Three things this weekend: Innocence, curiosity and permission. These are key words. None of them require skill. None of them require skill. All you have to do is to begin. And if you find yourself not able to stick with it or be consistent, well, pick yourself up and start over again. No one played a Beethoven sonata the first time they sat down to a piano.

I know practice, practice, practice, and it sounds like work. And that's not what I am pointing out here. I am pointing out that that which is true is worth persisting in and embracing. If after umpteen lifetimes of being buried in ignorance as to your divinity, you start to re-embrace your divinity and it doesn't happen like that [instantly], don't be discouraged.

It is the time of waking up. It is the time of waking up whether you are ready or not. And in that sense, you have tremendous support. You are not the sole (single) one attempting something that has never happened before, and where you are overcoming insurmountable odds.

I will tell you that although it seems as though the door has been closed a long time and you thought there was no way to move through, no way for breakthrough or enlightenment of such a nature as I am describing, the fact is that I am encouraging you all to reach out, and as I've said before, rattle your prison doors, to find out that they never were locked. And you will find that as you go to push on this thing you don't think will move, somebody's likely to open it from the other side. And any work that you thought would be required, any effort, any labor that you thought would have to occur because of the density of your ignorance, will be proven to be a false imagination.

So when you start to push, don't be so ready to give up just because you are afraid it won't work, or just because you are afraid it is going to take an eternity.

I am not here to get you to start doing something so that waking up can begin. I am here talking with you because waking up has already started. And I am here to support and nurture the courage you are already beginning to find to access the breakthrough.

A Movement has already begun. And you can experience it specifically relative to your body, specifically relative to your life right here, because this is what you are going to become enlightened about. The Kingdom of Heaven, that this has been all along, is what you are going to discover. Which means that the body that is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality, which is the presence of God Moving, is what you are going to discover here and now, and about all the things that you are already familiar with.

PAUL: This is me Paul. He's given this picture of me—I had to be maybe thirteen or fourteen—and I was really into the idea of teleportation. And there was one day—maybe I was younger than thirteen—anyway, I remember I was supposed to be taking a nap. And so, I was lying on the bed, and I was utterly willing (this was my perception of what was happening with me) I was perfectly willing to teleport to Paris and I was using the Eiffel Tower as my focus of where I was going.

And whether there's anything valid to what was happening (that's not really the point) I arrived at a point where I was so willing, it almost felt like it was going to happen. And immediately I said, "No, what if I can't get back."

And so, he's conveying that that is an example of the way we tend to not give full permission. We get all the way and then we say, "yes, but," and we want to get that clear before we have the experience.

QUESTION: I was wondering the place of doctors and dentists in our world. What are they operating or working on? And particularly, I want to know if I need this Holistic doctor I've been going to, with these special diets and injections and treatments?

ANSWER: Let us put it this way: Until you know better, you must do the best that you can do. And so, you don't off-handedly disqualify what I'm going to call "the highest expression of intelligence" that you have available. And so, what I have said does not disqualify physicians. I am not saying that all of you who are going to physicians are in error. What I am saying is that their theories and their practices do not express the ultimate. And the ultimate is available to each one of you regardless of education.

And so, each of you has available to you the option to go beyond what physicians are doing; just as the physicians have the option to go beyond what they are doing. But you see, I will tell you that there isn't a lot further that they can go until they make the discovery that there isn't a physical body there, either. Then they will begin to realize that the scope of their practice goes beyond a physical interpretation of what is here, and many of them will become, shall I say, psychiatric surgeons.

Through-out the world there are those on the leading edge in the medical fields, who are beginning to recognize the relationship, as they would put it, between mind and body. The very fact that the word relationship is used indicates that they still see mind and body as two distinctly separate things which are linked. But I have said to you that Mind is body—that the body is entirely mental.

Now, there is value in your association with this Holistic physician. The one thing that you haven't done is, you haven't made—and this is not the best word, but I'm going to use it, the word is assumption—you haven't made the assumption that you are the one who knows best. Almost all of you do not realize that you are hiring the physician; the physician is there to work for you. Therefore, you are the one in charge. That is not the way you approach it. And so, you are quite stupidly obedient to your physicians.

I am not implying that they are intent upon abusing or misusing you—although there are some who do. But, I am saying that it is a stupid thing for you not to pay attention to the fact that you know what you need, and that you are the one who has the authority in the situation.

And if you want to exercise your authority by saying to this gentleman: “Will you please give me an examination. I feel that there is something needing attention, and I do not have the means of finding out for sure. I would ask you to check me out.” And then let him do it and let him give you the results, remembering that you are still the one in the position of authority. And remembering also that his conclusions are going to be based on his best limited perception. Then you will not obediently do whatever he does without checking in with the boss first—meaning You.

And so you give your power away, and that is what is not intelligent. And if you say, “I am not going to act upon this at this present time because I want to think about it.” And he says, “That would not be wise. You need to do it now.” Remember who’s the boss.

I must say something in defense of physicians and attorneys. And that is that everyone is so ready to sue them (and so many people do) that in order to cover their derriere, in order to save themselves grief, they bend over backwards to be sure that they haven’t neglected you in any way that would allow you to come back and file a claim of neglect. And thus they will sometimes say, “this needs to be attended to immediately,” so that later on no one can say that he was careless or not strong enough, etc. And the very fact that so many people are ready to sue, puts them in a position of experiencing physicians who, out of fear and self-preservation, are over-bearing.

Now, it is appropriate for you to continue with this Holistic physician; there is benefit there. But I want you to continue to pay attention within yourself, and when you feel it is time to stop, whether you can explain it or justify it or not, you need to validate your Knowing. The same knowing that took you to him will tell you when it is time to stop. That’s really the key. “Well, I don’t know enough to know whether I should stop.” Well, you do know enough to know when it is time to stop—and you will feel it. You all need to trust yourselves more.

The degree on the wall—the license on the wall—is supposed to be there as an indication of a willingness to serve humanity. It is not there so that you can feel so ignorant that you discount yourself and you serve the diploma or the license. Remember that.

QUESTION: Raj I'd like to ask two questions. First of all we've been talking about crystals and what those crystals have to do with the universe, and what they have to do with how they can help to heal and all the different things that crystals are supposed to do.

ANSWER: Let me put it this way: Crystals are on a par with potatoes. Now, what does that say about potatoes. You all thought it said something about crystals. The fact is that cause does not lie in the three-dimensional frame of reference. Nothing originates in the third-dimension. The third-dimension can best be described as the visibility and the tangibility of the fourth-dimension. What is going on is going on fourth-dimensionally.

Now, another way of saying that is that cause does not lie in form, but in that Mind which by virtue of its Movement creates the patterns of energy that are called form. If anyone has ever experienced healing, release, benefit of any kind from a crystal, it is not because of the crystal, but because for some reason at some level their belief about the crystal gave them the courage to give permission for the change, and there was a change of mind. It is that simple. And a potato could be equally valuable for that purpose.

Now, as one opens up, as one does begin to say, "I'm not sure what anything means," as one begins to become curious and more unconditionally open, it is quite possible for a lot of nonsensical stuff to seem to be a reasonable avenue of investigation and belief.

And I am going to encourage all of you to only value that which goes beyond your present beliefs, which does not postulate or suggest that cause lies in form, that which says to you—relinquish your belief that you are form, that you are a body, that matter is the base, the ground of all Being and from it all life came forth. I would encourage you to value anything that increases your willingness to find the integrity of your Being. In other words, that which grounds you rather than ungrounds you, and yet at the same time frees you up from misunderstandings.

You see, I have said that all of this is what you are going to be enlightened about. This is very grounding. And yet I have also told you that the enlightenment you will experience about all of this will be a very different experience, in which there will be no conflict, in which all that is true about God will be obvious.

This keeps you in a stable, healthy frame of mind—if I may put it that way—that doesn't go off the deep end with wild imaginings that you can justify exploring because you have been told it is important to be unconditionally open in order to escape from the limitations that are false.

Crystals are beautiful. They do have properties of resonance that are different from other materials. There is something about them that is inspiring and uplifting, because of the way in which they catch the light and so-on. But you know what? The pulp of the potato and the dirty skin of the potato are just as absolutely constituted of patterns of energy as the crystal is—and therefore it is a meaningful thing.

Be careful not to prefer some forms over other forms. And be careful not to attribute to them properties that other forms, you say, cannot possibly have, because they are all one in the same thing—the immaterial energy patterns set into motion and maintained by the divine Mind—it is all the visibility and tangibility of God.

And you will feel sort of foolish if you and your friends who love crystals are gathered around your little hoard of wonderful gems, and someone else over here is in a state of ecstasy, oowing and aawing, because he saw the light in his potato. I mean truly, that revelation had occurred, and his perception of what a thing really is, had happened.

Be willing to see the clearer and clearer evidence of God, the clearer and clearer evidence of the Kingdom of Heaven anywhere, whether it's in the mud on your shoes, or whether it's in the clear glass of water you're about to drink, or whether it's in the hand that's holding the glass, or whether it's in you. Because as I said, the only thing that confronts you at any point is the Kingdom of Heaven, either seen clearly or seen through a glass darkly—to use Biblical terms.

And if you give special properties to certain things, you will definitely not be looking, you will not be bringing curiosity into play when you're with other things.

*QUESTION: Could you say something on the Eastern concept of Karma, please?

ANSWER: I would be delighted! First of all—and although it is said to illicit a laugh, it is the best way of expressing it—karma is a pay as you go affair. Karma is not accumulated. Karma is simply the manifestation of the fact that as long as you are ignorant, you will have the effects of the ignorance. Not because you have done something in the past that you must now pay for, but because you are doing something in the present in an ignorant fashion that doesn't achieve the results that are expected. And so, you suffer from the ignorance as long as the ignorance is present.

