness.

And so without thinking about it, without analyzing what it means, if you actually began to look at everything and say, “The chair that I see does not mean anything; nothing that I see means anything; the tree doesn't mean anything,” etc.—something will revolve within you, not as a result of reasoning or thinking, but as a result of the fact that you cannot exist in a meaningless world. And the discovery of the truer meaning of what you see will begin to emerge.

That lesson literally means—if you must think about it—that lesson literally means: “Nothing that I see means what I think it means.” And that lesson is the means of your breaking loose from your commitments to your definitions that you have evolved for yourself, as a result of not truly paying attention, but trying to figure everything out from your head—and, therefore, from your conditioned thinking and your current sense of limitation.

On the one hand you can say, “this is a meaningless world,” but if you think about what that means and you say, “therefore, this world is meaningless,” then you will stop valuing it; you will feel justified in mistreating it even more greatly than you already are. And if your body is ill or of larger proportions than you would like, and you have already been down on your body, and then you say, “it doesn't mean anything anyway,” you are likely to treat it with even less respect. And you are also likely to become compulsively inclined to abandon it, as though there is a need to get out of it, quickly, so that you do not have to endure this meaninglessness.

Now, I am going to tell you something: When I encountered the man with the withered arm, I reached out and touched him. Now, if his body was meaningless, if his body was illusion, and especially if his arm was an illusion, then healing would have constituted the disappearance of his arm—and then he would have only had one arm. But no, the healing which was described as regeneration was the illumination and the uncovering of the divine Intent, of the divine meaning, and he was Whole.

The result of revelation and the increased direct experience of your divinity is “Wholizing”—it does not cause further separation and division. Remember that! Your clear experience of your divinity “Wholizes” you—it brings everything about you into clearer focus.

And if you have been looking at it out of focus, with a fuzzy image that is not easily identified and easily determined, you don’t get rid of what you’re looking at, you adjust the focus so that what was unclear—and which might have been a little bit frightening because you couldn’t quite make out what it was—you bring it into focus so that you can see it clearly and see that fear was inappropriate, and that your false estimate as to what it was was untrue and, therefore, meaningless. It wasn’t what you were looking at that was meaningless, but your incorrect perception that was meaningless.

Denying the world is as old as the hills, there is nothing radical about that at all. There is nothing new about it, there is nothing revelatory about it. The purpose of the lessons in the Course and the purpose of the Text is, indeed, meant to cause a radical shift of perception, not a radical shift of the world.

And in that radical shift of perception, where it is your desire to see the face of God in everyone you look at and in everything you see—your definitions, which have been judgments—your definitions about everything become meaningless. And you begin to be able to see like a child, with new eyes, and with delight, and with curiosity. And indeed, your sense of your world changes, and you see it in a new way—you discover the harmony in it. And you find the way you’re going shopping and finding a parking place right where you need to go, is an expression of the divine Universal Order, because it all fits in as part of the tapestry.

Now, that shift of perception constitutes what the Course calls a “happy dream,” and it isn’t the last step. As I said yesterday, the last step is giving up your perceptions entirely. You shift from perceptions that are entirely ignorant to perceptions that are less dense, and then you give up private perceptions entirely—for God’s point of view. You let that Mind be in you that is God, which is the only Mind you have ever had or been all along.

But you must realize that you will not arrive at God’s point of view if you are in a conscious active state of denying the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of God, called Creation. Else you will not have healing of the world and you will not have healing of the body. And you might as well just go ahead and dig your grave and crawl into it and wait to die, because anything else is folderol.

So, embrace where you are with lightness and with curiosity, with a desire to see the face of God, with a desire to see and feel the way in which every little thing in your day fits into the divinely unfolding tapestry of Creation that is occurring at this very moment.

And indeed, as paradoxical as it seems, look at this world that you are willing to be present with and say, “nothing that I see means anything,” without interpreting that to mean that everything you see is meaningless. It doesn’t mean what you think it means. Why? Because it is the Presence of God in active, vital expression, expressing the Father’s Will in this very moment, expressing the Father’s Intent which is indivisible and, therefore, undivided. And it expresses a beauty and an intent that is totally escaping you, because you are so damn sure of your definitions of it all.

And so, you must break loose. And that is the purpose of the Course—to break you loose of your convictions as to what a thing is. If you are saying, “what I see has nothing to do with God,” then you’re lost. But if you look at everything, even the ugliest things, and you say, “everything that I see has something to do with God,” something is going to happen into you that says, “how can it be that this can have something to do with God?”

You will state it as an expression of a difficulty, a problem in your mind—“how can this be, it’s impossible.” But if you don’t add those last two words—“it’s impossible,” you’ll find that your question, “how can that be,” is the open door to revelation. “How can this be the Presence of God?” If you will ask that question as a statement of curiosity, rather than a statement of dilemma, you will get past the appearance, revelation will occur and you will experience the delight of being conscious. And you will also lessen the density of the ignorance that everyone seems to be bound by, because you will no longer be joining with everyone else in the false definition, you will have gotten passed it.

You see, everyone says, “nothing that I see means anything,” and then you think “everything I see is meaningless.” If you will not think, but just abide with the statement, “nothing that I see means anything,” this inner revolution will occur because it is impossible for you to exist in a meaningless world, and you will find revelation occurring. You will feel a need to find meaning.

That’s desire, and desire is the definition of prayer. It’s asking instead of telling. The ego tells; it says, “This is a chair. This is a finger.” And then it says, “This is a material chair, and this is a material finger, and this chair and this finger have nothing to do with God.” And you’re stuck in this world with fingers and chairs that have nothing to do with God. And you’ve got to find a way to deal with being in that kind of world.

But what does this chair and this finger have to do with God? Ask those questions. Even if you don't ask them, if the question will emerge, that inner revolution, or movement will occur. And it is desire and curiosity, and that's what unlocks the door to clarification, to enlightenment, to the new view that more closely approximates the truth of the Intent that the Father has expressed in what you call a chair and a finger.

So, be with your body, and be with it lightly, and be with it with curiosity. Doubt what you think a thing is; and do not then define it as meaningless and become depressed about it and caught up in unending anguish within yourself because it is such a depressing thing. Be curious, be open—that's the point. Anything else is an attack on God. When you falsely define your world and your body as meaningless, it is an attack on god.

As I said it is paradoxical. Because to see the God in a thing you must be willing to say that what you see doesn't mean anything. But that is simply a trigger and a stepping stone to your natural inability to exist in a meaningless world.

And if you will not get sidetracked with thinking and coming to a conclusion that the world is meaningless just because you have said, "nothing that I see means anything" the clearer, truer Meaning, with a capital "M", that expresses the Father's Intent, can begin to register with you, and you will say revelation has occurred. And you will begin to understand the miracle of A Course In Miracles. Or for those who are not students of A Course In Miracles, you will discover the miracle of Life, right here.

Everyone is glad you asked that question.

QUESTION: I seem to have been on a crusade for the past fifteen years to fix me. Forgetting the past, getting over the past and overcoming faults. And getting new viewpoints. The more I study...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you. Always what you end up having to forgive—whether it is from the present or the past—really amounts to making a decision within yourself to refrain from judging.

Now all of you can take years of your life seeking out those things that need to be forgiven, or you can chop down the tree at it's root by monitoring yourself and refusing to engage in judgment in the moment you're in. There can be ten thousand things to be upset about, or you can choose not to validate being upset about anything and choosing for your peace. If you are willing to make a commitment on an hourly basis or a minute by minute basis to stay in your peace as you face your world, you will find yourself experiencing your integrity.

You see, the ego suggests that you feel a loss of your integrity because of the ten thousand things—and especially this one and that one and the other one. And if you go out attempting to correct this one, that one and the other one, and hopefully someday the ten thousand, you can spend years of your life never feeling like you're getting ahead. Because I will tell you something, when you take care of the ten thousand you will find that the ego has ten thousand more in the wings.

I am not being over simplistic. And you will find the practicalness of what I am saying, in spite of the fact that you hear that you must weed out significant traumas in your past. But I will tell you something: If you don't plug in the trauma light, the light won't go on and illuminate ten thousand traumas to deal with. And if you choose consciously for your peace, if you say, "not my will, but Thine be done; what do I need to know; what is the truth in this moment about me"; and you insist upon making that inquiry not from the ragged edge, but from your peace, you will find the healing of the whole illusion of trauma occurring—it will cut down the whole tree.

Again, this is not over simplistic. Truth IS simple. And that's half the problem; because all of you are conditioned to see everything with complexity, you think that the answer to a complex question is going to be a complex answer that may be as much of a problem as the problem you're trying to get the answer for. And maybe you will not be able to comprehend the answer.

The Truth always simplifies. Why? Because it cuts down the whole tree, while you're trying to deal with this leaf or that leaf or the other leaf that apparently has turned brown.

QUESTION: Well part of my question was that I have a daughter and some friends who are in...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt again, I'm sorry. You see, instead of being a gardener who prunes the trees, I want you to become a logger who cuts down the tree.

Continue.

QUESTION: Okay. I understand that abusive relationships are there because of consent on both parties. I truly, truly want to be... to unconditionally love both my daughter and my son-in-law. And it's just hard to be nonjudgmental. How can I get past that?

ANSWER: If you listen within, you will come to know what the Truth is. And when you know what the Truth is, you will know that it is this and not that. You will be able to tell the difference between what is true and what is not true. That is discernment, not judgment.

Judgment is more than discernment between what is true and what is not, between what is right and what is wrong. Judgment is the discernment plus an attack on what is wrong, and almost invariably an arrogant, egotistical affirmation of what is true. And both the arrogant, self-righteous attitude and the anger and attack are irrelevant to the discernment—the knowing as to what is appropriate and what is not.

Arrogant self-righteousness is effortful and depleting; just as much as anger and attack on what is wrong is effortful and depleting. And both of them keep you in a state of conflict that will ultimately cause you to become a less effective agent for change. You have available to you the calm, clear distinction between what is appropriate and what is not. That knowing allows you to know how to be. It allows you to know when to say “no” and when to say “yes.” It allows you to know when to agree and when to disagree.

To be unconditionally loving does not mean letting anything and everything occur, whether it’s intelligent or principled or not. Being unconditional does not mean allowing yourself to be steam-rolled by a situation, and somehow managing to love it.

Quite often, the practice of unconditional love amounts to joining with another in his or her illusion and substantiating it—strengthening it. Now that is unprincipled; and, therefore, it cannot truly be love, because love says “no” to that which is unprincipled. Love says, “No, I will not join with you in this regard. And you will have to simply live with that fact, that I cannot join you in this illusion. And if you care to carry on this illusion, you’re going to have to do it outside of my presence; because if you are going to be in my presence, I will be in active disagreement with you.”

Oh boy, the ego will pop in and say, “That’s ego! Your unwillingness to embrace me is not love. How can you call yourself loving? How can you claim to be practicing unconditional love?” Don’t answer that question. Just say, “Nevertheless, I cannot join with you, I cannot agree with you.” And if there is an insistence upon not changing—leave.

Now, that sounds like abandonment. But if the only means by which you can remain is to join in that which is unprincipled, you cannot afford to stay, else you are abandoning them truly by reinforcing that which is inappropriate and not reflective of Truth. But you see, in all of this you do not have to indulge in judgment or self-righteousness which conflicts you.

Now, when you insist upon being the Christ—who does not let a withered arm remain a withered arm—you are not always going to be in harmony with everyone if the others are insisting upon not being the expression of God, consciously. And so, when you walk away, as an affirmation of your not joining with the illusion, but your insistence upon joining with their divinity, which expresses intelligence, you will not feel guilty. And you will turn the situation over to the Holy Spirit, and you will not play into the belief that you must be the savior. You get the picture?

QUESTION: I knew that, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Why should you do all the work? Why shouldn’t they have to? Take the necessary steps to engage in a new point of view.

It is very easy to get caught up in the game of “change me,” even though behind the statement “change me” is—“if you can.”

QUESTION: I have a short question. I would like to know what are orgasms?

ANSWER: Enjoyable! I will say pay attention the next time you have one. Learn to abide with, learn to be with your experiences without assuming that you must have an intellectual comprehension of what they are. And in this way, their fuller meaning can unfold to you.

QUESTION: How do I create order in my room when there appears to be apparent chaos around me, in it?

ANSWER: First of all, stop resenting the chaos around you. And then you will find that the energy is present to enjoy the little piece of orderliness that is available to you in your room, as you put it. Also, when it comes to your territory, do not hesitate to claim it and establish order, establish the harmony that you would like to experience. Do not succumb to influences around you that would say you do not have a right to your orderliness. You must put your foot down. Just because everyone else is running around like a chicken with its head cut off, does not mean that you have to do likewise.

QUESTION: I have many interests in my life and many choices that I can make right now regarding my job, regarding my heart’s desires. And I have been making decisions like this for the past few years. And every time, I discovered this is not really a thing that I want—I thought I wanted it, but I don’t. And what I’m trying to decide right now, because I am at a crossroads in my life, is what I’m really supposed to be doing—what God wants me to do.

I feel in my heart that I should be writing. But it’s one of those things where I’m neglecting to start, because I’m afraid it’s another one of these things where I’m making a decision on something that I’m going to find later on down the road, that I really didn’t want to begin with.

And I’m hesitant, maybe fearful to take another bold step, like quit a job, to go into something new. I just want guidance because there is that potential for distractions. And I’m tired of distractions, I don’t want distractions anymore, or that fear.

ANSWER: Heaven help you if you succeed in not having distractions. It will be called being dead. There is a saying: “You cannot steer a car that is parked at the curb.”

Let there be movement. Explore. As long as there is movement, you can modify the direction in which you are going. Do not let yourself be cornered by fear, or fear of failure, or fear of not hitting the mark as completely as you want. Let there be movement.

Now, once you have said “okay” and you realize that the fact that you might be moving in a direction that is not quite on target, once you realize that moving in a direction that is not quite on target is not a failure but simply an opportunity to modify your direction, then you will not associate guilt with movement. And you will begin to be able to enjoy the movement.

Were you unconscious during all of these, what you might have called, false starts? Do you not have experience, let us say, under your belt? Are you not the richer for it? And how sure are you that these false starts, or movements that didn't quite hit the mark, haven't begun to take their place in the preparation for what will really feel to you as though you are hitting the mark? Are you so sure that there have been mistakes?

Now, I understand that the idea of having made mistakes is not the strong point. The strong point for you is the reluctance to move, and move in the wrong direction, or a direction that is not right on target. And that is why I am addressing the fact that movement is the key, and allow it and thank God that there are distractions.

I'm going to come back to what you're saying. I want to point out to everyone that all of you in growing up have thought that you would come to a day when there would be no distractions—you would know what you needed to know, you would have life under your belt. And you know what? What you have been wanting is not to have to be conscious. You have wanted to arrive at a point where you could just relax and "enjoy life," because you had become a successful business man and father, and a wife and mother, etc. All of you have been working to arrive at a point where you didn't have to learn anymore. "Thank God we're out of school, now we can live."

So, distractions are the Movement of Creation getting you out of your rut. As you move away from the curb and no longer hold yourself immobile—listen while you are moving; pay attention, pay attention to what you love. And don't think that if you pay attention to what you love and find it, that it will be ultimate. Because until you are totally Awake you will find what you love deepening and clarifying. And you will find your capacity to love becoming more infinite.

Start with what you love. Don't be afraid to move. And check in along the way—pay attention along the way—so that as your horizons expand because you are expressing less fear, you are able to embrace more of your infinity while still listening, so that you don't feel overwhelmed by the opportunities. And by staying in touch with what you love, it will keep you on target. The point is: Stop thinking that there is a target which once you hit it you can forget about and never have to think about another target.

Stop being afraid. And stop associating guilt with movement, as though it were a test every time you moved that you were going to be graded on. Let go!

If you were going to start out for New York today and unknowingly you were on the wrong road and you saw a freeway sign that says, Washington, DC You would say, "Whoops!" And you would get off at the next intersection and turn around and head home. Now you could engage in thinking and reprimand yourself and feel guilty, or you could thank your lucky stars that you have simple common sense and intelligence—the ability to recognize your car was not pointed in the direction you were going and that you turned it around, and headed on your way without anything other than looking forward to being at home.

QUESTION: In A Course In Miracles there are two statements that I'd like to ask you about. One says, this is the Second Coming. And the other ends a sentence by saying that we may regain Eternity. I'd like to know from you what that means a little more, and I think I know for myself.

ANSWER: Well, we are certainly not talking about orgasm here.

The Second Coming is your Awakening. It is your own resurrection and ascension without crucifixion, physically. I'm not going to go through it again. I don't need to and couldn't and it would not serve purpose. The Second Coming is each of you embracing your Christhood, your Sonship and Daughtership; claiming it; making commitment to it and experiencing it.

Now, you claim it—not for others. And you commit to it—not for others, because you no longer want to practice being insane. You no longer want to experience conflict that is not your Birthright. You commit to it because you are exhausted and tired of being a Prodigal Son or Daughter; because you are tired of dallying with the ego while your divinity is held in trust; because you are tired of claiming to be a person in your own right, learning how to be a successful illusion.

The ego always has everything reversed. And so, the sense of regaining Eternity could be likened to an image in the vast universe of a huge, shallow, beautifully decorated Chinese bowl with liquid in it. And this bowl and the liquid in it represent Eternity (this is just imagery) and all of you have been struggling up over the edge of this bowl for eons. And regaining Eternity is you getting over the lip of the bowl and being able to just slide down into the water, into Eternity, as though you gained it yourself. That is, as I said, a hundred and eighty degrees out.

Regaining Eternity occurs when you let it in. If you are experiencing time, you are experiencing Eternity. I am not saying time is Eternity. If you are experiencing being conscious at this moment, you are experiencing Eternity—you are in it. And what you are calling time is a distorted experience of Eternity. It is not an experience of time, it is a distorted experience of Eternity.

So, you regain Eternity by letting go of the false sense or misinterpretation of it. You regain it by not inserting between you and it the belief that you are in time, and that you are a finite, separated entity. Whenever any of you becomes still within, you have a clearer experience of Eternity, because you are energizing time less. You are also having a clearer experience of yourself infinitely, which is why you feel greater stability. It is when you perceive yourself to be tiny as a body that you feel unstable. It is when you are experiencing your infinity as Mind that you feel your stability.

As I said yesterday, there are fewer asleep than those who are Awake. And as a result, the dream, the illusion, is not being as heavily reinforced because fewer are joining on behalf of illusion. And so, dreaming is breaking up—losing its so-called integrity that keeps it going.

And so, indeed, you live in a time of Awakening, whether you choose it or not. Those of you who love the dream are losing the companions it takes to keep the dream going, because everyone is waking up. And this is, therefore, not an Awakening that is being forced upon you through an act of will, it is being forced upon you because you are finding fewer and fewer to join with to reinforce it. And your acts of will on behalf of ignorance, are having less impact.

It takes great effort to maintain an illusion, especially in the face of an infinite God. But, you do have free will. And as long as you can find someone else to join with you in an act of free will, at odds with Reality, you can create for yourself an illusory experience. But it is just a form of insanity, and does not constitute the actual creation of a real illusion.

And so, everyone is on the verge of regaining infinity because you are less and less able to keep the experience of it out, because there are fewer to join with you in the reinforcement of your dream. And this is good news!

QUESTION: I'm going over several questions that I'd like to ask you while I've been sitting here for the last day and a half.

ANSWER: I would like for you to ask the one that is most important to you at the moment.

QUESTION: I think the most important one is to let you give me some advise, or some steps to take in my spiritual growth.

ANSWER: Weren't you listening yesterday and this morning?

QUESTION: Sure I was.

ANSWER: Listen, listen, listen. I do not mean listen to me here during this weekend. I mean more than anything else, be willing to listen. Do you realize what that means? It means that you are willing to assume that your own best thinking is not so gosh darn important. It means that you are willing to assume that if you stop thinking a little and begin listening more, that you might indeed experience a benefit.

At the bottom line what it means is that you are not validating the ego. It is very important to understand that the one thing that the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. Fight it, attack it, and it will be strong because it is only a defense mechanism. Disregard it and you render it powerless. And you render it powerless by listening to God, by listening for me, by listening for your guide, by listening for the Holy Spirit, by listening for anyone who is Awake.

And so I would say: listen, listen, listen so that you might begin to experience the joy of listening and hearing, and the joy of the transformations that occur as a result of major shifts of perception. And remember to have fun with it.

QUESTION: One day, early fall of last year, I experienced a white rose appearing to me under one of my family room pillows that is a throw pillow. Which every day of my life I go down and I rearrange it when it's in that position. Which the reason for it getting in that position is when my son would come home to sleep, even though he was living on campus.

And I would like to know what does that mean? When there was no rational explanation when I approached my family regarding this white rose, which had no thorns, no leaves. It was real and it was about nine inches long and it was not crushed. But I was frightened by it and I threw it in the garbage.

ANSWER: It was a gift from my mother. And that is all I am going to say, because I don't want you to think about it, I just want you to feel it.

I will add for the benefit of everyone, that I use those words "my mother" for your sake, so that you might know that it was Mary. But you must understand that both Mary and I are One in the sense that I spoke of the unity yesterday, because we are both Awake and do not labor under the idea of birth any longer.

I did not pick on you accidentally. It is important for all of you to know that we are all with you. And I need to extend that a little further. Not only are those of us who you currently find meaningful to you with you, but those who you never heard of and whose meaningfulness to you will not become apparent to you until you have the experience of them.

Indeed, Mary is very busy on your behalf, as I am; not as personalities, but as the Presence of the Christ intent upon illuminating your Christhood. Because ultimately the point is for you to join us in full comprehension and embrace of who you Are.

It is not appropriate for you to be groveling at our feet and feeling embarrassed at even approaching us, because you and I are absolutely identical. And you are all like children who have been told, "You can't do that. You can't do that. You can't do anything right. You'll never be able to amount to anything. You don't have a mathematical mind, so don't even try to take math, study music." And you believe it. You believe it is your nature. You believe it is an essential truth about yourselves. And it isn't an essential truth about you.

It is easy to hear words like you are the Child of God, and it is a far better thing to hear those words, even if they don't sink in deeply, than it is to hear that you are nothing but an organism that sprang from nowhere and will return to nowhere. But it is essential for all of you to begin to understand that when it is said that you are a Child of God, you really are the direct expression of God—nothing less and nothing more. And that this fact is a profound fact.

I will say that it is a powerful fact, the power of which you will begin to experience as soon as you are able to look at yourself and say that your current definition of yourself is invalid. And that what you have been told are lies. And then don't get hung up on the nature and character of the liar, and how much abuse that has constituted for you—recognize the lie and let go of it by claiming the Truth. And you claim the Truth by becoming humble enough to say: “Fill me, illuminate me with the clear experience of who I am.”

You are not the unworthies needing to become worthy, you are the worthies who need to let go of the idiotic notion that you are unworthy.

QUESTION: A very short time ago my father passed on and he passed on at home.

ANSWER: In other words, you lost sight of him.

QUESTION: Yes, we lost sight of him. And actually what I wanted to ask you is, did we truly lose sight of him on a street in Italy? My mother was sort of leading him on a creative visualization trip, and one minute he was with us, and the next minute it felt like he was on a street in Italy.

He was dying of cancer and this was his last moment. And his family had come from this certain village in Italy. And my mother was telling him to go to his mother's house and that she was waiting for him. And one minute he was with us and the next minute he wasn't.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: And I don't know if it's childish or ignorant of me to believe that several loved one's were waiting for him.

ANSWER: Oh, that is a very clear correct perception, which is what caused the feeling of his being “back home” in Italy. He was with his family.

You must understand that when one goes through this moment of what has come to be called transition or passing on, there is indeed this experience that has been described—of moving through a tunnel of light. What is not always conveyed is that there is no confined sense to this tunnel. It is more a matter of not feeling thrown out into infinity for the one who is experiencing this shift of perception.

And when one has the experience of arriving at a point of destination, it is not usually immediately with friends and family, but is what you might call a receiving station—a place where one has the opportunity to get his or her bearings. It is a moment, you might say, in which one has the option not to answer to anyone about anything, where one can have as much of an experience of time as he or she wants to collect himself or herself. And then when that individual chooses, he or she meets with those who are waiting with great welcome.

Your father wasted no time whatsoever, and immediately received family and friends. And that is why you had this almost immediate sense of, shall I say, Italianhood. But it had nothing to do with any geographic location in Italy.

What I mean to convey to you is that, there was no particular sense of trauma associated with his passing. And so, he did not need to take time to collect himself. On occasion, people will wait as much as what you would call a year, just experiencing the absence of pain, and soaking it up before going on to meet with family and friends. This was not the case.

I also want you to understand that, this place that I am calling a receiving station, has as its function, the immediate extension of support and love. The experience of moving through the tunnel of light is one of great support and love. But there is Movement occurring, there is a great deal of (as you might imagine) curiosity present. And it is when one arrives at the “destination” that there is an active need for support and love—nurturing—for those who’s reason for being there might have been traumatic.

Now, you may have felt that there was suffering associated with the death, but for him it was not.

QUESTION: Sometimes when I walk in the streets I see dogs or pigeons, and if I have food on me I share it with them and I feel happy about it. But I understand there are people who object to giving food to animals in the streets, because it’s the wrong food, and it may harm the animals. But I take the point of view of the Buddhist principle: I share with my little brothers and sisters what I have, it’s what I do. Would you comment on that?

ANSWER: You are absolutely on target. You must realize that the environment of your cities is quite unnatural. And you would not give a second thought to feeding animals in a more natural setting. And in a more natural setting you would likely have more natural foods for them. But I will tell you something: In a city environment where their natural habitat has been radically altered and they have had to adapt to it, and natural sources of food are not available, you are a blessing to them.

I am not going to, at this time, say anything further about the inconsiderate harshness of your city environments. But do know that there is thought that needs to be given to it, and listening that needs to be done about it, because you can accomplish the same ends that you accomplish in your cities in environmental settings that honor nature and honor your humanity and honor the other life forms. And that is all I will say at this moment.

QUESTION: I’ve been reading a lot lately about changes that are supposed to be happening now, or in the near future on the earth. And I’m curious as to number one: Whether these changes are going to take place? Number two: If they are, what are we in store for? And number three: How can we prepare ourselves for them?

ANSWER: The changes you are referring to are calamitous changes. I am here to tell you that the changes that will occur will be healing changes. And healing processes are not in themselves traumatic. Stop looking for changes in the world. I will tell you, almost everyone would give their right arm to have some sort of dramatic evidence of change to tell you that “the end is near”—some substantial evidence of the fact that life is not going to interminably plod along as it has been. And so, you are even willing to look forward to a negative evidence.

Now, the problem is not in your world, but in your perception of your world. The change is going to occur within you. And what I have been sharing with you this weekend is that, the change is already occurring in you. It's occurring in everyone, even though not everyone is talking to each other about it. And so there isn't the kind of confirmation available that would be well for everyone to have. But nevertheless, the mutual joining in agreement about illusion is breaking up. And, therefore, worldwide there is shifting of perception that is occurring, and you are already seeing evidences of it, even though there are certain awkwardness about the evidences.

Now, I encourage you all to begin to look for what I have referred to at other times as outbreaks of intelligence, instead of outbreaks of calamities. And be sure and look for these outbreaks of intelligence within yourself as well; because as you do, you will lend your Presence to the shifting that will become manifest in the world by virtue of your withdrawing from the partnership in illusion—the partnership in ignorance.

No, you do not need to look forward to or fear the calamities you have heard about. The Awakening process, if I may call it that, the arousing of all those sleeping on the lawn in the Kingdom of Heaven having their dreams, is occurring. And it is occurring sooner than anticipated. It was not predictable, but without getting complicated, I will repeat that it is happening sooner than expected. It is happening more smoothly than was anticipated. And there is going to be greater harmony, because the fact is that there is not as much active resistance to it.

And so, do not harbor within you fear or expectation of calamities as evidences of Awakening. And be participants in the gracefulness of Awakening.

QUESTION: My question deals with the Awakening process. As I understand it, we in effect don't have free will, and haven't in the sense that there's only one will, and we are the extension of God's Will. If that is the case, why does there have to be a process of Awakening? Why doesn't God just Will us to Awaken?

ANSWER: I mentioned yesterday: "That a mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still." No matter whether God is doing the coercing or not.

Now, the other thing is that, if you do not walk back into the Kingdom of Heaven, if you do not walk back into the undistorted conscious experience of Being voluntarily, you will feel unworthy of being there. You will not feel any confidence in your being able to remain there, because it wasn't you who said "yes." Nobody kicked you out! And you are the one who will have to change his mind, and simply walk back in.

Now, you see language can be confusing, because I say you must walk back in, and yet the fact is that you never left. And you are having your dream of not being in the Kingdom of Heaven right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and so why should the Father say “come back.” This whole experience is a pipe dream, going on right in the Kingdom of Heaven. It isn’t punishable, because it is not a disobedience.

How many of you have seen these kaleidoscopes that, instead of having pieces of glass in it, allow a portion of what is in front of you in the world to be reflected, so that you look and see incredible designs formed of your world. If you wish to view your world in that incredible way, you are welcome to do so. And if you wish to have two of them, in front of each eye, and find a way to begin to understand what you are seeing, and function with that perspective, it’s fine. And no one will tell you that you have to look at it differently.

But if you want to see and experience Reality really, then you must decide that you no longer want to explore all the possibilities of this extremely complex way of perceiving the simplicity of the Kingdom of Heaven.

QUESTION: Would you comment on what the experiences of a person who decides to take their own life and dies, as we call it death, through suicide?

ANSWER: First of all, you will have to explain to me in what way somebody passing on in their sleep, comfortably on their bed, is not a suicide. You see, at the bottom line, every death is a suicide. It does not matter whether one points a gun at his head and blows out his brains, or one serenely closes his eyes, and in all calmness and naturalness, passes on.

The passing on is indeed, a point of giving up—giving up the struggle, you might say. Having arrived at the point where the perception of life, the definition of life, seems to be not worth enduring any longer.

What this means is, that one who actively participates in a forceful manner in passing over that line, is not subject to penalty. With that one, the death is as much an act of ignorance as the one who quietly falls asleep and passes on, in his own bed. And the only difference is that, generally speaking, one who commits suicide ends up spending more time in the receiving station—that I mentioned earlier—sorting out why it is that he still exists and feels no guilt. It is a difficult thing to comprehend. But that one is not kept there. It simply tends to take longer for that one to sort things out and feel the freedom to go forward, and meet those who are awaiting him without any judgment.

The experience of an illusion is no more real or less real under one or another circumstance. And that is important to understand, else you will decide that right now, while you are “still living,” that there are certain things as opposed to other things which are worthy of guilt. And you will sort it out here, until you arrive at a point of releasing the guilt and embracing your divinity.

QUESTION: Very often, the people in the lives of the person who has taken their life in that way are the ones who feel the guilt. Feeling that they could have done more, or perhaps prevented it.

ANSWER: I will tell you this: They have gotten sucked into a ploy of the ego, because invariably the one who does commit suicide is saying, “so, there!” And it is done for others. Even if that one believes himself that he is doing it for his reasons, he is doing it to get even. That is his trip!

I will tell you something: Life itself, from within the three-dimensional frame of reference is, generally speaking, a process of everyone getting even with everyone else. But it is done often great style and diplomacy, and it is called public relations, it is called education, and it is the way everybody gets everybody else to behave “appropriately,” instead of originally.

I will tell you: In very practical terms in your daily life, the details of Awakening come in the form of releasing yourself from the guilt that everyone else is laying on you for the purpose of getting you to behave appropriately.

There is a point where you have to be fed up to here with attempting to atone for a guilt that is superimposed on you, so that you don’t make waves or upset someone else. There is a point where you have to realize that in your spontaneous originality of Being, you are sinless, and that the judgment of “guilty” that is laid upon you, reflects nothing other than the ignorance of the one laying that upon you; and you do not have to honor it within yourself, or have any feelings of guilt.

The practicality of it is that, the one who says “guilty,” the one who accuses, needs you to be guilty so that he is not alone in his own guilt, that he believes he is. And it is love for you not to join in agreement with that one by feeling guilty. Because if he sees that you’re not following the protocol and acting and feeling guilty, maybe he doesn’t have to either.

At the bottom line, all of you want to talk to someone who isn’t guilty, so that you can be inspired to feel your guiltlessness as well. You want someone to join with who is not guilty, who is just like you.

So honor your fellow man by not playing into the game of guilt when the finger is pointed. And enjoy your freedom, and become what I have called an agent for change, a transforming presence for the one who felt he needed you to be guilty, so that he wouldn’t be alone in his. His guilt is no more justified or valid than the guilt he would have you believe is yours.

The family is going to have to shake off the projection and say, “No, I refuse to play that game. I never was responsible for your life.”

Jewish mothers are, unfortunately, picked upon to epitomize something that everyone does, but no one wants to claim. The Jewish mother says, “You’ll be the death of me yet,” as a means of promoting appropriate behavior. But everyone says, “You will make me uncomfortable if you do that. You will make my life miserable if you don’t change.”

Everyone, in one way or another, uses this ploy. The result is that everyone thinks that they are responsible for everyone else's happiness. And that is a responsibility no one can bear. It is not humanly possible. And I am speaking down-to-earth, three-dimensionally, ignorantly speaking—no one is capable of bearing that burden.

The thing is that as long as everyone is pointing at everyone else saying, “you are responsible for my happiness,” you are not feeling your own integrity. You are feeling that your joy and your happiness are dependent upon something that is out of your control—the other person—when you alone are responsible for it.

Happiness is a choice, and misery is a choice. And if everyone will just get simple and acknowledge that fact, the game of manipulation and control and coercion through guilt, will stop.

Your sovereignty comes in your understanding that all you have to do is to choose for your happiness, and choose for your peace, because you do energize your misery. You say, “I cannot have my peace until this loved one is at peace himself.” You're the one saying that! You are the one giving the word! But you're not paying attention to what you're saying; you're paying attention to the attempt to blame—your attention is out there.

And then somebody says, “Well, you can be happy, all you have to do is choose differently.” “Well, if I choose differently, then I'm not loving him.” And you're still saying, “I choose to be miserable because he's miserable until he changes. And I am going to devote myself to changing him so that he will be happy.” And so, there are two of you who are miserable and stuck.

I will say—own your power. In other words, own the power of your word, and recognize the words that you are giving to your life. Realize that you have the option to choose for joy and peace. And then do it! And watch how that will be the leaven that leavens the whole lump.

As Paul noticed, when he sat down and simply closed his eyes to become still for his own reason, everyone else became still. And he didn't have to expend any energy to get anyone's attention.

There is sort of a psychological fad that everyone is glomming onto these days, a catch word called co-dependency. And it seems to be applied to particular groups of people: alcoholics, those who have been in abusive families, etc. Well, as long as you're an ego, you are co-dependent. And don't sit in your comfortable houses, not having been from an abused family and not being an alcoholic, and feel that the word co-dependency doesn't apply to you.

When I say these things, it is without judgment. It is not an accusation. It is an encouragement for you to not be afraid to take a clear, practical, simple, down-to-earth, intelligent look at what you are doing, so that you can realize that some of what you are doing is idiotic. In other words, it doesn't work.

In being able to look at it without adding an emotional charge to it of guilt and penalty and penance, you can change, because you have practiced discernment—you have been able to see the difference between what is True and what is not, between what works and what does not; which is not judgment. Because judgment brings in the added element of self-righteousness if you are right or if you are recognizing what is right; and guilt, if what you are recognizing is wrong. Both of which are charged experiences—conflicted experiences—that distract you from your peace and your ability to make your choice for joy and love.

