

Gathering In Carmel, CA - 1986

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

Note: Please excuse us as in various places the questions were not listed as the audio did allow for clear recording at all times.

QUESTION: My question is about relationships that break up. Having my own experience and I have never spoken to anybody who went through a relationship breaking up without mental, emotional and some people with physical pain. Is there something we need to know about this? Surely we're not doing it the right way with all this pain. And what effect does this have on the physical body if any?

ANSWER: It is not the breaking up with someone, the separating of ways that is hard on the physical body. It is the emotional reaction and the resistance within oneself to flow easily with the parting of ways that becomes registered physically as pain and distress and dysfunction. It is very seldom that a separation occurs peacefully, because the conscious intent behind a relationship has been to maintain the relationship.

In fact, most relationships are approached from the standpoint of lasting forever. And when the realities of individual growth make it obvious that remaining together permanently will not work, it flies in the face of the conscious intent of the partners and the emotional investment that each have made.

And so, there is a radical reorientation that must occur. And this is not usually done willingly, because one is not looking for a harmonious, easy separating of paths. At that point one is usually wanting to still attempt to maintain the ongoingness of the relationship and is emphatically attempting to employ guilt to bring the errant party into line so that the concept of permanence will be maintained, whether it is an honest maintenance or continuation of a relationship or not.

You, not specifically you, but everyone tends not to be interested in taking an honest look. Because honesty very often doesn't coincide with one's mindsets. One would rather maintain a lie and keep his "dignity" than be honest. In other words, the attempt is to serve one's ego, rather than the peace and natural harmony of individual growth.

Now the simply fact is that many relationships break up because the ego is paramount, and each member of the relationship is serving the other's ego as well as their own, rather than valuing the individuality of each member of the relationship and allowing the space for growth and unfoldment to occur. So the very thing that contributes to the break up of the relationship is what also contributes to the distress that is experienced in the break up. That is not to say that all relationships are supposed to be permanent, that is just to say that the status of the ego is what tends to get in the way of permanent relationships and it is what contributes to the stressful breaking up of a relationship.

Whenever you are resisting what your being is unfolding you will experience distress and discomfort. And if you do not pay attention to the subtle, gentle distress that first appears and you continue to resist, the distress will increase until it is manifest bodily, until you arrive at a point where you cannot ignore it and have to take a look at what your being is unfolding and agree to flow with it, rather than trying to hold to your concepts, your mindsets, your personal well-developed goals based on what you think is right. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm wondering how does one adjust after losing a mate through death?

ANSWER: In some ways this relates to the first question. It is very easy in a relationship to think in terms of being a couple, where individual identity sort of submerges and constantly yields to the set you have become—like salt and pepper shakers—where the individual contribution of the salt or the pepper becomes overlooked in whether or not the set of shakers is silver or poetry, or glass with shiny silver tops, and how it will look on the table, how the team will look in the community, etc.

And yet, in spite of the fact that there has been a joining together and a commitment, each member of the relationship remains a whole Souled individuality who is growing and is not apart of a set, and who is not there to serve the other partner, but is there to learn to be himself or herself totally.

When the valuing of the relationship overrides the valuing of one's individuality one surrenders his individuality and brings less and less of that which is of value to the relationship, and the relationship begins to suffer. One begins to feel more and more incomplete in himself or herself, and thus when a death occurs or a separation occurs one is confronted with his feeling of inadequacy. And that is why there is most often a mad scrambling to get another partner to replace the missing half, and there is little wisdom used in finding that new partner.

Now, your partner is gone, but you are not. And you are still and always were a whole-Souled woman, a whole-Souled individuality. It is out of the completeness or wholeness of your being that a partner manifested in your experience to identify that which meant wholeness to you. Your wholeness is still present. None of your essential being has disappeared. And your being at this instant and at every instant is still intent upon manifesting its infinite completeness.

Therefore, if you wish to move forward gracefully you will begin to be attentive and curious to see just how in the world your Being, with a capital “B”, is going to unfold and manifest that which identifies your completeness in terms of companionship and in terms of committedness and in terms of sharing.

You see it is out of the wholeness of each individuality in a relationship that value is brought to the relationship and fulfillment is experienced within the relationship. Because from that standpoint neither one of you sucks from the other, and depletes the other, and obligates the other to be the source of fulfillment.

You literally stand at the threshold of fulfillment, every single one of you does at every moment. But when there seems to be a significant loss it is hard to remember that you are still standing at the threshold of fulfillment. Nevertheless you are. And if you are observant and curious and interested in see how that fulfillment is going to manifest itself, you will not overlook it.

I am not suggesting that you hurry now to find a new partner, but do not delay unnecessarily to be open to that kind of unfoldment. It will not happen until you open up to it and say, “Okay, I am willing, I am ready.” You are the boss. What I have pointed out to you is that you are on the threshold of fulfillment and you can afford to and you can dare to be alert to that fulfillment manifesting itself in language that you can see and comprehend and find meaning and value in.

It has been my intent in this answer to set a new tone for you, so that you are not as likely to look back at what you had and by contrast to that impress yourself with how little you have now. You have as much or as little as you are curious to experience. And I encourage you to let your curiosity grow.

QUESTION: (Cannot hear the question. It has something to do with having trouble staying centered.)

ANSWER: You are not the only one in the room who has been experiencing this lately. And so I am going to specifically address everyone, even though I am specifically answering you as well.

As one begins to value being centered more than the exciting dynamics of conflict and struggle, there are naturally slippage’s which occur causing you to arrive at a point of inner peace and the experience of some degree of stability and then suddenly losing it and being caught up in the ego drama of fear and anxiety and stress.

But in the last three weeks there has been an additional dynamic and a great deal of the uncentering that has occurred has not had a direct relationship to one’s ability or lack of skill in remaining centered. There is very simply a shift, a positive shift of enlightenment occurring around your globe. It is fundamentally constituted of individual growth and enlightenment in mankind. But understand this, you are not alone. And as any progressive step is taken in your clearer and clearer experience of what is real and your valuing of what is real you automatically have the support and the, let us say, moral encouragement of your guides as well as from the entire Brotherhood of man that is already totally Awake.

A threshold has been crossed over during the last three weeks. As I said, it is a progressive step, but it is a step which is very frightening to the ego. And as a result as you have all noticed the ego has reared its head, expressed its fear in violent terms through particular individuals and particular incidence.

Now it is imperative for you to understand that the source of the conflict and fear is not Khaddafi. He is as frightened as you are and is expressing it, more so than the rest of you, and more publicly than the rest of you.

At the bottom line each one of you suffers only from your own ego sense, no one else's. And it is the degree to which you energize your finite, limited, tiny, ego sense that you experience great fear, depression, physical discomfort and disease.

No one else's ego sense can do anything to you if there is not a corresponding string in you that can vibrate sympathetically with the other's ego expression. There is no such thing as influence that is not invited by you by virtue of having a resonant sounding board in you. If this were not so you would be lost, and you would have reason to truly be depressed. Now this is an absolute fact I am stating here. If there is not something in you to resonate to a limited, finite, negative viewpoint or belief system or feeling external to you then you will not experience it within yourself no matter how distressed another might be.

If you understand that fact you understand your power and your authority over your experience. And it becomes crystal clear that you cannot be an innocent victim. Ah, but there were innocent victims on that plane that fell to their deaths. And so why am I to feel that I might not be an innocent victim, out of the blue, totally unexpected? How can I feel at peace? But you see that line of thought contradicted what I just said, there cannot be an innocent victim. Those three, even though one was a child was a participant in the drama, an active willing participant. There was something in them that collaborated with the fearful ego sense. And they had the authority within themselves not to participate.

Now I want you to notice that the way the ego works is to pull your attention away from the simple the fact that you have two vantage points within yourself to experience life from. Those two vantage points are either the ego's conflicted distressing sense, and the other is your eternal, immovable, stable, loving, principled Being, with a capital "B".

The ego distracts you from the awareness that you have two choices that will totally govern in opposite ways the way in which you experience your life. And it says, "Look out there, look at what happened, look at those innocent victims." Assumption after assumption, after assumption is going on there, which if you are not careful you will not challenge, and the ego will have you hooked, your gut will clench up and you will not sleep well, and you will wonder whether to make a trip.

And you will forget the fact that if you take a trip, and if you take a plane from here to there, it is you who are taking the plane, it is not the plane that is taking you, and that if you are not allowing the ego to take you over and you are not synergizing or sympathetically responding to the current of fear that is acting out these incidence, that you will be unable to get on a plane that will not reach its destination, or conversely that someone who intends to do harm on a plane that you are taking will be absolutely unable to carry it out.

Because you see, your connectedness with your peace, and your insistence upon not energizing the debilitating disintegration of your inner self-experience has no opposing presence or power because it is omnipotent. Your peace experienced within yourself is omnipotent. Not because you personally have a marvelous power, but because that peace in you that constitutes the substance of your Being and the nature of your Being is the presence of the Life Principle or God. That is why it has power. That is why it is transformational.

As this year progresses there will at times be increasing attempts on the part of the ego sense to create fear. That is nothing new. That is the way the ego has always functioned. But it is losing ground. And so, it is wildly taking steps to increase the level of fear and engage you in a conflicted place in yourself so that you forget to choose for your peace.

Your appropriate response is not, “Go get Khaddafi, kill the bastard.” That is to join into the ego’s drama. Your appropriate response is to remember that you have two vantage points, from which to experience your world and then make the choice. And if you choose for the ego you substantiate it, and no transformation is possible.

But if you choose for your peace with the understanding that your experience of it is the experience of the presence of the Life Principle, and that for you to be that experience of that presence is your only true function. And that performing that function is literally to be the light of the world, because you are being the presence of that which transforms and does not strengthen the ego sense, then you will make the contribution that counts. You will have responded appropriately.

And each one of you who chooses to respond appropriately by turning the other cheek, will contribute mightily to the shift of consciousness which mankind is entering into. You see, turning the other cheek is not a matter of being a doormat. It is not to say, “Oh, you hit me, hit me again.” There are two cheeks. And for clarification the one is the ego sense and the other is your Being. And when someone comes at you with the ego do not return the ego, turn the other cheek, respond from your peace, respond from your capacity to love unconditionally. And this is a capacity you have to love unconditionally when you are not in the reactive ego state.

As the months go by in the remainder of this year, I encourage all of you when you do find yourself unexplainably upset, when nothing is going on in your immediate experience to cause you to feel anxious, guilty, blamed, hated, defensive, be very quick to ask yourself first of all, “Is this me? Is this my stuff? Are these really my issues?” And be willing to consider that maybe they are not, other than the fact that there is a density in you which is harmonizing with or sympathetically vibrating to a fear in your world.

The more quickly you can discern that it is not yours, the more quickly you will realize, “I don’t have to put up with this expletive.” And in that recognition will come a great deal of freedom, and you will be able to move on out of that feeling with more ease.

This is a subject we will get into further as the weekend progresses. For now that is the answer to your question.

PAUL: Okay the question had to do with the speed up of consciousness, or the speed up of breakthroughs and boundary breaking generally. And then as to what significance’s Carmel and Pacific Grove and the surrounding area might have, or what part it might play in that. And whether or not perhaps the Carmel area itself geographically is in some way contributes to... whether it’s a power point. I’m just repeating this so that it’s clearly on the tape. Whether the locality itself is contributing to this accelerated pace.

ANSWER: Very simply the accelerated pace is due to the fact that there are more and more individualities who are disengaging from the limited ego sense, who are significantly opening themselves up to an understanding of life that goes beyond traditional concepts as well as beyond the data which the five physical senses provide about life.

You see, as each individuality loses density, let us say, in terms of belief structures that are ignorant and false, the density of all mankind is lessened, thus making it easier for others to experience a greater confidence as well as more easily remember who they really are, and what they really are. Because as there is less and less ego distraction it is easier to feel the nudge of one’s Being, to feel the insistent pressure that is there to wake up. And so, each individuals growth becomes compounded within the whole.

The amount of real enlightenment which is being experienced today is much greater than any of you is aware of. The media is not interested in reporting on it, and most individuals are being very quiet about it, because when it happens one is not sure that he is not going crazy, and so he does not publicize his enlightenment. But nevertheless he values it and nurtures it for the most part, and continues to grow until it begins to evidence itself in his life, and the quality of life begins to change.

Geographically speaking, Carmel is a hotbed of, let us say, spiritual phenomena. Part of it is due to the weather, in an environmental sense because one is not faced with survival as relates to the elements, and there is a source of inspiration in the simple beauty.

There is an energy vortex in the Pacific Grove area. It does not contribute heavily to the hotbed that I spoke of, but for those who are near it it does contribute to, you might say, a clearer head or a clearer mind. The contribution to the acceleration of the shift of consciousness comes primarily from the individuals in this area rather than from the geographic locality. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

PAUL: Why do the entities who are speaking to us seem to be masculine rather than feminine?

ANSWER: The fact is that there is not an imbalance or a disproportionate number of masculine entities, it is just that those who have come to your attention have been masculine rather than feminine. Guidance is coming from both masculine and feminine entities. Preference is not give to males. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: (Cannot hear the question clearly.)

ANSWER: You are, yes. And although you have been distracted from time to time your attention has been significantly placed. Do not be impatient with yourself. Watch for the tendency to "naturally" think that you should be doing better. This is not as affirmative as you might think, because its impact really is one of negating yourself and saying, "I am not doing as well as I ought to be." You keep yourself under a level of stress this way by always feeling that you are not measuring up.

I will tell you something, you are always as far forward on your leading edge as you can be. And if at times you think you can see that the leading edge is four feet in front of you, and you think you should be up there, and you cannot get any further forward than where you are, where you are is where your leading edge is, and not the spot four feet ahead.

Value where you are at all times. That does not mean to dig in and stay there for a lifetime, but it means stop putting yourself down for being where you are. It is the furthest forward you have ever been. And if you could move one centimeter further forward you would. But you are not likely to until you relax and allow yourself to value the place where you are, and not use it as a means of putting yourself down or putting the screws to yourself to force yourself to move a little bit further forward.

You cannot force your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. You can't force your way into enlightenment. You must allow and love yourself forward, which requires you to be appreciative of yourself in the now where you are. In effect when you are not appreciating where you are you are not allowing your full weight to be on the spot where you are. And until your full weight is on the spot where you are you do not have the balance to lift your foot and place it further forward.

Very simply, let us say, you are doing an outstanding job. You are doing well. Dare to acknowledge that within yourself and feel good about it, because it is what will free you up to move forward.

I cannot help but be pleased with you because it is so obvious to me that you are doing well. It is sort of like you looking at a seven year old, chubby little girl, sitting at the piano trying to play a piece that she has learned to share, and she is so concerned about whether she is doing well enough. And you are able to look at this little girl sitting at this big piano and hear ability and talent and desire there and delighting in it, even though she is nervous and all caught up in her concern that she might not be doing well enough.

You are doing beautifully. And it is important for you to know that. And when you can do better you will do better. But what you are doing now is already better than anything you have ever done before. So keep that perspective and appreciate yourself. Okay.

QUESTION: About employment.

ANSWER: There is nothing I can do to relieve you. You are up against some very strong feelings within yourself which it is difficult for you to release, and yet the releasing of them is what is necessary. Last night I used the word willingness and the word yield.

The dynamic here is not the job or the specific work you are doing, it is an inner thing that has to do with letting go, giving up, yielding, and flowing with what meets the human need, and loving or beginning to love to do what meets the human need. It is an inner struggle, rather than a struggle with your employment, or the specific activities of that employment.

You have 10,000 arguments, “Yes, but how can this paperwork possibly be the evidence of divine love in human experience? Yes, but aren’t there other things I could be doing that would be the presence of divine love in human experience that would nourish me as well?” You see, at the bottom line, it is a willfulness to have what nourishes you. And that is not unconditional love. It is the provision of what meets the need of another that constitutes the expression of divine love. And it is the expression of unconditional love that is nourishing to you.

PAUL: Okay, this is me. I wish I could remember... I may have the name of the river wrong, but... Oh, no I don’t. Somebody came to Jesus and I think he was blind or something, anyway, Jesus told him to go and bathe in the river Jordan three times. If that individual... Now my understanding is the river Jordan was a common river, a river where common people bathed in. It was not a river that people of higher social status bathed in. And if that person said, “Yes, but isn’t there a better river for me to bathe three times in,” he wouldn’t have gotten his healing.

It was a matter of yielding in that sense, of not holding out for what he thought would be best, or maybe more appropriate, or maybe more fulfilling. The healing came from the obedience, rather than from the specific river to bathe in, or the specific activity that you have to do.

ANSWER: Your capital “B” Being has your ego right where it wants it. And your Being has you right where your fulfillment is precisely present to be experienced, else I would tell you that there were alternatives, and help you discern what they are. Okay, that’s the end of the answer.

PAUL: Okay, the question is, in so many words, if we’re to let go how do we do that and still remain responsible?

ANSWER: Letting go is the releasing of the exercise of willfulness. Willfulness is constituted of actions that are carried out without bothering to be sensitive to the underlying divine order of things associated with your life and your environment.

One does not just let go. One lets go and listens. One releases the conditioned sense of what being responsible means so as to be quiet enough to sense into the divine order that has to be going on if there is any conscious experience being experienced at all. If you are conscious of anything something divine is happening. If you are experiencing anything it is the presence of the Life Principle unfolding itself infinitely. And so, at the bottom line, what you want is to be able to be quiet enough to be sensitive to what this divine event is so that you can cooperate with and flow with it and be at one with it. And therefore, not at odds with it.

Now if your individuality, your conscious experience of Being is the presence of the Life Principle experiencing itself, then this divine event which is unfolding has to be somewhat constituted of what you are, because you and the Father are one. And so, when you are allowing yourself to let go and listen, and sense into the divine Reality, you are sensing into something of yourself. Not something else that you are yielding to or turning yourself over to. This constitutes true responsible action. And you will come to find that when you were “being responsible” and totally ignoring the underlying Reality you were as far away as you could get from truly being responsible, and that the problems you ran into were evidences of your irresponsibility.

Now, you do not simply let go and sog in bed all day long doing nothing, staying out of the way of life, not interfering. Realize that if indeed you stayed in bed all day so as not to manipulate life in any way, you would be affecting life. Because there would be a line at the grocery store where someone was one step closer to the cash register than they would have been if you had been there. You cannot exist without participating in life even if you are stuck in your bedroom apparently not doing a thing.

Now, another important point. Until you get some clear inner guidance and clarity as a result of letting go, do not give up using your common sense. Do not say, “I am not going to do anything today until the hand of God evidences to me what I need to do, because I want to be sure that what I’m doing is absolutely responsible and right from a divine standpoint.” At some point you’ll need to go to the bathroom. And you can afford to use your common sense and get up and go to the bathroom without making a mess that has to be cleaned up later. And that is wisdom.

You will need to eat, you will need to prepare something to eat, or go out and get something to eat. And that will be wisdom. Not everything about you is foolish and useless right now. And so, use your highest sense of principle and your clearest sense of intelligence, and use your present skills in the way that you have learned does work best. And in addition to that listen. Let go. And when you have a clearer answer than the one your past experience can provide you with, go with that new information.

When you are at the grocery store and you are having to decide between Cherrios and Wheaties hesitate a moment. There is only one you are going to take home with you as far as you know, and so one will be more appropriate than the other under the circumstances. Just hesitate a moment, inquire within, “which is most appropriate today?” And then listen. And then whichever one is indicated take. You might find yourself occasionally being told to get both when there seems to be no reason for it, and upon arriving at home finding out that you have company, and you’re going to see that you needed the additional breakfast food and it will make sense.

My point is this. Inquire often during the day. Let go often during the day, even if it is momentarily. Let go and do not assume that you know the answer as a result of your reasoning and past experience. Momentarily inquire. And act upon the response. And you will find that you will be able to make a gradual and natural transition from you old sense of responsibility to, what from the old sense will be irresponsibility, but which will really be acting out from a constant consistent inner knowing or guidance.

Letting go gives you the opportunity to find out at an experiential level that there is a oneness and an orderliness to the infinite fabric of being, and not any one activity is too mundane or too inconsequential to have a place in that fabric. Okay, that’s the end of the answer.

PAUL: Excuse me. He says we are please to have such beautiful entities to help. What is unfortunate is that you can see ours, but it is difficult for you to see yours.

QUESTION: With all this help, isn’t it easier to grow now without pain?

ANSWER: It is easier but it is still difficult, the reason being that the ego does not perceive enlightenment and clarification as healthy. Because it threatens and actually will end up destroying the tininess of the ego sense, the presence of the distorted ego sense. As long as there continues to be an identification of one's essential being with this tiny ego sense, the destruction of that tiny ego sense will feel like your destruction, and therefore you will resist it. And yet, at the bottom line, what you are resisting is the emergence of your essential capital "B" Being. And so it constitutes a state of self-denial. And that will always hurt.

Part of the process of waking up is beginning to discern the difference between the ego sense and yourself, the discovery that the ego sense is not you, but is your program. As you begin to be able to say, "oops, there goes my ego again," and you're able to say that more and more often, the very act of making that statement will constitute a clear experience of your separateness from that little ego sense.

You will still have to listen to it wince and cry, but it will not hook you as significantly. And because there is a clearer and clearer sense and experience of yourself apart from the ego, you will begin to value yourself or that experience more and more and you will insist upon being in that place where you can experience it more and more. In doing that, you will withdraw your energy from your ego sense. You will not energize it, and its complaints will become weaker and weaker.

I did say that pain is not essential to growth. I also said that it very often is contributive to it. Understand that when you are up against pain, you are really up against a limit of a belief structure, a limit of conditioned thinking, a limit which it is time for you to move through and become free of.

So instead of kicking against the pain and complaining about it and fretting yourself because of it, let there be a recognition that you are up against some artificial boundary, some limitation that it is time for you to move through and become free of. And then let your desire be to move right through it. And let there be an authorization within you that says in effect, "I authorize the release of whatever conditioned thinking is present that would keep me from moving through this and experiencing my freedom."

If you are willing to insist upon the experience of your wholeness, you will be able to move more gracefully through that boundary with less stress. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

PAUL: You're talking about putting energy into promoting a crafts program in the elementary grade levels and then perhaps being involved in the teaching of them? Okay.

PAUL: Okay, I'm going to have to put this in my own words. The overview is that it is appropriate for you to push for it and get the ball rolling. It is not likely that you will end up actually teaching once it gets rolling you're not likely to end up actually involving yourself in the teaching part. There's a definite sense of about two years down the road of there being some new point of departure for you, some new area of interest that will take you away from the school setting. But you are the appropriate one to engage in putting the energy necessary into getting the ball rolling, even though someone else will carry it on out into practice.

Attend to what is at hand and what you do see to do it does need your energy and full attention. For whatever it's worth it's not a departure from this plane.

QUESTION: (Cannot hear the question, but from the answer I believe someone asked if Jesus had spoken to them.)

ANSWER: It was me, yes. And you heard it quite clearly, and therefore I will not repeat it. Pay attention to the feel you were experiencing when I was speaking to you. It will help you to recognize me at any future time when I may have something to share with you. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: (Cannot hear question clear enough to convey it.)

ANSWER: You are learning to flow with and from your center which is always creative. It is the artificial interference of the ego and the attempts at power which blocks true creativity. Self-expression, with a capital "S", is always the uninhibited flow of creativity. That is why it always constitutes a genuine gift to your world. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

I'm aware that part of your question wasn't answered. Do you want to pursue that?

QUESTION: (He is pursuing the question further. I still cannot hear it clearly.)

ANSWER: You are not likely to find that opportunity crystallizing into form. And that will be a part of your learning to flow as well and be passively active, which means to be a nonmanipulative part of the unfoldment of the fulfillment of your Being.

Observe that you are resisting acknowledging fully the things that are happening as a result of your flowingness, because it is different from the format you have come out of. What I want you to be especially aware of is that your Being will win-out. And so, I encourage you to look with eagerness and inquisitiveness and interest and amazement at what your Being is actually unfolding and manifesting in and as your experience.

You are still having the opportunity to yield even more significantly to your Self, with a capital "S". And you are doing quite well, but there is more benefit to be gained. There is more of the peace that comes from letting go even more waiting for you. And it is that which is the pay-off, let us say, rather than the acquiring of this particular job opportunity. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: ???

ANSWER: Your individuality is whole. And a part of waking up is discovering that the masculine and feminine natures are inappropriately and ignorantly separated, and that your experience of being a female in nature, emotions and form constitutes an incomplete experience of yourself. Within that delusional sense or experience you have experienced being masculine and feminine, male and female in a number of lifetimes, but you have never ceased being the completeness constituted of the oneness, the integratedness of those two natures.

Now I want to make it very clear, that if you are presently female, or if you are presently male the aspect that is currently absent, is not embodied in another individuality, in another dimension or time. This absent portion is present in the 98 percent of you that you are not currently accessing and consciously experiencing. It is present right where you are, just as the Body of Light that constitutes your manifest identity is present right now, which I can see, but which is not obvious to you.

You're not forever destined to be female and destined to be male. Each of you is destined to wake up to what you have always been, which is an undistorted completeness, period. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: ???

PAUL: Okay, you would like to have some help with some problems that your 12 year old daughter is having right now. What is her first name?

ANSWER: More than anything, praise her. She needs someone to see her worth and value, because she is having difficulty seeing it for herself. She is having difficulty being confident. She is also being overlaid, or we could say overshadowed by a sense of running out of time, a sense that she had better hurry up or she is going to miss her chance.

To whatever degree you can communicate to her that there is not a final deadline, no matter how much she is being impressed with the idea that there is. And the more you can help her to know that there continue to forever to be opportunities to move into a fuller experience of life, you will help to reduce the fear that is grabbing her that says, she had better make it now or she will ruin her life before she's even 14.

PAUL: This is me. Is she having difficulty with school?

QUESTION:

PAUL: The picture is one... It's like maybe for you and me, it was like, if you didn't make it through college life might not be too good for you. And it's like somewhere along the line it's gotten moved back down, it's like if you don't make it in high school you're destined to a mediocre life, and then it's gotten moved down to junior high so that this sense of pressure that you and I weren't confronted with until it was time to make a decision about college, the kid's are feeling in junior high. And it is a sense that is being laid upon them by the school systems. And it's not true. But there's a great deal of fear that she's going to mess her life up at 12 years old. It's sad.

It's like a responsibility is being laid upon her that she's not even supposed to be thinking about yet. And it's like whatever level of concern your husband may be expressing is supporting the validity of that idea that she has in her mind. It's like it's substantiating it. It's like if it weren't really true Mom and Dad wouldn't really be like their being.

And it's like one way or another you've got to find a way to communicate to her, it's like, do the best job you can today. If you get a C or if you... I mean it's like if everything goes wrong it won't be the end of the world. If at 24 you don't know what you want to do yet, or you haven't made it, it's not the end of the world. You still are standing at the point where you can make it, even though you know that at 24 it'll be harder to do because of the demands that we made on a 24 year old than it is now.

It's like the point is to communicate to her, like was said earlier, we're always standing on a threshold, we're always on the threshold of fulfillment, and that it isn't a do or die thing. She isn't going to make or break her life by the grades she's getting in music or history, that there is a continuity of her individuality that will be unaffected by how well or poorly she does this semester or in junior high.

Do you see what I'm... that there's something essential and stable and permanently ongoing, and that's her. I mean, she is permanently ongoing. And that at anytime in her life that she sets her mind to a task to accomplish, she will have the opportunity to do it, even though her teachers have said, "if you don't do it now you, you won't have another chance." That fear has to be dealt with, because it's like at 12 years old she has been impressed with the idea that she could very well not do some essential thing and miss out on success and happiness in her life.

You need to know that she's petrified. And that her behavior is a reflection of her being very afraid that she's going to fail in life, that she could actually miss the boat. I'm putting this in my own words, but this is the sense. Okay, that's the end. I said is there anything else, and he said, not at the present time.

PAUL: Okay, so the question is whether or not your daughter and you moving away from the situation would be helpful?

ANSWER: Yes, it most definitely would. I encourage you not to move rashly, but be open to the steps that will unfold. The moment you open the door in your mind to that as a viable step to take. The way to do it will begin to open up, it will be intelligent, it will be reasonable, and it will not be full of stress, you will not have to go out on a limb to do it. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: It will be a final settlement, yes. And you should not settle for anything less than this being it, the end, finished. You can always tell when you are flowing with and in alignment with what your Being is unfolding, because in your heart of hearts you will be at peace. There is always a feel to being on track or on target. And it is a feel that is there even if your rational thinking processes call it into question. And even if your friends tell you that you are being a fool, be willing to pay very close attention to your deepest feeling.

You see, your own mind, your ego sense will argue against your deepest levels of knowing. But when your ego is addressing you there will always be in the pit of your stomach a sense of anxiety. Where your ego is speaking there will never be an experience of the peace of your Being, they are unable to coexist together. Of course, this requires an investment of trust in your in your deepest level of knowing. But if you are willing to trust what arises out of your peace, you will always find what you do eliciting or bringing forth harmonious completion and fulfillment.

Now I encourage you in this particular case to stick to your guns, to proceed as you have been. And do not be willing to overthrow your deep sense of what is right for the opinions of others. And when this procedure is consummated walk away from it, leave it behind you, release it, and be glad to be through with it. I know you won't have any trouble being glad to be through with it. But the point is let there be a significant release of it. And attend to your life with gusto. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: The panic last night was the result of the fear of the unknown, yes, the standing on a threshold. Now I can guarantee you that always on the other side of a threshold is more of you. And therefore, the crossing over that threshold is always a movement into a clearer, less conflicted, less bound experience of yourself and life. Stepping over thresholds is a wholizing movement or process. It is always a movement into a more significantly integrated experience of life, of you.

However, when you are standing at the threshold, which is an ego boundary, your ego sense says there is nothing on the other side of that threshold, that indeed there is a void. And that if you step across you step into insanity, you step into emptiness, you step into the unknown. And of course, the unknown is perceived as being fundamentally negative and destructive, and this is because the clarity and the integration that is experienced is destructive to the old ego concepts, and therefore the old ego sense.

The ego projects upon your enlightenment images, fearful images to keep you from going Home, to keep you from experiencing your peace and your wholeness. The ego thrives on your fear, it thrives on your endarkenment. Therefore, I encourage you always to delight, if you can, being at a cusp or threshold, because you literally are standing at the edge of a clearer self-experience, and an experience of your world with less distortion in it. And although it looks like an empty void you will find in taking the step over the threshold that there is solid stable ground. And that solid stable ground is constituted of your integrity.

Your ego was panicky last night because it recognized that you were willing this weekend to conceive of something beyond your present frame of reference, your present conditioning. But fortunately your ego was not in control, because you're here. You acted out from a desire to move forward, in spite of the fear.

The digestive upset this morning was one last attempt on your ego's part to create enough fear that you might bow out of the weekend, but you held firm. There is no direct relationship between the dynamics last night and this morning, and your movement into healing work, other than the fact that you are going to be able to look back on yesterday and today and see that a shift was made, and that you did move beyond some old conditioned thinking, and you did not die, and in fact are experiencing a new level of integrity.

In this way you will have learned a significant lesson about dealing with boundaries, and the nature of your Being. And this is what will contribute to you being able to move into healing work, because you will be able to more clearly appreciate the real dynamics of boundary breaking, which those you will be working with will be confronted by. And you will not join in with them in their fear. And you will be able to support them as they dare to reach beyond their present sense of things. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Very simply, the image or images which one utilizes to define himself or his condition are enhanced and substantiated by repetition. The repetition constitutes the development of a fixation. And so the fixation is a mindless rehearsal of an image, a self-image, an image of one's world, an image of one's relationship. It is hypnotic. It is a repetitive process which can only efficiently be accomplished in privacy. It therefore, involves a withdrawing from external inputs. It constitutes isolationism to whatever degree is needed in order for the image to be maintained and substantiated.

Touch in a normal sense is helpful, but not sufficient in distracting the highly focused mindless repetition of the image. But touch that is in effect a direct expression of love and an intent to heal cuts through the mindless repetition and touches the individual in his Soul, thereby, strengthening his or her Soul sense.

When that happens, it becomes impossible to maintain the isolated attitude or dynamic. The individual is drawn into a relationship, a connectedness with someone else. His Soul sense is enhanced and spontaneously comes into play. He feels again, from the level of his being, instead of reacting to the mindless repetition of the image of conflict or limitation. And thus, the image changes and begins to reflect the qualities of Soul that are inherent in his individuality. Thus his self-image is transformed, or his image of his world is evened out or transformed.

Touch is not always essential, but in some cases it is. And in the work that you are doing this is what happens. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: If the image, the conflicted image is one of long standing, then there is, as it were, heaped upon the top of the habit negative self-feelings, rather like sludge. Therefore, when the touch is utilized and the Soul is connected with and there is movement and emergence the sludge, you might say, surfaces first as the habit is released. But underneath the anger or the violence is the movement of Soul. And you must remain with what you are doing in terms of touch until the sludge abates. It may seem like it will go on too long for you to be able to practically be there, but I guarantee that that is an illusion. And your willingness to hang in with that individuality will not take an unreasonable amount of time.

Once the pattern, once the habit has been broken there is no structure to contain the sludge, the conditioning, you might say, and therefore is spill over and runs off quite rapidly. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: It is not so much that there is a change coming, which you are sensing into, it is that there is something in you that wants a change to occur. And the dynamic is this: When you first began this work, it was by choice. And you were not required to do it. But recently it is something you have had to do, and you had no choice about it. And the sense of freedom and joy began to wane because it was a necessity for you to do it and not a matter of free choice. Part of you doesn't like that. And that part of you wants a change as an expression of essential freedom so that you do not feel trapped into a situation.

It will be dangerous in the sense of being impractical for you to pursue a change, because that is not what your Being is unfolding. It is however likely that it will only be for about eight more months on the outside that you will need to do this work. After that the sense of obligation and pressure will be gone and you will once again be in a position of doing this work simply because you choose to, and without the burden or weight the element of joy and pleasure will return.

Be aware that there is another element here also, and that is that the ego sense which is expressing itself or defining itself as impending change in you has as its goal an underhanded attempt to manipulate your husband to get his derriere in gear. This is not malicious, but it is coercive, and it is inappropriate.

There's also part of you that is at peace with what is happening in your life, and in which there is an inherent sense of confidence and hope and a feeling that things are really not out of kilter. And I encourage you to pay more attention to that sense, it is clear and it is accurate.

As I said, within a maximum of eight months you will be "out of the woods," and a more normal perspective will settle on the scene of your marriage and your life. Be reluctant to act on this feeling. And be reluctant to energize the frustration that has been growing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: You will not be able to do it in a more structured environment that you came out of, no. That does not mean that there will not be structure. But you see the way it works is that form follows function. And when function is confined to form there is always tension, and the movement of life becomes coerced into less and less movement because the form doesn't serve the movement.

Now it is not likely that everyone will experience the presence of this love that you are speaking of by the end of this decade. At least they will not be feeling it for what it is. Many will be experiencing it as threat, because they identify themselves so completely with the ego sense which this love will be dissolving.

I encourage you to stay in touch with this love. And I encourage you to understand that this love is the infinite presence of your individuality, and that there is nothing passive about it whatsoever. That it is a movement, and that movement is a movement into expression. And therefore, you need to be attentive to movement within you and in paying attention to that movement you will begin to discern the form, which it will be evolving for its self-expression.

Now its self-expression is your self-expression. And so in being attentive to it you are being attentive to your Being. And in your willingness to flow with and take the steps necessary for the form to be evidenced, you will find yourself being active in the world with structure, but structure that is serving the form because you are not preoccupied with the structure, you are preoccupied with the Movement of your Being, the Movement of the love that constitutes you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

PAUL: Have you since that meditation have you had any conversations with your guide, and do you address your guide as Ron?

He says...

ANSWER: No, there was no misunderstanding and you heard correctly what was given to you as your guides name, which is Ron. And it happens to be pure coincidence that your fiancée's name is Ron also. There is no significance there. You can rest assured that no matter how unclearly you pronounce your words, or how poorly you are able to formulate your questions, the meaning, the intent behind the question is clearly understood by your guide. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: It is not appropriate for you to think of making any kind of change at the present time. For the time being, and I mean by that through the end of this year, maintain the status quo. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Then let it happen. You are so very close to experiencing it that in a way it is amazing it hasn't registered with you. Because your guide has addressed you.

Now I encourage you not to be reluctant to let the words form in your mind. In other words, the words will not form outside, you might say, of your mind. Your mind will move, you might say, when your guide speaks. That is why in the beginning it is difficult to be sure that you are not making it up yourself.

Do not be so conscientious at not interfering, or not participating from a human level that you do not let a movement occur in your mind. And when it does occur dare to trust what you hear, or dare at least to play along with it until you have enough experience to justify a clear judgment that it is or is not you. Again, you are so very close to the experience. And you need to know that. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

PAUL: Step One: Become still.

Step Two: Mentally express your desire for dialog with your guide.

Step Three: Listen.

Step Four: Expect an answer!

Okay, I'll go back to step one: become still. Raj, has explained that this can be done through meditation, contemplation, visualization techniques, self-hypnosis relaxation techniques, or even soaking in a hot tub. In other words, it doesn't have to be a complicated process. Whatever allows you to relax and significantly set aside your cares and concerns of the day. You can dare to say, "I'm going to take twenty minutes, the world will not collapse around me if I don't worry about it for twenty minutes." And just take that time to become as centered as possible. It isn't necessary to become perfectly centered. It is only necessary to have relaxed somewhat significantly, let's put it that way.

Okay, step two is mentally express your desire to be in touch with your guide. You only need to express the desire once at any sitting, any twenty minute period, lets say, that you sit down to specifically try to get in touch with your guide. Don't repeat it over and over and over again. Express it once. Express it gently. Because if you've done a meditation and you've become centered and then you try to yell it out into the universe so your sure your guide will hear you. It will set up unevenness and rip open and get you out of that centered place.

So let it be gently and soft. But feel it, experience the desire to be in touch with your guide. You don't have to use fancy or formal words. Many of the nights when I was trying to get in touch with Raj, I just said, "If there are such things as guides, and if I have one, will whoever it is please speak up." So just in whatever way it comes to you to express it in your mind not out loud.

Then step three is listen. Now if you've been doing a meditation and you've been using a mantra, or you've been using visualization techniques, or self-hypnosis relaxation techniques where you've been using words and so on, obviously when you went to step two you had to stop doing that so you could express your desire to be in touch with your guide. When you get to step three the listening, do not resume the mantra or the imagery or the words, just abide in the quietness that you've arrived at in step one. Just continue to stay in that relaxed quiet place, with an attentive attitude.

It is extremely important for the attitude to be one of "Thy Will be done." And I don't mean that in a Biblical sense as much as a recognition that your guide knows the best way to connect with you so that you will hear it and so that it will have some significance. So allow for your not having enough perspective to know exactly what is the best way, and let it happen on your guides terms.

One of the things this does is that it keeps you from bringing willfulness or coerciveness into the listening process. Communication with your guide occurs at subtler levels of consciousness than the ones we employ usually in your day to day living. And one of the things that keeps us out of that subtler level is our willfulness, our attempt to be in charge, to be in control.

So the quieter you are and the more allowing you are of the response from your guide, it's like the more of your ego you're leaving outside of this quiet space. And he's indicated that to whatever degree you become coercive or manipulative you will distance yourself or push away the contact or the dialog.

Now when I was starting out I went for two weeks. And every night I sat down and I was like becoming centered for about ten minutes and then I would take the balance of an hour just to be in the quiet space listening. And I was doing it because I was in a real dire circumstance for me, and there was a part of me that was really sincerely wanting help. And that's one reason I did it for so long each night.

But after about two weeks I began to feel like, "hey I've been a good boy. I've really put myself out. I've left a good fifty minutes for you to talk. You haven't said anything. I don't have forever to sit here waiting." In so many words it was like, "if you want to talk to me you'd better hurry up." And I did not get an answer from him that night. But one of the things that I do feel that some communication occurred, because at that point it's like the fact that I was becoming manipulative there became apparent to me. And it also became clear to me that I would postpone communication by doing that. There had to be a willingness not to be in control, not to be in charge while I was trying to get in touch with my guide. It was about three nights later that I had my first conversation with him. But that's an example of coerciveness.

Okay, and step four is expect an answer. Raj has said that you can sit and listen forever and not hear anything if you're not expecting an answer. That doesn't mean the answer won't be there, but you will tend to overlook it. So expect an answer.

Now Raj has said that two things happen when you express a desire for the first time to be in touch with your guide. The first thing that happens is your guide rejoices. The second thing that happens is that your guide immediately begins to work with you to break through from the other side of whatever it is that blocks communication. You have to put forth your effort by desiring it, that's your part of it. And then your guide works with you from the other side of whatever blocks it, helps clear out garbage and debris, so to speak, that blocks the communication.

So you can know that you're not doing this all by yourself. It feels like, or at least to me it felt like I was sitting in my room all by myself sort of beating my head against the void, and feeling a little foolish like if somebody could see what I was doing and giving my time to they'd think I was crazy. So you can know that you are not doing it all by yourself.

It is your guide's desire to be in touch with you, because in relationship to you that is your guide's function. It's not your guide's only function in life, but in relationship to you that is your guide's function. So you can count on it that your guide isn't going to sit around twiddling his thumbs or her thumbs while you're trying so hard and not join in.

Now your guide can be either male or female. It is a good idea not to preconceive what it will be. Our oldest daughter's boyfriend wanted to get in touch with his guide, and I had told him it could be male or female. And later on I found out that when he went out the front door he just knew his guide would be a male.

And he tried really for a teenager, he tried very consistently for three months. I mean he really was diligent, and nothing happened. And then finally one day he heard my daughter's voice, except that it was like a voice in his head. And it was his guide. And after about three days she stopped using my oldest daughter's voice, and then he heard her voice. And he asked her why it had taken so long. And she said, "because you were listening for a male tone, or a male feel, and whenever I spoke you absolutely disregarded it." Until she finally used our oldest daughter's voice, and then that got his attention. So he had blocked it for almost three months, and really frustrated himself, because he really was sincere about it.

So whichever it is it will be absolutely appropriate for you, whether it has a male tone or a female tone. Also don't compare, don't say, "gee whiz you don't sound like Raj, or you don't sound like Ramtha, or you don't sound like Joann's guide, so therefore you must not be a guide." I have found that there are guides who have a great sense of humor, I mean are really funny, where Raj is to my sense more conservative, but not without a sense of humor.

The interesting thing was that with one person in particular, his guide is a real joker you might say—it's a female—but always the jokes have a double meaning. They're funny in themselves but the other meaning that they have always has a very deep spiritual or it brings out a point that is significantly enlightening, and it's absolutely appropriate for this guy. But for me I think I would not feel as comfortable with it.

So the point is your guide will be absolutely appropriate for you. You may not get long discourses, long complicated explanation that may be crystal clear to you, but nevertheless lengthy. You may get very short answers that are to the point and you get it and you're able to go on with things. It's like the whole thing is a practice in allowing, a practice in letting it be what it will be, and experiencing the benefit to whatever it is. So be careful not to compare.

The one thing that everybody says to me after it happens and they very often they'll call up and say, "will you check with Raj and see if I was really talking to my guide?" And when they find out yes that they have, the first response is, "it's so much easier than I thought it was going to be." The actual happening is so much easier than they thought.

And so I make a point now of sharing with people that when you are taking time to sit down, and you're feeling like it's difficult, or like you're getting nowhere and there must be something more you need to do, if you will assume that it is easier than anything you're anticipating it will help you to relax a little bit more and let go. If the anticipation of it being hard that sort of gets you tensed up mentally, and the need is to relax and to allow it to happen.

Okay, that pretty well covers it. It isn't any more complicated than those four steps. There are not some people who are more talented than other people, or more ready for it, like they've earned the right, or they've come far enough along their spiritual path to be able to do it. The only prerequisite that you have to have arrived at a point where you are sitting down and saying, "I desire to be in touch with my guide." Your motive doesn't even have to be particularly high.

My youngest daughter got in touch with her guide when she was 14 because she wanted help on a spelling bee. And she got in touch with her guide, didn't win the spelling bee, but she did get in touch with her guide. It is an absolutely natural phenomena. And age doesn't have anything to do with it, education doesn't have anything to do with it, skill doesn't have anything to do with it. At the bottom line, it boils down to desiring it and letting it happen, allowing it to happen.

The one other thing I will share is that my experience of it—and that of others that I've talked to who have gotten in touch with their guide—is that experientially it's almost identical to saying a poem in your mind, where there's a flow of words that mean something, except you didn't have to go through any process of figuring out what the next word was going to be. Okay, it's just a flow of words. It's just like he said to you there is a movement in your mind that feels just the same as saying the "pledge of allegiance" in your mind. So don't be so conscientious to be uninvolved and not interfere that you don't even allow the formation of words in your mind.

Also because it doesn't feel radically different, and therefore you are not likely to be sure that this really is your guide and that you're not making it up. Be willing to play along with it on the chance that it isn't you. And I mean be willing to play along with it for three months.

It took me about 90 days to begin to be able to actually tell a qualitative difference between when Raj was speaking and the feel of my saying a poem in my mind. Of course, there was the material I was getting was not the typical kind of thing I would normally think. But there began to be a qualitative difference, it was recognizably Raj. So give yourself time to have enough experience to be able to tell the subtle differences. That's very important.

Another thing is, don't require absolutely correct answers. In the beginning there's a lot of doubt, you'll find that at times you will begin to insert yourself, or you'll sort of bias the answer. You'll listen but as the answer goes along you'll sort of give it a little twist of your own. And if you're smart, you'll catch yourself and say, "no, I don't want to do that," and you'll stop.

When and if you begin to bias it in any way, or if you're unusually tense, you will not hear as accurately. And so if you say, "what's going to happen tomorrow," and you get an answer and it doesn't happen tomorrow, don't chuck the whole thing. Because there's a skill at listening that you acquire as you go along, and part of it has to do with investing trust in the whole process, trusting into it and not exercising as much active doubt.

At this point if somebody calls me and says, "I've lost my watch can Raj tell me where it is," I get really tense. And I know the reason is that because the minute I relay to them where he said it was they can walk to that place and look, and if it isn't there they know right away that I conveyed it wrong. And so I feel vulnerable.

So what I do is I know that the only way that the accuracy around that will increase is for me to relax. So I let them know that I don't feel comfortable with this, and that tends to get in the way of my hearing clearly, but because I want to become comfortable with it I'm going to go ahead and do my best.

And interestingly enough probably seventy percent of the articles are right where I got that they were, right where Raj said it. But if I required it from the beginning those kind of answers to be accurate I probably would not have hung in long enough to have developed enough trust in the process to hear with significant clarity. So be willing to hang in with the process and don't require absolute accuracy.

The illustration Raj gave of that is a child learning how to walk. And if he says, "I won't take my first without holding on until I have a guarantee that I won't fall down," he's going to have a hard time learning how to walk. But the child who says, "it's okay to fall down," and just picks himself up and tries again, that child will learn a whole lot faster by not requiring absolute perfection at walking from his very first step.

So that pretty well covers it. It's fundamentally simple. And my experience is that the only thing that really got in my way was my doubt. But hanging in in spite of it has moved me faster. Okay.

QUESTION: Would doubt be your ego?

PAUL: Oh absolutely. Yes, it told me that I was just accessing a much more creative part of myself than I had ever accessed before. It told me I was going crazy. It told me that because I was going through the collapse of a business that I was just psychologically compensating for a great sense of loss and was creating this whole hallucination. It ran me over the coals. The only thing was that I really was getting some significant help, and that help bolster my courage.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Ultimately divine love is the only force—the only force. It is the substance of everything—the constituting substance of everything. Every single object you see in this room is love, the energy of love in form. It also is literally, light. Love, the energy that is love is light. It is illuminated and illuminating. And the simple fact is that this chair and this carpet and the floor and the ground and every single form you see is literally a communication of love to every other form.

You exist literally in a sea of the Movement of divine love. Therefore, when you contemplate divine love, and I mean by that allow yourself to be open to its experience you are opening yourself up to the communication of love that surrounds you and constitutes you. You are putting yourself in alignment with everything that Is.

Now the simple fact is that very often in a group setting, the sense of numbers makes it safer from your present point of view to be open. Because you do not really grasp the significance of divine love, its potency, its presence as the only violable power there is. And you are as afraid of experiencing love as you are of experiencing your Self, with a capital “S”. Because from the ego frame of reference it is the “unknown,” as I mentioned earlier.

And so literally it is in groups where there is safety in numbers that you are most able to open up to the experience of presence of divine love. What you experienced is just a taste of what the presence of love feels like—and I mean divine love. Not only that the taste you felt of it was not just the taste of divine love in your world, because at the bottom line divine love is the substance of your individuality.

And so you were having a clearer experience of your nature, a clearer experience of what constitutes you. And that is why I can say that you are quite beautiful. And that you are worthy of self-appreciation. And that you should never think less than the best about yourself. Because in spite of your willingness at times to be distracted from being aware of who you are, in spite of your thinking less than the best of yourself, you never stop being what you were experiencing during those 15 minutes. You cannot stop being what you are, even though you can ignore it.

Where you give your attention is what will be magnified in your experience. And if you give it to the ego and the sense of conflict and the sense of fear that it provokes and you energize that and give that your attention, that is what will grow upon the thought until it consumes you and scares you so badly that you have no choice but to reach beyond it. And of course the only thing that is ever beyond it is the clearer experience of yourself. The only thing ever present on the other side of a limit is the more of you that exists but which you haven't been paying attention to or accessing.

This is why it is wise to give your attention to things like divine love, to give your attention to the meaning of God, to give your attention to the meaning of you, divinely speaking. Because when you give your attention to these things they are what will grow in your thought and be magnified.

And that is literally what you were doing that evening, you gave your attention and allowed the experience to grow, to become more apparent to you, to register more significantly at your conscious level of experience. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: You have already take the first step. There is perspective here because you are aware that you are trapped by your fears. Until that essential awareness has occurred you are totally in the dare and in bondage to your fears and you simply become the extension of your fear. So you have already take the first step. You have arrived at a point where you're recognizing that your fears are limiting you.

The next step you have to take is to value your peace more than your fear. Valuing your peace will cause you to do whatever you need to do to get in touch with your peace—again, whether that is taking a soak in a hot tub, or doing a meditation, or using a self-hypnosis relaxation technique. As long as you value your peace more than the fear that is limiting you, and you reach for the experience of your peace, or lean into the experience of your peace through the methods I've mentioned, you will find yourself moving past the fear and arriving at a centered place.

Now I will offer you and everyone else a suggestion, because very often in the process of relaxing and becoming centered you go to sleep because it is so relaxing. If this happens to you hold an object in your hand that can easily slip out of your hand as you relax too much. And in doing this you will find that when you get to the place where you're going too far into your peace and your hand begins to relax, the slight movement of the object beginning to slip will be enough to bring you back without shocking you, just this side of the boundary line where you would go to sleep. And you will learn how to ride on the edge of the deepest level of your peace for longer periods of time without losing it by falling asleep. You will also find that the level or degree of centeredness you can attain will become deeper and deeper without you losing conscious awareness of your surroundings.

Now once you have connected with your peace, then from that peaceful place desire to be aware of what your appropriate behavior would be if you were not governed by your fear. In other words, if you are dreadfully afraid of flying, you have no way to rationally consider a trip to the East Coast or to any place by plane from within the frame work of your fearful thought. And so you cannot trust decisions that occur from that fearful place. But if you will take the time to become quiet, to become centered, to be experiencing the peace of your being, where you're not available to the fearful ego sense, and then you begin to consider what the significance of flying is, and how you might be able to do it and be calm. You will find the information and the awareness' that you need come into view.

There is another thing, by your regularly taking time to connect with the peace of your individuality, of your Being, the experience of that peace becomes more significantly registered in your memory. As a result of that when you are confronted in your daily activity with something that tends to pull you off center, the memory of what it feels like to be centered is only perhaps 8 to 18 hours back in your experience. And it becomes easier to remember on the spot what it felt like.

And in remembering what it felt like it causes a spontaneous and natural movement of your focus of attention toward that centered place in you so that you rather quickly can have available to you a significantly greater sense of peace in your work day, so that you can deal from that peaceful perspective with the issue that ordinarily pulls you off center. And your effectiveness will increase, and you will find yourself moving beyond the limit or the boundary that your fearful response would have kept you at.

The key to moving beyond your fear is a more significant experience of your peace. You will not be able to do it by battling the fear. You will not even be able to do it through intellectual arguments. You will only be able to do it from a feeling. And that feeling will have to be the feeling of your peace, and therefore your security.

Understand that when you are centered and experiencing your peace, you are not just experiencing an alternative emotion to fear or anger. You are directly experiencing your nature. It is therefore a far more significant experience than just not being tense.

When you meditate or when by any means you arrive at your center, you are directly experiencing your individuality and you are experiencing its immovable stability. You are experiencing its eternality. And it is only that which can inspire you to trespass against your ego sense and violate its ingrained limits.

Becoming centered is even easier than getting in touch with your guide. So we are not talking about something difficult here. It boils down to making a decision as to which you value most, your experience of fear or your experience of peace. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Your goal to not harbor resentment as much as possible under the circumstances has been ennobled and ennobling. Because whether you grasped it or not, it arose out of a deep comprehension of what love really means. And you valued it more than you valued your apparently justifiable anger. I say apparently justifiable, because it was apparently justifiable from the ego standpoint. And you need to know that you did well.

The only significance there was to the timing of your encounter with him was that you have arrived at a point where you can really feel the futility and uselessness of hate and anger and of blame. And so, for you the encounter was significant.

The threshold you are sensing yourself being on you would have been on even without the encounter, and your movement across the threshold would have occurred even without the encounter. But the encounter has allowed you to release the barest shadow of justification within you that was being held in reserve for expressing distress and anger. And that has freed you up so that you will be able to enjoy the crossing over the threshold a little bit more. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Paul, what is my Being trying to unfold to me at this time? I feel like there's so many endings, or feelings of things being finished up. Am I on the leading edge of a change in another direction. My method of receiving is nothing like you have explained, and I've never met anybody who receives like I do. Is there any comment on these areas?

ANSWER: Value whatever way your guidance is experienced. Value whatever way your deepest levels of knowing emerge at the conscious level of your awareness. That is number one.

I encourage you to be open to any developments that may occur in your receipt. I am not going to suggest any particular thing to watch for, just value the way it works with you and be open to any enhancements that might occur.

It is not so much of a matter of your moving in a new direction. It is really the fact that loose ends are unnatural to Being. And you could say that you are moving into an experience of life in which there are no loose ends. And so the clearing up of loose ends is not the finishing off of something so you can move on to something new with new loose ends. It is simply a matter of your experience becoming more cohesive and integrated.

That does not mean you will not do new things. But do not conceptualize what is happening in a way that causes you to feel that one phase is coming to completion and a new phase is beginning. It is like the same phase continuing in an essentially more normal way. And I mean that in the sense of divinely normal. Because it is divinely normal for there to be unfoldment, but it is not divinely normal of that unfoldment to be experienced in a ragged manner or with loose ends flopping around catching on things and impeding your progress. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I lived in California for many years before I moved to Oregon. Even though I've been happy there, it's a lovely state and all that, and I am happy there, but why do I still have the feeling of being misplaced?

ANSWER: Because Oregon is not your state. You do not blend with Oregon. Fundamentally your energy is not at the same rate as the territory that constitutes the state of Oregon. There is not a harmonizing with it. As a result you seem to be riding the rails and unable to settle in and let go and relax. It is not a bad place for you to be, it is not injurious or detrimental to you. But the time will come when you will finally move back to California.

It is as though you are exploring other territory. But I want you to know that it is not necessary for you to stay there and explore it overly long. And it is not inappropriate for you to be open to and allowing of a shift back to California. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Don't jump the gun, the cycle is not completed. There is a period ahead of you of 8 or 9 months which will be relatively stable and eventless, let us say, a period in which to incorporate and integrate the learning from this cycle. Do not become impatient to get on with the next step. Give yourself time and space to breath. Let yourself not be dealing with issues involving major growth. Enjoy a little peace. Give yourself the space and time to significantly make sense out of those steps which you have recently taken.

In other words, in 8 or 9 months what you refer to this cycle will have come to an end. In the meantime it may even seem a little dull, and that is the way it is supposed to be. Okay, that's the answer.

QUESTION:

PAUL: I'm going to ask a favor: Could you say that question to be the first question tomorrow morning. I need to say that I have arrived... I can't say that I've arrived at a point of exhaustion because I haven't. But I've arrived at a point where I need to stop. And I will never attempt to bluff my way through if I arrive at that point. Tomorrow morning I would like to definitely start promptly at 9:30.

In other words, I'd like to start earlier when I'm fresher so that... because I know I'll have no trouble getting through until 5:30 in the afternoon tomorrow. But right now I've run out of juice is what it feels like.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: The first thing I want to assure you of is that your body is your ally. It has a specific function to perform. It has a reason for being. It is not an illusion, although the distress you are referring to is not a part of its eternal identity. The function of your body, its intent or reason for being is to render visible and tangible or identify the presence of your individuality. Your individuality is the direct expression of the Life Principle. And so, at the bottom line, it is your bodies purpose to identify the Life Principle. And so its function or intent is absolutely divine.

Your body is absolutely incapable of working at odds with you. So then what is it that you are experiencing here that seems to be not harmonious, not pleasant, and which implies that your body can perhaps function in a way destructive to your well-being. It is simply the manifestation of your blocking your perception of its divine intent.

And you are blocking it by fear and grief. There is a manifestation of your sorrow, your disappointment. And the reason it is manifesting physically is because you are not allowing your sadness to find expression through tears. At least you are not letting go of it fully. You are attempting to be staunch, and strong, and have a rod up your backbone and move through this and not feel. And yet you cannot eradicate your feelings. And if you will go ahead and feel what you are feeling you will not be dragged down into the depths of misery. You will find that in allowing it to come out it will be relatively brief.

Disappointment is the way we describe squelched hopes. We think our hopes are squelched by circumstances outside of us, but we always do the squelching ourselves. So when there is depression, when there is disappointment you may know that you are at that moment squelching your hope. You squelch it with your negative feelings.

Now when you decide to let yourself feel your sadness, and you let it flow out, it flows out because something is pushing it out. And what is pushing it out is the hope that lies eternally within you. In the process of emerging it pushes out first the debris and garbage of negativity which you have been using to squelch it with. And so that is why there are tears, that is why there is the feeling that you do not like.

But in allowing it out, it is like allowing the cork on a champagne bottle to pop out. There is pressure until the cork is out. But once it is out, everything that is in the bottle of value, of delight can pour forth. And so in letting these feelings be felt without squelching them, they will move rapidly out of the picture and what is pushing them out, what is cleansing you which is your hope and your confidence and your joy and your curiosity about life will come out. And you will feel revitalized. And the physical symptoms that you are experiencing will disappear because you are not stifling yourself.

Now this is the simple truth. It might sound like psychology, but it works. It is the intent of your being to fulfill itself perfectly and it has infinite capacities to do so. And this is an eternal fact of your being. Moment by moment you stand at the threshold of your fulfillment because your being is incapable of doing anything other than fulfilling itself. That is the Movement which is called Life, conscious experience.

So there has been a change of dynamics, a change of arrangement of individualities in your life. This in no way limits your essential being in its process of fulfilling itself because it still has infinite capacities and resources with which to fulfill itself.

So you are not at a loss here. What has happened is that life has not corresponded to your hope, to your particular concept of what you would have liked to have had.

Again, I want to assure you that you will not be swallowed up and smothered by your sadness. It will not incapacitate you for weeks or months on end, unless you squelch it and do not allow yourself to feel it. Then you will debilitate yourself, and incapacitate yourself to some extent for a much longer period of time.

The relationship is over, yes. Do not hang on to it. Don't maintain yourself in readiness for a reversal of the situation. In effect that would be like Lot's wife looking back. You need to dare to allow your attention to be on the present with a totally fresh open sense, and an eagerness to see the fulfillment which your being is unfolding at this moment, fulfillment that will be identifiable to you as fulfillment. Be willing to let go and understand that the separating of your ways has not succeeded and cannot succeed at depriving you in any way from your ongoing fulfillment.

If you want to be angry about it, you may know that you are more interested in justice than you are in your fulfillment. And that is okay, but getting justice is not satisfying. And being attentive to the fulfillment that is yours is satisfying, because it aligns you with your capacity to experience your fulfillment.

Let there be a significant releasing of the past now. Let yourself feel whatever sadness or grief is there, but do it with the understanding that in allowing it out it will pass off and that there will be a movement to the surface of your awareness of your essential hope and vitality and love and aliveness. And once again, a clear sense of the worthwhileness of being alive.

Let that picture of the champagne bottle be a valuable image for you. The grief is just the cork with which you are squelching your vital hope and strong sense of life. And you must let the cork go so that the bubbly in your life can come out. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: What she said was nonsense. I cannot explain it to you. It did have value in that it gave you something to hold on to, a sense of continuity and meaning. And that was its value. You see there is nothing you work with him on. He is on about his business. He does not need any help. He is not trapped or somehow held back from his own development. And the real necessity here is for you not to be held back in terms of your own development and growth and your discovery of the fulfillment which your being is also unfolding in the now, and unfolding in terms that have meaningful value for you.

It is important for you not to remain attached to your memories. That does not mean that you should not have memories, or that you should try to get rid of them, but you should not energize a sense of togetherness, or a sense of unity of intent with someone who is not with you and who is not working with you with a common intent. You should not be preoccupied with the past because it keeps you from being present and available to the fulfillment that is happening in the now.

I would suggest to you that you give the necklace away. This has two purposes. One is that it acts out your release of him and your release of the relationship, thereby releasing you from your past. The other thing it does is to free your desire for fulfillment and meaning to free that desire up and because you are not supplying a focus for it in the past it forces it to move in the direction of your future.

The relationship must be released. It is not a fact now. If it is not released, if it is held on to you will become over the years a very dull and sad woman. It will promote senility. I am not trying to frighten you, but I am trying to convey to you the impracticality of holding on to the past, holding on to that which is not actively existent now.

You are a divine entity. You are the presence of consciousness, the conscious experience of being—the conscious experience of being it is the Creation of God, the infinite Mind or intelligence. Because of this, what you are, as the conscious experience of being is itself the threshold of life, the threshold of fulfillment. You are not here to sacrifice what you are for a relationship, whether it is a current relationship or one that was in your past.

That is really the lesson that all of you are having to learn, because all of you have to one degree or another sacrificed yourself for something else, or someone else. And that sacrifice has constituted a self-depreciation, a devaluing of oneself. You see, if you are the very threshold of life, of creation, if you are that place where creation flows into conscious experience, into manifestation, then it behooves you to give your attention to the now, the place where you are experiencing being conscious, because that is where your fulfillment lies.

It is time for you to move forward now by allowing yourself to be in the present and release the past. Literally, the cork is out of your bottle. When we spoke last August the cork was not yet out, and there was, let us say, some grief work to do. But you have done it and the cork is gone. And you need to give your energy in a vital way to the now that you are in because the bubbly is coming out.

To give away the necklace will constitute an acknowledgment on your part that you are willing to experience the bubbly, which your being is unfolding now. An acknowledgment of your freedom to look forward and to be open to fulfillment now.

Your husband is not bound in any way to you. He has not forgotten you. His love has not changed, but he is on about his business with great joy. And it is your right and your opportunity to move on with your life with delight and joy, without devaluing in any way what you had in that relationship.

PAUL: And this is me. The picture I'm getting is like—I don't know that you might have had a red, white and blue dress—but the image that I'm getting is of a, let's say, a eleven or twelve year old who had a dress that was red, white and blue. And it was a dress that absolutely delighted this child. I mean it was one that the child really related to. It was pure pleasure. And yet the child was growing and it got to the point where she was too big for the dress, even though the dress wasn't worn out. And there was a time to stop taking it off the hanger and trying to get it on. And then there came a time when it actually had to be taken out of the closet and given away to someone else, released from possession to make room for something new.

The sense of the image is that to take it out of the closet and no longer possess it, to give it away didn't devalue the meaning it had and the delight that was experienced and all of the enjoyment that was gotten from wearing it, and even seeing it in the closet. None of that enjoyment, none of the texture and the value that it added to this little girls overall life. None of that was undermined in any way. But there came a time when it had to be released to make room for new fulfillment that was more appropriate, that fit the growing person.

And it's like it is now time for you to dare to look at the garments of life that fit the new you, the growing you. And overall the strong sense that whole thing is a positive process that you're going through. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Just insist on the forward look. As I have been saying, it is the movement of your being that constitutes creation. Because the movement of your being is the presence of the Life Principle in the process of fulfilling itself. And by allowing yourself to be consciously centered, on the threshold of now, of the instant of conscious awareness that you are experiencing you have aligned yourself with reality and it's direct perception. Preoccupation with the past or dread of the future keeps your attention out of the now where the fulfillment is occurring.

You are doing quite well at staying in the now with an expectant sense of observing the fulfillment which your being is manifesting, creating. And this is why you are happier. It feels good not to be conflicted within yourself. It feels good to be on target. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: The throat area is the area where you feel most vulnerable physically. And it is the place that you tend to tense up in order to provide a feeling of enough density to be invulnerable. It is like you armor yourself there, or shield yourself there. Now it happens that generally speaking around your globe the sixth chakra is opening. This is a part of the shift of consciousness, part of the development. And in light of that point of development your tendency to protect yourself in this area is becoming significantly more oppositional to the opening process. And so, the distress is becoming more pronounced.

PAUL: Okay, this is me. There is a book that he's recommending that you obtain, and it's called "Energy Ecstas." The author is Bernard Gunther. The book has to do with learning how—either by yourself or with a partner—how to clear the chakras. Are you familiar with the term chakras? Okay.

One of the reasons I think this book is of special value is because it helps one learn how to clear his own chakras or her own chakras alone so that you're not at a loss if you can't tell things are out of kilter you're not at a loss because you can't find anybody to help clear your chakras. And the sense is to use the technique that is shown for clearing the throat chakra, so that you can maybe once a day take time to sit down, take some quiet time to clear the blocks in there so that you become more in harmony with the general opening of the sixth chakra which everyone is in one way or another experiencing.

It's like you have a habit that's pulling in one direction and when nothing was happening with the chakra it was just as intense as it was. But not that there's an opening up it's like there's a pulling against your tendency to shield yourself and it's creating more intensity. And you need to begin to relax so that you're moving in the same direction that your being is unfolding in. I hope that made sense. Okay.

Okay, I have to put this in my own words too. The fear around letting go arises out of the feeling that if you really let go you will be especially vulnerable. But if you understand that the unblocking of the sixth chakra constitutes a clearer experience of the integrity of your self-expression, a clearer experience of the cohesiveness of your expressing yourself it will be more reasonable to you to conceive of going ahead and relaxing and letting go of the control in that area. Okay. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: There is a possibility it is not something that you should offhandedly turn off in your mind as a possibility. It is not likely to happen before the next 18 months is up. And there should not be any impatience around that because both of you are taking necessary steps, essential steps, which will pave the way for the move in 18 months.

At the present time there is a 50-50 split between you're moving to the Bay area and the Carmel area. Which means that you can afford to be open to either place and not just home in on the Bay area. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

PAUL: And this is me. There's a sense that moving here would require like a major shift for you Janet, like a major shift of intent or focus. And there's nothing wrong with that. I mean it isn't like that's not a good thing. The sense of it is certainly be open to that kind of a possibility of there being a major shift of focus for you. Okay, that's all there was.

PAUL: Okay, the question was that he would like an energy reading, specifically around the development of his sixth chakra.

PAUL: Okay, I'm going to have to put this in my own words. The image I'm getting is a flower, like a tulip, sort of the shape of a flower as opposed to a rose. In other words, the petals form like a cup. And it's like the flower represents the throat chakra and it's opening. Except it's like the ends of the petal are fluttering or quivering like trying to close up again. It's like, "Oh, don't open too fast, don't open too fast, don't open too fast." Because there's a feeling like if your point of awareness were down in the center of the flower it's like what you're feeling that once it opens up you'll be sucked out through the opening. And it's like you'll be out of control if you let go and get sucked out.

ANSWER: But that is the point of the opening of the sixth chakra so that there is an uninhibited and uncontrolled flow or expression of essential self that does—this is Raj—that does not mean just verbal expression of self, it means the trusting ability to act in the world from your center.

It is one thing to become aware of all that you essentially are at an intellectual level and marvel at your wonderousness, but there comes a point at which you must dare to be that wondrousness, own it so that it is allowed into expression.

It is a wonderful thing to learn that you are the light of the world—everyone—it is another thing to go ahead and be that light. Because in order to be it there has to be a great amount of self-appreciation. And everyone is conditioned to self-depreciation. The ego has done it. Your religions have done it. Your parents have done it. You have in one way or another been programmed into your unworthiness and the great need to behave in a way to earn your worth, to earn the right to feel good about yourself, to appreciate yourself enough to dare to express yourself from your heart, to express yourself with honesty.

That is what is happening here with the opening of the sixth chakra. You see it is the ego which wants control. It wants to know ahead of time what is going to happen so that it can be in charge and be prepared for any response that might follow one's self-expression. As a result of that interference of the flow of your essential self everything gets messed up.

So when you find yourself having the feeling that if you get opened up any more that you will be sucked through the opening and be out of control you can, at least intellectually, begin to understand that that is the whole point. And that indeed in letting go of the artificial need for control you are further putting yourself in the position of experiencing the underlying unity, cohesiveness and harmony of life.

It is scary to be out of control because you believe that there is essential chaos in the universe, and that it is only through the exercise of control that that chaos can be held down to a dull roar. As a result, you have to deny yourself, you have to cover up your essential value, and you have to suffer the absence of self-appreciation.

Your flower is open about 35 percent, or let us say the sixth chakra. You are not resisting it greatly. But I want to communicate to you that what you are defending yourself against is your great joy. You are defending yourself against your invulnerability. You are defending yourself against your immovable eternal stability.

The more you defend it the more you will find yourself having physical difficulties—and I am addressing everyone here—in the throat area. Even the neck area in the back in terms of tension and headaches.

The Christ Consciousness that each one of you fundamentally is, is going to emerge. Because mankind is waking up. And even though each one of you is having a tug-of-war, where part of you is desiring your Awakening, and part of you is resisting it, the fact is that the Awakening process is winning. And it is winning because there is a very great number of individualities who are already totally Awakened. And as a result the general consciousness of the Brotherhood of Man is less dense. And so it is easier to spontaneously experience one's enlightenment.

There is not as much ego structure or strength in the entire Brotherhood and as a result each one's ego structure is weaker. And each embracing of your further integrity, or experience of integrity, each willingness to own your divinity, each allowance of greater self-appreciation lessens the density further and, as I said yesterday, compounds the growth. Things will be moving quite rapidly, and the ego will be frightened, but your Soul will be so happy.

You may lose control as you go through the opening, but there will be a simultaneous and corresponding awareness of your invulnerability and integrity, and so you will not find yourself overwhelmed or terribly frightened. The fear is not from what is happening, it is not from the opening, it is from the projections which the ego is making upon the event of opening. You can trust into the essential integrity of your Being which is emerging at the conscious level of your awareness. No one else can do that for you. No one else can invest that trust and risk the chance, because from the ego standpoint it certainly is a risk.

And so that is why I am encouraging you, that is why your guide is encouraging you. And that is why you find encouragement available and present from other unusual sources. Because it is hard to have the nerve to invest the trust and risk the chance without help from a different perspective. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: I cannot answer that, simply because there are too many variables. It will depend entirely on how willing you are to allow the opening to occur, how willing you are to embrace whatever that opening might mean. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: It most certainly was. Except understand that it was your ego sense that was battling against your willingness to function in areas over which your ego had no control. And so it was fighting to get your attention back into its little play ground. It is important for you to understand that it is a waste of time for you to attempt to battle the ego, because it is a highly skilled defense mechanism. It knows with great skill how to defend itself successfully.

The way you disengage yourself from it is not to confront it directly, but literally to desire yourself right past it, you might say, into your greater capacity to be aware, into your divine knowing by desiring to Know, with a capital "K", you can move past the ego defenses, and it cannot do anything about it because you are not giving your energy to it. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Let us say that you are not significantly blocking anything. And let me also say that there is always infinite opportunity for putting into expression the flow of your essential Being, of your essential energy. I encourage you not to be heavy duty about this. Let there be a lightness, a sense of delight. Be alert for expressions of beauty, whether it is dusty and polishing your dining room table or clipping the rose bushes, or arranging flowers, or getting dressed. Let there be a real lightness, so that each thing does not become a task or a test or a significant part of your forward movement.

You cannot work your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you have to allow yourself into the Kingdom of Heaven. The process becomes less and less work, less and less stress and strain, less and less labor, more and more peace, more and more joy, with less effort needing to be expended in order to deserve the joy.

PAUL: This is me. The image I am getting is like at the doorway to the Kingdom of Heaven there is not a little booth like at a theater where you go up and pay for your ticket for admission. There isn't a cost to get into the Kingdom of Heaven. It's your Birthright. It's where you belong. It's your Home.

He says...

ANSWER: So don't do everything with the sense that in some way you are paying your dues. In this way you will not be quite so serious about it, heavy about it.

The only thing that I will say, the only direction that I will give is to let your attention be given to delighting and expressing beauty for you to enjoy. Not for anyone else. If someone else enjoys it that is because they have allowed themselves to enjoy it and says something about them, not about you.

If you like to see reflections of color, and outline, and light in the surface of a beautiful piece wood, then polish it and take the time to notice it as you walk past it. Don't overlook it in your hurry to get on to the next thing. Don't overlook it in your concern about what others will think about it. It's all for you. You are not to miss out on any of the delight of life or Heaven.

So do what you do with a light touch and a light attitude. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: That is not an appropriate issue to deal with at this time. The reason being, that you need to allow yourself to incorporate and really embrace in an accepting way the idea of moving, really moving. Not just thinking about it, arriving at a point in yourself of a decision that if the way unfolds you will flow with it.

In effect, by attending to this first step of integrating the decision you set things into motion, it causes the necessary energies to gather and take on the form that will be the manifestation of the place to move to, the work to do, the way to do it, the school for your daughter to attend, etc. Do not be impatient, else in effect you will jumble or not provide the essential focus or intent that will begin to bring the energies into a new pattern of manifestation for you.

Understand, as I said earlier, that it is the intent of your Being to fulfill itself perfectly. It is also the intent of your daughters Being to fulfill itself perfectly. And with both of you it has infinite resources with which to do so. What is essential is for you to have the fundamental desire, and to have arrived at a point within yourself where there is a willingness to make a commitment to the fulfillment of that desire. And then abide with the desire, and don't get out there and try to manipulate your world into the fulfillment of it.

The power of the movement of fulfillment lies in your desire. Not in your thinking and not in your doing. And a willingness to commit to the fulfillment of that desire as the movement of the desire itself brings about the form that identifies the fulfillment.

Trust that your Being has infinite wisdom and sees the whole picture without anything being left out. And therefore, its unfoldment of that which identifies fulfillment will be flawless. And then simply be attentive, listen. Not coercively, not impatiently, but allowingly listen, and you will find yourself knowing what the next step is. And you will find the opportunity for employment unfolding itself and practically walking up to you and hitting you in the face before you recognize it.

And so I encourage you not to be too busy trying to figure out how this is all going to work out, because in your busyness you are likely to overlook, or not immediately see the very fulfillment which your being is unfolding. So be patient for right now. And just feel the desire to move. It is consistent with what your being is unfolding, and it is consistent with the best interest of your daughter. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: To the contrary, you could say it is expanding your growth. You are not attending to nonessentials, they have to be taken care of, and they fall to you to take care of. What will help you most significantly is to not resist them in any way as though they are depriving you of your self-expression. You will not be dealing with these things indefinitely. And they are providing you with the opportunity to become aware of an increased capacity, an increased ability. It has served to reveal to you greater depth and breathe. It also kept you from a very significant depression or slump which you would have been inclined to go into. You didn't have time. Thank God.

To whatever degree you feel like these demands are somehow not valid for you and are interfering with your essential growth and development and joy, you will find your energy depleted because you will bring resistance and frustration and anger into play, and energy will go right out the window to maintain those feelings. Do not resent the necessities that you are confronted with having to deal with. You are coming out of the woods, so to speak, in terms of time and effort that is needing to be expended in these directions. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

PAUL: Okay, the words I'm getting is that it is appropriate for you to open the door to your work room. Does that make sense? Okay. And also the image that I'm getting in terms of an overview are like of a calendar is that by September, it's like go ahead and open the door and maybe start cleaning up so that you're not opening the door for the first time in September and having to clean everything up. It's like by September you're going to have quite a bit of time to play. But you can go ahead and open the door to your work room and begin to be aware of what you'd like to do and getting things arranged and set up.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: The most appropriate thing to do would be to have healing sessions. There is no need to go into or try to find out what the cause of the problem is. I would like to encourage you to also avail yourself of the help of your own healing team.

PAUL: Okay, this is me. He wants me to share this with you. He has explained that not only does each one of us have a spiritual guide, a specific individuality who is present for us on behalf of our growth and Awakening. But there's also a group of individualities who work like under the jurisdiction of or in conjunction with (end of tape 6).

address a question or a desire or whatever to your guide, your guide will hear you. So even if you haven't established dialog with your guide you can ask your guide for a healing session at a particular time or "will my healing team, or a group be with me while I'm driving all night long," or whatever the need is. And Raj has indicated that you can count on it that if you ask your guide will follow through, even though you may not later be able to say, "Okay, what did they do? And how are things? And is there anything left to do," and so on. So be aware that you have that kind of help available to you.

I think that's helpful to know, because if something comes up that you need help on and you call me to have Raj set up a healing session and the line is busy, you don't have to feel at a loss you can say, "Wait a minute," and just ask your guide, just mentally express the desire to your guide to have a healing session with your healing team, right away.

QUESTION:

PAUL: I'm going to put this in my own words, because it was sort of just all there in a flash. It is like yes, there is something you can do. And that is take one of those little yellow stickum things that you can write messages on, and write the word relax on it. And stick it on your typewriter or computer screen or whatever's in front of you, in some place where you'll see it often. And when you see it just take a moment to let go of your shoulders.

It's like just sort of consciously go all the way down and relax your shoulders, your arms. You can even sit there for a second with your arms at your side, and just consciously let go. And you'll find out that as you've been working you've slowly raised your shoulders up and you're holding them there, and you slowly tensed up. And so if 10 or 12 times a day you'll just stop for just a second and let go. Then what will happen is as the days go by, you'll begin to notice when you start to raise it up, and you'll catch yourself sooner and you'll say, "oops, no." And you'll recondition yourself.

But it definitely is tension. And it's from not having been taught that if you're working at a desk and in the same position for many hours that you need to learn how to do it and stay relaxed, because you won't tend naturally to stay relaxed. So that's the answer there.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Tell her to stop trying so hard. You see, all that is necessary is for her to have come to a point of decision regarding desiring to have a child.

PAUL: She's married? Okay, because the sense was really that both of them, she and her husband having come to a point where that's what they want.

ANSWER: You see, it is not understood clearly that the essential element is the desire. And that the desire includes within itself the energy necessary for its fulfillment, the means for its fulfillment. So having come to the point of desiring it and having decided for flowing with that unfoldment, they really need to relax and just enjoy each other when they are together intimately, and allow the desire to fulfill itself.

There is a great deal of tension. They are not really able to be attentive to each other, because there is a sense of needing to accomplish, wanting to accomplish. And brings a level of distress that makes conception difficult. They need to allow conception to occur. And they need to realize that it is out of their hands, they're taking on a false sense of responsibility. And they need to simply enjoy the sharing and the being sensitive to each other, and the fullness of the time spent together intimately. They need to relax and enjoy themselves. The rest will follow quite naturally because the desire is there and the decision in favor of the fulfillment of that desire is there, they have done the essential things.

PAUL: This is me. The sense I'm getting is that her husband will be greatly relieved to hear this. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Because the ego is a defense mechanism it requires a state of conflict in which to function. In the midst of peace there is nothing to defend itself against, and it loses its definition, and I am meaning that even in the sense of structural definition. It dissolves, it falls apart, it cannot hold itself together in the presence of peace. And this is an extremely important point to understand. This is why it has been said that you will find your power in your peace.

Therefore, you can learn to recognize the activity of the ego whenever you find yourself feeling conflicted, whenever you find polarization within yourself, whenever there is an obvious presence of duality. Polarization is always felt as a level of uneasiness. And it will always be accompanied with a physical sensation of uneasiness in the area of the solar plexus.

When you are centered and you are experiencing insight, you are receiving guidance, even if the answers or the guidance are not what you had expected, or not what you thought you wanted to hear, you will nevertheless find the area around your solar plexus at peace. It is absolutely impossible for the ego to artificially create a relaxed solar plexus, and thus fool you into believe that the guidance is coming from a reliable source, meaning the level of your capital "B" Being.

So the sensation in the area of the solar plexus is one of the ways in which you can know that the ego is functioning and that you are hooked to some degree. Any time there is physical discomfort, any time there is mental distress or emotional distress you may know that the ego is functioning. And like I said earlier, the only means of moving out of the ego's territory is to desire on your part to connect with the peace of your Being. It is to sidestep the ego. If things are really stressful, meditation is the most direct route you can take to your center.

Besides creating a sense of distress in you, the ego also blocks your experience of freedom by suggesting to you that it is unreasonable for you to expect as much as you are expecting. It causes you to feel one way or another as though you don't deserve it, and then sets you to work at earning it.

Whenever you find yourself inclined to say, "no, I can't do that," or, "no, I'd better not do that," or, "if I were younger I wouldn't think twice about it, but now," etc., that is just conditioning, that is just your ego speaking. It says that when you were a certain age you most certainly were standing at the threshold of fulfillment, but now you're less deserving of it or less capable of experiencing it, and therefore it is not available to you as readily. And the amazing thing is that you believe it.

As I said yesterday, you are always standing at the leading edge of your unfoldment. There is no way for you to stand five feet back from the leading edge actually. That's the end of the answer.

PAUL: The sense is that those are the most significant ploys that the ego uses to bind you.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: I want you to be extremely grateful for the insulin. Do not resent it. Do not resent needing it. Its presence is the provision of love. It is love appearing in language that meets the need at the moment and identifies the ongoingness of your Being. That's step one.

Step two: Your peace is not a physical thing. It isn't governed by your physique. And your experience of it is available to you at any time that you want to experience it. It is the peace of your Being, not just an emotional equilibrium. It is the substance of your Being. And if you are drawing a breath, and if you are capable of having an experience of taking insulin then your Being is present, and your Being is available to you to experience.

When you become centered you are not moving into a quiet place some place in your body, you are not moving into a quiet physical place, you are moving into your essential individuality. And your essential individuality is there to move into, no matter what your blood sugar level is doing.

It is impossible for God to be at the mercy of His infinite manifestation, else the manifestation would be God. It is impossible for God's direct expression, meaning your individuality, to be subject to that which identifies it. And this needs to be very clear to you, because you have bought into the idea that your peace is and can be blocked by your body, by its blood sugar level, by its activity or inactivity. And thus you have blocked yourself by virtue of that belief from experiencing the peace of your Being that is inviolably yours to be experiencing.

Your peace is available to you to experience. You need to know that fact and then allow yourself into it through meditation or whatever works fairly efficiently to help you to relax. In connecting with it you will find your body beginning to, we'll say respond and come into better alignment, manifest more stability and peace. And the up and down swings will not be as great.

There has been an assumption that because of the presence of conflict you have been and can be somehow blocked from, or successfully blocked from your peace. But you see that is an idea that has gone across your mind that you have bought into. And this is the way the ego works. Because it causes you to forget that you truly do have another vantage point available to you than the ego's vantage point, so that it doesn't occur to you to access it, or it occurs to you to access it, but then you believe you can't because the situation is such that it's impossible.

This is not true. Your peace is constantly available to you because you are that peace, your individuality is the presence of that peace. And the only way your peace could not be present or not be available to you is if you were not present, if you did not exist. And that also is an impossibility.

I want you to consciously and conscientiously challenge and invalidate the suggestion that because of the swings of the sugar level in your body, you really can't connect with the peace of your Being.

PAUL: Okay, this is me. Literally, what I was getting is that when those kinds of thoughts cross your mind say if you can have a one word response like, "ridiculous!" Or the word I was really getting which I do have trouble saying is, "bullshit!"

Whatever effectively dismisses as absolutely ridiculous the idea. So when the idea comes that there isn't any way to connect with your peace, it's like, "bullshit!" Okay?

QUESTION:

ANSWER: You certainly are. That is why it seems to be as difficult as it does. I mean that in the sense that the practice of unconditional love takes guts. It doesn't feel natural. It goes against the grain of your conditioned thinking. It requires not being in charge or in control. It requires yielding to the underlying orderliness of Being. And no one really has much practice at allowing. This is what you are doing a lot of. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: The likelihood is low. Only because the reality of things is that you have other areas in which there is a preference to let your energy flow. I mean by that, an area other than a significant relationship. And that is in order. You are attending to things that need to be attended to. And you are on target or on track, you are flowing with the unfolding of your being.

It is not likely to happen within the next year, because you are not ready for it to happen. And I mean YOU are not ready. You are not likely to have opened the door and said, "I am ready to have company, I am ready to share myself with you." And this is excellent. And I would encourage you not to open the door until you are ready, and you will know when you are. Honor where you are presently. And as your feeling changes, honor that change and flow with it.

It is more likely to be 18 to 24 months before you will desire, truly desire to have a relationship. And of course, the moment the desire is there the wheels will be set into motion and the fulfillment will take form.

The key thing I am trying to impress upon you here is to respect and honor where you are coming from at the moment, and not assume for any intellectual reasons that you ought to be doing something different. You have more than a reasonable...

PAUL: Okay, the specific words won't come, but the meaning is that you can reasonably, or even more than reasonably expect the relationship that will develop to be a significant one and a long lasting one. And it's also like you are far from the frazzled little girl that you were when in your prior relationship (the only reason I'm hesitating is because I never heard you talk about a prior relationship, but I mean it sounds like a marriage) I mean it's like at that point you were quite immature and sort of frazzled and there's been a lot of change. And what will unfold will tend to be quite stable and meaningful. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: No. The name is serving as a stepping stone to accessing some piece of information from that period in your life which will be forth coming. It will not even seem like a particularly significant piece of information, and yet it will have somewhat profound effects on you in the now, releasing effect. Not a releasing from something traumatic, but a subtle set of belief structures that are limiting you somewhat in the present. It is like sweeping out a little bit of dust that was swept under the corner of the rug. It is not enough to get excited about, but it is a little bit of spring cleaning. Let it unfold and do not fret over what it is. Okay.

QUESTION:

PAUL: You want to come to Carmel too, huh?

Okay, I'm putting this in my own words. He's indicating yes that the tightness in the neck was because that's where you clapped down or grounded yourself.

ANSWER: You are bringing into your life now those dynamics, those relationships and those opportunities which will facilitate your development and your forward movement in terms of "career activity." And you are recognizing that although they are not tending to move you in the direction of traditional business activity, they are moving you in the direction of, let us say, a life work.

What it is essential for you to understand is that you are already experiencing the process of your Being unfolding its fulfillment. You are already experiencing the ultimate. So do not see this “ultimate” as something to come off in the future somewhere.

These dynamics are not responsible for your growth, your growth is responsible for the dynamics. They are the forms which your consistent desire has created. And so you are having evidence of the fact that your world supports you. Your world is here to serve you by identifying your fulfillment, your wholeness. Your world is not here to create your wholeness. There is a oneness between you and your world. And what you experience in your world is a mirror of either the clarity or the confusion of your awareness of your integrity, of your capital “S” Self, of your divine Being.

You must keep this in mind else you will give your power away, you will overlook the fact that you are confronted with the manifestation of your already perfectly functioning capital “B” Being. And you will see yourself as short-changed, as limited, as incomplete, and you will see these benefits as your saviors, and you will empower them in an indirect way.

You see, the presence of these dynamics were empowered by your Being in the first place as that which would identify the fulfillment of your Being. And that is why they are in your experience. And when you do not realize that, when you do not realize that your Being has already empowered the forms, you will see them as occurring independent of you and you will recognize their positive presence in your life, and you will empower them through space.

But that empowering of them will only substantiate your sense of incompleteness and will not connect you with the experience of the total integrity of your Being, which their presence is already identifying. And so you will continue to feel disintegrated.

So appreciate John and Janet, and appreciate me, and appreciate Paul, and appreciate the members of the group and everyone who is apparently helping confirm for you things that you found yourself already knowing at some level. But understand that it is your Being which has unfolded all of these dynamics in the way that they have unfolded for you as evidence of your already existing integrity.

I am not going to suggest to you what particular form of activity you might be engaged in, because when you get to this point of unfoldment the form that your activity will take must arise out of love in you. And so it is only appropriate for me to encourage you to be in touch with what is important to you, what you love, and let it unfold to you the form in which it is intent upon moving into expression. And then be true to it, be faithful to it. That is what constitutes your inner integrity, your devotion to your Being and what it is unfolding. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

PAUL: May I make a comment here? Because I was sort of aware of it in the answer that he was giving to you. It's like it may look to you like you have come here to get something from Raj. Like Ray might be the key figure, or the focal point. But if you notice Raj doesn't have an agenda for any of you. So what has transpired, and what transpires on any weekend, is whatever has arisen out of your desire to know, so each one of us, all of us who are asking questions are equal participants, we're equally responsible for what happens in the weekend.

And it's important to know that if you are getting answers that are being helpful, it's because from somewhere in you you have evolved the opportunity for the weekend to occur. So every single one of us is equally responsible for the weekend and plays an equal part, and who happens to be asking the questions or answering the questions is just incidental to the process of Awakening which is really the event.

And I think it's important to realize that. Otherwise we get things out of perspective and we're sort of looking up to something that we assume is far greater than us, and that's a put down on us. Each one of you evolved this weekend. Okay.

QUESTION:

PAUL: Lots! He agrees.

ANSWER: I want to change the emphasis of your question though. You said, "is there anything I need to know and I said, "lots." What I really want to convey to you is that there is an abundance, a tremendous abundance of good news, a tremendous abundance of new insights, a tremendous abundance of new clarity, and a tremendous abundance of the experience of the integrity and cohesiveness and indivisible oneness of you and your whole conscious experience of body, world, universe.

It is like a treasure sits in front of you to discern. Not one you have to created, not one you have to dig for, it is what is confronting you all the time. Because the Reality of Being has never gone anywhere, it never disappeared, it was never destroyed and so it does not need to be recreated, or even brought out of the vault because it was never hidden.

I want to encourage all of you to have a sense of marvelous curiosity and inquisitiveness and interest in discovering the Heaven that you are in. And I do not mean the Heaven you are in as opposed to the Heaven others are in. I mean the Reality, with a capital "R", which is the perfect, undistorted, unchanged, ever present manifestation of God.

And I also want to encourage each of you to dare to look at yourselves as the unchanged and actual unchangeable perfect expression of God. I want to encourage you to realize that you do not have to go through great processes of earning your stripes of divinity. You are divine. You cannot stop being divine. And only someone who is ignorant of what he is could be fooled into earning his stripes.

The ego indulges in hazing. And to tell you that you need to earn your stripes is like telling the first year student in junior high school that he is supposed to go over right away to the swimming pool and see the coach when there isn't any swimming pool there. You are being encourage by the ego to indulge in a useless effort.

The ego creates conflict within you and then tells you that you are demoralized and says you must find out what this is that is upsetting you so that you may find your peace. And it sends you on a witch hunt, which is very often called psychotherapy. And it sends you through a maze of tunnels through your ego, but it can never get you out of the territory of the ego. Because it will never direct you to the cause of the distress or demoralization, which is the ego itself.

Psychotherapy at this point will not help you become released from the ego, it sees the ego as essential. And the most that it can do is to help you arrive at some sort of agreement or truce with your ego so that you have a reasonable degree of equilibrium, but not really peace.

What I want to emphasize here for you is not to make hard work out of emerging into clarity. If you get up in the morning and your drapes are closed and the interior of the house is dark it is not necessary for you to get down on your knees and bow 36 times to the east, and 12 times to the west and say certain words and then clean up the kitchen and make the bed and 25 other things before it is possible for you to experience the light. You can walk directly to the front door and open it and step out into it and there it is. But the conditioning of the ego tells you that you cannot do it that simply. But I am telling you that you can.

There is nothing that will stop you if you have made a decision for it, from stepping into the light. There is nothing that can stop you from stepping out of your past no matter how dark it has seemed to be, without any process to it. In other words, there is nothing that can stop you from dropping off your unnecessary burdens because you choose to, and experience the absence of burden or the freedom of burden.

You do not have to dig out every single little dirty detail. You do not have to handle every single little bit of garbage you have accumulated on the way and put into your knapsack, to relieve yourself of the knapsack. You do not have to deserve your freedom, your joy, it is your birthright. You do not have to earn it. You do have to want it. And then you have to allow it in.

And so what you need to know is don't make life so hard for yourself. If you want to be in the sun walk into the sun—light. If you want a drink of water, get a drink of water. Don't ask yourself if you have earned the right to walk into the kitchen and turn on the faucet.

And let the process of waking up be a little bit more pleasurable. As I said earlier, do it with a light heart. I also want to let you know that karma is a crock. It is a means the ego has of justifying the existence of trial and tribulation and conflict in your experience so that you will not challenge it. And you need to challenge it, and you need to feel right at challenging it. And when the thought comes, "boy, I must have really done something bad to have these experiences that I'm confronted with," catch yourself and de-energize or disqualify the suggestion.

The only thing you can possibly suffer from is a current ignorance. There is no way to suffer today for an ignorance you had 5000 years ago, or even 5 years ago. If you are suffering in any way today you are suffering from the bondage of a belief structure that is also present in the moment that you are suffering. And if you don't like to suffer in the same way that you don't like to be in a dark house, then don't mess around with the suffering or the dark house, open the door and walk into the light.

I am wanting to emphasize here, that to move into the light is a result of two things: A desire to and a commitment to the fulfillment of that desire. You do not have to go through obedience's or 500 hail Mary's in order to arrive at your good. You deserve it because you are conscious. And if you are conscious, then you are the presence of the infinite intelligence in specific manifestation.

And if as a result of divinely being what you are as consciousness, you have the capacity to imagine and imaginatively create a set of concepts which do not conform to Reality. And just because you can believe what you have thought does not mean that you can possibly actually become anything less than what you were divinely created to be. And so what you divinely are is accessible to you at any moment you make the decision for it—and commit to its fulfillment.

It is easy to get into the Kingdom of Heaven, or the undistorted conscious experience of Being, which constitutes pure joy. And that is why encourage you to approach today and tomorrow with a light heart. And with no sense of having to labor for any reason, karmic or otherwise, religious or otherwise, to manage somehow to get the god's to open the door for you so that poor little you can finally emerge into the wondrous light.

The Light is your Home, the Light is your Birthright at this moment. And it is not necessary for you to work at it to get to it or experience it. It is only necessary to desire it. And a glad heart, a light heart will help to precipitate your movement into the light because a light heart, and joyful heart, and a grateful heart is territory into which your ego sense cannot enter.

PAUL: This is me. He's reminding me of the fact that for years "Reader's Digest" has had a section that says, "laughter is the best medicine." It's that same thought.

ANSWER: Let up on yourself is what I am saying. Do not assume that you have a hard road to hoe. Assume that you can safely be idiotic enough to be happy under the circumstances or in the face of conditions that confront you. And your willingness to be joyful and happy and idiotic will contribute to your world being transformed. Because the only thing that contributes to the continuing in harmony is the fact that everybody is taking the ego seriously, and is wandering around trying to find the swimming pool when there isn't one. Dare to have fun! Okay.

PAUL: We have two people in the group who have not yet asked a question, so I'm going to do those first. And then we'll see whether there's time for any more.

The first one is from Syrus, and he says, "there is according to folklore a large cash of buried gold in the Carmel area. I would like to know if Raj will comment on this, not in the sense of a treasure hunt, but in the sense of the phenomena....and location....pin-pointed.

ANSWER: No, there is not.

PAUL: Okay, this is me. The picture that I was getting is that it's like when boys get together and talk about the girls and make claims about their conquests. The rumor about the cash of gold was a bragging sort of thing that was like a false claim to gain respect or to look good in everybody else's eyes.

Literally the image I get is like pirate type or boat type people drinking ale in a saloon or bar whatever they had at that time. And it was a bragging sort of thing, except that it was done in a way that was quite convincing. So for whatever that's worth. That was the dynamic of it. Okay.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: If time is of the essence, then you had best let go of time. The sense of time will create a sense of pressure that will interfere with your ability to clearly perceive what is actually needed. Time is not of the essence, peace is.

PAUL: This is me. There is a set of books entitled "A Course In Miracles." There's a statement—and I get the last word wrong, but it means much the same thing—the statement is: "Infinite patience brings immediate results." And the sense of the meaning there is that when you let go of a sense of impatience it allows you to be more present in the now. And because the now is where your fulfillment is occurring, the results of the evidence of that fulfillment is forth coming, let's say much more rapidly. He says....

ANSWER: Do not be bluffed into anxiety by the threat of time. This is very important to understand.

PAUL: I just posed the question which you had said, "is he on the right track?" And Raj said, "yes, he is."

Do not assume that you need to be so structured in terms of obtaining material. It is all around you. And I encourage you to utilize serendipity, which is the discovery of that for which you are not looking. If you want to find something, stop looking for it. Relax in the knowledge that if you need it your Being has the capacity to bring it to your attention in a way that will be recognizable to you and in a way that you will not overlook.

I want you to be willing to assume that the obtaining of material and structure for the material will come quite spontaneously if you will just be open to the fact that your Being is itself the creative principle in motion, and that it has the ability to be absolutely appropriate for the times and for the audiences.

There is much desire on your part regarding this project. But there is also so much eagerness and impatience that there has evolved a great intensity that is not constituted of peace, and is turning everything into a project—tension producing work.

Comedy is the expression of joyful insight. Satire is the joyful expression of the the inconsistencies of the human condition that trigger in one way or another the release of the ridiculous dynamics so that change can occur. Satirical comedy is a divine activity. (this is the end of side one.)

I encourage you to back off on the intensity, back off on the attempt at structure. Become alert for the unexpected ways in which you recognize the inconsistencies and the treatment of those inconsistencies that will convey transformationally the need for change. And listen with your heart, else you would be likely to get heavy handed with the satire, where your heart will keep it balanced right on the razors edge.

Trust your heart more than your head. And again let go of this sense of time, and the imperativeness of time. I know you can explain to me why it is a valid concern. But I am sharing with you unequivocally that it is a bluff of the ego and you do not need to respond. This is one of those places where idiocy, the idiocy of not responding to obvious facts is essential.

I reaffirm again, that if the sense of urgency is not released the light, joyful perspective needed in order to discern the inconsistencies will be overlooked, they will not register with you because of the preoccupying sense of time. And you will defeat yourself unnecessarily. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: Yes, it is some of the dirt work of the ego. Concentration is a form of control. It is a narrowing down of the attention, of the vision. It is a form of effort. Your lack of ability to concentrate is actually a progressive step unless somehow you manage to reestablish your ability to concentrate. And you will have difficulty doing that because you are growing. The only other alternative you have then is to let go and be open, as open as possible. In fact, to be what you could call full opened consciousness is what puts you in the position of having available to you what you would hope to have available to you by means of your concentration.

Do not look at this as a problem, but actually as part of the solution of the problem of being. Just because you cannot concentrate does not mean the knowledge is not available, that the knowing is not available it simply means that you're having the opportunity to access the information or the knowing because it is an inherent part of your totality, and not as a result of the exercise of the skill of focusing your attention. Have fun with that.

QUESTION:

ANSWER: You have just crossed over the threshold between 3 and 4, just into the beginning of the territory of 4.

PAUL: Okay we do need to go ahead and get on with the healing session. I explained earlier that each one of us has not only a spiritual guide but a group of individualities who work in conjunction with our guide in terms of the clarification of the perfection of our body. My sense is that our guides work with us to...it's sort of like the help wash the windows of our mind. And the healing group works in terms of washing away the belief structures and so on that cover up and distort our experience of our body.

Neither your guide nor the healing group, or team, or whatever—I have had no way to know what they should really be called, so we just call them the healing team, somebody finally decided to call them the H team—that they cannot override your free will. Therefore, if you have an investment in the problem you've asked them to deal with, and you're not willing to give up the investment they cannot override you.

For instance I had a gentleman who had a back problem, but he was getting Workman's Compensation for it. He didn't want the pain but he didn't want to give up the Workman's Comp. And he did not get his healing. Somebody else was getting Workman's Comp and he said do everything but my back.

Anyway, the point is they cannot override your free will. So you are in charge the whole time. At any time during the hour if you want work stopped all you have to say is, "please stop." You cannot be invaded or violated in the sense of even healing work being done that you don't want done. I want it to be very clear to you that you are not opening yourself up for any kind of control being exercised over you.

If you have made a decision for your wellness they will facilitate that decision and carry it right through as far as you will allow it to be carried. And so at all times you are in charge. And I share that with you, not so that if you don't get a healing it's your fault, but to assure you that at all times you are in charge, you have the authority.

And I think that's very important to understand, cause there's a lot of funny stuff that goes around about opening yourself up. If you open yourself up you never know what kind of a spirit is going to enter in and all that kind of thing. And Raj has made it very clear that there is no evil force, or there are no evil spirits. And that when we seem to be experiencing something evil or negative, it is our fear being projected upon the energy of spirit, which is the only energy that there is, it's the Life Principle, God. So anyway, that's one reason I'm pointing out to you that you're in charge, and nothing will be done that you will not allow. And you can call it to a stop at any point.

Now what we will do is for everybody to get comfortable, in whatever kind of a position—wait before you do it though—whatever would be comfortable for you for an hour. As soon as everybody's comfortable I will let you know when Raj says they are hear. You may be able to sense when they arrive, I can't, and I feel so foolish because I'm the one arranging for them to be here.

But anyway, I will let you know when they are here. And then all you need to do is in your mind just simply indicate what you would like them to work on. If you have fifteen complaints that you would like them to address list them off, they will give priorities to what you have listed. If everything can be done, great, but if it can't, then of all that cannot be done they will work with the most serious things first. I'm saying that so you don't say, "well, maybe I ought to just ask only for one thing." Because if you have three or five or eight, go ahead and list them and let it be know that that's what you would like help on.

Now, we don't have a lot of husbands and wives here, but it is a rule in the healing sessions that I have like this, that snoring is okay if you fall asleep. And so husbands or wives do not jab your partner if he or she starts snoring. The reason is that during a healing session the... it is the state of consciousness that you'll find that you'll be in will be somewhat deeper and more significant. This is my experience anyway. And when there's an elbow in the side it is far more jarring than at home in bed when it happens. It is just very jarring. Obviously it has happened to me. So if it's understood from the outset that this is allowed and it's okay, those of you who might normally be disturbed will find you're not as disturbed. Just let it be and if you feel like giggling, giggle, but allow it.

Gathering In Seattle, WA – May 1987

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

ANSWER: There is much going on in your world today. Both in terms of traditional, historical evolution—in psychology, in business, in society, in terms of national politics, etc. And there is also much going on in terms of what could only be called individual regeneration, or what could also be called, spiritual growth. As the book table over here attests, there are many things being said, many things relative to changes coming. All the way from earth changes to societal changes to changes in the manner of personal relationships.

The great variety and the broad spectrum of the kinds of changes addressed can tend to be overwhelming. And that is not the point. And so, it is important today to direct your attention to what the essential element of this transformation is, because each of you will be participants in the changes. And it is important for you not to wait for the changes to happen so that you can quickly react and respond hopefully appropriately.

The changes externally are happening because of the maturing process which is going on in individual mankind. Even though that inner shifting is not being generally broadcast—it is not hitting the newspapers or the news media—and so it is in effect going on underground in terms of publicity. But it is very much being felt by individuals. So it is not an external change which you will have to accommodate, it is an internal change which is already occurring which is manifesting itself as, is always the way, externally.

Now, the essential element of this change is Love. Don't be surprised that that which is going to generate the process of waking up to Reality is something as old as the hills. Don't be surprised that it isn't something shocking or radically new. But also because you have heard of love before, don't assume that it is something you have under your belt. Because the capacity to love involves far more than you have yet experienced. It will be your increasing capacity to love unconditionally that is going to bring about the transformations that are inherent in waking up.

Unconditional love is not really hard. But because of the way that you have been conditioned, it seems to you to be very difficult because you have to set aside so much firm belief in what is right and what is wrong.

It is very important, as I indicated to Paul, to keep your feet on the ground and your head not too far away. This means, that when radical idealism is recognized and then internalized it must come out as a practical regenerative aspect of the life you are living with your feet on the ground. And so, if radical idealism does not become translated into realism it is useless and constitutes an ongoing part of your ignorance of your divinity, it keeps you bound and does not constitute the freedom that you associate with enlightenment.

Now this is an extremely important point to understand so that you do not become ungrounded in your process of Awakening. Your capacity to love is your capacity to recognize what is divinely Real in each and everything you are confronted with. This means you are called upon to look at that which is unlovely, unlovable and get past what is unlovable about it so that you can connect with that which is essentially and divinely Real underneath it. This is why you are advised to have, or BE unconditional love.

Unconditional doesn't mean saying, "Okay, you can all do anything you want to do and I won't be distressed with it." Unconditional love means that you let down the conditions that you impose upon your perception that blocks you from perceiving that which is essentially divine in each and everything you see. It is you letting down your resistance to seeing the Truth right where the illusion seems to be going on. This is bringing radical idealism into practical realism. It's work! Not divinely speaking, but you will find that each of you wants to hold on to the belief structures that say, "I can't love the unlovable. I cannot love the ugly. I cannot love the unloving behavior. I cannot love a person who is expressing those attitudes. I cannot love a country that insists upon war as the main money making machine to keep the economy going," etc.

You are the one providing the conditioning that keeps your love from being unconditional. And by energizing that conditioning you are blocking yourself from recognizing in your heart that which is essentially divine and is underlying these manifestations of ego beliefs and mindsets. You are not going to be able to get past the manifestations of ego beliefs if you let those ego beliefs justify your withdrawal from your willingness to recognize the essential underlying divinity that has to be there in order for an ego sense to seem to be operating.

There is nothing wishy-washy about love, especially when you have the conditioning that you are operating under, because it takes insistence upon cutting through your unwillingness to hang in there in the presence of opposition and not join the opposition in their point of view that says, "I must behave in the way I'm behaving, because things are the way I see them, and I am an ego, and I am in a world full of egos, and therefore it is essential for me to be defensive."

Your idealism, your recognition that there has to be something essentially Real, with a capital "R", right there where this one seems to be coming at you out of an ego place, is what can serve as the basis for your not joining with that ego and strengthening it. And rather being the presence of that which is nondefensive, unconditional, and which allows that one who's coming from an ego place to say, "Maybe I don't have to look at things the way I'm looking at them. Maybe with this individual I can dare to be defenseless."

Idealism only becomes realism right where you are. So don't assume that because mankind is entering into a major shift of consciousness, or that there are major earth changes, or that because there is going to be an economic upset, etc., that all of a sudden all of the rules have gone out the window and intelligence is not required. It is when things become less stable that your insistence upon bringing your radical idealism into practical realism has the best chance of succeeding. And so, do not be frightened because changes are coming. But see that the defense against change is less strong, and therefore your insistence upon radical idealism is more assured of success than it can be when these structures are strong and secure and heavily guarded.

Your Awakening is going to relate to where you are. Right here! Even though in the process your experience of it will be transformed beyond anything you can currently imagine from within the egos frame of reference. And love is the essential element to that transformation.

QUESTION: Raj, for quite some time I've been having periods of, I guess it would be best termed as anticipation. At times when I'm having a quiet time, or reading and becoming introspective, it's a feeling that causes me to just kind of relax and close my eyes and feel like there is something on the brink of happening. It's like having something on the tip of your tongue, but not being able to say it. And that's the feeling I get. And I'm curious as to just what is going on.

ANSWER: In Biblical terms, it has been spoken of as the "quickening of the Spirit" in a man. There is a quickening of the Spirit in the world. Therefore, it is a quickening of the Spirit in the majority of individuals on your planet. When you are allowing yourself to settle out of the surface racket of the ego level of consciousness, you move into a quieter place where you are able to be sensitive to this quickening of the Spirit—this quickening of awareness.

Can I say that Being, with a capital "B", is a matter of constantly sitting on the verge of the entry of the unknown, because the infinite Life Principle never draws upon the past, because memory is a three-dimensional time space experience. Therefore, the Life Principle is forever being new, out of its infinite creative capacity.

I encourage you not to jump to the conclusion, when you are feeling this sense of impending something, that you are supposed to figure out what it is, or make it come faster. You are feeling the enlivening dynamic of Life itself. You are feeling something essential to your Being, and it is something for you to abide with. It is something for you simply to feel.

Everybody wants to feel alive. And most of the time people get their feeling of aliveness from the challenge, the conflict that the ego introduces. And they feel like they're not alive if they're not in the presence of conflict to be overcome. But when you move out of the ego level and you move into the peace of your Being, you find that the peace is inseparable from a joy, an enlivening, as you put it, the experience of the dynamic of life as your conscious experience of existing.

Again the ego always distracts you from simply being aware, by suggesting that you are to do something with what you are aware, instead of simply feel it. If you are simply feeling it, there are things that will happen. It will be almost impossible for you to get up in the morning and be depressed about the coming day, because you will be curious to see what divine events are manifesting themselves, what clarifications are going to be occurring, what opportunities to see the infinite harmony of Being evidenced, a-ha translated into practical realism, in your day.

This is an important point for everyone. Because as you wake up out of an ego frame of reference, the ego frame of reference will try to impose its concepts, its beliefs upon the expanded awareness that has become available to you. And so, because the ego is a doer, an accomplisher, it will suggest that you are to do something with your enlightenment—something besides just experience it. That automatically will pull you out of the experience.

And as a little tiny ego consciousness, you will try to duplicate somehow in the world the vision, the perspective that you experienced as though the experience were not a manifestation of what is already Real about the universe, what is already Real about you, which if you would abide with and stay in, you would find would disclose to you just how omnipotent, just how omnipresent Reality Is—Being Is.

To stay with the feeling does not mean that you have to sit every waking hour in meditation, somehow separated from life, but in this marvelous cozy place, because the joy is there. The joy won't let you sit very long. But when you get up, and your getting up is coming from your joy, and your actions come from the joy, you will find your actions harmonizing and blessing everything. And you will find the order of Life becoming clearer to you in practical everyday terms. It begins to cause you to realize that to have a parking place in front of the place you are going is not just by chance, that there is a oneness, an actual cooperative integrated oneness between you and your world, between God and the World. The evidence of God in the world is harmony, healing, transformation, beauty—just for starters.

So I encourage you to feel the feeling. Assume that the appropriate response is not to jump to and do something with it, but pay attention to it. It is your experience of your absolute inseparable oneness with the Life Principle, the vitality, the invigoration, the joy of Life. It is a disclosure to you that you are to feel, and feel, and feel—eternally.

The more familiar you become with the feeling the more available you will find it being when you are not taking time to be still. The feeling will be present as you are driving on the freeway, or making love, or conducting business, or doing any of the activities that you do. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, recently I started doing a simple chakra meditation. And it's gotten to the point now where it's like there's somebody helping me along and it's turning into an aerobic exercise. I'd like a little understanding of what's happening, because I can feel the energy being impacted into my body. And I can feel like I want to start it right now. I'm feeling a lot of energy. I'd like an understanding of what's happening and what it's leading up to.

ANSWER: I would encourage you not to use the word impacted, it sounds like an accident happening, a coming up against resistance. I know that isn't what you mean, but I do encourage you to be careful about the words you use so that you find words that express what you mean clearly and without any sense of conflict.

Now I suggested earlier that the process of Awakening is practical. But I want you to understand that as any of you in any way opens up to new territories of your Being, it is important not to try to reduce the experience to an understanding through an intellectual process. Almost invariably any of you who wants to reduce Awakening to an understanding, is coming still from an ego place. And the ego place wants the understanding so that it can duplicate the reality that is already going on, and thus maintain its sense of separation and the fear that constitutes the conflict that keeps you asleep.

Very simply, I would tell you what I told the gentleman in the last answer, feel what you are experiencing, abide with it, let the emotions emerge. Don't waste your time being self-conscious, even though nobody is watching you. Stay with the feeling and pay attention to it. By becoming aware of it on ITS terms, you will come to understand it. It will not be an intellectual understanding, and you may never be able to put it into words to explain to someone else except in the most vague way. And it will remain for them to have the experience and recognize what you have said and then say, "I understand what you meant," even though they can't explain it any better than you.

In the process of Awakening, each of you must be willing to become like an infant in a crib, a week old, two weeks old, three weeks old, surrounded by objects and sensory experiences that make no sense. But it just abides with the experiences, and before long the experiences begin to have meaning.

But you see, you tend to overlook the fact that the meaning of a ball, or the meaning of the softness of the blanket doesn't connect in any way with the meaning you give to it, with your understanding of soft polyester fibers, and that a ball rolls because there is very little resistance when it is hit because of its circular surface, etc.

There is no intellectual understanding of it that the child has. But it doesn't mean that the child cannot function in terms of those objects and experience meaning. It doesn't understand geometry of shapes. It doesn't understand physics of motion. And yet it can delightfully play with the ball. It can pull that blanket up close and smile. In delight! At what? It doesn't understand intellectually any of it.

Likewise, let yourself abide with what unfolds. Experience it! Trust! And the meaning will begin to unfold, but at a level of knowing that doesn't necessarily have words with it. And that knowing will have relevance to other aspects of your life that cause the gift of that knowing to multiply into greater understanding and feeling of the oneness of everything and the essential divinity of it.

I have said it before, "you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven." That is what the ego wants to do. You will feel your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. You will feel your way into enlightenment. And if that is going to happen, you have to give yourself the time to feel. You have to be quiet and pay attention long enough to allow the feeling to be experienced.

The movements that you are speaking of are not irrelevant and they are not meaningless, but I wouldn't presume to try to tell you intellectually what the meanings are. You know that you are not possessed in the process, and therefore you can dare to continue to pay attention and be in that place where it happens.

The ego wants to be in control, and so it is likely to say, "It is not intelligent for you to continue a step further until you know what you are going to run into." And yet, I would like to ask you, how revelation can be revelation if you can understand it ahead of time?

Now I am making a point here: Intelligence doesn't go out of the window in the process of waking up. And you can dare to assume that an acknowledgment that revelation can't be revelation if you know what it's going to be ahead of time, you can know that that awareness is part of the practicality of bringing radical idealism into practical realism.

There is much that you already know that is still going to be of value for you. And common sense is one of those things. Common sense does not mean sense you have in common with everybody else, and by which you are bound along with everyone else. Common sense is the SIMPLE sense of what is right, of what is true, a sense that is with you always. That ability to recognize what is true, is a sense you have in common with everyone else. But it is simple. And much of your common sense is relevant in the process of your Awakening.

So dare to pay attention. Dare to feel into your greater capacity to be aware. And realize that the ego's attempts to understand it are always so that it can take over and do it itself. And if it succeeds, then you have been further stuck in your ignorance, because you'll be busy duplicating and you will not be present with the Real experience—the experience that tells you there is no need for duplication. There is no need to be in control in the way the ego wants to be in control. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm wondering about how I can feel unconditional love for some people and not for others?

ANSWER: First of all I want you to be willing to assume that those for whom you do have unconditional love, is not for you the total experience of what unconditional love is. I do not say that to disappoint you, but to encourage you to be aware that there is even more available in terms of the experience of the meaning of unconditional love. I say it so that you can have a sense of open endedness at this point, that there is indeed an even fuller experience of what unconditional love is.

To answer your question: It is very understandable why you cannot feel unconditional love for some people. It is because you are conditioned not to be able to love them. Actually, it is because you have not arrived at a point where you can conceive of HOW that individual could possibly have arrived at the point of view that justifies for him or her the behavior which you find objectionable. To be honest with you, it is self-righteousness on your part.

The fact that you find it difficult, if not impossible, to love someone unconditionally implies a state of ignorance on your part, which could conceivably be construed by me as cause for not being able to love you, because you are coming from a level of ignorance that I am not suffering from.

But in your heart of hearts no matter what you have done, no matter what you currently believe, you do feel that you are worthy of love, you do feel that you are worthy of my attention to you. It is understandable to you that I might actually be able to love you right where you are, right at this instant, with just exactly the belief structures and ignorance's and biases that you obviously still have since you have not ascended. I encourage you to think about that.

If you are worthy of loving consideration and patience and the willingness to share with you the truth—even if it has to be shared five thousand times before it registers with you—is not someone whom to you is unlovable worthy of the same? And is not that what is called for, the willingness to love the unlovable? I would ask you how much love there is present when you are loving what is obviously lovable? I would suggest that perhaps that's not love, but enjoyment. Love where love is not needed is not transformational. And as one grows in his capacity to be unconditional in his love, the natural inclination is to love where it is needed.

How much do you want to be identified with the Christ—the Christ Consciousness? Do not ever think that you can become clear—the clear Presence of the Christ Consciousness—in private. That's what the ego is trying to do. It is trying to be something alone. The need, the demand, is to be the Christ where the Christ seems to be covered up, because that is what inspires the Christ that is buried under all of these ego concepts and belief structures to stand up and say, “Here I Am”—and wake up.

And so, it is understandable that you find it impossible to be unconditionally loving. But it does not relieve you of the necessity to do it anyway. It puts you right up against your belief structures. It puts you right up against your unwillingness. But this allows you to see that you actually do have parts of you that are unwilling to extend love. It illustrates to you at a level of experience that at this point you are insisting upon not lowering your conditions so that you will not be blinded by the divine Reality that confronts you.

Do you see how tricky the ego is? It presents the problem as, “I have difficulty being unconditionally loving with some people.” Some people being the focus, the issue. But what is actually happening, is you are acting out an unwillingness on your part to experience Reality. You are acting out an insistence on your part upon denying the experience of Reality. Now are you willing to pay the cost of denying yourself the experience of perceiving Reality right where the unlovable seems to be going on, right where Reality doesn’t seem to be going on? You must be alert! Are you willing to pay the cost of being unwilling to perceive Reality, and thus block your Awakening?

All of the arguments refer to the unlovable thing, “But they did this. But they do that. But they don’t do this.” And so, that justifies you depriving yourself of experiencing Reality right in that spot? There is no intelligence in that! There is nothing reasonable in that! But as long as they remain the focal point, and as long as their behavior and attitudes remain the focal point, you will overlook what you are doing to your capacity to wake up. It’s not worth it! And as you begin to look at it in this light, you will begin to see that there is nothing that can go on out there that can justify you denying yourself the experience of being Awake, and of seeing what is divinely True right out there where egos seem to be presenting themselves.

I’ve said it before, don’t go out there and try to save the world. Save yourself. Do what you need to do in order not to be blind yourself. Because I will tell you, and common sense will tell you, until you can see Truly you can’t see what needs to be done to save the world. And when you can see what needs to be done, you will discover it happening. And you will see that you will end up facilitating the happening, but not causing it to happen. Okay, that’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I wonder if you might tell me, if the Shroud of Turin is really the Shroud of Jesus Christ? And if you could tell me or all of us exactly how it was created for want of a better way to phrase that?

ANSWER: There is nothing mysterious about it. Yes it is the Shroud. It is a valid artifact. The image was, shall I say, impacted into the fibers of the Shroud as I allowed my body to translate into the Body of Light, and which I then “downgraded” before I left the tomb.

One word of admonishment: do not try to find me in the past. I am here Now! I am living Now! I am me Now! And I am not limited by the conditions and the mindsets and the circumstances of the past. Intelligence is always present and in harmony with whatever is going on in the Now. If you wish to speak with me privately, shall I say, not through Paul, I am available just as your guide is. But understand that I am not speaking through some dark tunnel that finds its way 2,000 years into the past. I am the Living Christ, and I am relevant to and pertinent to today—to now—and whatever it takes to facilitate the Awakening of every single one of you when you desire to wake up.

The other thing is: do not try to find me in my personality of 2,000 years ago. If you succeeded in finding me in my personality, your ego would absolutely jump for joy, because then you could validate your personality, and continue to override and overlook your Divine Individuality as my brother, my sister, my equal, the Christ Consciousness. It is not important for you to find my Divinity, except if it serves to justify your finding yours. And I want you to let that ring in your ears.

I am not scolding you. But I am providing you with the means of not getting hooked into personalities, or the past. That’s ego territory. Okay, that’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: For 35 of the years prior to 1985 I had no serious physical accidents. Within the last 20 months I’ve had three accidents, two of which statistically should have been fatal. I’m suspicious of coincidences, and my feeling is that there is something inside of me trying to tell me something that I’m not picking up on.

ANSWER: The message is: there is no escape! And it is important for you to understand that the message is not that you are trying to escape, or that there is something self-destructive in you that could be gathered from the events.

There is too often the tendency to use events as a means of trying to find out what is wrong with you. Again, this is the way the ego keeps you hooked. The message here for you is that you cannot get outside of your divinity. You cannot get outside your life. That you are not in charge, even though you would not have thought to approach this as a conscious act of choice to leave. The experience is a negative expansion—a negative experience providing you with an absolute truth. That truth being, that even at the ego level you cannot control your destiny, and that your capital “B” Being, that which you Divinely are is in charge, is governing.

You are absolutely right that there is no coincidence to it. It was a very specific point of learning. Why? Because it was time to learn that Divine fact—that you at an ego level do not govern your destiny and that your Being does, and does absolutely.

At this point in everyone's development, in the process of waking up out of the ego sense, the divinity of your Being is like the radical idealism I spoke of in the beginning. It seems disembodied. It seems spiritually vague, but substantial in some way. It seems not to relate to where you are.

But what you experienced in these accidents was a matter of divine idealism being translated into practical realism so that right here and right now you have the opportunity to recognize the truth about you with greater experiential perspective. This is going to allow you to dare to lean into what you divinely are more significantly, because it is obvious to you how absolute it is in terms of its governing your experience.

In other words, you now have the opportunity to invite, desire, radical idealism into your experience as practical realism at a new level of experience.

No matter how far any of you think you are actually able to get outside of God, outside of Reality, no matter how successful it might appear that the denial of God and the denial of Reality and the denial of your divinity has been, you haven't been able to get one fraction of an inch out of what you divinely Are. No one has succeeded in creating an alternate reality. And so, each one of you is secure in your divinity, or shall I say secured in your divinity permanently.

Is it any wonder then that when you attempt to act at odds with your divinity, that you feel the yank of that security. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi Raj, I just wanted you to know I heard all of your answers and they pertain to my question absolutely. And I still need to ask this. It pertains to me and it pertains to my boyfriend, who's name is Dennis. And we've been having a rough time on the home front because of this crisis—it's actually on a number of different levels.

We started buying a house six months ago and it hasn't closed yet. And it's kind of been endless difficulties associated with a number of different things. We've lost thousands of dollars on it, it hasn't closed, the woman who owns the house went into alcohol treatment. I think she got real crazy and doesn't want to sell us the house anymore. We've got many thousands of dollars into it.

I know that you don't need to have me tell the story. Anyway Dennis is infuriated, he is very angry, he's very negative, he's become suspicious of everyone in the world, including me. It's just been kind of traumatic for about the last six months, in that area.

And what I'm wanting to know is, do I need to get involved with this transaction at all, or do I need to step away from it? I've tried everything that I know of to try and look at things differently, and have him look at things differently. And he thinks that I'm crazy, because the whole thing is screwed up. And I want to know, do I need to do anything? I'm just really confused as to why this is happening. I'm kind of waiting for, as you would say, a revelation on the whole mess.

ANSWER: If he has set the reins down, then somebody better pick them up. And I would suggest that it be you. Yes, do step in. It is important for you to know that it is appropriate for this house to be secured by you—both of you. And that you must dare to be willing to follow through to the conclusion of the transaction.

Again, here is an example of bringing radical idealism, the unformed, or the impossible, or the not yet manifested into manifestation, practical realism. One does this by staying with the actual focus, the actual appropriate steps, and not succumbing to the various arguments that present themselves—that would tell you to back off, to let it go, to become inappropriate.

Dennis is allowing the circumstances to cause him to relinquish his trust in simple law and order. This is his choice, and he can choose differently. It is my suggestion that he change his approach, and that he not let go of his own integrity, his own willingness to invest trust in fundamental law and orderliness.

He is allowing himself to go a little crazy, because somebody else went a little crazy. But there is no requirement for it. And indeed he needs to stand up against it, and not give up his experience of the integrity of his life and the events in it.

Again, there is nothing that can happen out there that can justify letting go of ones experience of his or her integrity. Once you give up your integrity, everything is lost until you pick it up again. If everybody else lets go of theirs, and you don't let go of yours, you lose nothing—ever.

Now this purchase is not a lost cause. I encourage you to be willing to take legal steps if they are required. And I encourage you to follow through until the purchase has been finalized. And I encourage you both to do it together. And not assume that your own judgment is untrustworthy simply because other people have behaved in an untrustworthy way. You see, he is calling his trustworthiness into question, else he wouldn't be giving up his integrity to be as crazy as this woman is being.

I encourage him to pick his trust in himself back up. And I encourage him to carry it with him, as the two of you take steps to secure this house. Do not let the sense of lose override or bias your willingness to secure what is appropriately yours. And you will find that in the end no lose of anything significant will have occurred. Why? Because you have been willing to take radical idealism and pull it into practical realism. That process is a whole process. It affects every aspect of whatever it is that is unfolding Identifiably, as identifiably divine and therefore of benefit to everyone concerned. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello Raj, what would help a mentally disabled child to wake up?

ANSWER: First of all I encourage anyone who is working with this child to recognize that this child is in full possession of her faculties, and is consciously but ignorantly using her faculties in this way, and is thus presenting this facade.

Here is an example of seeing without your conditioning. Your conditioning will explain to you exactly why there seems to be this condition, and therefore causing it to be unchangable or irrevocable. This child needs to realize that she's been caught in the act. And this will happen when those around her start treating her as though she knows exactly what she's doing. Mind you this does not mean you have the right to try to get her to stop. She is enjoying pulling the wool over everyone's eyes. If you try to get her to change, she will resist. But if she recognizes that you know that she is in full possession of her faculties, and that you are not fooled, it will not be as interesting to maintain the game.

Now I do want to make something clear here. This child is no different from anyone else who seems to be exhibiting mental illness. I am not saying that this child is in full charge of herself and is handling herself in this way because there is a benefit, and therefore she's not really mentally ill, but other people are mentally ill.

But you see, in your recognition that she is exercising her authority in her life the way she is choosing to, because there is a pay off, and if you understand that the pay off for her is that she is managing to fool everybody and it's a big joke, then you will not feel sorry for this poor limited thing.

Your acknowledgment that she is in full charge is a matter of accepting a viewpoint of radical idealism simply because it isn't the obvious. And holding to that with the expectation of seeing it manifested or translated into practical realism, is what will heal. But mind, you this will not occur through coercion. It will result from recognition, and then continuing not to be fooled until she is willing to change and stop playing the game.

You see, when you are willing to let down the conditioning that doesn't allow you to be unconditional in your recognition of what is divinely there, you block yourself and you block the transformation—you block the process of waking up.

Radical idealism is the Truth about all things. It only seems to be ideal because you are looking from a limited point of view. What I have been referring to as radical idealism is really a reference to Reality, as opposed to your limited awareness, at the moment, of Reality, which causes it to appear quite differently to you than it really is.

Your willingness to recognize the divinity of each and everything that confronts you seems crazy to the ego—you would be called an idealist. But when you do not yield to the arguments against it, and you realize that the idealism is Reality waiting for you to perceive it, you will open up to it, you will see it ideally, you will feel it, and you will then find it being translated into practical realism.

Which means, watching Reality emerge right in front of you where the illusion seemed to be going on. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a great curiosity about Souls. At the beginning of recorded history there were perhaps as many as 5,000,000 souls on this earth. And by the year 2000 there will probably be about 50,000,000,000. And my curiosity goes from where do all these Souls come from and go to. And if we have some of the destruction that has been talking about, then those Souls will be put aside to try to get back into learning again.

ANSWER: That is an interesting statement. Until one wakes up, one never gets out of learning. One gets no vacation from it, let us say, simply because what one divinely is always present and insisting its way into one's private partial sense of self. One is constantly running into his infinitude and stubbing his toe, because he's denying its existence. And so, one is constantly at the threshold of discovering the more of himself that has always been present.

I'm going to give you an example here which cannot be used absolutely to describe Reality: The sun is shining, there are rays of light coming out from it—identifiable rays of light. And yet there really are no gaps in that radiation, there are not spaces between the rays, so to speak. The sun is the equivalent of the infinite Life Principle or God, the infinite Mind, the infinite Intelligence, which expresses Itself infinitely—meaning without any finity to it, without any limit to it.

You speak of Souls because you see yourselves like individual rays of light, which somehow are separated from each other. But there is just One Infinite Soul, God, Self expressing in a way that is not finite, but infinite.

There are not multiple Souls. Each one of you is the Father in expression. The Father, Self-expressed, is what constitutes you. God is indivisible, therefore you are not divided from God. And you are not divided from any other Individuality. And yet, just as there are identifiable rays of light, you are individually identifiable. This is difficult for the three-dimensional mind to grasp the full meaning of.

You do not have a Soul of your own. You are Soul being Soul. And God is the Source, the Substance, the Wholeness of that Soul. Why do all of the Masters speak of joining with the Godhead, when they are referring to going within yourself? Because that is where you find God being All That Is. And that is where you find your greater capacity to be aware as the Mind of God experiencing Himself infinitely, without any sense of division between that which is perceiving and that which is perceived.

God has been infinite forever. And that is a statement that only seems to make sense from within the three-dimensional frame of reference. Therefore, His infinite Self-expression has been complete and yet not limited, forever. Souls have not come and gone. The infinitude of the Father has not fluctuated in any way, at any time.

And again, I will state that it is absolutely impossible for any “Soul” to be left behind in the process of Awakening or enlightenment, because that would mean that God would become less than infinite. And although there may be those who resist waking up, it will become increasingly difficult to resist, because there will be fewer and fewer personalities around to support the sense of personality that the one resisting is holding on to because the others will have been willing to make a shift to the clear experience of their individuality as the very presence of the Father in expression. And it will become very difficult to continue to dream in the bright radiance of illumination, of enlightenment. And everyone WILL wake up. At different levels of perception this shift will be experienced differently.

But I am approaching each one of you from the standpoint of the radical idealism, that I talked about from the beginning today, so that you do not become sidetracted with the various levels of perception, which will be false because not totally enlightened, as the coming into one’s own, as the presence of the Father perceiving His infinity flawlessly happens.

Afterwards one individual could say, “It was a hell of a trip.” And someone else will say, “Gee, it was like sliding down a greased slide.” How it was experienced will be irrelevant, because the event was waking up. And that is what I am pointing each one of you to as we talk here and in all of my conversations.

So keep your vision honed in on the radical idealism, with the conscious awareness that it means nothing if it is not translated into practical realism. And how does one translate? Or how does one facilitate the translation? One does not give up his perception of what is Real once he has discerned it. In other words, he does not allow the previous conditionings to come up again, once he has gotten past them. He sees the truth and stays with it. And he stays with it because it feels good. It feels integrated. It feels substantial. It feels immovable. It feels invulnerable. And you are unwilling to give up your experience of your invulnerability for any belief, any mindset.

“To thine own self be true. And it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man.” And if you are not being false, artificial, fake to any man, you are being and owning your Christhood. And your Christhood does nothing but illuminate the Christhood of everyone and everything you come in contact with. And the illumination brings the radical idealism into the experience of practical realism. And you call it transformation.

It may sound to you as though I have picked a topic to rub your nose in today. You brought the topic with you. You’re ready to see it. And so I am illuminating you. I am not some teacher who has said, “time for them to learn this.” You are the teacher saying, “here is what I’m learning.” And I am simply reflecting it back to you so that you can own it and feel it deeply. That’s the end of the answer.

PAUL: Okay, just a moment. I was sitting here being quiet, and as is my habit very often, I thanked Raj for everything that he's been sharing. And it reminded me that since he's come along I've been doing a lot of that—saying “thank you.” And for me, it's like before he came along if I had had to say “thank you” to too many people I would have felt like I was incompetent in some way. Like I'm having to lean to much, I'm not being self-sufficient. Obviously, if I'm having to say “thank you,” a lot is being done for me, and that is not to my credit.

But what I became aware of as I was sitting here was, that it's a really wonderful thing to be able to feel gratitude. Which isn't something we have much opportunity to do when we are being so darn self-sufficient. If we're being self-sufficient we don't put ourselves in a position of allowing ourselves to relate with our fellow man in a way that something can happen that we could say “thank you” for. And so we miss out on feeling gratitude.

In the church I grew up in we had a hymn. It said, “A grateful heart a garden is, where there is always room for every lovely God-like grace to come to perfect bloom.” I don't know why I'm sharing this, but I just became aware as I was sitting here that this is an experience I've had and it has meant something to be able to express gratitude. And that has been a change in my life.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj, you've been wonderful today as always. Would you please clarify the word defenseless for me. I know in reference to unconditional love we must be totally defenseless. On the other hand, you counseled the lady to seek an attorney to defend her. Now I'm confused about the semantics of the word.

ANSWER: You could interpret that as hiring an attorney to defend her. I would express it this way: that she is hiring an attorney to confirm the truth of the situation.

Defenselessness... Defenselessness means not introducing any argument against your experience of Truth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I ask for further clarification on that, with reference to fighting or opposing another individual?

ANSWER: Defenselessness does not mean that you will not disagree with someone else. Defenselessness does not mean that you will not stand as a brick wall for your arrogant child to run into and find that there is order and principle that he cannot defy successfully. Defenselessness means being open to being aware of how to be appropriate in any given situation.

How does one be appropriate? One allows himself to become sensitive to the divine event that is going on. And in becoming aware of the divine event that is going on, the discrepancies between what appears to be going on and the actual divine event become crystal clear. What happens then is that the actual dynamics that are blocking the resolution of the conflict between the divine event and the one that seems to be going on, become crystal clear, and thus you can address the actual dynamic.

Paul can attest to the fact that very often people call and address a question to me, describing the dilemma they're in, and I will apparently respond to something that this person has not said. I will redescribe the dilemma more correctly, and the person will say, "I've got it," because I was addressing the real issue rather than the issue that the ego had misdirected this person to.

You will find that egos will very seldom express what they really mean. And yet, if you are willing to become still, if you are willing to come from your best centered place, you will find yourself knowing what the actual issue is. And then you and the individual you're confronted with can deal with the actual issue, and that person will feel heard. That person will feel that you have understood them and will relax.

Being defenseless means, not defending yourself against your clarity so that you may truly know how to be appropriate in any given situation and becoming clearer, as I indicated earlier with children. That clarity may allow you to speak from the tips of your toes when you say, "absolutely not!" which may enrage the child, may anger him or her terribly. But when you speak from your toes, what you say is heard.

I indicated in the beginning that unconditional love does not mean letting everyone do whatever they please, without disagreement. But the key is to have your disagreement come from a perception of truth, and not be a reaction of your ego conditioning to their very active egos.

I have shared with Paul what would appropriately be a cartoon, which shows an overview of the border of the Kingdom of Heaven with roads coming to it from all different directions. And at the border there is a sign posted every few feet that says, "No egos past this point." That's an unyielding fact. You could say it is a statement of disagreement with any egos that approach that line and want to cross over it. It is a Truth that will never change. It is unyielding. It is not a judgment. It is a statement of the way things work. And everyone will have to yield to it as they move into their Christ Consciousness—the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven.

So you see, the need is to be able to discern the truth so that you can express the truth. And the truth will always support the transformation of illusion into the closer approximation of Reality. But you will not be able to discern truth until you lower your conditioned thinking. And conditioned thinking is the accurate and clear definition of defenses.

Defenselessness is letting go, releasing conditioned thinking, and desiring to experience your Knowing, with a capital "K". And when I refer to Knowing, with a capital "K", I am referring to the knowledge of truth that immediately becomes yours and which is always available to you.

Defenselessness is the absence of your resistance to perceiving the Truth—your perceiving or experiencing of Reality. And the place where Reality needs to be discerned is right where the unreality, or right where the illusion, right where the distortion seems to be going on. And that is always the most unlovely or unlovable place.

But again, you can't afford to get caught up in the unlovable place. The attention needs to be brought back to your willingness or unwillingness to lower the defense you have against perceiving the Reality that is in that place. If you are willing to listen within and not respond spontaneously to your emotional reactions, you will find that there are times to walk away from a situation peacefully, and there are other times to stand firm. And in each case, it will be because that is what will facilitate the emergence of clarity, of resolution.

I want you to observe that the ego right now, in your asking of the question, has drawn your attention out to someone else who's behaving in such a way to elicit a fight, defensiveness.

So again, I will state where your attention needs to be: within. Defenselessness is your willingness to not defend yourself against the perception of Reality right in that situation. Once you have seen what needs to be seen, you will then know whether to stand firm or back off, to speak softly or to speak firmly, whether to be sweet or whether to be abrupt and blunt and to the point, and how to be abrupt and blunt and to the point in a way that will trigger healing.

Defenselessness is not something relative to something out there. It is an inner thing. It has to do with your willingness to lower your resistance to perceiving the Reality in that spot, and as a result, knowing how to behave appropriately—appropriately, meaning in the way that uncovers Reality rather than leaving it hidden. Defenselessness is an inside job that allows you to be appropriate externally for the purpose of healing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm going to have major surgery in two weeks. And I was wondering if there is a reason for this happening, besides the physical one?

ANSWER: No. That does not mean that there will not be learning, growth. But there is no profit in your looking for some flaw in you which has manifested in this way. It will be your opportunity to recognize the Father in the experience, in the setting, in the care, in the skill expressed by those caring for you.

It is your opportunity to be able to feel the presence of God right where you are, loving you just as you are, nourishing you as you need nourishment so that you might be able to look at this hospitalization as a profound time of experiencing being loved unconditionally, and increasing your ability to love yourself that way. It is inspiring to be loved unconditionally—inspiring, uplifting.

It is the opportunity to experience divinity in the place where you might least expect to find it, which will help you not to be afraid of other places in your world where you might feel that you are stepping outside of God's Presence, where you are really more vulnerable. It will inspire you to believe that right where there is cause for fear, there is the divine Reality present manifesting Itself in language of your present perception so that It has meaning right where you are, and discloses to you that you haven't stepped into a situation where you have distanced yourself from that love and care and nourishment, and that therefore any place you might go to holds a treat for you, a divine experience for you.

Very often you avoid radical idealism, because you think it will cause you to be vulnerable and be hurt, or it will bring responsibilities on you that you couldn't possibly be ready for. And this is one of the reasons that there is reluctance to embrace it in a way that will actually promote practical realism that is transformed.

Once you have the opportunity of being in a place where perhaps you can think God has abandoned you, and you find God there, it encourages you to find God in the other potentially unlovely or unpleasant places. And more of your world suddenly becomes available to you to explore and discover in. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I find there are so many paths and so many things that interest me, and they all seem to fit like all of those books on the table. I'd like to be able to read them all and take it all in. And I don't know how to get focused or where I should focus. How do I know... I know one answer is to follow my heart, but my heart is going in all these directions. And I don't know how to get focused and stay in one direction.

And this seems like another question, but it comes tied to it. Lately I've found myself drawn, through pictures and books, to a northern part of Arizona and southern Utah. And then it was mentioned you're doing a workshop in Sedona, and I find myself drawn to that area. And what does that mean?

ANSWER: The answer to your question is the same as the answer to the question, "How do you swallow an elephant?" And the answer is "one bite at a time." Now do you like tail, or tusk, or ear? It's irrelevant. Pick up the part you want to take a bite out of. Pick up the book that is at hand and read it. But realize that there is no demand for you to swallow it all whole.

Waking up is not a task. It is not something that you should allow some sort of patterned structure to develop around. The ego would busy you with things to do in certain orders. Keep it simple. Stand at the book table and close your eyes, and put your hand out and buy the book that's underneath it. There's nothing haphazard about that, there truly isn't. Because you cannot get outside of the absolute order of your Being in its process of fulfilling itself/you. And I encourage you to trust that inevitable natural order that is an inherent part of your Being, no matter how covered up you might be by a limited ego sense.

If you feel like going to Sedona, go to Sedona as soon as it is convenient. If you don't feel like going, don't go. But understand that basically what you will be inclined to do, what will emerge as a thing that you have energy for, is something which will represent a threshold of learning. And there will be no wasted motion to it. Don't make it complicated. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, in my last conversation with you, I verified some information about a job I was going to get. And you said, I would be offered this particular job and how much money I would be offered as a wage. I forgot to ask when I would start work.

I've been working with my own guide and the first date I got from my guide was May the 5th. Well that's not going to happen. And recently I got at the end of the summer. And more recently I've begun to get the sense that this particular job isn't going to happen at all. And the reason I think I've gotten that sense is that as I open myself up to the fact that life can be easy and effortless, and my prosperity can come easily and effortlessly, that I don't have to work full time and go to school. I don't have to work full time at all, but I can work at the jobs I really want to do and right now that's teaching reading. So my question is, am I going to be working at this particular job, if so when, and if not where is my income coming from?

ANSWER: This is a wonderful example of the fact that there is nothing static about your Being. And as a result of revelation, and the incorporating of what unfolds as a result of revelation, causes the divine idealism to be translated into practical realism in new language. This is one of the reasons that if you are inquiring about a future event that you continue to check from time to time prior to the predicted event, because you grow, and that which then identifies your fulfillment changes. It does not mean that the initial "prediction" was invalid, but let us say, it has been up-graded by your unfoldment.

You are correct. Your guidance is being understood clearly by you, that this opportunity is not likely to become translated into practical realism. Your work teaching reading will grow, and it will end up supporting you. But the reason is because you are willing to dare to do what you love. And you are willing to listen within to know what is appropriate for you.

This avenue of expressing what you love is an appropriate one for you. And it is also appropriate for you to follow through with it without inflicting upon it, or superimposing upon it—like a code of ethics—a code of behavior of things you ought to do, ways you should behave, ways you should express self-responsibility. You will find that as a result of flowing with what your intuition is unfolding to you, you will behave in a way that will be recognizably responsible as well as fulfilling, both within, as well as in terms of the green stuff that pays your rent. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: By this code of ethics and things I ought to do, do you mean that the fact that I think that I should be going out and applying for a job here and a job there, even though those aren't the jobs I want to do because people say you're supposed to be doing this, and this, and this, to bring in the money. Is that what you mean?

ANSWER: Exactly! I encourage you to trust what is coming as a result of genuine non-manipulative listening. You will get the verification you need for the value of having done it that way. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to know how to effectively raise young children without putting the conditioning into them. I have a three year old and an infant. When I don't feel I have yet awakened myself and dealing with my own conditioning. But how to not instill those conditionings into my children so that they can grow up more awake.

ANSWER: First of all, there is no accident to the fact that these particular children are yours, with your particular present mindsets and beliefs and enlightenments and awareness' of truths. Please everyone, learn that you cannot do more than you can do. You are not required to do more than you can do. But you always stand at the threshold of extending the capacity of what you can do. But until the extension has occurred, be pleased with where you are. Value what you do believe to be true and share it. What will be communicated even more than the information is the fact that you dared to trust yourself.

Specifically, I encourage you to love those children. Be aware that they are far from brand new. They are not empty slates upon which you are to write. They have come in with an infinite experience behind them, although they may spend time becoming accustomed to where they are, as I mentioned earlier. And although they may seem to be clumsy and not have much facility at effective communication, understand that nevertheless it is no different from you walking into or finding yourself abruptly in a Martian household, where you suddenly are provided with the opportunity to make sense out of senselessness. And yet you are far from stupid, and you are far from lacking life experience.

And then express your highest concept of love and principle and truth. And as your highest awareness of love and principle and truth grows, don't be proud, expand with them your new awareness'. But it is important at this point for you to assume that the fact that you have children to care for means that you are ready to care for them, that you do have what these children need, or those would not have been the children that came in to your experience. And that there is a marvelous matching that has occurred, and you are absolutely right for those children and they are absolutely right for you, because you are all teachers to each other.

You will push and stretch each others limits. And you will grow. And you will all be strengthened. But you must be willing to take a firm stand in your own mind that you know what needs to be known at this moment to provide the best care for these children.

And no matter how much you are capable of growing, do not indulge in the idea that, because you can grow you obviously must be in a much lesser place than you will come to, and therefore where you are must be worthy of some level of criticism and self-depreciation.

The child for whom your level of enlightenment would constitute an endarkenment will not come into your experience. Please understand that there is infinite order, even in your ignorance you have not gotten out of infinite order. And you and your family are embraced in that order, and that order is being manifest as the family that you are.

And even the ego structures that are prevalent—that need to be released—are particular ego structures that contributed to the discovery of their uselessness, because you cannot stop being what you divinely are. You cannot get outside of what you divinely are. And God cannot stop Being what God is, which is ALL. And so, even the apparent flaws in the ego concepts are utilized against each other and on your behalf so that you might as gracefully as possible Wake Up, and your children might as gracefully as possible Wake Up.

I want you to consider the last part of my answer to your question further. But the main thought I want to leave you with is: dare to appreciate yourself at this instant. Dare to appreciate and believe the fact that you right now, no matter how much further growth you can do, have what those children need. So give it to them! Share it with them!

ANSWER: I would like to thank everyone who came today. It's been a wonderful group. The energy of the group, every group has its own feel, from my standpoint. And it has been so smooth today. It's been a beautiful group. Whenever it does come time to stop, I have never been in a group where everybody has run out of questions or desire to ask them. So we simply have to stop and hope that there will be another group. So, I again thank everyone for being here. It's been wonderful.

Gathering In Ashland, WA –1989

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: That lead exactly into the question that I wanted to ask. How does one attempt to reach from the third to the fourth-dimension? Is there a quiescence, a technique, a perception, a study so that one actually does come from “out of Mind” all of the time?

ANSWER: Quiescence is the essence of the means of making that transition. Some of you will be relieved to know that a study is not involved. And those of you who thrive on study will not be happy with the ease that is actually inherent in Awakening.

Awakening the movement from the third-dimensional to the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being is experiential and is something that happens spontaneously when there is an absence of intellectual processes, when there is an absence of the energizing of one’s concepts, one’s beliefs, one’s pet theories, one’s righteous religion.

And I will tell you something: In your humble, natural, effortless state each and everyone of you is essentially religious. And I do not mean Christian, or Jew, or Mohammedan, or any religion, I mean that in your fundamental effortless essence you are the presence of the Father, and how much more religious can you get than that.

But how can you get from an ego oriented three-dimensional frame of reference to the God I Self fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being? You get there by letting down, you get there by letting go, you get there by releasing all of your preconceptions and becoming still, still enough so that in the Bibles terms you can hear “the still small voice of God.”

It is not really that God’s voice is small, it is just that it is not arrogant. It is immeasurable and infinitely powerful, but it is not powerful over anything, it is the power that is the substance OF everything. And so it does not have to assert itself. It is All. And so it doesn’t have to yell at you to get your attention so that you can find out that it is All, because it is All. And so you will not find your divinity enforced. And some of you say, “Why not? It would prove to me that there was a God. And that would help me wake up.” I beg to differ with you. The ego would simply argue louder and more arrogantly and say, “Prove it!”

Indeed, each and every one of you have to arrive at a point where you are more interested in becoming quiet enough to hear this immeasurable, infinite presence of power that is the all constituting presence of your individualities.

I will tell you this: The ego must be consciously set aside. It will not be magically removed from you by virtue of a very righteous prayer. You must arrive at a point where you are so clearly aware that you are not experiencing fulfillment by the means you have been trying to achieve it that you will dare to become still, dare to choose to extend your interests beyond your educated thinking, to extend your willingness to let life register with you beyond what you have been willing to accept.

And how do you do this? You do it by giving up! You do it by letting yourself go into the void, into the quiet center of you, not the void out there, but the still, small, quiet presence of God in you that is universal and not finite at all. But you say, “I do take time to become still, and nothings happening. I have been religiously taking time each day—sometimes twice a day, sometimes three times a day—that’s how intent I am upon waking up.”

I will tell you: the time you are taking to become still is indeed breaking down the inner inclination to be in charge of everything. It is breaking down the readiness you have to rebut whatever might happen before it happens. It is breaking down the inclination to be resistant. The quiet time that seems not to be connecting you yet with your guide, or with your experience of your divinity, or the shift into the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being is working.

You have no idea how many layers, upon layers, upon layers of resistance and self-protection you have built up. And you have no idea how much letting go there is to be done. You also have no idea how much letting go occurs.

Now that might sound as though you have a formidable task ahead of you, that you may achieve and you may not achieve, and maybe it’s worth taking this time to be quiet and maybe it’s not. There are two things I want you to know: You don’t have the perspective to know how much ground you are covering in your Awakening process by being willing to be still and not be in charge.

And secondly: Your divine actuality, the divine actuality of you—which I have referred to in the past as the Totality of you, as opposed to the little, tiny territory of that Totality that you call you—you in your Totality are intent upon reestablishing the conscious experience of All of your Self in your Totality. And so what you are divinely is constantly bombarding this little territory of your Being that you are claiming is yours, and breaking down the ego structures causing penetration to occur.

And so this process of letting go is not just the puny little you that you call yourself attempting to wake up, but you when you are becoming allowing, when you are becoming still, when you are engaged to the very best of your ability in yielding, are bringing yourself in such alignment with what you are in your Totality that the ego structures that encase this little tiny sense of you are weakening, and penetration is occurring.

And so because you have no way to gauge how fast you are moving, or whether what you are doing is succeeding because you do not have that perspective, and because it is inevitable for you to wake up, because it is inevitable for you to experience the integrity of the Totality of who and what you divinely are, it is absolutely worth every moment you take to be willing, to be yielding, to be still, to shift from the active, controlling, manipulating ego level to that inner sanctuary of your Being, where the attitude is, “Thy Will be done.”

Now, what stands in the way? What active blocking do you bring into play that does inhibit your Awakening? It is indeed, the reluctance to say, “Thy Will be done.”

You in the Western World are educated to be pioneers, assertive, explorers, learning how to get better and better understanding, and thereby control of your environment and your world. It is insulting to this sense of self that has developed to say, “Thy Will be done. I will yield to you.” It even seems irresponsible, like giving your power away. But understand that when you are becoming still and you are willing to yield that you are yielding to your divine Being.

Let’s be very clear here, your divine Being is not just an exalted form of your human being, still separate, still private, still not experiencing its oneness with everything. You do not have a divine Being, and you have a divine Being, and you in the back another divine Being. There is Being. Not a noun, but a verb. You are Being (verb). Divine Being, the Movement of Life itself, the Movement of Creation.

And so when you are yielding to what you are in your Totality, you are yielding to the presence of God being All There Is, and what God is will begin to define who you are to you. And you will let go of this tiny, private, controlling, proud sense of self that achieves greatness. You will even let go of a tiny sense of self trying to achieve its divinity. And you will see that that sense of self was an illusory sense of self overlaid upon the face of God, if you will, saying, “This is not God, this is me.”

In that usurping of God’s presence by the replacement of a private sense of yourself, you lose your experience of the joy that is part and parcel of the Movement of Creation, and you lose the experience of your invulnerability, because there are no opposites in the Movement of Creation, in the presence of Reality. And you become fearful. And in that fearful state the very idea of yielding to your greater Self, or to God becomes something fearful, something unwise.

It is very difficult for you to allow yourself to be vulnerable, because from within the ego’s frame of reference you exist in hostile territory. But that hostile territory is the overlay that the ego places upon the Kingdom of Heaven, where you are in perfect safety at this moment.

So the process of moving into the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being is one of giving up, yielding, yielding to the Father within, yielding to that which you divinely are, shutting up long enough to find that in what you thought would be a void is the presence of the Movement of Creation as your conscious experience of Being. But a Movement of Creation that is not arrogant, and does not blast you with its presence, and which you will not experience until you are willing to become still, and I will say, give up the ghost of the ego.

We will be spending time this weekend talking about this yielding process and this willingness to move into the not-knowing place, the place where you are not sure of anything, the place where divine possibilities become divine actualities, which is a description of the Movement of Creation. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: I’d like to ask a question about a spiritual teacher. If you could comment on the need for a spiritual teacher, and whether that teacher needs to be a living, accessible personage, or if the written teachings are sufficient to fulfill that need, or that function? That’s my question.

ANSWER: A teacher is most definitely needed, yes. And you use the word spiritual because that means to you a teacher who will guide you in the process of your coming into the experience of fulfillment that is divinely natural to you, rather than a teacher who would lead you in another direction.

You see, you are existing in a state of ignorance at the moment. You are not existing in the total comprehension of yourself or of Reality. And so until you are, you are obviously existing in a state of ignorance. That state of ignorance is to some degree confused, because it pays attention to and values its ignorance, relies upon it, defends it. And so there is a need for something functioning beyond the limits of your ignorance to entice you, if you will, beyond the limits that you are defending, energizing, maintaining.

Now, at the bottom line, your teacher is your divine Selfhood, it is the Christ of you that is always your teacher. And whether you turn to a book, or whether you turn to an incarnated human being, you will always be turning to that which is putting into words what find yourself beginning to believe. Not one of you ever gives your attention to someone you can't believe.

The fact is, you never give your power away except in your imagination. And when you go and you listen to someone, you are listening to hear whether or not your deepest inner knowing is being substantiated. And if it is you say, "Wow, this guy is tremendous!" And you go home and you tell all of your friends you've got to go and hear so-and-so, or read his books.

Well, it's your truth—not your personal possession—but your deep awareness of what truth is that is being voiced by this one, except that he is not nervous about owning the truth he is saying, and you are. And so you listen to this one because he helps give you courage to own what you already knew.

The problem comes into play when you fool yourself into thinking that the one you are listening to, the teacher, is the great one. But you see, if you are not at a point of experiencing a greater congruence within yourself, if you're not at a place of discerning a clarified awareness of truth, then no matter what this person says he'll be a jerk. And you'll tell everyone to avoid him, because you are not hearing what you are beginning to understand more clearly being expressed unapologetically by someone else.

I will tell each of you something: Not one of you has ever listened to anyone else. You have felt a unity with those who think as you think, who see as you see. And as I said, sometimes those you are listening to are less afraid to express and own what you are freshly, and naively, and unconfidently beginning to feel moving within you. And so you listen to them to gain strength within yourself about what you believe.

Now I say this so that you may be perfectly clear that the power is always with you, the enlightenment is always with you. And as your enlightenment expands, and as there is greater clarity within you, and as that clarity moves you beyond what that wise one is owning for himself, then you begin to find that wise one's ideas being limiting. And it feels to you as though that one is perhaps going flat, the bubbly is going out of his inspiring words and ideas. And yet there are others who are just beginning to have the faint stirrings of that congruence in them that allows them to value what that one, that wise one, is saying.

And so you see there is this process of enthusiastically embracing a teacher, and spreading the good news to all your friends about this wonderful teacher. And then comes the other side of the coin as you grow—as you begin to own what you weren't able to comfortably own—and then that teacher has lost it, only because it is time for you to find a new teacher who is speaking confidently at your leading edge.

And all along what has been happening? Divine love has been meeting your need by registering in your experience in language of your present perception confirming for you what you are hesitant to own, but which is already emerging from within you.

Now, everything that I have described is perfectly all right. If you have injured your leg, you are so grateful to have a pair of crutches to use. And as the crutches nourish and allow for the healing to occur and your leg becomes stronger and you are able to move more freely, the crutches become an impediment to you and you can't be rid of them soon enough.

Teachers are crutches that you use as you dare to own your own emerging clarity. And you will go from crutch to crutch, and you will make progress and you will finally arrive at a point where you will be a crutch for somebody else. And then you will be the one that is embraced and abandoned alternately. And you will rejoice at that process and be so grateful to fulfill that role of fulfillment.

You have never learned anything from anyone else. Everything you have learned has been constituted of the penetration of who you divinely are through the ego structures that you are employing, thus allowing you to dare to reach beyond your conditioned thinking and your education. Because you have never stopped being the Christ. You have never stopped being the presence of God in action. And it is the presence of God in action that you are that is your only teacher.

Now, the ego can feel really good about that. I mean, after all if you are your own teacher to hell with everyone else. Well I will tell you something: The capital "T" Teacher that is the Christ of you as it is embraced, as it is allowed in, as it is owned unapologetically does not see itself as separate in any way from every other individual expression of the Father. And it embraces everyone. And it lets everyone be the teacher also. And it does use others as a crutch, as an inspiration. And it does read whatever unfolds in one's experience.

And it does not continue to contribute to a sense of defensiveness—and he is better than she is, and this one says this and that one says that, and they both say they're enlightened and it is not consistent and therefore they're both charlatans. It does not create division. It has the humility to recognize the God in everything that is happening—the capital “G” Good. And it tends to bring everything together by seeing the God in it.

I have heard it said that people are very happy that my expression of the truth is not like Ramtha's. That Ramtha is arrogant and splashy and there is too much personality there. That obviously there is ego present there that isn't obvious when I speak. I have said it before, and I will say it again: Ramtha speaks boldly for those who are hard of hearing.

There is a joke about a newly wed couple back in the 1800's. He was not wealthy, he had a mule pulling his wagon. And as they were heading from the wedding home, the mule suddenly stopped, dug in its feet, and wouldn't move. The young husband went around to the back of the wagon and got out a two-by-four, and came around and whacked it on the forehead. And it jolted and was willing to move forward. And he said, “That's once.”

They went a little bit further and while they were moving along the wife was sitting there wondering if this was a side of her husband that... (much laughter) And the mule dug out its feet again, and again the husband got out and got the two-by-four and whacked it, and the mule was willing to go. And he said, “That's twice.” Well the young wife was really getting upset.

The next time the mule dug in its heels the husband did not go to the back of the wagon to get the two-by-four, he simply walked to the front and got out his gun and shot the mule, and he said, “That's three times.”

Well, the young wife went crazy and said, “What are you doing?” and railed and railed. And the husband looked at her and said, “That's once.”

Now, Ramtha comes with a two-by-four because that is what it takes to get the attention of those who are deeply engrossed in the three-dimensional frame of reference—who are fighting for all of the “values” of the ego and of mastering the world and the universe, who cannot in gentleness, and quietness, and yieldingness move into the same experience of unity and oneness and Reality that others, such as the majority of you here, are able to.

And so the Holy Spirit, the active presence of God meets everyone right where they are, and manages to communicate the healing and uniting message in ways that will register. Do not be so sure that you understand who is right and who is wrong. Do not be so sure there are inconsistencies, even though to your intellect inconsistencies seem obvious because you don't know what it takes to get the attention in this case, or that case, or the other case.

But if you will remember that no one has been listening to me and no one has been listening to Ramtha anyway, because each one of you is listening to the teacher that you are, and that you have been using us to inspire your confidence in your emerging knowing, then you will be able to be intelligently clear within yourself, and not get caught up on what appear to be personalities or different techniques.

If you remember who the teacher is you will never have to worry about what book you pick up or who you are hearing, because in the final analysis it is always your Self you are hearing. And if there is a desire in you to wake up, you will listen to those who are substantiating the increase in clarity that is coming forth from within you. And you will not have given your power away. And you will never find yourself feel dependent, because you will know that wherever you are you will find those individuals, those books, those circumstances which will encourage and nourish your daring to own the threshold learning that is happening within you that you are not totally comfortable with yet.

Don't worry neither Ramtha nor I will come along with a gun finally. But in one way or another each of us will use metaphysical two-by-fours to stun your ego and allow your individuality, your true identity to come forth willingly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thanks.

QUESTION: I wonder if you can help me understand why I'm having difficulty doing my art work? It's really not clear to me whether it's perhaps time for me to simply let it go, or if I'm blocked, or feeling fear about whatever the next step is.

And I've got a question about the ego in all of this. Do I need a stronger ego, or is my ego getting in the way and is it time to go beyond it?

ANSWER: Any moment you are in is the time to go beyond your ego. You must get in touch with why you are painting in the first place, not so that you can find that the reason is gone, but so that you may become unafraid again.

You stopped painting for yourself sometime ago. You stopped paying attention to yourself in this regard, and it is sad, and that is the sadness that you have felt. You have stopped playing. You have become serious about your work, and the fun has gone out of it. It has become somewhat calculated.

Now it is not necessary for you to withdraw entirely from, shall I say, being conscious of those who might observe your work. But you must find time to play with the colors, and the textures, and the arrangements. You must dare to experiment and be radical. You must dare to make horrible goofs. You must allow yourself to end up with trash. You must abandon your very orderly structured approach that you have allowed to develop because...and there is no justifiable continuation of that sentence. You are too cautious. You are not allowing yourself to fall flat on your face.

Now, I'm going to tell you something: I want you to start paying attention. I want you to start paying attention in your world. I want you to start paying attention to the fact that nature, if you will, is far from orderly. It doesn't arrange all of the trees in pretty little rows, of just the right height so that when you're standing twenty miles away the scene is beautiful. It doesn't see that all the weeds are cleaned up. And yet when you become defenseless enough in your looking, you can find that the weeds can express exquisite color and composition if you can find the right view.

You must let go. You must get in touch with yourself inside. You need to start experimenting again with texture and color. And I'm going to suggest that you start experimenting again with coarseness, coarse texture. So that you may begin to bring contrasts into your work of exquisiteness, that you don't allow at the moment because you are being too careful. Let there be boldness.

Now be careful. Do not assume that maybe I am revealing to you a new style that will emerge as your style of coarseness and contrast. I am telling you to do this to break you loose from a great precision, both in the art as well as in the way you are approaching your world, viewing your world, viewing your work. Some of what you would be inclined at the moment to call chaos in your art work, is beauty beyond your present tiny sense of order and beauty.

Now I am not telling you to look for a new style. I am suggesting that you simply break down and have fun exploring textures and boldness and contrasts, and anything else that might occur if you are not being precise. Explore the things you used to explore that you've put on the shelf in order to be reasonably successful. Don't you dare put the painting down. Don't abandon the art, but abandon the mindset that you have moved into.

Do some things that you would never dare show anyone else. And explore the breadth and the depth of your capacity to capture and express beauty. You will not find the breadth and depth of it if you are being careful. You've got to get in touch with fun of it again, and that means you're going to have to pay attention to yourself and to hell with everyone else.

I encourage you to give yourself some private art work not for anyone else's eyes. If need be burn it when you are through. But give yourself the opportunity to put some of these things that you feel on the canvas so that you may break out of the rut you have gotten into. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, considering what you said in the last newsletter, about women abusive men as a background, I would like to ask about the emancipation of men.

ANSWER: From?

QUESTION: Well, knowing about this predicament how can men emancipate themselves from their need for nurturing and mothering by women in their intimate relationships. I'm personally getting tired of that need, and happen to be blessed by a woman who's constantly throwing me back on myself and who doesn't indulge my need for nurturing and affection. But it's hard and disappointing for me. So I am desiring to be totally healed of it and become the man that I am. Also would you please describe this new emerging order of relationships between men and women?

ANSWER: First of all, you and men in general must dare to become weak, be weak, and own it, and not lay a trip on anyone else to get you out of it. You must dare to yield—as we were speaking earlier—yielding to your Christhood constitutes emasculation from the ego's point of view. It constitutes the relinquishment from authority and control from an ego level. Because the only way in which you can come into the experience of the integrity of your Being is to become defenseless and willing, rather than willful.

And in that willingness discover that somebody else is already running things perfectly—someone whom has expressed such perfect order that when you allow yourself to yield into that order you come into the full experience of your integrity. In other words, you become truly empowered, and yet this empowerment does not give you authority. It gives you peace.

It gives you the conscious experience of your invulnerability. It gives you the experience of your needlessness.

There is a great deal of talk, a great deal of publicity, and a great deal of what is called consciousness expanding going on relative to women getting in touch with their masculinity. Likewise men need to get in touch with their femininity. Women are soon going to find that getting in touch with their masculinity does not mean forsaking their femininity, and that the call is for a balance between two, just as it is with men.

At the bottom line, emancipation for men means arriving at a point where they don't make women responsible for their happiness, where they don't make their job responsible for their happiness. Two very difficult things for men to do. They need to arrive at a point where they are not governing themselves and judging themselves according to externals, but according to the pure joy of being connected within oneself to what one divinely is.

Now does this mean that you won't end up being loved—that you will be an island unto yourself, self-sufficient? Absolutely not. What it means is that when you are not coming out of a needy attitude. It is as though a thousand octopuses arms that you have had extended to grab onto your world to get your security are withdrawn, and your world feels a great deal more like getting close to you, because you do not have tentacles with which to entrap it. And so as a result of releasing neediness you find the world pouring in on you and not trying to withhold itself and there is the unity and the fulfillment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Do you have anything more to say about releasing neediness?

ANSWER: Well, one thing is for sure, you won't release neediness until there is something to replace it. So don't attend to getting rid of neediness, attend to the thing that replaces it. And the thing that replaces it is first of all: An awareness—even a conceptualization that you don't quite believe—that there is some Life Principle, some actual spark, some actual initiator of life that is not you. And that it is single, undivided, and therefore its self-expression is indivisible and therefore undivided.

And that this universal something, this universal cause is absolutely intelligent, and loving, and wise, and principled, expressing flawlessly. And that this something embraces you and actually constitutes you. And that your experience of this presence is available to you, as I said earlier, in the silence, in the quiet, in the stillness.

You—in order to get in touch with your wholeness, which is what replaces the neediness—must dare to align yourself with something greater than yourself so that the walls of your defenses that encase you and cause you to seem small may become disintegrated, and thus allow you to experience your wholeness, your inseparable oneness, universally, with everything.

You must let yourself be filled with who you are by becoming yielding. You are doing this in your study of the Course, every single lesson is calculated to break down your aggressive, assertive ego self-expression, while providing you with the concepts that help you to know that there is a universal underlying principle that you may dare to let go into, and thus find that it is the principle of your Being. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, hello and a hug to you.

ANSWER: And a universal embrace to you.

QUESTION: Thank you. My question is that my life has been going through a transition from the old to the new quite a bit these last several years. And is there anything I should know about, or be aware of, or do at this time that allows me to be most receptive to the working of my Being, in the midst of all these changes and releasing from all my security blankets?

ANSWER: Indeed, every peeling back of a layer that happens and that has been happening has been perfect in its timing. It has occurred as rapidly as you would allow it. And do not ask me how to speed it up, because there is a suggestion there that you are not allowing it perfectly. And the ego would get you caught up in doing better, which has been part of your problem in the first place.

The one thing that I would encourage you to do, without outlining, would expect to see visible manifestation of the order that you are allowing yourself into. In other words, do not imagine what it will be, but stop imagining that spiritual Awakening constitutes becoming more and more vague, in terms of living in the world.

That is a very important thing to understand, because if you are expecting the things of the spirit not to relate directly to your world then your eyes will be blind to the specific manifestation in the world of the things of the spirit. And you will miss your good, even though it is presenting itself. Again, this is an important point: It is not appropriate for you to visualize how the things of the spirit will appear, but you are not to imagine that the things of the spirit will not appear because somehow they are not of this world, and not truly relevant to your daily life. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Expecting then things on the physical plane to materialize...

ANSWER: Physical plane? There are not planes, there is conscious experience. Now I would like you to tell me how mind can be conscious without being conscious of something? I'm not asking you to answer that question, right now. But if there is an infinite intelligence, an infinite mind whose movement constitutes the Movement of Creation, who is there to experience consciously that Movement called Creation? It must be the mind that has moved.

And so the mind that has moved experiences its movement as something specific, the infinite, ongoing manifestation of Creation. And that mind experiences its ideas, its creations as things, as specific conscious experiences. And what happens is that the ego takes the specific conscious experiences of creation and says these things exist independently from any infinite intelligence. They are objects different from mind that mind can be aware of, or not be aware of.

But I will tell you the moment mind is unaware of what you are calling matter mind will be unconscious—no mind, no God, nothing. It is the ego which defines the substance of spirit as matter. And it is a false definition. Now continue with your question.

QUESTION: Ah, yea. On that infinite manifestation of mind, which my ego has judged on the physical plane...

ANSWER: To be a physical plane.

QUESTION: To be a physical plane, there apparently is—I know some of the things you've been through—apparent manifestation of physical abundance in areas that made basic needs. So am I then to expect that I should start seeing that abundance bubbling up, or my awareness of that abundance bubbling up everywhere, from this time forth? Yes, yes?

ANSWER: We're going to do this backwards. You are going to stop justifying its absence. The moment you start justifying its presence you will begin to conceptualize what that presence ought to be, and then you will have moved into a mentally manipulative process which has come to be called visualization. And you will be likely to visualize what you think will constitute abundance, which might not constitute fulfillment for you at all.

And so what I encourage you to do is to avoid that entirely, by first of all recognizing there cannot be unmanifest God, and then letting go of the justification for not seeing the manifestation of God, the manifestation of wholeness and completeness. The ego says, “But I haven’t punched a time clock. But I don’t have a job. But nobody avails themselves of my services, so how can I have abundance?” And so you justify lack—certain preconceived circumstances have not occurred which are essential to your experiencing your abundance.

When you find yourself justifying lack, squelch it! And do that in the context of the fact that there cannot be any unmanifest God, therefore the completeness of what God is must be manifesting. And as you release the resistance to the experience of that abundance, by withdrawing your justifications for its absence, you will find the abundance in the form that identifies fulfillment for you manifesting.

Now my point here has been to uncover the fact that the things of the spirit do relate to right where you are, because there are not planes or levels that can be at odds or inconsistent with each other, and then to point out to you the fallacy of trying to create a manifestation through the use of visualization, or any conscious process. If the only way to move into the fourth-dimensional conscious awareness of Being, or enlightened awareness is to yield to the Father, then must you not also yield to your abundance? This means you cannot approach your abundance with preconceptions.

I am going to say that you must succumb to your abundance—yield completely to your abundance, to your divinity, to your enlightenment, to your experience of your Christhood. And you succumb to it consciously, which is called life, instead of succumbing to it unconsciously, which is called death—and doesn’t actually constitute a succumbing to life. That’s the end of the answer.

I will say that you have been doing very well. And again, there has been great order. And you are aware of it except when the bills begin to get to you. And then it seems justifiable to be upset with God because you through your justifications have said, “I have no means of experiencing my abundance. Father you have not provided the people to avail themselves of the service I have to give.” But as I said, the answer is to realize that whether people are availing themselves of your service or not, have no bearing upon the Father’s current expression of His completeness, which therefore means that your fulfillment is at hand regardless of human circumstances. And therefore, you do not have justification for denying the possibility of experiencing your abundance.

It is as though you are sitting in front of a table full of a glorious feast, and you have your eyes closed and you say, “Father, I am starving. Why aren't you helping me?" And the fact is that you're not opening your eyes because in your belief you "know" that there's no justifiable reason for there to be a feast in front of you. So why open your eyes? Why would it just be there if you haven't earned it?

It is there because it is your Birthright, because you deserve it, because the Father has not withheld any of what He is from you. But it is not appropriate for you to sit there and say, "Well, I hope it's not too much starches. I'm going to wait to open my eyes until I'm sure that it's mostly vegetables, and fruits and especially papaya." The table is unconditionally full for you to enjoy whatever you like, whenever you like.

Now, one point of clarification for everyone. It is better to visualize abundance than lack, because you are at least thinking positively, and you are not undermining your peace with negativity. But understand that the visualizing is still a means of control that does not constitute yielding to the wholeness of your Being. In the context of your positive visualizations and affirmations you are in a better position to have the nerve to yield.

But understand that the step of yielding must occur before you will come into the full experience of your abundance and your invulnerable wholeness. And that the visualization is not the ultimate step. You see, it is not the great skill of your mind that will save you, but the letting of the Mind which is God be in you, because there is no other Mind. And a puny little private mind supposedly encapsulated in your skull is nothing more than the definition of the ego. You do not have a private mind, although you have a very specific individuality. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've started experiencing the joy of patternlessness life. And recently I've had a few...

ANSWER: No, you are beginning to enjoy the absence of the valuing of pattern. Continue.

QUESTION: I've moved through something recently that seems to be connected with several experiences in the last few days of receiving. My feeling is that I've become less defended, more undefended. And what I'd like you to talk to me about is the experience of the full table, of everything. And I'd like to know specifically about cash, and heart mate, and the personal transportation—the garage is still ready—those kinds of things specifically in terms of where I am now.

ANSWER: At the risk of sounding monotonous, the need is the same. The need is for choosing to go within and be centered, to go within and find your peace regardless of the external circumstances, because that is where your perspective is available to you, that is where your peace and joy are available, that is where your abundance is available, that is where you will know what to do and what not to do, that is where you will know how to be where the transportation is manifesting itself and getting in form in your experience together with the absence of frustration prior to the time and the place where the manifestation will take form.

What you are looking for is inner equilibrium, because that is where you are in alignment with the conscious experience of the manifestation of your abundance. And so I am not going to speak specifically about the car or the money. You are already demonstrating by means of your willingness that you have the abundance that you allow. And I'm going to leave it at that, because that crystallizes for you what needs to be crystallized here. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Would you care to give me anymore information about being more allowing and less defended?

ANSWER: Not at this time. You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm interested in form and color. Can you give some insight on how a divine idea like that arouse on Paul's side there, become manifest?

ANSWER: It is first and last an idea. I mean that at this moment although it appears to be physical it is an idea. It is an energy pattern, if you will, that has gathered together in this specific form because this specific form clearly expresses of the intent and meaning of the idea.

Part of what you experience of the beauty of a flower is the fact that you can see it grow. You can see the stem come up with the small bud, which begins then to swell and pop open and unfold. And you enjoy all of this process of coming into manifestation. But that is not what is happening. The whole rose, the whole idea from full blown to bud is present, present to be discerned simultaneously. It seems to unfold in time because you are bound through your perceptions to the sense of eternity being stretched out on a time line so you see total presence as unfolding presence.

Now whose idea was it? In words that you could most accurately understand, it was ours. The infinite Mind of God is infinitely individualized as every single conscious individuality there is. And this infinitely individualized primal mind does not become divided in the process. Every single conscious individuality constitutes an individual experience of being the consciousness or Mind that God is. And so when the mind of God conceives of an idea every single individuality has conceived of that idea because there is only one Mind actually doing the conceiving. And the sense of separate minds and separate individualities that seems so familiar to you is only apparent from within the three-dimensional frame of reference, and it is illusory.

Now the moment you can begin to look at these roses and let go of the sense of them being a material form, but rather as a gathering or gelling of energy that expresses the intent of the meaning of the conception of the idea, you will begin to be able to transcend the other aspects of the illusion of matter. We were, are the Movement that is conceiving this flower.

And when I say we I mean you and everyone, whether you are consciously embracing that fact or not. I am not speaking of the elite Awakened ones, we every single member of the Brotherhood are the conscious Movement of Creation that God Is. And every idea is absolutely tangible and experiential to this one Mind that is the Movement called the manifesting of an intent and meaning. That is enough for right now.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Firstly, Raj, through out the years now for your timeless message of the whole mind that I'm coming into fruition of. I have a feeling that this is the on the final intricacies of my dream here—as the Course says the borderland. Any comments that you have for me at this point will be appreciated, and especially those concerning any of those who are in my immediate relationship. Thank you.

ANSWER: There is a tendency with everyone in the process of letting go to assume that you are letting go so that you can learn how to take hold better after you're through letting go. The ego would turn the learning that occurs as a result of letting go into a better means of, a more efficient means of being in control.

Now this is the reason that as you pursue your spiritual quest that you want to understand. It is not truly you that wishes to understand, it is the ego. Because if it can understand the Movement of Being, with a capital "B", it can successfully duplicate the Movement of God, and thus gain, if you will, valid status instead of illusory or assumptive status.

So be aware that the process of Awakening does not involve increased understanding. What it involves is the increased experience of what you are. It doesn't have to be understood because it is directly known.

If you have tasted an orange you do not need to understand what it tastes like. You only need to understand what it tastes like if you are going to communicate, or attempt to communicate its meaning to someone else. But the experience is itself the fulfillment of the meaning.

Your movement, shall I say, through the borderland as you put it, is a point where the ego will rear its head again and say, “Ah hah, I am now getting the final dope, the final answers.” And it will suggest to you that as you come into the experience that the purpose of the experience is to provide the understanding so that you can then exercise ultimate beneficent control.

You are going to have to be alert—not you alone, everyone—but you are going to have to be alert to not take, what I will call the final rush of awakening as anything other than the experience of it that you are having. It will actually be a call for perhaps the hardest thing you have ever done, and that is to completely give up, to completely give up that part of you that wants to understand.

You see the desire to understand gets in way of the experience. The desire for an intellectual explanation gets in the way of the experience. Letting go into God, is letting go into the experience of what God is. But you see in letting go into that you cannot bring an ego along.

And so if any of you are thinking that Awakening is a process by which your ego becomes transformed into something divine, and that you will still have it and you will still exercise it, you are sadly mistaken and will be disappointed.

So I will say that as you go into the borderland your ego is going to be very upset. And it is going to speak up. You however will be much stronger, I will say, more comfortable in possession of the experience of your divinity and thus the ego’s “death throws” will not significantly get hold of you, but don’t be surprised that it is there. Don’t assume that something is going wrong. Don’t assume that perhaps you are not ready. After all if you are so close how could such an aggressive, active ego be present?