Now, there is another aspect of karma that is, unfortunately, what I'm going to call a malicious concept. Because if you buy into it, you have no real way of escaping from it—if you buy into the concept—and that is: if you have hurt someone else, you will have to suffer as a penalty for the suffering they endured.

You want to know what is malicious about it? What is malicious about it is that it suggests, underhandedly, not out in the open, that you can be hurt by someone else. In other words, that there is not enough integrity to your Being that you could, let us say, stand like a willow tree in the wind, and although it blows you about it doesn't harm you because you are not inflexible.

It means that all you can ever be is the recipient of what other people dish out, as though there were no substance to you in your own right. And if someone else is kind to you and loving toward you, that you can feel loved and you can feel good and you can experience the benefits of the kindness. And vice versa, if they are unkind to you, you can feel hurt and you can feel the effect of their hatred, etc.

And again, either positively or negatively, there is nothing of enough substance to you in your own right that whether someone is being kind to you or hurtful to you has nothing to do with your joy and your peace. It means that you are rather like Pinocchio, a puppet made out of wood, without a life of its own, that is enlivened only with the good or the bad that someone else does by pulling your strings. It promotes an ongoing experience of powerlessness. That is what is malicious about it.

And it is time for all of you to get off of this merry-go-round, this belief that someone else can make you happy or someone else can make you miserable. It is the very belief that you don't have enough integrity to your own Being, that you are dependent upon someone else's love or hate or appreciation or criticism to give you any substance. And indeed, because of that belief, it has become part of the means that the ego uses to exercise control.

The way you become free of that is in the recognition that your joy is independent of the good that anyone else does. And your joy is independent of any hurtful, hateful, malicious, unkind thing another person does to you. That's where your freedom is to be experienced. And when I said that's where your power is, I don't mean power over these terrible people or these wonderful people. I mean the power of your integrity that is so clear to you that you are unassailable, that you don't have to do anything to or for the person who is being kind, or to or against the person who is being unkind.

The sooner all of you stop passing the buck and making someone else accountable, the less all of you will need insurance, and the sooner you will begin to conduct yourself in a way that is self-responsible, reflecting your own integrity. And you will not feed into other people's beliefs that you are responsible for their misery. And you will not feed into the belief that you are indebted to someone because you created misery for them. You each, by virtue of your choice of thoughts and principles and values and so-on, create for yourself your own misery or your own joy.

For some of you, Paul came in and sat down and indeed we have had this weekend together, and just what has been said has registered with you and it has made you happy—it has made you feel joy. And others of you have come in and you have seen Paul out in the foyer smoking a cigarette. “Oh my, doesn't fit my picture.” But it's your picture—it's your picture. And those of you who have felt the joy have found things said that support what you believe and haven't violated your picture—and so you say you are happy.

I want for all of you to be feeling your joy, whether things conform to pictures or concepts or not, because that is where you stand in your integrity and you are really able to pay attention to what means something and disregard that which means nothing.

Now, I want to ask each of you something. None of you are totally Awakened at this moment. And yet available to each one of you—regardless of the degree of your ignorance—is a spiritual guide, a totally Awakened Individuality reflecting nothing less than the Father’s Will, whose intent it is to uncover to you, as rapidly as you are willing to absorb it, your divinity. Obviously, the experience of divine Guidance is going to be available to you in your state of, let’s say, having clay feet, having feet of clay.

It is going to be available to you in whatever level of ignorance you are experiencing at the moment—whether you smoke, whether you wear glasses, whether you are always polite, whether you have a temper, whether you are ever thoughtful or not, whether you bathe often enough, whether you are living out of your car or in an elegant home.

Are you going to say, “No thank you, I can’t talk with you yet, because it doesn’t fit everybody’s picture of what a person should be like to experience guidance.” No, you won’t do that. You want to know why? Because no matter how rotten you are, no matter how rotten you seem to be, there is always something in you that says you deserve something better—that there is justification for you to get out of your misery. And that is the Truth.

And so, the Father comes to you like the Prodigal Son, while you are yet still a long way off. He doesn’t wait at the end of the drive at the gate to welcome you after you have come all the way Home. But He goes out to meet you while you are yet a long way off—while you are yet in whatever level of ignorance you’re in.

You know what the wonderful lesson in this thing with me and Paul is? The fact that there does not have to be anything special about you in order for you to have available to you, in the most practical form, the Father’s Love that lifts you up and brings you Home, back into your Right Mind.

I have encouraged Paul to be willing to give up smoking. But I will tell you something: it would be a sad thing if Paul came to a workshop, no longer a smoker, and people said, “Ah, yes, this is a holy man. He doesn’t smoke, he’s clean, he’s polite, he manifests love, yes.” Why? they’re still hung up in their picture. Do you see what I mean?

And their picture is what they use to define whether they are comfortable or uncomfortable with a thing. And if someone is uncomfortable with the fact that Paul smokes because it doesn’t fit the picture, should Paul feel guilty? Is he now obligated in another lifetime to spend at least a few minutes penance for the little bit of distress that you felt, because he didn’t fit your picture? Or should he even maybe feel self-conscious and go down stairs and smoke in the bathroom so that you aren't offended? And so, that you might be willing at least to hear what Raj has to say, even though you are offended by Paul.

It's all control. It's all an endless string of spaghetti, tangled and messy. And it's all irrelevant. You each create your own joy or your own misery by virtue of what you believe to be true.

And now, we're going to take this another step, because that joy and that misery—which I have just talked at some length about—is all at the ego level and doesn't constitute the capital "J" Joy of your Being, which you can access when you dare to start within, and be in the world from that place. Because that Joy is not a vacillating emotion but an ever present part of the substance of your Being, just as peace is. And it is not dependent upon what happens. In fact what happens is dependent upon it.

So, karma, like twin flames, is bull shit. And if you play with it you will stink, until you decide that you would rather smell sweet than try to find out what on earth the value is of this sticky brown stuff.

QUESTION: Now that we've debunked crystals, I wondered if you mind telling me why is it that everybody, and particularly in this state, has as their spirit guides either an Indian or an American Red Indian? In other words, why not an Egyptian, a Englishman, a German, a Frenchman?

ANSWER: Quibble, quibble, quibble. This is how the ego does it, it gets you distracted from what is important. What does it matter whether it's Cleopatra or Jesus, yes, or John Lennon? I will tell you that anytime you find someone who is willing to be humble enough to engage with their guidance—rejoice, rejoice. And if the details seem a little peculiar to you—in other words, if they don't fit your picture—don't quibble about it. They could instead be out selling porno magazines, or robbing their neighbor, or even being actively engaged in the competition of business, of the business world and its unfair practices.

I told you that when I first came to Paul, I said my name was Rajpur, because if I had said my name was Jesus we wouldn't have had a second conversation. If somebody needs a red Indian, they'll have a red Indian until they can embrace more. Each of you is always met right where you are with whatever your peculiar needs are. And if you couldn't bear to speak to Jesus, then if Jesus speaks to you he will not say he's Jesus, because it doesn't matter. What matters is that the desire to reach beyond the limitations that have been imposed upon one has occurred and it needs to be answered; and it needs to be answered in a way that doesn't squelch the desire.

Now, some who are in touch with American Indians, some who are in touch with so-and-so and so-and-so, are not in touch with anything more than their ego and they're getting on the bandwagon of the stylishness of being in touch with their guidance. In other words, some of it is just ego stuff—to impress with. And I'm going to say, so what?

Again, don't miss the point. You, all of you, must pay attention within yourself and see what the feeling is. All of you are excellent at recognizing falsehood. And most of you don't pay any attention to that capacity that you have. You say, "Oh, no, I'm misunderstanding. I've got to give him the benefit of the doubt, etc."

Pay attention to yourself. And let Samantha over there, who's in touch with Roy Rogers (who hasn't even died yet) and who is gathering quite a crowd around her and perhaps from your standpoint misrepresenting that which is valid about guidance—let it be. No one has to be the watch dog.

This is the way that the promotion of self-responsibility will occur. Take care of yourself, and don't listen to those you don't want to listen to. And listen to those you do want to listen to. And don't say, "I listen to them, because they're so good," or "I listen to them, because they're on the track." Say, "I listen to them because I hear myself when I listen and it is strengthening to me. And I look forward to the day when I can be with me and not need to listen to them in order to value and honor me."

Please, don't force everything into predetermined little cubby-holes of appropriate behavior or appropriate appearance, or that which is traditional. And don't call into question for any reason (no matter how weird the situation might seem to be according to your judgment) somebody who is genuinely, but awkwardly, reaching out for guidance and happens to share what they are experiencing before there is any smoothness to the manner in which they are doing it; and before there has been enough opportunity for the guidance to actually cause growth to occur in them, that would allow them to get past the weirdness that was so essential to them, in order to be willing to hear at all. This is very important.

Every single one of you has your own peculiar little idiosyncrasies. And everyone of your guides could care less. But everyone of your guides will address you through the sieve of your idiosyncrasies so that connection can occur; and the feeling of your integrity can be felt as having been reflected back to you by your guide so that you can begin to relax enough to let go of some of those idiosyncrasies.

Be careful that you don't hold each other to the past by virtue of saying, "Who I perceive you to be now is not congruent with who I perceived you to be yesterday. You are making me uncomfortable. Please stop changing. Or if you are going to change, will you do it in the most proper way."

There isn't any proper way to wake up. The definition of proper will arise out of the level of ignorance from which you are waking up. Those two sentences need to be written down and put someplace where you can see them. There is much more meaning there than you know.

So, don't quibble, quibble, quibble, if things aren't fitting your picture of proper.