If you, as whatever you perceive yourself to be at the moment, and I, as the Christ, can sit here together and talk simply and openly and matter-of-factly, without any charge to it about what is working and what isn't working with you, you can dare to do it also. And recognize that what you are doing could be defined as True religion, True spiritual work, that has not one thing to do with overcoming their awe, prioritized state of being a sinner.

You must start looking at the solutions to your problems, or what you define to be problems, as innocent Christ's upon whom has been projected a false, distorted picture that represents no truth whatsoever. Then you will feel the right to wake up, and you will stop looking for those who will join you in your dream. And your Awakening will be that which contributes to everyone else's waking up also, whether you ever say a word to them or not.

QUESTION: I know quite a number of people who have given up on The Course In Miracles, because they say that it does not deal with feelings—that it's just a head trip. And that it tells you in a very unrealistic way, just to change your feelings.

Now, my personal belief is that the most useful thing to do with feelings is to use them to allow them to show you where your misperceptions are. And to then allow the misperceptions to be healed by understanding what the truth is, and asking for help from the Holy Spirit.

But I have not found anywhere in The Course In Miracles that I can point to and say to these people, "No, Jesus did not tell you to just ignore your feelings, and change them." And understanding you as I do, I find it hard to understand. Can you correct this misperception, or is it indeed a misperception?

ANSWER: The Course does not support being out of touch with your feelings. The problem is that everyone is thinking too much about what they are reading, as though it is something that must be absorbed intellectually. It is as though it is new data that is supposed to replace old data. And so, everyone busies themselves with memorizing and holding onto the words, instead of reading the words and letting the words—as they interact with your beliefs—bring about a movement in you that is an experience.

The Course—if one does not try to understand it and diagram it to see how it all fits logically together—the one who reads it and simply abides with it, will find his perceptions changing by virtue of the simple connection with the words. Everyone is so busy revamping their mental library, that no one is paying attention to what is happening to them.

When you practice the first lesson and you look at everything and you say, “nothing that I see means anything,” if you will not think about it but just abide with that apparently absurd statement, it will create what I called a revolution or movement within you, constituted of a desire to experience meaning. And because you haven’t engaged your intellect in the process, the emerging meaning will come from a place other than your intellect; the emerging clarification of what a thing divinely, really is, will register with you. That’s an experience!

Now, meanings are not constituted of definitions, but feelings. When something means something, it feels like something. You cannot get a feeling of meaning from an intellectual definition unless you are indulging in an ego emotion of pride and self-satisfaction from your intellectual prowess. And emotions are not feelings. Emotions are reactions to the Kingdom of Heaven when it (your world) is not conforming to the definition your ego gave it. Important point!

Emotions are ego reactions to the Kingdom of Heaven when it—being perceived as the world—doesn’t behave in accordance with the definition your ego gave it. That means that an ego reaction is a potential point of breakthrough, because there is an inconsistency between Reality and your ego’s definition of It—there is a crack that has occurred. And so whenever you are feeling emotions, you have the opportunity for breakthrough. That is another issue, but I wanted to share that.

Feelings are Soul. And God saw everything that He had made and behold it was very uhm-m-m. Is that what it says, neutral, so-so, okay? No! Behold it was very good! There was a response, a response of Self-recognition. God saw everything that He had made, and behold it was verily Himself. Self-recognition is the movement and definition of Being, but it isn’t a definition, it’s an experience.

And you can go home and you can take that sentence and you can share that idea with everyone, but it doesn’t mean anything as words. And in fact, everyone’s process of Awakening is a matter of getting out of the words and getting into the experience of recognizing yourself in everything you see—not yourself as a piss ant little mortal, but yourself as the Presence of the Mind of God that is the constituting Presence of You. God feels! God is Soul—your capacity to infinitely and fully feel the meaning of God’s Self-expression.

Everyone becomes jaded by their experience if they don’t reach outside of their experience. And so, one who works for a collection agency, or for a collection department in a department store, who works only with the two percent of the accounts, because those two percent are bad, begins—after doing this work day after day, and year after year—begins to see everyone as a flake, or a potential flake, certainly not trustworthy. And it is very hard to feel good about his fellow man.

Likewise—because habit works in all areas—your sense of education is one of learning and acquiring data, knowledge. It's a head trip. And so, when a book like A Course In Miracles comes along that is an expression of Soul—that connects with your Soul—you tend to read it from your prior mindset of education and storing knowledge, and indeed the ideas are tantalizing to the intellect and stimulating and create new questions. But if you don't realize that it's aimed at your heart rather than your head, you will miss the miracle of it.

Now, I will tell you: The Course is designed so that in spite of your bad habits, you cannot read it, you cannot go through the lessons without being changed. But if you realize that the Course is not directed at your head but your heart, you will experience the change more rapidly. And when you realize that it is not directed at your intellect, but is to trigger and promote more profound experiential feeling of the divinity of you and life, you will experience a joy and a transformation that will not allow you to keep your mouth shut, and your life will reflect the justification for the joy.

I have said it before, it is important enough to say again: You will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way into it.

ANSWER: You must be ever alert. The ego is canny, unfair, malicious, self-seeking and will get its nose in anywhere it can, to save its "life" at your expense. In my prior answer I indicated that no one can make anyone else happy—no one can take on the responsibility for another's happiness. And this is a wonderful opportunity for the ego to step in and say, "Great, now I can do anything I damn well please and nobody else can blame me."

I'm going to tell you something that might surprise you: Don't give up the practice of ignorant coercion if you don't have something better to replace it with. Don't give up what you are familiar with if you don't have something better to replace it with. Don't give up willful coercion for willful independence. Or shall I put it this way: Don't give up relating to others willfully, for not relating with others willfully. That is still the same thing in reverse. It is still an expression of free will at odds with the Father, because it doesn't take into account the Father's Will.

It could sound to the ego as though I have said, you can do anything you want and it's up to the other person not to be hurt, it's up to the other person not to be unhappy. And there's no more love in that, than there was to be in a relationship in a coercive manner for the purpose of maintaining a conceptual orderliness, where nobody makes waves for anybody.

Freedom is inseparable from order, and the expression of free will has no place in it. And I'm going to be very careful here, and you need to be very careful to understand what I am saying: Free will—as you understand the term—truly means, the expression of will that has not taken into consideration the Father’s Will; it is an expression of will that has occurred without checking in to see what is divinely appropriate.

And so, a husband cannot say, “I am not responsible for my children’s happiness or my wife’s happiness, therefore, I can work until ten o’clock, or midnight, or two a.m. in the morning every night and never see them, and maybe manage to spend a couple of hours on Saturday. And because I’m not responsible for their happiness, I don’t have to feel guilty when they complain. They should be able to be happy no matter what I’m doing.” Well, I’ll tell you what: Anyone who might take that attitude of freedom is going to have to be willing to listen to the expressions of freedom that the wife and children express in their complaints.

Do not exchange one form of self-will for another—stick with the one you’re familiar with. Because, indeed, you are using it because it does provide a certain amount of stability to your life, when you don’t have a larger measuring stick available to you.

If you are going to get out of the game of manipulation and control, in a manner that will allow for the blossoming of everyone involved, you are going to have to be willing to set aside your best sense of what is right and listen more deeply for guidance—listen for what is truly appropriate. And then act from there. And then see what happens. And if what happens surprises you and throws you off guard—listen further. Because it simply means that you are now engaged in a noncoercive process with another that requires continued listening, that requires being conscious more constantly.

In this way the relationship becomes alive. And the wife is not the dutiful, silent partner. And the husband is not the one in charge. And the wife is not the dominant authority with a husband who is obedient.

So, no, to realize that you are not responsible for another’s happiness or unhappiness, does not mean that you can act without disregard for what I referred to earlier as the fabric of Being—and whether at a particular point the orange thread needs to be seen or not seen, because it is part of the divine pattern. And even if orange is your favorite color, there are times when orange clashes and is not supposed to be seen.

You are never free to do whatever you want; the only thing you are free to do is to want to know what is appropriate. And that is what is the most difficult thing for the ego, because if you are having to listen for what is appropriate, you’re not in a position of expressing any authority. And authority is the fix that the ego hooks you with. And you get a little bit of a feeling of authority, and you need more, and it is glad to provide it to you.

So, part of the process of getting out of the game of manipulation is listening for what is appropriate beyond what you would call your personal wants. And you will find that when you listen, your real heart's desires are fulfilled, because there is congruency to that which is absolutely unified. And that which seemed to hold your fulfillment apart from you is no longer present, and so your fulfillment is what is present with you. This is a place where it is important for you to say, "nothing that I think means anything," so as to bring forth a Knowing that goes right down to the depths of your Being.

Be aware that when you realize that you don't have to be subject to another, it does not mean you will not relate to them. It does not mean that there will be truly independent action. It does mean, that you open yourself up to the dance, if you will, where the two of you blend perfectly together, but where in order for that dance to continue to blend, you must continue to be attentive every moment.

And so, the unity is expressed in what you would call an on-going cooperation. The word cooperation is not the best because it implies two things cooperating with each other. But in terms of the image of a dance together, indeed the word cooperation is fine. What it really is is the harmony of the movement of the dance.

One of the reasons all of you engage in coercing each other into behaviors that don't make waves, is that you fear that waves will be just disruptive, rather than manifesting or embodying a flow and a movement that is beautiful and orderly if you will yield to it.

So, I will end this little discussion by reminding you not to give up one form of self-will for another form of self-will. Don't give up the form of self-will you are engaged in until you are giving it up for something better. And the only thing better than self-will, is listening for the Father's Will, which is the Will for you to experience your fulfillment. And then flow with it, even though it means you are unable to experience any sense of authority in the process.

There is no way what I have said can truly be construed as giving everyone carte blanche to do anything they want, and saying that everyone else should not be disturb. If you listen and you move in harmony with the flow of your Being, those around you will not be disturbed. Because in the absence of willfulness on your part, no one else feels vulnerable.

QUESTION: I have a question of curiosity. Since I can remember, I don't rest. I wake up the next morning feeling as though I'd only slept half the night. I've gone to a lot of doctors. And they've all taken their share of blood, probably enough to keep a family of vampires together for awhile. But nobody seems to have any answers. So I'm curious if there might be a little light elsewhere on this?

ANSWER: It is an old memory, quite unconscious at the present time. And although I do not claim that reincarnation is a valid concept, nevertheless, within the three-dimensional frame of reference it has been your experience to have had more than one incarnation. When you wake up, all of you will find that you have been in the Kingdom of Heaven all along, and the various segments of your dream perception never really happened. But, nevertheless, it seems to have been your experience.

And in the lifetime (two lifetimes back from this one) you were awakened in the night with your house on fire. You were a child and you were on the second floor and you were not able to escape. And you seemed in that lifetime to die in the fire.

Now, what I am saying does not mean that you need to go to a hypnotist and be regressed to that lifetime. I am simply explaining to you, for your edification, that the cause for this experience is not from this lifetime.

Now, I will suggest to you that you practice meditating, and do it on a regular basis. And then when you wake up in the middle of the night, take that as an indicator that it is time to do another meditation. You will find that you will go back to sleep and rest during the second sleeping period of your night. And with the knowledge that I have just given you, a release will occur and the problem will be over. I encourage you to practice Transcendental Meditation.

QUESTION: Not very long ago I went to hear the Philharmonic. They were visiting from Warsaw, Poland, my home town. And as I entered the concert hall with my husband, I felt I was going to have some special experience, and anticipation overwhelmed me. And as I progressed, I noticed that the music was making me feel some special experiences. I could hear lyrics. At one point I asked my guidance if this lyric that I was hearing was from God? The end of the last movement of the last piece, I heard the words that came synchronized beautifully to the actual measure, “The hearts of men belong to me.”

I have a very strong connection between music. I’ve been singing since I was fifteen, however, I never pursued it as a profession. Would you be able to tell me what connection there is, or enlighten me as to if there is a connection that I should pursue with my singing?

ANSWER: First of all the experience you had can best be described as illumination. It is a penetration of your normal, everyday consciousness of things, which for lack of better words, exalts your perception and indeed you are able to experience more of the divine character of whatever you are at that time experiencing.

Now, it does not happen that there was a link between music and your having the experience. On that particular evening if you had been at home at that time, the experience would have occurred there; and the illuminated sense of divinity of things would have been relative to your home. You would have seen and experienced the exquisite beauty of the simplest, everyday things in your home, including the walls.

Now, what is marvelous about this is not where you were, but that it happened. And I promise you one thing: by virtue of it having happened, it will happen again more easily. But I do not want you to hold your breath. I do not want you to hold your breath, because when it happened this time it was unanticipated. And so, I want you not to be anticipating it so that it may happen again.

As I have said this weekend, all of you are in the Kingdom of Heaven at this very moment, not afar off somewhere really, with an illusory experience of being here, but right here and right now in what apparently is the state of Pennsylvania, and a hotel. You are in the middle of the Presence of God, and everything around you is expressing the Intent of the Father. And the fuller meaning of it is—I'm going to say—bombarding you at this very moment, all of you. Reality is what is confronting you at this very moment.

And that evening you were defenseless enough to experience more of the Reality that was going on and called a symphony playing. But again, because you are in the same place when you are at home, if you had been there at that time, all of the divine Meaning that you experienced would have been conveyed by your surroundings. And this experience awaits all of you at every moment. And it happens in moments of defenselessness.

In your Bible—and I'm speaking with all of you—in the parable of the Bridegroom, there are some very specifically chosen words, "The Bridegroom cometh when ye think not." And that is taken to mean, that the Bridegroom cometh when you least expect it. It's more literal than that—the Bridegroom cometh when ye are not thinking. The penetration of the divine into the human experience occurs when you are defenseless. And I'm going to say it again—thinking is a defense.

You may not agree at the moment, but abide with that, and contemplate in what way that might be possible, and you will experience great illumination.

QUESTION: I have a question about... since we all are living in the Kingdom of God, right? I have a question about the other animals, like the monkey, the ape and the cat and the dog and what not. How do they fit into the Sonship according to the Course? And as far as the reincarnation thing that I believe in or choose to believe in, have they chosen to be a monkey, or ape, or cat, or dog? And like we chose this state that we're in, and visa versa, can we somehow choose to be a monkey again, or did that happen? In other words, what is your thing on that, to clear it up?

ANSWER: No, they have no more choice than you had. What's more, when you are fully Awakened you find that every creature, every expression of life that you are aware of, is the full expression of God and, therefore, does not constitute a lower order of intelligence, or a lesser capacity to be able to express.

Therefore, you will find that you will be able to have complete and total communion—or what you would call communication—complete and total communion with the dolphins, and the trees, and the blades of grass, and the pine needles, and the cats, and the dogs. And in that experience of their Wholeness that is as complete as yours, you will wonder that you ever thought they might want to be a different form of expression, as though they were a lesser form.

It is important for you to understand this so that as you relate to your pets, or to the flora and fauna in your life, you may realize that the potential for communion is there, and that they are not lesser expressions of intelligence and that the fullness of what God is is present there to be experiencing.

Do you see how willing you have to be to unconditionally be open to seeing the Presence of God everywhere? And can you see how important it is to value and revere all forms of life? You miss opportunities.

Living where Paul does means that he is in a place where there are very often celebrities. And of course, word travels around when somebody of notoriety is there. One day Paul realized on the way to the post office that he was scanning everyone in the on-coming cars to see if this particular notorious person was to be seen.

And indeed, I reminded him: Why not look to see if the Christ was in any of the other cars. And when I said that, he realized that he would have to look at every single person in any of the other cars. You see, as long as you have your mindset or definition of who is in the other car, or who is beside you, you miss the opportunity to experience the most profound thing there is to be experienced—the Presence of God right next to you as the Christ.

I am not going to go into a discussion of reincarnation. I will tell you—which you did not ask—that animals (to use the vernacular) do have souls. They have souls as much as you have souls. And to tell you the truth, not a single one of you has a soul, because each one of you is Soul Itself, embodied and expressing. Soul isn't a possession. Every single thing you see is an expression of Soul, is the Presence of Soul.

QUESTION: Raj, my oldest brother, Shalom.

ANSWER: We are all the same age. I am only your older brother in the sense that I am ahead of you on the same path. And, therefore, it is easier for me to tell you where to step and where not to step, and be a helpful companion. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay this isn't incredulous, it's here, it's now, the awareness of the Kingdom. The opening of my eyes, the Christ sight. Everything that's been said has answered something, it's been applicable.

It's like the learning to listen. For me, I began to listen to my harmonic self. And there is a person that I felt a connection with over twenty-five years of this lifetime, it's a public personality. The words have spoken to me and I'd like to contact this person. I believe in the past I was supposed to and I did not listen to the Holy Spirit, my harmonic self. Will I meet this person?

ANSWER: It is not the appropriate time to make the connection. But you know what? There is no such thing as a lost chance. We are, you could say, ever patient. The reality of your life is—you could say—patiently, ever-presently awaiting your embrace of it. And if you did not embrace it at one time, because it can't go anywhere it remains present for you to embrace later.

Now, it is important for you not to think about what you should have done, or could have done, or ought to do—that's a head trip. Simply listen for the calm, inner guidance regarding when to take the step, or when not to take the step. And know that when you get the guidance not to take the step, it identifies fulfillment of purpose as much as taking the step. Because there is again a time for the thread to show in the tapestry as well as times for it not to show. And it all expresses the design of God—the Movement of Creation.

Now, I need to add one point: When I'm speaking about a thread in a tapestry that appears and disappears, and sometime later appears and disappears—for varying amounts of time, you might say—this cannot be appropriately construed to explain lifetimes. Because not one of you has ever been absent for a period of time, absent from the experience of consciousness, absent from being the Presence of God that you Are. Life—the conscious experience of Being—is forever uninterrupted. I know you did not ask about that, but it needed to be said.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you. I was asking that.

QUESTION: I would like to ask about healing. I have a problem understanding that we can heal, and yet we must allow others to do what they want to do.

ANSWER: You have no choice.

QUESTION: Yet they do ask for healing.

ANSWER: If they ask for healing and give permission for it, they receive it. Important point! If you ask for healing and give permission, you experience it. The only time you don't experience it is when—you don't give permission by virtue of justifying no healing.

Sometimes you justify it because you don't think it is possible; sometimes others justify it, because they don't want to give up the benefits they are getting from it. And I don't just mean that in terms of added attention that they get from other people, I mean literally insurance benefits.

Now, whether anyone asks you to help in terms of healing, you have the obligation to see them as they Truly Are, and not join with them in their belief about their limitation. Why? Because they deserve it? No! Because you do not want to be indulging in conflicted perception.

When they ask you, you are willing to do this. When they haven't asked you, you should still do it. But you must understand that this is not a means of control. No one has healing power. All that anyone can have is—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everyone.

And your willingness to see that one’s divinity and utter perfection, is your unwillingness to join with them in a sense of their limitation. Thus, you do not join with their ego perception of themselves; and your clear correct view of them—divinely speaking—constitutes a joining with them at the level of what they divinely Are (and you’ll have to excuse my use of the word level). And you strengthen that simply by virtue of joining, and that makes it easier for them to shift from their limited perception to their capacity to give permission for their healing. But they are the ones who give the permission; they are the ones who hold the key.

And they may say, “You’re a wonderful healer.” And they may go around and tell everybody: “You’ve got to see so-and-so, she’s a marvelous healer.” Don’t believe it!

All you can possibly be is that Presence which is unwilling to join another at the level of his or her belief, and insists rather on joining at the level of what they divinely Are. And then, in light of their having the opportunity to be plugged into that which is acknowledging their divinity, they have the option to shift their frame of reference, and then they will experience their healing.

You see the power of God cannot override free will. Does that mean that God is powerless? No, it means free will is powerless, calling for no special action on the part of God, Who lets the one who is practicing free will indulge in the nothingness he is indulging in, until he finds something more interesting to do.

If there is not a healing, you have not failed. And it is not cause for you to abdicate or sacrifice or abandon your intent to join with that other one at the level of what he or she divinely Is. At the bottom line, what you are doing is staying pure yourself, remaining innocent yourself, by not indulging in conflicted thinking.

QUESTION: I was wondering if you could comment on how we as parents can help guide our child’s spiritual development? I have two very small children, and I’m in the process of teaching them that we are all God’s Children. And how do we enlighten them that we are in fact all God’s Children, when someone is mean to them or teases them, so-on-and-so-forth, especially at a very young age?

ANSWER: Indeed it is a difficult task. What you need to help your children embrace is a sense of graciousness and loving kindness. I would encourage you to point out to them that, they tend to be unkind when they are feeling really bad about something, or they are really unhappy with themselves. And they know that when they are feeling like that, and you pick them up and hug them, the hurt goes away. And they know they deserve to be loved by you, even when they are upset and unkind.

In this way, you can share with them in a way that they will understand—that the other child who is being unkind to them is also feeling unhappy. And that they deserve love too, rather than simple reaction, anger and hate.

It is not an easy thing, as I said, to teach this, but it needs to be taught. And you need to be the example of it for them, with them. They need an example of what has been called long-suffering, or patience, and the willingness to give the benefit of the doubt, even though it seems to meet no return immediately.

Let them also know that you understand their hurt when another has mistreated them for no good reason. Let them feel unhappy, but do not just commiserate with them. Let it be an opportunity for gentle teaching. Let them express their hurt and calm down in the presence of your love, and then you can begin to encourage them to see another point of view, so that they might develop the capacity to have compassion. You will find the words to do this.

You know what? You can't do more than you can do. You can't be more than you are, and you can't express more than you understand. Understand also, that these children are not accidentally in your experience and, therefore, they are there because you are qualified. And realize also that they are not viewing their experience from your perspective, in which you can see (supposedly) psychological patterns emerging in their behavior and a much larger overview and greater complexity.

You must be careful not to be as the mother who's son came in and asked, "Mom where did I come from?" And she explained all of the details of the birth process. And when she was finished he said, "Oh, okay Mom, I just wanted to know—Jimmy's from Ohio."

If you realize that their questions are coming from a point of development that you have long since moved through—a stage of development that you are perfectly capable of coping with, because you have experienced it—you will be able to be more relaxed, because you will realize that you are not called upon to do something that you have not yet had any experience with.

QUESTION: I'm very thankful to be here. I'm really asking for healing. For the last couple of days when I was traveling here, I kept hearing the words to a song in my mind that a friend of mine sang once, and they were: "lay down your burden." And that's what I would really like to do.

On Thursday my brother's wife had a child. On Friday that child died. And despite all of what we've talked about here in the last two days, I still feel the pain of that. I think I understand what you talk about on an intellectual basis, but I still feel that pain. And I would like some help with that.

ANSWER: It is a sense of lost opportunity. There was an anticipation of the opportunity to experience this one, which now you do not have. And there is the sense of the child having had an opportunity to experience life and having lost it, as though something went awry.

But this is not the case. And I am not just saying anything that might console you, I am telling you the Truth. As is often the case when there is a sudden death shortly after birth, this little one got cold feet and you might say—jumped back out of the pool that the dive had been made into. But the opportunity for life has not been lost. The experience of life for that one has not been lost. And I will tell you that, the likelihood is that within ten months of now that one will try again, and the great likelihood is that it will not refuse to go with the flow, as it were.

Now, this one's parents need to forgive this one and give it the freedom to move forward in its comfort zone, rather than enduring a long period of time of uneasiness and distress. They need to give it the right that it has taken. They also need to know that they were not rejected. And they need to know that they were not at fault. There is still order here.

It is the sense of hopes that have been dashed that need to be felt and released, as this little one is given the right to be halfway comfortable as it moves forward.

PAUL: This is me Paul. The picture is, it's like the child got stage fright.

QUESTION: A number of people have spoken to me over the weekend about other teachers and facilitators of the Course, such as Kenneth Wapnick, a master teacher, and some teachers in California who appear to have somewhat different perceptions or interpretations of the Course than you've been sharing with us this weekend. Can you comment on these discrepancies or different points of view and how it looks from your perspective?

ANSWER: Paul has had the experience of listening to me speak with hundreds of people and discovered that I do not always say the same things to everyone. I do not always go as deeply into a subject as he knows I have with others. And he is sitting there eager for me to go on and get to the really juicy part—the really meaty part of it, from his point of view. And to his sense, I have just given pabulum, only to find when the conversation was finished that the individual was sitting there with their jaw hanging open, literally, because the little bit of pabulum that had been given was so overwhelmingly meaningful to them that they could do nothing but sit there with their jaw open. And then Paul has realized that if I had gone further and said more, it would have become meaningless, because they could not have absorbed it at the time.

Now, I'm going to encourage all of you to always pay attention to your good common sense. Until you have a better form of common sense than your present common sense, rely upon your present common sense.

I've said it before: None of you listens to anyone you don't want to listen to. And you may say that you are listening to them because they are right on. Well no, you are listening to them because what they are saying is right on with what you are deeply believing, but not yet able to make full commitment to.

And if you find what Kenneth Wapnick is saying to be valuable and to be moving you and to be causing growth to occur, then pay attention to it. In other words, realize that you are the governing factor, not the one you are listening to.

I have also said before, that the message will get through, like the old Pony Express. But the message that will trigger Awakening for an Australian Aborigine will not be the same message that will Awaken, let us say, a scientist of your Western World.

Now, the only thing that you ever need to watch out for is, a tendency on your part to give your power away. It is unprincipled for you to give your power away even to me—and Paul has tried it.

That which violates your integrity is an unintelligent thing to do. That which causes you not to feel your substance and your divinity is something to avoid like the plague. Anyone who does not place the responsibility for you squarely with you, and thus strengthen for you your integrity, is valueless. It doesn't matter what the subject is or the teaching is that that one is expounding.

How can you know who to believe? That is really the question. You had better believe yourself. Listen to everything. Don't be afraid to listen to anything, but go within yourself and measure what you hear against your deepest knowing. And as I have said before: If it adds up—excellent; if it doesn't add up—discard it.

Every single one of you has the capacity to recognize Truth. And so, I don't need to stand here and tell you what Truth is. I can tell the Truth, and your capacity to recognize Truth will confirm what I am saying, or anyone else.

You see, you must practice discernment—not judgment, discernment—which every single one of you has the capacity to do. The presence of the ego has not taken away your capacity to recognize Truth. And if you are willing to set aside your wants to know what Truth is, if you are willing for a short time—even twenty minutes—to set aside your best definition of what truth is, to listen deeply to what Truth really is, and what I say is confirmed by what you deeply know Truth to be, then you are on safe ground and we are able to be together as brothers and sisters, equals. And that is the only thing that is worth its salt.

Beware of those who would be your leader. Beware of those who would tell you they know what the truth is for you. And you will not give away your integrity; you will not shove it under the rug, out of sight. And you will not lose your experience of your strength.

And when you observe others who obviously are giving their power away, and who seem to be putting themselves in a vulnerable and unwise place, immediately recognize within yourself that it's impossible for them to get outside of their divinity. And that the Holy Spirit will use the experience to their advantage, turning it to their advantage, and that, therefore, it is not your personal responsibility to set them straight. Join with them at the level of their divinity and trust them to the Holy Spirit, and watch a miracle.

And for yourself, as I said, just really be honest. Because the fact is that you're in charge all the time, even when you think you are letting someone else be in charge. That's part of the ego game—to be in charge, doing what someone else says, letting them think they are in charge and then blaming them when something happens that you don't like.

I will be very honest with you: not one of you can be misled. Because you are in charge all the time you are doing exactly what you want to do, no matter how stupid or unwise it is. And that's part of the game of manipulation and control—you do exactly what you want to do, and make it appear as though you are a helpless victim.

Who can you trust? Yourself—your capacity to recognize the Truth. And that really is the only thing you have ever trusted; that is the thing you are trusting at this moment.

And so, don't ask me to evaluate someone else, and tell you whether they are on the right track or the wrong track. At the bottom line: be glad that somebody is making reference to something as wonderful as A Course In Miracles, no matter how awkwardly or how well it is being done.

QUESTION: You had made a statement yesterday that we should be happy or glad that we're not involved in some of the things, the turmoil and whatever, that's going on in South Africa and some other places.

ANSWER: I did not say that you should be glad, I said that you are glad that you're not going through the nitty-gritty aspects of the transformation that's occurring. Continue.

QUESTION: I am involved in some of those things. Is there anything special that I should be doing or know?

ANSWER: Don't be afraid of the work involved. And be willing to put your shoulder to the wheel a hundred percent. No matter how strenuous it seems to be, and no matter how often it begins to look like an insurmountable thing that will never accomplish enough, soon enough. That happens when you get tired. Get plenty of rest, and stick with it.

Now, this applies to everyone: Don't be afraid of the work involved, don't be afraid of the patience that is required when you are going through a transformation. Don't say that a transformation, because it is evidence of a divine Movement, ought to be more harmonious and more graceful than this.

QUESTION: Is there anything that I should do to be more aware quicker, stronger?

ANSWER: No, indeed. And I'm going to encourage you not to put yourself under a false sense of pressure by trying to be significantly more effective than you are. There is a point—and there is a part of you that knows this—there is a point at which you must be willing to stand knowing that you are doing what is required.

And it is not appropriate for you to put yourself under the pressure of constantly having to do better—that will drain you.

And I am telling you that the amount of strength that you are bringing to this, and the alertness that you are bringing to it is quite appropriate under the circumstances. And you need to rest confidently in that fact.

QUESTION: I did hear you, Raj, say to me in my mind that I do wish the answer to this question. I hope I can word it briefly.

ANSWER: You do not have to be any more articulate than anyone else has been.

QUESTION: Okay, I am dealing with the seeming conflict of passion versus radical... taking a radical stand for Truth. When I read the Course, often I feel so deeply moved that there's such a passion that I want to leap into the arms of God, or leap into some sort of unknown joy, to where there are moments when it feels out of control. And I'm so moved by some of the things that you say in the Course that I'm concerned that I will carry a flag like Joan of Arc. So could you please describe or help me discern the difference between these two?

ANSWER: It was very well put. The fear is, that to feel your passion you will lose control. And specifically, become a Zealot, forcing your vision upon others at the expense of their own integrity.

I'm going to tell you: Do not be afraid of passion, just be afraid of where passion is arising from. If your passion is arising from a disconnected ego oriented place, your passion will be expressed as coercion and manipulation without regard for the integrity of another. And yes, you could say that is dangerous, that is unprincipled. And others would have to be on their toes not to join with you in that game, because it would require them to sacrifice their integrity in favor of the vision you are enforcing upon them with great fervor.

But when your passion arises out of the experience you are having from your center—the direct experience of your Being—then your joy, which will be uncontrolled, will express utter harmony. You see...

PAUL: I'm sorry, this is me Paul. What's the word you used, Passion?

ANSWER: Passion that arises out of the separated ego sense finds expression through communication. But passion which is the spontaneous, unhindered flow of the joy that you feel in the experience of what divinely is, comes forth as an expression of communion that existed before it was expressed—before the passion was expressed.

And thus, the passion will always be utterly appropriate no matter what the setting is. And there will not be coercion, and no one's integrity will be violated; there will not even be the opportunity for another's power to be given away. Your expression of your joy, your passion, your connectedness to the divinity of you and of life, will only inspire a similar experience in another.

There is a reason for this and that is: When you are expressing from your own commitment to the divinity that you are experiencing, and it comes out as passion, you are utterly benign. And that beingness is flagrantly obvious to anyone around you, and this allows them to feel utterly safe to let down their defenses. Whereas, when you are coming from an ego place of arrogance and egotism and you are expressing passion, you actually frighten others—all of you frighten each other when you are passionately egocentric.

I want to tell you something else—passion isn't always intense. Passion is often sweet. Passion is often gentle. What is passion if it is not a commitment to something, an uninhibited commitment to something? And if you have made an unconditional commitment to your divinity, to God, what is going to happen is what is happening at this very instance with Paul—this is passion.

And that is why there is a feeling of substance to it. That is why there is a recognizable genuineness to the experience. And there is no loss of control, and no one is being brow-beaten because I am not trying to communicate the truth to you. And Paul is not trying to be something for you. He is committed to the Truth. He is committed to the clearest experience of God that he is capable of at the moment.

And so, please understand that passion runs the full spectrum from gentleness to unyielding firmness, but never is that firmness coercive. And never does it violate anyone. But it is full of meaning for Paul, or for you, or for anyone else who dares to be passionate—to be committed. And the feeling that comes forth is infinitely unself-conscious, but totally conscious, and always appropriate. It is when it is coming from an ego level that it has none of those elements. Thank you for asking the question.

ANSWER: Although the weekend is now over, I am not going to leave you. I never really ever came yesterday, because I was already here. And when Paul leaves, I want you all to know that I am still present and available with you and for you, if you will simply reach out and risk the chance that when I say something to you, it's not you making it up.

I have enjoyed being with you in this manner. And I even more look forward to being with you directly. I will leave you in this manner with one thought again: You are not alone. Dare to join.

Gathering In Winter Park –1992

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good morning. There is a premise to this weekend. The premise is, that you are neither behind the point of perfect, nor advancing toward it, you are at that point, and must understand yourself there from. That is actually the premise of every moment of conscious experience you experience. And if you see yourself, if you get up in the morning and see yourself as struggling to advance to your good, to your health, to the Kingdom of Heaven, to your Awakening, then you will ignore the fact, and you will live out the word that you are giving. The simple fact is, that you're all having a dream right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And in the dream you think that you have a complicated process to go through, when all that you need to do is open your eyes.

I cannot convey to you how important what I have just said is. It is the simple fact, your egos will not like it, because it gives them nothing to do. If you will begin to just slightly embrace this fact, that you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, a new kind of curiosity will begin to emerge in you. Not dread of your day, not dread of your relationships, but a curiosity to see what the more is that is present, than the current definitions you are giving it.

Tell me, wouldn't being asleep be the equivalent of an absence of curiosity, or aliveness to life? Indeed. And curiosity is the one single most important element in your Awakening. The ego says do not be curious, because you will uncover a can of worms. It says, don't be curious, because indeed, if you uncover the truth, it will do exactly what you think it will do, it will convict you, instead of uncover your innocence.

So, where does curiosity begin? It best begins with right where you are. The first lesson in A Course In Miracles says, "nothing that I see means anything." And this throws everyone for a loop. It's suppose to. It is suppose to unroot you from your confidence in your present definitions of everything. In fact, any of you who have seriously practiced that lesson, have found that it brings you to a point of frustration. And in that frustration, curiosity is born. And that's the point. You cannot stand being in a meaningless existence. But until it becomes meaningless, until you are willing to look around at everything and say, "nothing that I see means anything," you will not be able to escape from the meanings you have assigned to everything, that keeps you from seeing the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are.

Until you are not so damn sure that you know who your wife or your husband is, and what a slob, or what a bastard, or what a whatever they are, until you are able to set aside your very clear perception of them, you will not be in a position to recognize who they truly Are. In other words, the definitions you give to things, constitutes an act that is the opposite of love, in every instance. Because Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R," in each and everything. How can you possibly recognize that which is real, if you are insisting upon your definition, and projecting it on that one, or projecting it on that thing?

Now, indeed, you are not a body as the Course abundantly says, but it doesn't mean that you are not identified. How could there be unidentified God? How could there be unmanifest God? How could there be an absence of a conscious experience of God, and still have God? The Presence and Movement of Creation, that is the Presence and Movement of God, is going to be experienced as something. It is going to be an actual conscious experience, and that conscious experience will be what you would call visibility and tangibility and more.

Now, you do not say, "I am not a body," and then abandon your body and not love it, not take care of it. You say, "I am not a body. I am not this. But I am identifiable as a Conscious experience. I am identifiable as a conscious experience." But you say, "that's a physical experience." No, it's a Conscious experience. "Oh, but that's not what I thought it meant." Well, how about becoming curious now.