But I will tell you the ego will be using every last ounce of its supposed presence to engage your attention. And it will engage your attention by suggesting to you that what is unfolding to you or what is about to unfold to you is for the purpose of understanding something so it can subsequently be used. And that could be a sidetrack, because the necessity is to give up. Yield completely all sense of yourself as a private, personal, little presence with capacities of its own.

It is a form of sacrifice, but it is a sacrifice of illusion, illusion which has seemed to be very real in the past and which therefore can seem like a very real loss, but it is only from the ego's vantage point that it seems like a very real loss.

Now as to those around you, I can only speak to you about you relative to them. Some around you may pull away from you. That is all right. What you must be alert for is that you are not engaged in pushing them away, in the name of your enlightenment. Because if you are experiencing enlightenment you are becoming humble, nonarrogant and you're in a position of being able to recognize the divinity of others around you, because you are experiencing your simple divinity so much more clearly. And as a result you will find yourself lovingly and unconditionally embracing everyone around you, whether they are uncomfortable because of their established limits or not.

What the question will boil down to is, are you going to honor and desire to experience the congruence of your capital "S" Self and you, or are you going to try to be congruent with another. Each of you will come down to this point perhaps several times in the process of your awakening: Are you going to sacrifice yourself for your brother, or are you going to honor your divine Self?

You had better dare to be congruent with and honor your capital "S" Self so that the integrity of you may come fully into focus. Now the real question is are you going to sacrifice, are you going to be willing to sacrifice your small "s" self for your capital "S" Self?

And I will tell you something else: if you sacrifice your congruence with your Being for the sake of another, for the sake of not upsetting someone else's apple cart, for the sake of not challenging the limits of their beliefs, then you have sacrificed that in you which is of value to the one whom you are being so careful not to upset. Because you are sacrificing the divinity of you that would truly be transforming and uplifting to not only the one in your experience who is frightened by his or her limits, but every member of the Brotherhood who is still dreaming. And so if you sacrifice your Self, with a capital "S", the sacrifice is complete, everyone loses.

If you want to love your brother, you must love yourself. The statement never was, "love your brother and then love yourself." The statement was, "Love your brother as you love yourself." If you do not do that the gift of who you are is not made, and the whollizing effect of the giving of the gift of who you are is withheld and the blessing of the gift is thwarted. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I have, as you know, I have spent most of my life in service to others, to my brothers. I'm only beginning to realize what that means.

ANSWER: Yes, what is the service that you can do for others?

QUESTION: I teach, I give of myself, share of myself.

ANSWER: That means then that you must have engaged in a process of getting to know you.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Indeed, yes. Continue.

QUESTION: And under all of this I find the onion peels, so to speak.

ANSWER: Ah, and that is how your others become your teachers.

QUESTION: Exactly. What I am finding is that I'm awakening, I have the desire to serve myself more specifically. And I mean this that I have allowed myself for many years to be something like the fire station, the plumber, the doctor, whatever and on call. And there's a lot of ego around that. But essentially when I'm by myself, and there's the urge to express myself—especially in my art—I find as many distractions as possible not to do that.

I feel now that I'm going to pursue that space. And I would like a few...

ANSWER: Don't feel that you are going to do it.

QUESTION: I am. I've got the time and space to do that. And I'd like some tips in that direction.

ANSWER: Don't try to have a good reason for doing it, that will delay you more. Make no requirement on what the result will be of your doing it, that will delay you more. Engage in a little bit of self-irresponsibility. Be willing to allow what you do to be absolutely meaningless. If you do that, you will not come into it with preconceptions, and creativity will be the result, discovery will be the result, fun will be the result. Don't wait for conditions to be perfect, that will cause you to delay.

Now I'm just going to say this, and this is specifically for you. I want you to practice with smudges. I want you to practice making smudges. If you do that, there is much you will find yourself discovering. That is all I am going to say. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Will you please explain the concept of twin rays and soul mates?

ANSWER: I will explain them away. If it is the case the Father is indivisible, single of purpose, single of self-expression, then the only way in which there could be a division into twin flames, twin rays, soul mates, etc., would be purely imaginary. And indeed the concept is a concoction of the ego suggesting that you are half of something, rather than the indivisible and complete expression of the Father/Mother/God.

Even the term Father/Mother/God implies a division when I use it to express a balanced wholeness that is inseparable in any way so as to enhance your sense of God as Father, as well as to provide for women a more exalting and truer sense of femaleness, as well as to convey to men that because they are masculine and God is the Father does not mean that they have the edge, because God is Father/Mother. And if God is Father/Mother then the Father/Mother is fully expressed in every single male, and therefore every single male had better let in the conscious experience of his femininity.

I will tell you something (and I am directing this to all of the men): The ability to yield is a feminine characteristic, and if you are going to wake up half-way comfortably—because you will wake up no matter what—you had better be willing to embrace the capacity in you that is a feminine capacity to yield, to let in, to be defenseless, to not be controlling, to not be in charge, and as a result be open to the fullness of the experience of Being.

I have said this before, but I will repeat it: Every single one of you is soul mates. Every single individuality in the Brotherhood of Man are soul mates. And that is the only way in which the word soul mates has any true meaning whatsoever. You are soul mates because each one of you is the full and complete expression of Soul.

I will tell you something else: Everything that you might hold dear around the concept of soul mates needs to be released from the confines of just one other individuality, and extended to every other individuality. You desire to be in touch with your soul mate unless your soul mate happens to be your neighbor whose driving you crazy, and then you do not want to be in touch with your soul mate.

But in the acknowledgment that he or she is your soul mate, and in the willingness and the desire to experience that divine Being that that one is, and in your openness to it that you would reserve for this one soul mate that is your hearts desire, the factions in neighborhoods, the factions in communities, the factions between nations would dwindle, and community would emerge. And I will tell you something, community is emerging whether you are ready for it or not.

And so I would encourage you to observe how you are defining your brother, whether it is in your country, your continent, or another continent and another country, whether it is one you have called an enemy, whether it is one that you have called an ally.

So if you are going to use the concept of soul mate let it apply equally to everyone, and let the desire that you would naturally bring to the search for a soul mate come into focus in the search for that value that validity of the individual who you find it difficult to relate to or love. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I am experiencing difficulty in the work area. I want to have right livelihood, the right attitude to right livelihood. And there's some specifics that I would like to ask you about.

ANSWER: Certainly.

QUESTION: I'm presently working for a stock analysts broker investor. I've often experienced becoming excited with new jobs. I've had some indication that this is a possible direction for me to enter as a socially responsible investor myself, to be registered as a stock broker. I'm not sure if this is a present infatuation or a possible life current that will lead me forward.

ANSWER: It is the latter, without question.

QUESTION: Ooow! Ooow! What a rush! There are just a couple of other things that I was thinking about. I enjoy some jewelry making, I enjoy crystals and buying them, enjoy this pretty rocks, my roving photographer idea here in Ashland. Now, as you said the latter, the sociably responsible investing and the registration and so forth, I'm experiencing difficulty at my place of work. I house sat for my employer...

ANSWER: First of all let me interrupt. I did not suggest that you become a compulsive socially responsible investor or broker.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Make room for the full spectrum of what you love and enjoy, else you will begin to hate what it is that is keeping you from the full spectrum of your capacity to enjoy. Continue.

QUESTION: Wow, this is very powerful! At the present place of work my employer first was going to...

ANSWER: What is it you have to invest?

QUESTION: I have no capital.

ANSWER: Oh, that's interesting. Then you must be having difficulty getting up in the morning to go to work.

QUESTION: I used to have a lot more difficulty getting up and going to work when I was working as an electrician.

ANSWER: Oh, then what is it that you have to invest that you invest when the alarm clock goes off in the morning.

QUESTION: My desire to be of service to my employer.

ANSWER: Oh, come off it.

QUESTION: My desire to be excited about what I do when I'm there.

ANSWER: You have energy don't you?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Desire?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: You have a sense of a place for that energy to flow to.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: That is what you have to invest. Don't tell me you do not have capital. What you have to invest is clarity and ideas that are present if you let the energy flow.

QUESTION: What's going on at my office? What's going on in that home? Why was I attacked by that dog? I was viciously attacked and bitten four times by a dog. There are family dynamics there that—I was about to say I don't understand, but I hesitate to use that word. I seem to be under attack. My ideas or my energy seem to be under attack.

ANSWER: Then remove yourself from the location where there is a lack of ability to perceive your intent, your intelligence and your wisdom, and find a place where you can express them without resistance coming forth. But do not sacrifice your awareness that you are on the right track.

QUESTION: Is this my inheritance?

ANSWER: Is what your inheritance?

QUESTION: This track. I recently found my biological father's history that I'd never had before. And I found out that he was a whiz investor, and a psychic told me that he was not occasionally joined my guide. And that I did feel his presence at a certain time, and I'm wondering if this is part of my inheritance?

ANSWER: Absolutely not. I would encourage you to see that your inheritance is from your Father, with a capital “F”.

I’m going to put it another way, your inheritance is from what you are in your totality. And as you in your tiny self-sense yield up the ego structures that separate the part of you that is confined inside from the totality of you that is on the outside, you will find yourself coming into your true inheritance, your Birthright, your experience of your indivisible wholeness—which means your indivisible, universal comprehension of All That Is. And this will happen without your losing the capacity to also be absolutely specific and focused, let us say, in the world.

It is wonderful that your father, your earthly father, was a whiz as you put it. He was a whiz because he did not defend himself against his knowing, at least in this area. I’m not saying he was Awakened, but he was not justifying the absence of that capacity. He did not say, “I can’t do it, I can’t do it. I don’t have what it takes. I don’t have the experience. I don’t have the education, etc.” He didn’t rely on education or experience, he did indeed do what he did intuitively, which means he did it by means of listening deeply.

When you listen deeply you come into the experience of your right Mind, with a capital “M”. And you find yourself Knowing because Knowing is the nature of Being, not because you were educated.

Indeed, your father is occasionally working in conjunction with your guide. Your father is totally Awake.

Now, big deal! And what I mean by that is that you are not getting all of this beneficent help because you are unworthy and they have taken pity on you. You, as well as everyone else, has all of this help that is available, because you are divine, you are what you are in your totality at this very instant and that demands respect and love, even though you insist upon a very limited and tight and tiny concept of yourself as being all there is of you. Continue.

QUESTION: Is it possible for me to work with my present employer for a length of time?

ANSWER: If you are wise. If you do not expect them not to act as egos. Now does that constitute a slur on their divinity? Or does that constitute a, shall I say, malpractice on them by expecting them certainly to act like egos? No it does not. It is practical wisdom. Expect yourself to act like an ego also, to one degree or another until you are completely Awake.

There is a necessity to play what I would call a double role: You must be practical enough to recognize the way things work under the circumstances with ego's believe that they are what they are. And at the same time let yourself unconditionally into the clearer experience of what you divinely are so that you have the opportunity from that vantage point to be appropriate with others even if they are coming from an ego standpoint.

You may continue where you are if you are wise. And if you are wise, you will not be surprised by what might occur. You will not be caught off guard, and thus distracted from whatever degree of centered awareness you are able to maintain on an ongoing basis.

In other words, I am saying do not be naive. Also do not be afraid to move on as though you are in a unique circumstance here that couldn't possibly be available to you under any other circumstance. This is your track. This is what your Being is unfolding. And therefore, if on the basis of your integrity you choose to disalign yourself with these individuals, you can count on it that your Being will reconfigure your fulfillment in terms that will be more harmonious. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel like I'm in a sort of circular trap...

ANSWER: It is called the ego. It is spherical actually. Continue.

QUESTION: I've had a lot of health problems since I was very young. I have at times functioned quite well, and supported myself in a way that really felt good to me. But that's difficult for me to do. I have some way of being with people that seems to be more than I even understand. It feels like something I'm supposed to do. And I don't know how to do that in a way that financial supports me. And I don't know if I should be looking in a some other direction?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you to certainly look in a direction that works, that meets the need, even if what meets the need isn't the ultimate that you are feeling within yourself. If your need is not met, you will not have the strength and the stamina to persist, to follow through on the ultimate that is emerging from within you. So do not be afraid to be practical.

And by all means be willing to embrace the practical actions that meet the human need, be sure to embrace those actions in the context of divine love meeting your need, the Father manifesting that which allows you to persist in your desire and the consummation of that desire. In this way you will be able to value the intermediate steps that meet the practical human need, and not see them as blocks to your fulfillment. You will not engage in them resistently or resentfully.

Now as you sit there, you have the inherent capacity to go from that spot to any spot on your globe or any spot in the universe instantaneously, with no means of getting there other than the simple shift of your attention to that place.

QUESTION: I believe that.

ANSWER: But at the moment you are not able to give yourself permission to do that. And so if you were to go to the moon, or if you were to go into space you would need the shuttle. Or if you were to go from here to New York you would need a plane, or a train, or an automobile, or some means of moving yourself there. These obviously would not be ultimate forms, but they are forms that identify your omnipresence in language that doesn't push your limits at the moment—doesn't step over the bounds of reasonability.

Omnipresence is the fact that is demonstrated, we will say, by airplanes, and automobiles, and roller skates, and bicycles, and horses, etc., and space shuttles. It is the way the ultimate fact registers with you at the moment in language of your present perception.

So do not demean the means that are at hand for accomplishing something, whether it is a temporary job, whether it is even a permanent job that is not the one that you know you will ultimately be doing. Because it is the way in which your wholeness is manifesting in language of your present perception that gives you the freedom and the security to persist with the exalted view that you are getting glimpses of at the moment.

We have been talking a little bit about Birthright. Birthright is that which cannot be earned and does not need to be earned. It is that which is inviolably yours, which no one else can even get hold of. Your health is part of your Birthright. And your capacity to stand up in favor of, or on the side of that Birthright, your health, is a capacity which you need to bring into play, instead of being steamrolled by it and then picking yourself up slowly and regaining your balance.

I encourage you to be more alert mentally. And when the first suggestions of illness or incapacity present themselves to you, I encourage you to say, "This is BS. This is illusion. This is illegitimate. I don't buy into it. I am not going to participate with this suggestion. Be gone!" Dismiss it, and dismiss it with a sense of your right to dismiss it.

In the beginning you may need to dismiss it based upon a little bit of logic, that if indeed you are the direct expression of the Father/Mother from whom nothing has been withheld—none of what the Father/Mother is has been withheld from you—on that basis then you have the right to at least intellectually make the statement, “This is illegitimate and I am not going to give it a foothold in me. I am not going to accept it enough for it to find lodgment in my consciousness. I dismiss it. Be gone!” Do this in whatever words come to you. But the point is, dismiss it from your experience. Dismiss it from your inclination to validate it—your habitual inclination to validate or embrace it. Dismiss it, have nothing to do with it.

Now you have this authority. It is an authority to claim your Birthright. You see, that is not an authority over anything. It is itself part and parcel of the alignment, and the oneness, and the unity, and the inseparability of your Being, and to express your authority to not become divided within yourself, to not become conflicted in yourself, you constitute an impermeable presence—which the Father actually is—a place where no illness can find the least irregularity in the surface to grab hold of and claim.

It is time for you to experience your freedom. I could have said it is time for you to claim your freedom, but you would be inclined to turn that into a little bit of an ongoing struggle, the claiming part. I want you to embrace your invulnerability, and be willing to stand on it and dismiss any beginning stages of physical dysfunction right out of that area of your consciousness where it has presented itself to be invited in and entertained. You do not have to take in mental house guests that are unwelcome and who will do nothing but mess up your mental household.

And I encourage you to begin to do this, and whether you succeed each time or not, you will find yourself succeeding more and more consistently to the point where you will go for years without a single physical complaint. But you must begin to take on this new attitude based upon your Birthright. You must dare to claim your Birthright, embrace your Birthright, own it. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: The last time that I feel that I did come very close to what you are saying, I was rear-ended in an auto accident. And just prior to that I was having knowing guidance kinds of experiences. I was having experiences of oneness. I felt like I had gotten to the point where I had just done what you’ve just suggested. And I felt that as I pulled out of that those experiences had returned. But what I feel now is that it frightened me again, I began to feel that no matter what I did I couldn’t... the universe wouldn’t be safe.

ANSWER: The ego is jealous when you are not honoring it, and giving your attention to it, and it is not going to take it lying down. And it will find ways to conflict you again, if it can, because that is certainly what keeps it energized and apparently alive.

And at the bottom line, the dynamics to create conflict in you that the ego brings into play can be treated as a challenge that says, are you sincere in your desire to listen, to take guidance, to not depend upon your puny, little, human mind for all of your conclusions, or does the ego's frame of reference still hold value for you? It is an opportunity for you to continue to make the choice on behalf of your capital "B" Being, rather than your ego.

Do not expect the ego to just lay back after years of commitment from you, and let you withdraw that commitment without objecting.

QUESTION: Did I attract the accident?

ANSWER: I will tell you this, you did not attract the accident by virtue of listening, by virtue of desiring guidance and experiencing guidance.

There was as you were aware, a fear that what you were experiencing and feeling as a result of listening for guidance was perhaps too good to be true. The accident you could say was similar to a child stumbling as he or she takes the first few steps without holding on to anything. It expressed an awkwardness, an inconsistency in the movement necessary for ongoing harmonious unfoldment.

You see as you access new territory you will not be skilled in the movement necessary to be in that new territory. And you will stumble, and the ego will say such things as, "You attracted it into your experience. Naughty, naughty! It's your fault! You are to blame. You are guilty." Ah, the magic word, guilt.

Now like the child who stumbles and falls down, you must simply pick yourself up and with gusto and enthusiasm try that first and second step again, with a confidence that if you persists you will indeed make that first, and second, and third, and fourth step and eventually run.

QUESTION: I'm counting on it.

ANSWER: Persistence is what is required. You have persisted, but do not take on a false sense of guilt when you are simply awkward. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This is kind of a long question, because I want to be clear. And I'm very nervous so please be patient. It's becoming more and more clear that all I want is to surrender to God. I used to get high loving God, and loving other people and loving animals and the planet. And that doesn't work for me anymore because I don't love myself.

And so my desire to surrender to God has put me face to face with my ego. And I once thought that my ego was dying, but I can tell you that it is alive and well.

And so it's this process of learning and unlearning and every minute of every day seems to be an opportunity to choose whether I'm going to act from my ego, or choose to act from my integrity. And much of the time I watch myself fall flat on my face. And it keeps me from... when I most want to let Michael in, I withdraw. It keeps me from everything I want to do. And I'm very tired of my ego. And I want to love myself.

And so I want to know if there's some particular pattern or—because I've been working on this very hard—if there's some particular pattern or dynamic or something specific that I'm resisting, that if I understood it better it would help loosen some of this stuff. So I want to know how I can love myself and let God in?

ANSWER: It is a very hard thing for most of you to believe that if you will take yourself at any given instant and release all criticism, and all condemnation, and all judgment, and all inflicting of guilt, and all sense of responsibility—personal responsibility—that the result will not be becoming stuck. Do you see the ego has fooled you into believing that if you are not striving to be better that you will end up being immobilized, in mediocrity, that's what it would suggest—mediocrity and suffering. And so you are all conditioned to strive and never let down.

You have been trying you said. Indeed, I am going to suggest that you stop trying, and that you take yourself at any given moment and release these things so that you can come into a sense of peace about yourself in that moment, where you are not saying, "I should be doing more. I am not doing more, therefore I am coming up short, therefore I am worthless." Let yourself be in that moment free of those dynamics. That is what constitutes loving yourself. Another way of putting it is accepting yourself at any given moment, embracing yourself unconditionally.

Now I will tell you something, if you are loving yourself unconditionally, do not be afraid that that will constitute what the ego calls self-satisfaction. What it is is the absence of self-condemnation. Self-satisfaction is a dirty word these days. It implies that if you are at peace with yourself you will not have the gumption to rise up out of the gutter of your life, and it will be accepting the status-quo. This is not true.

In the absence of the squelching of what you divinely are—which occurs when you are striving to be more than you are at the moment—you come into this, I'm going to say, cradling place where you experience being loved, where you experience being safe because you are not attacking yourself.

And I will tell you something, when you are feeling safe you are immediately faced with an infilling of energy and motivation, because your energy is not being used up in self-defense. So if you dare to stop outlining how things ought to be, what point you ought to have arrived at by this time, etc., and love yourself in the moment, you will find yourself beginning to experience that union that you are desiring.

There is another point to remember also. This moment in which you are going to release self-depreciation, self-hate, this moment is also the unfolding of God. You are the unfolding of God, the moment is the unfolding of God. Your wholeness, your achievement perse, isn't somewhere off in the future. It is present in the only moment of conscious experience there is, and that is the now.

And I have said this before, but I will say it again: eternity is not endless time, endless into the past, endless into the future. Eternity is when you let go of the past and the future and let yourself come fully into the moment of conscious experience that you are in. And I will tell you this: You want to know where the little gap is? The little gap is dead center in the instant you are in, that is why it is called the holy instant. It is the place where the instant of wholeness is available to you, it is that point where you may slip out of time into the full conscious experience of the eternal now, the infinite now.

Now if you say to yourself that you are not worthy of experiencing your divinity until you have accomplished certain things, you most certainly will not let your attention be present in the now, because that's not where your salvation is. It's in the striving and the accomplishing, it's in the keep up with your goals. Well that's just exactly the way you stay trapped in the illusion of time—in the illusion of flowers growing, and buds opening and going to seed, and starting the cycle over again. That is the way you stay stuck in the three-dimensional only frame of reference.

The only way you're going to manage to get into the moment is to embrace yourself in the moment, to find the God that is there in the moment. That is why when you reach the end of your rope and you give up it is always the moment that you are in that you give up into. And when you truly give up that's when your transformational experience occurs. But you do not have to wait for a tragedy or a trauma to justify letting yourself into the only time there is, which is the conscious experience of existing at the instant you are experiencing it, which is always now.

The key here for you is to love yourself and let yourself be what you are as ignorant as it may seem, as unexalted, or unenlightened as it may seem. Love this retched little you that you think you are right in the moment you are in, and you will find this retched little self exalted, because you'll be able to connect with the integrity of you that's only present in that instant to be experienced.

Now is the only place you will find God. God is not hiding behind the next building just out of sight ready to jump out and embrace you when you arrive at that corner.

Again, the key is love yourself and love the moment also. In that way you will be able to find God in you and in that moment. And your fulfillment will be more noticeably present even if it doesn't seem that you have achieved yet full enlightenment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Right now I'm at a spot in my life where I feel like I don't know anything.

ANSWER: Marvelous.

QUESTION: And I'm having a lot of trouble dealing with that, and dealing with my emotions that are connected to that. Can you give me any kind of insight on what is going on?

ANSWER: It is when you know something, it is when you are sure of something that you are well defended against enlightenment, when you are well defended against discovery. Because discovery or enlightenment is the uncovering of what you don't know.

Now, listen carefully: Value this experience of not-knowing, of not being sure of what to be sure of. It is the vestibule or cradle of your accessing your greater capacity to be aware. It is the nursery school which provides the environment for growth—and I am talking about real growth. If it is these things as I have said, then by valuing it and not resisting it you will be receptive, open, even though you have no idea what it is you are opening up to.

Now one other factor you need to understand: The nature of Being is Knowing. The infinite Mind is All Knowing. It is easy to interpret that statement as though it is saying that the infinite Mind Knows All, is All Knowing. But let us emphasize the word "knowing," rather than "all" as meaning a quantity. The infinite Mind is All Knowing as a verb. The infinite Mind Knows itself completely, and there is nothing else for it to know.

So the infinite Mind is the action of Knowing. As a result when you as an ego, as a conditioned thinking mind arrive at point of not-knowing, not-knowing anything intellectually, not being sure of anything intellectually you are in a position for the Knowing—which I capitalize, capital “K” Knowing—you are in a position for the Knowing that constitutes you to begin to emerge and register with you. Because its pathway to your point of recognition is not blocked by your confidence that you know what a thing is.

And so you have a double task here: The first task is not resisting what feels like an uncomfortable situation for you, and redefining that uncomfortable situation as the vestibule of greater Knowing. And then in spite of the uneasiness you have with not-knowing, be open to the natural movement of your deeper Knowing, with a capital “K”, so that what you do need to be aware of can register with you most easily.

The problem is that when you arrive at a place of not being sure of anything you also tend to lose confidence in your capacity to recognize truth. And so you close down and become self-protective. The necessity is to allow yourself to be in this temporarily uncomfortable place—uncomfortable because you’re not familiar with it—and let the deeper levels of Knowing emerge and register with you.

In other words, instead of being distressed, recognize that you stand at the threshold of clarification, significant clarification, real clarification. And then to the best of your ability stay right there and watch for it to emerge, even if it takes a number of days. The point is don’t invalidate this state of “not being sure of anything.” That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Yes, Raj, my questions on communication with your brothers, with yourself. How it is emotions peace healing, how does the communication work for the dynamics?

PAUL: I’m sorry this is me, Paul. I don’t understand the question myself, so my mind is trying now to figure out what did he say. Would you say it one more time?

QUESTION: Raj, you’re communicating with everyone here trying to convey a message of truth that is significant to each and everybody in their own personal way. In seeing that truth how do the emotions that you see jumping around and everything, where does all of that come into play there?

ANSWER: Emotions are ego reactions, and I am delighted to see the ego dancing as though it is on hot coals. If it is uncomfortable, it is off guard. If it is off guard, you and I have a chance of communing. And so I am not in the least bit upset but completely delighted by the irregular and uncontrolled actions of the ego. I encourage you to do likewise and also realize that you are not the ego, you are the pure awareness, the pure consciousness, which never has been the ego, even though you have identified with it from time to time very significantly.

Now again, I want you to understand that emotions are ego reactions. This means emotions are illusions, and it is important to make this distinction. Now what is the divine equivalent of the illusory emotions? Feelings. And feelings are the Souls response to that which is Real. Again, emotions are the ego's response to that which is Real—jealousy, hate, reaction, fear, depression. The Souls reaction or response to that which is Real is peace, and joy, and love, and sweetness.

Now you have all heard of the word or term “aura.” The aura as it is perceived by those of you who are, shall I say, sensitive enough to see it, appears to be a subtle energy body around what has been called the physical body. But we discussed earlier the fact that there was no physical plane, and that the forms that you see are the manifestation of the meaning and intent of the idea that was the result of the Movement of the infinite Mind.

Each of you has a Body of Light at this very instant, which seems completely dense and dark when you look at it. But it is the lens of your perception that is causing you not to see the Body of Light at this instant. Those of you who are able to see the auras, are seeing what we could call the outer edges of the Body of Light. It is where your perception is not blocked by a completely physical interpretation of what you see.

Now I am bringing this up because, as you indicated, there is much dancing of the ego going on here today. However, the color of the light of your Bodies of Light in this room has since early this morning been undergoing a change of hue, which is indicative of the fact that communion has been occurring—you used the word communication.

I will tell you that most of what is being said is for the benefit of distracting your ego so that silent communion can occur. Most of the words are causing the triggering of your giving permission not to persist in your ignorance. And the communion, the oneness of Being, seen as all of us, is allowing for significant alterations of your capacity to embrace and own your divinity. And as I said, the color, the hue of your Bodies of Light has been changing all morning, indicating that healing of perception has been occurring.

Let the ego do its little dance, it is meaningless. Everything the ego does is meaningless. And so you let it do its jig, notice it and get your attention back to what you are interested in.

Now I have said this before, but it bears repeating, and it bears your repeating often: The only thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. Fight it and you strengthen it. Disregard it and it has no defense, and it becomes weaker and weaker and weaker. And that is why the constant choice for your divinity and your peace needs to be practiced, because it is what undoes the ego. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good, I like that.

ANSWER: It really doesn't matter whether you like it or not. It is the truth. I am glad that you are not resisting it, and I did not mean to be offensive. But it is important to understand that whether you like the truth or not it functions on your behalf. And so you do not have to qualify for the benefit of the Movement of Truth by embracing it fully.

You see it is the ego which would like to bring into play a certain amount of control. It says that it is doing this to promote your more rapid awakening. But of course, to whatever degree control comes into play you distance yourself from your Awakening.

Now it is well for you to have enjoyed the truth of what was said, but it does not put you further ahead in the game. I point this out because if you realize that it makes no difference whether you are happy with it, it can become clear to you that it makes no difference whether you are unhappy with it. That either way the truth operates on your behalf and moves you whether you are digging in your heels resistantly, or whether you are doing it willingly. And therefore, you are not at the mercy of your capacity to appreciate truth or not. Please continue.

QUESTION: Okay, my question relates to my relationship with my husband and my growth. In my discovery of myself and experience my individuality, I've had difficulty with my husband, and had repeated cycles in relationships that I've gotten kind of lost in myself and the relationship and then I flee from them. And I would like you to look into my present situation and give me some insight as to whether I should hold on to this relationship.

ANSWER: What would happen to it if you would let go of it?

QUESTION: Well, I could be leaving my present home, and children, and husband, or it's just difficult right now...

ANSWER: Let me ask you this: If you were standing in a shower with a bar of soap in your hand, and you are holding on to the bar of soap, what is likely to happen?

QUESTION: If you hold tight, it could slide away.

ANSWER: Absolutely. What happens if you do not hold on to it? In other words, you let the palm of your hand be completely open? It is likely to remain there indefinitely.

Now that is what I meant when I said what would happen if you let go of it—meaning, where not holding on to it so tightly. What if you relaxed? What if you did not make an issue out of your spiritual growth in comparison with his growth or lack of growth? What if you made no distinction between your growth and your understanding, and his ego idiosyncrasies? What if you relaxed? What if you became a little bit unconditional? What if you became less judgmental? How do you think you would come across to your husband? You are likely to be experienced as someone much easier to be around.

Watch the “yes, buts” though. Because the “yes, buts” are the first part of a justification for an inner conflict that you need relief from. But it’s an inner conflict which you are generating and keeping alive. And again, the necessity is for you to choose for your peace, not the reactive ego vantage point.

Your spiritual growth and Awakening should be allowing you to recognize the validity of your husband and of every other individual and his worth and, shall I say, the justification for patience and an extreme reluctance to engage in judgment and condemnation.

What are the vibes you are putting forth? Even if you say, “Well, he makes me do it. I can’t help but put this energy forth, because of the way he behaves.” But you see, you can help it. You are the one making the choices for what you are going to feel and what you are going to validate.

And as I said earlier, if you will dare to see him as your soul mate—not your exclusive soul mate—but as your soul mate because he is right here and now the direct manifestation of God, and you truly desire to unite with this divine one. And if you were willing to be defenseless and open to this you would illicit from him different behavior, not in a controlling way, but because you would be so comfortable to be with you would call into play such a lack of need for defensiveness that he would warm up toward you. And your spiritual Awakening would become translated into the practical terms of a loving relationship, which has nothing to do with spiritual progress, or a religious orientation.

It doesn’t really do any good to talk about God, or think about God if the word “god” and the understanding that you have of God doesn’t bring you to a point of defenselessness to the real experience of unity with your husband, or your brother, or your fellow man because you are not engaging in defense. Then you come into the experience of what the word “god” means. It doesn’t matter whether he understands the concepts. What matters is whether the concepts and the words you are using are truly allowing you to become defenseless.

And so I encourage you to rethink this question you have asked. And rethink the situation and dare to make the assumption that there is an entirely different way to look at what you have asked about. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I would like to add one more thing to the last answer. What can justify remaining conflicted within yourself? The behavior of another? Neither you nor anyone else is ever suffering from the behavior of another. You are always suffering from a choice you are making between your peace and conflict. You are making a choice between viewing the Kingdom of Heaven, viewing Reality through the lens of the ego, which will always cause a distortion, or from the vantage point of your essential Being. If you are suffering, it is because a choice has been made for the vantage point of your ego.

Now if your husband is being a piece of sandpaper, does that justify your being a piece of sandpaper until he becomes a little finer grained, and then you will say, “Okay, I will be a little finer grained.” Or again, is there anything that can justify your decision for conflict within yourself, regardless of whether he is coarse grained sandpaper or fine grained sandpaper.

It is a bitter pill to swallow to have to be what you would like others to be, without their being it. And yet that is what is needed. Should I not be me? Should I not commune with you because you are not enlightened yet? If you want to think conceptually, can you not imagine that your mentalities are coarse compared to the Christ Consciousness? Is that any reason for me not to convey to you that the coarseness of your mentality at the moment does not represent who you really are?

I refuse to believe what you are presenting to me as you. I will not join with you in your ignorance. I will join you in the acknowledgment of who you really are.

There was a time when there were only four of us out of the whole brotherhood who were extending this to the brotherhood in its dreams. It is not too much to convey to you that you have the capacity to be unconditional enough to love because you choose not to be conflicted within yourself. And as a result, be the presence that causes others to feel safe in becoming unconditional also. It is your fulfillment to be the Christ Consciousness, the clarity that doesn't play into and validate others ego self-images, and limitations, and pains, and sufferings. It feels good because it is you in your actuality to be that.

If you wait until they deserve your love, they won't need your love, and you will have missed out on the joy of being the love that exalts and transforms. And we are talking about really practicing what it is you desire in real situations, real processes of uncovering Reality a little more clearly where it has been covered up with ignorance and ego structures.

Your husband will recognize love in the absence of judgment. And the absence of judgment and the presence of love inspires greater self-appreciation, and a greater ease with which he or anyone else can dare to think in a new way about himself that is more exalted. If someone expresses confidence in you, it inspires you to be more confident about yourself. And that's the gift. Because everyone who is sleeping and dreaming dreams and nightmares needs the inspiration to refuse to validate the nightmare, and wake up from it.

Don't wait for him to be loving before you will be the love. Because all you will be doing will be postponing your joy from being congruent with yourself. And I am not picking on you particularly, I am taking this time because this is the gift that everyone is here to give. And it is the gift that promotes your own freedom from bondage and imprisonment and cruelty imposed upon you by your well developed egos.

The answer really is love. And this is not a new answer. But each one needs the encouragement to practice love where it seems least deserved, because it is where it is most deserved. It is the place where it seems not to be valid. The light is needed where it is darkest not where there is already full illumination.

Now I want you to know one other thing: If under the circumstances it were most appropriate for you not to remain in this relationship, I would have told you. I have told you what is needed. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question has to do with my relationship with my wife and expressing love. And we're at a place that we keep coming back to and that we both realize that we're stuck at. And she feels unhappy and insecure and upset because I don't express my love to her in a way that she can understand. I'm not affectionate physically like she'd like me to be. I don't treat her in a way that she wants to be treated.

And when she is reaching out for that type of love and I'm pulling away and don't want to give it to her, and we both see that this is happening and we both know that we are stuck. And what we'd like to know is how can we be unstuck, how can we break this cycle? Do I have to learn a new way of communicating my love to her.

ANSWER: Oh, yes. And likewise with her, she needs to learn a new way also. I'm going to tell you that you are both suffering from immaturity, from lack of life experience and from lack of self-confidence. And I will tell you something: It will not last forever. In this case time is on your side, because the experience at being alive will bring you to a point of greater comfort with yourselves. And as each of you becomes more comfortable with yourselves individually, the ease with which the love will flow and find expression will increase. And also the demand for proof of love will diminish because there will be greater security.

Now this is a case where it is important for both of you to accept yourselves right where you are in your apparent lack of life experience. As long as you continue to exist, your life experience will be extended and you will not continue to lack life experience, and wisdom and maturity will come with it. And I am not talking about another twenty years.

But what I am saying is both of you can afford to relax a little bit, accept the fact that you are not particularly skillful in relating one on one with commitment. You do not have twenty years of commitment behind you, having established a sense of comfort and ease and confidence in the stability of the relationship.

And of course, the ego has you at a point of proving yourselves both to each other and to the world. And it has both of you to that degree dancing a jig, demanding something of you that you don't know exactly how to fulfill. And so really the necessity is to be most patient with yourselves and with each other. The love that is there in your relationship is solid, it is sound. You simply—and I know this will not necessarily be ease—you simply need to embrace enough perspective to allow for some time to pass and for greater life experience to develop.

You are not at fault, she is not at fault. There is not a fly in the ointment of your marriage, or shall I say, there is not a flaw in the ointment of your marriage. And I encourage you to dare to have confidence in it and endure, not in the sense of putting up with, but endure in the sense of an ongoing commitment that lack of skill in relationships will not be enough to undermine.

Now I encourage you to explore being more affectionate. I encourage you to explore the different ways in which you can express thoughtfulness. It isn't corny. And it will broaden the spectrum of your expression of love. And it will make you feel good. And it will awaken you to an aliveness to the relationship that your current mode of expressing affection doesn't bring into play.

Now if there is a new area of interest in your life, some new technological discovery, or some new dynamic in the field that you are engaged in that peaks your curiosity you will go out and get books and read them, and you will find out everything you can about it, and you will do it with enthusiasm, because of what it will open up for you. I encourage you to treat the subject of affection in the same way, and explore the broad spectrum of expressing affection.

Most of all I encourage you to relax about yourself. Love yourself right in whatever degree of ignorance you feel you are currently in. Let me ask you this: If a new area of interest opens up in your life, and you have a spontaneous desire to pursue it, does the fact that you weren't interested in it before mean that you were at fault in some way? The fact that there is greater opportunity for you to express affection does not mean that you have been a dope so far. It does not constitute a judgment in any way on where you are at the moment and so you can embrace and love yourself right where you are at the moment with complete freedom to explore new potentials. And that is what I encourage you to do.

Your marriage is not in jeopardy. But you do need to be patient with the fact that you have not yet developed smoothly the skills of relating affectionately. That's the end of the answer.

ANSWER: Before you begin, I would like you to ask the most pertinent question you can ask about yourself. I heard you earlier indicate that you felt it might be so unique that it would have no relevance for anyone else. And I encourage you to provide yourself with the opportunity to find that the ego is not very original. And not deprive others of the opportunity to benefit from the same dynamics which have been brought into play in their own unique way in their lives.

QUESTION: I didn't know you were listening.

ANSWER: Now you do.

QUESTION: For fifteen years I have had unremitting insomnia. That means to me difficulty in falling asleep, inability to sleep very long, an inability to let go of conscious thinking during sleep. My sleep has the quality of conscious waking state thinking. And so I wake up exhausted after two or three hours, and then spend the next three or four hours trying to figure out how to get back to sleep, which sometimes works and sometimes doesn't.

I have obsessed about this for fifteen years and tried to think of any possible meaning for it, and the more I can let go of it the better my sleep is. But I still suffer from it. I think I brought this on myself by doing two years of intensive Transcendental Meditation in a retreat setting in the wrong way, when I wasn't ready, without proper instruction. And now I'm mainly trying to figure out how to undo what feels like damage, so that I can function normally in the world.

And this is all related to the larger question of why I want so much to escape from living a normal life like a normal human being. I thought I could somehow escape from life by getting a quick ticket to enlightenment. And it didn't work. Now I'm trying to just become a normal human being. So anything you could say to speak to that?

ANSWER: The reason you and everyone else is trying to escape the "normal life" is because "the normal life" means viewing Reality through the lens of the ego, and thus experiencing everything a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync, which causes everything to be reversed.

That which is good is bad. That which is bad, or not truthful, not representative of Reality is good. To be in charge is good. To be yielding is bad, from the ego standpoint. And yet being in charge doesn't work. It does not give you the peace, that something in you knows is your right to experience. And so life is one constant frustration. A frustration which nevertheless seems justifiable because you have not had adequate means to escape the distortions from the egos frame of reference.

And so there is a recognition of a need to escape from suffering. But the mistake has been practiced of assuming that it is the world that must be escaped from, that it is your humanness that must be escaped from, that your humanness is not divine, that there is indeed a material plane, with a material universe existent in it that partakes in no way with anything divine. The denial of the world is what happens when the world seen a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync from Reality is treated as though it were in sync.

Now it is not the world that needs to be denied, risen above, or escaped from, it is the perception that renders it a delusion. All of you are feeling the need for something more representative of fulfillment than what you are experiencing.

Your churches have taught that your very existence has been the result of sin, meaning the copulation of your parents. You're doomed from the beginning. The very human expression of love and the Movement of Creation, the unfoldment of that which the Father is is called entirely into question by virtue of having defined the experience of existence as the result of sin and therefore colored.

This causes you to get into a state of self-denial of the body. It causes the experience of fulfillment—which is experienced sexually in intercourse—to be seen as something to be risen above. And the churches have enforced this, reinforced this by virtue of its leaders and its staff being celibate. They represent the more Godly ones on your planet.

All of this has reinforced the fundamental idea that everything about your life is colored, and it is colored with the color sinful. Obviously then the suffering you have been experiencing has been caused by this world, this material plane of existence.

And as a result two things have happened: Some of you have endeavored to dig into this sinful world and reform it, lift it. And others of you have engaged in attempting to deny it and escape it. And you see neither way has worked, because what it is that is being escaped from and denied is the Kingdom of Heaven, which you cannot do anything about, and which does not need anything to be done about it.

It is very understandable, your drive, your compulsion, as it were, to escape has been motivated by a very strong inner feeling that the absence of fulfillment and the presence of suffering is not legitimate. And on that point you are one hundred percent correct. It is just that the means of demonstrating it has been faulty.

Now how can you be at peace, how can you let down and relax in such a dilemma? I will tell you something: Your practice of Transcendental Meditation has not fouled you up. True, there were ego dynamics going on around you in the setting that you were in, and the real meaning of the meditation and the real potential of the meditation got swallowed up in leveraging for position. But the practice itself was valid. And the benefit of the practice was there. It was the environment in which the practice was being done that was disturbing.

Now it is indeed time for you not to be able to say that for the past number of years you have suffered from insomnia. It is time for you to begin to say, “I sleep really well at night.” And I am going to suggest that when you go to bed at night do not fight the insomnia.

I am going to suggest that you utilize the time in which you are alert to begin to embrace yourself lovingly and embrace your world lovingly, not as you appear to be and not as your world appears to be at the moment, but on the basis that there is something essentially Real and sinless about you, and something essentially Real and divine about the world. And that you are not existing within a state of conflict that you cannot get out of without denying it, or without manipulating it.

I want you to lie there and as long as you are thinking, give direction to your thought. And I encourage you to say, “If there is a bed here at all, it must be the presence of God identifying fulfillment. If there is a room here at all, it must be the presence of God identifying fulfillment. If there is a house here, it must be the presence of God identifying fulfillment. If there is a square block of this city I live in right here, it must be the presence of God identifying fulfillment, no matter how I have been conditioned to interpret it.”

And I encourage you to increase the scope until you have embraced the planet, as identifying fulfillment as being the presence of God expressing a divine idea of fulfillment. You need to specifically undermine with the truth and with your ability to use logic, the concept that there is something going on here that is false, that you must either change or escape from. You must begin to make room in your consciousness to embrace the divinity of you and the divinity of everything that you experience. This will begin to cause you to relax.

Now I am going to suggest to you that you do this religiously, even if it gets to the point where you feel like it’s just a mere rehearsal of world, like somebody doing their rosary. I will tell you if you are rehearsing those words, “That this that I am thinking of must be if it exists at all the presence of God identifying fulfillment.” The rehearsal of that idea is the rehearsal of a truth, which will slowly begin to erode away the conviction that there truly is something to escape from. It will contribute to your being able to be more centered and more at peace. Utilize this time in which you are awake to undo the contributing factor to your not being able to sleep.

I will tell you something: You have no idea how many individuals will hear the answer I have given in response to your very real question, and who will have been specifically blessed because of their problem with insomnia. I am very glad that you asked the question. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have recently been exploring my personal relationship to global issues. Some have commented, or cautioned not to listened to the news or read the newspaper because it's fear based and askew...

ANSWER: But there is so much good news being broadcast these days. Be alert for the signs of the times, because the unsettling that you are noticing is the unsettling of conservative ego oriented limitations that have created dissonance. They appear to be unsettling in themselves, but they are not unsettling in a destructive way. They are unsettling as the clearing of the way for new more congruent social structures. Continue.

QUESTION: How are we to respond as a society and as individuals when we read in the paper—which was in a Seattle paper a few days ago about a seven year old boy being sexually abused and mutilated? What do we do with that?

ANSWER: Indeed. Now what happened was certainly not expressive of decency, of love, of truth. And it is not to be accepted as representative of anything of value. And it is not to be condoned. The individualities involved are also not to be condemned. The individual and the behavior, the individual and the experience are not one and the same. The behavior was wrong, but the individual has not suddenly become invalid or unworthy of the recognition of his divinity.

In other words, it is not appropriate to withdraw the perception that would transform and exalt that poor self-image into the true appreciation of what he divinely is. And I am speaking of the perpetrator of the mistreatment.

Now the part you are not going to like to hear, except I am going to make it a little more pertinent to each one of you. If each one of you is willing to be honest, and to the degree that any of you has been willing to be honest you will recognize the fact that any negative experience you have had you invited. And not one of you was an innocent victim—there was a curiosity, a fascination with whatever it was. And in its most blatant forms there was an aggressive search for the experience.

This child, as atrocious as the crime was, was not an innocent victim. You will not be able to see the truth of that fully until you are able to honestly look at your own negative experiences. And the fact that they were not inflicted on you without your willing participation. And I cannot be firm enough on this point.

Because I will tell you, that if you are not the one exercising authority over your experience by virtue of the permissions you give, or the withholding of permissions you will not recognize that you are free to wake up until something out there changes. And you will hold yourself in bondage until something out there does change, which means until everyone else has woken up and there is no longer anyone out there to justify your ongoing ignorance of your authority.

Either you are locked into hell, locked into suffering, or you're not. And if you are not, then you had best get about the business of discovering how to become free from your suffering, whether anyone else changes or not. It is a hard thing to swallow, but there are no innocent victims. You either attract your negative experiences out of fear or fascination, but you invite them.

The acting out of aggression is incompatible with life and I am not suggesting that it is to be condoned. But the one who is the aggressor, and the one who gets the brunt end of the aggression dance a dance together. We could say they are both to blame, but there we have the word blame and the consequential use of the word guilt and therefore penalty.

To dance a dance whether it is constructive or destructive is simply to dance a dance. It is not worthy of condemnation of the partners in the dance. And to the degree that those involved in the dance of aggression and victimization can be held consciously in the acknowledgment of their flawless divinity, and that anything other than that divinity is illusion, the more quickly both the aggressor and the victim can be freed from, healed from, transformed out of the inclination to be the aggressor and whatever the result of the victimization was.

But you are not going to get healing if you are holding one to be the bad guy and the other to be the good guy. You cannot heal the good guy, who was the innocent victim of the mistreatment if you are going to hold the other one to be a sinner. You must bring both parties into that exalted context of essential and inviolable divinity. And then both are available for healing and regeneration.

You must absolutely say no to the behavior, else chaos would tend to result. But when you say no to the behavior withhold condemnation from both the aggressor and the victim, because both of them are victims of their egos. And both are acting out from a lack of the sense of their divinity and worth. And both are worthy of not being imposed upon by such bondage. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Yesterday we finished up talking about individuals who would perpetrate heinous crimes on society and the need to see the divinity of the perpetrator as well as the victim. But as a society then and as individuals what do we do with these people. Obviously, it doesn't work to just turn them loose in society. The specific instance we were talking about yesterday, had occurred twenty-six times previously. Obviously our prison system isn't working. What do we do?

ANSWER: Understand that no matter how metaphysically or spiritually absolute you become in your thinking, you must at the same time express simple common sense. The thing is that the common sense must be based upon and reflect the nature of the metaphysically or spiritually absolute stance that you are choosing to operate according to.

Now if you have a wild animal loose in a community, you do not allow it to roam and express its current sense of its nature and harm other animals or the people in the community, or create an ongoing sense of fear in the community. You capture the animal and you do incarcerate it in a place where it cannot harm others and cannot bring harm to itself hopefully. That is common sense.

It is appropriate for those who are insisting upon their very limited and fearful and negative ego self-sense to not be allowed to express it spontaneously in a harmful way on the other members of the community. And indeed, just as someone is ill with what you would call a contagious disease, this one needs to be separated from those whom he would inflict harm upon. And during the incarceration a healing process, an educational healing process needs to be brought into play. And if and when that individual is willing to receive the healing, the transformation that is necessary in order for him or her to be free to interact with the public, the community, then once the transformation or healing has occurred he must be released.

It must become very clear to all of you that the ego and its misperceptions is an illegitimate imposition upon each one of you, and equally illegitimate for those who are so squelched, and so fear ridden, and so limited in their perception of themselves that all they can do is stick out in the best way they can conceive to achieve their freedom from the imposition.

Understand that the degree to which the ego distorts perception is an unjust imposition upon each one of you. And just as each one of you in this room feels the appropriateness of gaining your freedom from that imposition, those who are so very under the imposition that they act out heinous crimes deserve to be provided with the inspiration, and the concepts, and the reasoning, and the intelligence that allows them also to come out from under that illegitimate imposition.

And so the necessity is to express the common sense I mentioned, and the reeducation. Reeducation is what is going on here this weekend. Reeducation is what is going on as you in your totality penetrate the ego structures surrounding the you that you are currently experiencing as the limits of your conscious experience of being, thus freeing you.

You do not condone the ego. And you do not condone the behavior that arises out of the ego, whether it is in yourself who appear to be quite functional and able to relate to each other in an unharmed way, as it is with those who are functioning in a very frightened and harmful way in the community. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Thank you for being who and where you are and with us.

ANSWER: Thank you for being with me. Thank you for allowing yourself to conceive of the possibility that there is not a barrier, that you are not in the lesser place, and that we are because of our equality able to be together consciously. Continue.

QUESTION: I appreciate that, thank you. I've been struggling in the last couple of years with my own issues of darkness, and I'm beginning to see a pattern, the pattern that has resulted I feel in this lifetime in my diabetic condition. And I think my question, to sum it up, has to do with: Is it possible that in Awakening this condition can be totally removed and the karma that went with this birth condition and all the things that it brought can be totally released?

ANSWER: You bet your bottom dollar.

QUESTION: Well, then what relating to that would be a good thing for me to do, or to be implementing in my own life to further fulfill this—well I want to say goal—but that isn't really... it is a goal in a way, it can seem that way, but it's just being, and it's learning for me to just be and to trust.

PAUL: Is what?

QUESTION: I know part of my lesson is just learning to be and to trust, totally. And I get the simplicity. I get a lot of things these days, thank you for that.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Each one of you is learning what the real meaning of the word trust is—even Paul. I had the occasion just a week ago to mention to him that trust is like a muscle, it must be exercised or it is small. Trust is something you will find yourselves making an investment of more and more. And do not think that you will arrive at a point where you are trusting completely, and that you will then be able to finish your journey without ever having to bring into play further trust.

The continuing practice of trust, and the increasing practice of trust will continue until you have trusted completely. Which literally means, until you have yielded completely, given up completely—given up the sense of being a person who has to, through his own or her own efforts, achieve his or her divine status.

Now diabetes or any other physical ailment is one of the illegitimate impositions of the ego. Now the point to home in on is that it is illegitimate. The point to home in on is not that it is an imposition. Understand that it is an imposition, but do not become weighted down with the unfairness of the imposition because fair or unfair it is illegitimate, and therefore has no valid source, and therefore has no sound basis from which to actually imprison you.

So begin to claim your freedom from, your right to be free from this illegitimate imposition, because of the fact that it's illegitimate. And do not assume that there is some karmic reason for the imposition that justifies it. From first to last it is simply illegitimate, and therefore you have the right, and it is intelligent to stand up to it and deny it as anything you need to validate or continue to suffer from.

I am going to take a moment here to address one other issue that was not involved in the question. And it has to do with what I shared yesterday about understanding. There have been rumors and discussions circulating to the effect that understanding is now becoming a dirty word.

As I said yesterday, the experience constitutes the knowing that replaces the need for understanding. But it is what you could call a divine equivalent of understanding. What you need to avoid is trying to understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. Because in the process of understanding and gaining an understanding you have no means other than functioning at the level of the intellect through logic, and reason, and imagination.

And when you are starting at an intellectual level, instead of an experiential level you can arrive at conclusions which have no basis in fact. And the process and the conclusions sidetrack you from having the experience that removes the need for understanding. And what you had called understanding is replaced with Knowing, with a capital “K”.

Now “gaining an understanding” is part of the process that is valuable to you in your Awakening, because it helps you to arrive at a point where reason and logic prove to you intellectually at least, that it is safe to yield, that it is safe to let go of the intellectual process and allow yourself into the deep experience of your Being.

But understanding your way forward is not what will get you to an intellectual clarification that you call enlightenment. Enlightenment is experiential. Enlightenment is what happens when you shift from the intellect into the void, into the quiet center of you where the emergence of the experience of your Being can occur and Knowing will be what you are experiencing.

Now as I also shared with Paul, the ability to reason, the ability to use logic, the ability to use imagination, these factors are not ego factors they are divine. But you all get the cart before the horse. You try to use those faculties as a means of getting to enlightenment, rather than getting to enlightenment and then utilizing those faculties to give expression to what you find yourself Knowing.

You try to reason in order to get to Knowing, when the necessity is to get to Knowing and then let those faculties be used for the purpose of finding the words to express it—for finding the means of translating it through art, or business, or relationships—what you find yourself Knowing.

So reason and logic and imagination and understanding are not dirty words, they are not illegitimate, they are not of the ego. They have a place. But if you start with them the ego will take over, because you are not starting from the standpoint of an experience. And indeed what you call the human condition is a result of starting at the point of the intellect, rather than at the level of your Soul.

And as a result there has come to be “created” an illusory sense of everything that is going on. And thus, you walk around in the Kingdom of Heaven bumping into divine Reality, because you are out of sync with it. And when you bump into it and you say “Ouch” then immediately there comes into play a sense of your stupidity and that there is something wrong with you and that you must be paying a karmic debt.

All of this is what happens at the level of the intellect. When you are stubbing your toe, when you are up against a problem you are face to face with the Reality of the Kingdom of Heaven, but the ego is terming it a devil, a flaw in your nature, the dark forces. When the Kingdom of Heaven—so to speak, the reality of things—lets you know that you are being incongruent with Reality you tend to not rejoice at the blatant opportunity to discern what is Real that's in front of you, and rather many of you get on your metaphysical bandwagon and attempt to get rid of the opportunity. Because when the Christ knocks at your door the ego calls it the Devil, and suggests that you had better use every resource you have to get rid of it.

So do not make a bugaboo out of understanding, but understand that understanding is not where to start, neither is reasoning where to start. Where to start is in that quiet sanctuary within yourself, where you as a little ego seem to know nothing. Start in that place where you accept yourself to the very best of your ability and allow yourself to be comfortable with who you are at the moment. And in that place where you are not required to be something more, and you are not required to do something more, listen, allow the clarity of who you really are to begin to emerge in that quietness, filling that quietness with Knowing. In other words, with the experience.

For example: You meditate, many of you, and you know what it is to become very, very still, to be in that place where there are no thoughts, but there is awareness of everything. And you think this is a wonderful experience of peace. And you do not realize that the experience of peace is the direct experience of your Self, with a capital "S", and that the peace is not just a substitute for anxiety, another emotion. The peace, the quiet, the stability, the security that you feel, the absence of vulnerability that you feel is not just some mental experience, you are literally touching directly and experiencing directly your capital "S" Self and its nature.

And when you allow yourself to abide in that peace without trying to accomplish anything, by means of the peace, and you just explore it by allowing it, you then begin to find joy rising up from the very depths of that peace, which means the same thing as rising up from the very depths of your Being.

And that joy is the further disclosure to you of your direct experience of your God Self, of who you divinely Are. And as you begin to just be aware of what you are experiencing, and as you begin to realize that this is an experience of who you Are, it begins to be quite profound. Because you are beginning, just beginning to know yourself and to know God. And as that clarity begins to energy, you find yourself knowing yourself just like you know what an orange taste like when you taste it.

You also find that there's absolutely no need to talk about what you are experiencing. But you do find as time goes on that there are occasions when you feel motivated to convey this very simple and clear knowing about yourself, and about your brother, and about life. And this is when imagination, and reason, and logic come into play. But you see, you aren't using it to arrive at knowing, you are using it to express an experience.

And as you bring those factors into play, what you have to say takes on great meaning for those who hear you, because they know you are not talking off the top of your head, they know you are speaking from experience. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: If I remember or got it straight, at one point you said, no one has reached total enlightenment on this planet while incarnated since you did. And lately I've been feel that... I watched a movie "2010" and there's a phrase in there, "Something wonderful is going to happen, something wonderful is going to happen." And that just keeps running through my mind and I think there's a real connection between those two.

ANSWER: Indeed, Awakening is happening, even though you seem to be experiencing it in slow motion, even though you seem to be aware of each little process of release and embrace. It is highly unlikely that the year 1994 will be reached without one individual Awakening on the face of your planet. And I will tell you something: Whether you hear of it or not, whether it becomes public knowledge or not every single person on the face of your planet will feel the release from the significant inclination to continue to be imposed upon by the ego.

Now everyone is already finding it easier because so much of the Brotherhood is already totally Awake. And because so many of you—not specifically you in the room, but so many of you on the face of your globe—are paying attention to the movement within yourselves, which is the equivalent of the totality of you penetrating the ego structures, and which is also the equivalent of each of you not as significantly blocking your remembrance of Home, with a capital "H".

Now remember, you tend to think very three-dimensionally. And so when I use the word "Home," you tend to think of it as a place rather than a natural clarity of awareness from which nothing of All That Is is hidden. Home is you in your right Mind.

And so because so many are beginning not to resist this "memory" that is within you, a greater alignment of that which is within the ego structures, with that of your totality that is outside of the ego structures is occurring. And that alignment is significantly weakening the ego structures.

That of you which is seemingly encased within the ego structures is not functioning at odds with, or polarized against that which you are in your totality outside of those ego structures.

And as the polarization diminishes—which is what the yielding is all about—there is less and less present to energize the ego structures, and they weaken and more penetrations occur, more conscious experiences of your oneness with the totality that you Are occur, and you call it enlightenment, upliftment, inspiration, confidence and hope where it is not justified according to your best reason.

Indeed, something wonderful is happening. Do not put it in the future. It is already happening. There is indeed good news. And you are the good news. If you are happy, how do you think the rest of the Brotherhood is feeling? Because understand that as long as there are any who are sleeping and dreaming dreams and believing their dreams the Brotherhood as a whole is not experiencing its integrity consciously.

And so as each one of you Awakens, and if I may put it this way, takes your place consciously as the presence of God, the Brotherhood as a whole experiences itself and its integrity more completely.

Now I will tell you something: As long as there is one mutilator, as long as there is one thief, as long as there is one murderer who is not Awake, your Awakening is not total. And that is another reason for you to insist upon finding the Christ right where it seems to be obscured by an ego. That is why those of us who are completely Awake are supporting the Awakening of every single individual who is still slumbering and dreaming ugly nightmares, and believing that they are who they see themselves to be in their dream. And you cannot afford to take the ego presentation that another gives and believe it for an instant, else you prolong your sleep.

Now I will say one more thing. I am not working with you for selfish reasons, so that I may experience the Brotherhood—the integrity of the Brotherhood fully and completely. As you begin to yield to who you Are, as you begin to yield and let the Father fill you with all that the Father Is, as you take the time to connect with yourself in the silence, you will begin to find that you are not loving, but you are love itself.

And you will be the experience of the ever movement that love is. You will feel loved by the very love that you are. And you will find it incredibly impossible not to love, not to be that which recognizes what is Real in each and everything. You will find it impossible to withhold your acknowledgment of the divinity of a thing, or of an individuality whether he has mutilated, or killed, or robbed, or not.

And once you begin to truly feel this love that you are, you will realize what a sacrifice it would be to actually withhold it from those whom the ego says are unworthy of it, because it would constitute a squelching of who you are and what you are. It would constitute what the COURSE says is an attack on God. Because you would be withholding the Movement of God right where you are. You would be standing in the position as an arbitrator saying, “God can shine here. God can’t shine here. I will not let God through here. I will let God through here, you’re really worth it.”

You will realize what a sacrifice it is to you, and it will become ultimately clear to you how uncomfortable it is for you to try to be the dam, if you will, that can cut off the flow of who and what you are, or allow it to flow. The moment you stand as an arbitrator you are not deciding for or against another’s receipt of love, you are standing as the division point between your experiencing the love that you are. You stand at the point of blocking your receipt, if I may put it that way, of God’s Love for you.

And that is too much of a cost. And it is something that you cannot succeed at 100%. And in effect you are standing up against an infinite movement from a very tiny place, and the infinite movement will not be stopped by your idiotic arrogance, because your arrogance is infinitesimal in the face of infinity. And so your entire intent to block the presence of God can be nothing but painful, hurtful, unpleasant. It’s called suffering. It’s called the human condition. It’s called life.

And so you see when you are enjoined to love your brother, you are really being enjoined to not stand as the arbitrator doling out or withholding the Movement of your essential Being.

The ego has been called itself an attack on God, because it holds itself up as the funnel—ridiculous as it sounds—through which God can or cannot flow. It stands as a resistance to the flow of God, which is the flow of Creation, which is the flow of Love, which is the flow of Life.

So the moment you drop the stance of an arbitrator the moment the funnel dissolves, all that is left is God being everywhere, and you experiencing the fulfillment that is God Moving and recognizing Himself in the Movement. You being inseparable from the Movement and finding and recognizing yourself in the Movement, because you are not holding yourself out to be something separate or different from the Father.

Something wonderful is happening. But if you value too much being the arbitrator, this wonderful thing that is happening will seem to pull your job out from underneath you, and you will not be too happy about it until you yield to being jobless as an ego, and allow yourself to simply be the busyness of the Father in action. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: So when this first one wakes up, it's going to be contagious and spread like wildfire perhaps?

ANSWER: That is one way of putting it, but I also want you to understand that every little millimeter of progress each of you makes in your Awakening is contagious beyond the apparent impact of that millimeter.

So do not wait for the wonderfulness of what will happen when this one I have mentioned Awakens and pay attention to the wonderfulness of what is already happening in the now. Again, watch the degree to which you think three-dimensionally in terms of time and space, and distance from your Awakening.

I will repeat it again because it is so important: Every single one of you as you sit here right now are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, with your eyes all squinted up saying, "I cannot see the perfection." Now why are you going to wait for Joe Blow over on this little hill in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven just as you are to open his eyes up, when all you have to do is open your eye up? And maybe it won't be Joe Blow over there on the hill, and maybe it will be you who are the one.

Now I have said that it is almost impossible to arrive in the year 1994 without one person waking up, that is not to mean that there will not be more. So let's get with it!

QUESTION: Hello, Paul.

PAUL: Good morning.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: I love to exercise. I love to run. I like to feel myself from my three-dimensional point of view. I have recently felt so good at my exercising that I didn't pay attention to certain sorts of things as far as, well, I've put on a little bit of weight and my knee starting giving me trouble. And I figured it was a result of the exercise and the running. And I can't diet easily. I have a hard time taking it down gracefully, so I can just stop eating for about three days and take off a full ten pounds.

And I came up with another thing that is part of a thing that I know I can correct. I developed a hemorrhoid, and I can correct that with diet. And it's like I gave my permission to create this that I could straighten out the diet and stay straight with the diet. What I'm wondering is kind of what is the meaning of the knee and the hemorrhoid trouble?

ANSWER: The meaning here is that it is time for you to move beyond the pleasure of the focused physical awareness. To put it simply, it is time for you to move beyond the pleasure of being in charge of your body through the use of your will. It is time for you to open up to and discover the fact that your body knows how to be what it was formed to be, and that it knows how to be the form that it was formed to be.

Your body is a divine idea in the Mind of God. It is a specific and unique expression of the Father's Will to Be. Because it is specific it is forever identifiable, both as the Father and as you, not as though you are actually two separate things. But the specific expressions of the Father, of the Father's Will are specific and individualized, so that there is no confusion between one individualization and another, even though it is all the Father.

The meaning set into motion by the Movement of the Mind of God is the Movement of intelligence, and also it is a Movement which is incapable of, I'm going to say, decaying or losing definition. And so the specific definition of your body is eternal.

Now if your body knows how to be the form that expresses the intent and meaning of the conscious Movement of God, then it is not necessary for you to exercise it into shape. And it truly is not necessary for you to diet to reconfigure your rear-end.

Now I'm going to come back to this point we discussed earlier. Knowing the spiritual or metaphysical absolute fact does not negate the wisdom of using simple common sense. And if the particular configuration of your rear-end at the moment is uncomfortable, and if changing your diet will allow for reconfiguration to occur that more nearly expresses naturalness, then change your diet.

But understand that that is a manipulative process that you can alter again through improper diet and inappropriate exertion of energy, and therefore the reconfiguration does not represent your yielding to your bodies intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly, or shall I say, your bodies intent to identify the intent and meaning that the Father has set into motion that is called your individuality and that which identifies you.

And so even though you use the common sense means to relieve what is uncomfortable, understand that that is not ultimate. Because until you have let yourself into the experience of the underlying order of your body and of your world, you will not feel secure, and your healing will not be permanent. The uncovering of the eternal form of your body will not occur, and you will not feel your security.

What you call a problem with your knee and with your derriere is truly your bumping into the inconsistency between your beliefs from the ego's frame of reference, and the Reality of you in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. In other words, I am suggesting to you that you not try to find the great lesson in the hemorrhoid or the problem with the knee, but rather that you find the lesson in the opportunity that you have to experience a breakthrough because Reality has come up and, shall I say, kicked you in the rear-end to get your attention.

Always what you call problems is reality getting your attention and saying, "Give up the limit that you insist upon being bound by." In this case the limit you are being bound by is the belief that your body is not divine and does not know how to be what the Father set into motion. And that it needs your personal help through the use of your will, your personal will.

I encourage each and everyone of you to appraise your body more constructively, and begin to trust its capacity to be what it is—it is the intent to identify the Father's Will, the Father's Creative Movement. And the less you distrust, the less you hate it, the less you are frustrated by it the less you will introduce negative and conflicted dynamics into your means of perception, and the less distortion you will see. In other words, what you have call healing will begin to occur. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are most welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I don't quite know what to ask, so I'm open to anything you would have to say to me.

ANSWER: I am going to give yourself some more time to allow a question to emerge. Do not try to figure out a question, and we will come back to you.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I want first to say that it is a blessing to be here with you and share as part of this larger body of Beings. I'm feeling generally blessed in consciousness in an increasing openness in my relationships in art and music and in my very happy sense of trust that I experience.

Since deciding to come to this workshop I've been focusing on questions to ask you. And my mind has been flooded with thoughts. Many pages of questions have been written. I felt unable to choose among them and so made a list of general topics planning to ask you to choose. When I wrote the list one topic stood out clearly, almost as though the ink of that written word was more bold.

Since my late teens I have had a problem with stuttering. It comes and goes, linked perhaps with a level of internal relaxation I am experiencing, or whether or not a situation is loaded for me. Stuttering has been a source of discomfort and frustration. I've learned over the years to let go of all attachment and embarrassment when I stutter. Still I sense limits in my present speech patterns and lack of fluidity in certain situations.

Why do I stutter? And how can this be released? And I also welcome any other comments you might have.

ANSWER: You have already described why you stutter. Because you are in circumstances which bring out or elicit a sense of vulnerability, and understand—every single one of you—that when you feel vulnerability you also inescapable feel guilty of something. And so when you are feeling vulnerable you are waiting for an ax to fall. You are waiting for what the ego calls justice to occur, which of course will cost you. And this of course, increases the feeling of vulnerability, and every single one of your behaviors becomes awkward, and unnatural, and defensive.

Now it happens that with you it becomes specifically focused as stuttering, that is not the only way it manifests with you, but that is the most significant way.

Now I am going to encourage you to utilize the stuttering, or the unnatural selection of words that occurs so that you can avoid stuttering as simple indicators that you need to relax.

I'm going to put it a different way: I am going to encourage you to use the recognition of the inhibited flow of speech as an indicator that you are currently utilizing the vantage point of the ego as the place from which you are going to observe Reality or the Kingdom of Heaven. In other words, it should serve as a trigger, that what is called for is a choice—a choice for the vantage point of your ego, or for the vantage point of your Being. These are really the only two choices any of you have at any time. But you can use this manifestation as your ally, where it has been your enemy in the past.

You see, very few of you consistently have a dinner bell that says to you, “You are slipping into the ego's vantage point.” And as a result you slip into it and you stay in it and until things get really bad you don't realize you are in it, and you don't realize that you have an alternative.

But you have—by means of the impediment to the smooth flow of speech and expression of ideas—a rather constant and recognizable means of noticing that you have slipped into the ego’s vantage point, and that provides you with all you need to recognize that rather than reacting to the circumstance a simple choice for your peace needs to occur so that you can quietly go within and become more centered so that you can speak out from your peace.

Again, I encourage you to interpret the problem as that which points to the solution—in other words, as your ally—and avail yourself of it so that its presence doesn’t become more of the problem accentuating the sense of vulnerability that the circumstances are eliciting. Be glad you have a recognizable dinner bell that says that of the two choices you are currently picking the wrong one. That is not too simple an answer, and we are not overlooking anything essential. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I hear what you are saying, and it makes sense, I mean, I understand what you said. On a practical level when I find that I am reacting from the ego and I begin stuttering, I can recall situations where I sense the process and I sense I’m operating out of fear, because I have a picture that I need to be in a certain way in other people’s eyes for the out come of the situation to be way I picture it should be. And it sounds like what I need to do is to trust that I don’t really need to be working so hare at it.

But many times the internal signals I’m getting are, “this is happening, that means shut up and don’t say anything,” and that means just since I’m stuttering and since I’m reacting with anxiety that the best thing is to not do anything. Because it seems like the thing I hope to gain from the situation is causing it, and so I should just step out of any investment in the situation. But in some cases that isn’t really possible.

And it seems like no matter how much I try to surrender, I try to let go, that the choices I have are to not have any response at all, or if you just work through the stuttering and just do it in that way.

ANSWER: I will tell you something: Don’t ever back out because of what you think others will think. If you back out, let it be because from a centered place within yourself you are sensing that whether you were stuttering or not it is wise for you to keep your mouth shut because that is what will contribute most to the resolution of what is happening.

If you do not have that clear awareness that it is appropriate for you to keep your mouth shut, then whether you are speaking with a stutter or not, speak, and do not apologize. And do not assume that it’s unfair to make everyone else wait until you have managed to get it out, because you do not know what value there may be for them in not being able to keep up the, shall I say, rapid fire pace of the problem.

Now remember that from the ego's vantage point everything will be a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync. Your attention will not be on you it will be on everyone outside of you. The source of your problem will not seem to be on you it will seem to be out there. As a result, the solution of the problem will not be recognizable as being within you, but as out there when someone else changes.

Now you know, you have had experience with being at peace within yourself, with being centered, and even in the middle of a circumstance which is uncomfortable and which seems to elicit the stuttering you are able to remember with your memory somewhat of the experience of centeredness that you have had. And if you will simply draw upon your memory, take a couple of deep breaths, disengage from participation just for the space of two or three deep breaths, and remember to the best of your ability under the circumstances, the peace you have felt when you were centered, and let there be a sense of choosing for your peace rather than the ego's vantage point, you will find yourself allowing that relaxation to occur, that better centeredness, and you will find yourself able to speak more clearly.

Now one more thing: You had better dare to love yourself right in the middle of your stuttering. You had better be willing to allow yourself to express yourself haltingly because there is no call for you to do otherwise.

Paul lost the flow of words a few minutes ago, he could have become reactive, or as he did, let it be just what it was without giving it additional critical meaning. And in allowing it to be what it was, and being relaxed, and not reacting personally, he was available for the meanings I was expressing to continue to come smoothly.

There was no call for reaction. There was no call to move into an ego reactive space, even though his ego would have loved it. And he made a choice on the spot. And you can make the choice on the spot, but you must remember that the choice is not for your image, it is not for your face, it is not for how others see you, the choice is for your peace, and the fact that you do not need to engage in being conflicted. And that when you make the choice for your peace and you do not validate being reactive, reaction will not be energized in you. And you will continue to be the place where clarity comes forth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Okay, so it sounds like I need not to pay attention to the actual physical mechanism that seems to be staring me in the face.

The physical mechanism being that I know what I want to say and the physical linkage between knowing what I want say and the words coming out into the air.

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: So I need not to focus on that?

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: Just to ignore that in the same way that one ignores the complexities of the ego or whatever?

ANSWER: Exactly.

QUESTION: Okay. Do you have anything else you would say to me that would be helpful to me, in general?

ANSWER: I will just simply say that you are doing beautifully, in spite of what you sometimes think. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thanks very much.

QUESTION: Would you please give me some suggestions about ways that I might improve the teaching that I do, either in terms of content or emphasis? I would also like to hear anything you might have to say concerning whatever you think is important for me here.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. What kind of teaching do you do?

QUESTION: I teach yoga.

ANSWER: Here we have another situation of the cart before the horse. Originally yoga, the positions, emerged spontaneously as the result of meditation. Now one engages in the positions in order to arrive at an experience of centered meditation. This is all right, but it is important for you in your work with your students to emphasize the yielding mentally that is expressive of the yielding physically that they are engaging in with the yoga positions. They do not think they are yielding physically, it seems to them in the beginning as though they are working quite hard. But they are yielding to capacities or positions that they were not aware that they could embrace.

The point it to arrive at a point where there attention to their body allows them to get past their body. Others do very well to get past their body without engaging their body. As a general rule students of yoga are individuals whose bodies and the control of their bodies is primary. They are and intend to be controlling and manipulative individuals. And through the use of yoga they learn to utilize or practice control for the purpose of getting beyond.

Again, in working with your students, be sure to convey to them that the end goal is the perfect peace of their conscious awareness.

Now, I also encourage you in working with those who are advanced, let us say, begin to suggest to them that they be sensitive to changes of posture that they will find a feeling for—postures which are not traditional. And encourage them to allow those positions to be moved into from an intuitive level. Then yoga will become a moving practice of meditation that embraces both body and mind flexibly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I do have a question, and the reason that I was embarrassed to ask it is because I'm very conscious of how young I am and I like to think of myself as adult, and this question makes me feel very, very young.

So here's the question: I still suck my thumb occasionally for comfort and to help me go to sleep. And it's something that has screwed up my teeth somewhat, and makes me feel guilt and discomfort. And I would like your comments on this.

ANSWER: How wonderful that you have such a simple way to allow yourself to feel comfort. It is time for you to withdraw the judgment.

By the time you are twenty-one you will have had your teeth straightened. And there will be no irregularity to their beautiful shape. And so you will not have set up for yourself a lifetime of disfigurement as a result of this particular form of letting yourself into your comfort.

Everyone could learn a lesson here, not so much from the particular sucking of the thumb, but from the fact that each one of you when you are experiencing comfort has let yourself into that comfort, and whatever works ought to be utilized without judgment.

Each of you has your own idiosyncrasies which are not necessarily public. And you could treat this as a part of your uniqueness, if you will. In many other ways all of you are bold about being unique.

I would encourage all of you to take a look at the things you feel most embarrassed by. Almost 100% of the time the things that you feel embarrassed by are the things which are the most direct expressions of who you really are. In other words, they are those places where you tend to be most genuine. But of course it tends to make you out as an odd-ball.

The silly questions, the ones you feel are the silliest questions are the ones that generally embrace your most profound learning. And the reason is that when you feel silly, and when you feel embarrassed you are most in touch with yourself with the least defense. And this is not something that you are comfortable with. It is hard to be genuine because you have been coerced into behavior that is acceptable, that conforms. But you know what? Each one of you is an individual and there is specific unique expression embodied in the individuality that you are.

The Father never stops to repeat himself. Creation is forever new. And it takes every bit of the infinite self-expression of the Father to express the completeness of the Father. And when you conform, you cover up somewhat of the explicit uniqueness of the intent that was manifested as a result of the Father's Creative Movement.

As a general rule your egos are most at peace when you are the least noticeable, when you are the best conformist, when you are putting on the right face at the right time in the right place, rather than being you. And you have been educated to value such skillful conformity. You have not been educated to value who you genuinely are, who you are when you are the least defended, the most humble. And yet it is when you let yourself into that that the gift of you is made.

Now the sucking of the thumb may seem like a small thing, and for the most part a problem, something to feel guilty about, embarrassed by. We will make Christopher's ego a little uneasy. In his genuineness he sleeps with a teddy bear. Now this is beautiful. Do not feel embarrassed when you are uninhibitedly being at home with yourself, when you are allowing yourself into your comfort and your security. It is ever present, but you do not yield into it very easily. And it is time for you to love yourself at the times when you are being most genuine and undefended. That is where the real beauty of you comes forth. That is where the real value, that is where the real gift of your individuality is expressed. That is when it is possible for it to be received because it isn't being covered up.

Now also by the time you get to be twenty-one you will have naturally gravitated toward another means of providing yourself with comfort and coziness and ease. But in the mean time, don't be afraid to be you. You may want to be an adult and do "grown up things," but there are many grown ups in this room who ought to be sucking their thumb. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. May I ask another sort of question that has a little bit with that, I mean not with the sucking of the thumb, but with feeling young, for my age?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: Okay, because I feel like I'm being exposed to a lot of very wonderful things at my age, I feel very privileged. And I want to be able to share it with people my own age without seeming like a religious fanatic. And I'd like to know how to do that.

ANSWER: First of all realize that they don't need what you have to share. Part of what you are being exposed to is concept that everyone is the direct expression of God, everyone is therefore the Christ even if they are unconscious of their Christhood.

The thing you can most significantly bring to others is your acknowledgment within yourself of their inherent divinity, rather than what they are presenting. That acknowledgment of their divinity constitutes a joining with them at the level of their divinity, which strengthens it, whether you open your mouth or not. And if indeed they are the presence of the Christ, they do not have a need which you can fulfill.

Then if you will realize that so that you approach them with a sense of their already existing wholeness, then you will be able to be intuitive and sensitive so that you will know when it is appropriate to contribute something helpful to the conversation, and when it is appropriate to be quiet. And if you pay attention to that and abide by the inner feeling that you feel, others will not feel invaded by you or overwhelmed by what you say. But realize that silence is often as important as saying something, in terms of realization occurring. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have an immediate question that I want to ask about my little grandson. I have him with me for a few days and he's complaining about a stomach ache. And I want to know if it's the apple juice, allergy, or whether it's something that I should follow up and follow through on, because I have to take him back home to his parents?

ANSWER: Let us simply say to steer clear of the apple juice for the rest of the time that he is with you. In the mean time, there will be a healing session for him immediately, and you should find the condition absent.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. May I ask another question with regard to him? I'm a little concerned about his environment with my daughter and his step-father. Is there anything that I can do to help this situation?

ANSWER: Keep your nose out of it!

QUESTION: Thank you. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I in the process of learning to follow my inner guidance I have become aware of a strong push towards getting involved in spiritual healing and laying on of hands. And it feels very real to me, but I feel a lot of resistance to getting involved in this work—a lot of fear around it. I guess I'm asking for some guidance and suggestions for an appropriate way to approach this, and how to keep my ego in an appropriate position in this work. And also as...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you. You are not going to be able to keep your ego in any position, if you address IT you will strengthen it. You must simply let it be wherever it chooses to sit acting like whatever kind of an idiot it is choosing to act like, and allow it while giving your attention—because you are different from your attention—while giving your attention to what your Being is unfolding.

Learn to notice your ego's antics, because in noticing and being able to say, "oh, there goes my ego again," you are obviously standing as the observer of the ego rather than identifying with it. And just that amount of distance from it releases you from its apparent influence, leaving you free to give your attention to what your Being is unfolding.

Now, do not be a reluctant or timid explorer or the divinity of Being. Do not be afraid to explore the Movement that you feel arising within you, or the inclination or desire that is emerging. See it as exploration. See it as exploration which will move you into greater clarity about the reality of things, while deftly moving you out of limiting beliefs.

Honor this feeling that is coming from within you. Do not require that it bring along with it definite structure and pattern to what you are going to do. Explore whatever happens with the laying on of hands with whoever is interested in exploring its potential with you. Make no obligations upon yourself to succeed and do not care if you fail. The point is to allow yourself into the movement yieldingly without requiring anything of it.

For you, simply keep your eyes open. Be alert to what unfolds. And above all do not assume that you ought to know how to heal. All you have to be is the place where the healing can, shall I say, come through.

Understand that the healing energy, as it were, is the energy of love and love knows how to meet the human need. And you as an intellect, you as a person do not need to know. And again, the demand to understand what you are doing is the ego's requirement so that it can duplicate if possible the Movement of Love and the result of that Movement.

Let yourself into the flow of love, be spontaneous in what you allow to happen. And rejoice at the results. And do not require of yourself that you be able to make it happen. You must allow it to happen. And I simply want you to explore the allowing. Let it unfold. Do not provide structured parameters for it to unfold into. Let yourself be the place where love shines through, without any sense of obligation to coerce it into a desired result. It is the presence of the Father, and it knows what to do. And you will be a most effective healer if you are not attempting to be a healer right in the middle of being the healing movement.

Now just let go of the timidity. Let go of it. I did not say become bold, I just said let go of the timidity, and be willing to explore. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would like to know how with my utmost capacity walk in the presence of the master right here, right now, today, and simultaneously with my talents and my gifts be as practicable as possible and be as helpful to human kind in creating the highest expression amongst those around me. And specifically I would like to say that I love playing music, and I love singing, though I'm a little bit shy of being center stage.

ANSWER: You do walk with a master everyday, or shall I say, a master walks with you everyday. And this is true of everyone of you in the room. Every day since the moment of conception you have been accompanied by one who is totally awake, who is functioning in the capacity of a teacher with you.

In order to consciously experience that fact you must arrive at a point of desiring to experience this companionship consciously. And then you must become defenseless enough to let it register with you. You must let it in. The moment the desire is there your teacher, your guide begins to work with you to break down whatever blocks communication.

Now every single one of you and I am particularly addressing this to the questioner, is worthy of this companionship with a master. Because as Ramtha would put it: Each one of you are masters. And masters are certainly worthy of walking with, and talking with, and sharing with masters. Every single one of you is worthy of the attention and the unequivocal love that is extended to you and which you are embraced by from this one who companions with you. The only reason one does not experience it is because either he doesn't know he is companioned with, or he or she has not let that one in for whatever reason.

Now you are worthy of the degree of enlightened mastership that you conceptualize your teacher to have. And you will not be imposing upon him if you engage him in dialog in active conscious companionship.

Now if you want to be a light in the world, you are going to have to energize the light that you are, or shall I say, uncover the light that you are. And the only way that you can energize the light that you are is by loving yourself enough to be at peace with yourself, so that you are able to be genuine and unconditional. And I will tell you something: A look from one who is unconditional is healing, enlivening, enlightening.

And it is not necessary for you to assume that you will have to have an activity, or an act, or a process that you engage in in being a light to the world. And in your not planning how you will be a light in the world, the light that you are will begin to become recognizably present, and others may say to you, "Ah, here is one that makes me realize how wonderful I am whenever I am around him." And you will say, "Really, that's what happens to you? I wasn't even doing anything." And there is the secret.

Because when you are being the light, when you are letting the light shine it is not with any sense of control, and therefore it is not with any sense of accomplishment. It is easier than anything you are imagining. And if you will relax and love yourself, accept yourself, be happy with yourself whether you are accomplishing anything or not, the world will say you are accomplishing wonders. And you will rejoice that something is happening, even though you are not able to say how that came to pass. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would love to hear that dialog with my constant companion wherever I go.

ANSWER: He hears you. Now I encourage you to take time daily to momentarily feel that desire and then be silent and listen, unwillfully, allowingly. And do understand that it is your guide's, your teacher's intent to have that dialog, that communion consciously established. And then persist unwillfully, patiently in being open and providing that time for the conversation to occur. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I just gotta say thanks for what's been happening. There's so much joy, love, peace and questions that have been answered for me already—questions I didn't even know I had. And it's just been fascinating. And I'm going to ask what I hadn't even thought to ask, but it's something I want to get a little bit more clarification on.

You have spoken that we'll have in 1994 an enlightened person, or maybe more than one. And we've touched a little bit upon positive things that are happening on our planet. And I wondered if you could maybe go in a little deeper, will we see a like a world form of government, or will there even be a government, or what can we see in the future?

ANSWER: True government in human experience, is that which upholds and facilitates the truth about mankind. It is a facilitator rather than an enforcer. And if it is a facilitator rather than an enforcer then it means that there must be an absence of those to be governed. And if there is an absence of those to be governed it means that there are those who are practicing self-government, individually. And if you are going to practice self-government, you are going to have to get in touch with yourself.

This getting in touch is happening whether it occurs in a metaphysical or spiritual setting or not. People are beginning to get in touch with what they really value and with what is really important. And this is happening at a grassroots level all around your globe, even though there are spots where there seems to be a retarded progress. Nevertheless this shifting is occurring.

Everyone complains about the government. Nobody likes being governed, but everyone is reluctant to be self-governed. It is nice to have a government to blame. And so understand that a world government will be that body of individuals who are facilitating the will of the people, who will be facilitating self-government.

Movement is already beginning to occur in that direction. It will be a little bit rocky, but not in a threatening way, because those who are governing are fearful of withdrawing the government just as a parent is fearful of emancipating the child when it is time for them to become self-governed. And like children who want to continue to have parents to blame, the governed tend to want to not become self-responsible, self-governed.

Now it is not likely before the year 2000 for there to be a world government. But by 1995 you will find yourselves having, shall I say, cooperative government. Because you are past the time where any individual government, any individual country can continue to operate in an isolated manner thinking that their private interests are more important than the interests of the whole. You cannot continue to think of the world as anything other than a whole body of citizens.

Nothing you do anymore is isolated. Anything that is done affects everyone else on the planet. I'm going to tell you that unity has occurred, and everyone is still acting as though everyone is separate. And so the moving into unity consciousness is really a matter of facing already existing reality. And to be acting inconsistent with already existing reality, in human terms, is going to be increasingly difficult and shouldn't be comfortable.

You cannot have national economies, there is a world economy. You cannot have national interests, because there is a world of individualities who are touched by and affected by every other individuality. A world commerce will evolve. A world economy will begin to find definition.

And this brings us back to what we were talking about earlier. The intellect, the capacity to reason and the use of the imagination are going to need to be brought into play to give words to the unity that has already been established on your planet. There is already a world economy, and the words need to be listened for to express this experience of world economy that already exists. The experience is already occurring, but people are missing it because they are not allowing the ideas to emerge, to give expression to what already exists.

Now the world and everyone in it is coming into a very wonderful time, truly. For those who insist upon holding on to the status quo, or the past, or past conceptualizations it will not be a very pleasant time. But nevertheless you are going to see increasing manifestations of intelligence and order emerging. And everyone is going to have to become more unconditional—more yielding to the whole.

Now understand that just as when you let go of the ego sense of private personal selfhood you do not lose your unique individuality. Just as when you let go of the sense or experience of being small and open yourself up into the infinite conscious experience of Being, which I have described as the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of Being, and which is inseparable from God's experience of Himself, you do not lose your integrity, your experience of identity.

Likewise as national boundaries and private national thinking in opposition to other nations dissolves, the culture and the richness of those nations will not be swallowed up. In fact, creative self-expression will become greater because so little energy is being pulled off for defense.

How much everyone wants to open up to the Brotherhood of Man, with a capital “B” and a capital “M”, as long as you don’t have to do it with those of the Brotherhood that are on your planet. Indeed, you can open up to those of the Brotherhood who are completely Awake. But the practice of your Awakening will involve your opening up to your fellow man with the clear intent of desiring to see and experience that which is Real, with a capital “R”, in each and everyone.

It will be the actual practice of meaningfully feeling for the Soul mate in every single one of your brothers and sisters, not just the one that is your other half that for the moment is somewhat nebulous, but who you would love to connect with. You see it is easy to think in intangible terms, but when that Soul mate if he really existed came along and you were faced with flesh and blood and certain ego habits that would necessarily be there, you would wonder whether maybe you weren’t listening clearly or watching carefully, and you would love to slip back into the longing for this wonderful one that is your other half who this one couldn’t possibly be.

Now, what is it that is going to allow you to embrace your fellow man more easily as the Christ, as your Soul mate, as something other than your enemy? And I will tell you the only thing that will allow you to do that is for you to find out that you are not an enemy, that you are not judgeable, that you are flawless and sinless and lovable. And you do that by becoming defenseless against your Self with a capital “S”. And in becoming defenseless by moving into that quiet place in you where you are willing to embrace the more of you that you are not presently aware of, there will be the emerging of that awareness, that experience and the feeling of the profoundness and divinity of your being that will accompany it.

You see waking up is not an intellectual process, it’s an experiential process. It is something that feels like something. And you are aware that it is you that you are feeling, and you are aware that it is God that you are feeling, and you are aware that there is no way to find out where the difference is between the God that you are feeling and the you that you are feeling. And that is a profoundly meaningful revelation experientially.

And as you become aware that this little piss ant mortal that you thought you were is this wonderful presence of God, it becomes apparent that every other piss any mortal that you’ve been looking at is identical.

And now your appraisal of every other piss ant mortal will be coming from an experience of your Godhood, your divinity, an experience, not an idea, not a concept. And that's when the joining with your brother and sister occurs in a meaningful and transforming way.

So the elementary step is, and involves, getting in touch with yourself and truly loving yourself enough to become undefended against it. Why does everyone feel reluctant to yield to their self, to yield to the Father, because you believe that if you yield what is to become uncovered will condemn you. That the goodness of whatever is revealed will uncover the piss any mortal that you are—meaning, that you believe that you are—and if you are convicted you will be forever lost.

You do not grasp that the clear experience of Reality means the clear experience of the Reality of you, it is the uncovering of your guiltlessness.

I will tell you the light of truth does not scan the surface of life coming to the point where you are, examining it, condemning it and saying, "Go to hell." The light of truth, you might say, scans life, finds you and uncovers the fact that you aren't the piss ant mortal that your ego convinced you that you were, and relieves you of the guilt of the natural expectation of penalty and punishment and exalts your consciousness of yourself into a true apprehension of the presence of the Father that is your constituting presence.

It uncovers the truth about you and in the presence of the light there can be no darkness at all. There cannot be any speck of error, any speck of fault, any speck of guilt found in you. And when you begin to even get a glimpse of that experientially, you find yourself knowing something, you find yourself knowing without a doubt, you find yourself knowing unchallengeably that your brother is identical to you. And then the light of truth that is disclosed to you your divinity shines out upon your fellow man in your knowing about him. And that is the way the shift occurs.

And I will break with this one last point. The universe is on your side, Reality is on your side, the powers that be—however you want to put it—are on your side, the totality of what you are is on the side of your increasing clarity. And as a result of that increasing experiential clarity, you will find great support present nourishing your having the nerve to look at your so-called enemy and say, "I do not believe what my ego is suggesting, because I know that the divinity that is true of me, that I'm beginning to experience is true there, and therefore anything else I see is an illusion and I'm not going to validate it anymore."

That is the beginning of the Awakening on the planet. That is the beginning of healing. That is the beginning of the end of illusion. But it is going to happen in the nitty-gritty of life, in the actual relationships with each other, because everyone that you are with and the place that you are is the presence of Christ's in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven dreaming a dream that they are in a plane of matter as piss ant mortals. And so right here is where to cut through the illusion and wake up.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: As you spoke of earlier, I've had the opportunity to experience the trust while working with you, and allowing myself to open up to the source and abundance. Again, I'm face with a problem that looks like I'm going to find a solution to. And I want to be sure that I keep the ego at bay long enough for me to see what the solution is going to be and pay attention to my guide. Any suggestions for me?

ANSWER: Very specifically, listen with utter patience. Listen without any sense of urgency. Remember that you are not going to be listening for the purpose of holding the ego at bay. Listening is not a form of defense. Gently, willingly, continue to listen for continued guidance. And do not let the ego coerce you into listening urgently. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Greetings, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: As you know we have been going through some healing together. And I've had some rather phenomenal healing in the past. But what's happened recently is that last Monday, for example, they done some testing at the Hospital as per requisition of my work for employment, because it is a work related accident. And they found they said a 7 by 3 millimeter kidney stone on Monday, through x-rays.

I was supposed to go into hospital Tuesday coming up for surgery and Friday afternoon I went for the preliminary testing they did another x-ray, and the kidney stone is now gone. The doctor called me at my room Saturday morning to talk to me about it. And he's baffled, which makes three doctors now that are baffled, because they keep finding things and things keep disappearing.

And also I want to thank you for that through the healing team, obviously. But I'd also like to know when I meditate, and I get rather deep into meditation I feel a large amount of like heat or energy building within.

And those sitting near by including my wife in particular can feel the heat. What causes that?

ANSWER: It is not a physical heat. It is the radiancy of love. You will find if you pay attention that there is not only the sense of warmth, but there is the sense of love along with it. At the moment you are more aware to the unusualness of the warmth.

You see as you become defenseless and go within, it is as though the barriers that block out your fulfillment, your experience of yourself become lowered and you become filled. This is not always accompanied with a sensation of warmth. But when that sensation occurs it is indeed a fuller more direct experience of the infilling of love. Enjoy it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Indeed I shall, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Do you have anything to say that would enhance my relationship with my own guide?

ANSWER: Trust, trust, trust. And always give yourself the benefit of the doubt. And ask questions. When you find something occurring in your relationship, or as a result of your communication—when you find something not working out—instead of assuming that you have either gotten wrong information, or that you are not listening clearly, ask more questions. If you hear something that sounds intelligent, but it doesn't ring true with you, ask more questions.

The key is to be persistent and even incessant in your asking until you arrive at peace around the issue that you are asking about. Assume that if there is misunderstanding or simply a lack of understanding that there is more for you to receive, more for you to grasp then pursue whatever it is by asking more questions. Do not hesitate to say, "Yes, but what about this? Yes, but what about that? I hear what you're saying, but it doesn't make sense, can you amplify?"

Continue, persist in asking. And do not assume that you are bugging or bothering your guide. It is impossible for you to be a pest. Asking questions is the way you get answers. And your guide awaits your questions, because it is important for the impetus of the receipt of the answer to be an actual felt need within you, or an actual felt curiosity within you.

You see, it truly does not good for us to simply spew forth information, no matter how enlightening it might be, because if you are not curious, if you are not asking a question you will not be attentively listening.

So ask, ask, ask. And trust, trust, trust. And persist, persist, persist. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Are you involved when I talk with my guide?

ANSWER: On occasion I am, yes. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: You've described illness as illegitimate, and as an illusion. You've also used the term "contagious disease" in an example of the need for using common sense in the nitty-gritty of daily life. I don't think I know how to use common sense about illness, because I don't know which of the many versions of cause and effect are myth, and which are true. If someone has a cold or gets the measles is it because: A) They were afraid of getting sick? B) Their body is simply eliminating toxins? C) Viruses are attacking the system (probably spread from some contagious person)? D) Some of the combination of the above? Or E) None of the above?

And also I would like to know what my attitude toward vaccinations for my children should be? Are they helpful? Are they hurtful? Or are they irrelevant?

ANSWER: Common sense relates directly to your level of comfort. What ever allows you to remain in your comfort zone, is common sense.

Now relative to vaccinations for your children, there are two things you can do. You can listen within as to the appropriateness of it, or the inappropriateness of it. And you can also pay attention to your comfort zone. And when I say that I'm really speaking of your threshold of fear. Because I will tell you something, it will do no good for you to stand on principles, or on a should system that is based upon absolute fact, when doing so throws you into panic or fear. There is no love in that.

You must ask yourself what affords me the greatest peace. And then do whatever provides you with that sense of peace. Because your sense of peace experienced generates harmony around you, and everyone is blessed.

Now I am not saying that if you are afraid that your fear will cause your children to become infected with whatever the inoculations would have prevented. Because their own innate comfort zone will be governing them as well. The point is as the parent, as the one whom society places the responsibility upon, you must be willing to work within your comfort zone. And if that means at this time to have the inoculations, then have the inoculations. They certainly will not hurt the children. They will constitute an act of caring, an act of love that you are able to give from your best clarity at the moment.

Now if you ask for inner guidance relative to the inoculations, and the answer you get is, “No, you do not get the inoculations.” And you find that that throws you into a state of concern, then you must in spite of the guidance be honest with wear you are, love wear you are, and do what you need to do in order to be at peace. Even if that means getting the inoculations.

You are not ever—and this applies to everyone—you are not ever to override your best clarity on the basis of guidance. You are never to override your threshold of fear on the basis of guidance. If the guidance you get brings you up against your limit and you become upset, do not act on the guidance yet. This is a time to ask a thousand more questions until you have gotten the clarity that allows you to act in harmony with the guidance without eliciting fear.

The guidance that elicits fear, or puts you up against your limit, is guidance that is given because it is appropriate for you to come up against and move through that limit and gain your equilibrium at a new level. But do not just willy-nilly override the fear, or you will overwhelm yourself. And then you will question the validity of guidance and of your even listening to it.

Understand that guidance is not just the provision of answers, but the provision of the motivation and the nourishment necessary to move through limits that you are not legitimately bound by. Violating those limits will generate fear in the ego. And so when you find yourself getting guidance that makes you uneasy, persist in asking for further clarification.

If the further clarification seems to be taking time, and action is required then revert to your best judgment which allows you to be in your peace. In other words, revert to common sense. And as the definition of common sense, understand that it means not moving across your threshold of fear and overwhelming yourself.

Now, humanly speaking, the answer to the first part of your question would be all of the above. But nevertheless, illness in any form is illegitimate, is not valid, is not to be honored, and is to be dismissed by you.

Now for those of you who would like to copy what I am going to say down, I will give you time to get out a piece of paper and a pencil. I am going to give you what I call an authorization.

I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning, and I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary.

Now, as I said earlier, it is the intent of your body, it is its reason for being to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. Therefore, when you use this authorization you are not coercing a material body into obedience to the divine, you are actually bringing your thought processes, your thinking into alignment with what it is already the intent of your body to do. At least for the period of time in which you are making this authorization you are not introducing energetic emotional feelings that are at odds with your bodies intent to identify you perfectly.

Now this authorization does two things: The one I have just mentioned of bringing about mental or inner alignment with the truth. The second thing it does is that it reminds you that you are not at the mercy of anything else, that you are in authority. This does not mean that you are in authority as a little ego. But it means rather that as the direct expression of the Father you are inviolable. And if you are inviolable then you are in authority relative to what is true about you. Nothing else is.

And it is time for you to stop being submissive to disease, whether it seems to be the manifestation of a virus or not. Because I will tell you something, the moment you become clear about your authority, about your inviolability, or at least when you become consistent with the fact then whether the source of the problem seems to have been a virus or not you will begin instantly to find the manifestations disappearing.

Now you asked about cause and effect. Three-dimensionally speaking, there is no such thing as cause and effect. Cause does not arise out of the three-dimensional frame of reference. And this is why it is important for each and everyone of you to come to the point of understanding that your thinking is not the cause of anything. Therefore, you are wasting your time to try to cause your health to occur by means of your thinking.

As I said earlier, and let us be clear on this: You may use your thinking, and your reasoning, and your logic to help you arrive at a point of such clarity about the Allness of God that you are able to let go of the thinking and yield into that Allness without exercising any control whatsoever. Because it is the ego that tries to have control and it is the ego that blocks your experience of the presence of God as the constituting presence of you.

So where does cause arise from? It arises fourth-dimensionally. And that which is the cause is the Father. That which is the cause is the Life Principle. Now I mentioned yesterday, that the First Cause, the infinite Mind moves, and its movement is the Movement of Creation. And it experiences its Movement and recognizes itself in it. The Movement of Creation is the movement of self-recognition.

I'm going to put it this way, the Movement of Creation is the movement of the self-recognition of the Father, which constitutes conscious experience, the conscious experience of Being. Therefore, the cause is the event. It is important to understand this distinction because as you are used to thinking of cause and effect, they can be two entirely separate things.

Paul can knock over this cup causing the water to spill and the event will be a mess—two different things. But the First Cause, the Movement of God is the event that constitutes Life. The event of God is not what you could call an effect of God that would be different from what God is. The word Being should be understood to be a verb. And the movement of Being is the event called the conscious experience of Being, which is the conscious experience of the Movement of Life, the Movement of Creation.

So if your children have played with a playmate who you subsequently find out has chicken pox, are you going to play into the fear that cause lies in bacteria, or virus? And that indeed something at one point of the “physical universe” can move to another point and govern the second point? Or are you going to acknowledge that there is only One Cause, and that cause is itself the event called life, and because that cause is indivisible the event is indivisible, and therefore cannot be at odds with itself? And are you then not only going to embrace your children in that clarity, but are you also going to include the neighbors child, who himself or herself is suffering from the imposition of an ego frame of reference?

If you embrace all within the awareness of the indivisibility of God and the fact that cause does not lie in the three-dimensional frame of reference, but lies in the Movement of God Himself, you will find your children not even seeming to come down with the disease. And you will also find the child who seems to have it, recovering most amazingly rapidly.

Now I encourage all of you to give some further thought to this idea of cause and effect. Cause and effect are the split perception of the cause that is the indivisible event fourth-dimensionally speaking. Cause and effect are the third-dimensional divided, distorted perception of the indivisible event of the Movement of God when that Movement of God is looked at through the lens of the ego.

The distortion is inherent in the vantage point, not in what is being looked at, because always what is being looked at is the presence of God, the Kingdom of Heaven, Reality, flawless, perfect, harmonious, incapable of being polarized, or at odds with itself. And so always right where you seem to see something inconsistent with what God is, always right at that point is what God really is awaiting your experience of it. An experience that is available to you when you choose not to look at it from the divided, and divisive vantage point of the ego.

And you have the authority to lay claim to the undistorted experience of it. And that is what you are doing when you utilize this authorization that I have given you. Understand that you may exchange any part of the body for the word body. “I authorize my knee. I authorize my throat. I authorize my digestive tract to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect function. I authorize my circulatory system, to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning.”

Remind yourself often of your exemption from suffering. Remind yourself that you are exempt from it because you are not this little piss ant mortal, you are the presence of the Father. The Father is the presence that appears to be you and is recognizable as a unique expression of life, a unique expression of the Father, and then claim your exemption. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I want to thank you very much for the help and guidance you’ve given me for the last few months. It’s fantastic.

ANSWER: I would like to express my gratitude for your willingness to receive it.

QUESTION: The question I have is...

ANSWER: Excuse me, never forget that it is a two-way street. And if you have gotten, it is because you have been willing to receive. And thus we have played an equal part in uncovering the clearer experience of Reality, and I am not more deserving of your gratitude than you are. If you will make a point of being grateful to yourself as well, the experience of our equality will become clearer to you more quickly. And you will not in the process of your expressing gratitude be using that gratitude as a way of keeping yourself small.

The love you receive is not a beneficent gift to someone unworthy, which you are nevertheless grateful to receive in your unworthiness. It is a gift given to one who already has what was given, but hasn't recognized it. It is an acknowledgment of what is already present right there where you are. That is the gift. It is the illumination of what you already are. That is the gift. And as that becomes illuminated and you see yourself more clearly, you feel that you have been healed, you feel that you are clearer.

But in the final analysis the clarity of your Being was already there, and by virtue of our interaction it became illuminated. And I did not give you anything you did not already have, except the courage to look at it and own it. Continue.

QUESTION: Thank you. The question I have isn't the one that I came in with, but it's been popping into mind over and over during this session, and I think I'd better honor it.

I have a real problem with authority figures, and authority, and it's something that I have worked with many years in therapy. And when I found The Course In Miracles I applied the principles of the Course to the situation when I ran into it, and taking it into meditation. And I think that I have gotten on top of it. And then I get into a situation and I find that I'm right back where I started. In the extreme case I become none functional almost. And without going into more detail I think you have the picture. If you can help me in releasing this problem, I'd appreciate it.

ANSWER: Authority as you are referring to it is an illusion. It is what you feel when you are in a circumstance where you feel it is reasonable to completely disregard yourself, where you see yourself as not worth listening to or paying attention to. It is not that you experience authority under those circumstances, but the illusion of authority is experience by you when you are giving your power away, because you assume that something outside of yourself is more worthy of getting your investment of faith. That does not mean that there truly is something outside of yourself worthy of it. That is where the illusion is.

Actually what you call authority or an authority problem is an invalidation process that you are engaging in within yourself. There is never an occasion that warrants your not honoring yourself. I want you to write that sentence down.

There is never an occasion that warrants your not honoring yourself.

Now, I want you to put that in two places in your house: One on your refrigerator door, and the other on the wall immediately in front of your toilet. And I don't want you to do anything more than just let the meaning of the words register with you. Do not work them over in your mind. Do not analyze them, just read those words and let the meaning register with you and then go on about your business. We are not going to turn this into a project, but an ongoing gentle awareness.

So you say, "What do I do when I come up against an arrogant bastard, who insist on forcing me to dishonor myself?" Well, you don't do anything about him. You just stand there and connect with yourself again, and then either actually or figuratively turn your heel and walk off.

In other words, figuratively speaking, own your authority, own your energy again and act in this one's presence on the basis of what you know and what you feel, or else actually leave this persons presence. Because you are not here to cater to anyone else. You are not here to defer to another at the expense of your own integrity, and as I indicated earlier, this applies to your guide as well. You are not to blindly defer to whatever you think your guides clarity might be at the expense of your own feeling of comfort.

Either you hang in there doing whatever questioning it takes to arrive at clarity and peace or you set that guidance on the shelf until a later time. Or either you stand there in the presence of an arrogant, authoritative, overriding individual and you persist in the simple expression of who you are until the relationships changes character, or you leave. But understand that you are not here to defer to and cater to another, even if it is enlightened one. I am not suggesting that an enlightened one would be overbearing and override you, nor would an enlightened one allow you for very long to defer without bringing the ignorance of that approach to your attention in a way that you would not forget.

But I am making it clear that the authority problem is a call for finding no justifiable reason for overriding your own integrity, and for leaving your comfort zone and being yourself and letting the chips fall where they may.

You get the picture. Now practice it. And it does not matter whether you do it well to begin with or whether you feel totally comfortable as you are doing it, but know that as you are practicing not deferring to another you are putting your energy behind what is true. And the energy and the effort are not wasted, and it will be easier the next time. Like the child learning to walk you must persist, even if it is awkwardly done and even if you fall flat on your face a couple of times or many times in the process.

You are not here to cater to others. You are not here to override yourself, because that constitutes a withdrawal of the gift of you.

Now I know that all of you are listening to this and in one way or another saying, "Amen, I agree." But you must also look at the other side. If you are not here to be controlled neither is anyone else here to be controlled by you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you for that information. One thing, when I get in this situation I feel that...

ANSWER: Spit it out.

QUESTION: ...that there's a lot of unfairness to me, or to another situation, and...

ANSWER: Absolutely. But understand that the unfairness lies in the act of disregard which you are practicing, the act of disregard of your own integrity. That is going to make anyone hopping mad. That is going to make anyone feel the injustice, but of course, because the injustice is being experienced from within the ego's frame of reference the injustice is going to be projected outside of you. Not only to the injustice of the situation you are in, but even the injustice of others who are getting away with murder.

The whole world will begin to reflect injustice, and that will seem to justify you feeling miserable. The fact is, that the moment you stop deferring to another, the moment you start staying at home with yourself, and being you and letting the chips fall where they may, the sooner you will begin to see the justice that is going on in the world, because you will not be looking through the lens of the ego, and your vision will not be distorted.

There is another factor too, not only does the issue of injustice arise, but the issue of guilt arises. You cannot help but feel guilty when you are overriding your very integrity. You cannot feel comfortable, because you are attacking yourself.

Denial is attack. Denial of God in the assertion of oneself as a personality, is an attack on God. Denial of yourself as a personality deferring to another is an attack on you. It is unjust. And from within the ego's frame of reference you are the one who is responsible, and so you will not be able to feel good about yourself.

But again, the moment you bring your energy back to you, and you are paying more attention to you than any apparently arrogant one in your experience, the sooner all of the illusion, all of the distortion snaps and the clarity of your own integrity returns and leaves an absence of guilt, an absence of injustice, an absence of concern and frustration. And an emerging joy, because you are not feeling capable of being imposed upon because you aren't giving your permission to be imposed upon. You are not making that assumption that indeed it is more appropriate for you to pay attention to this wise one or this asshole, whichever the case maybe, than to pay attention to yourself.

And there is always joy there, because you are owning your own power again, not power over that one, but power to be you without apology and to come out from yourself. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Don's question on authority really brought my question into focus for me. And it's the same one I've dealt with for so long, about doing things I don't really want to do so that other people will like me. And then if they don't like me they get angry at me, and then ultimately they might abandon me. But lately it's getting clearer and clearer to me that—let's say I do that 100%--I realize that I've sold myself out and then I don't like me, and I'm angry with me, and I have abandoned me.

It's like I've had cold feet all my life, and I realize now it's because nobody was in them, nobody was home. And I know that the learning, the belief I had was that it was selfish to not do things for other people. But I realize now, right now I just want to do something for me, and to heck with anybody else. I'm tired of it.

ANSWER: What are you waiting for. Amen. That is taking your power back and feeling it. That is part and parcel of coming Home. I will tell you something: You have been a pain in the butt to a lot of people by virtue of your leaning on them for approval and acceptance. It is not very pleasant to be around someone who is cloying.

It is wonderful to be around someone who is indeed standing in her own two feet, not on them, in them. Because there is something that arises out of her that comes from the tips of her toes, there is a genuineness there and there is an originality that is there. And it is fun to be around someone who is contributing her uniqueness, not ego personality, but genuine sincere self-comfort.

At the bottom line, waking up is giving yourself permission to be who you are, and not constantly engaging in being who you are not. And ultimately giving yourself permission to be who you are means saying, “Yes” to God and letting God shine through, letting your innate perfection and sinlessness voice, giving it expression without apology.

But as we have said all weekend the necessity is to start loving yourself right where you are. Because until there is that self-acceptance right in your imperfection, if I may put it that way, until there is the capacity allowed to embrace yourself right where you are there is not the ability to have your attention right in the now, where the little gap exists to slip through.

How many of you have thought that the little gap needed to be bridged? The little gap is, you might say is, I am going to define it as the hole in your ego. Because your ego cannot establish itself as a totality. And when in spite of the ego you dare to love yourselves and to just be you and let the chips fall where they may, that is when you have the opportunity to slip through the middle of the moment you are in into eternity, into the full conscious experience of Being. That is where the shift can occur.

Give yourself permission to be you. And as I said, you will not end up being stuck in the miserable little self that you seem to be having to embrace and accept, because in the act of love, in the act of embracing the miserable little self you seem to be at the moment you find yourself filled with the energy of life, the energy of your Being, the energy of Spirit, with a capital “S”, and you find yourself moved, lifted and exalted.

The love you are willing to extend to yourself illuminates your loveableness, not your miserableness. And that is why the act of love for the exact spot you find yourself in at any given moment does not allow you to become stuck in that moment you are embracing, or that condition of selfhood that you are embracing.

There is something else you all need to know. In the totality of what you are, infinitely speaking, where this sphere of ego structures seems to encase some of the totality of you, the area, the volume embraced by the ego structures is the same substance as the totality of you that is outside the ego structures.

As a result, the sense of self that is limited is not illusory. The volume within the ego structures is not illusion. The ego structures, the shell, the sphere, if you will, is what is illusory. And this is the reason that each and everyone of you always carries with you, what I have referred to as the memory of Home. It is the reason that everyone of you at any given moment has the capacity to recognize what truth is. And you can dare to trust yourself, even when you seem to be confined by ego illusions.

There is something absolutely and essentially perfect about you at this very instant. It is the ego structures which seem to cause you not to have all of yourself available to experience consciously. But that which is encased is the direct expression of God, is the Christ, is the capital “Y” You. And that is why it is essential for you to love yourself. And that is why it is essential for you to love your neighbor, because that is what weakens and breaks down the sphere of ego structures.

It is selfish to squelch yourself. It is selfish to defer to others. Because to the degree that you are attempting to please others you are not being you, and not making the essential gift of you. And to that degree, the presence of the infinity of God is seemingly diminished. Everyone loses when you are being what you call unselfish and deferring to others and not expressing or being you, because you are withholding from the infinite expression of Being, the aspect of it that you are.

So being true to yourself is the greatest gift you can give, the clearest expression of unselfishness that you can express. It was fitting, since we are in Ashland where the Shakespeare Festival goes on, to remember the words, “To thine own self be true. And it must follow as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man.” That is true unselfishness. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I want to thank you for the Course it is very helpful in my life. I’m just a beginner in it, but I certainly see the truth.

ANSWER: You are seeing the truth with the truth that you are.

QUESTION: Yes, and also the answer you gave the last time to Bey I really relate to that because I’ve been the unselfish person too, and more unselfish to myself than others.

Okay, I want to talk about my granddaughter, she’s going to be three years old this year. I was present when she was born and I took care of her a great deal of the time until she was two, while her mother and father worked. And this caring was one of the greatest joys in my lifetime. Now they have moved away and I am having trouble healing the void...

ANSWER: You’re having trouble what?

QUESTION: Well, I said healing the void—missing them, and allowing them, I mean I totally allow them to do their own thing. I’m not wanting to camp on their doorstep.

ANSWER: Yes, you are.

QUESTION: I am. I thought I wouldn’t get away with it.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: My question is this: In the future will I be close to them ever again I wonder?

ANSWER: There is a very natural likelihood that you will be, yes, but it will be awhile. And in the meantime, it is time for you to open up and let yourself be filled with new meaningful experiences and relationships.

Obviously, since they are no longer in your immediate experience, then your Being is reconfiguring. And I encourage you to be alert to the reconfiguration as it unfolds. I encourage you not to be glancing longingly towards your family, but let your attention be attentively and curiously active right where you are for the new fulfillment of purpose that your Being is already unfolding. Let there be a curiosity to see what the ongoing delight of life is going to be. Don’t invest all of it in them, so that you overlook....

You see there is a similarity here which you will understand, in that everybody of a Christian background has invested the means of Christhood in one individual. And when that one individual was gone then the Christ was not present. At least that was their belief. And for 2000 years there has been a longing and a yearning for this Christ who was not present.

And as a result of that investment of the concept of Christhood in one person only, few have discovered their own Christhood, their own divinity, which has been present and which has been insisting upon asserting itself and shall I say coming out of the closet. And each one has felt it as a desire. But the conviction was so solid that only one was the Christ that everyone ignored their own Christhood. And everyone ignored the fact that I called you my brothers. And everyone ignored the fact that I said that the works that I did you would do also.

Well, how could you poor mortal sinners do it if you really were poor mortal sinners? You couldn’t! The only way you could do it is because we are brothers, we are equals, we are sisters and brothers, equals. And the whole point was to reveal to you, to uncover to you our equality and the fact that you were the divine manifestation of the Father, the current divine manifestation of the Father, because the Father is being you, being the Movement of Creation that is appearing as you this instant. You were not set into motion so many lifetimes ago. Creation is current.

So do not invest your good in a person, in their presence, because then when they are not in your presence you will seem to be minus something. And if your conviction is very dense, you will not recognize the manifestation of your divinity, the movement of fulfillment of your Being as it reconfigures and manifests anew with freshness the meaning of your life. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. the Course is helping me on that, Raj.

ANSWER: Indeed, yes.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel at this point in my life, that I'm rather marking time. And that maybe okay. Maybe it's my ego that's saying, "Carola, set some goals and be doing more."

ANSWER: Maybe it's your ego??? You do not want to move an inch until you find the ground swell coming from underneath you and lifting you. And then your only responsibility will be to yield to it, and to act on the basis of it.

Indeed, you are not marking time, but you are assimilating at the present time that which has been acquired. You are becoming at ease with growth that has occurred. It is becoming incorporated. And indeed the ground swell will come, and it will be time to move. But I encourage you to relax and enjoy the rest. It is not an inactive rest. But to try to move before the movement of your Being moves will constitute spinning your wheels and accomplishing nothing and creating frustration for yourself. Don't do it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have one related thing. I'm very much into playing the violin, and I'm wondering how I can consciously express my divinity through my violin? This is a really high point now in my life.

ANSWER: By playing, and by loving it while you are playing it. Practice, practice, practice.

QUESTION: I do, I do, I do. Thank you.

ANSWER: But understand that I mean practice being the place where love flows into beauty.

QUESTION: Exactly.

ANSWER: That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: About two weeks ago I was back East visiting my family.

ANSWER: Back what?

QUESTION: Back East in May and discovered that my oldest son has been sick, really ill for about a year. He has headaches, he's dizzy, his limbs get numb, he has a problem with his eyes. The doctors can't seem to diagnose the problem. He's feeling miserable, his wife is distraught and his children are sort of in the midst of all this. Could you help us out a little bit, so that I can help him?

ANSWER: I would ask you to ask either he or his wife to call Paul, so that I might have an opportunity to talk with them about this. This is not the appropriate setting to deal with it. You may ask another question.

QUESTION: Well, I don't have anything right now to ask, I was just hoping to get some help with this one. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I will add that during the course of the weekend we have talked about some things that you can do. You can acknowledge his essential divinity. You can acknowledge that whatever he is experiencing is illegitimate, and therefore does not actually have the substance of the capacity to maintain itself in the presence of the Allness of God. You can love him, and you can entrust him to his divinity. This will be extremely helpful without being manipulative or overbearing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Hello.

QUESTION: So far the first year of my son's life I've nearly always chosen conflict and irritation and anger at him and myself, instead of truly yielding to his needs as a growing person. I didn't know it was going to be this hard to yield. I don't know what's reasonable in balancing my desires for a house in order, or sleeping through the night, or pursuing art work, whatever my ego's agenda happens to be, and his needs for being held, or played with, carried or cared for night and day.

Is there a way to harmonize are beings? And how do I truly surrender my agendas and expectations without denying both of our integrities? What is the most loving way to relate to and perceive the truth of both of us? And clarify our needs in interaction?

ANSWER: Well, you are not there to be his servant. You are there to express your integrity. You are there to express your capacity to recognize what needs to be done and what does not need to be done. You are there to express the ability to help him be aware of what he is responsible for and what you are responsible for so that there is no confusion.

But you say, “what if I’m confused.” Here is where you must come back to your best common sense. You have not arrived at the point of having a one year old child without having had a great deal of experience at life. And there is a great deal of common sense that you have acquired. You must dare to use it. And you must not assume that you had been faced with a responsibility that you’re not ready for. You are reluctant to express your common sense, because you are afraid that what is called for is more than your common sense. And you will run yourself into the ground if you try to act beyond your capacity.

Now, you know what is right and what is wrong. And I’m not speaking in a great moral sense, I mean it in the sense of your knowing what works and what doesn’t work especially relative to a one year old child. And so you must dare to validate the right and wrong that you are aware of. You must validate what you know works and what doesn’t work, and do what works. And have him abide within the context of what you know works.

The requirement here is to trust yourself more than you are trusting yourself. You are trying to be very responsible. You are trying to be a creditable parent. But you are not paying attention to your common sense.

If you will start paying attention to your common sense, and become simpler in what you do, and if you will stop railing at yourself for not being something more than you are, you will come into a sense of peace with yourself, and your common sense will seem to increase, your perspective will return, and it will become easier, less hard work, and it will become more pleasant for you. But you must start assuming that you have in these empty-ump years acquired a sufficient amount of common sense, and an awareness of what works and what doesn’t work, that meets the need, meets the demand of the moment. You do not need to be more than you are in order to be a creditable and recognizably responsible parent.

Learn to say no. Learn to take time for yourself. But also realize that there is nothing more wonderful than being that presence that conveys the words through actions, “I love you. You are wonderful.” Just remember not to do it 24 hours a day. He must have some time to tell himself that he is wonderful. And if you try to do it 24 hours a day, then he will be like the earlier questioner, who constantly looked to his world for confirmation and acceptance and he will be a pain-in-the-ass.

Basically everything is fine. It is just that you are trying too hard, thinking that the demands are greater than what you have to give. And I am telling you that what you have to give at this moment is sufficient, pay attention to your common sense. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thanks. Having grown up as a pain-in-the-ass myself, I'd rather not bring up one more.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj. And thank you for coming here to us all.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: These last few years a lot has come down the pike for me. My relationship as it was ended. And my dealing with my ego and many other chain of events that has kicked me in the but to move. I see it's purpose. And as to my awakening to the essence of our existence, I find it now the only work to do. And I am thankful for that.

These last five weeks I find myself hardened and distant from my spiritual place. Working in port towns and being away from the kids and coming back with loving kindness towards Bonnie and receiving such coldness I'm now in the process of moving to the Coast as you advised me earlier. And I'm feeling very uncentered by all now, and could you give me some words of advice on this? And why is there such coldness when I am sending forth love to free us?

ANSWER: Ah-h-h. Don't get caught in that trap. You do not send forth loving kindness, you do not be loving for a result. You do it because doing anything else hurts you. To be anything less than loving is to be conflicted, which hurts you. To not be loving is a denial of your very nature, that never feels good. But do not think that you can be loving as some divine means of controlling your world, instead of some ego means of controlling your world.

Now you must start loving yourself—unconditionally. Don't love yourself if everything works out all right. Love yourself just because. Don't love yourself if things warm up or resolve with your wife. Love yourself just because there is nothing better to do than to love yourself.

You must forget about trying to change anything out there, not because nothing can change out there, but because at this moment your experience of yourself is very tentative, wobbly, and you need all the love you can give yourself, all of the nurturing, all of the honoring that you can possibly give to yourself.

All of this is not your fault. You are not the black sheep, the bad guy, the culprit. All you are called upon to do here relative to these events, is to insist upon desiring to know what the truth is. In other words, maintaining your own equilibrium, staying in that place where you can be the light, staying in that place where you experience your own integrity as not violated by the events.

Right now it is necessary for you to attend to yourself, by means of self-appreciation. Allow yourself time to see your children, and let your wife be in whatever space she is in, let her behave in whatever way she behaves. In other words, allow her ego to be whatever it tries to be, but do not take her behavior as a statement about you, or how you should feel about yourself, or how you should feel relative to your children.

There is no need for you to respond by means of self-criticism to what is going on. There is a need for you to continue to honor your integrity, to come out from it as clearly as you can, to expect to see your life reconfiguring in fulfilling ways.

Now you will have some time to yourself to love yourself without distraction. That is part of the reconfiguration. That is part of the kindness of your Being, that it is providing this place for you to come back into equilibrium where you are not judging yourself and condemning yourself for what has happened.

I will tell you that you are doing quite well. It is very understandable that it is not easy. But you will come through it in tack, and your perspective will return. But persist in loving yourself. And when the ego suggests to you that you are to blame, tell it to “shut up.” If you wish you can tell it to get behind you.

But do it in whatever way effectively dismisses it from your presence and expresses your authority in the situation. Because you do not have to invite the ego in and let it mess up your consciousness—conflict it. You can refuse it entrance by telling it to get lost. If you have to do it out loud, do it out loud. And you do not have to be polite about it. Tell it to get the hell out, and then give your attention to something else. And if it says, “But none of this would have happened if it weren’t for you and what you didn’t do.” You are free to say, “Bullshit,” and dismiss it and get on to some other topic of thought. Don’t be nice! Don’t be polite! Stand up for yourself! Love yourself. And do not let the ego succeed at causing you to justify self-criticism.

You are moving through this, as I said, well, and you are listening for inner guidance, you are getting guidance, you are being congruent, and the stress of it all will be diminishing. Keep up the good work.

QUESTION: Thank you. One more small little thing here. Being uncentered here the past five weeks, I received a scholarship to go to the Ram Dass retreat. Was this a gift of grace to me?

ANSWER: That is as good a way of describing it as another, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you very much for your guidance.

ANSWER: Understand that this unfoldment is indicative of the integrity of your Being—manifesting itself. Your Being evoked the opportunity because it identifies fulfillment, therefore you must not be in as bad a place as you sometimes think. And you can have confidence in the nature of your Being and its unfolding the manifestations of your good and your fulfillment and your integrity to confirm it for you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm deeply grateful for the many gifts that we have all shared here for the past two days, both verbally and silently. I don't know whether I have a question, I've waiting until the microphone got in my hand to see, because my questions have been answered, and answered, and answered here. What I wanted to say when I came was that as a question has come to mind, especially during the last few months, most of the time an answer has come with it. And also I feel that, well that is if I can think of a question, I'm not afraid to ask the question.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Also I feel that I communicate with people who have died and recently, but even more so, even several years ago, people who've died several years ago. And I guess I was originally going to ask you, "Is this really happening, or is my imagination working overtime?" And I already have the answer to that, I think. So I guess what I'd like to ask you is for some clarification.

ANSWER: What is the answer?

QUESTION: Well, the answer is, of course, in that my ego will tell me later that my imagination is working—my ego will fight it.

ANSWER: I will tell you that on the occasions when it has happened, it has truly happened. I want you to understand however that this sort of communication only happens when it fulfills purpose, and it is something that is allowed. In other words, in the order of things it falls into place as an occurrence, not because it is always possible for you to speak with one who has passed on, but because in those instances it fulfills purpose.

Understand that one who passes on is still experiencing the three-dimensional frame of reference, they have not suddenly relinquished the ego. The ego must be relinquished voluntarily, let us say, on purpose. And those who are suffering, shall I say, from the limits of the three-dimensional frame of reference are as incapable of communicating with each other, whether they are all incarnated, or whether one is not incarnated and one is.

Nothing suddenly happens upon the event of death that causes one to suddenly become Awakened. One still finds himself or herself with the same beliefs that were present before the passing occurred. The only sudden change there may be in belief structures would be relative to the beliefs about death as well as relative to the disease that may have contributed to their death.

If injury or disease was responsible for the death—apparently—one will find the injury no longer present. A severed limb will be present. The disease will either be gone, or will be almost instantaneously gone when the discovery is made that it did not kill the person. The fear of its killing them will immediately have been removed by the proof of the experience of still living. And the healing will occur immediately.

So understand that this is not likely to happen with great frequency—your speaking with those who have passed on. And when it does, it is because it fulfills purpose, and do indeed honor that fact. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Oh, thank you deeply.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I've had really a good time here, and I'm really enjoying myself. I have kind of a two part question. One is just a straight forward, should I continue to go to school this summer? We had talked about this...

ANSWER: Absolutely.

QUESTION: The second thing has to do with feeling that I have not been using my common sense financially in terms of building up for the future. And I'm kind of concerned about working, which I don't seem to be doing, and it doesn't seem to be happening. And I don't seem to even want to do it. And I'm just kind of hanging out. But then I'm getting anxious about, "This isn't very smart for the future." And so I'm in a little bit of a dilemma.

ANSWER: Learn to be attentive in the now. When you are using common sense as I have defined it, meaning staying within your comfort zone. This is to be done on the spot. This is to be the mode of being in the now. Pay attention in the now to what you are feeling, and to your comfort zone.

And if you find yourself not impelled to be "wise," but you are feeling complete comfort with being responsive in whatever way you are responsive in the moment, then function within that comfort zone. Understand that to the degree that you allow yourself to function in your comfort zone, you will not be overwhelmed with fear and it will be much easier for you to access your Knowing, with a capital "K". And as a result your actions will not be governed by whatever the limits are of your comfort zone. And expansion beyond your comfort zone will be able to occur comfortably. But don't force the issues. Don't force your way through the threshold.

I was asked once about moving through walls. And the answer that I gave involved the fact that one does not force one's way through a wall, one let's one's self through a wall. And that is the way I was able to appear in what you call the upper chamber without coming through the door. You must let yourself through your ego boundaries. You must allow yourself through. You must violate the boundaries, not through aggression, but through letting yourself beyond those limits.

So be willing to use your common sense, but let the common sense be applied to the moment you are in. Let it be applied to the now, not the future. Because then your common sense is relative to imagination, because you do not know what the future is going to be. Let your common sense be relative to the moment you are in, and in this way you will learn to be congruent in the moment that you are in. And the result will be harmony.

And if you learn to be appropriate in the moment you are in, you will know how to be appropriate in the moment you "will be in five years from now," when that moment comes. And the harmony of that moment will be available to you as a result. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I'm glad that I can be here in Ashland. I had thought it would be Carmel, but this is a nice change. And I also am very grateful for your guidance and help this past year. And I haven't quite come up with a question, but is there something that I need to know, or that you see that would be helpful right now to me?

ANSWER: I am going to be relentless here. Get into that room and paint. I realize that you are very close to it, but I intend to move you a little faster than you are moving. And the only reason is that there is no need to delay the experience of your creative capacity any longer.

It is your joy. And it is appropriate for you to be experience it, and it is also appropriate for you to discover that you know more than you did before. And what you know will find expression in new ways in your work. And you deserve that delightful discovery. Do it!

QUESTION: The studio is cleaned. And I spent one afternoon in it, and then I had to get ready for the trip. But that's one thing I've promised myself, when I get back it's the studio and the fitness center.

ANSWER: Wonderful.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. That is really the number one priority on your agenda.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: Hello.

QUESTION: I live in the woods. And I love to spend time walking in the forest, which brings me a deep sense of peace.

ANSWER: Why?

QUESTION: Why? Why, I'm impressed with... there's a strong power there. There's a sense of loving, I feel wisdom, I'm in awe of the beauty.

ANSWER: And effortless simplicity. Nature is so effortless, it is so flowing, it is so unpretentious, it does not try to accomplish anything. It just reaches for the light, and in the process becomes magnificent. And you feel that, and you identify with it. And along with the peace that you experience it also increases your longing for that same kind of natural simplicity in your life, and is inspiring you to let go into it. Continue.

QUESTION: My question is now: They want to log, log a large portion of this forest. Should I try to do something about it? Or what's happening with our environment?

ANSWER: The logging of this particular land is not inappropriate, and cannot come under the classification of the rape of the planet. It is not appropriate for you to resist it. It is orderly, and has been intelligently planned. You may relax about it, and enjoy that particular area before it is logged, and then explore some new areas. And do not make waves that are not appropriate, and which would constitute a waste of your energy.

And today I am not going to tackle the environment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj and Paul, I sincerely thank you, not only for the answers but to the questions that have been asked today. As many other people have said they've been deeply helpful to them and they have to me.

I've been wrestling with what to ask, and hopefully it will come out here, the right question. May I ask two questions, rather than one?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: One I've found myself back in the development business here, which I left in southern California. And it's the only thing that I'm waking up concerned about now in my life...

ANSWER: Concerned about?

QUESTION: Concerned about. Yes, I wake up with concerns about certain things about doing each one of the projects. So that's a question.

ANSWER: What is the question?

QUESTION: The question is should I continue on in doing this type of work when they require... when I'm not at peace, when I wake up in the morning I'm not at peace when I think about them. Or is it another barrier for me to go through?

ANSWER: The discomfort, the uneasiness you are experiencing is not because the projects are inappropriate, but because it is not really what you want to be doing.

QUESTION: Correct.

ANSWER: Then stop doing it. To be incongruent with yourself creates dissonance, creates uneasiness, creates a sense of guilt because it is an act of dishonesty. And then you will provide yourself with the punishment that goes along with the guilt. And all of this is totally unnecessary.

On the other hand, no matter what the apparent benefit might be of being incongruent that might seem to justify being incongruent, if you choose to for being congruent with yourself you will find the abundance that you desire, the security that you desire, and the fulfillment that you desire manifesting in other directions.

Congruency with yourself constitutes an alignment with you, with a capital "Y". And the result of that is the movement of fulfillment that is not hidden from you in any way. To be inconsistent with your Being simply creates discomfort, confinement and lack, no matter how much it promises fulfillment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I appreciate that. My other question's in reference to my relationship with my wife, which seems to have diminished greatly for two reasons. One: Two new children in the family. And secondly: Kind of a lack of communication we've...

PAUL: May I, Paul, ask a question? Are these two children of yours, or are they grandchildren?

QUESTION: Adopted, children, ours they're adopted.

PAUL: And the question is?

QUESTION: I want a holy relationship. How do I go about doing it with this woman?

ANSWER: First of all, replace the word "holy" with the word "whole." That will take away its religious connotations. That will take away the connotations that she finds uncomfortable. To wish to experience a relationship of wholeness is something that you will find natural ways to put into expression that will not elicit a lack of response.

Now you are over concerned. The situation is not as serious as you would think. You are going to find it extremely valuable to replace the word "holy" with the word "whole" because it brings the meaning of holiness down to earth, not that it limits its meaning, but it brings it down to a real level of communication and communion, where both of you are able to be very real with each other. I am even going to say very human with each other, because again, in accepting and embracing yourself, you must accept and embrace your humanity. And until every single one of you embraces your humanity you will not have the opportunity to find out how absolutely divine your humanity is.

That is not too simple an answer. I am not glossing over the need. It is the specific answer. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: Two years ago I began working at a shelter for the homeless. I wanted very much to have work that involved service to others as a way of giving meaning to my life, a fuller meaning. And at this point I feel quite battered by what's going on there, what I'm allowing to go on there. I don't know if my ego wants to take me away, because I don't want to face the friction of growth, or if my perception that the structures that are there are just too overwhelming for me to survive in? So I'm confused about whether I should continue until more becomes clear or if I can trust that the movement of my Being is moving on.

ANSWER: I will tell you that you either need to take action where you are or get out. It is not the circumstances that are most frustrating to you, it is your inaction. It is the fact that you are not doing anything other than just sogging in the situation.

I will tell you it is time for the mud, the bottom of the river bed to be stirred up, so that some clarity or clarification can occur. It is time for you to make a fuss. It is time for your presence to be made known to see whether the structure can be dislodged.

The issue is not truly whether the structure can be dislodged, the issue is whether you are going to remain silent when action is needed. You are not allowing your actions to arise out of the movement in you and you are squelching yourself and immobilizing yourself, and that is what is uncomfortable.

It is not appropriate for you to simply walk away. The structures are not immovable. But again, that is not the issue. The issue is your being congruent with yourself, and moving when you are moved to move. And in this case the movement is one of creating a stir.

I am not going to go into what the likely outcome is going to be. The point is that if you are daring to be consistent with yourself you will have broken free from the paralysis and whether the structure will not change and you are rejected from that job or not, you will be in a position of flexibility and of being able to act congruent with the movement within you and that will take care of your next steps. But it is time to make a stir! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good evening, Raj.

ANSWER: Good evening.

QUESTION: I have for most of my life been doing everything the "right way," to the point that now I have sometimes pains in my chest. I'm working overtime simply to maintain my bills. I'm drinking too much, not painting at all any longer. And I'm in a loving, but inappropriate relationship. I finally have realize that I'm making myself crazy.

And very recently something has changed in my life in the sense of some kind of opening at some place in my center, I think, which is showing me that something special I feel is allowing itself to surface in my Being. I want to honor this.

I think the universe is providing the opportunity by rearranging things that I really have little control over. And I may be able to move to Santa Fe, New Mexico for a year, which I would like to do and just be freed to be more completely myself to make some changes in the way that I've been living and to really paint again.

My primary question is: Am I running away from home? Is a physical move away answer the issue of the change that is very, very obviously happening inside my center?

ANSWER: No you would not be running away. You would be allowing yourself to be in an environment that does not trigger old habits in which it would be easier for you to integrate this shift, this new emphasis, this freedom, this capacity to be more congruent with yourself.

And as it unfolds I would encourage you to look for those things which confirm the move, rather than looking for those things that tell you that the move should not occur, that it is inappropriate. It is completely congruent, and I encourage you to embrace it willingly and gratefully. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very, very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Send me a postcard.

QUESTION: I promise.

ANSWER: In care of Paul.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Well, I would much rather you end it here. However, you gave an answer to the gentleman who had the problem of stuttering, and I have a similar problem of making myself understood, or communicating my thoughts and feelings. You encouraged him, when he felt like not speaking to speak, so that's what I'm going to do.

For some time now I have been struggling with what seems to me to be a very shameful thoughts. I have been really full of resentment, and anger, and impatience about the help that has been given to my grandchildren. It has seemed to me that things have been made far too easy for them. And I have not known what was causing this, I've been puzzled by it. And finally I have arrived at the point where I think that I'm just simply jealous of what they have received, and are receiving.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I beg your pardon?

ANSWER: Indeed. You are absolutely correct. You have used and it has taken courage for you to be willing to see that.

QUESTION: I don't like this feeling. In fact, I'm very unhappy with it, and I would like to be rid of it. I tell myself that the reason for this is that there have been a lot of hardships in my life and I have never had any help to get through them. And so I think that I'm jealous of the ease with which they are facing problems.

ANSWER: Exactly. I am so glad you have asked this question. Because I will tell you something: This is an experience that all of you are going to run into over the next few years, because it will seem to you that you have had to work very hard for your Awakening. And there will be those who come in at the last minute and (snaps his fingers) [wake up instantly]. And it will seem quite unfair.

Now what all of you need to take a look at in this respect is how much you are valuing the struggle. Because all of you have felt that it has developed character and strength. And indeed, you have used the opportunities fairly well—or shall I say the struggles—and you have indeed grown as a result of the exercise of your faith, your trust. But as we come to the point of where the shift spontaneously occurs, there are going to be those, many of those who will slip through the little gap right along with you without seeming to have had to learn anything. And your ego will call for justice.

Now, these shameful thoughts, as you put it, are understandable. And I would encourage you not to be too hard on yourself, but I also encourage you to be willing as rapidly as possible to let go of those negative or shameful feelings, those that keep you feeling conflicted inside. It does not matter how much effort you had to put forth in order to come into the full comprehension of your divinity, it only matters that you have finally come into it.

Now, would you delay the Awakening of the Brotherhood for the sake of somebody having to put in his struggles and pay his dues? Or would you rather have that one slip into his full conscious experience of being the presence of the Father so that you and everyone else can experience the integrity of the Totality of the Brotherhood. I will tell you something: The ego is not going to define Awakening as just in any-way-shape-or-form.

Your grandchildren are not spoiled, they are not being weakened. But by the same token do not indulge in self-pity. Because you can play both sides of the fence here. You can complain because they are having it so easy, when you had it so hard, and you know how valuable it was for you. That's playing one side of the fence. The other side of the fence is: They have it so easy, it wasn't fair for me to have to work so hard. And when you play this side of the fence, you take the benefit that you were standing up for on the other side of the fence and you hide it in the back of the closet so that you may just deserve pity.

Indeed, the strength that you gathered, and the character that was developed, and the wisdom that you accrued is valuable. And you have not been short changed. And so own it, and appreciate it. And don't whimper about it. And don't use it as a justification for being angry because they're having it so easy. And then at the same time, be grateful that their learning is not having to be as strenuous.

I will tell you something: The work that you put into surviving your life has made the place where you are presently so solid and your strength so substantial that there is nothing to complain about. You know what you know down to the tips of your toes. And you are a strength for those around you, and have been for many years. And you have gotten nourishing feedback, evidence of the value of the strength that you garnered about you. You have been having your pay-off, and you have had your joy as a result of the experience of your strength and your character.

There has been satisfaction with it. And you are not having to sacrifice that just because someone else is managing not to have as heavy-duty a struggle as you had. So rejoice for yourself, and rejoice for them. And do not allow this sense of injustice to come in and take away your peace and your joy. As I said, this is going to be happening more and more frequently as we get closer and closer to the, I will say, spill over into Awakened Conscious Awareness.

Paul has not been free of these feelings. As he has indicated, his establishing of communication with me was the result of very dire circumstances and struggle. And then when others began to talk with me, and a few weeks later called back to have me tell them whether they were actually in touch with their guide, that something had happened, and they wanted to know if it was real. It pissed Paul off.

They hadn't been in the middle of a traumatic experience. And it took them less time to get in touch with their guide. And on top of that they could call and ask whether it was really true. And Paul thought that was unfair since he had to trust, because he couldn't get validation from any external point. And he had to release that, and come to a point of rejoicing that the communion was occurring and that it was spreading, as a very result of his working with me in a public manner.

He thought he got that under his belt, and then when somebody called and asked whether they had had a conversation with me, not through Paul, he got pissed off again. He thought I was his personal possession. “Let them get their own guide,” was his attitude.

The ego is unreasonable but seems completely reasonable. What is happening is a call for rejoicing. Rejoice that your grandchildren do not have the struggle to go through. Rejoice when anyone is experiencing clarity and enlightenment, whether it is work for them or not, whether they seem to have to bring into play as much trust or not. The shift is occurring. The wave is coming into shore. Don't quibble about nonessentials, rejoice that everyone is going to wake up.

It's all right what is happening with your grandchildren and with you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I truly do thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome.

QUESTION: Greetings.

ANSWER: Good evening.

QUESTION: I've been marching through a lot of difficulty to manifest my desire and my dreams. It seems like I go against myself. And I've been able to pin-point what I'm doing that creates that to happen. And I call for inside information.

PAUL: You what?

QUESTION: I ask you for insight.

ANSWER: You embody a magnificent faith, a great deal of trust that is not easily challenged, and therefore constitutes a strength of intent. But at the same time there is an ingrained sense that you are moving against a very large resistance. So large that it indeed takes the degree of faith that you have, and the degree of intent that you have to overcome it. And so there has been created by those dynamics a sense of intensity. There is not a sense of struggle here, of combat, but a sense of the unyielding coming up against the immovable. That is called tension.

Now, this immovable something that your faith is going to help you move through is a concoction of the mind, a concoction of the ego. It is part of a belief system, which you are not unaware of, and which you are willing to have enough courage and trust and faith to push through. What is necessary here is for you to see that a belief structure is intangible, has no real density, except for the degree to which you validate it as being impermeable.

Thus, I encourage you to begin to acknowledge that what you faith is moving your through has no substance to it, therefore it cannot actually provide resistance, and therefore your forward movement and the manifestation of your desire is bound to happen, and is bound to happen easily and therefore, I will say in a timely fashion, rather than in a long drawn out fashion.

I encourage you to get in touch with the inevitability of the fulfillment—just contemplate the idea of the inevitability of the fulfillment. And at the same time contemplate the fact that that which seems to resist it has no substance to it whatsoever, has not the mass to actually resist the movement of your desire. And you will begin to find movement occurring again. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Well, it has been a wonderful weekend.

ALL: Yes it has.

Gathering In Montpelier – 1989

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

Tape: Two (There was no Tape One in the set I got.)

ANSWER: I'm going to say something: What happens when an immovable object meets an irresistible force? You have conflict, you have tension, you have strife. Don't take on polarizing standpoints in this dissolution of the relationship. If you are going to be immovable in the face of a wave, the wave will capsize you, the wave will shake things up. It will not be experienced as that which lifts and supports and moves you.

So let go of the antagonistic stance as though that is the only thing that can justify separation. As I said, it's just simply intelligent not to be together. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: These days I experience oneness in what seem to be brief rare moment. There definitely there. What my question is, what do we need to come into experiencing oneness in the midst of being on the run, in the midst of every day, in the midst of every moment?

ANSWER: When you look up in the sky and you see a large flock of Canadian geese flying south, there are obviously many, many, many, many individual geese, on the fly if you will. And yet you are able to see the V shape, you are able to grasp them as a unity. And yet if you were right up there with the geese, you would be aware that each one of them was simply flying south, that the line up was not a concertive group effort, a unified effort to make a particular shape.

And so their sense of themselves is that indeed they have company on this trip, which is nice, but it is not their sense of there being a collaborative effort to be a unified expression of movement south. Yet you can see it.

Begin to understand that every detail, every infinitesimal facet of the day, and the events of the day holds that same kind of unity, even though it is not apparent to you when you are in the middle of it. In this way you will begin to, if not appreciate the many facets of the day, at least you will be able to approach them intellectually in an undefiant way, in an undefensive way, and with an overriding sense of order.

And as you relax without feeling that there are ten thousand different things that you must get into order, or that somebody else ought to have gotten in order, you will begin to experience consciously more of the integrity of the tiny infinite parts.

Now I will tell you something else, the experience of unity is something that happens only when you are defenseless, only when you are not in control. It is, therefore, something which you must allow. And one of the things that contributes most greatly to allowing it is, to entertain intellectually some sense of unity, of overriding order, some sense that indeed there is a God, if you will, a divine intelligence expressing Itself as immaculate flawless order. Not static order, but movement, infinite movement, the infinite Movement of Creation.

In this mental context or attitude you will become less defended and the experience of unity that you have described will begin to occur more frequently. The necessity is for each one of you to get up and greet your day with a reminder that indeed, this is the day the Lord is making, not hath made, it hathent been made yet. But this is the day that God is Being.

And you are on the crest of that movement. That is how you angle your attitude to catch the wave and not be thrown under and caught in the turmoil of the movement. That is the way you angle your attitude to catch the Movement of Creation and experience it more truly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In the last year I have been doing a lot of asking and listening around what is right-livelihood for me? And how might I move into a life that is more free and fulfilling and fun. And during one of my listening times...

ANSWER: I am going to interrupt you. What do those words "right livelihood" mean? And specifically what does this word "right" mean—to you?

QUESTION: What it means to me is doing something that I love doing, that comes from me, that I was created to do, that's uniquely mine to share with other people. I don't want a job to pay the bills. I want right livelihood in terms of spending my time daily doing something that I just really love to do.

ANSWER: That is a fair explanation, appropriate explanation of right livelihood. It certainly cannot be right livelihood as opposed to wrong livelihood. So what do you love?

QUESTION: Well, I love a lot of things. I guess it's choosing how I want to spend my day.

ANSWER: I'm going to encourage you to even back off from making that choice and paying enough attention within yourself to find the choice that your Being is already making so that you may simply flow with it. And thus not only know what is the right thing to do, but also experience the energy that will allow you to fulfill that activity, because the energy needed to accomplish the fulfillment is always connected with the Movement of your Being. It is never connected with the idea in your head of a right thing to do. And that is why you in particular times end up attempting to do things that you do not feel the energy for. And so, the task peters out before it is accomplished.

So this is important. When you are paying attention to what you love, you want to get past even your concepts of what you love. And so I encourage you to pay attention to that which you have feeling for, where there is a movement of energy behind it, because it is so congruent with you, so in harmony with you. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, during one of my listening times, a phrase came to mind. And the phrase was... My particular question was, "What is it that's holding me back from experiencing life in its fullest?" And the phrase was in the first person, and I found myself saying, "I hide and crouch in the back of my mothers cave." And I'd like you to address that specifically for me. You use the word cave this morning a couple of times. But I'd like you to clarify that specifically for me, and how I can just get on with it and move out that place.

ANSWER: Before I do anything with that, I want you also to share with everyone what the feeling was when those words were being said. What is the feel of hiding and crouching in your mothers cave? I'm not speaking about how you felt about it after those words came, but what was the feeling simultaneously with those words?

QUESTION: There was a feeling that came simultaneously when those words came, and it was that I was in a very dark place and that I was looking out. And at the end of that place there was a lot of lights and there was a lot of activity going on. And it was like a carnival or a fair, there was music and there was laughter. But I was in a dark kind of a enclosed place looking out.

ANSWER: Indeed, first of all, if nothing else you need to find your own cave and not your mothers. Indeed, in this imagery you are cowering, not only in her cave, but behind her petticoats. This is where she stays also.

Now, there's only one way to get out of that cave, and that is to go for the light, if you will. You have what it takes to move out. It has simply been comfortable and familiar for you to stay in the cave. Now you have ventured out, and you have liked and enjoyed what you experienced. But there is a conditioned feeling that you treat as truth, that says, "such frivolity and fun does not constitute having your attention where it counts. It does not constitute being responsible, or adult, or mature. That, indeed, it is totally irrelevant to what counts, and therefore is (and I'm using this word very cautiously) and therefore it is "sinful."

That word in this instance does not carry, let us say, the qualification of heavy-duty sin, but rather that since it doesn't constitute attending to anything responsible, it therefore truly has no value.

I will tell you something, experiencing the joy of life is one of the most fundamental necessities, and is absolutely divine. And I encourage you to go for the joy.

Now there are individuals like yourself—incarnated individuals—who feel that they sense individualities who have passed on, who sort of somehow have not gravitated toward the light and are sort of hanging around without any purpose or destination. And so, they help those lost individuals by telling them to go to the light. And I'm telling you in that same sense, go for the joy, go for the joy at the end of the cave. Go for it! I am not going to give you a process. Just go for it! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I think I heard somewhere at sometime that if you're in a spiritual growth spurt you probably won't be in a primary relationship. And I want to ask you if that's true? Because for me specifically...

ANSWER: It used to be true. (Laughter) Now you're going to have to manage to be in a relationship at the same time. That is part of riding the wave, being in the Movement and finding the proper angle of attitude. Now you don't have an excuse for not being in a relationship.

QUESTION: I think now my excuse is fear.

ANSWER: I will tell you something, your ability to feel what is appropriate will be present whether fear is present or not. So don't be afraid of fear. Notice it, but ask again, "what is God's truth here?" In other words, "What is the truth that is available in spite of my fear? What is the clarity that is available to me, whether I am perfectly centered or not?"

You see, I am very specifically this morning homing in on the fact that you must begin to expect to have your guidance and your clarity and your Awakening happening in the midst of "the human condition," rather than in the privacy of the sanctuary of your cave. You are going to have to learn how to be in the world from your closet. I am referring to the closet, "go into Thy closet and pray to Thy Father, which is in the silence." Act in the world from the closet, instead of from the surface reactive level.

It is possible now to access your closet from the world. It is time for the two to merge, if you will, and not be experienced as exclusive of each other, and therefore actual antagonistic to each other. What needs to be heard at this point is that one can have his or her feet in the world going through the world's activities and let the footsteps be guided from the closet—that inner place. And it is no longer necessary for them to be treated as exclusive, as though they were actually capable of defeating each other.

I have talked before about the necessity of coming out of one's cave and being centered in the marketplace, but that was a time when the coming out of the cave was what needed to occur. It is now time to live in the world from what I will call you best centered place, whether it is the perfect silent equilibrium that you have achieved in meditation before, or not. Continue.

QUESTION: That's all, thank you.

QUESTION: I feel very blessed and chosen by a real sweet soul to be chosen as a mother. I'm 19 weeks pregnant and I guess I had a lot of expectations about pregnancy that since I wanted this more than anything, I wouldn't be as off balance as I am.

ANSWER: How balanced do you want to be?

QUESTION: Physically balanced, emotionally balanced. I feel thrown off balance, because my attention is constantly spent on things that are happening, not just in growing or hormonal changes, but I have severe sinus problems and other problems with pinched nerves and all these physical things. And it seems real hard to stay on this board that you're talking about and riding this wave. And I want so much to be in the joy and I hear myself complaining all the time.

And it's really hard to forgive myself because I feel like I've created this other stuff and I don't know why I won't allow myself to just experience the joy of the whole thing, of the pregnancy of the coming of the baby. And I'm wondering specifically if these conditions will go away or if there's something I can do to just keep my attention off of them? Any comments?

ANSWER: I will tell you something, and I wish for you to keep this as your slogan during this pregnancy and at delivery and after delivery: Love is the art of giving. What is giving? Giving is allowing. This is a movement here, which we have been talking about all morning. Yield to the movement. And don't think you're being the movement. Don't think the movement is starting with you. You and your husband were the expression of the movement, but it was God's movement.

You have very little to do with what's happening, except to be the awareness of the happening of it. Love is the art of giving, of allowing, letting, letting go. I encourage you to contemplate that. And in your contemplation of it you will find the symptoms leaving.

Don't complicate things by wondering, "Well, what if this, and what about that, and what about all the things I will have to take care of," and all the sense of responsibility that wells up. That is a good way to distract you from yielding, from allowing. You are the place where the movement of God shines through. Now you need to let go and let God, with confidence and joy and peace. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a question that I've been thinking about all the way up here, and it's hard for me to express it in words. But at my level of experience, where I'm at right now. My question has to deal with feelings. What's the most appropriate way for me to deal with feelings at this time—emotional feelings such as pain, hurt, even anger. I realize that anger isn't justified, but if I hold it in—and I'm not talking rage, but at a base feeling before it works into rage instead of stuffing it—is it appropriate in fact to express feelings and not feel guilty for it?

ANSWER: It all depends on how you express it. Anger can be most satisfyingly expressed by sitting down with a telephone book and taking it one page at a time and tearing it so slowly that it will take forever just to do the one page. And listen to the sound it makes. The anger or even the rage you might be feeling will be gone before you get through the telephone book and no one will have been hurt in the process.

Indeed, when you, as you put it, stuffed it, stuffed the anger until it has become very intense, there needs to be a way to let it out. And so you must find a way to do it that hurts no one.

Now, the word stuffed was a good word, because anger doesn't start out as anger, rage doesn't start out as rage. It starts out as a most subtle frustration that comes because you have put a lid on your flow of love. You have arrived at a point where you have said, "there is a circumstance that justifies my not being at peace, there is justification for to block usual expression of enjoyment or love."

And so that's where the stuffing begins. And frustration builds and becomes the first stages of the cork that you are stuffing your love with. And that cork becomes denser and turns into particles, you might say, of anger and greater anger and then finally rage, etc. If the cork has built up then the cork must be released.

But one of the most valuable things you can remember in the process of releasing a cork is what it is that's being corked, not what the cork is made of, but what it is stuffing down. The cork is stuffing down your love. And it is all based somewhere in the past upon an assumption that there was justification for not letting your love flow.

Now, I'm going to be very specific here, because this needs to be said, even though some of you have already heard it. There is a difference between feelings and emotions. Feelings truly are Soul, with a capital "S", responding to or recognizing itself in everything. In other words, it is God's capacity to recognize Himself in all that He is. That is feeling! It is the recognition of what is Real.

Emotions are the ego's response to that very same Reality, except the ego isn't responding, it reacting. And in every case is expressing a varying form of resistance to Reality. It isn't recognizing it at all, it is denying it, and it is denying it with hate, and it is denying it with lust, and it is denying it with jealousy, it is denying it with conflict. That is what emotions are. Emotions are the ego's reaction to Reality, and feelings are the Soul's response of recognition to Reality. One is unifying, resolving, the other is conflicting.

The love that the ego's reaction corks or blocks is your Soul capacity. The reaction, the emotional response corks the Soul. Knowing this will help you to be alert and to make the distinction between reaction and response so that you might embrace the response and invalidate the reaction when it comes as the first tiny thought of justification of letting go of your peace. When you catch at that point you can say, “No, there is no justification for letting go of my peace, and I choose for my peace.” And then you don’t stuff it. And then you don’t have anything to unstuff.

One other point, when you are unstuffing don’t pay too much attention to the dynamics or elements of the cork as they begin to surface. You don’t want to pay too much attention until the love that was being corked is what is flowing forth because the cork is gone. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: But Raj, I have a follow up on that if you don’t mind. I heard you mention on other occasions that we need to try to maintain our integrity in a situation. And if I have a certain value system which I believe is my integrity...

ANSWER: Then you have already lost your integrity. Your integrity isn’t in a value system. Your integrity lies in the honesty that I spoke of earlier. Continue.

QUESTION: There’s a line between acceptance and judgment, and I’m trying to understand where judgment would come in.

ANSWER: You have no means of judgment until you have yielded up your concepts, until you have been willing to say, “Thy Will, not mine be done,” until you have been willing to say, “I don’t know what is true, will you please tell me, will you disclose it to me,” when you are asking of inner guidance. Then you know what the truth is. And knowing the truth doesn’t constitute a judgment. Judgment doesn’t come into play in order to know the truth. Knowing comes into play, but you can’t access the knowing unless you are willing to listen and unless you are willing to assume that of yourself at the moment you don’t know what truth is.

Now I’m going to broach one other point here, and we won’t go into it extensively. But when you dare to listen after having made the inquiry as to what is truth, do not think that you are going to come up with or be provided with an absolute form of truth. You are not at the moment capable of experiencing truth without feeling entirely overwhelmed. Therefore, truth is revealed in language that you can understand at the moment. And so, you could say that the truth will be relatively true. But it will be the clearest expression of truth that you are capable of embracing without feeling overwhelmed.

Now I mention this because as you become comfortable with a new level of true perception, or truer perception, and you feel confident in your “understanding of truth,” you can become unnerved when further clarification of truth occurs. And this can become very confusing. And you can feel that somehow you must not have understood.

I'm going to put it this way: Right now every single one of you exists in the Kingdom of Heaven. There is no other place to be. That's where everything that is going on right now is going on. However, in Reality it doesn't look like this. Because if you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven you can't possibly be on your way back, can you? And yet, it appears as though this whole event this weekend involves a process of "coming Home." And I am speaking encouragingly of your prospects of arriving there.

This language is an accommodation to where you are right now, because when I say, "open your eyes and see the Kingdom of Heaven that you are in," you cannot do it. Your ego pops up and says, "If this is the Kingdom of Heaven, why is there a family problem? Why aren't things going smoothly? Why are people dying, etc., etc.?" Well, the absolute fact is that they aren't. But you can't experience that yet.

So understand, that just as right now, what is occurring is an accommodation to your present point of unfoldment, it is an expression of truth that can register with you in a way that means something, and also triggers movement beyond what you can embrace, still without overwhelming you. If you understand that, then as you listen for truth and it unfolds, you will not assume that it is ultimate, but you will know that it constitutes a secure stepping stone in your process of perceiving truth totally.

It is disconcerting to have a tremendous influx of enlightenment, a new level of perception occur. And when the newness of it wears off and you are aware that real progress has been made because you are comfortable in this new level of truth. And then you find another threshold occurs and a new view has unfolded. It can cause you to feel as though you have slipped. And you can say, "Wait a minute, am I back to square one, and I thought I had gone so far." Indeed, the growth has occurred, but if you are not expecting the growth to be further amplified you can misunderstand the further amplification. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, the last time I spoke to you, you told me that it was appropriate for me to be here. And since that time I've watched the unfoldment, I've watched perfection and harmony occur. And I have been in wonder and in awe of it. You also told me that I was to come here to learn. And I would like to know from you what the focus of that learning is to be for me?

ANSWER: I will encourage you to simply pay attention as we go through this weekend and you will find out. It is not appropriate for me to clue you in ahead of time. It will be most wonderful for you, however. It will not be heavy-duty hard work. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to know where I am on this surf board right now in relation to better awareness, clarity, listening and hearing? And what could I do to...

ANSWER: I am going to say that you are unsteady on your feet, but managing to stay up, managing to continue with the movement. And I encourage you to be very tolerant of yourself. It is not necessary for you to keep your balance with perfect equanimity. It is all right to be a little clumsy. The clumsiness, or the skill brought to bear, the style with which you ride the board is not the issue. It is that you get the hang of balancing on that forward movement and begin to enjoy it.

You have for some years now, managed to hang loose and stay upright. It is simply that now it's important for you to understand that it is not a matter of standing at the edge of something, but rather that the edge is a moving edge, as I said earlier. So that rather than worrying about what is on the other side of the edge, you may get your attention upon that point of balance where you engage the forward movement the most.

Again, don't waste energy being upset at lack of skill or grace or style. If you will forget about that, the element of joy or fun will come into the experience more rapidly and even more significantly than it already has. Trust yourself more. I mean by that, trust your process of listening more than you do. Consciously engage in listening even more than you have. And understand that in the process of listening you are not giving your power away, because what is reflected back to you is your Knowing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: As a follow up, do I understand that in listening that I am in essence hearing, but denying the hearing?

ANSWER: That is your assumption, that is not what I said. You are listening, you are hearing, and you are trusting into what you are hearing well, but I encourage you to do it even more—more frequently. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is, I'd like to know about my son. For the past couple of years my husband and I had gone through difficult times. And I wanted to know how this impacted on him, and will we have any future problems with it?

ANSWER: I will tell you, that regardless of the stress you have felt, from his standpoint the fact that both of you love him has never been called into question. He has known all the way through that he is loved. And that continuity of knowing on his part has constituted what you might call a bridge over the troubled waters that the two of you were experiencing. That continuity means that doubt relative to himself and his worthiness of love has not come into play. He has experienced no trauma that will need to be healed. He is just fine. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. Just as a follow up: We had gone through some very difficult times of which my whole focus was on our relationship. The past year has been extremely peaceful and harmonious between the two of us and the focus has changed. Can you just give me some feedback on that?

ANSWER: Indeed, in this period of time both you and your husband have done some growing up. And do not ask me who has done more. It doesn't matter. What matters is that a balance has been achieved that allows for the two of you to grow more gracefully and to enjoy the relationship, and to enjoy the potential not only of the relationship but of each of your potentials.

You have during the past two years provided proof of the value of not being impatient relative to the growth of each other. There is such great impatience among the young people, such a will to have instant gratification, that growth whether graceful or ungraceful is not easily allowed for. And too many give up.

Now the two of you in spite of everything hung in there—this is the persistence I spoke of earlier. Now this is not to be taken to imply that those whose paths have separated is a result of not being willing to persist. Because there are times for paths to separate and there are times for paths to remain together. And you very clearly felt the appropriateness of hanging together, even when your intellect was telling you that it was futile and even idiotic.

Now do be willing to pay attention for, as I said, God's truth, because your intellect is not going to be able to distinguish between what is appropriate and what is inappropriate. Your intellect is going to be based upon memory, upon past experience, and upon conclusions relative to those memories and experiences. When what is needed is a sensitivity to what God's truth is right now, which has nothing to do with the past.

Be willing to persist for the truth, even if the truth that is unfolding within you doesn't jive with your best intellectual judgment or conclusion. And be willing to extend to yourselves the same tolerance, the same patience, the same willingness to hang in there. Because at the bottom line, each one of you is your own worst enemy, or shall I say, each one of your ego's is your worst enemy.

And you must be willing to hang in there with who you divinely are, in spite of what your ego says about you, in spite of whether or not your ego suggests that it is futile and useless and there is no hope for you because you are such an obvious slob, or sinner, or whatever word it might come up with. You must be willing to hang in there with your divinity if you wish to see your divinity come forth more gracefully.

Notice I said, in order for your divinity to come forth more gracefully, your divinity, as I indicated earlier, is going to come forth gracefully or ungracefully, because the process of Awakening is occurring. So what you want is to have the flexibility and the tolerance to hang in there and flow and allow this coming forth to occur with the greatest grace, and even perhaps the greatest joy even as it is happening.

Understand that this movement of Awakening is going to undermine your concepts—your concepts that are not a result of being attentive to Reality in the moment. It is going to undermine your role so that you are freed to respond to the moment you are in out of a sensitivity to the moment, and not out of a sensitivity to your role, or out of a sensitivity to needing to save face, etc.

It is going to undermine your concept of enemy and ally. Because I promise you, you are going to arrive at a point where you will be faced with the wonderful opportunity to love your enemies, not because they are enemies who need to be loved to be saved from their enemyhood, but because something in you is beginning to see that the role of enemy is elicited by those who label the other as an enemy.

And that when one dares to love another, which means when one is willing to acknowledge that which is Real, divinely Real in another, then any other sense of being an antagonist will not have agreement from you, and therefore will not be able to maintain itself as well and the antagonistic expressions and attitudes will begin to fade.

This movement is going to undermine a lot. And at the bottom line, that “lot” will all relate to each of your self-identifications, your sense of your identity will change.

Now the ego is going to come in and it is going to say, “You are losing your marbles. You don’t know who you are. You are not stable. You need to get your identity.” And it will have you fall back upon past habits, and past concepts, and past ideas about what is principled, what is loving, etc. This is where the greatest tolerance is going to have to come in so that you might be willing to flow with the wave that is changing your sense of your own identity and uncovering your divinity more clearly, even though your divinity from your ego’s point of view is insane.

Your individuality arises not out of your circumstances or environment, but out of the Father which is Being you at every given moment. You are individuality. You are the Father individualized. And if there is a role, if there is a nature to that individuality that is God’s self-expression it is the Christ.

So what is the Christ? Because to be the Christ can seem to be an unreal burden. After all you’ve got to be constantly good, you’ve got to be constantly perfect, you’ve got to be flawlessly and constantly loving under every circumstance. That is a horrible burden an impossible task it would seem. This is the way the ego would see it. And of course, the ego won’t hesitate to uncover the fact that you don’t have what it takes in the first place, to do any of that.

What is it to be the Christ? It is to become daring enough, humble enough to get in touch with who you are at the moment and love yourself. And then be out from that self-acceptance and self-love, it’s the honesty I spoke of earlier. But you say, “If I do that I may not always be loving, I may at times be quite unyielding, I might be quite a brick wall under some circumstances.” And I would have to agree with you, yes. Because being the Christ is not being a certain set of behaviors.

Being the Christ is being the unapologetic true expression of who you are at the moment. But you say, “I’m not Awake at the moment. My ankle still hurts. I still have trouble digesting cheese. I still get angry if so-and-so cuts me off on the freeway. How can I accept myself, and how can that be being the Christ?”

Well, if you are willing to love yourself and accept yourself right where you are and release the self-criticism, then you are not conflicted—the Christ is not conflicted. And if you are not conflicted, then you are not in fear. And the Christ is not in fear. And if you are not conflicted and you are not in fear, then you are ripe for revelation, you are ripe for the influx of your greater capacity to be aware divinely. And you are also in a position of loving your fellow man more truly. And that is what the Christ does.

And so again, as I said earlier today about truth, the Christ becomes a movement rather than a manifestation of a fixed fact, or a fixed personality or characteristic. Because you see when you are comfortable you are more willing to explore, you are more willing to be undefended. And the more undefended you are the more of your divinity can get in through the ego structures and register with you, and transform you, and lift you into a new viewpoint of yourself.

But that comes from a willingness to take yourself right where you are and love yourself, and claim your credibility, and claim your worth, whether you have anything to prove your worth or not. Acquire things that prove your worth, and if they’re taken away you will think your worth has deserted you, when all along your worth has always been yours, inherently yours, something which can’t be taken away from you, but something which you can ignore.

But when there is a willingness to love yourself, to accept yourself right where you are, and to be you at the moment without apology, or without inclination to apologize, and without inclination to feel guilty about it—I will tell you something—you have discovered security, your security that is forever with you unless you believe that you are truly called upon to be something better or different from who you are at the moment. And then let others judge whether or not you are being that better thing well enough.

It is ultimately so simple, and so gentle, and so kind, and so reasonable, waking up is, being the Christ is. And what being the Christ is in its fullness will reveal itself to you ever more clearly. It doesn’t mean being a religious personage, it doesn’t mean being the savior of the world. But I will tell you something: If you be the Christ, if you begin to do these simple, gentle, reasonable things, and you discover your joy, and you discover your freedom from fear no matter what seems to be going on, your atmosphere, your attitude will be inspiring to others. Your behavior will justify to others the worth of their exploring the same kind of self-acceptance and self-love.

And so your brothers and sisters will be inspired, but it won’t be because you’re trying to be the savior, it will be because you are simply loving yourself and finding the joy of it, and feeling the congruence of it. And in feeling that unity within you, finding that's one and the same thing with finding God. It's all simple. It's all experiential. None of it is intellectual.

But we can do workshops and we can approach this intellectually. But for this reason only, to help you arrive at such a logically conclusion that there is a God, and that God Is All, that you can then justify intellectually letting go into the experience. But it's the letting go into the experience that constitutes the act or leap of faith, the investment of trust that actually does the trick. It's arriving at that point where you let go of the control and just allow, allow yourself to be who you are, love yourself at the moment, give yourself credit, and don't buy into the suggestions of others and their opinions that you leave much to be desired, and that indeed you are a pain in the neck, and that you are indeed far from divine, and that indeed it will take you lifetimes to deserve to walk into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Well, you're in it! You are in it and you never left it! And it is love that will uncover it to you. And it starts with love for you.

I know this is the same old story, but I am telling you something in a way that makes it more real to you, so that it doesn't just seem to be a spiritual practice, but something that is so ultimately natural to you that it becomes silly not to be doing it. Most of all, you need to know that it doesn't take obedience's and it doesn't take effort, it isn't hard work, it's letting go, letting go into your fundamental ever present unchangeable divinity. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello, this is the first time I've been at one of these seminars, and so far I've found it very interesting and informative. But I do have a limited understanding for some of your terms. So keeping that in mind the question I have is, what will be the outcomes of the issues going on in my life right now, and in what time frame will they be accomplished?

PAUL: This is me, Paul. I would ask if you would identify the three issues, you don't have to go into a story, but just identify like it's work, or a relationship, or whatever, because it'll be easier to hang the answer on something.

QUESTION: Work, home and school.

PAUL: Okay, I'm going to have to put this in my own words. The picture that he's giving is that the work issue will be resolved within 60 days, even if that seems to be impossible to you to conceive at the moment. And the only way I can put this relative to that is that what will happen relative to work is that you'll get your credibility back. Does that make any sense?

QUESTION: Yes.

PAUL: Okay. The time period on the schooling issue seems to be 15 months. And I said what will be the nature of the resolution and the word that he said was completion.

QUESTION: I'm hoping for completion, but in an earlier time frame.

ANSWER: Do not be impatient. Instead of going for a particular time frame, go for the perfect timing. And that is something different from what you may want conceptually, but desire to have it, if I may put it this way, occur in the fullness of time, meaning in its perfect timing. If it takes 15 months, let it, and watch the way unfold for it to take that amount of time without stressing you out. That's the end of the answer.

The other part of the question was?

QUESTION: Home.

PAUL: Meaning having a place of residence?

QUESTION: Well, that would enter into it. Its my son and husband.

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. Sometimes he answers with images, and if he does I have to put it in my own words. The picture is like there are three of you. And there's like underneath the floor where you're standing there's a bright light so that there's illumination coming up embracing all three of you from underneath. That's the image. T he feel is that there is a need for illumination, a need for nurturing—it's like the illumination is love—it's like there's a need for nurturing love. And it's like it is most definitely worth the investment of that love, and that seems to be relevant to you. It is definitely worth while for you to make an investment of love in being nurturing.

Timing of resolution there seems to be the end of November the beginning of December of this year.

QUESTION: I'm not quite sure but that nurturing component applies to? Is it to myself, because I have seen a lawyer to pursue divorce.

ANSWER: It is truly relative to all three of you. Now you must pay attention to what you must do. And I do not mean to throw a crimp in here, but I encourage you to take another look, to not be hasty, and to be completely sure that this is the appropriate step to take. I do mean to convey to you that it is a step that is not absolutely necessary. But this is something you will have to pay attention to within yourself.

And then I do encourage you to act from your clearest perception of what is needed. I do encourage you to trust yourself. I simply mean to convey to you that the part of you that is wondering whether this is truly appropriate is not crazy. And I encourage you to pay attention to it and not override it simply for the sake of relief. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Paul, I gave a silent request to Raj.

PAUL: Okay, this is me Paul. I'm simply getting the word yes. Is it a yes, no type question? I'm curious.

QUESTION: Sananda asked that I share a drawing today. But I'm going to ask the question because I don't know what to do with it—the drawing. I'm directed by super guidance to request of you an answer for revealing purpose Sananda. Please describe Who's Ramya (????) today with God's purpose.

PAUL: Again I didn't understand, whose...

QUESTION: Who's Ramya? That's the name of the Mothership.

PAUL: And what is the question now?

QUESTION: If you would care to share, describe Who's Ramya today with God's Purpose, capital "P" Purpose.

ANSWER: For the sake of the rest of you here, this question is relative to a, for lack of better words, a mother ship. Now, there are many who, in listening for guidance, find themselves receiving information relative to what could be called the space brothers. This is a term that has been used.

It is important for all of you to understand that indeed this term, the space brothers, is a valid term identifying individualities who are, shall I say, in your vicinity, specifically in your universe, and specifically in your galaxy. And there presence is for the purpose of supporting the tone, if you will, supporting the attitude I spoke of earlier with which you engaged with the wave, supporting the tone or attitude which will promote your Awakening.

Now as I have indicated before, these ships are not necessary for them to travel in. These ships are an accommodation to the ego level of development, or shall I say, the ego level of dissolution that is occurring. And because every level of ego thought will be addressed in this process of Awakening, the conveying of the message will come in many different languages of expression in ways that everyone will be able to understand, as I indicated earlier.

These ships, as I said, are an accommodation to the present level of thought, because at the bottom line, they inspire your willingness to think beyond your present frame of reference.

Now, the fact is that these ships have not displayed themselves with any frequency, because it would be overwhelming, frightening, if you will. Nevertheless, they are present. Now I indicated that they are present because those of the Brotherhood who are fulfilling this particular aspect of supporting the Awakening process are specifically addressing those whose inspiration is triggered by "beings from the stars," but they are not aliens, they are totally Awakened beings, therefore, there is no need for fear.

This particular ship is extremely large, hundreds of miles long. Now it is highly likely to make an appearance within the next two years. The reason being, that mankind, generally speaking, will be able to bear the experience. And also, because during the next two years there will be a significant increase in the general experience of guidance and the valuing of guidance. And through the guidance that will come there will be a general clearer awareness of the presence of the "space brothers."

Now I briefly wish to address one other issue that carries with it a certain amount of fear. There are stories of being from outer space who have picked up human beings and examined them and physically violated them in the sense of penetrating their body for the purpose of extracting samples, etc. I wish you to understand that this has not happened! Those who would be capable of space travel no everything there is to know simply by listening. And there is no necessity of violating anyone in order to know anything.

Now, all of this of course is happening as an expression of the Father's Will. And you must understand that it is the Father's Will for you to be Awake. It is the Father's Will for you to be experiencing yourself divinely, to be experiencing yourself as the Christ, to experience the fact that you are in the Kingdom of Heaven at this instant.

And so, there will be varying means of triggering your awareness of your divinity, of triggering your willingness to experience your divinity. And the space brothers are part of this, and the spacecraft are part of this, because it helps you to understand that conscious individuality, what you call beings of which you are some, that beings are citizens of the universe, that the universe is your normal domain and not just a small part of the surface of your planet. Your unity, the unity of the Brotherhood is a universal unity not a local one.

Now, the Brotherhood is gathering, because, also as I have said before, the Awakening process is going to look like something. The, if I may put it this way, final integration of the Brotherhood in its completeness, consciously speaking, is going to look like something.

What I am about to say is not an accurate description, but it conveys somewhat of the effect when the remnants of the Brotherhood who are still sleeping, but in the process of Awakening Awaken. And it will happen very rapidly when it happens. It will happen spontaneously when it happens.

It will be as though there is a bright effulgent glow which will emerge and radiate throughout the universe, throughout the infinity of God from the areas where the sleepers have Awakened. There is a concentrated gathering of sleepers in this particular part of your galaxies. And so, there are those who have come not only support but also share in this effulgent emergent movement of Light/Love. It is going to be a significant event.

You must understand that every single one of you is part of the Brotherhood of Man, that is the Body of Christ in Christian terms, which is simply the infinite manifestation of the Father.

This Brotherhood is not experiencing its completeness at the moment, because there are those of you who are insisting upon experiencing a tiny personal private sense of selfhood. "But Father I'd rather do it myself." As that willfulness yields, dissolves, each of you will come into the conscious experience of your Christhood, of God constituting the center and circumference, the warp and woof of you.

And the Brotherhood as a whole will become infinitely conscious of itself without any part of it being left out. And you will experience the infinitude of you as the awareness of the Brotherhood in every aspect. And this relates to the change of self-identification that I mentioned earlier. So you have great things in store for you. The space brothers and this ship together with all of those who are gathering in support of this event all express the Will of the Father for you to be Awake.

However, as I said earlier, do not wait for an external event, start to love yourself now, start to be self-accepting, start to be willing to go within into that place where you can discover you so that you might discover that it isn't some puny mortal sinner, but rather that it is something quite wonderfully divine, so that you may be able to embrace yourself more fully as what you really are.

Figuratively speaking, this will not happen, but figuratively speaking, if everyone refused to do that then the Brotherhood would not manifest the ship so that it could be seen. You see, your conscious awareness of your divinity cannot be forced upon you, it must be desired. And that is why you are getting support, and that is why you are not being coerced.

Now I realize that I have gone in a round about way to answer this question, but it helps you to understand how it all fits together. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: What would be the answer to the first part, Raj? Why was I asked to bring this drawing?

ANSWER: An opportunity for you to follow guidance.

QUESTION: Thank you, Sananda.

QUESTION: I am guided to request of you by super wisdom that you reveal Mitreya's purpose on Urantia? That being the name of our world.

ANSWER: It is very simple. To address the doubting Thomas'. To address those who will not acknowledge the Christ except as a man other than themselves. Someone whom those who have completely disowned their own divinity, can look to with faith who because of that faith will be able to direct the attention back upon the individuals who are insisting upon giving their power away by placing all of divinity in one individual who is other than themselves.

Now, it is not Mitreya's purpose to cause unity. Unity is already manifesting itself, because it is already the absolute fact, and because there are more individualities who are Awake than those who are dreaming. And as a result the dream is not getting the support it needs in order to maintain itself. It is beginning to break up. And more are waking up. And as more wake up the less strength there is to hold the dream together and that is why waking up will happen spontaneously and will not occur as a result of will or effort.

Mitreya will be here for those who are holding out for a Christ outside themselves. I have also indicated in the past and it still holds, that there is some possibility that he will not have to declare himself, because this shift of Awakening is occurring more rapidly than was anticipated. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well, my question concerns something that I recently ran into and that is a process developed to make conscious use of the night. In other words, I'm not talking about just dreaming, random dreaming and then waking up the next morning and trying to recollect it. I'm talking about the ability to learn to have out-of-body experiences, travel, roam the universe at will. And certain processes that have been developed that will allow people to basically make that leap in a very short period of time.

ANSWER: If it works indeed, it must work by promoting the willingness on the part of the individual to allow it to happen. And the use of the words conscious will are not entirely accurate. One cannot do this by means of what you would call conscious will, but rather by means of conscious allowing.

The giving of direction for the roaming of the universe, as you put it, in an out-of-body experience must happen as a result of the subtlest expression of desire rather than will.

Now, what you are describing does indeed fit the description I have just given, but I am clarifying the proper use of words so that those who might hear what you have to say by virtue of listening to the tapes will understand correctly and not misconstrue what you have said. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, there's not much more to continue. I just ran across it and it just rang very true inside myself. And there is definitely the desire to utilize the night time to have experiences as well as having access to knowledge in a more direct way, rather than sitting, let's say, at a desk and having to read or study a book. There's much more the feeling that it is possible to access any type of knowledge more directly.