QUESTION: The tangible and visible substance of energy which was labeled my Dad, passed over last year. Now, he was a real cynic and when he died he didn't look very peaceful, he looked very confused. And I'm seeing him like in the dream state. So I'd like to know your opinion of dreams, and what Dad and anyone else who's passed out of what we perceive as form is now experiencing.

ANSWER: There are two corrections I want to make: One relative to something you said and the other relative to something that was said earlier. I encourage all of you not to think about, or use as a definition, the phrase, "this plane of existence." There are not levels or planes of existence. There is, as I said, only the Kingdom of Heaven; just as there's only one universe out there, whether you are looking at it from here or Paul is looking at it from Hawaii or someone else is looking at it from Sydney. There aren't planes of existence, and this isn't a plane of existence—you didn't come into it and you won't go out of it. The only thing that you came into was a particularly biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, but it was still the Kingdom of Heaven.

The other thing that I want to address (that was in your question) is you said your father left his body or left this energy pattern. I promise you, you cannot leave. You cannot possibly become separated from the visibility and tangibility of the individuality that you are. I am telling you that your father experienced no loss, whatsoever, of that which identifies him.

And the easiest way that I can explain what everybody else buried is that it is the after-image of him left in their eyes. And I am not going to go into any more complex description of it. But I promise you he never left his body. And you never will leave your body—you will only ever leave the misperception of it. And as you leave that, what it truly is will replace it right here on the spot, or right there on whatever spot you're on when it happens.

This isn't some dispensable commodity. It really isn't like a garment that you put on for eighty years and then trade in for a newer model. The very idea that it is dispensable means that it is not as valuable as that which is wearing it. And that is part of the way that you dishonor it and demean it. It is an attack on it; you could say—it's not love.

So, I am not going to go into any particular detail relative to your father at this time in his experience, except to say that he is fine. And although he has had the choice to immediately engage with others who have passed on, he has chosen not to do that, and to have some time for peace and quiet for himself. Not so much to gather his wits about him, as it is to remember that he doesn't have to answer to everyone else.

His tendency would have been to give himself away to everyone. And the experience of passing on has jogged him enough to cause him to take advantage of the fact that he can choose to see no one for as long as he wants, in order to come to a peace within himself. The very fact that he is expressing the choice not to see or talk to anyone is, for him, an assertion of his authority over himself, and that everyone else does not have authority over him. And he is very happy with the experience he is having.

QUESTION: In your life as Jesus, did you say the same things as we are hearing this weekend? And if so, why does not the New Testament more closely reflect your words?

ANSWER: Always the necessity is one of being appropriate. In so many words, yes, I did say the same things. You must also realize that much that I did say to my disciples was not shared. It is not that it was secret, but it was a matter of its not being able to be understood without some, shall I say, teaching process to help lift the awareness of the students.

What I said was said in simpler form, because the ego was not as highly developed as it is at this point in time. And in many respects it was easier to communicate the essential meaning, because they didn't believe themselves to be as highly educated as all of you believe you are. And so, they didn't have ten thousand questions of a psychological nature or a logical nature.

Now, the purpose at that time was different from the purpose at this time. At this time, mankind is at the threshold of Awakening. At that time, a correct conception of God was the major threshold over which mankind was moving. It was a time of many gods, and the concept of just one God only was a difficult one to grasp in many areas.

Then to convey the fact that each one was the Son or Daughter of God, and that God was not just an impartial god of the forces of nature or a god in the heavens on a throne, but was a God in the sense of family, in a sense of a very real relationship with each individual—this was mind boggling and stimulating in that day.

And where I could, I did drop little hints of the absolute Oneness, by saying to them: "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." My disciples understood by virtue of the manner in which I dealt with them on a daily basis that, that was a statement about them also. But it was a statement that could not be generally made, because it would be incomprehensible or frightening. So the purpose here was that of establishing the fact that there is One God.

And the other purpose of my appearance was to demonstrate as a fact that life was eternal—and to fulfill prophecy—so that everyone might be able to grasp, in a simple way, that there was a context in which life, as they perceived it, was going on—in other words, a larger context.

You must understand that people lived their individual lifetime, and their lifetimes were much shorter than now. It was as though that were the beginning and the end—the totality of life. And to have prophecy fulfilled from two thousand years earlier made it obvious; it demonstrated for them—it proved for them—the fact that there was a context in which life was unfolding that spanned that many generations. And it did help lift them somewhat out of the belief that they were just organisms who sprouted up and died away, and sprouted up and died away, with no other context than that of physical propagation like the flocks.

So the purpose of my appearing was different then from now. In addition, its purpose was to anchor the simplicity of the truth that I shared at that time in the world. And by anchoring it thus, so that it continued to be present no matter how faulty the church carried out its task, it nevertheless anchored it in the world so that it was not forgotten. And by virtue of its ongoing presence it prepared the thought of mankind for, what I'm going to call, the spiritual renaissance that has been occurring since the year 1845, and the general Awakening that has been occurring since then. And it all worked perfectly.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask if reincarnation occurs, why? And could you talk about the idea that children choose their own parents?

ANSWER: I'm going to say, indeed, reincarnation occurs. We could say it's like a night of successive dreams, in terms of your going to bed and having dreams—more than one in one night, perhaps with some period of time between them. One gets hooked on the challenge of success, the challenge of overcoming, the challenge of proving that you indeed have what it takes to not be threatened successfully.

In other words, there is deep within you the awareness of your invulnerability and your sovereignty. That is a remembrance of Home; that is a remembrance of the truth about you. And because that is there, you know that you can beat the challenge. But the ego, and its desire to insure its ongoing existence, provokes you into using your remembrance of your invulnerability to overcome the illusory threats. And so you keep coming back for more. Because by damn it, this isn't gonna get ya down.

Now, the real answer is to give up. And that is what is so humiliating about waking up. It requires giving up, backing out of the challenge, recognizing that the ego is a liar and not playing into its ploy. You have to arrive at a point where you say to the ego, “the only way to win the game is not to play the game at all,” and give your attention in a new direction.

What I am sharing with you is the encouragement to give up the game so that you may come back into the undistorted experience of what all of this really is—the Kingdom of Heaven.

PAUL: This is me Paul. What was the other part of your question?

QUESTION: The idea that babies or unborn children choose their parents?

ANSWER: It is a truth: there is great order. And there are what you would call guidance counselors available to those intending to incarnate again. And help is provided in the choice so that those things which you were most hooked on by the ego, in the last lifetime, will have the greatest opportunity for being worked through in this lifetime. No one incarnates by force. No one reincarnates by force. It is always by choice.

You must realize that those who are waiting to be born are not really infants toddling up to the shoot, but individualities experiencing themselves in an adult form. And they know full well and good that the experience will seemingly involve going through a process of birth and growth to adulthood again.

You could best liken this process to students going to university for their first semester and meeting in a large hall, where the teachers are seated at long tables and the students can go to sign up, hoping to get a particular teacher, etc. And there are counselors helping the student choose the classes which will best promote the fulfillment of the particular education that the student is looking for.

Mind you, this is also going on within the limited perception that you are experiencing. It is not occurring in a place where everyone, including the ones incarnating, are totally Awake. And so, the guidance counseling that is provided is of the same sort that I am sharing with you, that I share with Paul, or that your guides will share with you, in helping you be where your fulfillment of purpose can most clearly be uncovered.

It's very important for you to know also that it is not just those who are incarnated who are experiencing the three-dimensional only frame of reference. Just because one passes on does not mean that they are suddenly Awake. They carry with them their same resistance to truth that they had before they passed on.

And the only place where there is invariably a breakthrough, as a result of the experience of passing on, is if they have passed on as a result of a disease and they find that they are still alive, that the disease didn't kill them—that the thing they had so greatly feared did not cause them to cease to exist. And in the absence of the fear of the disease, the disease is gone. The rest of their beliefs are still present for them to release themselves from. And so they are still experiencing the limitations of the ego frame of reference.

Now I've shared with you that there is a Movement occurring, a Movement of Awakening that is already happening. And I want you to know that it is not just happening on your planet, but it is happening throughout what you would call the ego frame of reference. Anyone who is still imprisoned in a false sense of identity is involved in a process of waking up. And so you might say, that a universal reunion is in the process of occurring, in which no one will be left out.

Now, I have digressed. Indeed, children choose their parents, except that they are individualities who choose those who will be their parents and they do it with help. You must realize that even in your apparently greatest ignorance, you haven't stopped being the divine One that you Are. And, therefore, your distorted tiny sense of identity, that you are believing constitutes the whole of your identity, is still safely embraced in what you divinely Are. And it is still safely embraced within the Totality of what God is Being, which is what constitutes your Presence.

And so, even in your darkest hour, even in your greatest ignorance, you still are always at that specific point where breakthrough can occur. You never become lost. There is always guidance, whether it is the active guidance of your guide, or whether it is the absolutely unavoidable Presence of the Father.

And so, always your specific ignorance, your specific problems, contribute uniquely to your growth and your Awakening. Not because problems are helpful, but because you are experiencing this ignorance right in the middle of the omnipresence of God and, therefore, the ignorance cannot curse you—blessing must be the result.

Not one of you has ever been with a wrong parent or a wrong mate; even if it was not appropriate for you to be with that mate, it was not wrong at the time that it happened. Because even in its greatest misery it was what uniquely propelled you out of it, with your dignity intact and with the strength to move forward, without keeping you small.