Your world and what you call your body is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of God infinitely identifying Himself and recognizing Himself in that Movement, in that visibility and tangibility. But God is never fooled into thinking that He is the form. And the shift of perception that now constitutes your misperception is, that you have identified with the form, and neglected the Conscious experience of Being the Infinite Intelligence or Mind, in which all experience of form is going on.

And thus, everything is, indeed, a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync, reversed. You feel as though you are inside, when you are the infinite in which all of this is occurring. And because you seem to be inside of it, it all seems to be happening to you, instead of it being you happening, because it is God happening. And you truly do not have a perspective, a private perspective of your own, different from the Fathers, that is real.

So, you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing towards it. You are at that point. The Reality of you is the Reality of you at this instant. And you must understand yourself there from. And you must understand your world there from. So, that you can begin to be curious to see God. Your present definition of everything you see is quite false, but it is a definition or a false definition of something Real.

So, this weekend is your opportunity to experience your curiosity, and see where it leads. And curiosity is expressed in the form of questions. Don't be afraid of any question you have. Don't be reluctant to ask any question you have. Because at the bottom line, a question is the leading edge of an answer.

QUESTION: I've been exposed to ideas from the "Great White Brotherhood." And the person telling me about these things, is saying it's the next step beyond The Course In Miracles. I'd like your response.

ANSWER: Let me put it this way. Pardon? Would you repeat the question please.

QUESTION: I've been told that the "Great White Brotherhood," the ideas of the 32 corona lessons, etc., are sort of the next step for understanding the universe and truth. And that if I want to progress spiritually, I will move on from The Course In Miracles to this. I'd like to know what you think of that.

ANSWER: Indeed, you must understand that The Course In Miracles is not a step. It is not a technique in the world for advancing you spiritually. We are through with advancing spiritually. You have had centuries of religious teachings of one sort or another, and everyone has gotten into the habit, you could say, of enjoying the parade of spiritually advanced floats to entertain you, and to give you a feeling that something is really happening that is beyond entertainment.

Now, literally the presence of the Course, in what you call your human experience, is the way you are experiencing a fourth-dimensional. In other words, a Movement that is not originating within the three-dimensional time space continuum that you all experience yourself as being in. The presence and movement of the meaning of the Course is a movement from, what I am going to call a dimension beyond the one you find yourself confined to. It is not there to help improve your dream. It is not here to help improve your human experience. But don't jump to conclusions. It is here to help you remember the infiniteness of your Self and your Divine status as that Conscious Awareness, which is God in the act of recognizing Himself/Herself in all that exists.

Now, indeed, there is much talk about what comes after A Course In Miracles. All you have to do is read the last lesson. And in effect the last lesson says—and I am quoting another lesson—"today I will make no decisions by myself." What comes after A Course In Miracles, is leaning into the Divine Knowing and actually not exercising human will or human thinking or accomplishing of any kind, but rather being in that place where your true Conscious experience of Being as the Presence of the Mind of God being You, can occur.

Because you see people pass on, you think there is a next step after this. But I will tell you something, if you pass on and you have not Awakened before you pass on, you are still experiencing the same degree of ignorance, you could say, in a new place, with the same opportunity to Awaken to who you Divinely Are. Because you can look back, and you have history books, and you have the family tree, and an apparent lengthy history, it appears to you as though progress occurs in time, from past, to present, to future.

And thus, it can appear to you that the Course is just another set of books that can help you in this process. But the point is to wake up. The point is not to continue in a dream that has great longevity and just live the dream with more style.

I do not mean to minimize the value, and there really is value, of what is expressed in the “Magic Kingdom,” where it is said that, “if you can imagine it, you can do it.” But imagination is of the ego, at least in the manner that it is currently used. And the words truly need to be, “if you can Know it, with a capital “K,” you can Be it.”

Now, it is time to be through with doing. It is time to be through with accomplishing. It is time to be through with improving. And there is a way to do it.

Paul is doing it at this moment. Paul is being absolutely appropriate in this given moment. And to be absolutely appropriate does not mean an exclusive experience of sitting in front of other people, saying words that are not one’s own. Because it can occur just as easily on the freeway or in any other situation. When one is willing to relinquish self-assertion, with a small “s,” and be in the Movement of God, one is utterly appropriate whether one is cooking dinner, or driving a car, or in a gathering.

And when one is being appropriate, the cooking of the meal becomes a Divine experience, not only for the cook, but for those who enjoy the meal. And driving on the freeway becomes a Divine experience, not only for the one who is willing to be in tune and be in the flow of the Movement of God, but everyone else on the freeway has the opportunity to have a new perception. As the bumper sticker out in the foyer says, “Shift happens.”

All it takes is one individual being willing to say, “nothing that I see means anything.” And then letting the Movement within him well up, or the Movement within her well up, that demands meaning. Not for any intellectual reason, but because there cannot be anything without meaning, there cannot be God without meaning.

Your question is a question that could be asked by a student in a university. A student, let us say, who has actually finished all four years of college, but has gotten into the swing of things, he’s on a roll, taking classes. And while everyone else is getting ready for graduation, this one is looking at the catalog for the next year, because that’s what one does at the end of one year, one get ready for the next class.

I'm telling you, all of you, that all of you are at the point of graduation. You're not a select group. Everyone on your planet who is not Awake, and everyone who is not currently incarnated, but is not Awake, stands at the threshold of Awakening. Why? Because there are more who are Awake than are asleep, and there are rapidly becoming too few dreamers to join in the dream, and thus support the on going experience of the illusion.

You know what? That means it's going to be easier for everyone than it has ever been before. You have heard, many of you, the parable of the person who comes to labor in the field, comes early in the morning, and is promised a certain amount of money for his labor. And then there is someone who comes at the end of the day, and only works fifteen minutes and gets paid an equal amount. Why, it was much easier for the person who came at the end to earn that amount, than the one who came first. And everybody says, "unfair, unfair," except, I'm telling you, that you are the Johnny-come-latelies.

And thank God, that it's going to be easier for you. And it is going to be easier for you, because of the ones who did it when was harder. Because everyone who has Awakened already has lessened the density of the dream, therefore, has lessened it's seeming integrity, so that it's able to come apart and dissolve with less stress and less effort. That's why it's so important to just bring curiosity into play. It is as though the stage is already set and all somebody has to do is peak under the curtain.

So please, let's get ready to leave school. And let's not be thinking about the next step and what comes after the Course. What comes after the Course, is living the Course. Actually daring, moment by moment in your day, to stand at the edge of the unknown, as Paul is doing at this moment. It's nothing spectacular, nothing grossly out of the ordinary. And believe me, he hears what I am saying, he is the one who is moving his hands and his mouth. He is being utterly appropriate.

You will not appear to be abnormal. You will appear to be more and more meaningful, whether you are expressing Divine ideas, or whether you are expressing a poem that is coming off the end of your tongue without any conscious fore thought, or cooking a dinner that you had no recipe for, that turns out to be exquisitely delicious.

Unfortunately, for those of you who's egos have suggested that spiritual growth is going to bring about radical marvelous new ideas, it is a lot of the old ones that you're going to find really have the meaning, "put your hand in the hand of the man." You cannot wake up alone, joining must occur. You must take someone's hand and break the sense of separation and independence and of being a self-made-man, or becoming an emancipated woman who can be a self-made-woman.

You must be willing to say, “I fit in somewhere,” and not be upset because you fit in and do not stand out. Because when you let yourself into the conscious experience of fitting in, you have the opportunity to make connection with All That Is, and you could say experience the infiniteness of you, the infinite Integrity of you as a consciously infinite experience. But to the ego this is very scary, to sacrifice your tiny independence, because it’s all you have that seems to be meaningful. That which goes beyond the Course, is that individual who gives up trying to be an independent soul.

Now, it is very difficult for any of you to join with each other unequivocally. And that is why you are invited to join with the Holy Spirit. First of all, you are enjoined to do that, because the Holy Spirit is Awake, and therefore utterly and absolutely dependable, calling for no fear on your part, but allowing for absolute trust.

And secondly, because as Paul brought out at the beginning, it is your Divinity held in trust, while you dally with the ego. And your joining with it as a Conscious experience, is the way you reunite with your Self and find your Sanity returning, and your faulty misperception yielding to the Conscious experience of the glory of God all around you.

You join with the Holy Spirit and discover that you are the Christ, and always have been, never stopped for a moment. And as the Christ, as the Conscious experience of Being what the Christ is, you experience your union with the Father. And your Conscious union with the Father, means your Conscious experience of union with the infinite Movement of Creation, which has been carelessly expressed as co-creation. The ego likes that word.

Co-creation is a poor word for the experience of union with the Father, where claiming no other mind than the Mind of the Father you experience your birthright as the Conscious experience of the Totality of the Movement of Creation, as your Self. But this is a new self, that has no sense or experience of separateness. I want to be very clear on that.

Lets stop thinking in terms of what comes next in your spiritual growth. Spiritual growth must come to a stop. Why? For the same reason that Paul would not find any work. Because continued spiritual progress will not identify fulfillment of purpose for you. Why? Because in spite of your egos you are waking up. Why? Because there are too few dreaming to support the on-goingness of the dream. And so here you are, whether you like it or not, waking up. And I’m not here to tell you to wake up, I’m here to tell you that you are waking up, so that you might not misunderstand what is happening, and rebel against it. And so, that you might actually consciously practice curiosity.

Waking up is going on all over the place, and I will tell you something, it’s not happening within organizations. It’s happening in the heart. People are beginning to feel their Soul again. Why? Because there isn’t as much covering it up. The Course hasn't uncovered your Souls, your Soul is uncovering to you what's in the Course, or any "holy book" that you might pick up. The Course does not have a corner on the market, but it does happen to be the most current penetration of the human experience of a Divine event.

And indeed, I'm here to encourage each of you to let that Divine penetration occur within you directly, every day. Because the clarification is already occurring, and your conscious intent to be curious will put you in such alignment with what is already happening, that it will make the happening more graceful. That is why. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I'm really grateful you're here with us today.

ANSWER: I wish you would be grateful that I am here with you everyday.

QUESTION: Indeed.

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you for a moment. What I mean by that is not to suggest that you feel guilty, but rather to remind you that the gratitude you feel today can be felt everyday, and the more you do embrace it consciously, the more opportunity each of you has for experiencing me directly. QUESTION: Thank you. When we're working workbook lessons and meditating, and we reach that point that you were talking about earlier today, that point of perfection, and there's a great burst of light. And with that light there's a great deal of energy, feeling, life. But that light only last for maybe a second or two seconds. What is it that we do at that point to shut it down? That's my question.

ANSWER: You use your body as a shield, very simply. You tighten up. You use the body to do it with. I'm going to tell you something, not one of you is a body, but not one of you is bodiless. And the clearest way that I can convey to you the true nature of body, is to refer to it as a body of light. It is a body of energy. And even physically speaking, I mean in scientific terms, when you or your scientists get down to the smallest particle, of what you call physicality, all you find there is energy pattern. A pattern of energy that has such integrity that it seems to be experienceable in an enduring way, and therefore identifiable in an on-going way. But at the bottom line, there is not one particle of substance, matter. It is all already energy.

Why it is not presently being experienced as light, is because in identifying with and as the form, one initially feels vulnerable, and one attempts to shield ones self, protect one self. And that form which is being identified becomes contracted, literally. Until it becomes, you might say, so dense that the light cannot be experienced consciously.

The use to which you are putting your body is what keeps you in the dark, literally. And the curiosity, that I mentioned, once it begins to be brought into play, once there is a desire to see the more of a thing that is present than you currently perceive it to be, you have practiced greater defenselessness.

And thus, two things happen, it seems to you that there can be an influx of light in terms of revelation. The other thing that you will find beginning to happen is, that there is an opportunity for a breakthrough of light, which even today some of those of you who are more sensitive than others, can see as light streaming from the fingers, and the toes, and the palms of the hands, etc., and what has been referred to as an aura. Unfortunately it's been called another body.

There's only one body, either seen clearly or seen through a glass darkly, densely. There's only one Reality present to be experienced, which you are either seeing clearly as the Kingdom of Heaven, or through a glass darkly as a material world and universe. But there's only one thing to experience. You use your body for defense and the light of it becomes hidden.

Now, the simple fact is, that all of you will only let in a little bit of your good, because you don't want to be overwhelmed. Why would your good overwhelm you? Because you think you've got to process it and be in charge of it. And so, you won't let it in any faster than you can deal with intelligently, which mean get a control of intelligently.

But, the majority in this room know that you are getting breakthroughs whether you are ready for them or not. And they are creating Movement in you faster than you can process them, and as a result you are having remarkable experiences, that haven't truly overwhelmed you. That which causes revelation to seem to be overwhelming, is the energy or effort you bring into play in order to capture the good, to understand it, so that you can control it.

It isn't the good that is overwhelming you. What is overwhelming you, is thinking that the thirty juggling balls that have been thrown at you, must be controlled by you, instead of putting your hands at your side, and watching God be the Movement.

One last point, the reason you want to control your good, is so that you can be better at protecting yourself, and that is not what your good is for. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm glad you're here, and I'm glad you're here everyday, and thanks for the help that you've already given.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: How do you suggest that I can help my child with his fears. What can I do?

ANSWER: More than anything be willing to express your fearlessness. More than any words you could use, is what you would call your nonverbal communication. First of all your lack of reaction. Your lack of reaction, allows your child to say, “Oh, maybe I don’t have to react.” And then if you speak without fear, or without an edge on your voice, in a reassuring and grounded manner, this tone, even more than the words, conveys most meaningfully to your child, that he or she does not need to be reacting.

And then, if generally speaking, you are referring to your world as though it is a fundamentally orderly place, where principles do operate, and that there is something dependable in a positive manner about it, this also will help create in that child, an inclination to look for order, even where disorder seems to be going on. Sometimes just a smile is all that is needed. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It’s a pleasure to be here with you today. Many people seem to be in financial quandary in this day and time. And I find myself in that particular position. Not that I’m going hungry, but I very much desire to find work that will be appropriate with the Awakening. And at times I find that I’m experiencing a goodly amount of fear over the process, because I seem to have engineered a stone wall in front of my face. What I would like to know is, what would best foster trust in this situation?

ANSWER: Always when you seem to have a stone wall in front of your face, it means that you have arrived at a point where your fulfillment or your good is going beyond your concept of good. It therefore means, that you are face with a demand to look with better eyes. How do you look with better eyes? You look with better eyes by abandoning the old way of looking. And you can do this in a very simple way, by consciously embracing the idea that there is another way to look at this. When you say there is another way to look at this, you are giving yourself permission to see a new way, instead of getting obsessed with the fact that what is happening isn’t happening according to your best concept of how it ought to be happening.

You see, none of you really wants to get stuck with what you want. And if you do get stuck with what you want, there must be a way to break loose from it. Your Being, with a capital “B,” your essential Selfhood, is forever unfolding Itself a new, because that is the nature of God. “Behold, I make all things new.” God never stops to repeat Himself. Therefore, because your Being is ever present—even if you are ignoring It—and It is unfolding Itself forever new, you holding on to what you think you want, inevitably, find yourself arriving at the point where it cannot any longer be available to you, because it is so out of sync with what your Being is being.

And if you have had a great investment in the having of what you want, emotionally and energetically and so on, the having to let go of it, can seem to say something about who you think you are. But a little bit of curiosity, together with a willingness to realize that there is another way to look at this, you will be able to give yourself permission to see the good that is yours, that is moving beyond your concept of your good. And you will be able to then find that what is happening, is your world reconfiguring to identify your fulfillment, instead of configuring in a way that doesn't allow you to any longer have what you thought you wanted.

In other words, again, there's only one thing happening, Reality, the Divine You that you are, God being forever new. And if you are identifying with what is no longer identifying fulfillment of purpose, and you are resisting that which now is identifying fulfillment of purpose, you will hurt. Which is an indirect blessing. Or, that very same event can be looked at with a curiosity and a recognition that there's another way to see what is happening. Thus, giving yourself permission to see the fulfillment that is occurring. You can't possibly be up against a brick wall that's really a brick wall.

Now, I could go on, but I'm simply going to say, let there be a willingness to admit that maybe what is looking like a dead end to you, is your simple inability to be inappropriate. And that therefore, you have evidence of being very closely held and guided, so that you cannot stub your toe. And that if you are being very carefully guided, it must be for an intelligent reason. And the intelligence of it relates to your fulfillment of purpose. If you will approach it this way, you will become eagerly curious, and you will be more able to say, "Thy will be done Father. I'm curious. Let it come. I will not block it." If it's all the Kingdom of Heaven, your willingness to yield to it, will inevitably cause your fulfillment to become more and more consciously apparent to you.

You cannot create your abundance. Your abundance has never been withheld from you. And therefore, to be a peon, a little laborer trying to create a little bit of abundance is redundant.

Remember, you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing towards it. You are at that point, and must understand yourself there from. Become a little less defended, and watch your fulfillment emerge from within you and from around you.

And above all, do not play into the ego suggestion, that you are the cause of the brick wall. That's another handy way the ego has for causing you to misinterpret the hand of God, that will not let you bash your foot against a stone and bruise it, and would move you into feelings of guilt, when what is really called for, is a bountiful gratitude to God.

You're not lost. And you are not at an impasse. You are at a place where, what I'm going to call benign curiosity is called for. Benign curiosity, is curiosity without willfulness attached. You are in a delightful spot. And don't say, "well, if I was thirty years younger, I might be able to believe that." Another dirty dastardly ego deed.

You are your Father's Son at this instant. And you are at this instant the expression of a current God. you are therefore, the current expression. You are therefore, the current embodiment of the Movement of Creation. And there truly is no age to you, you can't use it as an excuse. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: It's really a delight to be with everyone here. I would like some direction in my relationship with my family, particularly with my husband, and how our paths have grown in different directions.

ANSWER: What is the nuttiest nut of the relationship?

QUESTION: The nuttiest nut? The nuttiest nut is the fact that we are living in a noncommittal... that it's not a marriage. And my learning to accept that, and my desire to move on gracefully about that, for everyone involved. And to do it peaceably and face my fears about it.

ANSWER: This would not be as difficult a question for you, as difficult a situation for you, if you had a clearer understanding of the nature of your relationship with the Father.

I am going to encourage all of you, as you listen during the rest of the weekend, not to cringe, or automatically assume that when I make statements such as I just made about your relationship with the Father, or your relationship with God, do not be too quick to jump to traditional interpretations of those words. Don't worry if you are confused by the meaning of my words I will explain them. If you jump to conclusions however, it may take you a few minutes to get with the program, as it were, as I go on to embellish or explain.

What I mean is, that you as a woman—and indeed I am going to be addressing every woman in this group in this answer—you're being a woman involves a lot of concepts that demean you and demean your integrity as a whole Souled Individuality. There are many of you—I do not mean at this moment, in this room—but there are many of you who have yielded to an unprincipled relationship, or an unprincipled situation, because you did not grasp the fact, that your integrity is equal to the integrity of any man you might ever meet. That you are as equally the direct expression of God, as any man is.

There are many of you who do not walk away from an unprincipled circumstance, because there is this underlying premise that you are not as able to take care of yourself as a man. That you are the "one" who is to be care for, taken care of. That it is arrogant of you to feel as sovereign as you know a man feels. As a result of this, you not only keep yourself bound, but you perpetuate your own ignorance of your own integrity, you keep yourself from discovering your capacity to be sovereign.

I'll let you in on a secret, although men feel a right to be sovereign, they for any of a number of reasons, feel as easily as women do, that maybe they won't be able to achieve it, that it isn't really theirs yet. The difference is—between men and women generally speaking—that men will dare to reach for the brass ring, they will dare to embody their sovereignty. And in so doing, they do not perpetuate their dependence, and they open the door for their experience of their sovereignty.

Now, whether you are a male or a female, the fact is that it is your birthright to experience fulfillment. It is your birthright to have your needs met. For example: You need a job to support yourself. You need a job to express your talent, your skill, your creativity, etc. The general thought is, that there is only a certain number of jobs in the “job market,” that they are there because someone else has a need that may or may not have anything to do with yours.

Well, I will tell you something, and I have said this before: The job that identifies your fulfillment of purpose is something which evolves and emerges right out of the center of you, for the identity or identification of your fulfillment of purpose, and no one else can get it. It may appear that the opportunity is presented by someone else, but if that job is the one that identifies your fulfillment of purpose, you will be the one who gets it. This is true whether you are a man or a woman, except that men tend to naturally expect to have the manifestation of their fulfillment of purpose. And women tend to look for the men who have found their fulfillment of purpose, so that that man can take care of them.

You perpetuate the role of second class citizen. And of course, men are willing to play along with you. I am not overlooking the fact that there are men who will enforce it upon you. But it is very satisfying to the male ego to have a woman who needs them and who feels incomplete without them.

Now, you have a nonrelationship. Why? That’s what you should ask yourself. Why? Don’t be afraid to be intelligent. Don’t be afraid to be reasonable. Don’t be afraid to look at it and say, “this is a farce. It doesn’t identify fulfillment of purpose. And fulfillment of purpose is my birthright, as well as this one with whom I have a nonrelationship.” And then again, bring into play curiosity, because the minute you give permission for your fulfillment of purpose to manifest, or become embodied in your life, your world will begin to reconfigure to identify it. But you have to give permission for it. And you will not give permission for it, if you are insisting upon maintaining the status of a second class citizen. “Oh, but that isn’t what a man wants.” Well, your ego doesn’t want you to be awake either. Are you going to cooperate, or are you perhaps going to be that Presence of Intelligence that is unashamed of itself, who will, forthrightly express herself, and let the chips fall where they may.

Are you going to deprive the men in your world of the fullness of their experience that you constitute? I’m speaking to all women here. You are here, because without you some aspect of God would be unexpressed, and that is an impossibility. That is what I mean when I say, you need to get to understand your relationship with the Father better, and we could say the Father/Mother God. Because if God is Intelligence, if God is Life, if God is Soul, and Principle, and Mind, and Soul, and Spirit, then you, as the full representation, the full expression of God, must have the same qualities to express that any other individual does also. And if you are withholding it from a relationship, or from your community, or from the world, because somehow it doesn't fit your concept of "being a woman," then you had better be willing to be a little radical, and break the traces that hold you in bondage.

Men don't hold women in bondage. Men and woman cooperate together helpfully or unhelpfully, but it is always a mutual agreement.

Now, I encourage you to become very matter of fact here, look the situation straight in the face, and call it for what it is, a nonrelationship, an absence of fulfillment of purpose. And then I encourage you to lay claim on your birthright of fulfillment of purpose, and be ready and willing to take steps, and be curious to discover what those steps are, with an expectation that your world will reconfigure for the purpose of identifying your fulfillment of purpose, and identifying the specific steps that will not leave you at a disadvantage, nor anyone else.

Sovereignty is different from independence. Sovereignty is not being dependent. Independence is a pulling back and a separation and an assertion of differentness. One is willful, and one is a yielding into the Real nature of your Being. Now the fact is that men have to do this to, but they haven't been laboring under the false sense of being a second class citizen.

Men—and in some ways this is harder than the task that a woman is faced with—men must learn to yield to something bigger than them. Women have learned to join, not because it's their birthright, but because they believe it's a necessity. And so, they join from a position of weakness. Men tend not to join, unless it is a means of control. And they must learn to join, in order to release control, so that they might find out that there is an underlying order and principle to everything that is occurring, that they do not have to be responsible for. And when they are in the flow with it, they experience their unchallengable integrity.

So, be matter of fact here, and don't be afraid of the facts, the obvious facts, because they will help you to know whether you are hanging on to something valueless or not. And will help put you in the direction of a more active, unfolding experience of fulfillment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have two questions to ask you Raj. They're both Biblical. One is: We see a different picture of God in the Old Testament and the New Testament. Has God changed during that time, or has our perception of Him changed?

ANSWER: The latter.

QUESTION: And the second question is: Could you explain Revelation to us, and it's meaning for us in this time?

ANSWER: Do you have a month? The book of Revelation is the one book that is the least touched by human manipulation of all the books in the Bible, because it was not understood, and therefore no one knew what to change.

I'm going to ask you if there is a specific portion of the Book of Revelation, that you have a stronger curiosity about than any other?

QUESTION: Well, I'm intrigued by the numerology in it, and the Seventh Day Adventist seem to focus on the numerology. Some people read it and they look at Nostradamus' predictions, and they see that in Revelations. And I tend to see Revelation as a description of maybe a shift of consciousness that we're all going through, which is changing the world. But people see their own thing in the book, and I'm curious about is there a right way to look at what the book of Revelation says?

ANSWER: As with any revelation, it is constituted of a penetration of the ego frame of reference by a Divine Movement. And as always, those from within the limited frame of reference, tend to interpret it in the style that they interpret every other part of their limited experience. And therefore, they see it as referring to events in the limited frame of reference, over a time span, having to do with growth, and development, and spiritualization, etc., etc., etc.

When in actuality, it, the Book of Revelation, like the Course, was an inner experience of illumination, connection with Reality. Now, it therefore, is the rendering in words of an experience that was being had, an experience in that which was unreal fell away, lost its validity, and reality became clearer as the actual conscious experience.

Now, as you begin to move into what I'm going to call, the experiential aspect of A Course In Miracles, you will begin to experience illumination, not through any intellectual process, but through what I can best convey to you through the use of the word "realization"—when you realize something and there was nothing preceding the realization, just suddenly knowing something, knowing the Truth.

When you are willing to not validate your own thinking, and you are willing to make an inquiry first and then listen, you move into the void. At least it seems like a void, because there is not the chatter of your thinking and your reasoning, and your ongoing defense mechanism working. And you experience peace. And out of that peace, if you abide with it, you find joy, and you find that indeed this is you experiencing the substance of You, not just another emotion, that the peace is really the substance of your Being, of You. And as you allow yourself to abide there, and be in the world from there, you will have further experiences of revelation, which will allow you to say, "Ah, that's what he meant."

In other words, no I am not going to explain the Book of Revelation. The point is that it sits there waiting for you to comprehend, the moment you begin to let yourself into the experience of revelation. When you stop thinking, you will not stop existing. And in the existence minus thinking, you will find revelation occurring, except that it will mean something to you. I'm not avoiding the question, but I am setting your nose in the right direction.

We're going to vary the format here, and I'm going to ask if there is anyone else who has a question about the Book of Revelation specifically.

QUESTION: Is there any significance to the reference to Judea over and over in the Book, that you could explain to me at all?

ANSWER: No.

QUESTION: I'm interested in the mark of the beast.

ANSWER: I will tell you that rather than 6-6-6, it should be I-I-I. The mark of the beast, at an experiential level, is preoccupation with self, not ones Divine Being, but ones acquired concept of ones self, ones concept of oneself that is based upon how it relates to everything else in the world. In other words, that which accommodates and defends itself against everything and everyone else's perception of it, that which becomes the puppet of opinion, that which has no sense of its Integrity, that which has no real existence but which fights for its existence.

Beast... Everyone thinks devil. Beast... a beast is ignorant. A beast is governed by instinct, which is the equivalent of emotion. Beast is that which is not governed by Soul, but by reaction.

Waking up really involves identifying the I, not with the form, but with and as Consciousness or Mind. The shift of perception is from identification with the body, to identification as that Conscious Awareness in which the experience of form is going on. It is the shift of identification from body to Mind. In order to have the first three dimensions, line, plane, space, you must have something else, that which embraces it. Just as in order to have line and plane, you must have space which can embrace it. And your scientist think that time is that which embraces line, plane and space, but it is Mind. You could say the fourth-dimension is Mind. And time is just a convenient means of measuring the Movement of Mind, as it is observed in the line plane and space.

The mark of the beast is ignorance. And ignorance finds expression and support in preoccupation with an acquired sense of identity, based upon appearances, based upon identification with the body. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: The Course has stimulated my curiosity about angels. Never is the word angel in it's singular used in the Course. But always angels and sometimes referred to as hovering near and all about. So my curiosity is about angels.

ANSWER: Divinely speaking, nothing ever happens in the singular. Angels... I'm going to put it this way, angels are Divinely, what nature spirits are humanly, or in the so-called earthly realm. They are Divine natures, present, in support of, the nurturing of all that awakens in you your experience of wholeness, rather than partialness and separation. They are able to register with you, mostly, at what you would call a gut level, a nudge, an inclination to behave in a different way, or do a different thing. You often experience them as an unreasonable good feeling that is there for no reason.

Oh, you are all companioned with, far more greatly than you imagine, because you have never stopped being the Christ that you Are. And that fact confronts you moment by moment in an infinity of different ways.

There are not levels of angels. They do not hold different classifications. And you can experience as much or as little of the Divine Intent of them, as you are willing to allow to register with you. They do not act as guides. But, I am going to say, they function rather as spiritual fertilizer to your budding spirituality, that which nurtures it, and yet does not require you to comprehend it.

Angels do appear in many forms, as ideas, as triggers to clarification, as a gentle reminder to be sweet, as a gentle reminder to be patient with yourselves. And then, indeed, as Presence's that convey to you most distinctly—as happened with my Mother—your purpose at a particular time. Not a special dispensation, but the simple fact of what is going on with you at that time, so that you might be in harmony with it. And there is always an accompanying experience of Divinity when you experience angels, somewhat of the feel that you would associate with a Divine revelation.

They are all around. I'm going to give you another image: They are like the scent lingering in a room that a woman has walked through, almost palpably there, unmistakable, but intangible. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. It's good to be here. I've noticed in different spiritual quests, that the student has the propensity to worship the way-shower, rather than the way. And that has been eliminated in A Course In Miracles, because there is no way-shower to speak of in the physical plane.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Yes. Could you talk a little bit about that aspect, and also the particular trappings of the ego. Can you give a specific way where we can know, differentiating I guess between Thy will and the ego will. Thank you.

ANSWER: Always, when something is of the ego, you will have a feeling somewhere between the chest and the solar plexus of tension or uneasiness, similar to what you might feel or felt as a child when you went down an elevator. When what you are hearing is not of the ego, but is indeed guidance, there will be no sensation of that sort, but peace. The other thing that you cannot forget is, that each one of you has the inherent capacity to recognize Truth.

And I say this over and over, and you might get tired of hearing it, but it is such a simple Truth, and all of you are looking for such complex answers, that you tend to forget that you have this innate capacity, and therefore you do not rely upon it. It doesn't get any exercise, you might say. And because you do not engage it regularly, you do not begin to feel the dependability of it, and thus become comfortable with it.

If you are sleeping at night, and having a dream, and there is someone else in the dream, how could that one possibly show you the way back into your bedroom? You need someone like a mother, or an alarm clock, to occur in the bedroom, not in the dream, to distract you, to get your attention away from the dream. So, the thing that will wake you up, is not something from within the dream.

This is why I have said, the only teacher worth his salt, who is incarnated, is one who is constantly pointing you back to You, and your inherent capacity to recognize Truth. That teacher is worth his salt, who tells you repeatedly, to make that investment of trust in your capacity to recognize truth, that leap of faith that goes beyond confidence and lean into it.

Now, the joining that needs to be done before you join with each other, is with the Holy Spirit, or the Father, or me, or your guide, one who can tell you and encourage you to take that step, or to tell you that that step IS safe, even though you are frightened by it, even though the ego is arguing against it.

“Today I will make no decisions by myself.” Well, you know you had a certain number of years of making decisions by yourself and you are relatively safe. Therefore, if you experiment, if you decide that today you are going to do it differently, you know that you will not suddenly be vulnerable, because you can always fall back upon your developed ability to make judgments, and come to conclusions and decisions, without dying in the process.

A shift must eventually occur. A shift away from self-determination—small “s” self-determination—to capital “S” Self-government. Except, that capital “S” Self-government means, being joined with, in union with, flowing with, being nothing other than the Presence of the Movement of the Father, your Real Selfhood.

We must be careful with language here, however, because when the Father is the only Presence there where you are, you can’t talk about your Selfhood anymore. I only used that term to convey to you, that it will still be you from your standpoint of experience. But it will be you experiencing the Mind of God, from God’s point of view, not from some tiny ego point of view.

Let’s be grounded here. Indeed there are way-showers. It is almost impossible to wake up without help, because the ego definitions of everything are such, that anything smacking of Awakening is interpreted as highly dangerous. And therefore, it is only those with, what you might call great spiritual fortitude, who can cross the barriers set up by the ego.

And God is Love. And your very Being is Love. And that Love embraces you, even in your ignorant limited sense of yourself. And therefore, embraces you. And you could say, even entices you into your Awakened state, because it is the Intent of your Being—with a capital “B”—it is the Intent of that which you Divinely are, to have all of what you are experiencing itself consciously, instead of partially or unconsciously.

Don't try to be too darn independent in your process of Awakening, because it will stifle the process and make it uncomfortable. You do have way-showers. The Father does come out the meet you. Your disowned Divinity smacks you in the face almost, the moment you have a curiosity to experience it and a willingness to let it in. I say smacks you in the face, only in the sense that it's already You, and it's unavoidable as an experience, if you start thinking about and treating yourself as though you were Divine now. Until you have the willingness to yield all the way, you do have help, but you must open up to it and let it in.

And at the bottom line: it is that point of willingness to yield into the Father, "Thy will not mine be done," that the Course is all about. But, indeed, that requires abandoning the intellect and reason. "Oh, that sounds dangerous."

The right use of reason is, to bring you to a point where there is such a conviction in the Allness of God, that you don't feel it necessary to use reason in order to be safe, and you can yield into the Father's will—and as I've said before—regain your Sanity, be You in your Right Mind. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I seem to have a fear, reluctance to make commitment, total commitment, I think general. Could you give me some guidance to help me to make commitment or total commitment?

ANSWER: This is just exactly the situation in which it is absolutely wonderful that there is such a thing called the Holy Spirit. Because, when you need help with something that you seem unable to have the stamina or strength to accomplish, because of doubt, you have something you can ask for help from. And my answer to you is: Desire of the Holy Spirit, that you have the strength and the courage to make commitment.

And I'm going to suggest something else. I'm going to suggest that you ask the Holy Spirit to make that which you want to be committed to, seem so desirable, that it won't be as difficult to make commitment. This is something you need help on. In other words, it isn't something that you need to be able to do all by yourself.

And I want you to know something else. No desire that you put forth to me, or to the Holy Spirit, or to the Father, or to your guide will ever be taken as an imposition, or a bother. I will tell you that, any time we see an act of curiosity, or an act of desire, we rejoice. And I will also say, that whenever desire of this sort is present, the best way I can put it is, that the glow of you, the light of you brightens. We can easily tell when one is stirring from his or her dreams, his or her ignorance, and there is always rejoicing. So, please ask the Holy Spirit for the strength, and the stamina, and the courage to make the commitment.

And I will tell you something else. Commitment will occur when you let go. In other words, as you sit there right now, if you were to completely relax, you would say that you are committed to your chair. You do not have to look at commitment as a struggle, as a hanging on, as a laying hold of something and never letting it go.

You know what? You don't have to lay hold of your Divinity. What you have to do is let go of the belief that it isn't already yours, that you are not already Divine. You could dare to become lazy in your willingness to be distracted easily. And I encourage you to find ways to express this process of becoming lazy, of letting go into a thing, whether it is a job, or whether it is a relationship, or whether it is your Divinity. So that you might discover that you can be committed through an absence of an inclination to be fidgety. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: The last several weeks I have chosen, I suppose, to be troubled by what I see as a greater polarity that's existing. The incidence in Los Angeles, turning on TV and seeing what we call Fundamentalists blasting homosexuals, blasting anyone who disagrees with how they see the world to be. And I have chosen to be troubled by that, and have searched for the meaning in it, and relief from it. And I was hoping you might be able to help me with that.