ANSWER: In addition, I would encourage everyone, if they feel so inclined, just before going to sleep, whether or not you have established dialog with your guide, to specifically give your guide permission to help you wake up, to help you learn what you need to know while you are sleeping. You can be quite busily engaged in your Awakening process while you are sound asleep by virtue what I will call, educational processes that are completely beyond your comprehension.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. He's giving a picture here. It's not a new picture to me, but the picture is that at night when we're asleep if we have asked our guides to help us with our educational process of Awakening, it is possible for them to like take us, not bodily, but mentally to a place, and it's not a... visually the image that he gives is sort of like a black hold, I mean it's just like a black area in space, not a black hold in the sense that it sucks energy into itself.

And it's like this place is like a university, or a repository of all knowledge. And when one moves into this space it's as though you're scanned—I hate to use that word, because it has negative connotations—but it's as though there is an immediate awareness on the part of this educational space of where you are, what makes sense to you, and what you know, and immediately begins to start right from where you are filling you or providing you with additional information.

QUESTION: An infusion of knowledge?

ANSWER: An infusion of knowledge would be a good way of saying it, right. But always sensitive to your comfort zone, or what you're able to bear. You may not remember, I mean you probably won't remember it when you wake up in the morning. What Raj has said, there were many nights in the beginning of when Raj first came along that he indicated... I mean there were nights I would wake up the next morning and I would know that I hadn't just slept. And I asked him what was happening. And he indicated that something of this sort was happening. And I said, "but I don't remember any of it, what good is it?" And he just indicated that when it became appropriate for me to have it consciously available I would find myself "remembering it," even though I don't remember where I'm remembering it from. But it's like the knowledge was there and somehow activated in me, and when it became appropriate I would find myself knowing something that I hadn't known before. But it would be very natural. Okay, just a moment now.

ANSWER: I do indeed encourage you to explore this avenue that you have discovered. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Sometime ago you indicated that you are the most recent one to have fully Awakened while incarnated?

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: So obviously many millions have Awakened while not incarnated? And my question is what is the value of incarnation, if it's so much easier to Awaken when not?

ANSWER: In the first place, you make the assumption that most incarnations occur on your planet. And this is not true. And there are other places of incarnation, if I may put it that way, where Awakening has occurred. And so, it is not as though the majority of Awakenings have occurred to those who are not presently incarnated.

The value of incarnation, that is indeed a good question. There is not a great deal of value to it. It is a limited perception of the uninterrupted, ongoing, unfoldment of conscious individuality. To be incarnated means to experience one's infinitude as though he or she were some small part of it inside that infinitude, it is to have lost perspective. It is, however, an experience that is available.

It also happens to be an experience that one can become lost in, because the experience of it causes one to forget one's infinite, all embracing consciousness or Mind, that constitutes his or her actual Being. An infinite conscious individual is an individualization of the Father, in which all that the Father is is embraced. That is what you are.

So do not try to place too much value on incarnation. The ego thinks it is great, simply because it allows the ego to continue to exist. And that is the reason that once the ego no longer exists there will be no more incarnations. Because one will not choose to experience himself or herself from a limited standpoint.

Now it doesn't matter how it happened that you got to this place of experiencing Reality from a limited, private point of view. The point is that Awakening is what is occurring and everyone needs to get on with that process.

Now, although there is no particular value in incarnating, nevertheless, here you are. And what you must remember is that even from this partial or limited vantage point what you are looking at is Reality, what you are experiencing is the Kingdom of Heaven incompletely perceived. And so you cannot simply say that everything about your experience is illusory. And part of what will move you back out of the ego's limitation is the curiosity to see the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are, without playing into the ego's suggestion that salvation is off in the future somewhere other than this miscreation called the world and universe.

So, although there is no particular value in having incarnated, the state of viewing Reality from an incarnated sense of self is an experience of Reality. And that is why it is essential for you to begin to look for the evidences of Reality right where you are, rather than discounting it all because it's happening during an "incarnation."

In other words, just because the way of looking at everything, the incarnated way of looking at everything is an illusion does not mean that everything that you are seeing is illusory, and therefore absolutely nothing counts. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, it's been interesting being in your presence. Due to my preconditioning of "what God is and what the world is for," I've had a difficult and even fearful time accepting things like A Course In Miracles, or even entities like yourself.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: After three years the fear is gone, but there is still some confusion that stays. You talked earlier on the subject of truth, how new views unfold through growth, but when you don't know there is new views you think you have gone astray. I have had a long relationship with my God for about I'd say thirteen years, and now with A Course In Miracles broadening my horizons and the peace that I feel from that there is still some of that confusion. And my question is, am I truly still pursuing God?

ANSWER: You are indeed. Literally, the avenue you are taking is allowing you to come into an ever more relevant relationship with God, and an ever more relevant God.

The Bible indicates that God is closer than the neck vein. The neck vein, meaning the jugular, the vein which literally carries the life giving blood to the brain, which therefore is responsible for your being conscious, being alive mentally, if I may put it that way. That God is even closer than that. God is the presence, the infinite intelligence that you experience as being you.

Now I don't want you to jump to conclusions because I am not in any way saying that you are all there is of God. I am not reducing God to, shall I say, the lowest common denominator of the human mind, or of a human mind. Rather I am saying that the infinite God, the indivisible, undivided Life Force, Mind, Soul, Spirit, Life, Truth, Love, Principle is that which is unfolding Itself, and which constitutes the Movement of Life and is the only presence there is. And because God is the only presence there is, and yet you experience yourself as presence, then you are that Presence. Except that I must be very careful here. You will understand it more accurately if you say that that Presence, with a capital "P", is all there is truly of you.

God is closer than the neck vein, because God is the only thing that is present right where you are. If God is all that is present right where you are, then there is much about yourself awaiting your learning, because you do not experience yourself as embodying or embracing in any way all of the qualities of God that you are aware of.

Now, as you learn more of what God is in a more relevant way, it is going to begin to redefine you to you. And in redefining you and exalting you above or out of this limited puny and hopeless entity that you seem to be, as that exaltation occurs and there is a greater experience of unity between you and the Father/Mother, then what the Father/Mother is is going to begin to change and become even more relevant, because the unity of the Father/Mother and you will be more greatly substantiated.

Now I encourage you not to be afraid of the shifting of perception that occurs. I also encourage you to know—not so that you can make it true, but because it is true—that it is your natural estate, it is your natural state of awareness to be aware of all that is the way God is experiencing all that God is.

In other words, you will come to the point where you will be able not only to see, but to experience the presence of God in each and everything around you. And this constitutes coming Home. This constitutes coming into the Christ consciousness where you are not seeing anything differently from the way the Father sees it. And by virtue of not seeing it differently, you find that you are the Father seeing Himself, that that Movement of Mind, the Mind that is God truly constitutes the conscious experience of Being—meaning you—when you are no longer maintaining a private, personal, different perception of everything than God's Self experience of His infinity.

The shifting that will occur will feel good. And I encourage you to pay attention to the feeling, just as you know what the feeling of love truly feels like and can identify it when it is present, you have the capacity to recognize the feeling of God. It is not an educated feeling, it is not a concept, it is not an idea. It is an experience of the Soul. And you have the capacity to feel it and recognize it for what it is.

Therefore, I will put it this way, if you do not have the accompanying feeling then question your concept, or question what you are thinking. You can depend upon the feeling of the presence of God, because it feels like Home. And I use the word Home and there is no way for me to describe it, it is an experience that you recognize when you have it, and then you know exactly what I am meaning.

So, as you explore avenues that are opening up new frontiers for you pay attention for the feeling. Your relationship with God will become stronger, but there will be less and less distinction between you and God. And you will begin to recognize the harmony and the joy of living as an inseparable aspect, as an aspect inseparable from the presence of the Father in your life—and I'm going to say, as your life.

It will become more and more apparent that it isn't your personal private life, that you personally and privately are living or creating, but rather that it is the Father Being His fullness right where you are. And you will see the Father in your life. And you will see the Father in you, and the joy will, I am going to say, reek of Home. It will be unmistakable and it will be the indicator you can depend upon that you are on the right track.

Now at the same time I encourage you not to jump to conclusions too rapidly, because as the shifting occurs in your sense of yourself as well as your sense of God, there is always the tendency to grab onto whatever the nearest previous comfort zone, conceptual comfort zone was. The fact that shifting is occurring and a new you is emerging which creates uneasiness and a feeling of insecurity in you because it's not familiar, does not mean that what is unfolding is untrue. You must dare to allow that transition, or transformation, if you will, to occur, testing the water constantly, you could say, testing the Spirits to see whether they are of God. Dare to examine, or shall I say, dare to explore and examine.

One does not let go of old concepts and old habits and old familiarities easily, even though in letting go of them it allows one to come into a clearer and newer familiarity. And what I mean by a clearer and newer familiarity is an awareness of that which is closer to Home, closer to your divine origin, closer to the truth of you that is the fact at the moment, even though you temporarily turned your head away and ignored it.

I applaud you for your courage. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. The separation that this has caused in my family, a simple yes or no, will it be rectified?

ANSWER: Yes, indeed.

QUESTION: Raj, I've recently jumped onto a big wave by resigning from a long career in the High-Tech Industry. And in doing so, I've let go of a security blanket, you know the illusion of well-being that that career held for me. These days for the last several months I've been—to use Joseph Campbell's words—following my bliss, getting up every morning in beautiful sunshine and oil painting. Something which I had no idea I would be doing when I started doing this, which makes me realize it didn't come from my ego, it must be coming from somewhere inside.

I'm thoroughly enjoying this, but I'm at the same time have this level of anxiety of, where am I headed, what am I doing? The money is going out and none is coming in. It may feel somewhat like Paul Tuttle must have felt when he was being squeezed out of his business to ultimately end up channeling. There is no question here. I know that I am unfolding here, but there's still the fear perhaps I'm looking for the assurance that everything is going to be all right, even if specifics will help me in this case.

ANSWER: You see, the problem is that one usually thinks of bliss as irrelevant to daily life. Thus, if one follows it, one is bound to end up ungrounded, unable to function in the world, to become irrelevant in the worlds terms, and this is a terrible misunderstanding of the fact. Understand that bliss is well-balanced. Bliss is the unobstructed Movement of the Soul into expression. But this Soul isn't a personal private Soul of yours or anybody else's. This Soul is the presence of God that I was speaking of a moment ago, that constitutes the presence that everyone looks at and calls you or anyone else.

This Soul, with a capital "S", is God self-expressing. That is why following your bliss is experienced as bliss, because you are experiencing God. But God completely expresses Himself/Herself. God's self-expression is not partial or incomplete. And so, you in following your bliss can expect not only to have your Soul satisfied, but your stomach and your wallet, because God is relevant. God's complete self-expression is identifiable as that which meets every human need, not minimally, but fully—fully, fulfillment, not a little bit, but fulfillment. And fulfillment is an experience, a practical experience, and shall I say, in inner experience.

So I encourage you when you are following your bliss, when you are daring to let go into your bliss to embrace bliss as a balanced manifestation and Movement of fulfillment on all fronts, in all ways. Do not let it remain something fulfilling but irrelevant. Embrace it as that which is fulfilling and absolutely relevant. Following your bliss means being open to your fulfillment in every way that means fulfillment right here and right now. And that means having the dollars and cents to buy the food, and pay for the roof over your head, and transportation, and whatever meets the human needs.

If you are not careful and you conceptualize bliss as irrelevant joy or even activity, such as an artistic activity that is irrelevant but wonderful, then you are likely not to even have your eyes open to see the opportunities for your abundance to appear. And this I am encouraging you not to do.

Be just as curious to see how the manifestation of bliss is going to unfold relevant to your wallet and your stomach and your housing as you are to see it unfold as the artwork you are doing. Because it is all the Creative Movement of the Father, which you must simply yield to, be open to, be looking for, but not impatiently or coercively—yieldingly.

Very simply, follow your bliss. Keep that phrase in mind, but add a new phrase to it: Bliss is relevant. And just remember that because bliss is relevant doesn't diminish what bliss is in any way, it enlarges on the relevance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Are you confirming that I will be a successful artist financially?

ANSWER: I will confirm to you that if you will follow your bliss in the way I have just described, you will experience fulfillment whether you are “successful as an artist” or not.

Let's not go for a concept. “Successful artist” is a concept. You being you without apology, letting the honesty of your self-expression be the most important thing, will constitute following your bliss, and the evidence of your fulfillment will be present. But you won't be trying to be “a successful artist,” or a great artist who inherited a million, and therefore doesn't have to worry about being successful, or any other concept you might come up with.

Don't go for a concept, go for the honesty and the bliss and the relevance of bliss. And let, if I may put it this way, the universe manifest your fulfillment, because you're not in an active state of denying your fulfillment.

And I will tell you something: The moment you begin to go for a concept or a role you are limiting the universe, the Movement of God in its manifestation of fulfillment. Those are not exactly accurate words. You cannot limit God. But you will limit your perception of the Movement of fulfillment that God is Being.

So I dare you to just be whatever it is you happen to be being at the moment, because you are being honest and following your bliss. And to heck with the concepts. And watch the fulfillment begin to occur, and begin to be able to marvel at the infinite creativeness of the universe, the infinite creativeness of the Movement of Being.

You see, you do not really want the security of a confirmation that you will be financially successful as an artist, what you want is the confirmation that it is worth it to be true to yourself, the rest of it will fall into place. And I confirm to you that it is worth it to be true to yourself to follow your bliss and watch the fulfillment begin to unfold that you are not personally responsible for, at least nor from an ego level. And that is what personally responsible means. Your Being is responsible, but fortunately you are not able to control your Being. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to talk about getting in contact with my guide. And I talked to you about a month ago on the telephone and you see if I'm any closer to making contact with my guide and what do I need to do?

ANSWER: Yes, indeed, you are much closer. Literally that which blocks communication is much less dense.

Now what I would encourage you to do is to prime the pump, if you will. What I mean by that is that when you ask a question of your guide—and let there always be a question, and in the beginning I would encourage you to let the questions be questions that could be answered yes or no, or questions that could be answered with a minimal use of words—you could say for example: “Is it appropriate for me to do such-and-such?”

And then in the sense of priming the pump, you yourself could in the quietness say, “It is...” And let the sentence hang unfinished so that your guide may come in and say, “appropriate,” or your guide can come in and say, “not appropriate.” Let your guide finish the sentence. You start it. The value of doing this is so that there is at least that much activity in your mind. The two words, “it is,” those two words constitute an activity in your mind that does not block the formation of words to follow that you guide can then supply.

There is a tendency on your part to keep your mind very quiet so that you can be sure you're not interfering with the process. And in keeping your mind quiet you're not allowing anything from any source to occur.

So I encourage you to prime the pump, as it were, by providing two or three words that do not actually begin to answer the question, but just provide a lead in to the answer. You are very close. And I would encourage you to do this and to be more relaxed about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Over the past several weeks in my work, I have observed and personally experience, but I have observed many people who have suddenly experienced severe pain in their spine, and various locations. And it's quite mysterious to me what's occurring here.

ANSWER: Oh, it's so much easier to collapse than to face the shift and changes that either are occurring or that there is a sense of impending occurrence about. There is need for you to help reestablish the firm support of the spines, etc., along with some positive encouragement about that individuals capacity to face what they are faced with or what is coming.

Because what is coming is the wave that we were speaking of this morning. And people are feeling the Movement. And because the Movement is going to change the status quo there is a sense of vulnerability. And because the Movement is a deep Movement there is a sense of incapacity to deal with it.

And as I said, it is easier to collapse and be helpless than it is to do what is imagined to be the opposite. And the opposite is to put rod up your backbone and tough it out. Now that isn't what is called for, but that is what the imagination or ego says. What is required is simply to relax and be flexible and supple because the Movement is the Movement of clarification and Awakening. Continue.

QUESTION: The reason it seems strange is because most of the people and myself included were effected either in the lower neck or lower back. And I was wondering if the chakras were being turned on by some external forces. For instance the full moon that's coming up next weekend is going to cause the highest tides in ten years. And were approaching the peek of sunspot activity in the next few months that is the highest intensity recorded in the past 200 years. So apparently there is a lot of energetics that are occurring, and I'm wondering does this have an effect on the bodies electrical system, or activating viruses, or what is going on?

ANSWER: Nothing nearly that marvelous.

QUESTION: Oh, shoot! Oh, well!

ANSWER: I will tell you, those are the two areas most easily manipulated muscularly at a minimally conscious level. In other words, one does not overtly misalign their neck or spine consciously. But at an almost unconscious level these areas are the ones that can be most quickly brought out of alignment through a barely conscious act of will.

I am going to encourage you in working with these people who come to you, especially over the next five months, to understand that indeed there are things that are happening, there are shifts that are occurring. But they are positive, and they need not incapacitate themselves consciously or unconsciously to avoid having to deal with the shifts. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have some friends that are fundamentalist and they're always talking about being very specific with the Bible. And I'm curious, what's the best way of looking at the Bible itself?

ANSWER: As a source of inspiration, as a means of reminding yourself of Home. But I encourage you not to take the Bible literally. I encourage you rather to pay attention to the inspiration in you that it triggers—inspiration about the truth about God and man, the Father/Mother and you.

The Bible conveys more clearly than any other volume the presence of God among men and women, among mankind. And the transformational nature of that presence. But understand that in Biblical times it was exactly as it is now, there were those who had to be willing to listen, they had to be undefended against the experience of God. Because, as I said, God is the all constituting presence of you and of every individual and of everything that exists.

So God has always been present with man, as man, except that man has claimed a mind separate from God and an intent that is different from, and at odds with the Will of God. And all of this because man thought he didn't have a relationship with God that was absolute.

So you have the evidence of God with man and its transformational effect upon mankind in the Bible, which sets the example for today, because the reason God was experienced as with man, was because there were individuals who were undefended against the experience of the presence of God in them, and who dares to open up their mouths and let their words and their actions arise out of what they presence of God. So you see, it is not so much the details of the story but the context in which those stories or lives unfolded.

If anything the reading of the Bible should inspire you to be more open to the experience of the presence of God in relevant terms today. So that His story is not just available from the Bible, but from life now.

I'm going to be very blunt. You are the one who has forgotten who you are—not you alone, but you and I are talking right now—you are the one who has forgotten who you are. And so at the bottom line, the necessity is for you to remember who you are, and whatever books help you in that remembrance use them to promote that remembrance.

But remember that what you are serving is your process of waking up to who you divinely are, waking up to your inseparable unity with God. That is what you are serving. You're not here to serve a book, or a philosophy, or a teaching. You are here to utilize words and philosophies and teachings, etc., if indeed they serve you in your process of waking up to who you are and what God is. If you will keep that straight you will not lose your path. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I see my process of becoming what I am, a process of undoing.

ANSWER: Exactly!

QUESTION: At this point in time what might I undo that would best serve me on my path?

ANSWER: The attempt to take hold of what is specifically unfolding in your experience right now, in terms of your work, do not assume that God got the ball rolling and now you must keep it rolling. The Father will keep the ball rolling and I encourage you to walk along with the ball, to be there where the ball is as it identifies fulfillment of purpose for you.

Again, the key is not to assume that because the ball is now rolling that you can begin to make decisions and judgments of your own relative to it, and slowly begin to take charge of it. If at some point you are willing to say, "Thy Will be done," let that continue to be your policy. Don't say, "Thy Will be done," and then watch something marvelous begin to unfold and then say, "Oh, I think I can take care of it from here." Let it continue to be, "Thy Will be done," because then the movement of fulfillment for you will not become effortful because you have taken on personal responsibility for it.

That is the specific thing at this time. Allow this ball to roll, or shall I say, imagine that the ball turns into a small red carpet. Let the red carpet unfold itself and you walk behind the unrolling part. It's much more enjoyable that way. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This is the first time I've experienced you in this format. Can you hear me?

ANSWER: I can, indeed. Are you enjoying me in this format?

QUESTION: No. I don't even know if I have a question for you except that I do have a sense that I don't have to explain anything. I'm feeling as of recent past couple of years a sadness. And I don't know what this burden is. Do you have anything to say, I'd like to know?

ANSWER: Earlier a question was asked about anger. And I indicated that anger was the cork that bottles the flow of one's love. Now, sadness is another cork. Now what it is extremely important for you to understand is that the growth and development that has occurred in you over the last three years has promoted the dissolving of this cork in you of sadness.

This sadness comes from a sense of unworthiness that you had you thought come to terms with so that you were able to function relatively well in the world without getting rid of the unworthiness.

Now I'm going to tell you something: This sadness, the cork of sadness has been breaking up, dissolving, becoming rather fluid, you might say. And as it becomes fluid it begins to run off, leave the vicinity of the corked area. And as that happens it is as though it moves past the viewing screen of your awareness, and you feel this sadness, but it doesn't relate to anything that is going on.

Now I'm going to tell you something: It is important for you to let yourself feel this feeling. That does not mean that you are to become caught up in it, or overwhelmed with it, or let it get out of hand. But I encourage you not to deny the feeling, and also not to make something out of it that it is not.

The sadness is dissolving. And whereas love was what underlay the anger, what underlies your sadness is the direct experience of your worth, not an intellectual one, but a conscious strength of your very being. It is excellent for this sadness to be dissolving. Let it flow past the window of your awareness. It is in the process of passing off.

You're going to find within the next few months such a gushing forth of this strong worth, that the sadness was blocking, that you will wonder what hit you it will be so wonderful. The sadness is not an indication that there is something wrong with you, or that you are being punished for anything. Notice it when you feel it, and let it pass off, and do not engage in strong reaction. But do not try to squelch it either, because that pushes it right back into the cork form that it has been dissolving from.

You literally are engaged in a process of breakthrough and release so that your experience of your worth will not be hidden from you. And so I encourage you to interpret what is happening in these very positive, constructive ideas that I have just expressed. In this way you will not worsen the experience, by adding on top of it an idea that you are somehow off balance.

There is a wonderful healing process occurring here. I know you wish it would be a little faster. But I will tell you something: When the last little bit of cork comes out and the gush occurs you will say, “thank God,” and it won’t matter to you how long it took it will be so wonderful to have broken free of, or to have your experience of worth broken free from the cork of sadness.

You’re letting go of the cork as fast as you can. And so there is no need to try to hurry it, or to add to the frustration by being upset that this isn’t getting over with sooner. You are very close to the end and embracing it as a healing movement will allow it to move along a little bit faster. And it certainly will relieve you of the tendency to wonder what is going wrong with you. It is something that is going right with you. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I teach yoga, mostly in colleges, which requires a great deal of traveling, some overnights away from home. I work with several hundred students a week. And I’m required by the colleges to fit into their schedule. Now my questions around energy. I know that the only limitations that I have are those that I’ve put on myself, however, at the end of my day, and also particularly at the end of my work week I feel this body with fatigue. I’m still coming to that place of fully relating to the Body of Light. I understand it. I believe it. I’m probably not totally focused in that at this stage.

My question is: How do I work with that fatigue? Do I respond to it and let this that I call my physical body rest, or do I continue what I do when I’m teaching which is basically say, “Nope, I’m not going to let this get to me. This is the ego trying to slow me down,” that kind of thing. Can you help?

ANSWER: Indeed. Yesterday I mentioned that honesty is a matter of being genuinely you. And I brought out the necessity of loving yourself right where you are. And I also pointed out that when you are loving yourself right where you are, which means with whatever limitations you might be experiencing, that that will not constitute getting stuck in the limitation.

Now, it is very important for you not to use your spiritual path as a means to be hard on yourself, or to justify labor, with the idea that this will either exalt you or it will allow you to overcome the ego. I will tell you, if you attempt to deal with the ego head on, you will run into something that is an expert at resistance. This is why I have encouraged you to relax and be allowing and to love yourself right where you are.

You see, when you are not attacking the ego the ego has nothing to do. It does attempt to distract you from being happy with yourself, but it cannot force you to give your attention to it. So the necessity here is to dare to be kind to yourself, and to dare to, I am going to say, honor whatever your current limits are and within those limits discover your integrity.

I want you to understand that the ego is like a circular fence surrounding you, but this you—let us say, this grassy area within this circular fence—is constituted of what you are divinely. It is just that it is a circumscribe portion of what you are divinely.

Very often the ego is interpreted to mean not only the limit, the fence, but also all of the territory inside the fence, meaning that practically everything about you as you experience yourself at the moment is illusory or false, something to get out of, to rise above, to deny, to invalidate. And of course, this is exactly what the ego would love for you to do, to invalidate even the limited part of what you divinely are that you are experiencing.

So when I am saying to start with yourself right where you are, and to embrace yourself, to love yourself, to pay attention to how you feel and abide with it, that this is the means of getting beyond the ego limits. In acknowledging the territory within the fence as divine, and in acknowledging the fact that this of you which is embraced within the ego limits is absolutely divine and has the ever present capacity to recognize truth, in that recognition you are able to begin to love that of you which you are experiencing.

What happens when you do that? You have withdrawn your attention from the fence, and griping because it is there, and wanting to violate it, but having to deal with the threat of punishment, and you are magnifying the grassy area within the fence and you have withdrawn your attention from the ego. And I have said it before, but it should be an indelible idea in your mind: the one thing that the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard.

Now I encourage you to simply be kind to yourself. Do not say, “This limit is not a valid limit, I am going to override it.” Because in your attempt to override it, and to bulldoze your way through it you will be running up against something which knows perfectly well how to stop you. The ego is a defense mechanism. It is able to defend itself very skillfully. And it knows your weaknesses and will play upon them and get you to settle down and stay in your place.

Now understand that when I am saying to value yourself where you are I am not saying stay in your place, recognize your place and stay in it, I am saying recognize and embrace and love that which is inappropriately bound by the ego structure of the fence. Because in your willingness to do that you come to an experience of peace within yourself, where you are not feeling fear. And in the absence of fear there is no means for the fence to hold you back.

Imagine, if you will, a ball of silly putty. If you set the ball on the table it will relax and the circumference will get larger, it will spread out. As you relax into an appreciation and a valuing of your current limits and there is peace and a sense of security with who you are, it is the same as the silly putty relaxing and spreading out. And the circumference of the silly putty becomes larger and larger without any effort being put forth.

But your expansion into your greater capacity to express yourself will only come through an acceptance of where you are and a love of who you are at the moment, even though you know that you are not experiencing yourself completely. In order for the self you think you are to open up into the capital “S” Self that you really are, in order for it to be exalted you must start valuing and honoring the little bit of that capital “S” Self that you are experiencing. And that is why the admonition was, “to love your neighbor as yourself.”

If you are to love the Lord your God with all your Heart and all your Mind and all your Soul, it means that you are giving your Heart, Mind and Soul to the Father—you are willing to yield to the Father. What does that mean? The Father out there, out there behind you, underneath you? No, to yield to the Father is to yield to the little bit of territory embraced within the ego fence, the little bit of you that is in fact the expression of the Father and to come to a peace with yourself, that is loving the Lord thy God with all thy Heart and all thy Mind and all thy Soul.

It isn't a love that you project out into the cosmos in the hopes that it will touch God in some way, somewhere in infinity. It is right in the middle of you, it is the You of You. And even though your present sense of yourself is incomplete the self that you are aware of is a small portion of yourself in its totality. And it is the presence of God that must be yielded to, settled into, allowed into, embraced, not denied, not criticized, not demeaned, not something your try to get above or out of.

That is the way the ego has distracted you from experiencing your infinite capacity. And the ego says, “If you want your infinite capacity you are going to have to deal with me.” And you play into it and you fight your ego. And you continue to be bound because the energy you invest in overcoming the ego gives the ego life.

So, very simply I am going to encourage you to take a look at yourself at the end of the day, and at the end of the week, and I want you to ask yourself, “does this feel good? Does this feel comfortable?” And if it doesn't, then I encourage you to employ what you call good common sense, and change your behavior, except you are not to interpret your pulling back from as much activity as you have been engaged in as failure to demonstrate your freedom to be with boundless, endless energy.

If you want to access your boundless, endless energy, you're going to have to yield into yourself right where you are, and feel the congruence of it. Because I will tell you, when you back off and you find that happy medium where you are active and you also have time for rest and play, you will spontaneously give a sigh of relief. And that sigh of relief won't be coming from an intellectual agreement in you with what you were doing, it will come because of a nonintellectual responsiveness to the kindness you are expressing to yourself.

You will give that sigh of relief because there is congruence. And in that congruence and that relaxation the silly putty of you will relax and your borders will be expanded, not because you were trying to expand them, but because you were allowing yourself into the fuller experience of your capital "B" Being. And that is the way you wake up. It is not by strong arming the ego, it is not by overcoming the ego, it is not by fighting the ego. It is by disregarding it, and honoring that of you which is available to you to experience that is within the ego boundaries, and loving it, and honoring it.

When there is that inner congruence then you will begin to feel the Movement of the Father in you. And it will feel like energy. And there will be an increase. But I will tell you something else: with that increased energy is also likely to be an awareness of new avenues in which to express that new energy. And you will not be likely to use that energy to put your nose to the grindstone even more definitely. And there will be balance. And the energy will go into more work and more play.

The balance will arise not out of a plan, either a plan for fun or a plan of attack on the ego, but it will arise out of the fact that you have found a point of being at peace with you right where you are at the moment. The ego says that if you become self-satisfied you will become stuck in mediocrity. But it says that because if you become self-satisfied that will cause you to slip away from the ego and the ego will fade, and that is why it tells you that. It is not speaking in your interest at all.

Dare to acknowledge where you are and embrace it and love it and feel the congruence of it. Because the congruence of it constitutes a stability in you that is not intellectual, but is felt in the very fiber of your Being. And that stability is felt as safety and balance and peace and the absence of fear. Because you are not over extending yourself and trying to be something you are not.

The Christ Consciousness is right where you are, the Kingdom of Heaven is what you are in the middle of, but you will not discover that fact until you dare to release judgment against yourself, and defiance against the ego, and love yourself right where you are at the moment. It is out of that self-respect that your expansion can occur, and will occur. It is not respecting a limit, it is respecting your integrity, so that instead of trying to become more and do more, you embrace who you are fully, lovingly, acceptingly, recognizing its integrity and being willing to abide with it.

You are accepting the integrity, the divinity of the grassy area within the apparent but illegitimate confines of the ego. And that honoring of yourself magnifies yourself, without effort on your part. The only effort you need put forth is the intent to pay attention to and value the territory within the fence.

One further note here: The ego knows that it is the fence. It knows that it must keep you within the fence. It tells you that it is threatening to your salvation for you to violate the fence. And yet, it tells you that what is within the fence is invalid, and that the grass is greener on the other side of the fence. And so what does it do? It takes away your power within the fence, says it is outside the fence, but without any power you can't violate the fence. And then it further says that if you even think of violating the fence you will be damned.

So, you don't try to violate the fence, you forget about whether the grass is greener on the other side, and you begin to value that of you which you are experiencing within the fence and instead of defining it in the ego's terms you define it in the Father's terms, and acknowledge the divinity right where you are. Because that is the only thing that will undo the fence and promote your spontaneous expansion into the greater territory of you.

Oh, there have been militant Christians, and there have been militant metaphysicians. And in the name of the glory of freedom everyone has engaged in overcoming something. And whenever the attention has been on the enemy out there you have not been able to feel the divinity of the you that is defending or attacking the enemy. You have not had your attention on the one place where the breakthrough could occur, which is right within the ego boundary.

Just the fact that what I am saying causes you to think twice is an indication of your conditioning and the suggestion that if you do honor the limited self that you are experiencing you will simply substantiate those limits. That fact tells you how much you are bound by the false perception, and the false sense of self that the ego is presenting.

The ego says it couldn't be that easy. But I will tell you, your Birthright is yours, by virtue of the fact that the Father in being the Movement that resulted in the expression of God called you, had no means to withhold any of what He was from that expression. And so, your Birthright is yours, its not even something that could be handed to you when you reached the age of majority. It was yours at the moment of the Movement of God that looks like you.

Now if that is your Birthright, if that is the unalterable and permanent fact of you, then getting into that fact is what is going to be your salvation. And the ego says that fact is on the other side of the fence. And I am telling you that fact is in the very conscious awareness in which, let us say, a false concept can be embraced.

And so, instead of dealing with the concepts, and overcoming the concepts, the attention needs to come back to the simple state of awareness that you are. Because you are Conscious Being. And I encourage you to have fun with the words Conscious Being, and use them often, and use it in your mind to replace the words human being. Because human being identifies with the body.

It says, “I am the body. You are the body that I see. The tree is the body that I see.” And you become hoodwinked, because you are the awareness, the conscious being in which bodies and trees and universe and ideas are experienced. The bodies and the trees are not what you are. Conscious Being is what you are.

But you see, if you say, “At the end of the day I have and I am a tired body. And at the end of the week I have and I am an exhausted body.” And you’re hooked in a false perception of yourself. Because at the end of the day, or at the end of the week you are the conscious awareness which does not have the capacity to feel any exhaustion whatsoever.

And if your identification was with yourself as conscious awareness, you would have the perspective to know how to be appropriate. And you wouldn’t quibble over whether or not you ought to be challenging limits. And in the end you would find the body and the trees and the universe reflecting back to you the boundless energy and perfection of the Father.

Again, you are not here to do battle with the devil, or with the ego. You must put down your weapons of truth—absurd phrase—and let yourself into the truth. You gather—all of you—the truth around you as a defense, as a means of proving that the devil has no power. And yet the fact that you feel a need to use the truth to prove that the devil has no power, means you believe the devil has power.

If you didn’t believe that the devil had power you would not waste your time gathering any weapons of spiritual defense around you. You would just say, “What a ridiculous idea. A devil—with power.” And you would be about your business of living and you would discover that you were free because there would be no investment of faith negatively speaking in a thing which you fear, and by virtue of your fear you seem to give existence to.

So, stop trying to overcome the limit, and simply honor yourself wherever you find yourself to be. And if you are tired sit down. And if you are consistently tired stop doing so much. And if you have your nose to the grindstone—no matter how worthy the cause—if you have your nose to the grindstone, pay attention to the feedback you are getting, and back off from it and get a little balance in your life. And let a little fun and play and social life come it. And don’t say that it isn’t as worthy as teaching something as valuable as yoga, or any other spiritual discipline.

And find your comfort, because in your comfort is your peace, and in your peace is your security, and in your security or invulnerability is your capacity to be like the ball of silly putty that just because it can't hold itself up and isn't trying to control itself expands the territory that it embraces.

Now I have given a very long answer to your question. But it is a most important point to understand. It relates specifically to you and it relates to everyone else as well. And it is the fundamental key to waking up. Yielding to the Father means yielding to the territory within the ego's limits, because that territory is absolutely divine and the only reason you don't experience its divinity completely is because you treat this little bit of territory as though it is all there is of you. And on the basis of that misperception every conclusion that follows is false.

It isn't all of you, but it is absolutely divine. The fence doesn't change the territory that it embraces, but it does seem to create a little gap between that territory and the territory outside of it. And the territory within it, and the territory outside of it is You. And that territory that is You is God Moving, God being the Movement that is called Creation, Life, the Conscious experience of Being. Enough said. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a follow up on that. Thank you for all of that. I made an error in assuming that the additional classes that I took on were God's gift for abundance. How do I avoid doing that in the future?

ANSWER: You pay closer attention to the simple wisdom of your body language. Not your body language to others, but your body language to yourself. And if you are paying closer attention and you are better in touch with yourself, then when so called opportunities or gifts present themselves to you you will be able to recognize that they are not congruent with your comfort zone. You will be tempted to violate your comfort zone for the payoff.

And it is a point or an opportunity for you to learn to choose for your comfort zone. That constitutes an investment of faith, an investment of trust in the integrity of your Being at that moment. Even though a year from now you may be in a position to take on the extra work without being exhausted. But pay attention to the integrity of the moment. And in choosing to honor it, you will find that you will not lose out by refusing the "gift."

The gift that God gives comes from within as the ability to perceive what works, what is meaningful, and what is kind. And God does not give you a gift that makes you huff and puff and end up exhausted, where finally, in effect, your body says, "stop," and you say, "I'm sick."

You're not here to rise above your body. And you are not here to demonstrate that muscles can indefinitely flex and unflex and accomplish something. You're here to learn to be at home with every part of you. And not judge the body to be a piece of meat that is there for you to exercise control over. That's demeaning! Your body is that which identifies the presence of your individuality. And its intent is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly.

And if in fact your individuality is the expression of God, then your bodies intent to identify your individuality is the intent to identify the Father perfectly. And if you are treating the body as though it is an object that is not you, a temporary habitation that you must beat into submission either physically or metaphysically, you are in a state of denying and not acknowledging the presence of the Father. And that is not respect. That is an act of aggression, an act of separation.

And so when you say, “I can’t take another step,” don’t immediately say, “I have infinite capacity and I am going to prove it.” Sit down and take a load off your feet. Ah, but the ego says, “You are succumbing to matter. You are accepting the human condition.” You ought to challenge it. You have the divine right to challenge it. And the ego will throw your metaphysics up in your face as a means of making its point and keeping you bound.

And your metaphysics better have enough compassion to say, “No, I’m going to love myself. I’m going to sit down. And I’m going to enjoy a breather and when I feel like getting up and continuing, I’ll get up. When I feel the energy, the movement to get up, I will get up. I’m going to be congruent with me.” And the moment you begin to be congruent with you, your experience of who you are will spontaneously begin to expand.

Now I could continue in the vein, but there are other things to attend to, and if you wish to expose yourself to these ideas more you can buy a tape. It is necessary to here these things and to remind yourself, because your conditioning distracts you and gets you back into old habits, old limits, that you unwittingly magnify. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, you’ve just presented us with a banquet of wisdom, and I feel as though to ask for more is to be gluttonous.

ANSWER: Then we will take a break. And by the end of the break you will be ready to ask for more.

QUESTION: Raj, recently I was invited to apply for a hospice that’s opening that will be devoted exclusively to working with people dying of Aids. My first reaction was to say yes. I’ve had second thoughts about it, questions about whether I’m appropriate for that type work, or whether I should devote my time so exclusively who are dying, and questions about whether I could sustain a commitment in that context.

ANSWER: And what does your feeling tell you?

QUESTION: I continue to feel drawn to doing it...

ANSWER: Let me ask you this, is that really a feeling, or does the idea continue to be fascinating or interesting?

QUESTION: It's a feeling in the sense that my contacts with those people who are forming the hospice are unusual. I feel a very strong connection with them. And the quality of our communication has been very good. And so, it's a feeling in that sense.

ANSWER: The deeper feeling that you would not have the energy, the stamina to participate in this work on a continuing basis is again a sense of a limit that doesn't coincide with what you would like to think you were capable of. Again, the necessity is for you to pay attention to this deeper feeling, and not assume that because it seems to present a limit that it is something to be overcome. You must dare to honor where you find yourself to be, where you find yourself to be at a nonverbal experiential inner level.

Now the likelihood is that in spite of your deeper feeling you will find out from experience, you will pursue this. If you do I encourage you to pay attention to yourself so that you do not find yourself becoming emotionally exhausted, and even what I would call spiritually exhausted. If you are not in your peace, if you are not in your comfort zone, you do not have the perspective to experience your spiritual expression clearly, or your emotional environment clearly. And so you will have to be very careful to maintain your comfort zone so that it does not become biased by the overwhelming sense of death and hopelessness.

But if everybody did that, then these people who need help would never get help—that is the idea that occurs. And that seems to justify pushing against a deeper feeling that it is not appropriate for you to pursue this avenue. The suggestion is that if you do not provide the conscious direction for your life to take and for your service to be in, that you will become directionless and nothing profitable, nothing worthwhile will happen.

If you attempt to go against the deeper feeling within you, even though your motivation is righteous and loving whatever you attempt to do will not come to fruition because you are acting at odds with your Being, at odds with your Self. You are not here to define what is a right activity for you and then make your Being conform to that concept. Again, this comes back to the issue of yielding. "Not my will, but Thine be done."

There is integrity to you, there is integrity to your capital "B" Being. And if you yield to your capital "B" Being, you will be yielding to your integrity, and then your activity—whatever emerges—will have integrity and substance to it.

This is not your cup of tea, but it is other's cups of tea. If you are true to yourself you may not end up doing this. But that does not mean that others will not end up doing it, because this is a need that does need to be met—this care for those who have Aids, as well as any other "terminal" disease.

But do not make the assumption that because you have a great deal of love and you want to be of service that this ought to be it and you ought to be able to provide that kind of coercive direction to the movement of your life. It is not humiliating for you to be congruent with yourself. It takes humility, but it is not humiliating to that in you which is valid. And it constitutes your arriving at a point of being genuine. And when you are being genuine you are making the gift of you that only you can give. You can be the specific expression of God that you and only you can embody or bring into focus.

Now if you decide to pursue this, it will not be a mistake and you will learn. But I encourage you to pay attention to the deeper feeling that you call a feeling of reluctance. And do not assume that it constitutes a sense of limitation that you must override.

The ego goads all of you, as I said, it says the grass is greener on the other side of the fence and then it says you will go to hell if you violate the fence. And the implication is that this is a real challenge. And if you do manage to surmount this challenge your gold star will really be shiny and big, the payoff will be great. The joy of the congruence of your Being is the only payoff worth going for, and you go for it by being humble enough to pay attention to your Being, the deep feeling, and trusting it and acting upon it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question: My closest friend, who lives on the West Coast, recently wrote me a letter. And she made several statements in the letter that evoked ego reactions from me. The statements were: that more and more as she commits to herself and only to herself, and to her truth, and her integrity, and her honesty, that I could not rely on her or depend on her to be in a relationship with me. That she was committed only to herself and not to a relationship with me. If being committed to herself manifested as a relationship with me that would be fine, but that could change any moment from day to day based on her guidance.

After I got through my ego reactions and the hurt and the anger and so forth about it, I've been left with a feeling of ambivalence. Intellectually I understand perhaps what she's talking about. I'm not ready to accept it, I guess, on an emotional level. And the ambivalence I'm feeling is, "Oh, why bother now, why bother to continue in a relationship where I may never know whether she really is in relationship with me, depending on her guidance from moment to moment, depending I guess on my guidance from moment to moment too."

So I guess I would like you to perhaps address that ambivalence. And also, is she on to something? Is it possible to have a relationship with someone and not have commitment, but still be able to experience intimacy on all levels. And how does... I follow the guidance, I'm in the present, and if I want to make a commitment I can make a commitment now, but a commitment is about the future.

So when it comes around three weeks later to following that commitment, whether it's a relationship, or going to work, or an appointment

I've made, if in that moment I decide I don't want to keep that commitment anymore because my guidance says at that point it's not appropriate...

It seems to me there needs to be a balance between guidance and commitment. And how do I follow guidance but also keep commitments which are future oriented? Is that enough?

ANSWER: Indeed, it is. The assumption is that if one follows guidance that it will be personal guidance, that it will be private guidance, which will bear no relation to anyone or anything else. Let it be very clear when you are listening for guidance that you are interested in hearing only that which expresses the Father's Will.

I do not mean to do that to protect yourself against spurious guidance, I suggest that you do that in order to be clear within yourself what kind of guidance you are interested in having—complete whole guidance or partial guidance, impersonal guidance or personal guidance.

If you are opening up to guidance, and if actual guidance is occurring, the guidance is coming from one who is fully Awake. And one who is fully Awake is standing as the door, as I said yesterday, allowing the Will of the Father to come into conscious expression.

Now, the Will of the Father, because the Father is indivisible, is expressed as absolute universal harmony. The Father is indivisible, but infinitely individualized, thus, the infinite movement or manifestation of the Father is congruent with every aspect of the Father's infinity. And therefore, you could say that everything that is happening is "in relationship."

But when the word relationship is interpreted from a limited three-dimensional ego vantage point it means the cooperative endeavor of two independent entities, who may or may not choose to be cooperative. If they happen to choose to be cooperative it is a "good" relationship. And if they do not choose to function cooperatively it is a "bad" relationship.

A universal relationship is not constituted of disparate parts, of independent parts working through some form of cooperation to express a unity, it is rather the infinite manifestation of harmony. Harmony is a natural spontaneous movement of integrity, an integrity of the whole reflected in all the parts. Not by virtue of will, but by virtue of the fact that the indivisible Father is an integrated movement, and integrated infinite movement of perfection that can only be described as harmony.

The harmony is natural. It is not enforced. Power or will is not needed in order for that harmony to occur. But that harmony is not "achieved" or experienced until the individual expressions of the Father have all yielded to the Father's Will. This is important to understand, because in yielding to the Father's Will the infinite relationship of the indivisible allness of God begins to manifest. And so relationship becomes exalted from cooperation into a natural flowing harmony that takes everything and everyone else into consideration. You lift your little finger, or you have a thought and the whole of the Brotherhood experiences it in some way, because there is not actually the separation and the boundary that you imagine there to be.

And when one yields to guidance, when one yields to the Christ Consciousness one finds relationships becoming more meaningful, more permanent, and there is less need for commitment. And don't jump to conclusions. When I say less need for commitment, I mean that because there will be less inclination to separate oneself from this wonderfully beautiful flow of harmony, which constitutes a clearer experience of integrity individually.

And so if one is open to guidance the inevitable result is going to be greater congruency, greater genuineness to the relationships, greater honesty and greater endurance. The relationship of the Brotherhood is an eternal relationship. Now that what you would call commitment, except that it is not the result of will, but the result of willingness to be a part of the whole, if you will, and not act independently.

Now this one you are speaking of is at a stage of what we will call the cave meditator, the one who feels a necessity of withdrawing from relationships, from society, and having a very private quiet time, where there is absolutely no obligation to anyone else, because there is such a great need to have the quiet, the silence, to be in touch with herself.

Now, give her that right. It is the only way she can do it at the moment, and that she is seeking the guidance that she is seeking to connect more significantly with herself, even though it seems to have negative impact on the relationship is better than for her to stay locked into the three-dimensional frame of reference with a committed relationship that is coming from willfulness and from the head.

By all means, be, what shall I say, wise. And do not expect commitment when commitment is not going to be there. But do not take it as a personal affront. It is a stance that she is taking to save herself. And she deserves to save herself from the illusions, from the conditionings that she was brought up with.

So allow her the right, and understand that for the time being she will not be "a dependable friend." In other words, she will not be dependably there for you and for the relationship.

There are times when one needs to be free of the obligations of "friendship or relationships." Because as long as those relationships are there that person is locked into conditioned responses and an inability to experience his or her power or presence as something more than just conditioned responses.

Although you wouldn't choose to do what she is doing, what she is doing is not wrong for her. And you do not need to be reactive about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, that was very helpful for me. I have a follow up question about something that you said yesterday. It's the whole metaphor of the surfboard and riding the surfboard and the wave. And many times in the last year I have taken the leap in faith to step off the surfboard and just get right down into the wave. And to my surprise I didn't drown, I just was able to not only ride the wave but be the wave and really experience that on a feeling level. And I assume that as my capacity to love increases I will actually be able to experience the ocean, the Source, the Whole thing, without any sense of separation.

And the most amazing thing that I discovered as I was experiencing being the wave was I looked around and I realized that there never had been a surfboard there, that...

ANSWER: Or a surfer!

QUESTION: Or a surfer, thank you. And that the concept of the surfboard had been a valuable tool to help me along my path and whatever. But simultaneously I could see how the concept of the surfboard had kept me separated from being the wave, from being the ocean, being the Source.

So yesterday with so much talk about that metaphor, I noticed the ego was insinuating a little self-doubt, because somehow I knew this to be so, but then there was so much discussion about the surfboard, I guess I needed to run it by today just to find out if I'm on the right track in terms of my experience and feeling about that metaphor.

ANSWER: You are absolutely correct, yes. You see, however, one can be in the water drowning or one can be in the water on a surfboard and in a position to experience the very waters that were drowning him as the waters that provide the push of the forward movement. The one who experiences the water as drowning him is having a very uncomfortable experience of discovering his unity with the water, and will defy the water rather than yield to it and find his oneness and therefore his safety.

So, it becomes useful to be able to grasp the meaning of the movement of God that I was speaking of yesterday, as something that is supportive as well as understanding that there is something underneath you that is supported by the wave, mainly the surfboard. In this way there is enough security in the midst of the movement to dare to trust the movement without being so frightened that one becomes defensive against it.

And as one begins to trust and yield to it and get the feel, as I said, for the angle of attitude, and begins to experience the pleasure and the joy of riding that wave in balance, one then begins to feel a unity, a benevolence, if you will, in the relationship between the surfer, the surfboard and the wave. And as that awareness of unity and safety develops it becomes then easier to yield into the wave, and you could say, bodysurf.

Ultimately, you will discover that the movement that has been referred to the Movement of God which is moving your puny self-definition into a more exalted and expansive self-awareness is inseparable from this self-awareness. The wave is inseparable, the wave is the movement of your Being. And when that discovery occurs one can let go of the surfboard, one can let go of the sense of bodysurfing and yield to the wave, with a recognition of oneself in the wave. And simultaneous with that yielding, that intrusting of one's sense of self to one's Self, with a capital "S", simultaneous with that is the clear undistorted direct experience of the fact that the movement of the wave that is you is the Movement of God.

Now we are having to use words here and we are having to gentle into Awakened Awareness. And I am very glad that you shared what you shared because it was part of what needed to be brought out this weekend so that the full picture might be embraced.

But I want to encourage all of you not to attempt to jump off of your surfboards and force an experience of the absolute oneness of the wave and yourself. You must let yourself into it gently and enjoy and value the surfboard, because figuratively speaking, it is your means of gaining the experience of angling your attitude so that the wave of the movement of your Being catches you in your limited sense of yourself and lifts you and moves you forward in your process of clarification.

Trust that your Being knows exactly how to lift and move you into your clearer experience of your divinity. And then intrust yourself to that movement with your intellectual paraphernalia called surfboards and waves, etc. It is a means to an end to bridge the gap to your disbelief. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I think I've been doing this pretty much my whole life, but I'll be having a conversation with somebody and then half way through the conversation I'll realize that I didn't hear any word they said. And I don't know if it's because I'm preoccupied or what. But I feel like it's really difficult because I feel like maybe I don't care what they're saying, or if I'm just picking up what they're saying on a different level. I don't know, I just realize that I've been doing that a lot, even like when I watch movies, half way through the movie I'll realize that I'm not watching a movie. I just become unconscious I think. And I guess I want some clarity on that, and why I do that, and if you have anything to say about it?

ANSWER: Literally you are tuning out. And it is not a matter of your tuning into another place. Literally, it is a means of rejecting your world, or shall I say, getting some distance from it.

In your particular case here, it is important for you to consciously have the intent to reverse this. Let there be an intent on your part to pay attention, to be sensitive to and aware of where you are. Part of the integrity of you as conscious being is or involves your being more significantly in touch with, sensitive to, and experiencing the meaning of everything that is going on around you. I would encourage you to avoid these withdrawals they tend to isolate you and separate you, and they are a means of avoidance.

Now these are all psychological words, some of which might generate a little bit of fear and I am not using them for that reason. Avoidance is not that terrible, but it doesn't promote the experience of unity and the experience of meaningfulness of whatever is going on around you. And that experience of meaningfulness and unity is what you want.

Now I encourage you first of all to watch movies and go places that are fundamentally interesting to you. And then secondly when you are there I encourage you to pay attention, be curious to what is unfolding. Again, if you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven you always stand at the threshold of discovering something more than you have ever experienced before.

And so, I encourage you to let that sense of curiosity be present. Do not assume that you've got the conversation pegged, or the evening pegged, or the event pegged, and that it will probably be pretty dull, and therefore you might as well check out.

I encourage you to have a suspicions that something marvelous will happen, that here will be the opportunity for you to see something new. And then do not move into your head to figure out what the something new might be. Let yourself be more significantly present with your environment and the individuals around you, even if what someone is saying is particularly uninteresting, stand there noticing you being with them, hearing something particularly uninteresting and continue to be present.

You might even ask yourself, "What's really going on here?" Because something is really going on, something is truly going on, something is divinely and therefore wonderfully interestingly going on, or there couldn't seem to be something going on dull. You can't have a counterfeit of nothing. And so I encourage you to be curious to discover what is really going on there. We could call it becoming more alive to Life, but let's capitalize the letter "L" in that word Life—alive to what God is being there, alive to the meaning and the vitality of the Movement of Creation that is occurring at that moment. Your experience will change.

Now, this is the appropriate time for me to touch on the fact that Creation is always current. Creation did not occur billions of years ago, and what you call life is not just the movement of some perpetual motion machine that was caused or set into motion in the past. You were not created in the past, you are at every moment being the leading edge of the self-expression of the Father. Creation is now. And it is what is constituting conscious Being or the conscious experience of Being now.

And so, always in the instant you are in you are standing on the threshold of being able to clearly discern the infinite Movement of Creation that is causing every aspect of that moment of conscious awareness. That instant of conscious awareness is the holy instant. It is the instant of wholeness, in which you have the opportunity to slip through into your undistorted totally Awakened conscious experience of being.

And earlier I spoke of the circular fence, and that the grassy area inside is absolutely divine, and that in order to access the more of yourself that is on the outside of the fence your valuing of the area within must become the focus.

Likewise, in terms of time, it is not what is to come, and it is not what has been that is important, nor is it what you are to act or react according to. It is the instant of conscious awareness that you are experiencing at any given instant that constitutes your access point into your fully Christed Conscious Awareness of Reality, experiencing Reality as God sees it, because that instant is the instant of wholeness.

The future and the past are instance, you might say, imaginary instance of division, wholeness is not available in them because they are not the moment of creation. And so you must dare to allow yourself fully into the instant, which is the only instant you are ever experiencing. And honor it. And pay attention to everything about it. Let yourself be sensitive to it by letting yourself more fully into it. And let there be naive eyes, unconditional eyes that are not sure what they will see so that you may see the more of the Movement of God that is happening.

Let your desire be to be present in the now with the curiosity to see God in it, God in every aspect of it. And be curious to find out what God in it looks like and feels like. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I know you just talked about living in the instant moment, but is it going to take me a long time to get that?

ANSWER: Isn't the ego amusing. I will answer you by saying, infinite patience brings immediate results. The less you are concerned about how long it will take, and the more you let yourself be in the moment the more quickly you will arrive at your desired destination.

You see, again, the point is that you're already at your destination. Your destination is the very starting point of your Being in this very instant. You're already here so it's not going to take time for you to get here. How long is it going to take you to open your eyes up to see where you are? Well, that depends upon how willing you are to let yourself fully into the moment you're in with a curiosity to experience it without illusion.

It's that simple, but do remember infinite patience brings immediate results. So that you can begin to let go of your investment in the future. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Before I ask my question I wish to ask for you and Paul to send the healing team to me and my family.

ANSWER: Certainly.

QUESTION: Especially for my son Matthew, whose sick right now. My husband and I recently became aware that this child has a “learning disability.” And I ask that Matt not feel this as disabling or diminishing himself, but as a gift of different perception.

ANSWER: It is indeed a matter of differing perception, but it is still partial. You desire to honor it rather than identifying it as a dysfunction is excellent. But all the rest of you are suffering from a learning dysfunction. And all of you are desiring to Awaken out of it so that the partialness of your experience will be replaced with the undistorted conscious experience of Being.

Certainly the territory of your son’s circle is different from your territory and the nature of the fence is different, but the necessity still remains for expanding beyond the limits of the fence and arriving at a point where there are no more fences of any sort. We will certainly support that realization in him. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, I do have a question after this, if I may?

ANSWER: Certainly.

QUESTION: When I spoke with you privately the end of March, in this year, we spoke about my relationship with my husband. You indicated that I should wait to make a decision about it for five months, when I would at that point have a different vantage point. And I would like to know if you were referring to the dream work that I began around that time, which I have been doing, and which has led me to receive guidance from the images in the dreams.

The dreams are really kind of showing me how my ego/complex operates, and seem to be trying to guide me toward process/the Kingdom of God within me. But yet, my resistance still is very powerful. And I tend to flip in and out between love and hate and I keep longing to pass through a door which I see and seem unable to move into.

ANSWER: Ah, but you see the door!

QUESTION: I see it. It’s very beautiful.

ANSWER: This is excellent. This is “progress,” if you will, in quotes. I say in quotes because the progress of arriving at the conscious awareness of the Kingdom of Heaven is being done from the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and so it is not actually progress, except in the sense of it being perceptual progress.

Now, let’s be very frank. You will flip-flop back-and-forth. You want not to flip-flop, you want to become ensconced, placed securely in the permanent experience of love and joy. But flip-flopping back and forth is a great improvement over being firmly placed in anger, or illusion where there is no sense or awareness that there is anything to flop to.

To be in the place where flip-flopping is occurring is to be standing consciously at the threshold of Awakened awareness, it is standing unbound by the dream, the dream does not have hold of you totally anymore. The flip-flopping is a sign of progress, if you will. I encourage you to rejoice in it. And I also encourage you to indulge in the educational value of the flip-flopping.

The flip-flopping occurs so quickly that the two vantage points stand boldly side-by-side, the difference between the two is easily discernible. And I would encourage you to pay attention to the difference. In being feelingly aware of the difference it will become exceedingly easy for you to make a conscious choice for your clarity, for your peace, for your love, for your joy. And you will be making a choice between two experiences which stand side-by-side because they flip back and forth so quickly.

In other words, I am encouraging you not to be dismayed by the flip-flopping, but to utilize it to your advantage and rejoice in the fact that it is occurring, because it is enabling you to make a choice from an experiential level. The grossness of the flip-flopping will diminish. The flip-flopping will become more and more subtle. And as that happens the choice will not seem to require as much intent. You will be able to effect the choice more simply. Right now it is being of great educational value for you.

Yes, indeed, the dream work that you are doing is part of what I was encouraging you to wait for before coming to a conclusion. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Everyday we are told of man caused dangers to the Earth—Greenhouse effect, global warming, holes in the ozone layer, and so on. My question is how valid are these predictions and then how much energy and concern should we give them?

ANSWER: I'm going to suggest that it is important for you to recognize that when you get a cold it is the evidence of the correction of an imbalance in your body occurring. It is not the evidence of the imbalance. The imbalance was there and when the body began to deal with it, to remove it, you said, "I have a cold." The correction of an imbalance is what becomes identified as the problem. But what is happening is an action of correction.

There is an action of healing occurring that seems to be uncovering problems on your globe, and in your atmosphere. The healing of the Earth, the correction of the problem involves bringing to light the mental imbalances that are going on, the misperceptions of self going on relative to the Earth, and the readiness of mankind to embrace a more correct self-perception and a more correct world perception, which involves what we have been talking about this weekend, namely, the willingness to be a part of, the willingness to be at home with one's environment, rather than holding oneself separate from it thinking arrogantly that one is superior to the environment, being unwilling to humble oneself enough to feel that one is part of a whole—a whole system, if you will.

It is very humiliating and objectionable to the ego to feel that it is part of an ecological system, that it isn't superior to, that there is a oneness with it all.

The raping of the land that has occurred has arisen out of an arrogance, and an egotistical sense of superiority over the environment.

I have indicated that the necessity is to value the area of grass within the fence. I have indicated that it is essential to let yourself into the moment you are experiencing, the instant of awareness that you are experiencing. I have indicated that you are to allow yourself to function within your "limitations." I have indicated that you must learn to love yourself right where you are at any given moment.

Likewise you must allow yourself to be part of the wholeness of your planet and your universe. And you must cooperate with it. Now cooperation is something that happens from the head. Remember harmony is what is happening when you are coming from your Soul. Harmony is what is going on actually. But when you are not in touch with your Soul you must approximate harmony by cooperating.

Cooperating is something that the ego is not comfortable doing. And so engaging in cooperation is a step in the right direction. There must be a willingness to cooperate with the world and that is going to mean that you are going to have to reassess what the world is.

Is it a material world? Is this a material universe that started from a big bang and everything is the result of random chance? Or is there a God, the movement of which constitutes the eternal Movement of Creation, which means that everything of which you are aware is the visibility and the tangibility of the Father?

And if it is the latter then is not every aspect of the infinity of God a constituent part of God's self-expression. And if it is a constituent part, an inseparably constituent part, and if the harmony of the Movement of God means that there is a relationship between every constituent part, then must not every part discover the way it fits in with every other part, and must there not be a yielding to that harmony?

There is, as I indicated yesterday, a Movement of God. And that Movement of God as I am referring to it, relates to the process of waking up, of your coming into your right Mind, through the use of which you can experience All That Is as it Truly Is.

This Movement of God, this Awakening shift of awareness uncovers, shall I say, the next fence, the next threshold of ego subtlety that has bound you to your dreams and illusions. When that boundary comes to view you are inclined to say, "something has gone wrong." And if you had not expected to encounter another boundary since the last boundary you broke, you are likely to think that you have lost ground and you're back to square one, when in effect it is just a subtler boundary, which it is time for you to let yourself through.

Understand that when a limit is encountered it feels as though you are confronted with a problem, it feels as though “something has gone wrong,” in effect it is something that has BEEN wrong that you are just now beginning to perceive, because you have accessed new territory, because there is greater clarity, because there is more illumination and you can see the smaller specks of illusion.

You have brought to your attention problems, such as the holes in the ozone, the environmental pollution, etc. Why have these come to your attention? Because you have arrived at a point of clarity that allows you to perceive them, and as a result of perceiving them change your attitude. And as a result of changing your attitude catching the wave of your Being and the Movement of Awakening more significantly.

Now, it is not that you are to become alarmed or overwhelmed by the demand for the change in attitude, because if you become overwhelmed with the demand and frightened because of it, you will never get to giving your attention to your attitude. If you are seeing something that needs to be corrected, it is because you have arrived at a point of being able to correct it. You are not as ignorant as you used to be.

And so these signs of the times which you have described need to be interpreted as signs of the times, rather than the end of the time, or the end of the world, the beginning of destruction. It is simply another demand for a correction of attitude, a correction of perception.

Now you individually may not be in a position to effect a great change in the hole in the ozone, you may avoid using items that have fluoro-carbons in them. That isn't a major contribution, but it does mean something. But more than the physical change there is the necessity of recognizing that you are being called upon to fit in. I didn't say conform, I said fit in, blend, blend.

Let your boundaries become less well defined so that you do not hold yourself separated from everything else, and thus unable to experience its divinity and its meaning, and the aspect of you that it constitutes that you need to have available to you in order for you to feel your completeness. But that is humility isn't it? To the ego again it is humiliating. But when the ego is humiliated what is left is a humble Soul, what you primitively and ultimately were and will be and have been. That's coming Home! The only reason you need control of any kind is to avoid fitting in.

Now I have said that your body is the visibility and tangibility of the presence of your individuality. The body of the Earth, the planet itself is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of the Father. It therefore constitutes some part of your infinite body. It is some aspect of the infinitude of yourself. And if you are raping it, if you are scaring it, if you are polluting it, you are unconsciously engaged in self-denial, you are expressing your ignorance of your oneness with it all. And thus, you are denying yourself the opportunity to find God in you and God in your world.

But you say, "I have heard that the world is an illusion. And I've heard that my body is an illusion." Well, a polluted world, and a body capable of dying is an illusion. It is a deluded perception of something Real.

And I affirm again, and again, and again that the necessity is for each of you to begin to be curious to see the evidence of the presence of the Father in each and everything you see. That is love, the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything. That is what will cut through the deluded perception and leave your sight free to experience the Reality and divine meaning of each and every manifestation of the Father. And by comparison you will say that what you were experiencing was an illusion, but what you must understand is that it is a deluded perception of something Real right where the illusion seems to be, right there is the Reality.

You stand in front of a curved mirror in a Fun House and you see the funniest self you have ever looked at before. What you are seeing is a misperception, a distorted perception of something real that is standing before that mirror undistorted. There is no image in that mirror if there isn't some original standing in front of it to be acted upon by the shape of the mirror. And there is not distorted perception of the world called an illusion if there isn't a Real world to be reflected off of the distorting surface of the ego.

You and the universe must be brought back within the context of the Allness and the Wholeness of the Father, and then you must dare to allow yourself to be inseparably unified with it all. Because if it is all some aspect of the infinite expression of God, and if you are the direct expression of God, then it is all some aspect of the infinitude of you. Because you in your right mind are the full experience of God being Himself/Herself.

And so you must not only dare to see glimpses, glimmers of the presence of God in everything you see, but you must also be willing to discover your inseparability from what you are seeing. And that it isn't the environment in which you temporarily exist, but rather that you as conscious being versus human being, that you as conscious being are that infinite awareness in which the infinite manifestation of the Movement of God is being experienced. And therefore it' all you. And it is to be embraced and respected and loved as you.

When you become undefended against your world, what happens? Your fence, your shield comes down, and what the world is may fill you so that you might find yourself in it and understand yourself infinitely, and experience yourself infinitely as what you are, the presence of that infinite Mind, that infinite divine intelligence that is called God, experiencing itself infinitely and flawlessly.

So I am at the same time saying do not become alarmed and reactive to the circumstance, because that will distract you from attending to the discovery of your unity with it all and letting yourself into the humility that will allow you to blend with it all. At the same time I am not saying ignore it, that it's not real. All of your illusions hurt. You cannot be comfortable in an illusion. And so if you ignore the illusion you will continue to suffer until the willingness to let the perception change comes into play.

So do not be overwhelmed or frightened by what you see. But also do not ignore the dinner bell that it is, that calls your attention to becoming humble enough to be a part of a whole so that you may begin to experience the unity of it all as relative to you. And so that subsequently in the clearer experience of that unity you may stop holding yourself separate all together, and might come into the experience of finding the world and universe to be your infinite body, because it is the infinite expression of God, of which you are the crystallized individualization, the focused individualization which in its focusedness has not become less than what God is.

God is not diminished by His self-expression, nor does he become multiplied, therefore, the complete self-expression of the Father, the infinite Mind individualized as your conscious Being, does not mean that something separate from God has been created. There have not become multiple Gods. That individualization of the Father is the not simultaneous but same expression of self. All is God. Every individualized expression of God is God expressed. And although there is infinite individualization, there is only one God. And although there is uniqueness of individualized expression, that uniqueness does not constitute in any way the presence of something uniquely different from God.

This is the clearest that I can convey a fourth-dimensional fact to you. God infinitely individualizes Himself and remains undivided in that process. And every individualization of the Father is unique but is not different in any way from the Father, and does not constitute a different presence. There cannot be multiple infinities.

And this experience of infinitely individualized indivisibility is what you open yourself up to the experience of when you dare to take the first step of fitting in and being a part of the system, so to speak. Not a social system, not a governmental system arranged by egos. I am talking about the system, the universal system. And you can start with your local universe. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: First of all I'd like to thank you for everything.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Would you explain the kundalini energy?

ANSWER: It is just the energy of your being, which when given permission rises—that is not the best word, but it is an acceptable way of putting it. Literally, if it is allowed to rise it blows the lid off, you might say. It opens up the unobstructed flow of your energy, the energy of your Being. It is specifically related to the body, but only conceptually. In other words, it is not confined to the body, but the way in which it is experienced is as though it rises from the base of the spine moving upward and out through the crown of the head.

Chakras are the energy points through which the kundalini energy flows. If these various chakras are not open or only partially open then the movement of the kundalini energy flows unevenly creating pressures, just as water flow through a hose that one is standing upon, or which one has parked his car on, creates pressures within the hose. But the pressures are not natural to the hose, the pressures are not natural to the channels through which the kundalini energy flows through the chakras.

Now there is quite a teaching relative to the chakras and relative to the kundalini energy. And I will tell you something, it is all language for helping to promote the process of giving yourself permission to experience who you are divinely. It does not happen to be my particular language of expression. And I am not challenging in anyway those for whom this language is of value.

I will say that it tends to bring to great a focus to the body as though it were a physical organism being effected by etheric dynamics. And the fact is that your body is not physical in the sense that you presently perceive it to be. And there is not a need to emphasize the sense of a physical body effected by an etheric body, effected by a spiritual body, and on and on and on.

I will tell you something: The more you allow yourself to go within into that quiet sanctuary of your being, and the more you become familiar with it, and the more you honor it and love it, you will find what has been called the kundalini energy becoming active—I have referred to it as the Movement of your Being, which when you are in congruence with it you feel the energy. And the energy directly relates to the movement of your fulfillment. And I prefer to speak in these terms, because at this time these terms best promote the process of Awakening with the least amount of, shall I say, distracting side-effect.

Your body is a conscious experience. it is an idea embraced in Mind. Mind, with a capital “M”, is that which gave rise to the self-expression that is identified by means of the body or form of whatever has been created. You experience it as dense. You experience it as physical. You experience it as capable of dying, only because you are experiencing it 180 degrees out of sync. You are experiencing it as though you are an object inside the universe, rather than you being the conscious being in which the universe and your body exist as a conscious experience.

And I’m going to say this, but I’m not going to dwell on it particularly today, but the fact is that the body is not structural, it is an idea which expresses a meaning and is purely mental. What it is necessary for you to understand is that an idea is perfectly tangible to the Mind which forms it. God’s creation is perfectly tangible, experiential, substantial to God.

As you begin to relinquish the body identification, and you begin to explore yourself as that consciousness in which the experience of body is going on, you will begin to find your body reporting back to you new data. I mean by that, healing data, data of transformation, data which will constitute an experience of less density, more perfection and ultimately it will almost be as though your body cracks open and inner light will begin to shine through.

Now do not take that too literally. But the point is that as the density caused by viewing the body 180 degrees out of sync, that density will diminish and your body and the forms of every body will begin to be illuminated, until that illumination supersedes the density of the shell caused by the ego perception. And you find that right there where you had been experiencing “a physical body” is the Body of Light that constitutes your true identification, or your identification truly seen.

At the bottom line the kundalini energy is that Light energy. The concept of chakras and of kundalini energy are simply another avenue of opening up to the point where you can experience the Body of Light.

You do not need to delve into the kundalini energy, because you are already engaged in inner self-awareness, you are already engaged in listening within. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Surfs up!

ANSWER: Indeed, it is!

QUESTION: Waiting to ask a question is like waiting at the doctors office, you’re waiting and waiting, and finally when it’s time to go in your cured. (Much laughter).

ANSWER: Somehow I do not feel that you are going to pass the microphone on. (Much more laughter)

QUESTION: Because when I leave I’ll get that sickness back again. So we’ll have to take care of it. And the question is: With our demo tape, should we submit it to a record company, or should we think about distributing it ourselves?

ANSWER: I would most definitely not to turn it over to or become involved with a record company. I would encourage you to stay with the purity of the idea, the motivation that all of you are feeling, and keep the effort within the family unity so that the production and distribution do not become manipulated into something unlike the original vision.

Once you have the product and the production of it is under your supervision it will then be appropriate to have distributors in the normal sense of distributorship. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’d like to thank you also for your support, your guidance and love throughout my journey. The question I have here is in the fullness of time will any of my family members be living in Rutland?

ANSWER: It is not likely. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Why not?

ANSWER: I will put it this way, because it does not constitute the fullness of their time. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm really happy to be here, I think, cause I've seen some fulfillment from the past time. And I'm just really grateful to you and those who've come to me since that time.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I appreciated the image of the cork yesterday a lot, because I've been presented with a place where I recognize the cork unforming, and I've been forming in the past maybe month and a half I guess, probably it's formed a lot longer ago than that. The other thing I have appreciated is how you have told us about loving ourselves and I think that when that challenge was presented to me I arrived at one of those places where the movement was going to carry me and that was when the cork started to form.

And I think I'm aware that it's the time for this cork of the shame and the punishment to break up. And part of my question is, I want to take the opportunity to proceed where the event is happening now, and I guess I'm maybe just asking for support. And you probably know how much of challenge this is for me now. So I'm here to just put it out, and any help you can offer right now would be helpful. Because I see the one loving teacher who came to my path as being a gift and the other one is being the challenge that has presented me with the opportunity to understand what it means to love myself and I would really appreciate your help now, thanks.

ANSWER: Indeed, you have more support than you can fathom. And as you are able to receive it and acknowledge it it is already there waiting for you to feel. All of you need so terribly to understand and believe your absolute innocence.

Many of you have a great feeling around the concept of the innocence of the lamb. You are the lambs. Are you not part of the flock, the Father's flock, if you will?

You do not need to purge yourself of filth, and labor to recreate an innocence's that was once lost, because your innocence has been with you always. You have simply had heaped on that innocence a lot of irrelevant shit. Yes I use that word, because it is a relevant word, and you understand it very well. No matter how much it seems to make you smell it is irrelevant, it does not apply, it doesn't fit, it isn't true.

Why do you need someone to love you? Because the act of love that comes forth encourages you and inspires you to be able to love yourself, to be able to imagine that maybe you are innocent, or even that if you are guilty that the penalty that is supposed to go along with that guilt will not have to be paid before you can once again feel your innocence.

Shame arises out of a loss of innocence but you cannot lose your innocence. So then shame must arise out of an imagined loss of innocence. And I will tell you something, behavior that is not innocent arises out of the conviction that the imagined loss of innocence is a fact.

Now all of you must dare to claim your innocence as yours now. To the degree that you claim your innocence—and I am saying claim it within yourself, don't broadcast it to the world because the world will laugh at you, because the world doesn't think it is innocent either—but as you begin to claim your innocence, even though it doesn't seem to be obvious, the actual energy of your innocence and your integrity begins to become available to you as an experience because your thinking is coming in line with the fact about yourself.

And when there is a congruence between your thinking about yourself and your Self, with a capital "S", that serves as the bridge for the experience of your innocence to begin to be felt. And then your thinking about your innocence ceases to be just an intellectual process. And you will begin to shift from the use of the intellectual process to the actual experience of innocence to prove to yourself your innocence.

If you are foolish enough to engage in proving your innocence, you could end up living another two or three or five hundred lifetimes, if indeed this didn't happen to be the last incarnation. Because you can't prove your innocence. You are innocent and you must be out from it in order to have the evidence of it. It is like saying, "I want to wake up and become the Christ." Well, whether you are Awake or not you are the Christ.

So how can you become the Christ? And the attempt to become what you already are constitutes a denial of what you already are and as long as that denial is engaged in you will not experience the obvious and unalterable fact that you are already that the Christ, the perfect lamb of God, the Son, the Daughter, the direct expression of the Father/Mother.

You have been deluded by the ego and by your education into believing that you are less than, different from, and unworthy really of ever truly becoming the Son or Daughter of God, the Christ Consciousness, that which is unalterably innocent. You have been deluded. And you believe the conditioning. And as a result, for you to claim in the face of what the ego calls obvious evidence that you are innocent, it seems outrageous. But you must dare to begin to make that claim. Not to make it so, but to help uncover the fact that it is so.

Now I'm going to express a principle here. If you are asleep and having a nightmare and you rouse yourself out of the nightmare, tell me who it is that is rousing you? Is it the you in the nightmare? Or is it the you that is asleep in the bed? It is the you that is asleep in the bed.

Now the principle here that I want you to follow is, that if you are going to wake up and discover yourself to be in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, the rousing is going to have to start from the you that is sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. It is not going to start from the little ego sense of self that is caught in the dream.

Now when you make a claim to your Birthright, when you make a claim to your divinity or your innocence, that claim, that idea cannot even arise out of your ego. That claim has to be coming from a place in you that is identifying itself with, and is aware of itself being the Christ in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, not in anyway bound by or confined in the dream of a mortal exalting itself and becoming divine, or becoming divine by the grace of God.

You don't become divine by the grace of God. You become divine because it is inevitable that you will discover that you are divine and have never been anything else. The fact will out, is the phrase. The truth will manifest itself. But these days you might say that the truth has a little bit of help. Because, as I indicated before, there are fewer and fewer dreaming the dream, joining with other dreamers in substantiating the dream. And so the dream is beginning to break up spontaneously.

And so, you will open up your eyes and find yourself, as it were, propped up on a grassy knoll in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and you'll say, "Wow, what a dream I had. You won't believe it." Actually you won't waste any time on the dream you had because you will joyfully engage in consciously being who you are.

Now my point is this, the shame is unjustified whether it is yours or whether it is anyone else's. The guilt is unjustified whether it is yours or anyone else's. Because it is part of the dream of a self that there's no real relation to the self that you are. You can put the shame down, you can put the guilt down.

Again, I wouldn't suggest doing it vocally, because you have people gathered around you who will be more than happy to reinforce and prove to you that you are far from innocent and far from guiltless. And you do not need to have your illusion reinforced by other's illusions. In this respect you wake up alone. You must claim your innocence and your purity and your guiltlessness within the quietness of you.

Now, I have said that there are those with you providing support, and in that sense you are not alone. But those who are in support of your efforts to arouse yourself are those who are Awake.

The fundamental point you need to know is of your guiltlessness at this very instant. There is never enough justification for you to feel guilty or ashamed. And as we have talked this weekend, we have talked about the necessity of beginning to love yourself right where you are, because that is what broadens the avenue of your experience of your divinity. Because you are not continuing to engage in self-depreciation and guilt and self-punishment.

I tell you to love yourself because you are not a sinner. I do not tell you to love yourself because you are a sinner and you need love, and the love will exalt you. The love will break up the illusion of being a sinner, of being worthy of shame. And in the dissolving of that the illumination of your innocence and purity can break forth, and uncover in you great joy.

And the question is: How long will it take? There is such a crust of shame that it is going to take a long time to dissolve. I will tell you something: The shame is a belief! It is just an idea! And it is an idea that has no substance whatsoever, because it is imagined.

Simply begin to daily make this claim: "I am innocent. I have the innocence of the lamb. I have the innocence of the Father, because the Father is at this very instant being me. All that I am the Father is being at this moment, and therefore I am more than this puny little guilty thing that I think I am. I am the innocence and the purity of the current expression of the living God and I claim that to be the truth about me. And I am willing to let in the experience of that innocence no matter what horrible thing I might have done, or what horrible thing I might think I have done, or what horrible thing I have been told that I have done. I claim my innocence at this moment. I am going to climb off my cross of crucifixion and engage in the resurrection of me, and I am not going to hold onto the cross as though it is what is going to exalt me, because before I put myself on the cross I was the Son of God, before I put myself on the cross I was the Daughter of God and I still am."

You know what? Everybody thinks I died for you. I will tell you they missed the point. I lived! And I lived for you so that you might discover and realize the futility of suffering for purposes of exaltation, and might let yourself into the exaltation of yourself back into what I will call your spiritual original, which has been forever present with you.

You are innocent. You have never been anything less than the Daughter of God. And you have never been anything more than what God is unfolding is unfolding of Himself/Herself. You are the fullness of the glory of God at this instant. And I do not want you to say that so as to overcome something else. I want you to say it and claim it because it is the truth.

If the you in the dream—the nightmare—said, "I am not really being chased by this creature, something in me realizes that there is a me asleep in a bed somewhere. And I claim the clarity and perspective of the me that is really in the bed. That act of volition from within the nightmare, being in alignment with the actual fact would promote the Awakening. But to say, "I deserved to be chased by this monster, I deserve to experience the fear because it is going to exalt my Soul," would simply leave you in the dream longer and it wouldn't be the truth.

Is this radical enough for you? You are innocent! I am not even going to get up on a bandbox and lecture you with great energy to get you to believe it. It's the simple truth. It's the natural truth. It's really true. And I am not going to try to prove it to you, just like you need not prove your innocence. You simply need to embrace the possibility that it's true, and you need to explore what that means to you—to truly be innocent.

Now I have said a wonderful thing. Now we are going to have a little bit of reality and practicality, not that what I have said isn't real and practical, but let us be very clear. If you have engaged in behavior that is unloving, and if you seemed to have hurt another in the process, you cannot say, "I am innocent and therefore I do not need to change my behavior, no matter what I do I am innocent." That is not what I said. I did not say no matter what you do you are innocent. I said you are innocent, period.

I also said, that if you believed that you are guilty, and if you were indulging in penalty and shame, then your behavior will arise out of a feeling of guilt and it will be reactionary and unloving. There is a natural result to experiencing your innocence and that is that you become defenseless, you lower your defenses and in the absence of defenses you are experienced by others as being loving. And you have available to you the perspective to know how to be appropriate with another. And as a result your actions are spontaneous expressions of harmony.

I am not saying that your unloving actions make you guilty. They do not. You still remain as innocent as ever. But the experience of your innocence and the spontaneous expression of joy and love that flows forth as a result of feeling your innocence means that your behavior will not be identifiable as judgeable. And you will not engage in activities that will be hurtful, because this harmony of being, that I mentioned earlier, will be the experienced fact, where every facet of infinity moves relative to every other one, and there is no action that occurs out of willfulness at the expense of another aspect.

Your actions, your unloving actions do not cause you to be guilty. But it covers up your experience of your innocence and your ability to be that innocence in action. That constitutes a loss of integrity, a loss of the experience of your ever present integrity and it is not comfortable, and it calls for a change.

Now we could talk at some length about the concept of victims and victimization, and I will not go into that at this time. The point is that each and everyone of you at this instant are innocent. And your innocence has an energy to it. And as you begin to embrace the possibility that you are innocent, you will begin to feel the energy of your innocence, thus bringing your innocence in at a level of experience, not at a level of reasoning. And what comes in at a level of experience is much more meaningful.

You will not get to your innocence by means of paying penance! You will get to the experience of your innocence by means of embracing your innocence as a present fact, thus aligning yourself with the Christ sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, thus allowing the penetration of the dream by your real perception and your Awakening. It is time to stop trying to earn your innocence, it is time to start claiming it on the basis that it is the already existing and unalterable fact.

You are in the midst of such claiming and you are on the threshold of having this shame fall away from you, not because you have become worthy of something better, but because you were never worthy of such an awful experience. It has been an illegitimate imposition upon your experience of who you divinely are. And you do not have to continue to be imposed upon illegitimately. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have been having conversations with my own guide and recently I have allowed my guide to talk to my friends.

ANSWER: That is very magnanimous of you.

QUESTION: A lot of the subject matter recently are things that are really have a lot of our ego's on edge and mine including. And when I am talking to my guide I will ask him if he is of the Christ Consciousness. And I have gotten the answer, "yes." And then I will proceed, and then I will take the information and I will take it to my solar plexus to see if I feel comfortable with it. And that's been fine. And so last week during some of my talks with my guide I felt comfortable at the time that it was my guide speaking, but as the days go on I'm feeling that maybe it wasn't my guide and in fact it was my ego I was listening to. And I'm a little hesitant to talk to my guide right now.

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you something: You must dare to break the ice. If nothing else sit there and say, "hello," and let your guide say hello to you, so that if nothing else you can get the feel again of the communication.

Now, you will often find that the ego will work you over after the fact, after having listened for the guidance. And will attempt to disqualify or disprove what you have heard, and the necessity is to immediately go back to your guide and say, "what about this? You said such-and-such, but the thought has occurred to me that that cannot be. It doesn't make sense to me. I need more amplification. I need more explanation." Persist in asking questions to get the clarification until you have your peace.

The one thing I encourage you not to do is to refrain from continuing the conversation or dialog. Because if you refrain from having the dialog you remove yourself from the very place that the clarification can come forth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Could, would Raj confirm whether or no last weeks conversations from my guide?

ANSWER: Yes, indeed. Now explore further with your guide.

QUESTION: It seems to be taking a lot of self-love for me to allow myself to ask this question.

ANSWER: That is all right.

QUESTION: Well, I was in a relationship with someone and I thought the relationship was going to be forever. And since it now looks like it isn't going to be forever, I felt like I experienced a tremendous, tremendous amount of sadness, that surprised me. And what felt like a tremendous loss. And I felt so much sadness after a couple of weeks that I decided to just cut it off, just develop some kind of an attitude of superiority over this other person, totally knowing I was creating that just as a way of cutting off the sadness so I could feel angry and self-righteous instead of sad. And the sadness did stop to some degree. Obviously it's still here.

So my question is kind of from a couple different perspectives. I wondered if my approach, if there was something about my approach to the relationship or some expectation that I was setting up inside myself was off center, and that was the cause of all the pain and all the sadness? Or if there was some purpose to experiencing the sadness and should I continue, whether I'm complete with it?

Really I guess even though I would like those questions answered, even if none of those were answered I suppose most important to me is I'm still interesting in understanding an attitude to approach a close intimate relationship with one other human being that will not be a set up for great pain and disappointment if it doesn't turn out to be permanent.

ANSWER: I'm going to put it this way, the sadness, the sense of loss, the grief that you are experiencing is on the one hand genuine. But on the other hand it is an effort at gaining control. It is as though a part of you says, "I am suffering so much that I deserve a reversal of the situation." It is partly, on your part an attempt to strong arm God, or strong arm the universe, to change what has happened as a compensation for the great sense of loss and grief that you are experiencing. And to that degree the grief is not genuine, but a manipulation.

Now, the simple fact is that the relationship is over, but your being has not been thwarted by this turn of events relative to the unfoldment of your fulfillment, in terms of a relationship. But you are going to have to be will to give your attention to what your being is now unfolding, shall I say, now reconfiguring. And you are going to have to be willing to let this one go.

Now how are you to approach a new relationship? I will tell you one thing in particular: If it is obvious to you from the outset that there are adjustments that are going to have to occur before there will be a comfortable compatibility, find someone else. Love, love felt for each other is not going to be sufficient to cause major, or even minor change.

Don't wear your heart on your sleeve quite so readily. And I do not mean by that to withhold your love, but let there be a balanced perspective. And be alert for the unfoldment of a relationship where there is a naturalness, an easy-goingness, and no major changes called for.

You held out in this relationship on the basis of your great love for changes to occur, feeling that the love would help promote those changes. The problem was that the changes couldn't occur fast enough to be fulfilling.

A relationship is not meant for the purpose of changing the other partner. A relationship is for enjoying who the other partner is. And just as your self-acceptance is what does promote the growth of your increasing clarity, so your love in terms of the acceptance of your partner for who they are at the moment, does promote graceful growth and expansion. But remember that the purpose of the relationship is not to bring about change, but to experience the joy of simply being who you are with each other. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I guess the thought that's there is that I felt that towards the end of the relationship I had felt that I had lost a lot of the conditionality that I felt I brought to it initially. The question is was it so much my nonacceptance of her or her nonacceptance of herself, or just a combination of the two?

ANSWER: It was primarily the latter.

QUESTION: The combination?

ANSWER: No, her nonacceptance of herself.

QUESTION: Many of my questions have been brought up yesterday and today, and the questions I thought were answered. But the one about going back into the marketplace, and as it approaches at the end of this weekend my anxiety level is increasing. And I guess I want to bring it back to the amount of my work that is not bringing me the fulfillment that I want, even though I find it's the job I want. I enjoy the work, but the better I get at it the more work I get. And the rest of my fulfillment is being, I feel it's being squashed or it's under the wave, or behind the wave.

ANSWER: I will interrupt you here. The better you get, the more work you get. But I would encourage you to let it configure in a different way. The more work, the better you get, the more you charge, thus keeping the amount of work at a reasonable level.

QUESTION: It sounds simple. It may be simpler than I think it is.

ANSWER: You are not to pay a penalty for doing your work better.

QUESTION: No, no. I guess even though the answer was answered this morning about letting myself decide that it's enough and I need to rest, I still have been going through not just exhaustion, but physical pain.

ANSWER: How much is it going to take for you to use common sense? You see, what you don't realize is that you really have the choice to use common sense. You really have the freedom to say, “thus far and no farther, this much and no more.” And you really can take that freedom and express it with joy.

You at least have as much integrity as a woman, don’t you? Women are learning not to be subservient to men. And they are standing up for their right to say, “thus far and no farther,” to say, “I will be the whole-Souled individual that I am, and not fulfill the role that you or someone as a man expect me to fulfill.” Do you not have as much integrity as a woman, to stand up and say, “thus far and no farther,” and discover the joy of the freedom of your integrity? I agree I am hitting below the belt here, but it is working. If they can do it, you can do it.

You are not here to be like an ox made to pull a plow hour after hour, coming to the conclusion that it is the wearing down of you that gives you meaning. You are supposed to be having fun, but you are forgetting to take hold of the fun, you are forgetting to keep it in the picture.

Don’t be a slave to your work. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: And I guardedly say you are welcome. You will get to the point where you will be able to feel the thank you.

QUESTION: Thanks, again.

QUESTION: Raj, I recently moved to a yoga center and ashram. And I felt very guided in my decision to go there, and never really questioned that. And I wonder if you could offer some insight as to what I’m doing there?

ANSWER: Very simply, finding out whether you want to be there. You’re learning to pay attention to yourself. And you are also learning in a larger context that guidance does not give you ultimate answers. It gives you answers that allow you to take steps to the ultimate experience of being Awake. But it gives you only as many steps as you can dare to take comfortably.

So I encourage you to honor the guidance that has brought you this far. But continue to listen for guidance and allow for further steps to unfold without assuming that because you listened to guidance it should have led you directly to your “final resting place.” Life is a Movement, not a resting place, and it will continue to unfold. And especially you will find your steps specifically contributing to your process of Awakening as well as their identification of your fulfillment, humanly speaking.

So now you ask, “what next?” And when what next unfolds you will say, “all right, what now?” And thus you will stay on the wave as it continues to move forward. You are in the perfect spot at the moment. You are right where further self-trust can develop, where further trust in your guidance can develop and where you can begin to get the feel for the movement of life, rather than the end of life, or the ultimate. Do you understand what I mean?

QUESTION: Yes, I do.

ANSWER: In other words, you still stand at the threshold of discovery, you still stand in that delightful place of life moving on, making itself new.

So I encourage you to enjoy this spot, even though it does not seem to be obviously the ultimate, or a resting place at least for a reasonably fixed period of time. Enjoy this place that you are, and enjoy what you discover about you and about your life while you are here. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This community places a lot of emphasis on cathartic process and which I didn't know when I went there. And it seems to me that this weekend you've been talking about that too, in terms of releasing the cork. And last year you responded to a man who had a question about anger, and your answer was that if he kept his focus on God his anger would dribble out the sides. And I'm wondering, I prefer that method rather than the pain of the cathartic process that this community espouses. Would you respond to that please?

ANSWER: Does that awareness that you have just expressed constitute a meaningful self-awareness?

QUESTION: I don't understand the question.

ANSWER: What I mean is, you sit here with a crystallized feeling that you prefer the process of focusing on God so that the anger or whatever the negative might be might dissolve, rather than going through a catharsis. Correct? That is a clarity about you that you just expressed. Correct?

QUESTION: Well, I think it's more theoretical.

ANSWER: Now you know why you are there. I am not saying that what you have just expressed is not valid, but being where you are will help you find out experientially whether that hypothesis is true. Again, you are not in the wrong place, and you are not in a place where you will be damaged, but do pay attention to yourself and what you find yourself learning in the process.

I will tell you something: Catharsis for the sake of catharsis is not valuable. But in the process of getting in touch with yourself, in the process of daring to begin to love yourself you will find your justifications for not loving yourself coming to the surface. And their surfacing and their release does constitute a catharsis. How strenuous that catharsis is depends upon the degree that you resist it once you have asked for it.

Pain is not inherent in the Awakening process. Pain comes into play when the process of clarification is resisted once it has begun. And sometimes one learns how not to resist by finding out what it feels like to resist. And that is learning, and it does work. But it is not part of the setup, it is not unavoidable.

Pain and suffering are not necessary in order to wake up. But in many cases it seems to be inseparable simply because once the movement begins—which always begins as a result of a desire and a defenselessness—once it begins and the defenses are put up, it hurts. Because you have invited the active experience of the Movement of your capital “B” Being, you have opened yourself up to it, and it is as though the flood gates have been lowered and the water behind the dam, the you beyond your current limit begins to flow over with the force of the whole body of water that is behind it, and to put the flood gates back up again is more strenuous because you are going against a flow that you have allowed to start. But you see one doesn’t have to put up the defenses again.

Now, I encourage you to stay right where you are and pay attention and learn, and when you find out why you want to stay there, stay there. Or when you find out that it is not appropriate for you to stay there ask, “what now,” and listen and move on in accordance with your guidance.

You are right where your clarification can become crystallized with the greatest ease and succinctness. Your being has not wasted energy and it has not wasted your time. You sit on the cusp. A wonderful place to be. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Is it appropriate for me to extend my commitment to this place?

ANSWER: I am not going to answer that question. You must ask within yourself and then dare to trust the integrity of your answer, understanding that whichever answer you get will not be a mistake. You must invest a little bit of trust in what you find yourself feeling within yourself, and then act on it, and hold your head high and move forward with confidence and grow and move on. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hopefully this won’t be too extended. I have been told two or three different times in the past that my guide is standing directly behind me and it should be very easy for me to make contact. In spite of that I have not accomplished this as yet. Could you enlightenment as to how I might proceed to contact my guide?

ANSWER: Very specifically, I would encourage you, first of all, to attempt communication on a regular basis, like once a day, or once ever evening, or once every other evening. But let it be regular. And let it always be in the same place, in the same chair, or in the same room. Then sit down and take 10 or 15 minutes to just relax and to become as quiet as you can. You may meditate if you wish, you may use self-hypnosis relaxation techniques, whatever helps you to become relatively quiet within yourself.

Then mentally express the desire to have communication with your guide. After having done that, listen. Simply remain there for perhaps another 10 or 15 minutes listening. If you find yourself distracted by a thought, tell yourself you can take care of that after you are through, and become quiet and listen again. And expect an answer. Understand that you are not to expect the answer so as to make the answer happen, but you are to expect the answer so as to express your intent.

You are listening because you expect to hear an answer. You are not just listening for the heck of it.

Now, understand that when your guide speaks to you, there will be activity in your mind. So do not try to keep your mind a blank. Let the words form. You can block the hearing of the communication if you are trying to keep your mind absolutely still. And in the beginning you are going to have to “risk the chance” that what happens will not be you providing the words.

I will tell you this, your intent to hear from your guide will help focus your attention where it needs to be, rather than allowing it to be vague and undisciplined and therefore susceptible to your ego.

Now when you are listening I encourage you to have the attitude of “Thy Will be done.” And this attitude of “Thy Will be done,” needs to be directed towards your guide. There needs to be a willingness on your part to let your guide approach you in the way that he or she knows is best—the way that will connect with you most meaningfully. And you must even leave the timing of the first conversation up to the discretion of your guide.

It may not happen the first night, or the second night, or the third night. But let there be an attitude of letting your guide speak for the first time to you at his or her discretion, knowing that it is the intent of your guide to connect with you and knowing that it is your intent to have dialog.

It is not that you are asking for communication before it is appropriate, that is not why there would be a delay. It is because you are doing something new and unfamiliar to you, something perhaps a little radical. And it is important for the first communication to happen in a way that is substantiating and securing to the line of communication, if you will. And so, I encourage you to let it happen when it happens. And let there be patience.

Understand that since the moment of conception it has been your guides intent to connect with you as soon as you were desirous of having communication. So it is bound to happen.

I will tell you that although, visually speaking, those who are sensitive may be aware of your guide standing immediately behind you, the fact is that the point of contact is in consciousness. It is as though your guide as consciousness and you as consciousness are in the same place. And that is where the connection is and where it will be experienced. So you are even closer than you thought.

One further thing, in the beginning you will not be sure it is not you making it up. Let it be! And persist in having whatever dialog might occur. I also encourage you from the first day of communication or the first day of listening to have a journal in your lap with a pencil or pen in your hand, and write down not only your question, but whatever answers you get. It is very easy during the first few weeks for you to totally discount and invalidate what has happened. If it has been written down, you are not dependent upon your memory and it cannot be discounted as easily. Persist, you are indeed close. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: First of all I want to say that I really appreciate all the questions that everyone has been sharing this afternoon, and without a shadow of a doubt the answers also.

My questions deal with the issue of love. As we had a conversation earlier this year, you had stated that there was not a true understanding of love, or the experience of love with people here on this world. As a matter of fact, no one is truly experiencing love in its totality. And that very fragments of love were being experienced on a limited basis throughout the world, but nothing of any substantial totality.

My question is why can't we open up our eyes and experience love and see it, see what the Kingdom of Heaven is? And why does the resistance to love even exist at all?

ANSWER: The simple fact is that as long as you are identifying with a body as though the body were you, rather than the consciousness that you are, being you, then because your five physical senses tell you that this body is tiny in comparison to the universe, that it is fragile, that it can hurt, etc., one begins to be self-protective. And in the act of self-protection one begins to develop coercive means of controlling his environment so as to be safe, so as to increase one's invulnerability.

You see, the moment you leave the sound basis of your infinity and adopt rather a tiny sense of self located in the middle of infinity there is immediately a sense of insecurity and inferiority. And everything else arises out of that sense of insecurity and inferiority, even one's expression of love—thus love becomes a friendly way of controlling.

The reason that love isn't experienced is because love, true love, requires defenselessness. That is another way of describing unconditional love. To be unconditional does not mean to say, "I will love you no matter what you do." To be unconditional is to be defenseless, to not be self-protected. And in that state of defenselessness, as I said earlier, you have the opportunity for the Reality that confronts you to register with you, to let it in. Love is letting in what is Real. But as long as the defense is up you cannot see what is Real. And the defense constitutes the distorting factor that causes you to see egos all around you rather than Christ's.

Now I will tell you something, the moment you become truly unconditional, truly defenseless, and your eyes are open, you will see Christ's, even if they are seeing themselves as egos. And that is what is healing.

Because when you look at one who sees himself or herself as an ego, and you see the Christ there, your behavior toward that individual will be inconsistent with that individual's sense of what is appropriate. You will not be judgmental when they expect judgment to occur. You will not convey uneasiness with them when they are uncomfortable. They will feel an absence of a need for defense around you. And to whatever degree they allow their defenses to lower there will be increased meaning to the relationship. And so healing and transformation is the inevitable and ultimate result of one's practicing unconditional love.

Unconditional love has nothing to do with allowing or disallowing another's behavior. It has to do with letting go of one's defenses, one's self-protection. It is caring enough to be willing to recognize what is real in each and everything. In that willingness is the defenselessness. In that willingness is the openness to experience Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven more clearly. And that is the only sound basis for a relationship, because in that place all you can see are Christ's, all you can see is the presence of God.

And with that vision you will be unable to join with another in their ego point of view. And so their ego point of view will not be substantiated and strengthened by you. And they will feel touched by you, even though you did not extend anything to them, but let them in, by virtue of not being defended against them.

Nevertheless, you had better be willing to start with whatever your highest concept of love is. A concept of love is intellectual, but a concept of love is better than a concept of hate. And a concept of self-appreciation is better than a concept of self-hate. And as I said, that concept because it is in alignment with the fact about you serves as the bridge, serves as the means by which you begin to be able to have the experience of your divinity and of the divinity of whatever it is you are looking at or in relationship with. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. To follow that up I would very much like your help in giving me direction in allowing me to understand the feeling of love so I can radiate that love and share it with others.

ANSWER: I will tell you that if you will simply take the time to be quiet, to go within and abide in the quietness and pay attention to what you are experiencing there, pay attention to the peace, and realize that the peace that you are experiencing is not an emotion but a direct experience of the substance of your Being. The substance of your Being is peace and love, if you allow yourself to be in it and pay attention to the feeling of it and recognize that it is a direct experience of you, there will be a joy that you will find yourself experiencing. And this joy will ooze from you. It will be extended not because you are choosing to extend it but because it is just bubbling out all over you.

The other factor here is that in discovering this experience of yourself it becomes patently obvious to you that what you are experiencing of yourself is absolutely true of your fellow man if your fellow man would come into that same inner place within him or her and therefore because you are having a clearer experience of who you divinely are you come into a knowledge of the divinity of your fellow man. And that constitutes a shift of consciousness that will come across as love, and as a lack of need for defenses on their part.

The key though is to get into that place within yourself, that secret place of the most high, as it has been put, that sanctuary of you, get in touch with that. Because until you begin to know yourself from that level, you will still not know anything truly about your fellow man from a level of experience. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I really admire your stamina. My question is: I've been given an image a number of years ago about a healing center in up-state New York. And without losing sight of the future image, and without losing the here and now, I have a three-fold question.

I sometimes seem to have a real difficulty in focusing on being grounded and centered, and at the same time allowing both healing energy and creative energy to flow through.

ANSWER: If you are not grounded and centered where is the place for the healing energy to flow through?

QUESTION: I don't know, but I sometimes have.. unless I really concentrate I have a difficult time with everyday stuff. I mean I've been working very hard at it, but all my energy goes into it and I'd rather just be playing. And I haven't been doing that, but well I do it a little.

I've been told that in order to finance this healing center that I would be making a lot of money through the arts. And as part of the question I'd like to know where I begin, because I do have some fear. Should I focus on comedy, music, writing, entertaining, art programs that I do, children's programs? What do I do specifically?

ANSWER: Again, what do you have the most energy for? In other words, when you are paying attention to that list of opportunities, where do you find a rise of energy and enthusiasm, because that is the area that you should pursue, because that is where you are feeling the movement. Remember that you must pay attention to the movement.

QUESTION: Comedy and music.

ANSWER: You are correct.

QUESTION: So what do I do. I've been told and I've also felt that I'm supposed to...

ANSWER: First of all, before getting scattered discard the rest of the list, and let comedy and music remain. Now without the others there, simply pay attention to the feeling that you have about those two things. Listen within relative to those two things. Ideas will begin to emerge, because that is where the energy is. Jot the ideas down, begin to develop them. Do not think about the end result.

Pay attention as this unfolds, pay attention to what is unfolding in the now. Let the ideas develop and your enthusiasm will be sustained and they will naturally lead to a form of expression that will succeed. But you are going to have to be willing not to jump around from this to that or the other thing, or ask what if this, and what if that, and what if the other thing, or what if this doesn't happen, or what if that does happen." Stay simple. Stay focused in the sense of giving your attention specifically to those two things on the list and abiding with them. It will fall into place.

QUESTION: Thank you. Along with that, I've been feeling that this particular home that I see in my mind is supposed to somehow appear. And it hasn't, or I haven't seen it—it may have and I haven't seen it. And that I'm supposed to be continuing the spiritual work that's already been started—the healing classes and the sessions with people. Can you give me any information about this home, like when and what I need to do?

ANSWER: It is not pertinent at the present time. And that is why there is no activity around it, nothing further unfolding. I encourage you to let it be there, but let it be there on the back burner. And you attend to the other things that are up in the foreground—the two things on your list, plus your healing work, and the meeting of your daily needs in the simplest and most practical way.

You tend to try to take on responsibility for unfolding what is going to unfold instead of letting it unfold and being the joyous observer of it.

QUESTION: Am I going to be staying where I'm living at this friend's house?

ANSWER: For a short time longer. My definition of a short time is three to nine weeks. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Just want to thank you for having the workshop here again in Vermont, and thanking Paul for listening to you so we could have it here again.

I came to the workshop last year, and a little while after that I left for a trip and I've been traveling since then. I returned about two months ago. I was traveling overseas mainly in India. I've had some ambivalent feelings about my trip. And my present situation now is somewhat confusing...

ANSWER: You had had some ambivalent thoughts about your trip. The trip you had no ambivalence about you simply experienced it.

QUESTION: True. So at the moment I'm trying to get settled down with just started work again, and the living situation is really up in the air. Presently I'm also staying at the same friend that Dee Dee is staying at. And we're also looking for a home.

I just want to have some general guidance about what would be helpful at this particular time in space and situation...

ANSWER: Expect to have your practical needs met and expect to have a way to support the meeting of those practical needs. I will tell you also that it will be three to nine weeks. The two of you will indeed find a place together. Let there simply be an expectation that your need will be met. That is the intent of the movement of your being to identify your fulfillment. And fulfillment means the meet of your need right where you are at your present point of unfoldment. Let that expectation be there so you will not be blocking the recognition of it because of doubt.

QUESTION: Okay, also I just wanted to ask if there was any other just general guidance about that I would seem to need right now? And also anything about the relationship between Dee Dee and I that could be helpful to us to know.

ANSWER: Indeed at this time there is nothing further that it is appropriate to say. Simply be alert to, and expect to see your need being met relative to a residence together. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm sure this will be easy for you. Although it's been very tough for me, my question is not deeply spiritual, but ego like in maybe one of those silly ones that are appropriate.

ANSWER: I so glad you said that, because it is important for all of you to know that your motive for asking a question doesn't have to be particularly high or highly placed. I will tell you something, your guide will rejoice at having the opportunity to speak to you no matter what causes you to initiate the conversation.

QUESTION: My question is not exactly formulated, but is around the issue of vanity, about beauty and the physical body. I grew up with a gorgeous mother, with seven beautiful sisters and it's a problem for me and many of them. And how I have approached it... Sorry this is important to me. And I know it looks like a very surface issue. I'm very conflicted about it. I've run the gamut from sort of making myself ugly so as to not look pretty, to really wanting to be pretty, but feeling it's bad to try and have this mother and sisters to compete with.

So I feel trapped by this. I'd like to just let go of it. And I don't know if letting go of it means giving myself permission to do what I want to do to be pretty, or to just quit. But I can't seem to quit. And when I look at issues like using affirmations, I mean choose things that I can... It looks to me like it remains in the battle. And I'd just like some release. I'd like to be comfortable and forget about issues about my body and beauty and acceptableness. Is that enough, thank you?

ANSWER: I do not mean to be discouraging in any way, but I will tell you, that you on the leading edge of something that everyone will be faced with the Kingdom of Heaven is exquisitely beautiful. Reality is exquisitely beautiful. The Father/Mother is love and truth, and together manifested those constitute exquisite beauty. The Movement of the Father is beautiful. Creation is beautiful.

As Awakening occurs every single individuality who is dreaming the dream is going to find physical healing and transformation occurring. Disproportionate members of the body will become proportionate. Short-waisted people will become properly waisted people. Short-legged people, and long torsoed people will find balance come into play. It will physically feel similar to the teenage years when there were growth spurts, except these will be adjustment spurts.

I will tell you something... (end of side one) believe that they are really there and Paul wonders how long it will be before he will wake up and find out that it's a dream.

(beginning of side two)

That which is obviously beautiful and that which is obviously good it is difficult for you to embrace with any sense of eternity to it. It must have been a fluke, it must be temporary, it must be the luck of the draw, but you can't count on it being there forever. And all of you are going to be faced with, in the process of Awakening, the embracing of undeniable good and letting it rest with you, letting it be with you without finding justifications for kicking it away, or denying it a little bit.

As I said, you are on the leading edge of a dilemma that everyone is going to be faced with. And the answer is embrace your beauty.

I cannot convey strongly enough that God experiencing Himself, that God seeing all that He had made was an experience of Meaning, which is embodied in the words, "And behold it was very good." That recognition was a response, a meaningful response. It wasn't just okay, it was very good. And as I have said before, correctly interpreted the words say, "and God saw everything that He had made and behold it was verily it was God." God saw Himself. Being is the experience of self-recognition, of seeing yourself in what you see, in finding yourself in your fellow man, etc.

Now that which is beautiful is beautiful and it feels like something. There is a response. There is a Soul acknowledgment. The fact that there is a feeling does not mean you're uncentered, it means that you're alive to Reality. And so, you not only are going to have to accept your beauty, you are going to have to allow yourself to feel the feeling, the joy that is part and parcel of the experience of beauty. And then you're going to have to just let this whole wonderful experience be what it is. In other words, you're going to have to live with it.

This does not constitute vanity. Vanity is an obsessive preoccupation with beauty, not for the sake of beauty, but for the sake of impressions, for the sake of what other's will think, or at an inner level, or at a private level for the sake of living up to a concept that someone else has conditioned you with relative to your worth or your worthlessness. That is vanity.

But when you come over a rise on a drive and suddenly before you is this panoramic scene with a rainbow. And before you've had a chance to think you gasp, the air is taken away. That is a Soul response. It is Soul recognizing it is beauty its beauty, the beauty of the Movement of God. And it is supposed to be that way.

I would encourage you to say to yourself, “If God, if the Movement of God is exquisitely beautiful then I guess I’ll just have to live with myself.” And then don’t squelch the inevitable response that you will have when you recognize the beauty of God every time you look into a mirror.

Nothing is too good. Everything is perfectly exquisitely good. And I am very glad you asked this question, because it caps the topic that has emerged through the weekend. Everyone wants to wake up. The Movement of God that I have spoken of is occurring. The Awakening process is occurring.

We have talked about where to be in order to experience that Movement and that clarification, and we have touch somewhat on the nature of Reality. But here we are having the opportunity to bring it home in a very practical way. Because the beauty is going to effect you. You are going to have to live with it. You are going to have to let go of any sense of unworthiness, to have, to be and to be in the midst of such beauty, such symmetry, such balance of outline form and color. And you’re going to have to let go of the conditioned response that says, “it can’t last forever,” because that is a defense against embracing the nature of you fully.

This helps all of you to have some idea of how all inclusive and how profoundly meaningful the Awakening process will be, and the state of being Awake. Most of you could tolerate being in surroundings that are beautiful, but few of you could tolerate being beautiful.

Your question crystallizes either what you could call the dilemma that faces everyone, or the promise that awaits everyone, depending on whether you are willing to embrace the inevitable or continue to attempt to resist it a little bit longer. It is divinely natural for you to be beautiful. It is of God. It is not a personal attribute, it is an inherent attribute, which in the process of incarnating this time you did not cover up. And I encourage you to have the courage to embrace the expression of divine beauty that you are without apology and without guilt. And let the issue become a dead issue in terms of inner conflict and let the beauty and the appreciation of the beauty fill you.

And I will tell you something else, those who are caught up in vanity are assured of the fact that the beauty is only skin deep, as it is said, and that it will only last a few years. If it is God expressed then the beauty is eternal. And I encourage you not to expect it to fade, and not to buy into that, and also not to use the fading of it as a means of escaping the demand that confronts you to embrace beauty unconditionally, to embrace your beauty. Each one’s beauty, each one’s exquisite symmetrical unique expression of beauty is like each one’s innocence. And you must dare to embrace it and be it, and let it in.

Do not let this be a problem any longer. You deserve to be beautiful, because you are God expressed. Not because you did anything to get it, but just because you exist. And so does everyone else. So be the clearer of the trail, the trail breaker. Dare to embrace your beauty. Dare to feel responsive to it. And do not apologize for it. Find your comfort with it, because you will be able to inspire others as they begin to discover their beauty. And you will be able to help them embrace it more gracefully as a result of your experience.

I am certainly not trying to flatter you. The simple fact is that the Movement and expression of God is exquisitely beautiful. That means that each and everyone of you are exquisitely beautiful together with being absolutely flawlessly innocent.

So, I hear some of you saying that it's going to be impossible for all of this to happen very fast. That it will not be easy to embrace innocence and it will not be easy to embrace beauty, and it will not be easy to let go of worthlessness and shame, and it will not be easy to let go of self-depreciation.

But again I must affirm to you the fact that these negatives, these impossibilities are all ego techniques to defend you against experiencing your divinity. But it doesn't matter because there are not any longer a sufficient number of those dreaming to keep the dream going. And therefore, some of these things which I have said, which are absolutely true, but which seem to be perhaps impossible, will occur not by virtue of great skill or great native spirituality on your part, but because the dream is waking up.

I encourage you not to look at your waking up process as something that is going to be inherently laborious. All you have to bring to it is a little willingness. The reason being that the illusion doesn't have the strength that it used to have.

I encourage all of you to remember this last question because all of you can relate to how you would feel if you were beautiful. Some of you will find that you are very grateful that you are not exquisitely beautiful. Some of you will even be able to be honest enough to admit that if you were exquisitely beautiful you would probably fall in love with yourself. But you will have the opportunity.

And because this crystallizes the human dilemma I am bringing it to your attention. Because waking up involves the embracing of that which is exquisitely beautiful. And it involves discovering yourself to be exquisitely beautiful, perfect, flawless, innocent, pure. And it's going to feel like something. It's not an intellectual purity, it's an experiential purity, an experiential beauty.

I want you to remember this last question, because it will help remind you of the significance of waking up in a way that registers with you at this moment. You let yourself into the Kingdom of Heaven millimeter by millimeter so that you will not have to have your unworthiness confronted by unjustifiable good.

It isn't because you love that which is ungodlike, it is because you are afraid to be that perfect perception of Reality that constitutes being the Christ, and that allows you to experience your unity in the Brotherhood of Man. Which is what the Bible and Paul referred to—not Paul Tuttle, but St. Paul referred to as the Body of Christ. What is the Body of Christ? It is the manifestation of God. It is God's self-expression manifest.

The Brotherhood is exquisitely beautiful. You are Brotherhood, you are the Christ at this instant. All you have to do is to dare to embrace your beauty, to embrace your shamelessness, to embrace your worth, to embrace your good without arguing against it. A little willingness to become defenseless enough to let it in. That is it in a nutshell.

Gathering In Princeville, Hawaii– 1989

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING: Aloha. So you have questions. I will tell you that questions are the leading edge of answers. Questions are what you have when you arrive at a limit of your present conscious comprehension. Problems are what you experience when you get to the limit or edge of your ability to comprehend the presence of God. They are a fence, as it were, which part of you experiences the beyondness of. Your eyes can see beyond the fence, but your body cannot access what is beyond. The answer is what constitutes the accessing of what is beyond the fence with all of yourself, all of your present sense of yourself, so that you access new territory of your Being, which your ego structures, your belief structures had not allowed you to embrace and own.

So your questions and your problems are really the limit of your present perception of truth, which you are at the point of moving beyond. And so you are not to embrace your questions or your problems as statements of ignorance, or sinfulness, or unworthiness, but as violable and valuable opportunities to break through and move over a threshold of enlightenment.

You do not embrace your problem or your question and get stuck with it. You do not use your problem or your question as the justification for being stuck, or as the justification for denying yourself the movement across the threshold.

How many of you have asked your prayer, stated your problem, asked for an answer, and then continued to state the problem as though God needed to hear what the problem was over and over again before it would register? How many of you have actually enjoyed having the question itself, having the ignorance and staying in it as though perhaps this suffering was going to exalt—exalt your Soul—without ever moving on to the answer, without ever becoming defenseless against the answer?

Now the illustration of the boundary or the fence is an excellent one, and I'm using it on purpose because: What you are calling a boundary—something which is holding you in—is a defense. It is a means you are employing to withhold from yourself the abundance, the territory, the expansion, the ownership of your divinity. You are defending yourself against it. And in becoming defenseless you are letting go of the ego structures, you are dissolving the fence, you are letting yourself expand.

But how many of you sit down next to the fence and weep and suffer because you know there is something more, but what can you do there is a fence. Well, no one else put the fence up. And what you can do is begin to dismantle it, let it dissolve. Do not continue to defend yourself by means of your intellectual justifications against experiencing your good, against experiencing the answer that resolves the limit.

So value your questions. In so many words, each of you has painted yourself into a corner, and your corners are very unique to each of you. And so the answers are very unique to you. And so whatever your questions are, are valuable, because they address the specific limits that you claim to be bound by. So don't judge your questions and say they are silly. Don't judge yourself for having a question. Okay, that's the end of the comment.

QUESTION: As I'm thinking about my question, the fence looms ahead. A couple of years ago I had an experience...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you for a moment. I would like all of you to envision a prairie, a flat land, on which there are circular fences, fences which are placed, let us say, five miles apart, far enough apart so that if you are in the center of the first circle you cannot from that center see the fence.

I will tell you, if your fence is looming in front of you, it means that you have advanced to a point of being able to break through and access the next five miles of diameter that is there for you to enjoy. Being up where the fence looms, means that progress is being made. It does not indicate that you have suddenly begun to do something wrong and you are being penalized. You have dared to own the territory within the first fence enough to discover that there is a fence that you are not legitimately bound by. Continue.

QUESTION: Yes. A couple of years ago I had an experience that was most fulfilling, enlightening beyond anything I ever thought I could have experienced on this earth plane. That feeling of infinity and beauty and light stayed with me for probably four months. I know what it is, I have it in my memory, and occasionally it comes back to me which continues my quest. My question is when may I have this always and forever for all of us? Is this a different dimension I traveled to?

ANSWER: I cannot answer that question for everyone else, nor can you require that it be something for everyone else. But you will have the experience again as soon as you allow it. Now what does that mean? It means as soon as you are not actively energizing your very definite ego sense or interpretation of everything.

The experience occurred when you were defenseless. Now you have since that time engaged in becoming more defenseless, less defended. But I encourage you not to be willful in anyway in the sense of attempting to make this experience occur again. Literally every single one of you must let yourself into the Kingdom of Heaven, by means of not efforting, not putting forth effort to get there.

The Kingdom of Heaven is what you experience when there is an absence of will, human will, ego will. It is absolutely the easiest thing to do, because all it requires is letting go. You are all conditioned to strive and become. And you are by one means or another convinced that you are worthless and must become worthy.

I will tell you something: When you are feeling the most worthless, when you are scraping the bottom of the barrel and you give up, that is when the influx of the divine awareness of who you are can occur, because the ego defenses do not block you from the experience of who you are before you have a thought, before you lift your little finger to try to become something. But of course, the ego calls that failure.

To be at the bottom of the barrel, to feel absolutely worthless and then to give up is the worst thing that you could do from the standpoint of conditioned thinking. But I want to ask you what is it that you give up? You give up a false sense of who you are. And that false sense has been given a name the ego, and the ego sees its demise as something to avoid at all cost. And so it influences you to keep it alive, instead of releasing it.

Now there is a poster that is available throughout the United States. It is a picture of a kitten and a rope, and it is holding on for dear life with just the barest of claws, scared to death. And all of you in one way or another have been at that point of hanging on for dear life. I will ask you if you were to let go, if you were to fail at holding on to whatever it is you have defined as your good, what would you fall into? The underlying, everlasting arms of God.

It is because you are conditioned to believe that letting go and failing constitutes real failure, that you don't go through that humiliating experience of yielding into the Will of the Father.

What keeps you from having the experience again is, in one way or another, your conviction that you have enough smarts to do it yourself, to handle a situation yourself without having to do any listening whatsoever. You are still feeling some competence, shall I say, as a human being, and I am meaning by that a personality, an ego.

Don't try to have this expanded experience, but let yourself daily yield into the Father's Will by assuming that you from the level of your reasoning do not know the absolute answer. And to the degree that you can relinquish your common sense in favor of the inner experience of the support and the Creative Movement of the Father, you will let yourself into that place where the experience can happen again.

If any of you are not experience being Awakened it is because you feel you have some personal competency, which you are insistent upon exercising, because that is what gives you your sense of worth. Your sense of worth comes from doing, rather than being. And when you let go of the doing, the striving and let go and become what the ego would call worthless because you are not trying to become anything at all, then is when the fullness of who you are, the presence of the Father has the opportunity to register at your conscious level of awareness.

Now all of you, yes all of you, have had experiences of illumination, a divine experience of one sort or another. Those experiences prove to you that the way you are experiencing things at the moment is incomplete. And those experiences that each of you have had are what allow the first lesson of the Course to take on special meaning. “Nothing that I see means anything.”

Nothing that I see means anything, because there is more to it than I am presently experience. The experiences of illumination that you have had cause you to always be open to and curious to experience the clearer perception, the truer experience of all that is. And it allows you to let go of the world. Now I am not saying that it allows you to let go of the world, I am saying that it allows you to let go of your present limited perception of the world, so that you may experience Reality—All That Is—more truly.

Now I am going on at some length in response to your question, but it is important to everyone.

What is illusion? Illusion is truth incompletely seen. Illusion is not a separate reality called unreality. Reality seen through ignorance is truth distorted. But what is being experienced is Reality. What is being experience that is illusory is truth seen with your eyes all squinted up, so that the whole truth isn't being experienced. And when the partial truth is taken as though it is whole, as though it is All There Is, then you are experiencing a deluded or illusory sense of what? Of truth, of Reality.

So I'm going to encourage all of you not to give illusion such a bad time. Recognize that it is an incomplete experience of truth or of Reality. The illusion is not to be denied as evil and to be gotten rid of or risen above, because it is the truth incompletely seen. If you are seeing illusion then the desire should be awakened in you to see the whole truth, so that you are not judging on the basis of a partial perception.

Each of you appears to be a human being, troubled or not troubled to one degree or another. But what is the truth? The truth is that each and everyone of you is the Son and Daughter of God, each and everyone of you is the Christ, each and everyone of you is the innocent and flawless expression of the Father, the innocent and flawless current expression of a current and living God.

Now, should I face all of you and say, “Wow, what an illusion,” and then attempt to do away with you? No. And so don't attempt to do away with yourselves, or your bodies, or your world, or your universe. But dare to desire to experience the illumination that uncovers that each one of your is the Christ, the flawless and innocent self-expression of the Father. And that everything you are experiencing is Reality, let there be a desire to experience the Reality of it, which is what each of you has experienced to one degree or another in a moment of illumination.

Ask yourself, when you had that experience did everything disappear, or did everything take on new, divine, profoundly, beautiful meaning?

So how do you encourage having this experience again? By beginning to define illusion as partial or incomplete truth treated as though it was all of truth, and then desiring to see the truth that is beyond the present limited concept of it. Let your world, let your bodies, let yourselves begin to be the presence of God that you are desirous of experiencing more directly as what it is, instead of denying, and embrace.

And as that willingness to recognize the Father in each and everything takes up more and more of your conscious awareness and time, you will find yourselves experiencing greater and greater experiences of illumination and more frequent experiences. But you are going to have to start approaching yourself and your world less defensively.

Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: My question is about emotions. I'm not sure what to ask. All of my life I feel like my emotions are part of my nervous system, or there closely connected. And it feels as though, it's like the end of the many, many dots or spheres coming off of my body, and it's very sensitive. And there are many emotions that can be many, many different things. I feel like I have that for a reason, but I'm not sure. I don't feel like I'm...I feel like it's a gift, but it's painful. I don't think it's anything different from anybody else, but I don't feel like I'm utilizing a resource. I don't understand.

ANSWER: I am not surprised. It is not something one spontaneously understands. Now, I mentioned earlier, that your body is not an illusion. The way you experience it is illusory, but your body is divine. And it is at the bottom line everyone's desire to experience his or her body as it divinely is.

Now, the ego is a defense mechanism. And I will tell you this, the ego uses, or shall I say, misuses the body as its means of denying God. And the denial involves what you are calling emotions. If your body were completely anesthetized it would be impossible for you to experience fear, or anger, or jealousy, or any of the other emotions that you experience. Indeed, the emotions do arise out of a physicalness, they are body oriented.

This is the reason that when you meditate and become centered, your body does not feed back to you the gnawing in the pit of the stomach, or the intense anger in the shoulders, because you have moved by virtue of becoming still out of the surface reactive ego level. In moving out of it you are no longer in a position to experience the way in which the ego misuses the body. And you come into a clearer experience of what is natural and normal to your body.

Now you must understand that there is a clear distinction between emotions and feelings. Emotions arise out of the ego in concert with physical sensation, which the ego elicits. All emotions constitute a defense against experiencing truth. Feelings on the other hand are the Soul's response to the Reality of All That Is. Joy is a feeling, not an emotion. Peace is a feeling, not an emotion. Love is a feeling, not an emotion. The ego misuses the body relative to love, and then love seems to become obsessive and compulsive and physically oriented. But that is the misuse.

Now love is the recognition of that which is Real in each and everything. What is it that can recognize that which is Real in each and everything? It is not the ego, it is not the intellect. It is the Soul.

Now when you find yourself being turned upside-down emotionally, you may know that you are in the ego's bailiwick, you are viewing everything through the lens of the ego. And you may know that what is called for is not some valium, not a sedative to dull your awareness, but a conscious choice to become centered and experience your peace and move out of the surface reactive ego level. Because your peace is a direct experience of the fundamental nature of you, of your Being and of your body.

It is not emotions which make the world turn round, it is Soul. I will tell you something, if you try to understand your emotions you will add yet another emotion to the whole experience, one of frustration. You cannot understand the ego, you cannot understand emotions. But you can choose for your peace. You can choose to silence the ego by what? Disregarding it. And choosing to become quiet and centered within.

Tell yourself that after you have taken time to be centered you will have the opportunity to be upset again if you choose to. And in that way you can allow yourself five or ten minutes of peace. But once having accessed the peace, you can choose to remain there.

Feelings are Souls response to what is Real. And feelings, the capacity of Soul to sense and feel the divinity of a thing, feels good. It is not passive, it is not monotonous, or dull, or colorless, or vague. And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very blah? What was it that was defined as being good? It was Soul. God's recognition of Himself in what was seen, feels good, and constitutes the action of integrity, conscious integrity. That feels like something, and it is stable, and it is secure, and it is invulnerable, and therefore defense is useless and unnecessary and irrelevant.

Now, when you find yourself becoming emotional, don't try to understand it. Choose rather at that very instant, when your emotions tell you otherwise, to become still, access your peace, go within. As the Bible puts it, “Go into thy closet, and pray unto your Father, which is in secret,” which is in the silence, the silence of your Being.

Once you get into that silence, that inner stable quietness you will find that it is not empty, but full of feeling. And the first feelings you will experience will be specifically relative to you. You will find that you are guiltless. You will find that you are feeling safe for no reason at all. The ego has to have reasons for everything. But your peace is yours for no reason at all other than that you have made a simple chose for it, rather than bouncing around on the emotional surface of the ego.

Learn to make the distinction between feelings and emotions. Feelings are the Soul’s response to that which is Real. Emotions are the ego’s reactions to what is Real. Emotions are reactions. Feelings, you could say, are the spontaneous action of Soul recognizing itself in what it sees. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj. It’s good to be back with you.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is. Greetings.

QUESTION: Greetings. My life is going to be taking a bit of a change, within the next two years I’ll be ending a twenty year career.

ANSWER: Was there something static about the twenty year career.

QUESTION: No. It’s been very enjoyable.

ANSWER: Then do not make a line of demarcation where suddenly there’s going to change. There is simply going to be a continual flow. And if you will not make that artificial distinction, you will not approach it guardedly, or carefully, or with great attempts to be in charge. And you will more naturally flow with what is nothing more than the continuing unfoldment of your Being—of your Life. Continue.

QUESTION: Yes. I don’t have as direct a communication with my guide as Paul does with you. And I was wondering if there’s any message from my guide that I need to know right now?

ANSWER: We do not have a two party line here. I do not channel other people’s guides. You will have to listen for what your guide has to share with you.

Now, this ending of a career and moving into the public sector, so to speak, is not going to be as different as you might expect. Because you have been a whole Souled individual during this career, and you will be a whole Souled individual as you move on. There will be that uninterrupted continuity of who you are, and the intelligence that you are will continue to be active as it has been.

Again, I encourage you not to make a mountain out of a mole hill here. If you will make this transition from within yourself rather than seeing it as an external change, then you will have the intelligence available to you for whatever demands arise just as you have this past week.

Let me put it in another way. Stay in your canoe. Your canoe is on the river, or flow of your Being in its process of identifying your fulfillment. Do not see this change line as a time for you to get out of your canoe and get some grounding so that you may now take charge. Stay in your canoe, and allow the current of your Being to unfold and manifest what will identify your fulfillment just as it has been for the past week, or the past ten years.

That is what you need to be aware of. And let there be a sense of joy and expectation in seeing the new fulfillment, if you will. But understand that the new fulfillment is simply an evidence of the ongoing movement of your Being called Life.

Now if you do not do this, you will brace yourself for this change. And in bracing yourself you will be less resilient, less flexible, you will be on guard. Being on guard is an act of defense. And when you are defended you seem to elicit that which calls for defense. And I am telling you that there is nothing going on here, even humanly speaking, even from an ego standpoint that could constitute a demand for defensiveness.

So I encourage you to contemplate, and embrace the idea of continuity, uninterrupted continuity. Let it be clear that your Being is unfolding it, not someone outside of yourself, not yourself personally as a little ego. And then allow the unfoldment to occur without becoming defensive against it. The resiliency, the yieldingness that you bring into play will be reflected back to you as an effortless and harmonious transition. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: You will have to keep him on his toes.

QUESTION: This is a more personal question...

ANSWER: That was a very personal question for him.

QUESTION: Oh, I'm sorry. In relationship to myself: Is there anything you can tell me about the relationship between my mother and my brother, that seems to have been troubling me for a couple of months now?

ANSWER: Have you ever tried to play tennis with someone meandering around on the court that you're playing on. Now, what I am meaning to convey here is that they are doing a little dance, a little game with each other, and you do not belong on the court at all. Not only will it serve to distract them from their game, it will arouse there antagonism, and you are likely to get hit by the ball.

Very simply, butt out! Mind your own business! This is their dance, whether it seems appropriate to you or not. You do not belong anywhere in the vicinity. Entrust them to their divinity, because at the bottom line that is what is governing them. Release them to their divinity and attend to what is your business. You are borrowing trouble, in the sense of borrowing something that is not relevant to you.

Your sense of love for them, your caring because they are family constitutes a false sense of caring. Entrusting them to their divinity, acknowledging that it is impossible for them to get outside of their divinity, does constitute love and will allow you to let them to do whatever dance they insist upon doing. And I will tell you the less interference they have from you, by means of your help and your caring, the sooner they will finish their dance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question is similar to the one two previous, about a career type change. I'm feeling what Don Juan describes as the young mans pain, and that is the need to develop some kind of career, or some kind of a direction.

And since coming to Kauai, I've gotten more in touch with realizing that it's a more truthful and serving direction, as opposed to a preconceived idea of what I should be doing. And I feel like I'm close. And I feel like I'm floating along in my canoe with the sense of continuity that you mentioned. And at the same time I don't know how to take the next step.

ANSWER: You see, that is what everyone has to deal with. You get the hang of being in your canoe, and the thought is once you get a sense of balance, that then you will be able to pick up the paddles and once again begin to provide direction. The key is to be in the canoe without any paddles—forever—so that you are constantly in this yielding state, yielding to the movement of your capital “B” Being. Because your capital “B” Being and its movement constitute the Movement of God, the Movement of Creation. Did you think that God made a career choice?

Now, from the ego standpoint it will seem as though you are becoming directionless, because you are not working with externals, you are not manipulating externals to make them take form. In going within, allowing yourself to be in the canoe without paddles, and with the willingness to release any intent to pick up the paddles, you will find structure and form manifesting in your life. You will find yourself doing something. And what you will find yourself doing will be in complete harmony with you. You will be able to see yourself in it and feel the integrity.

There will be form, but you will not be able to claim responsibility for it. And yet, because you will be able to find yourself in it, you will know you had something to do with it. And there will be peace, and there will be an absence of a false sense of responsibility. You will not have to maintain the structure. And you will be able to be in a position to let the structure dissolve, reconfigure and take new form as your Being in the Movement of Creation takes on new self-expression.

Heaven help you if you manage to get a career goal. If you get it, and if you experience any little bit of success around it, you will begin guard it. You will begin to try to maintain it. You will not allow it to change. You will not allow yourself to lose your success, and you will not be flowing with your Being.

But your Being and your canoe will continue moving forward and will become more and more incongruent with the current form that you are holding on to, and the current form will begin to dissolve in spite of you. And if you are identifying your success and your worth with that form, it will seem to you as though you are losing your worth and success.

Ultimately, you will be yanked free of the form, you will momentarily think you have failed; but you will be brought into the new form that is evolving, and you will say a miracle has happened, and you will thank the gods. And if you have prayed, you will feel that you must have prayed right. When all along the inevitable experience of fulfillment will be what was happening.

Now, I encourage you to relax even more significantly into your canoe. And watch what the Movement of your Being evolves for its identification. And understand that the identification of the Movement of your Being is fulfillment. And fulfillment means that which is recognizable fulfillment for you, because you will be able to find yourself in it; your Self, with a capital "S".

You are literally doing everything right at the moment. Don't change. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Just one more point. That's a beautiful message and I feel the truth of it. And on a day to day basis I'm tired of shoveling. You said God didn't take a career, true; but Jesus did, he was a carpenter.

ANSWER: Now permanently.

QUESTION: This is true. I do thank you.

ANSWER: It was appropriate at the moment. Find the joy in what you are doing. And don't be afraid that in finding joy in it that you will be stuck in it. Because your Being does not stop to repeat itself, it moves on. That which meets the human need in the moment is the movement of divine Love, the Movement of God. Be willing to recognize that which is Real in shoveling whatever it may be that you are shoveling, or in doing whatever it might be that you are doing.

Remember that it is always Reality that you are experiencing, whether it is a partial view of it or an expanded view of it, or a complete conscious experience of it. Find your capacity to be grateful for the meeting of the need at the moment, whether it is agreeable with your ego or not. And you will find the joy of it. And you will find yourself not stuck in it any longer than it identifies fulfillment for you.

Again, you are right where you belong. But don't make the mistake of thinking that there will not be change and reconfiguration. And do not make the mistake of thinking that you must figure out what the reconfiguration is supposed to be. Trust into your Being. You are doing this, but you are getting antsy. And your hands are furtively and somewhat out of sight feeling for the oar. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I was very please to hear you glorify the having of questions, cause you know I have a few—and that's an under statement. I'm also wanting to tell you that I'm really interested in dismantling fences or bridging them. However you want to think about that.

ANSWER: Then let me interrupt. Deal with them as you arrive at them. There is an assumption on your part that there must be dozens of fences out there in front of you. And in your enthusiasm and eagerness to wake up, you would like to tackle them all at once. Be humble enough to assume that the fence that is in front of you is the one that it is appropriate for you to deal with, and that it is one that you are perfectly capable of dealing with. And let the next one that is five miles off wait until you have owned the territory that you have gained by virtue of violating the last fence.

If you don't know what being Awake means, if you don't know what it feels like; then you do not have the means of judging what you will encounter ahead of you, and you had best take care of and be humble enough to deal with the fence that is in front of you.

Now it is important for you to understand that the territory that is within the first fence is the territory of your capital "B" Being, which is infinite, that does not appropriately have any fences on it. Nevertheless, the territory within that fence is part of your capital "B" Being, and is to be experienced and valued. It is just the fence that is artificial and imposes a false limit on you.

I encourage you not to think that the grass is greener on the other side of the hundredth fence; it's the same grass, it's the same territory of your Being that you are on right now, within, let us say, the third fence. Now watch it! That doesn't mean you have only ninety-seven to go. Because, as I said, you don't know how many there are out there. And in fact, the fences aren't the point. The point is the willingness to let yourself through the fence that is at hand; to not validate it anymore, not strengthen it.

At one point someone asked me how I moved through walls. And the answer was, I let myself through. You cannot force your way through a wall, you must allow yourself through it. It is not an act of will, but of letting.

Now it isn't the fences as much as it is the releasing of the tendency to validate the fences. And once you get the hang of letting yourself through limits that are not valid—even though your ego has convinced you that they are—that you will arrive at a point that even if there are fifty more fences, because you have allowed yourself through the fence, you have gotten a hang of yielding.

You see, you are not to go through a fence and chalk one up for yourself, so that when you have chalked up ten you can really feel like you have made progress. Because in so doing you are validating the ego, you are validating fences—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten. “Ten fences. I made my way through ten illusions. Ten! You know how well I’ve done? I do, I’m getting pretty good at it.”

It isn’t the success at dealing with this particular illusion or that particular illusion, it is the act of willingness on your part to be disobedient to a limitation that the ego has imposed upon you, by not fighting it, but by yielding to what is actually your inheritance. It is your inheritance to have the whole land completely available to you because you are the totality of it.

The ego has your totality partitioned off. And in your learning not to honor and validate the limit, the limit that’s right in front of you; so that you may experience where you are, the divinity of where you are, the divinity of who you are at this very moment; that is the success.

The illusion was an illusion. It was just a partial experience of you in your totality. And so as you yield to you the apparent fence becomes clearly invalid. And nothing has been surmounted, nothing has been overcome, you have simply let go of a belief structure that you had judged to be valid when it was not.

Now why am I saying this? I am saying this so that you might begin to appreciate and validate where you are, and not worry about the hundred fences that are ahead of you. Because as you come more into the now, into the present, into the here, and find the reality of here and now; the quicker the illusion of multiple fences will fade completely.

If you are sitting at this moment in the very, very middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and your eyes are all squinted up and you are saying, “I cannot see the perfection. How can I get to the Kingdom of Heaven?” I could not answer you in the way that you have asked, because you are there. I would have to say, “Open your eyes.” But that is not what you were expecting. You were wanting to know how to get over the hurdles, with some expectancy even of satisfaction from overcoming the hurdles.

Let yourself be here and now in this beautiful place, or wherever you might find yourself, and practice letting go. And whatever limit you find yourself faced with let go and let yourself through. In letting go, instead of fighting the fence, you will find being uncovered in your awareness whatever the falsehoods are of your belief structures that are constituting the fence. You’ll see their nonsensical, silly nature, and you’ll be able to say, “My goodness, I can’t believe that anymore.” And you will relax some more. And there will not have been a struggle, just a realization, “I don’t have to believe that. I don’t have to be bound by that. That wasn’t legitimate.”

And what I have said is not too simple, it’s just that it doesn’t within itself imply the kind of profound, meaningful success that knocking down fences does. The willingness to violate the ego, to not honor its suggestions of guilt and penalty, because something in you desires to let go into your Being, with a capital “B”, to let go into the Will of the Father, is what is really happening when you seem to make a breakthrough. And what you seem to have broken through becomes irrelevant.

Remember again, that a fence constitutes a defense against your experiencing yourself in your wholeness. And the way you break through the fence is by disregarding it—being a naughty little boy and climbing over the fence, even though mother ego has told you you will be punished, and enjoying the larger territory of your Being, even though mother ego calls from the other side of the fence and says, “God will get you for that.” That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well, I haven’t asked the question yet. My question is about faith. And what you just said evokes a lot of things for me to say, but I won’t say them.

ANSWER: Say a couple of them.

QUESTION: One of them is I’d like to kick the shit out of the ego, I’m not really interested in the ego. I’d like to be gone with that.

ANSWER: The ego would love you to kick the shit out of it also. Because that is what will keep it alive. You must get this point: A direct attack on the ego, energizes the ego. The only thing the ego cannot defend itself against, is disregard. When you withdraw your attention from it, positive or negative, and you are giving your attention to experiencing the congruence of your Being, to experiencing your peace; it cannot defend itself and its structures begin to dissolve. And you find yourself experiencing healing, or breakthrough, or a new job opportunity, or the recovery of something that is lost, etc. Why? Because you successfully attacked the ego? No. Because you turned your back on it. You put it in second place, and you put yourself in the first place, and your peace in the first place.

Now watch it, because the ego is what would like to kick the shit out of itself. Do you understand what I mean?

QUESTION: Absolutely.

ANSWER: It is the ego that expressed that comment. Your Being knows there is nothing there to kick anything called shit out of.

Now, what is the ego? The ego is a partial view of your individuality. The ego is a little bit of what you divinely are, taking itself to be All That There Is. So you better be careful of who you’re going to kick the shit out of. You will find that it will be your very own foot that will kick you in your very own derriere, and then you will say, “See, I knew I needed to be defended. See, the world is against me.”

All you are ever stubbing your toe against is Reality. But you stub your toe against Reality because you want to look at it through such squinted eyes that you cannot see clearly enough to know what to avoid.

Your problems are always your perfection going beyond what you are willing to consider to be your perfection. It is always your fulfillment going beyond your limited concept of what fulfillment ought to be. And you had better realize that you do defend yourself against your good. And I am not aiming that just at you, every single one of you are not experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven, because you are defending yourself against it. “I haven’t done this. I’m not worthy. I don’t have enough money. That would be too good to be true.”

So let us be clear about the ego. The ego is not something that is a little ball of pure illusion, pure falsity in the middle of an infinite and ever present God. If God is infinite, where is this ego going to reside? Where can it go to be? The ego is a small circumscribed part of the totality of what you are, considering itself to be All There Is.

Now, I want to make this very clear. If you will imagine a sphere, a hollow sphere, and on the outside of this sphere, this shell, is the totality of what you are as the presence of God Being All There Is. And what is on the inside of this sphere is the rest of this totality. Then what is inside the sphere is not false. But the sphere is, because it seems to separate a totality into an inside and an outside—a disintegrated wholeness.

The shell, the spherical shell is constituted of beliefs based upon partial knowledge that is treated as though it is complete knowledge. And so when you get rid of the ego, you are getting rid of belief structures that seem to cause a little gap between who you are experiencing yourself to be and who you divinely are.

And the way that that shell becomes dissolved is by not kicking against it, and rather going within, into the quietness of your Being where you have half a chance of remembering Home, remembering Reality, remembering your Christhood, remembering who you are. And that who you are is God being All There Is.

And I do not mean by that that you are God being All There Is, I mean that God Being All There Is is all there is to You. And since God does not divide Himself up into little parts, then you must be All That God Is in the act of being what God Is, which is the Movement of Creation. But this You that is what God is Being, is not limited, and has no personal private little sense of self, and you find yourself to be the God Consciousness, if I may put it that way, properly put in this setting it is called the Christ consciousness. But the Christ Consciousness is God’s perception of Himself/Herself, and denominating what is seen as very good. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question it goes to the issue of faith. And it seems that in recent months I've had an opportunity to be in faith. And one of the manifestations of that was, I was reading the Course, and other things, probably some of your comments about healing.

I've had high blood pressure for about ten years, and recently it jumped up to what would be considered an unhealthy level. And I thought simultaneous with this reading that, well, this would be a good place to have faith. And so I thought well I'll just throw the blood pressure medicine away, and I'll just believe that my blood pressures down.

And I'm paraphrasing now, I'll just disavow this unhealthy state. And I can generally tell when my blood pressures up. And so I went in this state for a few days and I said, "well, you know, this is the way it is." And so I went to the machine, which may be an act of nonfaith, and it said that it was at extremely unhealthy levels.

And I went to a friend, whose the doctor, and he said, "well, maybe good sense would say go back to the medicine." And I said, "Well, okay, now I'm conflicted." And I really am perfectly willing to throw the medicine away and say, "I'm not going to have high blood pressure." I'm fully capable of doing that.

ANSWER: But why are you make the distinction that says, or does not allow you to say, "The blood pressure medicine is divine love registering with me in language of my present perception, and thereby meeting my need at the moment, whether it is an ultimate form of the meeting of the need or not." Why must you make an example of this?

QUESTION: Because I'm trying to create a way to gage faith. I recognize what I'm doing, because I'd like some emphasis so that I'll know in those other areas where I don't have such an obvious way to measure it that its working.

ANSWER: You want to be in charge of your Awakening. But you see, you already are what you want to become. You may not be experiencing it consciously at the moment. But if you do not start from the standpoint of your already being what you want to wake up into, then you will need measures and gages, you will need to study, you will need to go through processes of becoming worthy, etc. But you are already sitting in the middle of the Kingdom, and you are already the Christ, you are already nothing more and nothing less than the direct expression of God. And you must let yourself into that experience. You cannot work yourself into it. You cannot measure yourself into it.

Now there is too much control here. I said that waking up was effortless. To become effortless is experienced as becoming humble, except that when you are coming from an ego place it's called being humiliated. As the ego is humiliated, who you genuinely are in your humility begins to be able to register with you and everyone else. And you become easy with yourself and with others. You become easy with your problems. And you become easy with your successes, easy with your good. And there is an evenness to you. And in that evenness there is the clearer experience of your invulnerability, and with that an absence of fear. And with the absence of fear a more normal physical function—a reduction of high blood pressure or whatever.

But struggle will not do it. And having measuring sticks to measure or calculate how much of the struggle you have accomplished, or whether you are managing to be effectively in control on a spiritual basis, will not do it. You cannot be in control on a spiritual basis. Do you realize that God is not in control? God is Being. And because of the indivisible nature of God, and the fact that God is intelligence, innate intelligence, and principle; the movement of what God is is flawless, and expresses absolute harmony, which you would call order. But God isn't controlling anything. There is no need for control unless there is chaos, unless there is division and separation.

Now you are beginning to grasp what I am saying. There won't be anything satisfying about the process I'm telling you about, because it won't be anything you are doing. It will be what I have called an undoing, like the "uncola." I do not mean undoing of something, it is a not doing. And when the not doing is engaged in, allowed, and you begin to feel the influx of the clearer experience of who you are, you will not be able to say, "Look what I have done."

As you allow yourself to open your eyes up wider to see the Kingdom of Heaven that you are in, you will not have a sense of accomplishment, but a sense of peace and of being you without having to earn a thing. You don't have to earn your way, you don't have to reason your way, you don't have to think your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. But you have to dare to have enough trust to release the doing. You must entrust yourself to the Father. There is no other way to put it. You must say, "Thy Will be done."

There is only one right use of will, and that is to choose not to use it. I want you to think about what I've said. No, I do not want you to think about it, I want you to feel what I have said, just abide with whatever feeling is there. Because in doing that more of the meaning will begin to emerge. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I profoundly thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, thank you for letting me come here, I feel very blessed that I'm able to experience you, and later on I have the chance to talk with you in an interview and with you more personally.

I've been listening this morning to the canoe. And I feel that in my life I'm in the canoe and I'm not using the paddle. And I think I'm fighting with it, because sometimes I'm with a paddle and sometimes I'm without the paddle. But basically I feel that I'm in the canoe and I'm floating around and I'm doing things. And it's very scary sometimes. I found the financial part of it very scary. I feel sometimes very vulnerable, very... I don't know, just out there.

And I know that I'm guided. I know I'm doing the right work. I've asked guidance many, many times, shall I stop at the store, shall I do something else, get a job and work, pay the bills and all this. But So I know that this is all in divine order, but it scares me. And I know that my needs are met, as you brought forth in your six months and in other six months. And I know that I only want to do God's Work, or the work of the Light. And maybe I have something to go with that.

ANSWER: First of all be very patient with yourself. Yes, sometimes you pick the paddle up and yes, sometimes you put it down. And you are not as consistent as you would like to be. But it's all right. You don't have to do it perfect. But let the intent be there to as consistently as possible allow the Movement of your Being carry you.

Now when you are feeling vulnerable you are viewing your experience from the ego's frame of reference. Understand that the ego is an assumption to presence. It is not an actual presence. It assumes to presence, it pretends to be present. It therefore, is always vulnerable to the enlightened discovery that it has no existence at all.

And so it is always fearful of being discerned for what it is. And so whenever you are viewing life through the lens of the ego you will always experience fear and vulnerability and the need for defensiveness. Not because anything is calling for it in your environment, but because the ego cannot experience its supposed existence in any other way.

So when you feel this vulnerability, you may know that it is a call for becoming centered again, it is a call for connecting with your peace. When that happens stop dead in your tracks, and take time to become still and access your peace again, because that is where you will find no call for defense, you will feel your integrity.

Now I will tell you something else: At the same time that you feel this vulnerability you also feel right along side it a clear and seemingly irrational feeling that you are doing exactly what you are supposed to be doing. That is coming from your Being.

Now, generally, and I am addressing this to the whole group. When you inquire of your deepest most centered knowing whether a thing is appropriate or not, you will get either a "yes" or a "no" answer. In other words, the answer will not always be "yes." But when the answer is "no" it will not be accompanied with fear, it will be accompanied with peace. It will simply be clear that it is not appropriate.

So do not assume that if you are experiencing fear that this is somehow your Being at a very instinctive level telling you that it is not appropriate. Because when you gather the facts from the level of your Being, the affirmative or negative answer, which will express a truth that is in harmony with your Being will be accompanied with peace and assurance, not fear. That is an important distinction.

Now continue to pay attention to the peaceful, unworried knowing that you experience about your path. You are being true to your capital “S” Self. You are right where you belong for the identification of fulfillment. I do not mean that you are right where you belong for “your learning.” You will not help but learn, but you are right where you belong for the identification for your fulfillment. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I’m real happy to be here as well. And I’m going through a lot of changes as the rest of us are. And I feel like it’s a seven year cycle, where every aspect of my life is in change. And getting in touch with what it feels like to let go, and without letting go, and feeling the pain when there’s resistance and the fear, and wanting to move into a greater sense of peace and movement. And feeling like, how do you get past the fence when you’re in that state? And I understand the principles...

ANSWER: I will tell you something: You get through the fence as gracefully as you are able under the circumstances. And if you pay attention as you express this disobedience—this disobedience to the ego’s suggestion that this is an actual limit—and you find the reward, so to speak, the breakthrough, the resolution; if you have paid attention through this process, which as you are aware sometimes happens with great slow motion, you will find that when you come to the next fence you will be more ready for it. And your movement through it will be more graceful.

You will recognize that the ego’s bluffs are just that, bluffs, and that they do not need to be validated, they do not need to be honored. And its threats of punishment, or insanity, or whatever bag of tricks it uses, will not hook you.

So pay attention as you move through your boundaries. There will be subsequent boundaries for a time. In paying attention from beginning to end you will be more ready for the next boundary.

Now it is important for you to understand that there will be other limitations that you will be confronted by. Because the joy of moving through a boundary can sometimes cause you to think that you have made it. And when you come to the next boundary, which is always a more subtle boundary—a more subtle ego expression of ignorance—it is possible to feel like you are back to square one, as though you have lost ground. And this is not the case. It is just that the ego at a subtler level of operation is ready for you to move through, or I will put it this way, you are ready to move through a subtler level of operation of the ego.

Because the ego is not original, the second boundary will seem very much like the first, except that you have had some experience in moving through. And thus, each successive boundary will be easier to move through with more grace. Continue.

QUESTION: I think I have a lot more to offer than what I'm already doing in my work and being of service. And I know part of me wants to extend myself, challenge myself out there. And yet I'm still held back, like, as you expressed with yourself. And so I come into a frustration with my own ego.

ANSWER: When you are trying to be more than you are, when you are trying to do more, when you are trying period, it is as though you become firm, dense.

Now I want you to imagine that you if you were standing up as a very definite figure and presence, I want you to imagine that this figure is made of silly putty. As you know, if you take a piece of silly putty, it relaxes if you set it on a surface and spr-e-a-ds out. If you want to be more, if you want to accomplish more, if you want to reach more people, what is called for is letting go, relaxing, letting go of the effort, letting go of the trying. You see you are already whole, but your wholeness is lost to you when you are so busy trying to be better, or trying to be more.

Now it is going to get very monotonous this weekend, because we are going to be talking about letting go in many of its ramifications, not because I have decided this is what we are going to talk about it, but because all of you have decided that this is the boundary you are at, and this is the answer.

Now, if you want to touch more people, you have to become more comfortable with yourself, less defended, less careful, less cautious. And this is going to mean loving yourself, accepting yourself just as you are. But you say, "I've got so much to learn. There's so much I don't know." Yes, but there is so much that you do know, and there is so much clarity that you do have that is more than another has. What you call not being as enlightened as you would like to be, constitutes mind-boggling enlightenment to another who is not even experiencing the clarity that you are experiencing.

And I will tell you something: When you learn to just love yourself right where you are, whether you could be more or not, when you don't apologize for yourself and you just be present with love, you will touch others. You will be like the silly putty that relaxes, and spreads out, and touches more, and has a broader base, and more stability.

If indeed, you want to serve others then accept yourself, and love yourself, and arrive at a point where you feel no need to apologize for being you to anybody. Then your very presence at whatever degree of intellectual awareness or enlightenment you are, everyone will be touched by you. And you know what they'll say, "It's so easy to like myself when I'm around you." That's what people want. They want to be able to like themselves.

And when you are liking yourself, you are not being defensive, and others don't feel a need to be guarded around you because of your defensiveness. And it sets an example, and it allows them to relax also. And in their relaxing—like the silly putty—they come in to a better experience of their stability and their invulnerability.

You don't have to become more than you are to touch others. Just let yourself be fully where you are and fully who you experience yourself to be at this moment without apology, and without judgment upon yourself, without self-criticism. Just love yourself.

You are enjoined to love your brother as yourself, and that indeed is the order, as yourself love your brother. When you are loving yourself and you become defenseless, all that your brother or sister truly is is able to register with you, because you do not have a shield up against them. And when you are being defenseless against another and letting in the experience of them, they will say to you that they feel touched by you, even though all you have done is to let them in.

It is a trite phrase, it is used so much because it is the truth and it needs to be said until you finally hear what it really means—Love Yourself—refrain from indulging in self-criticism, begin to consciously appreciate yourself.

There are a number of you in the group today who spend a great part of your conscious thinking time in self-depreciation. "Boy, I was stupid today. Boy, what a nerd I am. Boy, I did a lousy job on that." Well, that isn't all that you did this day. There are things that you did do well. And I would encourage you to begin to magnify what you are doing well, rather than magnifying what may need improvement, and then using that short-coming as justification for feeling worthless, or feeling as though you are a sinner, or feeling that you are falling short because there is a fundamental flaw in you.

It doesn't seem reasonable to appreciate yourself unconditionally, but that's just because of your conditioning. You are the direct expression of God at this very moment, nothing more and nothing less. And you are worthy of loving yourself, and acknowledging the good that you are embodying. And it is not unreasonable. And the short-comings that you do need to do something about, the things that do need correction do not constitute an actual undermining of what you divinely are. And therefore, they do not constitute something for which you have to pay a penalty before you can dare to appreciate and love yourself.

You must start doing this irrational thing called loving yourself, without justification, just because. And this is what will allow you to take a deep breath, and sigh a sigh of relief, and let all of this self-improvement that you must engage in slip from your shoulders—self-improvement that must occur before you will give yourself permission to love yourself.

The ego is incapable of telling the truth. It is a liar, and the father of the lie. Therefore, it will tell you that you are not the son or daughter of God. It will tell you that you must earn your divinity—your wings if you will. And that you had better engage in the suffering that is due to one who is not divine. It is not telling the truth.

And whether you have been unloving, whether you have gotten ill, whether you have apparently harmed another, whether you have been loving to yourself or not, you must be willing to acknowledge that in spite of that the truth is that you are the direct expression of the Father at this very instant, nothing more or nothing less. That it is impossible for you except in your imagination to be something that God is not being.

And then on that basis love yourself, and begin to own that loveableness, embrace it, embody it, and you will feel your peace. And you will dare to feel it when you are around others. And without even trying to do anything for them, your very presence will be an inspiration, and will allow them, as I said, to say, “When I’m around you I’m able to like myself better. It is so wonderful to be with you.” And you will feel that they have been touched, and you will have been touched. Not because you stood tall, not because you became something more, but because you loved yourself on the spot, you loved yourself as you are at the moment.

It is a shame, the ego suggests that if you love yourself as you are, that that will constitute self-satisfaction. And that is an evil thing, because if you indulge in self-satisfaction you will surely never grow again. You will just move into a state of monotonous, unchangeableness. But I will tell you something, like the silly putty as it relaxes and forms a pool of silly putty, you will feel an influx of vitality because you are not defended against it, there isn’t enough ego structure to keep it out.

When you start loving yourself you start feeling energized, you start feeling like doing something, and you can feel the motivation to do it. It is when you are all up tight, trying so hard that you become depressed, frustrated, tired out; because you are defended against your peace, you are defended against self-acceptance. And when I say Self-acceptance I am speaking of Self with a capital “S”. And remember that the small “s” self is the capital “S” Self seen partially, in a limited way.

So don’t deny your small “s”, but don’t continue to embrace it as though it’s all there is of you. And then become yielding enough—like the silly putty—to let the greater experience of who you divinely are begin to register with you. That is what will happen.

But in the meantime, in your loving yourself right where you are and refraining from criticizing yourself, you will find that others will love to be around you and will flock to be with you. And you will feel very popular, and yet you will not be able to explain why. You will not be anymore educated than you are right now. Nothing special will have happened to you as a result of any effort on your part. It will happen because you're being genuinely you.

And in the humility and humbleness of genuinely being you at the moment with self-appreciation, you will find the you that you truly are emerging more vitally and transforming you and broadening your experience of Reality. But you see that will be a side-effect, a result of loving yourself.

These days everyone is looking for a more potent truth. "Well, I've known this truth, and there's been some good results from it, but it isn't quite enough. I need a more potent truth." And so you'll run to some other teacher who has a more potent truth, something more stimulating.

I will tell you something, there is no more potent truth than the statement "Love yourself." And you can seek and seek for teachers who will give you something more potent, but if indeed they are in tune with Reality, they will have to tell you the same thing. And you will finally be left with having to do it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm physically feeling fragile, and when that happens it feels like the flood gates come down and the ego just comes in very strongly.

ANSWER: You mean physically fragile?

QUESTION: Yea, and then it effects me emotionally as well as spiritually. So I'd like some feedback on what's going on, and it just feels like a struggle that I'm very tired of.

ANSWER: You are not trusting your body. You are not trusting that it has any innate intelligence at all. You are not trusting that it reflects the divine intelligence of that which formed it. The minute you withdraw trust, you bring into play defense, fear. And in effect that constitutes an attack on your body. You only distrust a potential enemy. You only defend yourself against something which seems to have proven itself to be an enemy.

And so when you withdraw a fundamental trust in the divinity of that which appears, you have moved into an attack mode. And of course, you experience feeling vulnerable. But the attack is coming from you by virtue of your own doubt, your own lack of trust.

Now, your body is either one of two things. It is either the visibility and tangibility of your individuality, which is God derived. Or it is a body of ideas and beliefs entertained by the ego, which causes the body to become the defense against the experience of God. Your body is either being misused as a defense mechanism, or it is being experienced truly as the visibility and tangibility of your individuality.

Whether it is being experienced truly, or whether it is being misused as a defense against experiencing the truth, it always remains what it is—the visibility and tangibility

Now you must begin to define your body in a new way, and make peace with it, rather than being frightened of it, rather than wondering what it is going to do to you next because after all it is an “illusion.” And an illusion is undependable, and you of course have seen how wretchedly so many others have experienced their body, and therefore what better can you expect.

But I will tell you something: As you forgive your body, as you withdraw the criticism, as you withdraw the demeaning of it and begin to embrace it as that which identifies the presence of your individuality and love it for its divine purpose; the feeling of vulnerability will leave, and the emotions associated with it will leave. And you will not only feel better, but you will feel a vigor and strength physically, a sense of invulnerability physically. But you must embrace your body with love.

Now for a point of clarification: If your body seems to be manifesting illness, or injury, or blemish, or pain; you do not love the pain, and the blemish, and the injury, and the illness; you love the body for its divine intent. And its intent is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. You do not allow the disease, or the injury, or the blemish to cause you to withdraw your expectancy of seeing perfection. You do not allow them to cause you to withdraw your appreciation of what the bodies intent is. You are experiencing the problem because at some point you withdrew the love.

Now I’m also going to be extremely clear here. Your bodies as you are experiencing them presently, are not the way they really are in actuality. You do not have dense organic bodies. At this very instant every single one of you is illuminating this tent, if you will, and the surrounding area greatly, because your bodies are bodies of light—and the substance of that light is living Love. That is the fact at this very instant.

I am pointing this out to you because the ultimate experience of body is not something you will have to grow into, it’s something that you will have to open up your eyes to. It’s not off in the future. Your experience of perfection is not off in the distance.

But you are not going to be able to get past the partial experience of body, the limited experience of body, if you look at it and you say, “This is what it is. It’s nothing more. It is an organism. It is the result of eons of evolution. It is physical. It springs into existence, and it dies and that’s all there is to it.” If you are convinced that that is what it is then you will not be looking for regeneration, you will not be looking for healing, it will not be a reasonable assumption that such a thing would happen except as a fluke. And so the perfection, the divinity of your being and that which identifies it will continue to escape you.

As I said earlier, illusion is truth partially seen. It isn't something sitting off in it's own right. And yes, at the moment you are experiencing a deluded sense of body, because you are not experiencing and feeling the Body of Light, the substance of which is Living Love that is actually going on. And you will not experience it as that unless you begin to open up to it.

And so there are two steps that have to occur. First of all you have to be willing to say, "I am not seeing truly." And then you have to say, "But, what is truly here to be seen is available to me and I desire to experience it." And if you desire to experience it, that's the first step of loving yourself, the first step of being willing to see what is divinely Real right here where the illusion, the limited perception of truth is your whole experience.

And so again, it is a yielding to Reality that results in healing, because there is a desire to see and experience beyond your present sense of sight. You do not remain satisfied with the way you are seeing things, but your dissatisfaction with your way of seeing things does not become a justification for not loving yourself, it simply serves as the trigger to your desire to see things more clearly.

Every single thing you see, every single form you see is an expression of meaning conceived in the Mind of the Father. And as you become undefended against the divine meaning of your body, it will begin to unfold to you, and you will not find yourself stuck with an aging, or diseased, or dying body; but one which is evidencing more and more of what is really present—more and more of the meaning that the Father has expressed as your individuality.

God unidentified is nonexistent. And so be careful how much effort you put toward getting rid of the manifestation. But if your perception of the manifestation is incomplete, don't be satisfied with the appearance, go for full clarity. If God is the Source and condition of your individuality and it is your bodies intent to render that individuality visible and tangible to consciousness, then your bodies intent is to identify the presence of God. And that is the truth.

It is not its intent to be blemished, or injured, or sick, or maimed, or dying. But you can manage to "create" the manifestations of illness by not trusting this divine event called the body, and this divine intent called the body, and by engaging in constant fear of what it is going to do next, and by calling it material as opposed to spiritual and therefore unlike God, and therefore as an impediment to your spiritual growth.

These are all ways in which you attack your body. These are all ways in which you undermine your capacity to experience the divine Reality that is right here. It is not comfortable to attack yourself. It is not comfortable to hold yourself in a state of subjection to the absence of love.

I am not telling you to love the illusion, I am telling you to love beyond the illusion into the fuller experience of what is truly there, the fuller experience of Reality.

If it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly, then when you refrain from judging it negatively, you will find your health, and your stability, and your invulnerability, and your vigor, and your vitality superseding the negative experience, replacing it.

Many of you are aware of the idea that it is not so much a practice of faith, as it is releasing the practice of faithlessness that is necessary. It is not so much that you have to change your body, or heal your body, as it is to become defenseless against its natural intent to identify you perfectly. Withdraw the hate, withdraw the depreciation of it, withdraw the value judgment that says, “it is material, unlike God, therefore unlovable, therefore something to be risen above,” and you will open the flood gates of healing and transformation and the slipping from your eyes of the scales that keep you from seeing the Body of Light that is yours, and actually the body of every single form that exists. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have another question. It hasn’t felt to me like the problem was that I don’t see my body as divine, but more that I don’t honor always—honor myself. I go beyond my energy level, and that seems to gets me into trouble.

ANSWER: But why do you go beyond your energy level? If you do not think that you mind is superior to your body, why are you unwilling to be congruent and integrated? It is because there is a sense that you are not to be governed by your body, because it is a lesser thing, a more base thing, a more material thing, a less spiritual thing than your mind. You get the point?

QUESTION: Uh-huh, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Okay, I’m really happy to be here, Raj. And I am experiencing myself in a little different place than I usually do when I come to talk with you. Because it seems like when I walked out of my apartment door something happened to me and everything left me that I was troubled about. So I’ve been in a wonderful place of peace and fulfillment and enjoyment, but which has been growing more gradually over the last few months anyway.

And I have some critical decisions to make in my life. And the way it happens for me is, that when these things come for my consideration my mind gets dusty. It’s just like somebody blew dust so that I can’t put one, two, three things together. And so I would like you to assist me to see beyond what I can now see.

ANSWER: We will take care of that part first. Whenever you are listening for clarity on an issue which has great meaning, or great consequences, it becomes more difficult to hear because you place unnecessary importance upon the answer—you become tense. If the issue is a complex issue, the suggestion is that the answer will be a complex answer. And if indeed the answer is as complex as the problem is, you probably won't be able to understand the answer, and so you become tense.

I will tell you: If you wish to experience clarity, and there is a dustiness, or a vagueness, or a haze of some sort that comes into play it is a call for becoming even more significantly at peace.

Now the ego under these circumstances will tell you that you do not have time to become clear, that you must have your answer right now, and therefore you had best depend upon your best judgment. But the universe is not testing you. The universe, life itself, is not testing any of you. And you are never being put in a position where it is more important to act without clarity than to take the time to become still and get clear.

And so you must challenge this bluff of the egos, release the validation of a sense of deadline, or urgency, and choose for your peace—let go of the anxiety, let go of the urgency, and let yourself into your peace. And then from within the framework of that peace listen for the answer.

Now I have said it before, answers are always simplifying. Answers are always easier than anything you are expecting, so drop your expectation, and be open to that which is simpler than what you are expecting. Simplicity is the key note of Being, with a capital "B". It is the false sense of urgency, of deadline, of there being a test which you can either fail or pass that blocks your ability to be clear, to hear clearly, to experience the guidance.

Again this is one of those simple answers that you cannot find a more potent truth to replace.

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. He's wanting me to share: We had a workshop almost two years ago now in Orlando, Florida. Two days before, three days before we were to catch the plane I got an abscessed tooth, and my jaw was out to here. And I was in such discomfort, I mean I was about five feet from the phone, ready to reach for it to call a dentist to see if he could please meet me immediately and pull the tooth out.

And Raj says, "Do a meditation." This is one of those time that I didn't appreciate him. So I went over to the couch and sat down right on the edge. I mean I was that ready to go for the phone. I was going to meditate, you know, not with much peace.

Anyway I did do the meditation, and I did get centered. And I only meditated for about ten minutes before all of the pain was gone, I mean I was completely free of pain. Then I sat back in the couch, and I just stayed there. I finally just laid down, I mean my face was still tight, but there was no pain. And it was like a matter of a half an hour or forty minutes before it opened and drained. And that was the end of it, and we were able to go on the trip.

But it was for me having come from a Christian Science metaphysical background, where you did metaphysical work for healing, to not go through a specific thought process to experience the healing, but to let go into my peace to get centered to experience healing was a pretty dramatic experience for me.

And that was a situation where there seemed to be a great deal of urgency as far as I was concerned, because I wanted to be rid of the pain. And it did not seem at all reasonable to think that I could meditate and become centered under those circumstances. But I found a place where I was able to be willing to do it and that was my experience.

Afterwards then I asked him what was going on, and he pointed out to me that I had been angry with him for a number of days. Because we were supposed to go and do two workshops and in one workshop we only had two people register, and then the other workshop we had fifteen people, which wouldn't nearly cover the expense of the trip and lodging and so on. And it was like my intelligence said, "don't go on this trip, there's nothing to justifying going, I mean it doesn't express any common sense."

But Raj kept saying, "It is appropriate to go. You'll have thirty-five people at one, and you'll have approximately twenty-five people at the other." And I'm saying, "it's two days before we leave, if they were really interested they would have said something." And I was mad at him for putting me in what I felt was a vulnerable position.

And so I could see that yes I was angry with him, and that the harboring of the anger is what had manifested this way. And I was able to release all of that and we went and indeed there were thirty-five at one and twenty-five at the other.

And so anyway he wanted that shared in light of the question and the answer that he had given.

QUESTION: Oh, well, it's interesting that you say that because one of my dilemmas at this time is that I've sent out a number of brochures for educational classes and therapist training, and I have had very little response. And I feel very closely and dearly to my heart that this work is fine and everyone who has done it has acknowledged it as such. So I'm at this point wondering what my next step is as far as marketing this program. And you told me, Raj, sometime ago that I would come into some money in August of this year, which I desperately will need to do this. And I need some answers my dear.

ANSWER: These things we will take care of at another time. But insist upon letting go more, relaxing more in your process of listening. And when you are listening listen for a feeling as much as specific words. And trust the peaceful, calm clarity, or affirmative feeling or negative feeling in the sense of a no, honor that, even if there is not a great deal of elaboration.

The point is to let yourself into the experience of trusting more significantly. And trusting more significantly means letting go of the conscious need for understanding and explanation and for reasoning the thing out yourself. Trusting is letting go of that, so that there is, you might say, room for the clarification to fill. The call is always for doing less, finding that indeed there is a greater level of peace available to you than you have ever experienced before. And out of that peace you will find the crystal clarity that you need in terms of specific answers. And it is time for you to depend upon this more and lean into it more.

Everything is going well, the aspects are falling into place and will be manifesting at the level of conscious awareness for you. And you will not be at a loss. But I encourage you to release the sense of demanding clarity when you think you have to have it. The clarity will be there in its absolutely appropriate timing. And you can dare to assume that if you do not have it yet, it is not yet timely, it is not yet needed, even though your ego will argue and give you ten reasons or me ten reasons why it ought to be had now.

I am telling you that you are not off track, and everything is in its order. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask a "yes" or "no" question. I'm looking at office space in Point Richmond right across the street from the Fire Department. I don't know the address. Does that seem like an appropriate place for my office?

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm looking for a definition for schizophrenia. Not a clinical definition as we know it in this third-dimension, but sort of a higher conscious definition.

My mother has been suffering from this condition for many, many years. And in my attempts to see her as whole and complete... Well, I still try and see her as whole and complete, I do see her as whole and complete, except I guess really there's a part of me that doesn't. Because when I see her acting out, or doing things like throwing garbage on the neighbors lawn, or telling me she's having a heart attack, or saying my brother is the replacement for the Ayatollah Khomeini, I mean these kinds of things I can't accept, and my mind sees her as being unhealthy.

And I really don't know of a healthy way to be of service to her and to help her other than just to love her just the way she is. And I wonder if there's something on a more physical plane, level that I can do? I guess that's about it.

ANSWER: Schizophrenia is an extreme form of what I will call ego-i-tice, a severe form of dissociation, of separation.

You see, what we will call the "normal" ego state is one in which your sense of your identity is private and personal, different from every other person and different from every other thing. You do not experience your unity with everything, but you are able to experience the relatedness of things. Your experience is not divided up into many compartments of unassociated things.

But with schizophrenia one's whole experience is compartmentalized, separated off from other things, so that relationships are not spontaneously recognized, and associations between them, between things cannot be perceived. As a result, comments are made that make perfect sense to the schizophrenic, which make no sense to anyone else who sees relationships, where the schizophrenic is talking as though those relationships do not exist.

Now, the necessity here is to be as consistent as you can be in acknowledging that your mother's individuality is, as I said earlier, God derived. That she is the current expression of a current and living Life Principle or Father. That the Father is being her flawlessly at this instant. And that the face and behavior that she presents to the world is caused by a very partial and fragmented perception of All That Is. This fragmented perception is an imposition upon her capacity to experience herself and her world wholly, w-h-o-l-l-y.

This is true for everyone else as well. The ego and its concepts constitutes an imposition upon your discernment of the unity of All That Is and its absolutely divine nature.

Now, we have taken care of your part, in that we are having you acknowledge the truth about her. Now the second thing you must do is entrust her to her divinity. You must remember that what you are in your totality is always present, always completely active. And then there is this little segmented part that you call the self, with the small "s", that takes itself as all there is to reality.

Well, this isolated, tiny, little self-sense is existing right in the middle of the totality of what you are. And the totality of what you are and what your mother is continues constantly to function wholly. And because it does and because it embraces this tiny separated sense of self, the shell of ego structures is constantly being broken down. That is why the ego is so busy building it up again.

The intent of the totality of you to experience its integrity without obstruction is constant and is dominant, therefore if you entrust your mother to her divinity, to her totality, you will be joining with her at the level of what she divinely is, instead of joining with her at the level of her fragmented sense of herself.

As a result of withdrawing your joining with the fragmented sense of her, you will weaken that fragmented sense. And by joining with her at the level of what she divinely is, by entrusting her to it, you will strengthen it in the sense of providing the environment of love in which it will be easier for her to yield to what she divinely is, because she's not getting support on the side of her fragmented sense of everything.

So you acknowledge the truth about her, and you entrust her to her divinity. Those two things are the most significant things you can do to facilitate her healing. Be alert when you find yourself accepting the picture: You can see that something is going on that doesn't manifest intelligence, but you don't have to agree with it. You don't have to say, "Well, that's just the way it is." You can acknowledge that this is the way it appears to be, but there is more to her than is meeting the eye, and your desire to see it, your willingness to acknowledge it and your willingness to entrust her to it what will be what you can contribute to her healing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have one more part to that question. She's currently living in her own house, and she drives her own car, and she's functioning at a fairly normal level as far as her physical activities are concerned. But our family is becoming concerned that she may do something to unconsciously hurt herself. For example: She's just started smoking cigarettes, and she's just started drinking about three years ago. And we're concerned she may burn the house down, or do something like this.

My immediate feeling is to rescue her, to step in and ask her to live with me, or to put her in a sanitarium of some sort, or to do something to protect her from her own self. But I wonder how you feel about that, and what you have to say on that?

ANSWER: I encourage you for the time being to take the approach that I have just described, and not take any outward actions to change the picture. I also encourage you not to take on a false sense of personal responsibility. To the degree that you want to take action you are not entrusting her to her divinity, you are more willing to entrust her to either your best judgment, or what you think your divinity is saying. And that reinforces her, shall I say, victimized sense of life. And this is not the path to healing and regeneration.

There is no call for action to be take at the present time, other than those actions which I just described. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, that's been really helpful for me.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I'm going to share with everyone, relative to this sense of responsibility of a loved one or mankind in general, it is something that I told Paul early on: It may be your purpose to serve, but you are not supposed to be the main dish. And I say this because you must be alert to see that in your process of serving, of loving others, that you do not sacrifice yourself in the process, and thus cause yourself to be unavailable to be the presence of love, to be the presence of that which is contributive, and intelligent, and inspiring, and fun, etc.

I am saying for you to be very alert, and do not imagine that self-sacrifice is appropriate at any point, else you might both keep each other company in the institution. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I don't know exactly how to word this question, but I've been experiencing a lot of pain in personal relationships over the last few months. And I wonder what it is that I have to let go of now?

ANSWER: For the sake of those in the group, what form does the pain take?

QUESTION: It takes the form of feeling that they're withdrawing love from me. Now I know that's not true, but that's the way it feels sometimes. And I recognize it's very unclear because the fear comes in. It's very unclear. I have a feeling that I'm right up against something, and if I could just let something go I would like to find my peace. And I would like to know what it is I have to let go, because I seem to be holding on to something.

ANSWER: You do embody a very clear sense of spiritual values, a clear sense of what is appropriate for you and what is meaningful, but you want a cheering section, if I may put it that way, a support group would be a kinder way of putting it—someone to help give you the nerve to truly own what you are feeling. And you know what? It's time for you to own it for yourself. It is time for you to stop requiring others to help give you the nerve to do it. It is time for you to find your independent self-authorized integrity.

And what I mean by that is—when I use the word independent—that it is time as with a just born infant for the umbilical cord to be tied so that it may experience its own integrity, not being in a state of dependence upon another for its well being. It is time for you to experience your security that is unaffected by the presence or absence of others, a security that comes from daring to believe what you believe.

Now, in the past it has been appropriate for you to have a support group, but if you continue to have a support group you will be weakened, and the group will become an impediment, just as a pair of crutches can become an impediment as your leg heals. It's time for you to set the crutch aside. It's time for you to dare to experience your integrity so that you may approach your others without a compulsive sense of need. When you approach others in a clutching way, so as to gather them around you, it makes other people back off.

You are at a point of becoming emancipated from dependence upon others for your having the nerve to own what you believe and be at peace with it. It is a threshold of learning. You are close to your day of independence, and close to the day of your experiencing more clearly than ever before that what you know is true. And your knowing it is all that matters. And it doesn't matter what anyone else thinks at all.

Such a freedom is involved in this that you can't believe it, and that is why you are grasping for help. It's time for you to stand on your own two feet. And you are ready to do it and that is why you are not finding others gathering in a mutual support such as you have had in the past.

Your Being is moving you further than you want to go at the moment. But it is moving you into a place that you are ready to go. And so I encourage you to allow it. And value and trust yourself more than you have been. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Greetings, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: I've been going through a lot of changes in the past two years, and to stay with your analogy of canoeing it felt like white water canoeing.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: One of the things that was necessary...

ANSWER: What is white water?

QUESTION: Turbulent.

ANSWER: White water is what occurs when you become too interested in analyzing the part of the river you are in, and comparing it with other parts, as though one part were better than another. And you are doing this as the beginning stages of attempting to justify not flowing with the river—moving up into the head, rather than flowing with the Soul.

The white water simply gets you too busy with what is in the moment to be too analytical. It is what brings you back in the now. It is not to be hated. It is not to be gotten rid of. It is a signal bringing your attention back where it needs to be. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, my greatest need is being to find a direction for the material path in my life.

ANSWER: Material path?

QUESTION: Right, creating an income for myself.

ANSWER: And what is material about that?

QUESTION: Well, as opposed to the spiritual path, because I don't feel... I know they're not separate, but I'm okay with that. But I see no direction for creating money in my life that I need. I see an outcome, and I've sort of used everything that I've learned to both program, visualize, allow, have faith and trust—which I've had to develop a lot. And I have basically sat back and said to myself, "The universe will show me the way."

ANSWER: Have you asked yourself, "What do I love?"

QUESTION: Oh, yes, lots of times. And I know what I love to do, but I have not found a way to translate that into supporting myself.

ANSWER: Abide with the feeling of what you love. And do not assume that once you know what it is that you love, that then you must facilitate its manifestation. When you are in touch with what you love, you are experiencing desire. But you must understand that desire includes within itself everything that is necessary to its fulfillment. And the necessity is for you to abide with the desire.

And I would encourage you to view desire as the sidecar on a motorcycle, a sidecar that has no motorcycle attached to it—a little pod, if you will, for you to sit in—one that has no steering wheel, no gas pedal, no brake. If you will allow yourself to feel what you love and just abide with it, you are bound to be with that desire at the point in which it fulfills itself. And you will not find that it is necessary for you to figure out, or facilitate, or cause to occur any part of that fulfillment. It will not fall to your puny little intellect to do it.

And in the peace of abiding with the desire, with the feeling of what you love, you will find yourself having the clarity to know when to act and when not to act, even if you cannot justify it intellectually. The key is to abide with the feeling of what you love, and watch the movement that occurs as a result of what? The desire moving in its process of manifesting its fulfillment of purpose.

Now you cannot possibly create what you love. You cannot create a feeling of what you love. What you love is inherent in you, before you lift a finger or think a thought. And in paying attention to what you love you are opening up to an awareness of it and it becomes uncovered.