The Course says that the Holy Spirit turns your every circumstance to your advantage—that is another way of saying it. You do not have to choose problems to grow. But if you are resistant to Reality, it is inevitably going to create a tension which is going to bring you to a point of such discomfort that you say, “I choose not to be in this anymore”—and you reverse your decision. It isn’t because you are being punished or pointed at or singled out. It is because that when you are trying to do something that doesn’t work—it doesn’t work. When you are trying to be something that you aren’t, you can’t be what you aren’t. But you can create a circumstance of certain dynamics, which some of you come to feel is the meaning of life, even though it’s pain and struggle.

If there is one message that I could give you this weekend, it would be give up—abandon the attempts to be a good personality, in control of your life, developing a marvelous identity. Abandon it so that when it is gone, you can discover that right in its place is a Real You, the divine You. Why can I say give up and have it be a constructive thing that will not result in chaos? I can tell it to you because you are not a fugitive from justice, you are already innocent. And you don’t have to keep up the struggle. You don’t have to repeat this process over and over. You don’t even have to choose parents again, because you are innocent; because you never ever were something different from God expressed.

So what is it you give up? You give up trying to be responsible for yourself. You give up the idea that thinking is the solution to everything. You give up thinking itself, which you will ultimately find was a defense against the stillness in which the discovery of who you Really Are could occur. Thinking is the insulation I was speaking about yesterday, which gives you distance between yourself as the fugitive and the justice, which is trying to catch up with you.

It's interesting that justice is always on your tail. Why? Not because it wants to prove you are guilty, but because it is inevitable that your innocence will be uncovered to you. Its pursuit of you is a pursuit of love, which your ego perceives as threat. And indeed, it is a threat to your ego, but not to You, because You are not your ego.

If you are having a dream and a monster is chasing you, and you are running for your life, the dream will go on for awhile. But if you had the capacity to stop in your tracks and the monster would catch up with you and get you, you would wake up. I agree you would wake up as a result of great fear. But nevertheless, the illusion of a seeming reality of a monster that would get you would be stopped, and you would find yourself on your bed in your room, where none of it had been actually happening.

Let justice catch up with you. Give your divine Self (that is Present as an actual experience to you right here today) let it have the opportunity to register with you, by beginning to value silence, and by not letting your thinking run away with you, and by not letting your emotions steamroller you.

I will tell you something: If you are not thinking, you cannot experience emotions. You all scare yourself by virtue of your thoughts. And by virtue of your thoughts you create physical sensations in the pit of your stomach, and elsewhere, that you then say are a valid proof of the need for defense. Without thinking you would not experience emotions. Without thinking you do experience your feelings: peace, joy, love, compassion. Without thinking you do not become dysfunctional; you become so unfettered, so free of reactive states, that you are able to be more present and be appropriate with clarity and obvious intelligence.

It's time to get off the wheel of history. And here is some encouraging news: If you don't get off of it, you will fall off of it, because it's time. More are Awake than those who are asleep. And as a result, there are fewer today joined in dreams and mutual agreement as to what constitutes reality within the dream. And as a result, it is becoming harder and harder for those still dreaming to continue, because there is not the reinforcement of the joining of others in dreams.

Those of you who want to hold onto the dream a little longer will likely find yourself frustrated, because this wonderful thing called becoming disillusioned is happening.

You know what? You have heard of the last days and you have heard of the gnashing of teeth and so-on. You want to know something? The gnashing of teeth will not be because something terrible is happening, but something more wonderful than what you want is happening. That says it in a nut-shell.

Innocence, permission and curiosity are the three simple elements with which you can easily get off this wheel of history without engaging all of the complicated, psychological aspects of the ego that it has developed to ensnare you. And although I have said some things this weekend that could be considered deep and difficult to grasp, the simplicity of there meaning will become obvious to you if you are willing to engage in becoming still, and becoming familiar with what that stillness feels like, so that you can then begin to enlarge the circle and embrace more of your world from that peace.

You will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. And I don't mean groping, I mean with the most wonderful, grounded, peaceful motivation to move forward and embrace it.

I have enjoyed being with you this weekend, and I will tell you that we will be back. I thank you for your attention.

Gathering In Princeville, Hawaii –1994

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good morning. What I want to begin this gathering considering is peace. It's a word that's bandied about a lot. Everyone says it's very valuable. And yet watch your TV. Whether it's news, or whether it's entertainment, what is it broadcasting? But you know, if the news was reporting back to you good news, and if your entertainment was reflecting back to you nonviolence, and let's say, constructive fare, it would not guarantee you peace. Because your peace doesn't come from out there, and the interference to your peace doesn't come from out there. In fact, peace can't be out there.

Now, I realize that what I'm saying is not new. But because it is true, I am saying it. Because everyone needs to be reminded of what is simply true. And the reason everyone needs to be reminded is because everyone in their work, in their relationships creates complex justifications for anger, for reaction, for conflict, for self-righteous anger, etc., etc., etc. As everyone does this they, of course, blame it on something out there—something out there coming toward them is justifying conflict.

But at the bottom line, it is the fact that each one of you within yourselves is not choosing for your peace. You are actively choosing for the hit, the thrill, the satisfaction of being self-righteously indignant, or looking for justice.

(Whispering) Listen to it—"looking for justice." Where's the love in it? Where's the peace in it? Even if it's said in dignity—"looking for justice"—it really means getting even. If you were really looking for justice you would get into your peace, because in your peace is where the clarity is present that allows you to discern what is really going on, instead of all of what you have justified. And in the presence of that peace you can make peace—and there's no winner and loser.

Now there is a very familiar song that says, "Let there be peace"—I do not have the exact words—"and let it begin with me." And one sings the words, or says the words, and more than anything the melody and camaraderie of singing it together gives a feeling of peace, sort of inspires a gentle, together feeling.

But that isn't enough! It takes a little bit of self-discipline to choose for your peace. And every single one of you who has been in turmoil has discovered that the amount of discipline it takes is not nearly as satisfying as continuing with being justifiably upset. One gets hooked on the satisfaction of being upset. And indeed, choosing for your peace doesn't seem to promise the satisfaction that self-righteousness does.

But you know what? This year is going to be easier for all of you to choose for your peace. And that's wonderful news. But there's a flip side to it, you're going to get some help. And the help you're going to get relative to being able to choose for your peace more easily is, that being in conflict is going to be more uncomfortable. And thus, you are more quickly going to arrive at the conclusion that pursuing the self-righteous satisfaction is not going to be worth it.

The reason this is going to happen is because a shift has occurred. More and more people in the world today are becoming exhausted with suffering; sick and tired of being sick and tired. As a result, there are more people than ever who are not valuing the payoff of being sick and tired, of suffering, of being angry, of seeking justice, etc. And the scales have tipped, because of this inner shift that has occurred with so many people. And when the scales shift, they shift for everyone.

And so this is a year that I have already indicated is the Year of the Miracle. It might not sound like it the way I just described it. But realize that whenever any of you ask for a miracle, you are asking for something new to happen, you are asking for something to happen that isn't your regular fare. And if something new is going to happen, it's going to shift balances, it's going to make a difference.

And what does that mean? It means you're going to grow, you're going to change, and you're going to have to embrace and embody a new way of being. And the new way of being is not resisting your good, not resisting the miracle, not resisting your fulfillment. And so, peace is going to be your greatest ally in gracefully receiving your fulfillment, gracefully receiving your good, gracefully receiving the miracle—the miracles. Ah, you won't just do it once this year. You will have multiple opportunities to choose for your peace so that you might gracefully stand in receipt of a new experience of yourselves.

Now you can get ahead of the game a little bit if you like, by not waiting for a state of conflict in which to begin to practice choosing for your peace, and settling down—quieting down. And you see, if you will do this when there isn't a crisis at hand, you will have the opportunity to discover in little ways just how much you have indulged in the habit of reaction—and that it is a habit that isn't constructive.

And if you practice daily, right in the middle of your job, right in the middle of your relationship, whatever, if you will practice choosing for your peace because that's where your clarity is available to you—your clarity about yourself as well as your clarity about the situation—you will begin to get the hang of it. You will begin to get the idea that there really isn't anything blocking your experience of peace and a sound mind, except a simple inner choice that it really doesn't matter how crazy the world or anyone else is being. Your peace is independent of that. And it is really available to you as an actual experience at every moment.

As you begin to have this experience on an ongoing basis, it will begin to feel desirable to you and more natural. And then if and when you have a crisis, or someone blows up in your face, you will say, “Ah, I can choose for my peace and be here, be here for that one from my peace, instead of engaging in judgment and defense.” And then you can gracefully move through the resolution of whatever needs to be resolved because you haven’t abandoned a sound mind.

Most of you here are, I would say, well on your way of your path of Awakening, and so for most of you what I have described is something that you can relate to in terms of your own experience. To the degree that each of you is willing to practice embodying peace from your “withinness” you lessen the density of the human condition. And you make it easier for everyone else to choose for their peace, because you are not energizing it yourselves.

And so, whether you become a teacher of peace who broadcasts it to large numbers of people, or whether in the context of your daily life and the fewer number of people that you are involved with, if in that context you choose for your peace, it still has a broader impact that blesses everyone. In fact, it is because more people are choosing for their peace that this year is the Year of the Miracle, and that it is the year in which it will be easier for all of you to continue choosing for your peace with more commitment and less intensity, more gentleness.

The greatest fly in the ointment relative to your experience of peace is the value you attach to judgment. Mind you, I didn’t say the greatest fly in the ointment was judgment, it’s the value you place on judgment. It’s the valuing of judgment that keeps the energy available for judging, instead of being in your peace and listening for what is really true about the thing that your ego state of mind would judge.

Now I’m not going to go on at length here. The primary point was peace. And I simply wanted to convey the one fly in the ointment that all of you will have to watch out for, and that is not judgment, but the value you give to judgment. I will tell you: it has no value except to keep you ignorant of the truth, because it keeps you in conflict, and it absolutely blocks your capacity to be love.