ANSWER: Well, I'll tell you something, the ego wouldn't be screaming if it wasn't threatened. And if the ego is being threatened, it means something Real is happening. It means that Movement is occurring. And so, I encourage you, instead of homing in on the apparent wailing of the ego and its objections, begin to look to see what it is that is causing the ego to rise up. The ego, indeed, wants to maintain the status quo. Change is not allowed. Acceptance, which is a form of union, is intolerable. Love is, of course, unacceptable.

Change is afoot, you better believe it. And you have been seeing it happening. And the changes that are occurring are not planned, they have been spontaneous events, which everyone has had to huff and puff to keep up with, to stay abreast of. Unrest... you could call unrest the process of unrutting, the end of stupid peace, ignorant peace.

I'm not going to get into predictions here, but I want you to notice that there are some people who are afraid for Perot to become President, because it would obviously require change. And he wants to involve everyone, and not just keep the business of Washington, in Washington. But I will tell you though, it's more important to be afraid of the ones you're all comfortable with, because they've got it all down pat, and it doesn't involve you, and it lets you move along in stupid rest.

The ego would keep you unconscious, not actively engaged with the whole, not actively conscious of your status, let us say, as a citizen, not only of your country but a citizen of the world, and ultimately a citizen of the universe.

The ego is the ultimate of conservatism, and Being is the ultimate of radical creativity. I use the word radical, not in the sense of that which is antagonistically asserting itself for the sake of being different, but rather as an expression of the “forever new,” “forever original,” Movement of Being, that is called God.

Don't be too self-righteous, because I don't see a single one in this room who is radical enough. “Give me my good, but not too much of it, and not too fast.” But at the same time that you're not going to be self-righteous when you look at another, who is expressing his bondage, also don't join that one by being unreasonably conservative.

Dare to discover the originality of your Being, by neglecting to rely upon your memory, and your conditioning, that allows you to function fairly well without being wide awake.

And at the bottom line, realize you are going to have to change. It is a wonderful thing to experience your Christhood. I mean, it is a wonderful thing for you to experience your Christhood. But everyone would like to wait until tomorrow, or dabble in it a little bit today, and maybe a little bit more tomorrow.

What you don't realize is, that when you consciously embrace who and what you really are, you come Home, into an experience of absolute invulnerability, and absolute innocence. So absolute, that the suggestion of guilt being applied to you, is so nonsensical, that it would bring forth gales of laughter from you. That means, that a rather fundamental major change has to occur.

You have to begin to hold yourself guiltless, no matter what has happened. And then you will find yourself holding your fellow man guiltless, also. And that means, that when your fellow man walks around parading a haughty ego, that says “I'm guilty, I'm guilty, I'm guilty, somebody agree with me and call me a bastard.” You will say, “no, that's ridiculous, I can't call you that, because you aren't what you are presenting yourself to be, I will not join you in that point of view. I love you.”

Love is the willingness to recognize, that which is Real in each and everything, each and everyone. That does not mean, love the guilty bastard. It means, love the innocent Son of God or Daughter of God that has to be there before a misperception of guilt can be projected upon him or her. This is so important.

What is a special relationship that the Course speaks of? It is a mutual agreement, a mutual agreement, it takes two or more. A mutual agreement to believe that an untruth is true. To believe that something that God did not create exists, and that will be the standard of truth, that agreement.

And when your fellow man approaches you, or your fellow woman approaches you, saying, “agree with my concept of me,” you must dare to be conscious and alert. You must dare to love, so that you can say, “no, I disagree. You'll have to find someone else, because I insist upon seeing the Truth here.”

This is the way you end the special relationship, by refusing to join with another at the level of his or her illusion.

And what helps you to discern what is illusory and what is Real, is your willingness to become still, to go within, to experience the peace of your Being, to abide in it as consistently as possible, so that you begin to become acquainted with yourself at a level deeper than the surface reactive level of your awareness, that you have treated as though it were the only level.

The most direct route to your fellow man, is right through the center of your being, because that's where you find yourself, and in finding yourself you find your fellow man as well. With feeling you find your fellow man, not with a bunch of intellectual theorems and concepts. Such an approach, would constitute a very different you, from the you you embrace everyday and treat as real.

You know, the statement is, "behold, I stand at the door and knock," and everyone calls out the militia to get rid of the intruder, that which would upset the status quo. change does not have to be strenuous, but if it is resisted, it will hurt. And when you realize that the pressure for change that you feel, is always the pressure of your Divinity, like the center of a flower that pushes out and causes the flower to open. If you recognize that the pressure you feel is the pressure of your Divinity, you will stop resisting it, and more gracefully experience blossoming.

The conservatism you see, and the strenuousnesses that you observe happening in your world, are not something to make judgments upon, but to have the patience to abide with, so that you might have the opportunity to grasp what the underlying movement is, that is causing the ego to be alarmed. And the underlying movement is never the devil, it's always the Christ.

Again, there's only one thing confronting you, it is the Kingdom of Heaven and the Movement of God, either seen correctly or through a glass darkly. Everyone rejoiced at the fall of the Berlin Wall, and the spontaneous actions that led to it's fall. I assure you that East Germany and Russia did not perceive it as the Movement of God—the Movement of God in the hearts of the people, and the yearning for the experience of freedom, that they knew was their birthright. And not even the people planned their spontaneous Movement. Not even the people in Los Angeles calculated the spontaneous Movement.

People need to dare to embrace their world, to be with it and find the God in it, the Presence of God in it. So, instead of saying, "look at everything that's wrong," wonder what the right is, that's illuminating the wrong and bringing it to the surface. Let's not hang crape, because of a misunderstanding of the Movement of God.

The only thing that can uncover the valuelessness of darkness, is light. And the only thing that can uncover the impracticalness of conservativeness, is freedom. Love the Movement. There is a statement, "why stand aghast at nothingness"? Are you going to look at a half empty glass, or a half full glass?

Start looking for the Movement of God, and you will sooner be able to rejoice and lend your weight on the side of Right—with a capital “R.” And Right—with a capital “R”—will take you, and everyone else, beyond the polarities of the limited vision, by providing an new vision that resolves the polarities of the old one. But if you’re going to stand aghast at nothingness, you are just going to feed the problem.

Look for the kernel of Truth in what is happening, and you will be able to share it, and it will be able to be recognized by those who are experiencing the dilemma, and it will dissolve the dilemma. The world needs more people who are recognizing the good that is happening in the apparent upheaval. It is what will encourage them to look for the good in the unrutting that is going to continue to occur and even perhaps anticipate it by being curious, so that then, it isn’t resisted, and can be more graceful. There need to be those who can teach others how to be gracefully in the midst of Movement, or change.

I don’t have to enlist you, because you’re already enlisted. I’m just saying, be aware that you are here, and you are here for a reason, and the reason is to be Conscious. And by virtue of being Conscious, promote greater grace as everything that you have ever wanted comes into view. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a two part question. I don’t understand all of the talk about the ego, it evidently is something that is rather negative. But who or what created the ego?

And then secondly, you mentioned a number of times about a need to wake up, and that we are asleep. Who or what... how did this sleep begin? And is it something like a “Midsummer Nights Dream,” where we were given a potion? And how and when did all this ignorance begin and why?

ANSWER: Now you know why I picked her.

There is something in the very debts of each one of you, that says that pain, suffering, grief, loss, lack, misery and on and on, do not represent essential fundamental realities of life. If you did not feel that, you would never take any steps to contradict or overcome those things. You would embrace them as aspects of the essence of existence. You would embrace them and you would not experience them as uncomfortable or undesirable.

And so, every man and woman and child reaches for something beyond those experiences. Now is this reaching beyond just some organismic mechanical response, or is it because there is something essentially Divine about every single one of you, and you know it, and you know that your birthright is greater than what you are experiencing. I will tell you that it is the latter.

So, how is it that you have come to have an experience with elements in it that do not represent the Truth about existence? It is not really as complicated as one might think. And it is important for all of you to know that the sense of sin and guilt that has been attached to it, or associated with it, doesn't represent Truth either.

I'm going to put it very simply. As Consciousness or Mind—as a shall I say, a mental being, not even a mental being—but as mental being, as the conscious experience of being conscious, you are as I mentioned earlier fourth-dimensional—Mind Being that which embraces the first three dimensions.

Now the simple fact is, that it is possible for you to experience the one and only thing going on, the Kingdom of Heaven, or Reality, the Movement of God, from any one of the four dimensions. And the choice to view it from a perspective other than that which is natural to you, does not constitute an error, or a sin, or a state of defiance of God. Everyone simply has the opportunity to explore or experience the one thing that is going on from more than one vantage point.

However, when one, shall I say, shifts from the fourth-dimensional perception, to the third—which is accomplished by identifying with and as the body, that is the visibility and tangibility of your specific identity—as that shift of identification occurs, all of a sudden you see things differently. You no longer see yourself as embracing it all. You no longer experience yourself as the infinite Presence that is infinitely identified as All That Is. And you feel like one little part of All That Is, that is in the middle of infinity. And indeed, that's an interesting experience.

But because of the sense of tininess, and because the Movement of the Kingdom of Heaven is infinite, and therefore, this infinity that is around you is constantly moving, you feel vulnerable. Now, the reason you feel vulnerable, is not because you are in the wrong place, it is not because you are feeling disobedient, it is because you are not in your natural state of Mind. It is like being off balance, it won't kill you, but it isn't comfortable.

If one doesn't recognize that the feeling of imbalance is a reminder that you are not at Home—that you are not in your normal state of Mind—and you remain there in the partial view, you begin to feel a need for self-protection. And because there is a certain sense of integrity that you have brought with you, there is a sense of your being able to be equal to whatever threat there might be. And thus, there develops what you could call a valuing of challenge. And the moment you accept the challenge, you're hooked.

The involvement with this frame of reference, this way of seeing, this sense of oneself being in the middle of infinity that is moving, and which may not be moving in a way that is harmonious and to your best interest. You, as I said, take up the challenge, and in the excitement of the ongoing challenge you no longer realize that the uneasiness you are feeling is a simple reminder that you are not in your normal frame of Mind, and there is Home to go back to. You forget about Home. And you become engrossed in living life from a limited perception.

And that is where you are, in a limited frame of reference, that does not constitute a sin, that is not deserving of punishment and which calls for a simple thing, remembering Home. And remembering that you are not guilty for indulging in the partial view. And therefore, there is not a penalty that has to be paid before you can return Home.

Now, there is an element here that I have left out, which I will now bring into the picture, and that is, that in order to move into the limited frame of reference—the third-dimensional frame of reference—and remain there, you must find someone to do it with. You must find someone who will agree with you about what you are experiencing, and who will agree that it is real, and with whom you can enjoy a certain camaraderie. And that joining becomes a marriage, if you will, it involves a commitment. And as long as the two of you maintain that commitment, you will be effectively blocked from returning Home, because if you do, without the agreement of your partner, you will be letting your partner down.

Again, none of this constitutes a sin, even though I have, let us say, “in modern terms” just described to you what has been called the fall of man, to which the judgment of sinner has been attached, and that, indeed, you are unworthy of returning Home. The longer you remain in the partial point of view, the more confining it becomes, and the more it insists that there is no out for you, there is no way out, there is nothing to get out to.

So no, it didn't take a potion. It just took a curiosity, we will say, to experience a partial view of infinity, and join with another in agreement as to the concept that what is being experienced is all there is. That is why it is so important to join with the Holy Spirit, or to join with the Father, or to join with me, with someone or something that is totally Awake, not bound by any of the perceptions that you are experiencing from the partial view. Because your reference point then is larger, your anchor is anchored in the undistorted Conscious experience of Being, providing you a life line to follow when it is difficult for you to recognize the way.

You must understand that what has held you in bondage, is the sense of guilt that follows the sense of disobedience, which follows the experience of vulnerability. After all, you did it! You chose! It's your fault! You're guilty! You deserve the penalty! So now, serve your term, and then maybe, maybe, by the grace of God you will be able to get back. This concept has bound you, and that is why I am sharing with you your innocence, this is why I am confirming it to you.

The ego is simply the sense of yourself that you acquire from observing yourself and your interaction with the world from this limited perception, this three-dimensional only frame of reference. You say, “this is me. That is not me. I am me. She is not me. I am here. That is there. I cannot feel the wall over there, but I can feel the chair here, therefore there is space, and I can't possibly be connected with that, but I can be connected with this,” and on and on and on.

As you begin to gather this kind of data, you develop a picture of yourself, and you also develop behaviors in dealing with it, and all of these become glued together, if you will, into a sense of your identity as a body, and as a finite separated entity. That is what I am referring to as the ego. It is a distinct sense of who you are, that does not take into account the infinite Consciousness, or Mind, that you Really Are, that which is identical with, identical to the Father, that which is the Father, the infinite Mind, the infinite Intelligence, and constitutes your Real Identity.

And so, in order to wake up, in order to remember Home, in order to escape the apparently real confines of the three-dimensional only frame of reference, you need to hear from someone who can help you give yourself permission. You need to hear someone tell you of the Truth about you, so that it might take on more substance than your faith in your current sense of yourself, who can tell you of your innocence, so that in the face of your obvious guilt—from your point of view—you may say, “if I am the Child of God, I must be guiltless. And it is as inappropriate for me to suffer from guilt, as it is for me to suffer from pain, or disease, or loss, etc.

Now, the only time your limited point of view becomes, as the Course says, an attack on God, is when you begin to remember the Truth about you and feel it, and then insist upon consciously ignoring it. But you know what? It still doesn't make it the truth. And therefore, you still haven't sinned. And you are still therefore guiltless. And still the only thing that is called for, is giving yourself permission to wake up, giving yourself permission to abandon paying the penalty, that could only seem to be valid, because you are indulging in a partial view, a limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven.

My life, said, you are my brothers and my sisters, if you have seen me, you have seen the Father, therefore, if I have seen you, or if you have seen you, you have seen the Father, you are guiltless. There are those who thought I was a rebel rouser. There are those for whom my simple presence was unsettling to the point, that the best decision that could be come to, was to get rid of me. But I was guiltless.

The ego can always find justification for protecting itself from that which threatens it, but it never makes it true. And the reason your prisons are full of “the guilty ones,” is simply because no one knows how to approach them in a way that uncovers to them their Divinity, so that they don't continue to identify themselves inappropriately and behave in a self-protective manner that hurts others. The only reason one has his body cut to heal him, is because no one knows how to heal yet without injuring further. But it isn't the ultimate, it is just an expression of current ignorance. You shoot a horse, because you do not yet know how to save the horse. Not because it is the appropriate thing to do to the poor horse. I'm not trying to make you feel guilty.

So, I am here, and the Course is here, to confirm to those who are responding to an inner movement, that is uncovering to them an inner conviction as to their Divinity and as to their guiltlessness, so that you might abandon the sentence you are giving yourself of guilty, and of having to pay for your guilt. If you knew that you were not guilty, you would not defend yourself, you would not behave in a defensive manner, you would all become much less offensive, much more lovable. Society would change, and the change would be greater than the sum total of the individual parts, because the conscious embracing of your innocence as a fact, and your curiosity to experience it as a fact, is the leaven that leavens to whole lump.

As I said earlier today, it's the withdrawal from joining in the dream, joining in the ignorant view point. And as withdrawal from it occurs, break down of the elements of the dream, or the ignorance occurs, and revelation begins to spontaneously happen.

And that's how the fall is undone. Everyone has needed to know for a very long time, that the fall could only have been conceived of as a fall from a limited perspective, because the Father looks on each and every one of you and sees His Self-expression.

And if you are having a little fantasy of incompleteness, it does not bother Him, because it doesn't change what you Really Are. And therefore, you are not held away, you do not have to pass a test to come back Home consciously. And that's what you need to understand, that you can indulge in a fantasy through the use of imagination, and it does not constitute a sin, and even if you believe that your fantasy is the truth it doesn't change what Truth is. And therefore, nothing, no-thing has occurred, which requires retribution.

God is not the least bit confused. Your essential Being, the infinite One that you Are, is not confused. And Reality, the Reality of you, and the Reality of God, is pressuring you by insinuating itself into your Conscious Awareness to once again embrace yourself as innocent, and as Real, and as far more than what you are currently experiencing and calling you. The essence of you is present at this moment, in what you call your limited sense of self. It is!

And as you learn of, through experience, the more of you that is present, you will not find yourself dropping anything except a misperception. The body will not disappear, the universe will not disappear, your misperception of it will. Your sense of it being constituted of independent parts will vanish, and you will experience all of it in it's Unity, it's Moving Unity. And as impossible as it may sound to you, you will experience yourself in all of it, it will all be you.

If you, as you sit in this room, were to close your eyes, you would still experience the seat you are sitting in, you would still experience your body, you would still experience the sound, but you would not experience the sight of it. Well, could that constitute a sin, punishable by death and suffering. No! It does constitute a limitation, you could say one fifth of your senses are gone, not available to you. But because you closed your eyes, you can open them again, but no one is going to tell you that you have to. No one is going to tell you that you have to wake up. You see, your free-will cannot be overridden, you have to open your eyes because you want to. After all, you were the one that closed them. And there is nothing wrong with having them closed, divinely speaking, except that you experience a form of limitation, that it is not your birthright to experience.

As you go home today, the thing I want you to have foremost in your mind, is the fact that you are not guilty of anything that you must pay a penalty for before you can reaccess your Right Mind, your experience of the Kingdom of Heaven. Again, you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it. You are at that point, and must understand yourself there from.

When you open up your eyes, you will find that “the fall” never happened, as a fact. That the limitation wasn’t real as a fact, even though it seemed real as a experience. And that you were always as free to make the choice for your Right Mind, as you were free to make a choice for a limited perception. The fact that you seem to be caught, is simply that you stayed in the limited perception long enough to forget what the lack of balance meant, the uneasiness. And you began to take it on as a challenge to be overcome, instead of a simple reminder that you were not in your natural frame of Mind. If anything, that would call for compassion on our part, not judgment.

This gives all of you great justification for desiring to know the Truth about everything. Because the Truth, in spite of what you fear, will not convict you, but will prove your innocence. And therefore, your total freedom to change your mind. That’s all that is called for. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Well, since I have a question, I have a two part. One is in your book Graduation, could you tell us how to live from the gift aspect more in our own lives. Do you know what I mean?

And the other is, talking like this the way we do with questions and answers, it’s sort of an intellectual process. Could you show us how to feel that Jesus is present with us when he is?

ANSWER: Don’t belittle the only means you have at the moment to open up to guidance. Indeed, it may seem intellectual, but it is very hard for any of you to express a desire without focusing it with words. And so, let your questions come forth in words, and do not demean it by labeling it intellectual, because what is going to happen next after you’ve asked the question, is you’re going to be still and listen, which is not an intellectual process, but a sensing or Soul process, you might say.

And of course, really the key is to stop asking the question once you’ve asked it. Very often you ask, and then after having asked the question, you list all the justifications behind having asked the questions, and the inconsistencies and the injustices that have led to your having to ask the question in the first place, and you seldom get around to listening.

Your questions always arise out of some level of uncomfortableness. They arise out of a feeling of lack of some form or another. So you might say, “am I not substantiating the lack by asking or complaining?” No, because the lack that you are feeling is a threshold you are on. If you would imagine being in a corral that is five miles in diameter, and you are somewhere in the middle, and it is hilly terrain, it might seem to you that you could go to the horizon without running into a limit, because you can’t see the fence that is five miles away from you. And as you begin to enjoy your freedom and move about, you find sooner or later that you bump into this fence that was there all along, but which you were not conscious of.

Now, the tendency all of you have when you run into a fence, is to say, “what did I done wrong? Well, I must have created this for myself.” And you will get into a process of blame, blame and self-doubt, self-criticism, etc., instead of simply noticing the fence and saying, “wow, here’s something to jump over, or crawl under, or knock down.” When you are finally feeling a limit, it is not because you have done something wrong, but because you have expanded to the point that you are able to recognize its presence, which means you are at the only place it can be crossed over. Until you got there, you couldn’t violate it,—if I may put it that way—it wasn’t available to climb over, or get beyond.

So, when you come to a place of uncomfortableness, or a feeling of lack of some sort, it is because there has been growth. And your growth has brought you to the place where an apparent limit has come to your attention. Now, just as with this illustration of the fence, when you arrive at this limit, you can see that there is something beyond it. And so, at the very same time that you come up to the limit, you recognize that it’s illegitimate. You recognize that it isn’t really an absolute limit, because you can see beyond it. And so, you have within you the perspective necessary to give you the gumption to disregard what the fence apparently says, which is, “stay inside.”

And so, every time you come up against a sense of lack, you are at a threshold of greater abundance, and the reason you are there is because you have grown. Like a chick who has had lots of room for many, many, many days, no sense of enclosure, but there comes that point where that which protected it, you might say, becomes a prison, it becomes tight, it becomes uncomfortable. What would you think if the chick said, “well, I must have created this for myself. Maybe even in a past life. Whatever it is, it’s my fault.” The necessity at that point is to violate the limit.

You need to begin to have a more positive sense about what your ego wants to complain about and use as justification for continuing ignorance. So, ask your questions. Do not define them as intellectual, and therefore, as that which may lead you further away from what you desire, because your growth has brought you to the point where this apparent limit is. And therefore, as I said, you are at a threshold of growth. And if you will refrain from the reaction that the ego would bring into play, you will find that the gumption is there that is sufficient to get over the fence, to dishonor it, and move on.

Now, there is only one way you can get into the gift giving mode, and that is to care enough to love. And you really only have one thing that you can give, the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. You are either giving that gift, or you are withholding it. And if you are withholding it, you are engaging in judgment. And although everyone else is likely to say that your practice of judgment against them hurts them, I will be very frank with you, the only one it hurts, is you, because everyone else is responsible for how they are choosing to see you, and whether they are giving the gift of love. And if you all join each other in judgment, and are withholding the gift, you will be a miserable lot together. And you will seem to reinforce for each other, your point of view. You will seem to substantiate that love is not what is called for, but defense. And there is only one thing that will break that dilemma, and that is someone daring to make the gift, someone willing to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R.” I mean by that, the essential Divine essence of whatever they are looking at.

You know, you get things backwards, and it’s understandable. Everyone thinks that the gift is for the other person. Everyone thinks that the beneficiary of the gift is the receiver of the gift. But the real beneficiary of the gift, is the one who is giving without a purpose, without an ulterior motive attached to it. Because there is something that happens when you give the gift of love, when you are willing to acknowledge that which is Real in each and everything. First of all, in your willingness to do that, you are being absolutely congruent with the very nature of your own Being, which means that you are not conflicted within yourself. And you are experiencing it while you are engaged in living in your world.

You know what? You cannot give this gift in isolation. You cannot give the gift of love without considering something more than just yourself. It is impossible! And so, the giving of the gift always constitutes a joining. And naturally it constitutes a joining with that which is Real, rather than whatever ego presentation may be sent your way.

So, the first benefit, you might say, is experiencing congruence within yourself. The second benefit is that, in experiencing and Being and embodying that which you Divinely Are—which is the Presence of the active expression of Love—you are withdrawing from the mutual agreement, that everyone has to behave like egos and function in a reactive manner. And in this way, everyone else is blessed, because your withdrawal from that groupness, weakens the mutual agreement of the group. Meaning, that it becomes easier for everyone else in the group to abandon their conviction as to what everything is. But that is just a side effect.

Now, I say you get everything backwards, because the same thing applies to forgiveness. Everyone thinks that it's the other one who is forgiven, that it is some blessing that you are giving to some poor miserable wretch. Some gift! Because you are still seeing that person as a poor miserable wretch, that your wonderful love is benefiting. That's self-righteousness, actually. And it doesn't do one thing to transform the apparently miserable wretch, or the one with the miserable eyes that's seeing the wretch, out of the wretchedness.

Forgiveness is the withdrawal of judgment on the part of the one doing the judging. It happens when you arrive at a point where you are exhausted from being conflicted within yourself, exhausted from trying to get revenge. Except that you say, exhausted from trying to get justice, and how unjust it is that you can't get justice. It is a point at which you become so tired of the process, that you withdraw from attack, which judgment is. And you are willing to abandon your definition of a Son of God and come to peace within yourself, then you have the opportunity to be the Presence of Love, which says, "I am willing to recognize that which is Real."

If you're willing to recognize that which is Real,--with a capital "R"—it means that something has become active in you, which I referred to yesterday, curiosity. A curiosity to get beyond your very definite definition about that person, and all of the justifications for your definition, so that you might have a new experience within yourself. You must understand that, because Love is never a means of controlling someone else into what you think their good is. Love is never leverage. It is omnipotent. It is all powerful. But it is not power to be used over something else.

You know where the power comes from? The power comes from the indivisibility of the integrity of you, that you are experiencing when you have abandoned the conflicted stance of judgment. That is called invulnerability. And it is called sovereignty. But it is always a sovereignty that does not have to be exercised over something else. It is your experience of such immovable stability, that there is no possibility of threat, and therefore you can stand there present in absolute defenselessness.

Now, what happens? When you are experiencing defenselessness you become a benign presence, no shell around you, and everyone breaths a sigh of relief. Your defenselessness... Your innocence... Who's innocence? Not theirs, your innocence is so obvious that no one else feels any need for defense, or feels a greatly lessened need for defense. And so, they begin to abandon their feeling of their need to be in a stance ready for attack. And if all of this was being recorded on a video tape, it would look as though somebody had done something that changed everything. When all that happened was, the act of forgiveness. Not a forgiveness that says, "I forgive you for being the bastard that you are."

Every single one of you until you are Awake, are to one degree or another, protecting yourselves, and thus, acting in an unfriendly manner toward each other. And socially you tend to gather together in groups of, shall I say, equal unkindness. And so, you have some groups that are obviously more unkind to each other, rougher, you might say, than others. And you're so glad you're in one that is less rough, a sign of your spiritual progress.

And your process of Awakening, is your process of forgiving, abandoning judgment within yourself, finding it more important to experience your balance and your peace, than it is to get justice. And in the process, truly beginning to see that your degree of unkindness is the same degree as the harsher degrees, it's just expressed in a different language. And you, as well as those who are functioning at a more intense level of unkindness, are suffering from an unjust imposition upon your recognition of your Divinity, that you are the direct expression of God. Then you have compassion, and your beingness increases, and you do not thank your lucky stars that you are in a less unkind group than someone else, and you will not see yourself as better off than they, and your oneness will become more apparent to you, and you will be more willing to help, you will be more willing to not engage in the judgment that holds everyone else in their feeling of a need for judgment and defense.

And again, I must point out to you, that as each one does this, no matter how little the steps are that are taken, the cumulative affect is always greater than the individual parts that have joined together in the expression of greater kindness.

So remember, forgiveness really has nothing to do with the one who is being forgiven. And it is never a matter of saying, "I love you, and your ego behavior. Keep stomping on me, I love you anyway." That isn't what it's about. "You're a crotchety old man, but I love you anyway. I know you'll never change, but I love you anyway." That's attack! And you will find that one changing, when you withdraw the judgment, and be the benign presence that undermines that ones conviction that his judgment and his stance of attack is justified.

But again, remember that you're not doing it to change anyone. It will not work, because it's your perception that needs to be cleared. It is your choice to have a perception different from God's point of view, that causes you to experience the Kingdom of Heaven right here, as though it is a material universe, a struggle of an existence, and a place to achieve a sense of integrity and pride, because you have overcome the struggle.

And so, it is you who's perception needs to change. And because all of this, that is seen in such a screwed up way is really the Kingdom of Heaven, your shift of perception will cause you to see more of the Kingdom of Heaven that it is. And you may stand aghast a little bit, at the miracle that has happened. And more of you need that experience. To have a miracle to be surprised at. Where something that you knew couldn't change, has changed. And once you realize that the change has occurred, because you have expressed a little willingness to see what is Real, and there has been a little bit of curiosity, and you have withdrawn judgment, you'll begin to get the idea. And you won't try to change anything out there, again. And you will begin to attend, with curiosity, to your own process of becoming more and more congruent with your Being.

The more clear you are about yourself, the more clear you will be about everyone else. And surprisingly enough, the more you will find everyone else being clear about themselves. Now, don't get hung up on who's responsible for the change, else your ego will jump in there and say, "look at what you did. You have wrought a miracle. Good for you! You have moved to a level of lesser unkindness." But we're not talking about moving to different levels of unkindness, we're talking about abandoning that sense of levels entirely, and being the Presence of what you Are, the congruent, indivisible, unconflicted Presence of Love, that says, "not my will, not my point of view, not my pet theories, not my pet concepts, not my highest sense of truth, but Thine be done."

We might as well discuss another point. Waking up is humiliating. Be aware of it from the outset. When the ego is humiliated, the Divine One that you are that is the presence of humility comes forth. Be aware that the very active sense of yourself that you have engaged in and developed and refined over the years, will have to vacate the premises, so that the rightful inhabitant can come forth. And your ego will indeed, feel as though it is being made unimportant. And it will feel as though you are having to abandon yourself. And you will have to abandon it in favor of a Self, capital "S," that you don't have a backlog of memories of. And therefore, it will feel as though you are yielding into something that is not you. And it will feel insecure.

But it is very important for you to understand, that when you arrive at the point where you are in this dilemma, you are like the person who has moved around and experienced his freedom, and come up to a fence that he didn't know was there. You will have the dilemma, because you have grown. And you will also be at a point where your vision goes beyond the apparent limit. You will have a sense of identity that goes beyond the accumulated habit patterns and thought patterns that you have identified as you. And therefore, there will be an accompanying strength, an accompanying conviction of safety, that will allow you to continue forward.

I point this out, not so that you will anticipate hard work, but so that you will not misinterpret any hard work that you encounter, as an indicator that something is wrong, rather that it is just the flaring up of your egos sense of righteous indignity, that it is being ignored and not valued or validated.

You know what? All of you who are students of the Course know that the ego is a defense mechanism, plain, pure and simple. And that's it! Attack it, and you'll loose. The one thing the ego cannot defend itself against, is disregard. That is why Awakening is effortless.

How do you disregard it? You disregard it, by giving your attention elsewhere. And that is why the Course speaks so consistently about joining, joining with the Holy Spirit, joining with the Father, joining with me, joining with those who are acting on your behalf, which I have referred to as guides, who are Totally Awake. You give your attention in a new place, and you do it by joining, especially since the formation of the ego was caused and is substantiated by an active attempt to be independent and different from everything else.

The ego being a defense mechanism, is what you might call, a movement of hate, an act of attack. But we must be careful here, because the words that I just used can seem to personify the ego as though it had a will, as though it had an actual presence. It does not. You give it all the life it has, because you have life in you. And the life in you, is the Life that is God.

The ego, you could say, makes suggestions, just as a hypnotist does. It says, "watch out, he's going to get you. Oh, your mother-in-law is coming over, be on guard." It just whispers in your ear. Now, even those words seem to suggest that the ego has enough presence and intelligence to formulate the suggestions. In actuality, those suggestions are spontaneous awarenesses arising out of ignorance, based upon memory. And it occurs because you are relying upon memory and the past, in order to come to intelligent conclusions about your present.

Now, again, there's only one thing going on at this very moment, at any moment, in any place, and that's the Presence of God being All That There Is. And the only thing confronting you or anyone else, is the Kingdom of Heaven or Reality, whatever word you want to use. When I use the words Kingdom of Heaven or Reality, I'm not talking about a religious sense of the Kingdom of Heaven. I am talking about the actual Presence of an indivisible and therefore, unconflicted First Cause. Which therefore, must be an infinite manifestation of perfection, which necessarily must move or have movement, because it is the act of Creation.

Now, you are confronted with the Kingdom of Heaven, and You who are confronted by the Kingdom of Heaven, are the Christ, are again, not a religious term Christ, but the Presence of this indivisible, and therefore, unconflicted, perfectly harmonious God. And this indivisible, unconflicted, perfectly harmonious God, that is infinite Intelligence, infinite Mind, has withheld nothing of what He is from His Self-expression. Therefore, if you are going to disregard the ego, which it cannot defend itself against, this Kingdom of Heaven, and this Christ that you are, must be leaned into, if I may put it that way, felt into. And you will not do it with your mind. You will do it with feelings.

And for some of you this will be repetitious, but it must be said so that you understand. Feelings are Soul sensings. Reactions or emotions are ego actions. Learn to be distinctly clear about this, so that you do not use the words feelings and emotions interchangeably. Feelings are your Soul capacity—S-o-u-l capacity—to feel the Divine meaning of Everything That Is. Emotions are the egos reaction to all that Really Is, when it doesn't conform, when It—all that it Really Is—doesn't conform to the egos definition of reality. Because, of course, the spontaneous original Movement of Creation never repeating itself, is never going to be able to be pegged by a definition that the ego has given. And therefore, the egos definitions are going to be constantly undermined. And that's why the ego is always uncomfortable.

Now, we have apparently traveled a long way from the question. But we haven't, because all that I have spoken about is the natural outcome of the giving of the gift. It starts by being willing to be the Presence of Love. Which necessarily means, that you must engage in forgiveness, the withdrawal of judgment. And the result of that is the opening of your eyes, and the apparent transformation of your world, and the unavoidable new experience of who you Are.

So, don't ever again, demean your intellectual question. It can open the door to infinity, as long as you don't get hung up on the question, and listen for the answer.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I was listening to a tape that was done at a previous workshop, and there were references on the tape to the fact that we would not be coming back, and that this was perhaps our last round. What I'm wondering is, is that the last round for everybody on earth? Is that the last round for those of us who are closer to graduation, or what? And also, what do we do after that? Do we go get incarnated on some far-off planet out in some other galaxy? Or does that really mean, that we are at the edge of the "happy dream," or Reality, or where and you and the Masters are?

ANSWER: Indeed, this is the last incarnation for everyone. Awakening is occurring. What this means is, that you will not go through a process of incarnation again. In other words, you will not go through a birth process, in which you seem to lose your awareness of Home. And the reason is because,-- and this is the simplest way I can put it—there are more of us—and I am including all of you in the word us—there are more of us who are Awake than there are those who are asleep. Now, let's not become technical in your thinking about this. The simple fact is, that there are not enough joined in the dream of a partial experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, to maintain it any longer. And this experience of ignorance is weakening. The very fact that you are here today interested in what we are speaking about, is an indication that the dream is breaking up.

And when I speak of Awakening, do not be too limited in your thinking, because I am not referring just to those incarnated on your planet. I am including also those who have passed on, but still are indulging in a partial view of Reality. Everyone is going to wake up, because of a lack of sufficient mutual agreement about the definitions that seem to substantiate further dreaming.

Now, what this means is, that indeed, you will have the opportunity to experience planet earth, but you will not have to go through a birth process to do it, and you will not experience any degree of ignorance in doing so.

What you cannot comprehend, but which I can share with you is: That the undistorted conscious experience of Being—I mean by that, Divine Awakened Being—is at one and the same time universal and specific. Right now you could say that you are experiencing specific, localized awareness. And the reason you feel as though you are inside a huge universe, trapped in limitation, is because you are not accessing your universal awareness, because you are identifying with such fixation on this particular form.

I will tell you, that I could appear right here beside Paul, in a form that you would recognize, like Paul's. I could appear here next to Paul as a body of Light. And even without appearing, I can be here in the sense that you know of being here, and experience planet earth without incarnating, without going through a birth process, and without seeming to become submerged in sensory data, and reaction to sensory data. In other words, I can be here Awake. And what I am here to tell you is, that you can be here Awake. And it is that shift of awareness into being Awake, that you are all currently engaged in, period. And I am confirming it to you, and encouraging you to continue.