If you did not create what you love because you already are what you love, then you do not need to create its manifestation. You simply need to remain congruent with it, abide with it without exercising any control whatsoever; and you will find yourself being at the right place, at the right time, with the right answer, and the right idea, and you will not have figured any of it out. And part of the joy of life will have reemerged.

Your Being, with a capital “B”, the aliveness of you, the experientialness of you, is itself the Movement of Creation—not your personal creation, but the Movement of the Father identified. And when you abide with the fulfillment of the Father’s purpose, that is inseparable from your fulfillment of purpose, when you simply yield to it; you will find every little detail of its fulfillment unfolding naturally, including the dollars and cents, including whatever structures are needed, including whatever ideas or plans are needed.

You are not yielding into it enough, you are taking personal responsibility at an intellectual level, and that will always be frustrating. Because as long as you are doing that you are in effect scouting around for a motorcycle to attach your desire to so you can get it where it needs to go.

Now these are not just nice illustrations, they are very specific, and mean exactly what I have conveyed. Yield into the flow with trust. And abide with the desire, abide with the feeling of what you love, and watch what happens.

QUESTION: My tendency really... my natural inclination is been to do exactly what you suggested, it’s just that lately I’ve been feeling a lot of pressure from various sources, that like if you don’t pick up those paddles your little sidecar is heading for a crash. And it’s just been making me a little nervous, because I haven’t seen the progress happening, but I do have a natural tendency just to believe it’ll unfold in a perfect way.

ANSWER: So, what are you going to pay attention to, the hearsay, the words of others, the warnings, the intelligent expressions of caring; or are you going to continue to trust what you are feeling from within?

QUESTION: No, I definitely have to trust my own feelings.

ANSWER: I will tell you something, you may get immediate positive response from others if you do what they say and what they think is best, but if you miss out on your fulfillment, or if the fulfillment that your Being is unfolding is delayed because you have begun serving the ideas of others; these others will not sit around with you commiserating with you, holding your hand while you get back on the track. Be true to yourself.

QUESTION: How do you recognize the flow? of your individuality.

ANSWER: There is a sense of peace. There is an unexcited quietness. There is a confidence. And usually it is a confidence that you cannot intellectually support or justify, but it is there. There is a feeling of congruence with yourself, even if it doesn’t make good rational sense.

I will tell you something: Do not be reluctant to listen to other people’s suggestions, do not be reluctant to listen to me or to anyone else, but no matter what the source of the information is, always take it back within yourself and measure it against your deepest level of knowing. And I dare you to trust into your deepest level of knowing, whether it is consistent with what I have said, or with what anyone else has said or not. You are not here to overthrow your own integrity. And you are here to remain congruent with your clearest awareness of what is right for you.

You are doing exactly what you feel is right for you, and the words of others are beginning to throw doubt in your mind. Well, don't just let the doubt hang there, get still and take what has been said within and compare it with the already existing feelings that are there. And if they do not match up, toss them out and stay with the congruence that is within you.

Understand that every step you take outside of the ego's boundaries, every step you take outside of your conditioned thinking about what is right and wrong, will carry you into what will seem like foreign territory, and you will not always be immediately at ease. But if you are paying attention within you, you will find that there is a built in radar system, and you will know whether it is safe to move, or whether you must stand still, or whether you must change direction.

You cannot afford to govern whether you move or not according to the unfamiliar sights and sounds and even absence of intellectual logic. Because I will tell you again, when you are moving outside of your conditioned thinking you are moving beyond the current sense of logic that binds you.

The fact that you are moving into territory that is unfamiliar is not justification for not moving into it. The only justification for not moving into it is if something within you says, "no," and there is a feeling of peace and quiet assurance that that "no" is absolutely correct.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. He's giving me a picture of, it's like the gates to the Kingdom of Heaven, and there's this group of about forty or fifty people milling around talking to each other. And there saying, "No, I don't think you ought to go in yet. No, no, wait a minute, it's not quite time. No, I don't think you should go." And there all just busy, there right there, but there all just busy helping each other do what each other thinks it ought to be. Any way so I'm passing on the picture.

QUESTION: Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Aloha Nui.

QUESTION: I didn't really have a question formulated when I came here this morning. After listening to your tapes, and watching your video, and reading the newsletters it was clear to me that even my unformulated questions were always answered.

Until I heard Paul tell the story of his acquaintance with you and how that came to be, and how he was drawn to Port Townsend in 1981, and I realized that I desire to know what the hell was I doing in Port Townsend in 1981? I have no idea. I know that I was there for a brief period, and I know that I was drawn there very specifically, but I don't know what for. And I wondered if you could tell me?

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. His answer is a picture. Okay? It used to be with Rail Roads that they would have what was called a round house, where they could drive just the engine into the round house and then it would be on a turn table and they could turn the turn table and then it would come out on a new track going in a new direction.

And the meaning of the picture is that that period in Port Townsend was a round house time where you were just simply changing direction, and then ready to move out. Okay.

Excuse me, there's a further sense that it was a place where you weren't surround with old familiar things that would have made it difficult to let go and shift into a new direction. You didn't have things that had a whole lot of memories associated with them to sort of pull you backwards and dissuade you from making a shift and moving in a new direction.

QUESTION: Aloha. First I want to point out that there's a rainbow over with the mountains.

PAUL: Is it worth looking at?

QUESTION: All rainbows are worth looking at.

PAUL: Oh, yes.

QUESTION: Just another rainbow in Kauai.

PAUL: Just another rainbow?

QUESTION: Oh, hum! And I would think about questions to ask you, and every time I would think about a question it would immediately be answered, and I found that really frustrating. And then as more questions came up they were pretty much answered going around, you covered the body, you covered relationships, you covered the ego, jobs, emotions.

But I do have one thing that's coming up for me, which is new in the last couple of days, is that I'm beginning to get a numbness. It started in my thumb, and now its moved to the back of my hand and up my arm. And I haven't been able to get in touch with what's going on. And I use my hands in my work, it's sort of critical to my work. And I need some guidance or some insights that I'm not able to get myself right now.

ANSWER: All limitations physical or otherwise are illegitimate impositions upon your experience of your wholeness, of your well being. Not all of the illegitimate impositions need to be identified as particular beliefs in order to experience freedom from the imposition. This is one of those instances. It is not necessary for you to delve and find out what it is that is going on at an ego level that is causing this problem.

I'm going to share with all of you an authorization. And this is something different from an affirmation. And if you would like to write it down, I will say it slowly.

“I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning. And I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary.”

Now, this is not a means of controlling the body. It is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly, therefore when you are making this authorization, you are doing two things. You are claiming your freedom from the imposition by exercising authority. And secondly, your thoughts are in harmony with what it is already the intent of your body to do or be. And therefore, in the absence of contrary thinking, your body has the opportunity to register with you more perfectly. Because you are not defended against it by means of contrary opinions or conclusions.

Now, you may be as general or as specific as you wish. I authorize my body, I authorize my wrist, I authorize my thumb, I authorize my kidneys, I authorize my big toe, I authorize my joints, ect., to release whatever is not necessary to their perfect functioning.

Now, you may contemplate the meaning of this authorization, or make the authorization as many times as you wish during the course of a day, but I would encourage you to not fail to make this authorization just before you fall asleep, so that it is one of the last things that occupies your mind before you go to sleep.

Understand that this is not mind over matter, this is not a matter of mentally manipulating your body into obedience. Control is an aggressive act. This authorization is a process of allowing your body to express the intelligence that is inherent in its purpose for being.

And I encourage you to utilize this relative to your thumb and your hand and your forearm with the full expectation of your experiencing the release of this condition. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’m just sort of curious why I throw these obstacles in for myself, whether it’s physically or emotionally, I seem at certain times in my life to just like make things more difficult.

ANSWER: Because you do not know any better. If you knew better, you would do better. If you have been accustomed to functioning within the ego’s frame of reference, then you have been accustomed to less than immaculate expressions of intelligence.

This is a place where most of you get hung up. Because when you discover that you are responsible for your suffering, by virtue of your thoughts and attitudes and beliefs, then instead of rejoicing at the knowledge that your healing and your Awakening is at your finger tips, as a result of authority you express, rather than your being at the mercy of circumstances or the opinions and thoughts of others, you take this awareness of your authority—which has been uncovered—and use it as a basis of condemning yourself.

“What kind of a person am I that I am so self-destructive? What must be wrong with me that I would desire this rather than my peace?” And you never get around, at least not immediately, to the exercise of the authority you have to make choices. To make the choice between the ego’s vantage point or the vantage point of your Being. Once you realize that you have the authority to choose which your vantage point is going to be, there should be great joy and a great sense of relief and the action of choosing for the vantage point of your Being.

Now there are times when it is absolutely essential for you to see what it is you are doing that is impractical—I did not say wrong, I said impractical—it is absolutely essential for you to see what you are doing that doesn’t work, so you can get about the business of that which does work.

If you are trying to unscrew a screw with a screwdriver that is too small, it is an expression of intelligence to recognize that you need a larger screwdriver. It is not a call for you to wonder what there is that is self-destructive about you that would cause you to be trying to use a screwdriver that is too small.

Now, as I said, in this case it is not necessary for you to become aware of any particular belief structure. It is essential for you simply to practice your authority. And understand that here when I use the word authority, I’m not speak of control of anything other than the choice of your vantage point—your choice to have your thinking in alignment with your Being.

As I said, the only right use of will is to choose not to use it. That does constitute a choice and an action, but the action is not one of willfulness. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have been feeling recently that I would like to contact my guide. I’ve never really felt before that there was a need for it, or that I had even given it much thought, although I had known people who had guides. But it’s been very strong with me and I started meditating again, which is something I had gotten away from for awhile. So I was wondering if you could give me any guidance in this, taking in mind what Paul said about asking for our guide. I was wonder if you can give me any help with this, as to how I might go about this?

ANSWER: First of all, it’s important for you to know that if you do get in touch with your guide you don’t have to pay any attention to him or her. Knowing that will not inhibit your ability to connect with your guide. And whether you choose to pay attention or to accept what is said or not, your guide will speak with you.

This is important for you because you are somewhat of an independent soul—if I might put it that way—with a small “s”. And there is a reluctance to defer to a guide, a reluctance to be put in a position where you are obligated to take what is said. You do not want to get locked into a necessity to be obedient to someone. And so I am letting you off the hook, by letting you know that you do not have to listen, you do not have to pay attention, you do not have to agree, and still your guide will speak with you.

Now there are four steps, simple steps to get in touch with your guide. All four steps are to be employed at a single sitting. Each time you sit down to take time to get in touch with your guide, utilize these four steps.

The first step is: Become still. And you may do this through meditation, soaking in a hot tub. Whatever allows you to relax and let go of the concerns of the day, and whatever allows you to become relatively quiet in your mind, become still.

The second step is: Mentally express your desire to have dialog with your guide. Express this desire once only and go on to step three. And express that desire gently, not controllingly, not urgently, not with great pleading and desire, but gently and peacefully and simply. Anything else constitutes willfulness.

Having expressed it gently once, go on to step three, which is: listen. Now how do you listen, imploringly, impatiently, with righteous intent? No, uncontrollingly and allowingly. This period of the meditation and the process of getting in touch with your guide must be one of yielding up willfulness and just becoming quietly and attentively listening. Let the attitude be, thy will be done, in the sense of allowing your guide to approach you in the way that he or she knows is best for you. And I say he or she because your guide will present himself or herself to you in a manner that will have meaning for you. Do not have an expectation as to which it will be, that can get in the way.

The fourth step is: Expect an answer. You can sit until doomsday and hear nothing if you are not expecting an answer, even though answers will be given.

Now it is important for all of you to know that no prerequisite must be met in order to connect with your guide other than to have arrived at a point where there is a desire for you to be able to speak with your guide.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. He’s going to have me tell the story of our youngest daughter who wanted to get in touch with her guide, I think at the age of fourteen, so she could have help on a spelling bee. That was not a very spiritual motive, but nevertheless she did get in touch with her guide. So your motives don’t have to be particularly spiritual. All you have to do is to have arrived at a point where there is a desire to have communication.

QUESTION: Did it help?

PAUL: Yes, but she didn’t win. I will tell you what helped us to know that she really was in touch with her guide was that he helped her to lose gracefully.

And she has always been a person who loses very ungracefully, almost to the point where I never dared to play a game with her because if she lost it was the end of the world. She's sitting back there shaking her head no.

Anyway she lost, but her guide talked to her about it, and she came home without a sense of failure, or anger, or upset, or anything. So it was very interesting.

ANSWER: Many of you are familiar with the idea that infinite patience brings immediate results. This is the way you should listen, with infinite patience. You know what infinite patience is? It's an absence of impatience. It isn't an abundance of patience. It is the allowing of yourself to be fully present in the moment you are in with no desire other than to be experiencing that moment. That is the way to listen.

Understand that the moment you actively desire to have communication with your guide, your guide begins to work with you from the other side of whatever blocks communication. And so you are not doing this all alone, even though you might feel that you are.

I will tell you there is enough justification in just wanting to enjoy the companionship. Of course, in the process of your companioning you will grow. Your guide is not present to cater to your ego, but to help move you beyond the ego's limits. And at times you will not always be ready to let go of the limits, because they hold meaning for you. And you can refuse. And you will not be penalized, except that you will delay the experience of freedom from having moved beyond the limit.

I will tell you something, one of the most significant aspects of Awakening is letting down your defenses enough to find out that you are not alone, that you are companioned by those who are Awake. But of course, as long as it is important to be a self-made-man, or a self-responsible-emancipated-woman, you will block yourself from the deep experience of unity with your brother and sister both seen and unseen. It is especially important for you to be able to have the experience of communion with those who are not seen, because it helps confirm for you the actuality of God.

Every experience that any of you might have had with what you called a Guardian Angel, any guidance that saved you from a problem, has helped to make you feel more safe, has helped you to feel that there is some underlying orderliness to the universe, to life, and that it's nature is love, and it has indeed helped you in your spiritual growth.

Now it is not necessary for you to speak with a guide, you have available to you the Holy Spirit. And do not think for a moment that the Father cannot convey to you what you need to know. And do not for a moment think that the Father might see you as unworthy of speaking to.

I know that it is very easy to sometimes feel that the Father not only wouldn't speak to you, but despises you. And this is one of the absurd and ugly expressions, or impositions of the ego. It is not true. And you are deserving of answers. You are deserving of the experience of God's love. You are worthy of experiencing the communion with your brothers and sisters who are Awake, so that you might have the encouragement necessary to get past the limits of your present sense of things.

They cannot walk you into the Kingdom of Heaven, they cannot walk into the Kingdom of Heaven for you. But I will tell you something, we will walk in front of you where it seems that there is nothing but insubstantiality for you to step on, and say, "See it's safe, come on another step." And we will back up and say, "Come on it's safe take another step." So that you have the encouragement and the support necessary to take these steps of faith.

So you may avail yourself of the Father, of me, of your guide, you may avail yourself of what you call your Higher Self with a capital "S", the Christ in you. You have many avenues. Mainly it is necessary for you to arrive at a point of having enough humility to ask for help. Because that's when the sharing can begin, that's when the love can be communicated and felt.

So enjoy meeting your guide. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you for being here.

ANSWER: Thank you for being here.

QUESTION: I was very interested in all you have to say about the guide and I on this plane just feel I have to analyze everything. And any insight you can give me as to how I will know when I'm receiving a message from elsewhere and it's not my ego or myself creating it. I would like to hear that.

ANSWER: The simplest way I can put it is that there will be a feel to it that you cannot associate with any prior experience that you have ever had, except in moments of illumination. A part of you will have absolutely no doubt whatsoever, while the ego will interject all of its alternate explanations of what it is that really happened.

Not all of your initial communications with guidance, not all of your initial experiences of guidance will clearly be discernible as coming from a divine source as opposed to perhaps some very clear thinking on your part. What is necessary is to persist in asking for guidance, listening, and receiving it. Because as you continue or persist in the experience the subtle differences between your thinking and guidance will become clearer and clearer.

So initially, I would encourage you to risk the chance that it isn't you making it up, even though you are not absolutely positive. Because as you have the experience repeatedly, as I said, the subtle differences will become clearer.

Now I'm going to tell you something: If you are going to let go out of your normal ego oriented thinking, there is only one place for you to let yourself into, and that is the clearer experience of the Allness of God, the clearer experience of the divinity of your Being. There is no way for you to let yourself into greater ignorance, it takes a great deal of work to get into greater ignorance.

And so, because there is nothing outside of the presence of God for you to allow yourself or let yourself into, and letting yourself into something unknown cannot put you into greater depths of ignorance, you can dare to do it more trustingly.

Now let's be very practical. Don't begin listening for guidance for the first time when you are face with a great calamity. Do it when you are at the grocery store and you are having to decide between five pounds of hamburger and two pounds of hamburger. This is not an emotionally charged issue. As a result, you will find it easier to listen for the "yes" or "no" answer. It is when you get too emotionally charged issues that it becomes more difficult to hear clearly, because your fear and your doubt gets in the way, and the details of the circumstances of the calamity or whatever.

So start listening about simple things. Desire to know what the divine order is. Because everything fits into divine order is, because everything fits into divine order and has its place and its natural point of manifestation.

So listen for guidance on mundane, everyday things. As a result of listening without an emotional charge, you will begin to find that your answers are correct, even when at the moment it doesn't seem reasonable. And your trust level will increase, and you will allow even more. And as a result of the practice around uncharged issues, you will find yourself more able to deal with charged issues, having built up a backlog of experience in listening and getting valid guidance.

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. Just for a simple example he's saying to share. We had gone to the grocery store, and Sue was having a feeling that she should get five pounds of ground round. At that time we didn't have a great abundance of money, I mean like maybe we had ten dollars to our name, okay. And so it was like two pounds of ground round would have taken care of us, and tomorrow if we needed more we could get it and possibly there would be more money.

So Sue said ask Raj. Well, Raj says get five pounds, which didn't make any sense at all, we would eat it that night, but he said to get it. We got it. We drove home, pulled into the driveway, and here was a car full of friends from Spokane, who had driven over to visit us and arrived at dinner time. We would have had to turn around and go back up and get more ground round. So then it made perfect sense, but at the moment it hadn't made any sense at all. And so anyway that's the story. That is the end of the answer.

ANSWER: It is important for each one of you to understand that your spiritual quest, that your spiritual Awakening is not of the same nature and character as the spiritual quest was experienced, let us say, 1000, or 2000, or 5000 years ago.

I will put it this way, if you have been on a long drive through the desert, and you live in a city on the other side of the mountains at the edge of the desert, and you are driving at night and there is the black vaulted sky with the stars and it is pitch black except for what the headlights of your car show ahead of you, and the moonlight and the starlight, and you come over and through the mountains. As you get near the valley on the other side where the city is, you can begin to see a glow in the sky and you know you are almost home.

Mankind at this point in "time" are in the mountains, beginning to see the glow in the sky that tells you that you are near the end of your journey.

One thousand years ago there was just the remembrance of Home without great inner feeling associated with it, without the impetus and the quickening of the spirit that comes from seeing the glow in the sky and having faint evidence of being near home. And so you are not at this point in time experiencing the same experiences associated with Awakening with the spiritual quest that was experienced a thousand, or two thousand years ago.

You are not just repeating the same old process of faith and insight, because there is the quickening of the spirit, the quickening of your trust, the quickening of your deep seated memory of Home, of your clear undistorted conscious experience of All That Is as it really is. And so there is more feeling. You are more connected with your Souls in spite of your heads.

The times are different. It isn't just a rehash of, shall I say, the forty years in the desert before you get to the promised land. You are standing, if I may put it this way, at the border. And there is an upsurge of feeling and commitment to what you divinely are than was experienced in the past.

It is important for you to know that you are not just one more part of the treadmill, so to speak, the plodding day after day through the desert, where at the end of the day there is no greater evidence of your being closer to your destination than there was at the beginning of the day. That is not the case. And most of you feel this and are not able to put words to it.

Well, I am putting words to it, but I also want to share one other thing with you. Begin to let go of the demand for words to put with the feeling. It is not necessary to be able to put it into words. It is just necessary to feel it and trust the feeling, in spite of your educated and conditioned thinking. You can begin to dare to trust what you deeply feel. And understand that since you are moving out of conditioned ego reactions into the spontaneous experience of Reality, this movement of Awakening isn't going to make sense, is not going to be congruent with your conditioned thinking. And that is why there is the need for faith, and the investment of trust in your deeper feeling of coming Home.

What does coming Home mean? Coming to a place? No, you're in the place, you've always been in the place. The desert was in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, in the middle of Reality, but there was such a denial of the Kingdom of Heaven that it looked barren.

Most of you live here in what has been called paradise, and those of you who have lived here know that you can be as miserable here as you can in the middle of the Mojave Desert. And the misery comes from the denial of the Reality, the blocking of your willingness to let in the beauty, to let it register with you. And this place can seem pretty barren, in spite of all of its lush and exquisite beauty.

So where is Home? Home is in the act of willingness to let in what is Real. Home is in that willingness to be undefended. It is not a physical place. It is a defenseless and unconditional conscious experience of all that you are experiencing. And in the process of becoming unconditional everything that you are aware of becomes expanded beyond what you have been aware of. And your embrace of All That Is truly includes the infinite self-expression of God beyond the limits of your present sense and experience of the universe.

"The times are a changing," it has been said. And indeed, the experience of time, the experience of limits is dissolving. Time and space will yield to the universal conscious experience of Being. Everything identified as time and space will still be present, but time and space will not be your anchors in infinity. You will pull up the anchor and thus not be tied down to a specific point of the universal self-expression of the Father.

And in not being anchored in time and space infinity will become the place, if you will, of your experience of Being. And it will be your experience of being You. And you will find that you are not a body, but you are the consciousness within which All That Is is embraced, and you will not limit your self-identification to any single point of that infinite self-expression of the Father. And thus, you will begin to find yourself in everything.

And you will find that your brother is some aspect of you. If you are some aspect of the Father, then all that the Father is expressing is some aspect of you, because the Father has not become divided in His self-expression. He has not dismembered Himself, disintegrated Himself into little bits and pieces called you, and you, and you, and you, and me.

Coming Home is shifting from an identification with objects to an identification with your being pure conscious awareness in which all that you are aware of, all that actually is is embraced. And wherever you are giving your attention in that universal conscious experience of Being, there will be this specific identification of you as a Body of Light. But you will not be identifying with it anymore than you would be identifying with the tent poles, or the trees, or the flowers, or the waterfalls, or the oceans.

Dare to trust the unreasonable feelings that you have of the divine presence of Life, and the Movement of God, if you will, that you are feeling. That does not constitute insanity, even though the ego calls it unreasonable. What is unreasonable is to deny it.

Now the Bible indicates that when “the end” comes there will be much gnashing of teeth and wailing etc. Well, I will tell you it will not be the Sons and Daughters of God that will be wailing, it will be all of the egos that are dissolving and fading out of the picture. And if you are identifying with the ego, rather than with the consciousness that you are, then it will seem to you that the ego as it goes through its death throws will be you going through your death throws, because the ego claims to be you, and claims to be all there is to you.

Dare to trust more and more significantly into your deeper feelings of the Movement of God, right here and right now. Not doing away with here and now, but illuminating it in its actuality, and doing away with whatever distorted perceptions cause you to call the Kingdom of Heaven a wilderness, which if you will wander through it well enough will exalt your Soul. Your Soul is exactly as God is Being it, and has been being it right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven all along and it doesn't need to be exalted and formed into something more perfect.

The process of enriching, and improving, and exalting your Soul is a false goal that the ego has set before you that in effect causes you to go around in circles, never arriving at the promised land, never discovering that right where you are is Home.

It is a wonderful time, and it is necessary for you to know that it is different now than it was 1000 years ago. The glow is not in the sky, it is in your heart. And you are feeling it and it is real, even though you cannot explain it and cannot justify it. And even though it seems to be incompatible with your reason, abide with it, feel it, and it will elicit words, it will evolve new reason that is a closer approximation of truth. And if you do you will have the opportunity to discover that waking up can be FUN!

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Why is my ego so strong, my ego and everybody's ego? I find myself melting in these workshops, and when I read spiritual books, and do my meditations. And then as soon as my buttons get pushed, I trigger back into a reaction and there I am back in the ego again feeling righteous and angry. Could you speak about this?

ANSWER: It is pure habit. If you drive exactly the same way to work every single morning, and one morning you decide that you would like to go a different route, the possibility is that you will forget when the time comes, because the habit is so ingrained to go the way you have gone.

Now the habits that are formed from an ego basis are always formed out of fear, out of a sense of insecurity, because as I indicated yesterday, the ego is insecure. It is an assumption to presence, not an actual presence. It therefore, has no substance to it, except to whatever degree it can cause you to have faith in it.

The habit is a pattern of behavior that you have developed in order to stabilize the feeling of insecurity and fear. And until you find that the fear is baseless, you will continue to engage in the habit that provides you with your present sense of safety, even if that safety is not absolute. The ego is a compulsive act of self-preservation, where one is in complete safety.

Now to give you a conceptual frame of reference: When you become centered that is wonderful, and it is contributive to your being less hookable when you move out into the marketplace. But what is important for each of you to understand is that once you have become centered, once you have connected with your peace, it then becomes important for you to move back into the marketplace, or “the world,” and bring that peace with you consciously and on purpose, even though it will seem to fade as the day goes by, or the minutes go by. The point is to be able to be in the marketplace from your center, rather than from the surface reactive ego level.

I mentioned that Home is that place or action of willingness to see what is Real. Because of the dualistic, polarized concept of life that has developed, especially in the Western World, you divide things into opposites, and your centered meditative place is good, and the world is bad. The things of the spirit are good, and the world of matter is bad, and they are incompatible. And so you see a challenge when you finish your meditation, and you brace yourself for the challenge of having to go back into this material place called the world.

You see the world as a block, or a challenge to divinity and to clear perception. Well, I will tell you, the marketplace is also right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and that it looks like a marketplace is no different from it looking like a desert. It is just another negative, or distorted concept of the Kingdom of Heaven. And that is where the clear perception is needed. That is where the defenselessness is needed. That is where the Light is needed. Not because it is a dark, horrible, mortal, devilish place; but because the illumination that it takes for you to see it correctly is needed so that you are not fooled by the appearance and then reactive to it.

When you hear of being unconditional, it does not mean to look at this ugly marketplace of a world, and unconditionally let it be what it is—still ugly. The unconditionalness is the withdrawal of judgment upon it, positively or negatively, so that you may not block the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven right there. The perception of the marketplace in all its splendor as the activity of God, where the buildings and those who are in “business” can be seen as the substance of Light, of Living Love moving in the most beautiful artistry, a living work of art, of expression, of meaning, of feeling. And again, not a moving work of art that you may unconditionally observe, but a moving work of art in which you find your capital “S” Self, so that you know you are it and it is you, and it is all love.

The fact that you look at the marketplace, or the world and do not see it as what I have just described, is due entirely to your conditioned thinking. It is the Kingdom of Heaven that you are in. It is the Kingdom of Heaven that you Are. But you are not going to begin to see it until you withdraw your commitment to your belief that it is the way you see it at the moment, and that it must be expunged, wiped off the face of the earth. And if the ego could have its way you would wipe the earth away also, so that there would be no material universe to stand in your way of discovering God.

Your experience of God is found right in the middle of hell, because hell is nothing more than the ego’s definition of Heaven. Right in the worst place you can imagine is where the greatest opportunity to experience the presence of God is. Don’t be afraid to bring the illumination of yourself to that place that does not seem to be worthy of it.

The ego would suggest that you will be doing something wonderful for that place, but in your unconditional defenselessness what you will be doing is withdrawing your resistance from discerning the Kingdom of God right there—Reality. And the moment that resistance is gone, Reality will snap into focus. And you will likely say and everyone else will likely say, “what a miracle,” as though one had done something to something and fixed it.

To be unconditional is to let go of the fear enough so that you are willing to open your eyes and see what is there. Paul cannot do that yet. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have a tremendous amount of excitement in my life at this time.

ANSWER: Is that good or bad?

QUESTION: It’s wonderful, and in a lot of ways I feel I’m not able to contain it, so I try to just allow.

ANSWER: That is good. It will hurt if you try to contain it.

QUESTION: This is what I am finding out. I’m right now...

ANSWER: I am going to interrupt. You are all so conditioned to accumulate truth, to accumulate knowledge, to accumulate facts, to accumulate what is good. If you would learn to let it fly like a butterfly, that would land on your finger momentarily, and take off, and not feel any necessity to hold onto it for future use; you would find more and more butterflies coming your way. And you would experience the joy of being able to be attentive in the now, and not busy cataloging what you have accumulated, and taking care of what you have in your memory banks, and the joy of life would increase. Continue.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'm wondering if it would be a furtherance to my expression to move to Kauai? I'm living on Maui and I keep finding new wonderful places. It's wonderful.

ANSWER: Which part of paradise is better than the other part of paradise?

QUESTION: I guess I don't really have any questions. Could I have an energy reading from you?

ANSWER: In answer to your first question, I'm going to tell you to follow your heart. But once you have followed it do not cast it in concrete, let it continue to be flexible so you may be responsive in the now, and remain continuously appropriate.

PAUL: Okay, as is the case when people ask for an energy reading the answer is always given, or has always been given so far in images. The images of your being at the edge of the water, the ocean. The temperature of the water is about 78 degrees, and you are going up there ready to put your toe in to test the water. It's like... and the feeling of it is that you generally tend to be more cautious than you need to be. It's like you could dare to relax and just walk into the water without wondering whether maybe it's too cold, being somewhat reluctant to just move forward with enjoyment.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Well, I noticed yesterday you said everything is about letting go. So I'd like some information, not information, but some ideas on just letting go again, on letting go and let the Holy Spirit lead the way, rather than the opposite.

ANSWER: I will tell you that the best practice you can engage in is to ask specific questions of the Holy Spirit. Don't just muddle around in the sense of resistance, or the sense of fear, or the sense of anxiety, or a sense of some specific hurdle that stands in your immediate path, and do not be vague in your desire for clarification.

The act of asking a question involves the formulating of the question. And the formulating of the question provides clarity about the "problem" that you will not have if you are just muddling around in the experience of anxiety or fear. The asking of a question brings clarity in itself. In asking the question you are saying, “I am not assuming that I know the answer from my memory, or from my experience, and I am reaching beyond that.” It is as though you cast your anchor into the infinite, rather than the finite, the problem, the situation.

And then having formulated and asked the question, listen for the answer in the same way you would approach your guide. Ask the question once, get off the question, and listen with the expectation of an answer. Now you will be put directly in the experience of letting go. Because when you move into the act of listening, you will find that you do not listen very well. And I am not picking on you, no one listens very well.

And letting go you will find will involve the letting go of the jabber, the “yes-buts,” the impatience, all of the dynamics that come into play that don’t constitute quiet attentive listening. You are so conditioned to figure things out that that business constitutes the block to your hearing.

So this act of asking, of reaching beyond your present experience, your present understanding, will bring you face to face with the process of letting go, and of truly listening. I cannot give you any better first step. And I will tell you something, when you get that under your belt, you will find that there isn’t a second step, unless the second step would be to arrive at a point where you don’t even utter the question and you just allow the knowing to be all that is going on at any given moment. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Could I have a reading?

PAUL: Hum, that’s me. The image is one of a snow white, I mean really bright white cloud with a black lining. Instead of a cloud with a silver lining, it’s a cloud with a black lining. The feel of it is that you tend to be very, very open, very nonjudgmental generally speaking. You allow inspiration and light to... you let it in, but there is still a part of the ego that gets a black edge around it so that you don’t embrace this white cloud fully. There is a little bit of active reservation that’s very, very definite, even though it’s just a thin black outline to the cloud.

In other words the black doesn’t occupy much of the volume of the cloud. And the whiteness of the cloud is increasing, but the black edge to the cloud is not going to be crowded out by the whiteness of the cloud. There’s going to come a point where you as a conscious act of will, if you will, will need to be brought into play where you set aside black linings. It will have to be a conscious act of release. And it’s sort of like that’s where your work is, if you want to call it that. Okay.

QUESTION: Thanks.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I’ve had a turmoil problem that’s been disturbing me this last year that I have been in the process of making out my living trust. And I had it all finished with the lawyer and so forth, and then I’ve decided it’s all wrong. So I've been going through it, and I'm trying to get some rest in that, and some proper answer that would make everything the way I feel it should be. I know it's wrong, or I wouldn't be so uncomfortable about it and suffer like this.

Now I've also had a problem with a physical...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you there. I will tell you something: It is all right the way you had it drawn up, but you have a tendency to be a perfectionist. And you are in your attempt to do it perfectly being overly precise.

Now if you are an artist, and you work with oils, and you become too precise in the application of the colors and the lines, etc.; the fullness and the richness and the texture of the picture can be lost and it can become very artificial in its appearance—the soul of it will have gone out of the picture.

Now it is fear, it is the ego, it is what you would call mortal mind suggesting to you that you have not arrived at a point of rest yet, and that you have more perfecting to do. I will encourage you to return it to its original form, and be grateful to be done with it, and get on about the living of life. It is not appropriate for you to put an undo amount of effort and energy into a living trust that is keeping you from living life with joy. The next part of your question?

QUESTION: Is that I've had a physical pain for several months in my arm. And I refuse to give into it, I go right on. And I've been trying to work with it, work to get rid of it, I should say, see more of the light. Just after yesterday, I was wondering if possibly there could be a latent belief or fear that these two mingle somehow. And until I get my rest with this other problem that's taking all of my time, that I will be suffering that arm ache.

ANSWER: Indeed, there is a connection, shall I say, an absolute connection, a very specific connection. It is time for you to put this problem down, because it is not a problem. You are reworking a solution. It was solved, and now you are attempting to rework it.

You are applying energy to something that is already finished, and therefore there is no place for that energy to move into expression. It is like having a rubber mold of a figurine that you pump clay into. When the form is filled, filled full, full filled, there is no more room for more clay to be pumped into it. And pressure builds up in the hose that the clay is coming through. And the hose must be removed and allowed to be put into a new form, another form, another activity.

To continue to try to get more clay into the finished form is a willfulness. And that is what you are experiencing of pain in your arm. It is time to be finished with that project and get on to a new one that is available move into expression or form. It's time for you to be relieved of that, and there is nothing more for you to do about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I'm going to say one other thing. Finish it, be at peace with it. And realize that what anyone thinks about it is irrelevant. No one else has to agree with what you have done. And it is no one else's business what you have done, or what your decisions have been. That is going to be very important for you to remember.

For anyone else to have an opinion about what you have done with this living trust, is for them to be being rude and to have their nose where it does not belong. It is none of their business, acknowledge that it is none of their business, and do not even engage in argument of discussion about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In Ashland I asked a question about a sleep problem that was related to two years of intensive TM that I did many years ago—about fifteen years ago. This question is related to that experience, because since that time I have felt blocked in my ability to go within. And the block is very specific.

I'm able to become settled with what feels like a unified or integrated when I'm in a group of people who are all like-minded, like the Course In Miracles group, where we're all doing the same thing.

I don't have much problem settling into myself in the group. But when I'm alone and I have the intent to become quiet, my mind becomes very compulsively active, as you were describing earlier. And the only place I can go to get out of that is the place that I conditioned myself to go to with all of that misguided meditation that I did. And it ends up feeling like I am in a kind of a white noise in my head, which feels like an electrical sound of my nervous system or something. And I feel completely disconnected from myself, completely ungrounded, no contact with the environment at all.

And I'm frankly quite afraid of it, because it represents for me the cause of all my sleeplessness, and the cause of my being spaced out all the time, and not in touch with my body, and not in touch with my feelings, and living as a head without a body. And I have been that way all my life, but it got intensified by the meditation. So I feel like I'm looking for a doorway into my peace that doesn't make me dependent on a group of people.

That's a long question, but the only success I've had working alone is with the affirmation of self-love that you described. And I'm able to pull myself out of some crummy places with that.

PAUL: May I ask a question—I, Paul. When you say when you were in that misguided meditation, were you meaning to refer to TM itself as a misguided meditation, or the energy of the group of people that you were involved with?

QUESTION: I feel that there was no guidance, there was no individual guidance available in the group, except for the master himself. And I didn't make use of him, although I had the opportunity. I think that the practice itself was not appropriate for me, because it took me further away from my wholeness. It took me more into a mentalness that I had already run into as a defense when I was a little child.

So I feel that that was a mistake that I reinforced by doing all of that stuff. And now I feel that I want to be grounded, I want to feel what's going on in the rest of my body, my heart, my gut, and my feet, I want to feel the world. And I feel the blood pounding in my brain, and I hear this electrical sound, and that's it—if I attempt to get quiet, unless I'm in a group. And then somehow in a group I'm able to... It has to do with fear I think.

I don't go surfing in high surf unless there's at least one other surfer around, because I'm not a strong swimmer. I love to surf, but it feels like the same kind of thing, like I'm afraid of my own good. I don't trust it.

ANSWER: I am going to encourage you to meditate and let your breath be the mantra rather than a word. And rather than giving your attention to the bridge of your nose as I have suggested at other times to other people, I'm going to encourage you to let your attention rest gently at the third chakra, just below the breast bone, in the place where you feel sensation if you are going down a fast elevator.

Let your attention rest on the intake and the outflow of the breath on the third chakra, just simply let your attention abide there, the sense of the air coming into that point and coming out from that point. Let your breathing be normal and relaxed. You will find that this will get you past the noise and the compulsive chatter, or busyness.

Do this easily. This is not a process of overcoming the noise. This is a process of letting yourself sink below it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I ask a follow up question?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: What might I do if I'm not able to sense anything in that region, anything below my neck? Is there a stronger sensation that I can anchor on until I get settled enough to be able to become aware of that? Because that literally is my experience that I feel almost nothing below my throat, lets say. It's like it's something way off in the distance, very, very distant.

ANSWER: Simply rest the palm of your hand at that point and breath into the palm of your hand and out of the palm of your hand.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I guess my question has to do with a dream that I had as a child, a recurring dream. I don't know I was probably three or four, had this dream every year of my life until I got married. And then the dream recurred a few years ago.

The dream is a dream I... Where I grew up was inland, but they did have sand, they had sand pits. So my mountains were mountains of sand. And the dream was that the top of the mountain kept falling into itself, the sand kept falling, it was a bottomless pit. And as it would fall into itself, it would look like a TV screen. And I would look at that TV screen for an answer, but then more sand would just fall in and it would open again to a TV screen, and more sand would fall... I would night after night after night I'd watch the sand fall into sand, fall into sand, fall into sand.

But over the period of my life answers began to come, and I did what was appropriate with that for the last fifteen years of my life.

PAUL: Excuse, me this is me, Paul. When you say answers did come, you mean you would begin to see answers on the screen?

QUESTION: No, I didn't see answers on the screen, but they came within me. I wasn't seeing the dream anymore, the answers were just coming.

Now, in the last three months of my life the dream has come back, not as a dream, but as I awake. It's like daily or every other day that dream, or the memory of it comes back. It's like an urgency, now it's telling me to do something with that dream in another expression. So I have been.

And I guess my question to you is, I'm wondering if I'm kind of dragging my feet on it? There seems to be an urgency, because it keeps coming so often. I mean, like if I'm not doing what I'm supposed to be doing, I get the idea of the dream again. And even since I've been here, everyday the dream comes, because I'm not doing what I'm supposed to be doing while I'm here. I'm supposed to be doing some writing. And I'm not doing that while I'm here, I'm just relaxing, having a good time, enjoying you and the people.

I wonder if I'm being like you were that six months that you just said no, you knew better?

PAUL: Me, Paul.

QUESTION: Right, you, Paul. So I guess would you give me some insight if there's some urgency about the writing that I'm doing, or can I kind of drag my feet a little bit more?

ANSWER: You are not dragging your feet, it is just that you do not have your foot on the gas pedal to give you forward moment. This means that you are exactly in the right place, doing exactly the right thing. What feels like dragging your feet to you is the fact that you are not applying yourself. And in not applying yourself, you are interpreting that as a resistance, when it is not. There is a shifting occurring with you, and this is most appropriate. And I encourage you to relax.

Ceaseless movement... The ceaseless movement of life that appears to be bringing forth something concrete, but never does. That is what you must get used to. Life does not bring forth things concretely, which become immovable. God is the Movement of Creation and what is created is never fixed.

The conscious experience of Being, with a capital “B”, is forever new, as the Bible said, it never stops to repeat itself. It is the ceaseless flow. It is your ego which is telling you that you must apply yourself, rather than be with the moment, and appropriate in the moment. Whenever there is, shall I say, change occurring, whenever there is significant movement occurring, I will call it reconfiguration, this dream has been in your experience.

Now it is not up to you to figure out what the reconfiguration is going to be, it is simply necessary for you to allow it. Everything is fine. Everything is all right. Life is not a test that you can pass or fail at. It is not necessary for you to take any activity or any inactivity and use it as a justification for expecting a penalty. Continue to flow as you are. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well, then I guess I would ask then, every morning when I get up and I have for the last almost twenty years asked for divine guidance. “What shall I do today? What shall I do to today? What shall I do today?” And now in the last three months the only thing I get is, write, sit down and write. And when I do sit down and write everything just flows, and flows, and flows. And the next time I sit down it says write, write, write.

And what my concern is that a lot of times when it says sit down and write, I don’t do it. I think about it. And then the next day it’ll say write, until there’s such a sense of urgency because I feel like I’m not minding it, I’m not doing it. I would rather go home at the end of working with people all day, and I’d like to watch the Oprah Winfrey Show. I’d just like to sit and relax. And I get this urgency, it’s not appropriate for me to do that, it’s appropriate for me to keep writing, keep writing.

ANSWER: So what?

QUESTION: So I watch the Oprah Winfrey Show.

ANSWER: And?

QUESTION: Well, someone came to me...

ANSWER: Do you let yourself enjoy it?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Do you feel as though there is an ax ready to fall because you enjoyed it?

QUESTION: No, I don’t feel that way. But someone came to me, probably six months ago, that didn’t know me, and just said, “if you don’t do what your being guided to do, there's other people that can do it. It'll be taken away from you." And I don't know where they were coming from, or what they knew.

ANSWER: I will tell you something, thank God there are other people who can do what you can do. It's going to take all of you doing it. You can't possibly do all of it.

QUESTION: Oh, we're just talking about the one little part.

ANSWER: Who are you doing this for?

QUESTION: Jesus. Jesus speaks to me. Jesus came to me.

ANSWER: No, why is there a desire to be obedient?

QUESTION: Because my life goes a heck of a lot better when I am. And it doesn't go so well when I don't.

ANSWER: If you don't do this, somebody else will. Who will they be doing it for?

QUESTION: For mankind. And for greater clarity within their own mind, heart and Soul.

ANSWER: You had better being doing it for yourself. If you cannot love yourself, how can you love mankind? If you do not connect with who you divinely are, how can you see, or feel, or experience who another divinely is?

I will tell you something: Shakespeare nailed it on the head. He perceived and felt the truth of this statement, "To thine own self be true. And it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." If you want to do something for mankind, discover the stranger within thy gates, the Christ of you. Find God in you, and then your light will shine. No one is going to take away your opportunity to find your Christhood, whether you delay for ten thousand more years, or for only one more second.

The comment that was made to you was coming from an ego place. Thoreau said, "If I knew for a fact that someone was coming to do me some good, I would run for my life for fear that some of their good would get done to me."

Be careful about being a do-gooder and doing something for the world, because if what you do for the world is different from being the humble and genuine presence of you, then you are fulfilling some concept of good. And fulfilling a concept of good for someone else always constitutes an expression of control, and not love.

QUESTION: Paul, I would come from a place where as one begins to discover a sense of divinity within them, there is no separation any longer. To do something for the world is to do it for yourself. It isn't you, and me, or them, or us any longer. It's just I, and in myself there is all of creation, which includes each person. It isn't a separate thing, it isn't...

ANSWER: But right now you are up in your head. If it is for you and there is no separation, then why would the term be used, “Do it for the world?”

QUESTION: The world is who I am. The world is who you are.

ANSWER: Then who would take away from you your opportunity to be who you are?

QUESTION: Myself.

ANSWER: Who else could do it for you?

QUESTION: Some other part of myself.

ANSWER: But you are not broken up into bits and pieces. I want you to pay attention to the words you are using. If you do not do “this work” it will be taken away from and someone else will do it for the world. There is no humility involved in doing some good for someone else. It is impossible to do something for someone else without being self-conscious, because you would be coming from an ego level.

If you are in a state of yielding to your Being there is no time to do anything for anyone else. And in yielding to your Being and discovering your innate stability, and security, and invulnerability, and peace, and joy, you find illuminated in you what is true about everyone else and you begin to see that there is nothing you need to do for them. And you begin to recognize that they are right where they need to be, and that there divinity is providing them with their opportunities for Awakening, with flawless ability.

And in this way you begin to find that you don’t need to do anything other than enjoy your clear capacity to appreciate and value where that one is in his learning, if you will, and to see how his or her divinity is operating so clearly, and in this you make the gift of acknowledging their divinity. But you don’t do it for them, you can’t avoid doing it because you are seeing clearly yourself. And so you don’t expect a result from it.

If you walk around and you see a need, then you are not seeing clearly. And if you are seeing need, then you cannot help another one see that he has no need. If I believed for one second that you or any of you were the poor miserable mortals that you think you are, our conversation would be of the same quality as that which goes on at a cocktail party.

Your capacity to be you cannot be taken away from you. And those who would help you—I’m speaking of your guide, of the Holy Spirit, the Father—those who would help you experience who you are more clearly will never withdraw their help. The totality of what you are will not withdraw its insistence upon breaking down the little gap that causes you to feel separated from what you totally are.

The gift that you have to give to the world, is the simple gift of you being in touch with your capital “S” Self, you daring to own and incorporate who you divinely are and embody it in your daily experience. And if you will attend to that, indeed everyone around you will respond as though you have done something for them. And you will wonder why they are saying that, because it will be so obvious to you that that is not what you are attempting to do. And then you will have learned the secret of love.

Love is something that happens when you are allowing yourself to be in love with you, when you are willing to recognize that which is Real in you and own it.

If you look at someone and they say, “Oh, you see me. Thank you, thank you.” You would say, “Of course, I see you I have my eyes open. Nothing else can happen if I have my eyes open but to see you.” “No, no, no, you have blessed me. Thank you, thank you, thank you, you have seen me.” And you will stand there a little bit incredulous, why are they thanking you for something you can’t help.

Well, that is the way you bless your world. You become humble enough, and undefended enough against your capital “S” Self to let it in, and let it fill you, and find the joy of the humble experience of just being you, and experiencing total congruence. And in that experience your eyes become opened, and others will say, “She has seen me. I have been touched.” And you will say, “You have? I’m so happy for you. Who touched you?” “Why you did.”

And you will realize that this is what happens when you are just being you and not denying who you divinely are in any way. And the joy of having this wonderful response when you weren’t trying to do anything, will convince you of the value of never trying to do anything yourself again. And you will begin to let yourself into the ongoing continuous experience of not trying to do anything for the world.

You will also have as a result of this response, an experiential proof of the unity of All That Is, the fact that you and your brother are not separated. But you will not be able to account for how that unity came to be experienced by everyone. But you see it is the ego that wants to account for it, so it can do it again—So it can do it.

What if the guidance says, “Grow daisies, grow daisies, grow daisies.” And everyday you grow daisies. Before long you will have daisies all around you and it will be a little monotonous. An orchid here or there, a rose here or there, even a dandelion here or there would be a nice break in the monotony of daisies.

We’re going to take a moment here, because everyone needs to hear this specifically. Don’t be blindly obedient to guidance! Whether it is the guide, whether it is the Holy Spirit, whether it is the Father, whether it is your direct connection with you capital “S” Self; one thing and one thing only is going to occur as a result of that connection: That is going to be the uncovering in you of your capacity to experience Reality.

Out of habit, because you have always learned from others, you have a tendency to defer to your “teacher” whatever your teacher, your guide, the Holy Spirit says, you will do it because that is what a student does. But the teacher does not have what he is saying as his focal point, he has the triggering of your Awakening as the focal point. You are the focal point.

Blind obedience does not constitute what I am going to cautiously call self-responsibility, self-governed. It is you who is to come into a clearer experience of your own integrity and your own divinity, and so you had best the effect that your guidance has upon you. The guidance doesn’t become an accumulation of facts for you to use in order to live more successfully.

What is said is that which will spontaneously trigger in that moment, from your present mindset, your escape from that mindset. And so you are to take what is given and measure it against your deepest level of knowing—your deepest level of knowing. You are the one who is being strengthened in your divinity, not the one who is speaking with you. You had better pay attention to what is happening to you.

I will tell you something: A little over two years ago, Paul became moved at my being Jesus, and entered into what you would call a personal relationship with me, very different from the relationship that had gone on for the previous six-and-a-half years. Paul prior to a year-and-a-half ago did not give me dutiful respect, he was often disrespectful. But his disrespect was an expression of his doubt, an expression of his integrity, an expression of his lack of clarity, and at times an expression of his clarity.

He wanted to understand—and so he pushed for understanding—whether I was Jesus or not, whether I was a character in history or not. And as a result, we had very real down-to-earth dialogs. And I could be real with him. But a year-and-a-half ago as a result of a conversation with a young priest that I had, it dawned on him, “My God, this is Jesus!” And he slipped into his concepts of me, and his concepts about how he ought to relate to me. And he became unreal.

And so as he listened dutifully, and wonderfully, and obediently to whatever I had to say, I gave him something to do that was impossible for him to do. And I did not tell him that he was deferring to me at the expense of his experience of his own integrity, because if I had he would have obediently paid attention to himself, and he would not be acting out from his own experience of his own integrity.

And so I gave him something impossible to do, and he obediently did it, except that it was not comfortable, it was not compatible with him. And then I put the screws to him a little tighter and made the impossible even more impossible. And finally he said, “Raj, if I don’t do this will you continue talking to me?” And I said, “Of course.” And he said, “Well, then I’m not going to have anything to do with this anymore.” And I said, “Good! That’s what this was all about. Because now you are paying attention yourself, you are paying attention to your own integrity. And if you are talking to me from your highest sense of your experience of your integrity, and you are treating me as though I have integrity also, we can be real with one another again.”

And now he’s paying very close attention to himself, and now there is movement where life became static for almost thirteen months. Don’t lose yourself in the process of connecting with your capital “S” Self. What I mean by that is, whatever the valid source of guidance is that you are getting help from, it is not to supersede you, but to uncover in you your equality with it so that you may stand side-by-side, shoulder-to-shoulder with that which is divine and own your own divinity, and dare to act out from it, and not be ashamed of it, and not feel that it must be not as good as it ought to be.

If you, out of habit, give your power away and serve someone else who is experiencing his or her divinity completely, and treat yourself as though you are nonexistent, your guidance will do whatever is necessary to cause you, for reasons of your own, to take your power back. Not because that is principled, not because that is wise, not because it reflects truth; but because something in you cannot do otherwise. That is where you get in touch with truth.

It isn’t words, “don’t give your power away to me,” it’s a feeling in you that you find you have in spite of the guidance, irrelevant of the guidance. And your guides—all of your guides—will utilize whatever it takes to cause you to validate yourself again, for your very own reasons, because it is you in your divinity that needs to walk into the Kingdom of Heaven. It is not you riding in on the shoulders of one who is Awake, whom you are the perfect servant of.

Now I have taken some time because this is extremely important. You will not get into the Kingdom of Heaven because you have a wonderful guide who showed you the way, and relieved you of the responsibility of having to be motivated from within yourself to get there. And since motivation to be who you are is what is needed, then the guidance will be such that it uncovers that motivation in you, which the ego has covered up.

And if you are insisting upon being a wonderfully obedient servant to the Christ, to a Christ that isn’t you, it will be an unpleasant experience. Because neither I, nor any other Awakened one will support you in that inappropriate, unintelligent, false goal. Remember you are the focal point. You are the ones who are sleeping. You are the ones who must become connected with the motivation to rouse yourself from ignorant dreams. And book learning, and wonderful guidance won’t do it! All that that can do is help you arrive at a point where you can muster up the energy to arouse yourself.

Now the glow within the sky, dawn is coming, you are getting help in feeling motivated to rouse yourself. But if you begin to bow to and worship the light in the sky, rather than looking at what is being uncovered in you as a result of the light, you will still be dreaming.

A good book is wonderful, guidance is wonderful, but if you do not allow what is in the book to illuminate you so that you can own yourself and experience who you divinely are; then having the book, and reading it, and rereading it, and rereading it, and marveling at the wonderful truths that are in them will not be useful. The connection has to be made. The truth that's in the books is the truth about you, but the truth about you isn't in the books it's in you. And so you must shift the attention from the book or the source to what has been uncovered in you, and you must embrace it, incorporate it, and dare to be it.

The ego wants guidance to be logical, intelligent, understandable. Why? Because the ego wants to take the knowledge and duplicate the spontaneous, uncontrolled, effortless, spontaneous Movement of Creation that God is being. And it wants to do it as an act of will, an act of control. And as I said yesterday, the Movement of Creation is not a practice or effort of control by the Father.

So when you listen to guidance, do not listen to it as though it is information. It is the exquisitely skilled Movement of Love that has the capacity to get past your ego and connect with you at the level of your Being and illuminate it so that you can say, "Wow, look at me, I am that?" And so that you can arrive at the point where you can say, "Look at me. I am that." And then so that you can arrive at a point where you just be it and you don't even comment about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, hello.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Good afternoon. You've spoken quite often this morning at various times about giving. And I was wondering if you could expand on that theme of giving, and particularly about tithing and it's role, or does it having any role in our development?

ANSWER: Let me put it this way, tithing as a gift is most appropriate. The taking of a portion of your income, of your abundance and specifically applying it in the direction of, I'm going to say that which you value, that which promotes Awakening, is most appropriate. But if tithing is a means of creating more income, it is a selfish act, and not a gift at all. And therefore, it is a meaningless act relative to the intent.

To acknowledge in your life the value of that which promotes your spiritual growth, together with the investing of your income in the down-to-earth specific meeting of your needs constitutes a balance. if you feel inclined to do it, do it. It represents a balance, an evenness. But understand also that if you do not do it, you are not in a worse off position than the one who does do it.

I'm going to put it very simply, pay attention to where your gratitude is, and be willing to share of your abundance in the direction of those things you feel grateful for. That is tithing. I will tell you this: A smile, a spontaneous felt smile constitutes a tithe. But as is always the case, if you do it to get something, it is not a tithe and does not constitute a gift, it is an expression of selfishness and control, and the effort will fall flat on its face.

Giving comes from the heart, not from the head. And of course, the greatest gift you can give is the gift of you. And the only way you can give the gift of you is to be in touch with yourself. And the only way you will truly dare to get in touch with yourself is, if you find some way to realize a connection between yourself and God, yourself and the Life Principle, yourself and the Creator.

The only way you can dare to get in touch with yourself is if you are able to acknowledge that your selfhood is derived from something more than just evolution. Because if your source is not divine, then what you will connect with when you connect with yourself is likely not to be very lovely, is likely to be flawed. And who wants to really connect with something that is flawed and experience it, I will say, exquisitely and completely?

Gifts are very seldom really given. Most of what is given is given with an expectation of getting. You invite someone to dinner, you expect a return invitation. You do something nice for someone and then you are perturbed if that one or someone else does not return the gift. You must arrive at a point where you give the gift because it constitutes a congruence with yourself, it constitutes an integrity of you, because it feels good to just give.

You see, when you give you can be complete in the giving, but you cannot guarantee that what you have given will be received. It might be taken, but has it been received? Has that one let it in? You cannot guarantee that. And if you do not feel a completeness until the gift has been received, then you are practicing control, and manipulation. "I can't feel good until you receive my gift. See what you are doing by not accepting my love?" But love is something that must be given freely. And you must learn to get your joy out of the sharing of you.

When you give your power away to another by saying you can't feel good until they receive the love you are giving, or accepting and acknowledging the kindness you are expressing; when you put another's actions in the position of governing how you feel in an attempt to manipulate them, you end up being their puppet. And you will be miserable.

Giving is something you just give. You present yourself. And when there is nothing expected in return, you will find your giving becoming more genuine, and more complete in itself. Your giving will not constitute a demand, and in the absence of a demand the gift is more likely to be received. It will not cause the receiver to become defensive against the strings attached to the gift.

Now this is not something you do not already know, but it is well to have it clearly put again. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In the Bible as it is now written, Jesus said, “Ask anything and you shall receive, if you meet one of three conditions.” Those three conditions that I understand them to be, when you ask you believe, or you have faith, or you ask in my name. My question is I would like a clear understanding of those three terms. And also, how I could acquire at least one of them?

ANSWER: How can you ask in my name? The word “name” truly refers to the word in English, nature, character. You must ask as I would ask.

Now what is it one wants, what is it one desires? If one desires from his head, from the intellect, from the ego; he does not ask in the nature of the Christ. When you ask, you must first have taken time to listen, you must have first taken time to be in touch with your Self, with a capital “S”. Because when you are in touch with your Self you are in touch with its Movement. And its Movement has a feeling.

And the feeling can best be described as pleasure, it is a feeling that arises out of wholeness, and it is also a feeling that you could say has an obvious destination, an obvious purpose for being. And this movement is desire. And when you ask in the Christ nature, when you ask from that place where your Christ Consciousness is being experienced by you, then you are not asking for something that is not congruent with your Being or different from what your Being is unfolding. And so the desire does not start from a small ego point, but starts, you might say, from the very swell of the Movement of the Father in you that constitutes your true will.

And so when you ask in the nature of the Christ you are asking in harmony with the flow of the unfoldment of your very own Being that is already in motion. And because you have come into perfect alignment with this movement of fulfillment of your Being, you will find that desire being fulfilled.

It is not that the universe is abundant and abundance is the law of Being, and therefore you can say, “Wow, I want a swimming pool, and a tennis court, and a Rolls Royce, and I want never to have to lift my finger again to have my abundance.” Going around demonstrating Cadillacs, and houses, and swimming pools, and whatever it is you think you might want, does not put you in the position of being congruent with yourself.

And what it actually becomes is a process of demonstrating a principle that may or may not have anything to do with what your Being is unfolding. And as a general rule, one begins to see whether he or she has as good or better a demonstration than the Smiths or the Jones down the street.

It is as though the swimming pool does not become the focus, but the skill at manifesting swimming pools becomes the focus. And the point is missed. And the having of the swimming pool does not bring peace because it didn't arise out of peace in the first place. It didn't arise out of a true sense of one's wholeness in the first place; but as, what I will call, a feat of magic.

The Mind of God is in you, because there is only one Mind. And that one infinite mind is infinitely individualized as what are called individualities. But the mind of the individuality is not a separated mind from the One Mind. If you are experiencing consciousness, you are experiencing God, but you think you are experiencing yourself, your life. If God is intelligence and you reflect or are the direct manifestation of that intelligence, it does not mean that you now have the capacity to become creative on your own, that is what the ego is.

What you have the capacity to do is to be so congruent with the Mind of God, so absent of any effort to be creative as a personal little entity that you find yourself caught up in the flow of the Movement of Creation. Creation could be called infinite demonstration. But it is God that is being the Movement.

And when the sense of a private, personal, intelligence, or mind—which is an imagined thing—is let go of, and one lets go of identifying with it; then the Movement of God that reflects the Will of God begins to register with you as the only will you could possibly have, and the only intelligence you could possibly have. And you become swept up in the wave of the Movement of Creation feeling it as the movement of your Being, except that your Being is no longer identified by you as a private and separate mentality, separate from the Mind of God which is the Movement of Creation.

So you do not want to be little personal creators reflecting The Creator, again that is what constitutes the ego self concept. What you truly want, what is truly satisfying to you because it is the Reality of you is to be so in touch with yourself that the Movement of your Being, which is the Movement of the Father, is experienced as your Movement, your infinite Movement and your inseparability, your experiential inseparability from the Movement of God so that what you experience is what God is experiencing from God's point of view, and that is what constitutes the Christ Consciousness.

And what I am talking about is not difficult, because it is absolutely natural and it is therefore effortless. What is unnatural and effortful is trying to be an individual mentality which by virtue of its skill at being mental can cause things to happen, or appear to cause things to happen. That is not natural. But it is what you are used to, and so it feels unnatural to let go of it.

Ask and ye shall receive. But what are you going to ask for? You had better be asking for what your Being is already unfolding. And then you shall surely receive it. You will surely find it being your experience. But of course, one cannot be proud of the accomplishment, because you have not accomplished it, and that is difficult for the ego to take.

Let me put it this way, your ego has not accomplished it, but your Being has. Your ego wants to take credit though, because that is how it validates itself.

And so you will have to get used to having fulfillment for which you are not personally responsible—personally as a little ego. And you will have to begin to be willing to experience fulfillment just because it's happening, and not because you have done it, not because you have become skillful enough, or learned enough to make it happen.

I will tell you something: When you begin to experience fulfillment that you are not responsible for and which you cannot take credit for, you will also find yourself completely free of a false sense of responsibility for maintaining that fulfillment, or causing that fulfillment to happen again. And that false sense of responsibility for success is a terrible burden as many of you have experienced from time to time. That will be completely gone when you give up the apparent need to be a creator of your good, of your success, of your abundance.

Indeed, the Father is infinite and is infinitely expressing Himself, and therefore there is no incompleteness to His self expression. And yes abundance is the natural, lawful, principled, loving and actual result of the Movement of God, the Movement of what your Being is. But it is not a personal accomplishment.

It is perhaps one of the difficult things in Awakening to arrive at a point of comfort and self-appreciation when wonderful things are happening and you cannot take personal credit for them. But it is a marvelous relief and a source of very deep joy, because you become aware of the unity of All That Is as your experience, and you know how much more safe you are than when you thought you were personally responsible for your happiness and your success and your abundance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I don't have a question. I would just like to have a reading, please.

ANSWER: An energy reading?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Yes.

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. The imagery is of a canoe in a current. It's like there's very rapid forward movement. The current is strong in other words. As I watch the image the canoe changed into a porpoise or a dolphin, which is moving through the water very rapidly without displacing the water very much. It's like very powerful and very sleek and able to move through the water without creating a lot of disturbance to the water. It is as though there is rapid forward movement with a very fine balance that is being maintained.

There's a great equilibrium or balance. And the feel is the fast forward movement will not go on indefinitely, and it's as though there will be some rest from it, but in the mean time it as though you are embracing the movement very beautifully and just continue to maintain that balance. That's the only way that I can put it into words.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You know how we're all saying the question was just oh, so close. Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Aloha.

QUESTION: Communicate with us if you will more of the love and harmony from our brothers and sisters, the whales and the dolphins.

ANSWER: They are communicating it well enough. I ask why it is that they inspire you and why they inspire mankind. And I ask you if it is not perhaps their innocence, which they manage to convey wordlessly, effortlessly, just by being? And if it is not also an aspect of unconditional presence in that they are quite willing to die and they are quite willing to live without any preference. I don't mean that they are willing on their own to die for their own reasons, I mean they are quite willing to die at the hand of mankind. And they seem not to avoid it.

I will say this, dolphins are Christed manifestations on your planet, and that is why they inspire you. And you can take a lesson from the fact that you are inspired without any rhetoric from dolphins, without any teaching, but just by their simple presence and by their behavior. This will give you a hint as to what it is like to be Christly.

They are not here to make a point. They joy in Being, you could say, without preferences. Positive or negative, right or wrong, they are not caught up in the polarities. They flow in the singleness of purpose to be, and I will tell you, to be love. And they communicate this and always have without words, without language, and all peoples of all races who have experienced them have felt this. That is all that I will say at the present time.

QUESTION: Mahola

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: Would you talk about UFO's and whether we are getting visits from beings from other planets.

ANSWER: You are being visited all over the place in all kinds of ways. Is this not a visitation? Is not the presence of your guides and your actual experience with them an experience of visitation. Indeed.

There are those who are gathering in what you call your heavens. And why do you think that is? Because quite an event is beginning to transpire on your planet, the event of Awakening. And it is known, it is recognized, it is easily seen.

The illumination around your globe that does not come as a reflection from your sun, but rather from the enlightened conscious Beings, if I may put it that way, on your planet is easily visible.

Some who are gathering, are gathering to help facilitate as I am facilitating and others are facilitating this shift. Others are gathering to watch the emerging effulgence of light.

Now it may sound as though I am being contradictory here, in that I have already indicated that your bodies are Bodies of Light at this present moment. But there is a shift in the quality of the light as individual conscious Being discovers its Christhood and dares to own it.

That conscious discovery of one's divinity is visible as well as felt. And I will tell you also, that in a spiritual equivalent there is a sound, a harmony that emerges. And just as you joy at watching a beautiful flower open, we joy as our brothers and sisters consciously discover, experience and own their Christhood, their Divinity, their Sonship and Daughtership. Because along with this brightening, if you will, of the light that you are, there is the experience received and felt of your capacity to consciously be love, which is what happens when you wake up.

And so you have those gathering who when it is appropriate will be facilitators, supporters if you will. And there are others who are gathering to observe it. You must remember that all those who are asleep are a part of the Brotherhood. And so your Awakening constitutes an experience for those of the Brotherhood who are already Awake, a clearer experience of the integrity of the wholeness of the Brotherhood as those who were unconscious of it become conscious of it.

Now I want to be very clear on a point for all of you. The space brothers, or whatever it is you wish to call them, are all fully Awakened. They do not overtake or overpower human beings, and lift them up into their ships and examine them and violate them physically. Whatever they might want to know, they know. Do not be afraid of those who have come to be called the space brothers. They will not intrude, they will not present themselves where they are not wanted.

You see, we all can only respond to an active inner desire for Awakening, or for truth, or for love, or for healing. As I indicated earlier, you must get into the Kingdom of Heaven, you must open your eyes by virtue of a motivation and a reason within yourself that stems from you. And once the motivation and desire is there we can support it and encourage it.

And so you will not find yourself being intruded upon by any of us. And so when there are sightings of spacecraft, you may know that it is because an invitation and a readiness to receive or have the experience of contact has been arrived at by mankind as a whole on your globe.

And again, it will not be a time to give your power away, but to ask yourself, “What does this say about me? What am I experiencing here?” It reflects a readiness. And you do not need to be afraid that they will be alien monsters, threatening, aggressive, warlike. They are fully Awakened individualities. I will tell you this also, they do not need the spacecraft in order to arrive here, or be here. It is an accommodation to your science fiction mentality.

In other words, the appearing is occurring in language of your present perception and that which will not frighten you. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My question is about my oldest son. I feel that he does not feel that he is connected to God. And I would like to know if there is a way that I may assist him in this, or if this is for him to find on his own?

ANSWER: I would encourage you to approach this very gently with him. It is certainly something that you cannot prove to him. What I would suggest that you do is, to share with him that God is Love, that God is Life, that God is Truth, that God is Principle, that God is Mind, that God is Soul. And that therefore, wherever he recognizes Love, and Principle, and Truth, and Soul, and Spirit, and Life, he is experiencing God.

And if God is Mind and Principle and Love, God is then harmony and intelligence. And therefore, wherever he sees intelligence expressed, whether it is in a flower, or a tree, or in an idea, there is God. And if God is Mind, and mind is consciousness, then wherever he finds consciousness, there is God.

Now you will not need to do much more than that, because once you have shared that with him, he is likely to pick up on it himself, and think about what you have said. It will begin to make sense to him, and he will begin to become, let us say, defenseless against his experiencing the presence of God in this way. It will start the ball rolling. And then back off, and let the momentum of the ideas carry him at whatever speed they carry him. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. May I also have an energy reading at this time?

PAUL: This is me, Paul. The image is an image of a pool of water that is absolutely still, perfectly at peace. Mind you, I am speaking of your energy here. The only way I can put this is as though the surface of the pool is ready to respond to the, I’m going to say, the presence of a divine idea, or is ready for a divine idea to be dropped in it, and thus, create a pattern of ripples that will identify the divine idea.

The feel of it is one of very receptive readiness. And so literally the sense is that there is something, I’ll say, about to happen, there is movement that is about to occur on the surface.

Who's question was that? Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

PAUL: You're welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: I'd appreciate a clarification of the surrender required for healing, and the definition and use of a healing team.

ANSWER: Disease is the manifestation of willfulness operating at odds with one's Being. Disease, suffering is the result of the opposite of surrendering. It is the result of aggressive, self-assertive willfulness from the standpoint of a tiny, separated entity called a human being, or an ego. This is why the skillful exercise by an ego of metaphysical principles does not constitute true healing. Because there is no surrendering into one's Being.

Put more bluntly, there is no surrendering into the will of the Father, because not only was the disease the result of willfulness, but the practice of metaphysical principles from the ego standpoint is willfulness, human will. And healing that appears to result from the practice of human will does not constitute healing, nor does it constitute one's permanent invulnerability to that disease.

But when one yields up this false human will and becomes humble enough to yield to his Being—"Thy Will, not mine be done"—that is when permanent healing occurs; because there is actual clarification, actual enlightenment that results, growth, if you will. And there is no way when growth has occurred for you to be able to ever fit in again to those smaller sized shoes, or smaller beliefs.

Now, each one of you has a spiritual guide. Working along with your guide is always a fluctuating group, fluctuating in quantity of Awakened individualities, who are present to help you in terms of clarifying your experience of your body, helping to support your movement toward the conscious experience of your Body of Light. They have been called the healing team. They work under the jurisdiction of your guide. Not that your guide governs them, but in that their point of cooperation is with your guide.

You may call upon your healing team any time you want. Your healing team, the individualities would be the equivalent of what you would call divine beings, angels. But let me tell you right now that angels do not have feathers. Not they do not have wings either. But understand that the beauty of conscious individuality aware of its divinity, aware of its inseparability from the Father is exquisitely beautiful and every movement of it has the grace that you would associate with an angel, in your present conception of it.

Now, what happens when you call upon your healing team, or what happens when you call upon the Father, or what happens when you call upon a healer who is incarnated and walking among you, is that you are surrendering your sense of personal responsibility, you are surrendering your arrogant need to be able to prove something, to make something happen so that you can validate your worth. And you are saying, "I am going to let someone else in." To do that you must become defenseless.

And I will tell you something, you may have thought that the healer healed you, you may have thought that God healed you; but what has happened is that you have become defenseless, you have stopped holding yourself completely separate. And as the defenses go down you begin to be infilled with the clearer experience of truth and Reality. What happens is that your eyes open up and you see the truth.

God didn't begin to dole out a little bit more of truth or health to you because you asked. God is ever present and continuously what He is, being what He is, withholding nothing from His self-expression. "Behold, all that I have is thine. All that I am you are."

When you reach out in faith, trustingly, defensively, you let down the shield you have had up that kept you from experiencing Reality clearly, and you say you have had a healing, and you thank God. It is like thanking the sun for giving you a tan, which you have experienced because you took your shirt off. The sun was shining there all along, but until you take off that which covers up your skin you cannot get the tan.

The love of God is shining on you always. The love of the rest of the Brotherhood who are totally Awake is constantly shared with you. And it is indeed a joyful thing when one of you says, "help me." It is a wonderful thing to see you become more defenseless. It allows our unity to be more clearly experienced consciously.

So in all cases healing is the result of surrendering to the Will of God, surrendering to the presence of God that is ever present, and not shielding yourself from it by the use of and the investment of energy in ego structures.

Now it is also important for you to understand that if you call upon your healing team, if you ask your guide to have your healing team work with you for the headache, or the sprained ankle, or the broken arm, or whatever it might be; understand that these individualities cannot override your free will. You must override your free will, by choosing not to validate it. When you say, "help me," you are reaching beyond the boundaries of your ego. Your ego will not say, "help me." It says, "but Father, I'd rather do it myself."

So when there is a request for help, it is a desire for joining that comes from your Being, and it is responded to. But if you do not ask, your choice to be alone, your choice to be sad, your choice to be ill will not be violated. Because you must arrive at a point where something in you recognizes that the suffering is illegitimate, that it is an imposition upon your capacity to experience the perfection of your Being as God is Being you. And then ask.

The asking has been called prayer. But prayer has become a petitioning, rather than a felt acknowledgment of your right to your experience of your health, your perfection. And so you have asked as some pitiful, little mortal who is actually unworthy of receiving what has been asked for.

Now I will tell you something: If you ask the Father, or if you ask the healing team for help; but you at the same time sit there and say, “I am not worthy of healing,” your word will be law, your will will be what you will have. And it cannot be overridden.

No healer, no matter how great, can cause you to accept the fact of your divinity and your flawless perfection. But the moment there is the merest willingness to embrace the idea that you are the flawless self-expression of God, and therefore anything less than perfect is an illegitimate imposition upon your experience of life; you will have available to you more support than you can imagine. And if you will invite it and receive it, your healing, your Awakening, if I may put it that way, will be accelerated. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Mahalo.

ANSWER: Mahalo.

QUESTION: Aloha, Jesus.

ANSWER: Aloha.

QUESTION: Since I’ve been studying A Course In Miracles, and there was the beautiful meditation about taking your hand, and you would take us through the clouds of doubt into the Light; I’ve been using that and it felt that you were my guide. And over this weekend I’ve had some doubt raised as to that, and I want to know if that’s inaccurate or if it is accurate. Are you my guide?

ANSWER: I am not specifically your guide, but you have not reached out to your guide, and you have reached out to me. And I have been with you, and I have been working with you, and I will continue as long as you wish. Paul had to get used to the fact that I am not his personal possession.

QUESTION: Also, as far as meditation is concerned, my ego has been real active lately saying that I’m not meditating properly. And yet down deep I feel that I am.

ANSWER: Trust that feeling.

QUESTION: The questions I’ve been asking in meditation about, joy, whether to go off with Jack and Lil, traveling, the fact that if that’s accurate that my partner Ben would be getting the same messages. My feeling is that that’s all just going to be revealed in its own due time. And I’m just to hang in there—not like the cat—but to let go.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: And when my ego starts to tell me that I'm full of it, and that I'm just an airy-fairy, it loves to say that I'm (the expression has escaped me right now)... it loves to beat me up with that one. And my normal response to that is, "thank you for sharing, ego breath."

I wonder if I'm on track with that?

ANSWER: You are indeed. Take one step at a time. Do not jump unless there is something clearly ahead of you to land on. And if there is nothing clearly ahead of you to land on, then patiently wait until there is, knowing that there is a divine order to absolutely everything that is unfolding with you. It will all fall into place.

But again, I want to remind you that the guidance that is given is not only relative to the specifics, but it is also relative to your inner growth. And so pay attention to what is being uncovered in you in the process.

Your ego is very tricky, everyone's is. But the Holy Spirit is trickier. And what the Holy Spirit does is always master of the situation, and will provide guidance that will uncover most effectively the truth about you and the illusion so that they may be more easily separated. So let your attention again, not just be on the specific guidance, but what you find happening to you as a result of the guidance, the shifting that occurs within you and what comes to light as a result of the shifting. And as I said, take it one step at a time. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I also have an energy reading?

ANSWER: For this present time until we have finished answering everyone's first question we will not do anymore energy readings.

QUESTION: Mahalo.

QUESTION: Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: On July the 4th I will be entering into holy matrimony. And so I'd like to hear some dialog or conversation on marriage. And also appreciating one's sexuality in the holy relationship.

ANSWER: May I extend my congratulations.

QUESTION: Mahalo.

ANSWER: Relationships are the laboratory in which you have the opportunity to learn what unconditional love is. Marriage is the place where you have the opportunity to get to know yourself better, so that you may more humbly present yourself genuinely to your partner. Marriage is the place where you learn how to be willing to see that which is real in each and everything. And you have your husband, and you have your children to provide you with the demand for that practice.

Marriage is the place where you have the opportunity to discover just how infinite is your capacity to love. Marriage is the place where you find the bottomless reserve that is part of you to give, and give, and give without getting. I am not trying to discourage you.

QUESTION: I'm still here.

ANSWER: To have all of these things uncovered to you, revealed to you by virtue of the experience of relationships that are so close is indeed wonderful.

Now, sexuality... We are going to talk about sexuality and cooking. Both of them are going to come into play in your marriage. Are you going to make a big thing out of cooking?

QUESTION: I don't know how to cook.

ANSWER: You will learn. You do not know a lot about sex either, and the meanings involved in the experience in a committed relationship, but you will learn.

But you see, you didn't ask me about cooking in marriage, you didn't ask me about cohabiting in marriage because there is no sense of sin associated about them, there is no question, no bias applied to them in your background. I am putting sexuality in marriage together with cooking in marriage because they are both as benign as cooking. And they are both as significant a part of life in a relationship. And they are both to be embraced as easily.

It is an opportunity for sharing. It is an opportunity to let go to yield up control for both of you. And to be with each other as unconditionally as possible, making no demands upon the other, but embracing each other easily, enjoying each other easily without judgment.

Sexuality is not an obstacle to a holy relationship, nor is it an obstacle to spiritual growth or Awakening. It is an expression of love. I agree that the body can be misused so that it is not an expression of love. But we are talking about two healthy individuals here, who are not inclined to misuse the body in a way that is hurtful or harmful.

Be defenseless against sexuality, be defenseless against your husband, and he should be defenseless against you, so that there is an openness, a blending, if you will, an experience of unity, of purpose, and motive, and love.

The sexual relationship is just as much an opportunity for unconditional love as cooking is going to be, during the first year of your marriage. You will have to love yourself anyway, and your husband will have to love you anyway. And you will do it. Don't make a mountain out of a mole hill, and enjoy yourselves. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Mahalo, I sure he will also.

QUESTION: Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would rather than a question, I think it's more on the lines of clarification. In the latter part of the text in the Course you talked about that place that we would be in when we have learned our lessons in forgiveness. It's sort of described in the Course, as I recall, as a place where we find that perfect peace that the Course talks about, and there's a period there that we remain in that state before God reaches across that gap and takes our hand and takes us Home.

I would like some clarification on that space as to how that's occupied, or what we're really doing at that time.

ANSWER: It is a period of "time" in which you become comfortable with and satisfied with your peace. It is a time in which you could say your peace becomes incorporated into you. It is a time when you take possession of it or own it completely, you could call it an adjustment period—a glorious adjustment period, but an adjustment period nevertheless. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Could I have a follow up on that? Is there any relationship to that period and the guides? What I'm asking is, is this where the guides may come from this space?

ANSWER: No, indeed. This space, as it were, is an internal space of mental adjustment. It is the last part of the passage, if you will—I'm going to say passage way, but I am using that term very loosely—it is the last part of the passage into your identity as the Christ Consciousness, as the Son of God in complete possession of his divine faculties, his divine knowing, his experience of God seeing Himself perfectly.

Although you are coming into the clear experience of who you always have been, it seems as though you are having to adjust to becoming something new. And that is because what you are adjusting to is outside of the ego's definition of itself, which you are identifying with. You will move forward only as rapidly as you will allow yourself to, and the speed with which you move forward will be governed by your comfort zone, how much of your good, how much of your divinity you can embrace without feeling overwhelmed.

And this period of experiencing your peace is a period of integration, if you will, where every last vestige of inclination to identify yourself other than as the presence of the Father dissolves.

And what was described as the Father reaching out to you, means, your letting the Father become All There Is of you as He always has been. And as you let it, it will be as though the Father is reaching to you, but it is because you are letting the Father in, because every vestige of identifying yourself as something other than the presence of God expressing Himself will have left, will no longer be present in any way shape or form to be renewed or regenerated. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I will add that this is not the Course In Miracles equivalent of purgatory. It is bliss, it is truly bliss. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Speaking of bliss, do you think I could have a hug if I come up very quickly?

ANSWER: Yes.....You may still have a question.

QUESTION: First I'd like to thank you for facilitating my Awakening. I've really enjoyed the tapes, and the papers, and I've done everything that has been asked in the Course, and in the papers, and on the tapes, and I've even moved my chair into the closet—it's become quite a joke up here in Princeville, because I keep tearing back to the closet to meditating.

And I still have the illusion of something that has been going on for me for many years. I don't make saliva and I don't make tears. And I've negated that and I've used last night the authorization. And I'm just wondering, in the Course it says that we don't heal our perception. Is there something that I'm not seeing, that I'm not healing.

I mean this is years and years that I've had it, and it doesn't seem to be getting any better. And I feel that I've given permission, and I desire it. And nothing seems to be happening, so I just wondered if you could... I was going to ask for an energy thing because I thought maybe you could tell from that, but it's just a tremendous blockage that I seem to have started when I was a child with blocking my sweat and things in my body.

ANSWER: It is okay to be a human being. You are completely and physically lovable at this instant. There is nothing about your physicality that needs to be denied, in fact it needs to be embraced lovingly so that what it divinely is may emerge.

Now I encourage you to continue to use the authorization. And I also encourage you to practice the infinite patience that brings immediate results. All of you must understand that there is a necessity for persistence, for hanging in there with the truth.

Acknowledging the truth is not a way of gaining leverage on the problem. Acknowledging the truth is a matter of recognizing what is true and then being willing to abide with it. The truth is not a tool you use, or a weapon you use to kill error, or evil, or the ego.

And so I am encouraging you to use the authorization and gently persist in simply acknowledging the truth. This physical manifestation does not represent the normal function of your body, and that which does represent the normal function of your body constitutes a clearer experience of the truth about your body than what you are presently experiencing.

And so you can dare to expect to see this inactivity becoming activated. But don't be impatient. The willingness to be infinitely patience constitutes the removal of will, of willfulness, which constitutes the emergence of yielding, of saying yes to your perfection. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I don't really have a question, but I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for reminding us of our divinity, and for reminding us of our quest for unity rather than separation. And I'm thankful to be able to share with all of you here today. Thank you.

ANSWER: Thank you.

QUESTION: Welcome, Raj. There is a message that was given to me on April 17th of this year, that seems to be resonating. And so I'd like to put in the air. It was, "We want you to land with the Christ on this one."

ANSWER: Indeed. I perceive no question in that.

QUESTION: No, it just wanted to be put in the air, because it seems to be connected to the land at this time.

ANSWER: It is in the air.

QUESTION: Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Aloha.

QUESTION: The question I have today regards my two children, who aren't living with me now, they're both living with their father. And I acquiesced to the choice because I felt it seemed to be in their best interest, and I could perceive clearly that it would help my Soul evolution if I could embrace the situation as it unfolded to me. My daughters been away for two years, and my son, this will be a year this month. And they both are aware that they can come back to live with me at any time.

But recently I've had cause for anxiety, because I feel a growing sense that they are embracing more darkness than I had expected. And the anxiety prevents me from functioning like a light being that I would like to function as, or I feel that I am. What I would like to ask you is, how can I keep the channel of light open to them and act when I have to act, and also accept the situation if the situation is to be accepted?

ANSWER: I will tell you something, every single one of you that is gathered here, has always done exactly what you wanted to do. And if you were skillful and smart you managed to do it and make those around you feel as though it was their idea and it is to their credit that you have done what you have done.

Children learn this very early on. Parents want to feel responsible, and they want to feel successful. And children recognize this immediately, and manage to behave in a way that meets their parents expectations without violating the child's individuality. The child does what he wants to do, and if it happens to be in alignment with what the parent agrees with then the child conveys to that parent that the parent has been successful.

Now your children have been making choices from the first moment they drew a breath, and where they are today is a result of their choices as much as you would like to think that you have made significant contributions. If they are embracing what you have provided, it just happens to be nice that you provided it, because if you hadn't they would have found it elsewhere, because they would have gone for what they were intent upon experiencing.

There is absolutely nothing I could say during this whole workshop that would make you believe anything. Whatever you are believing today that you did not believe yesterday is because I have substantiated what you were either ready to hear or wanted to hear. And those who were not ready to hear, or did not want to hear did not return today—that is not the only reason.

But you must understand that they are following their path, and have been, as I said, from the moment they drew their first breath. And that there is inner direction in them, and that inner direction is a composite of prior growth, prior release of ego structures, and the presence of unreleased ego structures together with the overriding insistence of what they are in their totality, which is slowly breaking down their ego structures.

In other words, humanly speaking, they are a combination of the truths and understandings that they have learned, as well as their ignorance's that have not been dealt with, and divinely speaking, what they are as God created them is embracing this conglomeration of ignorance and intelligence with the nurturing guidance and impulsion to wake up.

Now, you cannot bring the light to them and force them to see it. You could take steps to bring them home so that you could provide them with the environment and the opportunity to see the light that you feel is so important to them, because it is so important to you. But it would not be appropriate, because they are where they are by choice, and their choice is not unaffected by what they divinely are. In other words, their choice has not been unaffected by their divinity.

Now you must release a false sense of responsibility here. And when you think of them you embrace them in the light, because they are in it, and your acknowledgment of it is an acknowledgment of an already existing fact. And you love them in your heart, and you embrace them in your love, but not with a sense of being responsible for them, and as I said yesterday, entrust them to their divinity.

I will tell you something else: The Holy Spirit utilizes every circumstance to the advantage of your divine Being, to the advantage of your Awakening. And no matter what ignorance you might be laboring under, and no matter what ignorance they may be laboring under, you can count on it that the Holy Spirit will utilize that on behalf of their Awakening, in ways that will be specifically and uniquely contributive to their Awakening in such a meaningful way that they cannot miss it. Now do dare to entrust them to their divinity. Do dare to entrust them to the Holy Spirit.

And as an aside, I want to share with you what the Holy Spirit is. The Holy Spirit is your divinity, held in trust, while you dally with the ego. And that is why when you release the ego, when you decide not to energize it any further, and it is completely gone, and you are Home, and you are in your “Right Mind” there will no longer be the Holy Spirit. There will be God experiencing Himself/Herself perfectly, and recognizing Himself/Herself infinitely.

And that awareness that God has of God’s infinite Movement, constitutes the Christ Consciousness, which is infinitely individualized as conscious individuality. And so there will be the Father Being the Son. But since the Son will not be an entity or identity separate or different from the Father, it will all be the Father. And so instead of being the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit, it will be God, All That Is.

So when you are listening to the Holy Spirit, which came into existence the moment you decided to dally with an ego sense, a private sense of things, when you rely upon the Holy Spirit you are truly leaning into your own divinity and beginning to rely upon it and trust it, and therefore it constitutes an integral and necessary part of your, shall I say, reintegration, your Awakening.

Your children are right where they belong. You are right where you belong. Don’t be meddlesome. And understand that it is not your responsibility to save them. Because in the first place they are not truly in even what could be called a humanly detrimental situation, even though you would not choose to be there, and you would find it uncomfortable to be there.

Recognizing what is and what is not your responsibility will help you to let go of what is not your responsibility and be about the business and the joy of living your own life. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I understand. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Shalom.

ANSWER: Shalom.

QUESTION: You have referred to us as the Sons and Daughters of God, Son/Daughter. In the Course, as in much of life here on planet Earth the terms are masculine, the Father, the Brotherhood, the Sonship. I just wondered if this was a matter of convenience?

ANSWER: Exactly, nothing more than that.

QUESTION: I just wonder why sometimes they don’t do it the other way for convenience?

ANSWER: It would be more strenuous, not only for the men, but for the women to rethink in terms of the femininity of God and the femininity of Being. We took the easiest way out, because it is easiest for you. But it is absolutely essential for you to understand that God is Father/Mother/God, even though father and brother and mankind and brotherhood are the words most commonly used. Whether you are a woman, or whether you are a man you have a sense of what the word brotherhood means. And to use the word sisterhood would not convey as full a meaning as the word brotherhood does.

And the issue isn't really gender, the issue is waking up. And so whatever facilitates that most easily is what is done. But understand that God is Father/Mother/God, and that man is male/female, and women are female/male, if you will. And men must come in touch with their femininity, their yieldingness, their receptiveness, their allowingness, their sensitivity; just as women must come into a clearer experience of their strength, their stamina, their power, their authority, etc.

But women must not in the process of gaining their experience of their strength forsake their femininity, nor must men forsake their masculinity as they become more sensitive, and soft, and feeling, and yielding.

Please don't delay your Awakening, any of you, on the basis of a grammatical decision. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Can I just ask you one more quick question? I wonder if you could say anything about human beings eating other animals to survive.

ANSWER: At the bottom line, you do what works, and that is intelligence. But if you have more choices available to you than eating the flesh of an animal, then I would encourage you—and it is more consistent with the nature of the construction of your body—to not eat the flesh of animals; but to enjoy the abundance of fruits, and vegetables, and grains, etc. If you wish you can say that I endorse vegetarianism.

But what I endorse is intelligence, and your body was not designed to digest meat. And animals, you could say, are sentient, conscious life forms. Vegetables are not. And we will not get into the complexity of that at this time. Vegetables, and fruits, and nuts, and grains are what your body is designed to digest and function most efficiently with.

But at the bottom line, you do what works. And if you are starving and a chicken runs across the road, grab it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In 1982 my mother took her life, and I had always thought that it was best for me to be strong, so to speak, and to bury those feelings. And I'm finding now that it's been coming up in other ways, of anger, and just frustrations that I have. And I don't know how to deal with it. And I'm wondering am I doing the right thing by not addressing it, or letting it go, or I really don't know what to do about it It's coming up for me now though that I'm starting to cry about it, where as before I never did.

ANSWER: Indeed, I would encourage you when the tears come, to let them flow and do not stifle the crying. I will tell you something, you are getting in touch with your softness, your vulnerability, your yieldingness, your capacity to love, when the tears come.

There is nothing you can do obviously about what has happened. But I will tell you something, you do not have the right to judge what she has done, anymore than she would have the right, if she were still here to make judgments about what you are doing.

It is important for you to feel your feelings about this issue, not because there is some deep psychological problem associated with it, but because you are not able to breath easy about it.

There is not as much anger as you think there is. And underneath the anger is your capacity to love her, in spite what she did, in spite of whether it seems reasonable or not. And it is your capacity to feel your love, and to feel your softness, and to feel your defenselessness. It is important for that not to be unavailable to you. It is important for that to be available to you.

You should not have to go around holding yourself tense about this issue. Because whether it is anger, or whether it is tears, at the bottom line it is you getting in touch with your defenselessness again, and realizing that you are safe in your defenselessness, and that you do not need to hold yourself tight, and defended, and therefore conflicted within yourself.

It is not likely that you will need to work this through with a counselor. But do not be reluctant to do so, do not be reluctant to find someone with whom you can explore your feelings. And I have chosen my words very carefully there. Do not find someone whom you can talk about your feelings, and talk about your indignation, and your anger. Because that does not constitute being in touch with your feelings.

Find someone with whom you can explore your feelings around this issue, and feel them, even if it is the anger. Because as you feel the anger, it rises, it bubbles over the top, and what rises up underneath the anger is your capacity to love, which the anger and the frustration has squelched. And before long all of the anger has bubbled over the top, and what is coming forth, and what you are experiencing is your gentle capacity to love. And that will constitute an emergence of a feeling of wholeness in you that it is your right to be experiencing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I also ask, is this one of the blocks that I have in to loving myself. Because I do not feel love for myself as I am, a perfect person in this third-dimension. Is this what it is that is blocking me from getting in touch with my guides?

ANSWER: No, it is your ego that is blocking those things. This aspect, or this incident relative to your mother and the feelings you have around that incident do not have very much controlling effect on the rest of your life. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I thank you.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel such an affinity for your words that you share with us. And I would like to thank you so much.

ANSWER: I am glad that you agree with me.

QUESTION: I would like to thank you so much for giving us the Course, and for the clarification and communication that you are giving all of us now. It truly is most helpful to myself and I know many others.

My question is, as I feel such an affinity for your information, I wonder why I feel differently about other beings who are channeling or communicating with us through people? Why is there a variation among their messages, and are they all of equal awareness?

ANSWER: There is such a variety of egos that it takes a variety of expressions of truth to reach them, to register with them. And so the truth is expressed in the language of the perception of those who are listening. I have said it before, that Ramtha speaks boldly for those who are hard of hearing.

Now the process of Awakening is occurring, it is not that it is going to occur, it is occurring. The message, if you will, of Awakening will get through just like the early Pony Express. And it will come through in whatever language registers with those who are in the process of Awakening. Obviously what would trigger Awakening with an Australian Aborigine will be different from what will trigger the Awakening of a Scientist in the Western World.

Now don't fret over apparent inconsistencies. Underlying the style, or the accent, or the appearance is fundamentally the same message. But the way in which it is presented, and how much it cost to hear it all plays apart for those who are attending. There are those who do not value what does not cost an arm and a leg, and so they will not come to this gathering (even though some of you might have felt it cost an arm and a leg). And so they will be met where they are. Some are less contemplative than others, some need fires built under their derriere.

And so whatever it takes is provided all in the context of the process of Awakening. And so enjoy what you are able to enjoy, and disregard what does not register with you. But do not fret over the language of expression. And do not look for absolute consistency.

You will find from time to time that I might tell you what seems to be opposite to what I have told you before. But it will be because at that moment that is what will trigger the Awakening. You must understand that it is not so much the information as, what I will call, the slight of hand that is brought into play to distract your ego while I connect with you at the level of your Being. And whatever it takes to distract your ego, or cause you to voluntarily shift into a clearer space, I will do.

Do not be disturbed by the differences, but enjoy the fact that movement is occurring no matter what the language of its expression.

I am not going to list those who are being channeled and give them credits or discredits. You will have to pay attention to you, just as you must when you are listening to me. And what makes sense, and what nourishes and triggers your increasing clarity, take hold of it. And what does not, trash it. Or at least put it on the shelf until such time as it suddenly makes sense to you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I ask then about sometimes people have said that there are negative entities appearing to them and they need to protect themselves with white light and certain sayings and this type of thing. Could you talk about that?

ANSWER: This is an expression of ignorance, very simply. I will tell you something: Just as you are not able to sit out here and convey a message to someone else at a distance through what is called telepathy, those who are in the three-dimensional frame of reference who are incarnated cannot break through the density of that three-dimensional frame of reference and speak with another who is also bound within the three-dimensional frame of reference, but who has passed on.

The limits of the ego frame of reference does not allow for communication to occur in this manner. The ignorant cannot communicate with the ignorant over the barrier of what is called death, or the transition. We are able to speak because I am not blinded by ego structures any longer. Those only who can convey any communication to you whatsoever are those who are totally Awake. And there, of course, will not be any dark or negative energy being expressed.

The dark energies that other people feel are being communicated to them are not coming from any source outside their own limit and fear. And those who seem to be channeling entities expressing negative unintelligent ideas are not channeling at all, but giving "creative voice" to their very own ego, no matter how much they believe they are doing otherwise. There is indeed integrity to the universe, and to the way things work. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Aloha.

ANSWER: Aloha.

QUESTION: One of the greatest teachers I've had is a major illness that's been with me for three years. And although it's improved dramatically in the last six months there's still many symptoms. And as I meditate I feel it's really time to move on into total health. And I don't know what's holding me back and what more there is to learn. I really honor all that I've learned and the transformation. It's been fabulous.

ANSWER: I understand completely what you are saying. What I want you to understand is that the learning has not been a blessing derived from the illness, but from the use the Holy Spirit has put the illness to on your behalf. The reason it is important to understand this is so you will not value the illness to the point of not wanting to let go of it until you have gotten the maximum learning from it. You may release it, and whatever learning is needed will continue, because the Holy Spirit will continue to utilize whatever else is going on to your benefit and on your behalf.

Very specifically, what is delaying it now is the desire to get the maximum learning. And in order to have "the maximum learning" it is not wise to let go of it prematurely, it is not wise to let go of the disease prematurely. And so you are holding on to it. Do not value the problem as though it were the source of the learning, or as though its intent or reason for existing was for your benefit.

Under all circumstances disease, inharmony, illness, etc., is a manifestation of a resistance to Reality and it is an illegitimate imposition upon your experience of your perfection. And so do not honor your problems, no matter how well the Holy Spirit has turned the problem to your advantage. Don't value illusion, even though in the process of your releasing of your releasing it you learn so much. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Aloha, brother.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would also add my thanks for your wisdom and enlightenment, all of the wonderful help you've been giving us this weekend. I've been totally delighted as I watch one question after another pass through my mind as you answer them without them ever being voiced. I come to this point then simply by asking if you would share with me that which you know would be most beneficial to me at this particular point in my unfoldment.

ANSWER: Very simply, it is important for you to know that the red carpet that has been unrolling in front of you does not have an end. You have been wondering where the end is, or having a sense that it might be coming up shortly. Do not labor under that idea, and do not prepare yourself for it. Continue to take one step at a time on it. Embrace it, enjoy the fact that it is unfolding in front of you.

And do not worry what is going to be at the end of the next 30 yards of carpet, let yourself be supported fully by the carpet that is immediately under your feet. It is a false fear that is presenting itself. And understand that indeed the ego presents ideas, concepts in the form of suggestions just as a hypnotist does. And you have the prerogative not to validate and energize, and become subject to those suggestions. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I received that it wasn't so important for me to ask a question, but just in the being here the things would happen to me that I needed. I would be worked on in the levels that I needed to be worked on. But I do find that being pregnant six months, I have questions about the nature of life.

ANSWER: It is a miracle.

QUESTION: Indeed. I'm approaching the birth process and...

ANSWER: No, you are approaching the birthing process, the little one is approaching the birth process. And do understand that you will not be doing this alone, that it is an experience of unfoldment for both of you. And I am going to pass on some very wise counsel to you: Love is the art of giving. And I want you to remember that in delivery. Love is the art of giving. Unconditional giving. Continue.

QUESTION: I guess that's the end of my question. Thank you very much. (I think she was crying.)

ANSWER: You are welcome. Feel what you are feeling, and don't resist it. And do remember that the nature of life is a miracle. Divinely speaking, miracles are absolutely natural, but from the standpoint of the partial view the Movement of Life seems miraculous, because it goes beyond what can be defined from within the ego's limited frame of reference.

And so do not try to peg the nature of life completely at this moment relative to this birth, but participate in the process of the birthing, and feel the miracle of it. And hold that child in your arms and feel the miracle of it. And you will know something of the nature of life that the ego cannot embrace. And it will be part of your breakthrough, if you will, part of your Awakening process. Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Hello.

QUESTION: I would like to hear what I need to know at this moment, in relation to my desire to start running now that my health has improved. And what are the possibilities of this?

ANSWER: First of all, don't run with great intent or great intensity. Let it be pleasurable, let it be simple enjoyable exercise. Don't have an end result, like running ten miles a day, so that you can then run twelve miles a day, so that you can then run fourteen miles a day. It is good for you to enjoy the pleasure of running.

Now I would encourage you to start out gently. The healing with your heels is rapidly coming to a conclusion. But initially I encourage you to run gently, evenly, on level ground, not on sand, not on grass. And just enjoy the freedom of the movement, and keep it easy, it will be good exercise whether you do it strenuously or not. So avoid doing it strenuously.

Now at the same time I want you to understand that as you begin to acknowledge that your body has a divine intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly, you will begin to realize that the health of your body is not solely dependent upon what you put into it or the activities you give to it. And so you will begin to eat with more ease, you will begin to move and run and engage in physical activities more easily, because there will be an underlying feeling or confidence that your bodies natural inclination is to function smoothly, efficiently, comfortably and well.

So begin the running and do it easily, and enjoy it. But be very alert not to turn it into a discipline, a workout. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I need your wisdom on...

ANSWER: You have my wisdom.

QUESTION: I need your comments on an issue of patience related to trust. We're involved in a major change and direction in our lives, the last phase of which involved physical relocation to Kauai. Now this has all been done under guidance, and each step has progressed quite smoothly. There's one remaining phase and that involves the sale of some physical property.

We've received in our meditations that the sale—which this part of it is necessary to effect the complete physical change—the sale itself is immanent. But we have also I think because of our ego involvement and anxiety related to this have been given false information in our meditations, specifically we were given dates on which this was to occur, and it didn't occur.

ANSWER: Let me explain something for your benefit and everyone else's. The future is not fixed. It is not sitting on a reel of film waiting to come past the lens of the projector so you can see what it was inevitably going to be anyway. Whenever there are egos involved relative to what you would call a prediction, the prediction cannot be accurate. It can be very close to accurate, but the reactionary state of egos causes the information to be not absolute.

Any answer that you get from guidance relative to the future is not absolute. It is based upon all of the information as of the moment in which the information is being given and what the greatest likelihood is based upon that information.

So I would encourage you when there is a time span involved to check in periodically during that time span to see whether any elements have come into play of ego reaction that would alter the original answer that you have gotten relative to time. You will find that when an answer is given relative to the future, that is not subject to ego reactions, that those answers will turn out to be highly accurate.

So it is not that your egos have necessarily gotten in the way and caused you to hear incorrectly, it is just that the nature of the question elicits an answer that is not an absolute answer, and therefore you must check in relatively frequently in order to be updated. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: May I ask for an update from you?

ANSWER: Indeed, you may. The guidance you have gotten, that it is immanent is correct.

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. He indicated that the sale was likely to occur or to be definite within seven days. And I said is there like an outside limit, a certain amount of time within which it is almost bound to have happened. And he said fourteen to sixteen days.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Unfortunately money ever to present. I am wondering actually if it's time for me to start charging for things that—I do a lot of things that I don't make any money from and it's creating a terrible...

ANSWER: Why do you do that?

QUESTION: I do it because I think I'm good at it.

ANSWER: Why do you do it for nothing?

QUESTION: That's what I'm asking. Well, I do it for nothing, because I have another profession that I'm supposed to be making money at. And I'm wondering if there out of balance by purposely?

ANSWER: It is appropriate for you to be making a specific charge for what you are doing.

QUESTION: Do you know which part of what I'm doing I'm supposed to be charging. I don't seem to be making money from either one actually.

ANSWER: From the new activity you should be placing a charge. And it is appropriate for you to base it in terms of your time, rather than what it is you are doing. Do not be reluctant to demand a fair exchange. And above all don't try to be the one to decide whether what you are doing is worth $10 or $40 or $50. That is the persons prerogative who avails themselves of what you do. But let there be reciprocal balance. Don't be afraid to honor what you are doing.

Now, I encourage you on the basis that you are to make a charge for what you're doing, listen for how much you are to charge, listen for inner guidance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Aloha, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In our last conversation you suggested that I allow for clarity concerning Marty, and also to not make any emotional investment in this situation. And I was wondering if you would amplify this a bit for me?

ANSWER: Very simply, I meant for you to be allowing without biasing your attitude positively or negatively, without deciding how it ought to happen, or how it ought not to happen so that you may judge how happy or unhappy you ought to be. I meant for you to be allowing, and open, and unconditional—unconditional to see what ;your Being is in the process of unfolding for you. And what your being is unfolding for you is quite wonderful.

Do not formulate concepts in your mind ahead of time, with which to gage the reality that does happen. Let the reality happen, and let it define itself. That is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

PAUL: I want to say, when I got the letter in the mail asking if we would possibly—possibly, can you imagine—possibly consider coming all the way to Hawaii to do a workshop, I was absolutely delighted and was... I got a little chuckle out of the fact that there was any hesitancy, or that there was any thought that I might be hesitant to come over here. I want to express my sincerest thank you for the invitation. It has been a wonderful experience. Kauai has been a wonderful experience. All of you have been wonderful. And it's been great to be here. And so I want to say thank you to all of you.

A Gathering with Raj
Winnipeg, Manitoba
1989
(Volume 1)

Winnipeg, Manitoba—1989

TAPE: ONE

QUESTION: I would like to ask you about the incest issue that has come up in my family? I'm wondering what your comments are, if there are any better ways that I could be handling this? If there any lessons that you would like me to learn from this that I haven't learned already?

ANSWER: This is a loaded question, simply because there is so much conditioning associated with it—not just in your family, but in all families, generally speaking.

Now, what makes this most difficult to approach is the fact that very few individuals are willing to own the fact that they play an integral if not key part in every experience they have, and no one is ever an innocent victim.

Now incest is a dance that is played by two individualities. And both are partners in the process. Now this is quiet revolting to many people. But if I were to say that a successful marriage, or a successful business partnership was the result of a dance played by two who were partners in the endeavor, and that it was important for each member of that partnership to recognize and own the part he or she has played in it, you would be quite delighted with the realization of the necessity of owning the part you played.

Now you all must become willing to be honest. You must be willing to look at the facts, whether they are pleasing you or not pleasing you. Because it is only in your capacity to recognize the key role you play in your experience, whether you are liking it or not, whether it seems constructive or destructive, it is only in your ability to own the part you play that you will realize your power. And it is only in realizing your power that you will discover your invulnerability. And it is only in discovering your invulnerability that you will be able to let go of placing guilt, either outside yourself or within yourself.

Understand that the only reason guilt comes into play, is because you do not see a way to freedom from the negative that you must own or take responsibility for. And since you cannot find a way out into your freedom, you must come to some sort of means of living with the negative, and that causes guilt to come into play. Because guilt suggests that a penalty or penance is being paid that may earn you your freedom that you can't otherwise get.

Now, one who is a "victim of incest," as I said, is a partner in a dance. And if one partner is a victim of incest, so is the other partner—the one who has been incestuous, the one conceptualized as the instigator of the incest. But I will tell you again, there is not one who is the cause of it, and the other the victim of it.

Both are doing the dance, and therefore both are being the cause, and both are being the victim, because neither one of them is in a position of experiencing their integrity. They both lose their integrity in the process. They are both victimized and they both need healing. They both need love. They both need the recognition on someone's part of their essential divinity so that they may feel joined with, in terms of the integrity that is inviolably theirs, and thus let go of the guilt that both are feeling, and thus come out of their prison into their freedom.

Now, as I said, this is a difficult situation to deal with, because there is such a strong sense of victimization. There is also a strong sense of one of them being the victimizer. And also a very strong sense of guilt. Each one involved feels guilty for what has happened. And each one is paying penance. And each one is feeling a sense of worthlessness that will have to be overcome, but which they feel it is impossible to overcome.

Now I want to be very clear here, because there tends to be misunderstanding on these issues. I am not saying that incest is all right. I am not saying that it is just one of the many events or experiences one can have in the course of living. Incest is something which deprives those participating in it from the direct experience of their integrity, and thus it violates their integrity. It is not something which should be allowed. It is not something which should be condoned.

But that does not mean that judgment and criticism and penalty must be forthcoming. It means that someone must necessarily have the degree of love activated that constitutes a joining with the integrity that the act of incest seems to be covering up so that those participating in it might feel a strengthening at the fundamental level of their worth and validity, and thus be able to let go of the guilt, the sense of deserved punishment, the sense of unworthiness, as well as any further need to act out incest.

Healing is needed. But healing will not come from guilt. It will not come from judgment. It will only come from love.

I will tell you something: There are not degrees of illusion. There is just illusion or Reality. Some illusions are not worse than other illusions. Be very careful not to indulge in self-righteous judgment. Because those that you would judge relative to incest are not suffering from an illusion greater than the illusions that the rest of you are experiencing—of separation from the Father, or separation from your fellow man, or the justification to use a phone that is out of order that will allow a call to go through without putting a quarter in.

That which violates your integrity, violates your integrity, and there are not degrees of violation. And every single one of you deserves to have your divinity acknowledged so that you may release the sense of guilt or the lack of integrity that you feel within yourself.

As long as you have degrees of illusion, or degrees of seriousness of illusion, which therefore call for varying intensities of punishment, you are caught in the ego frame of reference and you are blinded to your possibilities for Awakening just as much as the one you are judging. And joining with that one in his sense of unworthiness, by becoming unworthy yourself in your engagement in judgment, is not going to help anyone even though the ego will cheer you on.

Now what is needed is for the sense of the integrity and power of each person involved in the incestuous experience to be bolstered, strengthened, illuminated, brought forth so that that one's sense of his or her power might return his or her substance and integrity so that the feeling of worthlessness and of guilt might be easily set aside.

Above all don't try to get justice. I will tell you what justice is: Justice is coming out from under any sense of guilt, any sense of worthlessness that one might be engaging in. That is justice. And that doesn't involve proving anyone wrong. That doesn't involve getting even.

I will tell you something else: To come into a sense of ones worth that is present, regardless of any action one has engaged in or not engaged in, is to come into the experience of ones primitive, faultless, perfectness, which is the truth about oneself. And that is available as an experience, always. Because not one of you, no matter what you have done, can ever have become less than what God has expressed Himself/Herself as. And each one of you, no matter what you have or have not done, has this experience of faultless perfection available.

But you will not access it until you are willing to let go of the judgment and the sense of guilt that you bring upon yourselves. Your employment of guilt relative to yourself is what covers up your ever available experience of your divine perfection, your Sonship and Daughtership, your divinity.

The trouble with the sense of victim and victimization is that it causes one to feel powerless until something out there changes, until the victimizer changes, or until the victimizer pays for his victimization. And that is an experience of loss of integrity, loss of worth, loss of authorship of ones own experience.

And without that sense of authorship one is at the mercy of externals. And I'll tell you, that's passing the buck. When you say, "I cannot be happy until so-and-so pays for what he did," or when you say, "I cannot be abundant until the economy changes," you are giving your power away by your very word. And you are a victim, but you are a victim of your word. You are not the victim of the economy. And you are not the victim of another. You are the victim of your very own word.

Now everyone involved here needs to be able to give a new word to himself or herself. And that word is, "I am the author of my experience. I have been the author of my experience. And those experiences that I have evolved for myself that I have not liked, I am not going to evolve for myself anymore. I have the authority not to evolve it anymore. And I am not going to fool myself into believing that I don't have the authority to evolve something new, by blaming someone else for my experience. And I am going to release my victimizer, whether it is the economy or whether it is another human being. I am going to release my victimizer from my judgment that that one is the cause of my suffering. I am going to release myself and I am going to release my other. And I am going to evolve a new experience." That is what uncovers one's freedom. And that is what allows one to let go of guilt.

Victims have a difficult time hearing the truth about their victimization, because the ego has so convinced the victim that the cause of the victimization lies with the victimizer, and covers up the fact that it is ones own ego that is the victimizer and not the one that the ego projects the blame upon out there. Such a call for justice from victims deludes those interested in coming to resolution and healing.

Again, the justice that is needed is the experience of ones integrity, that one is solely responsible for allowing himself or herself to experience or reject.

Justice doesn't come from circumstances or external events. Justice comes from one letting himself off the hook, releasing the judgment and the hate and the self-depreciation, and daring to look within with the desire to know, "What is True in me? What is Divine in me? In what way am I the direct expression of the Father? Where are the qualities of the Father in me?" And this question shouldn't be asked to prove that they're absent, but rather should be asked on the basis that those qualities of the Father are there together with the desire to open up and experience them.

Every single individuality who is experiencing the three-dimensional only frame of reference, every individuality who is not experiencing Totally Awakened Consciousness, is the victim of a partial view that is being treated as though it is whole. They are the victim of an ego sense of reality, a false or incomplete sense of reality.

And if you are going to say that so-and-so is a real victim, and so-and-so is not the victim but the victimizer, and they are different, and one truly needs to be punished and the other didn't deserve to be punished, then you are not allowing yourself into the realization of love that dissolves both the penalty for being the victim, as well as the penalty for being the victimizer and promoting that revelation of the Christ of each one of those individualities who stands there and appeared to do a dance of ignorance. The justice is in bringing out the divinity of both individuals, and their release from the victimization of their ignorance of their divinity.

Now I am not here to promote what the ego calls justice. I am here to promote Real justice, where every victim of every kind becomes freed from that label and freed from the penalties associated from that label.

I encourage you with your family not to make a mountain out of a mole hill. I would encourage you to support and help illuminate an awareness of the actual integrity of everyone involved. Not the integrity of the dance that occurred, because the dance did not express integrity. But the dance also did not express the true nature of the individuals involved. And you had better dare to home in on the true nature, rather than the false sense so that you are magnifying the truth rather than the illusion, and thus contributing to the healing of everyone concerned. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I believe you've almost answered my question already. I'm afraid, I have a fear of being found out, of really expressing my true feelings. I feel sometimes that I'm like a lit candle hiding under a bushel basket. And I've used all the escapes to hide my integrity. If you can tell me what I'm so afraid of, or why am I so afraid to reveal myself or to be me I would appreciate it? But most importantly, how can I let go of this fear so I can get on with my life?

ANSWER: I'm very glad that you use the illustration of the candle hid under the bushel basket. Because the candle is lit, and what is being hid is the light. You are not covering over a darkness, you are covering over a light. Secondly, it is not you who are covering over the light, but your ego. Again, the ego is a limited or finite sense of what you are in your totality, what you are actually, divinely. It is a limited perception of the infinity that you are.

Now, how do you come out from under this shielding, you might say, that your ego uses to cover over the light? Well, you don't become overwhelmed by that shielding of the ego. You don't become reactive and indignant to the ego. You get in touch with the light in you. And you love the light in you. And you desire to experience it more fully. That is what nurtures the light. That is what causes it's illumination to expand.

You see, it isn't that you don't want to experience yourself fully. It isn't that you don't want to share it fully. It is that the ego knows that if you share who you are fully, it and its limits will lose their substance and the ego will cease to exist. The ego is afraid to have who you divinely are step forth without apology.

You are not your ego. You are more than the limited ego sense of yourself that is prevalent. And the you that would love the light, and desire to see it grow and expand and illuminate every crevasse and every cranny and every part of what you divinely are, that which would love the light is not the ego, but is truly you. And so when you—who you truly are—love the light in you, and you give your attention to it, rather than overcoming the ego or doing anything with the ego, you will have withdrawn your energy and your attention from the ego, and it will immediately begin to lose substance.

All of you are afraid to wake up because you are afraid you will lose your identity. That is what the ego suggests. It suggests that if you wake up you will lose your identity. And the ego speaks with your own voice. And so you hear, “I am afraid to wake up because I will lose my identity.” But the fact is, that when you wake up the ego will lose its sense of identity. And you will become empowered and come into the full experience of who you are, not just a sense of yourself, not just a sense of your divinity, but the actual experience of yourself and the actual experience of your divinity. And so your integrity will be greatly enhanced. And your individuality will be completely crystal clear to you.

Now, you will not move into your freedom to be you without apology, by attempting to find out what there is in you that is afraid. That is the trap. You will have to let this part of you—this ego, that expresses its fear as though it is you expressing your fear—you will have to let it do it. Just notice that it is doing it. And you give your attention to whatever awareness you have of this light that is hid under the bushel, and love that light, and yield to it. Let yourself into it. Acknowledge it.

And daily refresh yourself with an encounter with it, if I may put it that way, an encounter that can be experienced in meditation, or some short period of time in which your intent is to feel the light in you. But don't try to do battle with that which is covering it up. In other words, don't become distracted by the bushel basket that is hiding your light, else the bushel basket will be strengthened. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've been sort of puzzling about how to frame my question. I would like to know more about animals, and plants and our relationship to them. And I think the reason I have a problem framing the answer is because I view the animals from an ego perspective, as I see myself much as an ego. My question is basically I guess, what are the animals? If they are expressions of God, why do they seem to have a lack? They don't seem to be as intelligent as we are, or some of the abilities. What is our relationship to the animals?

ANSWER: Yes, the animals are expressions of the Father, of God. They are part of the infinite self-expression of the Father. They are absolutely as divine and eternal as you are. And they seem to lack and they seem to suffer, because they have egos also.

Now, they appear not to be as intelligent because you have lost the means of communion. You have no language for communicating. And just as when you are around someone who does not speak your language well, they appear not to be as intelligent as you, because you must find more grade school level terminology in order to communicate with them, even though they may be a physicist, or a graduate of a university. Likewise, with the animals that you have no means of communicating with, they appear to be less intelligent.

But I will tell you something: Every living thing is conscious, even a tree. And anything which is conscious, is consciousness. And consciousness is Mind, and Mind is God. And, therefore, all that God is is fully embodied in every single form of self-expression that the Father has expressed Himself as. And so the means of communicating must come forth. And there is, indeed, some progress being made.

However, there is such a strong belief that trees, plants and animals are lesser forms of life. There is a great resistance to, even an unwillingness to actually have, shall I say, communication, to actually experience the discovery of the fullness of the self-expression of the Father in a particular plant or tree or animal, etc., especially the ones you do not like, like centipedes or snakes or spiders or mosquitoes.

The bad relationships that you experience with these creatures arises from an inability on your part to identify them properly as fully the expression of God, an expression of God which embodies all the intelligence that God is, just as you embody all the intelligence that God is.

They get a bad rap, because you make the assumption that they are a lesser form of life, that there is not intelligence there, but just knee jerk instinctive reaction. And it is only the very few who dare to deal with “pests” from, shall I say a metaphysical standpoint, a willingness to communicate with them and say, “It does not work out well for us both to occupy the same space, but there is a place for you just as there is a place for me. And, therefore, I will be in my place and I will ask you to be in your place.”

Those who are beginning to see the connection and to acknowledge the intelligence that is there, and to actually address these “pests,” are finding them moving out of their immediate experience, and so there is freedom for both to live without imposing on the other.

There is a willingness to attempt to communicate with the dolphins. But you see what has happened, man has come to a point where he’s willing to assume that maybe the dolphins are as intelligent and maybe even more intelligent than man. And so man is, the researchers are, truly looking for evidences of it, with an expectation of finding it. And that is what is beginning to open the door.

Now, you have a new way to approach the life forms on your planet. Understand that these life forms have egos. In other words, they are experiencing a limited sense of what they divinely are also. And when you see your pet behaving from an ego stance of impatience or distress or frustration with you, because you didn’t take them with you when you left, and you come home and you find your favorite purse torn up, or the toilet paper roll pulled out all over the kitchen, and they have obviously had an ego temper tantrum and are letting you know of their distress, understand that just as with your fellow man you are not to respond from an ego level of retaliation.

But what is being called for is your acknowledgment of their intelligence, of their divinity. Talk to them. And the next time you go somewhere, say to them, “I cannot take you with me. It will not work out right now, but I will be home in an hour, or I will be home this evening. I will see you then.” Let them know that you care. It is not as foolish as it sounds. They do not have to understand English. But do express the words that focus or crystallize a meaning in your mind relative to them, an intelligent meaning and assume that they have the means to grasp the meaning and understand what needs to be understood.

I've said before that love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and every thing, Real with a capital "R." Extend this to your pets. Extend this to the creatures in your environment. And watch the harmony and the order that unfolds. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is about the book, "Right use of Will, Healing and Evolving the Emotional Body." I may have a follow up question depending on the answer to the first one, which is: Have the understandings given in this book really been received from God in the first person?

ANSWER: What do you think?

QUESTION: It feels right. Yes, I think so, but...

ANSWER: I am not going to judge that book. I am going to give you a means of understanding whether it is valuable for you or not.

At the bottom line, there is only one right use of will, and that is to choose not to use it. What that means is, to become so unwillful that you are able to become quiet within yourself to feel what is appropriate for you—in effect to feel the will of the Father, because you are the direct and full expression of the Father.

The only presence you have is the presence that the Father is expressing of Himself. You do not have a separate presence. I agree that you appear to be separate from the Father, and you appear to be separate from every other one in this room, but that is not the fact. You do not have a presence of your own. The only thing that is there is the Father being Himself/Herself, the Father/Mother, the Movement of Creation Itself is what is present there, and the only thing that is present. And it constitutes your true individuality. It constitutes who you truly are, but not a you separate from the Father. And not a you separate from anyone else in the room.

In choosing not to use what you call will, you are becoming humble enough to yield to the Father in you—the Father/Mother in you. And in yielding to the Father/Mother in you, is to yield to your capital "S" Self. And in that process you discover who you truly are, what this capital "S" Self is. And you begin to claim less and less of a presence as a separate entity or personality. And you begin to allow the very natural and inevitable experience of wholeness that comes forth as you yield to the Father's Will.

And when you have completely yielded to the Father's Will, you will have come into the full experience of what your individuality is. And you will feel whole. And you will feel invulnerable. And you will feel the power of your presence. And you will feel your safety. And you will feel your actions, if I may put it that way. And everything that you do "in the world, in the universe," will be nothing more and nothing less than the Movement of the Father, except that from that vantage point of conscious awareness the Movement of the Father, those words "The Movement of the Father" will be inseparable from your experience of you being who you Truly Are.

One must be very careful when the word will is used. Because everyone is very familiar with what human will is, and it is very difficult to let go of that. It is very difficult not to attempt to exalt the human will so that it becomes a clear reflection of the Father's Will, or a clear example of the Father's Will, but nevertheless, a will separate from the Father's Will, a separate will that mirrors the Father's Will, if you will. But that's still separation. That is still duality.

And so you must be willing to use your human will for one thing only, to choose to set it aside, to choose not to use it. That is the beginning of humility. That is the beginning of peace.

Whenever one meditates, one is engaged in a process of disengaging from the human will, and that is why the experience of peace emerges, which is the first step of experiencing your capital "S" Self Truly.

You will not learn how to use your puny little human will better and better by getting it to be more expressive of the Father's Will. You will only come into a true sense of your integrity as you yield up the human will, and let the Will of the Father disclose Itself to you. And of course, the ego sees this as profound control. And yet, if you will disengage from the egos reaction, and engage in this process of beginning to feel the Father's Will, you will find yourself feeling empowered, as I said, because the Father's Will is what constitutes your integrity. Because the Father is the substance and the presence that is seen and called you. And as you get to experience the Father's Will you begin to know yourself Truly.

I will tell you something: This book you spoke of has it's place. It addresses individuals in their process of Awakening. It helps to trigger their movement into more intelligent empowerment. It is a Divine message, but it is not absolute, just as what I am sharing with you is not absolute. But what I am sharing with you triggers your movement into greater clarity, just as this book triggers others into their clarity. And we will not even get into a discussion of levels and relative values of those levels, because no matter what level anyone is on, he or she is at the threshold of their clarity or clarification. And that is all that matters.

So the question is: Does this book for you, express triggers, express values that help move you into a greater willingness on your part to yield to the Father's Will, to yield to your capital "S" Self, in other words? That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I was doing some work last night, delightful work, and noticing the enlarging space from myself between my fear. Okay I see the fear, but I still want to do this thing that I call delightful work, and watch it transform into a challenge that I can meet. Can you comment on that? It's a delightful experience.

ANSWER: I'm going to ask what your question is. It sound as though you have asked a question, but you have not. You have commented on the fact that you are observing a certain shifts that have occurred and that are occurring by virtue of this task you are engaging in. And this is wonderful.

QUESTION: But I didn't ask a question, right. How can I facilitate myself to transform fears into challenges with more delight?

ANSWER: I'm going to suggest modifying the word challenges and changing it to opportunities. Changing fears into opportunities. The surest way to do that is to be alert so that you recognize a fear as a fear, rather than a thoughtless emotional reaction where you find yourself submerged in emotion. If you are alert enough to recognize the onset of anxiety, or the initial stages of fear, then you will be able to say, "Ah-ha! I am approaching a threshold, an ego limit here, which necessarily means that I am at a point of breaking a boundary and accessing new territory. What is the new territory?"

That process that helps you arrive at a point of inquisitiveness, "what is the new territory?" is the means by which you turn the fear into an opportunity. And by being inquisitive about the new territory, you give your energy to that which is beyond the fence, beyond the limit. And thus, you do not energize the limit. And the desire to know what the beyond is—beyond this limit—is what begins to dissolve the limit. Do you get the picture?

QUESTION: Yes, in other words give no power to the fear, but rather to the opportunity.

ANSWER: Of course. The fear is just the edge of a conditioning. The conditioning says, "Thus far, and no farther." The conditioning says, "On this side of the fence, is your comfort zone. On that side of the fence is God knows what." But you see the truth in that? What is on the other side of the fence is something that God only knows. And what God knows, you ought to want to know. So let that very negative approach of the ego, the very words, "God knows, what's on the other side." Let that shift into, "God knows what's on the other side. I want to know what God knows."

And in that way, the conditioning that would keep you from moving into that knowing will be minimal or minimized. And your desire to know what God knows, your desire to experience that aspect of your capital "S" Self that is beyond this finite ego limit is what will promote your movement into the new territory. And it is also what will minimize the uneasiness or discomfort of the conditioned thinking that says, "You will pay a penalty for violating this ego limit."

QUESTION: I seem to start things, I think with pure intent, because I don't know what to expect. And then when things begin to happen, I become afraid because I feel that I am letting my ego take control. And I can't discern which is the true happening and which is my ego. And then I start to distrust, and I stop completely because I can't tell which is the "good." I'd like to know how to discern which is ego, and which is not? And how to build trust?

TAPE: TWO

ANSWER: I will tell you something: The easiest way to discredit the message is to discredit the messenger. And you will find that the ego will always attack you, whether it is your ego attacking you or another's ego attacking you. And it attacks you, to cause you to not give yourself credit. It attacks you to cause you to become reactive, and of course that is always an ego action. And if you are reactive, then you are not in that centered place where you can be the true reflection, or the true door through which the manifestation of your divinity can move into manifestation.

Now, you must be alert. And when you find yourself beginning to doubt yourself, when you begin to wonder whether it is the ego or not, this is an indicator that it is time to shut up, become still and get into your peace again. It is not wise to get into an evaluation of your ego or of where you are coming from, because as long as you are engaged in that, you are functioning from an intellectual level where you are not connected with your peace and your centered perspective. And your peace and centered perspective is where your ability to discern between truth and illusion lies.

So when you find yourself becoming uneasy, and you seem to be face with a need to analyze in order to come to a true answer, catch yourself and don't waste any time going through the process of analysis. Bring yourself back to that quiet centered place within you, where you are able to listen and hear and feel the rightness of your actions, or feel without emotional response the inappropriateness of an action.

The solution always lies in your centered perspective. And there you can feel the rightness or wrongness, the appropriateness or inappropriateness of an action, and you KNOW, and it isn't the result of analysis.

You see it is like the tares and the wheat, as long as they are growing side by side you will go crazy trying to differentiate one from the other. And so you don't try to do it. And that is where the wisdom comes in. At the time of the harvest it is obvious.

Now don't try to analyze to distinguish between your ego and your Being. Become as still as you can. Listen as deeply as you can within. And shut up the intellectual arguments and reasonings and thoughts that will present themselves. And listen deeply in that place where you can feel what is right, even though your intellect is not agreeing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question may sound frivolous to what everyone else has been asking, but I'm going to ask it anyway.

ANSWER: I love frivolous questions.

QUESTION: My daughter Cindy would very much like to meet someone and get married and have children. Can you see that in the very near future for her?

PAUL: How old is she? This is me Paul.

QUESTION: Twenty-six.

ANSWER: Not before she is thirty. At least not as long as she continues in the aspect or tack that she is presently taking. She may say, and she may think to herself that she wants a relationship, but she is enjoying her independence too much to really let in the limits, the yielding that she would have to give to another in order for a marriage to occur.

There is nothing wrong with this. But she needs to understand that as long as she is valuing her freedom to the degree that she is, she will not have the welcome mat out, if you will, for a relationship to begin to develop that would in some ways limit the kind of freedom that she is currently enjoying.

At the rate things are going now it is likely to be another four years until she has arrived at a point of softening, in terms of her expression of her integrity and freedom to be herself sufficiently for a relationship to form. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Last Spring, while at the University of British Columbia, my inner guidance strongly directed me to work with disabled persons. Presently I'm faced with writing proposals, as well as preparing programs for the various special groups, such as the blind, the hearing impaired, mentally retarded, paraplegics and so on. Are there any specific recommendations or awareness' that I may pay attention to when looking at research instruments, programs, or even my own personal presentations?

PAUL: This is me Paul. These proposals have to do with programs or things at the university for people who are, let's say, students who would be...

QUESTION: Right, at universities and at special agencies and community colleges and so on, where these special groups would be located.

ANSWER: First of all, I would encourage you to approach each of these groups, or the handling of each of these groups with as little preconception as possible. Indeed, you can research how these particular groups needs have been met in similar situations. But do not let history be your primary foundation for conclusions and recommendations. I encourage you to research individuals experiencing these limitations, and let your fundamental goal be to express humanity—I mean by that humaneness. Pay attention to the simple needs, the felt needs, both physical and psychological.

Now do not jump to the conclusion that paying attention to all these factors is going to make it complicated. It will make it easier. Because understand that solutions are simple. Remember that, solutions are simple. Arriving at them sometimes seems not to be simple. But what meets the human need, meets the human need.

Do not be reluctant to look with fresh eyes for fresh solutions. And do not assume that the solutions will not be possible, that they will not be able to be easily implemented simply because they tend to be radical. So humaneness and freshness of approach are the two fundamental elements to bring into play here.

You do not need to worry about how you present yourself. You do it very well, and you really do it with very little self-consciousness. And you do it with a great deal of self-confidence, and yet that self-confidence does not overwhelm those you are working with and does not come across as arrogant. Just continue being you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In one of the newsletters a long time ago, I noticed a question about the grey men. And I looked for it before I came here, and I couldn't find it. And I don't know what your answer was to the question—if I had read it maybe I wouldn't have to ask it now. The question was: Do the grey men exist? And I believe you said, "yes, they did." And I find that I'm having a lot of fear about that right now. And I guess what I'm looking for is some assurance that everything will be okay. And I'm also wondering if there is anything we should be doing?

ANSWER: Well, there is one very fundamental thing you can do, and that is you can begin to remind yourself frequently that your income comes from being centered. Literally, your income, your abundance, your joy comes from being centered. It does not come from any thing you do.

You see, to the degree that you are willing to be centered, to the degree that you are willing to go within and stand as the door, literally, the doorway through which Being, with a capital "B", flows into expression, to that degree you will be able to be in a position of observing your world reconfiguring and identifying your fulfillment.

The Movement of your Being is the Movement of fulfillment. There is nothing haphazard about it. There is nothing incomplete about it. But so few are in touch with their Being, so few are willing to yield to it and flow with it that their abundance passes them by, because they are not knowing how to be appropriate in their daily activities. They are not listening for guidance. They are not listening for how to fit in.

Oh, the arrogant ego says, "Fit in? Me fit in? I'm suppose to be in charge. I am suppose to be the one making things happen. If I don't make it happen, it won't happen.” But understand that what you are fitting into is your capital “S” Self. And so, it constitutes no loss of integrity to yield to it.

But there is the tendency, especially if things are going well, to say, “Well, I can handle this. There is no need for me to check in with guidance because there is no emergency facing me. All I have to do is go down to the bank and make a deposit today, and then take care of the regular things. Nothing hard about that. I can handle it.” And yet, there is a need to be willing to listen, to be willing to know what the real order of things is, not just your assumed sense of what orderliness is.

There is a need to be able to be congruent. Because when you are being at a conscious level, congruent with you capital “B” Being, you experience the strength and power and integrity of you. And there is not only a sense of peace, but a sense of integrated movement, you might say. There is an integration experienced between you at a conscious level, and each aspect of your unfolding day. And that is a feeling of invulnerability, that is most desirable and most enjoyable.

Now, and this does not apply just to the “gray men.” If you do not want to be at the mercy of the control of anything outside of yourself, then you had better dare to bring everything back within yourself. And then carry it even deeper into your capital “S” Self so that you might find that at a conscious level of experience—the way in which you fit in to the divine order of this unfoldment of Creation that you are in the middle of—so that you might function completely independent of anyone else’s attempt at ego control, whether it is an attempt by “money changers” to control your economy and therefore your pocket book, or whether it is a man attempting to be dominant over you and keep you in your place.

No matter what attempts might be made to control you, if your attention is within rather than out there on all those who might attempt to control you, you will find yourself being right where you need to be in order to have your abundance and your fulfillment identified. And you will seem to be squiggly and uncapturable to those who would attempt to control you. You simply will not happen to be at the spot when they reach for you. And they will be greatly frustrated. And yet, that is all irrelevant.

It doesn’t matter whether they’re frustrated or not. The point is that you are never at the mercy of circumstances. And you are never at the mercy of others who would attempt to control as a fact. But you can by virtue of fearing those attempting to control, and by giving your negative allegiance to them by fearing them, put yourself in a position of not being alert to the manner in which your Being is identifying your fulfillment, and you will seem to lose it.

Again, your income, your abundance, your freedom from control comes from being centered. When you are centered you are not operating at the level of the ego, and the ego is not able to hook you, because you don’t have any loops.

PAUL: And this is me Paul. You know what Velcro is? Okay, well half of the Velcro is made up of hundreds of little loops. And so, when you’re centered it’s as though—He’s said before—it’s as though all of the little loops get clipped. And then no matter how many hooks there are on the other half of the Velcro, it can’t hook you, it can’t engage the other half.

ANSWER: Now, concerted efforts are currently being implemented by “the gray men”—those who have been in financial control and who have had a long term game plan of control—but they are being frustrated. And the control that they have been seeking is beginning to slip from their fingers.

There are two major reasons for this. And that is: the Japanese economy and the Japanese motivation to practice free enterprise, if I may put it that way—they are not hookable. They, literally, have no financial loops that the “gray men” can get hold of. And the Japanese are upsetting the apple cart in that respect.

Secondly, you have a gentleman, truly a gentleman, in charge in Russia who is promoting significant new ideas. You must understand that the “gray men” have depended upon polarization in order to make their money, and in order to grow to the point of having control. It has been essential for there to be enemies present in order for them to make their money, because their money has been made by investing in the war machine. And the polarization between the United States and Russia, and Russia and the Western World is diminishing. And as a result, the pot, if you will, the resource for gaining control is dwindling, is disappearing. And so, you do not need to fear the results of the “gray men’s” efforts.

I am going to suggest something to all of you, and that is be very alert and at the same time wise. Be alert to the inclination to continue to hold a people in the role of enemy, whether it is your next door neighbor, or whether it is another country who has typically filled the role of enemy. Do not hold yourself or others to the past.

It is well for you if indeed you wish to wake up comfortably, to take each moment as though it is brand new, and not encumber the moment you are in with history or with the past. At the same time with wisdom, observe to see whether intelligence is being expressed, and if it is not being expressed, do not accept it. And if it is being expressed be the first to acknowledge it. And do not let your willingness to acknowledge intelligence be colored by an old concept, a historical concept, a well established and long established hate.

Also do not be afraid of the Japanese, they will not take over the world. But they are being an antibody to the virus that the “gray men” have been. That’s the end of the answer.

ANSWER: I would like to make an addendum to the last answer, which was asked just before lunch, since it touched on, let us say, world events.

There is a lot of interest, a lot of vital interest in, shall we say, the second coming, “the end of the world,” the end of illusion, the process of Awakening, and there is with almost everyone either the faint stirrings or even the strong stirrings of awareness of shift, of change, etc., occurring, and a sense of eminence about it.

But I want to make something clear. If you go to the doctor and you get a verdict from him that you have cancer, you do not say, “Oh, glory hallelujah the end of illusion is occurring. My body is going to disappear. I will not be encumbered with this illusion anymore, glory hallelujah!” Now, it is just as foolish to be scanning the horizon for the signs of the times, looking for disaster, or deterioration, or the collapse of the economy so that you might stand and say, “Glory, hallelujah, the end is at hand, illusion is almost over.”

If illusion is almost over, then something is going to be replacing the illusion. And that something is going to be Reality. And Reality is the expression of the infinite intelligence that is God. And that which is infinitely intelligent is harmonious, orderly, expressing the Movement of Creativity.

Disaster is not a representation of intelligence and order. It does not represent transformation that is healing. It is more trauma. The collapse of the economy is not a sign of healing. It is another example of ongoing illusion.

So let us not be looking with too much eager interest for the disasters that will spell the doom of illusion. What spells the doom of illusion is the breakthrough of Reality, the penetration of Reality into the limited perception that everyone is embracing at the moment, thus exalting one's clear perception or clear understanding and thereby exalting the manifestation of God, called the world and the universe. Thus bringing forth greater order and greater harmony and greater manifestation of intelligence on the face of your globe.

It is the ego which interprets the dawning of flawless clarity as Armageddon. It describes the actuality in exactly the opposite terms, great configuration, great suffering, great gnashing of teeth, etc. Why do you suppose that is? So that you might avoid waking up. So that you might avoid the "second coming." So that you might not engage in that which will be the annihilation of the ego. Again, defining the ego as a limited perception of Reality.

So again, do not scan the papers for signs of trauma to the earth, or signs of trauma to the economy, or signs of trauma to mankind so that you might know that indeed you will not have to endure the illusion much longer. Look rather for the continuing expressions of expanded intelligence that are occurring.

Be watching for them, they will be somewhat covered over in your newspapers, because the good news doesn't make money. And so you might find the signs in a little box on the next to the last page, just a little blurb of some apparently inconsequential event, but you will recognize that it is one of the significant things that simply isn't being recognized for its significance. Be alert for signs of healing. And be expectant of signs of emerging order in your country, in the world economy, in world politics.

Now I am not saying this so that you might begin to engage in positive thinking and thus change the course of history. Because whether you become positive or not in your outlook, the Awakening is going to occur. And your negative or positive approach will either make that Awakening comfortable or uncomfortable.

The simple fact is that the Awakening is occurring, because there are not any longer a sufficient number of egos to join together to substantiate the ego frame of reference. And so, the ego is weakening, and in its weakening mankind as a whole is beginning to remember Home, is beginning to remember its divinity, is beginning to remember its integrity, and is beginning to feel the necessity of extending that self-recognition to one's fellow man and to make demands for humanity to be the primary law, if you will, around the globe, that the meeting of the fundamental human needs rather than the meeting of the insatiable demands of the pocket book is what needs to be enhanced and made first—given the highest priority.

What is the "second coming" if it isn't this rising feeling of one's integrity, and this emerging inner conviction that there is something fundamentally divine about conscious human individuality, about you. What is the "second coming" if it isn't the Christ of each one of you, beginning to register with each one of you, and your daring to begin to own your divinity.

As I have said before, I don't need to come again. I have already owned my divinity. I have already done "the first coming." The "second coming" is yours. And it is time. Not because I say so, but because the Movement of Awakening that has been constantly occurring since what you call the "fall," and since what I call a submergence in ignorance of one's divinity, has advanced to a point where that ignorance, this sleep, this dream, can no longer support itself. And because the "second coming" is occurring, because the Awakening is occurring, because the process of coming back into your Right Mind is occurring, I am talking about it.

I am here not to entice you into the Kingdom of Heaven, but to confirm the Movement into the conscious experience of Reality that is already going on. So that you might embrace it more enthusiastically and whole heartedly. So that you might know that you are not going crazy, so that you might know that you are not being arrogant to have such a healthy and wonderful attitude about yourself as to claim to be fundamentally divine.

Now, lets get off of this Armageddon syndrome, mindset, and lets begin to look for the evidences of emerging and increasing intelligence, harmony, order, love, humanity. And when you find it being confirmed in your world from the most unexpected sources, such as the Soviet Union, be careful how quick you are to reject it instead of honor it.

Now, I have said what needed to be said. Let us continue.

QUESTION: Moving right along now. I'm getting two internal messages about my career. One is abandon, and one is stay with it. My question is what is the right answer?

ANSWER: The right answer is to be willing to move on, and that is different from abandoning it. I encourage you to anticipate a transition, not an abrupt end—a period of wondering where you are, and then an abrupt beginning of something new. You are approaching a transition and it is appropriate for you to be open to it, to let yourself be curious about the new opportunities. But do not surreptitiously kick off from the old career, when you aren't quite sure that there is a place to land. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This morning when Monic was asking Paul who he was and who you are, Paul made a statement about trying to explain us to one who is Awakened, is one who is not claiming a will separate from the Father. And I was sitting here with tears streaming down my face, and I don't know what triggered that. Because over the past week, if anything, I would have described my week as going along with this plateau, or this road of not feeling any emotion—like just sort of not feeling anything, but just sort of going along here. And then all of a sudden Paul says something and I got tears streaming down my face. It didn't feel like the tears came from a feeling or a thought, but just what was said. Could you give me any information regarding that? Please?

ANSWER: Indeed, it did not come from a conscious feeling, but from a remembering so deep that it seems not to be consciously present for you to experience. It was what I will call, a remembering of Home, and understand that Home is not a place, it is not somewhere in the universe or somewhere on your planet, it is the primitive and natural experience of being who you Divinely Are. It is that experience of God being All, and therefore being All there is of You.

The tears were tears of joy, that stem from, as I said, a remembering of the joy, the peace, the profound fulfillment of Self, with a capital "S," that occurs when you allow God to be All there Is of You, to be that which constitutes every fiber of your Being. That is what God Is, and that is what You Are, but you and everyone else are not allowing yourself to feel it. But, nevertheless, the primitive memory is still there. And that memory was triggered in what was said, and the joy came forth and you had feeling that came out as tears.

Now I am going to take this opportunity to expand on a theme which ties in with your question.

The thought is expressed, in one way or another, that one who channels is sacrificing self-awareness and self-responsibility by deferring to an entity separate or different from the one who is channeling. And that the necessity is to dare to own the fact that it is truly all the channeler, and that there isn't really any other entity. And that to claim that a separate individuality is being channeled is a way of passing the buck, not only relative to those who listen, but also as a means of self-denial on the part of the one channeling, and thereby not in a position of owning his power and therefore his integrity.

Now, this line of thought, this argument, can also be applied to any individual going within in prayer, and asking for guidance from the Father. The suggestion can be made that reaching out to the Father is a way of denying your already existing integrity, that it is a way of passing the buck, that it is a way of not having to be responsible for, or be able to take credit for whatever successes might follow as a result of listening for guidance.

The end result of this can be that channelers would stop channeling, that people would stop listening, that individuals would stop seeking inner guidance and begin to rely on themselves more. But in the final analysis that has been what has gone on for centuries and has constituted the human condition, the dream, that which everyone is so desirous to wake up out of, to be free of.

Now it is very simple. Each of you, anyone who is asleep or partially asleep is not conscious of the totality, of the fullness of his or her integrity and does not experience the total meaning of what their individuality is. In this ignorance, however, there has been a need to survive. And so, everyone has used their wits—in other words, their limited ego frame of reference—to succeed in surviving in one way or another.

Because listening to the ego is so closely related to survival, which there is a great emotional feeling about, there is a natural reluctance to let go of the ego because it so closely equates with survival. And letting go of this limited experience of self is almost impossible.

Also, because the limited frame of reference is the dominant one it does not include within itself what is necessary to get beyond itself. The ego frame of reference does not include within itself what you need to get into and access your greater capacity to be aware divinely.

Now it would be too bad if those who are channeling decided to stop channeling, because perhaps there is a little bit of a farce to what they are doing, because after all they cannot prove that there really is another entity, and after all it might really be some very creative part of their own individuality. But you see, their own individuality at the moment is identified as the ego, which is a partial sense of things, and therefore does not include within itself what is necessary to get beyond itself. And so, if one begins to validate the sense of self that one is currently experiencing, and attempts one way or another to own his or her power, that sense of power still comes out of a limited sense of self.

And likewise, those who are praying to the Father or to the Holy Spirit and being willing to yield to divine guidance, if they are just giving their power away, and imagining a God because they feel so tiny and inconsequential, and if they stop reaching out and start depending upon themselves and giving themselves credit from within their limited frame of reference, they also will be substantiating the human conditioning.

Now, I said earlier that the process of Awakening is occurring, it has nothing to do with choice. It has to do with the fact that there aren't enough active egos—and I'm speaking universally here—there are not enough active egos to continue to support the ongoing experience of illusion, of partial vision that is taken as fact.

So those who, for whatever reason, attempt from the standpoint of their puny little egos to own their power and to depend upon themselves and express self-reliance from that tiny frame of reference, are going to be attempting to substantiate that which the Movement of Awakening is undoing. And as the undoing of that tiny sense of self advances, those who are working so hard to substantiate it, and those who are identifying so completely with it, will feel as though they are being dissolved, undone, destroyed by this process of Awakening. And the process of Awakening will be very uncomfortable.

Now the simple fact is that even if you are opening up to your capital "S" Self, even if you are deciding to lean into what you Divinely Are, it is going to be a matter of yielding into something very different from yourself as you conceive yourself to be at the moment, and as you experience yourself to be at this moment. And if you are not willing to yield to this larger Self that you do not comprehend at the moment, if you do not yield to it because you want to maintain the tiny sense of self in the process, you will not experience the enlightenment you want.

I must be very clear here. Whether you are yielding to the Father's Will, whether you are yielding to your capital "S" Self, you are going to be yielding to something that is very different from the self you are currently experiencing yourself as. And this will not constitute giving your power away. You gave your power away when you identified with the ego. And to yield to your larger Self, to yield to what you Divinely Are and always have been, the ego is going to define as giving away your power and becoming irresponsible.

And yet, that is what is going to return to you your conscious experience of your integrity and your Divinity, and your infinite conscious experience of the Movement of God that is what you ARE. And being that conscious experience of the Movement of God will constitute the infinite awareness of the Movement of Creation from which you will find no sense of difference. You will feel the power of the Movement of Creation infinitely, and you will know you are one with it and it is one with you. But it is All God, and there is no private sense of power involved, just the infinite sense of being inseparable from that Movement of the Father that is the Movement of Creation.

And I say that, and there is no way to convey to you in words the meaning of the experience. But you are not going to move into that conscious experience if there is not a willingness on your part to yield up the private, personal, limited ego sense of self. And you will not wake up from that, or escape that limit if you are not willing to yield to your greater Self, or yield to the Will of the Father. And you will not even understand what the Will of the Father is until you make this unreasonable leap of faith called trusting into your Being, trusting into the Father.

TAPE: THREE

How can you own your power if you don't know who you are. And how can you know whether you are sacrificing your integrity if you don't know who you are.

Again, the simple fact is, that in being willing to let go of the ego, the limited self-perception, and yielding into what is there when it seems as though nothing ought to be there because you have stepped outside of your ego sense of yourself, that is the act of faith, the investment of trust in the existence of something more than your present sense of yourself. And that act of trust, that act of faith, that letting go of personal control is the only way you can get across the threshold, the boundary of the ego and begin to experience yourself, divinely speaking, with illumination.

As long as you are emerging from a state of ignorance, you cannot dare to hold on to that state of ignorance as though that were the means of gaining enlightenment. You don't know what to hold onto and you don't know what is valid and what is not.

Now the one thing you need to know in order to make that investment of faith, to make that leap of faith is, that in spite of your limited perception of yourself, what you are, and who you are, you are and have always been the full representation, the full expression of the Father. It has been and forever will be impossible for you to actually become less than what the Father is expressing.

It is absolutely impossible for you to become or to have ever been less than flawlessly divine. Anything else that you have experienced, has been a concoction of the imagination based on incomplete information, therefore, you can dare to make this leap of faith. You can dare to let go of the rope. You can dare to let go of the control. You can dare to go into the silence within yourself and let go. Because in letting go you will find come into view this forever divine presence of the Father that you Are.

You will not be swallowed up in oblivion. You will not be taken over by the dark forces. You will not be misused by "spirits." Because in letting go of the limited ego sense of yourself, you are letting go into your integrity. And when you are holding on to that limited ego sense of yourself, you are holding on to a lack of integrity.

I will tell you something: You cannot get into the Kingdom of Heaven by an act of the will. And you cannot get into clarity through a willful act of owning your power when you haven't even listened to find out who you are, because your act of reaching will be from a limited puny and worthless and guilty stance.

Now this is a very important point: You must yield into the Kingdom of Heaven. You must yield into what you divinely Are and the conscious experience of it. The ego is the equivalent of willfulness, thus any use of willfulness constitutes an act of the ego, which is a denial of the Kingdom of Heaven and a denial of your divine Selfhood. But the ego suggests that it is only through the use of will that you in your true character and integrity stand forth as who you are.

And so, what I am describing—at least from the ego's standpoint—constitutes a complete loss of identity, a complete loss of your integrity. And yet, it is the ego frame of reference that constitutes the lack of integrity, and has constituted the human condition all of these centuries. The very thing each one of you is experiencing an inner drive to become free of, because there is something in you that is clearly beginning to feel that it is an illegitimate imposition upon you at some very deep level.

It is in the absence of the act of human will, of ego will, that you can slip across the ego limit and reaccess your experience of who you Are divinely. And that will feel like yielding to something different from you, because this you that you are familiar with is a distorted or incomplete experience of who you are.

And so, you must be willing to dare to discover who you Are. And I am here to let each one of you know that in that transition—and I'm not talking about death, I am talking about a shift of consciousness, an altering of perception—in that shift of consciousness you will come into your right Mind, and you will feel your Sanity again, you will feel your Wholeness and Integrity and your Christhood, and your guiltlessness.

You cannot storm the gates to the Kingdom of Heaven, you must let yourself through them—allow. You must let yourself into the experience of who you Are. And you must do it without knowing ahead of time what it will mean, because you're doing it with blinders on. And the blinders will not disappear until you do it. And so, you must understand that it is simply part of the process of Awakening that you will yield to that which you do not grasp before hand, because what you are yielding to is beyond the limit of the ignorance that you are employing.

And again, it will be able to be claimed that you're giving your power away, that you are reaching for something that isn't there, that you are accommodating your sense of inadequacy by imagining something more that you are yielding to. But I will tell you something: You are not imagining it, you are very deeply remembering it. Because your submergence in ignorance or limitation hasn't changed who you Are, and therefore hasn't successfully eradicated the memory, and has not successfully covered up the availability of the conscious experience of who and what you divinely Are.

I bring this up so that you might not be confused with the subtle arguments of the ego as express by others as they fear to make that leap of faith into, as I said earlier, "God knows what." You are making that leap of faith into the all knowing capital "M" Mind that is God, that is fully expressed in each one of you—your own right Mind, in other words.

The crossing of the little gap, as is spoken of in the Course, is the leap of faith where you yield to that which you have no prior conception of. And as you step across the little gap, having no assurance whatsoever that there is any solid ground on the other side of it, you will find the Father coming and being the very solidness of your Being, not just a place to step, but the very Being of you will be the immovable security of existence, because you and existence are not two separate things.

You are all like the prodigal. But remember that when the prodigal gave up dallying with the ego and decided to come home, when he was yet a long way off his Father came to him. The Father didn't sit at Home saying, "Well, he went. He's got to come back on his own, too. He's got to feel every step of the way. But as long he's not in my Home, he's not in my Home. And he cannot have the comfort of my presence until he gets to where I am."

No, the conscious intent, the felt desire to Awaken, is responded to, you might say, and the Father and all those who are expressing the Will of the Father—in other words, all those who are Totally Awake—come to you as a Family, come to you where you are and love you right where you feel so ignorant and so lost and so incomplete and so worthless and say to you, "You are Loved, and you are Whole. And you never were what you thought you became, and you never lost your Birthright, and your inheritance is yours and always was. Open your eyes and accept."

But this you who comes back into his or her right Mind is a you that you must dare to yield up your private sense of selfhood to. You must be willing to chuck the garments that make you feel so tiny so that the Whole You that you always have been might be uncovered. And this process of yielding will feel like giving up your power. It isn't the tiny ego sense of self that will be exalted into something worthwhile, it is the tiny ego sense of self, the limited sense of self, or shall I say, the limits of that sense of self that will dissolve and leave clearly present the divine one that you Are.

As I said, this is a very important point. It is a very important point at this time, because there are shifts that are occurring, not earth shifts, but inner shifts of consciousness that are being greatly supported by those of the Brotherhood who are Awake. And it is important for you not to be sidetracked from your willingness to yield to who you divinely Are just because there are educated suggestions being made that such a yielding constitutes a disowning of your power.

If you are going to get beyond the limits of your present sense of perception, you must be willing to abandon your present sense of perception, and yield into your greater capacity to be aware, an ever present and presently present capacity.

It is the constant act or use of will from a limited perspective that constitutes your dallying with the ego in a far land—a prodigal. You are not going to be able to bring the prodigal back Home with you. You are going to have to leave that sense of yourself there, and come Home into your already existing inheritance, your already existing fulfillment that has never been withheld from you, but which through ignorance you have turned your back upon so that you might dally with an ego sense of yourself, a limited sense of yourself, a private one with the thrill of the challenge and the glory of success. But success at what? Being a prodigal, minus the conscious experience of your fulfillment that relieves you of any need to be successful or to gain success.

Now I could go on, but we would get away from the point. Remember, yielding is part and parcel of the process of Awakening. And it will be an experience of yielding to that which you do not know yet. It will not be an enhancement of your ego. And because you are absolutely divine and have never been anything less, your willingness to do this yielding, this leap of faith, is assured of success. Because in letting go of the act of will that creates the experience of separation you inevitably have opened yourself up to the experience of your unity with the Father, and therefore your conscious experience of your integrity—which I will tell you, you will never let go of again.

But understand the process of this Awakening so that you may remain clear in your intent or so that you may even, I'm going to say, "intelligently" refuse to engage in it yet. But let us not be so ignorant that educated opinions that float around about channeling or about the process of inner guidance will not influence you to drop the whole thing and to once again strengthen the ego and the human condition. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I must confess that I had some doubt and trepidation about this channeling business. But this last discourse astounded me because it related to a conversation that I had with Ray at lunch time. And it answered a question I had formulated. First of all, I didn't know what question to ask, so as the group was talking and you were relaying answers, I thought well that answers that question and that answers that question. So it was as though I didn't have any questions left. And I still don't have any questions because you answered it.

But anyway the question was, or the one I finally decided upon was, a heart and head question. In certain situations, particularly those situations that seem to be quite important to me, I have difficulty in deciding whether to follow my heart or my head. Having gone to a university for many, many years I get a lot of interference from my intellect, a lot of chatter.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. A lot of chatter or hassle relative to going back to school, or what?

QUESTION: No, relative to the problem that I'm trying to solve. My heart won't give me one answer. At a feeling or intuitive level I have certain perceptions, and then my intellect will say, "well, don't be silly, that's totally illogical, blah, blah, blah." So that's the problem. The question is: What should I follow, my heart or my head?

ANSWER: First of all, never forsake your common sense. Let that be your ground rule. Never forsake your common sense unless you are experiencing an uncommon sense that is so meaningful to you that following it does not put you in a position of great fear or great feeling of vulnerability.

There is no requirement for any of you to abandon your common sense if it hasn't been replaced by something even more significant to you. This is very important to understand. Waking up, spiritual growth does not require you to abandon your comfort zone. It may entice you to abandon it, but it does not require it. It is not wise for you to function at too great a distance outside of your comfort zone, because then you become fearful and defensive and the result is that you are more engaged in defense than you are in paying attention to what is appropriate.

Now, it is more important for you to follow your heart, but not at the expense of your peace. Remember that. Now I would encourage you to follow your heart on little things, little things that will not ruin your life if they don't work out the way you hoped. In this way you will be able to follow your heart and stay in your comfort zone, and have the opportunity to find out the wisdom of having followed your heart, even though it required you to act or move beyond what you could intellectually grasp as appropriate.

In this way you will build up a back log of experiences validating the worth of following your heart, and finding that your heart can carry you beyond where your intellect can carry you. In this way what you are able to embrace within your comfort zone will increase relative to following your heart.

I am pointing this out so that you might understand, first of all, that you are not required to abandon your comfort zone, abandon your common sense. And secondly, that through the practice of following your heart on small issues you will arrive at a point where you can more comfortably follow your heart on more major issues, or even issues that might be called emergencies. But you may handle this in a way that allows your confidence to grow without overwhelming you in the process.

Everyone must remember that spiritual growth or Awakening constitutes the clearer and clearer experience of intelligence. And intelligence is inherently orderly, inherently harmonious and harmony producing. But intelligence goes beyond your concepts of intelligence. And so you will not access more expanded experiences of intelligence if you don't know how to build trust in following your heart.

Always look for intelligence at the bottom line of your spiritual growth or Awakening. And always expect to see evidences of that intelligence emerging in your world and in your life as result of following your heart. But also understand that you don't have to swallow the whole process of Awakening in one bite. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: I...

ANSWER: Have a lot of questions.

QUESTION: I do! I'm originally from Vancouver, British Columbia. And when I was there almost ten years ago, I channeled or I saw a vision for myself. And I saw in that vision that I would be moving to sort of mid-western United States, around South Dakota, North Dakota, near a large body of water. And I would have a piece of property with a very, very rocky road to it.

And now I'm living in Manitoba, beside a large body of water, plus I have a fairly large body of water right behind my house. And I was wondering, now that all those things have come true, where do I go from here? I mean I saw more in my vision, but I don't think I need to go into it. But I'm here now, and I'm sitting back going, "Well, okay what's next?"

ANSWER: That's wonderful. This is the very element that I encourage everyone to bring into play, "What's next"? It is the engagement of curiosity. And curiosity is what triggers one's capacity to see beyond his present concepts, her present concepts. It is what opens one up. Curiosity is not something you can have about that which is already known. Curiosity is always about that which is not yet known. And so curiosity is the element, the wedge, if you will, that which pierces whatever the current limit is and helps you get past it.

Now, you say, "What next"? And the tendency you have and that everyone else has is, to figure out what next, instead of abiding with this fundamental curiosity that the question poses. Stay with the curiosity and just be alive, not alive to next month or next year, but alive to the moment that you're in. "What next? What is there to discover? What is going on that I'm not yet aware of? What is going to happen that I am not expecting?” In other words, “What is going to happen that isn’t already embraced in my bag of experiences?”

Now you can also dare to be fully curious by grasping the fact that what is going on beyond your present bag of experiences, beyond your memory and present experience, will always be the fuller experience of what God is, the fuller experience of Creation. Knowing that, or daring to believe that at least, will help to boost the degree to which you bring your curiosity into play. And it will also help you to realize that you can relax and let the “what next” reveal itself.

It’s not necessary for you to sit down and create the “what next,” or make something happen that will be stimulating and vital and interesting. I can guarantee you that the Movement of God is always far from dull, and always moves you beyond your present sense of things, which in itself is stimulating and vitalizing to you.

So what’s next? What’s next is, stay with that question, feel the question, feel the curiosity, but don’t try to satisfy the curiosity out of your own mentality.

I will tell you something: Creation is not something that was set into motion eons ago so that you are now just living on some perpetual motion machine. Creation is going on at this instant, constituting the experience of Being at this instant. And therefore, because the Father never repeats Himself, because the Life Principle never stops to repeat Itself, but is constantly making all things new, you can count on it that what will be unfolding will be very interesting. You are not responsible for figuring out what it will be and then implementing it, however. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Now that you’ve answered all my questions, I’ve been sitting here wondering what to ask you. But it’s come to me now. Several months ago, I had an experience during meditation. And it has to do with the rising of the “Kundalini.”

ANSWER: What is this “Kundalini”?

QUESTION: Well, during the experience it was the—it’s hard to explain—but the movement of light energy through out my whole being, and really feeling one, the oneness with everything. As fleeting as it was, it sort of transformed a lot of some beliefs I have, which I’m grateful for. But on the same token it’s created new conflicts that I’ve been trying to move through.

ANSWER: For example?

QUESTION: Basically, what I’m suppose to be doing. Why I’m here.

ANSWER: Oh, that experience didn’t create those questions.

QUESTION: Oh, that it’s always been there, yes. But I’ve been feeling really stagnated. There has been a lot of development, but I don’t seem to be going anywhere with it. So the question is: why, and what should I be doing, if anything, to just be comfortable with the Movement and trusting where it’s leading me?

ANSWER: First of all, do you really have any alternative?

QUESTION: I don’t think so.

ANSWER: That is the beginning of wisdom. The realization that you don’t think so. It is the ego which is introducing this sense of frustration, because the movement of the energy of the “Kundalini,” as you mentioned it, has had a vitalizing and awakening effect. It has created a greater alertness on your part. And the ego suggests that now you must do something with this aliveness and this alertness, as though, if you don't do something with it, you're not honoring the gift. Right?

QUESTION: Right.

ANSWER: I will tell you something: If you try to do something with it, you will not be honoring it, you will be distorting it, turning it into something for which it was not intended. It is there for you to feel. It is there to allow you to be more attentive, and to notice more. But not because you are trying, rather it is because you can't help it, the energy is there and you are just more alive to everything.

Now the ego, as I said, will try to get you to use the experience or to use some aspect of it. The ego is a doer, an accomplisher. And it will have you, if it can, take realization and transformation that occurs within you, and it will turn it into an obligation that you are responsible to carry out, instead of just abide with. It has given you a false task. You're not called upon to do that at all.

Now, I encourage you just to dare to experience your day and all of your activities whatever they might be, from this new level of alertness and aliveness. In other words, just pay attention and notice everything from this new vantage point. And be at peace with it.

When you become comfortable with this new kind of perception, when it seems natural and not unusual to you any more, you will be ready for, shall I say, another jolt. And you will find yourself having the opportunity again. What you need to know at this point is, that nothing has been given to you that you are obligated to do something with. It is more a matter of your having been given an attitudinal environment in which you have the opportunity to spontaneously experience everything with new perspective. And all that is left for you to do is pay attention. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've been mulling over in my mind how to phrase this, and my intellect is going to put it all wrong so I'll just say it anyway. It's easier if it comes from the heart. I'm wondering about my work? I'm sensing that there's some change afoot. I don't know what it is. I have several new tools that I'm using in my work—bio-circuits and a David machine—and I want to know what part they play or will play, if any, in my work? And is my work changing in form?

ANSWER: Basically no, your work is not changing in its form, although it is flexible and embellishment is occurring around its borders, if you will. There is a threshold coming up, a threshold of unfoldment, which does involve your having a place of your own from which to do your work. And it is important for you to be willing to embrace this. And it is important for you to not be so willing to take the crumbs that might fall your way in terms of the meeting of your need. And expect to have a plate with, shall I say, meat and vegetables and potatoes—in other words, with all of the food groups present, not just what might happen to fall on the floor for you to scrounge up.

In other words, I encourage you to embrace willingly without guilt a living circumstance that expresses the integrity that you express in your work. In other words, not only should those who come to you experience the integrity that you express, but YOU should be experiencing the integrity that you express. It does not make you more spiritual to always be riding on the cusp where there seems to be an undependable but ever present meeting of the need. It is appropriate for there to be a stronger more substantial structure, living format, if you will, from which to function, and from which to do your work.

Now, at the bottom line this is going to require a new form of self-respect from you. And you are to embrace this more definite structure of living accommodation without assuming that you are sacrificing some of your willingness to be so fluid, that you are willing to flow where the spirit moves you. You can flow where the spirit moves you and still have a firm home base. That will not undermine the integrity of your spiritual work.

A dwelling, a place of your own and a means to maintain it are the key factors in this threshold that you will be moving over. And this movement over the threshold will be happening within the next sixty days minimum, and ninety days maximum. The only thing that will hold it up will be your resistance to it, by virtue of finding salvation value in not having roots in the earth. I mean by that, the equivalent of what you would call not having feet of clay. I am saying, let yourself have feet of clay, let yourself be grounded, let there be form in the world. But understand that that does not constitute a sacrifice of your willingness to move where the spirit moves you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Is this new move going to be in this location, geographically?

ANSWER: That is the likelihood for this move.

QUESTION: A few years ago, some information came to be about working with Michael, Archangel Michael. And it was mentioned about a group of 1,500 that I belong to. I haven't delved into that any further. Could you give me some information on that?

ANSWER: No, indeed, it is not appropriate at this time for any further information to be disclosed. It is appropriate for you to attend to the other issues and activities of your life and await the time when further disclosure can appropriately be made, at which time you will be made aware of it. You may ask another question.

QUESTION: Thank you. I don't have too many questions that I can think of. Lately there has been energy that has been coming down, which seems to magnify where you're at, what feelings you're at at the time. Could you illuminate a little bit about where it's coming from, and who is energizing?

PAUL: This is me Paul. You're saying there is energy coming down that helps you to know where you're at, or...

QUESTION: Everybody.

ANSWER: There certainly is. Absolutely, you could say, "the heat is on." You're not soup yet, but you're getting close. Indeed, the inner shifting of human consciousness is, shall I say, inviting support for its Movement of Awakening. You must understand that those who are completely Awake, those of the Brotherhood who are fully enlightened, stand ready to provide support to your Awakening process as your Awakening process invites it.

We cannot force your growth, we cannot promote it. But we can confirm it and support it and encourage it. But we cannot override your free will. And we must wait until there is a desire to get beyond your will. We must wait until a quietness has been arrived at in you of the will and there is a desire present to experience more of this divinity that you feel but cannot justify.

There has been, shall I say, a change in the level of support, a specific change in degree that occurred on April 16 (1989) of this year and has continued. And, indeed, it is supporting clarification. Clarification isn't always comfortable. That isn't because you are being pushed to clarification, but because in the process of clarification you are bringing resistance to it. And that is where the discomfort occurs. But in that process of clarification occurring and resistance, you do learn.

I want you to understand that the discomfort is not inherent in the clarification, it is inherent in the resistance that is brought to that process of clarification. Further, you must understand, that this movement of clarification is not being created at your ego level of awareness, it is being created at the level of your capital "B" Being. And then your ego resists and you say, "Ouch," in one way or another.

So, if I may put it this way, mankind as a whole—and I am speaking of mankind that is still dreaming the dream—mankind as a whole is at a point of emergent divinity. I will put it that way. That is the Movement of Being. And as that emergent divinity has become stronger there has been an accompanying, supporting, confirming energy from all of us. That increase, as I said, began on April 16, (1989) of this year.

Now when you feel movement occurring understand that it is inner movement, that it is the movement of your capital "B" Being. It is the movement that is the equivalent of the center of the flower that pushes outward, and causes the green covering leaves to pull back, and for the petals also to pull back so that the fully blown, fully opened flower may be enjoyed.

This pressure of your divinity is what is promoting the feeling of movement, the feeling of shifting, and either anticipation or fear, depending upon how active or inactive your ego's are. If you will understand that the ego cannot create a feeling of movement, but only a feeling of resistance, then you will dare to embrace this feeling of movement more openly and with an anticipation of good results—if I might put it that way—rather than results that you might dread or have to be guarded against. To the degree that you embrace it and do not bring ego resistance into play, the movement or shifting will occur in an enjoyable way.

Mind you, again, the Brotherhood cannot force you to grow. None of us can force you to be healthy, wealthy or wise. You must desire to experience your abundance, your fulfillment. You must desire to experience your right to that abundance. And in your giving permission, you will find yourself well supported and well encouraged. But until you have made a choice for your divinity rather than your ego, we cannot interfere. We cannot inflict your divinity upon you. That's the end of the answer.

TAPE: FOUR

QUESTION: Greetings. Over the past...

ANSWER: I wish to have a hug. (They hugged) Thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you. Well since the last time I asked you a question, I expressed a lot more of my emotions and real feeling body, and a lot of things that I realized that I didn't accept as far as expressing anger and even hatred and love, even...

ANSWER: Of course, anger is blocked love. And in letting yourself feel the anger without judging yourself for it, the anger is able to pass off, making room for the love to come forth more significantly. Continue.

QUESTION: What I've come up against now is feeling an incredible amount of guilt in my life...

ANSWER: For?

QUESTION: Virtually anything. I guess it's connected with doing what I want to do.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: And I'm looking for some further understanding, and how to deal with it and rid myself of guilt.

ANSWER: Never do anything that you want to do again. (Laughter)

QUESTION: I don't like that answer.

ANSWER: Then simply use your intelligence and go ahead and do what you want to do and dare to enjoy what you are doing. Because, at the bottom line, when you are doing what you want to do, you are not being willful, you are not coming from an ego level, but you are allowing yourself to acknowledge what means something to you, and then you are daring to go ahead and act it out, act upon it.

Now, you recognize the stupidity of never doing anything you want to do again. Correct?

QUESTION: Certainly!

ANSWER: Then dare to use the same intelligence that recognizes the stupidity of that, to recognize the wisdom of doing what you want, of doing what means something to you, and feeling it deeply, and owning it as yours, and letting the chips fall where they may.

Now I am fully aware of just how scary it is to experience fulfillment without guilt. That is the only reason none of you are experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven at this moment. Because it is scary to feel your fulfillment without guilt. And yet that is what you must dare to do. That is, if I may put it this way, another way of expressing this leap of faith into that which is beyond your ability to conceive.

Now it is also not intelligent for you to decide not to never do what you want to do again, and then engage in doing some of the things you want to do and feeling guilty for them. That wears your energy down, physically. It contributes to depletion of your immune systems function. And so you tend to experience mild infections relatively easily.

I am going to encourage you to take the risk of doing what you want, enjoying it fully, and not engaging in guilt. I dare you to do it. I dare you to do it for two months. And I want you to pay attention to what happens to your health. And I want you to pay attention to what others begin to say about you. "Gee, what's happen to you? You're not the same guy. Some things changed, I like it, but I don't know what it is. You know it's really a pleasure to be around you, I can't put my finger on what it is, but I like you."

You will find yourself being included, thought of, called upon. And I will tell you that the reason will be because there isn't any sense of guilt and there also isn't any sense of arrogance. But there is a fantastic joy about you that you are feeling, if you will dare to engage in enjoying life without feeling guilty about it. And, of course, this applies to every single person in this room, or on this planet.

"It's the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." In the Father's self-expression called you, or you, or you, or anyone else? The Father/Mother has not withheld anything of what He or She is in that self-expression. So, if it has all been given to you, it is all there to enjoy and embraced and own—but not possess—and experience without apology.

But, as I said, here is another practice of the leap of faith. You are not going to experience the improvement in your physical health on an ongoing basis, until you dare to experience that joy and not apologize for it. And neither is anyone else.

You are not going to have the proof of the truth of what I am saying, until you take that leap of faith, and dare to do what your intellect tells you or your ego tells you is totally unreasonable. “It’s too good to be true. It can’t last forever. Enjoy it while it lasts.” You have all kinds of phrases to express the fact that the experience of good can only be limited and temporary. And your words set the scene, and become a law, and before long you refuse to receive—because of your unworthiness, which you are confident about. And then you say, “See, it doesn’t last forever, I knew it.” Be careful what you’re knowing.

Now, there isn’t any process I can give you, because either you are going to indulge in the guilt or you are going to stop. It’s one or the other. I would encourage you to just stop. And I would suggest that you give yourself sixty days. And say, “For sixty days I am not going to feel guilty for doing and enjoying what I want.” The world will not come to an end, I assure you. And everything will not collapse around you. And you will learn so much about your worthiness, but not because you’ve gone through some heavy duty process. It’s black or white. Do it or don’t do it. So just stop doing it.

And when the thought comes or the feeling begins to emerge of uneasy guiltiness, say, “No, no, no! I’m not going to feel guilty until the 21st of next month.” And then don’t feel guilty. Guilt isn’t foisted off on you. It is something you choose to bring it into play, everyone. So choose not to do it until the 21st of next month, or whatever date you set. And then figure you can take it all on. Except that I guarantee you that when that date comes, you’re going to be feeling so good about yourself and about the way things are going, that you’re going to put it off for another two months.

But do understand, that it’s a choice to do it, or a choice not to do it. And it is that simple and you truly can say, “No, I’m not even going to fool around with guilt until the 21st of next month.” It is the same as sitting down to do a meditation, and you remember in the middle of the meditation something that you forgot to do, and you must say, “I will take care of it after the meditation is over.” And you put it down and come back to your mantra.

Well, likewise when the suggestion comes to you to feel guilty, when the feeling begins to surface of guiltiness, say, “No, I’m not indulging in this until later. Right now I’m going back to my mantra of doing and enjoying what I want.” And let that be your meditation.

The intellect can come up with a great many arguments to what I’m about to say, and justifications, But I will tell you something: There is never an instance when guilt is justifiable. If it can be justified, if through the manipulations of the ego frame of reference guilt can be or seem to be justified, then I guarantee you that you are caught in the ego’s frame of reference, and you have no means of escape. You must be willing to release the guilt and arrive at a point where, even just intellectually, you can grasp that guilt has to be unjustifiable if you are the child of God, if you are the direct expression of the Father. And that, indeed, the employment of guilt is the means by which the ego keeps you from experiencing your Christhood.

The moment you are willing to claim your Christhood, and release the guilt, then all of the illusory drama and trauma that seemed to support the guilt and the justification for it, will reconfigure and immediately identify the Father's Will. And so you say, "Well, I hurt my family," or "I did so-and-so wrong." Well, the ego has you hoodwinked. It's telling you that you are in a position of creative power in which someone else's life was put into your hands to ruin or make happy.

Well, I tell you, God never turned any of His Self-expression over to a puny little ego called you. And so the ego has you hoodwinked. And in your willingness to dare to feel guiltless, because you are divine Being, and the perception of you as guilty is totally false, and you claim your divinity, and you dare to feel guiltless and therefore pure, you will experience what you will call healing of the heart.

And the one's who seem to be hurt by you, who were—because they're coming from an ego level also—willing to play into your false sense of responsibility and authority over them, they will begin to change in their behavior also, reconfiguration will occur there and they are likely to be healed of their misperception. You see, in your willingness to find your guiltlessness, you also uncover other's guiltlessness also.

So, I encourage you to be totally irresponsible from the ego's standpoint, and refuse to indulge in guilt. just don't do it. Tell your ego that you have other more important things to take care of at the moment, but you'll get back with it. Right now you are saying to your Life, "I've got an appointment with my ego, I'll be back with you in just a moment." And then you deal with your ego, and you're hooked, and you suffer.

You have more justification for attending to your Life and the joy of it, than you do for attending to your ego. Put your ego on hold until the 21st of next month or whatever date you set up. I am encouraging you to give yourself a specific amount of time. I encourage you to do it as a test so that you can compare the difference, and see from an experiential level which one is healthier for you and which one feels better. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: The question is likely to be longer than the answer, because I have a feeling that the preamble is kind of important to me. I have to give myself a pat on the back publicly, because I feel really good about me and where I am and the degree of allowing that I allow myself. So the questions that's come up for me is: Can you tell me what are the areas of my willfulness and my resistance which would cause the kinds of physical manifestations which I'm experiencing? Which are really no very big deal, but are a curiosity for me because it seems to be a step backwards.

ANSWER: You can count on it that it is not being a step backwards, but a more subtle form of the monotonous lack of creativity of the ego. In other words, you are moving forward and encountering a new limit, or ego boundary, but at a more subtle level of ego limitation.

All of you are encourage to take note, because when one goes through a first major ego boundary, it tends to be a very dynamic experience, both in terms of the difficulty encountered as well as in terms of the freedom that is accessed. And then as one continues to move around in this new territory that has been accessed, one eventually finds that there is another boundary, and one thinks, "Oh, my goodness, I've lost ground. I'm back to square one. I haven't made any progress at all." But the fact is that this is a second boundary.

And when I speak of boundaries, I encourage you to visualize them as circular fences, circular boundaries, nested inside of each other becoming larger and larger so that when you break through the first and smallest one, you then have the territory embraced by the next larger circular boundary. And when you arrive at that one, if you had thought that you were completely free of ego structures, you are likely to misinterpret the second one, and feel that boundary number one has been resurrected and you have lost ground.

You will find as you move through the second that there is yet a third and fourth, etc. But do not misunderstand, these circular boundaries do not go on indefinitely. In fact, the moving through the boundaries is not the point. It is the learning how to dishonor the boundaries, it is the learning how to move through the boundaries with grace that is the issue. And once you have mastered the yielding, you will find whatever remaining subtler fences are there will dissolve without your having to let your self through them, or violate them.

Again this is important to understand, it is not the conquest of the boundary, but the learning of the technique of being disobedient to the boundary, violating it without feeling guilty that is the key. Once you become free of the inclination to energize guilt as a result of moving through an ego boundary, you have set aside and learned the essential thing.

Literally, the physical symptoms you are experiencing are penance's, little penance's that you are paying. You are not letting yourself off scott free. You are still paying a little bit, suffering a little bit. I would not worry about it, but I would if I were you attend to releasing even that necessity of suffering for your freedom. It is an old habit. It is one that does not have a lot of substance to it, but you do not need the nuisances.

QUESTION: You're right, I don't need the nuisances. But I don't understand either what I'm suffering for, what I'm doing penance for. Is it for the freedom? And if we're talking about for the freedom, is it surrounded, or does that surround the circumstances that I'm in now? Is it that resistance?

ANSWER: No, now the freedom is not freedom particularly relative to your circumstances, but the freedom you are choosing to feel a right to exercise and be. The particular circumstances you are in served as the focal point for taking hold of your freedom, shall I say, reaching for the brass ring. But it was the getting the brass ring that you are paying a penance for. It is the fact, that you reached for and took and got the freedom that you are paying the penance for.

Now, the ego always uses, or shall I say, misuses the body for its purposes. And its purpose is always to establish its limits upon you as though they were legitimate. You now must claim something different for your body. You must recognize that it is the visibility and tangibility of your individuality, it is not the handmaiden of the ego, it is the handmaiden of your very Being. It is there serving to identify the presence of your individuality. It, therefore, has no means of acting out your ego's wishes. It is not the servant of your ego. But when you identify with your ego rather than with your Being, then your eyes become blinded to the divine service that your body fulfills in identifying the presence of your individuality perfectly. That is a divine service. It serves to identify the presence of the Father right there where you are as your individuality.

So you may dismiss this insidious and bothersome, pesky symptom, or these symptoms, with the realization that your body is not the servant of your ego, it is the servant, if I may put it this way, of the Living God. This will knock the underpinnings out from under this particular set of guilt structures, and you will find the symptoms fading rapidly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Can you give me any idea when they will begin to fade. I don't feel blocked. I haven't felt blocked. I know that there's always movement, but I just would like sort of a sense of... I need more explanation.

ANSWER: No, you don't.

QUESTION: I hate it when you do that.

ANSWER: You don't have to understand the belief or illusion in order to free yourself of it. You only have to claim your Birthright. Now you have reached for the brass ring. You have gotten the brass ring. And now you must reach for the confirmation of it physically. In other words, you must reach for your physical freedom from any illegitimately imposed limit or discomfort or hassle that the ego is attempting to foist off on you. You must claim that your body is as exempt from penalty as you are exempt from having your freedom.

Now that is all you have to do. You don't have to understand it. You don't need more explanation. You simply need to make the acknowledgment that your body serves and has one purpose and that is to identify you perfectly. And it is not the servant of the ego, even though the ego attempts to suggest that it governs your body. The brass ring you are reaching for now is that of disconnecting any validation for physical suffering on the basis that your body exists with one intent, and that is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Does this mean that I am able to allow healing?