Now, I will from time to time over the next three days probably have something to say that wasn’t engendered by a question. But for now we will begin with conversation, in the form of questions and answers.

QUESTION: I feel a little nervous. Because it’s been so long since I could ask you a personal question, I want to try to make it as clear and encompassing as possible.

My question is the same. It’s the same question that I had last year. It’s this situation that I’m still dealing with, and that is this, I want to say, problem of anxiety I’ve still been having that has gotten better since it began last year. And it seems that as the other three times that I had an episode like this it lasted about a year, year and a half, and then just kind of went away.

It is better. I mean I totally function in my life; most people think I'm a totally normal person. I do the Christmas party at my little boy's class; I have friends for dinner; I have people in my life all day; I'm a popular, active person, but within myself it's still a horrible problem. I call it "the big fear." And it is medically diagnosed as panic. I feel it physically, especially in the mornings.

And it's beyond just feeling a little anxious about some unknown thing. It's really all encompassing. I felt it again this morning. It's like a terror I feel that I'm going to go crazy, that I'm going crazy. I'm afraid of my own thinking. I'm afraid of the next thought I'll have. I'm afraid that I'll get caught up in obsessive thinking about how you can prove things are real, and then if things aren't real, well where do I fit in, and where are my thoughts coming from, and it's like I'm this hotbed of anxious fearful thinking, even though I keep functioning pretty much like a normal person.

I mean I could even be more detailed, but it does feel really personal, and I don't want everybody to think I'm really... See, that's why... I don't want everybody to think I'm crazy, because part of me thinks I'm crazy, and there's such a fear attached to it. I mean it's fun to be crazy if you're happy. And it's neat and you're thinking about interesting things, and it's like, "Oh, I'm a crazy person." But mine has a real fear attached to it that I will ultimately go crazy, or that I'm going to go crazy today. And that means being alone, being cutoff from everything, never being happy again, just having fearful thoughts, and tension and anxiety all the time.

And I don't know what more insight you can give me on this. I don't feel like I'm doing it because I get a charge out of it, like you were addressing with the topic of judgment and self-righteous anger. I don't feel like life's more interesting because I create this in myself. I really would like some practical suggestions of how to get to that peace, and make this conscious choice for my peace in a simple way. I guess that's a question.

ANSWER: One thing is for sure: it is important not to think too much about your problem, because there is a wealth of language, a vocabulary available to you to scare yourself to death with. Indeed, everything that I had to say about the choice for peace hits the nail on the head, in terms of the value of it for you.

If you were to stop thinking, you would experience no fear. This is true for everyone. Thinking is a responsibility that everyone of you bears. It is actually a burden. And you think for the purpose of keeping yourself safe.

Now I'm not going into any great depth on this at this point with you, but, and we will be discussing it over the next three days, your greatest ally—and this is true for everyone as well—your greatest ally is your willingness to listen, your willingness to listen. That can include listening to Raj tapes, or listening to other self-help tapes. It can involve reading. Because if you are not able to hear guidance within, then words of guidance are an alternative means to thinking, are an alternative means arriving at your peace.

Because when you read, or when you listen you are letting in, you are in a receptive mode. Thinking blocks reception, thinking blocks receipt. The only real value thinking can have is to lead you to a point of trust, by means of reason, whereby you can abandon thinking and open up because your level of trust assures you that it is a safe thing to do—to stop thinking.

Part of this fear comes from an increased sense of personal responsibility in your life. A fear that perhaps you will not be able to fulfill that responsibility well. But I will tell you that you are able to fulfill that responsibility well; you're more than qualified, and you need to remind yourself of it. You are qualified and well-skilled enough in the area of your marriage, and in the area of raising your child.

Your fear that they may call for more than you can provide creates a feeling of doubt—self-doubt and fear—and it becomes magnified. But you are choosing for your peace more consistently, and you are listening. And that is indeed why the fear is diminishing. And I will tell you that you are not likely to get to the fourth month from now without it being entirely absent from your experience. And it is also likely not to ever be your experience again.

Well, the old saying is: “The only thing there is to be afraid of is fear itself. The only thing to fear is fear itself.” But I'm going to tell you, don't bother to be afraid of fear. It's the ego's way of keeping you from choosing your peace, from choosing that which will release you from your ego.

And so when you notice the anxiety, I encourage you to say, “Ah, there goes my ego again,” or let's say, “There goes the ego again,” let's not even claim personal possession of it. “There goes the ego again.” Well, who's noticing it, who's noticing there goes the ego again? It isn't the ego. It's the essential you. So if you can notice that your ego is doing its little jig, then obviously you aren't the ego. And this part of you that can notice it can, instead of thinking about what it's doing, choose instead for something else—for your peace, or for listening to tapes, or reading a book.

You have always available to you the power of choice. I've said before that the only right use of will is to choose not to use it. Choosing not to use will is an act of will, but it is an act of will to abandon willfulness. And always the way you abandon willfulness is to listen, is to yield into communion, partnership, companionship with someone who is like the Rock of Gibraltar, whose integrity is unquestionable, but “feelable” to you. And in your association with one like that you begin to have the opportunity to find that that is the same integrity that you have, and that you are immovably perfect, unalterably perfect, invulnerable.

So, let's not make a mountain out of a mole hill. In other words, let's minimize in your mind, on a daily basis, what seems to be happening: “Oh, the ego's doing its jig again. I'm not the ego. Here's what I'm going to give my attention to.” That’s the way you choose for your peace, that is the way you have been choosing for your peace—continue.

This is not going to overcome you. And the more you listen, the more you will be aware of that, and the more of your peace you will experience. You are loved and you are embraced and you are companioned with, and the support is there for you that will help you feel your integrity more and more as each day goes by.

I want you to imagine that your body is hollow. And inside of your body there is one of these long skinny balloons. And you have an air hole in the sole of your foot and you attach the hose. And you say, “I’m just empty of peace. I’m just full of fear—nebulous, intangible, frightening fear.” Well, this skinny balloon is your integrity, we’ll say. And as air is blown into it, it begins to expand until it fills all of the cavities, all of the hollowness of your body. And in so doing, it filled up the vague emptiness of fear.

Well, now what happened? Did a new you come? No, it’s the you that was there all along, aware of your integrity now, instead of preoccupied with a sense of empty, vague, nebulous, frightening fear. The reason the fear is lessening, compared to what it was a year ago, is because your conscious experience of your eternal integrity is registering more with you because you have been choosing to listen. And in spite of your fear, you have been consciously choosing for your peace. Persist. You are doing well.

QUESTION: Everything you say sounds right to me. I know it’s so. There’s some part of this fear that wants to undermine any answer there is, until I back it into a corner and just squash it. I mean it’s going to pick, pick, pick, like: “Well, who is this person choosing for their peace.” It’s just so abstract. It’s never anything that seems to be... How can I say it?

It’s very specific thoughts. It’s not nebulous, it’s one thought and then another thought that there seems to be no answer to. And I feel like I’ll never be peaceful and be happy until I have the answer to “how can you prove things are real? How do I know I’m not dreaming things? Where do my thoughts come from? What is a thought?” I mean, I’ll have one thought and then it’ll scare me and then I’ll think, “Oh, gosh, there are people who are disincarnate with me right now.” Some days that’s fine; other days it’ll be “Oh, my gosh!” There’s one thing or another that on a deep, deep level I’ll be terrified by, when in the past years, they’ve interested me and fascinated me.

So it’s like this thing, it’s threat is fear of fear, fear is like...

ANSWER: Just listen, just listen to what you have just said. It was a stream of thoughts. Stop thinking. The answer will not come as a new thought that will clarify the questioning thoughts. The answer will come in the peace of your silence, in that place where you can hear. You see, in a way all of these specific thoughts are asking questions, but they never shut up, do they? They never stop long enough for an answer to come forth.

You know what you could do when a specific question like that comes? Realize that you're not the one to answer it. And that it is not to be answered by means of your thoughts. And say, "I'm going to turn this over to the Holy Spirit," or "I'm going to turn this over to the Father. And I'm going to listen to the Holy Spirit or the Father for the answer to that question."

QUESTION: I've done that many times.

ANSWER: And if you get no answer, don't then resume trying to come up with one yourself, or shall I say, don't let the flow of thoughts begin to work over the fact that there's no answer. Because sometimes when you don't get an answer, you are getting the answer. And the answer is: "It's time to be still." The answer lies in stillness in you. And you know that.

You know what? You're real. You do exist, even though I'm very well aware that through the use of reason and logic you can, or your ego can, explain you away. You're going to have to take a stance somewhere. You're going to have to acknowledge, at the least, your existence. And when the ego starts arguing it away, you're going to have to say, "Shut up! I will not engage in crazy logic, inane reasoning. I will not entertain you. I will not be a good hostess. You are not welcome here, get out!"

Have you ever had a salesman come to the door that you can't get rid of?

QUESTION: Yea, I end up buying something just to get rid of him.

ANSWER: Well, don't buy anything from this particular salesman. Because this particular salesman is trying to prove to you that you don't exist. So don't even buy one little tidbit, because if you buy part of the illusion you get the whole illusion.

Now, in so many words, you have done what I just said, you simply need to do it more consistently.

QUESTION: That's right, it's consistency. Because I'll do it one day and by evening I feel like me again—just normal, like myself, happy, enjoying people, enjoying my son, enjoying myself, reading, relieved. And I wake up the next morning and it's like, "Oh, no." It's just thinking, thoughts. And I know it sounds like, well, just stop doing it. But there's something underneath it that won't go away, that I feel like is almost a physical mental illness, or something.