Now, although nothing disappears when you wake up, you do not experience it in the way you experience it now, because you are not providing your acquired definitions and meanings to everything, and you are experiencing it from God's point of view. More than that, more than experiencing the world and universe—I will say the material world and universe, as you are currently defining it—more than experiencing it as the Kingdom of Heaven, you will also be experiencing yourself without limit.

And what is important to you right now, will not be important to you then, because what is important to you right now, relates almost entirely to survival. And threat to your survival will not be a part of your conscious awareness, and so you will not be engaged in surviving, you will be engaged in Being. And what will you be engaged in Being? You will be engaged in Being the Conscious Awareness of God. This means that what will get your attention is, the Movement of "Behold I make all things new." You will find yourself—and I must use images that have meaning to you—riding the crest of the wave of the Movement of Creation, and experiencing yourself as that Movement.

And although you will be able to be conscious of yourself in the universal sense of that Movement, you will also be aware of yourself specifically. Now, when I say that, I mean that, the Individuality that you Are, is identified specifically as your body, but the Individuality that you infinitely Are, is identified as the Creation of God, the infinite Creation of God. And you will find that there will be times when you will—I'm going to say—observe or experience things from the specific vantage point, and times when you will experience it from the universal vantage point. And what this amounts to, is a shift of emphasis. Because when you experience it from a specific vantage point, you don't sacrifice the universal vantage point. And when you experience everything from your universal vantage point, you will not be unconscious of the specific vantage point.

Now, it is not too useful to continue describing this further, because it is not comprehensible at the moment. The key thing in answer to your question is, that instead of engaging in survival, your attention will be involved in riding the crest of the wave of the Movement of Creation. And being conscious of the fact that you ARE the crest of the wave of the Movement of Creation. And you ARE the Creation that is inseparable from the Movement of Creation. It will all be your conscious experience of Being, because that is God's experience of Being. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It is really an honor to be here, with this amazing event.

ANSWER: It is an honor to be anywhere. Let your curiosity be present so that you might experience the Divinity of any place that you are, even in the "Magic Kingdom." Continue...

QUESTION: It seems to me that a lot of things that you've been talking about, on the limits, and the place where you get to humiliation and all that. Like I seem to be in a lot of that place in my life, but I'm lacking direction in two particular areas that are making my life difficult. One is: A relationship with my significant other. And the other is in the form of work. And I was wondering what direction I might take to make these situations in a better way, to fulfill my purpose, cause I feel like I really don't know what my purpose is, and where I ought to be focusing it. Sometimes I think I missed the piece of information that I needed to put it together.

ANSWER: There is a fine line that all of you must walk. Because if you are going to look at everything and be willing to acknowledge that nothing that you see means anything, you can get into trouble, because you can arrive at a point of believing that everything is meaningless. And if something is meaningless, it is purposeless. Everything has meaning, more correctly, everything is meaning expressed, and the meaning is derived from the Creative Movement of God.

The reason for saying, “nothing that I see means anything,” is so you can find an effective means of getting past the meaning you have given to it, and be open to the conscious experience of the meaning, set into motion by the Father. Don’t abandon the meaning that a thing has for you, until new meaning has been revealed that constitutes an excellent replacement. And this is the fine line you must walk in order not to become fanatical, in order not to become intelligent, in order not to become radical to the point where you say, “because this is all meaningless, it doesn’t mean anything if I stepped on this woman’s foot, or bumped into that car, or neglected to give my children dinner last night.” You know what? The Divine will of the Father, always meets each of you right where you are, in language of your present perception, or we could say, in language of your present misperception, because that’s what you understand.

All of you express Love, whether it is totally unconditional or not, you know what love is, you know what it feels like, and you do express it. You cannot say that it is meaningless and that it is nothing, because it isn’t pure unconditional love. It is the clearest expression of Divine Love that you can manage to express, while at the same time, defending yourself against your perception of a hostile world.

What I am pointing out is, that the degree of love, or the degree of intelligence that you are expressing at this moment, even if it isn’t the undistorted Presence of Intelligence and Love that the Father is and that you therefore truly Are, it is still that Divine Love and that Intelligence that you are expressing. What you need to do is arrive at a point where you no longer believe that the intelligence or love that you are expressing, is the totality of the love or intelligence that you have to express.

Then you can dare to say, “nothing that I see means anything,” and you can be willing to let go of your confidence in your definition of it. You can dare to let go of your definition of intelligence, and your definition of love, and your definitions of responsibility, in order to experience an influx of inspiration, of revelation that can replace your current definition of those things.

Now, Paul can verify this. The fact is that just because you have a revelation of truth, doesn’t mean that you are immediately willing to embrace it. It doesn’t mean that your problems are suddenly solved. Why? Because the revelation of Truth requires you to give up some of your beliefs, some of your ignorance’s that you have loved and been comfortable with. And you release them slowly, you argue and you fight for that with which you are familiar. Indeed, there is a greater need for some of the adventurer explorer attitude, where there is a curiosity to experience the new.

Now, I will tell you that the first thing you need, relative to both of these areas of your life, is your peace, your fearlessness, your ability to be minus the experience of fear. I’m aware that under the circumstances, the circumstances seem to call for fear, uneasiness, self-doubt, the tendency to blame the situation on yourself, rather than, as I said earlier, to recognize that you are at this point because of growth. And you are therefore, at a threshold of a clearer view of Reality, and a clearer experience of yourself.

This seems like a ridiculous time to take the time to find your peace. There seems to be urgencies to be attended to. But if you attend to the urgencies unconsciously, because you're not in your peace, you will do it in a haphazard way. Whereas, if you choose for your peace first, you will do it more gracefully and more quickly.

When you are choosing for your peace, and you sit down to become still, whether you sit in a lotus position, or whether you sit in a chair in a posture of prayer, whether you are prostrated on the floor in abject humility. If you take the time to be still, you will access your peace. And in accessing it, in experiencing it, you provide yourself with a choice, that didn't seem to be available to you, when you were judging according to the circumstances that seemed to need to be met. In having the choice as a conscious experience, you then can make the choice for your peace, and bring your peace with you after the meditation or the prayer, back into your relationship, and back into your practice of curiosity to observe your world reconfiguring to identify fulfillment of purpose called, job, career, employment.

You see, when you all make the choice for your peace and connect with it, even if it is for ten minutes only, for that period of time, that you are experiencing your peace, you are also experiencing your Integrity. And that's more important than you might think. It's important, because when you are out of your peace, and you are in a reactive state, reacting to relationships, or job situations, etc., the trouble in the relationship, and the absence of employment, can seem to reflect upon your Integrity, calling it into question, and creating in you self-doubt, that can't be there when you are experiencing your Integrity.

The value of this is, that you have the opportunity to discover that even if you are unemployed, even if your job situation is teetering, and your well-being and your families well-being seems to be threatened, and even if your relationship is lacking in some way that seems to threaten the stability of the marriage or the home, your experience of your Integrity is still available to you. When you are experiencing your peace, you are unavoidably also experiencing your integrity as intact. This is very important, because it gives you an experience of the fact that your Integrity is unaffected by what your ego defines and those things that give you integrity.

The fact that your Integrity is intact and available to you as an experience, when all of the things are gone, that your ego tells you gives you integrity, uncovers to you your sovereignty, that isn't dependent upon what is or isn't going on in your world. And there is where your security lies. You can tell yourself that you have integrity till you're blue in the face. You can tell yourself that you are the Son of God, that you are the direct expression of the Father, that the Father has withheld nothing of Himself from His Self-expression called you, and therefore, your integrity is intact, but that will not give you the experience.

If you talk fast enough and hard enough to block out your egos undermining suggestions, you may well arrive at a sense of stability that keeps you going. But it takes a great effort and will to do that, when you're simply becoming still and going within to the peace of you that is ever present, it is this that connects you with your Integrity, that's inviolable, that gives you your peace, that gives you your experience of inviolableness. Then you don't even have to have courage, because every move you make is made from a place of Integrity. When you are being from that place, it will be transformational to the relationship. And you will find yourself spontaneously being where you need to be for your career, or your job to be recognized.

The need here is for your peace, because that is what will help you move gracefully through the seeming limit or lack that your growth has brought you to. It can be a most wonderful and enjoyable experience, if you will do it from your peace, where your sense of your Integrity isn't threatened. More distracting than the relationship and job situation, is the job the ego is doing on you, to call your Integrity into question, because you're faced with these circumstances, that is more wearing to you than anything that is actually happening. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I wonder if you could make a confirmation for me? I have been receiving communion with one who I presume to be my guide, and her name I think is Agnus. If you could just confirm that?

And one other thing: Could you discuss true empathy?

ANSWER: Discuss?

QUESTION: True empathy, as it is discussed in The Course In Miracles, or expand on it.

PAUL: Okay, this enclosure here creates an echo for me, and I didn't understand. The question is, if he could discuss what true empathy means, as it's used in the Course.

ANSWER: Indeed, I can confirm to you that you are in communion and you are not going crazy.

Ah, excellent question. Excellent because the answer is so wonderful.

True empathy, is what occurs when you connect with your fellow man through the center of your Being. Now, I keep talking a lot about the center of your Being and going within, being centered, etc. This is the only place where God's point of view is available to you. The only place it's available to you is right where you live, right where you are, right where you are being conscious, right where you are experiencing. I'm speaking not of a location, but of the Experiencer that you are, that is the only place where God's point of view can be available to you.

I'm going to give you an example: Paul is expressing true empathy right now, because he's listening within, and he's not listening to you. He's not trying to connect with you. He does not care what you feel. He does not care how, what is being said, sounds to you. He is not trying to help you. He is listening to me. In listening to me, he is able to be utterly appropriate. The result is, that what comes out, you experience as being heard, as being connected with, meaningfully. And this will always be the case with everyone of you, when you approach each other in this manner.

True the day is going to have to come when Paul opens his eyes up, because it's going to be difficult for him to relate to people on the street, when he's bumping into everyone. And he will look odd, but it works for now.

The point is this: Empathy is the experience of touching and being touched by another, without going through the ego to do it. That is what constitutes Real Love. Paul has learned that if he begins to care how you feel, or care how all of you feel about what is happening, he will become exhausted within fifteen or twenty minutes, if he persists in caring. Humanly speaking, his caring about how you feel about what is happening, would be called empathy. But if Paul becomes empathetic, through space to you, and begins to have an investment in what is said and how it will affect you, he will become self-conscious,—with a small “s”—and will not be able to be appropriate, because self-consciousness—with a small “s”—is defense-consciousness, and there cannot be union in defense. That's the simple fact.

True caring, true empathy, is entirely different from the common definition of empathy. Because there cannot be a truly meaningful, transformational, healing, up-lifting connection until one is able to sacrifice one's personal caring for another, which is always just a less unkind defense FOR listening within, in that centered place, to the Divine Knowing that is available, that allows one to be utterly appropriate with his others, which really constitutes ultimately, communion, connection, of being touched in a way that leaves one better off than before.

Normally, empathy is a highly developed form of espionage, of finding out where the weak points and strengths are, so that one can feel safe with the enemy, and have sufficient control over the situation. That's called “caring.”

Now, to keep balance here, there is love present in the caring that everyone does extend to each other, but it gets covered over with defense. And caring, very often, does become an attempt to control someone else into a behavior that doesn't upset you. And so, I do not mean to undermine, let us say, the best qualities of empathy that are in play, even though the ego usurps it and turns it into espionage.

But you asked what true empathy was, and I am telling you. You will come to a point where you will realize how debilitating caring is, how exhausting it is, because it doesn't constitute communion or Real connection with another. If it debilitates you, you find yourself unable to be available to your fellow man in any capacity, and you will stop doing it.

There are moments during any gathering, when Paul becomes self-conscious, especially when I am talking about him. But he does not indulge in it for very long, because he knows it wouldn't be helpful at all to care what you thought. The gathering would come to an end, and if he tried to force it, he would literally become so exhausted physically that he couldn't continue. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel like I have a problem getting to the truth a lot of the times, like I can see it and recognize it, but there is a barrier of doubt, and despair about not being connected with it, not feeling personal with it. Can you give me some ideas about how to move through the barrier?

PAUL: I'm sorry this is me Paul. Some ideas what?

QUESTION: About how to move through the barrier of doubt?

ANSWER: First of all, instead of engaging frustration, I encourage you to engage in gratitude that you are seeing it or feeling its presence. Because you are not generating that feeling of its presence. It is. And gratitude at experiencing its presence will, shall I say, grease the skids, allowing it to come forth more easily.

I could say that there is a magnetic quality, a law of attraction, that exists between you and the Truth. There is a natural inclination with all of you, for Truth to gravitate toward you. And of course, the reason is, because the disowned unacknowledged part of what you infinitely Are, is still part of you. And it is its intent to, shall I say, demonstrate total unity, so that a little part of you isn't succeeding any longer to hold itself apart, and claim a private personal point of view. And so, this is the reason the ego is always scared, because this insistence upon wholeness, that is characteristic of your Being, is always at work undermining this sphere of ego beliefs, of ego structures, that seem to enclose you and separate you from the infinity of your Self.

If you will understand, that this truth that you are feeling the presence of, that you can see but not seem to get to, is intent upon connecting, breaking through the barrier, and you will engage in gratitude for the fact that you are at least experiencing its presence, you will find that breaking the block. It is frustration, disappointment, self-doubt, and in some cases even self-condemnation, that keep it at a distance.

You see, all of those things that I listed, self-doubt, discontent with yourself, is an act of will, it represents a willfulness. It is part of the shield your ego uses to keep your experience of Truth at a distance. You think that it is a natural and spontaneous and inevitable experience, when things aren't working right. It doesn't feel willful, because interestingly enough, you feel helpless, and that's why you say you are upset. This is the way the ego keeps you in the dark.

Indeed, the need is for more alertness, so that you do not get sucked into practicing doubt, and practicing fear, and practicing frustration, because what you are doing is practicing conflictedness, and that is willfulness. You may not have defined it that way before, but do understand that it takes energy to do this, and it is the result of a choice, because all of you at the very moment that you make the choice for conflict within yourself, have the choice to choose for your peace. And one of the most wonderful ways you have to choose for your peace, is to practice gratitude.

Indeed, there is a wonderful poem, "A grateful heart, a garden is. Where there is always room for every lovely God like grace to come to perfect bloom." A grateful heart. Conflict cannot remain present in the presence of gratitude.

I will say this not so that you can feel better than anyone else, but there are many who have not yet had a conscious experience of the Presence of Truth that even seems like it is at a distance from them. It actually seems nonexistent to them. And I will put it another way, so that there isn't a point of comparison with someone else's point of development. There was a time in your life, when you did not have this experience available to you. And so, rather than engaging in frustration, because you can't seem to get to it, even though you can feel its Presence, let there be gratitude that you know it exists, as compared to when you didn't know it existed as a thing to be felt. And then remember that it's natural, inevitable inclination is to join with you, to penetrate the sense of barrier that separates you from it. Because the barrier is illegitimate. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have a question about a business that I have. We have been running it for four years, and we have run into a problem and we now need to know if we should sell it. We have a real decision making process here. And we both pray for guidance and we're not hearing a thing. So we're asking, what's the problem?

ANSWER: No problem. There is simply no action called for at the moment. Sit tight, and do not assume that a decision is called for, or that action is called for at this very moment. I guarantee you that when the answers is appropriate for you to know, you will recognize it. It is not something that you are so dense that you will miss. The fact that you are not getting a step to take, is because there is no step to take.

I encourage you to continue to listen. But realize that you do not need to listen with a sense of urgency around this issue. And let there be a quiet confidence that when it is time, you will hear it. In other words, it will be presented to you in a way that you will hear, that will register with you.

I also encourage you not to try to hold God to your sense of order, but dare to assume that there is a Divine order that will work perfectly. And I do not mean, a Divine order that will work perfectly in spiritual terms, but that which bears no relevance to the human terms that you are dealing with everyday. The Divine order operates in the human experience, always, in a way that blesses everyone, and is truly timely, so that the blessing is complete. You could attempt to force the issue here, and you could seem to benefit from it, while others who were suppose to benefit from it, do not benefit from it, because it is not happening in the Divine timeliness, if I might put it that way. Wait patiently on God, the saying goes. And trust that you will know what to do and when to do it. Everything is all right. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I asked the question, put my hand up because I felt compelled to. So here I am. I have two questions. One is, I believe you spoke to me several years ago at a healing service, and I wondered if I got the message?

ANSWER: Perfectly, yes.

QUESTION: And secondly, I find that I still experience a lot of anger. And I have...

PAUL: You find what?

QUESTION: I experience a great deal of anger. And I wondered how I could best handle the anger, channel it, or deal with it, live with it.

ANSWER: My dear don't for a minute, plan on living with it! Don't any of you ever justify living with anger, or fear, or pain, or illness. You cannot imagine how many of you are embracing these things, think it is exalting your soul. That is the ultimate of ignorance.

In the first place you don't have a Soul, you are Soul. And your Soul, the Soul that you Are—and I'm not using the word Soul there as a noun, but as a verb—Soul is the sensing capacity of the infinite Mind that God Is. The sensing capacity that you are, is itself the Presence of God, because God is Soul. Does God need to be refined? Neither do you, as Soul. So let us not justify suffering, limitation, lack in any form, as though it is some valid and valuable part of your spiritual growth. This is the way you justify continuing to be asleep, even though the promise seems to be, that it will help you to wake up.

Now, there is something underneath the anger. And the best, let us say, the most wonderful image that I can provide to you to understand this, is the image of a bottle of champagne, pink champagne, which has a cork on it. Now, in your living of your life, ignorant of your Divinity, and basing your sense of yourself upon what others have taught you and what you have observed, you have accumulated misunderstandings that you know are unjust. And because you haven't stopped being the direct expression of God, and because no matter how buried you seem to become in ignorance, you still have and still Are the Presence of Divine Intelligence. You feel deeply the wrongness of these injustices, but mind you, the injustices are an accumulation of misunderstandings within you. And because you feel tiny, your sense of true justice isn't felt in its infinity, but rather as simply a justification for extreme frustration, which is called anger.

You see, as you have accumulated false beliefs about yourself, and used them as part of the definition of your identity, you have become more and more self-protective, more and more defended. And in doing that, you have blocked the flow of something, you have blocked the bubbly. Anger, hate, frustration, self-righteousness have formed the cork that blocks the flow of the Love that you Are, thus constricting your experience of who and what you Divinely Are.

Now, here's what I encourage you to do. I encourage you to find a safe place to feel the anger. A place where you will not be told to hush up. This could be with a counselor, or a minister, or a good friend. Find a place where you can feel it, because as you let yourself feel it, it is the equivalent of the cork beginning to emerge from the bottle. As you feel it, you do not energize it, it is when you repress it that you energize it and in effect make the cork fatter, and thus stuck more firmly in the neck of the bottle. If you will feel it, the cork will soften, you might say, and diminish in size, and the pressure of the bubbly, the pressure of your Divinity will spontaneously cause the cork to pop out.

And where you had been feeling anger, you will find a transformation occurring—it is what they call, in psychology, catharsis—where a strong negative feeling is transformed into a strong positive feeling. And the reason that can happen, is because the good feeling is what had been repressed. You think that if you will let yourself feel the anger, that there is so much there, that you will feel it forever, and that's why you block it. But it's just a little cork, I promise you.

Find a safe place to feel the anger. And feel it, because there is not an endless amount of it, there never is with any of you, but you must feel it, in order for it to soften and pop out. You know, most of you wait to do this until a crisis, and then at that point of crisis you give up, and you let it all hang out. And when you do it, you feel awful. You feel like you have come to the bottom of the barrel. You feel the humiliation that I spoke of earlier. But always when you get to that point of giving up and release, through humiliation, a transformation occurs.

Don't wait for a crisis. Don't wait until you're exhausted, to pay attention to what you're feeling. And understand, that any negative feeling that you are having, is just a tiny cork, let us say, on a magnum of bubbly. It is unintelligent for you to feel comfortable when you are stifling the flow of your essential Being.

You see, at the bottom line, you know what is legitimate and you know what is illegitimate. Let yourself feel. Let yourself feel! The cork is an emotional block, blocking your feelings, which are the Soul of you, the You that is Soul. Repress those emotions, and you magnify the ego that you think you are, and you block your capacity to feel, and there is no way to feel comfortable.

What you did not know before you asked the question, is that there is something underneath the anger. And it is not the expression of the anger, that is the point, but the softening of it, so that it might pass off and allow the Love that you Are and the Integrity that you Are underneath it, to come forth. And so, you have been afraid of the fear, you have been afraid of the anger. Don't be afraid of it. Just find a safe place to feel it. And if you think that it might take three days to feel it fully, treat yourself to three days in a safe place, and let everyone else take care of themselves for three days. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: These have been two very wonderful enlightening days. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Over population seems to be a major cause of a deterioration and destruction of our planet earth. So many people... there's a controversy over abortion. So many religious groups believe that life begins at birth, and other groups believe that life begins at conception. Would you please address this?

ANSWER: Believe it or not, there is innate order that goes beyond any of the attempts to bring order into play, as a result of conscious control. Do not worry, this planet will not become over populated. Without crisis and without trauma, you will find the birth rate dropping. You will find people being interested in other things than having a family, or an interest in a smaller family. You will find a natural balance occurring. Don't be too quick to assume that catastrophe will happen.

I will put the answer to the last part of your question, simply. There cannot be God without the infinite manifestation of God. There cannot be God without the Presence of God. If you are the direct expression of God, then there cannot be you and no presence of you, no manifestation of you. Where, to be more clear, there cannot be you and no manifestation of the Presence of God, called you. Therefore, there is never a moment when you are not identified and identifiable as the specific expression of God. Therefore, you will never be bodiless, anymore than God will ever be unmanifest.

You say, but so-and-so passed on last week, and we buried her body. No, you buried the last image of her body that you saw. I realize it is an over simplification, but everyone buries the after-image, while the Individuality, fully identified, continues on. The moment there is the presence of form, in other words, the moment the first cell division occurs, the Individuality is present. At that moment, the whole of that Individuality is present, and from your point of view, it is coming into view.

Now, if Paul were to go outside the door, so that the door blocked him, but he could still enter the room, and he were to stretch out his arm so that his finger tip was the first thing you see, you would wonder what on earth is this creature. This finger tip is like the first form at the point of the first cell division after the sperm and the egg meet. Doesn't look like an individual, does it? And if Paul were to continue to come in slowly, you would begin to see this hand, and a long funny looking thing, you wouldn't know what it was yet. The point is, that although your view of him would come in a strange way, the whole of him would be there on the other side of the door. And your asking whether the Soul comes into the body at the point of birth, is like saying, when did the whole Paul arrive. The whole Paul was there when you saw the finger tip.

Now, I gave a very definitive and wonderful answer to the issue of abortion in the workshop in Charlotte, North Carolina, two weeks ago. And I am not trying to sell tapes, but rather than take the time up here, I would encourage you to get the tape. I will simply tell you, that abortion can only be conceived as appropriate, if you think that you are nothing but a body. It can only seem to be justifiable, if you think that God has nothing to do with life. If however, you think that God does have something to do with life, then all life is valuable. And if indeed, you assume that life is valuable, because it is the expression of God, then if that particular expression seems not to be congruent with your life, you will be curious to discover the life affirming alternatives you have available to you.

I will tell you something else, if everyone truly respected life, by understanding that God is the Source and condition of life, there would be fewer unwanted pregnancies, and fewer occasions for the idea to arise to have an abortion. You would find yourself in the right place, doing the right thing, and what wasn't congruent wouldn't happen. Enough said.

But, I encourage all of you to listen further, and instead of seeing what I have said, as denial of free choice, you see it as an opportunity to find, what I'm going to call, socially responsible, life affirming alternatives to abortion. You will all contribute to some social change, that is greatly needed. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In the same vein of over population, we find ourselves deluged with information about the toxicity of air, food, water, mans irresponsibility on the planet. What is my personal response to be, not as a fear response as we move forward, but what's happening and what should I be doing about that?

ANSWER: Be conscious of the need, and whatever little part you can play in not polluting, play it. To tell you the truth, it comes down to a matter of honoring your world.

This is as good a time as any for me to say something that needs to be said, especially to students of The Course In Miracles. When you read in the Course that the world is an illusion, it is much the same in impact as the first lesson, "nothing that I see means anything." The purpose of those two statements, is not to convince you of the meaninglessness of the world, and the universe, and your body. And if you actually become convinced that it is, and begin to take it as a doctrinal point of A Course In Miracles, there will continue to be a degradation of the honoring of the world, and the universe, and you will have even further breakdown.

There is something going on here. And if indeed, God is omnipresent, there is no space for an illusion to exist. Therefore, what is called an illusion, must necessarily be a delusion, a misperception of something Real. And the point is, for you to arrive at a point where you are willing to say that, "this doesn't mean what I thought it meant. And from my limited point of view, I do not have the perspective necessary to understand or experience what it does mean. And therefore, I will relinquish my belief as to what it is, and stand in the void of not-knowing, so that its meaning can be revealed to me."

I mentioned earlier, this thing about gravitation, that there is a natural attraction of Truth to you, and you to Truth, because you in fact are inseparable. And your unity is what is constantly asserting itself and undermining your ego definitions and perceptions.

All of you have been taught to value knowledge. Knowledge is a noun, knowing is a verb. God is all Knowing. It doesn't mean that he knows all, it means that knowing is what constitutes the Presence of the Father, the action of knowing Himself. And God saw everything that He had made, in other words, he observed His infinite Movement, "and behold it was," the bible says, "very good." And I am changing the words, "and behold it was verily God," God recognizing the Movement of Himself, is Life, You being the conscious recognition of infinite Self, are Life, the Movement of Creation.

So be careful. Relationships are not meaningless. Bodies are not meaningless. The world is not meaningless. The universe is not meaningless. But it doesn't mean what you think it means at the moment. And when you define it falsely, and believe your misperception to be true, then indeed, you are observing something that isn't real. You are in a state of insanity, or delusion. What does that mean? It doesn't mean you have another reason to kick yourself around the block. It means that the opportunity to experience Sanity is all around you. The opportunity for something greater than such a limited perception that hides your experience of yourself in your Right Mind.

I will say it again, you are not a body, but you are not bodiless. You will never be unidentifiable. What will happen is, that your identity, being individual, will never again suggest the Presence of anything other than God. And yet you, as an individual conscious experience of Being, will not disappear. Again, this is as impossible to grasp intellectually, as grasping the fact that you can be infinite and specific at one and the same time is not possible for you to grasp intellectually. But it is a fact.

The saying is that no one likes being a statistic, because everybody feels that he or she is absolutely original. So, how can you possibly be governed by a statement that says, “most accidents occur within twelve and a half miles of your home.” As though that’s the most dangerous place for you to drive, and you’d better not drive there.

It is very difficult for the ego to fit into anything. And mankind in its ego sense of itself, has become arrogant enough to feel that it doesn’t have to blend in or participate in nature, mankind is here to control nature. The Indians knew better, and they saw God in everything. The mountain was the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit, and a lake was the face of the Holy Spirit, etc. And they knew how to cooperate with the whole.

And so, what you are faced with here is realization occurring, it is dawning on mankind as a whole, that they are part of a whole world, and they must blend with it, because that is the way in which unity, wholeness and healing are to be experienced. You are watching mankind discover that it has been arrogant, thoughtless, when there was a need for the honoring of the whole of life, a conscious participation. And you are going to see a turn around, and you are going to see healing of the planet, of the holes in the ozone, and an end to the wholesale dismembering of the rain forest on the equator, and indeed, the inappropriate wholesale cutting of lumber in your own country.

But again, the ego doesn’t like to have to be part of something. If it’s going to be part of something, it will be part of a small group, so that there is still “them” and “us.”

And this is another reason that I am currently making a point of addressing students of the Course, so that you do not begin to think in terms of being a group called, students of A Course In Miracles. “We believe this, and we believe that,” etc. You cannot afford to forget that you are part of a group called, for lack of better words, the Brotherhood of man, the Family of man, the infinite expression of God. That’s the group you’re in. And the only value there is in the Course, is if it helps you be a member of the Brotherhood of man more lovingly and efficiently.

You cannot selectively be willing to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, can you? So there cannot be a boundary, with someone on the other side, and someone on this side. And I also encourage you not to form churches, Course In Miracle churches. What's the first thing you will have to do if you organize a church?

QUESTION: Defend it.

ANSWER: You don't have anything to defend yet though. The first thing you will have to do is write, "we believe," and list what you believe, as opposed to everyone else. Then you will have to defend your beliefs.

Being a Brother and a Sister isn't a belief system, it's something Real. And seeing the Christ in your Brother and Sister, is the gift that is called for. Why? Not because the world needs it, but because as I said earlier, it brings you into congruence with who you Divinely Are, and allows revelation to occur, that does indeed bless everyone, and helps to lift the veil of what. Ignorance! You get the point. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I working on meshing the acknowledgment that I'm at this point of perfection and understanding myself from it...

PAUL: I'm sorry, the way the sound is booming, I'm having a hard time understanding what you're saying.

QUESTION: Closer? I'm working on meshing the acknowledgment that I'm at the perfection of my Being, and understanding myself from it, with finding the identification of the fulfillment of my purpose, in a job. I've been unemployed since October. I'm an attorney or was an attorney in civil litigation, which seems to be contrary to the words of The Course In Miracles. And secondly, in relationship, which I would very much like to have a holy relationship, rather than a special relationship. Any comments?

PAUL: This is me Paul. May I ask in what way you find being in civil litigation, inconsistent with the Course?

QUESTION: The way I'm seeing it is, it's based upon judging other people as being right or wrong. There's usually a victim involved or the perception of someone in the role of victim. It's based upon monetary considerations in finding an answer. And a conclusion that everyone would win with, rather than a winner and a loser, which seems to be the case in legal system.

ANSWER: You see, you do not have a legal system, for those who are law abiding. You could say that I was not a nice guy when I whipped the moneychangers out of the temple. There is a necessity to be the Presence of Love that says, "I will not join with you, not even by being silent and affirm your unintelligent, unloving, unprincipled acts." To be unconditionally loving, does not ever mean to become a doormat.

Indeed, the question was asked at the break, where it says that in the Course that, “perfect peace opposes nothing.” Well, good luck everyone! Perfect peace also, doesn’t embody and express unintelligence.

All of you who have raised children, how many of you from experience, would say that it would have been much better to allow the children to do everything they ever wanted without objecting, so that you might, in consistency with the Course oppose nothing. Don’t forget to be real.

Truth and peace know when to say, “No! Thus far and no farther.” Intelligence recognizes unintelligence, and does not allow it to elaborate or embroider itself into a larger expression of unintelligence. Your laws, when practiced intelligently, say “no” to those who through their ignorance, feel a right to take advantage, to consciously take advantage at the expense of another, of someone else. And if you do not say “no” to unintelligence, you will have to live with the unintelligent result. And you cannot assume that because you are saying “no” to that which is unintelligent, that somehow you are not practicing unconditional love and you are failing in the truth. You know, that someone who knows of a crime, an aggressive act of unkindness, someone who knows about it and keeps their mouth shut, is an accomplice.

Are you going to join with the ego, or are you going to join with your capital “B” Being, or with the Holy Spirit, or with the Father? Until you have something better than the legal system, until you have something better that works, don’t abandon the legal systems. It is the greatest expression of principle that is conceived at the moment. This is very important to understand.

If you go off in a fit of spiritual ecstasy, and abide by principles—as you term them—that do not meet the human need, you are becoming idiots. Don’t abandon the common sense you currently have, until you have better common sense. I said that yesterday. Somebody want to make a bumper sticker? It says, “the Christ is not a wimp.”

You sense into your capital “K” Knowing, and you will discern what is appropriate and what is not appropriate. And you will not join with that which is not appropriate, and you will not remain absolutely silent in all cases and allow the inappropriate to go on unobjected to. If you are listening you will know when you are called upon to be the one to stand and say, “no.” And you will not interpret yourself as being judgmental.

If there is a bowl of fruit here, with apples, oranges and grapefruit, and the person next to you says, “would you get me an apple.” Well, how are you going to manage to do that? You’re going to have to be able to tell the difference between an apple, orange and grapefruit. Is your capacity to recognize the difference between the three, judgment, or discernment? Does picking the apple, mean you are putting-down the grapefruit and the orange? No! In your peace you will discern the difference between what is True and what is not, and you will act on the basis of what is True.

Many of you who are parents, know that your saying “no” to your child caused great learning to occur, and saved them a great deal of grief, that they otherwise would have experienced if you had said nothing. You simply cannot sit there and allow your child to play with a bobby pin and a light socket. And it doesn’t even matter whether the child understands or not, all he has to do is get the message. You might say, “why, I don’t want to control his life. I don’t want to influence his free expression. I don’t want to stunt his curiosity.” You’re going to let him do it for himself. What I am saying is, be Real, be grounded as you apparently grow spiritually, as you wake up.

Those who out of extreme lack, extreme fear, an extreme self-depreciation, engage in acts of violence and attack against their fellow man, need to be enlightened. But before you can enlighten that one, you must get his attention. And you get his attention by saying “no,” so that he will engage in argument. Once he’s engaged in argument, his violent actions have stopped, and you can begin to use reason. But you’re going to have to care enough to hang in there, while he gives you all the arguments, as to why what you’re saying is useless.

And don’t think that Paul and I have not had many a conversations of that sort. You’ve got to care enough to say “no,” and not agree by silence, with that which substantiates the apparent need for ignorance and defense. And so, your work is not inconsistent with the Course. Because the Course has told none of you to be martyrs, to agreeably and wonderfully say, “stomp on me, I love you. I have learned how to be at peace, while I am in pain.” If you’re in your peace, you either will not be in the place where pain can be experienced, or you will be in that place as an agent for change. And if you are going to be an agent for change, you are not going to be standing in agreement with what is happening.

I encourage you to look more deeply into this feeling that you are having of the inconsistency of your profession, and what you are learning from the Course. It’s perfectly clear to me that law firms can be corrupt also. But that doesn’t make law and it’s appropriate practice something illegitimate. And you can manage to find a place to work where there is little corruption.

But as long as you are living with and working with those who are not Totally Awake, there are going to be discrepancies in their expression of Integrity. You can be there expressing with love and not judgment, your Integrity. And you can bring that Integrity into the court room.

You want to know something? A win-win situation is marvelous, but you can’t have a win-win situation when both parties do not agree as to what winning means. And someone who is insistent upon a limited and harsh assessment of what life is and how one ought to behave, you are not going to get win-win, unless he gets what he thinks he wants, which is what brought about the problem in the first place.

In the court room it is not your job to rehabilitate the one who is deeply imbedded in his false sense of things. It is only your task to be clear in expressing “no” to behavior that hurts. Do not cringe from that responsibility, and do not see it as being unChrist-like. To say, “what you are doing is unacceptable,” does not involve judgment on that individual. If you say, “what you are doing is unacceptable, you bastard,” that involves judgment, and is what is inappropriate. If you say, “what you are doing is unacceptable and inappropriate, and if you would like to learn another way in which you will win, I will be glad to work with you,” that is where the solution lays. However, that is not your job, you are not a therapist or counselor, you are an attorney.

So don't be afraid to be that point where the “no” is clearly stated, where there is a fair chance of that persons attention being gotten. So, that someone else can appropriately come in and say, “I perceive that you have capabilities far beyond anything you are using at the moment. And I perceive that you have the capacity to live with a lot more fulfillment than you are currently experiencing. How would you like to explore those capacities and possibilities with me? Again, the message is, the way you have been doing it, is not right, doesn't work, is impractical. But that doesn't represent you. And I want to talk to you about other ways that work, that you will like.” It still holds the individual in his innocence and honors his capacity. And for him to be confronted by this, over and over again, even if he is in jail, will cause him to begin to feel some inspiration.