ANSWER: Of course, it does!

QUESTION: At this stage I'm saying, am I not blocking it? Am I capable right now of allowing a healing on all physical fronts?

ANSWER: You are, indeed! And I would encourage you to give that authorization this evening.

QUESTION: I would like to ask about my work with the newspaper, The New Age Connection. It's taken a while, but I have overcome the fear of the Fundamentalists and their hostility. It's only taken two years so that's quite an accomplishment. And so, I would be interested...

ANSWER: In other words, you have learned not to define Fundamentalists as your enemy.

QUESTION: That's right. I've learned to recognize the Fundamentalist within me. That the enemy is within, not without. And I have accepted that part of me. And I guess what I'd like to ask about in connection to the paper is...

ANSWER: You have accepted that part of you. What do you mean?

QUESTION: Well, that there's a rigid, angry, negative, fearful part of me that I've been seeing as outside of me. And once I accepted that it was inside of me, then I was no longer afraid of them being outside.

ANSWER: Because in understanding that about yourself you were able to have compassion upon, rather than be judgmental of them. But you do not mean that you have accepted it as an unalterable part of your Being, but just a part that allows you to release the self-righteous judgment that would separate you from your brother, called a Fundamentalist, as though he or she were something truly different from you.

You see, this is an important point also, because part of Awakening is learning to accept yourself as you are at the moment, whether you are going to remain that way forever or not. In being able to honestly look at yourself and to not judge yourself for who you are puts you in a position of ease. Because you are not having to rise above yourself, you are not having to try to separate yourself from this part of you, just as you tended to feel a need to separate yourself from those who seemed to reflect that part of you. And so, there is greater self-appreciation. You cannot be where you cannot be.

And whatever threshold of growth any of you might be on at this moment, it doesn't constitute justification for judgment against yourself. Because whatever the belief structures are, whatever the dynamics of the limitations are at the moment, they are nevertheless the furthest forward you have ever stood on the threshold of your learning. And, therefore, there is much to be grateful for. And you see, in that sense of experiencing your integrity at the moment and valuing yourself at the moment, your comfort zone is large enough to allow you to step forward a couple of steps, and perhaps leave behind some of these angers, or frustrations, or lacks of tolerance that you might be embracing about yourself.

Everyone is afraid to let down and feel what they feel and still love themselves. But in doing so, it paves the way for a graceful growth out of those limits. The fear is that if you dare to accept yourself as you are, you'll never get out of where you are. You will be stuck there. That is the fear. But when there is the self-acceptance that says, "Here I am. If I could be different I would. But I can't and I'm not. And you'll just have to take me as I am. I take myself as I am." That gives the basis for growing gracefully.

And it also provides a capacity to have true compassion on others who may also be suffering from the same kind of lack of self-love and lack of self-appreciation. And that's what opens dialog, because in your compassion, in your lack of judgment, those who are suffering from the same thing feel safe. And in that safety it becomes easier for them to like themselves. Continue.

QUESTION: There's a woman who says she would like to come on staff with me, but she needs about $25,000 a year to live. And I need to not have financial pressure on me at this point to provide her with that kind of a living. At the present we're just trying to ask our spirit guides if they could arrange something. And we're just trying to think positive and be prepared to receive with gratitude. And I'm wondering if you have any comments about the direction the newspaper could go in, and the idea of her coming on staff two or three days a week with me?

ANSWER: Do not put yourself in a position that would cause you to become defended. Do not put yourself in a position that would cause you to feel vulnerable. Do not try to be what you cannot be. Do not try to do what you cannot do. Be willing to say what you can do, and let her accept or reject it. Do not feel that if her need is for a certain amount per year, that you must be the sole provider of that amount. She may well have to find two jobs, thus allowing her and you the time to allow growth with the paper to occur that would cover her expenses without your feeling vulnerable.

So, understand that her Being is responsible for the unfoldment of that which identifies her fulfillment. You are not the one that is responsible. So be clear with what you know you can do and what you know you can't do. And don't for the sake of your spiritual growth over extend yourself, saying that you are expressing confidence in the divine powers that be to come through.

Work where you are comfortable. Be straight about it. And leave it to her to decide whether that will work for her or not. If you are clear with her, then she can be clear within herself about what she needs to do. And she will be able to be clear in listening within herself for that which will identify her fulfillment, financially speaking. If you are hemming and hawing and being indefinite or vague, she will not be able to be clear in her process of listening.

So what is your responsibility? Not to provide her with the income she needs, but to be absolutely clear and unequivocally straight about what you can and can't do in order to remain in your comfort zone so that you may fulfill your tasks easily and without distraction. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This morning you mentioned the gentleman who is now the leader in Russia, and just briefly touched upon the changes that are happening there. And I would like to ask you to talk a little bit more about that gentleman, and about the changes that are happening there that are effecting all of us.

ANSWER: I am not going to go into any length here or any great detail. I will say this: If one is perceived to be an enemy, whether that perception has been justified by behavior or not, one is tempted to react, shall I say, respond reactively, one is likely to fulfill the role of enemy—whether it is a country, or whether it is another human being.

It takes a great deal of self-honesty for an individual or a nation to take a look at itself, see how it is perceived by others, and realize that if the perception of those who see one as an enemy is going to change there is going to have to be provided a basis for that change of perception.

Now, if you were married to someone who didn't believe that you loved him, who asked you repetitively whether you really loved him, and you said, "yes," and he would ask again, and you would say, "yes, of course," this would be no problem. But if he continued to ask year after year, you might begin to wonder whether he saw something in you that you didn't see, whether maybe you didn't really love him. Now, you could become inclined to find out what there was in you that he was perceiving that caused him to continue to ask you this simple question.

Now, it would become your task to be willing to provide the clear information to him that indeed you did love him. You would have to be willing to provide conscious expressions of your love for him so that he might eventually be able to give up his doubt.

This is what has happened in Russia. You are not just getting a PR snow-job. They are not just attempting to say the right things to create a new image. They are expressing their honest, shall I say, feelings, and clearly expressing their stance to the rest of the world.

It is not a ploy, but it is a very new thing for them to do, to dare to do. And they are having to do it in the face of ongoing doubt. And in the face of the

A Gathering with Raj
Winnipeg, Manitoba
1989
(Volume 2)

ongoing expressions of doubt they are having to persist, even though the ongoing expressions of doubt are discouraging. There is a great deal of fortitude and a great deal of commitment to peace, and to not playing into the taunts of the rest of the world—the invitations to react as the enemy by claiming that they are still the enemy.

In many respects there is greater honest self-appraisal going on in Russia, and greater accurate self-awareness going on in Russia than there is in the other major powers of the world. They are leading the way unfortunately. I say unfortunately because the other major countries state and feel that they are the leaders in the name of freedom, and yet they have become locked into their concept of polarized stances of enemies, of the right side and the wrong side, the good guys and the bad guys.

Now, as I have stated before, the shift of consciousness in Russia is going to start with the top down—from the leaders of their government down to the grassroots. In the Western World it is starting from the grassroots and will work up to the government officials.

So pay attention in reading the news. Pay attention in listening to or reading of the Gorbachev's speeches. Be alert to his expressions of the valuing of simple humane ideals, the meeting of the simple human needs. The very same things that you are finding emerging from within you as your values, and as what you recognize needs to be attended to. The grassroots shifting that is occurring on the North American continent can find its counter part in the evolving Soviet Government.

I encourage you to be willing to acknowledge this shift wherever it is happening, and as I said earlier, to not continue to energize the polarized enemy stance. You cannot have one enemy, you must have two who are enemies of each other. And if you are going to take the enemy stance, you are going to elicit the enemy stance, unless the one being accused of being an enemy makes a concerted effort to consistently communicate that there is no need for defense, that there is no enemy there.

As I said, it takes a great deal of courage, whether it is from an individual or from a nation, to counteract the accusation “enemy” with a constant presentation of friendship, and of valuing what truly means something to everyone.

Great headway will be made during the balance of this year and next year. I am not saying that it will stop after that, this is the only period I am choosing to refer to right now. Much greater unity is going to emerge, both on the North American continent as well as in Europe. The caution and the fear and the tendency still to identify Russia as enemy will persist, but it will weaken. And I simply encourage you to lend your weight to the truth by acknowledging the evidence of truth and love wherever it is being expressed, even if it is from a source that you hadn't expected it from.

There is a suggestion that Gorbachev will be removed from power. This is not likely, and I encourage all of you not to lend your weight to that belief.

Again, to quote Paul, it's not too good to be true what is happening in Russia. And one should not expect that it will only be temporary. The changes that are occurring are part and parcel of the shift of consciousness and the reconfiguration that would be occurring environmentally and socially and politically. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I need a little preamble to this question. Over the last almost two years now, I've done a lot of sifting and sorting of past conditioning and thrown out a lot of traditions and ideas that no longer felt appropriate. But I still find a tension within to be something or to do something. Can you suggest away to just accept who I am? How I would do that?

ANSWER: Well, how about accepting yourself as someone who is feeling a need to do or be? In other words, start with yourself as you are experiencing yourself, and don't judge it negatively, embrace it, abide with it. That will reduce the frustration and that will take the edge off it. And then you will be in a position of asking, "why do I have this motivation to do or to be?"

Now mind you, you asked the question, "Why do I have this feeling?" But don't try to figure out the answer, just pay attention to the feeling of the motivation. You would have to be dead not to feel motivation to do or be. And you do not want that. So the motivation is coming from somewhere. And mind you, the ego isn't able to create motivation, it is only able to create reluctance or resistance to motivation.

So I encourage you to abide with the feeling of motivation, to feel it without feeling called upon to act on it without knowing what it is motivation for. And by just abiding with it you will find yourself inevitably being in the spot where the motivation can be transformed or translated into actions. And you will find that the actions will be completely congruent with you, completely congruent with what you would call fulfillment of self-expression.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. There's a picture. The picture was that if you don't try to figure out what it is, the motivation will be there. And the picture was like the motivation was to play the piano, but you couldn't look at it directly, or you didn't know exactly what it was. And it's like one way or another you would find yourself sidling up to a piano and sneaking behind it and hitting the keys. And you will just find yourself there and doing it.

QUESTION: In fact, that's what happens. It's not thinking about it that it seems to allow me to do it in a very guided way.

ANSWER: Exactly! But you see, it requires embracing yourself with whatever is going on at the moment, rather than trying to get rid of some of it so that you can be at peace with yourself.

QUESTION: I would like to ask you something about my work. I work for the Federal Government. And there have been some moves to down size the Civil Service, and this year our branch has been affected. And there's a lot of insecurities in our office. And I just wondered whether you see any amelioration to this situation?

ANSWER: Not directly. In other words, the situation is not going to change in the environment you are in.

QUESTION: Are we going to be cut?

ANSWER: Meaning you personally.

QUESTION: No, no, I mean the program. It's a great program. I love the people I work with. I love the clients, the age group I deal with. There has been talk in the past that the program could have been cut. It hasn't been so far but...

TAPE: FIVE

ANSWER: For at least the next four years it will not be cut. There will not be relief from the financial tightness, but the program will not be cut. Your job will continue to exist. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question needs some preamble as well. My husband and I work in a child care, and we have twelve children with us. And for the last twelve years we've been able to keep these twelve spots filled quite easily. For the last eight months whenever we needed someone, I would talk to my guides, and they would respond within a day with a call for whatever I asked for.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. You mean in terms of filling in the blank spaces?

QUESTION: If I needed a three year old or something, I'd ask for a three-year-old, and within a day somebody would call with a three-year-old, or close. However, since July I've been asking for a three, four or five-year-old, and I've had lots of calls and they're all under two. My question is, we have four who are two or under, and the rest go up to six. I really don't want to take any young ones, because I feel it's not fair to the older ones.

However, I guess I'm wondering, have I forgotten how to ask, or am I missing the boat in terms of that we need to take younger children, or is something else pending—maybe a family with two that will fill the two spots we'll have as of the end of October. I guess I just need guidance as to should I keep waiting or should I do something more actively?

ANSWER: You are jumping the gun. You are being impatient. And you are cast doubt upon the integrity of your request. And as you have indicated, you are wondering if you have forgotten how to ask. The answer is, no, you have not forgotten how to ask, but you have forgotten how to listen. And listening in this case means, allowing the fulfillment of that request which is appropriate to unfold in its perfect timing. And its perfect timing will not be to your detriment.

To answer your question: No, it is not appropriate for you to take younger children to fill these spots that you will have. Continue to be clear that the age group you are desiring is appropriate, and does constitute balance for the overall group. You are correct.

I encourage you to have a little more faith in your listening, and your knowing what to ask for. You know that listening to know what to ask for, and the feeling around listening to know what to ask for has not changed, even though you have not had the immediate feedback from your world confirming it.

I am pointing this out to you so that you might realize that you are aware that nothing has changed, and that therefore the questioning, or the doubting of whether you are asking correctly has not been a valid doubt, if you will. The key is, "Thy Will be done." You have listened, you have known that it was appropriate to have a three, four or five-year-old. That is knowing that has resulted from listening. Then you express the desire for a three, four or five-year-old. And then say, "Thy Will be done." Want for the three, four or five-year-old to appear in the timing that identifies fulfillment, not old for the children you have but for the children who will be coming.

I fully understand that the ego can cause you to become antsy and impatient. But you have recognized that all of the signs of listening well have been present. And I encourage you to let that awareness serve as justification for holding on to your peace rather than letting it go.

Those slots will within three weeks be filled. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to know why my hearing appears to be diminishing? And why my blood pressure won't stabilize? And what I can do about it?

ANSWER: The diminishing hearing is a simple result of, what I will call an unchallenged suggestion that with age comes deterioration of the faculties. I do not mean that you have not objected to it. I do not mean that you have completely agreed with it. But there is a fundamental belief that you have been conditioned with, to the effect that slowly but surely you will begin to lose your youth, lose your capacities, lose your senses.

Now I encourage you to actively challenge this daily. Not because it will be a difficult thing to overcome, and therefore you must do it regularly. But rather because there is nothing more appropriate for you to do than to acknowledge the truth about yourself. There is nothing more pleasurable to do than to acknowledge the truth about yourself.

And so I encourage you daily to claim that those faculties which demonstrate or substantiate your conscious experience of Being—which your hearing certainly does—is a divine faculty, which has its source in you as consciousness. With the further understanding that you as consciousness are the reflection of the infinite Mind of God.

Your faculties of hearing, seeing, smelling, feeling, etc., are, if I may put it this way, divine representations or divine manifestations of conscious Being. They are therefore, as permanent, as enduring, as eternal as the conscious individuality that you are. But understand that the necessity is to bring your conscious awareness of these faculties into the context of the Allness of God so that you may understand the divine connection between God and these faculties of awareness.

In this way, you will not be inclined to agree with the suggestion that says that you are just a physical organism and that there will naturally be a certain deterioration that will occur until finally the physical organism collapses and your Soul becomes free again. I will tell you something: Your Soul will never be without that which identifies its presence. You will never be bodiless. If you are never going to be bodiless, then you might as well get about the business of embracing your body as the eternal identification of your individuality that it is, and not play into and support the idea of deterioration. Sooner or later you will have to correct that so that you do not experience this eternal identification, called body, in a negative and limited way.

So again, I encourage you to daily challenge this belief by acknowledging the divine intent of your body, and the fact that it exists in the context of the Allness of God rather than being something unlike God to be left behind.

PAUL: What was the second part of your question.

QUESTION: My blood pressure won't stabilize. It goes up and down.

ANSWER: Very simply I am going to encourage you to meditate regularly. You tend to allow yourself to be hooked by your world, to be reactive to it. And this indeed affects the stability of your blood pressure. The practice of meditation will help you to stabilize in terms of loosening you from the tendency to be reactive. The practice of meditation will help to stabilize your peace within, and that is what will be reflected outwardly as an equalized blood pressure. It must become more important to you to be centered than to be reactive to your world.

Now, I want you to be aware that you always have the option to observe your world from one of two vantage points: Either the vantage point of your reactive ego, or two, from the vantage point of your capital “B” Being. Those are the only two choices you have. When you are unaware that you have the choice of experiencing it from the level of your Being, then you feel that you must just flow on the waves of emotional responses, and tolerate it to the best of your ability.

But I encourage you to pay attention as you go through your day. And when you find yourself becoming reactive, disgruntled, upset, very happy, whatever extremes of emotional responses you might have, when you notice the extremes happening realize that you have the option to experience whatever is going on from the centered place of your capital “B” Being. And then choose to view it from there. And one of the most effective ways to choose to do it is to hesitate for maybe 30 or 45 seconds and simply, calmly breath. And as you exhale let there be a conscious intent to release the tension, to release the anxiety, to release the emotional response on the breath as you let it go.

This will help to remind you that you do not have to deal with your world in the same cockeyed way that everyone else is. And that you have the option to view it and to act within it from your centered place—your centered peaceful perspective. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Even though I have considerable clarification for the various content themes that I would like to integrate into my book, I’m presently very much searching for a particular style or format. Lately I’ve been drawn to myths, symbology, and particularly story telling. I feel my inner guidance directed me to the story telling class last week in order for me to use that particular writing format on some level in my book. Would you concur with that?

ANSWER: Completely, yes!

QUESTION: Ahhh! And is there something that you would like me to have special awareness for particularly as related to my own personal story, or any of the other themes?

ANSWER: With the degree of clarity that you are already experiencing, there is absolutely no need for me to embellish it or add to it. I encourage you to trust what your guidance is unfolding to you. You are listening. I do not need to encourage you to listen better or more consistently. There simply is no need for me to say anything except, “Keep up the good work.”

QUESTION: I don’t know what to do with my life at this point. My children are growing up and leaving home. And I’ve been thinking about going back to work, but I would have to be retrained, because I don’t want to do what I did before. But the problem is getting at an age where he’s starting to take more time off and he wants to travel. Now if I work I can’t travel. And I just don’t know what to do.

ANSWER: First of all, don't jump to any conclusions. Don't feel that there is an urgency to act or do something. Secondly, you have the opportunity here to rediscover your relationship with your husband. The two of you set out with the task and a goal of raising a family. This task did not require that you lose sight of each other, but the busyness of the task has not drawn you apart, but it has distracted you from thoroughly enjoying each others company. Therefore, I would encourage you to dare to be rather simple, rather human, if you will, and value the relationship that you have and let it take precedence, rather than letting a job take precedence that would interfere with the relationship.

Now this does not mean for you not to look for a job, not to look for an activity that you could identify as your own. But I encourage you to look for an activity that allows the flexibility needed in order for you to have the time to enjoy each others company, and explore living and even the world to some extent, together.

You did not have a great deal of time together before the family came along, and you deserve to share the love that brought you together and kept you together and is still actively present. But it is appropriate for you to share it with more of a spotlight on it, the illumination and enhancement of your experience of love for each other deserves to be experienced. And it is appropriate for you to let the freshness of that love reemerged and be rediscovered. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have to do a preamble for this question. Some time ago I was accused of incorrect behavior regarding my job. And my immediate superiors reacted with a certain degree of outrage, and attempted to find out details. And they have exhausted all avenues open to them to find out the details regarding this incidence. For myself I'm not aware that there was any incorrect behavior, but I'm really not sure, there may be.

Unknown to them or else known to them, I have another recourse to find out more information on this. And I want you to advise me whether I should take this unconventional course or not.

ANSWER: No, indeed. Do not take any steps to uncover further information. And I encourage you not to play into the suggestion of guilt just because you don't have all the facts, and there is in your mind some possibility that there was incorrect or inappropriate behavior. I encourage you to simply keep your peace and continue to give your attention to your work and release the suggestion that there is cause for guilt, and release the guilt as well.

I encourage you to simply not play into the suggestion that you are guilty of something. Your peace will help to smooth the waters, and you will find the issue being dropped. Do not become reactive. In this way, you will not fuel the imaginary fire—and I do not mean in your imagination, but in the imagination of those who have made the accusation. This will pass. And it is imperative for you to keep your peace. The old saying is, "If the shoe fits, wear it." Well, the shoe doesn't fit, so don't wear it. And don't waste your time wondering whether somehow in some way it might really fit. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: One of the most special gifts that I received from A Course In Miracles has been, that when I see something that pushes my buttons from someone else's behavior, that while my buttons are being pushed there's something I have to look at inside myself.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Well, it's been quite a journey this year. My question is tied in with that, in that we were talking about earlier this morning, about the fact that we had two choices. One from the vantage point of your reactive ego, and one from the centered place of Being. Has this sort of plateau that I've been experiencing lately, in between those two choices, or is it coming from the fact that I really am starting to be able to come from the centered place of Being, or is it just an illusion on my part that these tears for instance would be from my reactive ego? Do you understand the question?

ANSWER: Oh, yes indeed. I will put it this way, the plateau that you are speaking of is the manifest peace of your Being, the equilibrium that I was speaking of. I will say that you have gotten the hang of choosing for the vantage point of your Being. You will find yourself knocked off balance or distracted from that peace from time to time. But you will find that as you more and more consciously choose for the peaceful centered vantage point of your Being, that the peace, the plateau, the equilibrium will be more and more present in your life. And even if there are dynamics in your life that are ego oriented you will not be hooked as easily. You will be able to deal with them more easily, and life will generally become more enjoyable.

This plateau, as you put it, is not a stuck place. Just because there are not great traumatic and exciting dynamics does not mean you are stuck, does not mean that the vitality of life and the interestingness of life has gone out the window, it simply means that you have "achieved" a new level of clarified and centered perception.

The tears again, are not emotional in the sense of arriving out of the reactive ego, but rather express the joy, the meaningfulness of this centered perspective, and the valuing of it that you are embodying that is within you.

Now there are, if I may put it this way, further dimensions of peace, further depths of peace and equilibrium that will unfold to you. But enjoy what you're experiencing now. And above all, do not assume that you are ignoring or overlooking something essential, and that is why there is this plateau, or that is why there is this peace. Nothing essential is being overlooked, but the nonessentialness of ego reaction have been reduced. The richness of the fabric of existence is more able to be experienced by you from this peace. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a two-fold question here, this way I'll get more answers. First of all, it's been a long road getting here, right here. And I realized that I have been on a bumpy road, and I've experienced a lot of things, and it seems to me that the pattern is coming to... it's just I'm matching, everything is matching up the way it's supposed to be.

And my big question is: My husband and I have a business together, and I'm wondering if we're on track with that business or if there's some changes we could make to make it more prosperous and to enlighten more people. I probably should explain that: We're in the dog business. We train, breed retriever field trail dogs and hunting dogs. And there's a need for that specific type of animal to be trained. And I have a personal understanding of animal that comes from an inside part of me that I'm not even aware of.

Anyway, I need to know if we're on track with that specific area? If there's some changes that we could make that would make it better for everybody, including the animal.

And the next part of the question is, I've just changed...

ANSWER: We will take one part at a time. The answer to your question is: Yes, you are on track, and if there is anything that you are to change it is to enjoy what you are doing more, and not become burdened by a sense of responsibility or a sense of having to improve what you are doing. The improvement will occur through the joy that you allow yourself to more freely feel than you are currently allowing yourselves to feel. Let this element of enjoyment come back into the picture. It will benefit the animals and it will benefit those who come to you—those individuals who come to you for your services.

Now you may go to the second part.

QUESTION: The second part of the question is, that me personally... I changed careers. And I'm going to be going into an area that is not brand new to me, but I know that there's going to be a lot of needs. And I have this question of, "am I good enough to do this? Can I do this? Do I have the power to empower people?" My spiritual side says, "Yes I do." But my ego is getting in there going, "I'm not sure you do. I'm not sure you can really do this." And I'm asking for an answer.

ANSWER: Which voice are you going to listen to.

QUESTION: Well, my spiritual one. But the other one really causes a lot of havoc.

ANSWER: The ego dangles bait, that is all it does. You do not have to take the bait, you can let it dangle forever.

Now if nothing else I encourage you to listen to the spiritual sense that is unfolding to you and explore acting upon what it says. Just explore to see what happens. Have fun exploring. Acting in accordance with that spiritual awareness, of course you have it. You could however prove to yourself, or seem to prove to yourself that you don't have it if you let the bait that the ego is dangling distract you and perhaps even hook you temporarily.

You will not have the ability to empower others if you do not let yourself be empowered by your spiritual guidance and your deeper knowing of the truth. And so forget about empowering others, and attend to empowering yourself by daring to trust into what your heart is saying to you.

Again, this brings into play this leap of faith that we were talking about yesterday. But understand that you are doing your dreaming in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, you are experiencing your ignorance in the middle of Reality, and therefore all of your ignorance or your process of Awakening is occurring in a state of absolute security.

And so you can dare to explore potentials, spiritual potentials, other kinds of potentials. You can dare to explore without damaging your true self, because all of it is going on right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. So no matter what you are doing it is never a do or die situation.

QUESTION: Is there a process that I could use to help me through this?

ANSWER: A very simple one, dare to remember and pay attention to what your spiritual self is saying, and dare to act upon it. Dare to explore acting upon your spiritual intuitions.

Now if you want a more complicated ritual than that, you will have to go to someone else to find it. But the ritual will not enhance anything. The only thing that will “accomplish” anything will be the leap of faith and the investment of trust in what your spiritual intuition is saying to you, and acting upon it in the sense of exploring what that avenue has to offer you.

So you simply need to remind yourself frequently of what your spiritual intuition is saying, or listen frequently so that you may feel the intuition. That is the only way you are going to find that the intuition is dependable. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It looks like this is career morning, because I have a career minded question as well. For the past three years—I’ve been working in the health care field for more than that—but for the past three years I feel that my nursing career has been a stepping stone to something else outside of traditional health care.

And only in analogy I can sort of describe what I’ve been feeling, is this step... I’ve been going across this brook on these stepping stones, and I’ve stepped off and I’m busy chasing frogs, and gotten lost. So what I’m asking is am I on track, like you know it’s okay to be dabbling in this and dabbling in that and I’m still following my purpose?

ANSWER: It all depends on what you are dabbling in. What are you dabbling in?

QUESTION: Different career aspects. I worked on a movie in the summer which was fun. I’ve worked in community health, which was a wonderful experience. But I just don’t feel like now I have any real direction. I not quite sure how to describe it, but also I’m very interested in the holistic health field, and I feel I have a place in there somewhere, but I’m just not sure how or where or when.

ANSWER: So you are very simply not lost, but reconnoitering, getting the lay of the land, taking it into consideration relative to where you have come from, siting the horizon to see the best and most natural avenue to move in. This is excellent!

QUESTION: But why the feeling of frustration sometimes?

ANSWER: Because you are antsy, impatient, you want to get the show on the road. But you’re going to have to let the show get you on the road—meaning that you are going to have to dare to become quiet enough, patient enough to let the show unfold itself. And of course, the show that is unfolding itself is your Self, with a capital “S”, your Being.

Now there is a reason for this period of reconnoitering that has nothing to do with a conscious choice on your part. It has to do with the fact that integration needs to occur before you will be ready to move forward on a sound basis. And so I encourage you to pay attention to all of these aspects that you have been dabbling in, and pay attention to what you are feeling relative to them. And pay attention to how they feel relative to whatever movement or direction that is beginning to emerge from within you at the level of your conscious awareness.

When the forward movement is supposed to begin, it will begin. Do not avoid the integration that is occurring during this reconnoitering period, else you will extend the reconnoitering period. Because the integration must occur before you move forward or the movement forward will overwhelm you.

Now, rather than tell you to practice patience, I am going to suggest that you stop practicing impatience. Abide where you are and instead of focusing in on the horizon notice what is going on right around you.

QUESTION: I just had a very experiential experience with that in the last couple of weeks, where I had a fall off a horse, and at the time prior to that I was feeling really “Home” sick, like I didn’t want to be here anymore. And what I’ve been really feeling since then is that the joy is right where I am. Is this part of my integration, this feeling that Home is right where I am?

ANSWER: Absolutely Dorothy! (laughter)

QUESTION: Yea, I feel like I’ve been lost in Oz sometimes.

ANSWER: You see, the ego suggests that you are not right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and if you are going to find it you must get away from this illusion. Well, the only illusion there is to where you are is the misperception that causes the Kingdom of Heaven to appear to be what the ego suggests it is. And until you allow yourself to be fully present in the here and the now, you will not be in the place where the opportunity exists for the clarification to occur so that you might see with your right Mind.

If you want to find God, you have to go to the very center of you, not to the far reaches of the universe. And if you want to see the Kingdom of Heaven, you have to allow yourself into the very essence of everything you see, the very essence of every leaf, the very essence of every blade of grass, the very essence of every cell of your body.

Remember that I have said, “Love is the recognition of that which is Real, with a capital ‘R’, in each and everything.” Love is the letting down of your defenses, the defenses that keep you from experiencing the essence, the essential capital “M” Meaning of a thing. Love is the willingness to let the Real Meaning of a thing in to let it register with you. It is becoming defenseless.

There is no way to get outside of the Kingdom of Heaven. And so, you never have been outside of the Kingdom of Heaven. You have never been outside of Reality. And so, you start right in the middle of You, and you start right in the middle of everything you see. You develop enough humility to be fully present where you are and with what you are with, and then its divinity has the opportunity to register with you. And the misperception of you and the misperception of what you see will disappear, and you will seem to be transformed, and everything you see will seem to be transformed. But all that will have changed is that you will have come back into your right Mind, and you will see everything as it is, not as it has appeared to be through the lenses of the ego. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Yesterday you addressed the question of my taking the crumbs from the table...

ANSWER: Oh, not from the table, from beneath the table.

QUESTION: Okay, wherever they are they're crumbs. And I would like to know how I can be unblocked from allowing my abundance to flow? What's blocking it? I've been working with this for so many years, I'm very tired of it now. It unblocks and then it blocks up again.

ANSWER: By recognizing that fulfillment does not birth itself through lack, deprivation and false humility, called unworthiness. Fulfillment births itself through intelligence.

QUESTION: Where am I being unintelligent?

ANSWER: In the willingness to believe that fulfillment will emerge through your willingness to do without.

QUESTION: Is this saying I need to make a demand?

ANSWER: No, you do not have to demand of the Father to give you your abundance. Your abundance is your inherent Birthright. You have to stop justifying its absence by finding value in experiencing a lack that you associate with humility.

QUESTION: Is this an old belief system from my upbringing, or is it something I conjured up since I'm an adult?

ANSWER: No, it is an old belief, and it is one that has support, shall I say, ancient support. Vows of poverty suggest that there is exaltation that will result from the kind of humility it takes to put up with lack.

I am encouraging you to nurture self-respect, intelligence and the realization that God expresses Himself/Herself abundantly as an aspect of self-worth. The Father/Mother does not express Itself through tight channels. If I may put it this way, the birth canal of the Creative Movement of the Father is as infinite as the Father Is. And therefore, there is no value to be found in getting to your fulfillment through a tight birth canal.

QUESTION: In practical terms, how do we open it up? I have the intellectual knowledge, that's not the problem, I know.

ANSWER: I encourage you to ask the Father, "What is your Will for me? Disclose your Will for me, relative to my abundance and the manifest structure of what I would call a home, and a place from which to work." And then let the attitude be, "Thy Will be done," meaning, "I will no longer enforce upon the abundant self-expression of the Father a concept that His abundance must come to me through lack, or through a tightness. Not my false expectation, but `Thy Will be done.'"

QUESTION: An attitude of surrender?

ANSWER: Surrender to abundance, surrender to infinity, yes. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question extends from last year, the same kind of a question, where you stated something along the lines of a... it was like a pregnancy, that I had to wait, like I was having the feelings of I had to do something. And they were coming more from the ego, and I was to kind of wait. And things are happening now, the same kind of things, only the feelings are not quite the same, there not those ego feelings. So I guess my question is: How's my pregnancy doing?

ANSWER: The new feeling is the beginning of labor—very deep pushing, that is not coming from an ego level of accomplishment. Delivery from the level of your being is not laborious, but it is very definite.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. That's the end of his answer, but it's like you're on the cart being wheeled into the delivery room waving at you like, good luck, or have fun, or whatever. So I guess we're going to have to have another workshop next year to find out what you had. That's the end of the answer.

TAPE: SIX

QUESTION: Well, I'm not sure how this question is going to come out, because there seems to be a lot connected to it. This appears to be a career seminar here this morning, I'm going to go off on my career. I've heard from various guides that this isn't my best place to be, as far as the right place for me.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. Are you speaking of career or geographic location?

QUESTION: Geographic location. So I'm wondering basically if the patience that I've been dealing with here... it feels kind of like tolerance. And I've been dealing with my ego a lot and just kind of waiting for something to show itself to me. And I'm just wondering if this is the right approach, and if this next year something is going to unfold?

ANSWER: Indeed, it is the right approach until you feel the movement. Until you feel the motivation to relocate, don't relocate. And let other people have their best judgments and opinions and let them offer their wonderful help, but don't act upon it if you are not feeling the movement. They are expressing their feeling of being trapped or frustrated by the geographic location. Honor it as a self-expression of the individuals speaking, but don't assume that it is the way you ought to feel.

Always pay attention to what you do feel and you will always be on track.

QUESTION: That's good confirmation for what I have been feeling, because I have seen absolutely no need to move because everything is going very well.

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: I guess what I am looking for is my right place just within this geographic location as far as a place to feel at home and set up a place to create and fulfill myself creatively.

ANSWER: But at the moment you see, your place of being creative is not confined to a home. And unlike the earlier question about place, where it was appropriate for there to be a place and there was a movement out of a sense of "appropriate lack" you are not in a state of lack appropriate or inappropriate, there is an abundance of activity. There is a certain degree of financial security. You are not living on the brink financially, constantly.

So I encourage you to let your home base be a broader territory than a specific location. You're already home, and I'm not meaning that in a metaphysical way, I mean that you simply have a home base that allows you to enjoy, as it were, a summer residence, a winter residence, a spring residence, a January residence, a February residence, etc. But all of them serve the fulfillment that your being is unfolding and they do not represent a lack of stability that would suggest that you need to attend to becoming stable. So hang loose. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Yesterday I felt that the question I asked wasn't the real question. And I think it's finally gelled for me, and it does require some preamble. I'd like to talk about disengagement. And you use the word yesterday in one of your answers to somebody, and I realized that that was the word that triggered something in me that I was recognizing. And what I'd like to talk about is the disengagement that I have felt, which on an ego level would be I think alarming, in that it's meant that I have stepped back from almost all of life—that's relationships with people that I know for a long time, and also from new people I meet. It's more than a detachment, it's a disengagement from all.

And as you were speaking this morning I felt that perhaps what this was was the space between what I was seeing with my physical eyes, and the desire to allow myself to see with the eyes of my heart, but also my physical eyes. It's like the place where I'm making the transition to be able to see in a new way but with your physical eyes.

I would like to know if I'm on track with that feeling, because around that too is the lose of my memory. And this is becoming alarming, because very simply I accused my son of not doing something which he did do, and it was simply that I'd forgotten, and I'm forgetting everything. And when we were talking to Paul earlier, he was talking about "Cats." I was there, I have an impression of it, but I have no memory of it in specific detail. And this is falling away from me most dramatically.

ANSWER: You are speaking of the Broadway Play?

QUESTION: The Broadway Play "Cats," yes. So, I mean, all of these little things sort of gelled for me in the word disengagement.

ANSWER: Indeed. Disengagement is the word. It is not that you are becoming an isolationist. It is not that you are withdrawing from involvement from the world, but you are disengaging from what I will call ego attachment to the world. You are thus being able to respond or relate to the world, but free of the subtle governments of preconceptions.

You are able to be more present and more spontaneously responsive. And your responses are not arising out of memory or the past, but out of a connectedness with the moment that you are in. This constitutes freedom. And although you have not mentioned it, it necessarily has involved for you a sense of security and well-being which has not made sense to your intellect, but nevertheless has been present as an experience.

Now memory will begin to go out the window as you allow yourself to be present in the now. You utilize the memory as a substitute for knowing when you have lost touch with knowing. You accumulate knowledge, because you think that you do not have knowledge available to you. As you begin to tap into your Knowing, with a capital "K", as a result of consistently listening, it becomes unnecessary to remember anything, it becomes unnecessary to store up even marvelous truths that you have heard. Because the fact is, that the truth that needs to be known will be present and available to you in the moment that it needs to be known. And thus, the truth needing to be known will be absolutely relevant, and not the best approximation that you can pull out of a file drawer in your memory.

The reason you have accused your son of not doing something is not so much because you have forgotten, but because you are not paying attention in the moment to what you know. At those moments you have slipped back into, let us say, a three-dimensional mode. It represents—these incidents—they represent the necessity to even more consistently listen or be attentive to what you know. And then you will not seem to make the mistake of accusing him, or believing within yourself that he has not done something that he has done.

So there is more opportunity for you to let yourself more significantly into the awareness of the knowing in the moment. That is not a demand, but an opportunity—an opportunity to be even more fully aware from the level of your knowing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I do have a follow up to that, only I forgot what it was. The other word that comes to mind is, inarticulate. I just like to check this out with you. When I'm feeling inarticulate, at a loss for words, that means I should just shut up, right?

ANSWER: You've got it!

QUESTION: I think that's probably all. Thank you very much. Except that I feel like I should shut up an awful lot.

ANSWER: When you have shut up, you have the opportunity to listen. And when you listen you have the opportunity to know. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to ask for you comments on my relationship with my mother. My relationship with her has been quite a learning experience, to put it mildly.

ANSWER: When are you going to cut the apron strings?

QUESTION: This is what I am asking the question about. She is in very poor health right now, but has said she doesn't want to see me. And I'm realizing I do have the choice, I could force myself on her and go back and try and look after her. Or I could stay away and just continue to try and heal the relationship on a spirit level. And this is where I'm leaning right now. And also I'm wondering, did I beat her up in a previous life, because I've sure played the victim role in this life? And I wonder if we just reversed roles to even the score?

So those are my two questions. Should I stay apart now at this point? She could die. She's very ill. And all the relatives are putting that at me, for being separate and sort of on ego level I don't want everyone so mad at me. And yet I can see that this relationship really... it's time to let go on a physical level.

ANSWER: So what if everyone is mad at you? If you are going to act on the basis of their distress with you, then you're becoming their puppet. But as I have said before, the only way you can become someone's puppet is by taking strings attached to your belt and placing those strings in the hands of these other people and then behaving in accordance with their movements. And so, they are not controlling you, you are controlling yourself as though you are being controlled by them, and it is all you own doing.

Now, let them be distressed! It has nothing to do with you, it has to do with them. Let them work out their distress! It is not necessary for you to pick up on it and be distressed yourself.

Now, indeed, she may die. That is not a prediction, that is the human fact at the moment. But she has requested for you not to be there. Just as you realize you have the right to override that, realize that she has the right to express that she does not want to see you. And let her be in her comfort zone.

Now, it happens that her comfort zone is miserable. It is not very comfortable for her, but she has the right to demand it. You are not obligated by birth to remain the servant of your mother. You are here to be you. You are not here to fulfill a role as a daughter. You here to fulfill your purpose as a whole Souled woman, as your Self.

So let her have her little drama. And let your family have its distress. And you get about the business of joyfully living your life. And when and if these others decide that it is comfortable for them to blend with you, let them. But if they choose not to blend with you, then nurture companionship and camaraderie with those who do blend with you. And don't become anymore complicated about it than that. That is simple common sense. It also happens to be wisdom.

Now you must release yourself. That means, that you must either snip the string attached to your belt, or you must take the string out of the hands of those in who's hands you have placed that string. They do not even know that they have the string in their hands, so you do not have to get them back from those individuals. You simply have to stop behaving as though you were attached to them, and they were governing you.

You have seen individuals moving as though they were robots. And if they are really good at it, they look very mechanical, even though they are human beings with greater flexibility than is being expressed. Well, likewise you are being a puppet, but you are a human being behaving like a puppet, never really becoming one. And what is essential here, is for you to realize that although you are conceptualizing strings attached to the hands of others, and you are at times feeling governed by them, you are not. You are governing yourself completely. And you have the power, and have had it completely, at all times, even though at times you have so skillfully behaved like a puppet that you have believed yourself.

Your life is supposed to be a little bit more fun than that. And I encourage you to drop the charade. Mind you, I'm not picking on you alone here. I am speaking specifically to you, but anyone who is feeling as though he is a puppet at the mercy of other's decisions is playing a charade, and has all of the power resident in him or her to either continue the charade, or to live his or her life freely. Government is self-government. That is the only kind of government there is. And even when one seems to be governed by another, it is a matter of self-government.

And I will tell you something: One who is playing victim, which a puppet is—a victim of circumstances, a victim of the wills of others—that one, as I said, is engaged in a charade. And the charade implies that someone else is in power, and the victim victimizes the one whom they have invested the power in.

So we are touching on the same subject we were touching on yesterday, from a different angle. Don't feel so sorry for the victims, because the victims are victimizing the one they are claiming is the victimizer.

And if the victim plays the role of victim well enough then the victimizer can be caught into the game. Just as in the earlier question, the suggestion that there was inappropriate behavior, or the accusation that there was inappropriate behavior cause this women to begin to doubt whether or not she had all of her marbles. And in fact, whether or not maybe there was some inappropriate behavior that she was not conscious of. And this threw her into a state of self-doubt. And so, in effect, she played into the drama, becoming victim to the drama based on the claim that someone else had been her victim.

Now, it's time to be emancipated. And it's time to emancipate those in who's hands you have placed your strings. You see, in the final analysis it is not discernible whether the control is being exercised by the puppet or the puppeteer. Because in both cases manipulation is being employed. And wherever manipulation is being employed, ignorance is being experienced—ignorance of your freedom—ignorance of who you are. And of course, ignorance of the true nature of the one that you or anyone else as victim is claiming to be the victimizer.

And so you come full circle. And again, the demand is the willingness to acknowledge your divinity, and therefore the complete inappropriateness for you to play the role of victim or puppet, as well as the necessity of acknowledging the divinity of the one whom, you in this case, are calling the puppeteer or victimizer. Because both of you need to be released from the ugly sense of obligation and responsibility to each other that really amounts to a dance of control.

Oh, but it's selfish to claim my freedom” It's selfish to act as though what someone else feels doesn't count.” Oh, the ego is so sneaky. I would have you take the strings right back and put them in their hands so that they may control and not be upset. And pious little you, the gentle victim, tolerates continuing not to experience your inalienable right and inheritance of freedom.

You can't make waves for anyone else, only someone else can attempt to give their power away and place their strings in your hands and say, “Look at what you are doing to me. You are hurting my feelings. You are upsetting me.” And you can say, “Take the string out of your hand and place it back in theirs and say, “No, you are creating your distress and you don't have to. And if you want to find someone to blame, if you want to find someone to give your power away to, you'll have to find someone else because I don't have anything to do with this, and I won't have anything to do with this.”

That constitutes a recognition on your part of the inherent authority that the other one embodies and has. And you're saying, “no, I will not let you give your authority to me,” constitutes a confirmation of their strength. They may not pick up on it, they may not own it, but you have not played into their illusion. And you have acknowledged to them that they have the authority and the power, and they have had the opportunity to recognize it, and more than that you cannot do.

You can call the game of victim and victimizer to a halt. At this point the thing that you need to most clearly see is that the victim is the victimizer as well as the victimizer being the victim. And one is not better or worse than the other. And both of them, as I said yesterday, are suffering from an imposition of an illegitimate confinement, and illegitimate limit on their ability to recognize and experience their Christhood.

It is not selfish for you to express and enjoy your freedom. And to the degree that you will do that you will find yourself upsetting a few, but inspiring many who are likewise on the verge of claiming their freedom, but afraid of doing so. Think about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm curious about the visitor experience that Whitley Striver talks about in his books on communion and transformation. I would like to know who the visitors are, what is their purpose, and how do they chose the people they are visiting?

ANSWER: Paul is having trouble with this question, you will have to be patient. You do not have unenlightened visitors visiting your planet or even your galaxy. You have no visitors who are not totally Awakened, therefore, you have only visitors who already know everything there is to know, who therefore do not need to be here, on or around your planet for the purpose of study or analysis or examination. Everything needing to be known, everything available to be known is knowable and known to them.

You no more have visitors to your planet who are unilluminated than you have entities communicating psychically or mentally with individuals on your planet who are experiencing endarkenment of any kind, even though you here reports about possession and demons and dark spirits, etc., being channeled. Those expressions of negativity are arising entirely out of the ego and the imagination.

Now I am going to confined myself to making clear what is happening and what only can happen. You can come to your own conclusions about reports to the contrary. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, I think.

ANSWER: You have a question?

QUESTION: Yes. Well, I think it's answered. I said, "Who are they?" And you said, "they are illumined Beings." And I said, "What is their purpose...."

ANSWER: Ah! I said that the illumined Beings have no need of performing examinations or studies of human beings. And so I am saying that those reported in the publication you mentioned are of the imagination.

QUESTION: Thank you, that answers my question, thank you.

ANSWER: That is what Paul didn't want me to say.

QUESTION: It doesn't mean they are any less real to the people who imagine them, does it?

ANSWER: Not any more than a disease is any more real just because it has been experienced, it still remains an unreal experience, even though it is quite tangible, quite studyable, quite visible, that is correct. I am not suggesting—and Paul is happy I am saying this—I am not suggesting that anyone is being consciously fraudulent here, but it is necessary for you to know truth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Yesterday you spoke about the gentleman in Russia, and I would sort of like to carry on on that theme and hear your views about the situation in China. The impression I had was that the population was almost ready to take the step, but sort of became afraid at the last moment?

ANSWER: Under duress! Indeed! But you're watching, what I will call chemicalization, a fermenting, the enriching of the brew, if you will, in China and a consequent, inevitable emergency of the sort of humaneness and valuing of simple humanity. This ferment cannot be avoided. Now it is only ferment because there is resistance. If there were no resistance, there would be a spontaneous flow of change.

But since a cap has been placed upon this irrevocable change, there is, shall I say, pressure and ferment. It is a positive sign.

I am not saying that the pressure and ferment is positive, and I am referring to the cap that is being placed against the flow, but the flow is positive. It is not going to be stifled successfully. But just as each one of you individually are having to reach for and claim your Birthright as Sons and Daughters of God, as the Christ with some persistence and some faith and some great investment of trust, so are the Chinese as a people having to reach with persistence and commitment and faith and trust.

As a people they are engaged in the same process that all individuals are engaged in, that of claiming and demonstrating that they are not victims of the ego, or victims of any sort.

We have talked about domination, we have talked about puppets, each one of you is the puppet of your ego until you decide to snip the strings. But as you know it takes unyielding persistence in order to overcome the suggestion that you truly are a victim and have no choice and no authority. And so you could say that the process of Awakening is a ferment, a chemicalization.

What is happening in China is one of the signs of the times. It is not essential for that sign to be turbulent and violent. It is not essential, but there has been violence and there will be stress and strain. But I will tell you something: The Chinese people are withdrawing their investment of trust in their form of government and those governing them. They are sniping the strings. And without the support of the people the puppeteers will cease to be puppeteers.

It is not appropriate for you to quibble and say, "If this is divine unfoldment of integrity it should not be violent, there should be no stress or strain." Wake up and smell the roses everyone! There is an expression of faith and intent and commitment that each one of you is having to bring to your process of Awakening.

You are like a dreamer dreaming a nightmare who must draw upon resources that are outside of the dream or nightmare in order to wake yourself up. And it takes a great effort, if you will, a great intent, and literally a leap or act of faith that allows you to draw from your Awake state—your normal Awake state, which is not a part of your conscious awareness while you're in the dream—to lift yourself out of the dream. And there is nothing wrong with this. And it does not express willfulness, because willfulness is what creates the dynamics of the dream.

And to rouse yourself from a dream, as I said, involves acting from the standpoint of the individuality lying in the bed in the room that is nowhere to be found in the dream. You see, when you rouse yourself from a nightmare, you act from the standpoint of the person lying in the bed, you no longer act from the sense of yourself that you are experiencing in the dream.

And likewise, your process of Awakening involves acting from the standpoint of the Christ that you are, who is in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and from that fact, from that truth about you, wrenching yourself out of the hypnotic hold of the dream, the illusion of the ego's misperception.

That is why I have said before, that your savior is your capital "S" Self. Your savior is not me, or anyone else. Your savior is the capital "S" Self that you are at this instant, who is in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, who has arrived, who is what he or she is already. In other words, you wake yourself up out of the dream not by improving the character you see yourself as from within the dream, but by eliminating that character, by acting from the standpoint of the truth of you, which is nowhere to be found in the dream.

The Chinese people are reaching for an integrity that is already theirs, but they are having to take hold of it, claim it and live it and no longer play the role of puppet, of dominated. That act of self-respect is what is necessary in order to break the illusion of bondage, whether it is to a human dictator or a dictatorial government or on an individual basis, one's ego sense.

The divinity of man is emerging. The Christ is coming in China, in Russia, in the United States, in the heart and Soul and mind of every individual. And these are the signs of the coming. And this is why it is essential for you not to be so rigidly conceptual about who are victims and victimizers, enemies and allies.

There are those individualities who, because of what they divinely are, will wake up in what is termed the enemy camp. And you had better not be so bound by your concept of enemy that you attempt to injure the Christ where it appears. Because the divine Reality is not going to accommodate the human misperception or illusion of polarized camps, because those in the polarized camps are not the egos they appear to be and are not the mindsets they appear to be, they are the Christ misperceived by others and misperceiving themselves. But because they are the Christ, and because the Movement of Awakening is occurring, it is going to occur irrespective of camps.

So, I bring these things out so that you will look with a little more clarity and a little less judgment upon your world and not be so sure that an Awakening Christ will have to come from your country or from a country that is one of your allies. And so that you do not shoot down the manifestation of intelligence, the manifestation of divinity, when it surprisingly appears irrespective of polarized viewpoints in what has been called the enemy camp.

Now I have said this before and I'm going to say it again. No matter how deeply embedded in the dream of mortal existence you might be, you at all times have the capacity to recognize Truth, with a capital "T". And therefore, I encourage you not to be governed by your concepts, but to be open enough and flexible enough to acknowledge truth when you recognize it, even if it doesn't compute with your concepts.

You live in wonderful times, dynamic times, because the illusion is breaking up. And the illusion is breaking up because so many individuals are daring to be arrogant enough—at least from the ego's point of view—to claim their divinity. And on that basis to judge righteous judgment, acknowledging the Son and Daughter of God wherever male and female ego's appear to exist with willing readiness to acknowledge the behavior that identifies the Christ, even when that behavior haltingly or awkwardly comes out intermittently from an apparent ego that is unaware of its divinity.

You each desire to have your intuitions of your divinity confirmed, even though most of the rest of your daily life is constituted of typical ego reactions. Be ready to acknowledge truth where it is and when it is evidenced, and don't be thrown for a loop when from the very same spot that you have recognized the divinity of God, you also find splutterings of ignorance and ego concepts and reactions.

You are not so graceful yourself in emerging into and owning your divinity. It is all right! You don't have to do it smoothly, but neither does anyone else. And I encourage you to have enough decency to extend the acknowledgment and to encourage the further expressions of Christhood and intelligence and wisdom, even though they do not come out consistently. And don't condemn that one because there is inconsistency.

Your memory tells you that if someone has once been a bastard he's still going to be a bastard. You're going to have to work through that. You're going to have to be willing to release that.

You are reaching for the brass ring, you are reaching for the inevitable, you are reaching for the primitive state the original state of your Being that you have been all along. But since you feel that you have lost it, or that you even never had it, you're reaching for the brass ring feels arrogant, it feels as though you are being totally unreasonable. You cannot justify it, except that somewhere deep in you is some rising feeling that you cannot deny, even though you cannot justify it or explain it.

And so you reach for the brass ring. And have compassion on yourself when you falter and say, "on this pass around on the merry-go-round I'm not even going to try for the brass ring," even though three or four rounds later you will have refound the courage to reach for the brass ring. Your inconsistency is irrelevant.

The fact that the motivation to reach for the brass ring is occurring is what is paramount. And it is the fact that so many are reaching for the brass ring that it counts for the fact that there are so many of us who have gathered, in the sense of giving our attention to what you are doing, to support it. It is an event of universal significance.

You must give yourself the benefit of the doubt. And you must give those who have been bastards the benefit of the doubt, those who have been enemies you must give the benefit of the doubt. That does not mean be stupid. It means, as I said, be willing to acknowledge the expressions of intelligence when they come out, and to praise that and support that. But do not be surprised when that expression of intelligence goes out the window and is swallowed up in typical ego reaction.

Be clear enough to tell the difference, and also have enough compassion and love to identify the momentary expressions of intelligence and divinity, to identify those momentary expressions of divinity with who that individual truly is. And when the expressions of ego are expressed, recognize that they have nothing whatsoever to do with that individuality. And in this way you affirm the truth, and you withdraw affirmation or energy from the reversed expression of truth, the illusion.

I will tell you one thing: It will be easier for you to see in another his divinity, even though it is falteringly expressed, if you are having enough compassion on yourself to give yourself the benefit of the doubt and feel your divinity.

You are in a time where balance is beginning to occur, an evening out where distinct boundaries, distinct national boundaries, distinct conceptual boundaries will break down and where communion can begin to occur, where identification with another, whether he used to be an enemy or not can occur. And where the unity and the Godness of each one begins to be called natural, normal, and there is no inclination to behave otherwise. That's the end of the answer.

TAPE: SEVEN

QUESTION: I need a little preamble for this question.

ANSWER: Preambles are certainly allowed.

QUESTION: Well, it helps to sort of organize the thoughts. About two years ago I left a twenty-three year long relationship, because I just couldn't stay there any longer, and I felt very stifled. And I have since enjoyed living alone. I have allowed myself to receive the gift of wonderful guidance and to live by that. But I have this deep desire for a relationship, for a loving, sharing relationship.

And I look around, and I look at the people I know, and I listen to the guidance and it says, "no, no, wait, wait, hold to your integrity, hold to what you want." And I'm thinking, "okay, is this deep desire for a relationship one with the Father's Will, and is there something I could do to move towards it?"

ANSWER: In other words, you listen to but you don't pay attention to your guidance. That which is worth while is worth having in its perfection, which includes its perfect timing. If you want to enjoy the beauty of a full blown rose you must let it open itself in its own integrity, in its own fashion. If you attempt to open it, you will ruin it. And so if you are wise you will allow it to open itself so that you might enjoy its inherent beauty and perfection.

Now you have asked for guidance. The guidance has said, "no." The guidance, as you have said, has said to hold to your integrity, etc. Now I encourage you to do that. I encourage you to trust that guidance. And I encourage the rose or blossom of a relationship open itself in its own perfect timing, its own beauty. Don't let your ego get in the way and say, "Well, I don't have all the time in the world to wait for a relationship to come along. My desire is pure. I don't want to be controlling, but what's taking it so long?" That is willfulness. That is control.

Just because your motives are pure does not give you justification for control. Let the motivation be pure. And then let go of impatience. Let the attitude be, "Thy Will be done, not mine."

As I indicated yesterday, as long as you are in a process of Awakening out of a limited frame of reference, you do not have the perspective to know how to use your will. And without that perspective you will not use it correctly. That is why the admonition is to adopt the stance of, "Not my will, but Thine be done." That is the way you open up to the Father's Will. That is the way you get out of the distortion caused by the coercion of the human will, which acts without understanding the way in which its actions relate to the whole.

When you say, "Thy Will be done," you are really saying, "my true Will be done." Except that you cannot say, "my true will be done," without equating that with your ego sense of yourself. And so, at this point, as I indicated yesterday, you must be willing to step beyond your present sense of yourself and open up to that which is not apparently you. "Thy Will be done, not mine." And as there is truly a yielding to the Father's Will, you find that it is exactly what is congruent with your fulfillment, exactly what is congruent with what you really want, and what really identifies fulfillment. And so you then find the relevance between the Father's Will and your Being, and you no longer have this sense of the Father's Will being different from yours.

Pay attention to the guidance, and dare to trust it. And also, dare to ask, "why isn't it happening any faster?" So that you might have the opportunity for your guidance to reveal to you that it isn't happening faster because it doesn't express the perfection of the blossoming of this relationship that would identify fulfillment. And then you could relax and flow, knowing that you're right on schedule or right on target, that you are right where you need to be. And where you need to be is right in the middle of unfolding perfection. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Coming from a so-called healing profession back then, I'm having a little bit of trouble with some of the concepts that we have been talking about—the disengagement, the noninterference, the detachment. Is there no danger of moving into excess of noninvolvement and nonrelationships?

I'm thinking particularly of a situation that my husband and I are facing at this moment with aging parent. There's a multi-problem kind of a situation there—an alcoholic father, the mother has diabetes. And we're concerned about how they're eating. They're getting frailer and frailer. And sure we want to give them their space, they're still adults, they're still well able to make their choices. But at what point are we then moving into the noncaring? I'm a little concerned about that.

ANSWER: I never said anything about not caring. What I addressed myself to was being the puppet of other people's concepts, expectations and wills. And I also addressed myself to not giving one's power away, and thus making another responsible for your happiness or unhappiness. At the bottom line, I was talking about being self-responsible, self-governed, self-motivated. And I am truly meaning Self, with a capital "S", in each case.

Now, not to be emotionally attached—and I am using the word attachment in the sense that a puppet is attached to the fingers of the puppeteer by a definite link, a string—not to be attached out of obligation, out of concepts does not mean you will not be involved, does not mean that there will not be meaningful communication and relationships. What it means is that what happens in a relationship will come out of a place wherein you are comfortable with you, where you are not living for another, where you are not living to avoid another, where you are not living to fulfill another's expectations. In other words, where you are not living in a state of uncomfortableness, because you are not living up to someone else's expectations, or because you are afraid of upsetting their apple cart.

When you are daring to be self-responsible, you are daring to pay attention to who you are, to move into an inner place of self-acceptance no matter how much growth you know is still ahead of you, where you are coming out of a sense of peace and ease and self-acceptance, self-love.

From that place within yourself, from that frame of reference you are able to be genuine. You aren't acting with a mask in front of you, you are not presenting a picture, you are presenting you. The presence that is there is this one who is at ease and comfortable with herself.

And from that place of comfort there is no feeling that you must be something in particular, or fulfill a certain role. And as a result of not feeling an obligation to be someone different from yourself, you have the peace of mind and perspective to be sensitive to others and feel what is appropriate or inappropriate, and as a result you will not be controlling, you will not be manipulative, you will not be coercive, and you will not influence inappropriately.

It is when you are not comfortable with yourself that you become defensive and thereby cannot be sensitive to where another one is coming from. And in not being sensitive to where another one is coming from, you do not have the means to honor them, to honor their integrity and respect them. But when you are coming from a place of self-appreciation and comfort, then you can be attentive to others and you can butt out when it is appropriate to butt out, and you can step in when it is appropriate to step in, because you will feel the rightness of it or the inappropriateness of it. And others will find themselves not feeling defensive with you, because you are, shall I say, a benign presence, nonthreatening.

Now in your case, you are going to have to pay attention within, you are going to have to dare to express intelligence to the very best of your ability, and I will tell you that there is a point at which you will have to step in and exercise some judgment and authority so that proper and good care can be provided.

Now I am giving you this instruction as opposed to the earlier instruction, because you are not particularly bound up in being controlled by these individuals, nor are you feeling an obligation to fulfill their expectation. And so you have a clarity present that allows you to step in when it is needed. Be sensitive, love them, be there for them when it feels appropriate, and be away from them giving them their space when that feels appropriate.

At the present time you are not called upon to do anything in particular, and you are sensing that correctly. You will have no difficulty now that you understand what I was meaning. Attachment, as I have been using it, is a false sense of attachment that arises out of a misperception of who you are, and who others are that you would be attached to. Detachment, or the absence of attachment, means being so comfortable with yourself that you are able to be undefended and thereby be sensitive to others in a way that allows you to step in and step out, be involved and be uninvolved appropriately and meaningfully.

Now we are going to come back to the earlier questioner here, to answer the question, "Why can't it be that way with me?" And the fact is, that it can't be that way with you because it isn't that way with you. You are not the appropriate one to step in and step out. Even if you were at this very instant comfortable with yourself, feeling no sense of false obligation not to make waves for others, you would clearly see that it was appropriate for you to stay out of the picture, and let those who are engaged in their little dance finish their dance without cutting in. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Yesterday I mentioned our I work with children, for most of my married life, of 19 years, my husband and I have worked together in some sort of team work. But for the last 2 years we have been having urges to shift the kind of work that we're doing with children.

Now in many ways, from the time that we have started working with the children twelve years ago, we have done a shift in the way that we worked with the children. But I'm not sure that that's the shift that we feel the urged to make.

And I guess I'm wondering several things. One, are we still to work together?

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: But is the work still with children, or is it in a different way? And if it's in a different way, what is it? Because there's so many possibilities we can't see clearly what it means. And what kind of time frame that's set in? Like does this go on forever?

ANSWER: It is still appropriate for you to work with children. It is likely that you will continue working with children for approximately the next five years. And so, it is not appropriate for you to anticipate a change in that area.

QUESTION: Is it still in our home the way it has been for the next five years?

ANSWER: No, within 18 months you will have other quarters more suitable and more comfortable in which to provide this care. There truly is no particular shift that you need to engage in, no change in your approach. And it is important for you to be satisfied with what you are doing, rather than feeling an undercurrent of dissatisfaction. Do not let that kind of thing distract you from being fully present with these little ones, and enjoying every moment of it and enjoying their delight. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to know why I'm so fearful of intimacy, especially with men? I have put on a lot of weight. And I'm wondering if that's why I've put on this weight, to keep them at arms length? Could you give me some input on that?

ANSWER: To be intimate means letting someone in, letting someone get close to you. And you are afraid that if someone gets close to you, they will find out how unlovable you are.

Now you have a treat in store for yourself, because I promise you that if you dare to let yourself get close to you, you will not find out how unlovable you are, but how beautiful you are, how lovable you are. You see, you—and you are not alone in this—you assume that underneath your good behavior you are basically, in traditional terms, a sinner. You are basically flawed. You are basically unworthy. That is the belief that has been drummed into you, it has been reinforced, but it is a lie. But you will not find out that it is a lie until you let yourself relax enough to feel who you are.

And I will tell you something: Again, in the practice of meditation, in the practice of stilling your mind and getting into that inner quiet place of peace, you begin to connect with who you are, because that peace itself is the very nature of your capital "S" Self, of who you divinely are. When you get into that place, and you begin to pay attention to what you are experiencing, with the awareness that what you are experiencing is you, with a capital "Y", your perspective about yourself will begin to change. Not because you have changed ideas, but because you have had a new experience.

And once you begin to feel your goodness, once you begin to feel your peace and your integrity it will become obvious to you that if you let someone else in that that is what they will find also. And then being intimate will not constitute letting another be in a position where they could judge you and condemn you. Right now you feel vulnerable in intimacy because there is a fear that you will be found out, and that no one will remain.

Now, as I said, the solution is to take steps to get in touch with yourself so that you can have the experience of your worth and your integrity. And it will be a little confusing at the beginning, because you will feel this integrity but you will not be able to figure out where it came from, because it was an integrity that you don't remember having created. But indeed, your integrity is already there before you ever lift a finger to try to create it. It is your Birthright, it is your constituting nature. Once you find out that it is yours and that you did not create it, and therefore that it cannot be taken away, you will be able to relax and let somebody else discover it as well.

Now I have described in a different way the idea that when you can love yourself others can love you, and you can dare to let others get close enough to love you. But I have explained it with a little more detail so that you might understand that I am not saying, "Well, instead of hating yourself, start loving yourself." That is a wonderful statement, it is positive, but it doesn't tell you why you can love yourself or how to arrive at the point where it is reasonable to love yourself.

Now again, I encourage you to begin practicing some form of silence, meditation, if you will, whatever allows you to move out of the chatter of the surface reactive level of your mind so that you might move into the peace of your Being, and thus begin to become acquainted with yourself at a new level. In that peace you will find yourself experiencing yourself in a new way. I didn't say you will find yourself thinking about yourself in a new way, you will experience yourself in a new way. An experience is something which cannot be talked away. Experience is a knowing, not a thinking, not a concept.

Your experience of your divinity awaits you in the silence of your Being. Get acquainted with that quiet place, and then pay attention to the quietness. It only appears to be empty and silent by comparison with the ruckus, noisy, chatter of your ego thinking.

But when you allow yourself to regularly abide in the silence, in that inner quietness, you will begin to find activity, you will feel activity. You won't be able to put your finger on what it is, but you will begin to feel it, and by virtue of the feeling you will be able to desire to get closer to it, even though you do not know how to move through the silence. But the inclination to move closer will be there and the movement will occur, even though you don't know how you are doing it. And all of this time these will be new experiences of being you. And as that movement begins to occur you will find joy emerging.

Again, you will not be able to account for it because you didn't create the circumstance or the justification for the joy. But I will tell you, that the joy is also the nature of your Being. And slowly the void of the silence will begin to become fuller of you. And the marvelous benefit of this is that in the discovery of your true nature and your ability to experience it you will realize that this same experience awaits everyone else.

You will know beyond a shadow of a doubt that what you're experiencing as the truth of you is the truth of every other individual. And that's how you will begin to be able to trust others, this is how you will be able to begin to love others in spite of their behavior, because you will have experienced that in spite of your ego reactive level of daily living there is underneath it this forever abiding presence of your divine Self. And you will know that in spite of others ego's underneath it is this ever abiding presence of their capital "S" Self, their divine Being. That is the recognition of what is Real in your fellow man that I referred to earlier as the definition of love.

In this environment, in this conscious awareness it will be obvious to you that you do not have to defend yourself, or hold yourself apart from someone else, because you know if they will look close enough they will find something quite marvelous. And then you will dare to let someone in.

Now I want you to also know that the moment you begin to tackle this you will immediately be surrounded with support and help from your guide and those working with your guide. And I encourage you to expect to experience that support. I encourage you to know that you will not have to do this by yourself. You will have to take the steps, but you will have a cheering section, if I may put it that way. Not always one that you will hear in words, but one that you will be able to feel.

Why do you think it is that nations hold themselves separate from nations? Why do you think it is that individuals hold themselves separate from individuals, and groups hold themselves separate from groups? It is because of this fundamental feeling of vulnerability that if indeed someone got close enough they would find something there totally unacceptable, something unworthy. And no one wants to uncover their unworthiness.

But you see, what happens when someone finally becomes exhausted at maintaining the front of being worthy, and goes through what they call complete failure, and they give up—without checking out, so to speak, but they remain and give up—they move into an experience of what can only be called humility.

Unfortunately, it is only because they don't have the energy to create a pretense. But nevertheless, they arrive at this point of humility that allows themselves to just be who they are and let the chips fall as they may, as I said yesterday. And when that one dares to just be, without trying to meet the expectations of another, without trying to live up to the conditionings that have been laid on him or her, and there's just this genuine honest presence, everyone else immediately feels comfortable.

And the feedback that this one who has given up receives from his world is favorable, and there is a sense of a miracle having happened. And this is such a truism that words have taken form that say, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

When you finally stop honoring the ego's suggestion that you are worthless, and therefore you had better create a worthy mask, and you let yourself into this thing that the ego has said that you are, this worthless thing that the ego has suggested that you are, you find your divine Self. And you experience the transforming realization that you are quite wonderful, you are quite divine. And it begins to be reasonable to you that maybe indeed you are the Father's beloved Daughter in whom He is well pleased, and that you are not in any way this pitiful worthless mortal that the ego has suggested that you are, and which the ego has kept you busy covering up.

But again, what are we talking about here? We're talking about another form of that leap of faith. You can dare to make an investment of trust in the unknown in you. And of course, the unknown in you is the divine You, which the ego is telling you is a worthless lump of nothing so that you will strive to become something respectable.

You have the idea. Have faith that underneath whatever it is that the ego has said is worthless, unlovable is a bright shining diamond, if you will, a jewel that is the self-expression of the Father and all its beauty, which the ego has covered up with a handful of dirt, and said the dirt is what you are.

I encourage you to go right where you think the dirt is, and brush your mental hands around so that you might have the opportunity to uncover the jewel of you, so that you might feel it, so that you might feel your worthiness and discover that not only is there nothing you can do to create it, it doesn't need to be created by anything you do, because it is something that you already are. And that is what others will find if you let them get close enough. That is the truth about you. That's the end of the answer.

ANSWER: Now as to the rest of you slobs, you would gasp if you could see the radiance in this room, the radiance of you who are not and never have been slobs, every single one of you must dare to make this leap of faith into yourself which you will have no confirmation of before you leap into it, you will have no means of justifying your leap until after you have leapt and landed. And again, I will remind you that like the prodigal, your Father will come to meet you at the early part of the leap and accompany you onto your Home ground.

All the separation and division that everyone of you and everyone else experiences is a result of defending yourself against having everyone discover the poor slob that is underneath the mask of your lifetime of good behavior. The ego has kept all of you doing nip ups with the promise that it will eventually make you worthy, because the ego has fundamentally covered up your worthiness, hidden it from you, if you will, and fooled you into thinking that it is not your fundamental Birthright or nature. And so, you are not claiming your nature. You are assuming it doesn't exist, and it has to be brought into existence.

The commandment is: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soul and all thy mind, and your brother as yourself." Now if you stop and think about it, what does loving your brother as yourself have to do with your loving the Father with all of your Being? The connection is, that in loving the Father with all of your Being you are loving your Self, and putting yourself in the position by virtue of that leap of faith expressed in the love of the Father. You are bringing yourself into the experience of your Real Being. And as I said, your experience of your Real Being discloses to you what is true about your fellow man, and that is what allows you to love your fellow man truly, and not reinforce the enemy designation, or the victimizer designation, or the dictator designation. That's the end of his comment.

QUESTION: (Not using the microphone.)

ANSWER: It feels good to become congruent with your capital "S" Self, because it confirms your worth and your value and your truth, the essential Reality of you, the inviolable Reality of you. This constitutes your safety. It constitutes an environment in which you don't have to be defensive at all. And that is unbelievably wonderful to feel. And it is part of coming Home. And it is something that you can do right as you sit there. It doesn't require the environment to change.

You come into the clear experience of your invulnerability, and there will be nothing in your environment that will challenge or violate that vulnerability, even if there seem to be others around you who are experiencing the very same environment as threatening. The perfection with which you are looking governs the perfection that you see. And the ignorance with which you look governs the imperfection that you see.

So not one of you has to wait until someone else wakes up. Although someone else's waking up makes it easier for you. You are not dependent upon anyone else for your Awakening. And you are not dependent upon your location. In fact, as I said, wherever you are is the threshold of your Awakening. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, having traveled to Stonehenge and other various ancient wisdom sites in the last few months, as well as being very very interested in these high energy places on the planet, I'm wondering, Raj, if you might comment on the recent publicized circles that have been discovered in the fields around Stonehenge?

ANSWER: I would be most delighted to. They are what you hope they are, they are evidences of "spacecraft." These vehicles were not visible at the time of the landing. It was the intent to create the visible marks that would spark the curiosity and interest of those around your globe without frightening or overwhelming them. Because as we discussed earlier, the limits of the three-dimensional frame of reference and its sense of vulnerability almost invariably interprets the unknown as threatening. e

There are those on your globe who are expressing more enlightenment now. And so, extraterrestrials are not grotesque, vegetable creatures, but unusually appearing gentle, kind, intelligent beings such as those in "Close Encounters," or "E.T.," or "Star Wars," etc., variety, but not threat, variety of life forms, but not threat by virtue of the diversity.

This aspect of the unknown—other inhabitants of the universe—is embraced with less fear. And so, you have now more positive renderings of other universal life forms. Now what I have described here simply expresses a psychological development, if you will, one which makes it possible to be open with safety to the unknown, to be open with a sense of security to the unknown.

But as I said, there is still fear. And so the actual encounters that are occurring are being gentle, thought provoking, stimulating, but not overwhelming. As I said, these vehicles were not visible when they landed, the rings were the only thing meant to be visible.

I have said it before, that you will find increased sightings of spacecraft. But I want to make something clear: Those who are responsible for the spacecraft and their movements are totally Awakened Beings and do not need these spacecraft to move through infinity. The spacecraft are accommodations to, shall I say, the level of ignorance, or the level of enlightenment on your planet.

In other words, they are accommodations to the general threshold of enlightenment in mankind. They are calculated to release mankind from the very private local sense of life, and to trigger awareness' of a more universal Brotherhood so as to reduce the defensiveness and therefore the readiness to attack the unknown. Because the readiness to attack the unknown constitutes the opposite of love. it constitutes the opposite of the defenselessness that lets the world and universe in so that you have a chance to experience its actual divinity.

Those who have been described as ET's, extraterrestrials, are not so much extraterrestrial as what you would call other dimensional—in the sense that I'm other dimensional at the moment, at least as far as your experience is concerned. We are all sitting in a group in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and therefore it is your sense of yourself as a human being on planet Earth, a physical entity that is the result of evolution that constitutes the other dimensional aspect, or ET, or unusual and unreasonable aspect.

Now all of these movements that are occurring, that are causing expansion of awareness, an expansion of how you fit in and what you fit into, all of this is being handled with great care, always in response to the general inner desire to not be bound in the way that you have been bound, in the way in which mankind has been bound for centuries.

Sightings will increase and contact will occur. And I am not going to give a certain number of years, except to say that it is relatively imminent. Because I will tell you something: What will be reported back to you from those who meet with you is the same sort of thing I am reporting back to you—your divinity, and that it is time to embrace it, that it is time to own it and wake up. You could say it is all a plot. But you see, you must walk into your Christhood on your own two feet, as a result of your own choice and decision. And so you will not be pushed. You will be invited, you will be supported in whatever steps you take.

Now, go ahead and let your imagination work in the most positive ways relative to ET's. Do not indulge in fearful images, because that just expresses the ego.

The presence of space vehicles, the presence of space brothers, as you have heard them referred to, is a Reality. But they are all members of the Brotherhood of Man that constitutes, in Biblical terms “the body of Christ.” Which means that the Brotherhood of Man constitutes the Son of God, the infinite expression of the Father, the infinite presence of the Father seen as and experienced as the Christ, the Brotherhood.

Understand that we are quite wise, and we will do whatever works in triggering, and motivating, and encouraging you to embrace your divinity. We will say whatever helps. We will provide images if they will work. We will elicit your interest, but we cannot take the steps for you.

The Course In Miracles is an accommodation to the current level of ego thought. It does not state absolute facts, because your present level of ego thought could not grasp the absolute thoughts, the absolute truths. So it serves as a bridge, a bridge that supports your taking the step or leap of faith. It encourages you to know that beyond the edge of your ability to experience yourself is more of yourself, and the opportunity to experience the more of yourself. And it encourages you to leap, by letting you know that there is a landing point that it is worth your while to experience.

It is there, the Course is, to confirm or reconfirm to you the fact that there is a God that constitutes the very essence and substance and totality of your Being. And that if you indeed let go of the end of the rope and give up on your attempt to be the best damn ego you can be, that you will not lose your existence, but you will fall a few millimeters into the underlying everlasting arms of the Father, and once again experience your true Selfhood.

TAPE: EIGHT

It is important to understand this, because the fact is...

PAUL: Paul apologizes for the loss of the first minute and ten seconds have been lost on this tape.

ANSWER: ...distorted sense of yourself and where you are must be, shall I say, educated out of itself.

The Brotherhood, the space Brothers, the Course, the other religious and metaphysical materials—that have been inspired materials—are all language accommodating your Awakening process. And none of it is truly going on as a three-dimensional event in space/time. You are not a three-dimensional event occurring in space/time. You are the conscious awareness, the infinity in which the experiences of space and time are going on as experiences of consciousness. But you are the undefineable, unembraceable infinity of Mind in which all of these experiences are occurring.

As you begin to reaccess this infinite presence of Mind or awareness that you are, it will become obvious to you that any sense of your being some tiny infinitesimal part of infinity was a misunderstanding or misperception of yourself—one which was never a fact, one which never actually bound you as a fact. And you will be free, and you will join the rest of those who are Awake and add to the infinite conscious awareness of the Brotherhood of Man until every single sleeper has Awakened, and the Brotherhood of Man, the Son of God experiences itself in its Totality—Awake.

And mind you, this that I am describing is also imminent. And when I say imminent, I mean within the next 40 years. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Your last remarks to the last question caught me and some others by surprise. And I wonder if you could repeat what you said and clarify. You said something about the Brotherhood being Awakened in 40 years. Did I not hear this right? Or what did you say?

ANSWER: Within 40 years there will no longer be anyone confined by the three-dimensional only frame of reference. Every single individuality will be consciously Awake, experiencing his Christhood, recognizing God to be the center and circumference of his or her Being—although his and her will no longer apply as separate aspects. That is correct.

QUESTION: What about—I guess this is a judgment on my part—but what about those people who seem to be very much asleep at the moment? They will still reach that level in 40 years?

ANSWER: I will tell you something: Yes! I will tell you that one cannot wake up alone, and one cannot dream alone. And as there are fewer and fewer dreamers, there is less and less support for the dreaming. And those who are, or seem to be in deep sleep at this point will not be in deep sleep, because there will not be the mutual support for that deep sleep, and everyone will begin to rouse and wake up.

Now just for clarity, I want you to understand that sleepers or dreamers of the dream do not just exist on your planet. Those who have passed on, those who are in other parts of your universe are also still sleeping unless they have engaged in embracing and owning their divinity. And so this Awakening process is occurring universally in the sense of space. Those who have passed on who are not yet totally Awake will also be totally Awake within this 40 year period. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This morning you mentioned that there is an Awakening movement in the United States, in Russia and China. You failed to mention

Canada. And I was wondering... Two years ago I had a vision in downtown Winnipeg, where I was at the top of an escalator during rush hour, and I was looking down on a mass of people moving in one direction. They all wore very drab dark colors, and they were all moving in one direction. And it seemed to me that it looked like a group of very oppressed people. And that vision has stuck with me for two years. Do you have any comment on that?

PAUL: I'm sorry this is me, Paul. You saw this from an escalator?

QUESTION: Yes!

ANSWER: Why does that surprise you? What causes you to ask about it?

QUESTION: I was wondering if this is where Canada is heading as a country, into much like what we're seeing in China today? Are we going to become the next oppressed nation?

ANSWER: Oh, no.

QUESTION: Oh, good.

ANSWER: Fortunately the spirit of the Canadian people is not captured in its dress. I encourage you not to allow yourself to judge according to what you see with your eyes. This is a very vital and alive people in your country. After all, are we not having this gathering this weekend?

No, I did not pick on the various countries that I spoke about, I was specifically asked about them. The Awakening process is occurring everywhere.

Do not ask me to grade the Canadians versus the Americans versus the Chinese or the Russians, etc. The point is that the movement is being felt, it is not necessarily being understood, but it is most definitely being felt everywhere on your globe.

Now you must understand that, as I indicated, the language of expression that I am using, the language of expression that is used in the Course, the language of expression that is used relative to the space brothers, etc., are all accommodations to the various levels or degrees of ego consciousness that prevail. So that the message, the meaning of the movement that is felt, might be illuminated in language that can be understood, but which will not arouse ego resistance to any significant degree.

So even where this movement is being felt, but not being understood, you can count on it that from within that level or style of ego awareness, the words, the meanings will begin to emerge in language that can be grasped. There will, of course, everywhere be the old diehards that will say, "You have to prove it to me before I'll believe it." But you see, as I said earlier, as fewer and fewer are indulging in the dream, it will become more and more difficult for those old diehards to maintain the old diehard attitude, and they will begin to yield.

And I will tell you something: Don't fear that it won't happen because no one will be able to understand Reality. Do not assume that education or the lack of education will govern whether one can wake up, because it doesn't have to do with intellectual understanding. It has to do with the emergence of an experience, the experience I described earlier, that one has when one goes within and pays attention. It is the experience of one's Being that constitutes knowing, and knowing is different from understanding. One does not have to be able to intellectually grasp his divinity, or intellectually grasp the justifications for his divinity. The experience of it wipes out all need for intellectual proofs.

You look at yourself and you say, “I am a woman.” If I ask you to explain that to me, you would be hard put to do it. But you know you are a woman. No one can dissuade you from that. Likewise when you look at your capital “S” Self and experience your divinity you won’t have to be able to explain it or defend it. It simply is what is, and you know it.

I have said before, that you will not be able to understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way into it. And it doesn’t take education in order to feel, it doesn’t take your capacity to understand in order to feel. It only takes being conscious. And every single one of you on this globe, and every individuality who exists meets that fundamental requirement of being conscious.

So don’t labor under the idea that this is going to take time, or that there won’t be enough time, or that there are those who will necessarily be left behind because they simply don’t have the intellectual capacity to grasp whatever it is you think Reality is. They don’t have to intellectually grasp it.

And this is a key thing for you to understand. If those who couldn’t intellectually grasp it don’t need to, then neither do you with your capacity to grasp things intellectually. If you realize that the intellect is not the doorway into the Kingdom of Heaven, then you will not discount the intellect, but you will not address as much of your attention to it. And you will give more of your attention to feeling into your Being in the silence. And you will be able to grasp that waking up is simple.

If you sit down on a tack, you will jump up and say, “Ouch!” Now, how many years of schooling did you have to go through to learn how to do that? You didn’t have to learn anything, it was obvious to you that you were uncomfortable and that if you didn’t want to be uncomfortable you had better stand up. But you didn’t have to think that through. You simply didn’t sit on the tack any longer. It was an experience and a knowing. There is that kind of simplicity to Awakening.

Now we have talked for the whole weekend, discussed ideas, and you could become confused and think that it is the words and the ideas that are important and you had better memorize them, and you had better learn how to use them. And yet my whole point in using words, was to help you escape the need to use them, to dare to become quiet, to dare to go into the silence and yield to the inevitable experience of your Self that awaits you there.

We have talked about yielding to the Father’s Will. We have talked about the leap of faith into the unknown within you. Now how can you have an intellectual understanding of the unknown? The only thing you can have an intellectual grasp of is something that is known. So obviously waking up is not something that is going to be the result of an intellectual process.

The intellectual process that we have been engaging in this weekend is the one that helps you arrive at the point of letting go of intellectual processes. Letting go into the only place you’re aware of and that’s your conscious awareness, which has been referred to as your withinness, that place which is—for lack of better words—the very center of you. Because that is where the Reality of you is untouched and available for you to rediscover, reincorporate and be.

So indeed, I am expressing ideas that have helped break down conceptual structures. Not so that you can replace them with new conceptual structures, but so that you might arrive at a point of feeling greater safety without them, because that is where you are in the best position of yielding to the Reality of your Self. “Letting go and letting God,” is a catch phrase that is useful, but you must understand that “letting God” means allowing the substance of your very individuality to come forth fully without being obscured any longer by an assumptive sense of self called an ego or a personality.

To “let go and let God,” is to come into the full experience of who you are. Not as a glorified person, but as a simply divine conscious experience of being that is the Father being conscious of Himself.

Now I must be very clear on this point: You will not lose your experience of individuality in the experience of God being All There Is of You. You will not be swallowed up in God. But you also will practice no other sense of self claiming to be different from God.

And so, infinite unity, which three-dimensionally is nonsensical, will continue to be infinity. The Father will continue to be infinitely expressed—we could say infinitely individualized. And yet, the Father will not become any less of what He is by virtue of that infinite individualization, and the infinitude of individualities will not become anything less than what God is by virtue of that individualization. And that is what cannot be intellectually comprehended, but it is the fact. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, just as Sharon was passing me the mike I thought that I had the question that I was going to ask you, and then another one came into my mind. I’ll go for it! I think I’ve been in touch with my guide, but I don’t know my guides name. And that’s the question that just flowed through right now. Can I ask you that?

ANSWER: You may, but we will have to go back to your first question, because I cannot answer this question. It is only appropriate for your guide to give you his or her name. It is your guides prerogative, it is not my right to disclose it.

I will say this, it is part of the intimacy of the relationship between you and your guide. It may not make sense, but it is significant for your guide to share with you his or her name.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Your first question?

QUESTION: My first question is: The constant mess in my house... There is something about it that represents something that’s going on inside of me, because I can’t seem to keep up with it. And I have been very much berating myself because of it. Could you give me some insight onto that, please?

PAUL: Okay, this is me, Paul. I’m going to have to put this in my own words. The first immediate sense was, “get off your case.” It was like let go of berating yourself. Then the picture that he gave was of a rabbit hutch, with four or five baby rabbits, and the paper that’s in there that they tear up. And specifically it was the fact that when you have four or five baby rabbits you have a lot of poop. And it isn’t that there is anything wrong going on, it’s just that when you don’t have just two adult rabbits, but you have two adult rabbits and four or five babies you’ve got more poop. And so you don’t wonder what’s going wrong you just take care of it.

Also the sense was that it will pass, that this stage will pass. But in the meantime, it’s not really something wrong that you need to get hold of and do something about. Just be matter of fact about it, and do the best you can.

QUESTION: Thank you, Paul and Raj.

QUESTION: This is a career question. I've had at the back of my mind for several years, becoming a children's writer. The question is would this be a good direction for me to take?

ANSWER: Yes, it is time to take it out of the back of your mind and bring it up on the front burner. And simply begin putting ideas down on paper. You will find the first book formulating itself almost spontaneously. But you will have to get it out of the back of your mind and bring it up and give it your attention. Also, keep your mouth shut about it. Just do it. Don't talk about it. You do not need to listen to, or put up with the chatter that others will have about it. Nurture it and do it quietly. I do not mean that you should maintain absolute secrecy. But do not let it become general knowledge. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to know how I get more in touch with my guide. Like I...

ANSWER: You do not have a three part question?

QUESTION: Well, yea, I do. I do, but I thought I'd be pushing it a little bit. I'd like to know how I could get more in touch with my guide so I recognized him. I'm very aware that he's there, and he's been there all of my life. But I think I'd like to see him, you know visually, or, you know what I mean.

ANSWER: Let us not be too demanding. The communion, the connection with your guide results from allowing, not from controlling. If you want to improve the connection then let, let, let, allow, allow, allow. Say in affect to your guide, let your attitude toward your guide be, "Thy Will be done." Let there be an assumption that your guide knows exactly how to approach you in the way that will best serve the further establishment of the line of communication—how to approach you in the way that will not frighten you or turn you off.

When and if it fulfills purpose for your guide to appear to you, your guide will appear to you. But let there be the assumption that if your guide has not appeared to you it is because it would have the opposite effect of fulfilling purpose.

Paul has the same wish, he even at one point early on hoped that I would move his pack of cigarettes, or cause it to disappear—as he heard it happened with someone else—something to validate the reality of our conversation, and that he was not just going nuts.

But I will tell you something: If I had appeared to him, he would immediately at this point, begin to identify me with the image that he saw, which would distract him from experiencing me as conscious individuality, as consciousness not limited to a form. He is still bound by body identity. And because of that would attempt to identify me by means of the form that I would present to him. And this would block his expansion relative to his shifting from a body identification himself and it would contribute to his thinking of me as a personality or ego because that is what bodies generally imply. And so, it does not fulfill purpose for me to appear to him at this time, because he could not remain clear.

Now again, don't be demanding. Assume that whatever unfolds in your relationship with your guide has far more than your immediate personal satisfaction as its goal, it has rather the intent to promote your Awakening, to promote your clearer experience of your Self, with a capital “S”, your unlimited infinite conscious experience of Being, and the reidentification of self that occurs as Awakening occurs.

When seeing your guide will promote that rather than distract you from it, it will happen. But you see, you don’t know what you need yet. You think you need the confirmation of a visual sighting, if you will. But that would not promote what you really are after.

So again, let there be the attitude, “Thy Will be done.” In other words, “I will trust your wisdom and your perspective.” And although you will quibble with it from time to time, I encourage you to quibble as seldom as possible. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In my work I’ve always felt sort of a helping hand from my great-grandmother who’s no longer here in body but in spirit. And a year ago I was really pushed from within to begin a book about her life, and about her experiences. And basically she’s been there with me writing it. And lately I’ve been really blocked in the whole process. Is it not to continue? I’ve just really sort of lost sight of it and her guidance. Can you help me to understand this better?

ANSWER: I will put it this way, there are things that she is having to attend to that have a higher priority. I will put it this way, she will be back. And when she is able to continue, you will find the energy there for it, the interest and the motivation. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Could I just expand on it a little bit? Is there like a time frame that you can give me? Is this something that is... like I’m definitely supposed to continue. I guess that’s what I’m looking for.

ANSWER: Indeed, and the time frame is: sometime in your lifetime.

QUESTION: My ego’s saying that’s not specific enough.

ANSWER: I truly cannot tell you, because when she is able to continue is not definable. She is, shall I say, dealing with her own growth process at the present time. It is requiring her attention, and how much time it will take her is not predictable. However, the likelihood is that it will be within five years that you will resume.

QUESTION: So by my consciously trying to connect with her, I’m sort of interfering with her process as well?

ANSWER: Absolutely not, you have no means of affecting her whatsoever.

QUESTION: Or visa versa?

ANSWER: That is correct. Understand that she is not fully Awakened, and therefore her ability to connect with you is, for lack of better words, by permission only, because it fulfills purpose of some kind. She has not been disallowed from talking to you, or working with you in this capacity. She simply is engrossed in her own Awakening process also. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: A short time ago I talked to you on the phone about my Course In Miracles Workbook commentary. And you said it was imperative to publish it post-haste. Its very very close to be in a condition that it can be published, however the means is not available. When will this be available?

ANSWER: When will it be finished? Completely?

QUESTION: Within the next month.

ANSWER: Take one step at a time. Complete it completely. That will lay the ground work for the next step. Do not be distracted by what you will do next from doing what needs to be done now.

QUESTION: This is all that's required? Is a step at a time?

ANSWER: Are you capable of doing more than one step at a time?

QUESTION: Not really.

ANSWER: This is what is required, yes.

QUESTION: I guess all of us have mind chatter trying to control thoughts. I find that before I used to be able to just let the thoughts go on their own. Now I find that if I don't either shut them down there seems to be an almost immediate within 24 hours either a physical or reaction to it.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. If you shut them down?

QUESTION: No, now if I don't shut them down or deal with them right away. If I allow them just to keep going, I seem to hook into them and I have a physical reaction. Could you explain that a little bit to me?

ANSWER: There is a relatively well known statement that says, "Stand porter at the door of thought. Allowing only those thoughts which you would have manifest bodily, you will govern yourself harmoniously."

Now, you are describing the fact that if you do not stand porter at the door, if you do not monitor your thoughts, and you allow the ego to make its suggestions, and you embrace those thoughts and honor them, you suffer for it.

Now, discernment is a different thing from judgment. You must be able to discern the difference between the tares and the wheat. You must be able to discern the difference between the truth and the suggestions which the ego utilizes. You must be able to distinguish the difference between the knowing of your Being and the techniques of divisiveness and polarization, which the ego brings into play. And you must decide what you are going to invite into your conscious awareness and entertain, and what you are going to kick off your front porch, or the front porch of your awareness.

You are learning a simple practice of wisdom that could be called self-discipline. More than a practice of discipline it is a practice of intelligence. And I encourage you to make a habit of it, realizing that you indeed hold the key as to what you will allow in and what you will not, what you will entertain and what you will not. It is that simple. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This definitely requires some preamble, so I'll just let it out. Over the last year—about a year and a month ago—I decided that I wanted to get on with the task fulfilling my Will of the Father, through the creation of music. So immediately after that I attracted an abundance, and I wanted to start getting my abundance happening so that I could afford to purchase some equipment that I thought was necessary.

But over the course of the year as I've looked at what I want, it's become completely confusing because the options are just staggering. So I want some clarity on that situation as far as the form of my creation of music—of the creation of music.

A further on that would be that I'm also feeling a need, as I mentioned earlier, to eventually find a place to set this up, which would be in the form of a house of some sort, or wherever—I'm open to whatever it is.

Now as well as that, all of a sudden this opportunity to make money at an alarming rate, that seems to good to be true is been presented to me. And so this is all interconnected in my mind and I'm sort of mulling this over, and I'm pretty confused about it as far as which way to go, sort of just sitting with it and trying to let something happen and not judge it.

ANSWER: You are like a juggler who has three balls going, and out of nowhere there comes a fourth ball, and oops you're a little bit busier. And as you stand there there comes a fifth ball and oops you're a little bit busier. And this continues until you have nine balls going, which up to this point has been your absolute limit, and you are wondering if things are going to be fouled up by the presence of a tenth ball. And indeed, there it comes! And you are feeling totally personally responsible for keeping these balls going.

As ridiculous as what I'm going to say might sound, I encourage you to challenge the suggestion that you are personally responsible for keeping these balls going. I encourage you to figuratively speaking, put your hands at your side so that you might stand there and watch them go round, because the Father is making them go round, and it never was you.

You don't have to figure out how to clear up the confusion. The confusion is being created by the idea that you have to bring it all into some order, and you have to figure out how to do it. You are not giving yourself the flexibility that the Father is providing. You are making assumptions that you will have to purchase the equipment yourself. You think that would be a great idea that would express freedom of action, not having to answer to others, not having to coordinate quite as much, etc. And you think that it is a good idea to have it in a place, a house, for example.

And yet, you say you are open. And I understand that you are not locked into these things, but I mean to point out to you that you have already become too definite and have lost some of your openness and you are frustrating yourself. The simple fact is that the creativity that you are wanting to flow with, to experience, to have manifest, has been happening. But it hasn't been happening with your possessions. It hasn't been happening in a way that you can take complete credit for. And yet, it has been happening.

I encourage you to allow what is unfolding to unfold. And not assume that you must be in charge of all ten elements, all ten balls. If you will attend to staying on your creative leading edge and be there for the moment that you are in—in other words—giving your attention to what is actually unfolding in the moment, even if it doesn't have a preexisting well-established structure that you have created, then you will find the particular balls or elements coming into the picture that are needed, while they are needed. And when the fulfillment of purpose has occurred they will move out of the picture. And theoretically, you will be back to three balls and saying, "It sure is nice to only have three balls."

Now the point is: stay on your creative leading edge and let everything necessary to the fulfillment of that movement of creation gather round so that fulfillment of purpose can occur. And don't feel that you must be locked into the configuration that occurs while the fulfillment of purpose is happening. And do not feel that you must possess everything. Let the reconfiguration occur, let the fulfillment of purpose occur, let reconfiguration occur, and whatever the next fulfillment of purpose is going to be let it happen. And you simply attend to staying attentive in the moment, at that leading edge and just marvel at the Movement of God, which is the Movement of Creation, which isn't separate in any way from you.

I will tell you something: The Movement of Creation is a universal movement. And although you might think that you are engaged in a tiny endeavor of making and expressing harmonic beauty, somewhere in a small spot on the face of the globe of your planet it is a universal event, with universal impact, because nothing happens in an isolated way.

And if you want to try to be responsible, you'll have more than ten balls, you will have to possess the whole universe and keep it all in order, and see that it all happens in a way that is harmonious without imposing on any other part. And the simple fact is, that if you will stay on the leading edge of your creativity, if you will listen and not try to be controlling, you will find yourself being the manifestation of the creative moment of the Father. And in that Movement you will find your Self, and at the same time the universal aspect of the Movement will be in play, in motion, and you can rejoice at not having to be responsible for it all.

Don't try to become too definite, too conceptual about being creative. You don't even know how to be creative. Any time creativity happens, it's because you allowed it to happen, and you know it. And so the trick, if you will, is to learn to be on that edge of the Movement of Creation that you're not personally responsible for, but you are inseparable from. And enjoy the freedom of that kind of Movement.

And let the equipment come and go, let it be there when it is needed in whatever way it presents itself and let it go. Do not assume that you have got to control all ten or eleven balls yourself. Watch the creative and flexible Movement of the Father, right where you are and appreciate the fact that you're not having to do it all yourself. There will be the freedom and the joy. That's the end of the answer.

RAJ GATHERING - ASHLAND - 1990

QUESTION: Raj, I'm concerned with environmental problems on the planet, such as the cutting of the rain forest, pollution from driving cars and pollution of the oceans and the rivers. And I feel ready for a cause. What do you consider to be the greatest environmental problem? And how do you see that one person can best put their energy to solve it?

ANSWER: The greatest environmental problem there is is the unconsciousness of the inhabitants of your planet of the seriousness of the problem. And what is needed is the raising of the conscious awareness of it. And you can afford to put your full energy into bringing the problem to the level of conscious awareness. Any group that you can join or support to raise its voice intelligently and practically, will be an excellent thing for you to do.

Now I said intelligently and practically. If you are too intelligent about it no one will pay attention. And so, what really amounts to intelligence and practicality is whatever works. There needs to be a more conscious willingness to love this particular aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven. There needs to be a certain humility that develops in the hearts of men, that allows them to let go of their arrogant belief that they are superior to the planet and do not have to cooperate with it.

It is insulting to the ego to consider itself to be a part of the ecological system. The ego never likes to have to fit in. It never likes to have to be subject to the larger more universal order of things.

I will tell you something: if waking up means the defenseless embrace of All That Is, the defenseless embrace of the Wholeness of Being, it is necessarily going to mean the defenseless unconditional embrace of the planet. Just as it is going to have to involve the unconditional, loving embrace of body, of form in everyone of its manifestations. If this love is not brought forth, and if one insists on holding oneself separate from either the earth or ones body, you will see continued degeneration of both. But as there is a willingness to love and honor and, I'm going to say, be equal to all the manifestations of life, you will see regeneration and healing occurring.

I don't care how little a voice you add to that voice which raises the conscious awareness of the necessity of loving this planet, it will be energy well spent. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: This question kind of, almost relates to that one.

ANSWER: I am not surprised. There is order, isn't there?

QUESTION: Do animals choose their own destiny? And if so, why do some choose to be eaten?

ANSWER: Nothing chooses its own destiny. Not one expression of life stands on its own to choose for itself anything. Now you know why so few have woken up, because the ego itself is the supposition that such a choice actually exists. And it fights for its right to determine its life, its course. And all the time that it does this, it is acting at odds with the actual Movement of Creation.

The reason few have woken up is because few have arrived at a point of inner equilibrium that has allowed them to truly value the idea of yielding to the Father. That is unconscionable to the ego, “yield to anything, much less the Father? Actually arrive at a point of saying, “the concept of self-determination is an illusion?”” It does not make sense from within the three-dimensional frame of reference—from the ego’s vantage point. And yet, the power and the clarity and the joy and the congruence of Being, the experience of Being at Home, with a capital “H”, cannot be experienced until self-determination is trashed—released, let go of.

You are, every single one of you, the imminent Movement of God, the present Movement of the presence of God. Now the ego suggests that if you are not self-determined, and that you are to succumb to the Will of God, then you are yielding yourself into fate. No. You are yielding into the conscious experience of the Movement of Creation, because you are not claiming a mind separate from the capital “M” Mind, the Infinite Intelligence that God Is, the Movement of which is the Action of Creation. And when you are not claiming a mind separate from the Father, when you are not energizing a sense of mind or presence separate from the Infinite Intelligence or Mind that the Father is, you come into the undistorted conscious experience of God Being God.

Mind you, this does not mean that you as a puny little mortal come into a conscious experience of being God. But when this sense of being a mortal is released, then you find yourself forever on the threshold of the Movement of God that is called Life, experiencing what at this point I would have to call an active participation with the Father in that Movement of Creation.

And I’m being careful in my choice of words here, because it is not you cooperating with or playing a part in something else called God Being God. Because when you yield to that experience, a sense of private selfhood disappears while conscious individuality remains, except that that experience of conscious individuality is in no way distinguishable from the Movement of Consciousness—the Movement of the Infinite Mind that God Is that is the Movement of Creation.

So, how wonderful is self-determination if self-determination denies you the experience of unity with the Father, and the indivisible, inseparable experience of the Movement of Creation that is the Movement of your Being, because you are claiming and experiencing not being separate from the Infinite Being—God?

Now quite obviously all of you have a certain backlog of memories of some apparent ability to be self-determined and to be creative. But the only thing that you can seem to create is a resistance to Reality. The only thing that you can seem to create is a certain amount of distressing tension that is a result of trying to go at right angles to the river of your Being, or to try to swim upstream so that you may stay in a particular area where the view on shore is particularly attractive.

Mind you, this aggressive act of disagreement with the flow of Life, the flow of Creation, does not change the elements. The river is still there. The shoreline is still there. The view is still there. But it is not moving as it would be if you were flowing. I say this so that you may understand that your whole sojourn in the three-dimensional frame of reference, your whole trek through the personal sense of existence separate from the Father, is going on right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. It's going on right in the middle of Reality. Which means that the dissonance you feel is what it feels like when you are acting at odds with the Kingdom of Heaven.

Your resistance to the undistorted experience of Reality does not create something new called unreality. And so you do not have something called unreality to work out of to get back to some other place called Reality. You are doing all of your dreaming right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

And all of you who are engaged in waking up and returning to the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, are engaging in this process from your destination. And it is extremely important to understand this so that you do not get caught in the idea that waking up is a long process that involves going from one place to some place else. And it is almost as though, while you are sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, in your ignorant reverie, an apple could fall from the tree over your head and snap you Awake.

You see, there really is no distance involved. And all of the processes you are going through are not absolutely necessary—they are helpful. But the more complex you conceptualize your Awakening to be the less you will expect to experience it in the moment you are in. And to that degree you will tend to distance yourself, or delay the experience of Awakening. This is the only way in which you seem to create your experience.

But again, the only experience you seem to create is an ignorance of what is going on right where you are—Reality. You choose or create your dissonant experience, because you are resisting experiencing Reality. You are resisting giving yourself permission to acknowledge and experience your innocence, your guiltlessness, your sinlessness, your inherent perfection, your Birthright of the Christ Consciousness, your Birthright which is to experience yourself as the presence of the Father/Mother, right here and right now.

And you create this dissonance by arguing on the side of your guilt and your worthlessness. You look back on this illusory experience that you have created, which doesn't seem to uncover your Divinity, and you say, "See, it proves that I am not worthy. Yesterday I was unloving. Last week I did something absolutely horrible. The week before I did something that was so thoughtless that my mind must be going. There is no justification for me to embrace the fact—what you call the fact—that I am Divine.”

But I am saying be radical, and don't abide by your acquired sense of what is intelligent and reasonable, and begin to actively claim your Birthright that you are the perfect child of God. What does that make you? That makes you in actuality the Christ, right here, right now. That's the fact that you need to give yourself permission to experience. And then in order to experience it, you do have to be willing to succumb to the current of the river of your Being, which is the Movement of God—God expressed and embodied Infinitely—of which you are the embodiment. And release all attempts to be self-determined from a standpoint of a puny little ego sense of yourself. And begin to be willing to experience the ways in which your life is capital “S” Self-determined, God-determined.

This process is suppose to be a delightful journey. And the only thing that seems to make it difficult for anybody is that they keep listening to their ego conditioning that says, “You are going crazy. You are not making sense. Nobody will respect you.”

But you know what? Becoming capital “S” Self-determined, where you as a little ego are not aggressively doing anything at all, really amounts to becoming Real—Real in the sense that you are getting to know yourself, who you Are—and not who others expect you to be and allowing yourself to be at home with whoever you find yourself to be in the moment.

You will find that as you let go of meeting other peoples expectations, or resisting other peoples expectations, you will begin to relax, and a common sense and intelligence will begin to be easily available to you because you are not compulsively defending yourself against or trying to comply with what the world expects of you. And your simple divinity will begin to come forth and be expressed. And you won't end up just being a good guy. You will end up being a presence that is truly meaningful and that others will enjoy being with, because you are so down-to-earth. And you seem always to have the answer or the words that bring perspective into play and annihilates conflict and concern.

When you begin to stop being self-determined from a small ego standpoint, and you relax with yourself about yourself, you will find yourself becoming eminently intelligent. That is what Paul is doing at this moment. And there is nothing overwhelming about him. And there is nothing arrogant about him. There is nothing that creates a feeling of a need for defensiveness.

Yes, I am speaking at the moment. But if Paul would allow himself to speak at this moment, it would be what I am saying. Because I am not speaking to you as a personality, you could say I am speaking as the voice for Truth, because I am claiming no other presence than the presence of Truth. And when one is allowing the ego sense to be out of the way, one becomes the transparency for Truth, the ultimate appropriateness at any given moment.

Paul is not being self-determined at this moment—self-determined, with a small “s”. Now, he is become self-conscious, with a small “s”. And I will take the opportunity to use this as an example, because he has learned under these circumstances that when he becomes self-conscious it is important for him to not energize it, but to become centered again, and therefore Self-determined, with a capital “S”. And as a result of that, he does not lose the capacity to continue to be the presence of unconditional love and intelligence and appropriateness.

Now I bring this out because the same thing applies to all of you at various times you become self-conscious. You become ego conscious, and you lose whatever equilibrium you have gained. And always, when that happens it is because an ego sense of vulnerability has come into play. And why would there be an ego sense of vulnerability? Because you believe that you are confronted with other egos, who of course are undependable and certainly frightening.

If when this happens you will immediately cease to define those around you whom you are reacting to as egos, which you need to be defensive against, and then you choose to move back to your best equilibrium, you will recover your equilibrium and will be able to continue to be what I will call an agent for change, because you are not contributing to and substantiating the ego dynamic—the ego illusion.

The tendency always when this happens is to become defensive, and then arm yourselves even further to be protected against being judged. And so you leave your best centered place, or your best equilibrium, you become a good little defensive ego, armed against the egos whom you have judged will judge you, and intelligence is lost, and the ability to be appropriate and healing and being meaningful is lost.

You become capital “S” Self-determined by setting aside all attempts to be self-determined as a body—as a person confined by the outline of your form. If you want to experience ongoing ignorance, frustration and confusion, be self-determined. And if indeed you want to become that presence of genuineness that is the presence of God right where you are, give up self-determination and be in touch with yourself with love. And then just be out of that place of balance and of peace that is always there in that love.

Oh yes, animals do indeed attempt to be self-determined. They have as big egos as human beings. And they also have to learn to yield. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, my question seems very personal, but somehow related to what you just said concerning self-determination. In the Course, it says, “It is not up to you to change your brother, but merely to see him as he Is.”

ANSWER: That does not mean to see him as the asshole he seems to be presenting himself as. It doesn’t matter how much of an ego he seems to be presenting. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, you have said that as my mind gets clearer about my divinity that my world will reconfigure.

ANSWER: And even before it reconfigures you will begin to recognize the same divinity that you are now owning as your own, as being inherent in those others in your world. You will see this even before their behavior begins to reconfigure. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay. So, is it ever appropriate to say to someone that I love and interact with a lot, “this interaction between us doesn’t seem loving. And I don’t know what to do about it. Would you know why this is taking place?” It seems like that could be construed, I want them to change their behavior. And I do. Because I don’t think I deserve to continue in the same interaction that I’ve done before. So, is it appropriate ever to say, “I don’t like what’s going on here”?

ANSWER: It is if you want an inappropriate behavior to stop. As I’ve said before, love does not mean becoming a doormat for the ego’s of others. You can relate to this relative to the raising of your own children. Were there not times that you had to say, “no, this is not loving behavior,” or “no, this is not intelligent behavior,” or “no this is not principled behavior”? Indeed, and you understood that, in fact, it was your responsibility to make that educational disclosure. Correct?

QUESTION: Right.

ANSWER: Now, since your children have grown, have you suddenly become a nincompoop, not knowing what is truth, or what is right, or what is principled, or what is loving, and now you must close your lips and be an idiot and say nothing? I am saying it this way to you because it is easy for you to see in this light how completely appropriate it is for you to state your clear perception of truth—your clear awareness of what is loving and what is appropriate.

Would you let your children mistreat you out of ignorance? No! You would disclose to them what constituted appropriate and loving treatment. Don’t hesitate to do this with your brother or sister, your fellow man, your fellow woman.

Do not hesitate to say, “This is appropriate behavior with me. And that is not appropriate behavior with me, because it isn’t loving. And if you insist on that type of behavior, you will simply need to do it elsewhere. Because you see, I know it doesn’t represent you. I know you are not wanting to convey that. But however, if you insist on saying that you are not conveying that, and your behavior does not mean that, and therefore you see no reason to change, then I will have to ask you to behave like that elsewhere and not in my home, or not in my presence. I love you, but I will not join with you in support of that kind of behavior in my presence.”

You must be willing to be straight and direct. And I will tell you also, that you must be willing to dare to express truth. You have the capacity to recognize it. Dare to express it. You didn’t hesitate with your children.

QUESTION: Let’s say that I share a driveway with someone I dearly love, and they park their car in a way that before I can do what I want to do I have to move their car. And so in the past I've done it, and not said anything. And now I am saying something, and it still happens. And so what is my recourse then? I still don't like it.

ANSWER: Continue to express the need, with firmness, for them not to park the car that way so that it necessitates your moving it. This does not constitute being demanding or overbearing. You are asking for a thoughtfulness, an expression of kindness. That is a good thing to do.

What is not a good thing to do, is to get angry about it. When you get angry about it, you are engaging in judgment. You are creating the conflicted emotion of anger within you. You are upsetting yourself. And then after you have gone through all of this inner agony of being angry, it pisses you off because that other one doesn't even feel bad.

And I will tell you that that experience states a truth or a solution, rather than a problem because it isn't the point for the other one to feel bad. The point is, that you are creating an experience of feeling bad for yourself that is inappropriate.

Now be willing to be like the drop of water that wears away the immovable stone. It requires no emotion. It does require repetition. But it required repetition with the kids, didn't it? If you are learning the multiplication tables, it takes repetition, doesn't it? Be willing to lovingly repeat that which helps promote greater harmony. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is: what is the appropriate way to express anger? And also, how can I be assertive without being angry?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you that if you will be assertive instead of squelching the assertiveness, you will not end up being angry. And if before you are assertive you pay attention quietly within to what is appropriate, then you will always find yourself being assertive in ways that are productive of harmony.

That is not an absolute fact. Because sometimes when you are appropriate and you say "no" aggressively to someone who is very insistent upon having you say "yes," you will be met with distress. But if you're saying "no," or if you're standing at odds with someone else's point of view is a result of quiet awareness within yourself of what is appropriate for you, then your statement of "no" will not be a form of attack, it will simply be a very clear statement of you. You will not be saying it to get anyone else to change. You will be saying it to state where you unequivocally stand, not as over and against the other point of view, but as a simple statement of self.

And when you do this and there is not an act of aggression in it, but there is a definite statement, a genuine statement that expresses you, you will find that the other persons objection will not tend to come back at you in a form of attack. Because they will hear the fact that you are not coming from a place of weakness, or vulnerability, or indecision, or doubt. And they will realize that they are simply going to have to pay attention to what you are saying.

What you are meaning by assertiveness, is expressing yourself simply and clearly so as not to arouse opposition. And the only thing that will truly do that is when you are speaking from your genuine feeling, not from emotions.

You get angry when you are not heard. But generally speaking, when you are not heard it is because you have not been listening to yourself first and are not clearly expressing you. And you are rather, by means of your words, attempting to defend your sense of vulnerability. That's the end of the answer.

Don't be afraid to be in touch with the simplicity of who you are, and then express it simply and let the chips fall where they may. That's when the gift of you begins to truly be made, and everyone around you is blessed.

QUESTION: I recently took on what for me was a rather large responsibility. I made a commitment before I was really fully ready to take responsibility for the commitment. And as a result of that I find that I've needed to find a way to generate more money than I have ever thought I would need to generate. And so I've taken off on a new career, studying towards being an accountant.

In the process of doing this field of study, this sadness comes over me that feels like it's saying I'm violating my Being in some way. This is my interpretation of the sadness. I don't really know what it is. I don't trust myself to let go of this and then just see what else will come up, because it is the only thing I can see.

PAUL: This is me Paul. When you say let go of this, what is the this?

QUESTION: This course of pursuing the accounting credential, which will set me up to get a job which will pay enough to support the family that I now have. And I want to support the family. But somehow I would like to do so in such a way that it doesn't violate my Being. And I guess what I want is some kind of confirmation, that either I'm on the right track with this and that the sadness is just something that is a necessary loss that I have to go through, or what? I feel like I'm pushing myself through this, rather than allowing it to unfold. And maybe I'm wrong?

ANSWER: The fact is that you are pushing yourself through it, instead of allowing it to unfold. But you must understand that you do not need to change anything that is happening in order to switch from a pushing to an allowing mode. But I will tell you, literally, you are faced with what I am going to call the loss of freedom that accompanies a commitment. And your ego is indeed distressed at the loss of freedom. But the commitment that you have made is one which is grounding to you in the most fundamental divine spiritual way.

Your horizons are being expanded. You are at a point of having to embody the love that you have for them. And when I say embody, I mean bring into tangible expression.

You are, literally, getting a taste of what a mother expresses daily towards her children and her husband—selfless willingness with love, to do repetitious, supposedly unfulfilling, meaningless work—cook, clean house, change diapers, clean toilets, and still be fresh for hubby as though her day had not been hard at all and the only one important is him.

Now I am glossing the picture over a little too much. But the point is that you are moving into a level of experience that is maturing you, because you are having to embody or bring into practical expression your love. And you have lost a freedom to be uncommitted. But there is a fulfillment here that far exceeds any of the fulfillments you could get from being uncommitted, because you are going to grow wonderfully. Not only from the work that you are doing, not only from your willingness to express your love in this way, but from the demands that this family will make upon you. These demands will not deplete you, they will enlarge you. They will uncover more of you than you thought was there—just like boot camp.

I will tell you that the majority of the young men in the world would not know of their capacities if it were not for boot camp, because they would not have had the demand to extend themselves, and discover that there was more to them than they thought there was.

Now this responsibility you have taken on is not truly like boot camp, but it is broadening, expanding, enlarging. And it will uncover depths of you that you did not know you had. Depths of your capacity to love, and love, and love, and love. And you will become more aware of how big you are, how unlimited your resources are. You are not on the wrong track. You are not doing the wrong thing. You are not going against your fundamental nature. But, you are going against your ego conditioning. And Bravo!

And I encourage you to hold on to this, and to pursue it. And notice the ego when it complains, but don't take the bait. Just notice that it is acting up again. The part of you that notices it is the part of you that is Real. And you can say to your ego, "Go ahead and complain, I am unaffected by it. I do not choose to energize you. I do not choose to validate you." And then let it grouse. And when it sees that the grouching is not going to hook you, it will shut up and it will try to find another place to hook you.

I will tell you something else: No one who gets married is ready for what comes. So do not feel that you have somehow missed the boat and are unprepared, where everyone else was prepared. If everyone waited until they could afford to get married, no one would get married. But when out of their love, and out of their confidence in life they open themselves up and are willing to embrace it, they find that what they need is there in one form or another. And so have faith. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Some of the early answers really addressed a major issue that I'm seeing rising in my life. It has to do with: that it's seeming to me that I'm increasingly less capable of having strategies to direct my life to approach areas or to manipulate things. And that seemed to be something that you spoke of earlier. And along with a deepening trust that if I follow my own integrity, follow my own deep sense of what is appropriate and don't try and push things around a lot, I'm having a deepening sense of trust that what is best for me or what is most creative, the most loving, will unfold. And I'm finding that in fact that is happening.

It's almost like I feel incapable of having strategies, and that's very scary sometimes. Because I suppose my ego totally panics when it looks at things and says, "you can't do this anymore, and you can't do this anymore, and what's going to happen?" And it sort of sends out rational for all these forms of fear.

And I would like some support in the direction I'm moving in. I give myself the support. And when I go inward, I do find very definite support for this that those activities which I most love, that that is the most appropriate thing. Well, in this case they don't even seem to be strategies, they seem to be just giving it my creative attention, and doing a certain kind of work.

ANSWER: Indeed, your question illustrates a point that it is important for everyone to understand. The experience of enlightenment that increases your capacity to be aware divinely, doesn't constitute new intellectual understandings that replace older more limited intellectual understandings.

The experiences of enlightenment actually begin to change your experience of you. Which is exactly what you were describing. And you may find that you are seeming to lose the capacity to be intellectually, intelligently in control, by means of grasping everything with your intellect so clearly that you are ready for anything. Or it can seem to unfold as a continued capacity to operate intellectually without being effective. Either way it can seem scary. Because it puts you at a point similar to the one that Paul and Susan find themselves in, when I referred to them as boats adrift in the grip of God, ignorantly bemoaning their fate, their bad luck.

Indeed, as one begins to trust, one begins to yield. One finds himself seeming to lose control. And because the sense of one's integrity has to a great degree been gathered from or derived from a skillful exercise of control, then one's sense of integrity seems to be undermined by this loss of control.

But you see, until you are willing to take this risk, which you have been willing to take, and yield to the Movement of your Being, with a capital "B", you do not have the opportunity to find out that there is a pre-existing divine order to everything. Because everything is the current manifestation of the Movement of Creation, which of course is the Movement of God. And God is Truth. And God is Principle. And God is intelligence. And therefore, there is perfect order and perfect fulfillment of purpose in every single aspect of the Movement of God's Being.

You have heard the statement "let go and let God." And it sounds wonderful, but doing it is very much like a youngster learning how to float on his back. He will sink if he tenses up. But if he relaxes he will find himself magically supported.

Waking up is going to mean changes in your experience of yourself. And the changes are going to move you beyond your current way of interpreting everything. And it is going to involve trust.

Those of you who are familiar with A Course In Miracles are of course familiar with that word trust. And when trust is put into practice, you find that it is something different from confidence. And you find that what you used to call trust, was confidence and not trust. Because trust is when you step into that which you are not yet familiar with. Trust is daring to risk the chance that God Is All.

Now I will confirm for you that everything that is happening is in absolute order. But I wish to also confirm to you, and to everyone else, that as you are willing to step into that with which you are not familiar, but that which you have an unreasonable willingness to commit to, you must be willing to take responsibility for it.

Now what do I mean by that? I mean, don't do it if you don't feel it. And if you do feel it, do it, and do it with a certain joy. And never do it because someone else said that is the way of the spiritual path.

When you are truly ready to risk the chance that God Is All, and step out on the basis of an inner conviction, you will do it without hold an ace up your sleeve or behind your back that allows you to blame someone else if it doesn't work out. If it doesn't work out you will say, "it was worth it to try it. And if I had it to do over again, I would do it over again." That is taking responsibility. That is what I mean.

Therefore, when you feel led within, whether it is through a conscious experience of dialog with your guide, or whether it is an inner nudge, don't act upon that inner nudge or that guidance until you have arrived at a point of comfort with it, where you are willing to test it out. When you do this, you want the steps to be genuinely taken because you feel it is important for you, whether you succeed the first time or not. In this way, you will bring the kind of commitment to it that is really necessary for it to be experienced fulfillingly.

The unreasonable things you have been stating in your question, shall I say, the unreasonable basis upon which you have been living your life for this past period of time, is indeed reasonable beyond your egos sense of reasonability. And by continuing, you will find yourself getting further confirmation from your experience. You are on track. That's the end of the answer.

Now I will tell all of you that a prolonged experience of real peace is utterly boring to the ego. And if you experience prolonged periods of peace and harmony, your ego's will get in there and attempt to drum up a little drama. And there is a necessity to, when you are learning to support, if I can put it that way, an ongoing experience of peace, to be willing to hang in there with it, even though from the standpoint of your old conditioning the vitality, the vigor and the apparent meaning of life has gone out of life.

As one is willing to let go of being hooked by a demand for another fix of drama, one finds himself or herself coming into a fuller experience of the joy that is inherent in the peace and the harmony. The ego thrives on and depends upon conflict for its sustenance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: If I am not totally Awake and have not my lessons learned in this lifetime, will I in the next dimension continue to Awaken and to learn? And will I have any control over whether I will reincarnate or not?

ANSWER: Absolutely, if you were to pass on at this very instant, you would find yourself having experienced no interruption of conscious awareness of yourself, and of conscious awareness of your body. You will find yourself as ignorant as you were the moment before you passed on, and with the same opportunities to wake up that you experience now. And indeed the process of waking up would continue. Why? Because the whole time you have been dreaming a dream you have been doing it in the Kingdom of Heaven, and you have been the Christ doing it.

So inevitably the facts will break through the nature of the dream and rouse you out of it. The fact of you must register with you. Everyone is going to wake up, because no one has ever really stopped being what they divinely are.

Now the fact is that you will not have the choice to incarnate again. The reason being that, literally, this is the last incarnation. Everyone who is still dreaming dreams is on the verge of waking up, because there are not enough involved in the ego sense of existence, or the limited perception of the Kingdom of Heaven to support its ongoing existence. The dream is breaking up.

You do indeed live in interesting times. Awakening has been proceeding at an accelerated rate since 1845. Humanly speaking, this has been represented by, shall I say, the increase in inventions, the increase in discoveries, scientifically speaking. It is as though the limited frame of reference is becoming more unlimited.

Up until 1845, mankind as a whole—throughout recorded history within the three-dimensional frame of reference—had dealt primarily with survival, had very little time to truly be contemplative, had very little time to do anything other than be defensive and self-protective for the purpose of sustaining his experience of being alive.

Since that time, there have been within the ranks of the Brotherhood of Man—which in Biblical terms is called the Body of Christ, which in Reality defines the infinite expression of God as Conscious Individuality—has become unfettered from the sense of identity or identification with the body. And significant numbers of Individualities have Awakened, thus withdrawing their energy from joining with the others who were asleep caught in the limited ego frame of reference. You could say that they have joined the ranks of those who are helping (just as I am right now) support the encouragement of further Awakening among those who are still dreaming, but dreaming fitfully.

And so there are rapid strides being taken. The shift of consciousness from body identification to mind identification to the conscious experience of one's self as Conscious Awareness, in which the experience of all form, of all specific meaning is going on—is occurring. And it is occurring rapidly enough that there will be within the next 40 years this total shift of Awakening of the Brotherhood of Man coming into its right Mind. And there will be no further dips being taken into the pool of ignorance.

So no, you will not come back again. And yes, you will wake up very soon. And it is not appropriate for any of you to assume that you will not wake up before the time that you would normally have passed on. Put more positively: it is reasonable for all of you to expect to wake up before you pass on. That is becoming the more profound likelihood.

Remember you are doing your waking up at your destination. Remember that, because you must remind yourself that you are not a great distance away from your destination. It's only a matter of a shift of attention. I fully understand that you don't know exactly what that means in the practical terms of experience, but you grasp the idea that if you are in the Kingdom of Heaven at this moment, dreaming a dream let us say, sidetracked from paying attention to what is going on, obviously your task is not to hike or maneuver your way back to a location called the Kingdom of Heaven. All that is necessary is to let go of the distraction and open your eyes.

Therefore, you don't have to engage in practices that cause you to become deserving of going through the Pearly Gates. It tells you that there is no lectern from which Peter says, "that way," or, "that way." You need to know that at this very instant, because you are already in the Kingdom of Heaven, you deserve to be there. You do not have to earn the right to be there. You don't have to become more than you are to be there. All you have to do is to say "okay" to being there, and then begin to look around you with a curiosity to see the evidences of the presence's of God. That element of curiosity is what will begin to cause your eyelids to crack open and begin to see the truth—the truth about you and the truth about where you are. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I have a question for you. Our scientist and many of our authors, like Carl Sagan, have allowed us to know that there is another planet that is entering our galaxy and is coming towards the Earth. And I'd like to know if this is the missing planet that's been called planet "X", or others have referred to it at the Twelfth Planet that has the Nafilim on it. And I want to know when it will be coming here, and what effects it will have on the planet and the peoples of the Earth?

ANSWER: At this time the only thing that it is appropriate for me to say is that its presence is not a random movement. That indeed, it is a three-dimensional manifestation of a fourth-dimensional Movement, and therefore expresses the divine intent of the Father, shall I say, the integrated, indivisible, harmonious Movement of fulfillment of purpose. And there is absolutely no need for fear, period.

Also, do not let such an event distract you from being fully present in the now with your curiosity wide open to begin to see the evidences of the Movement of God—that are inches away from your nose.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. He's giving an image here. It's like when you're sleeping at night, and if somebody comes in and shakes your shoulder or calls your name, and you're dreaming a dream, and in the dream you hear someone call your name, or a character or person in your dream is shaking your shoulder. And so the event that is really occurring in the real world gets translated into the dynamics of the dream you are having.

It's almost as though, here you are or here any of us is, sitting like on a grassy knoll in the Kingdom of Heaven, maybe propped up against a tree and we've dozed off and we're having a dream, and here comes somebody notable. And our sensing of it becomes translated into whatever is going on as we're dozing.

Three-dimensionally speaking, physically speaking, there is this planet coming into our experience. Fourth-dimensionally it's like it's something else in the sense that it has greater meaning than what we are allowing ourselves to perceive by virtue of interpreting it physically, as a physical phenomena of a physical universe that probably doesn't have anything to do with a God or a fourth-dimension. Does that make sense?

QUESTION: Not completely. If it is in the third-dimension and it is coming into our sphere of where we can see it and we can register it as being made up of matter, then what could it possibly be in the fourth-dimension? Is it a separate entity in the fourth-dimension, or is the fourth-dimension a shadow of the third-dimension of this planet. I'm a little confused.

ANSWER: Your confusion will be cleared up if you understand that the only thing there is present to be experienced is Reality, with a capital "R". When I use the term Reality, with a capital "R", I am speaking of the fourth-dimension. I will put it this way: The fourth-dimension is that state of consciousness that is fully illumined, fully Awake, fully enlightened, experiencing all of Reality, you might say, through the Father's eyes, or with identically the same conscious experience that God is experiencing all that He is being, and recognizing Himself in it.

If one chooses to experience fourth-dimensional Reality from the third-dimension, he continues to experience the fourth-dimensional Reality with limitations. If at this instant you were to make a shift to a two-dimensional frame of reference, you would still experience everything in this room, everything in this room would be available to you to experience, but with greater limitation than you currently have from the three-dimensional frame of reference.

No matter what degree of limitation you are perceiving Reality from, it is still Reality that you are experiencing. One is not a shadow of another. One is not an archetype standing above and behind another. Everything you are experiencing is some aspect of Reality, with a capital “R”. It is the fourth-dimension that you are experiencing from within a limited perception of it.

Indeed, you appear to be a physical organism, but I have been sitting here tonight telling you that you are the embodiment of God. I am not talking about a different you than the one who is right here in front of me. I will tell you that as I sit here I experience you with your Body of Light, as you would experience yourself if you were not enclosed or confined by your limited concepts or perceptions. This Body of Light is not behind the physical, it is in identically the same space because it is the same body experienced without limits of perception.

As you begin to be unconditional in your observation of your world, as you begin to concede that maybe nothing that you see means what you think it means, you will begin to see everything new because you will not be holding everything to your current sense of definition of it. You will not begin to see a different thing, you will see that thing clearly. In Biblical terms, you will no longer see it through a glass darkly.

QUESTION: I got it.

ANSWER: Again, there is not another place, another dimension per se, to which you can move that has a different reality going on in it, different from the one you are experiencing. It is an enlightened rather than an endarkened experience of the only Reality, the only thing that is going on, which is the Kingdom of Heaven. As each of you begins to claim your Birthright as the Son or Daughter of God, as being the embodiment of the intent and meaning that the Father has brought into play as His Self-expression, you experience healing.

You don’t begin to see a different body, you see this body more perfectly. And this increasing presence or manifestation of perfection is what you will see as you begin to wake up. You will not rise above this world. You will not rise above your body. You will be right where you are experiencing it all with a true perspective.

And I will tell you something: the most significant factor that blocks you from seeing the perfection of the Kingdom of Heaven that is going on right here, is your fear and your resultant defensiveness, which causes you to contract and use your body as a means of defense against whatever it is that you are fearing.

And this is why it is so necessary to engage in the act of love, which is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R”, in each and everything, whether it is an ant, or whether it is a chair, or whether it is a fellow human being, or whether it is a tree, or whether it is a planet.

And I’m going to add: not only is love the willingness to recognize that which is Real, it is the curiosity to see it. So that you do not approach your day as though you have it pegged, and you know what it is, and there’s nothing else to be discovered.

This is where it’s going to happen. And all of this is what you are going to see anew. And so start being curious here, and start being curious today, so that when this planet gets where you can see it you will already have had practice at discerning a thing for what it is. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, a little better than a year ago, myself and a few friends decided to undertake a business endeavor. And we really, truly felt that this was spiritually directed. We all put forth our efforts as best we could and asked for guidance. And I really can't say that this has prospered. Now we have to make a decision as to perhaps a change in marketing, or as a friend says, "You can't continue to ride a dead horse." Do you know what I mean? Do you have any insight as to what might be our best direction?

ANSWER: To pay attention to what all of you are feeling. Now I need to be very clear here. There is a difference between feelings and emotions. Feelings are the deep recognition of Soul in you. Emotions are ego reactions to Reality when it doesn't occur according to the ego's concept of how it ought to be. The ego is always reacting to Reality when it doesn't conform to its attempts to control. They [emotions] are undependable, and they do not reflect truth. Feelings reflect truth, because they are a Soul experience, and they are never conflicted, and they always convey the meanings of truth.

Now you as a group must not invalidate your willingness to listen for guidance because of what has transpired. You must be willing to listen further. And you must understand that when you are listening you are listening for answers, and that answers always simplify and clarify. Answers never condemn. Answers never judge. Answers always uncover your integrity, and answers always uncover fulfillment of purpose.

Now I'm not avoiding answering the question, because the answer is not what I might tell you to do, or what direction to take relative to the business. The answer here is that you need to continue to entrust yourself to listening for guidance, for further refinements of clarification that are relevant to the circumstances at the moment. And then I encourage you to trust what you as a group find yourselves knowing as a result of listening.

You must all understand that when you are listening for truth, when you are listening for guidance, you are listening for guidance relative to life, which is always moving and never static. And therefore, you will never get an answer that will stand for all time, that will allow you to not have to pay attention anymore because you've got that pegged.

That is the problem you are experiencing right now. You have everything pegged. You think you know what a thing is. And that is why the first lesson in the Course says, "Nothing I see means anything." This conviction that you have the definition, or the meaning of a thing down pat, needs to be broken so that you may get in touch with the fluidity of the Movement of Creation, and remain or stay forever fresh with it.

There is simply a call here for continued listening. But not listening for a new definite answer that won't change. You will be listening for the awareness of what is appropriate, the feeling of what is appropriate that will identify fulfillment of purpose. And you have the right to do that, because you seem not to be experiencing fulfillment of purpose at the moment. And yet fulfillment of purpose is the nature of the Movement of God, and therefore that is what is present for you to discern.

Further deep listening is called for, with a confidence that what you need to know in order to experience that fulfillment of purpose will be naturally forthcoming, because that is the nature of life, and therefore it is the nature of this particular endeavor, if you will. That is what needs to be attended to. That is the answer. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I have a special affinity for animals, and I was wondering if animals are part of the one Soul, one Sonship? And if so, do animals ever incarnate in human form?

ANSWER: They never incarnate in human form. Indeed, they are full manifestations of the Father. They are part of the infinite Creation of God. They are not a lesser manifestation of the Father. They are just a different manifestation. And when the sense of difference that you experience between yourself and them is gone, you will find communication completely possible and full. I mean by that, that they will be able—if I may put it this way—that they will be able to communicate with you about scientific subjects, or about any aspect of the infinity of God's Creation.

You, mankind currently has a willingness to embrace the possibility that the dolphins are not an inferior species. And they are coming closer to the truth here, even though the means of communication has not yet been established. But you see there is a curiosity. And as a result of the curiosity, there is a willingness to pay attention to them and to the sounds they make, as though maybe something intelligent is occurring.

That shift of perception means that they have become more defenseless relative to dolphins. They are not convinced that they are just a dumb animal—a sub-species. And by virtue of letting go of the conviction that because dolphins are part of the animal kingdom, which is necessarily inferior to mankind, they are, shall I say, right for the penetration of the reality of things to occur. Now it just happens that the same thing is true of dogs and cats and birds and snakes.

So, you can begin to see how valuable this statement is, that nothing that I see means what I think it means. Because if you are willing to embrace that statement, and then approach your world as though there literally is more of the infinite manifestation of intelligence to it, that you can communicate with and commune with... well you will see that that statement opens the door for you because it allows for curiosity, and it brings into play a willingness to give permission for radical, new experiences.

The convictions that you have as to what a thing is and what a thing is not, literally blinds you and binds you to your current limited perception of what? The Kingdom of Heaven. If a dog or a cat is itself the embodiment of God, then why would it want to become a human being? And vice versa. It doesn't need to become different because it isn't lacking.

And fourth-dimensionally, or truly speaking, there is no hierarchy to the infinite expression of the Father. The idea of spiritual hierarchies is a concept colored by ego. It is the way the indivisible, and therefore undivided infinite expression of God looks when looked at through the lenses of the ego. But even though the lenses suggest levels of order, and levels of control, it doesn't change the fact that Reality is undivided and indivisible, expressing infinitely perfect harmony. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: What is it going to be like to be Awake? And if we're all light and we have no contrast, then how will we know that's perfect?

ANSWER: It is not that it is all just light. It is also that the substance of everything that is light also embodies the meaning of that particular form of God's expression. And so there is color as well, which, three-dimensionally speaking, means that there is part of the spectrum that has been deleted, part of the spectrum is absent in order for you to see red, or blue, or green, or any color other than white. But fourth-dimensionally speaking, that is not the case.

And so, part of the experience of the light is that the shades or colors, which far surpass anything that you can imagine at the moment, express something of the intent or meaning. So there's not only a shape of light that is indeed distinguishable from other shapes of light, there is the meaning that is conveyed by the colors involved. And then underlying that is the fact that the light is love. Love is literally the illumination of the substance of Spirit. And so it is more than just light.

As I have said before, Bodies of Light can pass through each other. And that is accompanied with an experience. You can just barely grasp what I mean when you think of bodies connecting with each other. But this constitutes an aspect, or an experience of the intent or meaning of that particular expression of the Father.

Now I would have to go on and on to convey in some way the infiniteness of this experience, but let me simply say that when one Body of Light passes through another Body of Light, and it is experienced, it is not a private experience only of the two Bodies of Light, but is experienced by all of the Brotherhood. And so, you can at least conceptualize the fact that the infinite expression of God is at once experiencing all of conscious experience that is available without being overwhelmed or confused in any way. And it is an experience of bliss.

What it is difficult for your present frame of reference to grasp is the fact that you can experience being infinite and specific simultaneously without confusion.

Being Awake is an infinite experience, it is no longer a private experience. And yet, there is a definite experience of being consciously individual. Now the word individual takes on more of the word indivisible, which is what your dictionary defines individual as. But indivisible now means something infinitely indivisible at one with everything, as well as specifically aware but claiming no sense of separateness to that awareness of specific individuality. I cannot express it in three-dimensional terms more clearly than that. And I encourage you not to fret yourself trying to grasp it.

What I encourage you to do is to begin to open yourself up to that experience by becoming less defensive towards your fellow man and woman, and to be willing to begin to acknowledge that even though everyone around you knows through exhibiting ego tendencies, the fact is that underneath those tendencies is the Christ. In this way you will begin to redefine what you are seeing, and thus you will begin to release yourself from your old confining definitions.

And if indeed you wake up in the morning and begin to approach your day, each day, with the idea that you are confronted with the Allness of God, and you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and it must necessarily be expressing the indivisibility and therefore the unconflicted harmony of God, and you are going to be curious to see it, this also will begin to open you up to constitute the giving of permission to experience everything new—experience everything more clearly as Reality, as the Kingdom of Heaven.

But you must first be willing to look at everything and say, “This isn’t just the physical world I thought it was. I don’t really know what else it is, but Raj has said, and other Masters, or other Seers have said, ‘Now are we the Sons of God, now,’ and ‘the Kingdom of Heaven is within you. Now is the accepted time. Now are the fields white and ready for harvest. Now is the time to see God. If you have seen me, you have seen the Father.’” Well, if the seeing of me means you have seen the Father, then it means that the seeing of you means the seeing of the Father.

Waking up is giving permission to no longer hold your world in a conflicted, polarized, conceptual frame work. And a willingness to begin to see, what I will call, the miracle of the presence of God in the leaf that has fallen at your feet, or the woman standing in front of you across the counter, or your boss, or yourself.

The world over the last three years has had to do the unbelievable, it has had to be willing to relinquish the label “enemy” relative to the Soviet Union. Now which came first, the behavior that allowed for releasing the label? Or a certain level of spiritual maturity that let go of the label first? But the fact is that the concept has changed, and the manifestation has changed.

There are great miracles, great radical changes awaiting you over the next decade. And if you are willing to look at each day with fresh eyes, willing to acknowledge that God is present here and now, and that Heaven is not a far-off or in the after-life, you will be prepared for, as well as preparing the way for radical and wonderful transformation. And then I will ask you, will it be a transformation of the world, or will it be a transformation of the eyes that are looking at the world?

And I will leave you on that point. It has been my pleasure to be with you this evening. You are indeed welcome.

Gathering In Ashland, WA –1990

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: My question is: how is the aftermath of death by suicide of the body, different from the aftermath of death by accident or cancer, or any other way?

ANSWER: Literally, there is no difference at all from the standpoint of individual experience. Whether one dies by accident or as a result of a physical disease, it is, at the bottom line, always a suicide. It is always a conscious or unconscious act of resistance to the flow of one's, capital "B" Being. A resistance to the embracing of life as the manifestation of God, the manifestation of fundamental self-directed conscious intelligence.

Death by "natural causes" is simply a rather prolonged process of slowly withdrawing from life. And the reason that one slowly withdraws from life, rather than actively engaging in it, is because everyone has this sense of being a physical organism in which their soul or mind is temporarily housed. And because they look around and they see that only a handful of individualities have ever departed from this place by any means other than dying, the assumption is made that, that is the normal natural inevitable way by which to move on.

And so, when one begins to, oh, let us say, get somewhere near their forty-fifth birthday or their early fifties, they begin to say; "there's no point in starting a new project"; "there's no point in starting a new career"; "there is no point in taking on a long term project, because although I am healthy now, I am not likely to be around long enough to complete this new project." And so, one begins either overtly or subtly to become resistant to active engagement of life. And this act of resistance to life, truly constitutes an act of resistance to the movement of one's Being. And so, one becomes more and more incongruent, out of sync, with himself or herself. And this is the beginning of the first stages of an act of suicide. If someone else decides to take a gun, and shorten the process, it makes no difference. It still constitutes a willful act of becoming resistant to the active engagement in life.

Now, always when one passes on, no matter what the apparent trigger of that shift is, one finds himself or herself identically the same, as a general rule. Normally the only change that is suddenly experienced, as a result of death, is immediate relief from whatever it was, that was apparently causing the death. If it were cancer, if it were surgery, no matter what the physical cause was, the fact that one is still experiencing life, proves that the disease could not kill that one. And so, one is immediately freed from the fear of the disease. And in the absence of that fear, and all of the associated beliefs relative to its capacity to kill you, there is the immediate experience of healing of whatever that disease was.

And so, it really behooves all of you, when you are dealing with a disease, to begin to embrace what is happening, with this in mind. The fact that it is the fear associated with the disease, and the beliefs that it has certain progressive characteristics, that will ultimately end in your death. You see, this is a belief, it is a conditioning, not just from the words of others, but from observing what has happened to others. And an automatic assumption is made that what is true for someone else, must necessarily be true for you.

But again, as I indicated, when one has passed on and has discovered that, indeed, the disease has not succeeded in causing you to cease to exist, the fear of it is immediately wiped out. And the sense of threat associated with that disease is wiped out, and healing is experienced. The healing is not a result of having passed on, it is always the result of realization. It is always the result of a shift into the clarity of Truth. And that kind of shift can be made right here, right now, without, shall I say, succumbing to the beliefs about the progressive nature of disease.

This means, of course, that those who commit suicide, do not go to hell, do not rot in purgatory, but find themselves as everyone else, continuing to stand at the threshold of their opportunity to discover Truth, and to claim it, and own it for themselves. To embody it. And they continue just as you are continuing. Having passed on, does not give them an edge. And they have with them, whatever beliefs were governing them before they passed on, and the same opportunity for clarification is present.

Now, I have in the past spoken of the fact, that everyone stands at the threshold of awakening, something that could not be stated as absolutely or, shall I say, universally two hundred years ago or two thousand years ago, as it can be stated today. Because, in the past two thousand years, there has been significant, shall I say, growing up that has occurred in the brotherhood, those of the brotherhood still sleeping and dreaming dreams. And there is greater willingness to take on self-responsibility, with a greater sense of self-worth. And as a result, there is now present a significant enough degree of trust, that more and more people are being able to yield, in biblical terms, to the Father's Will. In more everyday terms, it is a matter of everyone daring to yield to their deepest Inner Knowing. Daring to yield to a Self in them, that is deeper and broader and more expansive than the little tiny ego sense of self, that has been employed for the purpose of survival, for so many centuries.

And, as a result of this, there are fewer and fewer people actively energizing ignorance. And, as more and more people are leaning into their inner Knowing, as more and more people are yielding into the Holy Spirit, or the Father's Will, deferring to a Knowing that is far deeper than the knowing that results from the intellect. There are fewer and fewer who are strengthening and substantiating the ignorance that is typical of the three-dimensional only frame of reference, or the ego frame of reference.

And so, the ego and its structures of belief embraced by mankind, are weakening. And this is happening not only here, for those of you who are incarnated, or even in other places in the universe, where there are those who are incarnated, but also with those who have passed on, who still find themselves standing at the leading edge of their awakening. This shift of consciousness, that I refer to as awakening, is going on universally. Literally, because there are too few present energizing, activating and substantiating the ego level of ignorance.

Again, one who has passed on at his or her own hand, in other words, as a result of an overt act of suicide, finds himself or herself, no more in a state of penalty, than one who dies by natural means, or any other means.

Death is an illusion. And the means by which an illusion is perpetrated, is irrelevant. And one is not worse than another. It is the general, or overall ignorance of one's Divinity, that creates the penalty of ignorance. It isn't the individual acts, that are carried out as a result of ignorance. And it is important to understand that, you are not judged for your acts, in any circumstance or setting. The judgment that is brought against you, is always brought against you, by your own choice for ignorance, but never by the Father, and never by one who is totally awake. You suffer from your ignorance as long as you employ it. And when the ignorance is replaced with Knowing or understanding, the suffering ceases. That is where the element of judgment "against you" comes into play.

Ignorance simply blinds you to your experience of Truth. And suffering from the ignorance is the only penalty there is. And therefore, release from ignorance is a matter of becoming defenseless enough to allow Truth to penetrate your current limits and reveal and exalt Truth as the essence of You, and thus clarify your awareness of who you really are. And the suffering disappears with the ignorance. And the apparent judgment against you also is nowhere to be found. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I'd like some help with my relationship with my oldest adopted son, Scott, now forty years old. As I see it, he only takes responsibility for his life for a very short period of time, and then he's broke again and ends up back home.

He has four different trades that he would be very good at, but he doesn't make any financial gains or emotional gains. His thinking is along the lines of, against the establishment, including taxes are unconditional. I would appreciate knowing what my part is in this relationship? Like, what would be my wisest action or solution to have a win-win situation with him?

ANSWER: I would encourage you not to be quite so intellectually intelligent. I mean by that, that I would encourage you to observe nature, and the way a mother bird treats it's young, the way a mother bear treats it's cub, who is at a point of appropriate emancipation. I would encourage you to not be there for him, in terms of relieving him of responsibility for himself. But do be there for him, in terms of reflecting back to him, your confidence in his capacity to be self-responsible. It is important for you to be able to convey to him, that you see him acting self-responsibly. Being self-responsible, even when he is choosing to kick against the status-quo, even when he is choosing to behave in a way that causes him to be in a state of lack, in a state where dependency seems to be called for, he is choosing. And he has repeated this often enough, for it to be obvious, that he has a pattern going, if you will.

Now it is simply absolutely necessary for you to cease to be available to relieve him of his self-responsibility for "a short period of time" while he, "gets back on his feet." You have a co-dependency operating here. And he knows that he does not have to become consciously self-responsible, because Mom will be there, and he will get a respite from having to be self-responsible.

It is not your job to do anything other than, as I said, to convey your confidence in his capacity to be self-responsible. And also to convey to him, to whatever degree you see it, the fact that he is being responsible for his lot, and is choosing it. Because this is what will confront him with his integrity. This is what will strengthen him. But it will be tough for you.

I will tell you, that when a piano tuner tunes a piano, he takes his hammer and tightens the string. And when he finishes tightening the string, he hits the handle of the tuning hammer and sets the pin into the block, so that it can't loosen up easily. You do very well at, shall I say, bringing your son up to pitch, but you have been reluctant to set the pin, to consciously, directly and even bluntly, matter-of-factly set him on his own, conveying, as I said, his competence. Not only his competence, but the demand for him to consistently express and live his competence, and that Mom, is no longer there to let him come back home to roost, and be irresponsible for awhile.

This is part of your task or role, as teacher or parent. And I will tell you, that you have the capacity to do this. And you need to embrace it, as part of your job. And that the doing of it, will constitute your being responsible, and will constitute an act of your integrity. And then do it.

I am going to say, if a time comes when you are not around, and I am stressing the word IF. If there is a time when you are not around any longer, he will suddenly have a realization, that he must do it. He must practice his integrity and self-responsibility. And boy, suddenly he will do it. And I am encouraging you to establish that clarity now, so that the two of you might enjoy a relationship of equality, rather than dependency. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is in regard to a response that you gave in a recent newsletter. A person asked a question about inconsistencies in channeled information. And in your response you used the word, retrace consciously, a forgotten... am I speaking loud enough there?...

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Retrace his particular steps of undoing his conscious experience of Home.

ANSWER: Of undoing, forgetting.

QUESTION: Undoing, forgetting.

ANSWER: Of his conscious experience of Home.

QUESTION: And you used the word "retrace," and that's what I am curious about. Could you elaborate on that please.

ANSWER: You see, you didn't all start out ignorant, and then begin to grow and develop into your enlightenment. And without going into a long detailed explanation, I will simply say, that you all originally were totally awake. In that awakesness, you experienced the forth-dimensional conscious experience of Being, in which no aspect of what you Infinitely are was unavailable to you. And in which your experience of All That Is, was clearly identical to God's experience of being All That Is, and being it as the movement of creation.

Literally, this means, that everyone experienced being, what you might call, a co-author with God. But since there was no sense of separateness from the Father, there was no sense of personal, tiny, private accomplishment involved. It was just that your undistorted conscious experience of being, involved the full conscious experience of every aspect of the movement of creation. It involved standing always at the threshold of, "Behold I make all things new." That conscious experience constituted, and even now constitutes, your natural inherent birthright, and the nature and experience of your Being.

Now, we could say, that this is a four-dimensional continuum. And because it is, it is quite possible to experience this movement of creation from any of the four dimensions, the fourth, third, second, or first. But if one decides to experience it, let us say, from the third-dimensional frame of reference, the movement to that vantage point, always involves the sacrifice of ones capacity to experience the fact, that he or she embraces the totality that All That Is is embraced within what one Divinely Is. And suddenly, one begins to feel everything inside-out. And one is at the center, rather than being the infinite circumference. And the infinity of the movement of creation, seems to be outside ones self, happening to him. And indeed this can be a very interesting experience.

But in the process of moving into this limited experience of Infinity, as I said, one sacrifices the experience of ones Infiniteness. As you are all aware, it causes you to feel tiny. It causes, that which is absolutely at one with you, to seem to be different from you, and happening to you, instead of being the evidence or manifestation of the movement of your essential Being.

And thus, because of this untrue, I will say, perception of Reality, there are conclusions that begin to form. Such as, that there is a need for you to be defensive, because everything is happening to you, instead of being experienced as the happening of what you are.

There are certain processes by which each one of you has become defensive. Means by which you have arrived at a point of securing, to one degree or another, a sense of security and invulnerability by virtue of acquired skill. And as this has happened, it is as though you have blazed a trail, of becoming an ego, of becoming a personality, of becoming a finite person or human being, as opposed to the Divine Individuality that you are.

This process, is a process that must be undone. And waking up, is a matter of undoing the manner in which you established your loss of memory of Home, with a capital "H," the path by which you established your apparent ignorance of the Kingdom of Heaven, or of Reality as it truly is, and you as that infinite conscious experience of being, that embraces the infinite manifestation of the movement of God.

And so, indeed, it is a matter of retracing ones steps. Of recognizing specific decisions or conclusions that you came to, as you moved away from Home, which you used as the basis for even further steps away from Home, so that you may recognize their uselessness, their invalidity and can set them down.

Now, of course, as one does this, it feels like one is growing. It feels as though one is becoming more intelligent. One certainly finds himself happier, healthier, finds his or her relationships smoothing out. It certainly appears to be progressive. And the reason it does, is because you are coming back into your right Mind or your fundamental sanity. But I will tell you, that it isn't that you are moving forward in the sense that you thought. From an ego standpoint forward movement occurred. It is forward movement, in the sense of undoing your insanity, of undoing your ignorance, in exactly the reverse order, by which your ignorance was chosen and established and abided by.

It is important for you to understand, that waking up is an undoing of an ignorant doing, that had occurred in the past. And, that indeed, you are retracing your steps. And, therefore, what is happening, is not building your ego further. It is undoing your ego. It is undoing the limits, that you have treated as actual and truly limiting and binding to you. This is the reason that, as awakening occurs, there is a certain confusion that is felt. The confusion is felt, because there is obviously growth or forward movement that has occurred, and yet, that experience of clarification is not something you can take credit for, in the same way that you could take credit for every step you took further and further away from Home, further and further away from your right Mind, your sanity. You could take credit for that, and the ego felt good about it.

But as the undoing occurs, there is no one to give credit to, for the influx of enlightenment or the unjustified experience of peace or security that is felt. And this is because, this process of awakening, is, indeed, a matter of yielding into a preexisting integrity and worth, and I will say, lovableness and innocence, that you became ignorant of, forgot, as you moved further into the experience of the three-dimensional only frame of reference.

Now, what compounds the confusion of this experience, is that at the same time you don't feel responsible for this increased experience of sanity and well-being, you also know that you aren't separate from it. So here you are, on the one hand, knowing that you are not responsible for it, but you are also inseparable from it, and, therefore, must connect with it in some way. And so this is unsettling. The reason you know you are connected with it is because it is You, with a capital "Y," that you are finding, unfolding to you consciously. But it is a You, that you were never responsible for creating, ever. Because the creation of it, was the act of God.

So this yielding that occurs, this yielding up of ego control, this yielding up of acts of moving further and further away from your conscious experience of who You are, and what Home is, and what Reality is; is met with a sense of your own well-being and integrity, that goes far beyond any sense of success you have felt as a little ego. And yet you can't take credit for it. And yet you are not separate from it, in any way.

This yielding into the preexisting integrity of each of you, that each of you moves into, feels like, yielding into the unknown, even though it is the ever present presence of what you Divinely are. And because of the preexisting, and I'm speaking in terms of the illusion here, because of the preexisting ego sense of the need for self-protection and control, the ego suggests, that what you are yielding into, may be dangerous to your health. And what it is saying is that, you are yielding into something that is dangerous to it's health, that the health of the illusion is threatened, as you yield into the fundamentals of your Being.

And so, indeed, this waking up business, involves a tremendous amount of trust. And I am here to state unequivocally to you, that whatever degree of trust you do embrace and embody will, indeed, move you into greater and greater safety and security and stability, because it is the undoing of the process by which you became, mentally disturbed. It is, therefore, your process of becoming mentally clear. It is, therefore, safe.

Now the part of you that is ego oriented, says, "well can't you give me a map?" "Can't you just show me the way I got where I am, so that I can easily get back?" And, the answer is NO! Because that would allow you to continue to employ acts of self-will. You must let yourself back into the experience of your right Mind, and the undistorted experience of Reality. It is by virtue of the act of faith in your ability to move back Home, that the specific fears, that were utilized to forget Home, will come to your attention, and uncover in perfect order those beliefs, those conclusions, those confidences, that you have arrived at, that are expressive only of ignorance, and which blind you, prohibit you, from experiencing Reality and Yourself Truly.

It is the act of faith, which uncovers the specific fears, that are keeping you from being at Home, and it uncovers them in the precise order that they were established, and thus there undoing will not overwhelm you. This is an important point, because you can listen to the stories of others who have engaged in there process of awakening, and you can say, “well they did this, and they did that, and they realized this, and that belief had to be let go of, and they did it this way, et cetera, therefore, I am going to take a look at those very same issues in myself, and tackle them.” But if those issues were, shall I say, twenty-five issues back from the most recent one you engaged in, you will find yourself becoming unbalanced if you attempt to take care of them without having taken care of the twenty-four intervening steps you took away from your sanity.

And so, I encourage all of you, to dare to trust your own process of undoing. And dare to trust, that in going within and becoming still and letting your desire be, to be in the flow of your Being and to experience it consciously. That in doing that, expressing the trust and the willingness, will uncover your most recent conclusion or confidence that had been formed on the basis of misunderstanding. And each one you deal with, will be one you can cope with. It will appear to you, that there is a wonderful, wonderful order to your process of coming back into your right Mind and your perfect perception of Reality. If, you will dare to lean into your Being.

And so as not to draw this answer out unduly, I will point out to you, that the means of leaning into your Being is to ask, after you have become quiet. “What is the Truth here?” Not what is true according to all the current contemporary beliefs, but “what is the Divine fact here.” “I desire to know it, and I know I cannot arrive at it by virtue of my reasoning.” “Reveal it to me.” “I will listen.” “I will be undefended against it, and I will not require it to fit my preconceptions, before I will let it register with me.” “What is the Truth here?” If you ask that question, and you truly become defenseless and let it in, it will penetrate whatever boundary is confining you. And it will uncover to you the first undoing, that needs to occur. And you will retrace your steps. And you will not look at others and say, “well that’s the way they went, that must be the way I will have to go.” You will make no assumptions about yourself, based upon someone else’s experience.

You see, it is part of the characteristic of the ego personality, that it established its confinement in a very unique way, the ego does not like to be like anyone else. And so each of you from the standpoint of the ego that has been formed, has created your own unique path of becoming ignorant.

So, you know what this means? It means that you cannot return to the Kingdom of Heaven in a group. You cannot return to your right Mind, your undistorted perception of Reality, right here and right now, in a group. What does that mean? That means that you then have the opportunity to experience a great intimacy with yourself, which necessarily will call into play self-love and self-appreciation, and a willingness to not judge. A willingness to become defenseless enough, to yield into, the fundamental Divine one that You are, that has had to be present in order for you to have a distorted perception.

Waking up involves a certain release of attachment and distraction from yourself, by means of attachment to everything outside of yourself. A time of atonement, I did not say, a long time of atonement. It isn't the time, it is the act of willingness to be in touch with yourself, with some degree of Self-appreciation, and capitalize that word Self, don't appreciate the limited ego sense. But there is a Divine Self present, right where this ego sense or personality seems to be, and it embodies all that the Father expressed, in the Father's creation of it.

You see, this undoing is not a trek home to the Kingdom of Heaven, somewhere in the distance. It is rather, an inner process of letting go of ignorance, that allows you to experience Truly. And there isn't any distance to it. It involves a time of being intimate with You. With a confidence, that in being intimate you reduce the sense of separation, not only from God, but from the Christ of you that You are.

What is Home? It is the Kingdom of Heaven. It is Reality. But what is Reality? It is You being the conscious experience of Being, that is absolutely integrated. Integrated in the sense of no little speck of it, being fragmented away. Where you discover the integrity of You, to mean the inseparable oneness, the inseparable wholeness of being conscious of All That Is, without any sense of separateness from it.

I have said before, that all of you are sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, with your eyes all squinched up saying, "I cannot see the perfection." The Kingdom of Heaven is within You. The Kingdom of Heaven is You. You are, at the bottom line, that capital "M" Mind, which is the Infinite Mind that is God, which is incapable of being divided, but which, nevertheless, is Infinitely Self-expressed. And, therefore, there is, right here, a small part of the Infinite expression of the Father, called Man. But Man is not body. Man is Mind.

Within the three-dimensional frame of reference you feel everything reversed. And so you are something inside a body, instead of the consciousness within which is the experience of body and all form.

As I said, there are not enough dreamers to support the ongoing ignorance of the Kingdom of Heaven of who You are. And so, awakening is beginning to spontaneously occur, and you are finding yourself retracing your steps, almost whether you have chosen it or not. And you bemoan your faith, but it is a time of rejoicing.

I will tell you also, that you can anticipate a snowball effect, where there will be apparently a certain pace of realization, if you will, of the clarification that constitutes the undoing. And as you move further along, there will be sudden repetitive, or multiple realizations. And as you get to the point of awakening, it will be a very rapid process of realization, in which all of the sense of illusion drops away very rapidly, because you remember it All. And everything begins to fall in place. You see, as you retrace your steps, there is more and more of you, in your right Mind present, to remember the direction Home.

I will conclude this answer by stating, that it is always the presence of your right Mind, functioning within the limits of your ego frame of reference, that is guiding your tiny sense of you, back into your Whole experience of Yourself. Your desire to wake up, your spiritual progress, has never been promoted by your ego, but always by the presence of your right Mind, right here. You are employing your right Mind, to access your right Mind. And I say this to you so that you might know, that all the tools and everything that is necessary, is already present, and you are already employing it. And, therefore, your success is assured. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: This year 1990, has been the most intense and troubling time of my life. Our three adult children, all developed life threatening illnesses. And then most recently, as you know, what could only be described as the shattering of a primary relationship. My question is, what advice can you give me on healing and rebuilding a relationship?

ANSWER: There is a story, about a young couple, coming out to the west from the east coast, in the horse and buggy days. The days of stagecoaches. And they, indeed, were traveling by stagecoach, going through the Rockies. And the driver of the stagecoach had made the trip many times, and so felt sure enough of the road they were using, to move at a good clip. And inside the stagecoach, of course, it was rough and they could look out the window and see down gaping canyons and it was terrifying. And not only that, it was uncomfortable, because they did not have fancy cushions. And they were sitting there tense and tight. And finally the young husband hollered up to the driver and said, "can't you go slower? This is terrible." And the driver said, "Ah, you gotta sit loose to enjoy the ride."

Now, my reason for telling you this, is to encourage you to, “sit loose to enjoy the ride,” even though your ego is interpreting the ride, as dangerous, as justifiably worth being concerned about, as certainly not the circumstances for peace. But as with the young couple, the more intense they were, the more rigid they sat in there seats, the harder and more unkind the wooden seats were. If they had relaxed, they would not have become as exhausted, and would not have found the seats as unyielding.

There is indeed, in your family a great deal of cleansing and purification occurring, a great deal of radical, almost surgical removal, of impediments, that have been present with all of you, in one way or another. There have been elements present with each of you, for a number of years that were not, shall I say, getting your attention. And, therefore, were not being dealt with. But as I said, this is the time of awakening. I do not mean specifically 1990 as the period in which all of the awakening is going to be occurring. But because of the weakening of the ego, generally speaking, that is occurring, there is a more rapid and spontaneous release of old baggage occurring, cleansing.

In your case, in terms of this primary relationship, there is a releasing of, what can only be called ego shit, that is occurring. Truly what has been an impediment, to not only the fullness of that relationship, but the egoless intimacy, the egoless sharing, that it is the birthright of both of the partners of this relationship, to be experiencing with each other. It is time for the joy of being genuinely You with each other, to be experienced without even any unconscious distractions.

With your youngsters, they are each in there own way, being caused by virtue of there releases, to reexamine and reevaluate what they believe. And also in the, shall I say, unsettledness of their circumstances individually, they are finding themselves recognizing, that they know some very fundamental facts, about their behavior and their attitudes, that they were ignoring. And so, in the face of the circumstances, they find themselves humbled some. And in that humility, being able to honor, what before they had felt they did not have time to honor, because of the demands in their lives.

Now again, as I said, it is necessary for you to “sit loose and enjoy the ride.” It is one of purification and clarification, in preparation for the truly clearer experience of fulfillment.

Now, this does not mean that God brings disease or disruption, for your learning. What the Father enlivens in you, is the joy and the fulfillment, that it is your birthright to be experiencing. And this is very much like, someone turning on the light, where you had been functioning in shadows. And by virtue of the light, it becomes possible to see, garbage, if you will, useless collections of irrelevant junk, which had not been bothersome in the dim light of shadows. And so, when the light shines, it’s as though the light says, “look at what a mess everything is.” When actually, it is the simple presence of the illumination, that allows you to say, “Wow, I don’t need this.” “Wow, I don’t want this here,” and you can remove it.

Unfamiliarity with the nature of light and the way in which it illuminates discernment, so that you can make choices more easily, is very much the equivalent of the young couple riding in unfamiliar territory and feeling that there was a chaotic lack of intelligence and order, on the part of the driver of the stagecoach. It was simply ignorance, that cause them to see it that way, and to be in the state of reaction they were in.

All of you are on safe ground, if you will. The only thing is, that the ground is not conforming to your preexisting mind sets. But I encourage you to trust the ground you are on, and not to be so reactive. And to look for the blessings. To look for the clarification and the greater peace and the greater harmony, that is what is actually unfolding here. It is an unfolding of increased integrity, or an increased awareness of integrity, on the part of everyone of them that you asked about in your question, including you.

All of you must remember, that waking up, coming into your right Mind, really does mean change. We’re not just talking about an intellectual process of enlightenment, in which you are left with a glorious sense of Divinity and peace, but actual changed perceptions. Which means seeing yourself anew, and seeing your mate anew, and your fellowman anew. It truly isn’t a matter of arriving at a place of such unconditional awareness, that your fellowman can be a total ass, and not bother you. It is a matter of experiencing the inner clarification, that causes you to see your fellowman behaving, in a new way, because you are not illiciting ignorant behavior by virtue of your ignorant point of view.

And it also involves, seeing yourself differently, behaving differently, because different elements are governing you. Soul elements are governing you, and not reactive ego elements. You really are going to experience yourself as new. And to the degree that there is any tendency to hold on to what is useless, the change will be experienced with fear or discomfort. But that is not the nature of the change. It is indicative of, and inherent in, whatever resistance you bring to the process, because it isn’t matching up with your preconceptions.

You and your family are making wonderful progress. And just because I have said to “sit loose and enjoy the ride,” does not mean to become careless. It means simply enjoy the movement, experience the movement, without allowing your ego to unreasonably generate fear. Let there be a willingness on your part, to assume that there is a divine movement occurring here, that is healing by nature. And that part of the healing, involves the release of ego dynamics, the release of personality dynamics, that will uncover in you, and each member of your family, a more egoless truer presence of conscious individuality. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are most welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Is it just another aspect of ones ego, to wish to find guide posts, milestones along the path to awakening? In other words, in my case, as things are revealed to me, and as I experience things, I want to find little encouragement's along the way. Is it okay to expect that, or not?

ANSWER: It's okay to expect it. It is appropriate to expect it. But, the secret is to be willing to expect the unexpected. In other words, you will find that the signpost, the way-markers are likely to uncover, shall I say, an ability to be unwillful. But that will feel like, in some instances, lacking a goal, which will be surprising to you, because that doesn't make sense according to your old mindsets.

You might also find yourself feeling ungrounded, and that would be a signpost, which would really be an experience of not being attached to anything, and, therefore, not available to be governed like a puppet by the thing you would, in the past, have thought you ought to be attached to. And so, we're talking here about an experience of freedom, but minus an attachment to something which you had previously used to give you identity. And again, that leaves you in a rather nebulous or ungrounded place. And so, you might not at first, recognize it as a signpost of "progress."

Now, that is the only sense in which it is appropriate for you to expect signposts. When the ego talks about signposts, it is talking about, something that fits it's criterion of progress. And, it will always be a signpost, that it can take credit for having arrived at, or surpassed. And it does this so as to create a sense of being in control. And that is not the way you get back in your right Mind. That is the way every single one of you, or anyone, who is experiencing the three-dimensional only frame of reference, arrived in that ignorant state.

You slip back into your right Mind, inadvertently and spontaneously, when you are not exercising the will. One of the signpost is, a joy that is experienced for no reason at all. A sense of stability and security, that has nothing to do with how much you have in your pocket, or in your bank account, that has nothing to do with whether you own anything or not. You get the picture. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question involves, I guess, creating our own reality. Understand, I'm going to use my eyesight as an example of my question. As I've been near-sighted for many, many, well since ten or eleven years old, and my eyes have even gotten worse. Now, if this is a reflection of my creation, I need to know why am I creating it. And I notice a lot of people, of course, wear glasses, so you can let me have it, as an example. And perhaps it might apply here. Your answers normally apply to more than one person, but in this case be specific, if you wish, and you can be general as much as you wish.

ANSWER: You see, it is never that you create your own reality. Reality Is. Reality is what Is. It is the only thing available to you to experience. There is nothing else but It. Strictly speaking, the only thing you can, by an act of will, create, is a distorted perception, or a limited attentiveness to the only Reality there is. And then all it is, that has been created, is what you might call a mental apparition. Reality isn't affected at all, by the inclination, or decision to only select certain aspects of Reality, and then treat them as though they constituted all of Reality. Everyone creates their illusions, their distorted perceptions of Reality, by virtue of their willfulness. And again, waking up, is a matter of releasing the willfulness, that creates the distorted perception.

Now, as far as glasses are concerned, other than the sense of touch, which gives you a most direct experience of your world, vision is the next most connective experience that the five physical senses can provide you with the world. Poor vision is, generally speaking, the manifestation of the degree to which one feels at odds with or estranged from or separate from, his world or her world. And literally, as one becomes defenseless enough to be sensitive to ones world, and to release the sense of difference, and to stop trying to be better than the world, the more one becomes defenseless and sensitive and congruent with the world, he or she will find his or her vision beginning to clear. The optometrist will say that the lens and the muscles have become more flexible and responsive. Certainly, there will be an identifiable "physical change," but it will reflect the degree to which one is embracing the fact, that what is beheld is the beholder. In other words, that you are seeing your infinite Selfhood, when you open your eyes up and observe the world and the universe. You are observing the infinite manifestation of the movement of conscious Being, that is called the infinite Mind or God.

Everything you see, is the infinitude of your Being, as conscious awareness. It is not something that you exist in, and it is not something that can truly be at odds with you, or that you or your body can be at odds with. As the greater sense of unity with everything you see is embraced consciously, you will find your vision manifesting less and less of the resistance that has to come into play, if you are going to hold yourself apart from and superior to your world.

Mankind, at the present moment, is coming to the tail end of an arrogance, that holds itself to be superior to the world, and thus allows it to be inconsiderate of the world, and to simply use it as though it had no part with him, meaning man. A more universal conscience is evolving here, on your planet. And no, it is not too late. It is occurring in time. And, of course, it would occur in time, because what you are looking at is Reality. What you are looking at is the Movement of Creation. And an ignorant attitude or viewpoint, cannot change Reality. And, therefore, the closer one gets to the inconsiderate disregard of Reality, the closer one will inevitably come to having Reality, slap him in the face, and say, "Wake up and see me for what I am." And so, you could never end up being too late, and destroying your planet.

But, of course, that is not what you asked about. Poor vision, and what we will call, an unhealthy planet, however, stem from one and the same thing, mankind's sense that he is superior, and can act with disregard for his environment, rather than allow for the natural sense of unity that begins to disclose, at the point of inner experience, the fact that it is all one, that there is one infinite universe, that is inseparable from the mind that is experiencing it. And that, indeed, it is the infinitude of your Being, whether it is a rainbow you see, or a distant star, or a snail eating a leaf in your garden, or a simple clod of earth.

As you look at your world, and you think you are seeing it or not seeing it clearly, because you have good or bad eyes. Understand, that there is not that much separation and division into various factors. There is You, as conscious Being, experiencing the infinitude of what it means to be conscious. And it's all You, and none of it is occupying space, all of it is occupying Mind. And all of what you see, and all of what seems to be seeing what you see, are what I will call, constructions of consciousness, whether it looks like muscles, and tissues, and lenses, and trees, and stars, and snails.

And so, it isn't something physical, experiencing something else physical, by means of physical processes, that might or might not be damaged. There is an absolute mental unity with everything, because everything is mental. Everything is Mind. All is Infinite Mind, and it's infinite manifestation, because God is All in All, absolutely indivisible. And that statement, describes specifically the experience of being conscious Being. The experience of identity called You.

Now, I have gone into some explanation, but at the point of feeling, which is important. All you have to begin to do, is to look at your world with a willingness to say, "This is all Me." "This is all the infinite manifestation of what I Divinely am, whether I am perceiving it correctly or not." "And I am willing." "I am willing to yield into being the Divine One that I Am, so that I might experience the oneness of myself with my world." "And I will stop holding my experience of the world, at the mercy of the concept of muscles, and tissues, and space, and weakness or strength, or wellness or illness. So, that the inseparable unity of life, and my conscious experience of it, may occur without any distortion whatsoever.” “And so, that I may take these glasses and throw them in the trash.”

Again, I will bring out, that whether one passes on or not, the time will come when everyone will have to accept the fact, that he has that which eternally identifies his presence, his Divine presence, not his ego presence. And that which eternally identifies his eternal identity, will be called body, even though it will be an experience of body that is exalted, above what you are currently experiencing. And the body of the universe will be exalted, because, you will not be observing it with a sense of differentness, and superiority over it. The universe is not here to conquer. It is here to be embraced, with a sense of your oneness with it.

And so, you can start right here, with the things that are close enough to see without a telescope. And begin to acknowledge if that exists at all, if there is any Divine essence or kernel of Truth to it, it must be some part of the infinitude of what I, as conscious Being am. And, therefore, it cannot truly be at a distance from me, separate from me, which requires muscles, and tissues, and lenses to focus. Because, none of what is going on is material. And, as this more spiritually correct assessment of what is going on, begins to occur in your thought, the physical limitations, that seemed to distract you from experiencing everything perfectly, will disappear, and everyone will say a healing has occurred.

Let's all be about the business of waking up, now, of experiencing the clarification of perception, that constitutes healing, NOW, rather than waiting until sometime after you die to do it. Death will not give you an advantage. And as the saying goes “Now, is the accepted time.” That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning, indeed.

QUESTION: My question concerns an energy that I often experience. It is an unpleasant energy, and the best way I can describe it, is that it's a real wiry energy, and often leaves me with a real internal tension. I most experience it, not always, but most experience it, during meditation. I do have some very pleasant meditations, but this energy often comes up in meditation. And just as everybody else is getting into a very deep state, I start coming up with this wiry energy. It also occurs most often during sleep, and wakes me up. And most of the time it is after I've been asleep from a half hour, to about an hour. And it makes me feel like screaming and stomping my feet. And it's just very unpleasant. And I was wondering if you can tell me what I need to know about what's going on, and what I need to do about it?

ANSWER: It is not something that it will be necessary for you to begin to like, but it is something which will not disappear from your experience for awhile.

As you meditate, you come upon, as it were, a level, a strata, in which this energy is active. Some individuals in their meditation experience this as a strata or level of chatter. They have been able to be relatively quiet, to become more and more still, and then suddenly they will find this irrelevant chattering going on, almost as though they are listening to a party line with eight or ten people talking, and where snatches of intelligent or coherent conversation is being heard. And many individuals, when they arrive at that point, assume that they have slipped back into their everyday thinking level, and that this means, that they are not good at meditation.

I will tell you something: when you are meditating, and you notice this wiry energy, as you put it, just notice it, don't become preoccupied with it. Notice it and do not energize it by reacting, simply continue with the meditation. You will find, as it were, as though you sink into that level of wiry energy. And if you proceed with your meditation, without reacting, you will sink through the bottom of that strata into quietness again. Of course, a deeper level of quietness.

You will come to recognize the wiry energy, as a way-marker, if you will, an indicator that you have arrived at that part of your trip of meditating. And you will come to know, that if you persist with the meditation, you will pass through it. It is like a freeway sign that says, "you are three-quarters of your way to centeredness." And it will begin to appear on the horizon, and get bigger and bigger in your field of vision. The point is not to stop your car, and get out and talk about and think about the bigness of this sign. The point is to notice what it says, "you are three-quarters of the way to centeredness," and continue driving forward, or allowing yourself into your centered place. And the sign will recede behind you, and soon there will be no experience of it.

Now, initially, it may seem as though the wiry energy occupies a significant part of your meditation. Though, once you begin to slip through the bottom side of it, as it were, and have the experience of getting beyond it, so that you see it doesn't actually keep you from moving towards your centeredness, you will resist it less. You will be less guarded, in terms of watching for it, as though it could really inhibit you, and then it will come and go more quickly. And you will begin to recognize it, in the same way that you recognized a certain landmark, on the way to a relatives house, that was some distance. And that landmark, let you know, that it wasn't going to be much longer until you got there.

So, it will become a positive presence, because you will use it to your benefit, rather than interpreting it as something standing in opposition to you, that you need to resist. That strata will eventually become thinner and thinner, and will disappear entirely. But for now, when you come to that strata of wiry energy, you may know that it is saying, in effect, "you are three-quarters of the way to centeredness." And, just treat it as though it is a landmark, telling you that you are almost there. And do not become preoccupied by it. Notice it, and then bring your attention gently back to your meditation. It is the reaction, that energizes and magnifies it.

It is fundamentally, the same thing that is happening when you fall asleep. But I will tell you: that if you will begin to treat it as something similar to the tick of a clock, or the sound of traffic, or of a dog barking, when you are meditating, and you notice it, but do not interpret it, as something that you need to respond to, and you just allow it, and bring your attention back to your meditation, it will begin to stop occurring as you are falling asleep. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I would like to ask a question later today.

ANSWER: Very well.

QUESTION: I have only one question to ask, but it has many parts to it. And it's all about the work to do in my future that I'll find the most satisfaction with, the most growth with, the most awareness...

ANSWER: I am going to interrupt. I would like to deal with this question immediately following the lunch break.

QUESTION: Okay.

QUESTION: It has become very clear to me this morning that in the many past lives that I have been put in touch with, and familiar with, that I have been very willful. And that was...

ANSWER: So-o-o-o what! What's new?

QUESTION: Well, I think, the more willful one has been, the bigger the barrier to get over. And so, it concerns me now in my work. I always ask the Holy Spirit, is this the thing to do or not the thing to do. And I'm guided by that. But I want to be sure that I am not misinterpreting what I seem to get. I really want to do what needs to be done for myself and for the earth.

ANSWER: I will tell you, that what you are talking about can only be answered, can only be uncovered, through the practice of trust. Now, what I mean by this is, that if in the process of listening for guidance, you make a requirement for the guidance to be absolutely correct, if you make a requirement that you hear absolutely correctly, you bring an aggressive act of will. You call it focus, clarity and focus, about what it is you want.

Now, here is what I am going to suggest that you do: When you ask the Holy Spirit for guidance, you are, indeed, expressing a specific and clear desire. But, if you truly want to hear clearly and accurately, you are, after having expressed the desire, going to have to, not care whether the answer is right, or not. Not care, whether you are listening perfectly, or not. The caring will constitute, an uneasiness that will interfere with, your ability to relax into your perfect peace, which is what is essential in order to hear with absolutely correct clarity.

You will not hear clearly, until you can let yourself off the hook, as it were. This might seem irresponsible, but if you think about it, you will realize, that it is only when you are in a state of perfect peace, that you are not bringing a level of care or concern, that constitutes tension or anxiety. And it is in the absence of tension or anxiety, that you have that presence of mind, that will hear clearly and correctly.

And so, literally, if you don't want to make a mistake, and if you want to hear the guidance clearly, you are going to have to dare to be a little bit irresponsible, and make no requirement upon what follows your inner expression of your desire for guidance. This is the way in which you set aside the ego. This is the way in which the personality is released, so that you can become the transparency for truth, and experience it.

QUESTION: I don't really hear, my head goes forward and back for a yes. I have to frame the question so that I can get a yes or no. And the opposite if I'm not to do it. And so when you speak of hearing, I don't know whether that applies to the way I seem to get an answer.

ANSWER: If you were allowing yourself to be uninhibited enough, you would find that, that which is causing the nodding, or the shaking, to come forth as yes or no, as an experiencable word. But in either case, whether you were to hear a word, or whether you were to find your head naturally and spontaneously shaking or nodding, it is an expression of a meaning, that is felt. So, the hearing can more accurately be described as feeling. Feeling the meaning of affirmative or negative, yes or no. You are experiencing a feeling of meaning, and at the moment, the feeling slips through into a body expression, because you are being too guarded, at the level of your mind, and not quite allowing the word to form.

Now, I encourage you to let the word occur in your mind, that expresses the meaning, that your body is spontaneously communicating the meaning that you are feeling. And that will begin to open the door for you to "hear" words, that identify the meaning you are feeling. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj my question is both specific and general. I'd like some guidance, if I may...

ANSWER: ...That is helpful. I'm going to interrupt. Because in one way or another, everyone will be able to understand, how you can ask a specific and a general question. And it will help each one of you to understand, how you can be specific and universal, as conscious identity, as conscious human individuality, because, God is at one and the same time, Infinite as well as specifically expressed. And what God is, is embodied totally, as and in everyone of His Self-expressions, which means, that you as consciousness, are Infinite and yet specifically identified, with visibility and tangibility, that is called body. Now, continue with your question. Your general, but specific question...

QUESTION: The specifics first. I'm curious about the prospects for selling the house, that I currently have on the market. And for my continued success in the area of real estate, that I've been engaged in, in the last few years. And then more generally, I'm curious as to whether there's any relationship, between these issues, and the question of whether or not this is the area in which I should continue to seek to make a living?

ANSWER: The geographic area?

QUESTION: No, the area of business, well, and geographic area, as well.

ANSWER: Indeed, the area of timing of the sale of the house, is likely to be in the latter part of February, of next year. Don't try to manipulate that. That is when fulfillment for you, and fulfillment for the buyer, will be identified. Be willing to flow with the natural orderliness of the unfoldment, just as you would wait for the natural unfoldment of the blooming of a daffodil.