ANSWER: Bull shit! That's more of the crap that your ego would bury you under. Have enough self-respect to tell it to shut up.

QUESTION: Okay, so basically when the thoughts start, and I feel this incredible panic and fear, like I'm going to detach from reality—I'm going to take my little boy to school, I'm just going to stare at people like I don't know them—just be willing to stop thinking and be a flat, neutral, zero person. Just stop.

ANSWER: Whenever you do that you will discover that you haven't disappeared. But you will have your peace. It's like the salesman says, "Man, if you don't buy it today, you're going to miss the big deal, because we got this promotion on. And if you do it today, you get the really fantastic offer that we're giving you. There's something behind, something beyond what we're offering you. So take what we're offering you. But you got to do it now, because the software only last for two more minutes." There isn't something behind, and something behind that, and something underneath that.

You've got to be really simple-minded. There are only two voices you can ever hear: the Voice for Truth, which is the Holy Spirit or the Father speaking, or the voice for the ego.

QUESTION: Well, see that frightens me too, because even if I say, "Shut up, it's just my ego," then I think, "Well, look, I'm stuck with this ego," and then I get freaked out about that. It's like I don't want it there. It's twisted.

ANSWER: Say, "Shut up!" and then stop thinking. Don't let the next thought come, because you want the silence in which your experience of your presence is obvious to you, and you want to be in the silence where your connection with God is available to you as your experience. But you will not have it as long as you are letting the ego talk, or you are arguing with your ego.

Now I am well aware that you are expressing the fears that come to you, and they are not necessarily the way you are feeling at the moment. I also understand that you know what I'm talking about.

The point is, love yourself—and I'm going to say this to everyone—love yourselves enough to give yourself the attention you need to put the energy into yourself that it takes to have your peace available as a conscious experience. "Oh no, I've got things to do. The world is more important. My children are getting home from school, I've got to take care of them. I've got to take care of my husband. I've got to take care of my work." You've got to take care of yourself, or you won't be there for the children, or the husband, or the work, or the world.

So be simple-minded. You don't have time for that other voice. Because at the bottom line, whether it's as severe as it is with you, or whether it's in the much milder ways, thousands of ways that it happens for everyone else during their day, the ego is always undercutting you. And you don't have to listen. You have another choice.

Most people just think that this flow of thoughts, of ridiculous undermining thoughts, is life. And they don't realize there is a choice. They don't realize there is another voice that they can listen for and hear, another voice that is intent upon registering with you, because ultimately it is your capital “V” Voice, it’s the Voice of the integrity of your Being, because God is the integrity of your Being.

So each one of you is worth whatever effort it takes to use a little bit of self-discipline—just enough self-discipline—to make the choice for which of the two voices you are going to listen to.

So I am confirming to you what you’ve already known, and I’m confirming to you what you have practiced. And I am saying you are worth every ounce of energy or intent that it takes to do it all the time. Because it’s everyone’s Birthright to experience the glory of their Being, rather than the conflict and suffering that everyone thinks is normal.

And what we have been talking about is the way you make the choice between the only two things there are to choose from, so that you can gracefully experience your fulfillment.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. Since the last big earthquake in LA, my husband and I have been thinking of moving elsewhere. And I guess I feel some inner promptings to do that. I’m wondering if this is just my fear misleading me, or if it would be a good thing for us to think about relocating? And if so, where?

ANSWER: This is a wonderful question. No matter where you are, there will always be something to run from. But I want you to imagine a tulip bulb that has been planted and begins to grow. And as it grows, you know that out on the end is going to be a bud. Now is the bud trying to get away from the bulb? Or because the flower—and I’m going to say, the bulb, the stem and the flower are the wholeness of that idea that you see partially as a bulb first and alone—is it a matter of the flower moving toward where its fulfillment is, where it is in the fulfillment of the whole idea?

When you move, it is well for you to be listening for where you are to move to, because the move identifies fulfillment of purpose. A move never occurs to get away from something, but always to be, as I told Paul and Sue, where the flower is blossoming.

When Paul and Susan moved to Kauai, they had just done a workshop here. They went on to Australia. And when they had been here, they asked me, because they felt an affinity for it, they felt something, they asked if there was any possibility that they might ever live here. And I said, “Yes, but not for at least a year.”

They went on to Australia, and as Paul has put it, when they got back home to Bellingham, Washington, and walked into the house, it was like the people who lived there had moved. It was their house, but the energy, you might say, of their presence didn’t fill the house. And it wasn’t until a week had passed that both Susan and Paul decided to ask me what was going on. And I said, “Because it is time to move to Hawaii.”

Well, that little ego part of Paul's mind immediately thought, "Ah, I've got ya, Raj. I've proved that you're invalid, you contradict yourself. You said not for at least a year, now you're saying right away." And I pointed out to him, that if while they were here I had told them, "yes, you will be moving a month after you get home from Australia," I would not have had Paul's attention for the rest of the trip. He would not have been available for the other workshops. So love is what works.

Now in Bellingham, everything that was there was most desirable. The environment was not one where earthquakes happen, there had been no disaster per se, except for Mt. St. Helen's. And so, they didn't have something to run from. There was no motivation, no unloveliness or negativity that they were wanting to move away from. And then when they asked why were they to move to Kauai, my answer to them was the one I just said to you, "Because that is where the flower is blossoming."

In other words, it isn't blossoming three inches up from the bulb, it's blossoming six inches up from the bulb. And the blossom does not have the prerogative to say, "I'd rather bloom here." So you must be where the fulfillment is happening, that's what I'm trying to say.

Therefore, if you are going to move, let go of any sense of needing to move because of it being earthquake country. Somebody else could ask the same question and I would say, "don't move because it's gang country," or "don't move because it's riot country," etc. You want to move only when the move identifies fulfillment of purpose, because moving will cause you to be where the flower is blossoming, where your fulfillment is identifying itself.

Now there is such a thing as common sense. If a truck is bearing down on you, you don't stop and ask for guidance, "should I step out of the way, or not?" You step out of the way. And so I am not suggesting that you don't use common sense.

However, to specifically answer your question, there is not at this moment a call for you to move because of earthquakes. Even if the earthquake hadn't happened, you would find yourself feeling the impulse to consider the possibility and the wisdom of moving. Even though you couldn't specify what the wisdom referred to, such as earthquakes, or a better business opportunity, or whatever; it is important for you to continue listening.

I am not going to tell you where to move. Because you see, you want to cultivate the habit of desiring to be where your fulfillment is manifesting itself. And because it's "your" fulfillment, it is going to be meaningful to you. And so when you desire to know what is appropriate for you, you are feeling into what will feel natural, harmonious and is something you will be able to say, "I recognize myself in that. I recognize myself in that."

This flash of recognition is essential. And if I tell you you need to move here, you will not give the attention necessary that allows that recognition of what is appropriate to occur. And you could obediently go and miss the depth of the experience of the fulfillment, because you didn't engage in that part of the blossom coming up to where it was going to bloom that allows you to recognize yourself in where you are.

I am not copping out. I am just refusing to do what would deprive you of an essential element of your fulfillment—really the most important part, the part where you are able to recognize yourself in it and feel your congruence.

QUESTION: Hi. For many years now, I've had a serious life threatening illness that has come in out of my life. And in the last couple of years it has been particularly intense. I've been a student of the Course for a good many years, and I understand pretty much what the material in the Course says about this. And although I've tried to work with it, and although I know that it's purely my own thoughts and my own mind, and that I'm in total control of it, for some reason or another I have not been able to let go of it. And I need some help in being able to let go of it.

ANSWER: Are you aware that you're not in control of your health?

QUESTION: In what way?

ANSWER: In any way.

QUESTION: Who is?

ANSWER: So what is it you are in control of?

QUESTION: I am in control of my thoughts, which affect my health.

ANSWER: Which block your experience of your health, and seem to create blocks to the experience of your health. Now, your health is a Birthright, your perfection is a Birthright. I do not mean the process of birth. I would put it this way: it is your inheritance. If you are the son of a king, you have an inheritance. It is in that sense that I am using the word birthright. It is your birthright to experience what you are as God's expression in its absolute perfection.

Now, all of you do seem to be in control of not your health, but your illnesses. You are in control of the blocks to your experience of your perfection. But none of you can control your body into health. Why? Because its perfection is beyond your control. You have nothing to do with its perfection, God does. You have no more control over its perfection than you have over your individuality or your existence, because God does. But by virtue of your thoughts you can make your existence miserable. That is the only thing you can do by means of your thoughts—create disturbances causing you to have distorted perceptions of the one and only thing that's going on, which is the Kingdom of Heaven and the Sons and Daughters of God.

Now why is this important? Why am I bringing this out? Because what you are not responsible for, in other words, what God is responsible for—I'm going to put it this way—has ascendancy over anything you think, it has authority over anything you think. Therefore, because God’s self-expression is an expression of God’s Will, then your perfection right here and right now is constantly insisting upon being what you experience.

It is very easy from the metaphysics of the Course, or the metaphysics of any other metaphysical systems that are present, to begin to say, “I’m creating my experience.” Well, no, you aren’t creating all of it. You’re only creating a distorted perception of something—a distorted expression, a distorted perception of your experience. Your experience, God is in charge of. Your body, God is in charge of. Your world, God is responsible for. That means that what God has made insists on being recognized for what it is.

Why is this important? Because, first of all, it relieves you of any personal responsibility for your health. Secondly, it helps you to see that your ideas can create tensions, and tightnesses and blockages that distort the actually undistortable presence of God. It distorts your perception of the undistortable presence of God.

So the only thing you have control over is whether or not you are going to employ the thoughts, the judgments, the conclusions that haven’t arisen from a connectedness with God.