So, again, you have put a lot of energy and a lot of yourself into arriving at the point of being an attorney, and a good one. Don't overthrow it casually just because you cannot at the moment, or have not been able to reconcile what you find in the Course and your work. And let your question to the Holy Spirit be, “show me, the way in which I can be the Christ right where I am. Help me to understand how the Course relates to something as nitty-gritty and down-to-earth as a court of law, and the practice of law.” They are not exclusive of each other.

I will tell you something else: You have the intelligence and the quickness of mind that is capable of discovering the congruence, and I encourage you to enjoy it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I feel like trust is a big issue with most people. Can you, would you talk to us a little bit about the difference between trust and gullibility maybe?

PAUL: Trust and?

QUESTION: Being gullible, naive.

PAUL: The question is: Can Raj speak about the difference between trust and being gullible and naive?

ANSWER: It is a good question. The difference is that one who is being gullible and naive is abandoning his or her common sense. Again, it is a matter of walking this fine line between trusting into that which you know nothing about, literally, abandoning what you do know, but not becoming ungrounded in the process. You may be willing to admit that you are experiencing illusion, but you cannot afford to abandon the illusion, as I have already said, until you have some reality to replace it with, period.

Now, there is another thing: You may have developed an ego, but you are not an ego. There is an excellent illustration that will help to straighten things out. You have infinity, or let us say, we have an infinite circle—a very, very, very, very large circle—this circle represents you, it represents your infinite conscious awareness. Everything inside this circle is You. Then somewhere inside this infinite circle, let us say, that we are going to imagine a sphere, like a bubble, about ten inches in diameter. What is inside the bubble is the same stuff that is outside the bubble. The bubble represents the accumulated beliefs and conditionings that you have accepted and created and stored, and which you treat as your clear and complete understanding of what life is about, and who you are.

Because you are only experiencing what is inside the bubble, at the moment, it is very easy for you to say I'm an ego. But you aren't. You are what is inside the bubble, and you are what is outside the bubble. And the bubble is constituted only of belief structures, ideas that have been put together in what you call a logical manner, and this is what you have come to call your identity.

What this means is, that the volume of stuff or air, we'll say, inside the bubble is absolutely Divine. All the bubble is doing is partitioning off part of what is Divine, from the other part that is Divine, and seeming to create a barrier, a limit. Now, if you accept the idea that you are an ego, then everything about you must be false and untrustworthy. And if you believe that, then you might willingly give yourself over to a teacher, a guru, or even a guide, a spiritual advisor, or even the Holy Spirit.

You want to know something? One who is Awake, whether it is me, or your guide, or the Holy Spirit, will not let you give yourself away to us. We will not let you give your power away. We cannot afford to allow you to think that that of yourself which you are experiencing, which is within the bubble, is anything less than what is on the outside of the bubble, because if you think that, you reinforce the bubble.

But, what happens when you apparently, within the limits of the bubble, begin to acknowledge, and rely upon, and lean into that Divine Selfhood that is inside the bubble, what if you honor yourself right where you are within the bubble? If you do that, you begin to be more consciously like everything that's on the outside of the bubble. And because of that, penetration of the bubble can occur more easily.

Now, it doesn't take very much to pop a bubble. So, in terms of your Awakening and experiencing the reuniting of the whole you, it isn't going to take a lot of effort. It takes what the Course calls, a little willingness. And those are key words. It doesn't take a little willfulness, it takes a little willingness.

If you don't go home from this weekend with anything other than the remembrance, that you are not to abandon your common sense until you have something better to replace it with, you will all be safe. You will be unavailable to be used by those who are self-seeking, spiritual self-seekers.

You will only be gullible if you neglect to pay attention to yourself, if you neglect to honor yourself. That is why I am telling you, that even within the context of your limited perception of things, you must understand that you are the Christ, that you are the direct expression of God, nothing more and nothing less. Again, you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and you must understand yourself there from. You must begin to conceive of yourself there from. Literally, you must begin to have a more immaculate conception of yourself.

The more consistent your Conscious Awareness of your Divinity within the bubble becomes, the less the bubble will be able to separate you, or seem to separate you from what you Divinely are, infinitely speaking. And to acknowledge that you are Divine, and that you are the Son or Daughter of God, and that you are by birthright the Christ Consciousness, the Mind of God having no other point of view than the Father's Mind, that Awareness is your new common sense.

Don't worry, you won't embrace it all at once and overwhelm yourself. But I am encouraging you to nurture that self-awareness, and let the experience of it in, so that you may begin to know the truth about your fellow man, and begin to apprehend him more clearly, and thereby, stand as support for his or her making that shift, because he or she doesn't have to as actively defend himself or herself against your misperception, and your actions that arise out of the misperception, that are a form of attack.

Pay attention to your gut feeling, never abandon it. Your gut feeling will be exalted, as you trust into your Divinity more. And it will begin to reflect greater and greater Divine knowing. But until it does, trust it now, and at each point trust it, and you will not become gullible. Want to know the Truth about everything, but pay attention to the Truth that is revealed from within, or pay attention to the Truth that you hear that confirms what you are already feeling within. The governing factor had better be your trust in your Integrity, even if your Integrity seems to be improved day by day.

You must honor the fact that what is within the bubble is the same thing that is on the outside of the bubble. It is therefore, absolutely Divine. Why do any of you think that you have a desire for such an unreasonable thing as peace, and joy, and health, and perfection? It's not because of your ego. It's because that which is enveloped by your ego, knows of it's Divinity. The bubble can't ever change the volume within it. It can't change it's nature or character. And that's why your Integrity is intact, and that's why your Divinity is intact, and that's why I can say to you, you are the Christ. And you're not advancing towards perfection, you already know it. But there's doubt that keeps you from committing to it, and yielding into it, and giving up the struggle to prove that you are something worthwhile, and just being worthwhile.

You are to practice trust. Where on earth do you have to practice trust, if it isn't in the only place you're experiencing, which is your conscious experience of Being.

You have been so conditioned from all quarters, to believe in one way or another that you are sinners. Even if you were not brought up in a religion where you were taught that you were born in sin, you have heard about it, the idea has been presented, and your mind makes free associations. And when your teacher told you that you had better not go into math, because you didn't have what it took to understand it, you make spontaneous assumptions, connections, "it must be because I'm a sinner. It must be because I'm less than something else."

And in one way or another you all arrive at an attitude of self-depreciation, rather than self-honoring. And it's time to stop! Your ego will say you are foolish, because indeed you are a fool to believe anything about yourself that is, or that smacks of perfection or Divinity.

Now, I've used this illustration before, but it's pertinent here. It is as though you have awakened in a cell, the door is closed, the jailers parade up and down outside. They curse you, they tell you how horrible you are, how worthless you are, how much you deserve to be confined. And don't you dare try to escape, because you will be caught until you've paid the uttermost farthing. And not one of you has dared to get up and push against the door, so that you might discover it's not locked. And I'm saying push against the door, push against the bubble, and realize that your prison isn't anymore substantial than a bubble. And yet a bubble seems to be an impermeable boundary.

You may have an ego sense of yourself, but you are not an ego. And that of you, which you are experiencing within the confines of the ego frame of reference, the sphere, the bubble, is absolutely Divine, and it is that which remembers Home—in other words, unity—and desires to experience it and gives you unreasonable faith in achieving it. That which is within the bubble does not need to improve itself, it only needs to acknowledge itself for what it is. You do not have a hard road to hoe, in front of you. You are bound by that which is insubstantial and that which is bound by it, is God. It is a flimsy fantasy you are experiencing, and it's getting flimsier by the moment.

So remember, curiosity, a desire to know the Truth, a desire to know the Real meaning of everything. A willingness to set aside your best definitions of yourself and of your world. Every single thing you see everyday, every form you see, as I said, is a light form. You want to know something else? The light is Living Love, it radiates what it is. And at this very moment every single thing that you can see, or touch, or feel is embracing you in the radiance of the Love that it is. So don't try to rise above it. There are those who are talking about getting out of here, others who are talking about flashing out. That's just another form of denial. What you want is to be here and wake up, and see it all as it really Is.

Now, I left out the most important part. Not only is everything that you see made up of the substance of Love that is light, that is loving you, you Are It. And so, when you see and feel the embrace of Living Love, you have the inseparable experience of being that Love, and knowing that it is You Loving. And thus, your unity with the universe and with All That Is, is a conscious experience of unity, not just a head trip. Be careful now with the words I'm going to use. It is a Conscious experience of unity of all space. The word space, is the poor word, but I use that phrase to convey to you the fact, that it is a unity where there are no emptynesses.

Don't believe everything you hear, don't be willing to believe everything you hear, without taking it within and measuring it against your deepest level of knowing of what Truth is. As I said, you all have the inherent capacity to recognize Truth. Why? Because the you that is within the bubble, is the Divine You, who knows Truth. It is a capacity you have not activated, because you have been so busy surviving and suffering from your sense of limitedness, and your sense of worthlessness.

So, start by paying attention to your common sense. Your common sense is your best use of intelligence at the moment. And as you wake up, your intelligence is going to seem to increase. You will not abandon the degree of intelligence that you have been allowing yourself to express. You will never get into trouble this way. It might give your ego a little bit of trouble, but you will never give your power away again, and you will never think that your good is somewhere out there for you. Begin to trust yourself and rely upon your capacity to recognize Truth, and you will never be gullible again, you will never be naive, and you will never be abused. Now that's empowerment!

RAJ CLOSING COMMENTS: It has been a good weekend, and I have enjoyed being with you. And I have said this before to other groups. But I'm glad to have been with you, with you being conscious of the fact that I am with you. And, just because Paul is going to Boston, don't stop being open to the experience of my Presence. Paul won't be jealous.

PAUL: Okay, what a weekend. (Long applause) I love you too.

Gathering In Melbourne, Australia –1993

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ COMMENTS: You are not fugitives. Indeed, that is not too strong a word. You might say, “But I’m not running from anything. I’m not hiding from anything.” But you know what? At some level, to one degree or another, every single one of you feels guilty of something, whether there is any justifiable reason for it or not.

And those of you who feel most comfortable in your life, who feel the least of guilt and the least of being a fugitive, are simply those who have, by virtue of their manner of living their life, created a cushion between yourself and justice. And it is thick enough that you know that justice is not likely to catch up with you, and you be unprepared. But indeed, if you do not do well, if you do not act responsibly, if you do not behave appropriately, that cushion will diminish.

Remember you are always—anyone is always—a fugitive from justice. It is justice that you don’t want to catch up with you. Why? Because it will prove you are guilty. And then you will have to pay the penalty.

Now, some of you have had this sense of guilt indoctrinated into you through teachings that you are a sinner. Some of you have been indoctrinated into it by observing the world and watching what happens to those who haven’t handled themselves well—and the ax has fallen, or their life has been miserable. In other words, the inevitable result of not behaving in a manner that gives you credits enough to insulate you from the judgment of guilt. The inevitable result will be hurt, sorrow, lack of peace, suffering.

You even have an image, and you have called it the “grim reaper.” Sooner or later the “grim reaper” is going to get you, because that is what characterizes the fundamental essence of life: guilt, punishment, death. What an outlook!

What I am here to share with you and to illuminate for you this weekend is the fact that all of this is crap! It is a lie that has arisen out of ignorance—that everyone to one degree or another has agreed to validate and use as the basis for your behavior “in the world.”

I want to tell you something: If you will actually let the insulation between you and justice diminish, and justice can touch you and surround you, not at gun point, but embrace, in embrace of love, you will find that justice will declare you to be innocent. And then the flight from justice, the life of being a fugitive, will evaporate. And you will wish that someone had told you sooner—it is Truth.

Every single one of you is innocent, because every single one of you is the direct expression of God. The only reason you exist is because there is a Creator. There is a First Principle, or First Cause, that is Being. And you are the visibility and tangibility of that Being—not a noun, a verb—you are the visibility and tangibility of that Movement of Life that is God. You are not the effect of God, you are the presence of the Movement of God Himself/Herself.

A potter forms the pot. And the pot is different from the potter. But God is the potter, you might say. And the movement of the creation of the pot is what you are. You are not like the pot. It is important for you to know that you are not the effect of God—you are the Presence of the Movement of what God Is. And that is why you are forever innocent.

Your conditioned thinking says that it is arrogant for you to say that you are something more than a sinner; it is arrogant for you to say that you are worthy of sitting at the table, instead of eating the crumbs on the floor that have fallen from God's table. It says you are arrogant to have any sense of self-worth other than one that is sheepishly expressed with doubt, as though it were a wish.

The full stature of each of you as Conscious Individuality needs to be, shall I say, stretched into. You need to stand up, instead of cowering in your unworthiness, and a desire to be worthy. It is a matter of expanding into what you have always been. It is a matter of giving yourself permission. And what is it you give yourself permission for? It is simple. It is a matter of giving yourself permission to be in-filled, filled up with God, so that there isn't anything else present claiming presence. You know what your conditioned thinking says—"Oh, if I do that, I will be something outlandish, other-worldly, incompatible with human life."

I'm going to ask you something: Why do you think the words Father, and Brother, and Sister, and Mother are used, relative to God and you? Because it is in the simplicity of the love that exists between father and son, father and daughter, mother and son, mother and daughter that your feeling of safety lies and allows you to become undefended enough to receive. To be filled with the Presence of God, to have abandoned a sense of yourself that you must present to others in order to keep this insulation between you and justice—this insulation keeps you from the simplicity of love, in which the Presence of what God is can find entrance into your world in a way that everyone will recognize as love, which everyone will recognize as the absence of the need for defense. I want you to think about it for a moment.

If you were to find yourself in a situation where you realized that no defense of any kind was needed, you would find yourself feeling loved. It would be an inescapable feeling even if you couldn't find an object from which that love was coming. The Love is ever-present, omnipresent, and you feel it when you dare to be defenseless, and it uncovers your Birthright: You are innocent.

Now, I'm going to say something for the sake of clarity. I am not stooping to the level of addressing a peculiarity relative to your country, that being that originally it was a penal colony. And the belief that had been bandied about that for one reason or another none of you can feel worthy, because you are all descendants of prisoners—guilty ones. I am not stooping to play into that, or cause you to feel as though I understand you because I have spoken to something that you can understand.

I want it to be very clear to you that whether or not you seem to have that kind of a history, everyone else on the face of this globe experiences the same threat of justice that will prove their guilt, which keeps them a fugitive from God—a fugitive from experiencing themselves in their Right Mind. You see, the human mind says, “Well, as Australians we really do have a unique situation that doesn't apply everywhere. And we really do have to come out from under this uniqueness.” And I am telling you that that is the way the ego works with everyone. And you are not unique.

Anyone who is not Awake, anyone who is not experiencing himself in his Right Mind (and you know what that means—it means experiencing a mind different from the Mind of God—experiencing everything different from the way God is experiencing it) anyone who is not totally Awakened, is experiencing being a fugitive, because he thinks or she thinks that his or her guilt is absolute, life then becomes a process of keeping a distance between the justice that would uncover the absoluteness of that guilt. Everyone who is not Awake feels like a fugitive, and the suggestion that you are a fugitive is a lie.

The devil is a liar and the father of it, meaning the lie. Well, today I would say the ego is a liar and the father of it. The tiny, private, personal sense of self that you have developed, which must defend itself, keeps you ignorant of what you divinely are. And its lies are what cover over your innocence. The fact is that there is ample justification for you to become defenseless on the basis of pre-existing, unalterable innocence.

Now, I am not going to cram this down your throat today and tomorrow, but you are going to find this basic fact illustrated, intertwined into the answers to your questions. Because as a whole, those of you who are here, and those of you who will be here tomorrow, are not only addressing issues of innocence versus guilt, but are literally at a point of being able to begin to grasp that guilt can be abandoned, instead of disproven. There's a significant difference.

I welcome you. And I am happy to be here with you in this fashion. I am always with you. And anytime you address yourself to me in your thoughts, I hear you and I respond. I say this so that you will know that there is always a response; therefore, there is justification if you are not hearing it for you to listen even more quietly, with less doubt.

RAJ CONTINUES: I will ask you to indulge me a couple more minutes. It is appropriate for me to share with you why I am called Raj, as far as my work with Paul is concerned and in light of the fact that I have also stated that I am the author of A Course In Miracles, which means that, indeed, I was two thousand years ago present on the face of your planet as the one you have known as Jesus.

First of all, the very practical reason is that as I have said before—if during my first conversation with Paul I had identified myself as Jesus we would never have had a second conversation. Paul would have known that he had gone crazy.

Why we continue to use the name Rajpur is because every single one of you need to have a way to approach me that allows you to side-step your sense of my being a god, to whom you must cater with obedience's and politenesses that absolutely inhibit your being Real with me. They keep you from grasping the fact that I am your brother.

And so, in your mind, you may address me as Raj, or you may address me as Jesus. But I would encourage you to address me in the manner that allows you to be Real. Indeed, Paul tried addressing me as Jesus a few times, but he found that he couldn't be pissed off with me, even though that's what he felt.

Indeed, being in touch with an Awakened One keeps you on your leading edge. And sometimes you want not to be on your leading edge. And so it is frustrating to you when I or your guide do not accommodate your need to sleep a little longer; and so you do get upset, and it is understandable.

But if you are talking to Jesus, you will squelch being upset, you will stuff it, as it is said. And that is not healthy. And at the bottom line, most importantly: It keeps you from being able to feel our equality which is absolutely essential, it is part of the realization of your innocence. The only thing that could keep us from being equal would be your guilt and my innocence.

Indeed, is it not the innocent blood of the lamb that, ultimately, all of you are supposed to be guilty for. You are hooked in so many ways into your sense of guilt. And it is essential for you to be able to relate with me, free of those hooks that continue to create a sense of justification for being “on the lam”—escaping justice.

And so, my purpose is not to be confusing, but rather to allow you, shall I say, access through the side door to relate with me in a most Real way, where you are free to express your doubt and your frustrations and your questions, without feeling guilty for putting yourself in the position of experiencing enlightenment.

If you do not ask, you will not get an answer. And of course, asking seems to postulate ignorance, doesn't it? Well, let it seem to postulate ignorance. The desire is for understanding or clarity—that's the point.

Now, I have taken up enough time and we will open it up to questions.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask: What do I need to learn in order to heal the disease in my body? And secondly: Am I able to heal this bodily disease and continue on my path of learning and giving here on earth? Could you please give me some guidance?

ANSWER: The first and foremost thing is for you to realize that there is no justification for it. You are not paying for something that occurred in a past lifetime. You are not paying for something that occurred in this lifetime. And I don't care how long a list you can present to me of those things which don't reflect your divinity, they do not constitute justification for your experiencing this disease.

If you do not feel your innocence, you must begin to consciously embrace it, at least as a possibility, even though I am telling you that it is the fact. You must begin to abandon energizing any justifications you are nurturing within yourself that say that you deserve this.

Now, the state of being an ego, a separated mind, a sense of self that seems to experience no connection with the Father's point of view, is the result of an act of separation—an intent to be independent, self-sufficient. And the ultimate of that is the practice of thinking clearly and intelligently and correctly, as though the more correctly you can think the better the manifestation you will have in your life. Therefore, thinking becomes the insulation all of you keep between you and justice, the justice that will ultimately say you are innocent rather than guilty.

And so, a fundamental essential part of your healing is going to be your willingness to join with something else beyond your best thinking; to join with something else, and abandon the idea that you yourself can bring about your healing through some mental practice. This is important.

So I am going to suggest to you that you ask the Father, or the Holy Spirit, or your guide, or me, or any Awakened One to help uncover the Birthright of your perfection—the perfection that reflects your unalterable innocence.

When you wake up in the morning, I encourage you to ask whoever, to be with you throughout the day, specifically relative to the uncovering of your physical perfection. And when you go to bed at night and you know that you are going to be asleep and your ego and your thinking will not be operating actively, I encourage you to authorize me, or the Father, or the Holy Spirit to use every means at our disposal to help breakthrough whatever justifications are lurking within you that say, “this disease has a legitimate reason for existing.”

I do not want you to try to heal yourself. I do not want you to feel that you can take on the responsibility for your health. Your health is the gift of God. Your Wholeness is the gift of God. Why? Because God has withheld nothing of what He Is in His Self-expression, called you.

So it is not a retractable gift. If you have been disobedient, the Father does not say, “Well, sixteen percent of your innocence and perfection is retracted until you behave better,” because the Father is incapable of expressing himself incompletely. When the Father Moves it is all of what the Father Is that is involved with that Movement. Therefore, it is a gift that is not retractable; it is a gift that is irrevocable; and it is a gift that constitutes the absolute unchangeable Presence of You.

Now you can, if you wish, get hung up on the question, “What have I been doing to obscure this perfection from myself? And what self-destructive thing is there in me that would do this?” Those two questions are the ego’s bait to get you to occupy your mind with something other than joining, for the purpose of uncovering the perfection that not only is your Birthright, but is the actual state of your Being, right here, right now, on this earth, in this universe.

Now, whether you call this this earth or this universe, it is one in the same thing, because there is only one thing going on; there’s only one thing that you can be confronted by, and that is the Kingdom of Heaven, perceived or misperceived—perceived correctly or misperceived. But either way, there’s only one thing for you to have a true experience of or a misperception of. It’s important for you to know this; because if you know this, then you will realize that in waking up there will not be someplace else to go that will cause you to be separated from those you love and those things that you enjoy.

It is a wonderful thing that you are on this threshold and that, indeed, you seem to have something giving you a point of focus that justifies your doing something new, which is reaching out and asking for help—and by doing that, breaking the sense of isolation that creates a sense of guilt that seems to justify suffering.

This disease is an illegitimate imposition upon the Presence of God, called you. Illegitimate, a bastard. You know what that means? It means that which has no father and mother—that which has no source; therefore, it must be a pretense to presence—nothing more than an assumption that’s being treated as something actual. And so, this disease is an illegitimate something which has no real source; an illegitimate imposition, a sourceless imposition upon the Son of God; the Presence of the Movement of God, called You.

If this is what you are, then you are forever innocent and you do not have to work out of guilt. There is not a path of struggle, or of hard work, at thinking correct spiritual thoughts for you to get out of this manifestation of disease, or for it to dissolve out of your experience—it’s the claiming of your innocence. And it is your joining with the Father, or the Holy Spirit, or with me, or with your guide, that will break the element of isolated selfhood that seems to prove that you deserve to suffer.

Now, I am speaking to everyone: Is what I have said to him true of him in his particular circumstance, but not applicable to anyone else? No, it does apply to everyone.

Now if you want to get in touch with your guide, there are four simple steps. (This does relate to your question.)

The first step is to become still—through meditation, soaking in a hot tub, whatever helps you to become still.

And once you have become still you take the second step, which is mentally desire communication with your guide, or the Holy Spirit, or me.

The third step is to listen, which necessarily means that you stop asking to speak with your guide. I know that you can sit there and say, “Are you there? Are you hearing me? Please say something. Are you there?” If you have asked, you may know that the response is being given and what is necessary is to become still and listen.

The fourth step is really the most important one: expect an answer. “Well, I didn’t hear anything last night, but then I wasn’t really expecting an answer. I know it’s going to take a little longer with me than Joe Blow down the street.” And if you are not expecting an answer, that is an expectation, and it will block your hearing.

And what getting in touch with your guide (the four steps) has to do with your healing is that, you are making the point of joining and not trying to handle this all alone. Joining with the Holy Spirit, or the Father, etc., and the act of joining is occurring in the form of desiring your perfection to be revealed to you. And then you must expect a healing. “Oh, I asked, but I didn’t really expect it to happen. I know I have more growing to do.”

You are healed on the basis of your innocence, your unalterable, eternal innocence. “Oh, but it’s got to be more complicated than that.” NO, it doesn’t! Truth, the truth about you is utterly simple! and most humiliating and unsatisfying to your egos, because your egos like a challenge. It likes to earn its birthright. In fact, it says it has to create its birthright.

If God is not creating, supporting and maintaining the disease, then there is absolutely nothing present to continue to substantiate it in your experience, because it has no source.

Now, I will tell you something: In joining with the Holy Spirit, or your guide, etc., and asking for help—I’m going to say, if you turn it over to the Holy Spirit—you provide an invitation to be with, as opposed to being alone. That is an act of love; separation and isolation are an act of hate. And this act of love uncovers the perfection of you that has been present at every moment that your physicians have said you have a disease. And the act of joining dissolves that which blocks your ability to experience this unalterable perfection.

Why am I saying this? I am saying it so that you might understand that perfection will not be created out of imperfection. It will not be an imperfect body manipulated or molded into perfection. The unalterable perfection of You has remained unaltered, and that perfection is what will be uncovered. And that which has had nothing to do with your perfection will simply disappear.

You have heard the story of someone speaking to a sculptor who says, “How on earth can you sculpt such a beautiful thing?” And the sculptor says, “Well it’s easy, I just chip away that which has nothing to do with the figure.” He doesn’t create a figure out of a block, he simply removes what has nothing to do with the figure. Likewise, healing is a revealing of your essential perfection that has been covered over by that which has nothing to do with your essential perfection.

The last thing I am going to say will address the bottom line issue with you that stands in the way of your healing: You deserve to be healed.

QUESTION: I’d like to ask you about success, about what it is that I specifically need to do for it to be in my life? The way I like it.

ANSWER: I am going to put it to you very simply: Success is what happens when you get past the point of feeling like you have to prove yourself. Success is what happens—is what you experience—when you are no longer trying to meet anyone else’s expectations. Success is what you experience when you get past the point of feeling that you must be successful.

Because when you get past that point, suddenly all of your energy is present with you, available to that which moves within you. And none of that energy is being siphoned off with a wonder about what so-and-so will think, or what this group will think, or what my family will think. And thus, it is as though your energy can move straight as an arrow, with no hindrances.

Now, what will make it move straight as an arrow is not that because you are not distracted you are able to give sharp focus to it, it is that when you are in this place where you are not living for other people, you are in that place where your peace is available to you and you can feel the Movement of YOUR Being, and flow with it.

And when you are not introducing scattering energy of distraction into the Movement of your energy, it inevitably flows in a manner that reveals that which you love in a form that everyone else loves. And there is unobstructed forward movement that feels good to you and feels good to everyone else.

Success is not having a lot of money. Success is being in a manner that identifies your joy. And always that movement that identifies your joy will be accompanied by your needs being met. Success is something that flows from you; it isn’t something that comes to you; it isn’t something to be acquired. Success is built in. But none of you access it as long as you are trying to meet some concept of what success is.

And inevitably, any concept of success you have has come from something put forth by another—whether it’s your parents, whether it’s your educators—or else it has come from you as an assessment of the world and how it works through the sheer use of your reason and observation, without ever having become quiet enough to become congruent with yourself.

Success is you allowing yourself to be what is present without apology, without doubt and without any attempt to show anyone anything. The rose opens, and it is beautiful whether anyone is looking at it or not. And because it is beautiful, everyone looks at it.

Success is you being on target with who you Are. Am I leaving anything out? You do not have to answer. I know that my answer doesn't seem to address what everyone else says are the elements of success. Be grateful that I am not addressing them. Because what I am addressing is going to help you get off the wheel of history—is going to help you get out of the rut that everyone else is caught in—so that you might truly experience the joy of being you, and the discovery that you being you fit in. The world and you are a unity, the world and the universe and you are a unity.

And when you are allowing yourself to be in that peace of your being that is inseparable from that unity, you will find that all of the elements of success that everyone else has described will be present, not as an accomplishment, but rather, because it is your Birthright. And because it is your Birthright there is no labor—no struggle to it—and no terrible sense of responsibility, no burden of responsibility.

Fulfillment will be present and fully identified in your experience. Success is what you experience when you get past trying to be successful. And I'm going to change the words slightly, because “get past” sounds like a little bit of work. So, let us say, success is what you will find yourself experiencing when you abandon trying to be successful.

Why won't everything go to pot if you don't have a highly developed, strong focus? Because what I told you at the outset this morning was that you are divine. You are the innocent full expression, the innocent full Presence of the Movement of God. That is why everything will configure around you to identify the fullness of God's purpose, and when you abandon trying to be successful and fulfilling other people's concepts of what success is.

QUESTION: I was wondering, could you tell me please did Jesus fall asleep as we fell asleep, and then Awakened himself as we need to be Awakened. Or did he merely incarnate to help us Awaken, himself never having been asleep?

ANSWER: I guess you could say it was half an incarnation, since I only had half of the compliment of human parents that everyone else has.

I will tell you that this was the only “incarnation” that I participated in. And, therefore, my presence was not one of a long series of incarnations. And thus, the process of birth—the physical process of birth and what you would call development—could not successfully hide, completely from me my divinity. Because my divinity had not been “lost” through a series of lifetimes, the one incident of birth could not successfully obscure from me my divinity—this was on purpose.

And indeed, it was my purpose in incarnating to not forget, and to be able to be present to help remind my brothers of their divinity that they had become unconscious of. And indeed, that is what I am continuing to do at this time, without a physical presence. And it is for very good reason.

Although each one of you is identifiable and your identifiability is called your body, you are not a body. And the shift of consciousness that mankind is moving into at this very time, is a shift from body identification to mind identification.

You are that Conscious Awareness in which the conscious experience of body and chair and buildings and world and universe are going on. You are unlimited Conscious Awareness. There is no available experience of boundary to you as Conscious Awareness. If I were to appear in form, you would make stronger the identification with body, and this would inhibit your making that willing shift from body identification to Mind or Awareness identification.

You could say that the first time I came was just to get your attention, while at the same time sharing the essential truth so that it was present to—you might say—percolate. It fulfilled prophecy, it fulfilled divine Order. Because you see, although you can sleep and dream and have what had been called vain imaginations and believe that they are true, they cannot alter what is true. And, therefore, because sleeping and dreaming is not your natural estate or natural state of awareness, everyone will eventually wake up.

I will tell you something: By conceiving yourself as going through a series of lifetimes in which your Soul is being refined, you actually delay waking up, because you conceive that there is much more growing and refining of your Soul that must be done.

And do not let this feel monotonous, but you are going to keep hearing me talk about abandoning things, not working through them. And it is time to abandon this so-called refining of your Soul. Soul can only be written with a capital “S”, because it is one of the seven aspects, you might say, of God.

Soul is God’s capacity to feel the Meaning of His Movement, His capacity to recognize Himself in that Movement and say, “Behold, it is very good.” In other words, to feel good about it. Being is a feeling thing, and I’m not talking about emotion, I’m talking about Soul-sensing.

PAUL: If you have a “yes, but” or an addendum to it, he’s inviting it.

QUESTION: Yes please if I could. One of the first contacts with spirituality, I guess, was through Edgar Cayce. And I understood that he had mentioned that Jesus had incarnated a number of times. What you’re saying seems to be a contradiction of this. Can you ease my mind anyway here?

ANSWER: Well, you have gotten it from the horse's mouth. Are you going to take my word or Edgar's?

I will elaborate a bit more in response to the last question, in this respect: Indeed, as a child growing up there was not the full conscious awareness of myself inseparable from the Father. I could not at that age have said to anyone, "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." Because that was not my conscious experience of myself. And so indeed, I experienced the things that you experience. And thus, when I speak to you, I speak with understanding as to the nature of the manner in which the ego functions and controls your experience.

And I will tell you something (and Jewish mothers haven't changed that much in two thousand years): My mother never let me forget who I was. Now Jewish mothers don't tend nowadays to not let their sons remember who they divinely are, but my mother was excellent at reminding me of my divine nature. It wasn't just a metaphysical thought or a religious teaching to her that I was divine, the manner of my birth made it obvious to her at a feeling, experiential level that I was divine.

And so, when the times came about where I was getting into fights with the other guys, and feeling ego peaks and valleys, she was very quick to remind me that this was not my nature. She was not pushy about this—although I perceived her to be—because, of course, I wanted satisfaction, and what she was sharing with me obviated the necessity for satisfaction from an ego level.

I am speaking to you at this moment in a very human way, although it is not my present perception really. I say it because it is so important for you. When you are talking to your children, when you are thinking about yourself, when you are relating to friends, or lovers, or mates, find ways to acknowledge their divinity.

Now, you do not have to sit at the dinner table and say, "Now, George, remember you're the Christ." But praise, acknowledgment of that which has been done that is loving (because you know that they are the Presence of the Christ, the direct expression of the Father) does not reinforce their negative, limited, down-bearing self-concepts.

And it makes all the difference in the world for the inner false sense of limitation not to be nurtured, but to be counteracted much in the way that a frightened child hears his parents say, "There are no ghosts, you are safe." They don't need to be told the metaphysical perspective about ghosts. They don't need to understand about ghosts. They only need to hear, "You don't need to be afraid." And they need to hear it from someone who isn't afraid so that they can conceive of the possibility that it's safe to relax.

And when someone behaves in a way to you, or expresses themselves to you that says, "I don't have the capacity to love. I don't have the capacity to endure this situation," you can be encouraging and remind them that they do have the capacity to love. And it doesn't come from their body, it doesn't come from energy gotten from the food that they eat, it comes from an inexhaustible source in them.

There are ways for you to talk to each other. There are ways for you to talk to each other that nourishes and supports movement beyond whatever the conviction is at the moment as to one's limitations. Because the more safe one feels, and the more one's concept of one's self reflects the divine original, the easier it becomes for that one to let go of overt attempts to control, and instead begin to allow their fulfillment to occur—to allow their enlightenment to occur.

Indeed, as the Bible says, it was not until John and I were in the river and I was being baptized that the last of the scales fell from my eyes (I knew the word, Paul forgot it) and I came into the full conscious experience of having no other Mind than the Mind of God. This is your Birthright.

Indeed, I did not experience the ego sense of life to the degree that most of you are experiencing it. But I will tell you that a little bit is pretty bad, and did ultimately require a willingness on my part to abandon it, even though it felt as though abandoning it would be a grave and serious mistake.

And so I understand what each of you seem to be faced with. And you may always know that no matter what I say to you directly in the quietness of your own being, it is not without an understanding of how things appear to you—not only appear to you, but feel to you. And in this case I am using the word “feel” to describe the emotions of fear and doubt and mistrust that accompany listening to divine clarity, and the demand it makes upon you to do what flies in the face of the ego's definition of security.

I do understand. You could say I am able to read the situation correctly. I am not so other-worldly that I cannot comprehend what you are going through and, therefore, I must have misunderstood you. I encourage you to believe that I have understood you perfectly. And if what I have said seems a little unbelievable to you, you can dare to say, “Maybe he knows better than me. And maybe I can dare to look at what he is saying. And maybe I can pursue my objections to it with him so that he can clarify it further, and free me up of the doubt I have that keeps me from embracing it wholly.”

QUESTION: I have two questions. I think they're related. The first one is: Why are we so attached to our guilt and our ego? And secondly: Is there any shortcut in abandoning the attachments?

ANSWER: I know others in this room who are delighted that you asked the second part of your question. Why are you so attached to your thoughts and your ego? Because your perception that you are tiny and that you exist in a huge universe, which you believe puts you at a significant disadvantage, causes you to be defensive, on guard. And so you “naturally” insist upon carrying out your defense to keep yourself safe in the face of imagined threat. And as a result, you seldom take time to become quiet enough to find value in the awareness you experience in that silence.