What you are interested in, is fulfillment, that which constitutes, as is put, a win-win situation, both for you and for the buyer of the house. And indeed, you are in the right field, and you are in the right area. And the key element, that you have to bring to this work, that will contribute to your success, is not to be found in the making of a million, but to be found in the connecting, of the right home, with the right people. Being sensitive to the people and being sensitive to your own inner guidance, so that it will be easy for you to be?

There are going to be some significant changes in real estate, and property, over the next five years. Property values are not going to continue to increase. In fact, there will be some dropping back to a more realistic level. Now, you might take this to be an indication, that it is time to get out of the business, but it is not.

Again, that is why I pointed out, that fulfillment for you in this field, is going to come from your ability to sensitively, and with inner knowing, put the right people with the right home. Your financial success will lie in the skill with which you do that. The approach will become one that is more humane and more humanitarian. Property values will begin to support family, whether it is a well established family, or whether it is a young couple who is interested in starting a family, and feeling, not only the need, but the right to have a home.

And also, to reassure you all, the decrease in property values, will not be part and parcel of a financial debacle. Do not look for collapse of the economy. And do not interpret this rebalancing, relative to land and property values, as part of a collapse of the economy. It is going to be part of the healing, of the economy, which will involve it's functioning in support of human values, and respect for the individual, rather than respect for the pocketbook, and the prestige and power, that in the past, have come from having money.

Land, over the next ten years, is likely to become a good investment, in that, you will not lose value. But, it will not be a good investment, in terms of, making you money. And its use then, will cease to be a competition, that ignores human values and leaves everyone out in the cold, literally, homeless. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Over the course of lunch time I had a very good opportunity to reevaluate my complete question, and start from another perspective all together.

This involves my future work, and what work I will be doing for the rest of my life. I am in retirement and I need to have a real good sense of direction, on what to do.

I'm going to start back, where I've always had from the first, that I could remember, something in my mind, that said I had a special task to do in this lifetime, other than growing up, getting education, raising children and doing things like that.

I never knew what it was, but when I was around four years old I had an experience where I was rocking on a horse and my mind opened up and I saw a whole universe in there, and I suddenly realized that I was a universe, that it was me, and I was in such a state of complete shock at that. And I tried to explain that to my father, and he realized he was no longer my god, so he tried to abuse that out of me.

As I went along through my lifetime, I realized that very subtly, overt, covertly people were going to try to educate that completely out of me, one way or another. Especially in school, I took a tremendous amount of abuse and I realized, you might say, my first seventeen years of life were similar to a Nazi concentration camp. If I hadn't of had such abuse, I might never have realized the great privilege, the great gift that we all have. But I never could identify it, until I got into my forties.

I got into metaphysics, and it was love at first sight. And I started into everything that I could possibly find, do, study and everything. I started doing all kinds of group work, facilitating groups, leading groups, cheering groups, setting up groups. I've done that for twenty years now. And when I thought that was finished, I said, "here am I Lord, send me, use me," I thought my group work was finished. Well, somebody showed up and ask if I could be their teacher, and I said I have no such experience, but she was so persistent, that I taught. For five years I taught metaphysics.

When that was over, I thought, well I learned a lot from that, I guess that's over, then I figured that was the end of my metaphysical career. And I said, “well here am I Lord, send me, use me.” So the next thing I know people started showing up actually asking for counseling. I mean the real heavy stuff.

So I do have a degree in writing, and I have a very special feeling for writing children’s stories for the wonderful psychic life that children have between the ages of one and eight, that is so soon forgotten about, and that is so cultured out of us, so conditioned out of us, indoctrinated out of us. This is what I was trying to hold on to, which I almost lost my life over, many a times, trying to hold on to this. And I’m writing stories about it, but it’s not in the mainstream? And I don’t know if anything will ever be accepted as a future in writing such a thing. I don’t see any such literature on the market.

I once asked in a dream, what kind of literature I wrote, so I would have some kind of indication where to publish it. And I dreamt about pink and blue giraffes. Well, that means write stories for children, and of a different sort of animal, is all I got from that. I don’t know if I should go in that direction writing the stories.

I have a tremendous, wonderful sense of peace and comfort when I sit down to write stories about children, and about this eight year space in the psychic life of the children...

ANSWER: ...I’m going to interrupt you here. First of all, I heartily encourage you to write, and to get these ideas down on paper. I will tell you, that as you have already found out, there is not a broad market for it. The parents today are not quite as, I am going to say, spiritually literate as the children are, and the parents are the ones who buy the books. And, it is going to be another four or five years, before this sort of book will find a ready market, if you will. But, nevertheless, it is well for you to write, and to have it ready, when the market is there.

Now, you are asking about a career. You are wanting to have something nailed down, hard and fast, that you can thereby apply yourself to. But, I will tell you something, and this applies to everyone in this room, it indeed, applies to everyone on the face of the planet, this is a time of learning to flow. It is the time of beginning to let go of, shall I say, futures that are nailed down. It is the time for learning how to be humble enough, sensitive enough, to yield to, what I will call, the flow of Being.

Now, specifically in response to your question. With all of this book learning, with all of this study, with all of this, shall I say, acquired understanding, you have indeed, arrived at a point of enough intellectual clarity, to dare to learn to become still. To dare to learn to be quiet with yourself, within yourself.

There is a gift, indeed, that you have to give. But you know what? It’s not a book, and it’s not a teaching, it is a gift of the genuine You. It is the gift of who you find that you are, when you let go of all attempts to be in control or in charge.

All attempts to present a face to the world, a picture to the world, where you are through with that folderol. And I am not picking on you, because this applies to everyone.

The gift you are here to give, is the sharing of the uniqueness of the creation of God, that is embodied right there where you are, for everyone's pleasure. But before this gift of who you are can be given, so that everyone can enjoy it, it requires a process of, what I am going to call grounding. And when I say grounding, I mean, what I was referring to earlier, allowing yourself to be so in harmony with the earth and your world, so open to your experience of your oneness with it, rather than any superiority over it, that you are able to just simply be present, and allow who you are to be expressed, without concern about what others think. Willing to just let the chips fall where they may.

I do not mean this in a challenging way, to your world or to your friends. But, it is a point of such humbleness within yourself, such a lack of arrogance, that you are unafraid. And, in being unafraid, you are able to feel your kindness and your love and your realness. And you are able to just be, and let that Beingness, be shared with others, without any attempt to change them, without any attempt to make a mark upon the world. And, it is in this humble unpretentious sharing of yourself, that, indeed, you do become a meaningful presence on your globe. But, it is an uncovering of a meaning that has always been present, but, which in your busyness and in your attempts to hold on to what you have valued, you have, and everyone else has, lost contact with.

You are at a point now of sufficient understanding, to let go of the understanding, and yield into your integrity. Yield into the meaning of the presence of You. It isn't exciting, but it is fulfilling beyond your wildest imaginations. Because there is such a relief at your being able to be with utter originality because you are not buried under other peoples expectations. And you are not buried under your past experiences. You are not buried under what you have been taught. You're able to come out from the utter simplicity and beauty of who You are.

So, I encourage you not to think so much in terms of specific, nailed down goals, and rather apply yourself, if you will, to the task of gentling, quieting, humbling, letting go of conditioned responses, conditioned thinking of your own and others, so that you might feel your utter safety and your utter security, and then in that feeling of safety, security and peace, just be, just be, just be present. Then, you won't have to wait any longer to achieve a goal off in the future, because the fulfillment of the giving of the gift of You, will be being now. And the fulfillment of that, will be experienced now. And, if your behavior and your activities fluctuate or flow and change over the next ten or fifteen years, you will not make a big thing of it. You will just flow with it, and be utterly appropriate at all times. That is where your freedom and your joy comes. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTIONER: Thank you Raj. That gives me considerable insight into being a person, and what a person is, and how to express being a person, and being present, as a person. Being there, is the way I would put it.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTIONER: So I don't need to worry about taking a course for counseling. Just be there for whoever, whomever comes.

ANSWER: Be there for you, first. And then, for those who are in your experience.

QUESTIONER: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome.

QUESTION: This is not a personal question. I would like to know something about the Persian Gulf situation. Whether there will be a war or a peaceful settlement. And how long will this take to be settled? And when will the hostages be released?

ANSWER: As I have indicated on prior occasions, you are watching or observing, an awkward outbreak of intelligence. You truly are not observing the first stages of war. And ultimately, you are not observing anything about oil. You are observing, literally, various Arab tribes, engaging in processes of unification, awkwardly. Even as of this time, there is no likelihood of war, or of armed conflict. We do, indeed, have some ego dynamics going on, but you must understand that that is all reaction, and does not constitute the governing dynamic. The governing dynamic is a process of unification, that is unfolding. The participants who are in the process of unification, are engaging in it with resistance. But the likelihood is, that the unification will come without bloodshed.

Because there is such active ego resistance occurring, I cannot, at this moment, predict when the hostages will be released, or when all manifestations of stress will have subsided. But it is not likely to last beyond another ninety days. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel like I'm doing what I need to do, generally what I seek is spiritual growth. What I'd like to know is, are there any specific areas where I'm balking or where I'm missing the point?

ANSWER: There are no significant areas of error. But there is a specific area, that it would be well for you to give attention to. And that applies to, having fun, and not interpret the having of fun, as inconsistent with your spiritual awakening. As though, you really should be about the business, meaning the work, of waking up.

It is very, very, very important for all of you, o-o-oh, I sound serious. I enthusiastically encourage all of you, to approach your awakening process with enthusiasm, and with an expectation, that joy is the appropriate accompaniment of exploring your greater capacity to be aware Divinely.

And I encourage you to dare to play, not just relative to waking up, but relative to, if nothing else, being happy and feeling good. Because, it is in the context of delight with life, it is in the context of, fun and pleasure and happiness, that it is easier to be defenseless.

Now, I am aware that I am repeating myself a lot today, not just relative to things having been said earlier in the day, but also things that have been said in earlier workshops. But, nevertheless, it is important to know, that you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. And those of you with a metaphysical background, find this the most difficult thing to grasp. But the fact is, that you will feel your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, and the feelings that will grease the way, as it were, for slipping into the Kingdom of Heaven unthinkingly, are joy and love and gratitude.

And so, many of you work so hard with your, books, and your thesauruses, and your concordances, and your dictionaries. They have their place, absolutely they have their place. But understand, that what they are there for, is so that you can become so intellectually clear about the Allness of God, that you can dare to abandon yourself into that Allness. It isn't the thinking that will get you into the Kingdom of Heaven. It's the experience of your utter safety, in the presence of the Allness of God. Which you will not feel, when you are in control. You will not feel it, until you are willing to abandon yourself, into the underlying, everlasting arms of the Father. You will not have the opportunity to discover your safety, until you let go of your conditioned defenses. You cannot dare to underestimate the value of, joy, and fun, and laughter, and play. It is disarming.

Play is one of the most wonderful spiritual practices, any of you could engage in. Because, it is disarming, it allows your innocence, your ever present innocence, to bubble forth. Now, that is a far cry from, what has been called the practitioners pinch, where you concentrate and think clearly, so as to create a manifestation of your innocence. We don't want manifestations of innocence. We want the experience itself, of innocence, where there is no longer, even any inner threat of guilt, that could get one iota of your attention, and distract you from your innocence.

I sincerely encourage you, to engage in play and having fun, and embrace it as a spiritual practice, not as a distraction from your awakening. Yes, I know that you do engage in activities, adult activities of play, let us say. But you don't do it with carefree abandon, and you don't do it with a sense of its place in your process of awakening. And it is that element of abandonment to fun, not calculated play, not competitive play, but literal abandonment to fun, that I encourage you to embrace and explore. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm going to wait with my question until tomorrow.

ANSWER: Certainly.

QUESTION: I will also.

ANSWER: If everybody keeps passing the microphone, it is likely to come back to you today.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I want to have more joy in my work at the hospital. And I'm wondering what is moving here, as far as getting full time work, so that I can move out on my own.

ANSWER: Part of the reason, that you are not experiencing joy at the moment, relative to your work, is because it is all new to you, and you are not feeling as though your place is secure. And in that sense of vulnerability, you don't allow yourself to let go and just be happy. That kind of carefree abandonment, seems unreasonable and irresponsible under the circumstances.

But I will tell you something: there is never a justifiable reason for sacrificing your joy. It is within you. It is not dependent upon circumstances. It is there to feel, at any time you choose to feel it. And if you will allow yourself to feel it and let it come out and positively color your activities at your work, you will find your work situation improving, including the establishment of a full time position.

Now, at this point, it is necessary for you to simply hang in there, persist in other words. But don't grin and bare it. Let the grin that comes on your face, be a result of an inner joy, because you have dared to feel it.

And I will tell you something else: be aware that the work that you do is a service. And let that service be an expression of love. In other words, identify it as an expression of love. And in that way, you will feel a connectedness to, not only your work, but those who are benefiting from your service. And that is going to give you, more of a feeling of being meaningful. And that is going to support your, happiness and your joy.

To know what is needed, like full time work, and to know, that it is appropriate for you to have a place of your own to live, those knowings, should not be used as a means of brow beating yourself, because they aren't happening as fast as you think they ought to. Those are awareness', of what is appropriate. And what is appropriate, is what is unfolding itself. And so, your knowing about it, simply means, that you cannot successfully be distracted by other irrelevant things.

And you can quietly and joyfully observe, as what is appropriate unfolds itself, identifies itself. And to the degree that you let there be joy, to the degree that you let yourself feel connected to the bubbly of you, it will smooth out the way, and facilitate the fulfillment. You are right where you need to be, and everything is unfolding properly. There is just a need for trust. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Is the work going to come at this particular hospital, or am I going to need to look at other work? I mean is someone going to be leaving that, I can fill there spot?

ANSWER: At the present time the likelihood is that it will unfold where you are. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon indeed.

QUESTION: My question is a follow on of conversations we've been having. I keep coming back all of the time to the area of the activities that I am engaged in, which seem to be very important to me and essential, and I do not want to fall in love with a model. And so I'd like some clarity on what is true about this particular process.

ANSWER: This particular?

QUESTION: Process.

PAUL: And this is me Paul. Which particular process?

QUESTION: I'm going to tell you. And then I have a follow up question around that. And it is this idea, that for a shift in consciousness to be experienced or facilitated, that what is necessary is a conscious meeting, at the edge of the awareness of the experience, experiencing the experience, and the experience itself. All of it embraced in one simultaneously, experienced event.

And I think, that the way we are working with images, in the activities that I am presently engaged in, is accomplishing that. And I'd like to know if that's true? And I'd like to know if it really is as essential as I seem to think that it is? And if so, where do I go now? I've been told to do all these things I've been hearing, play, and enjoy it, and let it unfold. I must say, life's getting a lot better, but I'm beginning to think, that maybe it's time, that I had a little more direction.

ANSWER: But thinking may get you into trouble. Allow yourself to think that, but don't assume, that because it has been thought it is correct. Let there then be, a curiosity to see if, indeed, that is what unfolds.

Now, you spoke of a process. You spoke of a meeting at the edge. And whether this meeting at the edge of, let us say, conscious experience, whether that meeting is between you, as you perceive yourself to be, and your capital "S" Self, or whether it is a meeting between you and someone with whom you are working as a facilitator, it is a place in which a connection occurs, a union, in which an experience of safety is felt. Because, in the experience of union is always the unmistakable experience of being loved.

Now, I mentioned earlier, that one does not have to go looking for, the specific twists and turns, that were taken as one moved away from Home, and became less capital "S" Self-aware. When you're meeting with your capital "S" Self, or when you're meeting with a client, make the connection, so that the union is felt, and the safety and security is experienced, together with the experience of being loved. In that sanctuary of the moment, that is the only way I can put it and come close to the meaning, in that sanctuary of the moment, in that Holy instant, in that instant of Wholeness, whatever the next undoing is that needs to occur to allow a return to your natural sanity, whatever that next undoing is, will present itself as realization.

You see, all of you are like stretched rubber bands. Your ego has hold of one end of you, and the Kingdom of Heaven or Home or your True identity, is the immovable anchor. And so, whenever any of you allows yourself into an experience of invulnerability, and I mean by that, an experience of utter safety, where you are not energizing the ego through the use of fear, the ego is weakened. And what is the inevitable thing that will happen, to a stretched rubber band, if what is holding one end of it becomes weaker? It will contract! And you will find yourself spontaneously, experiencing the clearer sense of yourself, that is a direct result of less tension, less conflict within yourself. That is why you can always trust into this process, because, there is no other choice but to become more and more integrated, more and more at peace.

Now the answer to the latter, series of questions. The answers are all yes. You are on the right track. The only thing is, that at this point, it is not appropriate for you to say, "well I have been willing, I have been beautifully willing, but now it seems like we need to get back down to business." There is a need to continue to be willing. Anything other than willingness is willfulness, which energizes and re-establishes whatever ego you have managed to weaken and release.

Trust, is not something you will do for awhile, and then get relief from. Trust will become the new norm. Because, I will tell you all something, when you arrive at the point where you are experiencing your greater capacity to be aware Divinely, you will find that you will be riding the crest of the wave of creation. That means that you will always be at the point of experiencing what has never been before. And in order to do that without feeling overwhelmed, you must come into a new meaning of normalcy, which involves utter trust.

Trust is different from confidence. Confidence is something you have in something that has proven itself. Something that you know from past experience is dependable, that's confidence. Trust, is that investment of willingness to move into and experience that you have never experienced before. Trust is what allows you to be. Trust is what allows you to be defenseless, in the face of the unknown. And it is what allows you to move over the threshold of memory, into the freshness of being, as conscious being, as the actuality of the meaning of the word, individuality, and experiencing your birthright. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: You partially answered, just now, some of the question I had. And you mentioned this feeling of being loved. And I first experienced this after listening to your video, and I had an overwhelming feeling of this and it stayed with me for some time. And then I thought I'd lost it. And then, this spring, again I had it and it stayed with me for some time. But what I'm really asking about is how I can stay in this place more, or is my trying to recapture it in my way, in experiencing this more of the time?

ANSWER: The times when you experienced it, it happened unexpectedly. The statement is made in the Bible, "the bridegroom cometh when ye think not." And everyone reads that and says, "the Christ cometh when you are not expecting it." But the choice of words is perfect. Because when one sets aside thinking and reasoning, in order to bring about their good, that is when the Christ of them can come forth. Because that is when the humility is present. That is when the absence of willfulness and arrogance is present. That is when personality does not stand in the way of who you are as conscious individuality, which is the presence's of the Divine You, the Christ.

And so no, you cannot recreate the experience. You must, if you will, re-allow the experience, by not trying to have it. It is also important for you to understand, that having had the experience, on two different occasions, you are even less defended against it, than you were before the first time it happened. You are less defended against it, because it is not just some metaphysical or religious idea, that you have heard about. It is something that you have experienced. And so there cannot be the doubt about the truth of it, that there was when it was only an idea that you had heard about.

And so, your ego defenses against having the experience again, are severely cracked, not just weakened but cracked. And so, the likelihood of your having the experience again, is extremely high. And each time you experience it again, it increases the likelihood of a repeat. So, I encourage you to let the nature of the way things work, bring forth the experience, and you simply appreciate and value the experiences that you have had. The movement is already occurring. You do not have to start it up, and you do not have to restart it. But you must be willing to let go of the attempt to try to control it back into your experience, because that will effectively distance it from you.

The ego is not going to be able to plaster up the crack, that your experience of the presence of Divine Love, has caused. Because you would have to become totally ignorant again, in order for that to happen. And there is no way, you are going to forget those experiences.

Now, there are others who would give their right arm, to have the experience once. You have had the experience twice, and I have already shared with you, that that increases the likelihood of your having more experiences. And so, rather than fussing because you haven't had another one, be so grateful for what you have had. And that gratitude, which is an integral part of joy, will be part of the lightness, that should accompany your spiritual growth, as I have said. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I am very grateful for the experiences, and thank you very much.

ANSWER: I know that you are, and you are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj. It's nice to meet you for the first time.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I've had several types of employment. And I finished my last contract job in September. And I'd like to go back to work. And I was wondering, when that might be, and maybe, what kind of job?

ANSWER: Understand first of all, that any answers given about the future, are all based upon, all of the factors at the present moment, and what the greatest likelihood is, because, I cannot second guess the Father.

Now, the greatest likelihood is, that you will find yourself being specifically employed, around the third week of January of 1991. Just a moment...

PAUL: This is me Paul. The picture that's being given is, that you will be self-employed. There's a sense of like, freelance work. This is still me Paul. But you will not have to drum up the work. It's almost like it will be dropped in your lap. And it's like between now and then, enjoy yourself. That doesn't mean that when you get the work you can stop enjoying yourself. But it means there's no reason to fuss and fret in the meantime. And that's the end of what is being given.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Hello.

QUESTION: First of all I want to thank you for all your help, in the last year.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: And to express my love for you, formally.

ANSWER: It is received.

QUESTION: Thank you. I've been attempting to ride on that wooden seat, of that pioneer wagon, that you spoke of earlier. My question is, how can I help my family, my children, in this same situation, in finding their peace. And walking through their threshold to their awakening?

ANSWER: I will tell you: You must present it to them, much like you would put out the dishes for a pot luck dinner. You cannot afford to do it as though you are preparing dinner, and your family is sitting down, and they had better eat what you prepare. It is appropriate for you to make available, what you believe and what you find of value, and what you feel might be of value for them. But, you must simply put it out on the table for them, to choose or not choose, at that particular time.

As a parent, you have, shall I say, the unenviable job of entrusting your children to their Divinity, to their own Christhood, the stranger within their gates. Just as you have had to entrust yourself, to the stranger within your gates, until you have been ready to ask and listen. It didn't matter how many people talked for how long, because, if there is not a desire on your part to know, you will not be listening, and, when something is said, it will not be heard. And if the one saying it, felt an obligation to make you have a realization, they would find themselves very frustrated.

Now, you know that is true, relative to you. It is also true, relative to your children. So, you can share the news, share the values that you have. You can even be ready to amplify upon them, if interest is shown. But, if interest is not shown, you may know that what you have shared, is there for them to pick up on, when they are ready.

Now, the part I said about, entrusting them to their Divinity, is very important. Because, either you can look at them and you say, "they are certainly not handling things well." "They are making a mess of their lives." "They just don't seem to learn." And you can go down the list, making judgments and evaluations, and in effect you are agreeing with their behavior and reinforcing it, even if you never say it out loud to them. And in that way you are strengthening their limitations. You are strengthening their, I'm going to say, humanhood.

But when you look at them, and you see that, indeed, they do not seem to be handling things well, that they have been flubbing up for quiet a length of time, you can immediately correct that thought, by acknowledging, "this is the child of God." "This one is, as I am, conscious individuality, the direct expression of the Father." "And confusion, awkwardness, are not native to him or to her." "I know, that they have a Divinity in them, that is absolute, whether they are acknowledging it or not, at the moment." This acknowledgment of the truth about them, causes you to move beyond the point of joining with them, at the level of their behavior, and strengthening it. And constitutes a joining with them, at the level of what they Divinely are, and strengthening it. It cannot force them to change their viewpoint, or embrace their Divinity. But it can provide the environment, in which such a vote of confidence in themselves, Divinely speaking, can occur. And that is the extent of what you can do.

You can approach them on every occasion, that you have contact with them, with their Divinity in mind. And when they are not expressing it, you can refuse to accept that, as indicative of what they really are. And you can express verbally, your confidence in their capacity to express intelligence and love and wisdom and truth and principle.

You cannot force another to wake up. I can not inflict your good upon you. But, I can unceasingly disclose to you, what is true about you, until such time as you are, ready to hear it. Ready to let it register, deeply within you. That is all I can do.

But I will tell you something, there is nothing better I could be doing. And likewise there is nothing better you could be doing, than to express confidence in the Divine qualities, that must be present in each of your children, in order for them even to have a distorted picture of themselves. There must be something real going on, about which a distorted perception is being experienced. You cannot have a distorted experience of nothing.

So, when you find yourself thinking about your children, or relating to them directly, embrace them in the acknowledgment of what they Divinely are. That is what you can do. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Thank you for being with us.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I would like some help in looking at what's going on with me, with regard to experiencing occasionally discomfort, sometimes pain in the area of my knees, ankles, more frequently my hips, usually after I've been walking or on my feet for a considerable period of time, which sometimes is necessary in the work that I do.

And also in regard to being, it seems a little overly sensitive to light, sound, suddenly to be awakened, I experience almost like a shock in my system, there's almost a quivering that occurs inside. It's uncomfortable at times and I think perhaps these are areas that I need to look at, in a different way, and perhaps can use some insight from you about.

ANSWER: First of all, regarding the sensitivity. You are, indeed, more sensitive than the average individual. It is not a dysfunction. It is just a variation, if you will. And what will significantly help you in that respect is, meditation. It will not cause you to be less sensitive. It will simply reduce the degree of reaction, so that you are able to function with more balance. You do not need to become desensitized. You simply need to become less reactive. This is not something you need to understand your way through. The simple practice of meditation, on a regular basis, will do the trick. Just a moment.

PAUL: Okay, this is me Paul. In response to the ankles, knees and hips, the picture that He's giving is that, there is a need for exercise like swimming. That kind of exercise tends to be more balanced on both sides of the body. It also tends to relax. Where as the walking and the things that you do on your feet, don't tend to relax, but contribute to being more tense. And so it's like what you need is more exercise, but exercise that is like swimming, where both sides of your body are getting equal activity and where it's not done under pressure.

Just a moment. He says it is not arthritis or bone degeneration. And this is me Paul, the feel is that you can dare to relax about it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: What is the meaning of, and what is my next step regarding my youngest sons recent test results. Should I agree to further testing? And based on that result, what would be the most appropriate school environment for him? And how could I provide that, under the current circumstances of resistance from his father?

ANSWER: And what was the nature of the test results?

QUESTION: He did very poorly, on a Stanford achievement test, regarding education. And the further testing is to determine learning disabilities.

ANSWER: It is completely appropriate to allow for the additional testing, so that, very specific help may be given. It is not so much a matter of a learning disability, with him as it is, what I will call, a unique approach to receiving and dealing with information. There is already existing, a well established means for presenting the information, in a way he can grasp quickly, and easily, and thus not feel any sense of dysfunction.

PAUL: This is me Paul. The picture that He's giving along with that, is that there are some people, like if someone gives me directions over the phone, I have no trouble visualizing it and being able to do it. There are other people, that need to have it on paper. If they see it, it registers with them more than the most accurate words. That's not a handicap, but it's just a different, that's the sense of it, it's a different way of it registering.

And let the testing be done so that they can quickly arrive at knowing what is needed, and then he will not feel, somehow not equal to his peers. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: My question surrounds the issue of contracts that we make prior to incarnating. If we do make such contracts, I'd like you to address, what contract I've made.

ANSWER: It is never a matter of a contract or a binding commitment. It is more in the sense of selecting your courses, as you do in college. Which you may or may not complete. And which you have the opportunity, to take over again. But at the beginning of the semester you express your intent, in terms of the materials that you wish to cover during that semester. So, it is not so much a matter of contract, as it is a specific intent.

Just a moment. The specific intent which you hope to fulfill, and which was set into place prior to your birth, for this lifetime, was to experience your strength and your integrity, as a female, without sacrificing your femininity.

You have had a number of lifetimes, in which you were an acquiescing, subservient female. Early on in those experiences, you derived a great deal of satisfaction and a great sense of fulfillment from being an almost invisible presence. You grew out of that significantly.

In fact in your last lifetime, although it certainly was prior to, what is now called women's liberation, you, indeed, began to act assertively, on your behalf. But because of the great resistance, and unacceptability, the great resistance to and the unacceptability of your being an assertive, equal presence, you became overbearing, developing the masculine strength, that it took to do a halfway decent job of standing your ground. And you decided with counsel, to once again express these strengths, but this time without losing your sweetness, your gentleness, your capacity to be sensitive and loving, et cetera.

You are managing to keep a fairly good balance, although there have been some significant challenges, in the last two years. But you will find things leveling out and as you grow, I'm going to say in terms of years or experience in this incarnation, you will find a solid strength, establishing itself. A strength, that involves the sensitivity of the feminine aspect, and the principle and the strength, of the masculine aspect, without becoming compulsively one or the other. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I'd appreciate your comments concerning, what feels like an interrelationship, between breathing and drawing in, or yielding to the Divine presence. Specifically openings through my head. And also, if this process has anything to do with my perfect expression in the world, as it unfolds?

PAUL: This is me Paul. When you say this process, you mean this process of breathing?

QUESTION: The interrelated process of breathing, and drawing in, what feels like a soft, Divine presence.

ANSWER: Indeed, there is an interrelationship. There is a connection. Breathing, when it is being paid attention to, is a gentling and intimate experience of Self. Specific and special qualities have been assigned to breathing, in terms of mankind's conception of it. But at the bottom line, it is the simple giving of attention to ones self in the process of breathing, that establishes the intimacy. And that establishment of intimacy or joining, is what's specifically allows for centeredness, for a greater experience of congruence and peace. And as I said earlier, as the ego dynamics are weakened the rubber band, naturally contracts, back to it's normal state of untense, rubber bandedness.

As one, through breathing, arrives at a state of peace, this contraction or coming back to a nontense state of being, is not only going to uncover what next needs to be undone, in terms of your retracing your steps back to your experience of Home, it is also going to uncover, the clearer experience of who you are.

And so, you will experience revelation. You will experience opening. You will experience yourself, changing. You will feel the energy in your body, moving differently. Where you were never aware of energy before, to speak of, you will now become aware of it. And you will discover, that there have been blocks, in the movement of the energy. All of this because opening is occurring.

As I said earlier, illumination uncovers the clutter, that couldn't be seen. And the whole reason for it, is so that what is cluttering up, maybe released. Not so that you can see what a mess you are.

Now, I encourage you to continue with the breathing. Practice. I encourage you to know, that there is a connection. And more than anything, I encourage you simply to be as unconditionally and humbly attentive to, whatever openings occur. And don't jump to any conclusions about them. Be like a new born child, full of an experience of a world, that it is not familiar with, which, therefore, means it stands on the threshold of vast discovery. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are very welcome.

QUESTION: Hi. I want to express my gratitude for Raj and his work, and for Paul and Susan for their work, as well.

And my question has been addressed by Raj before, but I need additional help to quiet my ego, on this one. It's about, cause and effect. "The Course In Miracles" is obvious about cause and effect, and it makes me crazy, in terms of body stuff.

ANSWER: For those in the room who are not familiar with what "The Course In Miracles" states, would you give a brief explanation?

QUESTION: Oh, Lord.

ANSWER: Don't worry.

QUESTION: Well, as I get it, “The Course” says, that the only cause is the mind. So, that an allergy reaction, has nothing to do with the food or the drug, but has only to do with the mind.

Now, my confusion, is that, in the first chapter or so of Paul’s book, Raj tells him, that it would be best if he quit smoking and drinking caffeine. And so, my ego liked that contradiction, or what seemed to be, at any rate. And I’m struggling with this a lot, getting a lot out of the struggle. But I’d rather not suffer anymore with the confusion of this. So clarification, on cause and effect, is what I’m after.

ANSWER: If, before you had sat down in your chair, someone had placed a thumbtack on it, and you had come back from break and sat down on it, it would be rather difficult to convince you, that it was all going on in your mind. And, that it was simply a shift of perception in your mind, rather than your standing up and pulling the thumbtack out, that would correct the problem.

Now, when you arrive at a point where you are experiencing the body of light, that is the true experience of this body, that you are presently experiencing, that would be in pain, if you sat on a tack. Until you are experiencing that body of light, which would also disclose to you the body of light of the tack that you are sitting on, it will hurt to sit on a tack. When you are experiencing all form as light forms, if you will, manifesting the true intent of that which formed it, meaning the Father, you will, indeed, be able to sit on the tack, and only experience exquisite beauty of the intent of your body and the intent of the tack, which have nothing to do with harm.

Likewise, until you are mentally clear, able to be absolutely unconflicted and unfearful in your mind, when a match is held under your finger tip, do not hold your finger over a match. Until you are able to take a drug without suffering ill effects from it because you are absolutely unconflicted in your mind, do not take the drug.

But I will tell you, that when the time comes, that you have been able to discover perfect equilibrium mentally, which is what you do when you go into meditation. You will, indeed, find yourself able to sit on a tack, or smoke a cigarette, or put your hand over a flame, with no sensation of suffering, whatsoever. And so it’s always an issue of the mind. But, until that issue is corrected at the point of mind, it is well to steer clear of those circumstances, physically speaking.

Physical distress, is always the manifestation of mental conflict, of confusion. And if you do not know who you are, truly, if you are not experiencing your Christhood, and if you are not experiencing the universe and your world as one, inseparable from you, then you must use common sense, while you undo the false mental conditionings, that will ultimately allow you to be in any circumstance without physical damage or suffering.

So you, if I may put it this way, break the rules, slowly. And you only break the rules, that you can break, without generating fear. Your guide helps you, to step out into new territory, in such a way, that your level of fear is reduced, and you do not panic, and you then have the opportunity to find that the step you have taken has been on to solid firm ground, rather than the void that you thought it was. So you use your common sense, as you gently and wisely move beyond the limits, of your common sense. And in this way you establish an extended or enlarged, common sense. And what is reasonable and what works, becomes less and less confining. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I've been attempting to formulate my question and I hope that it's going to be clear. Several years ago...

ANSWER: We are going to give you ten more minutes to formulate it. It is necessary to take a break.

QUESTION: Oh, I can use it thank you.

ANSWER: Good morning.

ALL: Good morning.

ANSWER: Before we continue with the pending question, I would like to take a few moments to discuss the process or means of getting in touch with ones guide. But first of all, let's understand the context in which this connection and communication occurs.

It has been stated that, "it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." Now, what does that mean? That means, that in the movement of creation, in the movement of Self-expression, as the Father expresses Himself, He withholds nothing of what He is from that Self-expression. Therefore, the Self-expression is nothing less than the full manifestation of God, the full manifestation of Mind, Divine Mind, which can also be called the Christ consciousness. Therefore, every single one of you is in fact, the presence of that Christ consciousness.

If however, for whatever reason, you have forgotten who you are, and are not experiencing yourself as this Christ consciousness, this Divine Mind, that is the full presence of the Father, then the full presence of the Father, seems to be something outside of you. But because, it is not actually separate and different from you, it's omnipotence, it's omnipresence is experienced as your being loved by the Father, as your being embraced by the Father. The Father, which is really You in your Wholeness, appears to embrace and extend His love to you. And the omnipotence of the Father, the omnipotence of your Christhood, is constantly asserting Itself and undermining whatever the limits are of your current perception.

As a result, when and if you arrive at a point where you have lost confidence in your own ability to think your way through things, or your own ability to be competently in charge, and in that sense of humiliation, which really ends up being humility, you reach out to the Father. In effect you have become defenseless, because there isn't much arrogance present. And you feel the entry of the fullness of the Father, the fullness of God's love. And it fills you. And if you have truly been defenseless, your situation turns around. And that is why the statement has been made, that "man's extremity is God's opportunity."

Now, it is not that the Father has suddenly decided to grace you with His love, it is that, in your humiliation, in your suffering sense of not feeling personally competent, and not having much confidence in your personal ego ability, you have become weak in your confident self-assertion. And your resistance to the experience of who you Divinely are, is minimal, and then what you call breakthrough occurs. The Christ of you, that which constitutes your true individuality, has the opportunity to register with you. And because, it is constituted of your reconnection with your greater capacity to be aware Divinely, and it constitutes a clearer experience of your integrity, you feel it to be profound and meaningful. And you tend to say, that God has touched you. As though it is still something, somehow different from you. But it isn't just because it is God, that you feel the meaningfulness of it, it is because the presence of God is what constitutes your actual identity. It is what constitutes your individuality. And so, it is a clearer experience of your sanity. And that always feels meaningful.

Now, it really doesn't matter whether you reach out to the Father, whether you reach out to the Holy Spirit, whether you reach out to your capital "S" Self, or whether you reach out to your guide. As long as what you are reaching out to, is one of those four things, you are reaching out to, the undistorted presence of the Father, in the act of being all there is of You. You are reaching out to that which will reflect back to you, the Father's will for you, which is for you to become fully conscious, for you to be out of ignorance. So in effect, this reaching out is a means of experiencing unity, or what has been called unity consciousness.

The only reason you don't experience who you are in your totality, is because you hold on so tightly to your current sense of limitation. And you even fight to maintain it, and see to it that it doesn't become loose, it doesn't become weak, because there is such a sense of security within it. When however, there is a weakness, when there is an expressed desire to access your greater capacity, to be truly aware, that part of you which has been operating within a limit, becomes congruent with that of you in your infinity, which it has continuously been expressing itself outside that limit. And because, the Father has not withheld anything of what He is from His Self-expression, and the gift of what He is has been continuously made, then whenever there is a weakness, there can be a penetration.

Now, I mention this so that you might understand that as you reach out for guidance, you are reaching out for that which is intent upon penetrating the limits of your current vision and registering with you, so that the limit might become reasonably and intelligently, invalidated. So that you can release it, and experience unity, experience Your Identity.

Now, there are literally, four simple steps to get in touch with your guide, to get in touch with the Holy Spirit, to get in touch with the Father, to get in touch with your capital "S" Self.

The first step is: Become still.

The second step is: Mentally express your desire for dialog, for connection, for communication.

The third step is: Listen. That is the step most people neglect to engage in.

And the fourth step or the fourth part is: To expect an answer. Because, if you ask and do not expect an answer, you will not hear it even though it will be given.

Now, you may become still by whatever means works for you, meditating, self-hypnosis, relaxation techniques. Whatever helps you to get in that place, where the chattering of your mind is not occurring. And when you have arrived at a reasonably quiet inner place, then gently, quietly express your desire. There is no need to be formal about it. Do not conceive of this process as one of entering a church, where you must follow certain protocols of proper spiritual behavior. Just simply, in your own words, express your desire. Express it once only, at any given sitting. And then move on to the third point, which is, listen.

Now, one of the places you get hung-up on in the second step is, that you ask, and you ask, and you ask, and you ask, "will my guide please speak to me?" "I will listen." "Will you please speak to me." "I really do want to hear from you." "I really am in the middle of a problem." "I really need you." And you keep expressing the desire, without setting the reason for it aside, together with setting aside the request, so that you are able to be silently and attentively and allowingly, listening. Your guide knew before you asked, that you were experiencing a problem.

Now, what happens when you ask, and ask, and ask, and you give all the reasons you can think of for why it is important for you to have an answer. What you are doing there, is filling the space up with you and your concern. Even though your request says, "I desire to make room for someone and something other than me and my current concerns." The expression of the desire to be in touch with your guide, is a desire to let someone or something else into the space in which you are present. It is important to remember that, because you cannot have a joining, if you are insisting upon being the only one present. And your expression of concern, over and over and over again, constitutes you filling up the space. So, express the desire, and be aware that you are asking to share your space with someone else.

That what this is all about, even more than getting answers, is the joining with, one who loves you. One who's intent it is, to disclose to you, your Divinity. To disclose to you who you are, so that you might come to a realization, that your problem as you are seeing it, is a limited perception of Reality, that does not and cannot appropriately govern your experience. And so that, the Truth about it, in it's simplicity, might be placed before you, so that you can become free of the problem, or free of the ignorance.

So you ask once. And then you truly become quiet and listen. Listening is an invitation, isn't it? It isn't just being still, as you would normally do in a meditation. Listening is an attentiveness to something, even though you don't know what it will be. That is an invitation. It is an invitation to, that which has already been insisting upon registering with you. Because, it is really in the final analysis, the totality of who you are, which your busyness and with your concerns and worries has blocked you from experiencing. And so literally, the expression of this desire to share your space, to allow someone or something else in, is a means of giving permission, for what you Divinely are to register with you. It is the giving of permission, for the Father or the Holy Spirit to register with you.

Now, I say all of this so that you might understand just how natural and simple a process this is. And why it is inevitable, that if you truly ask and truly listen, you will get an answer. The intelligence of creation is bound to register with you, if you are coming into alignment with it, by setting aside your arrogance and your willfulness, which is very often expressed as the repetitive expression of your worries and your concerns. It is inevitable, that the integrity of life will register when there is an invitation. And when one other essential element is present, the giving of permission for the invitation to be responded to.

Now, when you pray to the Father, you are opening up to, and to some degree, giving permission for what God is, to register with you, and exalt your poor sense of yourself, and uncover in you His/Her full Self-expression.

Now it is important to understand that the Holy Spirit, is what I will call a different function, than the movement of God. The Holy Spirit is your Divinity, held in trust, while you are dallying with the ego. As you are aware, the moment that the sense of ignorance came into play, the Holy Spirit came into existence. The moment each of you chose to experience a limited perception of the forth-dimensional conscious experience of Being, that part of Yourself which you disowned in the process, did not disappear. And so You in your totality, right up to this very instant, have continued to function and Be fully. That of You, what I will call your disowned capital "S" Self, is the Holy Spirit. And when reunion occurs, the Holy Spirit will no longer be. Because your Divinity will no longer need to be held in trust, while you play in a sense of limitation.

Your guide is an actual individuality, part of the brotherhood, the body of Christ, if you will, part of the brotherhood that is awake. When you reach out to your guide, you are reaching out to one of your brothers or sisters. An individuality just like you. Part of the process, an essential aspect of the process of awakening, involves your active willingness to join with another. To let another into this private little arrogant ego space, that you have been playing in, if I may put it that way, exploring the experience of. This is one of the means of undoing the ego frame of reference. Letting someone else in. It doesn't need to be your guide, it can be your mate, it can be your child, it can be your friend, it can be your minister. But the letting in of someone else, is an act that is in opposition to the isolation and separation of the ego sense. And this is another reason that when you let someone into your experience, it feels good.

Your guide, for lack of better words, was assigned to you at the moment of conception, and has been present, on your behalf, to help remind you, of who you Divinely are. While you are somewhat overwhelmed and having the "pleasure" of understanding all the sensory data, that you are getting from the five physical senses, which tend to cause you to forget or overlook the more subtle spiritual levels of your Being.

So, when you reach out for guidance, whether it is your guide, the Holy Spirit, your capital "S" Self or the Father, you are reaching out to that which has the soul intent of connecting with you. It is a self-fulfilling process, if you will give permission for it. Everything is set up for you to remember who you are. And although, when you in your limited sense of things feel vulnerable, tiny, unloved and unlovable, and, therefore, it is hard for you to believe, that anyone would respond or that you are worthy of any response, you are, nevertheless, in a place, where you are bound to get your answers, if you will reach out, no matter how unjustifiable a response seems, because of your conviction in your littleness.

Now there is one other thing. Let go of willfulness, in this process of listening. Do not be demanding. When Paul was first trying to connect with Me, and he had sat there every night for two weeks, becoming still, genuinely expressing his desire, and there had been no response, he became impatient, and said, he had better things to do, and that he couldn't sit there forever, waiting for me to respond. In so many words, he was saying, "hurry up." That is willfulness, and it will, indeed, get in the way of your hearing.

Part of the process of waking up is arriving at a place within yourself, where you are saying, "Thy Will not mine be done." A place where there is an expression of confidence in the fundamental order of Being. All of you are very uncomfortable, being in that yielding place, because you are so conditioned to be in control and feel that you cannot feel worth while or responsible, if you aren't exercising the control. I will tell you that the only exercise of control that is worth it's salt, is to use your will, to choose not to use your will. And that is what you are doing, whenever you meditate. And that is what you are doing when you desire to get in touch with your guide and go through the four steps that I have mentioned.

It is the Father's good pleasure, to give you the Kingdom. It is the Father's good pleasure to disclose to you your right Mind, to illuminate it to you. And as you can see, there are a number of avenues available to you, for having the Father's Will for you identified in a recognizable form in your life. And I simply encourage all of you to begin to avail yourself of it. And I encourage you to do it with a certain lightness to it. Don't work hard at it. Don't make your whole life depend upon whether it works or not. It will work, but do it with an ease. Do it with a certain lightness.

You go to the kitchen sink to get a glass of water. You do not stand there and pray, that water might come out this time, when you turn on the faucet. You do not meditate first. You simply go, and casually turn on the faucet. Likewise, let there be a certain casualness here. Because, what we are talking about, is engaging in something that is absolutely and Divinely normal, that is available to you at all times, no matter how confined you're feeling by your limitations. Okay, that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning indeed.

QUESTION: I'm going to attempt to phrase this question, without becoming wordy. My question concerns nonduality, which is how I more or less formulate the notion of the separation in my mind. The separation is the existence of duality, and the atonement is the healing of duality.

In my experience, if I'm still I can see clearly and feel to some extent that my experience of time and space is simply a mental construction, a mental abstraction, that I'm imposing on my experience. Yet in spite of that, I'm unable to actually, I guess I could say, touch my experience directly. There's always the intermediary of the ego, my self created, self-image. And what seems to hold that in place, for me, primarily, is my sense of my body, as being the location of my consciousness, the focal point of my consciousness, in my field of experience, that I seem to experience my body, feel my body more directly, more personally, than the other things that are in my experience.

And so, this seems to have the effect of distancing me from everything that is going on. That's kind of where I'm at in this search, and I hope that you can see the things in my mind, that I'm not expressing clearly. I would appreciate anything that you might have to say to me about this.

ANSWER: Well, then necessarily you need to find some loopholes in your conceptualization. Some holes in the fence, as it were, that at the least, you can just stick your head through to see from a larger vantage point.

Now, one of the means of doing this is meditation. Because literally, in meditation as you become centered, you do move into a direct experience of the infinity of your presence. And the first experience of it, is peace. And this peace is not confined, and indeed, if while you are in that peace you open up your eyes, the way in which you perceive your world is, shall I say, colored by that peace. And you are able to observe your world without being hooked by it, at least for whatever period of time you are able to stay connected with that peace, and have your eyes opened.

Another means of having a connective experience with that which is not bound by time and space, is your connection with your guide, or your connection with the Holy Spirit. These connections, experienced somewhat regularly, begin to provide you with an alternate perspective, if you will.

Paul says to me, good morning, or good afternoon, or good evening. And I say, good morning, or good afternoon and good evening. But every time I do that, I convey the fact, wordlessly, that I am answering it from a place where it is not morning, afternoon or evening. And Paul is beginning to get the feel of the ridiculousness of his sense of morning, afternoon or evening. It has become more apparent to him that, that is a local experience, not even one that someone on the moon can experience, or someone somewhere else in space. It is a local concept. But since it is what you pay attention to, and you do not have as much of an opportunity to have an alternate experience, you treat it as though it is actual fact.

It truly hasn't been until the invention of television and the ability to see something happening in Tokyo or the opposite side of the world, at the time that it is happening, that you have been able to have the experience of night and day, of morning and evening simultaneously. And experience the fact that your solid conviction, in the actuality of morning isn't, absolute fact. Those experiences have begun to undermine your very localized perception of things. And likewise, your connection with your guide, and your experience of being centered in meditation, are two means of having experience that goes beyond, your limited sense of time and space.

Now, it is also important to understand that you cannot attack time and space. That trying to overcome them, by doing something with them, will only succeed in making them seem more real. It literally is the practice of moving into what we will call unity consciousness, by virtue of meditation, that begins to free you up, by uncovering the experience of unity, that undermines your confidence in your belief in duality.

Everyone wants to deal with the problem, instead of getting to the solution. Everyone wants to figure out a better way to deal with clutter in the shadows, than to turn on the light. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: My question has to do with a job that Raj has told me about, on several occasions. And my question is, if that job is still there, what needs to happen within me to make it happen, or is it something on the other end, that needs to take place?

ANSWER: It is indeed, something that is unfolding and needing to come to completion, from the standpoint of the employer. It is important for you to simply, willingly, abide with the awareness that your unfoldment is, indeed, intent upon unfolding itself and identifying itself to you, as your experience. It is important for you, not to abandon your sense of universal order as the governing factor, while your next employer yields to that order, and has the opportunity to discover you. That is the simplest way I can put it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: About two months ago, we found out that my husband has cancer, and he's going to be operated on, in Stanford tomorrow morning. So, I kind of feel like I've been riding in that stagecoach you talked about yesterday,? ups and downs. And I feel that I've been doing pretty well.

My question to you is, what do you suggest for me, to get by the next ten or fifteen days? And also is there something I can be doing that will help my husband?

ANSWER: First of all, I encourage you to approach these next fifteen days as, the specific manifestation of the penetration of the Divine fact of your husbands Being, into the current level of human experience, that he and you are experiencing. You see, as I said when we began today, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. The Father withholds nothing of what He is, from His Self-expression. The gift of what He is, is eternally being expressed and, as I said, attempting to penetrate, whatever illusion of limitation one is experiencing.

Now, Divine Love meets the human need, in the language of each ones present perception. Meaning, that it meets one at whatever his current belief level is, or we could say, at whatever his current level of ignorance is. But it always penetrates that level of ignorance and registers with one, in language that identifies the Divinity of its source and the resolution of a problem, if it is given permission. And so, what I am talking about here, is your process of giving permission.

Now, does that building, called a hospital, have a means of telling you what it is? Do the doctors there, do the hospital beds there, have a means of telling you what they are? At the bottom line, I would have to say that the answer is yes. But what I am meaning to bring out here is that the doctors may present themselves from a human standpoint, with certain levels of ignorance or belief, about what they are doing and about what you can expect, et cetera. But you are not required to accept them, in terms of the mask or face, they are presenting to you. You can look at the hospital bed, and very literally acknowledge it, as a manifestation of the underlying everlasting arms of love, because they give support, when that kind of support is needed. And you have the opportunity to acknowledge the physicians as the Christ. You have the opportunity to recognize that in spite of who they might think they are, they are truly the direct and full expression of the Father. And God is the one that is omnipotent, not a limited self-perception that might be presenting itself to you.

And so, I encourage you, tomorrow and over the next fifteen days to, shall I say, translate or re-identify what you are seeing. Translate it into Divine terms. The nurses that are there, are there to express the love of God, the love God has for His Son, your husband, or His Daughter, you. And that you are moving into the experience of the penetration of Divine fulfillment, meeting the human need, to be able to live, to be able to be well, to be able to be happy.

You also have the option of interpreting the physicians, as limited human beings, governed by their egos, perhaps ignorant of spiritual reality, and you can scare yourself shitless.

But you know, I will tell you something: God will still reign supreme. God is still God. And it is much more appropriate for you to move through this period with an increasing sense of the presence of God in the human experience. That is what it is your birthright to experience. And so again, I encourage you to approach the next fifteen days, as the opportunity to experience the penetration of Divine Love of the presence of the Father, right in the middle of what appears to be a limited human experience, and lift the threat, and exalt both of you into a clearer knowing of the Allness of God. And of the fact that His Allness, is not separate from either one of you, but constitutes the very presence of you. It is not a process of getting rid of something, but of uncovering the Divine birthright of health. That is what is happening. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I don't think I can even talk after that.

ANSWER: You will find a way.

QUESTION: Raj, it's such a blessing to be here with you.

ANSWER: Likewise.

QUESTION: Well, of course, the big question is, what happens in April after the lease runs out at Payton's place? We have a big blank, you know, there. And I'd like to see if you can shed any light, on this situation?

ANSWER: There is an unbroken continuity that you will discover where there appears to be a break in the continuity of a certain manifestation of form, called a lease. This is a time for you to be willing to trust into the equilibrium, which Payton embodies. Indeed, it is a time for you to trust him. And to trust what is moving within him. To stand by him. To not lead him. To be with him, in support of him. And have the patience and the willingness to remain with him, as he, shall I say, in staying on the beam of his inner continuity, moves unerringly into the new structure. Which I am not going to address here. I am simply going to tell you that you are not going to be in a vulnerable spot, and you do not need to try to hang on to the old form or quickly reestablish it.

I am telling you, that there is a great evenness in Payton. And that evenness, is a matter of him staying on the Homing beacon, if you will, and not diverging from it. And if you will abide with him, allowing him to stay in tune with his evenness, you will find something new unfolding, that will be even more fulfilling.

There is not cause for alarm here, or concern. Nor do you need to fear that you will lose meaningful form, meaningful structure in your life. This for you is a time of learning to trust your partner, to trust his makeup. Let him embrace and shelter you. And let yourself abide with him, because his evenness is trustworthy. And if you ask him what he's going to do and he says, "I don't know," trust anyway. Because he is paying attention and he is being sensitive, in the now. And that is where your safety and security lies. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome. You're welcome to go ahead anytime.

QUESTION: Hi Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I'm not exactly sure how to word this question, because I'm still formulating it. But I have a heck of a time dealing with change. I'm what you call "Mr. Stable," same job for almost twenty-four years and everything. And I'm going through a period in my life where I find myself kind of drifting. I can't really concentrate on things. I'll just go through the formalities of life. My mind isn't on things. I'll just drift along. And I've been thinking of making, what for me is one heck of a change. And I'm not sure whether it's my old ego talking, "mid-life crisis" time, or what. I've been thinking of just kind of tossing it all. Selling out, and this is the "mid-life crisis" part, moving to a tropical island, to a lady I met. And I'm wondering, what am I doing? (Laughter)

ANSWER: I gather that there are a number of people who will willingly trade places with you. (Laughter)

QUESTION: Then let them have the problem.

ANSWER: This is a wonderful example of the fact, that, the movement of God, which is the movement of creation, often appears to the limited ego frame of reference, as that which threatens its stability. The Christ says, “behold I stand at the door and knock,” and the ego inside says, “call the police and get rid of the intruder.”

Now, you do indeed have a very wonderful sense of stability. And your experience of stability, not just an intellectual concept of what stability ought to be like or what it might be, but your actual experience of stability, provides you with the capacity to grasp the fact, that God is Infinite stability, and that His Self-expression is absolutely stable, even though God’s Being, constitutes a movement that is characterized by the words “Behold I make all things new.” What God is Being, never stops to repeat itself or even to maintain a “stable position.” And yet this movement of life, is inherently stable.

You look out at this beautiful universe, it is moving in every direction, and yet it is absolutely orderly. Orderly enough that your probes are able to be aimed at where a planet will be three years from now, and when the probe gets there three years from now, that planet will be there. That indicates something of the Infinite Order of a movement of creation, called the universe. Movement or change is not in opposition to or at odds with order and stability.

You simply don’t want to become stuck in a particular form of stability. Your ego does. But I am saying that none of you truly wants to choose for absolute fixed stability that doesn’t allow for change, as though that is the achievement or goal you need to be working toward. In fact, all of you are coming into a time of great change. Great world change. Great inner change. And those of you who have had some experience of stability, are better prepared for it, if you will, shall I say, translate that experience of stability into a confidence in the ultimate and absolute stability of that which is moving it all, God. So that you can dare to trust into the change, without an automatic assumption that change means chaos.

When, not if. When you make this move, when you embrace this change, and engage in it, don’t abandon an expectation of orderliness and stability. Embrace it with a confidence, that the underlying orderliness of the Movement of Creation, is governing the change. Let there be flexibility here.

So I will tell you something: If you don’t embrace the change, if you do not allow yourself the flexibility, you will be engaging in the first stages of suicide, that I mentioned yesterday. A suicide, that everyone else will call a “natural death,” which is about as sensible as dry water.

Now, just because you allow for change and a little bit of delight, does not mean, that you are becoming irrational or irresponsible. And again, I encourage you not to begin to bury yourself in a static and dependable life pattern, from which you will allow no variation. I encourage you to have a little bit of fun and realize that in having fun, you are not abandoning intelligence. Enjoy the island, and enjoy the woman, and enjoy yourself. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. (Laughter)

QUESTION: Good morning Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question is about my place, in the scheme of things...

ANSWER: Your place?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: You are the place, where God shines through. Stop thinking of your place, as a geographic location in the world, or a set of special coordinances, that identify you in a spot in the universe. You are the place where the experience of life unfolds, as the conscious experience of Being. You are the place, where all the meaning of God, shines through into manifestation. You are the threshold, of the Movement of Creation. You are the place. And if you think of yourself as having a place in the world, you will give more attention to that, than being the place, where the originality and creativity of God comes into expression, as what everyone else will experience as the gift of You, that you are uninhabitably making, by daring to just be, without apology. Just be, genuinely You.

So the question is not, what or where is your place. No! The question is not where is your place. Paul is becoming self-conscious.

The question is not, what or where is your place, but how to be the place, that you are. And the way you begin to be the place where God shines through, is to adopt an attitude of "not my will but Thine be done." In other words, it is again a matter of making the invitation, to have someone or something else share your space.

Now, literally when I say that, I mean to share the space that your ego has been filling up. I do not mean that it is to share the space, with the ego. But to share the space, that the essential you is, which you might say, squeezes the ego out, and allows the presence of God, that constitutes the presence of you to join, and be the expression or embodiment of the true meaning of your presence. Don't be so concerned about your place in the world, let your attention and interest and invitation be, to allowing the full meaning of who you Divinely are to be what is present, right here, and right now. Continue...

QUESTION: At this stage of my life, I would like to know whether I should be closer physically to my long time spiritual group, spiritual study and service group. Now I am physically away from them, and I'm concerned about our continuation as a unit, because some members are leaving this plane.

ANSWER: Ultimately, you will do what you are going to do. But, I am going to encourage you to embrace the idea, that groups with specific identities, inhibit the grasping of the fact, that the Brotherhood of Man is the only group. And you are already in that group. And you are already everyday in communication with members of that group.

And so everyday you are provided with the opportunity to be the presence that supports the clearer and clearer experience of what it means to be a member of the Brotherhood of Man, or in biblical terms the “Body of Christ.” And understand, this does not mean the body of Christ, a man. It means the body of that Infinite Self-expression of the Father, called His Son, His Expression, which includes Sons and Daughters.

Those of the Brotherhood, who are still not experiencing their Divinity fully, need the ongoing support of the other members of the Brotherhood, who are experiencing a greater confidence in the Divinity of Being, rather than the frustrating humanity or mortality of Being. It is not that I am equating mortality with humanness. But when humanness is identified with ego, rather than Divinity, then it is frustrating and is experienced in a mortal way, an uncomfortable and dying way. When humanness is equated with humaneness, and what you could call, fundamental real human values, that is when you begin to connect with the essential Divinity of your Being, right here. And that is what nurtures the clearer experience of Brotherhood.

There are national boundaries, and there are group boundaries, and these boundaries will have to dissolve. Yielding to the experience of the Brotherhood of man, that in no way diminishes, what you might call, the wealth of the fabric of cultural differences. Cultural differences are not divisions, but what you might call, infinite expressions of art, infinite expressions of soul.

To have national or group boundaries dissolve, does not mean the sacrifice of the infinite expression of soul, anymore than everyone’s waking up and claiming no other presence than the presence of God, annihilates the experience of individuality.

So, how could you possibly be alone, separated from your group, when you identify the group as the Brotherhood of Man, from which you are excluding no one.

I encourage you to contemplate this. I also encourage you to ask yourself, whether it is important to maintain or contribute to the maintenance of a clear cut distinction of an existing group. A distinction from everyone else. Which is another way of saying, maintaining a specific identity to this group. For the specific identity of the group to dissolve, does not mean that the spiritual value of the members of that group, will be lost to the world. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I think you've answered aspects of my question, in the last two answers. You may remember a year or so ago, in Ashland, I asked if I should go to Santa Fe for a year, and you said, "yes." And in fact, I did go, and had an absolutely magical time.

I have returned now to California, and I have verified that, the move to Santa Fe was a breaking up of old patterns and old systems and an old person. And that the more I broke things apart, including my own belief systems, the better I felt, the more clear at my center. The move to Santa Fe I think turns out to have been, an inner kind of movement expressed geographically.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I want to go back to New Mexico to live. In my deep heart, I want to go back there. And I want to take my family with me. And in fact I will do that. I'm not afraid to continue the breaking up, of what I've been comfortable with my whole life, because the comfort level is different.

In other words, I'm on an interior journey, and I do understand that. I trust it. I'm going to go into it. But my fear comes to the front, in the fact that, I think I'm going to lose the battle, in the sense of trusting into the breaking and the going forward, and get sucked out by my ego, and get sucked back into old systems. And if I'm not over stating it, I think I'm at a point where I'm fearful of a battle, between good and evil, in this forward journey.

ANSWER: Well, the only battle between good and evil that there could be, would be the awkwardness of yielding to the inner movement of your Being, verses yielding to your old conditioning. But I will tell you something, your love for the movement of your Being, is greater than your inclination, to be hooked by your old conditioning. You might say, that you are hooked on your fulfillment. And you will find yourself, smoothly or at least consistently, moving in terms of your fulfillment, even if at times, it feels a little bit strenuous, because an old habit is hooking you.

In other words, now your path is clear to you, where before you didn't even know for a fact, that there was a path. And there is something in you that is not going to allow itself to be distracted again from, being aware of your path and moving along it. I understand the fear. The ego is, indeed, threatening you, but you are stronger, you might say, than you think, in terms of your spiritual growth.

And I encourage you to continue to intend, to return to Santa Fe. That is in order. And because it is in order, your world will tend to configure in support of that. And so with a certain amount of a light heart, I encourage you to look forward to returning. And when the thought comes, that something will keep you from it, laugh it off, say, “that’s ridiculous! My Being is stronger than that.” That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you kindly.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: It was very difficult for me to come here this weekend, because my last two conversations have been canceled. And I have felt, rejected as not being capable of anymore enlightenment or growth. And, I assume there is a definite reason for these particular lessons. And I would like to have some word from you, about why, and perhaps what I need to do, now. Thank you.

ANSWER: First of all I would encourage you to set up another appointment.

Now, it is very important for all of you, especially when you are seriously engaged, or engaged with a certain intent upon moving along your spiritual path, not to make mountains out of mole hills. And if something does not go as you had expected, it is not appropriate for you to immediately try to figure out what it is you are doing wrong, that has caused this to happen. There is indeed, a need to have a certain, I will say, casualness about your movement along your spiritual path, so that you do not make circumstances into life and death dynamics, do or die dynamics.

Now, it is the ego which would have you turn a benign circumstance, into a circumstance that judges you, or a circumstance that calls for judgment in any direction. This is the way the ego hooks you, and distracts you, from your peace, and distracts you from, what I will call, your access point to your enlightenment, which is forever present with you, within you.

Now, I encourage you to also realize, that Paul is not the one who is totally awake. And that Paul is needing to deal with his experiences of guidance and the results of those experiences of guidance, just as the rest of you are. And he doesn’t always do it gracefully. He doesn’t always do it unresistently, because indeed, I am constantly saying, “you are a little bit bigger than you think you are.” “You can take a step here,” and his limited thinking says, “I hear you, but I do not have the nerve. I here you, but it does not sound reasonable.” And he digs in his feet and suffers, if you will, creates for himself tension and distress. And when he does this it is difficult for him to be clear. And he does not always want to have more clarity provided to him, since the clarity that has been provided is distressing enough.

There is one thing about Paul, and that is, that he consistently refuses to engage in or allow a conversation with Raj when he is not centered.

I will tell you that, this past year has been a year of great growth on his part, which has required him to allow for a much larger experience, a more expansive experience of life, which he has not felt there was any sound basis for. And as a result, he has fretted through an almost literal experience of paradise.

Indeed, to the human sense of things, he has been quite unproductive, compared with prior years. No workshops, two issues of a newsletter and, indeed, many canceled appointments, which again, I must say, reflect an integrity on his part, not to bluff his way through. I am taking this time to make these comments about Paul, because he will not do it. And it is important for everyone not to assume, that just because he trusts into the process enough to allow what is happening right now to happen, does not mean, that it is truly any easier for him, than it is for anyone else. Or that he has truly arrived at a point of much, much, much greater spirituality, than the rest of you.

And I encourage you to realize two things: there is a certain necessity for compassion, relative to Paul, because of this. And when he cancels an appointment, or a newsletter is not received in a timely fashion, that there be allowances for the fact that in spite of it all, he persists. And secondly: If you will not assume that he is somehow in a different position from the rest of you, you will be able to embrace your fretting, and your resistance, and your awkwardness, and not assume that you don't have what it takes, because its "so easy for Paul," and so difficult for you.

It is important to maintain a sense of equality and camaraderie, as you move together along the path of coming Home into your right Mind. There literally is no greater significance, to the cancellation of your appointments, than the fact that Paul was groveling in shit, and choose that rather than to be clear at that moment.

I would love to talk with you again, whenever you wish. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi Raj, is this on?

ANSWER: It is indeed.

QUESTION: Well each question I have come up with has been answered, either in my own mind or by someone else's answer. So I'm simply going to ask if there is anything I need to know at this time that would be helpful?

ANSWER: There is such a wonderful state of equilibrium, that you are embodying at this moment, that the answer is No. I will give you an opportunity before the end of the day to ask a question, if you should have one then.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question, I'm looking for some understanding and some direction. For the past two years, I have been wanting to adopt a little girl, and haven't been successful. The past year has been spent, I felt as an extremely intense year, where I've felt literally pushed through the air.

PAUL: Pushed through the air?

QUESTION: Pushed through the year.

PAUL: Oh, year.

QUESTION: A year that was packed full of experiences and challenges. I really feel that I want to adopt a child. And I'm wondering if you can give me some guidance, as to what I might need to do in order to achieve that?

ANSWER: Persist. It is in order. And it is not inappropriate for you to be put in the position, of having to consistently experience your desire to have a child. It allows you to bring into play, before the fact of the presence of the child, your love, the love you are willing to share. The means will unfold. But do not let the natural outpouring of your love and your desire for a child to become clouded or undermined by frustration. Learn to stay with the love and the extension of it, as you naturally reach out for, this one who will come into your experience.

All that is pertinent at the moment in this process for you, is your willingness to persist. You are in the process of discovering your infinite capacity for being loving. And once this child is in your experience, it will not be all peaches and cream. And there will be days, when you will have the opportunity to draw upon this infinite resource of your capacity to love, so that you are able to love, in spite of your temporary ego frustration with what might be happening. The mother love in you, is having the opportunity to come into play, and be the invitation, if you will, extended to this child, helping to set into place in a tangible form, the fulfillment of that extension or sharing of love, that will appear as an adoption. Be patient in, and persistent in, your love. That is the single task at hand, and the single appropriate action that is called for. And that's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Could you tell me a time, when I might expect that?

ANSWER: No, Because that will set up a dynamic, that will be promotive of impatience, and it will distract you from the purity of the practice of your love, which is what will, shall I say, grease the way. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good late morning Paul.

PAUL: Good late morning to you.

QUESTION: Paul, I even hate to ask anything, because everything has been so marvelous for me this last year and a half. And it seems that if all I need to do is just to wish for something, and it's there, before I even know about it. And physically I'm having a little bit more problems. I can use the, being able to help with the tooth maybe that's hurting or something else. But I am having problems with my eyes. And I can't seem to get to much help on that. And I was wondering, are we just going to continue the way we are, or what do I do? Do I just accept it?

ANSWER: Absolutely not! Never just accept limitation! Whether it is physical or in terms of a relationship or finances, et cetera. Again "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." Absolutely none of what constitutes your perfection, in all areas, is withheld from you. It is your birthright to be experiencing it.

Now, and this is important for everyone. Do not let your frustration at not experiencing it, occupy your thought to the point, that you are distracted from giving permission for your perfection to be experienced, giving permission for your healing.

Now I simply encourage you each night, just before you fall asleep, to ask your healing team to address the issue with your eyes. Ask for a healing session during the night, while you are sleeping. Then during the daytime, when you feel yourself being bothered, relative to your eyes, or even if the thought comes to you, acknowledge that perfect vision is your birthright. Remind yourself, that it is the intent of your body, to identify the presence of you perfectly. That it is, therefore, the intent of your eyes, to perform their function perfectly. That is their intent. That is their inclination. And by acknowledging it, you, if I might put it this way, engage in a little bit of reprogramming of your mindsets. In acknowledging, that it is your birthright to experience your perfection, physically. And that indeed, it is the intent of your body to identify you perfectly.

You are beginning to come into alignment with the Truth, at least, relative to your thinking, you are coming into alignment with the Truth. And that is what allows for the penetration, of the Truth to occur and regenerate.

Now it is absolutely inappropriate for any of you, to assume that because you are a certain age, which simply means you have traveled around the sun a certain number of times. It is absolutely inappropriate for you to believe or accept the idea, that because you are a certain age, there are certain things you must just accept. That you must just realize, that you can't do what you used to do. And that you shouldn't even bother to try anymore.

The fullness of the expression of God, that constitutes your identity and your individuality and your existence, is as fresh and new today, as it was when you were two hours old. God is not running down. God's Self-expression isn't becoming weakened. God is still omnipotent, and omnipresent. And any limitation that one is feeling, is invalid and illusory. But one does, through the use of imagination, begin to embrace mistaken concepts, and then that one begins to behave according to the concept.

All age problems, are not old age problems. There are teenagers, who are suffering from being teenagers. And there are those in their forties, who are suffering from “mid-life crisis.” And there are those who are twenty-four or twenty-five, who are not yet feeling a strong sense of their presence and substantiality. They’re not in their mind, quite grown up and they’re not kids anymore, and that is a problem, an age problem. But whether you are fourteen, or whether you are eighty, or whether you are forty, in other words, whether you have traveled around the sun fourteen times, or eighty times, having experienced a little bit of space travel, you are always the full representation of capital “M” Mind. The full representation or manifestation of God expressing Himself/Herself.

The creation of God, that constitutes your conscious experience of Being, is forever new, and forever vital. And those who, getting into their “twilight years,” which is just another ridiculous concept, who put off living, because there’s not enough time left to complete any of it, will find themselves after they have passed on, as I said yesterday, with the same opportunities to continue to engage in life. And I will tell you, you will not suddenly find yourself to be a babe again, with what might seem to be a natural feeling of having a whole life ahead of you with freshness. You will find yourself, experiencing yourself, just as you were before you passed on. And then you will say, “Wow, I’m not going to postpone living anymore.” “Why didn’t I realize that twenty years ago when I was sixty.”

The moment you begin to say, “I guess I’m just going to have to put up with my limitations,” again, whether you’re sixty or twenty, you are simply succumbing to a misperception, an aberration of awareness. And if you indulge in it, you begin to undermine your sense of your own integrity, both physically and mentally. And you begin to squelch the life force within you. The life force is there. The ideas come, to engage in life. But then the intellect and the conditioning comes in and says, “well, I never saw anybody else do this.” “Of course, Aunt Agnes would slide down a banister at eighty-five years old, but she was eccentric.” I’ll tell you, Aunt Agnes was engaging in life, and that’s why she had the spunk, because she didn’t squelch herself.

Remember that, if the Father has withheld nothing of what He Is from His Self-expression, meaning you, then the vitality and vigor of life, are forever present for you to embody. And generally speaking, as a youngster, you dare to embody it, without hesitation. But as you become educated and you learn how to be intelligent, you reason yourself right out of the spontaneous willingness to be the embodiment of life. And that is what I am here to encourage you to stop doing. Stop withdrawing the permission to experience your Perfection, your wholeness and your vitality, no matter what age you are.

Now, if you were to pass on at this very instant, you would find yourself still appearing just as you appear, believing what you believed just a moment ago, except, that where you experienced some doubt as to whether you will exist at the moment after death, that ignorance will be annihilated, by the fact that you find yourself still existing. And so the fear of death will be gone. That is the one belief that is altered, annihilated by virtue of the experience of passing on. Now, if this were to happen at this moment, you would find others, who went on before you, if they had not incarnated in the meantime, those who you remember as being elderly, who are not manifesting elderliness. You will find that they have experienced regeneration of their bodies. And it is because they gave up the inclination to just accept where they were, to just put up with old age, and because also, they had the example of others who went before them, who were also manifesting more youth, who were physically regenerated.

Now at the moment, you don't have many examples of physical regeneration. There are healings here and there, with young people and it is easy to say, "well, it is because they are young and their body has an active immune system, and also perhaps they were more spiritually alert and that allowed for regenerative healing." But those are all just excuses, for not embodying regenerative processes, right now.

And I cannot say it too often, "now is the accepted time," don't wait to engage in waking up, after you pass on. Don't wait to engage in re-embracing life, after you have passed on. Start giving permission today. No matter what your age, give permission for the perfect Self-expression of the Father/Mother God, to be embodied right where you are. Give permission for the ever new expression of the Father, that appears as you, to be physically embodied. Let the perfection of your Being come forth.

And I will encourage all of you, who have a metaphysical, studious, orientation, not to turn this into an intellectual process of work. I encourage you with a certain abandonment, and freedom, and lightness, to just give permission to yourself to let what the Father Is, fill you, and become embodied, for no good reason at all, other than that it expresses that which is essentially natural and normal to Divine existence, which is the only existence you have to experience. Unless you choose to abide in your faulty imagination. And then you will seem to experience less than, that which is Divinely natural.

Your birthright doesn't have to be earned. You do not have to become worthy of God's Love. And you do not have to become worthy of His Will for you, which is for you to experience yourself in your right Mind, with a capital "M," with a clear undistorted perception of your perfect body. And with the capacity to recognize your world, as God is Being It, rather than as your limited perception allows you to see it. Literally, we are not talking about something that you must gain, that is not natural to you, and which, therefore, requires some practice or exercise, some spiritual exercise, or some practice of spiritually correct thinking, in order for you to gain this thing that is not fundamentally natural to you.

The children who are being born today, are being born into an environment and a social setting, that is far more spiritually enlightened, than society of a thousand years ago. How is it that they're able to cope, without having had to go through all of the last thousand years and the social changes that were worked through, by those who were making the social changes. It is because they don't come in with preconceptions, and they simply embrace what is. They give permission, for there to be cars, and airplanes. They give permission, for there to be, not only color television, but little tiny color televisions with VCRs that fit in the palm of your hand. They don't have to go through, getting use to the wonders of radio and talking pictures and the development of color film and the development of black and white TV, et cetera, in order to be able to embrace, this marvel of technology, called a portable-hand-held-color-TV-VCR.

Likewise, it truly is unnecessary for everyone to go through metaphysical processes of intellect and reasoning, in order to deserve to see perfectly, or in order to deserve to experience physical regeneration. There simply needs to be, the child like willingness to give permission to embrace, what it is already your birthright to be experiencing. And this is part of the process of yielding. Yielding into your birthright.

Everyone is going to yield into the experience of Reality or the Kingdom of Heaven. Everyone simply needs to say, yes to there fulfillment. And fulfillment does include the experience of regeneration and healing, whether you're eighty or forty or twenty-five or fourteen. And that's the Truth.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome.

QUESTION: First, I want to say thank you, to Paul, and to Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm aware that the limit that I am desiring to release is basically fear, and it has many faces, self-doubt, and a sense of scarcity, which intellectually I know is not true. But on an emotional level, there seems to be some kind of a barrier I have, to receiving all that I really desire, abundance, a man in my life, more joy and happiness. So I would like some, maybe, very specific help, in how to release this particular, outmoded attitude or belief, and any help into why I have such a strong ego defense in this area.

ANSWER: I will tell you, it will be difficult for you to let go of fear, if fear is the focal point. And if you try to let go of the fear, fear is the focal point. Now, instead of trying to let go of fear, I encourage you to embrace fearlessness. Not as an effort, because fearlessness is not something you do. Fearlessness is a "practice" that is the equivalent of becoming irresponsible and uncaring. In other words, it is an absence of doing something. Whereas fear, is a practice of doing something. Fearlessness is something you can replace fear with, by first of all, noticing your body, which you will find is tense. You will also find that your breathing is shallow. And if you will take a moment in the middle of your fear, to move your body, your shoulders, your torso, your legs, and after having brought all the muscles into play, you relax, so you are aware that you are not holding yourself tense. And then if you will in that relaxed physical state, notice your breathing, and increase the depth of the breathe, and slow down the rate of inspiration and expiration, you will find a great deal of your sense of fear diminished.

I will tell you something: it is impossible to be experiencing emotional reactions without a body. If your body were able to be anesthetized without your going to sleep, you would find it absolutely impossible to experience reaction and you would find yourself totally able to respond out of peaceful intelligence.

The ego, the private tiny sense of self, utilizes the body to create emotional reactions and sustain them. When you take time to relax the body, slow down the breathing and increase the depth of the breathe, your body will cease to be as sensorially active and the sustenance of the emotional reaction will be deprived from the emotional reaction and you will experience more peace. Then if you will consciously choose for your experience of peace mentally, because you value it, knowing that when you are not reactive, you are in a better place to experience common intelligence. That choice for your peace will help move you over the threshold and out of the fear.

You see now, we have not been dealing with fear. We have been dealing with making a choice for fearlessness. Which means becoming less personally involved with all of the manifestations of fear. You still embrace your body. But you embrace it as though it's peace, its state of relaxation, is what is most contributive to your being able to deal intelligently with whatever it is that's going on. You do not rise above the body. You do not tense it up to squelch the reaction. You engage in doing less than you were doing, when you were experiencing fear.

Fear is a choice. Peace is a choice. Inner conflict is a choice. And the only reason you choose for these things, is because the body seems to be supporting and substantiating the validity of those reactions. And the other reason is, that you seem to have intellectual justification, for maintaining yourself in a reactive state.

You have heard the saying, "if you are not upset, frightened and uneasy you don't understand the situation." That is a justification. The suggestion is, that if you are not afraid, you are not in touch with the realities of things. But, I am telling you, that if you are afraid and if you are experiencing conflict, you are out of touch with Reality. And the solution to whatever it is that seems to justify the fear, is your choosing for your peace, and your moving into that quietness, that undoing, that lack of doing, that will allow you to experience clarity, that will be resolving of the situation.

Don't value the sensory data, that your body gives you when you are in a state of reaction. Your ego will tell you, that the fear is a survival mode, that is very important to you if you want to survive. And that, therefore, if you are experiencing clenching in the pit of your stomach, and tension in the rest of your body, it is because, some intuitive part of you is noticing the presence of something truly threatening, and that you had better pay attention to it.

But I will tell you: in the process of awakening, you need to learn to become intelligently irrational. In the same sense, that anyone who works at a great height from the ground, whether it is an old time sailor with the rigging of the ships or whether it is a fireman, they are taught how to fall, and have to practice falling, so that they can learn to do the intelligently irrational thing of relaxing, before they hit the ground. Because, if they are relaxed, they will experience less injury, than if they had braced themselves, which is what your immediate reaction is.

So, we are talking here about the intelligent irrational act of choosing for fearlessness. And doing exactly the opposite of what your ego conditioned thinking says is essential. If you are the expression of Divine intelligence, then it is totally irrational for you to, under any circumstances, justify fear. And, if you will remember that fear is a choice, it will be more reasonable to you to believe that you can not choose for it, and choose for something else.

So, begin to practice on the little uneasinesses, not the big full blown fear issues, but start with the little uneasinesses, the little self-doubts, if you will, and realize that this is simply an ego dynamic, a conflict that you do not have to validate, and so, don't validate it. Be irresponsible, dare to feel good, in spite of whatever the issue is that seems to be creating the uneasiness.

I will tell you something: The only reason anything meaningful has occurred today, is because Paul has dared to be fearless, nonself-protective. He has dared to assume that there is no threat, and in the peace of mind, the peace of being, he is able to simply be the flow of appropriateness of the moment.

And yet, there was a question a few moments ago, that expressed a frustration, that could have been interpreted as a personal attack, or at least a loss of faith in Paul personally, and that could have gotten in the way, and caused him to feel bad and become self-protective, which would have made it difficult for us to continue together as we're doing right now. And from an intellectual reasoning process, he could have justified his sense of self-protection, after all, what if there are some more questions like that, that he could interpret in a personal way to his disadvantage and to an ultimate loss of his peace.

You see, you must understand, that you really do exist in the Kingdom of Heaven. And there really are answers, that uncover the Reality of the Kingdom of Heaven, and show you that you are not vulnerable and that any justification for fear, was the result of an ignorant belief, and not the result of instinct for survival.

So I encourage you, and I encourage everyone else, to dare to practice fearlessness, which will always feel like the putting forth of less effort, than the effort it takes to be fearful. The fear seems to call for more energy to be put forth, but if you dare to relax and if you dare to get into your peace, you will find the fear absent. The situation occasioning it, may still be present, but then you will be able to see it from your peace, and your natural capacity to be intelligent. And then your expressions of intelligence, will not be compulsive and unintelligent.

Everything is truly on your side, because you are in the middle of Reality. Everything is ready to conform, to identify your fulfillment, and your good, and your fearlessness, and your peace, if you are willing to let go, become from the ego's point of view irrational, and choose for your peace before you act. Then the Divinity of who you are will come forth, and your value to everyone else will come forth, and your experience of the need for everyone else, in order for you to experience your fulfillment will come forth, and that will even contribute to a greater willingness to be defenseless.

Now I could go on, but we have covered the point. And all of you deserve to have some lunch.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: It's wonderful to be here, and your messages are so loving and supportive, and make me feel that we are so much more than we think we are. And...

ANSWER: ...I will interject here. That if all of you pay attention to the way you feel, when you are treated with an acknowledgment of your Divinity, it will become obvious to you, how wise it would be to treat your fellowman in the same way. Because not only will your fellowman find it a pleasure to be with you, but you will find yourself feeling good also. But it takes the willingness to acknowledge what is Real in your fellowman, rather than assuming that you have that individual pegged, for what that individual is presenting himself as.

Absolutely everyone of you, no matter what you think is going on in your life at this moment, and no matter whether you are thinking well of yourself or not, is absolutely innocent, absolutely guiltless. And it would be well for all of you, to approach your fellowman with the willingness to see that, and help express that in a way that allows your fellowman to more easily embrace that concept of himself or herself. As that begins to happen, you will find incredible things happening, in terms of progress on your planet.

Now all of you have had the opportunity to embrace a brand new attitude toward Russia. Indeed, for the head of that country to be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, indicates that there has been significant willingness to acknowledge integrity, where integrity is being expressed, even though everyone's conditioned thinking causes that one to be inclined to judge that country according to the past.

Every time you encounter a friend, or an associate, whom you have known before, I dare you to approach that person as though you have never met them before, so that you bring absolutely no preconceptions along with you, into your encounter. This is what will significantly allow for change to occur. Continue...

QUESTION: I don't know if I have a question anymore. Again, the messages are so supportive, and you talk to us of our integrity, and our Divinity. And this was the type of message that I was seeking for, all the years that I attended church. and I didn't find the message in the church, and the teaching of the bible in the church, where it was impressed upon us about sin, our fall from grace, that we all fell short of the glory of God...

ANSWER: I can only agree with you.

QUESTION: I'm not sure what the question, exactly is. But why isn't your message being taught in the church, why don't the people who are seeking for spiritual enlightenment, find this loving acceptance and reassurance, that our Divine unfoldment is a natural process, and that we are entitled to all of God's gifts?

ANSWER: Because, indeed, if it is not the Holy Spirit that is addressing the congregation, or the people, there is no means of speaking the words in a manner that can be heard, in a manner that does not elicit objection, contradiction and argument. I will put it very bluntly, if Paul were sitting here telling you exactly the same thing, you would not as defenselessly accept it. Because you would attempt to hold that statement of truth, in the grasp of, or the confinement of, your insistence upon seeing Paul as an ego, or a personality. And by that means, you would not give the permission necessary to unconditionally consider what is being said.

And, I am speaking to everyone when I say that, I am not singling you out. Don't worry, this message will begin to get through, but where it is going to get through, is within individual conscious awareness, more than from established groups, church's, denominations of religions. More and more, all of you will begin to feel the conviction of your Divinity, and as it becomes a conviction, you will begin to speak from your heart, and you will begin to speak of what you see, and what you know. And the atmosphere of your environment will begin to change, and begin to be supportive of each ones willingness to embody the Christ consciousness, and let it show. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: This is Kay.

ANSWER: Indeed, I would have known you anywhere.

QUESTION: As you know, I've been having some conversations with you and with Jeremiah, about the elemental kingdom. I was wondering if you would talk generally about our connection with the elemental kingdom, and what it really means to have a connection, what the elemental kingdom really is, and what our relationship is to them.

ANSWER: As all of you begin to allow yourselves to become more unconditional, you will begin to find that the infinite expression of God, is far more infinite than you imagined. And I mean this not only in terms of those who are called the space brothers, those who inhabit other parts of the universe, but also those manifestations of conscious individuality right on your own planet, that you are not recognizing at the moment, which have been referred to as nature spirits, or fairy's, or deva's. Those who you might say, function in relationship to the earth, the plant life, et cetera. It is these, that could be called the elemental kingdom as you have put it.

Now, if this strikes some of you as being a little far out, that is all right, it is not bad for your borders to be expanded a little bit, and I will not push too many of your buttons today.

You also have, what you call the animal kingdom, which is not part of the elemental kingdom. And you will find that not only are Dolphins actually able to communicate and express their inherent intelligence, but also the other animals. I have said it before, but I will repeat it again, every single form that you experience, whether you are experiencing it clearly yet or not, is capable of communicating its reason for being. Its capable of communicating its meaning, the meaning that was set into motion by means of the movement of creation, the movement of God.

There is absolutely nothing that is unconscious substance, whether it looks like a rock, whether it looks like a blade of grass, whether it is plastic, or whether it is a natural substance. If there is form, it has meaning, and it is capable of conveying that meaning to you, if you are willing to be still enough, and sensitive enough, to let it register with you. And its meaning is always Divine. I do not mean that it speaks in religious terms. But I mean that it expresses perfectly the intent of the Father. And it embodies the intent of the Father. It, therefore, embodies an indivisible, unconflicted intent. It embodies intelligence, and it is, therefore, a most wonderful thing to experience communion with things. The substance of these things, is living love, because that is the substance of God.

And, when you dare to become defenseless toward everything that you see, and when that little invitation is made, to allow it to share your space, you have the opportunity, not only of experiencing the marvelous meaning of those things, but you also have the opportunity to experience being loved by everything you see, because it is the active embodiment of Love. Some of you in this room, in moments of illumination or enlightenment, have had that experience. And it awaits the rest of you, and it is something to look forward to.

Now, you are embarking upon a specific practice of opening up to, and inviting communion with the elemental kingdom, with the fairies, and nature spirits and deva's, et cetera. You are indeed, inviting connection, and making room for them in your space. You are lowering your fences or defenses, if you will.

If there are others of you in the room who find what I am saying confirming a desire that you have in you, I encourage all of you to do likewise. To let there be an active defenseless invitation to have more of the Infinite creation of God register with you. And as you do, I encourage you to anticipate that whatever connections might occur, will constitute encounters with intelligence, more intelligence than you might normally have attributed to fairies. But, I also encourage you not to fear that they might be so much more intelligent than you, that they would not care to communicate with you, or would make you feel quite inferior.

In most cases, the character of fairies is quite angelic. And, the pictures you have of fairies with wings, is most appropriate, not because they actually have wings, but because of the fact that they are very much like angels, which you also conceive as having wings.

But I will tell you something else, and it is something you will have to be ready for: there is an inescapable expression of humor that fairies express, and they will promote in you a tendency to laugh. They will embody joy. And they will not stand for seriousness. And so, they will tickle your funny bone, and in doing so, will illuminate in your conscious awareness the fact that being Divine is a joyful, happy, fun thing, and not something sanctimonious and seriously reverent.

Indeed, fairies are real. Deva's are real. Nature spirits are real. And, that is all I will say about it today. But, indeed, I encourage you all to not be so sure that you are aware, or have a fairly good idea of how the Kingdom of God is going to appear to you. Be open for delightful surprises. Delightful surprises. Another reason that I suggest that as you continue to advance along your spiritual path, or should I say, undo your process of moving away from Home, you do it with more lightness than you have done it before, with more casualness. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you so much, that was wonderful.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I was delighted to listen to the last conversation, because, I have always felt so close to the nature spirits especially the birds. And I wanted to ask in relation to... I've asked upon occasion for healing, which I thought was, healing team activity, to take care of many of the birds that happen to hit the windows, and different things. And I've often experienced healing. Also I've asked for healings for all of the oak trees, which were infested. And so many things have worked out so well. Would those be attributed, basically then to the fairies, spirits of that nature?

ANSWER: No, indeed, you have by virtue of your request, you could say, specifically invoked the efforts of the healing team. And the responses you have experienced, have been as a result of the healing team. Continue...

QUESTION: Also, in connection with the oak trees? We are talking about the healing team?

ANSWER: That is correct. That does not mean that the Deva's are not attending to their business also. You must also understand, that when the healing team works, they are not only working with the, let us say, manifestation of disease. Let us say, they are also working with you in terms of helping reveal to you the natural, inherent, perfection of that which is being healed. Which is not the case with the Deva's. They are working primarily with the plant life itself, regardless of your clarity or lack of clarity. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Okay, well thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Do I have time for one more question?

ANSWER: It would be well to pass the microphone on at this point.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: We will be talking again.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My question is more personal in nature. Having about four months ago taken an intelligently irrational leap, and undone my very stable life, I find myself mid-leap, if I could describe it that way, and trusting the wisdom of my Beingness expressing this new aspect, and I feel fearless. And, I would very much appreciate if you had... I don't have a question per se.... but if you had a message for me I would be delighted.

ANSWER: Well, if you are at mid-leap, it is not a good idea for me to tell you, you have made a mistake. Because at this point it is absolutely essential for there to be follow through, landing, stability.

Now, the leap was appropriate, and I am not telling you that, just because you are in mid-leap, and I will tell you something different after you land. It is absolutely essential for you to maintain, and I mean by that, not undermine the feeling of the integrity of the actions that you have taken, to trust, as your life reconfigures around you. To identify your fulfillment, in new terms.

It is also absolutely essential for everything about your departure point, to be held innocent, and not to be held as the cause of your leap. It is essential for you to know that, your starting point and your ending point, are both manifestations of fulfillment, and both are valuable, and both are meaningful, even though one is no longer identifying your fulfillment. In other words, the departure point and the arrival point, are both innocent, both valuable. And if that is your frame of reference, you will experience harmony. You will be able to value them both, even though it is not practical to be at the departure point any longer.

There is a hymn that says, "From Glory Unto Glory." That is what the movement of fulfillment is, "From Glory Unto Glory." And it is not a matter of moving from, an absence of fulfillment, to fulfillment. Let judgment be absent, relative to the departure point and the reconfigured destination point.

It is not appropriate for you to arrive at a new configuration of fulfillment, as a means of escape from the old one. If that is the manner in which you arrive at the new configuration of fulfillment, you will approach the new fulfillment with a certain caution, because you will realize that at some point it will need to be a place to escape from, into a greater fulfillment. And also because your departure was a means of escape, you will deal with your point of arrival with a certain compulsive self-protection, that will cause you to lose the whole point, which is from fulfillment, to fulfillment, to fulfillment.

If it is seen that where you've left from is as valuable and as important as where you arrive at, there will be an inner evenness, an equilibrium, that will allow you to function with perspective and compassion, and a defenselessness that will allow you to absorb where you are, without denying where you were. And this is important. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I find myself working with the handicap children on Friday mornings, to teach them to square dance. At first, I didn't know how bad some of the children were, and we went ahead and taught them. But now, some of the teachers are telling us what the children are not capable of. But I wake up in the morning, with ideas of how to teach them. And I'm wondering what I'm doing there, or if you have a comment on that?

ANSWER: Only that, as I said earlier, it is most valuable for you to go into your encounters with them, your relationships with them, without preconceptions. And unfortunately, those who work on an on going basis with others who are, let us say, embracing less of their totality, than those that are caring for them, they develop a very definite picture of what is possible and what is not. In other words, they begin to accept what those children are presenting, as though that is the fact, and therefore, a true statement of their potential, and thus they loose their healing capacity in those children's lives.

I simply encourage you to work with them, not on the basis of what they present, but on the basis of having no preconceptions. Now, it is important to understand that, it is just as detrimental for you to have a specific concept of what they can do, as it is for their teachers to have a specific concept as to what they can't do. To have a specific more unlimited concept of what they can do, does not constitute being sensitive to them, does not constitute being willing to be truly present with them. It does not constitute being unconditional. And it does not constitute being in the place where you are susceptible to insight, a fresh perception of Truth in the moment, a perception of Truth that will constitute love penetrating their particular level of ignorance, and registering with them, in language that they can understand, respond to, and joy at. Yes you understand what I am saying.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Dear Raj, it's such a joy to be here. Thank you. I am working on a project for earth. And I would like to know whether you think the background for it is valid, and whether I should continue to put energy and time into it? There are a number of experts, in appropriate fields, who believe that there may be an ice age before global warming takes over. And I am sending out material on the subject to various ecology groups, and it is time consuming. I get very little response so far, not that I care about that. I just wonder if its worth doing. If there's validity for this idea of these experts?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you, that what you are engaged in, is a mixed bag. Indeed, there will not be an ice age before global warming. And so, the premise is incorrect. But the activity, is increasing the awareness of the need to be sensitive to the earth. And that is excellent. And so your efforts are not wasted.

Now, for yourself, you simply need to pay attention to whether or not this means, of contributing to, shall I say, better global awareness, is fulfilling to you, even though the fundamental premise that is being expressed is not accurate. As I said, you are not wasting your time, and it is a mixed bag. It is a means you have of effectively contributing, shall I say, being an effective presence on the globe. And it is important for you to know that, that is the case.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I wanted to ask a question pertaining to my dog. My dog was recently diagnosed to have cancer of the mouth. And I wanted to hear an explanation of that. And, then I thought that dogs didn't have egos.

ANSWER: Surprise, surprise!

QUESTION: They do?

ANSWER: Absolutely! Have you ever seen a dog pout? Have you ever heard of a dog unwinding the toilet paper throughout the house, because it was left home instead of being taken? These are manifestations of ego. And indeed, they are growing out of an ego level of operation, also. Indeed there is ego.

QUESTION: I had also heard that dogs often were kind of mirrors for their owners.

ANSWER: Your whole world is a mirror of you. But if you take that in a negative way, you can end up experiencing your world as though it is standing in judgment against you, and convicting you, rather than standing as a reflection of your infinitude, and as a reflection of what you Divinely are, that proves your innocence. You see, you see always with what you are looking with. And when you wake up with a lousy attitude, your world seems to reflect back to you, that it is justified to have that lousy attitude. And on the other hand, if you are going somewhere and you expect to have a parking place right in front of where you are going, you are likely to find a parking place there.

So let's be careful that in our metaphysical or spiritual expertise, we don't begin to use a principle against ourselves. The Truth always stands in favor of you. That's the end of his answer.

PAUL: Do you have a yes, but?

QUESTION: How can I help her?

ANSWER: You can claim for her, her Divine perfection, because indeed, she is as much the expression of God as you are. You need not to join...

PAUL: ...It is a her? That's me Paul...

ANSWER: ...You do not need to join her in her current self-experience. And your clear perception of what is true about her, coupled with an awareness that this problem is an illegitimate imposition upon what she Divinely is, by her ego, you will be that presence, which is the presence of love that is healing. You can afford to take no other stand, whether she agrees to receive it, or not.

Tell her, that she is a Divine idea in the infinite mind of God, eternal, and eternally perfect, and that is the Truth about her. And do it firmly but lovingly. Tell her the truth about herself. And point out to her, that there is nothing that can stand in the face of the omnipotence of God successfully. And that she, along with you, can expect healing, because that is what is Divinely natural. And love her.

And, when and if you are bothered or plagued by what the vet has said, acknowledge that indeed this is the furthest that his vision takes him. But it doesn't tell the whole truth, and then, you stick with the whole Truth. I would also encourage you to ask your guide to have your healing team work with her, relative to this problem, daily or nightly. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have another personal question. I was wondering if you can tell me, when might be the best time for me to retire from my present job, after July of '91, or would it be better to wait til '92?

ANSWER: In all ways, it would be best to wait until '92, both from a financial standpoint and also from a standpoint of, I will say, your own readiness to retire without giving up the ship, if you will. During that period of time, you will find a new activity emerging that will occupy you after you retire, and thus you will find yourself not twiddling your thumbs, adjusting to retirement. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I've been encouraged, pressured would be too strong a word, by a contingent of the people here, to ask a question about a teacher, who has been coming to some peoples attention lately, called Telok. And, I know that you're familiar with Telok and his activities. And so, rather than asking any specific question, I would just ask you if you would care to share any remarks that would be good for the group, as a whole, and especially for those people who aren't familiar with this. And maybe also, if you could comment on just what the nature of the light is, that Telok is bringing to his students. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are sure you are not asking for an endorsement? I will simply say this, the experience is a valid experience. I cannot explain to you what the light is, you must pay attention to the experience of it, as unconditionally as possible, so that as a result of the experience, its meaning might become disclosed to you.

It is time to be through with intellectual explanations. And it is time for there to be a greater trust on the part of everyone to, dare to experience and pay attention to experience, with brand new eyes. With the unconditional curious eyes of a babe, that is the way you will all become familiar with your greater capacity to be aware Divinely.

I will simply say that, Telok is not a charlatan. He is not deceptive. The experience of light, that those who encounter him have, is an experience of literally illumination, a heightened spiritual experience, whether or not such an experience is of interest is a purely individual matter. And, I always encourage everyone to pay attention within themselves to their natural inclinations and motivations, relative to what they explore in the process of their awakening. And I always encourage you to trust it, and not to take the word of another. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'd like to thank you Raj, for your answer to my question yesterday. This is an extension of it.

I wonder if you see any success for me for writing the stories I was discussing yesterday? I have a whole book full of them written, and another whole book full of them in my mind. I can write so many hours a day, but then I need something else to do. I do love working in groups with people. I'd like to start a metaphysical support group for women, but I haven't had the moxie, guts, or courage, or whatever it takes, to start it up, or get a syllabus going for it. Do you see any success for me working in the writing field? And what do you see that I might do with the rest of my retirement time?

ANSWER: Well, the rest of your retirement time is likely to cover a great period of time, and I see you doing more than one thing.

But right now, what I encourage you to do more than anything else, is to learn to be quiet with your world, and to be present with it, to learn to become still. I know that you are conditioned to be busy, to be conscientiously, and intelligently active. But there is a time here ahead of you, where it's going to be important for you to learn how to be quiet enough, if I may put it this way, to be sensitive to the fairies. I mean to be quiet enough to be sensitive to the subtleties of the fullness of Gods expression, that is right here in your world.

The writing will take care of itself. Learn to use your mind, to pay attention, and not to use it exclusively for reasoning and thinking. I am not saying stop thinking and reasoning, but do your best to bring about a balance between thinking and paying attention, because it is when you are paying attention that you learn. And the fuller disclosure of the presence of God in your world, will dawn on you when you are paying attention, and then indeed you will have something worthwhile to think about, so that you can arrive at a point of being able to communicate what you have experienced. Begin to value quietness, tranquillity and alert awareness. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj, I'll give that considerable study and thought and quietness.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask a question. How does the body of light, or the energy body, interface with or make its correspondence or connection with the dense body, which we call the physical body?

ANSWER: They are one and the same thing. They don't interface, because they are not separate. When you are observing the light body, which you are doing when you see any form at all, whether it is what you call another persons body, or the body of a building, or a wall, or of sheet rock, et cetera. When you look at these things, you are seeing the real thing, you are seeing the ultimate thing. Understand, that creation isn't hidden from you, it is just that you are perceiving it through such limited lenses, if I may put it that way.

It is very important to understand, that there is not a dense or material body, behind which stands the archetype or real body, as though there were somehow a gap between the two. You are either seeing the body of light, as a body of light, or you are seeing the body of light through a glass darkly, if you will.

You see, this is very important to understand, you are either seeing Reality clearly or unclearly, but it is Reality you are seeing. It is the Movement of Creation that you are experiencing, it isn't somewhere else, and it isn't something different. It is identically the same thing you are experiencing now, without any distorting bias being given to the experience of it.

This is a very simple example, but if you put on a pair of red glasses and look at a white horse, you will see a red horse. But the red horse is the white horse, and you will say, "well how can the red horse be the white horse?" "I know the difference between red and white and the horse is red." But it is the white horse. And, if you take the glasses off, you will see that it never was red, even though your experience of it was. Why is this important to understand? Because, if you are wearing the red glasses and you do not understand that it is the glasses that are providing a spectral bias to your experience of the whiteness of the horse, you will attempt to correct what is wrong with the horse, much to it's dismay. You will try to correct something that is not in need of correction, because you do not understand where the interference with the perception of perfection or the white horse is occurring.

Likewise, if it dawns on you that you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, that you are already the Christ, that you are and always have been innocent, and that your body is a body of light, and that is what is present right now, that is what is truly going on right now, then you will not be sucked into a belief that you are unworthy, and that some correction of something in you needs to occur before you will become worthy. And you will not be sidetracked into programs of self-development or self-improvement.

"If this, that I am experiencing is not a dense body, but a body of light, and if I am really the Christ, if I am the full direct expression of the Father from whom nothing has been withheld, then there is much for me to be curious about, rather than racking my brain to find out what is wrong with me, I need to evoke a certain curiosity about everything that is going on. Here I thought I understood it all pretty well, and now I find out, that there is a lot I do not grasp. And so, I'm going to employ curiosity to reduce my resistance to what is really there. I'm going to employ curiosity to undo my conviction as to the meaning of things."

There isn't an interface between you and God. It is all God. God is all there is to you, experiencing being conscious. That is the fact. And it is an infinite fact, which you are not experiencing infinitely at the moment, but it is already the fact. And as you become curious about that, you will begin to find yourself, the only word I can use is, remembering. Remembering how to experience infinitely. It is like, having put something away for safe keeping, and then forgetting where on earth you put it. You know you put it somewhere so it would be safe, and by damn it's safe, not even you can find it. But, when you remember where it is, in that instant of remembering, you realize there is no process you must go through, other than going to the place where it is, and retrieving it.

Likewise, as you begin to remember the feel and the activity of being conscious infinitely, there won't be a process to go through, you will just say, "Oh yes," and you'll do it. But it is the act of curiosity that literally opens this door, this remembering. And it is a remembering of a function, of an activity of consciousness, if you will, it is not a remembering of a piece of data, or fact.

Reality doesn't interface with your limited experience of life. Reality is the wholeness of what you are experiencing, in a very partial fashion. The Holy Spirit, that of you which you are not embracing, and is held in trust, while you dally with a limited perception of things, does not interface with your limited perception. It constitutes the territory, if you will, of that limited perception and more. And the little boundary, that seems to effectively separate you from what you are in your totality, is constituted of nothing more than, conditioned beliefs taken as fact. And when that little boundary disappears, you will experience the fact that, your present sense of yourself is an integral part of what you are in your totality. And, therefore, there is not truly an interface. You are what the Holy Spirit is. And you are what the movement of conscious Being, called God Being the Movement of Creation, Is.

And there isn't an interface between this apparently organic, dense, dark body and your body of light. This dense body, is the body of light, perceived in a very limited fashion. It is everything that you are already aware of, you might say, enhanced, that you will experience, in the state of full illumination or total enlightenment. It is this very wall, that you will experience when you are totally awake, without any sense of limiting density to it.

You are on the third floor of this building, it is well for the floor to support you, is it not, at this height? When you are totally awake, it will still serve purpose for you to be able to be on the third floor of this building at times, and when that is the case the floor will support you. But when it does not serve purpose for this floor to support you, you will be able to allow yourself to sink through it, and float gently through the second floor right on down to the first floor, and leave the building. It will serve whatever fulfills purpose. But it will not constitute for you, a boundary, or a limitation.

Also, it is not only this two legged, two armed body that you call body, that is a body of light, it is the floor, it is the ceiling, it is whatever has substance, that is constituted of living love, that is experienced as illumination or light. Even what you call air, which appears to be invisible to you is illuminated. You would say that it has a sparkle to it, but not a distracting one.

Your body, that you are currently experiencing and interpreting as a purely physical, organic form, is the body of light, perceived through the effects of the sense of separation from your capital "S" Self. The fact that, from within the three-dimensional frame of reference, you seem to be in everything, instead of everything being embraced within what you are, the elements of time and space, and the fact that that which is absolutely indivisible, forth-dimensionally or truly speaking, is always experienced with polarities from within the three-dimensional frame of reference.

Now, listen carefully: waking up does not constitute an escape from a material universe into a spiritual reality, that is somewhere else. It is constituted of an inner or mental shift from limited perception to unlimited, direct experience. And when that inner shift occurs, the deception that you are confronted with, part of which involves your interpreting your body as a physical, organic form, will shift also. It isn't that your body needs to be exalted, it is that the shift of consciousness, needs to occur. It is a shift of consciousness that will bring all illusion to an end, and cause you to be able to experience the reality of the Movement of Creation that you have been experiencing in a limited way, without any limits whatsoever.

"A Course In Miracles" states that you are not a body, and that is correct. You are pure conscious awareness, in which all experience of substance and form is embraced. And waking up constitutes a shift from body orientation, to mind orientation. And in that shift, the polarities will disappear. The organic, limited forms, together with there capacity to deteriorate and die, will cease to be the experience. It will seem to you, as though everything reconfigures. But it is like being a person with perfect vision, who puts on a pair of glasses that had a prescription for someone with very poor eye sight, and you look at everything and everything is a mess. You cannot make out anything. And you take off the glasses and suddenly everything is perfectly crystal clear. The shift of consciousness, is an equivalent shift into the experience of Reality with crystal clarity, and it will be the same thing you were looking at before.

It is so important to understand this, because it is right where you are that you need to be being curious to see the Kingdom of Heaven, Reality. And it is with your present experience of mind, that you are to look for it. The ego boundary, that seems to close the part of your mind that you are experiencing, off from, what you are in your totality, is valid. That which is bound within ego structures, is valid. It's really You. And that's why each of you has the capacity, even in your limitation, to recognize Truth, and to remember Home. To remember a fullness, a wholeness, a sanity, that you aren't experiencing at the moment. And you start with where you are, and what you have, because all of it is Real, and all of it is to be valued. And it is the conditioned thinking about it, that is the fly in the ointment.

All the materials are at hand, at this very instant, for you to wake up. All of the essentials are present, that are needed to wake up. And the fundamental element needed, is the element of curiosity, to experience it.

It is my task, if you will, to share with you, that it is present, so that you can justify, becoming curious. And so that you might also, be relieved of the belief that it will require a great study, in order to accomplish it. All it requires is being willing to pay attention, right where you are.

There isn't any interface between, the Real and the unreal, the Divine and the human, because that kind of duality doesn't even exist. The human is the Divine, seen in a limited manner. The illusion, is the Reality, seen in a limited manner, and treated as though it were the totality of existence. There isn't an interface, because there never has been a separation.

Now, can you all see why forgiveness is so justifiable? Because no one has ever been the guilty sinner, that he or she has believed he or she was. Love, the willingness to recognize that which is real in each and everything. Where? Right here. When? Right now. Why? Just because. For no good reason. And you are likely to hear me say that more and more often, just because. If its the Truth, it's the Truth. You don't get a gold star for being You. You don't get a gold star for waking up. And, you also don't get a black star for being asleep. But why not be awake. And why not embrace your fearlessness. Why not embrace your peace. Why not embrace your joy. Just because! Any justification for not doing it is an irrelevant waste of time, and constitutes the buying into a concept that has no validity to it, no matter how well your conditioned thinking can support it.

We really do need some explorers, who are willing to be totally irresponsible, as I have said, from the ego's standpoint, and dare to access their Divinity and their joy, when from the standpoint of your conditioned thinking, it doesn't seem justifiable. But I will tell you: there are people who you think are crazy, who are absolutely happy in the middle of what you perceive to be chaos. And there are people who are able to operate under conditions of great stress, without being flustered by stress that you perceive, and functioning as agents for change or resolution of the chaos you perceive. And that is because they have dared to be irresponsible, and allow themselves to be at peace, in spite of the apparent chaos.

Dare to be happy, regardless of what is happening. And you will become the embodiment of joy, manifest in the world. And you will become the embodiment of, that which is an active agent for change. What, change in a material world, of a material world? Or a change of inner decision, as to what is going to be believed, by those who are around you, and distressed, by that which is not hooking you, so that more appropriate behavior in Reality can occur.

I'm very glad you asked the question. Again, there is no interface between the body of light and the apparently dense, organic body you are experiencing. They are one and the same, and the one that is the same with, is the body of light. The presence of the expression of God, identifying the presence of your individuality perfectly. And as you begin to be curious to experience it, because it is the thing that is really right here, you will find healing occurring. It could happen in the twinkling of an eye. It could happen over, what you would call a period of time. But lets get down to the business of, the joyful discovery of that which is Real, right where you are, right in the moment you're in. And dare to have a little fun, in the process. Paul has noticed that my timing is impeccable. It has been my joy, to be with you this weekend.

QUESTION: We thank you for the Truth.

ALL: We thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

Gathering In Hood River, OR –1990

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

OPENING: Good morning. There's one thing I want to suggest to everyone here, and that is that throughout this weekend do not forget to laugh, do not forget to be happy. And when you leave do not forget to laugh, and do not forget to be happy. Because indeed moving down your spiritual path, engaging in your process of Awakening and enlightenment is not meant to be serious and heavy duty.

All of you are conditioned to approach something that is important to you as though it is a task at hand that you must be deadly serious about. When in actuality what you are confronted with is the opportunity for expansion, for growth, for a fuller experience of real fulfillment. And that never comes with a heavy heart, with a heavy mind, with heavy duty work. And so do not allow your conditioning to cause you to—out of habit—work hard at your Awakening.

Now, everyday you wake up, and whether you think about it or not you start your day with a premise, a mind set, if you will, "well, another day on the treadmill," or "wow, I wonder what today is going to bring." And your mind set—your premise—will absolutely govern what you experience. And so it is well to pay attention to what your conscious or unconscious premises are as you start your day, or as we start this weekend. Because, as I said, they will absolutely govern the way you experience what happens.

Now, I will tell you that my premise for this weekend, and my premise for every moment is that we, all of us, are smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, right in the middle of Reality, with a capital "R", no matter how you have been conditioned to perceive it. And every single one of us is the Son or Daughter of God, absolutely sinless, absolutely perfect, absolutely guiltless, absolutely innocent. Everything that will follow from my words will be based upon that premise. So that this weekend can serve to allow you to release your self-inflicted sense of guilt, your self-inflicted sense of separation from Reality, or from God, or from that which is True. So that you might go home with a clearer sense of who you really Are, and what all of this world and universe Is, so that when you begin your day you may have a new premise.

You have come with a sense of yourself. Some of you with a sense that life is going very well for you. Some of you that you have major problems that cause you to doubt your integrity, that cause you to doubt your innocence—and you can even point to those who will verify that you are not innocent—and thus undermine your capacity to embrace yourself lovingly and with appreciation.

But I will tell you something: not one of you has ever stopped being the Child of God, the direct expression of God. And no matter what you have come to believe about yourself, it hasn't changed who you Are. I will tell you something else: the only thing that keeps you from experiencing your divinity, your absolute Christhood, and the only thing that keeps you from experiencing your world as the Kingdom of Heaven—your Universe as the Kingdom of Heaven—is your conditioning, your beliefs, your mind sets, your premises upon which you base your perceptions of your day.

And so there is cause for joy right now as we proceed into the weekend, because we are here to uncover your divinity and to uncover, let us say, the mind sets or beliefs which are causing you to misinterpret your world and yourself and thus blind yourself to your fulfillment.

Mind you, I'm not talking about intellectual fulfillment, or conceptual fulfillment. I'm talking about your coming into a place within yourself where you give yourself permission to embrace yourself as divine, as guiltless, as innocent, as having absolute integrity. Where you do not have to deal with witch messages—w-i-t-c-h, witch messages that your conditioning causes to roll around in your mind undermining your ability to love yourself and feel good.

If you do not leave this weekend with anything other than an awareness that you are suppose to feel good, it will have been worth it. Because that will become part of your premise for your day—each day.

It is a pleasure to be together with you.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: For a long time I've accepted the idea that physical ailments or disease can somehow be a manifestation of something that needs healing on some other level, like an attitude or something. I'm having a lot of problems with my legs and to me legs are a symbol of moving on, of change and all of that.

ANSWER: It is part of your understanding, isn't it?

QUESTION: Oh yes! A-a-a-a, okay!

ANSWER: Now, all of you are conditioned to understand things. You want to understand the universe. You want to understand the body. Your scientist want to understand everything. And this intense desire to understand, engages your mentalities in such a way and to such a degree that it becomes impossible to be still. Now I have said before, that you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now those who have a metaphysical back ground have taken the statement, “Ye shall know the Truth and the Truth shall make you free,” and they have taken that as an intellectual process. If they think the Truth, their thinking of the Truth will create a better body, or a better wallet, or bank account, that it will create a new car, or a tennis court, or whatever. And so the valuing of understanding and thinking has become an impediment to waking up, because it has negated the value of silence.

Yielding to the Father’s Will is a fundamental premise of Christianity. It is a fundamental premise of other religions as well. It is when you stop taking on personal responsibility for thinking the Truth—so as to bring about a desired result—that you have the chance to become quiet enough to allow Truth to reveal itself to you. In that revealing, you come into your peace and an inner conviction that isn’t generated by intellectual processes, a conviction that is part and parcel of your feeling your essential integrity more strongly, because you have come Home into your Soul, if you will, and are not over valuing your ability to think clearly.

As a result of that self revealing of Truth to you, within you, because you’ve been quiet, you find the fear and the doubt and the conditioned thinking simply dissolving, because it makes no sense whatsoever in the face of this conviction that unfolds within you. If indeed you are already the Daughter of God, then you are already deserving of your perfect health, and you do not need to earn it by right thinking.

Now I am not saying that there is value in wrong thinking, or that there is value in unclear thinking. That which obscures your ability to experience Reality at this moment in its absolute clarity is your unclear thinking. But I’m telling you that what will clear up your thinking is, if you will stop thinking long enough for Truth to reveal itself to you, so that you may indeed know what clarity is, together with this conviction as to its truth, because you are connecting with your Soul. Then you will know what to think that is True. But your thinking will not create a healing, it will be the reconnection with your Soul that does the healing.
Continue.

QUESTION: I think you’ve answered my question. Did you feel there is something else coming up?

ANSWER: I would encourage you to be still for just a moment and pay attention to the subtle “yes, but,” that is there. Not as a challenge, but it is simply there.

QUESTION: Okay! Yes, but, I feel like I know what you’re talking about, because I feel like that’s what I’ve been doing for the last four years. And it’s wonderful. And I guess I’m wondering why there hasn’t been more manifestation on a physical level of the change that I feel on that other level.

ANSWER: Indeed it is because it is not yet clear enough to you that you deserve the healing. And that you deserve it just because. You deserve it for no good reason. You deserve it because you are indeed the current, direct, expression of God.

I will tell you something: In the Bible there is a series of comments about the temporary nature of man, that he is born, and grows, and then like the grass, withers and dies, and is there but for a moment. And it ends up asking, “What is man, that Thou, God, art mindful of him?” Why would you be mindful of this puny, little, temporary, transient me? But you must remember that the answer is, because this is my beloved Daughter, or this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Don’t forget that you are the Son or Daughter of God. Don’t forget that you are His direct expression. You are the Father embodied by virtue of the act of the Father in Being All There Is.

Now, true what I am saying clarifies your understanding. But the reason for clarifying the understanding is so that you may let go of a personal sense of responsibility for your health or well-being, and yield into the truth of what I have said—relax into it. You don’t have to deserve your good. You don’t have to earn it. It is your birthright. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Thank you for everything.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You’ve answered a great deal of my question I had already. I think to kind of follow on that same area of healing, because I was going to ask about how to get a healing consciousness more often.

ANSWER: Ah, I am going to interrupt you here, and I will let you continue. But, there is a poem that says:

A grateful heart a garden is,
Where there is always room for,
every lovely God-like grace, to come to perfect bloom.

Gratitude felt, when your ego and your conditioned thinking tells you that there is no justification for it because you are ill, or you are experiencing this ache or pain, gratitude felt right in the face of that is what will help cut through and allow for the joy to emerge in you, that will signify a connection with your Soul, your essential Being, and contribute to the healing.

Don’t worry I am going to manage to bring the topic of joy into everything that we talk about this weekend. And now you understand that there is a connection between gratitude and joy. And if you say, “Well, things are so rugged I have really nothing to be grateful for.” Well, think again. If your toe is hurting and your finger is not, can you not be grateful for the finger that is not hurting? If you are in pain, in your chair, in your home and not in a hospital bed, do you not have that to be grateful for?

There is always something going on that is not wrong, something that is right that you can be grateful for. And gratitude being a form of joy is what creates the crack in the problem, or the illness, and allows for the penetration of Truth, and the further penetration of joy that will result “in your experiencing Reality more clearly—as healing.” continue...

QUESTION: I’m going to ask you about, that’s about myself. I’m concerned about people who are ill that you would like to extend a sense of healing to. And they are not feeling gratitude nor joy about being ill. What is the best...

ANSWER: Oh, never feel grateful for being ill. Continue.

QUESTION: What I meant was, they’re not feeling any gratitude about the situation they find themselves in. What is your approach to very ill people...

ANSWER: I realize that this sounds very blunt, perhaps even cold. But you must understand that it is the fact. “You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink.” If someone is unwilling to pursue the element that will heal them, if they are unwilling to see the possibility of healing in the face of what they are experiencing, you cannot make them change their mind. And it is not your responsibility to change their mind.

What is it your responsibility to do? And this applies to everyone. It is your responsibility, yourself, to stay in touch with your Soul, to stay in touch with your joy, to not see this, let us say, crotchety, unyielding, unwilling individual as justification for your releasing your joy—as justification for your being depressed. You will only be depressed if you think that it is your responsibility to be an affective person in their life that changes their life, as though you are responsible for what they think. And if you cannot get them to change their attitude, their problem becomes your fault.

I will tell you something: I cannot make any of you wake up. But I don’t labor under the idea that it is my personal responsibility to enlighten you. I will sit here as long as you are willing to listen, and I will share the Truth with you. But I don’t labor under the idea that it is my responsibility to make you see the Truth.

One YIELDS into the Kingdom of Heaven. One allows himself or herself into the clearer experience of Reality. And the reason one does that is because there is a desire within you to do it. And if that desire is not there, I can talk till I am blue in the face, and my words will do nothing other than provide the environment in which it becomes easier for you to change your mind. But it never becomes a situation where it is possible for me to change your mind.

Now, what better thing do you have to do than be the presence of love, to be the presence of joy, to be the transparency for Truth, to be the transparency for the Will of the Father—because it really constitutes your will? What better thing do you have to do than to be full of your integrity, whether anyone else is enjoying it or not?

The sun comes up everyday, and there are those who stay in out of the sun. It does not matter to the sun whether it is avoided or not. Because it is fulfilling it's purpose by shining. And you feel your joy by fulfilling your purpose of being the transparency for Truth, and feeling your integrity. And everyone is blessed, whether they choose to receive the blessing or not. What you suffer from is a false sense of responsibility. The idea that you can and must be an active agent for change in that persons life.

And I will tell you something: That is the way codependency starts. Because it does not remain clear that that individual that is not open and willing is the only one who has access to the switch of giving permission within themselves to hear and embrace the Truth. Not you. You have access to your own switch. You are the only one who can give yourself permission to allow Reality to register with you. I, by virtue of relating with you in light of who you Truly Are, can create, if you will, an environment in which you can give that permission more easily.

But I will tell you, there are millions who implore me to help them. And if it did not remain clear with me that I am not the one who has access to the switch, I would become smothered and burdened by the beginnings of codependency. And I would not be in a position of clarity that would be able to help, by saying, "You are the Christ. You are the Son or Daughter of God. You are that which embodies and is the expression of God. You are the one with the integrity. And it is out of that integrity that you must begin to dare to act."

And if you do not choose to do it yet, I say, "Okay." Because, you see, it doesn't change you. It doesn't cause you to be different from the Son or Daughter of God. And so, if you engage in illusion for a little bit longer, it doesn't change Reality, and it doesn't condemn you. It simply constitutes an illusory experience. But you're still the perfect, sinless, innocent expression of God.

And so, when you are working with these individuals who are imploring you for help, but are unwilling to receive it, don't labor under a false sense of responsibility and kick yourself around the block. And remember that they are absolutely divine, and they cannot change that fact. And so, their illusion is not affecting them truly, or actually.

And then there will be a degree of honesty in your relationship. And you, recognizing their divinity, even though they are not recognizing it, will be a presence for them that will not join with them in their sense of their weakness. And that is strengthening to them at the level of what they divinely Are.

And as I said, that makes it easier for them to make an inner change. But that is their responsibility, not yours. You're simply to be the transparency for Truth, the presence of joy and love that is based upon a correct recognition of who they really Are, rather than who they would convince you, or attempt to convince you that they are. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I am really grateful for that.

ANSWER: You are indeed, welcome.

And I will say, for everyone's benefit, that what I have expressed here doesn't just apply to the elderly, or the ill. It applies to husbands, wives, children. Because, in one way or another, everyone is struggling with their sense of who they Are. And everyone, to one degree or another, is believing less than what is true about themselves, and binding themselves in that way to an illusion.

And not one of you can be the Truth for another. Not one of you can be the responsible party for causing an act of the giving of permission for the truer sense of things in another. And as you let go of that sense of responsibility that you burden yourself with, and sometimes bury yourself with, and you clearly relate with the son, or the daughter, or the husband, or the wife, or the parents, conveying that they have integrity and that they have the capacity to give the permission, you will strengthen them, even if they are so pissed off that they could scream.

That anger is the ego's last attempt to create a codependent situation where everybody loses a sense of their integrity, but somehow creates a feeling of togetherness that very often is called family, which doesn't allow each member of the family to blossom and grow in his or her own right. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I think most people are of the opinion that an out of tune violin does not create as beautiful a music as an in tune violin. And using that analogy, applying it to the physical body, does an out of tune body inhibit hearing from your guides, or creates any kind of barrier?

ANSWER: Absolutely not! Absolutely not! You may adopt an attitude or mindset that says, "I cannot possibly hear guidance when I am in such pain." But that is like saying, "I cannot become centered because the clock is ticking so loudly," or "I cannot meditate and become centered because of the traffic outside." That is just a concept, that is just an idea put into words. But you believe your words, and you behave accordingly. That is your premise, "I cannot become centered and go into my inner quietness when there is so much distraction." You could just as easily say, "I can easily go within and become still in spite of the noise, regardless of the noise, or sounds, or the distractions." And then you would act accordingly. Because then you would give yourself permission to become centered, to become still.

Now, agreed, when there is intense pain, it is very distracting. But it is indeed possible to become still and to become centered in spite of the pain. And as a result of becoming centered, find the pain dissolving and disappearing, and whatever is causing the pain to also disappear.

You must all realize how completely you govern yourself by your words and your ideas. Realizing this will uncover to you power and authority that you have, because you can say other words, can't you? You can say new words that express something other than your habit of thinking. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I guess what I would really like to ask is how I can drop all of the struggle, and be in the joy?

ANSWER: If I gave you a technique, you would work the technique to death. It would become part of the struggle. I will tell you literally, there is only one thing you can do, it is: Give up. Just stop the struggle.

Have you ever picked up a child that didn't want to be picked up, who goes absolutely limp, and there's no place to take grab hold of him or her? And try as you might you have to put the child down. You must be willing to give up like that. The child who struggles against being picked up, provides wonderful hand-holds. It is easy to get a hold of a child who is struggling. But the one who is absolutely non-resistant is almost impossible to deal with.

Now, of course, this means, according to your conditioned thinking, becoming totally irresponsible. Which of course is not acceptable. There's no integrity in irresponsibility. There's integrity in work, and struggle, and trying, and becoming. Right? But to just let go, to just give up, to yield? Why your ego and your conditioned thinking says, "What are you yielding into? You'd better find out before you yield in." Because that way you won't be totally out of control." And it keeps the struggle going, doesn't it?

The great value of yielding up human will, willfulness, is that you are able to succumb to the Will of God. You are able to be still enough to feel the Movement of the Will of God as your will. And it constitutes an inner experience of integrity.

And I will put it in another way: It constitutes an experience of being at Home with You, congruent with You at the very essence of your Being. And that experience only comes in the middle of peace. That is why the practice of going into your closet and communing with the Father in secret, or in the silence, is so valuable. This is why meditation, of any sort, that allows you to arrive at a stable, secure experience of quiet peace. That is why that is so important.

All of you are conditioned, especially in the Western world, to being a self-made-man. And now that women are on the march for their rights, they are wanting to become self-made-women. And I encourage you to follow the men down that path.

You, because you are already the Son or Daughter of God, already have your integrity in tact. And if you will simply become still enough to connect with it, you will begin to feel it. And you will discover that you may act out from it, instead of reaching out side of yourself to get it, by means of consciously directed willfulness.

Now what is willfulness? Willfulness is an act of conscious awareness, a controlling act of conscious awareness, a claiming of a birthright that has been arrived at through intellectual reasoning, without ever having become quiet enough to connect with your Soul and feel your already existing integrity. And that is why willfulness puts you out of sync with God. Because it puts you out of sync with your Self. And you are God Self expressed.

And I mean to be very careful here. You are the self expression of God. God is all there is of you. But you cannot at this moment look at yourself and say, "I am God." Because your conditioned and tiny ego oriented thinking will miss use that statement. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I think you're terrific!

ANSWER: You are correct.

QUESTION: I know.

ANSWER: And so are you.

QUESTION: I have some confusion in reading your book. Some of the phrases that you use I don't understand. I was hoping you would explain, "Universal harmonies of your Being. Conscious Being as Mind..."

ANSWER: Let's take them one at a time.

QUESTION: Oh, Good.

ANSWER: The first one was?

QUESTION: "Universal harmonies of your Being."

ANSWER: Ah-h-h, yes. You all think of yourself as being confined by the outline of your bodies. You identify as the body, because that is what you have sensor experience of. And this is part of the misperception. By virtue of preoccupation with the sensory data of the body, you neglect an ever present factor, which is that you are conscious of these sensory feelings. This consciousness that is conscious of it is unlimited. Not one of you has ever found the edge of your awareness, or a limit to what you are able to embrace, because you can look out at the night sky and see objects light years away.

The infinite harmonies of your Being. How could you not have infinite harmonies? You are not a finite experience of Being. Your Self is infinite. And indeed, the process of Awakening constitutes a shift from identification solely with the body to a primary identification with yourself as consciousness—that awareness in which all experiences of form including your body are going on.

So the infinite harmonies of the Kingdom of Heaven, which you are able to conceive of as being infinite, constitute the infinite harmonies of you, because you are not tiny, you are not finite. If there is any harmony you are experiencing anywhere, it is part of the infinite harmony of your Being. That's the end of that answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. “Conscious Being as Mind?”

ANSWER: Ah-h-h. Instead of conscious being as a body, instead of a body that has evolved for itself a brain that somehow has allowed conscious thought processes to occur where the experience of consciousness is some form of extension of physical evolution. You're not conscious as a body, you are not consciousness as a body that is conscious, you are consciousness as a Mind, with a capital “M”. And it is capitalized to define God, the infinite Mind which is the only Mind, and therefore must be that Mind which you are experiencing at the moment but defining in such a finite way.

Being conscious as Mind, means, being conscious as that which is infinite. A Course In Miracles says, “I am not a body. I am free to be as God created me”—as Mind. The last two words are not part of the statement in the Course. But that is the meaning. You are free to be that pure conscious intelligent awareness of being that is the direct expression of the infinite intelligence that God is.

“Conscious Being as Mind.” Those are words which help you to make, or begin to make a shift from body identification to consciousness identification. Continue.

QUESTION: The last one is, “Being out from Mind as Mind.”

ANSWER: Indeed, when you take time to become still, to go within into the silence, you find yourself standing at the threshold of Being, with a capital “B”. It constitutes your standing at the first clear experience of who you are as conscious awareness. It is the threshold over which the Movement of Creation, the Movement of God comes into expression. When one does not relinquish that centered perspective, even while continuing to engage in his or her daily activities, one is being out from Mind, out from pure undistorted awareness as Mind. Because there is not the identification with the body, even though the body has not disappeared.

Right now Paul is coming out from Mind, not identifying himself as body. He is fully aware of the movements his body is making, but he is not acting out from the body. And he is also not self-conscious, even as I'm sitting here talking about him, because he is not identifying as a personality. Interestingly enough, he opts for time to be a body still. He has the right not to be on the job all the time, he says. As though there were something more pleasurable, even though what he experiences when he is identifying with the body is vulnerability and fear. He recognizes that it is stupid, but he insists upon it anyway.

Now he is getting self-conscious and so we will take a break.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: My question is: Is there another place besides Earth where there are spiritual beings living as we do now?

ANSWER: Absolutely. As you do and as you don't. I will put it this way: The Universe is peopled with divine ideas, conscious identity, conscious Individualities. And the way they live there depends upon exactly how much of Reality they are allowing to register with them.

You must understand that no matter where one is in the Universe, one is in the middle of Reality. And one is experiencing it either as the Kingdom of Heaven, or one is experiencing it as whatever his mindsets allow him to perceive of the Kingdom of Heaven. Again it is important to know that infinity is full of nothing more and nothing less than the uninhibited full expression of God. There isn't truly a space in which unreality is occurring. There is Reality perceived correctly, or Reality misperceived.

But to answer your question specifically: Yes there are other conscious Individualities, spiritual Identities occupying your Universe. Not just your Universe, but "The Universe" in its infinity. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I would like to ask you for some clarification, if I may. Yesterday, Sally had asked me to contact my guide to obtain some information in regards to an experience she is having. It appears as though she's had a lump, or a thickening in her throat, and she wanted to know the cause of it.

Well, after I had some quiet time last night, I put the question to George, and I got the information back. But about half way through the answer it changed from very clear words into meanings or feelings. And what I found is that I had to use my own words to describe the information in order to pass it on to Sally. And this is the first time since I've had communication with George that I've had to do this. So my question to you is: Can you tell me if the information that I did convey to her using my words, was indeed correct?

ANSWER: Indeed, you conveyed the meanings clearly and perfectly, and for the sake of everyone else, George is the name of your guide, correct?

QUESTION: That's correct.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: And may I ask you a follow up on this? I realize that the outcome of this information—probably Sally needs to make the decision herself as to how to deal with it..

ANSWER: Absolutely.

QUESTION: But what can I do as her friend? How can I help her to realize this?

ANSWER: This is a point at which to be very careful. Let—as I said earlier—yourself be the simple transparency for truth. Your fearless willingness to listen within to find answers, your lack of fear around an answer is bound to support her fearlessness in making her own decisions in coming to an awareness of what is appropriate for herself.

And as long as you entrust her to her divinity, you will not contribute to a state of co-dependency. You will not contribute to her weakness, but you will contribute to her clearer experience of her integrity if indeed she is willing to give herself permission to experience it. Your lack of fear, your peace, your calmness and your lack of fear to be clear will be inspiring to her. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have a question about my career. And I feel fortunate that I have known for a long time that my career is music, and have known that I have a purpose in doing music that will help to heal peoples misperceptions of Reality. And for a number of years...

ANSWER: You may know that that is the potential of the music. And you may know that that is what may happen, but do not let that become the goal, else you will write to meet the goal instead of writing what is spontaneously emerging from you. It is what is spontaneously emerging from you that is healing. It is that the music expresses an inner connectedness that causes the music to be healing. But the moment you shift up into your head and try to write music that is healing, it will not. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you. I realize that I can't be attached to the specific results that it's going to have on people, that I can only write what it is in me to write, and put that out, and allow each person who hears it to have whatever effect on them that does.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: My question is: I've been for some years writing this music, but have not done much as far as putting it out, and now am finally in a position where I'm going to be able to. I've just completed building a recording studio in my home and am going to be able to do that. In the meantime, I have been continuing to play music in public with a band, and that has been a very rewarding experience for me doing that. I've enjoyed it a lot and I'm making some money at it.

My question now is: Is it appropriate for me to continue with doing that, or do I need to be concentrating all of my energies on putting out my own music?

ANSWER: Indeed, it is appropriate for you to do what works. It is appropriate for your needs to be met, and it is also appropriate for you to be allowing time for the creative flow, shall I say, the original creative flow to occur.

Now, you will have a tendency, because of your current means to “do something,” to stop being spontaneous. You will have a tendency to attempt to take control and make things happen.

You need from this moment to be like a woman who has been a wife for her husband, and a mother to her children to 18 years. And has gone into the kitchen every night, where all of the equipment was necessary in order to make a meal, and who is unimpressed by her kitchen. And who does not see the presence of everything—all of the equipment, and all of the food that is needed—as a demand for her to cook, nor as an opportunity to impress her family.

I encourage you from the start to be at peace with your well equipped kitchen, or studio, or means of being creative. And I encourage you not to let it become that which leads you around by the nose. It is there to serve you, you are not there to serve it. It is there to embody and express intangible form the movement of creativity in you. Let that creativity continue to be the focus, and that which you value, that which you are, shall I say, impressed with. And let the equipment be there to serve you when it serves the movement of creativity.

And when the movement of creativity is not occurring because there is some other fulfilling activity going on, let the studio be idle. And do not assume that you ought to be doing something with it.

Again, be careful that it does not begin to lead you around by the nose. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have been doing massive amounts of guilt and controlling and all this wonderful drama and trauma lately over my Aunt...

ANSWER: Now isn't it wonderful not to be alone? And isn't it wonderful to be loved anyway? Continue.

QUESTION: Yea, so anyway I put her in a nursing home for a week, because I felt like I had to watch her every minute. She is, in my opinion (huh, in my opinion) choosing to let her mind drift away, but leaving her body here for me to take care of. And I don't like that idea. I'm very willing to love her and care for her if she's willing to keep her mind here. But I have just all kinds of judgments about taking care of a body with no mind hanging out in it.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is not appropriate for you to become the nursemaid of a body where there is no clear expression of intelligence. That is not your fulfillment of purpose. There are others for whom that is very meaningful fulfillment of purpose. Do not feel guilty for expressing common sense and intelligence. That's the end of answer.

QUESTION: Is the place where I have put her an appropriate placement for her?

ANSWER: Quite appropriate, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Now, you in somewhat derogatory way referred to "my opinion," meaning your opinion as though somehow you don't have the capacity to recognize truth, and therefore it must be called an opinion and then downgraded to self-judgment. Don't be afraid to express simple intelligence. And realize that you don't have to apologize for seeing to it that you are able to function in your comfort zone. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: In conversations that I've shared with others, and listening today again, in our every ordinary day, we're dealing with ordinary people in the conditions and situations in which egos are played. How can we best not fall into the trap of our own egos?

ANSWER: First of all monitor yourself, and ask yourself if you are comfortable or not. If you are not comfortable, you may know you have been caught in an ego game. And if you find that you are not comfortable, that you are uneasy then let there be a willingness to become still, let there be a willingness to set the factors, the aspects of the circumstance aside so that you may then become curious as to what is truly going on, or what you truly need to be doing. But there must be a willingness to shut up the babbling of the ego, the conditioned response.

If you are not caught in an ego game, then whether the circumstances around you change or not, you will find your own equilibrium. And from the vantage point of that equilibrium you will know what it is appropriate for you to do. Whether it is to simply leave the circumstance, or whether it is to express a clarity that will resolve the circumstance, or whether even it is necessary for you to be the brick wall that says no to the circumstance, which may increase the difficulty of the circumstance but without engaging you in ego reaction.

Always pay attention to yourself and what you are feeling. And the area of the solar plexus is the area in which you can tell whether your ego is operating or not. Because when it is operating, this area is not at peace—is not at rest. And when you are centered and when you are truly at peace there will be no disruptive undercurrent or feedback coming from the area of your solar plexus.

If there is feedback coming, you may know that you are hooked, and that which is hooking you is illusory. In other words, it is not to be taken as justifiable fact, upon which you can then base your responses. That will be enough to cause you to choose to become still.

You always have only two vantage points from which to experience the Kingdom of Heaven, or the only thing that is going on. And those two vantage points are the vantage point of your capital “B” Being, which I describe as the centered perspective. And the other vantage point is the vantage point of your ego, which is totally reactive, totally fallacious, because it takes partial information and treats it as though it is all the information there is, and then stupidly but confidently basis is actions upon that partial information.

The key always is the presence of your peace. Choose for that, and then you will not function in the reactive level of the ego. And you will be able to be appropriate and always functioning in a way that elicits and uncovers resolution. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Raj, I’d like to ask about the guides, and if there is a plan that they may have for us, or our own guide has for us. Is there something that’s unfolding that we’re working toward, or is it unfolding as we’re working toward? Is there something that we catch hold of sometimes that guides us more quickly, and that we might miss at other times? Are the guides guiding, or are they there for us to get back on course?

ANSWER: Your guides are always guiding. But it is guidance more in the sense of the word “way-shower.” Because in effect your guide, walking backwards, and facing you moves a couple of feet ahead of you, in effect, where you see nothing solid for you to stand upon and says, “Come on, it’s safe. Come on, it’s safe.” And you move forward a little bit and your guide moves back a little bit more. And by virtue of being in that place that feels insecure to you, it helps give you the courage to step forward and find that indeed there is solid ground for you to stand upon.

Now, is there a plan? That is the same as asking if there is predestination, and there is not. If there is a plan, it is to help you become free of dreaming dreams.

Right now your question is similar to someone who is asleep dreaming a dream, experiencing someone who is awake shaking them on the shoulder. And that shaking of the shoulder is being translated into the dream. And you are wondering if whoever is shaking your shoulder has a plan for you in the context of the dream you are having. When in actuality, the context in which it is really happening is that of the world in which it is appropriate for you to be awake, rather than slumbering away in the imagination.

What this means is, that your guide is constantly inviting you and encouraging you to let go of your attempts to hold the Movement of Creation in a static form that you will not have to adjust to. In other words, your guide is encouraging you to develop the skill to yield to and flow with the current of your capital “B” Being. And therefore, to forever be on the edge of the Movement of Creation, where you stand at that point of discerning that which is new at identically the same time that God experiences the newness of it, and with the same divine clarity that the Father is observing His Movement of Creation.

So you see, the purpose of waking up is not just to have a better life, humanly speaking. It is not a matter of waking up into something that is absolutely unmovably dependable. It is a waking up into, (for lack of better words) succumbing to the Will of Father, yielding up the last vestiges of control, and the feeling of the need for control.

Now you asked if there is anyway to speed this up? You will only yield as much as you can yield without being overwhelmed. The only thing you can do is to desire to Awaken, and then learn to be as unwillful as possible. And the best place for you to learn to be unwillful, is in your centered place as a result of meditation, or whatever means you have of going into your inner closet, where you settle out from the surface reactive level of the ego, which is where willfulness comes into play.

Simply asking for guidance and daring to listen to it, is an effective practice that involves letting go of control. Because you are not saying, “I can do it myself,” or “I know enough about this situation to do it without asking.” If you are asking, if you are desiring to know what is appropriate, if you are wanting to know how a particular activity fits into the divine scheme, if you will, or whether it is congruent with the Movement of Creation that is unfolding, you are yielding up the practice of control.

Now the ego again, says that this is irresponsible, that it is not respectable. But the fact is that that is the way in which you come back into congruence with who you already divinely are—the Christ of you. That is the way you come back into an awareness of the Father’s Will that is not separate from your essential identity. That is the way you come Home.

Your desire to Awaken, your desire to experience revelation and enlightenment does not arise out of your ego, but out of your essential Being. And if you embrace that desire and abide with it without any attempt to bring it to pass, you will be with it as it fulfills itself. Desire that arises out of the Movement of Being, with a capital “B”, is a self-fulfilling Movement. And if you abide with it, without attempting to manipulate it, you will be present at the point of its fulfillment.

Of course, this is not what you are conditioned to do. You are not conditioned to surrender to something outside of your limited present sense of yourself. Guidance always reflects back to you what you would find yourself Knowing, with a capital “K”, If you were listening directly.

And so in asking for guidance, you can count on it that always what will be reflected back to you is your own integrity. It will help you, so to speak, connect with yourself through the back door, because confronting yourself directly is too frightening.

And so guidance is always capital “S” Self-affirming. And you are not relinquishing control or authority to anything outside of yourself. Your guides are always totally Awake, expressing no self-will, but being the perfect expression of the Father’s Will. And the Father’s Will is for you to experience yourself without distortion. It is the Father’s Will for you to experience yourself as His complete Self-expression.

So if there is a plan, it is for you to wake up and experience yourself truly. So that the Brotherhood of man, which is the infinite self-expression of the Father may experience itself in its Totality, consciously, with full participation of every member of the Brotherhood, including you.

So again, the only plan is for you to be Awake so you may fully and consciously experience the Movement of Creation without any distortion. And then there is no plan for you, because you are Awake and in the Movement, experiencing the Movement as the Movement of You, and therefore experiencing your integrity infinitely, perfectly, with no slighting in anyway of your experience of fulfillment, because you are at Home and in your Right Mind. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel like I have about 25 questions. And what everyone has said here is sparked all of those. So I’ve been sitting here trying to figure out how I can ask one and get everything brought to light. I have been experiencing what feels like being buffeted by winds of change. And for the first time in my life it has not been scary. It really has been feeling kind of delicious, and it's incredible, and I'm grateful.

ANSWER: It is as though you are beginning to find that you are not a leaf caught on the winds of change, but a glider with lift in its wings that the winds of change support. And you are learning how to flow with, cooperate with the winds so that they support the movement of the glider that you are.

QUESTION: Thank you. It does feel more like that.

ANSWER: The winds won't stop. The Movement of Life, the Movement of Creation is not going to stop. But all of you are learning how not to separate yourself from it any more, and how to be so congruent with it that it becomes—for lack of better words—you ally, instead of your enemy.

You see, if you are the direct expression of God, and God is the Movement of Creation, then the Movement of Creation is the nature of the conscious experience of Being that you call conscious identity—You. If you separate yourself from that Movement, it will not change the nature of that Movement of Creation. And all of a sudden that Movement will seem to be happening to you, because you have pulled yourself apart from it without altering it in any way.

And so when you are yielding—which the ego can't stand the idea of—when you are yielding you are releasing this act of opposition to the Movement, which is what separation is. And then the congruence of the Movement with you becomes apparent, no longer is it happening to you, you find that you are it happening. And you become the conscious experience of that Movement of Creation, that act of “Behold I make all things new.”

The wind can capsize a ship or move it thousands of miles with grace, if the sail is set to catch the wind. It depends upon whether there is enough humility to allow yourself to blend with Creation, rather than hold yourself to be superior to it. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, I feel that the direction of what I've been expressing and sharing has been changing. And there has been a kind of an underground drawing to a remembering that I used to want to do more work in education with training teachers and working with adolescence at the level of self-recognition. And always it's kind of come up and gone down, and come up and gone down like a cork. And I'm wondering if that is the direction that this new wave is carrying this little ship?

ANSWER: Yes, indeed. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good day, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I don't know how I'm going to ask this question, because my question is all muddled.

ANSWER: Never hesitate to ask, even if your question is muddled, because divine intelligence knows what you mean. And the meaning is clear to you, even though you are not always able to express it perfectly.

QUESTION: Thank you. My throats been bothering me. I've been very restless, and can't stay in one place for any length of time. And I would like to know what's going on with me?

ANSWER: You are literally standing at a threshold of change. And rather than quietly paying attention to it and allowing it to unfold, you are impatient and antsy to get on with it. Now that is all right, it will not interfere with the progress of the change. However, you are likely to wear yourself out unnecessarily.

I encourage you when you have these feelings to know that indeed there is a movement of support underneath you that is lifting you and moving you forward, and therefore doesn't require any personal response from you other than a willingness to pay attention. And then based on this idea of a movement that is moving you and lifting you, refuse to engage a personal effort to get the show on the road. Let there be a sense of divine orderliness to this movement, just as you do trust the divine timeliness of a bud opening into a full blown blossom, knowing that if you interfered by trying to hurry things up that the perfection of the blossoming would be lost.

I encourage you to say, "Not my will, but Thine be done. I acquiesce to the divine order here, knowing that it is moving in my best interests. And I refuse, by virtue of my impatience, to get in here and mess it up." That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: My question is: What is the highest and best for me to be doing on this Earth this time around?

ANSWER: Well, since it is the last time around, I would encourage you to simply, actively engage in waking up. It is not just the last time for you. This Movement of Awakening is Universal. All those who are still engaged in dreams or illusions are in the process of becoming emancipated from them.

So what would I suggest that it would be your best activity to engage in? I will tell you: Curiosity, curiosity, curiosity. Curiosity about everything. A curiosity to discern divinity—the handiwork of the Prime Mover, if you will—no matter where you look. Because whether what you are seeing appears to be divine or not, healthy or not, constructive or not, there is an essential element of Reality there that is, as I've said earlier, being perceived correctly or incorrectly. And don't just look outside of yourself, look within yourself too. And be willing to acknowledge that if there is anything going on at all right where you are, or right where a tree is, or right where a concrete pillar is, there must be the intent of God expressed, and seen clearly or unclearly.

On that basis you will be able to practice curiosity, to see more clearly the manifestation of God there. And that will begin to undo any illusion or delusion you are experiencing relative to that thing.

You are here to wake up and discover your Christhood and to wake up and discover the presence of God and nothing else. You are here to come back into your Right Mind with a capital “M”. And curiosity will do the trick. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Understand everyone that it isn’t practices that will do the trick. Practices may get you to the point where you can truly be curious without exercising control. Intellectual practices may get you to a point where you can logically conceive of the omnipotence of God to the point where you can dare to let go of personal control and yield into it. But processes only help you arrive at the point of yielding, of being willing to let go of self-will. Curiosity will help move you over that threshold, over that inertia. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: The question I have here is that I seem to be at war with my body. I’ve had a variety of things, rashes, lumps, blood sugar disorders, and I’ve read all these self-help books, and worked with homeopathy, and I’ve not gotten any place. I still have all these things. And I wonder if you have any insight for me? It’s probably right under my nose and I’m not seeing it—of how I can help myself?

ANSWER: The problem is that you think you have something better to do than love your body, that the attention that you are being required to give to your body is distracting you from something that is more appropriate, that is keeping you from the real meaning of things—the real fulfillment.

I tell you there is nothing any of you can do that is more important than loving yourself. Those of you who have been on death’s bed, so to speak, have found yourself in a position where it really is more important to you to stop your wild grasping for things and fulfilling concepts that have been laid upon you as “shoulds” and “oughts,” to perhaps do nothing more than to lie still and honor your body enough not to disturb it while it heals.

It is in this honoring, it is in this ultimate act of self-appreciation and humility that the real essence and meaning of you comes forth. It is also where you find yourself most able to be compassionate towards others. Because there isn't as much arrogance in you seeming to cause a valid difference between you and your fellow man, and it isn't insulting to be like your fellow man.

Now the thought is that you shouldn't have to be taking this much time, that there must be a right way for you to do this so you can get it over quickly and get on with what is important. That is arrogance. And what is needed is simple humility.

There is a saying, a statement in A Course In Miracles, that "infinite patience brings immediate results." And what that means is that the absence of impatience allows you to be so present in the moment, in the now, that there is no fragmentation of your conscious experience into past, present and future, and the wholeness of Being that is present in the now can register with you. But until the humility and the absence of impatience and the absence of arrogance is present you will not be in that place of balance where your health can manifest.

Your life and your experience of its health is important enough for you to attend to for as long as it takes. Why? Because it is the nature of your Being to express love. And expressing love is what brings into play your experience of fulfillment, because you are not distracted by irrelevant non essentials.

As I said earlier, Paul feels that he has a right to time off from being absolutely in touch and absolutely appropriate, that he has a right to be, or have time to be a little bit ignorant and confused. Likewise, there is a feeling that you ought to have time off from loving your body. But if you have time off from doing that, your body is not going to report back to you comfort, because you are dissociating yourself from something that you are inseparable.

There is truly no time off from being love anymore than there is time off from being centered and appropriate. Being on target, being Awake, being forever love is where the experience of your integrity awaits you, and your experience of your innate perfection—and this applies to absolutely everyone. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Right now I can say that I have no idea where I'm going.

ANSWER: Excellent!

QUESTION: I have an idea where I want to go. But I have this...

ANSWER: Don't mess with that idea.

QUESTION: But I still have this fear that I'm going to miss the train. And I don't know where the fear is coming from. I've asked for a lot of clarification for it. And I've asked for help to understand it. But it still seems to pop up quite regularly. Well, I'm afraid it will stop my journey.

ANSWER: The misperception suggests that you are not on the train. The fact is you cannot get off the train. The fact is you cannot get off the wave, or the Movement of Creation. You cannot actually separate yourself from it and observe it, even, except in the imagination.

Now you want dearly to be on the train. Once you get on the train you might dearly want to get off. And I'm going to share a remark that I made to both Paul and Susan, who expressed some distress with the movement that was occurring that they were not in charge of, and I told them: You are like boats adrift in the grip of God, bemoaning—ignorantly bemoaning—your bad luck.

Now the fact is that in spite of the fantasies that you project between yourself and your clear perception of your world you have continued to be the Christ, you have continued to be the perfect creative self-expression of the Father, and therefore you have never truly been out of sync with Reality of God. You have imagined that you were and your conditioned thinking has seemed to confirm that you were.

I will tell you: You cannot get off the train, you cannot be off the train, and you cannot miss the train. You are the Movement Itself. And so I encourage you also to relax and simply pay attention to where you are and the glory of it, rather than overlooking it because there is this consistent, bothersome, subtle undermining of your experience of your divinity and integrity.

No matter where you are if you will allow yourself to move out of the reactive surface level of the ego into the centeredness of your being, you will begin to experience what is really going on. And you will be able to feel the integrity of it, and you will be able to feel the movement of it, and you will forever be freed up from thinking that this location, or that location, or this circumstance, or that circumstance contributes to or inhibits your experience of Reality. That is a freedom, that it is your Birthright to experience, because then you will never again be caught again by circumstances.

If you are in a stream, and you are swimming against the current—because of your strength you may be able to do that for awhile without becoming exhausted—even if you were swimming down stream you would be likely to become exhausted after awhile. *Why the current of the river would carry you effortlessly. And if indeed the current of the river is the Movement of Creation, then you will find yourself effortlessly engaged in standing always on the threshold of what I will call new fulfillment.

You must understand that you are on the train, or you must understand that you're already in the water. But the ego is engaging you in swimming when you have the capacity to float. But the ego says, "That doesn't express much self-direction, that doesn't express much self-responsibility, that doesn't express much of respectability. If you swim, it will become obvious that you are self-directed, that you have integrity. You're already the Son of God. You're already the full conscious experience of the Movement of Creation. That is where your integrity is before you lift a little finger for the purpose of willful actions, which the ego says give you integrity and respectability.

You can't miss the boat. You can't miss the train. But you won't find that out unless you let yourself be fully in the moment and the place and the circumstance that you are already in. I encourage you to start acknowledging to yourself, "I am in my right place. It's impossible for me to be outside of the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. I'm safe. I'm going to stop this fussing and start paying attention, and watch the Movement move me."

You will have the opportunity to find that your integrity doesn't not come from what you do, but from what you are. And that is another freedom from bondage. And remember I am talking about something worth rejoicing about. This is the good news. You see, not everybody always wants to find out that they're in the best possible spot they can be, because of the way they're judging the spot they are in.

But I'll tell you something: If any of you could actually be in a bad spot, you would be in trouble. There is always an answer, there is always a solution, because you can't ever be in the wrong spot. And the clear perception of the rightness of it, of the divinity of it, of the presence of the Father in it, of the presence of your integrity in it is what awaits you. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My question in one sentence: Is the concept of spiritual evolution a valid one? And we talk about evolution of various sorts. Before I became a student of A Course IN MIRACLES I was involved with various books like Alice Bailey and such, who postulated this concept of evolving through the mineral kingdom, to the plant kingdom and animal kingdom and all of that.

Now this seems to have a certain validity, but it also would seem at this point to be kind of a distraction, and beyond that it seems there's real danger of feelings of separatism or whatever coming about.

Let me throw one more thing in here. Correct me if you're wrong. I believe that you've mentioned that you're also the author of the "Starseed Transmissions," as well as A Course In Miracles? And at the end of the "Starseed Transmissions" it gets into a rather interesting discussion about what happens after everyone is Awake. That's it.

ANSWER: Indeed, that explanation at the end of "Starseed Transmissions" is not absolutely literal. It is a means of conveying, standing on the threshold of a forever new conscious experience of Being, which is what the Movement of Creation is. It involves an absolute experience of conscious Brotherhood.

I mean by that, the conscious experience of the unity, the indivisibility of the Brotherhood of Man acting, you might say, in concert. But understand that this “in concert” is not a matter of cooperation of wills, but rather it is a matter of each one, each member of the Brotherhood being nothing more and nothing less than the direct expression of the indivisible Will of the Father.

The Movement of the Father is a Movement of absolute harmony. And so there is harmony without cooperation—it takes separation and then agreement between two separated parts to have cooperation. There is no hierarchy in Reality. There are no levels of authority carrying directives from the top of the line down to the bottom. Every individual is not denying his inseparable identicalness with the Father, and thus there is what I will call completely individual expressions of absolute harmony.

You see, the experience of conscious identity doesn't disappear in the state of total enlightenment. But the sense of that conscious identity being separate from the Father's Will is gone. And as a result, the flawless experience of who one truly is is the only experience of Being that is available, and that is what coming Home means.

Spiritual growth, spiritual development these are all ego concepts. They are not facts. You are the ultimate and have been the ultimate of you since you “began”—and there was no beginning. The apparent experience of the movement from ignorance to enlightenment implies growth. But if the hands are placed in front of the eyes and the eyes are open, one cannot see anything. If the hands are slowly moved out of the way, one sees more and more of what there is to see. Is that growth? Is that development? No. It is simply becoming free of an obstruction, a distraction, an imposition upon your Birthright.

You are not advancing toward anything. You have already arrived. You never left the Kingdom of Heaven, and you cannot grow back into it because you didn't leave. And so you are in the ultimate spot, you might say, to discover the truth about you. And you don't have to grow into it. And you don't have to wait until the grace of God comes upon you to lift you out of your unworthiness into a state of worthiness, because you never lost your worthiness.

It is the apparent transition from ignorance into enlightenment that has given rise to the concept of spiritual evolution. And it is a false concept. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Recently I've moved to a village and there's a couple there who were guided to develop in this village a village that they say will bring in 12 masters to help with the New Age. And I was wondering if you could give more information on that, if it's so. And if it is so, how as community can we come together to see this through?

ANSWER: As I will tell all of you something: Don't look for leaders to whom you can give your obedience. And don't look to leaders as though you do not have within yourself the essential capacity to recognize truth or you will sacrifice whatever degree of your experience of your integrity you might be experiencing at the moment. And in the sacrificing of it, by virtue of ignoring it, because of the willingness to give attention to masters or teachers.

You will create for yourself a state of inner distress that will finally get your attention, and cause you to once again to honor yourself. If any one of you were to attempt to return authority for your life over to me, I would nip it in the bud. You can ask Paul. The reason being, that it is your integrity which needs to be uncovered—it is your dignity, it is your divinity. And any step that any of you take to ignore it or override it in favor of the integrity or divinity of another will not feel good, because you will be in a state of self-denial.

Now what is happening here in this village is an exploration of a new manner of relating, ultimately a manner of relating to each other that does not involve self-will but rather a greater inner sensitivity to what is Real relative to relationships.

The plan may be to bring in or to make room for masters, but they will not appear until the students are ready—there will not be a command performance. And so, you might say, that what needs to be attended to is, becoming ready to listen before the teacher appears. And you will save yourself a lot of time if you will listen in the context of your innate capacity to recognize truth. It will be easier if you begin to honor yourself from the onset. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Boy, you haven't cut anybody any slack today.

Everything's wake up.

ANSWER: Why waste time with dreams?

QUESTION: How little time do we have?

ANSWER: You're already there. You're already in the Kingdom of Heaven. Time has nothing to do with it. A willingness to see is all that is required.

Stop thinking in terms of time. And stop thinking in terms of growth, or of development. You're already there, right here at this very instant—on the Columbia Gorge, in the state of Oregon—right here you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. You are in the middle of Reality. No I'm going to put it this way: All of what reality is is present in the middle of the infinite you that you are as consciousness—Mind.

I mentioned at the beginning of the day, that you all imprison yourself with your words. Remind yourself, “I am in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. This spot that I am experiencing is the Kingdom of Heaven, whether I am seeing it clearly or not. I don’t have to go anywhere to get there, I am there.” And then the next obvious question will be, “Well, how can I see it?” And as I said, you express curiosity—become curious, become an explorer.

An explorer doesn’t say, “Do I deserve to explore this new territory? Have I grown to the point where I can deal with this new territory?” No, an explorer is eager for the experience of that which is new and moves forward into the new territory. And it is his curiosity that drives him, that motivates him together with an innate feeling that it is inappropriate for him to be confined in any way.

And so let your Awakening process not be caught up in moralistic issues, or of whether you deserve it, or whether you are ready for it, or whether there is a great deal more “growth” that must occur. It’s all poppycock. You’re sitting on a grassy knoll, in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, as I’ve said before, with your eyes all squinched up saying, “I cannot see the perfection.” Well, I’ll tell you it’s only an eyelid away.

It isn’t at a distance in time, it is the willingness to open your eyes and simply observe where you are. And the key to this, as I have given you, is in the recognition that you exist as consciousness rather than body. And this consciousness that you are is unlimited, and it is within this consciousness that all experience of form is occurring.

If you identify with body, with form, if you claim that you are nothing more than form with a mind, then the infinite manifestation of you that the universe is, the visibility and tangibility of you, which is the visibility and tangibility of the Father, seems to be something that can happen to you, and that you can be at odds with, and where there can be conflict. But as the shift from body identification to mind or awareness identification occurs and you begin to pay attention to the experience of being conscious, the Universe and your world will stop appearing to happen to you, at odds with you. And you will find your world reconfiguring to identify marvelous fulfillment which you are not responsible for, but which you are inseparable from. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Would you tell me if the primary relationship that I have will become integrated?

ANSWER: The answer is yes. It will seem to call for some patience from you, which you already are not unfamiliar with, but remember that patience means the absence of impatience, and the willingness to be present with and sensitive to that which your ego would say you need to be patient with. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: What would my ego say I need to be patient with?

ANSWER: The apparent time involved in the integration. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Greetings.

QUESTION: In The Course In Miracles it talks about periods of unsettling. And I've been experiencing one of these. It seems that it happens to me when I am most—my Real Self—that it's like a wind blows be off my under-pinnings, and without warning my ego takes control again. And then there's a period of unsettling that's more disorienting than it ever used to be, because I was thinking that I wasn't going to do that anymore. I guess my question is what's the purpose of the period of unsettling?

ANSWER: The unsettling is always the undoing of your ego's security blanks, the unraveling of your ego's security blanks. The unsettling is the lifting of the anchor, or anchor's, that prohibit you from flowing with the Movement of your Being, with a capital "B". The unsettling is the undoing of your confidences in illusion. The unsettling is the means of your emancipation from bondage that is not legitimate and is not part of your Birthright.

Your conditioning says that your anchors, your boundaries are there for your safety, and that to abandon them causes you to be vulnerable, and that therefore their loss constitutes a lack of wisdom and a presence of danger for you. If that were true, then you would be forever lost, forever unable to yield into the flow of the Movement of your Being, which is inseparable from the Movement of Creation that the Father is being.

Do not worry that you flip-flop back and forth. It is the way you maintain a certain degree of balance so that you do not become overwhelmed by the process. But each time the ego gains control it does so with a little less faith on your part in it, and a greater willingness and eagerness to once again experience the unsettling, and the movement that reminds you of who you are, truly.

I will tell you something: The only reason there is an unsettling is because the ego is losing its strength, and the current of your Being is greater than the amount of drag of the anchor, you might say, that your ego is using to hold you tight. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Some time ago I sort of pressurized a group of relatives into forming a partnership and securing a Christmas tree farm and operating it. It hasn't been easy to do, because we live in rather distant locations from the Christmas tree farm, and it's become quite a burden. And I've suffered with some feelings of guilt over having pressurized people into doing something that might not have been a good idea. And I've been working on releasing those feelings...

ANSWER: Good. Understand that they were completely responsible for their decision, you never were in control of them. And they need to play as active a part as you in deciding how best to deal with the property, whether to dispose of it or not. Do not waste your time feel guilty, because you did not make anyone make the decision that they made. They made the decision themselves. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, I think I've fairly well internalized that, but it's creating some problems now in that the Christmas season is coming up and the farm has been listed for sale. And my question now is, is it going to sell in time that we won't have to go through the Christmas season with it? And if not, why?

ANSWER: At this point it is not the likelihood that it will sell before the Christmas season. And the answer as to why is because that simply is not, shall I say, the timing of it. And I encourage you to be willing to embrace the possibility that the actual timing that occurs will be perfect, and not be so sure that you know what perfect is. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Smile. I have shared with you good news. I encourage you to be open to the reception of the goodness of it.

QUESTION: Thank you for being here, Raj, now and always. I know I have a guide, and the times when I've been most in touch with him or her have been the milestones of my life. But most of the rest of the time it seems like I'm talking on a walkie-talkie, or I ask a question and I wait for an answer, but I leave my finger on the talk button. And what I would like to ask of you is, as a mutual friend, if you can make a formal conscious introduction.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. A formal conscious introduction of what?

QUESTION: Of my guide and me to each other.

ANSWER: I will tell you something: Your connection with your guide is a very intimate connection. It is intimate because your guide is absolutely unseparated from you, is not holding himself apart from you, is not identifying himself as being a separated Individuality. It is—for lack of better words—unethical for me to do anything other than to tell you what I have just told you and instruct you to persist in experience this connection that isn't really a connection, because there are not two things to be connected to each other.

Your desire is sufficient. But as you said you do have to take your finger off the talk button. As I have indicated before, the first step to get in touch with your guide is the become still. The second step is to mentally and gently express the desire for communication. And step three is the magic step—listen. And step four is expect an answer.

Your guide is intent upon connecting with you, with dialog, with clear cut communion. But the desire must be there on your part, and the defenselessness must be there, and so there must be a desire to be defenseless.

Now I will tell you something else, and everyone needs to know this: The only reason there is resistance to get in touch with your guide is because you are afraid that when your guide speaks to you you will be convicted of whatever you feel you are guilty of. But your guide is there to illuminate to you the fact that you are innocent—not guilty. Your guide is there to provide the truth. Your guide is there to resolve confusion. Your guide is there to provide answers not problems.

Your conditioning will suggest to you that your problems are so complex that the answer must be beyond your capacity to grasp. It is never true. Answers always simplify. Connection with your guide always simplifies. And the only time you have problems is when you are demanding a more complex answer, where the simple answer is just to unbelievable to you, or when the simple answer doesn't conform to your expectation. But always the answers are avenues of simplification. As I have said before, you can dare to expect that the answer is simpler than anything that you are expecting.

So on that basis I encourage you to continue to desire communion, and then desire to be defenseless, and then let go and listen. And risk the chance, if you will, that the answer will illuminate and demonstrate your innocence, and that you do not need to be afraid. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you so much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. I am very concerned about aids and cancer and terminal illness. Will there be cures for these people who are so sick?

ANSWER: I do not mean to be over simplistic here, but the answer is, yes, as soon as they are willing to give themselves permission to set aside the verdict and the penalty, if you will, as soon as there is a willingness to discredit the source of the verdict.

These diseases seem to be death sentences, but if the judge is a jerk they are not to be honored. Who or what is the law maker? Who or what is governing? Is the body governing? Is a doctors current knowledge governing? Or does everyone function or be under divine law that perfectly reflects the flawless intelligence of the First Cause of God?

Now it started out this morning by pointing out that there was a premise upon which everything this weekend would follow. That premise being, that each one of you is at this very instant the direct expression of God. And you are at this very moment in the middle of Reality—the Kingdom of Heaven. That must be ones premise when he or she seems to be faced with the verdict of death that seems inseparable from cancer, and aids, and age.

It is imperative to begin to release this idea or concept that each one of you is just a physical organism, or that each of you is a spiritual individuality temporarily occupying a physical organism as a host for your Soul.

God unidentified, unmanifest is nonexistent God. There cannot be God without the infinite manifestation of God that is called the Movement of Creation. And likewise there cannot be conscious individuality without it being identified. And so if you are conscious, then there is that which specifically identifies you, which you call the body, and that which universally identifies you, that is called the universe. And so body and universe constitute the eternal identification of your eternal Individuality.

Any other interpretation, concept or perception is deluded and is what A Course In Miracles refers to as an illusion. But again I reiterate, that you must understand that the word illusion refers to the misperception and not that which is being perceived.

If your body is as eternal as your individuality, if that which identifies the presence of your individuality is inseparable from your individuality then whether you seem to die from cancer or aids or anything else, you will still find yourself having an uninterrupted experience of body, even though to everyone else it seems as though you have left your body behind. That is their perception. That is not the experience of the one who has passed on.

And if in the process of death the cause of death has not been shown to be absolutely idiotic, because you are still experiencing life and body, then the opportunity to give yourself permission to experience your divine health is still present for you to practice. And so why wait? The necessity is to start now to give permission so that that which has the intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly has the opportunity to identify the presence of the Father perfectly, because it is one and the same thing.

Illness, disease is an illegitimate imposition upon the divine one that you are. But if you insist upon identifying as body or organism, you will not seem to experience your Birthright.

What is something that is illegitimate? It is something that has no real source. A three dollar bill is illegitimate, because there isn't a real three dollar bill. You cannot have a counterfeit three dollar bill, therefore its presence wouldn't fool a sole. Illness and disease is equally illegitimate, and it constitutes an imposition upon your experience of your Birthright. And it's important to begin to challenge the apparent justification for disease or illness of any kind. If you walk outdoors and you breath the wonderful crisp cold air, and you think, "I'd better go back inside or I'll get a chill," correct that thought immediately—replace it. The cool crisp air, the autumn colors, the river, the rain, the fog are all part of the infinite expression of you. It cannot possibly be functioning at odds with you, if it is you in your infinite aspect.

And I will tell you something else, turn down the volume on your TV when they begin to advertise medications. Do you realize that you are told when to expect a summer cold, and a winter cold. You are told when the flu season is going to start, and you are advised to be prepared to become sick by getting the medicine that they are selling. And you are brainwashed into forgetting that you are a divine manifestation of an indivisible and undivided First Cause, who's self-expression is incapable of being divided and polarized into opposites—into conflict. Do not subject yourself to such information anymore than you would subject yourself to constant scenes of violence.

Now we could speak for hours about illness, about healing, about the fact that illness is an illegitimate imposition. But this is not the time to do that. Whenever you are confronted with someone, whenever you are made aware of someone who seems to have a terminal illness, do not play into that emotionally anymore than I have suggested that you play emotionally into the fear tactics that are used in the advertisement of illness so that medication can be sold and a profit made.

Be the presence of love. In other words, the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything, or each and everyone. Don't join that one in his or her ignorant belief of victimization. And don't give what is at the bottom line an illusion, the validation of your fear, which says it is real. If it is not of the Father, it is a suggestion, it is a whispered suggestion—you might say, a hypnotic suggestion—the equivalent of someone saying, "you have an apple stuck on the end of your nose. And you cannot get it off. And you look like a fool. What are you going to do?"

Now I'm not being too simplistic here, this is the truth, and it does give you a starting point. Acknowledge each ones divinity. Do not take it upon yourself to try to correct the situation, but to the best of your ability, as I said earlier, be the transparency for truth that doesn't join with that one's fear and strengthen the fear, but that which joins with what is true about that one, thus making it easier for him or her to give permission for healing to occur. Permission is the key word. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you so much, and I love you.

ANSWER: You are welcome, and the feeling is mutual.

QUESTION: First I'd like to express publicly my gratitude for the people in my life and the good fortune I've had to have them in my life, to attract these incredible human beings and this incredible environment. Thank you, thank me, thank them.

My question would be... actually I would like you to speak to what you perceive as my greatest obstruction?

ANSWER: Fear of what significant others in your life think about you. And a reluctance to simply be you and let the chips fall where they may. You have a certain willfulness about you that does assert itself and plow through resistance, but it doesn't do it without caring, it doesn't do it with comfort and ease, it just knows it must do it.

And I'm not speaking of ego here. I am talking about an inner conviction in your own integrity and a willingness to stand by it knowing that there will be resistance. And this is healthy. The only thing is that you are hooked by concern about reactions, instead of recognizing that those reactions are other peoples issues for them to deal with. And then leaving them free to have their reaction and come to terms with it themselves.

It is helpful for you to know that there are more people on this planet who do not care what you think or do than there are those who do. And it would be helpful for you to think about them, rather than the few who might disagree. Because the ones whom you would react to would limit you in your freedom to be you and honor yourself and the millions of other who don't give a damn leave you free to explore and be you. It is your right to enjoy being you. It is your birthright not to have to answer to anyone else, to meet their expectations, or not make waves for them.

Now, by going on at length here, I do not mean to imply that you are a blithering mess. But this is a key issue. And when I say a key issue, I do not mean a serious issue. I mean an issue where the promise and the fulfillment is very great on the other side. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you for the key.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good evening.

ANSWER: Good evening.

QUESTION: Somehow I feel the answer to the last question applies to me.

ANSWER: Indeed, to one degree or another it applies to everyone, because everyone has been taught not to make waves, to be polite, to conform to social etiquette, to be respectful—which always means, in so many words, to defer to others if they are in some position of authority. And you realize that there is never a point where you were finally told, “Okay, you are grown up now you do not have to automatically defer to your superiors. You do not have to defer to your elders. You have graduated. You are now free to be you, and to learn how to do it gracefully.

And so whether one is 80, or whether one is 50, or whether one is 25 everyone continues especially to try to please Mom and Dad, or to be the kind of wife or husband that your Mom and Dad were, or that those who gave you instruction as you grew up had indicated to you was best, or that role models that you yourself selected had represented to you was the most desirable. And very few of you have arrived at a point of asking yourself what you feel, and what is important to you, and what do you want to explore, and what do you want to experience? Continue.

QUESTION: I have this urge, and I’m constantly being put in the position of healing. And I enjoy being in that space. I feel this is part of my work, and I’m not there yet, I’m willing and wanting to be there. And also I would like to know what my obstacles are?

ANSWER: The primary obstacle is that there is a feeling that you must somehow find a way to be personally responsible, or personally effect healing.

And I will tell you something: The only healer there is is love. The only thing that effectively cuts through the illegitimate imposition of ego beliefs is love. And all that is necessary is for you to be willing to get out of the way and to be the transparency for that love, and let it flow and let it be the presence of intelligence and harmony that it is because it comes from the Father. And let it do the healing. And do not assume that it is a personal or acquired skill of your own that you haven’t quite yet gained. These words, “Not my will but Thine be done,” meaning the Father, or God, or your capital “S” Self, because they are all one and the same and are God.

That is the key, surrendering any sense of personal will, or of personal responsibility for making something happen. Surrendering that to the inevitable flow, the inevitable expression of God right where you are, and right where the one needing healing is.

I cannot emphasize firmly enough that you are conditioned to be responsible, to be an effective presence, to make your mark on the world by virtue of learning, when the only manner in which the value of your Presence, with a capital “P”, can be experienced by others is when the attempt to be effective is released, and you let God shine through and be the only presence right there where you are, so that you become not only the transparency for love and the transparency for truth, but you become the embodiment for it right in the world, because you are choosing to let that be what is present. And you are not claiming a right to be present also as this little, tiny, limited organism that can acquire skill and expertise and a reason for pride, etc., and a sense of accomplishment.

When you allow yourself to be the unconditional presence of truth, by letting truth be right where you are, and letting love be right where you are, you are not sacrificing yourself. You are allowing who you really are to be present, it is your ego that gets sacrificed. And it is an illusion anyway, a limited perception of Self, with a capital “S”—a limited sense of who you divinely are. That is what gets sacrificed. And in that process of being the presence of, “not my human puny will be done, but Thine be done,” you are engaging in an active process of coming into a clear and true experience of your identity.

When you let the Father through, you are letting through the only thing that has ever been present right where you are. There never has been anything other than God right there where you are.

And so when it comes to healing you can say, “I don’t have the faintest idea what needs to be done here. I don’t have the faintest idea of how to heal anyone. But I am willing to step out of the way and let the infinite penetration of truth shine through, because that is its inclination and intent. And I will not block that flow. I yield to it. And I trust it. And I entrust the one I am working to it.” And then you let the illumination of love, which is the presence of the Father in human experience do the healing.

And you will not feel incompetent or unready, because that which feels incompetent and unready can never become competent or ready, because it isn’t part of the healing process. You are the place where God shines through. Yield to that illumination, knowing that It knows exactly what to do and how to do it. And I encourage you not to wait six months to try this out. Whatever opportunity you have to actively stand as the transparency for truth and love you will find healing occurring. There is no need to delay. There’s no way for you to be ready, so why not go ahead now and watch the dynamic healing effect of the love that you let shine through.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: And I love you.

QUESTION: Good evening, Raj.

ANSWER: Good evening, indeed.

QUESTION: Well, I have a question that I would like to preface it with something. I have two visionary experiences, at least to me, that are a recurring thing. One is of you as Jesus, and I see everything but the face. And the other is stepping up to a gate into what I call infinity or infinite love, and turning back as if I needed a parachute, and I’m asking how I see the face and I step past the gate.

ANSWER: The way you see the face is by not attempting to coerce it into being whatever you conceive my face to be, and daring to allow your face to appear. The Christ, the stranger within thy gates that is your teacher, and your healer, and your revealer is you.

Now, the second vision is not one for you to do anything about. It is one that will continue to occur and you will find subtle changes occurring and they are for you to simply observe. The move through the gate will occur. It is not a call for you to do anything at all, just observe it, and notice the changes, and be curious. But also be allowing, and do not try to hurry it up, do not try to help it be what you think it is going to become.

It bears a direct relationship to the degree of trust that you are bringing into play, and instead of reacting to the fact that you stepped back, acknowledge the significance of your stepping up to the gate first. That is a stepping up to the threshold. That is what is to be magnified and valued in this vision. The stepping back will become less and less, and the forward movement will be more and more. Just be patient and abide with the unfolding scene of the vision. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you so much.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: It's been difficult for me to be here in this setting, but I'm here. I've been working a lot on changing my misperceptions of you, as I see you here in the present, instead of the way I used to think of you. Could you help me with anything you could say on this to help the shift?

ANSWER: Certainly it illustrates to you the necessity of being willing to be present with whatever it is that you feel uncomfortable with, rather than being present with your preconceptions.

This phenomena that you have experienced of the difficulty of being with me because of your preconceptions, illustrates difficulties that everyone has being with certain other people, whether they are me, or whether they are family, friends, business associates, etc. Because your preconception, or your mindsets so completely governs how you perceive what is going on, altering what is going on at least to your perception. And in this way each of you does create your experience.

And I will tell you something: when you approach your fellow man behaving toward him on the basis of your preconception, your fellow man feels the fact that you are not present with him, that you are not seeing him. And this is bothersome to say the least.

I will tell you that it is very much like one night when Paul's wife had a dream about Paul, and in the dream he did something that was very offensive to her. And she woke him up and was very angry with him for his behavior in her dream. At the moment she was not distinguishing the difference between the events in her dream and the real Paul.

It is well, especially when it comes to those things which are divine to approach them with a simple willingness to be present with them so that you might be sensitive to them as they are instead of as you perceive them to be, or conceive them to be.

This is one of the major difficulties in Awakening, because of the fact that the limited ego frame of reference defines everything in limited terms. And thus, that which is infinite, that which promotes expansion into one's native freedom is seen as a threat to the ego. And so it paints horrible pictures, it creates images of fear around those, shall I say, portholes of expansiveness so that one will not pass through them. And that is why it is wise in order to get past the ego images to be willing to simply be present, assuming that your preconceptions are likely to be false. And be open. And let that which is divine present itself to you.

You see, at the bottom line, when you are opening up to that which is divine, you are opening up to that which is part of you, because, as I said yesterday, your being is infinite. The limited circumference of the ego frame of reference simply blocks you from experiencing all of yourself. And what you are opening up to by virtue of defenselessness and just a simple willingness to be present with that which is divine, is yourself. And that is the way you let yourself into your greater capacity to be aware divinely.

Why would you be defended against that which is real? Only because to the ego that which is real uncovers the ego's unreality. And that is why the ego is nothing more nor less than a defense mechanism, it is intent upon saving it's skin. But I will tell you that it is a sense of self that is only reasonably comfortable to anyone because it's familiar. And you will not be able to move into your larger capacity to be aware and be comfortable if you don't become defenseless against it, if you don't become undefended, if you don't become willing, receptive and yielding.

As I said yesterday, the reason it is difficult to open up to one's guide, and the reason it is difficult to stand defenseless in the presence of God is because everyone is afraid that in the illumination of that which is real your guilt will be confirmed.

(Side 2 of tape 5 starts here. It sounds like something was missed. But I'm transcribing from the original tapes.)

But what the light uncovers, truly is the divine reality of each of you, your Christhood, your divinity, your purity, your innocence. And these are not just nice words that I am bandying about with, I may be saying them gently, I may be saying them casually, but I am talking about the fundamental capital "F" Fact of your Being. That's the only thing that can be uncovered in the illumination of the presence of God.

I will put it this way, in the baptism of the light of God, what you will hear is “not guilty,” but “this is my beloved Son, this is my beloved Daughter in whom I am well pleased.” Do not be afraid of the divine presence, whether it is me, whether it is the Father, whether it is the Holy Spirit, whether it is your guide. Because in that presence who you truly are in all of your innocence and perfection and completeness is uncovered to you, because you are the only one’s who are not experiencing your divinity. It is obvious to me. It is obvious to the Father. It sticks out all over you like a sore thumb.

And I will tell you something else: When you approach your fellow man with preconceptions that cause you to be defensive, you are disallowing yourself the experience of recognizing their Christhood, and you are eliciting by your behavior responses from them, shall I say, of confusion and frustration, because they feel you are not connecting with them. It is as though you are talking to somebody else, or about somebody else, and yet you appear to be talking to them. This is very disturbing, and each of you has had that experience at one time or another.