Now, you did not create your body. None of you created your body. None of you, in other words, created the visibility and tangibility of the presence of your Individuality. God unidentified is God nonexistent. God and God’s expression, God’s extension constitutes the wholeness of God—God identified constitutes God. You are that which identifies God. Conscious human Individuality is the visibility and tangibility, the presence, the experienceable presence of God. God Individualized, but not separated into many constitutes your Individuality, and It cannot be invisible, It cannot be unexperienceable.

And so, there is that which you call body, that is the visibility and tangibility of the presence of your Individuality, which is the presence of God expressed, therefore your body and everything you see if seen truly would be recognized as the presence of God incapable of functioning in its infinity in a conflicted way.

Now, what you can choose to do is to not engage in any of the justifications you are employing for the ongoingness of this physical “problem.” You are not responsible for your health. You are not responsible for the existence of your body. You are responsible for any judgments you have toward your body, any misperceptions you have about your body. You are responsible for any negative thoughts about your body. You are responsible for any line of reasoning that causes you to say, “I deserve this because,” and then there is a long list of reasons.

All of these things which you and everyone else are responsible for create disturbance, because they are conflicted. And that disturbance stands between you and your experience of the perfection of God that is the only thing going on. It seems to distort the presence of that which is really dominant, which really insists on being All There Is, because it really is All There Is.

Therefore—and here is the reason I am spending this time bringing this out—therefore, the moment any of you begin to reduce your investment in your problem, reduce your investment in the thinking that seems to justify the problem and causes you to say, “I deserve it,” to the degree that you release the thinking that says, “I have no choice about this, because my body is just a physical organism that has nothing to do with God, that arose out of the primordial ooze, and therefore I’ve just got to go with the program.” As you release, as you abandon, as you refuse to indulge in practicing these thoughts, you will experience healing. Why? Because you are reducing the resistance you are bringing to experiencing what is truly dominant. You are reducing the resistance to seeing what is really going on right here as the visibility and tangibility or expression of God, which is absolutely indivisible and therefore expresses utter harmony, not conflict.

What I want you to walk away from this gathering being aware of is, that what is real right there where you see a body, what is Real with a capital “R”, the presence of God that is there is insisting upon being your conscious experience. That means that you are not responsible for creating health, as though you are going against the tide of a physical body that doesn’t want to cooperate with the divine You.

I want you to leave here aware, in very simple terms, that your body is your ally. Why? Because it’s there to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. It is intent upon it, and has no other function, and that function is divine. The moment you really begin to invalidate your judgments about your body and your concepts about your body that leave it outside of the presence of God, you will find your body identifying your perfection, because its divine purpose is to express nothing else. And the Will of the Father lies underneath that insistence. The Will of the Father is the motivation of that insistence. That insistence of what? Of that body that is sitting right there.

It is really very dangerous to your Sanity to believe that your body is an illusion. It is also dangerous to your Sanity to believe that your body is Real, but it has nothing to do with God.

What is unreal about your body is all of the conclusions you have come to about it that have not held it in the context of the Allness of God—all the fears you have about it, all of the distrust you have about it, coupled with the ego’s ongoing insistence that you don’t deserve unreasonable good, and that you do, for one reason or another, deserve what you’re experiencing. These things are, as it says on the pack of cigarettes, dangerous to your health.

You’re here at this very moment with a divine ally, rather than a hunk of flesh that really has no inclination whatsoever to cooperate with the divine Individuality you are, because it's really a physical, evolutionary process that has nothing to do with God. Your false beliefs are the illusory aspect of your experience of your body.

If you truly want to experience your health, I encourage you to walk out of here at the end of the gathering rejoicing that you are experiencing the presence of God, whose Will it is to be expressed perfectly, flawlessly, without conflict and that your body means something divine.

The Course says that all it takes is a little willingness, not a strong conviction, just a little willingness to be open to the possibility that everything exists in the context of God. And that anything about the world you are seeing, or the body you are seeing that seems not to reflect the perfection of God, is necessarily a distorted perception caused by thinking, reasoning, and coming to conclusions, all of which is based upon the belief that none of this has anything to do with God.

When you are denying God where God is, you will experience dissonance. It's that simple. But you know what? Because God is omnipotent, any denial you engage in of God means that God will win and you will win. You are bound to get well. You are bound to experience your perfection here or hereafter, because what is Real is the only thing that can endure, and because one way or the other you are going to win with God. You might as well begin to win today by not denying God right where God is, and becoming curious to see God where you didn't think God was.

If your body isn't real, how can you really expect healing? Why would you heal or make better something that doesn't exist anyway? It becomes confusing. If the man with the withered arm... Let me put it this way, if his withered arm was an illusion, why would I make it look like the other one? Why not make both of them disappear? So there was no suggestion of an illusion there. Why not make him disappear? Indeed, this line of thinking becomes very much like Connie's question, where the ego eventually proves you don't exist.

If you want to know what the truth is, and if you want to experience your health, and you want to experience harmony, and if you have any shred of hope whatsoever for experiencing peace on earth, all of you had better begin to acknowledge that the earth is God expressed, not that it and the universe are just some chance result of some physical interactions, and that somehow speckled throughout the universe are these Souls; little, bright, divine lights, sort of embedded in bits and pieces of the material world. It may not look like God, it might look like earthquakes, and it might look like horrendous fires, and it might look like floods, and on, and on, and on.

What do you think healing is if it isn't transformed vision of everything you're already aware of, so that you can begin to see God there, because you have abandoned your investment in all of the definitions YOU have given everything, including your body.

You didn't create your body. You can't create your health. You didn't create the world, and you can't create the infinite perfection of it. But you can stop creating the arguments against it, and the convictions you have as to the fact that the Kingdom of Heaven is not here to be perceived, and the convictions for whatever reason you have decided that you cannot experience your health, or you don't deserve to experience it.

You can abandon those things. And in abandoning them watch the assertion of God, watch the intent of every visibility and tangibility to register with you, so that the wholeness of it is there, not just the perfection not seen because everyone is too busy having a different perspective and gaining a sense of being the creator.

So, you have an ally that has a divine intent to register with you as it truly is, so that you come back into your right Mind about your body in this instance, about your mind in your instance, about your relationships, etc. In other words, you have a powerful ally, not passive or wimpy. You could almost say it cares that you recognize it. In order for you to be whole and experience your wholeness you must recognize it. And so, that is its intent—for you to recognize it.

Your body is not malfunctioning because it has a will of its own—it doesn't [have a will of its own]. It has an intent. That intent was set into motion by the Movement of God called Creation; creation of Himself expressed and looking like you. But how on earth can you ever arrive at the experience of what you really look like if you are saying that God cannot be in the look, that the ego created the look.

Now, the ego created the misperception of the visibility and tangibility of God. And when one is caught up in one's misperceptions and ignoring what's really there, one is what? Mentally unbalanced, insane, experiencing a form of insanity. It's the valuing of the misperception that is the insanity. And the thing that's being misperceived remains forever the presence of God perfectly expressed and intent upon being recognized for what it is. And that intent is asserted with utter love. It cannot force itself upon you, but the moment you dare to begin to let it in by conceiving that it possibly exists, it most gently and lovingly fills you up. And it fills you up because it expresses a Will, the Will of the Father, which is Love.

I want you, if you leave here with nothing else in your mind, to be aware that you have a powerful ally, and the power of it is God's Love and perfection. Feel yourself being companioned with in the most intimate way as the very presence of your body and its intent to identify your presence flawlessly, immaculately.

And boy, the ego is a bastard isn't it. It says, "Well, it's only supposed to take a little willingness. Boy, I must not even have that, and I therefore haven't much hope.” Well, when that suggests itself to you, I want you to remember the degree to which I have gone to share with you that you companion with a powerful Presence—Presence has a capital “P”, and I said it wasn’t wimpy.

You know what? The suggestion that you don’t have what it takes, that you can’t even muster up the little bit of willingness that the Course says that it takes; well, I’m going to tell you that there’s a wonderful lesson in failure, failing to have even the little willingness, failing to be a success. You want to know why? It’s the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom and you don’t have to deserve it. Trying is willful.

A little willingness really means embracing failure at being a successful ego, or even a successful Son or Daughter of God. Because your successes as the Sons and Daughters of God are not experienced by virtue of anything you do as Sons or Daughters of God, your successes at being the Sons and Daughters of God is a result of being the expression of God, which God is responsible for.

So, I have not set up a challenge here for you to have a little bit of willingness so that you might experience the powerful Presence of that which you companion with. I haven’t set up a challenge at all. If you are not responsible for your health, if you cannot create your health, then you cannot fail at creating it can you? It was never in your hands to do anything about. So what I have been describing here, in your abandoning the exercise of false perceptions and false conclusions and judgments and doubts, etc., all of that really does constitute becoming a failure as an ego.

Do you see what I’m saying? I’m saying that absolutely nothing is called for on your part except failing. That’s how little is called for from you. And when as a result of negligence you succeed at failing at being an ego—in other words, when you really let go—this powerful Presence, this ally that you companion with, that is actually what is present and called the visibility and tangibility of you that is your body, this will assert itself. It will, you might say, emerge (it’s not the best word, it sounds like it came from somewhere) but transformation will be experienced. And it will be experienced because something Real is right there where you say your body is.

Willingness to see it is love. Willingness to see what is Real in your world is love. It’s a willingness to see beyond your present sense of sight, and acknowledge the presence of God. And mind you again, all of you, what blocks you from perceiving the presence of God in its absolutely unconflicted wholeness, what blocks that are the thoughts, the reasonings, the judgments, the conclusions that have been arrived at without feeling into the presence of God first.

Maharishi says, “doing less and accomplishing more,” and I am saying, “do nothing and be All.” Discover your wholeness.