Many of you are like Paul used to be—you think that being conscious is synonymous with thinking, and it is not. And I will be very frank with you: One of the great values of meditation is that you are able to find that you can be fully aware without a single thought going on. That in itself is a revelation. It lets you, at an experiential level, find out that there is another way to be present in the world besides constantly thinking.

You are attached to thought because of the fact that, through the use of reason and logic you are able to come to conclusions that allow you to manipulate and control your environment and life-style, we'll say, with a certain degree of success. And because there has been a certain degree of success, you are impelled to learn how to think even more correctly. And because of this fundamental sense of tininess that is a result of having lost the experience of your infinity, you value thinking because it insures your safety—you think.

And so it seems to be a very difficult thing to abandon thinking, to let it go in order to find that there is a different experience available to you—a different experience of being present; an experience in which knowing, which is not a result of thinking, becomes available to you because it is an inherent and natural part of your Being, of your divine Being.

Now, I want you to remember that it is you right here and now who will seem to be exalted. It is not you who will be exalted into some other place, because you are at this very instant the full manifestation of the Movement of God. Another way of putting it is that you are the Christ. You could say that you are the Buddha. You are the divine One, each of you, right here.

As you begin to embrace the possibility that there is another way to be present than as a thinker and an accomplisher, and that way is to be found in your peace—peace of mind, quietness of mind—you will begin to allow yourself to have that experience with some curiosity and expectation, as though it might possibly be a most delightful thing and not something to be afraid of. And in doing this, you will allow yourself to be in that place where you feel the Movement of your Being, of your essential Being not your conceived being, not your concept you have of yourself. And that Movement feels very different from any other form of physical peace you have experienced, because you can feel its substantiality—immoveable, like the Rock of Gibraltar, unthreatenable, utterly safe.

And to feel that kind of substantial peace right here, where you have always been afraid to one degree or another, is the first step in your having a grounded experience of the fact that there is another way to be present in the world—a way that is without fear, even though you cannot explain why you aren't afraid, even though you don't understand why you aren't afraid. It just is the fact of your Being.

But you don't connect with that experience because your sense of your tininess causes you to feel vulnerable, it seems to call for defense. And so you engage in your life acts of defense to keep yourself safe and to control the situation in a hostile environment.

Now, there is something you need to know: What I am talking about is not like an ostrich sticking its head in the ground and just saying, "everything is all right," when it isn't. I am saying that when you dare to abandon thinking in favor of the inner experience of your peace—and you have that inner experience of peace—truly all the things that seemed threatening will no longer be threatening to you. They may need to be dealt with, but they will not be frightening to deal with.

The child learning math who writes two plus two equals five has made a mistake. He could think about it and say, "This must mean I'm terrible at math and, therefore, I won't succeed in life because I know I'll never get this." And a simple wrong answer becomes life-threatening. And the teacher comes along and says, "No, Johnny, two plus two is four." "Two plus two equals four, Oh-h-h, I get it." And now, the five that had been there, not being threatening to his whole life, has become something to simply correct without emotion.

So, is there any way to speed this up? Is there any short-cut? Well, I will tell you: I am telling you the short-cut. You all in one way or another have been refining your Souls over lifetimes—that's the long-cut. The short-cut is to get off of that repetitious, linear movement and stop the thinking that improves the mind that refines the Soul—blah, blah, blah, blah—and daring to become still, so that the chatter of your ego and your concepts and beliefs and your effort to protect yourself might subside enough for you to feel the REAL presence of you that has always been present.

If you want to know in words what the short-cut is, it is: choose for your peace. I'll say it in another way: Life is not a test. Therefore, you are not going to be graded. Success or failure is not the potential. And if failure is not one of the potentials, then fear is groundless. Again, too simple? No! It is that simple! And I am encouraging all of you to muster up enough courage to explore the truth of what I am saying.

It is only when you are mentally discumbooberated that everything can seem to go haywire and be overly complex, because it reflects the disintegratedness of your awareness. And when you choose for your peace and find that it is ever available to you whenever you choose to feel it, you will find that in the experience of that peace all the frazzled loose ends and all of their potentials will disappear. And in their place you are left with a clarity that, "This is appropriate, and this is not. This is the direction to go, and these ten directions are not."

In the peace of your Being comes the simplicity of Being. This is a fact. And it does not take one of great spiritual advancement or understanding to have the experience; it only takes one who is willing to sit down and become still. And one most effective means of doing that is just sitting quietly and breathing through one's nose and paying attention to the sensation of the air as it passes the inside of your nostrils, and just letting your attention rest gently on that sensation. "Well, what could that accomplish?" Nothing—that's the point.

It allows you to just be present—not hypnotically—but without distraction, with the sensation on the inside of your nose. And when you find that you have become distracted by a thought, don't hassle yourself in your mind about it, just drop the thought and bring your attention back to the sensation on the inside of your nostrils. And do that for twenty minutes twice a day.

The sensation is the equivalent of a mantra, and if you want to use a mantra, use a mantra. The point is that you will come to a time when you haven't been distracted by a thought, but you will realize that you weren't paying attention to the sensation inside your nostrils, and yet you were totally present with everything going on around you—you could still hear the cars, or the tick of the clock, or the kids getting home from school, or whatever. None of it escaped you, but you weren't engaged in thinking ABOUT it; coming to conclusions; assuming what kind of a day Johnny had and what you might be called upon to respond to, etc. And you will find that you have experienced in that quietness a perfect equilibrium that would have allowed you to deal with whatever came up, without fear—and, therefore, with an ability to be perfectly appropriate.

It has been said that I walked through the world Awake—I walked through the dream Awake. It is a nice phrase. It expresses somewhat of the truth. Your task is to be in the world from your center, rather than from the surface, reactive level of your ego.

And when you dare to do this you begin to find your world more fully revealed in its divinity and its Real Meaning—and that's where the delight of waking up begins to occur. Aside from the fact that while you are doing it, you will not experience fear on an ongoing basis. That in itself is a marvel. Except that you might find that you will live for five years before it dawns on you that you haven't been experiencing fear. Why would that happen? Because it is so utterly natural to you to be fearless—without fear. And when you feel what is natural it doesn't stand out to you. Your divine birthright is your birthright right here, not in the future after you die.

I'm going to say something else: Everyone thinks of Awakening and being enlightened as a religious experience, well, it's a very secular experience; because being divine isn't separate from being Real, it isn't separate from being genuine, it isn't separate from being humane and, therefore, it isn't separate from humanity.

So the way to hurry it up is to more consistently choose for your peace. Now, I want you to understand that this is not a lonely task. If the only thing that you can be confronted with is Reality, perceived truly or misperceived, then all that is characteristic of God is what is confronting you. And God is indivisible and, therefore, incapable of conflict. And, therefore, conflict is not natural to life.

If everything is God Being, then when you begin to show the slightest interest in seeing everything free of your current concepts about what it is, when you begin to dare to let go of your addiction to thinking and be in this peace of your Being—you can count on it—that from your standpoint you will feel the support of the universe. And it will not be a lonely task that you are engaged in.

Why will you feel that? You will feel it because the truth of the universe is that it is the Presence of God, and not a presence of conflict. Therefore, its truly divine nature, as an expression of Love, will register with you as what it is, and you will feel that it is supportive of you because it is incapable of acting at odds with you.

And so, while you are doing this apparently lonely thing of going within into the peace of your Being, you will really be slipping through what the Course calls the little gap—slipping through it off of the time line of history, out of your finiteness into your infinite Whole Conscious Awareness of Being, in which the unity of All That Is can begin to register with you because that's what's really there.

Another way of putting this is that you will begin to find your practice of not thinking greatly supported. It is as though your world will begin to reconfigure and not represent to you what it used to represent to you—and it gives you nurturing encouragement to continue.

But the point is that you must dare to start. You must dare to stop thinking so that the ever presence and omnipresence of God, that is called All That Is, will actually begin to register with you as something absolutely inseparable from you.

I will become even more succinct: How do you hurry this up? You shut up! It is a marvelous thing, you won't be comfortable in silence for very long. You will feel a desire for something. And if you are willing not to provide the something, that desire will be your act of giving permission for the infilling of the Holy Spirit.

And we might as well talk about the Holy Spirit for a moment, because it is important for you to know that the Holy Spirit, which has been described as part of the Godhead, the Trinity, is really your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. And so, when you don't let the ego answer the call for something to fill the void and, instead, you desire the Holy Spirit to fill it—that invitation is an opening of your doors, and thus it begins to infill you. And since it is what you divinely Are that is infilling you, it is an experience of integrity; it is the experience of you coming back into your Right Mind—you regaining your Sanity.

So you see, it is a completely reinforcing process that enhances and enlarges your experience of your integrity; whereas, the addiction to thinking and the ego causes your integrity to be undermined, and it seems to substantiate the ongoing need for self-protection which keeps you separate from everything, as a life-preserving technique—can you imagine that? It is the technique for losing your life. It is the technique for losing your clear awareness of everything as God knows it to be. It is the sacrifice of your peace.

So take twenty minutes twice a day and shut up! so that there is room for the Holy Spirit—for what you divinely are, infinitely speaking, to have room to infill you and illuminate You to you. And thus make it easier for you to devalue thinking in favor of the spontaneous knowing—of how to be utterly appropriate in the world—to register with you.

Others will not think you are weird, they will say, “You are really much more calm than I remember you. You are amazing, the way you are able to cope with things without being frazzled by them. What is your secret? It is so easy to be around you, because you’re not jangled, and when you’re not jangled it’s easier for me not to be jangled, and I’m able to like myself better when I’m with you. What is it that’s going on with you?” It will create interest, but interest coupled with appreciation and not fear.

So, you are addicted to thinking and to the ego as an act of self-defense, as a result of feeling tiny when you’re not. You feel tiny because you have identified with the body, instead of identifying as Conscious Awareness. And thus, mistake, upon mistake, upon mistake, has occurred. And you cut through it by becoming still—listening—inviting the infilling of guidance, of the Holy Spirit, and expecting that infilling to occur.

I told Paul at one time that when he was willing to give up the cigarettes, the cigarettes would be willing to give him up. In other words, he would find his world reconfiguring in support of his clarity. He has yet to have that experience.

You know what? You’re not condemned for what you haven’t realized yet, even if you’ve been told. Because life is not a test. You have never actually been changed from the divine One you Are. Therefore, because your divine Selfhood is unchangeable and unthreatenable, no matter what you think you have done wrong, no matter what actions you are engaged in out of baseless fear, it truly is meaningless and does not call for judgment and penalty.

I said it earlier in a different way, but it is very important for you to understand that God, or Jesus Christ, or anyone who is Totally Awake—it is inconceivable to them for judgment to be anything other than a ridiculous concept. And, therefore, there is never an indictment, never a divine indictment, against you.

If you imagine, as you sit there, that you have purple and orange polka dots on your nose, and you further imagine that this is the sign of a terminal disease, and you become frightened to death for your life—your imagination cannot change the fact that your nose has no polka dots on it, whatsoever. And anyone in his Right Mind would look at you and not agree with your fear, and not be concerned for your life, and would not judge you for your imagination, but would have compassion on you (just as you would with a child who has a baseless fear) and encourage you to let go of the fear.

No matter what your ignorance might seem to be, no matter how serious it might seem to be to you, no matter how much it seems to call for judgment, indictment and suffering—it is so much tinkling brass, so much nonsense, it means nothing. And only another ego believing the same thing would agree with your very negative conclusion. One who is Awake sees the silliness of the idea.

God is not sitting in judgment, because you haven't stopped being His Son or Daughter, His self-expression, from which He has withheld nothing of what He Is. And so if you imagine something to the contrary, it means nothing, even though it seems most real to you. It is very important for you to know, that the verdict of justice is innocence.

We are all the beloved Sons and Daughters of God in whom God is well pleased; anything to the contrary that you seem to be experiencing is just a spurious idea that you are entertaining in your mind, in a most imaginative way. It is pure fantasy, and has not the ability to control your life. You all can stop validating these ideas, and in doing that, put yourself in the receipt of the support of the Kingdom of Heaven that will reflect back to you the validation of your innocence.

The only thing any of you are ever caught in is a farce that has been put over on you, and you didn't have the courage to disagree with it, or not validate it.

No, I don't love to hear the sound of my voice. I am going on at some length here because you are ready to hear this at a much deeper level of your Being. And so indeed, I am responding to where you are with nourishment and encouragement, so that you can take hold of this truth with more confidence.

The ego, itself, is a defense mechanism—very highly skilled. There is only one thing it cannot defend itself against and that is disregard; you will not be able to overcome the ego, tie it up, restrain it, and then be able to be free to head off for the Kingdom of Heaven. You will simply have to disregard it. You will simply have to give your attention in a new place. And the new place is the silence within you. The ego cannot defend itself against lack of attention.

QUESTION: In the first week of this year something, should I say, occurred—took place in my previous home. My question is what bearing will this have on my future. Thank you.

ANSWER: I want you to take these words advisedly. The effect they will have is that of freeing you up.

PAUL: And this is me, Paul. Sometimes when he says things, there are also images. And this is the first time today that it's happened. But it's like a knapsack that has a hole in it, and a few things have fallen out so that the load is lighter.

Even if one thought it wasn't good that the things had fallen out... Okay just a moment now...

ANSWER: Now, I said you would need to take my words advisedly, and that is because cause does not lie in the three-dimensional frame of reference. Effects are not created within the three-dimensional frame of reference. What you see as events are effects of fourth-dimensional Movement, divine Movement.

Again, when viewed from the ego's frame of reference, you see everything three-dimensionally in terms of cause and effect. But truly speaking, or what we could call fourth-dimensionally speaking, the First Cause, God, is the Movement that is the event rather than the effect. Fourth-dimensionally speaking, you could talk about cause and event, instead of cause and effect. But if you realize that the Event is the Movement of the First Cause, you will realize that they cannot be separated into two things. The Movement, the Cause that is the Event, when viewed three-dimensionally—through the lens of limitation—can be interpreted as causes and effects, three-dimensionally speaking.

Now, if you buy into this appearance, your future will seem to be governed by your past. The sins of the fathers are carried down to the children and grandchildren and so-on. The sins of your youth rule your adult life, etc.

Therefore, what has happened at the first of the year, in itself, is not going to have any effect upon your future. What is going to happen is that you are going to find yourself experiencing a demand for change that you hadn't anticipated. And that is going to create an openness and a curiosity, which is going to allow some new things in. And in that sense there will be expansion and you will call it a greater freedom, a release from limitation. The reason that the expansion will occur is because the permission was given by means of curiosity, and not because of an event in time.

I encourage you to look forward to the balance of this year, because it is going to be significant for you in terms of expansion and movement in new directions. And I am not being a soothsayer here. This is appropriate knowledge for you to have.

Some of the newness will seem to be the result of a demand you would rather not be faced with. But that's all right. And if when you find yourself saying, "I would rather not be faced with this," if instead of that you would say—"I'm going to embrace it, I'm not going to resist it"—the period of change will be shortened and the dynamics of it will be minimized and you will move through it more gracefully.

QUESTION: I don't get to talk to Jesus often.

Why do I continue to believe that I am less deserving than others in attaining my dreams? And why do I continue to perceive my needs and desires as being less important or deserved than others? In particular, in attaining satisfaction in my work/financial life? And why do I continue to choose suffering, when my rational mind tells me that this is unnecessary?

And just an afterthought on that. If this isn't the question I should be asking, Jesus, could you please answer the question I meant to have asked?

ANSWER: I will be very frank with you. It makes you somewhat special. It makes you stand out from the crowd, because you tend, generally speaking, to have friends and acquaintances and associates who are doing well. In effect, it makes you apparently more worthy of God's grace; if you, out of those you associate with, are the underdog. You see what I mean?

Well, I am sorry to say that it will not get you any special favors. And you don't need any.

Now, I encourage you to start giving a new word. You think that you are looking at your circumstances, and describing the circumstances apart from your thinking. In other words, the description that you have just given has come second. But I promise you that a decision was made by you in the adopting of that attitude and it has been reflected in your experience. You need to start giving a new word.

A beggar is not more deserving than a rich man. It is not a sneaky way to gain the grace of God, or the divine Ear of God.

Now, it is especially important for you not to try to find out why it is that you have come to this decision about yourself and your life. It really is necessary for you to use a little bit of, what I am going to call, mental self-discipline. And when you catch these words whispering through your mind that you are not as deserving, or you are not as worthy, you know what I want you to do?--I want you to say, "shut up to your ego!" And I want you to mean the same thing as I meant when I said, "Get thee behind me Satan!" What did that mean, "Get thee behind me?" In other words: "You can't be in first place, get at the back of the line. I will not honor you by putting you ahead of me."

Don't put your Birthright in second place to a string of words that say you are not as worthy as someone else, thinking that that is somehow going to get you divine favor, causing you to be more pitiful and, therefore, worthy of pity. You don't need to get help through pity.

Now, you know and I know that what I am saying is true, in spite of the fact that, generally speaking, you come across as a very strong capable individual who doesn't take second place to anyone. But you and I know that that is a front. And that what you honor is not what you are presenting, but what you are feeling emotionally, which is a sense of unworthiness—except that there is a purpose for it. It is a not so secret manipulation of God, and what I mean is, it is not so secret to God—amusing, but not secret.

It doesn't matter why you haven't given yourself permission to experience your fulfillment of purpose—just because, or for no good reason. But I am encouraging you to do that. Simply stop the old habit and do something new in its place.

I am going to suggest to you that you be ready for an influx of opportunity. Be ready for it not in the sense of bracing yourself, but in the sense of being willing to receive it without arguing against it. The only reason for doing that is so that you can experience it more gracefully—not because if you argue against it, it will be taken away and not given again.

All of you create processes. You think them up. And certain processes have to be accomplished before you will give yourself permission to experience your good. And it's all folderol. If you would drop that and just simply say, "Yes, Father," or just simply say, "yes" without any arguments to the contrary, you would find these things being added unto you; or more correctly, you would find what was already there becoming visible to you. You asked the right question.

QUESTION: How do I put meaning in my life? And what is the purpose of the relationship I'm in now, with a woman?

ANSWER: The answer to how you put meaning into your life is, pay attention. You're like a little child sitting at the side of a road and there's a parade. And he is sort of dejected—he has his gaze down between his legs at the curb, and some pieces of paper and debris that he is sort of playing with, fiddling with. And the wonder of life is going on all around him, and he simply isn't looking up. There isn't a curiosity to see what is there, because he is preoccupied with feeling sorry for himself.

Putting meaning into your life—that could be quite a job. It denies that meaning is there. And the denial is what will govern your perception. But if you are willing to embrace the fact (but I'm going to say embrace the idea) that meaning is going on, and that what is called for is a little curiosity to open the door to your experience of it, then you will dare to, so-to-speak, lift up your head and look around at exactly what is already present, but with curiosity—abandoning the preoccupation that has engrossed you.

This relationship is part of what is going on that is the meaning. And I am refraining from saying what the meaning is, but it is part of the meaning that is going on, and it is one of the opportunities you have for paying attention.

You know the saying, "You've got to get outside yourself." Indeed, I'm going to put it this way, there is a necessity for your sense of yourself to be a little bit more inclusive rather than exclusive. And it becomes inclusive by virtue of your paying attention to see what in the world is going on.

Don't look outside what is going on in your life, don't move to another city, don't change your friends, don't find a new job, don't go to new places. Pay attention right where you are to exactly what is already going on, and do it with curiosity—you might say, with interest.

The other thing you need to know is that as long as you want to sit there fiddling with the debris on the ground in front of you, without raising your head, you are allowed to do that. No ax will fall, no punishment will come, no judgment against you will be made. And no one of any divine nature will try to change your mind; because it is all right for you to do that, even though it is not particularly fulfilling.

You see, you won't abandon that activity until you're sick and tired of it. Someone might be able to distract you, but if you still have an affection for it, you will find your way back to that spot and sit down and begin to fiddle with the debris. So it's okay. And you can sit there as long as you want. The meaning hasn't gone anywhere, but you're going to have to let it in. And the only way you will let it in is if you want to. And when you want to, then I encourage you to engage some curiosity and look up and out and pay attention.

The reason you are sitting there, eyes downcast, is because you are getting even with someone—someone who cares about you. And you know that because they care, it will be disturbing to them to see you in this state. And so they will suffer for what they did, because it is not easy for them to leave you in your misery.

You cannot be responsible for someone else's misery; they have to take it on themselves. But you know what that means? That no one else can be responsible for your misery. And if this other one is miserable because you are sulking, that's their problem to straighten out. And if you are trying to get even because someone else made you miserable, that is something for you to work out.

And at the bottom line—You are eventually going to come to the realization that, doing this little behavioral act isn't really accomplishing anything other than depriving you of the meaning that you asked for, or asked about. And you will finally decide that it is costing you too much.

If you want justice, then embrace your world and it will embrace you. And you will be in your joy no matter what anyone else has or hasn't done. Everyone else can be an ignoramus, and if you are in your joy, because you're not preoccupied with getting justice, it will be irrelevant to you whether they are acting like ignoramuses. And your freedom to experience your joy is a better occupation of your time than this sitting, fiddling with debris, ignoring the meaning of life, so that someone else might feel miserable for what you judge they did to you. Truly, you're the only one losing here.

I am speaking now to everyone in the room. There was a question earlier by a gentleman regarding an event that had happened during the first of the year. And that one question applied specifically to that gentleman and could not be said to apply to everyone. But the answer I have just shared here, applies to everyone as well.

Jewish mothers are known for claiming misery in order to make others miserable. Why? For control. But not Jewish mothers only—they just have less shame about doing it openly. It is not an indictment, it is simply an observation.

The call for justice is one of the most vicious of the ego's ploys to engage you in that which deprives you of your joy. And because it seems to be a claim for something righteous, it seems more justifiable. But at the bottom line—it keeps the one seeking justice caught in hate. And he must renew that hate daily in order to continue the quest for justice—all in the name of righteousness. Be careful of that one; because it is difficult to discern the injustice of what is happening to you in the process, and thus seems to take a longer time to disengage yourselves from.

If there is an injustice, I would encourage you all to turn it over to the Holy Spirit completely, and get on with your life, get on with paying attention to the meaning that is going on around you. And if, indeed, there is something needing to be corrected, you can count on it that the Holy Spirit will deal with it in a way that will be utterly appropriate.

I say what I have said with love. But there are times in which a good boot in the seat of the pants is what is needed to jar you out of the doldrums, or the hooks the ego gets into you and binds you with. And you deserve not to be bound.

QUESTION: You said before that to disregard the ego, it couldn't take that. But how do you know the difference between when you're denying your feelings, really, and you're disregarding the ego? Like you said, you need to be able to get pissed off with your guide. So, I find it difficult to actually recognize always what the ego is, and what I should pay attention to in myself.

And also, I keep coming back to the thought that I never really wanted to be here on the earth, and that I was tricked into coming. And if my life has a purpose, I'd like to know what it is.

ANSWER: The one practice that begins to invalidate the ego without challenging it is, for you to join with someone. I do not mean another human being, but I mean a choice within yourself to reach out to one who is Awake, one who is expressing the Will of the Father. It is important for all of you to know that every single one of your guides are totally Awakened; you could say, fully Christed. They are claiming no other mind, no other awareness of things, different from the Father's. "Thy Will be done" is their constant song you might say, except it is a behavioral expression of devotion.

When you get up in the morning and you are willing to say, "today I will make no decisions by myself," and then to the best of your ability you join with the Holy Spirit or your guide, and together come to conclusions—that is the way you disengage from the ego. That is the way you get out of the isolation from your fulfillment, even if you don't hear an answer to begin with. If the act of invitation to join is made, I promise you the joining occurs. That in itself undoes the devotion you have to the ego.

And for all practical purposes we're going to say that your conditioned thinking, your conditioned responses—the sense of who you are based upon what you have done—is what constitutes the definition of the ego. It is that which thinks for itself; comes to snap decisions; knows that it's perfectly all right to rush out to go to the store, at this moment, without needing to check in—it's not a major life-threatening decision.

But why not inquire? “Wait a minute, is it appropriate for me to go out this moment, or should I go a little bit later?” In that willingness to inquire, you are withdrawing from your habit patterns, you are abandoning your conditioned thinking, and you are open for something new to come in that isn't the result of your best judgment.

Even if you don't seem to get a response in the beginning, if you will persist, you will begin to feel something. I mean that if you will persist, let us say, even for a month or two, be willing to persist for a long time, so that your action isn't tentative. “Well, I'll try it today and see if it works.” You don't want it to be tentative, you want the willingness to be as complete as possible.

The very act of being aware that there is someone beside you with whom you can companion, breaks, we'll say, the strangle hold of your conditioned thinking and the teachings that you have ingrained and accepted. It is the way that you become disentangled from them—from the ego.

And as you begin to feel the nudges—the helpful hint to move in this direction, or to wait—then your willingness to conceive that you are not alone is proven as an experience. And that reassurance that you do not have to do everything by yourself and that help from one who has perfect vision is available to you, that then becomes your first solid step in letting go of the ego; and also discerning the difference between your inner knowing and the ego.

You persist in other things; this is something really worth persisting in.

I'm going to refrain from answering the second part of your question; because as the weekend continues it will be answered in a context that will be even more helpful for everyone present.

QUESTION: I was wondering if you could say something about the connection between mistrust and impatience?

ANSWER: Impatience is an unwillingness to be present in the now. Impatience postulates that your fulfillment is not available, presently. And likewise, distrust is an inability to conceive of something Real being present. It doesn't register with everyone that distrust is a totally private event. It is always someone you distrust, or something you distrust. As usual, the ego distracts you to something outside yourself. But distrust, practiced, is a practice of willingness to not be at peace within yourself.

To be in that sanctuary where trust is inevitable—unavoidable—because you clearly see the truth is, according to A Course In Miracles, the first element that comes into play for a teacher of God. In other words, a teacher of the meaning of A Course In Miracles—not a teacher of the words—but a teacher of the Being of it. Trust is a willingness to step into the unknown, and not engage your fear.

Distrust is the means your ego uses to keep you from stepping into the unknown and continuing to function in “the known.” Distrust is a way you have of invalidating your own experience of your integrity, and thus not being present with you, present with yourself. In this sense, impatience and distrust are the means by which the ego keeps you from being present with what Is. And it, thereby, keeps you from experiencing It—It with a capital “I”, the divine It, whatever It might be.

QUESTION: I believe I’m addressing myself to the Master Jesus?

ANSWER: You believe correctly.

QUESTION: And in that case I would like to know a little bit about the healing works of Jesus here on earth, about his success and failures. And I would also like to learn from a Master Healer to become one myself. Thank you.

ANSWER: I will tell you one of the first lessons that one learns is that, you cannot heal someone unwilling to be healed. To be a healer does not mean to have power, it means rather to have the Love—the lack of judgment that allows another to feel enough comfort within himself or herself to become defenseless—which is when the influx of the Holy Spirit can occur, the influx of their divinity can occur.

It is not uncommon to think that someone who is totally Awakened has the power of God at his or her disposal. But what I want you to understand is that, the fact that you are not experiencing your incredibly, wonderful perfection at this moment is not because it has been withheld from you, but rather because a decision for finiteness, a decision for separation, has been made by you—I mean all of you. And the counteracting decision must be made by you. You must abandon the decision of separation that causes you to feel vulnerable and therefore necessarily defensive, and therefore necessarily conflicted, and therefore subject to experiences of conflict.

There’s something that must happen within the one called a healer before God’s Love, before the divine Love that heals, can truly be extended to another in a manner that effects the environment—brings about the environment—in which that person can let go of his defenses—his seeming need to defend himself against conflict. Something that must happen within the healer is that, he must have arrived at a point, or she must have arrived at a point, of enough humility to be open to some experience of who and what he or she divinely Is.

In other words, that one must have arrived at a point where, in one way or another, there has been enough willingness to experience the peace of his or her being so that the revelation, the uncovering, the revealing of his or her divinity, can occur. When that occurs, it is not possible once again to completely close off and block that Self-experience. And that revelation, as an experience of that Individual, becomes the new measuring stick, if you will, of everyone he encounters, or everyone she encounters.

When one experiences that Love within himself or herself, one realizes that no matter what he or she has done, it hasn't been sufficient to cause that Love to be unavailable. Which means it's available to everyone; which means that in some way everyone must be innocent enough to deserve that ongoing Love.

That is the context in which a new vision of your fellow man emerges in your life that alters the way you perceive your fellow man. And it allows you, no matter what the circumstances seemed to have been with that other one, to embrace that other one without judgment; other than the awareness that that one is unconditionally deserving of the Love that can allow that Individual to relax and let down his or her defenses and thereby, the conflict that has been manifesting as a disease.

Your Master Teacher is within you. And when you dare to become defenseless against the Holy Spirit in you and the Love of the Father, and it fills you, and reveals You to you on a new basis, whether it causes you to wake up totally or not, it alters your vision of your fellow man.

What I want you to know is, that you are the Teacher of you—all of you are. The divine One that you are—yes, the Christ that you Are—is waiting to teach you about the Christ that you Are. You can go and listen to Masters all over the place. You can listen to me. But what I say is not what counts, what I MEAN is what counts.

And to the degree that what I mean is allowed by you to register with you, it causes a new feeling within you. Not a new concept—a new feeling in you that short-circuits the intellect, you might say—gives you a short cut, if you will. You get from point “A” to point “B” because of a feeling that has been uncovered within you; and thus healing occurs because of an experience, a thoughtless, wordless experience. Subsequently, you may find words with which to share the experience, but it isn't the thoughts or the words that got you to the point of having the experience.

Besides listening to what I am saying this weekend, I want you to pay attention to how I am treating you. How does it feel? What difference has it made, if any? And if you are worthy of being treated like this, then you all know you're not anyone special. Then how completely is it appropriate for you to treat your fellow man like this? It is completely appropriate.

You are not here and I am not here to give you words that will allow you to think and reason more effectively. The ultimate purpose of the words I use and the ideas that are expressed are to help you arrive at a point of such trust that you can let go of words, and allow the experience that is there in the absence of words and reasoning and logic.

How do you become a healer? By loving yourself enough to let go of control and let yourself be filled. And if you are afraid of being filled by the Holy Spirit, then let yourself be filled by the Father. Let yourself be filled, and then you can share, but you cannot control. And it is not your responsibility to make a healing happen. It's the individual who is suffering from a disease that has, for lack of better words, their hands on the switch. It's their decision to turn the switch off and ignore their divinity. And it must be their decision to turn the switch on and give permission for their divinity to be experienced.

There really isn't much glory in being a healer, because it isn't something you accomplish. All you can do is to be that presence, which is so benign and so unconditionally loving, that it makes it easier for another to do likewise, and make a new decision for himself or herself.

If you are confused about healing being the result of a power of love that the healer has achieved, then you will be at the mercy of others telling you it is your responsibility to heal them. And the fact that they are not healed says, you are making a false claim about yourself by saying you are a healer. And the illusion that the person's problem is someone else's responsibility, or its solution is someone else's responsibility, can continue—and healing will be delayed.

“Physician heal thyself.”

QUESTION: This question which I am asking was asked by my friend. And the question is: Why are we experiencing this illusion if we are all perfect in the Movement of God?

ANSWER: Why do you ride a roller-coaster?

QUESTION: I don't.

ANSWER: You must understand that, just as you can look around you and view everything within your range of vision, and you can get a microscope and hone in on a very minute aspect of all that your vision normally takes in—in which you experience a limitation because of such a high degree of focus—you are, divinely speaking, able to experience Reality from many levels (which you are most familiar with through the use of the word dimensions—first, second, third, fourth).

It is not a disobedience to do this. And so, as I have said before, what has been called the fall of man was not an act of disobedience for which you have believed you were punishable, it is rather an option that you have available to you. The problem is that when you choose to look at the Kingdom of Heaven through only the first three-dimensions—which I have referred to as the third-dimensional frame of reference—the experience of limitation is necessarily one of losing your experience of your infiniteness.

This experience does not feel natural. It's unnaturalness is not a penalty that you are experiencing, but rather just the reminder that this is not your home-base perception—your home-base experience. It is this uncomfortableness, this unnaturalness which has become the trigger of fear, which your now tiny sense of self takes as a call for defense.

And thus what happens is, you can become entrapped in a pattern of behavior of self-protection that causes you to forever stay at a distance from your threshold of Awakening—or in other words, coming back into the infinite view that it is your Birthright to be experiencing.

Most of you in this room have been caught in what I will call an eddy, like an eddy in a river—a little circular, repetitive movement of water—which if a leaf gets caught in, will stay for sometime until it becomes dislodged and is once again caught up in the current of forward movement of the river.

We began talking yesterday about innocence, and about the fact that most everyone to one degree or another feels like a fugitive—and always a fugitive is a fugitive from justice. And through the use of thinking one builds an insulation between one's self—a distance between one's self—and this justice, which, one believes will indict one as being guilty. And so one stays away from the Justice, which because it is Justice with a capital "J", will demonstrate to you the verdict of innocent.

Likewise, in shifting from your Birthright of the infinite view to a limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, you move into an experience of limitation, which feels uncomfortable and which your now tiny sense of self interprets to be danger, rather than your innate Sanity telling you that this is not home-base for you. And that is when the defense, the insulation, is developed. And as long as that insulation is maintained, you will remain caught in the limited perception.

Again, it is very important for you to understand that the choice to view the Kingdom of Heaven from within the three-dimensional frame of reference is no different from you choosing to look at the three-dimensional frame of reference, but narrowing yourself down to a microscopic view. Therefore, no judgment is made upon you, and you are not guilty of anything that you must make up for.

Now, the very fact that each of you has divine guidance available to you is, because there are those of us who have not chosen to view the Kingdom of Heaven from within the three-dimensional frame of reference only. And we see that you are distracted from your Wholeness, you are distracted from the infinite view (what I referred to yesterday as God's point of view) that it is your Birthright to be experiencing.

And so we are able to step into that point where you are paying attention, in order to help encourage you to invalidate the fear, to invalidate the sense of guilt, to help re-instill in you your innocence (that has not gone anywhere and which, very deeply, you have not forgotten) so that you might begin to reinterpret your discomfort. Not as a sign of danger, but as an evidence of your ever present capital "S" Sanity that knows that the limitation you are experiencing is not your Birthright, is not valid for you. And so, as to help you get the courage to abandon your flight, to abandon the identification as a fugitive, and in the absence of fear, be able to slip back into your Sanity.

I will tell you that the ego is not your friend. The ego is that sense of yourself that you have developed based upon the unusual and, in some ways, exciting experience of being and feeling tiny. The ego—in other words, this sense of yourself that you have developed, sometimes with great pride because of the skill and excellence with which you are able to express this egohood—is itself a misunderstanding of who you are, it is itself flawed. And every apparent perception that it has is a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync with Reality; therefore, it is always lying. In other words, it is giving you information that is exactly the opposite of the truth.

This is why it is very difficult to wake up without help, because the perspective that your conditioning provides you is one that is ultimately scary. In fact, the moment any of you actively begins to pursue your enlightenment, because something in you has illuminated to you the fact that there is enlightenment to be experienced, your ego immediately begins to speak up and pose threatening thoughts of danger. And I will tell you that the closer you get to the threshold of your Awakening, the more gargoyles there will be placed around the door to the Kingdom of Heaven by the ego.

It truly is very much like the maps in Columbus' time, where the belief was that there was an edge to the planet that one could fall off. And to keep people from venturing to that point of danger, they always characterized the edge as the habitat of dragons—gargoyles, in so many words.

Now, the real call here is for all of you to abandon the sense of guilt, the sense of vulnerability, the sense of tininess—which is the exact opposite of the truth about you—and like Columbus, dare to move beyond what everyone perceives to be the edge, beyond which there is nothing. And you accomplish this by bringing curiosity into play. An explorer embodies curiosity—a willingness to abandon the conditionings that say, thus far and no farther.