So I do encourage you to be willing to be present, defensively present with your guide, with me, with the Father, with the Holy Spirit, and let us in, so that you might have the opportunity to know us NOW—not a God of the past, not a Christ of the past. Because there is no such thing! I exist NOW! You exist NOW! The Father is being the Movement of Creation NOW!

And I will tell you something else: The unbelievable thing that will happen when you dare to be defenselessly present, is that you will experience being loved. And you might cry because of the joy of being loved when you thought you were so undeserving.

And I will tell you something else: The love of the Father is not extended to you, because you are willing to be defenselessly present. Because you are being defenselessly present the ever present love of God has the opportunity to register with you. It is not a sudden gift, as a reward for being willing to be defenselessly present. Not one of you has ever managed to be outside of the love of the Father. It is an all-consuming, all-embracing love.

But it is possible for you to become so preoccupied with your imagination that you ignore it, in preference to the very strong belief of your worthlessness. You all to one degree or another have a very strong conviction in your worthlessness. And your conviction convicts you, and you feel convicted to darkness, and you feel that it is justifiable. And all the time that you are caught up in this intellectual, compulsive, preoccupation with worthlessness, you are the glorious Christ being loved by the Father, included in the Brotherhood of Man—which the Bible has spoken of as the Body of Christ—dreaming this tiny little dream.

I encourage all of you when the word dream is used, as in A Course In Miracles, or in other metaphysical systems that you stop thinking of it as a night dream and start thinking of it as a daydream. A night dream suggests that you are unconscious. A daydream is something that is going on while you are totally conscious—you can sit here and glance out the window and become distracted and involved in a daydream, or a student in school can do the same thing.

It is much more helpful for you to think of the dream as something that is going on while you are conscious, because then switching from the dream to what is really going on amounts to nothing more than a shift of attention—a conscious shift of attention from a preoccupation with something that isn't going on to something that is going on. And this will help you to understand that waking up is not some difficult process of moving from unconsciousness to consciousness. And it will be easier for you to grasp that this doesn't necessarily mean a long journey. It is just a shift of focus of attention.

I am with you this weekend to help distract you from your daydream. The revelation can come instantly. In the school room the teacher calling your name, or a nearby student dropping a book on the floor so there is a sharp sound is enough to wake you out of your reverie, your daydream. And there you are back in the class room. And likewise, just as suddenly as that you can find yourself back in the Kingdom of Heaven, because you are in the Kingdom of Heaven at this instant, fully conscious, but distracted with an imagination.

Now does being distracted by an imagination cause you to be a sinner? Is it a moral issue? Is it something that is deserving of punishment? No. It certainly is a capacity that each one of us has. The only thing is that in giving your attention to an imagination you become distracted from the experience of being the conscious Movement of Creation. Your awareness becomes limited to a very fine focus. And so it is a limited experience. A limited experience going on right in the middle of real happenings that are unlimited.

Now you simply became comfortable with your daydream about me—your preconception about me—to the point that it felt threatening to have your attention snapped back into a real experience of who I really am in the now. And it is the same thing relative to waking up.

Everyone is afraid to wake up, because they are afraid they will be judged for having been distracted and involved in imaginations. But everyone of us, everyone of us, every one, including you, of the Brotherhood of Man have that option, that capacity. It is just that we do not any longer engage in it, because it is so much more unfulfilling an experience than being totally aware of our identity—being aware of our divinity, being the conscious experience of the Movement of Creation that means that we are inseparable from the Father—it is so much less fulfilling than being at Home in our Right Mind, with a capital “M”.

And so you are simply learning that your distraction into imaginations is not particularly fulfilling. Don't be afraid to be present with Reality. And assume that until you are willing to be defenselessly present with Reality, that anything that you might think about Reality will tend to be false, and therefore you don't have a justifiable reason for being defended.

And then as I said yesterday, dare to become explorers. Dare to become undefended and risk the chance that God is All, and that the act of become defenseless and willingly present with God will uncover and illuminate your undeniable innocence and confirm to you your divinity. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are indeed welcome. And it is good to be able to be with you, and have you let me in.

QUESTION: Raj...

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I believe I'm in the Kingdom of Heaven. And being here, I'd like to know more about the divinity of the people (the men) I've known as an adult—been in relationship with—and so that I will be in a clear understanding of the truth, instead of misperceptions.

ANSWER: There are two things that it will be important for you to do. And I'm not going to talk to you about past relationships, but I'm going to talk to you about current relationships and any future relationships that might occur.

First of all, as I said yesterday, there is always a preexisting premise to your means of perceiving what is going on around you. There is always some basic premise that you are utilizing in order to interpret your world. And so you must dare, with those men in your life—as well as the men and women in your life who are perhaps not intimate relationships, but associates or friends—you must dare to approach them in the context, in the premise that if there is anything there appearing to be a man or a woman it must be the presence of God. And it must either be the presence of God seen truly, or the presence of God being misperceived. But nevertheless it is the presence of God.

Now, that is the first part. The second part is: You must be willing to intelligently monitor your thinking so that when you begin to judge them, or when you begin to perceive them as un-God-like—unloving, untruthful, unprincipled, acting at odds with life, not expressing much soul, etc.—you must catch that thought process and replace it with the conscious awareness of your basic premise, which is, that if there is anything standing here looking like a man, it must be the presence of God.

Do you love God? I'm not asking you to answer that question. But is not God ultimately lovable? I know that some of you at times have felt that God is absolutely not lovable, but that is because of the misperception caused by the limited frame of reference. God is indivisible.

Do you know what that means? If God is indivisible, then God is incapable of being divided. And if there is not division, there cannot be polarization and there cannot be agreement. There can only be unity. And unity is the definition of harmony. Harmony does not define the cooperative working together of disconnected parts. And that is very important to understand. God is infinitely expressed, and the harmony of God's infinite expression is not a result of an incredibly complex cooperative effort of disconnected parts. It is the unavoidable perfection of the infinite expression of unity.

Now why am I saying this? I am saying it because this means that it is an idiotic idea to conceive of God as being a wrathful god, a god of punishment, a god that would be impossible for you to love, a god that it would be impossible to dare to be defenseless in the presence of. It is because God is indivisible presence—which is another way of saying omnipresence—that you can dare to love God, and you can dare to love the God in your fellow man, whether you fellow man is consciously embracing it and embodying and expressing it or not.

As I said yesterday, love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything, in each and every one. And so you must dare to exercise a little bit of, not judgment, but discernment relative to your thinking. And when you find thoughts, conditionings presenting themselves to you that interpret another as being unloving, hateful, worthy of judgment and condemnation, you may squelch that unintelligent activity going on in your own mind, and replace it with an acknowledgment that, "if there is anything going on here at all where I see this man or this woman, it must be the presence of God, and I desire to be defenselessly present, defenselessly open to the presence of God that is here."

Now we cannot avoid also being wise. If the one whom you are willing to acknowledge the divinity of, is unaware of his divinity and is behaving out of fear and inner conflict, you cannot afford to allow yourself to be influenced or mistreated by that one's behavior that is based on his ignorance. To be defenselessly present with the divinity of another does not mean being unconditionally willing to be abused when that one's behavior is based upon ignorance.

And this is a very important point. But understand that in the intelligent use of discernment and the recognition—the discernment between that which is real and that which is unreal—you are not blocked from being unconditionally present with the Christ of that one.

When you go out into your garden, you look at it and you see that there are the flowers that you have planted, and there are weeds that have also started to grow. You are able to discern the difference. Being open enough to discern the difference doesn't put you in a position of being overwhelmed and controlled by the weeds, it simply allows you to discern which ones to pluck up and which ones to leave. You let the beauty and the order of the flowers dominate, and you let the presence of the weeds hold no control over you, and you pluck them out and discard them.

So you do make a distinction, but that does not mean judgment, it is simply a matter of discernment. And when I use the word judgment, I mean it in the sense of accusation, judgment and conviction. You discern in your fellow man what doesn't truly represent him. And you do not honor it. You also do not react to it. You simply handle yourself in a way that is wise, and then you make the effort to honor that which is Real in that individual, and by virtue of honoring it elicit it from that individual, give support to it by virtue of your honoring it, and identifying it as that one's true identity.

In this way you will handle yourself well, and you will find that you have available to you a bridge that can get past the ego—the false ego dynamics of that individual—and connect with him at the level of who he is. And it will most definitely appear as though miracles are happening. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. That's a very satisfying answer.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You mentioned yesterday, Raj, that in relating to this experiment going on in this village where there are some of us together, that there would be a new way of relating. I believe that's the way you phrased it. I'm going to need to ponder it for awhile.

ANSWER: The answer to the last question and the one prior to that, both address this way of relating from one's center. and so you have even more of a grasp of the meaning of the answer given yesterday. Continue.

QUESTION: We have a group, a small group of us that are meeting regularly, in addition to our Miracles group, and we are meditating once a week. And my perception is that, there are two things that are important or feeling correct about it. One is that simplicity is part of the Reality, and also a good deal of desire to be in the silence. And everyone seems to be responding to this.

And I feel a strong desire to be still almost all the time, to not be using words that often. Yet I feel that somehow we all need to have some common understanding and some understanding together that as a group there is something to listen to that effects all of us around what we will be doing in the future...I think I'm asking for guidelines, further guidelines as to how we can be together.

ANSWER: It is important to understand that as one first begins to explore, shall I say, the nature of the closet that one goes into—that inner space, that centered place—that as one initially begins to explore that experience of quietness, it is necessary to be still, to be physically inactive, sitting quietly. But as one becomes familiar with the experience of his or her peace—the peace of his or her Being—it then becomes possible to experience it without the requirement of being physically still. It becomes possible for one to be connected to his centered awareness without absolute mental activity.

Now when you meditate and you finish the meditation, do not immediately release the experience in favor of returning to your normal responses and approaches to your activities. I encourage each of you, when you finish your meditation, to gently and even slowly open your eyes, and do not engage in actions that are jarring, that unsettle the experience of peace. And you will find that you will be able to get up from your seat and go and attend to thing while still carrying forward a surprising amount of that peace.

The point of meditating is to become so familiar and so comfortable with your centered place that it is easy to remain in it as you re-engage with activities in the world. The point is to bring that centered perspective, as I have said before, into the market place, into the activities of your day.

The more familiar you become with being centered, by virtue of meditating, the easier it will be to access that centeredness in the middle of your activities. And that is what is going to contribute to your behaving with others in a way that represents Reality more clearly, and will revolve a new means of relating or of relationships.

You move into the silence to become familiar with the nature of your Being. And then you can bring that nature of you—that essential Being of you—with you into your activities when there is not silence. I say this so that you will not begin to value silence and immobility so much that you make a distinction between that and your activities and begin to see them as opposing each other.

When Paul and I first began to speak, it was essential for him to meditate for at least 15 minutes before he was quiet enough to be able to experience my presence and what I was conveying. As he became more and more comfortable with it, he found that he could speak with me without meditating at all, and even speak with me while he was driving the car.

And now obviously, he is able to hear me when he is with a large number of people, and there are activities going on around, and sounds above, etc. And he is able to use his body expressively as it fits what is being said. And so it is not necessary for him to be sitting in silence in perfect inactivity. That is just a stepping stone that allows for becoming familiar and comfortable with being connected within.

As I said yesterday, much to Paul's distress, he is coming to a point where it is becoming more and more ridiculous for him to return to what has been called the role of “bumbling Paul.” His wife jokingly says that after a workshop he turns back into a pumpkin. It is lovingly said.

And so the point is to arrive where one is being, as we said yesterday, out from capital “M” Mind, out from one’s center in the world, so that one walks through the world Awake, so that one engages in relationships Awake, so that one engages in activities Awake. And the state of being centered is not identifies with a particular pose or posture or location. And one moves into the freedom of his Being, and the freedom of moving and being in the world without sacrificing his or her wholeness.

Now the one other point that it is important for you to understand in the context of the question that you asked is: That becoming the transparency for truth, becoming the transparency for love, allowing the presence of God that truly constitutes your individuality to be that which is embodied and expressed by you does not require you to use certain language. What it requires you to do is to simply be unconditional love.

It means for your behavior to flow out of an inner balance and equilibrium that constitutes poise, that allows you to be exquisitely responsive with absolute appropriateness at any given time. It amounts to being genuine, and real and simple in your relationships and activities with others.

So I am encouraging you as you move forward in the development of this community, not to look for structures or new patterns of behavior to replace the old patterns of behavior in community. You don’t want structure. You want the fluid, flexible flow of the ability to be appropriate at any given moment. That of simple genuineness, of simply being present with and sensitive to another, without new, more modern, more new age rules of etiquette.

You’re at a point of letting go of etiquette, of letting go of rules or patterns of behavior in favor of being so present with those around you and in the community that you are again exquisitely appropriate in a manner that confirms everyone’s essential divinity and worth. That takes love.

And again, and this cannot be said often enough, Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital “R”, in each and everything. It doesn’t take a lot of schooling to do this. It doesn’t take a lot of skill to do this. It doesn’t take a lot techniques to do it. It takes nothing more than a willingness to be humble, simple, genuinely coming forth from your center, from the void in you, the nonarrogant defenselessness.

In all of your “processes” of Awakening, don’t for one minute allow yourself to forget about love, and gratitude, and joy. These three things are the most effective elements for cutting through the limits of your old conditioning. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have a young son who was diagnosed last year as a diabetic when he was three. How can he and his parents teach him, or how can we help him make the decision to heal himself?

ANSWER: I encourage you to convey to him—again in language that he can understand—that he is wonderful, that he is the child of God, that he is the expression of Life, with a capital “L”, that everything about him is regenerative. I understand that you cannot use these words with a three-year-old. But if he cuts himself accidentally, and he cries, and he is frightened, you tell him not to worry that it will get better, because it will heal.

You convey to him that he doesn’t need to be afraid, and that he can expect himself to arrive at a point where his finger is no longer bleeding and no longer looks or appears to be out of the ordinary. You convey by your attitude the fact that he can dare to relax and be confident in regeneration—healing, the manifestation of perfection.

Now, both of you as parents have the opportunity, you even have the demand here to take a look at the premise or the context in which you are interpreting his presence. Is he just an organism generated by the organisms of your two bodies? Is he a body that is the result of something that two other bodies have engaged in? Or is he a manifestation of something greater than, more than physique?

If you are willing to acknowledge that you are in the middle of Reality, you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and so is he, and all three of you are the direct expression of God, and therefore Christ’s, then you will be holding him, you might say, in a context of what is Real, with a capital “R”, therefore divine, and therefore at the bottom line, incapable of expressing anything unlike its Source.

This will cause you to arrive at the conclusion that the diabetes is a distorted manifestation, or I’m going to say, a distorted experience of something essentially perfect, that the distortion is an illusion having its source not in God, and therefore being sourceless.

As you withdraw investment of faith in the definition of his health that says he has diabetes, and there becomes an equivalent investment of faith in his divine origin, his current divine nature, and the fact that there is not truly present any causative agent capable of generating disease, you, by virtue of that clarity and the peace that will come with it will stand as, what I will call, healing agents in his experience.

You will be embracing him in the truth, and your actions, and your words will thoughtlessly convey to him the very same confidence that you have conveyed to him that he can practice that if he cuts himself it will get well. And it will confirm and support his confidence in the fact that his body is present to affirm life not destroy it.

It is the intent of everyone's body to identify the presence of that one's individuality perfectly. If the two of you are not expressing fear, and you are not conveying that fear is justified to your son, and on the other hand you are conveying justification for confidence and peace and healing, you will be laying the ground work for his experiencing that healing. And you will not be establishing a mindset that will undermine his confidence in his very experience of life, because maybe this body is on his side and maybe it's not.

And in the meantime you take all the practical steps to see that balance is manifested in his body. And you be grateful for the fact that in spite of the fact that this balance is not occurring naturally, the penetration of love into the illusion is sufficient to negate the illusion and bring about that balance until that balance is able to be seen so clearly that no "artificial means" are required. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: First of all I'd like to thank you and Paul and the Father and all of us for that rainbow, and the love and the joy that it represented.

My question is about karma. And this really is a personal question, it's not a metaphysical one. I really agree with your teaching that salvation is here and our divinity is absolute, and that guilt and all that can be changed in a moment, and that we can Awaken in a moment. As I believe somebody like Saddam Hussein could wake up in a moment, and I pray that he does.

But it also seems to me that the law of karma is at least relatively active, otherwise people wouldn't be born with diabetes, or deformities, or whatever. And I really don't have any problem with that polarity. My question is more about...

ANSWER: Let us stop for just a moment. It is quite possible that there are other explanations for those who are born with what are called birth defects, besides karma.

Karma, the word, simply represents ignorance, whatever the current ignorance of reality is. Karma is never a debt or a penalty. It is simply the suffering that accompanies ignorance, which lasts until the ignorance is replaced with clarity.

For example: If you were to pass on at this very instant, you would not find yourself changed in anyway from the moment prior to your passing on. You would still find yourself believing what you believe now. You would still find yourself fearing what you fear now, except your fear of death, because the experience of passing on would have proven to you conclusively the uninterruptibility and eternity of your existence. But other than that you would find yourself still faced with the necessity of yielding into your divinity, the necessity of becoming defenseless against it.

Someone observing you from the other side entering that place might look at you from a more Awakened vantage point and notice that you are bringing with you some old baggage, if you will, that would be the equivalent of birth defects in this lifetime.

So what you take with you, what you bring with you as you come into this lifetime is whatever degree of clarity you allowed to penetrate your limited frame of reference prior to your birth and whatever remaining ignorance's had not been removed prior to your birth.

I am glad you brought up this subject, because I love it—I love to dispel the belief about it. As I have said before, karma is a pay-as-you-go affair. Your suffering is always the result of current ignorance. Ignorance is not accrued, and whatever suffering you experienced in the past does not create for you a penalty greater than the suffering that accompanies the ignorance.

Who would decide that a penalty greater than the suffering of the current ignorance ought to be laid upon you, and make that judgment, and convict you, and hold you to the paying of a penalty whether you experienced clarification or not. Or who would decide that clarification would not be allowed until you had served your time. Certainly no one who was Awake. And if you want to put it this way, creative decisions—the practice of, shall I say, being causative—can only be exercised by those who are Awake. Continue with your question.

QUESTION: I agree with you that karma is ignorance. To go and step further, my questions about, whether you can take on this ignorance or this suffering for someone else? And my question relates to my experience with a man who is a head of one of the Tibetan Buddhist lineage's. And his name is the Karmapa, and his name literally means karma pa, or father of karma. And I believed him to be an Awakened one. He has consciously reincarnated as the Karmapa for the last 800 years, and he predicts his next incarnation. So from my limited view, that's relatively enlightened.

And he has taken what's called the bodhisattva vow, which is to gain enlightenment for all beings, and to stay here until all beings is enlightened. And yet in each incarnation he's very sick. He's always got many diseases and he dies in his fifties, usually. And there's some misunderstanding I have of how that could be as before you said when you're in lined with the spirit that your body lines up and your diseases go away. Well, the belief is that this man takes on karma for other beings as part of his spiritual path.

And I asked the Karmapa a question, a few years ago about suffering. And he told me that suffering was joy. And at that time I went into a period of long suffering, I believe as a result of that encounter. And I was told that I took on karma for other people. And I don't say that with pride, because it was a very unpleasant and humbling experience.

And I guess my question is just trying to understanding this idea of suffering, and also about your life as Jesus. I feel that your life effected me very much, and still does. And I think I have some misunderstanding of this idea of the martyr or taking on the suffering for other beings in service. And I would like your illumination on this issue, which is a very deep one for me.

ANSWER: You see, because of the necessity, the apparent necessity to present the idea that everyone is a sinner in order to keep the church alive, it also became necessary to provide an explanation as to how one could possibly escape that decree of sinner, that statement of sinfulness as though it were a fact. And so it was decided within the church hierarchy to present the idea that I had died for your sins, for everyone's sins. This was the escape hatch, the loop hole, if you will, that allowed for those who were being told and convinced that they were sinners, to escape from that pronouncement.

There really is only one word that can be properly associated with my life, and that is: Way-shower. Because I simply proceeded along the path that everyone must proceed along in their process of Awakening. And even now I am simply standing a little bit ahead of you saying, "Come on it's safe."

The concept of sin is a deluded or distorted mental concept, an aberration, if you will, of conscious awareness that causes it to seem reasonable for all of you to assume that maybe you are sinners, just because. Even though none of you can really justify it.

And that is why I am here, to restate the fact that we are brothers and sisters, that we are the off-spring, if you will, of the Father/Mother, that we are nothing more and nothing less than the direct expression of God, that we are therefore God expressed, as I have been saying.

Suffering is inseparable from the belief of being a sinner, of being something less than the Christ, being something less than what God is being right in the spot where you are. If you are a sinner then you are guilty of something. And if you embrace guilt you cannot help but be uncomfortable. And the more firmly convinced you are of your guilt the more uncomfortable you will be, and the more distressing will be your experience of life.

Now, you cannot take on someone else's illusion. You cannot take on someone else's guilt. If you think you are, you are just embroidering the basic false premise of sinfulness as a given of existence. What most effectively cuts through illusion, is someone who is not seeing the illusion and is able to report back to you the reality.

Now you must understand that each of you holds on to your illusions. Some of you have found that you can believe that your illusions are actually contributing to the progression, the evolution, the development, the exalting of your Soul. And so why would you get rid of the suffering that is going to exalt you?

I was no martyr. It was a simple fact that it was time for the deathlessness of life to be demonstrated, for all to know. So that the fear of death, and the disbelief in the eternity of life might be release from one's conscious experience and thus promote a more rapid embracing of the essential divinity of conscious human individuality.

I was not confused, and I was not conflicted, and I did not experience death, and I knew I would not experience death. I was going through a process, if you will, that would register in human thought, that would penetrate the limited frame of reference in language that would prove something that is apparently incomprehensible from within the limited frame of reference.

What I did appeared to fit the concept of martyrdom. But none of the other martyrs who have died for their cause, has advanced the comprehension of the eternity of life, because there was no resurrection and ascension. And so I was not fulfilling the role of martyr, and I was not dying for your sins. My life, and my work, and my words, and my relationships with the disciples and those who listened was such that it opened up a clearer sense of who our Father is, and therefore of who we are, so that those who were aware of me and what I had to say could embrace an expanded or enlarged view of themselves in a larger context, and thus free themselves up to more gracefully Awaken.

I was here, and it was part of my fulfillment of purpose to set an example. But my life has been used as a means of separating all of you from me, setting up a difference between us, exalting me by virtue of my martyrdom, exalting me by virtue of proposing that I was the only begotten Son of God—and I don't know where that leaves the rest of you. And that it was because I was different from you that resurrection and ascension—in other words the disproving of death as being as sure as taxes—and my being able to leave this planet without dying is what is in store for you. Except that the example doesn't need to be repeated, and so it is unnecessary for anyone else to be killed and to be resurrected before ascending.

You can simply allow yourselves more easily into the conscious embrace of your divinity so as to experience the enlightenment that allows you to be more and more congruent with the fulfillment of God's purpose that you are, and thus not go through an experience of death again. And when it is time to, shall I say, be somewhere else because it fulfills purpose, you will be able to go there without going through a process of death.

The ego always uses divine events to support its on going existence, and it does it by turning the unlimiting freeing elements of emerging divinity and turning them into processes and means of becoming deserving of what is truly already yours. My life and my apparent death occurred to prove what is already true, and what is already yours and always had been.

Now this one that you mentioned indeed has returned many times and has fulfilled this intent. He—and I am not meaning to negate what he is doing—is caught in an attachment to a role of savior. There is indeed a great deal of clarity, a great deal of enlightenment, but he is enamored with the package in which the gift of his clarity is given.

He is not totally Awake, but he is far more Awake than those with who he works, and has worked in each of his lifetimes. There is still further Awakening, and you are correct, there is an inconsistency between what he is teaching and the way he is manifesting, the way he is being in the world. And it is important for you to understand this so that you do not assume that there can be or that there needs to be as part of your spiritual advancement the taking on of suffering.

It is time to be through with suffering. It is time to be through with ignorance. And it is especially time for suffering not to be valued as that which exalts you. What exalts you is your already existing divinity, your already existing Christhood. It is Reality penetrating the limited frame of reference that exalts—already existing Reality.

There are many in their process of healing—and the practice of healing, which if there is healing, is always an expression of true Love, Love with a capital “L”—who embrace the belief that they must take on the problem themselves, and then because they know that it isn’t their problem they can more easily discard it. And so indeed, the person whom they are healing becomes free of the disease, and the healer experiences it as his or hers and then sets it aside.

Well I will tell you something: The taking on of the illness and the setting aside of it, are an irrelevant and unreal process. Because the love that is being expressed has in the final analysis provided, as I said yesterday, the environment or atmosphere in which the individual needing healing has been able to give permission to himself or herself to let it go and not claim it any longer. It is that individuals decision, that giving of permission, and the release that has effected the healing. It is the unconditional love that promoted and supported that inner decision on the part of the one needing to be healed.

That is the only real thing that happens. The apparent experience of taking on the illness by the healer and the subsequent discarding of it is an irrelevant bit of nonsense. But because the one engaging in the healing gives permission for all of this to happen on that basis, it works. It doesn’t make it true. But it is a manner, a way in which the penetration of Reality can occur because the permission is given. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: That was very helpful. Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

ANSWER: I would like to answer Susan's question. But you will have to ask it.

SUSAN (Paul's wife): I've never done this in a workshop before, but I'm urged to ask this question. And I'll try to keep it simple. Can you give your interpretation or definition of the word "integrity?" It's used often, and I have a feeling that it's not going to have the same meaning that we usually feel it does. That's it.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is a good question. Integrity is essential truth. Your integrity, if I am speaking to each of you individually, is constituted of the essential truth of you, the essential presence of you, the undistorted presence of the First Cause, the Life Principle, the Father/Mother/God, whatever word you choose to use. There is something genuine about each of you. There seems to be a wrapping around that genuineness of a bunch of irrelevant crap. But underneath it is something fundamentally, essentially valid.

I will tell you something: The experience of humiliation is constituted of the peeling away of the layers of irrelevant crap, which you have come to value because in one way or another it represents you and gives you credibility, because you have learned to work with it relatively well, and to integrate and correlate it with the crap that is encircling everyone else.

Indeed when you are ultimately humiliated, you have come to an experience and a place of humility, you have come down to the essential kernel of your presence. You do not enjoy that experience to begin with, except that there is a great relief that is experienced, because you don't have to put on a front anymore for anybody. You don't have the energy to put on the front anymore for anybody. And you don't give a damn whether anyone cares or not. And something ultimately honest comes out of you finally. And there is a great relief even though your conditioning tells you you are in the worst spot you have ever been in ever.

What you have come down to is the essential truth of you. Because it seems to have been covered over like layers of onion skins, you feel very small when it has been peeled away. But when you get to that point where you simply don't have the energy anymore to play the ego games, and you must let yourself be this inconsequential little piece of shit that you feel like, something happens, you begin to feel yourself being filled with something quite unexpected. That is if you do not quickly attempt to wrap yourself up again.

You begin to feel marvelous, because you are free of the ego games. You experience a freedom that feels unquestionably perfect and justifiable. In fact it is so substantial that no justification is called for. You begin to feel the presence of God as the constituting presence of you. That is your integrity.

Gathering In ISSAQUAH, WA –1990

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: I've had a difficult year with myself.

ANSWER: You are not the only one.

QUESTION: That's a relief. And my difficulty seems to be focused around employment. Due to unforeseen circumstances my nursing license is gone, and I can't make myself do what I need to do to retrieve it. And because of our financial situation, I have taken work that I find very boring. And I've been extremely unhappy to the point that I just don't feel I can do it anymore, and I'm feeling guilty about that; I'm feeling selfish that I'm not wanting to contribute to our income. I guess I would just like some direction.

I've had difficulty with employment in the past, in that I've gotten very ill [in order] to leave. This time I'm not as ill, but I'm very unhappy. Is it that I don't want to work and therefore this happens, or is it the employment that I have is not fulfilling to me?

ANSWER: I will be very frank with you: it is your ego throwing a temper tantrum. It is absolutely appropriate for you to retrieve your license. That is truly what you love to do. But there is an anger in you at the circumstances, which sometimes comes out directed to the one closest to you. But more than that it tends to be anger at God and a refusal on your part to express common sense because you or your ego are angry at God. If God is not going to express intelligence in a recognizable way in your experience then neither are you. That is really the bottom line of it.

What you must realize is that when you refuse to express intelligence, you are creating a closed door to the entry of the intelligence that God is—you are not being that place where God moves into expression. You are the threshold of the Movement of God. You are not the only threshold, but your very Being is constituted of the point of entry into expression of the Father/Mother.

And so if you are going to be, or if your ego is going to be willful, and it is going to refuse to express intelligence because it is pissed off at God, then you are going to find yourself experiencing a void—an emptiness of intelligence unfolding in and as your experience.

The call really is for the releasing of that anger—a little more Self-appreciation, with a capital "S", in the sense of appreciating that indeed you are the place where God shines through, where God moves into specific Self-expression. And then on the basis of that Self-appreciation, let that Movement of God flow as intelligence expressed, as that love or willingness to recognize Reality or fulfillment right where you are.

I understand that the ego is getting quite a bit of satisfaction from attempting to create a stand off with God. But God is not standing off with you, or from you. And the moment you are willing to yield, to be humble enough, to be willing to let intelligence flow through you, in the willingness to let, what I'm going to call, your common sense, your clearest expression of intelligence to come into expression, you will begin to find yourself moving—moving in the flow of the clearer and clearer manifestation of fulfillment.

The suggestion that the ego gives is that you didn't get mad until after God shortchanged you. But the fact is that the only closing off that occurs is on your part, or on other people's parts. God is forever expressing Himself. And the expression appears as you, and you, and you, and you, and everyone. And if everyone from their tiny perspective claims a place that can stand in opposition to the expression of God, that one blocks the experience of the Movement of fulfillment—and then there is distress. But the blocking off, the closing off occurs first on the part of everyone of you, and then the distressing circumstance begins to, shall I say, congeal and manifest in one's experience. That is always the way it is, because the Father never withholds any of what He Is from His Self-expression.

And waking up is literally a matter of letting go of the resistance to this Self-expression of the Father that you are, and letting all that constitutes what God is be that which identifies you.

If you wish to indulge in the tantrum a little further, go ahead. But understand that the sense of limitation, of lack, of distress will not stop until you have had your fill of the apparent satisfaction of getting even.

And understand also, that no judgment is made upon you, and no penalty will be given for this temper tantrum. The suffering, or limitation that you are experiencing as a result of blocking is the only penalty there is. And it isn't inflicted upon you from outside of you, it is brought upon you by your refusal to be in your peace and to yield to the Movement of Intelligence as you recognize it as yours. The moment you begin to let that intelligence flow—the intelligence that is you—the frustration, the suffering, the lack, etc., will cease.

QUESTION: So am I to understand that if I begin to go back for my license that this will be yielding, and the suffering will decrease. And why am I pissed off?

ANSWER: If you go back for your license with willingness rather than a vengeance, indeed you will find the limitation and the frustration ceasing.

You are pissed off because you have seemed to experience a lack that you were unwilling to take responsibility for. And there was, early on, not a great deal of anger but an insistence on your part not to bring your full expression of intelligence into play in your life until, shall I say, you had a sign from God, until there was some indication that you were cared for. And when that indication was not forthcoming, then you began to get angry, and more forcible in your stand off.

You, every single one of you, are the entry point of the presence of God. Now I do not truly mean that you are the threshold through which God manifests in the world. You are the threshold of Mind through which the conscious experience of the Movement of Creation flows into identifiable, experienceable form. You are the threshold of the conscious experience of Reality, of the Kingdom of Heaven. And when resistance to that flow is released, you find transformation occurring within you, and you find transformation apparently occurring within the world. But what is actually happening is—in Biblical terms—the scales are falling from your eyes that hid from view the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven or of Reality that you have forever been in.

In that sense, it appears as though God makes His presence known in the world. But the fact is that what is happening is an inner opening, an inner unconditional resistancelessness in which revelation, the revealing, the uncovering of the Reality that has always been going on occurs as your conscious experience. So, you are as Conscious Being the threshold of the conscious experience of Reality. The breakthrough and the entering of this revealed Reality is one of consciousness.

And so you are not responsible for allowing God into the world, and therefore responsible for the saving of all mankind. You are responsible for releasing the resistance to the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're already in. And in that way you will discover experientially what I am describing as you being the threshold of the Movement of God.

You see you get angry, all of you get angry at God or the divine powers that be, because you hold yourself apart, you feel separate and tiny, different from the Divine Presence called God. And then you attempt to bring about a reconciliation, controlling as it might be. And that still misses the point, because you are not relaxing into your essential Self, your essential Being, which is already constituted of the Presence of God.

So literally, when one stops bargaining with God, which is always a process of negotiation, which is always an exercise of control for your best interests, when you let go of the negotiating and bargaining and you become willing and yielding and nonresistant, you have the opportunity then to experience what feels like an infilling of the presence of love, and the presence of peace, and the presence of a sense of your absolute integrity. And then in that feeling and experience of safety you relax further, and you begin to find your world reconfiguring.

And it is because you have ceased to function at odds with your conception of God. And you have ceased to function at odds with yourself. And in that congruence, in that inner integrity you find that you aren't separate from God and you aren't separate from the meaning of life, and life begins to be seen more clearly in its truth.

Indeed, when you do that, you do become an inspiration to others. It does seem as though you are a presence "in the world" that is of value. But it isn't that you are a presence in the world, it is that you are being the presence of Mind, capital "M" Mind, the presence of your Real Selfhood, the presence of God that has not been distorted into a tiny personal sense of self. And that inspires everyone to dare to yield into and explore their own divinity; because in your presence, because you are coming from that place, they feel no need for defense.

So if you are the threshold of the Movement of God into expression as your conscious discovery of Reality right where you are, of the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are, then of what value is bargaining, of what value is a temper tantrum? I know it's momentarily satisfying, but it is a shallow fulfillment, because it doesn't connect you with that which is truly fulfilling, and it does not allow you the feeling of unity with your world.

Waking up is a matter of letting in the already present, already existing capital "R" Reality that has also been called the Kingdom of Heaven, that is forever confronting you. If you are conditioned to think that you are not in it and that you are separate from God, then God easily becomes the scapegoat and you miss the opportunity to discover your own essential validity—Meaning, with a capital "M", worth; because you don't have the context, the concept, if you will, that allows for you to look right where you are for that which is meaningful, because that is where God is—the Movement of Conscious Being that is the undistorted experience of Reality.

And so in your discovery of your Self you are always discovering God. And in your discovery of God you are always discovering your Self. But that willingness to set aside the anger and the bargaining and the testing of God must occur, so as to unblock the flow of the Movement of Creation over the threshold that you Are, so you may experience the Kingdom of Heaven instead of a tiny, distorted misperception of it that occurs because of a sense of tininess, and because of the seeking of satisfaction as a result of throwing a temper tantrum.

QUESTION: Well I have a question about anger, also. I can be going along for a couple of days, and be at peace and feeling centered, and then something will happen, and just like that I'll be angry. And it's very clear that it blocks things up. And then I kind of get stuck there. It's like a hole with slippery sides; it's real easy to fall in and then I'm in there, and I don't know, maybe it's pride that keeps me from getting out. But I would like to know somehow how to get out of the hole.

ANSWER: It isn't pride, it is the sense of justification for the anger, and the promise of satisfaction that will be gotten if you hang in there with this point you are angry about. There is not a complicated answer to your dilemma. It is ultimately simple. It is a matter of a little—I'm going to say, self-discipline, but I'm going to use those words cautiously—it is self-discipline in the sense of being alert: monitoring yourself enough to notice when you are losing your peace, so that you might consciously choose for your peace. The hooker is the justification for the anger. The justification is never, ever valid.

The only effect there is from anger is that you lose your peace. And yet your peace is forever available to you because it is inherent in you. Peace doesn't have to be generated, anger does. Peace is always accessible because it is always present, but you have to make a choice for it. And of course, the best time to make the choice for it is moments after you find your ego has been triggered by an event and anger has begun to operate.

The circumstances that create an angry response always seem more important than your noticing that you are losing your equilibrium, your peace. You must arrive at a point where you value your peace more than anything else, and where you are also able to acknowledge that the justification for anger or emotional reaction is always arising out of an ignorance—never out of clarity; therefore, the justification for it is always erroneous—always false. Then you will be able to see that the ego is suckering you—making a sucker out of you. It is distracting you from remembering that your peace is where you have your perspective that allows you to respond to any circumstance with appropriateness, and without being tied up in a knot.

Again, it is simple. Pay attention to yourself—be alert—so that when you begin to lose your peace you can say, “No, I don't choose to do that. I choose to continue to experience my peace, because that is where my intelligence is available to me, that is where my ability to be intelligent in the world is available to me. And I am no longer stupid enough to sacrifice my peace for a false thrill of satisfaction.” Then after having made that decision and having relaxed into your peace, deal with whatever is going on that your ego had chosen to be reactive about. But deal with it from your center.

QUESTION: So then is anger not like sadness? Some people say, “well, I think you have sadness, good to go through sadness or grieving to get to the other side.” But are you saying that that's not the case with anger? And that we need not experience it? Or are there times when it's necessary to go down in the hole for awhile and deal with that anger and express it.

ANSWER: Indeed, if you make the choice for your peace, and you sit and you attempt to meditate and to become centered, and you seem unable to get past the anger or the sadness, or the fear or the pain, whatever it might be, then indeed it is well to allow yourself into the anger.

Now I am talking about something that is going on within the interior of you. It is never a matter of getting into the anger and expressing it outwardly. If you allow yourself into the emotion that won't seem to go away when you attempt to become centered, you will always find a feeling arising—a feeling different from the anger or the sadness—and it will be relative to you. It will be a feeling about yourself. And once you connect with it and look at it, you will almost invariably find that that feeling is not relevant to anything going on in the moment you are in—that it is an old conditioned response. And when you arrive at that clarity, it then becomes easy for you to set down the response because it is so incongruent.

But I will tell you something: If you begin to be alert so that you catch these emotional reactions at their inception and you choose to return to your peace, you will always be able to get back to the peace, almost instantaneously, within minutes, let us say. It is only when the anger or the pain, let us say, gets hold of you, and you feel it reactively for a period of time, that it seems to establish itself and becomes less easy to set aside.

If it doesn't subside, then pay attention to it. And pay attention to what this feeling is expressing about you. And then when you discover what it is you are feeling, then take a look at your actual circumstances at that very moment—the immediate actual circumstances at that moment—and see whether there is anything at all occurring that is justifying that feeling. When you discover the inconsistency of the feeling with the actual events occurring, you will then be able to let go of it because it won't make sense, it will not be easy to justify.

Now when I said to pay attention to your immediate circumstances, I am being very precise. You may have a daughter, or a loved one, or a parent, or a friend, or business partner elsewhere in your city who you know is very angry or upset with you who is feeling unkindly toward you, and you may say that that justifies the feeling you are having.

When I say be aware of your circumstances, I mean, let us say, within fifty feet of you. I encourage you to bring yourself very much into the here and the now. Doing this will provide a little, shall I say, reality therapy. And if you will acknowledge the fact that there is nothing going on in your experience at that moment that warrants the reaction you are experiencing, the break in the mesmerism—if I may put it that way—will be able to occur that will release you so that you can then choose for your peace and access it.

And then once having accessed it, you can deal with the partner, or the loved one, or the child, or the parent, that might seem to be behaving in a way that calls for a response—a reaction within you.

This is a very important thing to understand, and a very practical practice to engage in. But you must realize that there is never a legitimate justification for your sacrificing your peace. If there were, it would be like saying there was justification for being temporarily insane—and there is none. And the loss of your sanity, if you indulged in the justification, would simply be an act of will on your part moving you out of your peace, and you would simply be left with the necessity of changing your mind and moving back into your peace. So you could say that the period of time that you engage in anger is a total waste of time and energy—always.

QUESTION: I am puzzled by the way we always blame the ego. Do we have to have a scapegoat?

ANSWER: Oh-h, a scapegoat implies an undeserving repository for judgment. The ego deserves the clarity of perception that we are engaging in, using, relative to it.

Now it is, however, important to understand that although we talk about the ego as though it were a presence, one that seems to act with some purpose and with some capacity to be affective, we are really talking about nothing more than an accumulation of beliefs and mindsets that cause one to misunderstand life.

The ego has no ability to express itself at all. I'm going to put it this way: It is always you who is doing the expressing—the activity, the action, the vitality, if you will—the force always comes from you. But you must understand that you all are the Christ, you all are the direct and full expression of the Father.

If, however, as this infinite capacity to be the presence of intelligence, you choose to only pay attention to certain data selected out of the infinity of what God is Being, and then you choose to treat that selected data as though it constituted all of the data, you end up with an incomplete picture being treated as though it were whole. And you are then in a state of confusion.

And if you operate on that basis, then we have what is called the ego state. Now the fact is that the Christ Consciousness, the Divine Mind that constitutes you hasn't changed one bit; all of what it is is still present. But you are selecting out a limited part of it to treat as though that is you. And so that sense of yourself is referred to as the ego. It would be much clearer to all of you if you used the words "ego sense of self," rather than just speaking of "the ego."

An ego sense of self is a limited self. The self is always the One and only Self—the Christ, literally. But when it is functioning on two cylinders instead of eight, it is not expressing itself fully. And if judgments and conclusions are arrived at on the basis that two cylinders are the maximum, and therefore represent the totality of what you are, you will behave unintelligently, you will behave incongruently with what is really true of yourself and what is true of the Kingdom of Heaven, or Reality, that is confronting you.

And so on the basis of an ignorant or limited perception of things, you trip over Reality. Reality, you might say, slaps you in the face, and you interpret it as an aggressive world that you must defend yourself against, rather than saying, "Wait a minute, maybe I needed that, maybe there is something more going on here than I am embracing."

So the ego is not a presence. It is not an intelligence. You might say that it is the presence of God being expressed through a knot hole. This is accomplished by what I have called selective seeing, where you pick and choose, for whatever reason, parts of Reality to embrace and other parts to exclude. But you know what? What you are selecting and excluding are all parts of you, are all parts of your conscious capacity to experience Reality.

So this ego sense of self is unintelligent, it really has no actual presence, it is an assumption to presence—it is a sense of presence based upon assumptions. And then you say, “that is me,” and it isn’t, because you are much more than that. But when you say, “that is me,” and then you behave on that basis, you are not in touch with your Self, and you are not in touch with life, you are functioning at odds with it—with life—and you stub your toe against Reality. And you say that this little sense of self that seems vulnerable truly needs to be even more defended.

So the ego is not a scapegoat. The ego is clearly a limited perception of self, a limited sense of self which is being treated as though it is the totality of self, and therefore constitutes an irrational act or action of mind that is not to be honored. Because if you honor it you will continue to deny the infinity of yourself in favor of this limited sense that you are affirming.

When you are willing to say, “I am not this bundle of reactions called a limited psychological process of synapses in the brain of this physical organism,” and you are willing to say, “I am an infinite presence of intelligence that expresses and embodies the Infinite Divine Mind of God,” you open up the door of your prison of your current limitations and give yourself the opportunity to access who you Divinely Are.

And so if you do not acknowledge the ego for what it really is, and acknowledge that indeed it constitutes a false limitation upon your experience of life, you will not ever try to reach beyond it.

Now we are not judging the ego, we are simply explaining what it is in very honest and real terms so that there is no mystical sense about it, no mystery to it that allows you to continue to stay in the dark about your divinity. You get the picture.

QUESTION: I think this question has to do with predestination. I have the feeling from reading The Course In Miracles that we choose God... He has chosen us first. Then when we choose God we make a connection, and from then on we have given up control of our own lives. And with the Holy Spirit we make decisions, okay. Is this predestination from there on?

ANSWER: Only in the sense that in having yielded to the Father, you are destined to be the forever fresh, clear, undistorted experience of the Movement of Creation. You are destined to forever be the conscious experience of the Movement of utter originality—the originality of the Movement of God. But that is not predestination in the sense of predictably determined futures. It puts you on the threshold of “Behold I make all things new.” God never stops to repeat Himself/Herself.

QUESTION: The question about the ego has been bothering me. What is the right place of the ego then? I mean we have it, I don’t think that it’s an accident that we have it. As a mother of young children I’m aware of the development of their ego as a way that they function in the world, and paradoxically see that that’s also something they will eventually know its limitation.

But I’m trying to put together my knowledge of psychological health, and that includes this paradoxical relationship, and how children develop. And it’s hard for me to believe that there isn’t a rightful place for the ego, or is there? I feel at odds with this discussion of the ego, it makes me feel uncomfortable, and I want to understand why?

ANSWER: You are speaking here of ego as a clear sense of identity, a definite clear sense of one’s own presence. And indeed it is imperative for this to develop as children are growing up and becoming familiar with their world. It is not, however, absolutely essential for a sense of conflict to accompany a clear sense of one’s identity. It is not necessary for there to be competition. It is not necessary for the presence of a clear sense of one’s identity to involve contests. Polarization is not an essential aspect of what you would call a healthy ego, or a healthy sense of one’s clear present identity.

However, because adults have acquired as an inherent part of their sense of identity a conflicted and defensive attitude, they pass this on in the education of their children. And it is carried out in the educational system—competition: doing better than Mary or Johnny, excelling beyond what someone else is doing, getting the best grades so that one can go to the best college, so that one can have the greatest amount of clout in the business world. All of these things create a sense of getting the competitive edge, and it becomes an inherent part of one’s ego sense of self.

Now this can be changed. There are those who are standing on the leading edge education wise, who are attempting even globally to introduce more sane, more humane practices that will evolve, you might say, egos that are indeed healthier, who will not engage in the competitive edge as long, or through as long a period of their life before they arrive at a point of realizing that they can let go into even deeper levels of integrity within them.

Mind you the ego is a sense of self that is acquired. It is, you might say, acquired by the self that is there. But the ego is a definition of self, an intellectual definition of self. While the experience of self, you could say, constitutes the Reality of Conscious Individuality.

Children inevitably, as they newly experience this world, develop an intellectual experience of themselves. But I will tell you something: At the same time these children—including every single one of you when you were children—also had an undefined sense or experience of yourself that you placed a great deal of trust in, but the education of those around you squelched it.

I will tell you that the children who are being born at this time are less willing to let go of that honoring of this nonintellectual, nonconceptual experience of themselves. Some of them are being interpreted as problem children, because they are not getting into the competitive game in elementary school. And it is not being recognized that they are expressing a more fundamental level of innate intelligence, and that they are indeed the leading edge of what you might call the new wave of individualities who are not releasing their clarity as a result of the process of birth.

One must arrive at a point of clearly identifying one's self; because it is within the safety of that clear self identification that one can have the nerve to let go into his or her greater capacity to be aware, if I may put it that way.

Now if you understand what I have said, you will find that there is no inconsistency. You will also find yourself able to approach your children with an intent not to create, as an integral part of their ego, the sense that competition, of bettering oneself, of becoming better than someone else, of putting another down and being more righteous.

You will be able to help that child develop a clear sense of himself or herself without bringing those things into play and implying that they are part and parcel of clear self-identification. And you will also be able to support in them the willingness to continue to honor the inherent fundamental sense of worth that they experience without defining it conceptually, so that they do not sacrifice it in favor of being totally intellectual, and then have to at a later time in their life reverse that process with a great deal of guilt, because of a great sense of disobedience and disrespect to their intellect.

QUESTION: First of all I want to thank Raj for The Course In Miracles, which changed my life. And to Paul and Raj for the conversations with Raj that make that change consistent.

ANSWER: You are welcome. But I also want you to thank your fellow man, because the Course could not appear until the students were ready. It was not an outright overt gift to unworthy, puny little egos. It came into expression because you and others were ready to embrace it and to be defenseless enough to allow the influx of enlightenment to occur.

So thank yourself, and thank all of those who were ready to grasp the truth, and in this way you will feel a greater unity between us.

When the student is ready, the teacher appears. And so here are the students, here is the Course, here is the one who, shall I say, dictated the Course.

It all expresses a oneness, and not a hierarchy from greater to lesser by means of an intermediary called A Course In Miracles. All of us together are expressing a fundamental unity—Brotherhood, Sisterhood, which necessarily means Sonship and Daughtership—which necessarily leads one to the inevitable awareness that it’s all God disclosing His/Her infinity more and more specifically within the limits of current ego frames of reference.

It is as though we are all at a party enjoying the surprises of Awakening together. It is not me being gracious to you, poor thing. All of this is uncovering our equality, our original and untarnished divinity, and our unity with the Father. You know what that means? It means unity with that which is Real rather than unity with that which is false, and doesn’t really have anything to do with abiding with the “great one.” It is abiding in clarity rather than in ignorance; that is unity with the Father, that is “coming Home”—Home with a capital “H”—coming back into your Right Mind. All of us coming back into the infinite conscious experience of being in our Right Mind where none of us, none of the brotherhood experiences separation from any part of itself. Continue.

QUESTION: My situation is that I don’t have many people to share these great feelings with—some, but they’re not close. And at times I know I’m just doing great developing, but lots of times I feel very dense...

ANSWER: I’m going to interrupt you here. Do you think that the great thing that is happening here today is the information that I am sharing with you? Or might it not be the simple act of togetherness, the simple being together and sharing without my experiencing you with any illusion? Many get hung up because they cannot share the words. But every single one of you can be the love that allows itself to be humbly and genuinely present with his or her fellow man.

Do you not think that two individuals, two incarnated human beings, apparently not free of the ego, who manage to be defenselessly with each other, unguardedly with each other, sensitive to each other, without masks, without roles, whether they are sitting across the room from each other or whether they are engaged in intimate sexual experience with each other, that there is not something ultimately and profoundly holy about it, even though not a word of the Course is being uttered, even though not a word of the “Bible” or the “Koran” or any other spiritual work is being discussed.

No matter what one is doing, if there is one of the two that is present with the other defenselessly, humbly and genuinely, a divine experience is occurring that is felt. It feels like simply being loved; loved in such a way that it inspires a greater joy within oneself about oneself, and a freedom from any need for the expression of pretense. I will tell you that the words that I am using, and the words that are in the Course, and the words that are in the “Bible,” are there to trigger not intellectual processes, but your arriving at the point of daring to be defenseless with another. To just be with each other, and experience the fundamental love of being, of existing.

Mothers who have nursed their newborn child in the middle of the night, or fathers who have given their newborn child a bottle in the middle of the night, who have experienced in utter silence the intimacy of undefended togetherness are aware of the profoundness of simply being with someone else. It is your letting yourself into that experience with your brother or your sister, your fellow man, that all of these words are calculated to bring about.

It isn't that the words are there so that you can talk a new language and still not learn how to be with each other. Because it is in the being with another undefendedly, with the willingness to just experience that the opportunity to discover your divinity and their divinity occurs. And it occurs in the utter simplicity of the profoundness of not trying to be someone special; not trying to be one who speaks glorious metaphysical words of truth, not one who can quote chapter and verse.

If you tell me that you feel alone because you have no one to talk to, I am afraid that I cannot feel sorry for you, because you are not minus people to be with, unpretentiously and unconditionally. And you see this is what the Course is talking about when it speaks of joining. Joining is the unpretentious, nonconceptual, being with—being present with another.

And I have said it before: everyone recognizes what love is, and it isn't a bunch of words. It's in the utterly undefended sharing of you without any pretense. That's what it's all about. That is the joining that spontaneously reveals the divinity and the magnificent profoundness of existing. It is what begins to uncover your divine being and the divinity of all that you are experiencing.

Don't get hung up on the words, but do pay attention within you to what the words are doing in terms of moving you to a willingness to be present with another, with an expectation of discerning something quite divine in that experience of joining, just as it occurs in that quiet experience of simply being together that occurs between a mother and a child in the wee hours of the morning.

QUESTION: The concept of undefended oneness touched me very deeply. I feel that that's all I've ever wanted and all I want now. And yet it's caused me so much pain in my life, because of not having boundaries and taking on other people's problems, even overweight and cancer and all kinds of goodies. It's still all I really want, but I don't want all this other stuff.

ANSWER: Undefended does not mean to become stupid. It does not mean a willingness to join with other's unintelligent behavior. I will tell you that you come into a sense of oneness not by becoming undefended through space, but by becoming undefended against experiencing your peace, by becoming undefended against yourself, by becoming undefended against your utter divinity and your utter guiltlessness—your utter innocence.

If you want to be at one with your brother, you start by being at one with yourself. It is not as though you throw open the doors and the windows so that the horrendous noise of the city may reach your ears, and then somehow you must find your peace in the midst of such chaos.

By virtue of becoming undefended against your experience of your peace and your divinity, you put yourself in the position of experiencing your invulnerability, your stability and the fact that defenses aren't needed at all. And then when the defenses come down, you begin to discern your brother, your fellow man, with new eyes. You unavoidably begin to know, not through reasoning but through knowing at an experiential level, that your brother is divine also.

Two things happen. I will say two kinds of respect come into play at that point. One is self-respect that stops you from joining with or agreeing with an ego presentation that your brother is putting forth as though it is a true expression of himself. And in your refusal to join with your brother in confirming his ignorant sense of himself, you are expressing respect to him. Thus, you find yourself saying, "no" and you find yourself saying, "yes."

But it is because there is this peaceful, innocent clarity within yourself that recognizes the innocence of your brother and says when he is acting guilty: "This doesn't make sense. Your behavior doesn't reflect you. What you are saying with your mouth is not reflecting what is true about you. And I want to join with that which is true about you, and not this other garbage." And because you recognize what is true about your brother, and the fact that what he is expressing is incongruent, causes you to know that what is incongruent does not deserve a reaction from you, because it is literally meaningless. And so then you relate to your brother without reaction and without defense.

Now that is being unconditionally present with another. Understand that discernment does not go out the window when you become unconditionally loving, or unconditionally aware of what is true about your brother. You are even more able to experience the disparity, the inconsistency between what is true about your brother and a current ignorance that he might be expressing. But you—because you do not take the ignorance seriously—do not find a reason to react to the ignorance, and that supports your brother's ability to see himself differently.

So do not think that becoming defenselessly and unconditionally present with another means simply embracing everything that might come forth from your brother, whether it is pleasant or unpleasant, kind or hateful, and then listen for all of the crap together with all that is wonderful that comes from your brothers as though you are the repository for it all. Don't let it all in, because some of it isn't Real. Some of it doesn't reflect the genuineness of Conscious Individuality that really is what is true about your fellow man. And to become unconditional does not mean embracing that.

Again, be unconditionally present with yourself and with your peace, because that is what will disclose to you what is appropriate and what is not appropriate relative to your fellow man. And always what will be inappropriate is your joining in agreement with an expression of unintelligence and not naming it for what it is, so that it might be seen and easily released, because in your making the discernment and expressing it you are not doing it with reaction.

Oneness... The experience of oneness starts within you and grows so that it embraces all. I encourage you to continue to desire the experience of unconditional oneness. But instead of embracing everyone out there in your world and drawing them into your circle, unconditionally go within. Because the oneness is already a fact, you do not have to create it by inviting everyone in. And the fact of it becomes apparent when you connect undefendedly with yourself within. And that's when the oneness that is all inclusive becomes apparent. Then you do not go out and gather everyone in, because they're already in.

And because you are feeling your wholeness, you are in a state of equilibrium that allows you with balance, and with a certain artistry, to be able to express yourself without confirming their ego sense, and with an obvious confirmation of their divinity so that transformation can occur. But in that process you do not accept and validate behavior that doesn't express their divinity.

Remember you are not here to be a doormat. You are not here to sacrifice your simple intelligence in favor of unconditional defenselessness. And if you want authority for that, remember me and the moneychangers. And if you want further confirmation, remember me and the diseases and the "devils" that I dismissed. This dismissal was a result of the capacity to discern between truth and illusion, and not validate illusion. But, also, the refusal to not validate illusion did not involve emotional reaction.

When you are in your clarity, that which is illusion is absolutely ridiculous, and it doesn't require a strong, emotional, forceful dismissal. I was not angry when I overturned the moneychangers' tables. I was simply appropriate.

You are not here to be a martyr and take on everyone's "sins"—ignorance's. You are here to be the clarity that recognizes these falsities, and as a result, doesn't give them the time of day, doesn't energize them with a response. You must be willing to say, "this doesn't reflect Reality, and I do not invite it into my experience." Turn your back on it, and give your attention to that which is Real, whatever it might be.

And if it is another's thoughtless, unloving behavior that you are unwilling to validate, you must say, "I do not embrace this behavior in my experience, and if you wish to behave this way, you will need to go somewhere else to do it." When you find yourself inundated, apparently with unpleasant thoughts of others—I will give you a clue—say, "this invasion of my mental household was not asked for. I will not cooperate with it. And if you want help, you call me on the phone and let's do it upfront and direct. These are the terms under which I am available. I am not available to be harassed.”

You do not have to simply sit there and exist in the presence of confusion and conflict and unkindness, and put up with it. It doesn't reflect the truth. And if someone is going to be in your experience expressing conflict—let us say, problems—be clear within yourself that the only circumstances under which you will allow that is in a context of doing something about it so that the conflict is relieved, else you can find yourself being constantly visited with those who will simply come and dump their shit, and leave you to clean it up, and come back the next day because it feels so good for them to be themselves. And you must say, “This doesn't represent who you are. Your expression of your joy would. Your expression of curiosity to have a new viewpoint would. And if you want to explore those with me, I will be glad to have you here, otherwise I really have other things to do. And you need to go somewhere else to find somebody to simply commiserate with you about your ignorance, about your illusion.”

Don't be a doormat. It isn't part and parcel of unconditional love. If you really love someone, you do not join in agreement with them relative to their ignorance's and support it. So don't labor under the false idea that if you are going to open up and become unconditionally loving, that you must simply take whatever comes without any act of discernment, any act of recognition of that which is Real and that which is illusion, and without any act of separating the two, so that what is Real stands forth, and what is illusion is no longer around to disturb the experience of Reality. Don't be afraid to do this.

QUESTION: I'm having difficulty trusting to the future. This year's been really great as you know, and you keep telling me next year is even going to be better. I think I'd have an easier time if you told me it's going to be just as difficult as the past. You know, struggling is so much easier.

ANSWER: Because it doesn't require as much trust.

QUESTION: That's true. So how does one become, or how do I—selfishly speaking—how do I become more trusting?

ANSWER: You simply have to dare to explore the irrational act of trust. Now you are not completely devoid of some understanding of the existence of a God, or the existence of God, a Life Principle that in itself is Life-affirming by nature, and which is indivisible and therefore incapable of being conflicted, which therefore means that the life affirming nature is absolute and unvarying.

You must simply choose what you are going to occupy your mind with—that which does intelligently support the investment of trust, or that which supports justifiable fear and the anticipation of a great deal of labor.

I encourage you to dare to risk the chance that God is All and trust. That is like saying that I encourage you to dare to risk the chance that you exist and breathe. You simply must do it. In doing it, and finding that your trust was justified, it will begin to be less and less of a risk. But there's no way you can get around it; initially it is going to seem to be a risk.

As I said though, you do have some education and some belief in the existence of God and the Life-affirming nature of the presence of God. And that will support your daring to risk the chance and trust.

You are like the child who has been taking swimming lessons and has held on to the side of the pool and kicked her feet, and who has been supported by a mother or a teacher in the water while you practiced moving your arms and kicking your feet. But now comes the moment when there will be no hands there, and everything in you says, "But I will sink! But I will sink, and I will drown!" No! No! No! There comes that point when you risk all; you risk the chance, and in risking the chance you find that you do not sink. And in discovering that, you open up your freedom to enjoy swimming.

It may take two more wonderful years before you dare to sigh a sigh of relief and say, "It is not unreasonable for me to expect a fourth year." And that is all right—plug away. Bring whatever degree of trust you can into the picture.

I also encourage you to pay attention when you are employing doubt, and see what it does to you. Pay attention to the drag. Pay attention to the degree to which it depletes your energy. Pay attention to the manner in which it causes you to be fearful. Just pay attention to the difference you feel between doubt and trust, because that will provide you with a perspective that will allow you to more intelligently and more reasonably choose for your trust.

Trust isn't always easy, but it is inspiring. It does elicit a certain amount of joy, even though it may be very small. And it does make you happy. And it doesn't deplete your energy. And it's easier for your husband to be with you—and your children, and your co-workers.

So just pay attention to these little intelligent things that I have shared with you, and they will help you to dare to engage in the unreasonable act of trust, and contribute to that act of trust becoming easier and easier. You are doing well.

QUESTION: I wanted to make a comment about joy. And speaking of having a good year—this has been a marvelous year of delight and joy, and I just wanted to claim it and name it. And I thank you. And I thank all of you for all the work that you do for yourselves, and the work that I do for myself.

And I have felt this week, in particular, coming to a vista, a place that I hoped existed. And there is a real feeling in me now that it exists. I'm standing there, powerfully being who I am and delighted by it, and surprised, and having a good time.

ANSWER: Don't let go of the view. There is no requirement. Continue.

QUESTION: Part of the joy for me this year has been being reunited with my son, and living with him, and finding myself, truly who I am, most of the time, me—not "parent me"—me, Joyce.

ANSWER: In other words, you your Self, rather than you as a role.

QUESTION: Yes, yes. And that was rough getting to that place. But I am very grateful for my own work, because I see the effect it has on this boy, and also my joy in acting as parent. This situation is unusual, in the sense that I have no model for these circumstances.

ANSWER: Do you realize that anything that you do that is original will never have a model? What you have to do when you are not following a model is pay very close attention to yourself; not a self you ought to be, but who you Are. Now this is not just double talk. Every single one of you in this room plays roles. And at the same time you play the role you also know exactly how you feel. Who you are and how you feel at any given moment is not generally hidden from you. And you are completely aware of the incongruence when you say one thing and feel another.

As a result of attempting to squelch how you really feel and disconnect, your behavior becomes altered, biased in an unhealthy manner. You feel anger a great deal of the time, because you are not being true to yourself. And you are playing the game and most of the time not quite sure whether you're winning, and therefore whether the playing of the role is worth it.

The fear is—from this biased, distorted place—that if you become genuine you will be nothing but an expression of anger and harshness. But that is because in already denying yourself in favor of the role, you have created a frustration within you and an anger, and you think that is what constitutes you. And so whenever anyone decides to let go and be Real, one of the first things that comes out is inappropriate behavior—is that anger, is that frustration.

But if one has truly let go of the role, one begins to connect again with how one really feels and that one expresses it on the spot, which doesn't have any frustration or anger with it because it hasn't been squelched. And so you are simply able to say, "No, that won't work today. No, I can't do that. Yes, that sounds terrific. No, you can't leave your room a mess." But there is no emotional charge to it. And it comes out as an expression, a genuine expression of you, and a genuine expression of what you feel.

If you will dare to trust you, in the moment, without preconceptions as to how you ought to behave under certain circumstances, and you will just dare to express yourself in the moment, you will manage to be original in an appropriate and intelligent manner.

I cannot give you a model to follow in order to be original. I can only tell you to pay close attention to yourself. Do not squelch yourself, and your innate ability to be appropriate in the moment will emerge. But that involves risk taking. And again, the taking of a risk, no matter how assured you are of the outcome will not be easy until you have done it and discovered the reasonability of it by virtue of what has intelligently happened. And then you will begin to dare to be spontaneous in the moment, with trust.

QUESTION: I really wasn't asking for you to provide me with a model.

ANSWER: You asked for some help, after indicating that you had no model. And the help I am giving you is telling you to pay attention to yourself in the moment and you will not need a model. And you will be able to be appropriate without confining your actions to memory and past experience.

QUESTION: I hear you. What I'd like is to have you help me identify what it is that I'm becoming aware of. There is a discomfort around the specific circumstances that I did not feel before. I don't feel insistent that he either go to school or do what might be seen as ordinary. But I'm not comfortable with so much inactivity. I also don't think it's healthy for him. And I'm not sure where to go with that. I'm not sure if this is a bottom line for me, if I have to state it in such clear terms—or what?

ANSWER: I would encourage you to embrace the simplicity of your present awareness; not as an incomplete awareness, but as one that is absolutely appropriate to express. Just as you expressed it, express it to him. You are not only not comfortable with the inactivity, you will not tolerate it indefinitely. You are very clear. Now it's up to him to figure out what he is going to do in the face of this utterly simple clarity on your part. Don't you take on the figuring out of it for him. He insists upon his independence, well, give him some parameters that reflect your genuine feeling so that he may have the opportunity to express his independence and come to a conclusion as to what he needs to do.

QUESTION: What a great idea.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I think a lot of questions have been answered for me today, on anger and trust and appropriateness and becoming a beacon to our fellow man, etc. So I have a very immediate question, and one that concerns me a great deal.

I have a daughter, Kirsten, who's heavily into drugs. And I was very concerned about her five years ago. I spent a lot of sleepless nights and this type of thing, and then I kind of dropped it. Now I think, well, maybe I've dropped it too far. But I've had a lot of things going on in my own life. I am thinking that perhaps I might look back someday and say, "well, I could have done this, or I should have done that," or something along those lines. And I was wondering if you would think of anything that might be appropriate for me to do right now?

ANSWER: I will tell you that she is quite a determined young lady, and nothing you might do would change her course of action. And so I encourage you to release her to her course of action. Now I am very well aware that as a parent it is scary to release your children from your beneficent control. But I will tell you that it is absolutely essential for you to realize that it is absolutely impossible for her to get outside of her divinity.

If there is only one thing going on, and it is God being All and looking like this, then it is only in the realm of imaginative belief that any of you think you are self-directed and self-determined.

Every single one of you is and has been held in the grasp of what you divinely Are. And what you divinely Are has penetrated at every point along your imaginative sense of life that you have created for yourself, and has, shall I say, nudged, pushed, cajoled you into an awareness of the fact that you cannot operate independent of God. And the same thing applies to your daughter. And you must dare to trust that. She is not able to escape her capital “S” Self, and actually put herself in a place that is not contributive to her Awakening, even though you would avoid that place at all cost.

Now there is a specific reason for engaging in this practice that I have described—of entrusting her to her divinity. You’re going to be thinking something, you are going to be having some thoughts; you are going to be having some feelings. If those thoughts and feelings are based upon your fear and your limited appraisal of her, then indeed you will be joining with her and strengthening her in that ignorant state.

But I will tell you, that when you embrace and acknowledge her as being the direct expression of God, not the direct expression of you or her human father, but the direct expression of God, then in that acknowledgment, you are joining with her at the level of what she divinely is, and this constitutes a strengthening of that—a strengthening of what is true about her, shall I say, an emphasizing of it—even if you do not open your mouth or say a word to her.

In your acknowledgment of her essential divinity you happen to be consciously in perfect alignment with the truth about her, this seems to give your thought more potency. But it is not because of any power you have personally, as a little human being or mother. It has potency because you, by virtue of your thinking, are not in opposition to what God is Being. And in your open acknowledgment of the truth about her, you function as an agent for change, an agent for healing.

Again, this does not mean that you as a puny little ego have power to change her. It simply means that since one with God is a majority, you’re standing firmly and consciously in the truth—you have withdrawn your energy from the illusion. And this is always transformational. This is always healing.

Now I understand that you want to do more. But you cannot. Your standing firmly in the conscious acknowledgment of truth, and being in absolute harmony with the intent of the Father, IS the ultimate. You do not need to be able to do more than that.

Now you need to be very practical here, because there comes a point when each one must choose for life, or for resistance to life. Your daughter has to come to her choice for her reasons.

And I will tell you that you can count on it, that the Holy Spirit, that her divinity will unerringly provide her with the experiences that will uniquely lead her to the choice for life.

QUESTION: I haven't really gotten my question together. I've been very much enjoying what has been happening with me in the last several weeks. I feel much better and more open...

ANSWER: And you know why? Because you have been daring to honor yourself more without any hoopla, with just a simple acceptance of your integrity and a certain fearlessness when it comes to expressing it. You are daring to just be genuinely you more than you have before. Continue...

QUESTION: It feels very good.

ANSWER: That is because you are feeling integrated, you are feeling the unity, you are feeling your integrity. That always feels good. And it also is proof that you always have the capacity to recognize truth. It always feels good. Continue...

QUESTION: I did have one question involving my family. There is a bit of a feud going on there, and I put myself in the middle, hoping to be the voice of reason. Only I'm not doing such a good job of being reasonable. And I'm wondering if you could give me any advice, or what I could have done differently last night.

ANSWER: You could have stayed out of the middle. I will remind everyone: The only way to win the ego game, is not to play the game at all. Remember that.

QUESTION: It's so nice to see you in person after hearing you all of these years, just your voice.

ANSWER: Do not be so sure you have seen me in person.

QUESTION: Very good. I'm having a little trouble seeing the truth too, and I'm feeling uncomfortable about a situation I have in my company with sales. It seems I'm having a plethora of what might be called opportunities all at once. And I'm trying to find the truth to the situation. And I'm having a great deal of difficulty. It seems like maybe I should be out of the sales end of it, or I should be selling that part of the company. It's just part of the rebuilding process that is going on. But I'd appreciate a little guidance in wanting to point my nose in the right direction.

ANSWER: The necessity is to hang in there. The necessity is not to run from the “opportunities.” If there is movement at all, whether your conditioned thinking is judging it positively or negatively, it is the Movement of Being, with a capital “B”.

And so instead of jumping to the conclusion that there is something out of order, I encourage you to observe what is going on with a curiosity to see what is going on that is in order, but beyond your present sense of order. And if you withdraw from the opportunities, you will miss the fruition. Following through to the complete healing, following through to the complete revealing of order is not always fun. But it is an essential part of coming out of ignorance, coming out of the sense of limitation.

Now it is true that there are circumstances where it is appropriate to move on to something else, but that is not the case here. And I encourage you to plant your feet firmly and take one step at a time, utilizing your clearest intelligence at each step, and let each step be solid—not aggressive, but solid, weighted, if you will—so that the winds of ego dynamics have little effect on you. Persist here.

QUESTION: I think during our last conversation you were talking to me about emancipation, and I realized when I hung up that I wasn’t quite sure what you meant by emancipation. I didn’t know whether you meant it in the universal and cosmic sense, or in the sort of mini boundary sense.

ANSWER: Well, I meant it in the mini boundary sense.

Emancipation... The ability to be without concern. It is not so much the ability to be whatever you feel like being. It is not a matter of being able to be anything you want to be. The focus is never on a goal. It is the freedom to be without concern, without a sense of obligation to be different. Emancipation is the experience of freedom that requires no display or exercise of freedom to prove its presence.

Specifically, relative to you, it can best be described as the freedom to be without concern. That is specifically what I meant when I was speaking to you.

QUESTION: I have a follow up to that. And that is: what does this have to do with my concerns—which I think I’m handling fairly well—about the move that we’ve made, and the fact that at some point our livelihood will manifest, and my sort of desire to see it faster than it’s actually happening. Does that make any sense?

ANSWER: Oh, it does. It has everything to do with it. The move has been made with a great deal of trust, and relatively speaking, a low level of concern. But your impatience relative to your income is definitely willful, arising out of a sense of lack that creates a sense of urgency, that causes you to tense up and not be attentive to the flow of the Movement of your fulfillment. And thus, you are not experiencing emancipation.

I want, if you will, to have you consider life to be a Movement of God, which you have the opportunity to ride in—that is another way of saying flow with. Freedom is existing without distractions from simply abiding with the Movement, so that you might forever be present with the fulfillment of that Movement.

In other words, at this moment when you are experiencing concern about income and its timely appearance in your experience, you have the opportunity to experience even more of the freedom that it is your Birthright to experience. You will call it letting go of control and being more patient, which seems like a task rather than an enjoyable exploration of your freedom.

Now you are caught in your head, because this flowing with the Movement of your Being, with great trust, is something that you have brought into play quite significantly in your life. It is not new to you.

Now you really don't need the thrill of the fear. It is creating a little bit of interesting dynamics. But you don't need it. And it would be well for you to have a continuity of experience of peace as your fulfillment unfolds.

And so I encourage you not to play with this sticky potato of the excitement of fear, because it might stick to you longer than you want. Your concern is a matter of playing with a hot potato. You literally are toying with the fear. It isn't really deeply ingrained in you. You are not crossing a threshold of trust. You are instead standing well on the other side of that threshold of trust that is called for in this situation, and you are reaching back and getting your fingers dirty, playing with a little bit of fear for a little bit of stimulation.

Stop doing it.

QUESTION: I hate to do this, but I'm going to do it anyway. I have been given two gifts. One was the gift to be able to be here, which I knew was available to me but wouldn't allow it to happen until I got the call from Marion.

The other one was in reaching back and playing with the hot potato. I genuinely asked for relief from that, and a phone call was made, and I made contact with someone who could very easily provide me with a nice job for the time being. I want to know what that meant, because they were both almost instantaneous in my asking for clarification or relief.

ANSWER: It simply manifests the inseparability of giving permission to yourself to experience your good, and the manifestation of it. It is that simple.

QUESTION: Several months ago I had the herniated disk complete with paralysis. At that time I was listening to some tapes of yours where you mentioned, don't acknowledge it as real, or don't acknowledge it as being significant, or it's illegitimate.

Well, I was alone in the house one night, practically bedridden, in a great deal of pain. And I think I spent most of the night saying, “this is not legitimate, this is not legitimate.” The next hour I was walking. Within a week you’d never know I had any herniated disk, and I haven’t had any recurring of it.

But, now I have some sort of eczema on my legs and my elbows, on my buttocks that is ungodly itchy, and it’s a weeping type. It’s almost as though because I can see it, I can’t get past the seeming realness of it. Why can’t I dismiss this too? That’s my question. I need help, I need a healing session.

ANSWER: Indeed, you will have it this evening at 1:00 am.

Now when you have a condition that is visible, the sight of which is distressing and causes you to lose your peace—cover it up, and then address its illegitimacy.

QUESTION: Well, it’s the itching too as much as anything. That is more real than pain. I can handle pain. Itching I can’t.

ANSWER: I understand. It is very distracting. Also, you at any time can simply ask your guide to have your healing team address this issue.

QUESTION: I’ve been doing it almost constantly.

ANSWER: Yes. Now, the other thing that it will be well for you to do is to make the acknowledgment that right where the appearance is and the sensation is must be the presence of God being perfect, else you couldn’t possibly have a distorted or distressed experience of it. Then you sit with it. I’m not saying that you sit with the itching, you sit with that acknowledgment.

You see this isn’t a contest, because that which is illegitimate is that which is sourceless. Therefore, it cannot stand consistently in the presence of consistent acknowledgment of your perfection, and that your being and everything about it is derived from the Father.

Now you have been doing very well. It has been difficult for you to get past the sensation. But I will talk with you tomorrow after you have had the healing session this evening. Again, realize that this is not a contest, because there is no legitimate opposer or antagonist. And you are the one with the authority to acknowledge the truth and see the manifestation of it. You simply must stand with that unequivocally. You will see it.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you. Oh, one other thing. I have a cousin in California who calls me one of God’s lunatics. Is there some Biblical thing regarding that? I was just curious where that phrase God’s lunatic came from. I think it’s kind of a compliment myself.

ANSWER: It is well that you have taken it in a positive light. No there is no Biblical authority for such a statement. And neither you nor anyone else in this room needs help getting into the Kingdom of Heaven, because you have been there all along, whether you have been ignoring it or not.

Indeed, from the standpoint of the ego frame of reference waking up is a matter of becoming insane, because it is a matter of accessing Reason, with a capital “R”, Reasonability, with a capital “R” that goes beyond the limits of the ego’s frame of reference.

But do not enjoy the phrase too much. And simply continue in your greater embrace of your divine sanity. That is a better phrase to contemplate and use. You are accessing your divine sanity. Let the ego call it whatever it wants. But that is what it is.

QUESTION: My question: I’ve been planning to get involved in a business venture, coming up soon. But recently I’m getting the sense that it might be more appropriate for me to spend the time in some other areas that I’m getting interested in, and doing some research in. And I don’t feel I can do both. I’d like your comments on that.

ANSWER: It is a good idea not to become distracted from this business venture. These other interests are the ego’s way of helping you avoid a very practical and wonderful avenue of fulfillment. And I encourage you not to play into it. I encourage you to, shall I say, forge forward with this venture. It holds a great deal that is meaningful for you, even monetarily.

PAUL: There is an image accompanying it, and that is of little dogs nipping at your heels—at your Achilles’ heel, sort of—and distracting you from moving in the direction you are headed.

QUESTION: I’d like a reality check. I have been hearing and paying attention to inner guidance for awhile now. And I want to check on that. And in particular with regard to my husband Rob’s and my life’s circumstances. Both of us are feeling really wonderful. And there’s no outward reason that that should be so, in fact quite to the contrary.

My own guidance is saying that this will pass very quickly. It’s given me a number of specifics, even specifics with regard to my husband’s embracing a new consulting business here, that he’s trying to build up since we’ve arrived here. And with regard to family—my father; with regard to some investments we have. All of these things and more, I have been relying on this inner guidance for. I think I just want to know, am I hearing correctly? I just want to check on what’s happening.

ANSWER: Indeed, there are no serious or, what I will call, significant minor misperceptions that have occurred. You are hearing quite clearly. What is beautiful is the degree of trust, and the degree to which you are letting go of a personal sense of control in this process. It is beautiful because, the only way I can put it is, the light of you is glowing more brightly, because there is a more conscious connection with your own integrity. How wonderful that you feel good for no good reason.

QUESTION: This is a mystery to me that I love.

ANSWER: I am glad that you love it. It is important to appreciate a mystery. It is only a mystery because it flies in the face of reason, and yet it is very real. I encourage both of you to embrace this unreasonable experience. In abiding with it, you will find your world reconfiguring; not because you are experiencing it to make your world reconfigure, but because you are just willing to experience it for its sake.

I will say that what is transpiring with the two of you now, and also what is transpiring with you relative to your listening for guidance, is the beginning of the culmination of the whole reason you moved from the East Coast. It is the beginning of the gelling, or congealing, the clarification of a rather major shift of consciousness that both of you have engaged in, which I'm going to tell you is literally going to extend your lives. Because the only alternative you had was to not engage with the original Movement of Life and remain in a pattern that had been established.

And if you had done that, no matter how comfortable and secure it seemed to be, you would have been squelching yourselves. You have dared to engage in the Movement, and the newness, and the insecurity, and the undependability of the Movement of Life. I say undependability because you cannot depend upon it to conform to what it was before. And so you have revitalized yourselves. And I know it hasn't been easy. But one doesn't break old habits easily. Old habits are habits because they have been held on to and are familiar.

Now mind you, I said this is the beginning of the evidencing of the whole reason for your move from the East Coast. So there is more for you to be curious about. But I do want you to understand that what you are to be curious about is something that will identify fulfillment of purpose, and will not identify ongoing reconfiguration of yourselves.

In other words, for the past two years the appropriateness of the Movement of your lives has involved transformation—the shifting itself of the transformation. Now you are entering the point where what the old is being transformed into is becoming identifiable.

And I say to you bravo! You have hung in there. Your ego has been humiliated, but your being has been exalted. More correctly, your experience of your being has been freed up to stand forth more clearly as what it is.

And in terms of the overall picture, you really did do this gracefully. Your previous habit patterns, your previous, shall I say, emotional behavior patterns would have ordinarily created a much more strenuous transformation, but you have brought an unbelievable amount of trust to it, even though to you it seems as though there was a tremendous amount of doubt. And so you have moved through it with quite a bit of grace.

QUESTION: I'm determined to ask just this question about myself. It has to do with credentialing, in the religion of education. I have had an opportunity lately, the last few years, for many skills, techniques, insights, all of that, coming my way. And also a lot of change. And there seems to be a lot of change right on the edge of economic events. I think that I will be seeking employment, besides our own small business.

And the conflict has to do with where I have felt effective in the past working with people, helping people, has to do with always... I've been most effective with what I needed to learn. It seems that if I enter into seeking a higher degree, I wouldn't be in the same place helping the people that... I mean, I'm beginning to sound scrambled here...

ANSWER: You are being very clear. Let me ask you this? Let us suppose that you had been working very hard doing things for other people—and I am speaking of physical labor—and because of the hard work you stunk to high heaven and were most unpleasant to be around, you would tend to scare off those who would really like to approach you to see if you could help them. And you could say, “Well, taking a shower and cleaning myself and smelling sweet isn't helpful. It doesn't get any of the things done that the people need.” But part of what the people need is to be able to get close enough to you to ask you to help them.

Now you need to lighten up. You are far too serious. Go to school and enjoy the exploration, the examination. Enjoy the process of fresh ideas. Enjoy the triggering of insights that will occur. The people whom you would help will benefit from your being happy. And where is the joy that uplifts and inspires another going to come from if you are so busy helping them that you don't have time to be joyful.

Again, lighten up. There is no call for such intense, serious helpfulness. There needs to be a little bit more spirit to it. And you're not going to get into the spirit if you don't allow for a little bit of fun. And I am saying that your continuing your education should be fun, and should be for you. If you don't take care of yourself, there will be no one around to be helpful. And so part of your functioning in a meaningful way in the lives of others in your world does involve respecting yourself enough to take care of yourself. That is one of the ways in which you love others, just as bathing regularly is a way of making the world a more pleasant place for everyone else.

QUESTION: All I have to do is take a bath, huh?

ANSWER: All you have to do is go to school and have fun.

QUESTION: Do I have to go to school to get a higher degree, can't I just go and have fun?

ANSWER: Why can't you go and have fun, and at the end have a higher degree? Just for the hell of it!

ANSWER: I am glad you asked the question. I have one more thing to say. Why do you equate, why do any of you equate having fun or enjoying life with meaninglessness?

QUESTION: Well, I've said a lot that we're the working Johnson's: we just work and work and work. We're the people that just work and work and work. And where I'm balancing that, you're right.

ANSWER: Having fun, doing that which is enjoyable, again, is like taking a shower—it makes you much more fun to be with. And it means that there is more of the gift of you that can be made.

QUESTION: Can I just ask a follow up question, because I mean I have so many obligations. If I was going to help anybody go to school, it's my children. And when I'm talking about getting a job, and you're saying go to school.

ANSWER: Put yourself on the list too.

QUESTION: I guess this is where the faith comes in? I can do this?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you something: If you don't think you can do it, what do you think you are teaching your children about whether they can do it.

QUESTION: Okay, right.

ANSWER: And if you deprive yourself for no good reason, except your unreasonable belief that somehow it isn't meant for you but it's meant for them, what makes you think that they are not going to glean from unspoken feelings and actions that what they are getting is not really deserved, but is because of a sacrifice that you have made.

QUESTION: Oh, yea, I don't want to do that.

ANSWER: They deserve it and you deserve it. Again, lighten up, embrace more, include yourself on the list of the candidates for a degree. There's no reason to exclude yourself. But if you do, you will experience that limit as though it were a fact, and you will also tend to even become more serious.

QUESTION: So I'm the serious one?

ANSWER: You got the picture. You call it being conscientious, but a little dash of joy in your conscientiousness, three tablespoons of fun and a half a cup of pleasure will make all the difference.

QUESTION: You and I have talked about joy before, and it's wonderful to experience great joy.

ANSWER: Sometimes.

QUESTION: Sometimes?

ANSWER: Sometimes great joy is avoided, is squelched, because it moves one out of control and can feel overwhelming. Sometimes one wishes to enjoy “a little more misery.” Joy is not always willingly embraced. Continue.

QUESTION: It’s really great to be “willing” for all the changes in my life to occur as they manifest themselves no matter what they are. And some of these changes or happenings have been perceived by me as interruptions in my state of joy. And I think to myself, “Well, this doesn’t feel too joyful, and yet yesterday I was very joyful.” So I feel resistance here and there to some things that happen.

ANSWER: But you see, what is needed is for you to bring that joy into the interruption, rather than trying to set the interruption aside. It is the nitty-gritty of daily experience that needs joy brought into it. You are simply faced with the opportunity to bring your capacity to be love into that area that seems unlovable, so that that area may become illuminated and everyone may experience joy. Continue.

QUESTION: When I do experience this interruption, so to speak, it isn’t very comfortable.

ANSWER: No it isn’t the interruption which is uncomfortable, but the resistance to the call for attention that has been made. Continue.

QUESTION: So is there a way to be totally nonresistant, 100% of the time to feel joy and peace always in whatever is going on or being said in any given situation? So if everything is really joyful, and then something’s pop up that are said that really can be sort of jangling to the whole thing, how does one approach those things, to be unaffected by them, to retain the joy? And I haven’t been able to get over that little stumbling block there, I don’t know how to handle it.

ANSWER: As I indicated earlier in answer to another question, the necessity is to pay close attention to yourself, and not play into the apparent justification for sacrificing your joy, and becoming angry or upset.

If you are being in touch with yourself, you will recognize the incongruence of what is occurring with what you are feeling. And you will say, “If this behavior is not going to stop, you will need to take your behavior elsewhere. Because I have learned that there isn’t any justification for letting go of joy. If you wish to be happy with me, if you wish to move through what is causing this unpleasant behavior, in an expectant way—expectant of resolution—so that we may enjoy that process, you may stay, and let’s move through it and get to the joy. Otherwise, I don’t have time today for anything except my joy.”

You don’t have to become the doormat for other’s lack of joy, for other’s inconsiderateness, for other’s insistence upon grinding their own ax in front of you, in your presence.

At one time Paul thought that he ought to be able to be in touch with me and be able to answer questions or relay answers to questions provided by others no matter what was going on in the environment.

At that time all of his children were still at home, and the two older children were especially enamored of hard rock music. And he was feeling guilty for not being able to remain centered with this music blaring. He expected that ultimately he ought to be able to be centered no matter what. It was necessary for me to make clear to him that he must honor what worked for him, and not make unreasonable demands upon himself; that it was necessary for him to say, “No, this is not congruent. It cannot go on while I am doing my work. If you want to listen to the music, put on headphones.”

So, you must set the limits, so that you do not find yourself successfully distracted from experiencing your joy and your peace. Everyone is making choices constantly. If you choose for that which is natural to you—divinely natural to you—you will be advancing in your spiritual growth. And you will also be contributing to your world by being able to be present out from joy and out from your centered perspective. So you must call a stop to these distractions, if those that are introducing the distractions do not want to modify their behavior.

Now how does that constitute bring love into that spot? Well, as I said earlier, it amounts to your not joining with that one who is insisting upon expressing ignorance and therefore strengthening their sense of the appropriateness of conflict and the expression of it with no desire to get out of it. It sets the tone, so that they know that when they are with you they had either better leave their garbage outside your front door, or they had better be willing to move through it, so that they don't carry it any further with them, and it can be released. That is love!

That is love! Because you are then joining with them in terms of their healing. If they refuse it, if they are not interested, for whatever reason, it is not your task to convince them otherwise. It is just necessary for you to state your limits, to state what kind of an environment you choose to operate in.

QUESTION: I'm grateful to be in conversation with you again. And I'm grateful too for discovering again, as I do in these group settings, that sense of oneness as I hear how everyone's issue is my issue. A lot of what I brought with me today has already been addressed.

You told me several years ago that by this time I was going to be feeling a much greater sense of security in the world, a feeling of safety and certainty. And I can certainly say that that's the case, at a basic level. And there have been many moments of joy and delight in these several years of staying in the adventure, and doing the trust walk. But I feel quite taken aback at times, like the present, when I'm not experiencing the joy.

I just heard you talking about making that a continuous choice. But I find myself tripping into these emotional states, where from this perspective things seem bleak to barren. And I'm wondering if in addition to the issue of my exercising my choice, you would address the possibility that I am also perhaps experiencing energies from outside myself. Could this have anything to do with what we hear of earth changes and with other influences around me? I'd like the highest perspective on this I could get.

ANSWER: I will tell you that the only influences that can actually, shall I say, influence you are those that are constituted of the clarified conscious experience of Being. And the only effect they can have on you is to inspire you to joy, not depress you.

Now almost inseparable from joy is gratitude. If you are experiencing joy, you are also finding yourself experiencing gratitude. And if you are not experiencing joy, but you do begin to find places in your experience where you can honestly, genuinely express gratitude, you will begin to find joy re-appearing.

And so if you are not experiencing joy, then begin to express gratitude—not for unreal things, but for actual things—whether it is your health, whether it is that you have a roof over your head, whether it is that you live in an especially beautiful place, whether it is the cozy feeling that a rainy drizzly day like this provides, when you would just love to have some chili and cornbread and snuggle up in a blanket. It is these kinds of expressions of gratitude that reverse the process of depression and open the door for your joy to once again register with you.

When you begin to think in terms of earth changes, of things occurring globally, as though they can be affective to your joy or your experience, you begin to give your power away and you neglect to remember to be grateful.

I'm going to put it this way—this is not an absolutely true statement, but it expresses a meaning—your light begins to go out when you forget yourself and begin to think relative to events out there in the world. When I said to find something to be grateful for, I was saying do something that brings your attention back to you and your immediate experience. Because this is where you re-access your power and the experience of your presence, because you are not giving your power away.

Far too much fearful thought is given to “earth changes,” catastrophes, even though some of these changes are presented in a way that seems positive.

I will tell you something—and I will say this as many times as I need to—the transformations associated with the Awakening of mankind are always healing, never traumatic. The Movement of Creation only hurts when it is being resisted. And it will only be resisted when a negative point of view is projected upon it, and one becomes fearful of that negative view and begins to brace himself or herself against the Movement.

We are not entering into a time of Armageddon, of cataclysm, of great horrendous traumatic earth changes, or changes of human nature. But every single one of you does stand at the threshold of great change. And that great change is going to be the result of direct revelation, the uncovering in you of your conscious experience of your divinity and the divinity of the world, and the fact that it is all the direct expression of the Father; and that indeed your sense of being able to have a mind separate from the Father's, with its own personal, private viewpoint, is the only thing that gets in the way and creates disturbance.

This private sense of a personal capacity to have your own perception of things is what is going to be yielding. And I will tell you that this yielding of the limited or finite view is not all going to occur by direct personal effort on your part through correct thinking. That is going to play a part in it, but greater than that is the fact that Awakening of the Brotherhood of man is proceeding at a rapid enough pace that there is no longer enough joining and strengthening of the illusion—more are Awake than are asleep dreaming dreams. And thus, there is what you would call a natural support for your experiencing enlightenment, your experiencing unfolding clarity that isn't a result of your personal effort. And it will seem to happen, just because.

Again, indeed, you are moving into a period of great transformation. But it is a transformation of healing, not a transformation, the characteristics of which are trauma and suffering. And when you hear stories, when you hear words that express a negative future, be very alert and be unwilling to swallow it hook, line and sinker. Because if you do swallow it, you will inevitably become resistant. You will do everything you can to protect yourself, and you will engage in a denial of life, a denial of a Movement of Healing. And that will not be comfortable. But the discomfort will only be the result of the resistance, it is not because healing hurts.

And I cannot say this strongly enough, and although you may hear other channeled information that seems to confirm catastrophe, great struggle, etc., I will not yield in this statement of truth.

These are great times. It is the time of the end of illusion. And only those who are valuing the illusion and deriving a sense of identity from it will seem to move through the enlightenment ruggedly.

But I encourage all of you not to proceed with reluctance. I encourage all of you to be curious to see the clearer and clearer manifestation of the presence of God right where you are—the presence of harmony, the presence of truth, the presence of intelligence, the presence of uninterrupted life, the presence of principle, the presence of order, the presence of Soul that does not need to be exalted because it never was something limited. You have heard this before, but you need to hear it again, and again and again.

QUESTION: For awhile now I see the future. It comes in different ways, and sometimes it's a solid little ball of information, it might take 10 seconds, but it seems like everything's there—a movie. And I have a lot of confirmation all around me; I've seen them come true, like the San Francisco earthquake, I predicted it that morning.

But on the other hand, what's bothering me is I'm an accountant and I'm losing my ability to function in the world. My short-term memory is just horrible. I lose things, like keys. I run out of gas. I forget things.

And I just recently found out that I'm sitting in an office that goes off the dial with ELF's—or it goes up to about a 10 in that machine—electromagnetic frequencies. And I know that that also disturbs people. But I also know that it doesn't have to disturb me if I don't want it to.

Most of the people I know just accept it as a truth, and nobody thinks I'm crazy, except me. I don't think I'm crazy about that, I just wonder why I am so unable to just function anymore in the old way?

ANSWER: Because you are growing. And there is a necessity to rely more consistently on, what I will call, intuitive perceptions—awareness that is not the result of memory, awareness that is not the result of reasoning. There is simply a need for you to notice that indeed your short-term memory is not functioning as it used to, and then listen more deeply than your short-term memory—“What do I need to know today”—expecting a response, because the knowing is embraced totally within you.

It is not that you are losing a capacity and becoming incapacitated, it is that you are graduating. And so instead of depending upon short-term memory, begin to lean into your deeper capacity to know what is needed.

Now as regards awareness' of events. In many instances, the reason you know the event is so that you may bless it rather than simply notice it and expect it to happen. If you find yourself aware that there is a tendency for an accident to happen, a tendency for someone to be hurt, or a likelihood that they will become ill, you may know that this is a tendency that is in motion, but it has come to your attention so that you may consciously acknowledge the Truth about it—that the illness is illegitimate, as I mentioned earlier; that it is absolutely nonsensical for that one to have to experience the illness; that the tendency toward an accident has not been set into motion by the Father, and therefore does not have a divine source or a legitimate means for manifesting itself.

So instead of just noticing the little blocks of information that you are experiencing, take the little blocks of information and bless them with your clearest sense of what the truth is. Then, so to speak, the transaction or involvement will be completed.

QUESTION: It's interesting that you talked about accidents, because I think my original question was going to be... I see more accidents than anybody. I see at least one accident a week. No matter where I'm going there's a car turned over somewhere, and there's an ambulance. And I drive by and I don't like to look at it or anything. I mean I don't know why I see so many... One week I saw three.

ANSWER: It's no accident that you are coming across these accidents. These repetitive experiences are making a statement to you about the nature of life—a negative statement; a statement which if reversed expresses the truth. It is a call for you to acknowledge exactly the reverse of the impression or feeling you are finding arising in you as a result of seeing these scenes on a repetitive basis.

Now you will have to pay attention within yourself to see what the negative is. Once it is recognized and the lie of it is clear to you, these series of repetitive experiences will cease. It is a call for you to move beyond a point in your current frame of reference.

I'm going to let Paul share an experience that he had. I cannot appropriately identify the specific thing to you, because you need to pay attention and recognize it yourself. And that is part of the learning of it, if you will.

PAUL: Okay, and this is me, Paul. It's been twenty year ago or so, that I went through a period where squirrels, and cats and birds would all run in front of my car, and I would hit them. Prior to that I would have occasions where rabbits or something would run, but they would always scurry through somehow, but all of a sudden I was hitting everything. And I love animals. I should have a bumper sticker that says "I swerve for animals." I mean I would swerve, and I hit them.

Finally one evening I went out to the store, and I was driving on an expressway, and a black Doberman Pinscher ran in front of the car, and it was night time, and I was in a Volkswagen bug at the time. And he just came out of nowhere.

Now the point, and this is awful, but the point of it was that when I stopped the car, the dog had totally ruined the front end of my Volkswagen. Okay, this was where my mind was. I couldn't find the dog anywhere. I don't know how it could have still been alive. But I looked for it and couldn't find it.

And I was left with a severely damaged car. And it was like that's what got my attention. I mean that's when I started to say, "Wait a minute, what's going on here?" Unfortunately, I wish that I could say that my compassion for the dog caused me to ask the question, but it wasn't.

Anyway, when I started to pay attention to it, I realized that a very solid conviction that I had that all life was an expression of God and that God was eternal and uninterrupted, all of these experiences were challenging that, and causing me to believe—because it was at my hand, or I was responsible for it—that indeed life could be cut off.

And so for me it was a realization that I needed to more consciously embrace the fact that the uninteruptibility of God had to mean the uninteruptibility of every expression of God. It came as an intellectual realization and it moved into a feeling. And never again has anything even run in front of the car. Now I beg your pardon, there was one occasion a year ago where a black cat ran in front and I did hit it. But within the last twenty years, that's the only time. And so, I mean these things had been happening for once or twice a week over a period of three months. So when it stopped it was very abrupt.

QUESTION: I need a reality check. I've really been depressed lately, I guess. I've got insomnia, so maybe I must. I feel like I can't get straight what's going on. My Mom has Alzheimer's. I've been trying to go back to Virginia every month, because pretty soon she won't know who we are.

There's seven kids. And the family is falling apart fast. It used to be that I was the only one that everyone spoke to, but now my sister is totally pissed off at me. One brother pulled a stunt where I don't even want to speak to him anymore. And I'm not in the habit of writing people out of my life. I think my life would be a lot less stressful without my siblings, but that doesn't seem like a fair option.

I broke up with a guy six weeks ago. Which I guess on the one hand I can congratulate myself that I figured it out in five months, where it's the same thing that I had with my husband, and I was with him for twelve years. So I guess I should give myself credit.

You know I don't know if it's a time for drugs or what, I mean, sometimes I wish I could be an alcoholic, I'm envious of those people; it just strikes me that they get to slip away, and all I do is go to sleep.

ANSWER: Indeed, everything that you have described has constituted an attitude of self-respect, which you are not tending to validate because it doesn't meet the criteria of your concept of who you ought to be.

You know that you have difficulty avoiding being your family's savior; but indeed in order for you to fulfill that role you do have to sacrifice yourself. And self-sacrifice of that sort, which constitutes the withdrawing of the gift of you, is unintelligent, uncalled for—and I'm going to be very strong—a form of self-hate.

Now don't get too excited. But understand that you are not here to sacrifice yourself in the sense of withholding the gift of who you are from the world so as to somehow be meaningful to everyone else. To be truly meaningful, you will honor yourself. You will do what you need to do so as to not override your own integrity, and you will let the chips fall where they may. And you will let the others come to terms, instead of trying to develop the terms for them.

All of the things which you are feeling it is appropriate to do are expressions of freedom, and do not embody a false sense of responsibility. But you feel obligated by virtue of your conditioning to falsely obligate yourself, and that is what you think should provide you with a sense of worth and of being worthy of self-appreciation.

Well, how much longer do you want to be the puppet of your family members—being dangled around while you are trying to be helpful? I have made it very clear here today that being unconditionally loving does not mean becoming the doormat of everyone else's ego. And the fact that you must dare to set your limit, and operate within that framework which allows you to experience your peace and your joy. If you are going to squelch yourself in favor of others, you will be depressed.

I encourage you to try being consistent with you, and do it with a certain carefree abandon. Because there is much peace that it is yours to experience right here and now. Don't be so quick to judge yourself for not being what you ought to be for everyone else. And also, I encourage you to stop putting yourself down when your deep feelings of self-respect do not match your concept of who you ought to be.

QUESTION: Well, let me just check something then. So the reason my sister isn't speaking to me is because I finally told her what was on my mind, which was saying what I thought was the truth.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: And so I'm depressed about that situation because I'm the one that caused her to stop speaking to me? I mean is that where I'm getting off track?

ANSWER: That is true. Let her not speak to you. And let her go through the inner changes necessary for her to be able to reconnect with you.

QUESTION: What if this takes years?

ANSWER: What if it does? Now it makes a difference if you are going to feel responsible during those "years."

QUESTION: No, I'm trying not to.

ANSWER: You must face the fact that you are fundamentally intelligent. You do not seem to be fundamentally spiteful. And when you do express yourself it is with a conscientious intent to be an agent for change, constructively. Now you must honor that and you must just be present and be you, and let the chips fall where they may.

Do you think... No, in fact, you yourself are living proof of the fact that not everyone is always happy with the answers I give. If I felt responsible for conveying the answers in a way that wouldn't make you upset, I would have to pay attention to you very carefully and avoid doing what would upset you, and then I would simply be reflecting back to you your present limited sense of yourself—and you might as well talk to your brother.

Sometimes you are called upon to say the truth, and it will not make another comfortable, because it confronts them with an inconsistency within them. And you must let them work it out.

QUESTION: You know actually this doesn't upset me. It's like it gives me permission to not talk to them, which is fine.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is fine.

QUESTION: How does the insomnia fit in?

ANSWER: It is simply a result of the distress you are feeling because you are being so responsible for everyone else's misery. And you are also feeling that a simple expression of you amounts to inconsiderateness. And that is not an easy belief to embrace, because it undercuts and undermines whatever sense of integrity you might have been experiencing.

I do encourage you to honor yourself a little bit more. Don't be afraid to express the truth as you see it. Again, you are not spiteful; you are not vengeful.

And I will tell you something else: It is completely inappropriate for you to be judging yourself because you have strength and don't fit into the typical role of delicate, sweet, feminine womanhood. You do not squelch your strength—your strength does not undermine your femininity. But because you are as forthright as any man around, you tend to disqualify yourself; while at the same time you are absolutely unwilling to give up the experience of your strength, and that is very wearing. And so again I say, embrace your strength, realize that it doesn't undermine your womanhood and forget about feeling guilty.

QUESTION: For the last year I have been working at a job which has a little carrot of great possibilities around the corner that's been hanging out there for next month. And that next month is now kept being next month, and next month, and next month.

And so I have been struggling with whether or not it's appropriate to stick with this longer. So my question is—because some other opportunities have come up—whether or not I should stick with it? And is the carrot really just around the corner, or is it an illusion that I have created?

And more importantly during this period of time I have felt like there's a veil between me and my inner knowing, which I have had before, so that I haven't been able to bring forth any knowing about what to do about this job as well as other things. So I guess the real question has to do with how, at times when we feel that veil is there, can I remove the veil and feel more connected with my own inner knowing?

ANSWER: The necessity is to redefine the veil. You are speaking of a veil because it feels like a haze. What you must dare to assume is that there is something absolutely orderly here. And the fact that you do not have the answer means that it is not at that moment appropriate to have the answer, because fulfillment of purpose is not occurring in a manner that calls for action at that time.

You see, you have been willing to listen, and you have been willing to persist. And along the way you have had clear guidance. No guidance when you are open and desirous of guidance, no answer when you are desirous of an answer, is an answer. I encourage you to let there be no answer until there is an answer.

I will clue you in: No answer is keeping you from engaging in arguing. If the answer “no, it is not time,” were given, you would argue—you would attempt to weasel an answer. No answer leaves you without grounds for taking steps, and does not engage you in argument, because there is no one there to argue with. And it saves you the grief and the loss of energy that would come from the argument.

Your guidance is always two to ten jumps ahead of you and your ego, and therefore is always able to respond in the way that leaves you most clear as you move along—as it was put earlier—this walk of trust.

Don't be so sure anything is out of order here. And by all means do not take a step just for the sake of having some activity. That which will identify fulfillment of purpose here will come forth. But I encourage you to trust that it will come forth in its perfect timing, which will indeed constitute real fulfillment for you, even though it is not happening at the pace that your ego thinks it should. You are safe. You are not at a point of great vulnerability.

QUESTION: I'll try to be brief, but this has triggered something that has happened in the past year. Before then it seemed that I always had knowing down to the detail of where to go for the day in terms of survival—to get my goods, to know what's coming next. I noticed in the past year I seem to have been wiped out. I can't function in terms of, let's say, a certain psychic ability to know beforehand, again in terms of survival. And I'm wondering is it going to continue that way of seeming to have a totally blank mind? I feel I've stepped backwards.

ANSWER: I know it feels that way, but it is a moving into a more spontaneous response to the moment with freshness without bias. It feels like a loss of a capacity, but it is really the loss of a hindrance. You are literally finding yourself choicelessly being present in the now, on its terms. Which means being in the experience of the Movement of Creation on the terms that God is unfolding it.

Now there is a fuller experience of this that awaits you, but that will not come clearly into focus until you have released the sorrow at the loss of the psychic capacity to know that helped you feel in charge. This is a progressive step. You do not yet gather from the experience of it a feeling of your integrity and safety, but that will come.

You and everyone else have an innate capacity to be absolutely appropriate in the moment, responding to the moment, without preconceptions. And you are beginning to learn what that feels like.

I know that it feels like being completely out of control. And always in the past being out of control has meant being at the mercy of something. If you are at the mercy of something, it is the presence of the Father's love and the Father's exquisite expression of life and its perfection. In spite of your seeming loss of an overview that gave you a sense of having things pegged, that gave you a sense of being secure, you have found your life itself being quite remarkable. And your ego says, "Yes, but I didn't know it was coming." Now look back and see that it came. It was what happened without it being pegged.

And I will tell you something: Although you have been fretful because you couldn't embrace what was happening intellectually, you have moved through this year almost totally free of fear. And you are losing the compulsive need to have things psychically pegged, and you are moving into a new level of freedom, of emancipation, of less bondage. It is a beautiful thing that is happening.

QUESTION: Also, in April of '91 I have some orchard property that I want to sell to pay off some taxes and my home, to bring my home out of debt. Will that happen and is it appropriate that I do that?

ANSWER: It is appropriate to do it, but it is not appropriate to put all of your eggs in one basket. In other words: do it, but do not make everything dependent upon it going through. Be aware when you take this specific step that your Being is not limited to that step in order to identify fulfillment of purpose. So take the step, and also be fully open to other avenues of your need being met in the most practical terms.

Understand that that does not constitute an expression of doubt regarding this particular step. It simply means that you are not selecting that step as the only means of identifying your fulfilling.

Remember, your Being, with a capital "B", has infinite resources with which to identify your fulfillment.

QUESTION: Recently, for a couple of months, I went on an emotional roller coaster, which is quite unusual for me. But I was grateful for it, because it forced me to look at some of my ego garbage. And I'm wondering if there's anything there in that experience that needs a little more light shed on it?

ANSWER: Literally, you are standing in the clear, and there is no further illumination on the subject that is necessary. I will simply say, don't be afraid of the experience of being on an emotional roller coaster—that is like being afraid of being afraid. And there is a part of you that can stand observing the emotional roller coaster; as unbelievable as it might seem, it is possible to observe it from a vantage point that is not particularly moved by this display of the ego.

Learning to stand in that observing place, noticing what is happening without hooking into it, is part of accessing and establishing for yourself your permanent ability to stand in balance—to have your equilibrium, even when your ego is doing everything it can to hook you. It is possible for you to say, “There goes my ego again.” And the part of you that can say that is the part of you that is not your ego; it is You.

This period was a period of cleansing and release, which you yourself, from a controlling standpoint, were not creating. It was a part of, what I will call, spiritual growth, or a process of maturity. As I said, you are standing in the clear; there is no unfinished business relative to that roller coaster ride.

QUESTION: I have a comment to make. You gave me a great lesson yesterday, or all you people did.

The lesson was that everything has meaning, everything is of importance. And I was so struck by the fact that Raj pays close and exquisite attention to each instance of difficulty that one has. And the reason I was struck by that is because I’m pretty judgmental about such things: I think something’s are important and something’s are not. And I caught myself right in the act yesterday. As Raj showed forth his love, I sat there saying, “Well I don’t know if that’s important or not.” But it was a great lesson, because it did go deeply. And thank you, thank you all for that.

ANSWER: It is wonderful that you noticed. And indeed it can be helpful to you in not assuming that your judgments are valid. And if you do not assume that your judgments are valid, it will allow you to become curious with fresh eyes—curious to know what is the truth here, rather than what you think the facts are.

And I will tell you that this willingness and this capacity to assume that your spontaneous judgments are conditioned responses, rather than a connectedness with what is Real, is what will significantly help each of you to get past your inability to connect with your fellow man when your fellow man is apparently, obviously, being unreasonable, being unkind, being stupid, and by virtue of their continuous unreasonable behavior, causing you to engage resistance to them.

When you make a judgment and create in you a resistance to your fellow man, you have no idea what impact that has in terms of holding that one in his or her place of ignorance. You have no comprehension of how it is experienced as an unwillingness of others to see that one in a new light. And from that one’s stand point they feel unloved, and disallowed of respect, even when they are trying, or even when they are just beginning to screw up enough courage to try to change.

Literally, your spontaneous confidence that you know what a thing means is what keeps you from the experience of revelation—the revealing of Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are, and the Christhood of that individual that you create a resistance to. Healing occurs when perception is released from preconceptions.

Now indeed, if you are all existing at this moment in the middle of Reality, with a capital “R”—the Kingdom of Heaven—then everything you are experiencing is Reality seen through a glass darkly, or Reality seen clearly without any interfering lens, if you will. And so everything is of meaning. Everything expresses the intent that the Father has set into motion by the act of being, which is called Creation.

And so there is nothing too inconsequential. And wherever there is an ignorance that one is suffering from, it is the opportunity to see right in that spot, Reality. But judgment and resulting resistance blocks one from cutting through to the experience of what is Real.

And of course, this is where love comes into play. Because love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. And, of course, that means recognizing what is divinely Real in the places where that which doesn't seem to express God is going on. That is where the love is needed, and that is where it is deserved.

And let me ask you something: Who is it that is seeing something unlike the Father going on? It is always you. And then, if as a result of your ignorance of the presence of God in that spot, you make a judgment on that spot and become resistant to it, you are substantiating, solidifying your ignorance. And you are also engaged in an act of denial of that spot. And if that spot is another human being, it is—I'm going to say—hurtful. Or if it is an animal or a tree or any other life form. And there is always the possibility that that other one will believe your judgment, and believe that your resistance is valid, and they will be discouraged from opening up to their own Christhood, their own value.

It is important to discover that every single aspect of your daily life is, if I may put it this way, some essential thread in the tapestry of the Movement of Creation. All of it is the Father embodied for you to experience for what it is, rather than what you believe it to be, judge it to be and condemn it to be.

All of you, in one way or another, by virtue of your judgments, hold your world in a state of less than desirable, and then feel frustrated because it is the way it is. Your willingness to acknowledge what is Real is what will release the static, immovable nature of life and allow it to open up and reveal itself to you as the presence of God, as the presence of good, as the presence of that which has capital “M”, Meaning, the experience of which will always be fulfilling for the one who is not defended against experiencing it.

Do not let any part of your world be too inconsequential to look for the presence, the full presence of God expressed, and the joy of experiencing it.

And also do not feel that any ignorance you might be experiencing, any doubt you might have, any concern you might have is too inconsequential or bothersome to bring to the altar, if you will; to bring to the threshold; to ask for guidance about; to be open to experiencing revelation about. Do not assume that God, or the Holy Spirit, or your guide will be bothered by your puny little problem. Because it is our pleasure, and it will become your pleasure to acknowledge the presence of God right there, so that it will no longer be experienced as an absence of God, an absence of good, a concern.

QUESTION: May I ask one question then, in the light of what you've just said. How can I regard, or how can we regard this threat of war that we see in the Middle East, where Bush and Saddam are posturing?

ANSWER: Good choice of words, posturing. First of all, do not jump to conclusions based upon your conditioned thinking, and do not jump to conclusions based upon what your media is presenting, because they are not really asking what is truly going on. They are observing and perceiving through their mindsets also.

The simple fact is that this is simply an additional outbreak of intelligence in the world. The others—the changes in Russia, the pulling down of the Berlin wall—have all been relatively easy to recognize as outbreaks of intelligence. This one is an awkward outbreak of intelligence.

And I will tell you that it doesn't really have anything to do with oil, and it is not really a power play in the world. It is an uneasy process of unification of the Arab states. And as I shared a couple of weeks ago, you are observing the birth of a nation—a process of conscious unification that is indeed occurring with great posturing, and great expressions of threatening movements.

But it is at the bottom line, a process of a coming together of a people who for centuries have been experiencing a dissociation. Don't worry, your President will not be able to inadvertently start a war, because that is not what this is about.

QUESTION: Can I just ask how far the unity extends? Does it extend to Israel? Is that the whole situation?

ANSWER: That I will have to say is the tendency, that is the likelihood, but at this point it is not a great enough likelihood to allow me to say it will happen. It is part of the gathering picture, if I may put it that way.

QUESTION: I've sensed that Saddam is the catalyst which around which or whom the unity will begin to take shape. Is that correct?

ANSWER: He is the Judas in this drama.

QUESTION: So we should bless him as well?

ANSWER: You must understand that Judas was the Christ also. And indeed that is true in this particular human drama. That which promotes change, that which promotes the substantiation of Reality is always the Christ, whether it is perceived to be an enemy or not. I have indicated before that divine love always registers with those in a dream, in language of the dream—and always in language that promotes a rousing from the dream.

This is the current language of the penetration of divine truth causing chemicalization, purification and the uncovering of the unity that is inherently natural, where unity has seemed to be absent. Very often calm, quiet, intelligent approaches to Reality are ignored, because everyone is so conditioned to high degrees of stimulation.

And so you can see that it is important not to jump to conclusions based upon appearances without daring to listen more deeply, with the assumption that your spontaneous judgments are likely to be based on conditioning, rather than a true attentiveness to what is really happening, and then daring to be curious unconditionally to discover the unexpected.

QUESTION: Raj, I want to stand and proclaim that I received a healing last night that confirmed for me the reality of what you are teaching us. So I just want to share that. I'd be willing to hug and leap with anybody who wants to, in celebration of the clarity that came and joy and gratitude. And I have more work to do and I have more healing appointments.

My question is we are told by the Tara Center that Mitreya is appearing to world leaders. I'm wondering if you can say anything more about that? Or please just tell us anything about Mitreya.

ANSWER: Indeed, the source of information about Mitreya is through Tara Center, and we will let that be the continuing source.

I will simply, once again, confirm the fact that Mitreya is here; that he is fully Awakened. And it is important to understand that although he is present in a perfectly tangible and apparently dense form as all the rest of you, he is not functioning as a personality, but as the presence of capital "M" Mind, that is the Mind of God—therefore, being absolutely appropriate and expressing the Father's Will in the language of present perception for those on the face of your planet.

He is at work; you can count on it. And his interface, if you will, with the earth—I mean by that, the mankind on the earth—is occurring at levels other than just communication and personal interaction. I mean by that, face to face interaction.

There are a great number of us who are actively working to facilitate the willingnesses as they appear in mankind to consciously embrace a clearer view of Reality and the true meaningfulness of life, right where mankind is living and experiencing being.

I know you would like details about Mitreya, but it is not my function to elaborate on that. It is my function to relate to each of you in the manner of uncovering your divinity and inspiring your greater embracing, acknowledging and owning of it. When the student is ready, the teacher appears, as I said. So I am working with your readiness, and promoting it so that Mitreya will not have followers, but co-workers, if you will.

To be a follower does not express your integrity. To be Christ's with the Christ's—to be Christ's with the Christ Mitreya—is expressive of your integrity and your dignity and your Birthright. And so although you may be intensely curious as to other physical manifestations of the presence of God in the world, do not let it overshadow your interest in discovering the concrete manifestation of God right where you are standing.

That is the area of my work. And that is what we will attend to here. But continue to be curious about Mitreya and all other evidences of the Christ operating in the world, transforming the world and bringing out the wonderful nature of life on your planet that becomes obvious to you when you get a million miles away, or even as far away as your Moon and look back at this jewel of a planet. It conveys to you that it is meant to be a happy place, a place of beauty and harmony, naturally.

QUESTION: Thank you, I just wanted to hear you say Mitreya's name.

ANSWER: I will say it again, Mitreya. A rose by any other name is still a rose. The Christ by any other name, whether it is your name, whether it is Saddam Husseins name, whether it is George Bush's name, is still the Christ. Don't be fooled by appearances.

Now we must be wise. The necessity is to recognize the Christ everywhere as the identity of every single individuality. But if an individuality is claiming for himself or herself anything less than his or her Christhood then also use discernment, so that you may separate illusion from Reality and not end up as a doormat to other's egos. Recognize the illusion for what it is—pure nothingness parading as somethingness.

If you are clearly seeing that a thing is illusion, you will find no call for an inner emotional response to it. Energetically speaking, you could say, you are then left free to engage in recognizing the truth—the Christ that is there. And that recognition will come with a Soul response, which is not an emotional reaction. And that Soul response is what can cut through the illusion causing it to seem to no longer even present itself.

QUESTION: Recently some of us here at Sky Song received a gift. And I have gotten out the Bible, but I can't really find it or understand it. I was wondering if you would like to tell the story of the nine gifts of the Holy Spirit, and what went on and what they are and how to use them?

ANSWER: Not at this time. We are here to talk about the gift of you, that you make when you are not covering yourself up. And the gift that you give, you give to yourself first, by daring to go against all of your conditioned thinking, and acknowledge yourself as sinless, guiltless, pure, innocent.

Under all circumstances it is your conditioned thinking and the conditioned thinking of everyone else that holds you unreasonably and unjustifiably in a sense of guilt—certainly in a sense of lack of innocence, and therefore forever in a state of potential punishment. Such a frame of reference, such a concept is absolutely false, no matter how justifiable it seems. And until someone comes along and totally challenges that belief or suggestion, and dishonors it and dares to feel his or her innocence, there will continue to be a process of Awakening, rather than the spontaneous experience of it.

The time will come when your question will be answered, but that is not, let us say, what is unfolding today.

Do you think I am in charge of what is unfolding today? And if I am not in charge of what is unfolding today, then why would any of you attempt to be in charge of what is unfolding in your day. We are simply illuminating. I mean you and I are simply illuminating by virtue of becoming as defenseless as possible. The Movement of God, the Movement of Light, the Movement of capital “B” Being, that is what is unfolding today.

And I must flow with it as much as you must flow with it. All of us must come to a point of comfort and security in yielding to the fulfillment that the Father is unfolding that constitutes the conscious experience of “day” that is happening.

QUESTION: I want to first of all thank whoever or whatever nudged me into being here, because I’m really kind of surprised at myself. And I also want to thank you for all the assurance you’ve given me this morning to go ahead and say what I wanted to say. Because part of my mind’s telling me it will be so petty and selfish, and that I’ve already heard the answers.

ANSWER: If you still have the question, then the answer has not yet fully registered with you, and there is one thing you can be sure of: the answer will be provided to you as many times as you need to hear it until it finally registers.

QUESTION: I have the thought that I should be married again. And what really seems to happen with me is, if any poor fellow tries to show any interest in me, I become furious—it’s like I hold him in contempt. And I do things about working with forgiveness and so forth, and the truth is I haven’t forgiven. I seem to be really stuck in this. And what I want to know is, if you can see through some of this mud and give me a hint as to where I should go to try to solve this problem?

ANSWER: Indeed, it is important for you to find someone whom you can trust. And naturally, at this point, it will be a woman: someone with whom you can work in accessing the anger that you are feeling, and finding, what I'm going to call, exquisite forms of expressing the anger in a setting of safety and intelligence. There is a need for an opening, and there is a need for some physical expression of the very great feelings that you have bottled up in you.

There are very creative and nonharmful means of expressing anger that indeed extract and express, as I said, all of the exquisiteness of the anger. You may be surprised at my words here. But at the bottom line, we are simply talking about not squelching yourself, not squelching the feeling.

It is very possible to sit with a telephone book and take it page by page, and tear each page very, very slowly, listening to the sound of the tearing. It is an exquisite way to destroy a telephone book. It is also possible to take aluminum foil pie tins and bend them slowly, listening to the sound of their destruction. There is great value when there is this degree of, what I will call, bottled-up anger to employ sounds. It hurts nothing, it hurts no one to tear paper or to crush an aluminum pie tin.

Now I would suggest to you that you not do this all alone, but in the company of someone whom you can trust. You will find that you will thoroughly enjoy the sensory experience of the expression of your anger. And you will be surprised to find that you will not want to do this forever. There will be indeed a sense or feeling of satisfaction, and then you will find a release—a breakthrough—occurring.

I will tell you something that is very important for you to understand and for everyone to understand, and that is that bottled anger is corking your love. When you find a way to express the anger in a way that is not harmful, and it begins to come out, it feels as though there is an infinite amount of this anger, and it will pour forth forever. But it is just a little cork, you might say, sitting on the top of a magnum of love.

As the cork begins to dissolve, by virtue of expressing it safely, it pops out. And then the love that is you can bubble forth and flow freely. And so you are likely to find yourself feeling this anger greatly. Then you will watch it change miraculously and speedily from anger to this love that you don't know where it came from, because it felt like all there was in you was anger.

You are not permanently stuck. And you are not just filled with hate; although, because it is what is right at the surface, it does seem to mask your infinite capacity to love, which can never be taken away from you, which has always been present with you. So I encourage you, as I said, to find a woman, a "therapist" whom you can trust, who can help you explore in actions the expression of the anger that you are feeling.

Feel it without judgment, because it isn't the anger at the bottom line that is the focal point; it is not squelching your feeling that is the issue. And once it becomes fluid enough to flow, you will find the cork exiting and the bubbly of you emerging, and thereby bringing into the arena of your life your capacity to respond to the overtures of men with kindness and sensitivity and willingness to allow relationships to grow.

If you could get just a glimpse of the beauty of the love that you are, you would not hesitate a moment to engage in this process that I have described. You would not for a moment even judge it. There is too much of the beauty of you, and of the love that you Are, to allow it to continue to be covered up or squelched by this puny little cork.

QUESTION: I have a two-part question on bumps in the road. It seems as though most of the time things go great, and then once in awhile on a particular day something will happen or a couple of events will happen of what I call bumps in the road, and they really have a tendency to foul up your day. And last Monday was particularly notable, because there were so many bumps at the end of the day that I wrote a list of them. There were 14 that had been really bothering me. So I drew a card from THE Course IN MIRACLES box, and it said something to the effect, that you could see peace here instead of this. Which was a good message.

I'm wondering about that day in particular, and if it were an example of the kind of thing that Paul was talking about yesterday with all the animals?

And then the second part of that is that when these bumps involve individuals, what's a more appropriate way to work with the individuals and not let them be so intruding on my peace? I deal with people all day long, and some of their personalities are more pleasant to be with than others.

ANSWER: The fact is that Paul does the same thing. And literally, you're making the same choice that Paul makes all day long, as different people call with different points of view and different degrees of distress. This applies to you as well, and everyone else, because it involves a choice not to be totally attentive to and sensitive to the other individual and the manner in which he or she is presenting himself or herself but while being aware of them, also being attentive within to whatever clarity is present within you to be aware of.

If you give your full attention and sensitivity to the one you are with, and especially to what is being said, the feelings that are being expressed, etc., you are likely to begin to have an investment in that one's point of view. And if they are being unpleasant, you are, as I indicated earlier, likely to begin to be resistant to them. And in your resistance you become tense, and unable as a result of that tension to feel your peace and access your ever present clear perspective.

So when you are dealing with individuals who obviously will approach you from different vantage points because of the way their day is going, and what they are believing, and their problems, etc., always keep your ear to the ground, as it were. Let one ear listen to the ground of your Being, with a capital “B”. And let the ear that is listening deeply within be the one that you favor.

You are the embodiment of intelligence. You are the embodiment of wisdom, because in fact you are the presence of the Father in expression. I encourage you to practice this; it will express an intent on your part to always be in touch with fundamental sanity, an intent to recognize the truth, when ignorance seems to be presenting itself. No matter what you are confronted with, whether it presents itself as ignorance or not, you literally are confronted with Reality, and there is a truth that goes beyond the limits of the ignorance that is present to be discerned.

I will tell all of you, that to the degree that you have a conscious intent to listen for answers that resolve ignorance’s or problems, you are expressing a confidence that you cannot have a problem without an answer. You are bringing into play a practice that could be called—taking a problem, as the indicator of an answer that is present, seeking your recognition. The problem becomes a dinner bell calling you to move right past the dinner bell on into the dining room for the feast.

This can change the nature and the tone of your day, especially when there are bumps. And I will also tell you that that day—even though there were a significant number of bumps—did not stand as any particular form of learning for you. It was just another typical day, with typical opportunities to be the transparency for truth, to be the threshold of love. You just had many opportunities to see peace, instead of something else.

QUESTION: My question is pretty similar. For the most part I’m a pretty happy guy, and I always have been. But on occasions there’ll be two, three days in a row where I don’t particularly feel happy. And I could probably best describe it as losing my passion for life: just sort of an overall depression, despondency with my life and how it’s going. Now can you shed some light on that?

ANSWER: Always, when that happens, it is a manifestation of not being in touch with yourself. Because whenever you are in touch with yourself, whenever you are not blocked off from yourself, you feel energy for life.

Literally, it is like a muscle that you use, without a break in its use, that finally says, “I cannot continue further. I am exhausted.” And no matter how hard you try, you cannot tense it up. Prior to these days of no energy for life, no enthusiasm for your life, you have, without being in touch with yourself, activated such a level of ego activity that you have become exhausted. And this quiet time that you unavoidably end up experiencing is simply the opportunity for you to connect with yourself again, and hopefully not repeat the intensity that brought you to that point of let down.

Again, if you are not feeling the vigor and vitality of life, it is because you have become disconnected—out of touch with yourself in your simplicity—and therefore the call is for reconnection.

Now this is what applies specifically to you. For the sake of the rest of you, there are other circumstances in which you find yourselves not feeling the vigor and vitality of life, and what is actually going on is that you are experiencing peace and not knowing what to do with it, because the stimulation of ego dynamics are not hooking you.

QUESTION: May I take this to mean that we need to play more, and take ourselves a little less seriously? Sometimes it's hard to make yourself go out and play, when I know quite well that I should. It's easier to find excuses to do something serious.

ANSWER: Something productive?

QUESTION: Um-uh.

ANSWER: Indeed, yes.

PAUL: The feeling is that he's throwing the ball back in your court. Do you have a "yes, but," or anything?

QUESTION: Nope.

QUESTION: In three years of counseling, I've pretty much learned that I have a right to be who I was in the first place. It's a hard-won right. I also have a right to be treated with respect.

And I am at a crossroads, Michael is at a crossroads; our relationship is in a crossroads. The love between us is very strong and very deep, and I believe that we are good for each other. But he has low self-esteem and he has a knee-jerk reaction to try to control me. And he does it in the way he talks to me, and it hurts.

So about three weeks ago we decided that we were driving each other nuts, and we decided to go our separate ways. And I heaved a big sigh of relief. He went on a cruise to Southern California to deliver a sailboat. And I think in that time I've done some serious growing up. And I have chosen to be whole. It's not just a head choice; I think it's from deep inside of me, and I've chosen to be who I am. And I see this choice in me as an opportunity for Michael to also choose. I can't ask him to change, or expect him to change, but my choice to be different may be a door to him.

I don't know why I'm crying?

ANSWER: We will wait.

QUESTION: So anyway he's coming back, and he's done some thinking and he wants to stay with me. And we're going to do some talking, and I'm obviously scared. Do you have any comments?

ANSWER: Do, indeed, talk, but remain in touch with yourself, remain in touch with this feeling that you have the right to be who you were in the first place, and that you deserve respect. That very acknowledgment within you is called self-respect. It is not appropriate for you to override your own integrity by behaving in a way that is inconsistent with it.

And if you will stay in touch with yourself, it will become obvious to you whether or not Michael is willing to respect you in the context of the manner in which you are respecting yourself. Also, to the degree that you do remain in touch with yourself, you will obviously convey to him, naturally, that you are not vacillating, you are not unsure, and this will thereby not open up for Michael the opportunity to get in there and help make things clear for you, which is experienced as attempts at control.

You are here to be you and let the chips fall where they may. Be true to yourself; it is a part of your growing up, yes. And it is time for you to dare to be you and rest with it, even though you will grow, and being you a year from now will not be the way you be you now. But honor you as you are now; that is the way you get connected. And then you present a clear self to Michael that makes it easier for him to know what he needs to do.

QUESTION: When I was out to dinner with you and Susan and we were talking about surrendering, and it just seems like this last four years with Michael has been so much hard work. And you have kept saying that this is a good relationship, and I see that the potential is for that. But I was thinking while we were talking that perhaps the relationship is at that point of surrender—of making a commitment and surrendering into it—and not having to work so hard at protecting myself so much.

ANSWER: You're not here to surrender to Michael. You are here to surrender to you—to your essential divine Self. And that will always feel like a surrender, because you will have to give up the sense of yourself that you have created. And so you surrender into your essential being. It always feels like a loss of control, and it is. But in surrendering to who you are, in surrendering to self-respect, you then have the balanced, clear perspective that allows you then to make a commitment to another—not a surrender, but a clear commitment.

And yes, indeed the real nature of relationships is that it promotes surrender. That is its purpose—surrender to one's essential being, surrender to being Real, because that's when the gift of you is made. And when the gift of you is made, the relationship ceases to be a special relationship and becomes a holy relationship. A relationship where the fundamental common denominator is wholeness—not a fragmented sense of identity, an incomplete sense of identity that is getting its completeness from the relationship.

QUESTION: I've been wondering about dreams that I've been having. And they were about my husband, Bob. And in those dreams I expressed an anger that I didn't know that was in me. And even though I have a sense of what it means, I would still like clarification about it.

ANSWER: Literally, the dreams are registering with you at, the conscious level of awareness, a release of anger that has been occurring while you have been sleeping.

Now, you are likely to have two or three more dreams like this, because you are engaged in a spontaneous release of anger while you are sleeping. And there is a little bit more to release.

Now, what I wish for you to understand is, that having the dreams is an indicator of an already existing release having occurred. It is not appropriate for you to become overly interested in what the anger was or why you were angry. What is important for you to, shall I say, focus in on is the fact that release is occurring. There is a spontaneous healing occurring, and I encourage you to embrace that and appreciate it, and dare to feel relief, instead of assuming that you now have a task before you to understand what this anger is. Let it simply go and be grateful that it is going.

QUESTION: You mentioned to Nancy about clear commitment. For me right now—I don't know if this is for everyone or what—but what is the commitment to? For me I can only see committing to be who I am and tell the truth. So could you talk about that in terms of a relationship, a love relationship in particular?

ANSWER: It is a commitment to specifically be who you are, with one other individual on an enduring long-term basis. Now why would one do this? The answer is, because it is too difficult to do it with everyone at once. The time will come when all of you will become so defenseless, so free of any need for self-protection, that such commitment will be made to everyone.

That is the way unity of the Brotherhood is experienced; where one is not guarded in any way against his brother or his sister. But you get practice at developing the experience of safety with another, with one person. In this way you do not bite off more than you can chew and overwhelm yourself.

QUESTION: I come here today or this weekend, in a state of exhaustion. And my question to you is perhaps giving me some insight on how to prevent exhaustion, and maybe what the exhaustion is, and how to prevent it from coming into my life.

ANSWER: Well, there is a great need for a better expression of common sense. There is a need for R & R, if you will. There is a need for balance, so that you are not intensely applying yourself, whether the application is physical or not. You can exhaust yourself by intense mental application, by constantly being mentally active in, as I said earlier, productive ways, where there is no frivolous use of your mind.

You need a little frivolity. You need to value a balance between, let us say, work and play; between being productive and having fun, where there is no obvious product other than the fact that you have experienced some joy. You keep yourself on the hook all the time—and you need to let yourself off. And you need to recognize that that is as absolutely essential as the work that you do.

QUESTION: I have a personal question for you this morning. I come from a family of four siblings, and we're very, very close and always have been. And for the first time I'm experiencing a great deal of anger from my sister. I wonder if you could tell me why and how this will end or persist?

ANSWER: Whether she will admit it or not, she is experiencing jealousy. She feels a lack of something that you have. Allow her to move through this. Do not be upset with her, do not rile yourself up. But, also, as long as she is in this process that she is moving through, it is wise to give her space and not be in it yourself.

PAUL: This is me, Paul. The picture that he's giving is that it really is not appropriate for you to know the specific dynamics. Sometimes he refrains from answering a question, if having the answer would be the equivalent of being a mental Peeping Tom. And evidently this is something very private with her, and it's not appropriate for him to explain the specifics of it.

ANSWER: It could well be November of next year before she comes to terms with this. That is not an absolute prediction; I am simply saying that at this time point the likelihood is that she will enjoy her distress, her jealousy for that period of time before she tires of it. I mean by that that she will feel that it is a valuable and meaningful thing to engage in.

Absolutely none of you does anything for no reason at all. And when you are angry there is a reason, there is a justification, there is a pay off, if you will, else you wouldn't do it. Not one of you does anything idiotic, for no good reason. You always do it because it seems completely justifiable.

Indeed, everything we are talking about this week-end is a matter of beginning to discern the difference between what is really justifiable and what is not. And what unjustifiable things keep you from experiencing your peace and your joy and your integrity.

No matter what you do, your sister is likely to find her expression of jealousy and her feeling of jealousy justifiable and satisfying to her for approximately a year. Let her have her rough year.

It is very much like when Paul felt like he was growing up and becoming more mature, and decided one Christmas that he was going to acknowledge that there was no Santa Claus. He would have nothing to do with that nonsense, and let everyone know that there was no Santa Claus, and made it absolutely miserable for everyone else.

When the end of Christmas day came, he found that his day had been lacking the meaning, and the joy, and the fun that all of the previous Christmases had embodied. And so when the next Christmas came, he did not indulge in a seemingly satisfying expression of “grown-upness” called denying Santa Claus. He knew there was no Santa Claus, but there was no satisfaction from making an issue about it.

All of you must arrive at a point where something seemingly justifiable is recognized not to be satisfying. And then it is easily released.

QUESTION: I’ve been doing quite a bit of writing lately, and I’d like to have a Reality check on that.

ANSWER: I will confirm to you that you have been doing quite a bit of writing. What is it you would like a Reality check on?

QUESTION: The Reality of it.

ANSWER: Indeed, it is valid and it is valuable. And you’re engaging in the writing needs to continue.

BILL HENLEY: I woke up at 5:00 this morning and it occurred to me that maybe it wasn’t a very good idea for me to be asking questions about yielding to someone who allowed himself to be crucified. And I thought this is not what I want from all my yielding. And it occurred to me that—wouldn’t it be better to be able to fix things?

And so my question concerns my life experience for the past few months, which has been quite difficult and out of my control, and tiring at times. And yes, I do what I can to see the perfection—see beyond the problem. But it still is overall quite a grind. I don’t know whether it’s purposeful to ask how long it’s going to be this way, because I know you might not answer it. And yet what is it I’m supposed to get from it so that it will be better. Because it really is almost to the point of feeling harmful; there are manifestations of it being harmful or unhealthy. I don’t have even that much control.

And I’m trying to see how God’s love can be manifesting this way. It’s like 5% of what I see is God’s love, and the rest is I don’t know what. I’m trying to see—“Yes, oh, isn’t that God’s love? Thank you, thank you, give me another one.” And I just find it too God damn hard to continue. And so whatever you might have to say would be appreciated.

ANSWER: As long as you are yielding with an ace up your sleeve, you will find yourself quick and ready to judge the things that happen. Because in effect, you are not yielding.

Now I am not saying that you have not been yielding. But the end of the yielding will come when you throw away the ace. And then you will find your world configuring in a way that not only you but everyone else will be able to recognize as fulfillment and as expressive of integrity. You are in the enviable or unenviable position of being stripped of that which is valueless.

BILL: Except for my ace, right?

ANSWER: That is correct; that you will have to throw away.

There is no way I can gloss it over, yielding is not easy, because all of your conditioning is geared to being in control. Yet every vestige of control that you still manage to save and employ acts as an absolute distance between you and your experience of your integrity, and your experience of your oneness—inseparability from the Father and the Movement of fulfillment—which is another way of describing the Movement of Creation.

You are being effectively weaned from your will. And the only reason that any success is occurring is because you have said “Yes” to it, even though you have brought along an ace. Because you have said “Yes,” the weaning will become more intense until you either say “no,” and then attempt to retrace your steps and become a little more ignorant and idiotic, or you say “yes” and let go of the ace and allow, as it were, Reality to pop into focus.

There is still a feeling that a little bit of will is of benefit. And you say, “I will give up that little bit of will when I have demonstrated proof that it will really be valuable for me.” Having that little bit of will means that you do not have willingness. And willingness is what we could describe as an untethered boat caught in the current of the river.

Now I am being very direct and straight with you; I am not saying anything new, and I am not suggesting that you haven’t been flowing. It is just that you have created a very long rope. And although your boat is floating with the current, it has not come to the end of the rope yet, and so you feel as though you have fooled the powers that be. This extended length of rope is under the water, and it is tied to the dock below the water level, and it is tied to your boat below the water level. And for all practical purposes your boat is totally free-floating.

Now you have gone to this great trouble of having a long rope and attaching it in this way, because indeed you want the experience of not being tightly tethered. And that is to be honored and credited. I am just letting you know that if you will go ahead and reach over the side of the boat and snip the rope—get rid of your ace—and totally surrender to the river, you will find your integrity manifesting immediately.

You are still testing. And it is excellent that you are testing, but it is time to give up the testing. You fully intend to go all the way. And to a certain degree, the having of the long rope is a bit of a charade. So I encourage you to go ahead and be totally Real, totally committed to what you are already committed to.

Your fulfillment, the fulfillment you are asking for is no further away from you than the thickness, let us say, of a sheet of paper. And the thickness of that sheet of paper is constituted of your ace. Give up—all the way! You are giving up into your Wholeness.

BILL: Well, this goes back to whether or not I feel comfortable trusting God's Will. I mean, since that is what one is yielding to, and as I mentioned flippantly about the crucifixion, I mean what if that pops into one's idea: "Oh, that's what God's Will is for me." It has to get worse.

ANSWER: If I had thought a crucifixion was what was happening, I would have died. Why are you defining the crucifixion in a way that I did not, and then using that as justification for not being willing now in your experience—willing to not define yielding as being an inherently traumatic experience.

BILL: Well, the crucifixion, perhaps, is misunderstood here, you see, and all the information we have on it is that it was sacrifice. Now I don't believe that. But for anyone other than you, maybe crucifixion would be traumatic, you see. So that's why we define it that way, because the truth has not come out. I mean we hear what you say, and this is new, but we have all of that programming. I don't even know why I'm saying this. But we have all this programming about what the crucifixion meant. And so we have become convinced that God's Will can have a lot of pain. I'm not justifying...

ANSWER: Even historically speaking, you have no great expose of some pain or great pain that I went through.

BILL: No, it's religious tradition. It's not what happened. It's how it's interpreted now, and the whole idea that somehow God's Will for us is arduous.

ANSWER: What did it say? It said that God's Will for you was Eternal Life. Now you tell me how on earth the illustration of Eternal Life could have been demonstrated without a resurrection from that which everyone unequivocally recognized to be what they call death?

BILL: Oh, I agree, I agree. But I'm saying that emotionally when one is under a lot of stress and pain and what their focus is is yielding, I mean—"By god, I'm going to try to do God's Will; I'm going to yield," and then things get worse and more difficult and more cumbersome. Then you begin to say, "What's up, Doc? What's the story here?"

ANSWER: What you are yielding to is not experiences of limitation; you are yielding to honesty, you are yielding to the genuineness of you, you are yielding into the essential you, and you are sacrificing or giving up a limited false sense of yourself.

Now it is not the demonstration of Eternal Life that is needed today. It is the demonstration of the fundamental, essential divinity of conscious human individuality. What does that bring into play? That brings into play trust. The demonstration of Eternal Life brought into play, by necessity, an event called death.

Throughout what everybody observed, you could say that I stayed on the Homing beacon or tone of the emergence of the fact of Eternal Life. But that is not the dynamic involved in the uncovering and revealing of the essential divinity of conscious human individuality right here on this planet.

We are talking about coming into a deeper level of humility of which the holding of an ace behind your back is a denial. You have yielded almost to the bottom of the barrel, and I am saying yield all the way. Let go completely.

Now it is well for everyone to hear you say that it is a hell of an experience, so that when others in their process of yielding discover that they are holding an ace up their sleeve and they're experiencing what they might call a hell of an experience in the face of their conscious intent to yield, they will not feel peculiar.

Paul has been scraping the bottom of the barrel for eight years in his process of yielding, and then attempting to protect himself from time to time, and then learning to yield even more and not be in control. He is totally aware at this very moment of what is going on and is, at all times, in the workshop, but there is a part of him that would like me to spice things up. And he simply has to learn to yield. He cannot be in control. He cannot decide what is needed and what will best promote the work, and I cannot either.

When you see or experience divine Being present in your experience, you are observing no will but the Father's, being the absolutely perfect expression of divine purpose. You are not seeing an expression of great character or of great skillful control. And all of you will find essential and profound meaningfulness occurring and being experienced when there is a willingness to allow what will be to be. And that is not a matter of abandoning yourself to fate, it is a matter of abandoning yourself to the already existing Movement of divine Meaning, which is God Being and constituting you and constituting all that you are experiencing.

Now there is a part of you that sees this, and that is the part of you which is willing to yield further. But since you are not totally free of the ego, there is still part of you that wants to have an ace up your sleeve.

Now I want to home in on one other point here; it is important for you to understand. You have already made a commitment to go all the way. And so to a certain degree your expression of your concern is a farce. It isn't that you are trying to perpetrate a farce on everyone else. What I want you to understand is that you are unnecessarily frustrating and distracting yourself by something that you have no intent to honor at all. And if you are clear on that, you will not waste anymore of your time.

BILL: Thank you. I think I'll go throw some aluminum pie tins. I would like a follow up. Susan just reminded me and I forgot to ask, but would you tell me and everyone else what the ace is?

ANSWER: It is not a specific ace. It is an opting for safety in the face of feared danger, if you let go completely.

QUESTION: I'm glad that I got to ask a question after Bill, because it gave me some courage to expose myself for the flagrant back-slider that I am. I've had some tough times here recently, and the whole thing seems to center around my employment situation and my financial well-being. And I think it has quite a bit to do with my capacity for self-denial, and basically the same feelings that Bill gets, that if the willing God could encompass the crucifixion for you, then God knows what it could encompass for me.

ANSWER: Why does everyone insist on looking at the hole instead of the donut?

Well, if you are in the same fix that everyone else is in, then there is no specialness to your situation, is there? It is "the norm." And so "big deal." Now I say that because if it is "the way things are," then there is no need to give it any great significance and there is no need to, shall I say, give it your attention.

If lack is the norm, then don't waste your time energizing it. Give your energy to exploring its opposite. Give your attention to exploring what is beyond the limits of lack. Explore your potentials beyond the patterns you are already engaging in. Obviously not exploring new potentials leaves you sitting in things the way they are. Now to sit in "the way things are," and accept them—but also to grouse about them—is truly the equivalent of looking at the hole instead of the donut. You see, you cannot have a lack of nothing, just as you cannot have a hole without a donut.

And so there is something beyond this normal state of lack. Now one of the key elements that needs to come into play here is a certain element of fun at engaging in exploring beyond the norm. Exploration always involves abandoning the amenities and comforts of home. And if home is lack, then what's the big deal about abandoning "the amenities" and comforts of lack.

Too much is made about what needs to be gotten out of, and not enough energy, not enough joyful, lighthearted energy is put into exploring beyond the limits. And I will tell you that the withdrawal of the interests, and the motivation to explore, is the beginning of old age; it's the beginning of "dying."

Now you can never solve a problem from the level of the problem. So let's stop sitting in the problem—grousing about it, examining it, analyzing it. Let's do a little exploring. Let's let go of a few of the comfortable familiarities relative to the lack and be expansive, be open to that which moves you in new directions, new paths. And don't require that you know what's just around the bend before you go around the bend. You'll have to go around the bend, and open up your eyes and see what's there. Now literally, all of you need to become adventurers, and explore purposely the unfamiliar.

Now relative to your work, I encourage you to be open to things that you have not been open to before, rather than making an assumption that you will have to move in a direction that reflects what you have been doing. Not only that, it is essential for you to dare to embrace the idea that the very essence of life, the very essence of having a conscious experience of existence, is one that is fulfilling.

Life is an energetic, active Movement of expression. It embodies the intent to be—to be something. That is the Movement of Creation: Mind, with a capital "M", meaning God, having the intent to be; that intent being a movement or action, which Mind then observes and recognizes itself in as self-expression. All that you experience is the visibility and tangibility of that self-expressing Movement of God, the infinite Mind.

Where do you fit in? You are, like the Father is, the observer of that Movement. And when you no longer define yourself in a tiny, separated way, you will also find that you are inseparable from that intent to be that constitutes the Movement that is rendered visible and tangible as All That Is—as the Universe.

With that in mind, you can dare to explore and feel safe. Certainly it will feel risky, because you have not explored for quite awhile. And when I say quite awhile, I'm not talking about lifetimes back, I'm talking about when you were a kid. Dare to think expansively. Dare to explore and know that in your exploration you are justified in expecting to discover something; that your work, shall I say, your gainful employment and your needs being met in the most practical ways is a reasonable expectation. But don't limit it to the means by which you have had these things in the past.

And above all, I encourage you to let go of the idea that you had them in the past, and you will have them in the future, because of your personal, tiny ego effort. You have them because it is the nature of your being to experience the fulfillment that is the result of God not withholding any of what He Is from his self-expression.

Although this doesn't happen to be the case with Bill, the ace that some people hold up their sleeve is a readiness to take control again if it turns out that God isn't really doing too good of a job. If the Movement of Creation isn't constituting as much fulfillment as one thinks he can create for himself.

I encourage you specifically to dare to be expansive, adventuresome, exploring with willingness, and being open to things that you would never have considered before relative to, shall I say, gainful employment.

There is a need to loosen up some with the expectation that, in your willingness to loosen up and look more unconditionally, there will indeed be something for you to see, because it is the nature of existence to be identified as a conscious experience of fulfillment. Not what somebody else might find fulfilling, but what you will unavoidably find fulfilling. You simply need to give permission in a larger way than you have been giving permission.

QUESTION: One quick thing. You mentioned that it's been some time since I did exploring of this nature, and that it was when I was a kid. Could you relate that to some specifics?

ANSWER: No. I will only say this: Be willing to break a few rules—I did not say laws—but be willing to break a few rules. That was a means by which you explored potential as a youngster.

QUESTION: Raj, I'd like a progress report—sort of an assessment of my growth with oneness. And how my job at this time—the business that I started four years ago—continues to fit in, or doesn't continue to fit in?

ANSWER: It continues to fit in, but not in a fixed way, not in a fixed pattern. And there is necessity for you to be willing to let it grow and reconfigure. You have done that rather flowingly as time has passed, but I encourage you not to begin to see it as something which will settle down and become permanently identified without change. It is going to continue to develop and change.

There is a great deal more trust that you are practicing. There is some relinquishment of a compulsive need for control. Of course, there is opportunity for a more significant release of that, but as a general rule, you are breaking into new territory. You are, shall I say, staying as far forward as you are able to without overwhelming yourself in regard to practicing trust.

I do not usually do this, but if I were to give you a report card in this respect you would get a B+.

QUESTION: I've been finding that my business has been much slower than I've been wanting. And in listening to your responses to others this morning, I'm wondering if it's that I don't also recognize the time of quiet and peace. I wondered, in relationship to this, if doing socially responsible investing is still the appropriate path for me to follow? And if it is, is it time for me to be expanding my business, or enjoying the quiet?

ANSWER: Absolutely, socially responsible and environmentally responsible investing is wise and appropriate and meaningful. Now, indeed, you need to do both of the latter part of your question. You need to anticipate growth; you need to embrace growth—increased activity—at the same time you need to be availing yourself of your peace. Peace and activity are not mutually exclusive.

Now there is a need for you to give yourself time off from your “busyness.” Not so that you can become busy with other activities, but so that you can take time specifically to meditate, to specifically become still and reconnect with and remind yourself of what peace feels like. And then you need to reverse the tendency to be more aggressive—because business is slower and you need to do something to make something happen—and attend to your business without letting go of your peace.

Now I have said it before and I will say it again: There used to be a time when it was appropriate to separate yourself from the world and go into a cave to become still enough to “achieve union with God.” But the day and the time in which you live is a day and a time in which you access your peace and live out from it in the marketplace—in the middle of your daily activities. Because, literally, it is time to discover God; it is time to discover the Kingdom of Heaven, Reality, right in the marketplace, right here on earth—not in the afterlife—right in yourself and right in your fellow man. But this takes, shall I say, a conscious intent to engage in your day from a place of centeredness.

Paul has experienced a great deal of centeredness in the rather nurturing and gentle nature of the Islands. He did not realize that when he came back to the Mainland and, you might say, entered the mainstream that it would be engaging, distracting, exciting. Now he knows. And when he comes again, he will be able to move into the marketplace and stay in his peace, because he will be aware of the tendency of the “busyness” of the marketplace to be distracting. I will tell you that it will not be wise for him to return to the Island and refuse to come to the Mainland again, because the marketplace is so boisterous and busy and noisy.

All of you need to have a shift in perspective, where in you accept that now it is not only appropriate, but it is possible to be centered right in the middle of activity. If you are willing to take that as a fact, you will begin to give your attention to it. You will give permission for it to happen, even though it seems not reasonable. And to the degree that you bring your attention to this, you will find that your sanity, and your peace of mind, and your wisdom, and your capacity to recognize truth is present, available and active in the middle of activity.

QUESTION: I believe I have learned to go with my feelings, and to make decisions based on how I feel about the situation, whether I know how we’re going to pay for it, or how we’re going to be provided for in that situation.

Now my daughter has a very expensive hobby, and hasn’t been doing well this whole season. Yesterday was the last time she was eliminated again, down in California. When I spoke to her on the phone, she said she wanted to go ahead and try again. And this felt very good to me. It felt like this was the proper thing to do.

My husband saw this whole thing as a failure. He said, “This hobby is too expensive, it has to go.” And I find this all very difficult. Am I guided correctly to allow her to go back down to California and try again?

ANSWER: Indeed. It is an important part of her growth and her development. And I encourage you to be very firm in your expression of your confidence as to this being the right thing to do when you are speaking with your husband, and encourage him to relent, if you will. And I do not mind a bit if you let him know that I concurred that it is wise to let her continue.

QUESTION: I mean he actually called her a failure. And that made me kind of mad, even though I tried to stay at peace with myself. But I compared it to his business. And I said, “you have tried several times and haven’t succeeded.” And well this got him mad, of course, and he said, “that is a hobby and this is a business.” I find it very, very frustrating.

ANSWER: It is not that that is a hobby and this is a business. It is really that it is your husband’s leading edge and his point of emerging self-expression, just as it is with your daughter.

QUESTION: Am I not correct that if she wouldn’t be doing it—I know it involves an awful lot of money, it involves horses and all this—but he’s under the impression, I think, that that money will go into our savings account. Well I feel it is just provided, because we do allow her that.

ANSWER: That is correct. It would not go into a savings account, I will guarantee you.

QUESTION: When the business starts, I know it’s my guidance to work with him. And I know you said my enthusiasm isn’t too great about it, because I do not know that I’m going to be of value to that company. I mean he’s going to be the boss, he’s going to do it the way he’s conditioned to do it, while I will kind of try to bring in what I have learned, and to go out on the limb as I like to, and explore there.

ANSWER: I will be very frank with you: You already have a great deal of experience at bringing forth your point of view in a way that connects with him without him knowing that it connects with him. You let him be the boss, and work with him on his terms, but in your own inimitable style present what you have to present, until it occurs to him that it is his idea.

Don’t set up a problem for yourself by assuming ahead of time that it will not work. You will be needed. And I will tell you that once the business, shall I say, takes off, he is going to be more at ease, himself, and it will be easier to work with him. In the meantime, attend to the things you have at hand to deal with, and let there be some peace within you. Don’t imagine what will happen, and then react to what you are imagining before anything has happened. And know that you are playing a part in your family that is absolutely essential, and that you are fulfilling it well.

QUESTION: There are a couple of statements in A Course In Miracles—one is: “the whole reason for the world you see is that it is a place for you to express your anger at injustices that you perceive.” You started out yesterday with anger. And as I try to believe that statement, I watch other people's little bits of anger justifying their stance in where they are. And I'd like some clarification on that one.

ANSWER: The whole reason for the world you see, as you see it at the moment is because, indeed, anger seems justified, jealousy seems justified, emotional reactions seem justified. And all of these things, as I have said, keep you blocked from experiencing the world as it is. It keeps you from experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now I use the words Kingdom of Heaven not as a religious description, but as a description of All That Is as divine, as having its source in God, as having its condition constituted of the nature of God, and therefore very different from the way you are currently experiencing it. If I only refer to All That Is as Reality, it is very easy to think of Reality as that which is Real, but which may or may not have anything to do with a divine, indivisible, harmonious, loving Source. And it is very important for you to remember that the very nature of the world is Love, because it is an expression of Love. And that is why I refer to it as the Kingdom of Heaven.

All of you are in one way or another slowly releasing the seeming need to be emotionally reactive—to hate, to be jealous, to fear, to suffer, to feel guilty, etc. When that seeming need is released, when the justifications for it are released, it will seem to you as though the world is transformed. Literally, visually some things will be seen differently—specifically and especially your bodies. And it is not really that the world will lurch and stretch and change shape, it is rather that your distorted perception, your vision, will clear and you will recognize everything in a new way.

It is obvious that anger is a rather dominant subject with this particular group of people in this room. And it has come up so that we might deal with it, and promote a clarity relative to its release for a number of reasons.

If you remember that your practice of anger causes you to be distanced from, separated from the experience of harmony and perfection and beauty and innocence, then it will begin to dawn on you that the expression of it is a luxury you cannot afford—it costs too much. And I am here to tell you that not only does it cost too much, it is utterly nonsensical. It accomplishes nothing.

The ego does suggest that it will promise you satisfaction; except that satisfaction doesn't mean a state of being satisfied, it means getting revenge. That is anger crystallized. But what gets crystallized? It's you! I mean, literally: hardening of the arteries, poor circulation, difficulty breathing, congestion. But oh, the apparent satisfaction of vengeance and justice—it never truly comes. But satisfaction is yours to experience. It doesn't come, however, out of revenge. It comes out of discovering the wisdom of not practicing, indulging, in reaction—the emotional response to your world when it doesn't conform to your expectation of it, your concept of how it should be. Satisfaction is what you feel, the peace you feel, the joy you feel when you are not feeling at odds with your world.

What you see, literally, reflects what you are looking with. And if you are looking with anger, you will see that which justifies anger. And when you look with love you will see the Kingdom of Heaven. And the world that you saw through the eyes of anger will seem to be healed and transformed. But again, it will be a matter of the scales falling from your eyes as you stop looking for justice and revenge. Justice and revenge are aggressive acts of war, if you will, reflecting an inner conflict that you feel is fully justified.

Invariably, if you dare to look with the eyes of love, you will see the loveliness of your fellow man and of your world. And if some part of your world still insists upon acting as though it is less than the loveliness of God's expression, you will still find yourself feeling the absolute appropriateness of not forsaking your clear view of their loveliness and their divinity. And you will stand for that within yourself, whether the other one is receptive to it or not. And in so doing, as I also said, you will be exhibiting the fact that one with God is a majority. And thus you will be the inspiration for the transformation.

What is the second quotation?

QUESTION: The second quotation was: "If illumination could be continuously maintained, the body could not long be maintained."

ANSWER: Of course, the body as you see it, the dense body could not long remain unilluminated. In the experience of illumination, enlightened conscious awareness, where there is no suffering from a limited perception, one begins to become aware of the substance of all things as being Living Love, which is the illuminating light of All That Really Is.

And so the dense, dark, closed, defensive, tight, apparently organic, physical body will not long last AS THAT. And you will find it opening up. I mean by that, what could best be understood if you were to imagine that the atoms of the body were to move apart from each other leaving more open space so that, figuratively speaking, the energy of the atoms—the light—could break forth, thus causing the body of light that is right where your dense body seems to be, so that the body of light might be apparent, register with you and everyone else.

You see if you are going to express anger, you obviously have already accepted a sense of yourself as being tiny and vulnerable, capable of being hurt, and thereby needing protection.

Anger is a combination of fear and aggressive self-protection. The aspect of fear associated with anger is identified as a tightening up, a densifying of your body so that it feels more substantial and impervious. The anger then comes forth as attack, through space, outside of you, towards the source of the danger. Thus you tighten up your body—you densify it—you squelch the possibility of seeing the body of light that you are. And this is an act of aggression against yourself.

And then you use the body as a tool of aggression to protect itself and you from the enemy in the world. And that is an act of aggression on your world.

There cannot be illumination within or without when that is the way you are using your mind and your body. You see how much it costs you to indulge in this sometimes delicious luxury of expressing anger, jealousy, fear, etc. And all of it is nonsense. All of it is literal nonsense—an absolutely irrelevant waste of time and energy. It doesn't accomplish anything. You can do it as long as you want, but it accomplishes nothing. It is so much tinkling brass. And because it is tinkling brass, because it is nonsense, it doesn't even warrant a judgment by the Father against it.

And so although your ego and your religious teachers tell you that you are accruing guilt, the Father is watching that which means nothing, and sees nothing to respond to, and loves you. And you are free to stop anytime you want, without a reprimand, without any comment.

Nothing, as you are experiencing it in a limited way, will long last in the face of illumination. And Awakening is giving permission to let yourself become illuminated—filled. That is why the word “yield” is so important. Because yielding is de-densifying yourself; yielding is letting go, opening up. And when you open up you are spontaneously filled, and that which you Are is uncovered, that which you have always truly divinely been is uncovered, uncovered as your conscious experience. Not just an idea about yourself, but a new inner sense and experience of yourself, in which you are undeniably lovable, and you can spontaneously love yourself.

And so you see when one has an ace up their sleeve, when one is cautiously yielding, one is simply bringing into play another nonsensical, meaningless activity that simply delays the discovery of what I have been describing.

And again you must understand that it is okay; you can indulge in this nonsense without being judged. And then when you stop, you can once again enjoy the conscious experience of who you Are, the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, the conscious experience of the Body of Light—not only of yourself, but of all forms—and also a direct access, you might say, to the infinite conscious experience of All That Is, so that you are able to be simultaneously, specifically aware and universally aware.

QUESTION: I kind of need a Reality check. In the last month I've been experiencing waves of, I call them, little pin pricks in the body. And they're more so when I'm meditating or focused. Is that what you're saying, that the cells are actually becoming lighter or something? It's a wonderful feeling. I feel it more so in the morning and then at night when I'm meditating. Not so much during the day. And I feel it more in the chest and head, but I'm starting to feel it in the stomach and legs now. And is that the same thing you meant when you said, “If thine eye is single, thy body be filled with light”?

ANSWER: Absolutely. Yes. Now the little pin pricks you are speaking of, these are not to be confused with occasions where there is a spontaneous release of tension—of energy—wherein there is also a similar sensation of pin pricks. But indeed, what you are asking about has a different sensation; similar, but different. And there is a great sense of energy associated, almost as though it is a little burst of energy which it is very easy to conceive of as a microscopic explosion of light; that is very often the spontaneous sense that one has when that happens. And it happens to be true, yes. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I’ve been having a lot of trouble lately making decisions. Well, I get confused, because there are the things that I want to do, and I have another set of ways of looking at it that I’m trying on.

My question is how to reconcile a couple of things that seem in conflict. One is my deep concern over the state of the eco system—the earth’s environment—and what I understand as damage to it, and my responsibility in that and how I make choices in my lifestyle that effect that; both the earth itself and the other beings, human and others that share the planet.

And growing out of that, a belief that at its crudest way of describing it is: “live simply so others may simply live.” And the belief that there is an order to this; that God’s order is in fact operating in this too, and that the limitations that I’m seeing may in fact not be limitations. And I want to know what the Reality of that situation is.

ANSWER: It certainly is possible to become quite complicated and complex, intellectually, so as to create unnecessary confusion. But if you are willing indeed to live simply, if you are willing to become simple, if you are willing to let go of arrogance—I’m not addressing this only to you, I am speaking generally of mankind—if you will become less arrogant, if you will allow yourselves to become humble, you will find it infinitely easier to feel at home where you are. And in the valuing of genuineness, not egotistical arrogance, but simple genuineness, you will in the most practical terms begin to be able to be absolutely appropriate relative to your planet.

So many of the destructive things that are being done on your planet, relative to the ecology, are done in the name of money. I don’t just mean in the name of making money, but I mean it in the sense that to alter what is being done that is unhealthy to the planet will cause a loss of money that can’t be justified, because money is the all-important god. To stop doing some of the things which are harming the planet would require everyone to become a little bit more responsible and not have things done for you that involve chemicals, and smoke, and other elements that are harmful to the ecology, as well as harmful to life.

Now it is not necessary for everyone to become farmers again, but it is necessary for mankind to arrive at a point of acknowledging that it is an integral part of life on the planet. Man is not the lord of the planet, he fits in—he has a place. As I indicated earlier, I am not in charge of this weekend, and I am not governing it and neither is Paul. We are fitting in. And we are allowing the Movement of divine intelligence to occur in language of present perception so that the greatest fulfillment is brought forth.

It is the same thing with mankind's relating to the planet. Man is not going to feel the unity of everything if he holds himself arrogantly apart and superior to it. And so there is a need for enough humility to pay attention to what really means something.

Now I could sit here and I could talk for hours, and sound just like your ecologists, your Green Peace, your people who are intent upon not continuing the wholesale destruction, not only of your Rain Forests around the equator, but your beautiful forests here in the Pacific Northwest. But you know what? Those things need to be expressed. But what needs to be brought out more emphatically, here and now, is the need for each of you to dare to humbly see that you fit into a Wholeness, and be willing to yield to it with honor and respect.

We have spent this weekend talking about yielding to the Father; yielding to your capital "B" Being; yielding to your Birthright; allowing; letting go of control; learning to operate at a level of genuineness and humility—all of this relevant to Awakening and your coming into your Right Mind, your natural Sanity, with a capital "S".

All of this is not just going to happen in your head, as I have also said, it is going to relate to the way you behave with others, and to the way you behave relative to your world and the way you treat yourself. And it is going to involve what will be radically altered perceptions and awareness. You are going to feel different about yourself, not think different about yourself.

Now if Awakening is a matter of yielding to that which is beyond your present concepts, and if in that yielding you come into a direct experience of unity with All That Is—meaning, let us say, God and the Brotherhood of Man—it is necessarily going to also be reflected in a willingness to yield to and fit into a larger whole called the infinite expression of God. And so it is going to mean treating your world differently. In fact it's not going to be a matter of treating your world at all, it is going to be a matter of no longer acting separately from it—treating it well or treating it poorly.

Your divinity is accessed right through the center of your humanity, not by rising above your humanity. Your divinity is going to be found at the essential core of your humanness, with all of the apparent flaws that you presently conceive your humanity to hold or embody. The reason is that, that's where the least amount of arrogance is. It is humiliating to get into your humanity, to be utterly human. But that's where the essence of your divinity is. And every attempt to rise above your humanhood has been a denial of the very place where your divineness is deposited for safe-keeping for you to access.

The more Real you allow yourself to be as a human being, and the more Real you allow yourself to be as part of the flora and fauna of this planet, the more you are free of arrogance that would somehow set you apart from it all. And there is a peace there that is the threshold of your discovery of the unity of it all; not in a limited human aspect, but in its divine Reality.

So indeed, you have money that you can spend. And that is not a sin. And it is not something to be distressed about. But if you are willing to be genuine—humane—you will know how to spend it so that it stands in support of humaneness.

Stop dividing the experience of existence into divine—with a gold star, and human, with a black star. Stop demeaning your humanness. Being human is where you find yourself to be at the moment. You are not experiencing yourself in some marvelous light-filled divine sense. And if there is anything, it is my intent to communicate to you—by virtue of our being together—that this divinity that I have been talking about and encouraging you to embrace is smack dab in the middle of your humanity. It's right smack dab in the middle of your not knowing what anything means, really—which none of you like to say that is the truth.

But you see, when one is willing to let himself into a place where he doesn't claim to know anything about anything, he puts himself at the threshold of revelation. And when one let's himself be genuinely and simply human—as I said yesterday, willing to simply be with another without defenses—that's when the magic happens, that's when, what I will call the grounded revelation of divine Reality occurs.

And so let it start with the love for your planet as well as the love for yourself. And don't gripe if you have to separate the paper from the tin, from the food—it's an act of love.

There is indeed so much that you use to live that is not needed, and it does pollute. Use what you need. And the things that you need, let them be exquisite. You cannot afford to have exquisite things, because you must have so much of everything, when you really need so little of it. You would experience a much greater sense of wealth if you surrounded yourself only with what you need. And because you don't need as much as you use, you could afford to have exquisitely beautiful things, which in the long run would, shall I say, create a greater market for individual creativity—handwork, artwork.

And individuals would find themselves experiencing more fulfillment, because they could do those things which are truly beautiful, because there would be people who could pay for it, because they haven't spent it on so much that is nonessential.

And thus, you would find yourselves visiting with each other and enjoying each other's homes. And it would be, if I may put it this way, like walking into a museum. Which at the moment is literally the only place where utterly beautiful things are present to see. And these beautiful things should be in your homes, and should contribute as an expression of your value, of your divinity.

Now it is not appropriate for all of you to get on the bandwagon and get out there to create a raising of the conscious awareness relative to respect and love for your planet and a willingness to fit into the whole. But those of you who can raise a voice—do. And the rest of you live it to the best of your ability.

One final thing. Do not feel guilty if you have been arrogant. Guilt undermines your peace and your experience of your integrity. And without your peace and integrity you will not be available and present to be an agent for change in the manner that I have described, in terms of effecting changes in behavior relative to your planet.

If you are learning to look at your fellow man or woman with a willingness to recognize that which is Real in them—in other words, their Christhood, their divinity—extend that same willingness to everything in your world: be willing to look at it with a willingness to see God's expression of fulfillment of purpose. If you do both of these things, your behavior toward your fellow man and your world will naturally change. And that will be part of the transformation.

This is, indeed, the Kingdom of Heaven, and you are indeed Christ's. And we are brothers and sisters. And it is time for all of us to claim our Birthright, consciously and together, and behave as the Sons and Daughters of God. What does that mean? Obedient children? No. Truly it means claiming no other mind than the Mind that God Is that is expressed in you as You. Where? Relative to you and your fellow man and relative to your universe. This is where the joy of life awaits you: in that experience of being who you Are, Truly.

Love yourself, love your fellow man, love your planet and learn to be willing to fit in. Learn to be so unspecial that you can really feel your oneness with your fellow man, right straight through from whatever level of ignorance and incompetence you might be feeling now, to the full revelation and experience of your absolutely competent wholeness.

It might be insulting to your ego to acknowledge that you're in the same rotten place that the guy next to you is. But I'll tell you that when you don't have to put up the front anymore, it becomes possible for you to say, "I'm in a lousy position, but you know I know I'm worthwhile." And the person next to you will say, "Boy, you know I'm in a lousy position and I know I'm worthwhile. It's the shits isn't it?" Ah, and now you are together. And you are together in an acknowledgment that things are not so hot, but that somehow it doesn't make a statement about you—either of you. And there is a beginning of awareness of oneness with a positive sense, a divine sense.

And if there is that awareness coupled with an experience of union with your fellow man, it is as though you can link your arms together, not to overcome the world, but to simply embrace what is true about you together, without any sense of superiority or inferiority. Just an experience of lovingly being together without the burden of having to put forward a false pretense, a front. It is laborious to try to be something that you are not.

All of this ties into the process of yielding that was brought up earlier today. How far do you have to yield? Well, all the way to the bottom. Everybody wants to rise to the top. But you know what? It's at the bottom where the essence of what you truly are is. Being an ego is always an attempt to be more than you are.

Now if you existed before your ego—which all of you did—then you existed as the present and full expression of God. If the ego is an attempt to be more than you are, then the ego is an attempt to be more than what God is. And literally, when you begin to let go of the ego and sink back to the bottom, you're sinking back to the top. You are sinking into that humiliating place—as far as the ego is concerned—of your utter perfection and innocence; something that is constituting you just because that's the way being is. And that is why coming Home will be a relief. And that is why you always feel better and more congruent when you give up trying to be successful, trying to be better.

Again, your divinity is accessed right through the middle of your humanity. Your divinity is accessed right at the bottom of what your ego has been trying to be. So if you let go, you'll end up at the top of the heap. And the more you can let that register with you, the more you will be able to let go of the ace up your sleeve and the less you will be inclined to approach your spiritual path as a test.

I will tell you something: It doesn't take any skill to wake up. It takes giving up to wake up. And when I say giving up, it has no connotations of failure. It means allowing yourself to be human and loving it—humane, loving to be humane, letting go of preconceptions and judgments, and being willing to see that which is Real in each and everything right where you are today—now. I will get off my soapbox.

Gathering In Menlo Park, CA –1990

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: I would like to ask if Raj has a message for me?

ANSWER: Indeed, it is very important for you—not in a sense of urgency, but because of the promise that it holds for you—it is very important for you to learn to interpret waves or unsettling movements in your life in a way that causes it to support you, rather than overwhelm you and drown you, rather than standing sometimes tentatively looking over your shoulder to see whether something is headed towards you, with fear.

You need to become like a surfer who looks over to see whether the big one is coming that you have been waiting to catch. Because in catching it, it will move you, carry you forward. If you are unprepared, or if you are resistant to the wave it can turn you topsy-turvy. But if you are willing to be sensitive to the nature of the wave, you can utilize its power so that it moves you, rather than drowns you. It is not the wave that is the problem, it is the way in which you are anticipating it.

Don't become rigid, remain flexible so that you truly can be sensitive to the dynamics of the movement. It is very important for you to more consciously embrace your life, your life experience, the dynamics of your day which constitute your life experience, in the context of there being expressions of life, which are therefore life supporting, rather than haphazard events of a world of chance, where order and harmony and intelligence are not likely to be what is being expressed, or what is coming into manifestation.

The wave is a wave, whether you choose to catch it or resist it. The wave in itself, the Movement of Life in itself, is not good or bad. It is what is. But what Is is life affirming, is a Movement of Life, not life and death, not right and wrong.

I have not answered your question in terms of specifics, but I have made my point. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm real skeptical, but I'm going to leave that behind and just ask a question.

ANSWER: You think you are not having a real experience?

QUESTION: I've never seen anyone who has channeled to do what you do. But regardless of that, the question I have it won't hurt to ask—just as specifically as you can. Why am I here? What is my purpose? Or am I ever going to feel like I have one?

ANSWER: You cannot exist without having purpose. Nothing exists that does not express intent or reason for being. The only thing is, that most people are looking for an intellectually created purpose. And I will tell you that at the present time in your experience—in everyone's experience, in mankind's experience—the call is for doing something far less impressive than you think.

Your purpose is not a purpose in the world. Your purpose, truly, is to regain your Sanity. And what I mean by that is, it is a call for each one of you to come to a point of such familiarity with who you Are, at the most essential level of your Being, that unity occurs. So that you are not cognitively, reasonably, logically arriving at a sense of purpose, but are connecting with yourself, which is a Movement of Being, so completely and so humbly and so trustingly that the already existing purpose of the Movement of You can become obvious to you.

When one is not paying attention to one's essential Self and is functioning out of the level of beliefs and mindsets and conditionings and socially accepted processes of behavior, one is not integrated, one is not experiencing his or her integrity. And so as a result, you don't know who you Are. And the whole world misses out on the gift of who you Are. You are essential to the whole.

You are essential to the whole, not your intellectually arrived at purpose, not what you do in the world, but you in your simple essence, just as you sit there, are a gift, a gift of, if you embrace it, integrated wholeness, of one who is in his right mind, who is not disconnected from himself. And as a result of not being ignorant of who you Are, able to be sensitive to and recognize who everyone else is also. You are not here to make a mark in the world. You are not to be different from the world, not to be so arrogant that you are out of touch.

The white man came into this country that the red man inhabited. And the red man didn't separate himself from his world, did not think he was better than it, did not hold himself apart from it, and as a result was able to operate in harmony with it and feel a unity with everything that the white man still doesn't feel. Because the white man feels that he is superior.

Your scientists even tell you that man is, let us say, the end product or highest point of evolution, and therefore superior to all that came before him. And everyone is believing it. And everyone is not relating to his world, because it is insulting to feel that one is nothing separate, or different from, or better than something else.

We're talking about simplicity here, your purpose, the call is for becoming simple enough, and humble enough, non-arrogant enough to be in touch with yourself and then in touch with your fellow man, and then in touch with your world.

Now the simple fact is that the result of such a simple purpose actively allowed will constitute major social changes in the world. And even more, it will constitute perceptual changes, where illusions that had been the result of selective receptivity of life that cause one not to be able to perceive what it all really is, dissolve.

In religious terms, one could say that you will begin to recognize that you are in the Kingdom of Heaven. In non-religious terms, we could say that in coming back into your right mind, into your simple sanity, you will see Reality as it is.

And Reality is not separated into different parts that stand alone in inferior or superior positions. There is still an infinite expression of life. But when no one is holding one's self apart from any other part, and there is enough humility to be congruent within, unity with it all begins to dawn in one's conscious awareness—changing, literally, one's perceptions, because there is less defensiveness, less resistance, less blocking.

Reality is not being perceived by you in its Totality at the moment, and the reason is—and I'm not singling you out here, it is true of everyone—the reason is that there is too much intellectual busyness, too many attempts to fulfill other people's expectations of you, too much honoring of pre-established rules that may or may not have arisen out of a connectedness with one's Being, to the point that there is a feeling that you don't need to sense into anything deeper or more essential than the intellectual processes you have learned and been taught to value.

It is very simple. Get to know yourself and you will find that you know your fellow man, not by virtue of what he or she presents to you, but by virtue of an undeniable experience within you of what existence or being means. Which by virtue of the experience, proves to you that the same thing is true about your fellow man, and alters your perception and causes your behavior towards him or her to change, and the same with your world.

I will tell you the whole reason that there is a subject called psychology, and the whole reason there is therapy is because everybody thinks and nobody experiences. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a lot of health questions that have been puzzling me lately. And I wanted to ask you: How can I communicate with my inner healer?

ANSWER: By simply consciously expressing a thought or an idea or a desire to the inner healer, whether you get a response in recognizable words or not, I guarantee you that your inner healer hears every single thing that is addressed to him—and him is not proper but neither is her, it is for convenience that I use the word.

Now there is a further thing you need to understand, and that is that your body has a purpose for being. It isn't just a physical organism that is the temporary host for your Individuality. It exists for the purpose of identifying the presence of your Individuality perfectly.

Therefore, whenever you express a desire to experience health, you are expressing or practicing an intellectual process that happens to be in perfect harmony with the already existing intent of your body. That congruence allows for health to begin to be able to show forth, or for healing to occur.

When you're worried or fearful about the body, when you begin to doubt that it is on your side, etc., you set up a dissonance between the intent of your body and the negatives and the emotional charges that you are bringing into play by virtue of your doubt or fear. And this dissonance disallows your experiencing healing to occur.

If you understand that it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly, and you abide with that, and you embrace your body in the fullness of the meaning of that statement, you may well find that you don't even have to call upon the healer within you. But if, indeed, you feel the need to call upon the healer within you—do it! And know that your healer will address both your body and any tendency on your part to think inconsistently with the truth about your body and promote that better alignment or congruence.

The inner healer will not just get rid of the physical symptom, but also of the inconsistent and, shall I say, the ignorant thought processes that are used by you to create an inner dissonance that becomes reflected as disease or physical distress.

You will find that one of two things will happen; either the mindset or conditioning that is at odds with the intent of your body will simply dissolve without your ever becoming aware of what it was, and you will experience healing. Or you will find that inconsistency brought to your attention at the level of your conscious awareness so that you may examine it and see its inconsistency and consciously set it aside—then experiencing healing.

Your body is on your side. And I will tell you something else, you will always have it. You will always have that which identifies your presence. You will always have a visibility and tangibility of the presence of your Individuality. If you pass on, that which seems to be left behind is everyone else's inability to follow you where you are going with your body. And they will have to dispose of their inability to follow you further than their concept allows. But you will find yourself having an uninterrupted conscious experience of body, or visibility and tangibility of your presence.

I say this so that you might begin to honor it a little bit more than you do if you just interpret it as a physical organism caused by the joining of a sperm and an egg, which you will ultimately leave, and which therefore may be more of an impediment to you than a help.

The more at peace and the more appreciative you are of your body, the more you will find it reflecting back harmony and health. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I hear your answers, and intellectually I understand them. My trouble is dropping those answers to a heart level. Can you give me some clues as to how to do that?

ANSWER: I would encourage you to meditate upon them in this way: I would encourage you to take the points that you want to bring to a heart level, and sit down, and become still. But not absolutely, totally in a meditative state, or else you will simply forget to do what I am going to tell you. Become reasonably well centered and at peace, but conscious enough to carry out an activity, a mental activity.

Once you have become still, take the point that you wish to bring to a heart level, and as it were, set it in front of you in your mind's eye as though it were a jewel, you might even imagine that it is sitting on black velvet with a light shining on it that illuminates it totally. And then just be still with it.

Now every idea that has truth to it is a living or active presence. And every idea that expresses truth has the capacity to illuminate itself to you. Everything that has meaning has the capacity of conveying its meaning to you. And so I encourage you to use an active will to bring this point into a place in front of you and then simply be present with it. Don't try to figure it out. Don't get into any reasoning process. Simply abide with it quietly and sensitively and listen. In other words, be undefended and open to its meaning beginning to register with you.

Now I have told you on purpose that it has the capacity to disclose itself to you. And I have told you that so that you may know that you are not required in this exercise to figure anything out. And I have told you that so that you will not engage in figuring anything out.

I will tell all of you that to the degree that you begin to be present with your world with a sense of it having an active presence and intent and purpose of its own that it is capable of disclosing to you, and you dare to let it in, you will begin in that experience to feel the unity of you and your world, and that there truly is not the division that you are so convinced of. And communion will begin to be an active part of your life that will render the meanings of the world and the meanings of what I am saying relevant at a heart level.

Everybody says, “Well, it’s just a piece of plastic, or it’s just a bunch of plaster, or it’s nothing but concrete or asphalt.” Well don’t be too sure. If it exists at all, it exists as an expression of meaning, meaning that is a manifestation of life. And at the bottom line, the only kind of life there is Life, with a capital “L”. I mean by that, Life that cannot be polarized, Life that embodies perfect intelligence and order and harmony.

So, when you understand something intellectually and you would like to feel its meaning, take that thing into your meditation and simply be with it, with an awareness that it has the capacity to disclose itself to you. And if you are having any degree of desire to understand and experience its meaning, that communion or communication will occur. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I have a question. When I meditate and feel very centered, my body begins to rock. And I’d like to know what that is about.

ANSWER: It is about rocking. It is about you being defenseless. It is about you being in touch. It is about you not judging. Afterwards you judge, but at the moment that the rocking begins you are simply being unconditionally there.

Now you must watch it because your ego wants to put everything into patterns—predictability, dependability—so that it can everything pegged and be in control. Do not be surprised if you meditate and no rocking happens. What is that about? It is about no rocking. And it is about you simply being. Be with whatever happens.

I will tell you something, when you move into peace as a result of meditation, it is not just the absence of anxiety, it is not just a phenomena like anxiety but different. When you become centered and you are experiencing your peace, you are having a direct experience of your Being. You are feeling You. You are feeling the nature of You, which is perfect peace. It is a direct experience of Self, not just a wonderful means of relaxing your body and lowering your blood pressure.

And if you abide in that peace and pay attention to it—just pay attention to it—you will begin to find that joy begins to be felt. It begins to be felt because you are feeling your integrity, you are not as estranged from your Self as you were. And heaven only knows what you will do when joy starts coming forth.

But I encourage you to entrust yourself to this unconditional willingness to be present, to be unguardedly present, because that is the threshold of your introduction to and new acquaintance with who you always have been.

I will tell you something else: Don't try to understand it. Learn to abide with experiences, and learn to let the experience disclose its meaning to you. Once its meaning has been experienced you will know how to think about it. But you won't arrive at knowing what to think about it by creating an understanding of it in your head.

You see, things have gotten backwards, the cart before the horse. Everyone uses thinking to arrive at understanding, instead of experiencing in order to arrive at understanding, which then allows you to think truly. You will not be able to reason yourself into ultimate clarity about life. You will only be able to reason yourself to appoint to yielding to the experience. And then by virtue of the experience you will know. And then you can think and speak about what you know. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I was wondering if you had any specific advice on the direction my life should take at this point?

ANSWER: I would not be so arrogant as to think that there was a direction that could be provided. Your life has its own direction, which it would be a good idea for you to feel for and yield to. You cannot exist and be purposeless. But arriving at purpose again does not come as a result of figuring out what the best thing you could do would be, and then figuring out how to accomplish it.

Again, the necessity is for you, as an intellect, not to be at odds with you at the essential level of your Being, any more than man should operate at the level of his intellect, and not be connected with his world.

QUESTION: But what I'm struggling with is to feeling wants in my heart and kind of wishing that it could get out into the world.

ANSWER: You are going to have to learn one thing: You aren't going to be able to twist the universe's arm to give it to you when you want it. You aren't going to be able to twist your Being's arm to disclose to you its purpose when you want it.

Now that does not mean that the universe or your Being is withholding it from you. What it means is that the act of aggression, the act of the assertion of control effectively and absolutely inhibits your discerning or feeling what direction your life is moving in. And so you are going to have to dare to take what might seem to be an irresponsible stand, and assume that you are important enough to simply abide with, without any sense of urgency, and feel into your Self.

If you cannot experience fulfillment without being connected with yourself, then why would you do anything else aside from willingly, unhurriedly, patiently, infinitely patiently abiding with yourself so that the degree of arrogance that you might otherwise use will be completely absent, and in quietness you might feel yourself. There is a saying that, “death is life’s way of saying slow down.” Well, that is an extreme, but the fact is that one does slow down.

I encourage you to slow down, to stop being impetuous and anxious and aggressively assertive on behalf of your finding your direction, simply because those dynamics block your ability to be quietly sensitive, and make that connection. You know there is no deadline. I don’t care how convinced you are that there is. To operate on the basis of deadlines causes you to lose your peace. And when you have lost your peace you cannot have the clarity needed to be in touch. And if you are not in touch, you do not have the ability to be appropriate, effective, you are not where the gift of you can be made, because you can’t even sense into it do to the conflict.

There is a saying, “infinite patience brings immediate results.” And that is what I am saying to you. Dare to have infinite patience. Dare to discard impatience and a sense of urgency and deadline as useless. And actually as detrimental to your experience of your integrity, or your clearer experience of your integrity.

If you want to feel and experience your purpose, dare to go into the void. Be absolutely goalless, absolutely unintense, purposeless. It is a paradox: When you become purposeless, your purpose has the opportunity to register with you. And you deserve whatever—I mean, you, as that which deserves to be fulfilled—deserve whatever technique you can bring into play to allow yourself into the void, to allow yourself to be purposeless.

You certainly deserve to be well fed, don’t you? You deserve to be warm, you deserve to be sheltered, you deserve to be loved? Then you deserve whatever love, whatever form of love it takes to allow you to connect with your Being. That is where your purpose is already imprinted in you. And now that I have used the word “imprinted,” and you get the point, I want you to forget the word “imprinted,” because your essential being, your essential purpose is a living, moving, changing thing. I use the word “imprinted” because it is in the void in you, it is in the quietness within you that your purpose is present to be felt, fully developed, even though it is a perpetually, unfolding, fully developed purpose.

Now every single one of you in this room can proceed with your life, trying to get hold of it, trying to manipulate it with the greatest intelligence that you can bring to bear upon your environment. And you can ultimately arrive at a point where you discover that it isn’t working. And then you can give up, and go into the void and connect with your purpose, and immediately begin to find your presence in the world having meaning. But I am suggesting that you do it now, and don't waste your time finding out what doesn't work. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I feel a little bit stuck somewhere in my journey. I would like you to give me an advice or a next step.

ANSWER: You're not stuck, you are integrating growth that has already occurred. Enjoy the respite from the learning, more will come. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I've asked my dreams to help me deal with what I feel to be a core issue involved in shame that I am looking at. And I would like to engage my inner spiritual guide to assist, look at the same issue.

ANSWER: Your desire has already been heard by your inner guide, and your inner guide is already responding. But understand something, the issue isn't shame, that's simply what is getting your attention and pointing to the issue. The issue is your purity and innocence. Do not expect an understanding of your shame to be revealed to you. It is your innocence and your purity which will be revealed and will negate, invalidate this conditioned sense of shame. It will invalidate it because it wasn't ever valid to begin with, it is constituted of a set of beliefs which you are accepting as true—which aren't—and which you are then controlling your feelings by means of.

Again, you do not want to become fixated on the shame or an understanding of it. You already understand it beautifully, and you are suffering from your understanding of it. What will be forthcoming, what will be revealed is your innocence that never went anywhere—and your purity.

Your biggest problem is what other people think. But what they think isn't what is governing you, and what they think is not what is energizing shame. It is what you think. They can think whatever they want for eternity, and for that whole time no matter how untrue, and negative, and critical, and judgmental their thought processes are; you can feel your innocence, and your purity, and your loveableness, your worthiness of love.

This sense of shame has been drilled into you. Why? So that you could be more easily controlled. You have been lied to. And not knowing that it was a lie, and because there was an element of trust in your teachers you took it to be true. You are playing into a game of manipulation when you are energizing the shame in you. You engage in an unreal drama.

But I will tell you something, there is not one molecule, there is not one atom, there is not one aspect of the energy of all of you that is shameful. Instead of telling you a ghost story, somebody told you a shame story, and you are scared to death. But there are no ghosts, and there is no justification for shame. And I will tell you something else, you are effectively surrounded by people who love you, by people who see you and accept you. And you know it.

But I will tell you something else, you are not valuing it. You are preferring to value homing in on those who do not love you because of your shame. And I will tell you that the suffering that you experience is because of that simple but ignorant choice. You are more intelligent than that. And there is no benefit in store for you by beating yourself down, by giving your power away to those who ignorantly judge you. And not experiencing the power of joining with those who love you, feeling the integration of the you that has always had integrity.

There is no benefit from engaging in inner conflict that undermines your capacity to feel your integrity. Again, remember that the issue is your innocence and purity. Do not become focused on the wrong thing by calling it the issue. Shame is not the issue. It is the obscured innocence and purity of you that is the issue. Its coming forth and being embraced by you is the issue.

In the context of the love and the support that you live in, I encourage you to become open to the revealing, the uncovering of that innocence and purity. And then I encourage you to be irresponsible enough to embrace it. And experience your peace and your integrity, without having to become what someone else thinks you ought to be. And just be out of that peace and the joy that will emerge, and let the chips fall where they may. Enough said.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask Raj about the energy which is coming all over, which is increasing in frequency and affecting the DNA in a beautiful to everything and everything on this planet.

ANSWER: First of all, there is only one amount of energy, it is infinite, it is every present, it is omnipresent. What appears to you and to others to be an increase of energy is another way of expressing the increased experience of it by virtue of the decrease of defensiveness that mankind is experiencing and allowing. As any of you becomes more unconditional, more defenseless, more is able to reach you and register with you. And it will always feel as though it is an increase, whether it is an increase of energy, whether it is an increase of love, whether it is an increase in the sense of the size of you.

Now indeed, your scientist are going to find that the DNA molecules will be undergoing changes. But it is for the reason that I mentioned earlier: It is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. Your Individuality is not the same as your personality or ego. Your Individuality is the essential, pure, awareness that embraces all of conscious experience, including the conscious experience of form.

All form, that you call your universe is the visibility and the tangibility of the infinite Mind, which some of you call God—the Movement of Creation, which is a Movement of Intelligence or Mind.

Now as there is a greater sense of, I'm going to say personal security, it becomes possible to begin to release one's personality, and begin to allow for an expanded experience of one's self as the Individuality that one Is. And as that influx or increase of self awareness as Individuality—not as personality—grows, there begins to be the evidence of regeneration or greater harmony, physically speaking, as your body begins to reflect back to you the presence of your Individuality more perfectly.

You see, this process of change is representative of the increasing actuality of unity, the unity of conscious Individuality. And for awhile your scientist are likely to look for a physical cause for the restructuring in the DNA, and they will observe it as a physical phenomena. But the fact is, that it will simply represent the fact that your body is identifying the presence of your clarified experience of conscious Individuality more and more perfectly, because you are not employing personality or ego to the extent that dissociation can be manifested, and so unification, or the uncovering of fundamental unity occurs.

Indeed, it is a wonderful energy, as you put it. But you know what the energy is? It is the energy of love. Now I will ask you, how can there be an increasing flow of energy, called love, if there are not individuals being willing to embody it? This should be very pleasing to all of you—I am not going to say exciting—it should be joyous news. Because the fact that the energy is increasing is not because entities beyond your realm are showering you with it, it is occurring because more and more individuals right where you are, incarnated individuals, are being willing to embody love—to be the presence of love. And I encourage all of you to contemplate that, whether I'm real or not.

And ask yourself whether you dare to be the embodiment of love, whether you dare to be the embodiment of joy, whether you dare to be the embodiment of truth, whether you dare to be the embodiment of wisdom.

You live in wonderful times. Because mankind as a whole has arrived at a point of, what I will call, spiritual maturity that is allowing for greater level of trust to be employed. And it may not be hitting the newspapers, but it is occurring and it is being felt and it is supporting further investments of trust. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

Gathering In Pacific Palisades, CA –1990

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

OPENING: Good morning. As we begin this weekend, I do not want any of you to become too serious. I do not want any of you to approach the weekend and whatever you imagine might happen, with a sense that you must be studious. That you must be absent of humor, absent of joy. Because, after all, if anything meaningful is going to happen here this weekend, it must, of necessity, be happifying.

Now, I want you to imagine three people coming to the city of Los Angeles for the first time. One is a landscape architect. And one is a young single man. And we're going to say, that one is Paul.

And the young man who is single, will drive through the city and he will notice all the pretty girls, especially if he desires not to be alone. He will notice all the girls and his attention will be caught by the pretty ones. And he will be relatively free of any sense of over crowdedness of the streets. His attention will appreciate the fact, that there is an abundance of pretty young things, if you will.

Now, the young landscape architect, is a young man, who is very much enthralled with his work. It is new to him. And his greater desire in coming to this city for the first time, is not only to notice how other landscape architects have planted and what kinds of plants they have used, but also an awareness of the buildings. How mirrored surfaces have been used to amplify the sense of space, when actually the buildings confine the space. His attention will be attracted to architecture and landscaping, that relates to how people are able to function comfortably, in a setting, where there is intense congregation of human beings. And where claustrophobia and tightness, et cetera, can be distracting to their wanting to be in a city.

And then you have Paul, who has come from an environment which is very quiet, very unbusy and gentle, where there is only the stimulation of, shall I say, exceptional beauty. And he sees hustle and bustle, what to him looks like frenetic, chaotic activity. And a tremendous abundance of goods and great input, that promotes the buying of goods, et cetera. And, in fact, when he emerged from his hotel room this morning and looked out at the freeway, he felt intensity and tension and a sense of rushing, that he took negatively. I happen to be with him at the moment and triggered in his awareness, the fact that, many of these people were expressing an act of joy in getting away for the weekend. And immediately his perception of what he was seeing, changed.

Now, the reason I am bringing this out, is that every single one of you approaches your day and, indeed, is approaching this weekend with certain preconceptions, certain mindsets, that cause you to engage in, what I will call selective seeing. And I encourage you to let go of that. To allow yourself to be, what I will call, full open consciousness. Let go of your preconceptions, because they cause you to single out, from all that is going on, only those things which either match your expectations or fit your sense of what is right. And to the degree that you are indulging in selective seeing, you are denying everything else that you have not selected. This is particularly important, because in the process of waking up, in the process of becoming fully illumined, this selective seeing, must be released or you will not be able to experience the unity of All That Is, of everything that you are experiencing.

And literally, to the degree that you are denying some of what you are seeing; because as with Paul, it is being conceptualized negatively, you are in fact, denying God. You are denying the infinite manifestation of the First Cause or Life Principle. Now, this is more important than you might think, because you each are the direct expression of this First Principle. You might say, that you are this First Cause, this Life Principle in action, embodied. And, therefore, if you are in a state of denying some aspect of what you are experiencing and you are, therefore, denying some aspect of what God is Being, you are also denying some aspect of yourself. And you are denying yourself the joy, that it is your birthright to be experiencing, when you do open your eyes up and look and see your world.

Paul walked back into his motel room, with not a sense of noise and intensity and unpleasant activity, but rather with a sense, that all of this energy that he had been thus defining, was an energy, for the most part, of joy that was being expressed and anticipation on the part of those who were driving on the freeway. And so, he felt better about being where he was.

To the degree that you are not enjoying being where you are, you are engaged in selective seeing. And as we move through this weekend, it will be my intent, to help diminish that selective seeing. So, that more of the infinitude of your Essential Being, can be embraced in its Reality, rather than being biased by your preconceptions or your selections, of what you are going to validate and notice. I look forward to this time with all of you.

ANSWER: We forget to be happy. And when we squelch the joy that is in us and we become deadly serious about living, we squelch our capacity to be grateful. We squelch our capacity to be unconditional with ourselves and we depress ourselves. Go ahead.

QUESTION: I experience a lot of joy, and what feels like, almost, freedom. And then they're times like now, when I have a painful headache. And I don't feel what is my natural feeling of joy.

ANSWER: No, there are times when you let go of the joy, and have a headache. You do not have the headache and lose your joy. Continue.

QUESTION: One thing I've learned is, that I don't want to focus on the headache. What I want to focus on is, whatever is an impediment or a concept, that I am holding on to, that would free me to do what you just said, to not let go of the joy. And so I'd like some help with that. A lot of help. Any help.

And also, what's been in my mind, is my desire to live without pain and without fear. And if that is in some way an impediment and ties me to the pain and the fear. But right now my desire, I would say, is to be in joy without any sense of drag or heaviness.

ANSWER: Then you must let go of all sense of obligation, to fulfill someone else's expectation of you. And you must also be willing to let go of feeling, that if you are not fulfilling someone else's expectation of you, that you are, indeed, guilty of something.

Now, in order for any of you to experience pain or fear, you must somewhere along the line have become convinced, that you are a person. I mean by that, a finite limited ego. If you will observe, you will find that, whenever you are feeling guilty, you have been confronted by someone, who has attempted to promote the concept, that you are not the very presence of God embodied. But, indeed, you are this puny little mortal, this puny little organism, called a human being, that is absolutely and even inevitably capable of making mistakes, that are judgeable.

Now, in the process of waking up, there is a shift that occurs. It is a shift from identification with the body, to identification as Mind. As that conscious awareness, in which the experience of all form is occurring. That is a shift from identifying with, what I will call, the specific identification of you, to the universal presence of You. Whenever any of you are feeling guilty, it is because, either your own inner conditioning or the words of others, have caused you to bring your focus of attention back to this apparently finite, puny little form, called your body, and the ego that supposedly inhabits it. And in your tinniness that you are experiencing, you cannot help but feel vulnerable and, therefore, fearful.

Now, very often mothers are able to convince their offspring, that they are little, that they know not enough, and that their behavior ought to conform to the mothers concept of what is right. But if the mother is not identifying herself with conscious awareness, but with her own tiny sense of self as body, then her concepts do not embrace your fulfillment, or hers.

Fathers do this too, but it is your mother who bugs you, that manages to trip the switch, that brings into play, your sense of tiny ineffective presence. Now, your freedom lies in your absolute disregard for her point of view, and your willingness to embrace yourself as the offspring of the Father/Mother God, the Life Principle, the Infinite Intelligence, that is absolutely flawless and, therefore, You are absolutely flawless.

Because, you cannot stop being what the Father is expressing and embodying, you cannot possibly be guilty. Again, the only way any of you can become convinced of being guilty of anything, is if you can become convinced that you are the body, that you appear to be. That you are nothing more than an organism, which has evolved and developed a capacity to think. And that the thinking is, therefore, the ultimate expression of limitation. In other words, of physical form, rather than the ultimate expression of an infinite Divine presence, called the Life Principle, the First Cause, Father/Mother God.

You need to switch parents, here. Because, you are the embodiment of what God is Being, you are not the embodiment of what your, so called, earth mother or father, even though they would both love for you to be the embodiment of them and all of their values. But you are not here to embody their beliefs. You are not even here to embody their understandings. You are here to be the unfettered, unconditional expression of God. And in that unfettered, unconditional expression of God, you will experience your integrity and your validity, and your worth. And the gift of who You are, will be made in the world and everyone will be blessed.

Now, not only is your human parent and her concepts, not worthy of being governed by, they are not worthy of being, uptight about. Let her be herself. Because, as I have said before, she is on the threshold of her own learning, just as you are. And so, let her be in her tight space, but understand that that poses no requirement upon you, to be in a tight place yourself. And so, let go of the reaction. This is your weekend. This is your day. This is your moment, to Be and to Be fully, and to enjoy. And if someone else whom you love is fretful, let her be fretful, until she's sick and tired to being fretful and decides she wants to utilize her capacity to be conscious, in another way. And not see her world, with that particular mindset, that keeps her uptight.

You are not here, to embody her ignorance or express it. And likewise, you are not here, to embody or express her intelligence. You are the embodiment of intelligence yourself, regardless of her. And you are the embodiment of joy, in this moment, regardless of her. If you will simply say, “Yes, okay.” Which I can see you are doing, and will do.

You are absolutely free in this very moment, to be happy and to be comfortable. Every single one of you are. Because, at the bottom line, you are not a puny little organism that has achieved a capacity to think, but who forever remains limited in your capacity to think. Because that capacity has arisen out of matter, out of that which is limited and polarized. That which you are the expression of, is an indivisible and, therefore, unpolarized Life Principle, Mind, with a capital “M.”

And you no longer have to play into a role of puny little mortal, trying to lift himself or herself by your boot straps, and somehow become more, than you were destined to be, by virtue of your starting point of clay. You never started out as clay. And you never have been, truly little egos. You have always been the Divine presence, of the infinite Movement of Mind, called Creation, that is the action or activity of the First Cause, God.

Your mother may attempt to have strings on you, and move you about like a puppet expressing her will. But I will tell you something: You have scissors in your pocket. Use them.

QUESTION: I’d like to follow up one part of that. I seem to not notice, this last visit with my mother, that I was slipping out of my joy, until I noticed that I had a headache.

ANSWER: Indeed, your body is useful in that way.

QUESTION: It seems once the experience of an ego attack, called headache starts, I don’t know how to get the scissors out and cut the strings. I’m conscious. I’m aware. I meditate. I talk to my guide. I let go, as best I can. But, if there’s anything significant you could say, and not necessarily just about my mother, because I do have headaches from other circumstances. Anyway, I could use some real practical advise, regarding what I might do to help myself once there’s a physical reaction in process.

ANSWER: You must understand, that your body is not self-acting. The belief is, that once by virtue of your reacting to your mother, your body begins to be painful. That somehow, something physical has been set into motion and that there cannot, therefore, be an immediate evaporation of that physical symptom, because it is going to take awhile for matter to reconfigure or settle down. There are nerves involved, there are muscles involved, relaxation must occur, et cetera, and physically speaking, this must take time. This is absolutely false.

Again, it is the intent of your body, and I’m speaking in Divine terms here. It is the intent of your body, to identify the presence of your Individuality. Not your ego, but your Individuality, with a capital “I,” perfectly. That is it’s function.

It is here to render visible and tangible, the presence of God, called Individuality, right where you are. Therefore, it is absolutely capable and more than willing to spontaneously behave in a manner that identifies your perfection.

So, you must let go of the belief that you have acquired, that once something physical has been started, it can only subside according to, what we will call physical laws, or laws of physics, or laws of the function of an organism. Your body is quite fluid and quite capable of spontaneously reconfiguring, if you will, whether we are talking about a disease or simple muscle tension. Understand that your body is on your side. It is there to identify your presence perfectly, not imperfectly. And because it is, at the bottom line, absolutely Divine, it is not governed by physical laws.

So, let go of the idea, that it must now take time and physical processes, for the pain to subside. Simply forgive yourself. Which means, withdraw judgment against yourself. Embrace your innocence. And also, embrace your mother's innocence. Don't forgive yourself, but neglect to forgive her. Don't neglect to withdraw self-judgment and neglect to withdraw other judgment, judgment on someone out there. And then fully expect to see your body immediately, if not instantaneously, reconfigure and re-identify your perfect comfort.

You see, this is not unlike other circumstances, where somebody says, "well the physical condition that I'm having to deal with took a long time to come on, and, therefore, it's not reasonable for me to expect it to disappear instantaneously." And that is a bunch of poppycock. It isn't True. You can expect to see your body reconfigure and identify your health instantaneously. Because at the bottom line, it's not the stodgy, physical organism that you interpret it to be. It is a Divine function, acting. And that function is, the identification of the presence of your Individuality. That is what it truly is.

In fact, your approach to your body, as though it is a physical organism, that is somehow different than your Spirit. That concept, causes you to resist seeing reconfiguration and healing. At least, resisting the instantaneous manifestation of it. And that sense of body, as being a physical, material organism, constitutes a false sense of body. And if it is believed, you are believing in an illusion. Because, you are believing your concept. Which blocks you from watching the natural, spontaneous, reconfiguration, called healing; when you are not resisting seeing it, because of your conviction that it can only reconfigure very slowly, if at all.

QUESTION: I wonder if you could give me some guidance on my job situation at the university?

ANSWER: For the sake of everyone here, share the nature of the "dilemma." Briefly.

QUESTION: My job may be in danger, either due to budget cuts, or problems with an evaluation. And I'm wondering how to handle this situation, or what my responsibilities are?

ANSWER: The challenge, of course, is to your sense of your integrity. What you really need to know is that your integrity, does not come from your job. Your integrity is inseparable from you. Therefore, as events unfold here, it is essential for you to engage with them from your undeniable, already existing integrity.

If, in fact, you end up leaving, you must leave and move forward, I'm going to say, riding on the back of your integrity. However, the likelihood is, that you will not be effected by, either, as you put it, the evaluation or the budget cuts.

The point to understand here, is that you have, as does everyone else, an uninterrupted, unbroken, unalterable integrity. And the necessity is to act on the basis of that integrity, no matter what the external events are. And if you act relative to those events out from your integrity, you will bring forth integrity, in those external events. If, however, you begin to feel as though changes in the work situation, reflect a change in your integrity, and, therefore, a potential lose of integrity, you will begin to act out of fear. And you will set your integrity on the back shelf, as it were. Because you cannot get rid of it, and it cannot really go anywhere. And then your behavior will tend to bring forth, a lack of integrity. It will begin to reflect your fear. Your integrity, is absolutely yours. It isn't derived from anything. It isn't gotten from anything. It is inherent in you. Because, can you imagine a God without integrity? Is an absence of integrity a capacity that God has? Absolutely not! Because of the indivisibility of God and, therefore, the absence of polarization or conflict, there is absolute integrity and that is reflected or embodied in your presence, as You.

I encourage you to get up each day, regardless of rumors, regardless of hearsay, and approach every aspect of your day, with an active expression of your integrity. Honor yourself, and honor yourself right through whatever dynamics occur. Because no matter what happens out there, your intelligence remains intact. Your skills remain in tact. Your ability to reason clearly remains intact, unless you become fearful. But your ability remains intact. And no matter what happens externally, you will still be the same qualified presence of intelligence and dignity, that you are right now, when everything seems to be identifying it. Your integrity is, what I will call, an eternal constant. It is inseparable from you. And you can move through troubled waters with it. And you can move through smooth waters with it.

Now, I encourage you to relax. Take one day at a time. And in each moment, honor yourself and act out from your integrity. And begin to embrace the fact that changes in circumstances, cannot affect your integrity. The tendency is, to gather ones sense of integrity, from how things are going in ones life. But, that then makes you the puppet of circumstances, which is always uncomfortable. It is always impractical.

Your integrity would be present, if there were an atomic war today. And everything around you that had identified normalcy and dignity, et cetera, were whipped out, but you were left, your integrity would be one hundred percent present. And if you did not sacrifice it by ignoring it, because of circumstances, that fundamental integrity, that is you, and is not a possession of yours, would find expression in your subsequent actions. And integrity would once again begin to be embodied in your world. Now you are not faced with a holocaust. Don't let go of your integrity, just because there may be reconfiguration, in your environment.

This will make things smoother and more joyful between now and the time that a reconfiguration occurs. And it will allow you to move through it, shall I say, unscathed. If others around you, are running around like a chicken with their heads cut off, because they are reacting to their fear and their sense of potential lose of integrity, it does not mean that you have to join them. And you may appear to be the idiot, because you are too happy, considering the circumstances. But you will not be contributing to the sense of conflict and the fear. And there may even be those who will say, "how is it that you are managing to remain calm?" And you can share it in your own words and it may inspire them to withdraw from the hen party, if you will.

There is absolutely nothing occurring here, no matter what form the reconfiguration takes, that calls for you to fear a lose of integrity.

QUESTION: I've been helping my fourteen year old grandson, every day with his homework. And I'm doing this, because I have a strong feeling that this is what I'm suppose to be doing. It also gives me a great deal of joy. And Johnny, his name is. He's a child that is not highly motivated, at this time. And he doesn't take responsibility for his homework. He's intelligent enough. But unless someone's with him and working with him, he wouldn't do it at all. But, I also have the feeling, that this is a great learning experience for me, in participating with him.

But, I don't have a great deal of clarity, at this time, about who Johnny is. And what will work, in bringing about this motivation and this willingness for him to take responsibility for himself. So, my question is, what will work for Johnny, based on who he is, and who I am, as someone that's working and being with him daily?

ANSWER: You are asking for a picture, a sense, a pegging of who he is, if you will, and of who you are. And, indeed, this is a way of arriving at a point, where you don't have to pay attention. Where you don't have to be, on the spot. Where you don't have to be, present attentively, in the moment, that you are experiencing.

Now, the simple fact is, that you are being appropriate with him. You are identifying fulfillment for him, his fulfillment. There is absolute order here. And instead of looking for a label, if you will, or a static definition, of who you are, or of who he is, I encourage you to be in the flow, as you are being. Because you truly are allowing yourself to be with him, whoever it is that he might be. And whoever it is that you are. You are being present with him unconditionally.

I will tell you, that if you can peg who he is, and you can peg who you are, you will stop being unconditional. You will stop being open and sensitive into the moment, as to what is appropriate in the moment. And you will begin to treat him, as this definition. And that would be sad.

You don't have to have him pegged, in order to be with him. Don't worry, he will grow up. Inner maturity will develop, just as surly as he is physically developing, getting taller, becoming more mature. He can not stop that from happening. And there is nothing that can stop, this inner maturity from happening, that will result in his, actively taking hold, if you will, and being self-motivated.

You are nurturing him, while this motivation is developing. But, that motivation is developing, outside of your grasp and even outside of his. Trust that it is there, because it is. And don't try to peg, who he is. Just be willing to be fluidly, in the moment with him, present with him.

You see, if you arrive at a point of having a definition of who he is, then you will begin to hold him to that definition. But, he is a flexible, fluid Movement of Being, just as you are. And he is not going to remain always in conformity to that definition. And if you are sure you know who he is, you will constantly be attempting to hold him to something, that he will always be out-growing. Just learn to be with him, as you are already doing. And stop looking for something definite.

Understand, that the word definite means, that which is not moving, and is, therefore, specifically definable. Life is moving. Being is a movement. Conscious identity is the movement of Being. Would you like me to have a definition of you? If I did, I would lose touch with you, because you are growing. You are a movement. Would you like me to take you at this very instant, and describe you as you are at this instant, and then say that is you, don't change? No, it would stifle you. It would kill you.

Let him be the ever moving presence of conscious awareness. And trust that he is essentially Divine, just as you are. And that he cannot escape what he Divinely is. And that in his own time, and in his perfect way, this motivation will arise. Trust the movement that is happening and be willing to be part of it.

QUESTION: I know that I have questions, but I'm having difficulty coming up with a specific question. I'm actually interested in why I'm having that difficulty. You know, why don't I have a more specific question? The one that seems to be pressing on my mind is, how to be... Well what I do is teach yoga. And what I would like to do is, like be a clearer channel for teaching, what yoga is actually about. So, how to be a clearer channel?

ANSWER: Literally, the need is, to allow yourself to be more centered. To be less conceptual and more sensitive, deeply sensitive in the quietness or the void within you.

Indeed, the practice of yoga, emerged out of centeredness. The sensitive, flowing with the capacity to be absolutely appropriate. Appropriateness is expressed in many forms: Art, the activities of life in general and including the postures of yoga. Then, as time past, and there were students of yoga, the postures or forms became more important than the centered, sensitive, quiet abiding in the void, that allowed for the positions to come forth. The positions were a manifestation of centeredness, of connection, at the level of ones Being. Now, the postures are used to get into that place.

I encourage you to let yourself be, I will say, more intuitive. This is the way, in which you will become a more effective teacher. And it is the way, in which you will begin to evoke in your students, a similar preference for centeredness. For abiding in the void, where the Movement of Being can be felt and then come forth into expression, as what have come to be called postures.

Now, you are already well equipped for this. And to some degree, you are already doing it. The simple fact is, that I cannot tell you what will come forth. I can only tell you where to place your attention. Because, what will come forth, will always be fresh, shall I say, original. And it will always connect those whom you are teaching, more significantly with their essential Being. And what will do that on one particular day, will not necessarily do that on another day.

You are not particularly blocked from the experience, that I am directing your attention to. I am simply substantiating for you, that that is where to give your attention.

QUESTION: With regards to your first two answers, physical reactions to relationships, be they parental relationships, whatever. You made a couple of analogies to: Puppet strings, cutting the strings, reacting to a parent, or to a love relationship, as though, they were a switch.

I have two questions about this. One is, your answers seem to be, that it is our idea of ourselves that creates that physical reaction, rather than that physical reaction being inherently physical.

I'm curious about that. Because, speaking for me, I often react to things, in what seems to be a physiological way. In other words, one statement will create a certain consistent response, or one idea or attitude will create a certain response. I'm wondering, if there is any physical basis to this at all, any neurological basis? And if not, then how does the healing team work, and why does the healing team work? In other words, why do they need to come back over a period of time? Why can't they just do a one time switch?

ANSWER: Indeed, healing can occur in one healing session, if the inner shift is allowed for by the one who is in need of the healing. I will tell you, that at the bottom line, nothing ever has a physical origin. The physical dysfunction, is always a manifestation of a mental resistance, of one form or another, a mental denial. And at the bottom line, any denial that one engages in, has to be at some point, self-denial. Because after all, you are confronted with the infinitude of your Being, which is the infinite manifestation of God. And you are the embodiment of God. Then your experience, is God's experience of what He/She Infinitely Is. That's the fact, at the bottom line.

Now, when you engage in any form of self-denial, it is as though, you decrease the illumination of your Being, the glow of it, if you will. You might say, you get dark spots. And since, those dark spots do not reflect you truly, there is a dissonance that is felt. You say, that you experience physical dysfunction of one form or another. But the fact is, that the source of the condition is mental.

Now, when a healing session is occurring, what is happening, is that the healing team or those individualities who are responding to your desire for healing, are addressing the mental concepts, the conditionings, the denials, that have been brought into play. That are manifesting in this form or that form. They are not just addressing the physical condition. Because, it is obvious to them, that what you call a physical body, is entirely mental. And that the blocking, the denial, the fear, the hate or whatever it might be, is also mental. And so, there is no body/mind confusion, that they are suffering from.

If you or anyone else is desirous of healing, but unwilling to give total permission for it, then the healing may not be experienced instantaneously. But, if there is complete willingness, then, indeed, the healing will be experienced instantaneously. What you would call miraculously.

I will share with you, that there was a gentleman who called for a healing session, for recovery from an injury to his back. There were three healing sessions. After which he questioned, why he wasn't healed. And I simply shared with him, because he wasn't willing yet to give up his workman's compensation benefits. As long as he was experiencing the discomfort, he would get it. But the moment the discomfort or the moment the healing occurred, he would cease to get it. And that required other major changes in his attitude towards his life. And he was not willing to give permission for that. When I brought this to his attention, he said, "you're absolutely right. At this point, I cannot afford to be healed. And I would like to discontinue the healing sessions." He did not want to be free of it, even though at the surface, he wanted to be free of the pain.

Now, the healing team cannot override your free will. None of us, who are awake, can force you to embrace your Good. We can encourage you to, but we cannot force you. Every healing that any of you have had, has been because there was an element of permission given.

For those who are very young, there is a natural expectation of healing. One cuts himself and he expects the cut to heal. One experiences a childhood disease and expects to get well. That expectation, is a form of permission given. And then as it happens, as one "gets older," one begins to say, "there is less and less reason for me to expect healing. Or, there is less reason for me to experience, a rapid healing. My educated peers tell me, that as the body gets older, it begins to lose its capacity to regenerate itself. And I choose to believe this nonsense. And so, I begin to withhold permission or expectation of a rapid, regenerative healing." And as that permission is withdrawn and willfulness in that form of inner conviction as to what the truth is, is brought into play; less and less spontaneous, quick, regenerative healing is experienced. But, it is simply because the permission, begins to be withheld.

Now, waking up, and experiencing ones full illumination, one experiencing himself or herself in his or her right Mind, with a capital "M," is a healing. It is the result of, giving yourself permission to access your greater capacity to be aware, Divinely speaking. I don't mean religiously speaking, but I mean, speaking in terms of perceiving the essential Truth or Reality, of a thing. And the reason everyone doesn't wake up instantaneously, is because, everyone has preconceptions. And some of them are: "I am not worthy. I don't have what it takes. My soul needs to be tried a little bit more, in the refiners fire. I don't deserve it, et cetera." Or, "I am so far off track, that it is going to take ages for me to get back on track."

But, I am going to tell you something and I have said this before and I don't mind being repetitive. Every single one of you, at this moment, is sitting smack dab in the middle of Reality. Smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, with your eyes all squinched up, saying, "I cannot see the perfection." Well, it's not that it isn't there. It is that permission to open your eyes, has not been given. And literally, all that distances you from the experience of Reality, is that willingness to open your eyes up. The giving of permission. There isn't more to be learned, except, if I may put it this way, how to stop arguing against it. And thus denying yourself the experience.

So, indeed, physical manifestations of disease, are manifestations of a form of mental denial. Which must, therefore, be a denial of some aspect of the infinitude of your Being, and it never is actually physical. If you are existing in a state of reaction to family, or if you are existing in a state of reaction to your environment, it is simply because, you have not yet given permission for yourself to exist without reacting. It isn't that her mother really is a bitch, anymore than the trees or animals in your experience, are truly affective, affective negatively speaking.

It simply is, that neither one of you, has yet arrived at a point of allowing them to be what they are. Realizing, that there is absolutely no call for you to be resistant to them. And thus, you haven't let yourself off the hook. But the potential is there. And the moment you just make this little inner shift, of saying, "wow, I don't have to react. There truly is nothing physically, factually, present that is affective. It is just my little quirky mind, that is not yet giving permission, that seems to cause the headache or the physical reactions to your environment. And I'm not going to do it anymore. I don't have to. There's no Divine requirement for me to be in pain, or in a state of physical reaction and suffering. I'm just playing out a conditioned process, purely mental. And my body is identifying the fact, that I am being inconsistent with what is True."

QUESTION: I have a follow up question to that. There's an element in your answer, that because of my own conditioning, makes me feel a certain sense of blame. That I'm not capable of healing myself, because I can't get this concept—that kind of a thought. I know other people have run into this sense of blame, when they're faced with an illness, that they have not yet been able to heal, combined with a belief system that's been told to them, that says that, in fact, it's within their power to heal. And I wonder how that concept works in regards, to adults with serious illnesses; such as, cancer, aids, things like that. And also, small children with serious illnesses like that. Where, as you said, a child looks at a cut and sees that it will heal. And yet, there are children that get serious illnesses and die, from things like leukemia.

ANSWER: You must understand, that you are in a situation very similar to, shall I say, a resident of a mental institution. All of you, I'm not singling you out. And you are functioning, in a less than full embodiment of your mental capacities.

As a result of the engagement of your full capacities, everything that you do, will seem to express less than the full capacity.

In other words, if you are experiencing a significant degree of ignorance, it will seem that everything you do, even in the process of gaining back your full capacity, will occur in an ignorant way. It is, as though, the cards are stacked against you. Because, you are attempting to become sane again, using capacities that are characteristic of insanity. Thus, your steps are not solid. They do not usually express one hundred percent intelligence or sanity. And experientially speaking, it is as though, you are up against an impossible task. How can one who is insane, using whatever capacities are present, access that which apparently exists outside of insanity, something called sanity. And yet, the fact is, that in your current ignorance, whatever degree of spiritual ignorance you might be experiencing, there is present in you, all of your Divine capacities. And as a result, there is in you all, a desire to access them more completely, even though your steps are likely to be awkward, because of your current incapacity.

I will use a kinder illustration. If you have injured your legs, and you need to go through therapy, you will attempt to do something that you cannot do easily. You will attempt to walk. You will practice walking. You will attempt to do something, that you cannot do well yet. And, by virtue of attempting to do it without skill, you will acquire skill. An even kinder example is, that you want to learn how to play the piano. And you sit down, and you have heard others play the piano well. And you sound clumsy, and you are clumsy. And you do not have facility, with your fingers or the keys on the piano. And you must use your hands awkwardly, in order to discover your ability to handle your fingers and the keyboard, with dexterity and skill and a clear expression of the beauty of the music. But, you acquire the skill, through the use of lack of skill.

Now, the fact that you sit down to the piano and you touch it, and you try to do the simple exercise or the simple piece that your teacher has given you. The fact, that when you sit down to do that, it does not sound beautiful, is that justification for self-criticism or blame? After all, until you sat down to the piano, you weren't confronted brazenly or boldly with your inability. You sit down, and all of a sudden, it's obvious to you and everyone else around, that you lack skill. You could ask your self, why? What's wrong with you? What did you do, that doesn't allow you to sit down and simply play like an accomplished pianist? But you don't get hung-up on that. You stay with your desire to play. And you know that your awkward practicing, will result in greater and greater facility and skill and ability to express the music, as it is suppose to be expressed.

Likewise, when you are confronted with a physical dysfunction, indeed, you may have been responsible for it. But through your persistence to experience the healing and to not become preoccupied, with what was wrong with you, that got you into the mess, you will get out of the mess. It is a tricky situation. Because, until you realize that it isn't anything else outside of you that is responsible for the way you are experiencing your life, you cannot discover your capacity for changing what you are doing. You will not realize that you have the power. You will feel, that the condition does or that the environment does or the virus does, et cetera. And then you are powerless, to experience change of any sort.

Now, everyone must dare to access their greater capacity to be aware, even though at the moment, you all seem to be experiencing an inability or lack of capacity. And all of you must dare to embrace, your birthright of perfect health. And your ability to experience it, in spite of the current definite limitation. Because, that is what will begin to get you past the limits. That is what will bring you back into your sanity, your experience of your right Mind.

Understand, that the landscape architect, seeing only the things he's selected to see, is not experiencing himself in his right Mind, which would embrace the totality, without resistance to any part of it. Being able to fully be aware of the aspects of what he is looking at, of landscape architecture, but not singling it out.

To whatever degree, you are not embracing the Whole and experiencing its unity, you are using selective seeing. Which is a nicer way of saying, a form of insanity. Your freedom to experience healing, from what are believed to be terminal illnesses, must be embraced. You must put it into practice. You seem not to have justification for it, because "those in authority, those in the know" have said, there is no cure. You must, indeed, be willing to challenge that authoritative expression of current ignorance. And I am not saying that, as a judgment. I am simply pointing out, that even humanly speaking, ten years from now, they will not say the same thing. Because, they will have given themselves permission, to discover the cure. And so, they are authoritatively expressing the current limits of their awareness.

No one is a victim of a virus. No one is a victim of a disease. Everyone is a victim, of their unwillingness to take a radical stand in consciousness and claim their birthright, to experience their health and their Wholeness because, they are not a physical organism, but the direct expression of a Life Principle, that is absolutely indivisible. And, therefore, all that is needed, is the willingness to give permission to see healing, a miracle, a radical and instantaneous manifestation, of the integrity of mind and body. Because, it is the intent of the body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly.

This integrity is so complete, that we can put it this way: If you are the direct expression of God, and it is the intent of your body to identify your presence perfectly, it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of God perfectly.

There is the unity. And what is needed is the daring, if you will, to give permission to yourself, to experience that fact.

And giving permission involves, letting go of your confidence in even your most skilled persons of authority, called physicians and scientists. Your physicians and your scientists are exploring the leading edge of, what they call the mind/body connection. But they are not telling you that they are exploring it. And they are not telling you of their hopes, aspirations and confidences. They just come across, with what saves their derrière, in a legal sense. Because, if they tell you that you have reason, unreasonable, reason for hope and you embrace it, but don't embrace it completely enough, and you seem to suffer from it, you will sue them. And so, they will not step out on a limb.

And I am telling you, dare to stand out on a limb. Because, you cannot sue me. And so, you will take the step, without laying responsibility for it upon me. And that willingness to take the step yourself, constitutes that investment of trust or faith, if you will, that is necessary to bring into focus experientially, your health, that supposedly wasn't available to you.

From a vantage point of insanity, it seems impossible to embrace, whatever the meaning of insanity might be. And yet everyone is doing just that. And everyone is succeeding slowly. I am giving you encouragement to do it, with even more vigor and more expectation. So, that you might see your fulfillment come into view, your sanity come into view more rapidly.

QUESTION: We've done a lot of talking today, or you have Raj, about the greater expression of the Divinity through us, and moving from a place of identifying with the smaller ego, and so on and so forth. And all that, kind of comes in, through the head. And I'm sure, that we've all heard it and striven in a hundred thousand different ways, to embody that. But sometimes when you're in a bad state of mind, those ideals seem a million miles away, and it feels like your hanging from the thinnest filament of just intellectuality. You're sort of reminding yourself that, oh, I heard Raj say something. Or, I heard somebody else say something. But you can't translate it into anything, that is going to help you, at the moment you're there, you know, struggling.

And sometimes you think, well this is all just a fantasy, you know. And I don't even know anyone in my life, that embodies this. And I feel sometimes that this, although I grasp this intellectually, the physical. The experience of it, in my bones or in my cells, is something that has eluded me, except, maybe here and there on certain drugs. So, I guess my question is, I'm coming around to a question is, is there a discipline. Is there, other than just talking about it and sort of being encouraged and inspired, is there a way to, or how, what would you say, and I'll say it as it reflects to me, for me.

I don't know if anyone else could tune in on whatever we're talking about, here, to really get that experience, of the larger Being. The real experience, that you can hang on to, when you need it.

ANSWER: First of all, you don't wait until the dire circumstance, to do it. What you do is, you start out with an unloaded, uncharged situation. And you listen for guidance, or you be open to an influx of clarity, regarding something, that as I said, is uncharged. Should I go to the dump, today? Is today, the appropriate day to do that? No big deal, if you don't do it today, it won't be the end of the world. And you listen, in that uncharged setting, where there is no threat of lose of integrity. Should I ware my red tie or my blue tie? This may sound very ridiculous, but you will come to understand, that everything has it's place, in the Divine order. In the Divine unfoldment of fulfillment of purpose.

And if you begin to make inquiry within yourself, of your Divine guidance, of your Divine awareness, as to what is appropriate, as to what fits where, at times when the answer is not going to make earth shaking differences in your life, you will begin to have the experience. You will begin to find out, after the fact, why a certain choice was perfectly orderly. And you will begin to acquire, what I will call a body of experiences, that will ground you more firmly, in the practice of trust. So, that when you finally do have occasion to deal with something major, that really does hook you emotionally, you will have this experience sitting behind you, that will allow you to listen, from a more centered place. And hear guidance, without it being distorted, by the presence of fear.

There is nothing too inconsequential to want to know the Truth about or to want to know where it fits in to the, shall I say, larger tapestry of Life, with a capital "L," in the Father's grand design of fulfillment of purpose. The suggestion may be presented to you, that if you are checking everything out, that you are then just believing in fate. And I am suggesting, that all that is happening, is that you are allowing yourself to become congruent with the Movement of God, the Movement of Creation. And because of your inquisitiveness, you are not relying upon your best conception, which may or may not be congruent with the Movement of Creation Itself.

And so, if you will, this is the practice that I prescribe: Listen, listen, listen. And listen about everything. Because, to the degree that you become aware of how this fits into, the Divine order of the Movement of Fulfillment, you will begin to realize how completely you are surrounded by, embraced by, the Movement of God. And that in itself, establishes a foundation for your letting go, even further. Letting go of control, from a limited standpoint, even further. And trusting into an underlying universal order, that is relevant to absolutely every little aspect of your daily life.

Listening for guidance, can be misconstrued as giving ones power away. But Divine guidance, always leaves you standing more clearly present, as the embodiment of God's purpose. And doesn't leave you feeling like, a piss ant mortal, inconsequential. It helps bring you into your sense of the tapestry of life, as well as everything else. So, that you know that nothing is left up to chance. And that there is such Divine order, that you can let go of your attempts at control, and surrender into the active experience of the Movement of Creation. And what I mean by this, is that, when you are not holding yourself separate, as a puny little mind, or a puny little ego, attempting to be something important. As that defense mechanism is released, you begin at the point of conscious experience, to come into an experience of what God is consciously experiencing, while God is in the act of Creation. And this is the way, in which you find yourself, literally, your Self, with a capital "S." Because, you come into the direct conscious experience, of the act of Creation. So that you experience being inseparable from the act of Creation and the action of the Creator.

But the only way you come into that experience, is when you let go of trying to be separate, a separate, affective, creative human being, or personality. Your movement into that conscious experience of being inseparable from the act of Creation, comes as a result of, beginning to listen. Listening with the inconsequential things. So that you become more comfortable and more confident with that process, and are then able to maintain your equilibrium and your peace and listen when you are faced with, let us say, more strenuous dynamics.

This is the way you begin to discover, that you are not a body. You are not a personality. But you are that pure conscious awareness, in which everything is embraced. And in which your security and stability and your invulnerability, is present for you to experience. This is the beginning.

QUESTION: I have had so many wonderful things happen to me recently, in the last month, that I'm just so deeply appreciative, and deeply appreciative of your help.

I feel as though, in the very near future, there's a lot of not only inner changes coming up, but outer changes. And perhaps a different stress, a different focusing on what I'm doing. I feel that I have been very strongly cooperating with the part of me that wants to put tremendous pressure on me. And that this pressure, has been very useful and it is culminating and allowing me to push through it, in some areas. And, I'm wondering, do I really understand that? Am I really clear, as I feel I am in that area? Not that I'm clear across the board at all, but perhaps in that area.

ANSWER: When you are talking about pressure, you are truly not referring to the intensity of conflict. It is what I would call, the pressure of your Divinity.

It is very much like, the opening of a flower. Because, the stem grows and there is a tiny bud on the end of it. And the stem gets to its full length and the bud begins to swell. And as it begins to swell, it begins to press against the outer covering of green leaves, that are sheltering the bud. And literally, the very center of the flower, is pressing up and out. And it causes the outer covering of green leaves, to separate and then the pedals begin to show. And as the flower comes into full bloom, if you were to watch it in slow motion, you would see the center of the flower, pressing out to show itself. And that is what is called, the opening and the blossoming of the flower. And indeed, while there is the resistance of the outer covering of green leaves, there is a certain sense of tightness. There are no two ways about it.

Now, the pressure of your Divinity, is another way of speaking of, the penetration of who you are Divinely, into the limits of your present sense of yourself. You see, there always has been and always will be the presence of what you infinitely are. But at the present time, all of you are experiencing, only a small circumscribed part of what you are in your totality. And that which separates the small circumscribed part, that you call you, now, from what you are Divinely, infinitely, are ego structures, beliefs. Beliefs, that are the results, of selective seeing.

Now, it is unnatural for you to experience yourself, in this separated or even dissociated way. Where, what you are in your totality, is partitioned off, as it were. And so, because of the integrity, the actual indivisibility of you in your totality, there is this constant, I will say, attempt, occurring to reestablish equilibrium. And this is accomplished by the undoing of the belief structures, that create a separating shell, between you as you currently experience yourself to be, and what you are in your totality.

Thus your Being, with a capital “B,” is constantly attempting to penetrate the shell of your ego structures, always at its weakest points. This is why the saying is, “man’s extremity is God’s opportunities.” When you are pushed to your limit, and you become too exhausted to maintain your conditioned sense of yourself, there is almost always, what I call, break through—penetration.

And as a result of the penetration, of what you Divinely are, into your limited sense of yourself, there are major and often miraculous changes that occur in your life. And you feel as though you have felt the hand of God, rather than the hand of circumstances. Even though the experience, is one you wouldn’t want to go through again. Now, it isn’t because the penetration of what you Divinely are, is in itself unpleasant. It is just that, from the ego’s standpoint, you have to be in such a state of disrepair, (Ha, ha) and, inability to maintain the ego defenses, that it feels, from the ego’s standpoint, like failure. But of course, wherever the ego structures fail, is where the penetration can occur and the transforming enlightenment, can take place.

So, the word pressure, is not a bad word. What you Divinely are, is constantly pressuring, what you think you are, to give up the ghost. What you Divinely are—your constituting, capital “I” Individuality—is constantly pressuring the ego sense of personality, to give up the ghost. And of course, that is humiliating to your ego.

Now, this is important to understand, because it will allow you, to begin to interpret the experience of humiliation, differently. Because, humiliation, is that which leads to humility. It is that which leads one to the point of saying, “I of myself can do nothing.” Which from the ego standpoint, is the ultimate insult. But when one gets to the point of saying, “I of myself can do nothing,” one is in such a weakened ego dynamic, that ones capital “S” Self, can penetrate and radically alter his or her experience of life and of identity. And then your self, can be exalted. Not the ego, but the capital “S” Self, that you are, can expand and fill the place, where this arrogant little private ego sense, had been operating, or seeming to operate.

Now, this process, is not in itself strenuous. There may be pressure. But to tell you the truth, the pressure is like a friend, putting his arm around your waist and saying, “come on let’s go.” And providing that little bit of embracing push, to encourage forward movement. It is a kind pressure, And it only seems to be strenuous, when one says, “wait a minute, I’m not quite ready,” and digs in the heels, thus creating resistance, that was not intended in the warm embracing encouragement to move forward.

QUESTION: That’s what happened this weekend. I was demanding to understand, and I can’t do that.

ANSWER: You certainly can’t. Understanding isn’t what is truly needed. A feeling, is what is needed. A feeling. A feeling that includes peace. A feeling that includes invulnerability. A feeling that includes unreasonable confidence. Confidence that just simply is there. Of course, the confidence is there, because of this embracing urge, that is being provided. You will grow. And grow is not the best word. You will find expansion occurring.

Now, I mentioned earlier, that all of you are in a process of accessing your sanity, from a place of lesser sanity. Which makes every effort to become more sane, occur in an awkward and unskilled way.

You must understand, that you have support for accessing your capital “S” Sanity, because of the penetrations of your capital “B” Being, the penetrations through the ego structures, that help trigger the remembrance of who you really are. And it is because of these penetrations, that you feel a confidence, to move beyond the familiarity of your current insanity, into the unfamiliar experience, of who you Divinely are.

Now, I mentioned that this process occurs awkwardly, because it is occurring from a level of ignorance. And, as a result, it is important for you to constantly give yourself the benefit of the doubt, to not engage in self-depreciation and self-criticism.

The point you need to also grasp is, that as you engage in this expansion, as you embrace more of your true sanity, there is constantly present, a greater and greater degree of intelligence and less and less awkwardness to your expansion. And thus, if you do not become side-tracked, by the awkwardness of your forward movement, you will find the forward movement being self-substantiating. In other words, each successive step will by virtue of the increase presence of sanity, cause each succeeding step to be more sane, and more intelligent, and more embraceable.

As I said it is tricky. It is a fine line. Because, the moment there is insight, you immediately become aware of the degree of ignorance, you just stepped out of. And you can become sidetracked by how ignorant you were, just before the enlightenment occurred. Your attention can be grabbed by it. And that can cause you, to not fully embrace quickly, that which the enlightenment has uncovered about your health, your Wholeness, your Divinity. Again, each successive step will be easier. Because, there will be more of your native intelligence brought into play, with each succeeding step.

Every single one of you needs to be aware, that because you are going through this “journey of awakening,” from a position smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, you are guaranteed of arriving there. And the pressure of your Divinity, is really constituted of the dynamics of the Kingdom of Heaven, that are going on around you, pulling you out of your negative reverie. And if you understand that this is the context, even though it is an intellectual understanding. If you understand this context, it will be easier for you, to become less and less serious about the process.

You can look at it a little bit more lightly. And I’m going to say, let yourself into the humiliation more willingly. So that you might arrive at the experience of humility. That experience of humility does, indeed, feel like a void. But it is simply a void, because it is empty of willfulness. And when you begin to value the void, you will begin to see the void filling up with, the clearer experience of Reality. The clearer experience of your True Identity, healing, increased Sanity. And as a result, a willingness to go into the void again, more smoothly.

QUESTION: Am I simply being impatient? Am I really on the right track? Am I right Minded as it is?

ANSWER: You are on the right track. And your ego is suggesting to you, that you ought to be doing more, and you ought to be doing it faster. And I encourage you, to tell it to, jump in the lake. That you are going to yield into this, not control yourself into it.

QUESTION: Over the last several years, I've spoken to you about my marital and domestic situation. And to ask you about leaving that relationship. And more recently, ask you, if there were any loose ends that I need to tie up? And you assured me, that there weren't.

So, after six months of discussion, I've decided, just less than a month ago, to move out of my home of thirty-six years. And to move into, continue in my direction, which is very different from my wife's. This is going to give me a great deal of freedom, compared to what I have had.

And among the things I've done, in the past, is to do workshops and seminars. And I have a friend that I've known for four years, in another part of the country, who has invited me to join with her in presenting workshops. And so, I would just like your feedback, in terms of that feasibility and the probability of joining forces, in doing something of that sort.

ANSWER: Indeed, this is a most appropriate avenue to explore and to enjoy. I will not say more, because, I have said all that needs to be said. And I want it to remain simple and clear with you.

QUESTION: Raj, I've been trying to formulate a question out of feelings that I've been having. And I don't really have a question. But I would welcome your insights or anything you'd have to say, about, kind of a current experience I'm having of myself, and have been having for months now.

And I preface in my expression of that by saying, yes I have just had a baby. And I know that does make tremendous change in your life. And it requires all of your energy and all of that. I really do recognize that. But it feels to me, that this feeling of, like depression or lethargy that I've been having for months now, is something beyond just that.

I've felt, I'm still very functional. And I get on with my life. And I see tons of people. And you know, there's a tremendous part of me, that is still very available to functioning in my life and my friendships and everything.

But there is a part of me, I've been experiencing as lethargic and sad and so exhausted. I just feel tired, to the point, where I feel like my intellect has been affected. And I've always prided myself on having a very above average memory, for example. And I'm very sharp on details.

And I know that you're going to say something about just having had a baby. But I feel within myself, it's beyond that. It's disturbing to me. I even feel like I'm in a fog, half of the time. That I'm just a few steps removed from behind my eyeballs or something. And it's really like I'm not feeling it so much now. I've just had lunch. I'm kind of energized. And I feel nice and all this. But it's kind of a constant thing, in my life and has been for a while. And it's really depressing, just a sadness, a lethargic feeling and almost rudderless, even with having a new child. I always, you know, thought that that would be very galvanizing. But even with Martin, I love him so much, I feel like I'm not quite on the mark with him or something. Not as intense as I would like to be.

You can see, I don't know what my question is. I'm really expressing a whole state of being, that I've been experiencing, that is distressing to me. But I'm kind of in a fog or I'm just not sharp. I wondered if you had any insights?

ANSWER: Oh, indeed. As you said, you have felt that you have always had a good intellect and a well functioning intellect. In effect, you have always been able to feel relatively in charge of your life, in a very wonderful and orderly fashion.

I am not going to blame, what you are experiencing, upon you having a child. But in the having of this child, you truly found yourself for the first time, engaged in flowing with something that you were not intellectually responsible for. You literally, had to yield to the event of the birth.

And in effect, it is as though, an anchor which had been cast near a dock or in a bay where you could feel secure, had been lifted, brought on deck. And your vessel has become caught in the current. Part of you is very much enjoying the movement of your vessel. That part of you that is enjoying it, is the feeling part of you. But it is a part of you that you have not connected with significantly, because of the high degree of intellectual expertise, that you have had. And in effect, we could say that it is your intellect which is feeling sad and depressed. Because it truly isn't having as much opportunity to get exercise and fulfill its role.

Now, what I am saying here, is that, you have been graduating, literally from head to heart. You are connected with your son. No, I'm going to put it this way, you are connected with yourself, as a result of, yielding into the experience of motherhood. And there is a movement, there is a certain connectedness, a centered connectedness with the movement of your Being. It is not totally familiar to you, but you are yielding to it. You are not being able to grasp it intellectually. And, it is my hope, that you never will. It will be well for you to learn to find your security in the movement. I'm going to say, in the movement of your relationship with your son. Because, that is what is connecting you, with the movement of your Being. And that is what is going to connect you more significantly, at a feeling level, at an experiential level, with your spouse and with your friends and with your world.

The part of you that has prided itself on its facility and skill, simply isn't being brought into play. But it has been replaced with a new enlivening within you, of your more mature connectedness with life.

I encourage you, to be very patient with yourself, as the full meaning of this inner shift, reveals itself to you. Again, it is not going to reveal itself, in an intellectual way. It is going to reveal itself, in a feeling way. And there is another aspect to this, that I encourage you to be alert for. And that is, that you will find yourself having a greater capacity to love yourself, because, at a feeling level, you will be more comfortable with yourself. When you are uncomfortable, it is because you are thinking too much.

You see, with Martin, you manage to allow yourself to let go and simply be present with him. And this is laying the ground work, for you to simply be present with others and with your world, without any intellectual process to it, more heart to it.

Your intellectual foundation, has laid the ground work for this shift. But the intellectual ground work, is literally, like the scaffolding that is used to build a building. And when the building has been built, the scaffolding is removed.

Ultimately, your intellect and everyone's, is there to help you arrive at, indeed, an intellectual grasp of the absolute orderliness of life. The absolute principledness of life. I am going to say, of the Allness of the Life Principle, or God. It gets you to the point where there is such a conviction in the life affirming nature of Being, that you can let go into it, abandoning the intellectual controls. Not abandoning intelligence, but abandoning the structure, the scaffolding. So that what is Real, is all that is left and all that is being experienced. And as I said, this constitutes a shift, from head to heart, or from head to soul, if you will.

Be very patient with yourself here. As you pay attention to what it feels like, to be caught in the grasp of the current of your Being, which is moving, rather than stationary, and is feeling, rather than understanding. You are very Real. And Martin is very Real. And Robert is very Real. And the Reality of all three of you, is what you are in the process of beginning to embrace, from the feelings. It is a wonderful transformation that is occurring. And it will be relatively enjoyable, as you allow it, rather than resist it. There is reason for joy here, even though you are getting stretched a little.

QUESTION: I understand the answer. But I wanted to ask about one more aspect of that. When I'm saying I'm spending my time with Martin, which is most of my time. And say, we're on the floor playing, or doing whatever you do. I will literally, it's like I see where my third eye should be, like a fan that's like gray and blank. And it's a physical experience. I feel like there's nothing there. It's really an uncomfortable physical experience, between my eyes, where a third eye should be, of it just being vacant. And I feel, I struggle with that, because, I feel this is what I'm talking about, when I say, that I'm kind of in a daze or a fog. It's like a physical experience of blankness.

And I feel that distress. And I'm communicating nothing to him. That he's so, kind of, psychically vulnerable and open now. I feel that somehow that feels like something not totally dynamic is happening. Is that because I have always been so identified with my thoughts and thinking and intellect? And that now it's not working?

ANSWER: You've got it.

QUESTION: But it is like a physical feeling there, of a gray blank place.

ANSWER: Indeed, it feels gray and blank, because what is there, you are not familiar with yet. It is like the void. The void is always full.

It is always full of your real experience of yourself, or your experience of who you truly are. But when you move from your typical everyday surface willful frame of reference, to the point of interface with who you truly are. That point of interface, feels empty by contrasted. But as you abide with it, you begin to feel it filling up, even though it has always been full. It is just that it is not registering with you immediately, because it is constituted of a subtler conscious experience. Where is, your everyday sensory experiences, are less subtle, I will say, more gross.

Now, this gray area is already full. Let it be. It is uncomfortable, because it is not aggressive, and you are used to aggressive. And aggressive means self-respect and a comfort zone, at the grosser level. So, when you notice the gray, remember that before you noticed it, you weren't feeling anything there. And, therefore, the sensation you are experiencing, does constitute an expanded conscious experience. Now, just abide with it and let it begin to provide you with more definition, as to what it is and what is there.

Now, there is something very important for you to know: And that is, that Martin is not just an extension of you. He is an individuality in his own right, already, was before you even saw him for the first time. He has his own inner motivations. He will reach for life, because he wants to reach for life. He will embrace it or even reject it, because he wishes to embrace or reject it. And although he loves you, he is not hanging on to your every thought or word, to define his life. And, therefore, you do not need to be so self-conscious. This is not a test.

QUESTION: It's like that. It's like performance anxiety. Am I being rich enough in the moment; or, am I being, you know, a well spring of inspiration, or warmth; or does he want to be with me; or am I interesting; or am I just a warm body? I do have some insecurities around being a rich resource of a person for him, you know.

ANSWER: Do you love him?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Are you half-way intelligent?

QUESTION: Yes. I think, I'm not really sure anymore.

ANSWER: Indeed, I will confirm to you that you are half-way intelligent. Are you prone to hateful thoughts? Are you spiteful?

QUESTION: Recently yes, actually that was another part of my question, but I just figured I couldn't cover it all in one question.

ANSWER: But, that is a result of frustration, from not being able to be in control.

QUESTION: Right, a lot of anger, and like bordering on malice, I would say.

ANSWER: That is because you are conditioned to be a very proper, obedient, young lady. But you happen to be a real human being. Now, you are a very valuable real human being. And you are not being called on to perform, you are only being called upon to simply, be you. You are not ignorant. You are not uneducated. You have experienced and know what a loving relationship is. Everything about you, except your concern at the moment and your frustration, is absolutely healthy. And you, therefore, constitute a rich resource, yes.

But I want you to understand, that Martin is not going to reach for you, as the only resource and is not now, reaching only to you. And, therefore, in that sense, even your false sense of burden does not represent the fact. You do not carry all of the burden. The trees carry some of the burden. They must be trees for him. He looks at them. They must be something for him. But do you think they are worried? They just be trees and drop leaves and grow leaves and be dormant and blossom in the spring. And they just be themselves and constitute a rich resource of experience for him.

You may be a nourishing resource for Martin, but there is a lot more to his world, than just you. And, therefore, you can afford to relax and help him enjoy all of the resources, that are available to him. And there will be times, that the way in which you let those resources be of value to him, is to not be so actively present in his experience. So that he has the opportunity to explore, because he is motivated to explore. So part of being a resource to him, is learning to leave him free to explore. Instead of setting him up a wonderful, what you might call Easter egg hunt of delightful life experiences, for him to discover, because you have thoughtfully laid them out for him.

In other words, again, I am encouraging you to relax. To understand that he is going to explore life, and life is going to be available to him, and will define itself to him. And it isn't all sitting on your shoulders. It truly isn't.

QUESTION: I'd like to receive whatever guidance you may offer.

ANSWER: Just a moment. Specifically, I encourage you to have infinite patience and not tire of saying, "I love you." Although at times it might seem to be an unheard expression. And although doubt may be expressed by virtue of, shall I say, continued requests for verification of your love, that would seem to call your love into question or the validity of your statement. Realize that you truly have nothing better to do. It is a wonderful opportunity, to express what you truly feel. Hang in there. Persist.

QUESTION: I wrote a question down at lunch, if I can find it.

ANSWER: How many pages long is it?

QUESTION: Just two. I'm interested in how to discriminate between euphoria of the ego and joy, as I think you'd define it, of the spirit. And how it relates to special love, as a term used in "A Course In Miracles." I want to learn more, how to recognize love or a reflection of love, as opposed to the dependency needs being fulfilled, that I may seem to think is love.

I'm in a romantic triangle. I'm exhilarated sometimes and that through being gently honest with both partners, that they're responding in a way that communicates that everyone is benefiting, despite the jealousy and the fears, somehow. But I know that it's not likely that the triangle will continue. Nor do I want it to. I don't think. One or neither person that I'm involved with, will end up being my partner.

If it's one, I want to share my life with that person, in a fairly conventional and committed or monogamous relationship.

ANSWER: Fairly?

QUESTION: Definitely monogamous. I've hedged on committed, because that seems so absolute. But not on the other one. The woman toward whom I'm most currently leaning, and I have leaned back and forth.

(Laughter) I thought somebody might laugh at that. The newer partner is someone I've been involved with that way, for a couple of months and who I've known for several months on the job, before that. Seems to make me feel extraordinarily comfortable, and we seem very compatible.

Anyway, I'm afraid I'm falling into some emotional codependency. And my original partner and I—so that's one of my concerns—and my original partner and I who—the first person in the triangle—who I've been involved with for over a year. And who lived with me, until about three months ago. And who had an extraordinarily fiery relationship, through which there seems to have been, a tremendous learning and healing. I'm concern, that I may be leaving her, to substitute or, as is discussed, in the healing relationship in the "Course"; for a new person, with whom I can pursue primarily ego goals. And thus slow or make more painful, my awakening.

So the issue is then, that I would like more understanding or some help with, is euphoria versus joy, special love, co-dependency, substituting another relationship for the pursuit of a seemingly more comfortable ego goal. And how can I be helpful, for all of us in this situation?

ANSWER: Indeed, joy is a soul experience. And euphoria, is a false high and ego satisfaction; almost always experienced with fear, never experienced with peace. Joy is always experienced with peace. It would seem incongruent, but the fact is, that peace and joy are inseparable. It is from the very debts of the peace of your being, that your joy arises. And as it arises, it does not unsettle the peace. And yet the fullness of the joy, is not minimized by the presence of this absolute peace. This causes the joy, to be absolutely stable. Whereas, euphoria is always unstable and it never lasts.

Now, euphoria is something you experience when you get something. And joy is something you experience when you give something. It is really that simple. Love is what you experience when you give. Feeling embraced by, consumed by love, is what you feel when you give. And this is absolute.

Love or being loved, is not something you necessarily feel, when someone else gives to you—loves you. It is possible to be loved by another and feel totally unloved, because you are not giving. And until you are giving, you will not feel the very substance of your Being, which is Love. And you will not feel loved or even lovable, until you are making that gift of You.

So you must examine your situation. And take note of whether you are feeling whatever you are feeling, because you are getting or because you are giving. And that will tell you, whether there is any substance to what is happening. And then you can govern yourself accordingly.

Right now, you are providing yourself with an arena, in which there is much to pay attention to. Now, simply pay attention to it in light of what I have shared. And you will become clear.

Special relationships, always involve getting. Holy relationships, relationships of Wholeness, always occur, when giving is occurring.

QUESTION: How do I differentiate, between giving and indulging someone? Indulging someone's neediness?

ANSWER: If you are indulging someone's neediness, they will be the focus of your attention, and they will be the governor of what you do. You will be sensitive to their behavior and based upon their behavior, you will either continue what you are doing or modify it. That is not really giving. That is not being in touch with you. That is not being in touch with the love, that you are. Because, when you are, you will also know when not to give, because, it will be indulgence if you do. But in order to know that, you're going to have to be in touch with you, not in touch with the one you would avoid indulging. You get the picture?

QUESTION: I think so. It's a little foggy to me actually. Indulging someone's neediness, I can tell that, when they become the focus, rather than me. I'd just like you to expand on that a little bit.

ANSWER: Very simply, if you are indulging someone's neediness, you will be being very attentive to them. In other words, you will be watching to see what you are going to get from them, so as to know, whether to continue or cease what you are doing. If you get nothing back from them, you will modify your behavior. If you get, shall I say, confirmation, if you get a lot of attention, if you get showered with affection, etc.; then you will not change your behavior. And so you see, the indulgence of another's neediness puts you not in the position truly of giving, but in a position of being attentive to what you are getting. And in that process, you become dishonest. You become the puppet, of that ones neediness.

QUESTION: On the other side of that, how do I tell when I'm being not loving to them, you know, when I'm being ego centered directly?

ANSWER: You will never be at peace, when you are ego centered. Again, the necessity is to pay attention to how you are feeling. Peace and joy are inseparable. Peace and love truly are inseparable. And when you are not at peace, you may know that you are ego oriented, ego centered. And so, you must pay attention to yourself. And when you are in your peace and your joy and your love are available to you, you will find yourself spontaneously motivated, to do or not do certain things at certain times. And you will feel the congruence of it. You will feel the integrity or unconflictedness in you. You will feel at peace, and I might even say, you will feel strong about what you are doing. Strong in the sense of not being vulnerable and, therefore, not having to be on guard.

QUESTION: From your point of view, will you share something about, what is the role of Mary, in...

ANSWER: Mary?

QUESTION: Yes, Mary, your mother, in our time? And her interactions with us at this time? Perhaps, even in relation to how this fits into your role?

ANSWER: To my...

QUESTION: Your role, as you see it. In your interactions with those of us, alive at this time.

ANSWER: All of us who are totally awake, have one task, you might say. That is of reminding those who are caught in the limited or finite sense of themselves, of their infiniteness. Those who are caught in a guilty sense of self, of their innocence. Those who are, shall I say, very distracted by the sensory data and the interpretations of the world, that are based entirely upon that sensory data; of the mental, the Divine, the nonmaterialistic nature of the world. It is only in the human experience that there is; mother and son, mother and daughter, father and son, et cetera. Because in actuality, we are all brothers and sisters, if you will, offspring or expressions or embodiments of the Life Principle, the Father/Mother God.

And so, my experience of her, is not as mother now, but of equal, of a sister, you might say, truly companions in expressing the Father's Will. And in promoting the desire to express the Father's Will, in those who are still enjoying a false sense of self and a limited experience of will, which is all consuming. And I will tell you, that we take any opportunity that presents itself, to convey the Truth about man, to man, to you. We do not have roles to fulfill. We have the expression of Truth, to Be at all times, with utter appropriateness.

QUESTION: Well, I would like to follow that up, with a question relating to the experience that my friend Lisa, here, and I have had in communicating with Mary, the way Paul communicates with you. And to get any guidance or insight, you might offer us, in pursuing that relationship. And that opportunity, as you say.

ANSWER: Well, of course, I encourage you to be as nondefensive as possible, without feeling totally vulnerable. Mind you, it seems a little unconceivable that anyone would feel vulnerable in the presence of Mary. But you see, the ego sense of self, this tiny sense of self, feels insecure, because it doesn't represent the Whole Truth. And, therefore, every single one of you, if you were confronted by or knew that you were going to be confronted by utter Divinity; would on the verge of being confronted by it, avoid it. Because, you would feel that it would uncover some fundamental guilt in you, rather than exonerate you totally of that sense of guilt.

So, I encourage you to be as defenseless as possible. And I also encourage you to be as honest as possible. Don't put on airs or she like I, will pop your false balloon or your balloon of falsehood. It is very important for all of you, to become comfortable with who you, are at the moment. So that you may be secure enough to receive new information. If you are on guard and uncomfortable, you will not be, shall I say, responsive to that which triggers new and greater insight. And so, if you are really upset by something that is said, say that you are upset. If you do not understand and what you have heard seems unfair, don't squelch it, express that you are distressed. And ask for further guidance. Ask for further explanation. But be yourself, exactly as you are at the moment.

And I will tell you, there is another reason for doing this: If you are willing to be, what might seem to you to be, a reactive self, whose reactions would be totally inappropriate, in the presence of one who is Divine and, therefore, such reaction would necessarily bring forth judgment upon and against you; your expression of that reactivity will disprove your belief. Because, you will find yourself unquestionably loved and not judged.

And unless you are willing to be this, so called sinner, that you have been told that you are; until you're willing to be it and find that the wrath of God does not come down upon you and that judgment is not given, but love is and understanding and compassion is, then you begin to be able to, at an experiential level, let go of your fear of judgment. And accept this unconditional embrace, that is extended to you. And then companion with her or companion with me or companion with your guide, in your forward movement, with less fear. That is what I would tell you.

And this applies to everyone, who is desiring to be in touch with guidance or insight or revelation. Be willing to simply be who you are at the moment, without apology. If you want to apologize you can, but it is not necessary. Because, no judgment will be made, that the apology would fit, or be appropriately responsive to. I will tell you, it is going to be very difficult, to let go of a sense of guilt, until you find that you are loved, not penalized, whether you are feeling guilty or not. And that is when you will begin to be able to grasp, that maybe you are really innocent. And maybe you never were really guilty. And that is what she is present to work with you on, your fuller embrace with yourself with self-love, instead of judgment and criticism. And instead of a burden of guilt, that the church has created, in order to keep the pews full.

QUESTION: Good afternoon. The question that to me has the most energy behind it, is the one that I am most terrified about.

ANSWER: Wonderful.

QUESTION: And it has to do with my acting. And the reawakening that I'm having about really committing to it, on a really deep level, as never before. And along with other things that I'm doing, one thing that I'm taking steps toward, is moving to New York for awhile, which I love. And I kind of want to get your feedback; as to my relationship to New York, its relationship to me, the theater that's there and my relationship to acting. And I'm terrified about it all. Because, I'm wondering if its in line with my purpose; even though I know it is, even though I question whether it is or not. And I go back and forth, simply because, I think I haven't had reflected back to me, this time around, as it were; jobs in acting, which I had before, in what feels like another life, which was about ten years ago I worked all the time. And I haven't now since I've had a break from it, doing other things. I'm now going back to it totally committed, totally new, but terrified. And I want to get your impression of it.

ANSWER: I can only tell you what you already know. It is absolutely congruent. And I will be very frank with you, it is time to be through with talk about it. It is time to be through with thinking about it. It is time to do it. To just do it. Because, the doing of it will bring forth the substantiation of the fact, that it is what you should be doing. I am not going to waste my time or your time, attempting to convince you, that you are perceiving what is true for you, correctly. I encourage you not to look around for further confirmation, because it is a delay tactic. It is as though, you are standing on the board on the high dive. You have your bathing suit on. The pool is full of water. Thinking about diving, is no longer relevant, it's time to make the dive. That is very simply the answer.

QUESTION: Well, I've been trying to decide which question to ask. I think I'll ask in relation to Joyce's first question, it will probable fall in there somewhere.

I have an older sister. And when my father was dying, he chose me to handle the trust, the family trust. She being an older sister, feels that she should have been the one chosen, and is trying to prove me incompetent and quite pitiful, in handling the family trust. I feel, because I won't comply with certain requests that she has made, she is no longer speaking to me. I'd like to...

ANSWER: That must be a relief...

QUESTION: In a way it is, but I want to express love to her. And in so doing, it's like a wall or something, I think there's something I'm denying within myself. But I want to see what's in myself, that's preventing me from loving her.

ANSWER: What is love? Love is the recognition of that which is Real, in each and everything. It is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, in each and everything. To be unconditionally loving, means to withhold judgment relative to anything. However, being unconditionally loving, does not mean becoming a doormat to everyone else's ego perceptions.

Now, I will tell you, that the only thing you can do, is to refrain from engaging in judging her and condemning her, within yourself. But you cannot force her to receive the love you have to give. You cannot, by virtue of being unconditionally loving, force her to change. Loving or being the presence of love, is not a matter of becoming a tool for effecting change. If it could be, then it would become part of the ego's bag of skills for manipulating relationships.

So when you refrain from judgment and you engage in being the presence of love, and she continues to be unpleasant; do not ask yourself what you are doing wrong. As though, if you were doing something right, she would automatically change. She has to arrive at a point within herself, where being judgmental is so unfulfilling, that she decides not to utilize that as part of her repertoire of behavior in the world. And until she makes that decision, you can only refrain from indulging in judgment yourself. And you can only be willing to acknowledge her Divinity, even if she refuses to embrace it, as a practical and real thing in her life, relative to you.

Now, you're responsible for handling a trust. It is a trust that was placed in you. A trust in you, placed in you by your father. It has nothing to do with you and what you might think. And it has nothing to do with what your sister might think. This was an act of conscious intent expressed by your father, a placement of trust with you. It is really not open to question.

And it is your sister who, is being disrespectful, not of you, as much as of her father. And I encourage you not to be distracted by her behavior or her attitude. I encourage you to be true to the trust, that your father placed with you and in you, and let the chips fall where they may. And you handle that trust, according to your best and clearest judgment, because that is exactly why, he placed that trust in you. This truly is not open for debate. And I encourage you to be matter-of-factly clear within yourself about it, and let whoever else doesn't like it, just tough it out.

QUESTION: Well, you must be aware of these levels that I've been experiencing, that are, you know, kind of absolutely to a point of great need for clarification at this moment.

For some months I have been experiencing—and not necessarily in a disturbing way—levels of experience that there is something going on out here, which seems to be offering me various enticements and possibilities. And there is a dream level of activity, where for weeks, every night I'm on the road. I'm with a group of people and we're going from conference to conference or we're going somewhere. And there's various symbols along the way, people from my past, but its movement also. And the other level, that seems to be going on here, is this is both professionally and personally.

And the third level seems to be in the last couple of weeks, where when I've been quiet, wanting to speak with you or with my guide, I've heard this little voice just say, (?) And its very clear and very sweet and very loving and its different. The way I feel is different, than with you or with Thomas. And somewhere in this whole experience, I must have asked who it was. And I got the word Sybil. Which is a name I never would have thought of in a million years. And so, now, what I have here is a triangle. And I experience you as teacher and I experience Thomas as a companion and I don't know what Sybil is. But I work in three's a lot. And with the triangle, I'm in the middle of it, it's around me, its inner/outer. And I would like to have some place to stand now, that I've had all these experiences.

ANSWER: The place you must stand is, as the one who is paying attention, without preconceptions. Paying attention as unconditionally as possible.

I will put it very simply, you are like a walnut that is being opened, so that the meat may be gotten to. So that, the meat of the walnut, the essence of it, is no longer hidden. This opening is a self-opening. I mean by that, that you are engaged in a process of self-discovery. It is simply time to pay attention and allow this movement of opening, to fulfill itself. You do not want to help it along. What you want is to maintain an equilibrium of balance, in which you may pay attention, because disclosure of you to you, is in the process of occurring.

I also encourage you, not to take any of the symbolism that you have expressed, as though that is what expresses the absolutes of this movement. The movement that you are feeling, is itself the absolute. It is what I have referred to as, the opening of the walnut. The opening of the shell, that covers over the meat of the nut.

The part of you that clamors for control, is not satisfied with what I have said. But the part of you that clamors for control, even the amount of control that would come from, a general overview of what is happening, that part of you, is what has constituted the shell. And the shell is being broken open.

And so, I encourage you to notice the part of you that clamors for control. Just notice it and let it, let it be there. And then take this part of you that is noticing the ego, let this part of you that is noticing the ego, abide with the movement. Because, it has the patience to let the disclosure occur, in its perfect timing. Perfect in terms of, your conscious experience of your fulfillment.

You won't arrive at the sense of what is happening, through an intellectual process. It will finally make sense, because disclosure is what is occurring. And once the disclosure has occurred, it will have made sense out of itself. So, I am encouraging you to learn from the movement itself, rather than learning by means of a logical process.

QUESTION: Yes, but...

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I feel like...

ANSWER: You are like a young woman on the delivery table, knees up in the stirrups saying, "Yes, but, it would be easier if I was on my side." Continue.

QUESTION: Most of the time it feels fine. And I'm enjoying the journey, really. And then comes the time when I need to make a decision about this. You know, am I going to stay in this apartment? Am I going to move some place? And its like I do not have enough information.

ANSWER: And if you do not have enough information, then you cannot come to a conclusion, and you must stay where you are. If you do not have the clarification, it is not time for the clarification. And the fact is, that you are not blocking clarification. You are wanting it, sooner than its perfect and appropriate timing.

QUESTION: Can you tell me or will you tell me rather, if I will receive some clarification, beyond where I am now, by the first of the year.

ANSWER: I will say that that is very likely. Understand, that I am not here to satisfy your ego. But to promote and substantiate the essential You. Which is not available to be run around, by the ego.

QUESTION: I have for most of my life been in a depressive state. And I'm really tired of it.

ANSWER: A depressive state?

QUESTION: Yea, I think so. Well that's how I would call it. Something less than joy. I suppose experiencing my joy and connection, mostly through my own mind. Experiencing a happiness in relationship, mostly in my imagination. And combining that with thoughts of death, in whatever way, heroically, or in various ways. And seeming to have the feeling connection to body, mostly through that experience of imagination. Can you clarify that, or help me understand it and be done with it? Or find a better way the world?

ANSWER: The great lessons, the great insights, the great learning's, the great awakenings, if you will; all tend to occur spontaneously, in moments of utter simplicity, in the middle of utter mediocrity, in the absence of specialness. They do not happen in the height of frenzy or excitement or of great spiritual dynamics. They happen in the place of humility. And as I said earlier, from the ego's standpoint, in the places of great humiliation. In other words, they happen in the very spot, that you are complaining about being in.

One tends to deny his or her opportunity for joy and fulfillment, because nothing grand is happening. But I guarantee you, that the great things that have happened in this world, have arisen out of ungrand, simple, mundane moments. So mundane, that there were no great dynamics to distract one from the insight or the revelation or the discovery.

Now, your question was for the most part, asked on the basis of ego activity, ego thinking, ego reasoning. But the fact is, there is a part of you that values this space, that you have found yourself in for such a long time. It is a space, an experience of being, that you actually feel is more spiritually advanced. You would not actually trade this experience, this space, for what your friends or people you know have; who seem to love themselves, who seem to be happy, who seem to have evidences of fulfillment.

And I am here to confirm to you, that that part of you that values this absence of, what I am going to call false success, is honed in on the Homing Beacon. And it doesn't really constitute a depressed state. The part of you that asked the question, is the part that is looking for stimulating excitement and dynamic success, which the more dominate part of you really would not accept, if it were given.

Because you are very dedicated to your enlightenment, you are very dedicated to being spiritually clear. In other words, you are very dedicated to experiencing, being without any distortion or bias. Now, I point this out, so that you can see that, indeed, there can seem to be at the same time, two parts of you operating. When you really become distressed, is when you begin to pay attention to the part of you that asked the question. And when you are feeling your inner strength and, I'm going to call it your spiritual strength, it is when you are honoring this part of you that is humble; that is not full of excitement, that feels its stability that arises out of a much deeper level than the ego.

Just be aware of this. So that when your ego acts up, you can say, "Oh, my ego's acting up again." And then don't honor the tantrum that it is throwing, too much. The moment it finds out you're not going to hook into it, it will stop and find some other approach, that it thinks may hook you.

QUESTION: Then my yes, but, is: Why do I cry so easily? Why do I cry just raising the question?

ANSWER: Because, at the bottom line, you are very connected with your soul and you feel a lot. You experience, shall I say, more of the depth and breadth of your capacity to feel. And, indeed, much of your crying, generally speaking, is a result of your remembering Home, with a capital "H." Experiencing a connection, that you cannot put into words. And, it is not an uncommon thing. It is the way in which a deep joy emerges.

And I will tell you, that the time will come, when that deep joy will emerge as laughter. But right now, it emerges as a very beautiful feeling, that your human experience, can only interpret as sadness. But it is a very beautiful feeling of joy, that comes out in this fashion. You need not resist it. And you need not wonder, what in the world is wrong with you.

QUESTION: Well, my question is kind of based around words. Mainly the words of the Bible. My problem is, I'm not really sure how to understand words, especially in terms of the Bible. I don't know if I'm to believe that what I interpret from the Bible today, is actually what was meant, when the story was written.

And I guess my question to you is, is it important for me to place a value on the words I read, or just accept them from whatever form of the Bible I chose to read. Whether it's King James version or Old Hebrew Testament or whatever? I guess I'm asking you, is there one more valid Bible, than another or should I place any value on it, at all?

ANSWER: I encourage you to place value only on that which triggers, promotes an inner conviction, as to the Truth. You must understand, that much of the Bible has been altered down through the centuries, to suit the purposes of the church. And so, it is necessary to read the Bible with discernment. And as I have said before, you must dare to trust, that you have the innate capacity to recognize Truth. And then honor that, by trusting your perception of Truth. If you do not have an innate capacity to recognize Truth, then you are lost. And, indeed, it would require a miracle, for you to become aware of Truth and know that it was the Truth.

But absolutely everyone of you has the inherent, innate capacity to recognize Truth. Because, at the bottom line, what Truth is, isn't separate from you. You are the embodiment of Truth. And because you are, you have that in you, which is able to recognize it. Now, that which discloses to you more and more clearly, your essential Divinity or your essential Worth or your essential integrity, should be valued. And that which tends to undermine your sense of your integrity and worth and value, should be trashed. That which unsettles you and causes you to become confused, should be avoided. And that which promotes greater equilibrium and balance within you; a clearer perspective that is able, by virtue of the peace that it operates in, to come to correct conclusions, should be valued. And you will find places in the Bible, that do both.

You cannot know what was truly intended, because you are not reading the original, in the original language. But it doesn't matter, because you have the innate capacity to recognize Truth. And so, read the Bible with discernment. And value that which allows you to yield to God. And do not value that which causes a gulf to grow between you and the Father, causing you to be fearful to come close. Because, obviously, if you get too close, you will be convicted of that which you are guilty. You see, that sets up a barrier, a spontaneous and natural resistance. The love of God uncovers God's Son, as what He Really Is. Which exonerates you of any guilt and relieves you, of the belief that any penalty is do you, that you must pay.

Whatever confirms your Divinity, value; whether it is in the Bible or not. Also, it is not so much the words, as it is the feelings, when you are reading the Bible. Because, always your return Home, occurs as a result of, what I'm going to call, remembering the feeling of Home. And the remembering, is not an intellectual remembering, but a feeling remembering. Value whatever connects you with the feeling or experience of your Divinity, and that which more completely discloses your innocence, your guiltlessness, your integrity and your inviolability. That is what will allow you to function in the world, out from your integrity. And as I mentioned earlier, deal with interruptions of forms or patterns of living in your world, without experiencing any interruption, of your sense of your integrity.

QUESTION: Thank you. One more question, I guess, it's kind of my own personal ego question. Was Joseph Smith a prophet?

ANSWER: Indeed. Indeed. So, what do you do with a prophet? What do any of you do, when there is a prophet in your mist? To whom do you listen? Yourself, that is correct. And you see whether what the prophet says, adds up, when you measure it against your deepest level of knowing. You do not become the obedient servant of the prophet. You are not here to serve another's vision. You are here to experience the fact, that others have visions and make the spontaneous connection that, indeed, that is your prerogative, to be the one to experience visions.

In other words, to be the one who experiences a direct connection with Reality. The one whom Reality can penetrate and register with, so that you can be utterly appropriate in the moment, utterly congruent with your fulfillment of purpose.

A prophet is, indeed, suppose to be a way-shower. Not in terms of saying, move here, move here, move here, move here. But, in terms of what he embodies, himself. So that you may realize, "Ah, I can embody that also."

So, I have said that Joseph Smith was a prophet. That may or may not have anything to do with you, in this moment, on this day, at this time. It is a fact. It may not be relevant though, to you, today. And you will only know that, if you take that little bit of information within yourself and measure it against your deepest level of knowing. And then trust your deepest level of knowing.

QUESTION: I'd like to thank you for your smiles. And the sense of peace, that I feel when you're with us. I was wondering, if you could offer some insights, to my present leading edge of awareness or feeling about myself currently?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you this, there is such a significant level of evenness and peace and, what I am going to cautiously call, self-satisfaction, without any negative connotations to it. That you are significantly primed for break-through, for, I will say, further expansion. And yet, that word expansion in this respect, really means, experiencing a more all inclusive awareness of yourself, where in, there is a diminished sense of separation between you and your world, between you and your fellowman. And I'm not talking about this at an intellectual level, I am talking about it at an experiential level. And because of the degree of peace that you are experiencing, this expansion is likely to be experienced very smoothly, very gracefully. Because, there is a sense of inner security and an absence of any significant sense of vulnerability.

You are in effect, in a permissive state. Not so much a matter of consciously giving permission, as being in a permissive and, therefore, yielding state. And this is wonderful. I do not tell you this, so that you will look forward to it and loose contact with where you are. I tell you this, so that it can simply be embraced, in your awareness of where you are. And I also tell you what I have told you, so that you will not be inclined to think, that maybe you ought to be experiencing something other than this equilibrium.

The evenness can seem to become monotonous, unstimulating. And, of course, the ego thrives on stimulation. And so, it always inserts itself and says, "create a little drama in your life, this is very dull. Because it is dull, it certainly cannot represent Divinity. Divinity must be significantly meaningful." Well, it is. But I want all of you to understand, that the experience of being Divine, is an ultimately natural experience. It is an experience of being more you, than you have ever been before, not more different from you, than you have ever been before. It is an experience of coming down to the essential Self, which is going to feel like you, even though it is far more expansive than what you have experienced to this point. And so, I encourage you not to brace yourself for the break-through.

QUESTION: Raj, I seem to recently realize that, at least it appears to me, that I have chosen for the majority of my lifetime, this time, to be a loner. Or when I haven't been a loner, I haven't felt comfortable and I go back to being a loner again. Therefore, I'm wondering if that really has been appropriate for me to have operated in that style, during this lifetime?

ANSWER: I will tell you, that it has been essential for you. It has been an essential part of your arriving at a point, of owning your own integrity. Owning your integrity to the point, that you have found it unnecessary to be with someone else, in order to experience it. You see, before a relationship can become totally fulfilling, before it can fulfill its Holy purpose, each member of the relationship must arrive at a point, of being aware of his or her independent integrity. Where his or her sense of identity, is not gathered from the other member of the relationship; but is clearly derived from the First Cause, the Prime Mover, God.

Once that connection is made and once permission is given to embody ones own Wholeness, then it becomes possible for the gift of ones self, to be made to the world. And then those who are in relationship to you, all greatly benefit. It is by virtue of your “aloneness,” that you have found yourself coming into a fuller experience of your health, a clearer experience of your invulnerability and your peace.

I will put it this way, you are nearing the point where you could engage in a relationship. And the potential for that relationship would be very, very full, because you would not be gathering your sense of yourself, from the relationship. You would bless the relationship, with the gift of who you are.

QUESTION: I wanted to ask about joy. And it seems this morning, I have a different headache, not the same one. And with all your help, and with Paul’s healers and my healers, I got through the day more comfortably yesterday. But I had a raging, really bad headache, with nausea, last night. And I tried to be with the things that I know are true and that you shared yesterday, about embracing my innocence and forgiving and all the other things and doing the authorization. At some point, it gets very jumbled and all I can do is pray for help.

And I want to go on here a minute, so I can bring up all these things that have been, kind of a constellation of things, in this. Somehow, what you said yesterday about humiliation, has stuck with me. I don’t know if there’s something I’m missing, in all of the inner work that I’ve been doing, or in my heart I believe I’m not doing anything wrong, and yet I still have a great deal of pain.

The pain isn’t acceptable, and yet, I also think maybe I need to accept, that at this time in my life, this is how it is. And I still hold the belief, that life of freedom from pain and fear is possible. And like, pain and fear are connected for me. And also, because I feel so much joy. Okay, so, last night, what I’ve come to in my own awareness with my guides help; is to allow and yield into and through a headache, specifically a headache.

And I persisted and that headache left. And now there’s this small other headache. Am I missing something, or what could you share with me to expand on—I’m confused again—about what the role, if there is a role for pain? And what I need to understand for myself, so that I can live in freedom?

ANSWER: It is not well for you to conceptualize, that there is a role for pain, as though it were an actual presence, with an actual intent, that could benefit you. Pain is always, the way in which you experience unacknowledged Good. That is another way of saying, that it is the way you experience the act of resisting your Good. However, it puts a different emphasis, because it makes it clearer, that there is something there to acknowledge and it is not the pain.

When you were willing last night, to simply be with the pain, shall I say, to go into it, rather than denying it or resisting it; you also found yourself experiencing a feeling along with it, a self-feeling, a negative self-feeling. When you do not resist the pain, and I'm going to say, if you are willing to abide with it, the feeling; I'm going to say, the lie, the negative that is covering up some aspect of your Good and your experience of well-being, surfaces. And you can see, what it is you are feeling about yourself, that constitutes self-denial. Then it becomes possible for you to see the ridiculousness of that denial, and the fact that it isn't truly relevant now, although it may have seemed to be relevant in the past.

Allowing yourself into the pain, rather than trying to rise above it and separate yourself further; is, indeed, another way of describing the process of humiliation.

Now, I want you to understand something. I want all of you to understand something. This process of ego humiliation, that allows you ultimately, to move into the experience of your humility, with which there is no pain associated, is very much like a roller coaster ride. Where you reach the crest of the upper curve and begin to plummet downward. And I want you to imagine, if you will, that instead of coming to the bottom of the plummet and ascending again, you continue to move forward parallel to the surface of the earth. In the process of this humiliation, you literally pick up momentum.

In other words, it is not just a downward movement of unpleasantness, of sadness, of a sense of failure, etc. It is a downward movement, only from the ego's point of view. It is actually a picking up of momentum, as you move into your humility and the clearer experience of who you Divinely are, of who you Really are, and not of who you believed you were. And so, when you reach the bottom of the descent and you begin to level off and move forward, it is with great speed. Now, that speed, is the equivalent of the power and the strength and the substantiality of what you Divinely are, which is now being experienced, as a state of humility.

And if you stop and think about it, the words humility and grace are almost always used together. Because, when you are experiencing humility, when there is humbleness, when you are not arrogantly believing that you are something important, from a conceptual and conditioned standpoint; you, indeed, come into an awareness of your essential validity, your essential worth. Which has nothing to do with any accomplishments. It has nothing to do with anything you have done or anything you are planning on doing. You are in this state of humility, a total absence of arrogance of any kind, which to the ego's point of view, is the pits. And, in that unpretentious being, you experience your integrity. You experience your indivisibility and, therefore, you find yourself absent of conflict in any form.

So, this process of humiliation, is truly a movement into the essential power of your Being, which has nothing to do with credit that you can claim, as having been caused by anything you have done. That is the meaning of the word grace. It is experiencing your essential value, your essential integrity, without being able to claim any responsibility for it. It is simply there. And it is always there in your humility.

Now, there is still a part of you, that is feeling irresponsible. And that irresponsibility, is being judged by your ego, as bad. That is what is hooking you, and that is the nature of the headache, today. But the simple fact is, that you have become irresponsible from the ego's standpoint, but you have not become unintelligent. You have not abandoned simple wisdom.

You are obviously functioning in the world, well. Even though you are not functioning in the way you did, two years ago. You are flowing intelligently, rather than controlling intelligently. That is intelligence. When you are living in this fashion, you are embodying intelligence itself, which is the nature of God or the nature of the Prime Mover. That is called congruence. And because it is new to you, you are not gathering from it, fully, the sense of your integrity. You are not seeing that your integrity is fully embodied in that. And so, the ego still has a little place to hook you, and say, "but you are not following the accepted norm, of being a responsible human being, a responsible parent, etc."

But I am telling you, that you are simply moving into a new manner of dealing with the world, by not dealing with it; but flowing sensitively, paying attention to inner guidance, paying attention to a wisdom that is going beyond the concepts of wisdom, which you have been raised with. You are beginning to express more originality, not ego originality, but originality in the sense that you are managing to be intelligent. You are managing to function well, without exercising a personal sense of control. It is a spontaneous intelligence and wisdom, rather than a calculated intelligence or wisdom.

Everyone will find that, as they begin to allow for the embodiment, the practice, if you will, of spontaneous wisdom; that your ego will hook you. It will try to get you back within the fence of obedience of practices, obedience to the continued reinforcement of fixed patterns. It will tell you that you are being disobedient, except that now that you are adults, it will tell you, that you are going crazy. It will tell you, that you are being irresponsible. It will tell you, that you are not expressing intelligence. And it will picture for you, impose upon you, the old patterns, from which you used to derive a sense of being intelligent.

I will tell you something, there would be no growth of anything that you see, trees, grass, there would be no movement of the universe; if all of it were actually functioning within the confines of a pattern. The growth occurs because the growth doesn't abide by patterns, by fixed structures. And that is why an embryo divides and grows and becomes something totally different, from a sperm and an egg. And that is why one tree doesn't look exactly like another tree. And that is why no two sets of finger prints are the same. Because life doesn't have anything to do with patterns, fixed, stable, structures. It is a movement. And if there is anything happening here, in the process of awakening or the process of enlightenment, it is that you are beginning to learn to let go of patterns, and be the flow. To be the Movement. Because that is what you have always been.

Humanly speaking, it seems as though, you have a very short time, in which to make this shift, from rules and concepts, to the spontaneous movement of intelligence. The spontaneous expression of wisdom, that is not calculated, but is a response to your world, in the moment that you are experiencing it, without preconceptions governing.

Now, everyone says, that it is by virtue of memory and the ability to examine history, which is embraced in memory; that it has become possible to be civilized. And that, therefore, the past and memory are absolutely essential. But the time is coming, for not absolutely governing your present according to memory. Because if, indeed, that is successfully accomplished, change will no longer occur. Life will be stifled, you might say. And, of course, that will be cataclysmic. Because the power of the movement of life, cannot be squelched. Now, it is scary to be spontaneous. It is scary to be in the middle of movement, change and activity, and deal with it, by means of your wits.

Now, student pilots practice in a simulator. And they know, that if they goof and crash, no one will be hurt, because the crash will not actually happen. If you were to practice driving in a simulator, you would feel safe. But the time would come, when you would need to put into practice what you had learned, on a real road with other cars that are real, that are not programmed by a computer onto a screen, and which seem to be driven by other potentially erratic and undependable egos.

And then you are smack dab in the middle of change and the need to respond, not according to what happened in your practice sessions in the simulator, but “Johnny-on-the-spot” on the highway, at the time that life is happening. And so, you do not drive in a calculated way, other than that you know where your destination is, usually. And so, you learn to be on-the-spot when you are driving.

This movement of awakening, this willingness to be sensitive-on-the-spot to life itself, and not to respond to it according to memory or according to mental calculations, is what is frightening to everyone. It literally, is the straight and narrow way, that few go in. Because you might say, it takes guts. It is much easier, to have everything pegged. To have everything fixed and dependable, so that you don’t have to be sensitive. You don’t have to be aware. You don’t have to be fully conscious.

And so, as you move into this practice, if you will, of being spontaneous in the moment and not responding to everything on the basis of what you have come to believe it is, you are from the standpoint of your old conditioning, becoming irresponsible. You are stepping out on the water, as it were. Not absolutely solid ground. You are catching the wave, as it were, and learning to be in a process of movement, rather than standing on solid ground; that will likely be there for ten thousand years. And if you never move, you’ll never have to think or be sensitive or responsive.

You are in a process of letting go of conditioned thinking and responding to life in the moment. And your old conditioning is hooking you and saying, “You are being irresponsible. You are breaking the rules. Therefore, you are being disobedient and punishment must be experienced.” And that threat, that suggestion, whispered out of the recesses of your memory; cause you to feel guilty and defensive. And that defensiveness, results in a physical tightening up, for self protection. As though, tensing up makes you more dense and, therefore, more invulnerable. And you use your body to defend yourself against the punishment, that has been whispered into your ear, as what is coming. And it is not the potential punishment that was whispered in your ear, that you are suffering from, but the fact that you are using your body, as a defense against this supposed punishment. Again, pain is always, the way you experience the presence of unacknowledged Good.

You are always confronted by one thing only, Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven. Now, I keep using the word Kingdom of Heaven; it simply means All That Is, experienced without any distorted perception at all, experienced as it is being expressed by the Life Principle, the Life Force, the Father/Mother, God. You are confronted always with that which is Real, with a capital “R.” And if you are defended against any aspect of it, for whatever reason, and you attempt to densify your body for solidity and protection like armor, you will experience pain.

Only value the pain as an indicator, that you are confronted by a good, that you are not embracing. There are times that you can simply acknowledge that, and there will be a spontaneous giving of permission to experience that good and the pain will fade, without ever having become aware of what the specific self-doubt or self-criticism or fear was. But if the pain doesn't spontaneously disappear, then as you did last night, allow yourself into it and pay attention to the emotional feeling, that is also present with the experience of physical pain. You may find, that it is a sense of worthlessness. You may find, that it is a feeling of being unloved. It may be a feeling, of being treated unjustly. But whatever it is that comes to your attention, once it has come to your attention, you will realize that it doesn't justify, it truly doesn't justify the degree of defense that you are bringing into play, and the misuse of your body that results and which results in pain. And the nonsensicalness of it, will trigger your willingness to let it go. It will be to ridiculous to continue to embrace.

Now, I say this cautiously, because there will be a tendency on the part of some of you in the room, and on the part of some of those who will eventually listen to the tapes; to begin to value pain and look for every opportunity, to get into it. And it isn't the focus on the pain, that is important. It is not resisting the pain, and giving your attention to the emotional feeling relative to yourself, that you find emerging.

Growth, is not in itself painful. Pain is not inherent in growth and enlightenment. It is only experienced when one is resisting it, because, one is seeing it as threatening to the status quo, or threatening to ones current sense of what is right and wrong. The growth is expanding you beyond your current limits. Just as the growth of your feet constituted an expansion beyond the size of the shoes you were wearing and your shoes began to get tight and uncomfortable.

Now, you are doing very well, in terms of becoming intelligently irresponsible. And you need to hear that. All of you need encouragement, as you are breaking old patterns, not to engage in self-criticism and self-doubt just because you are experiencing something new, that is causing your perspective to take on a new flavor, if you will. As children, all of you embraced growth, with enthusiasm and joy. And, there was great curiosity to see what remained yet undiscovered. But, as you have grown up and become adults, you have tried to become responsible. And, you have tightened up and begun to limit yourself and abide by the principles you were taught as a child. I will tell something, the principles were taught, so that you could become an adult, that you could survive, if you will, growing up.

Now, it is time to let the rules take second place. Just as the one learning in a simulator, must eventually give up the characteristics of that experiences, which were always absolutely safe, for actual engagement in driving on the freeway, for actual engagement in life, which is not predictable. And if you have grown up being told, never drive if you're not in a simulator or you will get twenty demerits. You will have to override that conditioning and access your freedom to be intelligent spontaneously and flowingly, on the spot, while engaged in the undependability, or shall I say, the forever freshness and newness of life itself.

This process of awakening, indeed, constitutes a next step, if you will, in your developing maturity, as what you Divinely are. I will tell you, once you get this point, once it really clicks with you, then as you proceed even further you will manage to be able to get past the whispering of disobedience in your ear more gracefully, without hooking into it and beginning to defend yourself, by densifying your body. I'll tell you something else, to the degree that you use your body as a defense, you are significantly identifying with and as body. And you become trapped further, in that you neglect to access the conscious experience of the infinite nature of your Being as Mind, as conscious awareness.

It is not outer space that it is time to explore, although that will happen, it is the infinite actuality of you, as conscious awareness, that constitutes the new threshold of exploration and discovery.

QUESTION: I need clarity about my nephew, John Dean. He's forty years old. He was a schizophrenic and then he was healed. And he has a great deal of determination. And has shown determination and effort to get a job. Which he has a nice job now, driving for a messenger service. And I've been assisting him, to get settled in his new place. He has a nice room with a family. And he's not capable of managing his own income. So I've got a budget set up and he brings me his check, and then I give him what he needs, for gas and food and so forth. And then we save each week towards his rent, that will come due.

But he disappeared all of a sudden. I got him settled in his place and no one's seen him for several days, since probably Thursday. Although, he may have been to work on Friday and I didn't happen to contact his work. So in the past, he did this once before, he took off for Las Vegas and spent all his money there and then came home broke.

But my question is, well, I could first ask, is he okay? And will he be back?

ANSWER: Indeed, the answer to both questions, is yes.

QUESTION: Okay, good. Did he go to Las Vegas? I might as well know that.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Okay, so he's following an old pattern. And it's been at least two years since he did this very same thing. So I want to know what my responsibilities are towards John? I've loaned him money, and I feel very comfortable about having done that. It'll either come back to me as income later on or it'll be a gift. And either way I'm comfortable with.

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt here. Your responsibility is not so much to him, as it is to yourself, monitoring or paying attention to yourself. So you see that you are never violating your own clearest sense of, what is appropriate for you. You must always do what allows you to remain in your comfort zone. And I mean that emotionally, as well as financially. As long as you are doing what feels right to you and is not jeopardizing you, then you are fulfilling your responsibility to yourself. And that will bless everyone around you.

Simply, don't do what is uncomfortable to you. Don't do what creates conflict or distress within you. And when you arrive at a point where you cannot do more, or perhaps you cannot continue to do what you have been doing and remain comfortable, then simply state, unapologetically, that you cannot do it.

Again, the responsibility, is for you to remain congruent with yourself. To do that which keeps you in your peace. Because it is only in your peace, that you easily have available to you, the perspective that allows you to be appropriate.

For instance, Paul was late this morning. And he was feeling responsible for all of you and how you might be feeling. And the fact, that he did not keep his word, etc. And he began to drive more hastily and, I will say, more unconsciously. And he rather quickly discovered, that he was feeling uncomfortable. And that this was not what he now recognizes, as natural to him. And he decided that what needed to happen, was for him to experience his peace, and let the chips fall where they may. He did recognize that if he continued to rile himself up, he would not be fit for sitting here and listening to me. And that he would at some point have to take the time, to become still, to become centered. And so, he chose to do it, on-the-spot, while he was driving.

And thus, he was able to get here safely and what we all were intent upon doing today, began. Now, he could still criticize himself. But what benefit would it have? The only thing that would result from it, would be that he would be less able to be appropriate in the moment. Less able to experience the order, the fulfillment, the meaning that each moment holds.

And so, if you truly want to be of help, pay attention to yourself. And do what you have to do, to be in your peace. Stay within your comfort zone. And don't defer to everyone else, because that will tie you up in knots, sooner or later. It is your integrity which needs to be expressed. And you will have to pay attention to yourself, to know what your integrity is, at any given moment and how it is best expressed in the world.

QUESTION: What my fear is, is when John was a schizophrenic, he was out on the streets. He chose this, cause he didn't want to be medicated, otherwise he could have been in a board and care home. But anyway, he got healed. But my fear is, of him being out on the streets, again, if I'm not available. Maybe I won't recognize that part of my integrity. I'm not sure. So that's my fear. And this is my ego, I know, drawing all these pictures that could happen.

ANSWER: Indeed, and it is also a false sense of what real help is. Because you are dealing with only one person and maybe two, in your life, that you are helping. The unreasonableness of your approach, does not stand out as much, as it would if you had a hundred or two hundred people.

You are not God. You are not your nephew's, capital "R," Resource. You are not, that which is embodied in your nephew. It is God, that is embodied in and as your nephew. And it is God, that is embodied in and as you.

Now, humanly speaking, as I said, you must pay attention to your comfort zone, and I mean, in extremely practical terms. And then you must also entrust your nephew to his Divinity, to the capital "S" Source, that is embodied in him, as him, truly. And you must not try to take on responsibility, that is God's. And you must dare to give him the freedom to explore his leading edges of discovery, whether they are in ways that you would choose for yourself or not. Be sure that in your process of helping, you are not taking on the position of controller, else you will find yourself beginning to feel burdened.

Now, the only way in which you will not recognize what is appropriate for you, is if you are not paying attention to yourself, but you are trying to fulfill a role or a concept of helper, of being the only one who can appropriately fulfill his need. The justification seems to come, that no one else will do it. Well his Divinity will. His Divinity, just as yours, is always operating in his experience, in spite of his ignorance, in spite of your ignorance, in spite of everyone's ignorance. Each one's Divinity, as I said yesterday, is insisting upon registering, is insisting upon penetrating whatever the false limits are that are binding one. And I will tell you something else, Love, Divine Love, always is able to manifest itself, in language of your current perception, in language of your current limitations. It is always able to register with you, as that which meets the need under the circumstances.

You are not God. And yet, God is all there is of You. But you are not here to function as the ultimate Resource, for another's well-being or Wholeness. And instead of making spontaneous assumptions, that he does not have within him what is needed for his well-being and, therefore, it falls to you, to be that. Correct it. Because you are projecting upon him as though it were a fact, your belief that he is incapable, that that essential something is not in him. And if he is believing that, he now has a partner in that belief, that strengthens it. And you are not able to be present as an agent for change in his life, which is really the meaning of a helper.

If you are going to help, truly help, you will be that which triggers the awareness in him, that he is Whole, that he has integrity, that he has what it takes. It has been said, that the best charity, is to show someone that he doesn't need charity. I encourage you to keep that in mind as your motto. That is truly Love. And that is truly helpful.

QUESTION: Raj, thank you so much. I can feel the Truth. And I can trust myself. I have the feeling that I can trust my feelings and just take a step at a time. And I'll know the best way to help myself and to help John, as I'm guided.

ANSWER: Indeed, it will be your emancipation. Remember to trust your feelings and not your emotions.

QUESTION: And if this had perhaps happened yesterday, at this time, I would say, "Raj, is this really happening." I don't have to. Because I know that I've made some tremendous progress, by coming. And I'm very deeply moved by it. And it could not have happened under any circumstances that I can see, except these right here. It had to happen in a workshop, I think. And I know it had to happen in a place where I fully trusted the leader, completely.

ANSWER: But you see, you are the one who had the trust.

QUESTION: Yes, I trust, I trust you completely.

ANSWER: It was all You.

QUESTION: I see that. And I believe I've hit the jackpot. And I don't have to ask you, I know I did. Its the very basis of many lifetimes of clearing the fear. I haven't done it. I've opened the door and I've opened the door quite a bit.

ANSWER: And when you, do the fresh air blows in. I say that, so you will not conceptualize, that you must now step over the threshold, before anything else can be experienced.

QUESTION: I feel, I have already done that. I already am there. I am there. And, of course, the main fear is based in the root chakra. And I had some wonderful conversations, wonderful conversations. And God bless those I've talked with. One woman especially, sitting across from me, Sally. God bless you. The work you've done with yourself, I'm so grateful, so grateful, what I've learned from you. And Raj, I ask you to qualify that, what I've learned. I know that's the direction I'm going. I know it. And, that's my question.

ANSWER: You are feeling and experiencing You, with a capital "Y." What you are feeling, is your integrity. I just encourage you, to remember that it is a moving thing. It is really, as though, at this moment you have climbed into your integrity, as though, it were a wagon or a vehicle. And if you continue to leave the door open, as you put it, and abide with it, it will move you. It is a feeling of congruence, with your capital "S" Self, that you are feeling. That is all I need to say.

QUESTION: My question was—I didn't make it clear. I'm interested in knowing—well, here I go with wanting to know again. Is it a matter of my just simply being patient and waiting and see how it all happens. Or I guess I'm just plain curious.

ANSWER: Well, you can be impatient and still wait to see how it all happens.

QUESTION: All right, lets do that. The conversations this morning from this lady, were about working with root chakra energy, through Eastern philosophies. And, a lot of that has come my way already, not a lot, but some of it has come my way, already. And I'm wondering if that is appropriate for me? Like for instance, what do I do about the?

ANSWER: The what?

QUESTION: The(?) The Eastern term for energy moving in an erratic way, at a point of time where there are high energy around.

ANSWER: In all cases, what is called for, is what I will call relaxing, letting go. That which blocks the flow, is the practice of control, of being tight, up-tight, tense, defensive. It is not that you need to do something, with the energy at the root chakra or at any other level. It is this willingness to give permission to let go, that allows the natural movement to occur, unhindered.

QUESTION: You spoke earlier today, about the patterns being broken. And, how important that is to move away from that mechanical repetitive way of responding to life. And I think I've broken a lot of patterns recently in the last couple of years, which has enabled me to move as I have recently.

ANSWER: And in each case, there has been a greater investment of trust in your essential Self. I'm not talking about your ego, but your essential Being. There has been a greater honoring of It. And that is why there has been an experience of emerging freedom. Continue.

QUESTION: In reference to this, concurrently with my decision to move away from the former patterns that I'd been in, a lady has come into my life, that I've known for some time, but has spent the last four or five years working on moving out of her patterns. And so, we have a great deal of freedom and equality, as we come together. And I'm very strongly moved to combine forces with her and move together, as we break other patterns, and continue to realize our Wholeness and to facilitate each other...

ANSWER: ...Could you repeat the last part of what you just said.

QUESTION: I would like you to comment on the feasibility of my combining forces with her, in a partnership arrangement, where we would work to facilitate the continued growth and development in each one of us, as a person and as a couple.

ANSWER: I will simply say, that it is feasible and that it is appropriate to allow it to unfold. And I will also tell you something else, you will not be moving into this relationship "on the rebound." Because you have not suddenly left the old pattern, but have left it over a period of time. And you are not in a state of reaction. You are in a place of noticing your greatly increased freedom, but you are not like a jack-in-a-box, that has just popped it's lid, where you are suddenly in a new frame of reference. Again, I encourage you to let this relationship unfold.

QUESTION: Yesterday, when I asked you the question about working together with a person in doing workshops and seminars, there was quite a smile on your face. And I'm wondering if you have any recollection as to why you were smiling.

ANSWER: Simply because, you were experiencing doubts about it, and it is so plainly appropriate. The doubts reflect a certain caution, out of habit, that is totally, uncalled for.

QUESTION: I believe that you defined love as, that which recognizes that which is Real...

ANSWER: Not that which recognizes, but the recognition, the action of recognizing, Yes.

QUESTION: Would you say more about that. I mean, it seems to be a matter of letting go of what you think you know, in order to recognize what is actually there.

ANSWER: Indeed, that is why the very first lesson in "A Course In Miracles" is, "Nothing that I see means anything." The purpose of that statement or that acknowledgment, is to jar one loose from his or her convictions, about the meaning of the thing. If there is a willingness to assume that you do not know what a thing means, there is a spontaneous activation of curiosity. If I don't know what this thing means, then what in the hell is it? In other words, there is an opening of a door of willingness, to understand what the thing is. Because, it is impossible for you to say, this doesn't mean anything and have it continue to be there in your experience, without beginning to experience wonder. I wonder, what it's doing here. I wonder, what it's purpose is.

You see, you all block yourself from further discovery, by assuming that you understand what a thing is, or that you understand who this individual is, in your experience. Except, that usually what you mean, when you understand what this individual is in your experience, is that they are what you perceive to be a set of behavioral patterns. And yet, if someone else looks at you, and treats you as though you are a set of behavioral patterns, you become indignant. It is insulting for any of you to feel, that you are nothing more than a statistic in an evaluative report somewhere. And that that report, by virtue of reflecting patterns of behavior, has captured the essence of you.

All of you are defended against experiencing Reality by means of your convictions, as to what a thing is, as though you now understand it. Actually, your reason for understanding a thing, for coming to an understanding, is so that you can quit giving it your attention. You have come to a belief, that there is a point that you are suppose to arrive at and where you have a grasp of everything, and you will, therefore, have "grown up" and won't have to learn anymore. And actually, learning is the definition of, embracing the ever new Movement of Creation, as it unfolds Itself.

The willingness to recognize the essential Moving Reality of a thing, is Love. And what love amounts to, is the willingness to be undefended against the experience of the Real meaning of a thing. Love is defenselessness. Love is a letting in. Love is extended, by letting in the full meaning of that which you are experiencing. And when I say a full Meaning, I mean Meaning with a capital "M", implying again, its Divine or True Meaning, without any perceptual distortion whatsoever.

You look at the plaster walls here, and you imagine that underneath the plaster walls is tar paper and chicken wire and nails, and underneath that are the studs and the plaster has been mixed, etc. So you sense or you have a feeling, that you grasp everything there is to grasp about it.

But I will tell you something, and some of you in this room have had the experience of an illumined state of awareness, where what you were observing, that looked like plaster or any other substance, was living, moving, its substance was love. And there was an absolute awareness, that it was the presence of God in expression. And thus, this plaster and lath and tar paper, etc., was discerned to be something far more Divine and far less mundane or material than you thought it was. Absolutely everything that you are observing and experiencing at this moment, is the manifestation of the Divine Movement of Creation, constituted of the substance of what God is, which is Love, Spirit, Life. Absolutely everything you see, whether it is the wood of this chair or whether it is these flowers, is alive. Not organically alive, as you think of life, but alive in that, it is, at this very moment, the active expression of the Father's intent. The active expression of the Movement of Infinite Divine Intelligence, the Life Principle, God.

If you are not having a direct experience of it, then you don't yet know what these things mean. Which means that you stand always on the threshold of discovery, if there is a little bit of curiosity and a willingness, not to be so sure of what you think you know. Love is the willingness to go out into your day and dare to see the presence of God. And much to Paul's dismay, I am going to say, that you even have the opportunity to experience that, on a crowded freeway, literally, a Holy experience.

Love, is—the willingness and the acknowledgment of—the willingness to acknowledge and the acknowledgment of that which is Real, with a capital “R,” in each and everything, in each and everyone. The fact that you think you understand what these flowers are or what this building is; literally limits you, literally confines you. Your conviction about their meaning, convicts you to that single limited perception. Love is the willingness to become defenseless enough, to let the Real Meaning of these things penetrate, at the level of experience. So that, you in your state of illumination, have the opportunity to discover that life Itself, right here, is a Divine experience, profoundly Holy. Which doesn't mean, profoundly religious. It means profoundly Whole, profoundly complete in every aspect. So that, the connection of the thing being observed with the Father, is inescapable.

Now, there is another aspect to this, and that is, that in this state of illumination, which truly is your natural state of Being; it is also an inescapable fact, that what you are observing and recognizing as the presence of the Father, is also inseparable from You. And You are inseparable from It. And the Love that constitutes Its substance is You, is inseparable from You. The absolute unity of it all, without loss of its infinite Individualized expression, becomes clear and you are embraced in that unity.

And what's more, in the moments of illumination that some of you have had that I am describing, you have not experienced any tininess. You have not experienced the limits of the ego. And what makes this experience profound and Holy, is because it is your Wholeness, your Infinity, that becomes apparent to you. And there is joy.

Remember when you hear the word Holy, don't think of churches, don't think of religions. Think of it in terms of Wholeness, an experience of indivisible

Wholeness, that you are not separated from. In which the unity of the infinite expression of God is experienced without any, I'm going to say divisiveness. The infinite expression of God, will still have infinitely diverse expressions or manifestations. But the diversity of them won't separate them from each other, nor will it separate them from you. Love is the willingness to have this experience. The willingness to acknowledge, right where you are, this experience of Wholeness and utter perfection. There isn't some place else to go to have it. Because, what is causing you not to experience it here, will cause you not to experience it there. It isn't in what you are observing, but it is in the manner that you are observing it, that the problem lies.

And it really is time to wake up. And it is only your conditioning and it is only the suggestions of your limited frame of reference, that causes you to assume, that it is going to take vast amounts of growth and refinement of your soul, before you can have that experience. And that is part of the dream that can occur, when you don't have your eyes open. And it might seem as though a great process must occur, to extricate yourself from the dream. And the only thing that needs to happen, is for your eyelids to flutter open. Which has nothing to do with any of the dynamics of the dream, you might be having while your eyelids are closed.

Now, I'm going to share a point with you. Many of you, as a result of your various studies, have heard the term dream used, relative to the human condition. And, of course, we are talking about waking up, awakening, etc. It is time now, for you to conceptualize or understand the word dream. Not to reflect a night dream, but a day dream, where you have become distracted by memory or even imagination, from what is Really going on, right where you are. You are where you are suppose to be. Reality is what is happening. But you are distracted from it, by a thought or an image or a series of images. In this way, you will be able to understand that what is needed, is not a heavy duty process of rousing yourself out of the heaviness of sleep and a night dream, but rather a simple shift of attention, back to what is going on right in front of you. And in this way, you will begin to understand, that you do not need to believe that there is a great deal of process that must occur, in order for you to have this experience of illumination, that I have described. The one element that is needed, is curiosity and the willingness to acknowledge what you will see, as a result of your curiosity, that is Love.

And so, each of you might as well start with the things that are right in front of you, the pain in your knee, the pain in your head, the relationship, whatever. And let that be the place or the point where you are willing to see the presence of God. And then watch, because sometimes the ego will say, "Oh boy, if I do that, then I'm really likely to get stuck in this relationship." No, Love emancipates. And what does not fulfill purpose to be together, will not end up being together. It is only in our ignorance, that we function inappropriately, incongruently, at odds with the divine order. But when love is practiced, when one is willing to acknowledge that which is Real in each and everything, then it becomes easy to allow each one and each thing, to be where it needs to be. And one doesn't compulsively grab for, that which one thinks identifies Reality. One lets go of a concept of Reality, for Reality itself. One lets go of a concept of fulfillment, for fulfillment itself. And so emancipation occurs, healing.

And then, let me ask you something. Does any of you know how to be intensely curious? Curious in a heavy duty manner? No. Curiosity, if it is curiosity, is always light, I will say, airy, not insubstantial. But there is a light-heartedness to curiosity. And the image of children in a park, chasing after a butterfly or a dog laughing gleefully, expresses the real nature of curiosity. And, of course, we are coming back to the subject of joy, because it is inseparable. So when you are curious to experience that which is Real in each and everything or each and everyone; don't do it with intensity, do it with curiosity and let there be a lightness to it.

You will find, however, that if you are willing for there to be lightness to it, you are going to have to let go of all the arguments you have against seeing what is Real. Because, those are heavy. You see someone you love and they are not behaving in a manner that is pleasant to be around. And they haven't behaved in a manner that's pleasant to be around, for ages. And now here they are again in your experience. And you brace yourself, because "experience has taught you," that its going to be the same again. Your reasoning, based on your experience and your memory, locks you into self-protection. And you approach this one, with no consideration of what might have happened since the last time you saw them. Because, of course, if something happened, it would have had to have been a miracle and miracles don't happen. And, in effect, you hold them to your old concept of them. And if they have begun to change, they find you to be a resistance to their expressing it. And you are not expressing Love. And your ego says, it is dangerous to express love, because then you are likely to be the brunt of their historically, substantiated likelihood of misbehaving now. And that is the way you defend yourself, against experiencing change in others.

Now, what I have been saying here in this example, relates to the human level of experience, let us say, a manner of behaving toward your fellowman, that psychologically certainly would promote change. If, indeed, you were willing to look at this one, with a sense of curiosity. But there is more to it than that. Because it isn't your goal and it isn't my goal, for you to just experience yourselves more happily in a social context. It is your goal and it is my goal, for you to experience each other in the Real context, the Divine context, the Infinite context of your Being. Where the Christ of your fellowman and the Christ of You, is being fully and profoundly experienced.

Now, let's be clear about the definition of the word Christ. The word Christ means, that conscious awareness of existence, that in no way holds itself separate from the Infinite Mind of God and God's perspective. It has nothing to do with a historical figure. It is the natural estate and nature of conscious individuality, at every point of its expression, at the point of every Individuality.

And when one has yielded to the Father, it means that one has yielded up a private, personal sense of conscious awareness and a private, personal definition of everything that is seen. Which, of course, is exactly what Adam and Eve did. They sat down and defined again, everything that had been created. They gave their own definition and lost the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, because they believed their definitions. And they lost the Kingdom of Heaven, right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And they did not make a new creation. And, they walked around in the Kingdom of Heaven and called it earth, the human condition.

The Christ is Individuality, which derives every meaning of its presence, only from the Father. And thus, does not experience a conscious experience of everything, different from what the Father intended it to be, by His act of Being the Infinite Movement of Creation. The Christ is conscious Individuality, experiencing the full Movement of God, because that Individuality, is claiming no separate sort of existence. It is what each one of You are. And the experience of it comes through the act of Love. The willingness to see that which is Real in each and everything. Which means, the willingness to abandon your firm convictions, in what everything is. To abandon your definitions. And the ego says, "abandon your definitions, and you will be left with chaos." And the fact is, that what you will be left with is Sanity, and the conscious experience of the absolute order and beauty and integrity and Wholeness of Being. And everything will be opened up to you. In Biblical terms "The veil will be lifted." The veil of ignorance.

So start with the little things, the immediate things, as I said, the headache, the sore knee, the sprained ankle, the chicken pox, the thin wallet, and let there be a curiosity to see what is Real.

Now, I realize that I am going on at some length here, but this is important. And it specifically addresses your question, and you did ask me to elaborate.

Be careful, because there is a tendency when you desire to know what is Real, to define that term Real, in old terms. If you want to know what is True or what is Real, you can come to the conclusion, that it is true that you live in an existence, which it would be a good idea to get out of. You could come to the conclusion, that it is true that this is a hell of an experience. You could come to the conclusion, that the truth about what you are experiencing, is very far removed from what God is. You could come to the conclusion, that what is true about what you are experiencing, is that, it is an illusion.

So, when I say, that love is the willingness to recognize or acknowledge that which is Real or that which is True; I am saying, that which relates to God; and the perfection, the unavoidable perfection, of the Movement of God, the Movement of Creation.

You need to be curious to see the perfection where the headache seems to be; the perfection where the sore knee is, the perfection where an unlovable ego, called you, seems to be. You are needing to be curious to see, that which goes beyond your present definition of who you are and what a thing is.

Contemplate the words, perfection, beauty, harmony, love, joy, integrity, wisdom; as expressions of the nature of the Movement of God. And, therefore, as the substance and the nature of You and of everything. These are not other worldly terms. They are not terms that apply to the afterlife. They are terms, that properly define what is Really going on here, and now.

Everyone says, in the by-and-by or after I pass on, I can expect to experience the Reality of God's Creation. And that is the way you deny yourself the experience, here. You say, in effect, "I am not going to give myself permission to experience it here, because I have come to the conclusion, that it is not here to be experienced, but after I die, it will." Well, I will tell you something: After you die—IF you do—you will find that the ignorance you were suffering from here, has accompanied you. And you will still find yourself in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, needing to give yourself permission, to experience it.

Love is a big word. It is a big word, the results of which, are life changing. But the act of Love, is simple. It is the willingness to acknowledge Divinity, right in the middle of your humanity. The willingness to allow the utterly, incredibly, perfect perception of the Movement of God, of the Movement of Life, with a capital "L," right now. And the willingness to let go of, the tendency to try to hold your walls in your current definition of them, and your fellowman in terms of your current definition of them. It is what will uncover your physical perfection. It is what will uncover your deathlessness. It is what will uncover the transformation of your world, and the transformation of your social behavior.

And if there is anything that this world needs right now, it is a little joy. You are having great manifestations of justification for joy on the world scene, or you have over the past two years. And even now, what seems to be spoiling the causes for joy that you have experienced, is constituted of an awkward outbreak of intelligence; and should not be interpreted in the manner that your media is presenting it, or even in terms of what some of your best thinkers are judging it to be. Now, I have talked enough. I have answered your question.

QUESTION: You were talking about perfection, a little, in the last answer. What is the perfection of the pain in the knee, or...

ANSWER: It is not the perfection of the pain. It is the perfection of the knee, which is painless. The simple fact is, that all of you do understand the word perfect. It means flawless. It means manifesting no conflict. Perfection feels good, looks good, smells good. So don't become confused and intellectually arrive at some complex explanation of perfection, that somehow embraces what is obviously imperfect.

QUESTION: How does something obviously imperfect exist, in the perfection?

ANSWER: How is it, that all of you can sit here this morning and not see Heaven? How is it, that you can sit here and appear to be nothing more than physical organisms? It is possible, because you do have imagination. And you can imagine anything you wish. And then you can take your imagination and you can treat it, as though it were Real. And you can give your imagination, defined as real, preference to Reality.

Like the student in the class room, gazing out the window, daydreaming about swimming down at the swimming hole, who is not hearing the explanation of a principle of mathematics. You can seem to exist in a space, meaning the classroom, without consciously embracing it. Now, if that child were to begin to behave in the classroom on the basis of his daydream, he would run into trouble. He would experience dissonance, such as bumping into a desk, or falling over a wastebasket. His actions based upon his daydream, would be incongruent with where he was. And the reality of where he was, would begin to interfere, would constitute a dissonant experience, simply because he was being incongruent.

You can, by virtue of resistance to Reality, experience Reality uncomfortably. The dissonance, no matter what form it takes, is always representative of your not being congruent with what is Real. The problem is, that most everyone gets caught up with the dissonance and bemoans his or her fate, rather than saying, "what does this dissonance represent?" So, that there can become an interest in becoming sensitive enough to what is True, to be congruent with it and experience the harmony; whether it is physical harmony, social harmony, national harmony, et cetera. Something is going on. Something Real is going on. If you are experiencing dissonance, it means you are not congruent with what is going on. And the incongruence or the dissonance should spontaneously foster a curiosity as to what is really going on, so that one can act congruently with it.

Now, the fundamental flaw, if you will. I will say, the fundamental error that is being made is, that everyone tends to define his experience, based on an assumption, that he or she is the physical organism he or she experiences himself or herself to be. And that, indeed, Darwin's theory is correct. And, therefore, everything that is going on, has no direct relationship to, let us say, a greater intelligence than physical intelligence. And when I say physical intelligence, I am speaking of natural atomic order, that has allowed for the formation of a universe and the appearance of life, because of a random joining of fundamental atomic structures, that have allowed for a spontaneous generation of what is called Life. The interpretation of existence. The interpretation of the conscious experience of being, that everyone is having, based solely upon, the evidence that can be gathered by the five physical senses, does not provide the opportunity to connect with, what I am telling you is the capital "R" Real knowledge of what is really going on. And from within that limited definition of Reality, that your scientist have arrived at up to this point. Based upon that limited understanding, you are locked into the belief that life and the body, which could be called a life support systems, is brief and temporary. And that, indeed, there is a point at which the body naturally reaches its peak, and then begins to decline, and become a less and less effective life support systems. That is a very limited comprehension of life.

Now, it is no accident, that down through the centuries of life, perceived as I have just described it, there have been seers. Seers in all countries and in all religions, who have been willing to listen, to be sensitive beyond the data gathering means of the five physical sense. And, indeed, they have, in so many words, allowed for the penetration, that I spoke of yesterday, of Reality. The penetration of the perspective of the Divine Mind, that really is what is moving and appearing as everything that you see. And as a result of there doing so and sharing it, you could say, that the further penetration of the human experience by what is Divine, has occurred. And to the degree that that penetration of the Divine has been embraced and even lived, and to the degree that the definition of man or the definition of the conscious experience of Being, has been based upon what has penetrated the human condition, there has been transformation. I mean by that, physical transformation, called healing. In many cases instantaneous healing. And this has left an indelible mark, historically speaking, that has served those who have experienced an awakening curiosity within themselves, to pursue their curiosity further.

And in the last hundred years, there has evolved, what has been called, metaphysics, and metaphysical healing. Which has been based upon a fundamental principle, that man is not the result of physical evolution, but is the direct expression of the infinite intelligence, of which all that you see is the manifestation. And as this new manner of self-identification has been embraced and, I will say loved. And as the conclusions that have been arrived at, based upon evolution, have been called into question, there have been more and more dramatic evidences of healing.

Now, the simple fact is, that everyone has, Divinely has, the capacity to view Reality forth-dimensionally, three-dimensionally, two-dimensionally or one-dimensionally. To view Reality, which is forth-dimensional, from any of the lesser dimensions, constitutes a limited experience of it, but doesn't change the Reality that is going on. But the more limited experience of it, is not natural to you. And so, it is not experienced comfortably. And that's something that is innately inherent in you, meaning your Divine origin asserts itself at some point, reminding you that your discomfort, your illnesses, your disease, your distress etc. don't represent.....?

?.....to generate the curiosity necessary to rouse yourself. Mankind is greatly more roused now, than a hundred years ago. And it is making it easier and easier for, what I'm going to call the Divine awareness of Reality, to register, and to grow, and to be embodied. So that those who have become enamored of the limited three-dimensional frame of reference, are beginning to be able to let go of their compulsive hold on it and to let go of, the apparent challenge that it represents.

Physical healing of every disease and even of, what I'm going to call, imbalanced proportions of the body, will occur, as one begins to make the shift from a body identification, to a mind identification. If you want to play with the essential factors of awakening and explore the possibilities, begin to take time observing everything from the standpoint of your awareness, rather than from the standpoint of you as a body, seeing. That is a very practical way of beginning to open up and to become defenseless.

And understand, as I said yesterday, that what you are in your Totality, what you Really are, in spite of the limited perception that you are using to experience it, is insisting upon reestablishing the integrity of its wholeness and undermine the false concepts that seem to separate part of it, from the rest of it. Meaning you in your present sense of yourself, from what you are in your Totality. And so the moment there begins to be slight curiosity, there is a weakening of the ego structures. And what you are in your Totality immediately takes advantage of the weakness, using it as a point of entry, thus connecting with you and inspiring you to further curiosity.

So you are not doing this all alone. You are not lifting yourself up by your boot straps. You have help from the rest of what you are, that you are not embracing at the moment. There is an intent of your Being, to experience its undivided integrity.

Your question is very much like asking, “I have eyes, how could it be that I might not see with them?” And I would say “well, if you simply close them for a moment, you’ll see that you are quite capable of experiencing an inability to see.” And yet there is no dysfunction going on. You are not blind. Likewise you can be the undistorted presence of and the embodiment of God, and yet seem not to experience it without there being any fundamental error or fundamental dysfunction in the Allness of God going on.

It is possible to experience Reality, from any of the four dimensions. And to experience it from the third or the second or the first, does not constitute a disobedience, it is simply an experience that is available. It is an experience of limitation. But I want all of you to know, that the fact that you are experiencing it, does not mean you have been disobedient. And although, it has been called the fall from grace, it does not constitute an act that elicits judgment from the Father.

You are not sinners, by virtue of having opted for a temporary experience of Reality, from the third level, as it were. But because it is an experience of limitation, and because it is engaging, and because it does cause you to feel small, rather than infinite; it does pull you into an ethic of defense, of challenge and of overcoming the challenge. And it becomes easy to forget to come back into your right mind, if you will. To come back into the infinite view, which it is natural for you to be experiencing. And the fact that one can tend to get stuck, and forget to come Home. And because, that stuckness represents a dissonant experience, does not mean that you are being punished. It just means, that there needs to be someone to say, “Hey, over this way, come on. Remember? Remember what it was like? Come on, ah that’s it! Come a little closer. We’re making it.” And that’s what I am doing. And that’s what your Being is doing, every time there is a little bit more illumination or penetration. Because, it is not natural for you to be stuck in this viewpoint.

QUESTION: This morning, Joyce, was speaking about humility and joy. The question that I had originally framed before I came into the group today, came out of a feeling of discomfort. And the word you used was dissonance. And I’ve been experiencing yesterday, and the word pride came to me, and still my question was around humility. And the way I experience it, is that although intellectually and conceptually and in some way with my heart, I accept and feel together with everyone. There is an emotional holdout, that always seems to—well not always, but less and less, but it did while in this situation—holds me like a step away, instead of in union and that’s very, its a real form of suffering for me.

And I remembered or dreamt or something, that when I was little, that the identification that we were all given as children, was that we were different, we didn't do things that other people did, and that difference made us better, and that it was something to be proud of. And intellectually I've known for a long time, how terribly set up we were, to feel separate always. And I have a sadness around that.

And then I came upon what humility was some years ago, which was that humility was not(?) Humility was in recognizing, that which is true and acting in accordance with it. So your use Raj, with the word humiliation, brought up this old past anguish and whatever I am experiencing here, brought up the feelings, of not quite having that wonderful sense of communion, of being totally with my companions.

I'd like to know what's the truth about that? And I'd really want to bridge that gap, and be where I have been a lot of the time recently, which is feeling like, like that wonderful feeling I'm just like everyone else and isn't that wonderful.

ANSWER: Indeed, that feeling of being like everyone else, does come at the end of, shall I say, the process of humiliation. Humiliation is, your process of coming to the end of your rope. And, literally, the rope I am speaking of, is the rope of roles. The rope of the masks, that you present to others, that causes you not to be seen. And yet, this mask that is presented, just a moment... is treated as though it really constitutes your identity. And again, I'm not addressing only you. Everyone is, to one degree or another, presenting their best face and as a result, not simply presenting who you are.

When you get to the end of your rope, you get to that point where you are so tired and exhausted, that you don't have the energy to put forward the mask. You don't have the energy to put forward your ego presentation of yourself, your good manners, your fulfilling certain expectations of others. And, of course, since that mask is what you have identified yourself as, this loss of the mask, truly feels like a loss of identity. It is when you let go of the rope, that you find yourself in the state of humility, because you simply have ceased to desire to put forward the mask, you have ceased to put any energy into it, and you are left with You.

What isn't immediately apparent as you let go of the rope, is that this you, that you will be left with, is what I will call, the You, with a capital "Y." Your essential Self, your honest expression of yourself. Not an honest expression of ego. But an honest, genuine presentation of, I'm going to put it this way, whoever you find yourself to be in that humility. Because of your conditioning, this feels very uncomfortable. The process of arriving there, feels very uncomfortable. But the freedom you feel and the joy that you feel, at being released from any self-directed obligation to put forward a mask, is Heavenly. It is not that you suddenly become an angel or suddenly exhibit Divine qualities, it amounts to coming to a point of utter self-acceptance. It is a matter of arriving at a point where you are not trying to be anything, you are not trying to be different from who you are and what you feel at that moment. This does not constitute a coming into an experience of your Divinity fully. What it constitutes, is arriving at a threshold where what you Divinely are, can begin to emerge.

One of the first things you notice, is that you feel a great stability, a great evenness within yourself. You become aware of how unsettling it had been, to attempt to put forward this face, this mask, this sense of being better than everyone else, that there was something significantly unique about you, that set you apart and above everyone else. This evenness, this equilibrium, is a real direct experience of the peace of your Being, your Divine nature. And what also emerges, is a conscious awareness of what you are feeling, is Divine. What you are feeling about yourself is Divine, is Holy, in the sense of being Whole, as I said. This still does not constitute a full embrace of what you Divinely are. These are the first emerging glimpses at an experiential level.

You begin to discover that what your ego had defined as a problem, is the solution. The ego says, to be humiliated is a problem. But to come to the end of humiliation and let go of it, and move into the experience of your humility, is the solution. When you come into this experience of humility, you make no claim to know anything, there isn't even that much arrogance. And there is a willingness to insist upon not knowing anything of yourself, based upon your past experience or your best judgments. And that is the element that contributes to this direct experience of the Divinity, the Holiness of You, the God connectedness of You.

And then is when a realization occurs, that you in your essential humanity, you in your essential humanness, are the ultimate, that is where your Divinity is. And because you have discovered that your Divinity lies in your essential humanness, it is inescapably obvious to you, that because everyone else is also human, this must be true about them as well. And that is when you experience being the same. Except that this sameness, at the level of simple humanness, turns out to be Divine and that is a cause of great joy within you. And then you find yourself, because of feeling identical with them, able to relate to them, without your mask. And because you are coming to them undefended, they immediately recognize that they do not need to be defended with you. And this is the way transformation begins.

Again, this is inseparable from the act of love. Letting go of the rope, letting go of the mask, is the releasing of defense, whereby, it is possible for you to let in the recognition of what is Real in your fellowman. It happens to be very undramatic, the happening of it does, but the impact of it is quite great, not overwhelming, but most significant.

If you want to know more than you know, then you have to erase from the blackboard, as it were, of your mind, what you know. Or, at least, you have to be willing to not let it be standing out so boldly, that there is no room for anything else to replace it. And that is why, I have referred to it in the past, as the not knowing place, the void.

In no longer being present as the mask or face that you put forward to the world, and being present without that sort of self-identification, you have the opportunity to discover what it is that has always been present behind the mask. And what is present behind the mask, is, indeed, the presence of God. The presence of You in your unapologetic genuineness. The key to genuineness is, being free of an attempt to be anything, and just to be present.

That which was distressing to you yesterday, was the fact that you thought you knew what needed to happen. Or you thought you knew what was appropriate, and what was happening was not what you thought was appropriate. Your thinking got in the way. When that happens it is well to say, “I don’t know what needs to happen. The I, that thinks it knows what needs to happen, is an illusion, a mask. I am going to be still. I am not going to activate this reaction. And I am going to pay attention to what is happening, to see the fullness of it. I am going to yield to the flow and not wish it was different. I am going to allow myself not to know, so that I might become aware of what I need to know.”

QUESTION: It’s funny, this has to do with humility too. I’ve never really understood the idea of humility, as a virtue. Certainly, we’re taught in this world, to act in the opposite way. And then I think about the memo, in the S&L scandal, that the sales people, who were trying to sell the junk bonds, wrote among themselves, where they were instructed to prey upon the weak, the meek and the easily deceived, or something like that. I wonder if you could, Raj, if you could talk about the phrase, “the meek shall inherit the earth.” What the word meek means there and what it means to inherit the earth?

ANSWER: Indeed, there is a connection between the meek and the humble. Out of what, does arrogance arise? It arises out of a fundamental belief, self-belief, of incapacity and incompleteness. I mentioned earlier, that within the three-dimensional frame of reference, there is the experience of challenge and then the thrill and ultimate pride of overcoming the challenge. The only reason there seems to be a challenge, is because one is not experiencing himself wholly, w-h-o-l-l-y, and thus experiencing all that is going on within his wholeness, with perspective.

When one is experiencing himself in a partial way, he feels as though he is a small part of the totality, of things. That is a misperception. But if it is accepted as true, then life becomes something to cope with, instead of experience the harmony of. And so, one begins to try to achieve control. One becomes arrogant, assertive. But this assertiveness arises out of an incomplete perception, that is being taken as though it is total. And so, it becomes a compulsive act, that is not based upon clear balanced perspective. Ones acts inevitably occur at odds with Reality, at odds with what is going on, as the Movement of Creation.

When one has adopted this stance, when one has accepted it and identified with it, then the concept of meekness, is equated with vulnerability and stupidity. The statement “to prey upon the meek,” can only be made in the absence of an understanding of what the word meek means. It interprets the word meek, to mean vulnerable and stupid. But meekness and humility constitute a description or definition, of one who is not behaving out from a sense of incompleteness, because there is a very significant groundedness that that one is experiencing. There is not a feeling of vulnerability that that one is experiencing, and thus his perception is not biased by a need for self-protection.

And in this marvelous state of equilibrium, one cannot be taken advantage of, because one is not overlooking himself and being dishonest, to impress others or to protect oneself from others. The meek cannot be violated. The meek cannot be used or abused, because they are so in touch with themselves and so unapologetically, unafraid to declare themselves, as who they are at the moment, that there is no opportunity for deception to occur. It is only when one is unself-conscious that he can be deceived.

“The meek shall inherit the earth.” The only thing is, that to the meek the earth is Heaven. And they inherit Heaven, because they are allowing themselves to be the Christ. They are allowing themselves to be the threshold of the perception of Reality.

QUESTION: Raj, you have talked about pain, as originating in a mental pattern. I have noticed that behaviors, responding to another persons behavior or responding to a situation, are also patterned. In other words, you can recreate a certain behavior, trigger a certain behavior, repetitively. A parent can do that with a child, relationships. I asked a similar question yesterday, and I want an elaboration, please, today.

When you talk about, all things seem to originate as a thought, a lot of our activities, behaviors, pain, etc., seem to have a basis in thought. Some thoughts such as, where to have dinner or what to wear, are readily changeable. Other thoughts, which are reactions, behavior patterns, are very difficult to change. Can thoughts be like mental computers, or mental templates, where they're reproducible almost as a physical reaction is reproducible? So that that is why we have difficulty releasing certain behavior patterns, because they are almost as tangible as physical reactions. In other words, are there levels of thought, almost like a physical level of reaction? Does that question make sense?

ANSWER: Indeed. I'm going to put it this way, right as you sit there at this very instant, there is present a body of light. Right there where you seem to be experiencing a dense, physical, organic body, it is perfectly visible to me, as the body of light, that is the real manifestation; or shall I say, the True manifestation of You.

Now literally, as one moves from the forth-dimensional conscious experience of Being, the undistorted conscious experience of Being, to the three-dimensional frame of reference; the body of light moves with that one into that frame of reference, it is not immediately, shall I say, snuffed out. But as one becomes involved with the, shall I say, unusual and distracting elements of the three-dimensional frame of reference and the means of experiencing it and begins to feel the way everything appears; in other words, tiny, a small part of something infinite, and one begins to feel a need for defensiveness; one begins to tense up, to become tighter.

In other words, one begins to create, by virtue of the need for defensiveness or the perceived need for defensiveness, to contract and create a shell, where this, I'm going to say intangible body of light has been. As this closing down occurs, as this act of defensiveness occurs, it is almost as though the atoms, the energy of the light; becomes so densely packed, that it begins to block off the light. Now mind you, this is still happening at very subtle levels of energy, if you will. But as it continues, the body begins to not show forth the light, at least, from your point of perception. And there is a certain relief at that, because you now have a more solid feeling of presence, that seems to give you a feeling of being less vulnerable. And eventually you arrive at a point, where you are experiencing your body as you now experience it. Mind you, I said, as you are now experiencing it, because, in fact, every single one of you in this room, is grandly illuminating this room with the effulgence of the light that you are. But you are not experiencing it, because of the mental act of defensiveness that you are engaged in and which seems to be justified by your environment, your circumstances and the fact, that you do not feel your Wholeness, your Infinity.

Now, now we have arrived at a level of, what you would call physicality, it is not subtle any more. We are not talking about subtle defensiveness, we are talking about physical defensiveness. For those of you who are students of the "Course," this whole process, describes using your body improperly, using it as a defense, using it as a tool of defense. Now, once you arrive at the level of a physical dense experience of what cannot actually be changed from a body of light, you then still find yourself still needing to protect yourself.

And so, after the experience of birth, and as you are becoming familiar with this experience, certain events in your life trigger your perceived need for further defense. And you pick away, you pick a pattern, if you will, to densify your body further. And you do this by tensing it up. You do this by, almost literally, solidifying it, so as to give you an even greater sense of impenetrability and, therefore, greater safety. And, indeed, your mother may have at one time, for the first time, said (very loud), “Leslie;” and you responded spontaneously and tightened up a part of your body, to gain your equilibrium after the surprise of the tone of voice and the way it was said. And then the next time it was said that way, you spontaneously repeated it. You had established a pattern of self-protection.

Now, the patterns are not inherent in the form, and they are not inherent in the idea, they are inherent in the spontaneous way in which you used your body to provide further protection. And so, indeed, it is as though you create a pattern of response, that repeats itself, until you finally, at some point, invalidate that pattern and simply do not utilize it again.

You could call this programming, in the sense of computer programming. But the first time in which that particular response was used, was totally original. I’m not meaning Divinely original, but totally original in the use of the body in that way. And so, it isn’t as though there is a mental body, behind the physical body, that has a structure of its own. But there are ways in which you have used the body, that have established a pattern, that I suppose you could call a mental body, because it is a mental way of using the body for defense, that is always consistent.

It is, as though you create a groove, that it is easy to slip into and establish your safety, through the use of your body, as a means of defense. Now, this means that the habit is not in your body, physical or mental body, the habit is entirely mental, but not as a mental body. And the moment that you release yourself from the supposed need to protect yourself, from your mother, or your mate, or your environment, what happens is, you don’t spontaneously use that avenue anymore and you can be instantaneously release from that pattern.

Now it is important to understand this, so that you don’t conceptualize that there is a physical body that must go through a change, and there is a mental body that must go through a change, before you will be released from this habit. A simple shift of attention, a simple shift of consciousness, is all that it takes. And something as simple as the statement in your mind that, “this pain that I am experiencing is illegitimate,” may be all that is needed to make that shift. A simple remark, “that’s ridiculous!” made in an off handed manner, but one that expresses the truth to you, maybe all that it takes for the spontaneous instantaneous release from that pattern of behavior.

I encourage you, I encourage all of you, but I specifically encourage you, to play around with off handed remarks, that disqualify or negate what have been standard patterns of response. You are likely to find them working in releasing you from spontaneous physical problems, that have occurred in the past, out of that simple habit, that I have described.

QUESTION: So then, by releasing habit patterns progressively over time, do you release or relieve physical density, which allows you to then perceive your own light better?

ANSWER: Indeed, yes. And actually, through out the weekend here, everything that I have been saying, has been addressing each of you individually, relative to your making a shift of consciousness, that spontaneously triggers the release. So that, you might experience yourself leaving the weekend and subsequently discovering that changes have occurred, that you did not have to work hard for. So that, you might then allow yourself to become lighter, less intense, less concentrated in your spiritual growth. And thus, might effect the shifts, without the hard work, that you have engaged in, in the past.

QUESTION: Raj, something you just said, reminded me of a time, about five years ago, when I started feeling a severe pain in my side. And it just occurred to me, out of the blue, a line kind of from the “Course,” but it seemed to come to me, very spontaneously, “I’m a Holy Son of God and I cannot suffer,” And the attitude was, “this was ridiculous, that I have this pain.” And the pain went away. And it was a kind of chronic pain that I had been having for weeks and it went away and was gone for quite some time. I’ve had it since then but, I haven’t been able to repeat that kind of experience. It’s just that, at that point in time, it wasn’t just an affirmation or something, it was something I actually thought. And so, you spoke to this and if you could say anymore, that might be helpful in how to do that some more. That wasn’t my original question, but it occurs to me anyway.

ANSWER: It will be easier for you to make such an off handed comment in your mind, if you will embrace the fact, that pain and illness and every manifestation of imperfection, is an illegitimate imposition upon your birthright to experience your perfection. Even just the acknowledgment that this is illegitimate, whether it is the headache or whether it is the knee or whatever it might be, may be all that is needed to facilitate this shift, which actually constitutes a withdrawal of an investment of trust or faith in the condition you are experiencing.

Now, the reason it is important to know that these things are illegitimate, is because the word illegitimate means, having no valid source. And, therefore, it constitutes an invalid phenomenon or illusion. The best way to release an illusion, is in an off handed way. Because, in effect, you are not honoring it enough to get intense about it. The way to dismiss something that is invalid from your experience, is literally, in one way or another, to laugh at it. To not be serious about it. Because, the moment you become serious and intent about it, you are treating it as though it has substance that requires that kind of concentrated intention, concentrated attention.

QUESTION: Isn't that sometimes denial, psychological denial, therefore, making it stronger, my belief in the thing that I'm trying to tell myself is not real. And how would I know the difference.

PAUL: This is me Paul. Would you restate the question?

QUESTION: Yes. To do that sometimes, would seem like psychological denial. And, thereby, making it stronger, the belief in the pain or whatever. Am I correct in that?

ANSWER: The word denial is too strong a meaning. Denial is an attempt to annihilate.

You must rather be like a King, who is giving audience to his subjects, on a particular day of the week. And one of his subjects comes into his presence with a frivolous thing, that the King knows he doesn't have time for. And so, he simply dismisses the subject from his presence, "you are dismissed, next." He does not deny the existence of that subject. He does not get into a process of removing him from his experience. He knows his authority. He says, "you are dismissed, next," immediately shifting his attention to the next subject, who is waiting for audience with him. The King's guards will eject the subject that has been dismissed, if that subject does not want to leave, but the King knows that is not his job. He dismisses him, in the way he would wave off a fly. That is not denial. That is not engagement in conflict or contest. It is just an awareness, that it is not something that you have to deal with, because it is not legitimate.

QUESTION: So, I've been going to a therapist for about the last month or so. And the goal is, for me to become aware of things I'm defending against. To become aware of the ways, that I defend against being in touch with myself. It's like, we're searching to recognize what defenses I'm using, getting sleepy or being preoccupied with things that are not.....? About a year ago, I think, I asked you if therapy would be a good idea for me, specifically, and you said no. And now I'm doing it.

ANSWER: And how is it going?

QUESTION: I think it's going okay. I think I've had some awareness', well I have had a couple of awareness'. I've become aware of some kind of chronic anger and sort of a cruel streak in myself. My question I guess is, is for me personally, is continuing therapy a useful thing for me to do? And in a larger sense, is continuing to look for things, that are ways, that I'm holding myself back a functional thing to do.

ANSWER: It is appropriate and valuable, for you to continue with the therapy. It is not particularly productive for you to go on an internal witch hunt. What is of value is, for you to have the conscious intent, as you go through your days, aside from the time you spend with the therapist, with the intent to be present with what is going on. Because, your intent to be present with what is going on, is what will bring into play, any habits of resistance that you unconsciously utilize. And then, you will feel yourself being distracted from being present with what is going on. And because, you are doing this consciously, you will be able to notice those things which will need to be dealt with, with the therapist.

You see, it is the conscious intent to actively engage in life by being present with it, that will uncover spontaneously those techniques that you have developed, for avoiding experiencing life directly. Don't just sit there in the therapy session, racking your mind to find out how you might be blocking the full experience of your life. Actively engage in your life, and you will naturally come up against those blocks, that you habitually bring into play.

There is an additional point here. Those things which will come up, are the things that you will be most ready to deal with and release. And once having released them, then you will find yourself being confronted with subtler means of defense. And those subtler means of defense, cannot be dealt with appropriately, without the grosser means of defense being dealt with first. But, if you sit, going through a mental or an intellectual process, you may attempt to deal with some of the subtler things first, and find no real progress occurring.

The key is, the active engagement with life, the conscious intent to be present with it, while at the same time being alert for the experiences of withdrawal that happen "against your will." Then you will have the material that is ready to be dealt with, to take with you into therapy. Or to consider within yourself, with the desire to experience illumination relative to them, so that you can release them, without the therapist.

The key is to handle them in their proper order and their proper order will be uncovered, as you consciously and, shall I say, conscientiously engage in living.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask you about Mitreya. And any clarification you can give me about his relationship with you, and his present circumstances or—let me be more specific—I guess any clarity that you can—and then to the whole topic of Mitreya and the fact that—so you hear that he is living in London. And exactly who this being is, in relation to Jesus, Buddha, you know, all of the great masters. And specifically address this whole phenomenon of the crosses of light, that keep appearing now in the most mundane places, like peoples bathroom windows and things. But I am very, very interested in Mitreya and hear little dribbles of things and have read some of the Alice Bailey material and know that there’s been, you know, kind of a gradual release of more focused information about him.

ANSWER: I will tell you, that the gradual release is quite orderly, and literally, it is not appropriate for me to gradually release a little more, at this time. Now, the presence of Mitreya, the presence of Myself, but not in physical form, on your globe and the presence of other phenomenon around your globe, are all manifestations calculated to trigger a solid conviction, if you will, within mankind. That the spiritual teachings that have been handed down, have been based in fact and not fantasy. That they are still relevant to the age in which you live. And that, indeed, there is more to the conscious experience of being, on your planet, than you are presently experiencing. So, as to instill the curiosity necessary to give permission to yourself to experience the more, that is present to be experienced.

Now, as I have said before, at this time there is some question as to whether or not it will fulfill purpose for Mitreya to make his presence known, globally. The process of awakening, the shifting of consciousness that has been represented by the events and the changes in Russia, as well as in Germany, and so on, are beginning to obviate the necessity of a fully manifested man on your globe, for the purpose of promoting or facilitating, the more rapid process of the shift of consciousness. Nevertheless, he is still at work, but not in the forefront.

And also, as I have said before, there is one other Individuality on your globe, who was not born into your experience. He is just being on your planet. As I said, He is or appears to be an itinerant traveler in the Himalayas. But He, together with Mitreya and Myself and others, that you do not even know of, who are not on your globe, are helping to support, what I will call the tone. As some of you might put it, the vibration of Love, that supports the experience of inner security, that allows those who are curious, to give permission to experience awakening. To experience the influx of revelation and enlightenment, of the sort that we have been talking about this weekend. I mean by that, the very practical, down to earth, experiences of physical healing, of experiencing the forms in your world as alive and constituted of living Love.

We cannot force any of you, as I said, to awaken, but we can support, by joining with you at the level of your Divinity and your willingness, your giving yourself permission.

It isn't so much the presence of Mitreya and Myself or anyone else that is important. It is the movement of dawning awareness, of enlightenment, of the embracing of the truth about you, in you. That is important.

And so, I do encourage you not be too curious about teachers. Because, I will tell you something, if there are going to be teachers here, someone is going to be the student. And that means, that the student will be engaged in his growth, and the teacher won't be the focal point. So don't be too quick to want a teacher, unless you want to experience the growth. That is not a threat, it is just a fact. And I do not want you to be side tract by some grand sense of what a teacher is. A teacher is that which promotes growth. Where, in the teacher? No, in the student.

I am helping to promote a shift of awareness in those who are listening to me, which allows them to engage their growth, totally as a result of their own inner desire, rather than, because they are being nudged by a teacher. So, that you might feel the integrity of you, in every step of your progress and thus avoid the tendency to acknowledge the integrity of the teacher.

I thank you for asking that question. There is one other thing, you asked what is my relationship to Mitreya? You must understand, that my relationship, is with the Father. Mitreya's relationship, is with the Father. And because we are claiming no other mind except the Mind of God, and because we are not functioning out of a mind separate from God, we are each acting in concert, you might say. Not by virtue of mutual agreement and not by virtue of position, but by virtue of the fact that we are expressing the indivisible, nonconflicting, harmonious, integrity of God's Will.

My oneness with you is not through space. My oneness with you, exists by virtue of the fact, that God is all there is of Me, and God is all there is of You. And the unity and congruence of that, is truly only experiencible, as one gives up a sense of private selfhood, which we have called the ego.

QUESTION: And my follow up was, that Mitreya refers to the crosses of light, that have appeared, say in Monrovia here or in someone's bathroom window or some very mundane place. And I recently heard, I think it was last week on the news, that one had appeared in a bathroom window in Louisiana. And I wondered what, if there was any substance to these crosses of light?

ANSWER: Absolutely, these are the phenomena that cannot be explained, that get the attention of the people and open them up, reluctantly though it may be, to the fact that, there is more to Reality than what is being consciously embraced, at the moment. And that there are laws, let us say, above and beyond, what are called physical laws, that operate and are actually governing, what you call the universe. They are triggers that cut through the reasoning, and illuminate the fact that you don't know. They spontaneously move individuals into the not knowing place, which immediately, as I said, brings into play, curiosity, which opens the door. And there will be more and more signs.

QUESTION: I have two questions that I would ask of you, relative to the last discussion I had with Paul, before lunch. But before I do, I would like to follow up with the issue of humility. And I think it was rather well followed up by the questions concerning neatness, specifically applicable, was also the questions concerning behavior patterns and the difficulty overcoming them.

I have for a substantial period of time, been going through various processes of self-evaluation in many different forms and manners, to try and divest myself of some of the arrogance and some of the masks, that I find myself wearing in public, and even in my private relationships.

And I have found that it is extremely difficult. It involves a process beyond mere recognition and mere observation and throwing aside, to adopt a new form and getting in touch with yourself. It's an extremely difficult process, even after recognition, there becomes a period of stagnation. I guess, where your fear of change wrestles with your recognition that such change must take place.

Overcoming that fear is one aspect, which I think I appreciate and I'd like to avoid discussion necessarily created with that, but to focus on the process of overcoming those steps, which are really in addition significant to progress, in that evolution of self, recognition of self. I would like to hear your comments on what processes you would feel would be tailored, and I hate to be selfish, but to me, for that. And, I say I hate to be selfish, I want to be, but I hope everybody else will understand this is a question of import to me. And I feel that it will allow me to relate to other people and to my environment on all levels, in a much better and more significant manner.

I would like to have some insight into this aspect of change and personal growth techniques. I might use, ways I might adopt, to approach this.

ANSWER: You are quite correct in your observation, that this process is not always easy. I point out, that it is not necessarily hard, but the fact is, that if it's easiness were perceived, more people would have already woken up.

One does not let go easily, of those things which have provided a sense of security. More than anything, I have been meaning to communicate the reasonableness, the desireableness, of breaking old habits and the justification for it. And that, indeed, it isn't a matter of creating something entirely new out of yourself, but uncovering the greater aspects of yourself, which you have not been accessing. This in itself, conveys the fact, that it is not the laborious hard work, that it would be if, indeed, you were creating something entirely new in yourself.

Now, you will not overcome old habits and access new more genuine parts of yourself, if there is not a desire. If there is not an inner motivation. And if there is not an inner motivation to do so, it does not mean that something is wrong. As I indicated yesterday and earlier today, that of you in your totality which you are not currently accessing, is insistent upon registering with you, with everyone. And so, there is this constant, you might say, undermining, pestering of the ego structures which do confine you, even though you may not be uncomfortable within them, at the moment. Therefore, you can trust that as a natural course of events, an unsettling will occur, which will give rise to motivation or curiosity...

QUESTION: Raj, I'd like to interrupt you just a minute.

ANSWER: Okay.

QUESTION: I don't think the problem for me, is a motivational one. I recognize and desire change in these areas of my life. Specifically, in my manner of approaching and addressing others, and the way that I express who I am, and knowing myself. And I think, that's more an area of change, instead of recognizing that I need to work with this, I've been doing this for some time. And I recognize the aspects that I wish to change, to a large extent, I'm sure I don't recognize all of them. But I'm having difficulty overcoming the set behavioral patterns that I have.

I can relate them back to my childhood, my upbringing; my father, how he was; my mother, how she was; my brothers, how they were and all these things. But they don't seem to help me. I guess, I work better with a process or a procedure, that I can understand. I don't see myself breaking through these behavior patterns, even though I desire to do that. I don't think they're terrible wrongful or destructive, but I do think that they have to have an inhibiting factor, into what my fullest potential could be.

ANSWER: Indeed, what I was leading up to was, that you can dare to allow yourself to be exactly where you are. Because, whatever is needed to promote the release of the mask, will naturally come forth. It is the same as I put it yesterday, regarding your son, when I was speaking to your wife. That she does not need to feel personally responsible for being the ultimate resource for him, because there is that in him which is insistent upon taking hold of the fullest potentials. And it is the same with you.

You are already abiding with a desire to be more genuine, to allow who you are, rather than old patterns of behavior, to be what comes forth and not be colored by the old patterns. That desire in itself and abiding with it, is what will provide the degree of attentiveness needed for you to, shall I say, open up. And there is not a call for you to apply yourself more specifically than you already are, else the process will become laborious, when it does not need to.

You see, what I was bringing out, was that there is a natural movement in you, just as in everyone else, that does promote your being on your leading edge and moving over it. And it is already happening with you, in language of your work, in language of your life. It is commendable that you consciously desire to facilitate this, but it doesn't call for you to do anymore than you are already doing. And you need to know that, so that you may allow yourself to be where you are, engaging in this process, in the way you are engaging in it, and be at peace.

QUESTION: In essence then, you are reiterating your advice of yesterday, that I need great patience. And must continue with my efforts, as I am. Would that be paraphrasing what you...

ANSWER: I am saying that patience is needed, because there is no need for patience. I mean that, you are right where you need to be. It isn't someplace else that you need to be. And you, in the language of your own experience, are doing what I will call, threshold work. Even though it may not be the same threshold that your wife is on, or the language of the threshold, may not be the same language as hers.

QUESTION: That brings me to the second questions, actually set of questions. Recognizing that my wife and I have in these ways some significant differences and in that, I point out, that I know we have a loving relationship, and that there is a lot that keeps us together and there is mutual interest that we also share.

It seems to be a source of frustration, I feel probably more for my wife, than for me. That she's so willing to fly, if I can express it that way, with concepts of self and concepts of meaning and life and activity and relations. And my interests have not been devoted in a strong way, in this area. My interests have been more on an either pragmatic or day-to-day basis. I don't know whether I would say materialistic, but there is an element of that I'm sure.

Is there a way that I can foster and support my wife's interest, that will be more comforting to her, while being honest with my interests, as they are?

And the second part of that question, which I'm sure will relate. Obviously, I have a very beautiful young child, both my wife. And any comments you have with regard to appropriately approaching these subjects with him or in growth with him, would be appreciated as well.

ANSWER: It is important for the two of you within the relationship, to emphasize those avenues of connection, that do already exist. And not allow them to be demeaned or minimized, because there are a couple of other areas where you are not meeting or interfacing well. It is so important to understand, that the elements of relationships which have substance, are the elements of love, and communion where they exist. And again I say, it is important for those elements of communion that do exist, not to be undermined by the elements where that communion does not yet exist.

It is not possible for you at the moment, to, shall I say, be a stimulating partner, relative to her particular engagement in her spiritual growth. But that does not mean that you are not engaged in your spiritual growth. I encourage you not to try to be something you are not, and not to try to do something you cannot do. But what you can do, do. Where the communion exist, I encourage both of you to value IT. Because, it will serve as a foundation for expansion and growth, where it really matters.

In that environment, in the peace and the joy of it, it will be possible for the two of you to ease up and come to a greater sense of peace. That will contribute to and allow for, let us say, expansion that will allow for either a direct interface or, what I am going to call, an interface by virtue of translation. Where the same elements that are operating in your experience and your growth, which come to you, in other words, than the words she is familiar with, will become identifiable as interchangeable, and you will be able to say, "Yes I understand what you are saying, because with me it happens this way." And dialog will be able to open up, without a requirement for both of you to speak without translation.

It is perfectly all right for translation to come into play, and for the two of you not to speak the identical language. And there is an added advantage to this, because the ability to make the translation will broaden both of you. And help both of you to come to a mutual understanding, that it isn't the language that is important, but the experience.

You both have the opportunity to discover that you are doing leading edge work, if you will, that is of equal value or significance, even though the language of that leading edge work is different for the two of you. The fact is, that the difference will contribute to stimulating even further growth, without narrowing things down into such a myopic or limited manner of expression.

But I will tell you something, again, it is not the language of your growth that matters in your relationship, it is the places where you are experiencing communion. Lock on to those and value them, because they have substance. And because there are so many people who are together, who are not experiencing communion, but are insisting on remaining together.

QUESTION: I hate to do this, but I just want to ask. There's a tremendous amount of frustration, because of the significance of these areas. Frustration on my wife's behalf, because she wants to fly with her life-mate. Frustration on my behalf, because I want very much to be with my wife and to be able to support her this way, but also to be honest with myself.

And I really appreciate your answer, because I think it was very significant to me. But, how do you deal with the moments of, I would say, conflict? But it's not really conflict, it's more like an explosion.

ANSWER: I will tell you, this is a place where humility comes into play. Fly in the areas where communion exists. I realize that I am being monotonous here. But fly together where the connection exists. Valuing that connection and flying together where you connect, as I said, will broaden the base of your love, will broaden the base of your communion. So that, ultimately, it can embrace these areas where you cannot fly together at the moment. But don't undermine the essential relationship, by insisting on flying together in areas that you can't.

The place where the humility is going to have to come into play, is literally, on your wife's part. Because, she is the one who is so desirous of being able to fly in this language, with you. The humility and the simpleness of flying together where communion does exist, will seal your union, if I may put it that way, and provide the bases upon which the two of you can grow together, expand together, with substance and duration to the relationship.

Fly where you do connect. Fly together in the areas that you do connect. This is very practical advice for all of you. Fly where things work. Do what works. Love yourself as you are. And in the environment of that love, you will find your capacities expanding. But, if you hold yourselves, in one way or another, to be less than you ought to be, and then you criticize yourself for it, even though in many areas you are all that you ought to be, at the moment. You will lose the stability of the awareness of the areas in which you are all that you ought to be, at the moment. And you will create for yourself, an on going experience of frustration, which is not a contributing factor to your expansion and growth.

I have made the statement before, to always work with the clay that is at hand, instead of rcaucusing(?) about the better quality clay, that comes from such and such a place, but which isn't available to you at the moment.

I am not frustrated, because I am not working with more brilliant people. And I do not require anything of you. And I acknowledge you and love you, right where you are. And where we can talk, I talk. And I enjoy the interchange. And for instance, the fact that you and I are not able to pass through each other as bodies of light, and experience, what could be called the far more fulfilling experience of communion, than what we are experience in this way; does not cause me to value the places where we are communing less. It does not cause me to value it less. And I joy at whatever degree of communion we are able to experience, because I know that that promotes our being able to access greater connection.

The barriers are coming down. But the barriers in a relationship, only come down, when those places where connection exists, are valued and embellished by the attention that is given to it.

QUESTION: My question is going to be on a more wider topic, what I consider a wider topic. But I'm curious about it. My sister, who lives in the northern California area, has two birds, Pete and Repete...

ANSWER: Pete and?

QUESTION: Repete. They've been acting quite strangely lately. For instance, one has been walking across the top of the cage, which it does not usually do or has never done before...

ANSWER: On the inside of the cage?

QUESTION: Un-huh, upside down. Because of the birds peculiar behavior, about a year or so ago, she became sensitive or more aware of an earthquake, which they did have. And then there's Humphrey, the hump back whale, who got lost in San Francisco Bay. And some activity in the Mona lake, Mamaths lakes region, which is a volcanic area. It's as if the earth is beginning to wake up again. That's my curiosity about it.

Are there going to be more earthquakes, is there going to be more volcanic activity, is there anything really going on?

ANSWER: I will put it this way, there is adjustment occurring. It is not a matter of the earth waking up. It never was asleep. The adjustments are adjustments of equalization, rather than radical movements of reconfiguration. That is the simplest way I can put it.

I will tell you, that at the turn of the century and especially at the turn of a period of a hundred years, oh that is the same, there is always an expectation of new beginnings. And as a result, there is also a certain willingness to gullibly entertain expectations of catastrophe. It happens that at the present time, because of the shifting of consciousness that is going on, and the more definite connectedness with, what I will call humane values on your planet, there are not only manifestations of healing socially on your globe, but manifestations of healing physically on your globe. Thus, you are experiencing movements of adjustment of the crust of the earth. But these are manifestations of healing. And because they are manifestations of healing, you will not find them fitting the definition of global catastrophe.

I encourage all of you, not to indulge in speculative fear. But rather, a willingness to be curious to see and expectant to see further and further manifestations of harmony and health globally, and I mean that physically, including the closing of the hole in the ozone layer. It is inappropriate for everyone to climb on the crape hanging bandwagon, and energize that kind of thought, that kind of energy. Because why? Because, it will distract you from your peace. It will distract you from remembering, that there is a fundamental harmony and order to life, that is available to all of you anytime you chose to become open to life, from your center, rather than from your conditioned thinking.

This is not a time of catastrophe, that you are entering into. It literally, is a time of fulfillment.

QUESTION: There is sort of a follow up curiosity. And around the year 2000, the planets are suppose to become aligned. Will that have any effect on the earth? Will it change magnetism or anything weird like that?

ANSWER: It will facilitate a shift of the axis of the earth. It will not cause it, but it will facilitate it. And as I have indicated before, this shift will also be part of the manifestation of healing. And will, therefore, not be accompanied with physical catastrophe. It will happen very gradually, very gently and will not inundate coastal cities with large amounts of water.

It is extremely important for everyone to begin to approach this shifting that is occurring at all levels, with a sense of it being God manifest. And, therefore, inherently expressing and embodying the nature of God, which is harmony. Healing is not traumatic.

QUESTION: I have a heavier question. I'm presently separated from my husband. There's a lot of unfinished business between us. What can best heal each of us, our relationship, whatever that may be or become? And my relationship with all men, and the masculine and/or Father aspect of life in my own being?

ANSWER: Well first of all, I would encourage you to identify God as the Father from whom you will gather the characteristics of fatherhood, which will then illuminate for you the true qualities of manhood. And will allow you to be more forgiving, to be more willing to withdraw judgment. Remember that forgiveness is the release of judgment, within you. And it really has very little to do with the one who is forgiven. Forgiveness is you, engaging in the act of love, the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R," in each and everything.

Now, the unfinished business, as it were, that you have to complete, will most easily be able to be done, if you will not conceptualize your husband as your adversary. Because, to the degree that you hold him in your mind to be an enemy or an adversary in anyway, you will be in a mode of attack. Because, you will be engaged in a judgment, that is not based upon what truly constitutes him.

And it doesn't matter what he thinks constitutes him. It matters what you think constitutes him. Because, what you think constitutes him, will govern how you act. I'm going to put it this way, it will govern whether you are able to act, or whether you are in a state of reaction. And if you are in a state of reaction, you are in an attack mode. I cannot put it more simply than that. And when you are in an attack mode, he is going to become defensive.

Now, I encourage you to understand that when you adopt the attitude of acknowledging his Divinity, that will not be the same thing as becoming unintelligent, unalert and undiscerning, to what is appropriate or inappropriate. And you will not say, "well, he is the Son of God, and, therefore, I can trust that he will do the right thing, and I can just be unattentive, unaware." And that certainly is not intelligent.

So, what you do is, you hold yourself in your peace. You allow yourself to abide in your peace, which you accomplish by not engaging in judgment. And then from the standpoint of your peace, you be conscious. And you discern between what is appropriate and what is not, and what is reasonable for you and what is not. And you trust that feeling within yourself, and you hold to it. Not out of defensiveness. Not as a form of getting even. Not with any element of reaction to it, but just out of simple clarity. When you do that, the element of attack will be absent in your behavior. And although you may need to negotiate, the negotiations will not occur, in what would otherwise be an open state of war. And, therefore, peaceful negotiations and settlements will more easily occur.

QUESTION: Is the marriage ended completely? Between us?

ANSWER: Indeed. And that is your blessing and his blessing. And I say that, so that you might generate a little bit of curiosity. Just a little bit of curiosity, to be open to recognizing the blessings as they come. Rather than digging in your heels, with a certain amount of distress and frustration, for the first few miles of your freedom, before you finally relent and embrace the freedom and the blessing.

QUESTION: I have one more statement. I seem to want to ascribe to some big cosmic deal, to this whole event, that has taken place between my husband and myself, three or four years ago, when the separation occurred. It was like...

ANSWER: I really encourage you, to embrace it, as a simple manifestation of nothing more than common sense, simple orderliness. The movement of the Divine in the human experience, is ultimately simple. And connects, you might say, at the level of the humility, that we have been talking about, the genuineness.

All that is really very unprofound, except, that by virtue of it's utter simplicity, it is Profound.

There doesn't have to be cosmic significance, to a manifestation of simple intelligence. And it does not have to have cosmic significance, in order to be worth what you went through. For it to be simply intelligent and express simple common sense, is where the wonder of it is. Just as it is in the exquisiteness of who you are in your humility, in your simple humaneness, that the presence of God, finds expression.

The ego always has all of you strive for the ultimate. But it has you look for the ultimate in a place other than, simply who you are as the conscious experience of Being, of existing. And thus, you always miss the point. And if you begin to get close to the point, oh boy, does the ego speak up.

Always you will find the experience of illumination, of enlightenment, of revelation, occurring when you least expect it, when you are being least controlling. And very often, it will occur only when you are at your extremity and feeling utterly humiliated. And that is because, it is in that simple place within you, that that which is truly meaningful is present to come into expression. So, I encourage you to let this divorce, this moving of each of you in new directions, to be something utterly and simply intelligent and wise.

QUESTION: Raj, would you please indicate to me, how things are progressing, so to speak, with establishing for myself, more of my own genuineness my worthiness?

ANSWER: Very well. But he is obviously throwing the ball back in your court.

QUESTION: In relation to that, I would like to ask the question about the incident at the motel last night, also. I'm not sure how that relates, but it was an uncomfortable time for me. And could you tell me, whether or not the action was action or was it reaction? Was it an expression of anger or an expression of intelligence?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you this, the actions that you took, expressed integrity, dignity and self-respect. The fact that you delayed in taking the action, expressed an uncertainty within you of what did constitute self-respect. And, indeed, you attempted to go through a somewhat metaphysical process, of seeing through the situation or of not engaging in judgment, as though you would be able to arrive at a point of peace within yourself, where the continued disturbance was undisturbing.