We could put this another way using the illustration of the microscope: If you have become very familiar with everything as you see it in the larger view with your eyes, and then you begin to view a drop of water from a pond or a small piece of tissue or something else, and you discover fascinating things going on, you could become quite engrossed. And your mother or your wife might have to say, “Dinner is ready, come on, come on.” “Just a minute, just a minute, this is fascinating, you wouldn't believe what I'm seeing here.” “Come on, dinner is ready.” And they have to tear you away from your engrossment with all of this fascinating new view.

Now, I am purposely sharing these images with you so that you might understand that your current dilemma of experiencing a limited view—which is uncomfortable at times—is not because of an act of disobedience on your part, which means that punishment will be coming when you're finally caught. And you are also not lost. You are not lost Souls.

You are like the individual engrossed with his view in the microscope, who by virtue of his engrossment has abandoned common sense and doesn't care about eating dinner. But dinner hasn't gone anywhere, and the room in the house that the microscope is in is still there, and his family is still there, and life is hustling and bustling all around him, even though it is not part of what he is giving his attention to. That is the key. And I said yesterday in answer to one of the questions: If you want to experience more meaning, then you must pay attention.

You are not caught in a limited perception because you did something wrong and God is punishing you. You do not have a sentence that you must fulfill before you can be released. You simply have to arrive at a point where you realize that the whole thing doesn't represent Reality; that you are experiencing it as a matter of conscious choice. And it was a choice for something that was perfectly all right, except that it happened to be so engrossing that you have forgotten to come Home to dinner.

In this way, you will not be hesitant to come Home for fear of punishment, and you will not justify remaining further in a limited perception of things. And also, any fascination you have with any aspect of this illusion, or limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, will become less engrossing. Because knowing what I have said allows you to remember that there is something else besides this.

As the COURSE says—there is another way to look at this. And this is the Kingdom of Heaven; there is another way to look at all of this. And once you remember that, it will become easier to develop a little bit of curiosity, and curiosity is like grease on the skids.

Someone who is superstitious could say that a microscope is one of the toys in the devil's workshop, because it distracts you from Reality. Someone else could say that, having chosen to look at the Kingdom of Heaven from within the three-dimensional only frame of reference (because that is a distraction from the Kingdom of Heaven) it is the evidence, it is one of the tools of the devil.

But I want to cut through this superstition of duality. There is only God and His infinite Self-expression, and nothing else. And the only way in which duality or conflict of opposing forces, the only way those thoughts or concepts could come into play, is once you have adopted the three-dimensional only frame of reference—in which you lose your true sense of yourself. And instead of being that Conscious Awareness in which everything is going on, you are a little tiny point of awareness in the middle of it all.

And in that reversed experience, it becomes possible to conceive of danger, and therefore some opposing force. And then—here's the hooker—this opposing force is something for you to overcome. And because something in you tells you that you are divine, because it cannot be utterly wiped from your memory by your preoccupation, you say, “I can beat this sucker.” And the contest is on. And the more you become engrossed in it, the further from your mind going Home becomes. Mind you, none of this changes Reality in any way.

You have heard the phrase, I know, a woman who is a computer widow, meaning that she has lost her husband to a computer—can’t tear him away for dinner, can’t get him to go out with the family and so-on, because it is so engrossing. That is all the more serious “the fall” was or is. It was not an act against God.

You see, the COURSE speaks of level confusion, and I am addressing level confusion here today. When a shift from being in your Right Mind occurs—when you abandon God’s point of view for what we will call a partial experience of what God is Being—and you begin to experience polarities, fear, the call for defense and so-on, and this seems very real to you, you make the assumption that these dualistic or polarized characteristics that you are now experiencing must also necessarily be characteristic of God.

And that is how the concept of a wrathful God developed. It was a projection of the confusion experienced by those caught in the three-dimensional only frame of reference. And who is going to want to unite with a wrathful God?

So you see how the limited perception reinforces itself and imprisons you. This is why it is so essential for all of you to be willing to at least consider that who you think you are at the moment is not who you Are, but is nothing more than a collection of definitions and characteristics that you have slowly put together and said, “This is me.”

As a child you practiced walking, either like a lady or like a man. And you got the hang of certain characteristics that you liked and you incorporated them. Today they are just a part of you, and you say “It’s me. That’s part of the package I am. That’s the way I always have been. I came into this life this way.” But you didn’t. You saw characteristics and behaviors that you liked and you slowly incorporated them and you developed a character.

It’s the ego. And it’s not you; it’s a collection of characteristics, either physical characteristics of behavior or mental characteristics. You are that which observed and said, “I’ll take a little bit of swagger, and I’ll take a little bit of gentleness, but not too much. I’ll take a lot of understanding, but I’ll also take a lot of arrogance so that there will be a balance and I won’t be a wimp,” and so-on. That which was observing is who you Are; not the collection of things that were appropriated for your use, as defense against the hostile world that you thought you found yourself in.

Now, I am not going to ask any of you, because you can’t do it and you wouldn’t do it, but I am not going to ask any one of you to totally invalidate yourself and say, “There’s nothing here except illusion. Who I think I am is nothing but illusion.” That won’t help you a bit. You must start right where you are, as exactly who you think you are, exactly who you think you are at the moment. And because there is already a curiosity present in you (or you wouldn’t be on a spiritual path, or you would not be searching for something more) because that’s there—be willing to look at yourself or anything else and say, “What I see does not mean what I think it means.”

For those of you who are students of A Course In Miracles, the very first lesson in the workbook says, “Nothing that I see means anything.” And this is a “wow-er” of a first lesson in a book that you’re not even sure you believe. It is meant to jolt you out of your rut, out of your confidence that you understand everything, and that there is nothing more than what you are experiencing. Why? In order to bring into play curiosity, so that you don’t just complacently, out of habit, assume that everything is what you’ve been told it is, or that everything is what you assumed it was.

If I say that right there where each one of you sits is the direct expression of God, the fully illuminated and illuminating Christ Presence, and you conceive that what I am saying might be true, that indeed my perspective about you is more accurate than your present perspective about yourself—well, the fact is you may go through some ego reactions of revulsion or denial or whatever—but there is a part of you that will become curious. And you will not off-handedly say, “What you see is what you get. What I see of me is all there is of me.”

And you will become curious: “If I am divine, then there must be some natural inherent characteristics of my divinity that I don’t have to demonstrate or create. And I am going to be open to any potential glimmers or beginning experiences of that divinity that will help give me courage to dare to say—even with little confidence—that I am indeed, fully divine, even though I can’t conceive of it totally.”

You see, it begins to open the door. But you won’t open the door if you believe the sense of guilt, that you feel in the pit of your stomach, that seems to prove to you that the pursuit of your experience of your divinity will be detrimental to your health. That, in other words, it will lead you to the guillotine; it will lead you to the ax; to the judgment guilty, that has come from God; and there will be no way for you to escape.

That’s what you are afraid of and what the ego is afraid is ahead of it. And it tells you that it is your neck that is on the line. And so it is safer not to risk the chance that you may be innocent, in face of the likelihood that you will be proven guilty forever. That’s the way the ego keeps you. That’s the way your conditioned thinking holds you in an illegitimate bondage.

I cannot overstate the value of meditation, because meditation side-steps thinking, which is the way the ego functions. And it allows you to come into the silence within yourself, in which you have an unusually wonderful opportunity to have a direct experience of who you divinely Are.

And the first experience of that divinity is what you call peace, centeredness—a peace with an exquisite equilibrium to it. You think that it's just a physical relaxation, but it isn't. It truly is that you shift away from body identification. The peace that you experience is the direct experience of the peace of your Being. It is the way that you begin coming back Home. It is the way you begin to undo your preoccupation with the computer, or your preoccupation with the fascinating (but highly limited) view through the microscope. It is the way you disengage from your addiction to overcoming the opponent.

As crazy as this sounds to some of you, the choice to view Reality, the choice to view the Kingdom of Heaven, from within the first three-dimensions only is not a disobedience, it is not punishable. Those who are Awake think nothing of it, because it is not a wrongness.

The only thing is, is that we know the potential for becoming side-tracked from coming back to your true vantage point is high. And if you become too engrossed, we will have to shake your shoulder or somehow get your attention, and literally entice you into turning away from that which engrosses you, so that you may voluntarily bring your attention back to what is Real, or to that which is viewed from a proper perspective—the Real perspective.

I will tell you that the likelihood is, once you have decided for your Wholeness and for the experience of who you truly Are, that the great likelihood is that you will never ever again choose to view the Kingdom of Heaven from the first three dimensions only. But that will be a conscious, rational choice, not with any sense of guilt, but just with a sense that if you've had too much chocolate, you've had too much chocolate. If you've had too much of anything, you've had too much of it and that will do you for eternity. But it won't be with remorse.

What will come into play, as a matter of great perspective (you could almost say, what will come into play that is saddening, except it won't be saddening) is just a feeling of wisdom. You will realize that it is too bad that you felt so bad about what you were doing while you were doing it, because there was no reason for the feeling of guilt and of self-depreciation. There was no reason for you to interpret the tininess, which is inherent in that point of view, as a flaw or a fault within yourself, and something you had to strive for to overcome and to deserve to come back Home.

At the same time you will see that it all didn't even happen; it didn't happen as you were perceiving it. It all happened as it divinely occurred. Because you must remember that if you are just looking at the first, second and third of the fourth-dimension, which is all inclusive, it is what is going on in the fourth-dimension that is being observed from the limited perception.

And you will see that your interpretations of who you are and what part you played in everything, wasn't the way it was at all. And you will have the remembrance of what has been infinitely, divinely happening. And so, you will simply—really—understand the nature of limited perception. You will see that it doesn't constitute the real vantage point. And you will see that only under the most unusual circumstances would there be any value for you to do it again. That will just be perspective, without any charge to it—any emotional charge.

I am glad you asked the question. I knew that was what you were going to ask, and it was what everyone needed to hear. And I am always pleased to bring into focus the fact that all of the justifications that all of you come up with for feeling guilty, for running from justice, for demeaning yourselves, for not embracing yourselves lovingly—I am always glad to illuminate the fact that there is no justification for any of it. And the sooner you let go of that—the sooner you invalidate all of those activities—the sooner you will be free to be present where you are and pay attention with new eyes. And that will precipitate Awakening. Because this element of curiosity, that breaks down conceptual structures that have bound you, comes into play. But you will not dare to explore if you think that the ultimate result is that you will be pegged and nailed to the cross. We won't even go into that.

QUESTION: My question was, if everything in this universe was created by God and Is God, why did the ego come into existence? And why are we here? And what's the purpose of our existence?

ANSWER: What is the purpose of our existence here? At times it is very difficult not to sound very trite; but it is only because the Truth is the Truth, and it manages to come forth and hang around and thus keep coming up. It is your purpose to glorify God. It is not your purpose to glorify the ego. And you glorify either God or the ego by embodying either God or the ego. And what governs which it is you are going to do is your choice: to identify with the body or to identify with awareness (to identify with form is another way of putting it) or to identify with Mind.

What I want to illuminate now is, that glorifying God does not mean becoming a holy person, it does not mean becoming celibate, it does not mean becoming different. It means being more Real right where you are. It means being more genuinely present.

When you are not covered with armor, when you are not highly defended then, obviously, you who had been under the armor are more genuinely present. And because you are not armed, because you are not defended and therefore obviously ready for either attack or defense, others around you can feel safe enough to take off their armor.

You will find that as you glorify God you will be perceived to be a more humane individual or presence—a more meaningful presence—one in the presence of whom everyone will feel love, whether you even know they're there or not. Obviously, the more of you there are who are willing to be genuinely present and Real (and I mean Real in terms of your humanity) the more transformational change will occur on the face of your globe. Not just in the disappearance of violence and crime, etc., not just in greater harmony, but also and primarily in terms of mass revelation—mass Awakening, mass insight. Because in the absence of the business and busyness of defense, the heart and the mind are freed up to re-engage the Soul.

What is your purpose? This is, of course, a question on everyone's mind at one time or another. And always one thinks of it in terms of a career or a specific activity. Everyone feels as though it's necessary to get their purpose pegged so they may devote themselves to it entirely, and not spend time doing what is irrelevant. And the sense is that it is necessary to become anchored and definite—on the target. What you don't realize is that it's not a stationary target. And so getting it pegged will not bring you to a point of relief where you don't have to think about it anymore. It truly isn't something specific.

Your purpose is to learn how to be so present and so in touch with yourself—I mean present with everything, and so connected with yourself—that at any given moment you are able to be utterly appropriate. And so, you may in one moment be a counselor, and in another moment you may be engaged in something else. And each thing you do will be significant. Because in being in touch, in being congruent with the moment that you are in, means that nothing meaningless will occur.

Your purpose is to glorify god. In other words: to not claim any other presence, right where you are, than that which expresses the father's will.

Now your sense of yourself as an ego, and of yourself as having will-power and authority, causes each of you to feel frightened of embodying the Father's Will; because if you're not engaging yours, your not in charge. And being in charge is part of your defense—ultimately, your defense against Awakening—because you are afraid if you get into that place where Awakening can occur, the verdict of guilty will fall upon you permanently.

Instead of finding a purpose, a life purpose—there we are on that linear extension in time—instead of looking for a life purpose, remember that your purpose is to be so present with others, present with what is going on, with a curiosity to see the more of what is divinely there than you are seeing at the moment, that you become a transformational Presence just by virtue of simply being congruent in the moment, available in the moment. Thus every encounter becomes a Holy encounter.

I will tell you something: What you call religiousness is for the most part totally sacrilegious, because you equate other-worldliness with spirituality and religion—the spiritual world and what you’re stuck with—the material world. Again we have the polarization.

What is a Holy encounter? When I say that, I am not speaking in religious terms—it is an encounter of Wholeness. And indeed, the word “holy” and the word “whole” both come from the same root word. You all hang yourselves on your spirituality, because you don’t have a curiosity—because no one ever prompted you to think this way—you don’t have a curiosity to see that these spiritual terms relate absolutely to the secular life. They weren’t meant to separate what you’re experiencing from what is Real, but to help make what you’re experiencing more Real—meaning, in it’s divine aspect.

Your purpose then is to be in that place where every encounter becomes a Holy encounter, an encounter of Wholeness—not an encounter of separateness and control. And when you are really present with, and when you are really not claiming an arrogant right to act on your own without sensing into everything so that you can be congruent with it, indeed when you are not holding yourself apart and when you are not trying to control things, then you can be available to the motivation felt within you, and the energy necessary to act in the world in a manner that is fulfilling to you and fulfilling to everyone else—whether it looks like being an accountant or a concert pianist or a mother or whatever.

And so, you will appear to be many things, but you will not use those things as a means of defining who you are. You will be experiencing the joy of being on the spot instead of being for the future; instead of being in the future as a result of calculating, before you got there, what you were going to be.

And so everything you do will feel fulfilling. And nothing that you do will say anything about you to you. It is an interesting experience. I will tell you that it is an experience in which there is no feeling of responsibility—responsibility that you could be held accountable for. And that in itself makes being appropriate a joyful thing. It makes being a meaningful presence in the world a joyful thing.

But you know what, it’s very unsatisfying for the ego, because it can’t take credit for anything. But therein lies your salvation, and therein lies your joy, and therein lies your peace.

So, for almost ten years Paul made himself available for private conversations between others and myself. He did not sacrifice himself; this was fulfillment of purpose for him. And there was great joy in what he was doing. And also during that period of time there were gatherings of this sort that took place. And although Paul knew he didn’t create this job for himself and didn’t feel responsible for it, there was, over this period of almost ten years, a developing idea (that just sort of percolated in quietly) that this is what he would be forever doing. And in that sense, he felt a little bit of security from the pattern of behavior that had for nine and a half years.

And then last January I said to him: We are not going to do anymore private conversations, because there is a need to get this material into printed form and into the places where people go who are looking for this kind of information. And there is also a need to do more public gatherings, because there are more people who want to hear.

Well, it took him a bit by surprise. He didn't know his job description could change. And his confidence in it's stability got in the way of his being able to joyfully say, "Fine." He made no charge for the conversations, but that is an activity he had been engaged in and people did make contributions. And his ego came into play and said, "Well, if you're not doing the conversations, people aren't going to have anything to be grateful for. And even though Raj knows what he is doing—your ship could sink."

And his thoughts caused him concern. He asked me, as a way to pin me down, how on earth we were going to reach more people in the gatherings if no new means or techniques were going to be used in setting them up? Because I had explained to him that, just as always, we would send out a brochure that would announce that gatherings would be happening in particular locations.

For six years, notices had been sent to everyone on the mailing list. And the groups were always an average of twenty-five to forty people, no matter how many people were on the mailing list. I told him watch and see. It did not satisfy him, because he didn't want to have to trust. He said, "all right."

And I also assured him that all that was needed in order for this work to occur would be present; that it never had been there because of anything he had been doing. In other words, he hadn't been personally responsible for it and he didn't now need to think that maybe in some small way he had, and that things would change for the worse.

As you can see, this gathering is much larger than twenty-five or thirty people. And indeed, all of the gatherings since this change have been from two hundred to three hundred and fifty people. And Paul stands there and says, "I don't understand." And I tell him, you do not need to understand. You simply need to dare to be present with what is going on, and available to the moment. And then fulfillment of purpose occurs; fulfillment of purpose that Paul is not separate from (which he knows) but fulfillment of purpose that is not the result of his exercise of control of any kind.

What is your life purpose? You could say to be on purpose—on the mark. And the way for you to be on the mark is to be present with what is going on with curiosity. And a willingness to listen to know what is appropriate, rather than figuring it out. What I am saying is absolutely true—it's not a relative statement of truth—it is absolutely true. Paul is not unique.

And so each one of you can dare to be present with what is going on with curiosity, and dare to listen so that you can be totally congruent with the Father's

Will, which really is your will, except that you have developed a separated sense of yourself. And then being on purpose will occur. It will be obvious that there is purpose in your life that everyone can recognize and honor. And no matter what it is that you are doing at any given moment, you will have joy.

And as I said earlier, the more of you who are doing this, the more it will precipitate Awakening right here with everyone on this planet.

QUESTION: If two people on this plane met as twin flames, what would be the significance of that relationship, and the difference between other relationships?

ANSWER: Twin flames is a wonderful, romantic bit of esoteric bull shit! Not one of you is a half of anything. And I encourage you not to nurture within you, no matter how romantically wonderful it sounds, a sense of incompleteness looking for completeness. Because even if you find what seems to be your other half, you are still not whole without that other half. And, therefore, neither you nor your partner bring to the relationship the integrity of your individual wholeness, and the relationship will become one of co-dependency. And you will value and validate it because of the fundamental belief that you are only a half of something—the fundamental belief that you are not whole.

If you are looking, if you are scanning the horizon for “the one” out of an emptiness in you, you will not be looking with perspective. You will be looking with a sense of inadequacy. You will look without any feeling of deserving. It will be looking with wanting. And there is a significant difference between deserving something, and wanting, needing something. And you will attract into your experience those who are looking for needy ones, and they are looking for needy ones because they need to control. And thus, what you are likely to perceive as your twin flame is someone who is the compliment of inadequacy, which is over-control.

As romantic as the idea of twin flames is, and even in the sense that the coming together as twin flames is the rejoining of something that once was one (which seems to be a reunion or unification, even though it can be expressed in ways that seem most reasonable) it is a most unkind and impractical concept, because it furthers the sense of separation. Even within the relationship you cannot, yourself, be whole.

Let me ask you something: When the time comes where the two halves actually merge, are you going to be the one to sacrifice your sense of identity, as you and you alone? I guarantee you that if that point was ever arrived at, war would start and splitting would occur. And you would find yourself right back where you are today—standing at the point where you really do have the opportunity to abandon this sense of incompleteness and the wonder of looking for your other half, so that you might begin to embrace and embody the integrity of you that is absolutely whole.

Now, I am going to speak in a manner accommodating your present point of view, because there is no way for you to understand the absolute Truth. God is Father/Mother/God—Whole. God does not have a wife, “Mr. and Mrs. God, currently living in the Kingdom of Heaven, rather happily married expressing a great deal of unity.”

As Awakening occurs, as your embrace of the Wholeness of you occurs, the masculine qualities—the masculine strength, etc., that you seem not to be embodying—will become more fully available to you as your sense of your identity, as your experience of your identity. And this other one, that you would have called your twin flame, will find the feminine aspects of his Being filling up more of his experience of his identity. Each partner in a relationship needs to bring his or her greatest available consciousness of his or her Wholeness to the relationship, in order to make it a Holy relationship.

Open up to God, open up to your capacity to know the truth in that inner quiet place so that you may bring what you find yourself knowing into the relationship to share, and from there be with the other one in the relationship. In other words, let the relationship be with God, and from there be with your mate. And as more and more couples begin to do this consciously, there will be greater and greater harmony. And again, as I have said before, it will promote world wide or precipitate the Awakening of everyone.

For you to connect with your wholeness and bring it to a relationship, and for another to connect with his wholeness and bring it to your relationship, will be far more fulfilling than any fantasy you might have about meeting your twin flame. Because coming from your wholeness will be a sane thing to do, and coming from a sense of your incompleteness will be an insane thing to do. And the experience, the difference in the experience of sanity and insanity, is stark and obvious, and no one would consciously—knowingly—make the choice for an insane relationship.

And so, I have shared with you good news, even if it means you are going to have to make an abrupt left turn that you hadn't expected. And the joy of a relationship of wholeness, rather than the joining of two incompleteness', will be wonderful for you and an example for everyone else that will inspire them. So I have shared good news with you.

QUESTION: I want to ask about what you could tell me about the balance between finding your wholeness working with other people, with friends and partners and finding your wholeness working by yourself, in your own space?

ANSWER: It is not as complicated as you might think. What you do—in other words, this is the evolution of it—you first go within, you first become familiar with that place within you of your peace, and then without abandoning it, you allow yourself to be present in the world—present with your world. There isn't you in your wholeness in your space, and then you in wholeness in the world.

What it is, is you becoming familiar enough and stable enough in your experience of centeredness that then the circumference of that centeredness can be enlarged so that it embraces more of your world. And the embrace of the world does not cause you to lose your balance.

I encourage all of you to do your best at all times during the day, everyday, to come from your peace. And if you find yourself getting uncentered and upset, go into the bathroom at work or find a place that you can be quiet, even if it is just for three minutes. Or just sit at your desk and breathe deeply and slowly with a conscious intent to release the tension or the reactions on your breath.

In other words, make a conscious choice, remember to make an ongoing conscious choice, for your peace always. Because it's so darned intelligent to be in your peace, especially if something upsetting is going on. If you are in your peace in the midst of chaos, you are the one who is likely to be unmoved enough by the circumstance to be able to see what will resolve it. Here is a place where you can pay attention to your reasoning and logic so that you can value being at peace, because that's where your clarity is.

So your peace within yourself and your peace within the world are not two different "peace's." It is the same peace with the circumference enlarged, so that it embraces your world without your making the assumption that embracing the world will cause you to lose your peace and, therefore, your peace must necessarily forever remain a private experience. You get the point.

QUESTION: You advise us, on one of the tapes I've heard, to expect physical manifestation of health and increasing perfection. Well, I've been trying to hold this attitude for some months, but I still see my body, muscles and joints and parts of me failing. And now my eyes are giving me lots of problems. And it seems they're full of abuse and pain I've given over the years, and so inflicted on them.

I really would like some advice about what's going on in my body, and what I have to do. Perhaps change attitudes to fix it all.

ANSWER: The first thing is to stop seeing it as physical. As though it were a lump of matter that happens to have synapses and nerves and nerve paths, and that which allows it to move and live, etc.

Here's the simplest way I can put it: If you take this microscope I was talking about earlier, and you go to the greatest power and you look at matter, you do not find an object there. What you find is a pattern of energy. It used to be that atoms were visualized as billiard balls. In other words, a little universe made up of actual pieces of matter. They have since been discovered to be charges; electrical charges that are spinning around a nucleus, which itself is a charge, an electrical charge.

And so, there is nowhere to be found any matter. So if all this is that you see as a body, if all this is is an arrangement of patterns of energy, you can begin to grasp that really speaking, humanly speaking, not in any great spiritual sense, your body is non-physical. And if it is not something constituted of building blocks of matter, like concrete blocks, but is energy pattern, then obviously the pattern can be changed effortlessly, because nothing concrete has to be manipulated.

It used to be easy to think that your mind was one thing and matter, or your body, was another thing, and that the two were really dissimilar. That is why it was easy to think in terms of body and Soul. And that in fact, they were so different that your body was just a temporary host for your Soul. And when your Soul left, your body died. And that which was dissimilar was no longer even in a confusing arrangement with each other.

Well, what I am leading up to here is, that there is something holding this pattern of energy together, and it isn't matter. It has to be intelligence. Intelligence has to be governing the stability of the pattern. So the pattern must actually be the non-physical, intangible identification of a mental intent—or what we will call the Intent of Mind.

Don't worry, I am not getting too metaphysical here. God is the Infinite Mind, the Infinite Intelligence that Moves, and the Movement is the Movement of Mind. That Movement is experienced by Mind as ideas. We are talking about God. The substance of those ideas is the Mind that Moved creating the experience of ideas. And that experience—that truly self-experience of Mind—is an experience of substance and meaning. And so the ideas in the Mind of God, we will say, are perfectly tangible to that Mind, perfectly Real. And that really is what this is, and the body is. It is really an idea, right here and right now. It is not matter. It is an arrangement of energy patterns, stabilized and held in place, you might say, by the intent of the Mind that Moved and had the idea called chair, or body, etc.

If you will adopt a premise that the body is not physical but entirely mental, even tangibly mental, this in itself will allow you to conceive of the possibility that matter—concrete lumps of stuff—do not have to become somehow de-solidified. Or that in order for them to be arranged, physical processes that will take time will have to occur. Because all that has to occur is a simple change of intent.

Now, does God need to change his Mind to change your body? No, because God has not misconceived and created a faulty idea.

Now, how is it that there seems to be a faulty body, or one that is defaulting? As each of you shifted from the vantage point of your awareness to the vantage point of your body (where you identified with the body) you immediately lost the experience of your infiniteness and felt tiny. It was a very strange experience.

And the feeling of vulnerability developed. And the need for defense seemed to become more obvious, when in actuality you just became deluded. Nevertheless, you believed the threat was real. And so, you began to use the thing you were identifying with, as a defense. It is as though you shielded your body

(this thing that you now thought was who you were). And in this process, distortion of your perception of this forever, divine manifestation of the Intent of God began to be experienced by you in an unnatural way.

Therefore, I am going to encourage all of you not to try to change your thinking about your body. This is what metaphysics is about—what could be called practical metaphysics—where you apply correct thinking to an incorrect concept so as to effect a physical healing. This still keeps you occupied at the level of control—control over something that God is already Being, Wholly.

So, on the premise that your body is not at all physical (and I mean that in the most human terms, it is absolutely not physical—there isn't one bit of matter anywhere as far as you can see, or as far as your telescopes can go) on that basis that your body is not physical, is not matter but is indeed a collection of patterns of energy, conceived and maintained by the divine Mind, you can let go of a feeling of personal responsibility for making it better. And you can let go of the belief that it will take physical processes for it to change according to laws of matter, or physical laws.

And then knowing that there is ultimate responsiveness (you might say possible at any moment) you can say, “I am not going to try to make my body better by virtue of my better thinking, but rather I am going to relax about this body, let go of all sense of personal responsibility for its well-being by virtue of my correct thinking, and I am going to become curious. I am going to ask God to reveal to me what He is Being, right here where I see this body.” This truly will open the door to the most rapid healing.

Now what if the healing isn't rapid? There is a most wonderful statement in the Course—“Infinite patience brings immediate results.” So, infinite patience doesn't mean unending patience, it means the absence of impatience. Abandoning impatience is easier than trying to screw up the courage and the energy to be endlessly patient.

And so I encourage you—because of the depth and the strength of your pre-existing beliefs about the body and that it is physical, it is matter, it is dense, if it is damaged it cannot repair itself, or it will be almost impossible and it would require a miracle, etc.—all of these kinds of thoughts work against your willingness to conceive the body anew. And so, it might take some persistence. But if you are persisting with that which is true, rather than that which is illusory, your persistence will be well worth it.

Now, we might as well get another point straight, together: Many of you who are students of the Course are aware that the Course refers to the body and the world that you see as illusion. What I want you to realize is that you cannot have an illusion of nothing—you cannot have a misperception of nothing. And so, anything in your experience that you have an incorrect perception of is there, in its correctness, to be seen correctly.

I have said it before and I will say it again: You cannot have a counterfeit of nothing. You cannot have a counterfeit $17.50 bill, because there isn't a real one to counterfeit. Now, how then can it be said that the body and the world are illusion? Very simply. Because if you believe that the body is matter, if you believe that it is a physical organism that has very little or nothing to do with what you divinely Are—if you believe that—then you are deluded. And what you identify the body as is purely false.

And if you believe that this world and universe was a result of chance—physical chance—that God had nothing to do with, that divine Intelligence had nothing to do with, then your definition of it and your sense of it is one hundred percent false. And what you believe it is and call it, is an illusion. I will put it another way: Your false belief, which you think is absolute truth, is an illusion. But it is not an illusion of nothing. It is not a misperception of nothing. It is a false sense, a false interpretation, a false belief about something Real.

So I have said you have no physical body; that it is substanceless; that it is just patterns of energy, visible and tangible, yes, but insubstantial in the sense that you have thought of substance.

I am now describing to you the Reality of body. And the same thing applies to everything else you look at, whether it is a rock or a leaf or some bark or a piece of concrete—it is all patterns of energy. You could almost speak of the patterns of energy that seem so definite as diaphanous—insubstantial, but definite.

So, I've told you that you have a body that isn't physical. It hasn't any substance to it that can get in the way of its changing form, or that can get in the way of the uncovering of its innate perfection. And then I have said, become curious to have what it really is revealed or uncovered to you; knowing that the uncovering can occur spontaneously and instantaneously because there is no matter in the process to get in the way of the process, or be sluggish, or recalcitrant—there's nothing to inhibit it.

Because what you Really Are, you have never stopped Being. And what your body Really Is, has never stopped Being. And because it is the absolute eternal fact, it is just inevitable that it will resume its proper position as the only true you and the only true visibility and tangibility of you that there can be.

And so I'm going to put it this way: Whether it is now or later, healing is inevitable—healing is inevitable. The establishment—the embodiment—of the perfection of you is inevitable, because it is, I'm going to say, dominant. It's dominant because it is the unchangeable fact. This means that you don't have to earn your healing. You don't have to become worthy of experiencing perfection—perfect, wonderful health, perfect, wonderful symmetry, how about that? Nice hips, full figure, the essence and epitome of beauty—and men you are not left out either.

What I am saying is (and I am not saying this with any sexual connotation) women you know that it would be wonderful to feel symmetry in your body—just because. This is a natural feeling. It is your birthright to feel this equilibrium of what we might call design.

I want you to know that God being the divine Mind, the First Cause, the Prime Mover, etc., being Love, being Indivisible, and therefore undivided, is by nature an artist. And beauty is the only thing that can come of the Movement of that divine Mind that is Love. And, therefore, it is not arrogant, and it also is not egotistical or vain, for any of you to feel a right to see the artistry of God—the perfect expression of beauty—in every aspect of your body.

Now, you may say that I am catering to the ego here, or suggesting something that isn't ultimately true, divinely speaking. I will tell you something: As you begin to let go of your resistance—your disbelief—as to what the nature of your body is; as you let go of the disbelief that holds it in a distorted fashion to your perception, that which it really is begins to manifest.

And I've said it before, but I will say it again: Shortened portions of the body will become elongated; proportions will change; balance will come in all directions, in all areas of your body—internally, externally. The beauty of the individual expression of God that you are will come forth, will manifest—you will call it healing, except that you will have healing that you hadn't even thought to ask for, because it really hadn't bothered you that maybe you were five centimeters shorter wasted than you ought to be. It had never posed a problem, you hadn't even noticed, and you didn't really think you had any alternative. But you will find symmetry returning. This is the evidence of the scales falling from your eyes—your ignorance's getting out of the way of the true experience of you.

Now, we are still speaking of what appears to be an organic body, as this is happening. It is just healing that is occurring. But as you embrace this more completely and you are less defended against it and as you begin to wake up, the call for defense and the misuse of the body (by turning it into a defended fortress for your Soul) will diminish. And as it does, it will begin to definitely be less dense.

You are not aware of it right now, and on occasion you have had some insightful, revelatory glimpses of the fact that the body is a body of light. As your defenses lessen, as you no longer identify the body as you, as you no longer identify specifically as the body and you become more defenseless, it will become less dense and you will begin to find light streaming from it. That will be one of the first experiences of the truth of what I am saying—usually out of the head, out of the fingers, out of the palms of the hands, out of the toes, out of the soles of the feet. You will also be able to see this in terms of other forms—light streaming out of the edges of leaves—in moments of illumination.

My point is this: Once the defenselessness is totally abandoned, you will find that your body will not be perceived to be organic anymore. And it also will not be perceived as being male or female. But there will be exquisite beauty of intent that will be recognizable to you, experienceable by you and experienceable by everyone else.

And so, when I am speaking about symmetry, fullness, balance relative to your body, I am referring to the fact that the intent of the body that is really there will become manifested in the easiest forms that you can recognize that identify beauty, symmetry, balance, etc.

And so, it is not so much that the body is going to become really handsome or really beautiful—it is not that. It is not what it is going to look like that your ego would say would be wonderfully satisfying, it is, rather, that the substance of the intent that is holding the patterns of energy in place is less obscured; the artistry, the beauty of the expression of God will be less obscured. Because the presence of what God is being right where you are will not be actively covered over by a tightening up—a densifying for the purpose of defending yourself against what you inappropriately have defined to be a hostile environment.

Now, I shared a lot more than you thought you asked for. But the reason for sharing it is so that you can more easily let go of your convictions as to how your body works—what it can and can't do. I will tell you, even if there seems to have been damage—even let us say constructive damage, like the removal of an appendix that had burst—any variation from what would be called perfect form will be corrected. Why? Because of the Intent set into motion by the Father, in His Self-expression called you. In other words, you might say, the master blueprint (but it is really the original Intent) has not been lost and has not been altered. And it is there as the dominant fact, which sooner or later will come forth, because it is the fact.

And you can have it sooner by relinquishing your strong convictions that you have only a physical body that is really not truly compatible with your Soul, because it really doesn't have anything to do with God, because it's part of a material universe, or physical universe, that was the result of pure chance, with no intelligence to it. And in the relinquishing of that, you are actually giving permission for a new experience that more truly manifests or embodies the truth about you to come forth, because that's the only thing that is really going on.

Don't bother getting discouraged if it doesn't seem to happen overnight. Habits do seem to die slowly; and it is just a habit that keeps you fixed in your way of perceiving things. Now, above all, I want you to remember that this healing and regeneration can happen in a twinkling of an eye. Because there isn't any matter anywhere to be found that can be sluggish or stand in the way or block the evidence of healing—even healing of that which you hadn't really thought was a problem.

So just because I gave the answer I gave, do not believe that it has to be hard, or that it's going to take forever because you can't grasp all of what I said and embody it totally. That's why it is such an enduring truth, that yielding to the Father's Will is the answer. Then it's not up to your will, and it's not up to your capacity as this tiny mentality or human being that you think you are. Say "yes" to God; and know now that there isn't any matter to respond sluggishly or disagree with the Father's Will.