We can pursue this further as we go into the next two days. But let’s let that gel for now. And what I want to say to everyone is do not hesitate to challenge if you experience a great disbelief about something that I say. What I mean is, be willing to ask for further clarification and express what it is your perception is that doesn't allow you to embrace what I am saying. And when you are listening for guidance within, do the same thing until you can come to a place where it makes sense, and you can let go of the last little bit of resistance to experiencing the truth, or experiencing your healing. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: You mentioned something about God creating the body. I'm confused on this point. My understanding was that we created the body as an illusion.

ANSWER: Indeed, that is one of the reasons that I am speaking at some length here. You are the expression of God, God expressed is not intangible, invisible, unrecognizable, unexperienceable. Therefore, your Individuality has visibility and tangibility. My words are somewhat an accommodation, but they say what needs to be said so that you will treat the body as though it is real. You, your essential Individuality is recognizable. I could say that there is its "recognizableness." This here is Paul's "recognizableness." It is mind's ability to recognize Paul. That, all that I just said, lies in the context of the Allness of God.

Now, if Paul makes a decision to think for himself and says, "Father I'd rather do it myself. I'd rather perceive everything with my own quirky little bias. I'd like to add a little bit of something that you didn't include. But since it's inviolable, the only thing I can really add is a quirky way of perceiving it. So I'm going to perceive it a little bit differently than you do, Father." Ah, now he says, "Ah, now, well this is my body, and let's see if it isn't what it was the way God made it... Well, wait a minute now, I'm feeling uncomfortable here. I don't exactly know what it is, but the peace I experienced when I was with my Father's point of view is absent, and I'm feeling uncomfortable. Oh, um, where can I hide? I've got to protect myself."

Well, what's happening right there? The first stages of identifying the body as vulnerable, and as something that needs to be protected, and the definitions keep flowing. Now, the visibility and tangibility of Paul, as the Son of God, as the expression of God was there before Paul had a sense of it as being himself that he must protect and hide. And it's still the body, or visibility and tangibility there after he begins to have this distorted sense of what it is and what its purpose is.

That sense of it, as something to protect, and as something that can be perceived separate and apart from what the Father is Being right there, that is the illusion that you create, that you all create. But it is, I'm going to put it this way, it is a delusion about something. You cannot have a delusion about nothing.

You have created, conceptualized, you have literally conceived your body in a manner that is totally inconsistent with the visibility and tangibility of what the Father is Being right there where you are, right there where everyone experiences you. But the Father is still the only thing there, even though you describe it as a body, which is experiencing a disease that is life threatening. ‘Tain’t so. The only thing that is there is the presence of God, and maybe an imaginative misperception of it, which you are believing and reinforcing. And that is what I am talking about abandoning. Remember that I said, God unexpressed is nonexistent God. Or as the Course says it: “God not extended is nonexistent God.”

The only world and body you have created is an independent assessment of the Kingdom of Heaven. You get that? The only illusory body and world that you have created has been a false assessment of the Kingdom of Heaven. But the Kingdom of Heaven continues uninterruptedly to be the only thing going on. And the Son of God that you are, and the Daughters of God that you are continue to be the only thing present.

So you create a false perception, and all of you get together and you agree on your misperceptions, and you develop codes of behavior and agreements as to how things work. And by virtue of your agreements with each other about how all of your definitions work you seem to function with some harmony. But all of this has happened after that point where you said, “Father I want to add a little of my own English to your creation. A little of my own bias, or well, slightly different creative perception of it.”

And in doing that, you step into your sense of separation and vulnerability, and all of the definitions of everything that are colored by that separation and vulnerability. That doesn’t cause another world to come into existence, but it causes you to see the Kingdom of Heaven wacko, insanely.

And so, indeed, when you look, what you are seeing for the most part is illusion in the sense that what you are seeing is what you are convinced is there, rather than what is really there. And love is the willingness to recognize that which is really there, and abandon your convictions about what you think is there. And abandoning the mutual agreements you have with each other about what you think is there.

You see this is important, because if you really remain convinced that you have created your body, then it must be an illusion, and ultimately healing would have to mean that your body would disappear, the illusion would no longer even be presenting itself. That’s insanity. And that is not love. And it is not appropriate to indulge in it.

As the Course says, there is a different way to look at this. You know what? Looking out here and saying, “there is a different way to look at this, and meaning it doesn’t exist at all. Wow, what a different way to look at it. My goodness, it doesn’t even exist.” That’s not a different way to look at it. That’s engaging in, or indulging in a very wild, imaginative idea, and thinking that having that idea constitutes a different way of looking. It’s not a way of looking, it’s just a different thought bias.

But if you're willing to look out here and say, "there is another way to look at this," or if you look at your body and say, "there is another way to look at this," and you mean "there is another vantage point from which I can look at it, there is a different vantage point from which I can look at this. I can look at it from a place of having no confidence about what it is. There is a place where I can go in the silence and in my peace, and ask God what's really going on." And having God, or the Holy Spirit share with you God's point of view, so that you look at it from a different place, and you see it in a different way, not as a result of a different way of conceptualizing it, but a different vantage point entirely. A different way of seeing it.

I will share with you that the last workshop that was held here on Kauai, at the end, Paul was very much with me. And I was thanking everyone for their presence and their participation and so on. And as I did that, Paul opened his eyes, because in effect that expressed what was happening, I was looking. And he had a new experience of seeing. He's used to looking with his eyes to gather information. But he experienced me seeing for the purpose of giving acknowledgment. It was for the purpose of embracing, extending, acknowledging, instead of gathering data, which you really do for the purpose of self-protection.

That gives you an idea of what it means; there is another way to look at this, not a different way to conceptualize it, no. There's a different place from which you can look, instead of being from your tiny limited viewpoint, you can look with God, through God's eyes. You see?

Waking up is not a head trip, the Course is not a head trip, even though many people intellectualize it. And I will leave you with that until after lunch.

ANSWER: Before we pass the microphone, and because the subject of the last question and answer are so important, I'm going to open it up to everyone, if someone else has a question, or an objection, or a comment pertinent to the subject of the last question and answer. And we will do that before we continue on passing the microphone.

QUESTION: Would it be fair to say then that one should love one's body?

ANSWER: Amen. What is your alternative? Well, if love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything, and if love illuminates what is Real, then actively loving your body is going to uncover what is Real. And if there really isn't anything Real about your body, it will disappear, and that will constitute a revelation and a healing. However, it will not disappear.

What I am meaning to say is, that to love anything will cause it to be seen more truly as it is. And it will cause that which is not true about it to fade from sight. You want what is illusory to fade from sight. And if indeed your body is an illusion then it will fade from sight, and that will be good news.

So yes, love your body, because you really only have one alternative and that is to hate it. In other words, either you are embracing it with a desire to experience what is divinely Real right there, or you are actively engaged in denying that there's anything there. Denial, especially if you are denying something that is Real is an act of aggression, it's an attack. Do you see? Love is never an attack and it's always healing. Hate, or denial is an attack and it is never loving. It is, therefore, never healing. So you tell me what occasion there might legitimately be to ever do anything but love everything?

Now understand that I am not saying love an illusion. I'm saying withdraw the judgment or the assessment that what you're looking at is an illusion, and be willing to love whatever is there that might be Real. It is that act of faith, you might say, it is that act of faith that there is something Real there, divinely Real, and therefore unconflicted, that allows for, in Biblical terms, "the scales to fall from your eyes"; from your eyes, not from the thing you're looking at so that you can see what is true and Real there, so that you can see whatever of God is there.

Now, just as an interesting point. If God is infinite, if God is omnipresent, then, as the saying goes, "there is no spot where God is not." Even physically speaking, since probes have been sent out into space where it was assumed that there was probably a perfect vacuum, they have found no perfect vacuum, no place where absolutely nothing is. Of course, that's what they found because they are exploring the Kingdom of Heaven, and there is no spot where something Real doesn't exist.

If you stop and think about it—and I am not making fun of your question, because I know you were asking it in all seriousness—but may I suggest, in the process of your spiritual growth and Awakening, don't be too quick to abandon your common sense. And if you stop and listen to the question, it is really funny that it could be asked seriously—"Are you saying that we should love our body?"

The fact is that there is no occasion not to love everything. Loving provides the threshold of transformation, healing. Attack always promotes defense, which is simply attack from the other direction. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Maybe I'm a little confused. I think I love myself, and when I feel that, I love from my heart. Can you illuminate love so that I know maybe from your perspective how I might perceive love?

ANSWER: One of the simplest ways I can describe it is that love is defenselessness. And I know that might sound funny, because it sounds like that's something you do all by yourself. It is like my definition of forgiveness is the withdrawal of judgment. What makes it different is that most people think of love and forgiveness as something you extend to another.

Someone is a dirty so-and-so and you forgive him, in spite of him being a dirty so-and-so. Now you tell me where there's been a withdrawal of judgment there, even though there has been an apparent willingness to love the dirty so-and-so. But, ah, let's withdraw the judgment "dirty so-and-so." Let's be willing to not engage concepts or definitions that we use to define that other one. That's forgiveness.

Love as defenselessness, again, doesn't sound like something being extended. However, if you have ever been with someone who has been really defenseless, you have felt loved. Because you have felt utterly safe. And you have recognized that in the presence of someone who is defenseless, you are in the presence of someone who is totally with you, totally present with you. Wow! That's brotherhood. When no one has their guard up, when no one has a concept of you that they're employing, when they are utterly defenseless with you, with no defense between you, you feel loved.

As I said earlier, love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, in spite of what appears, in spite of what someone else presents, and in spite of a concept of them that you hold between yourself and them. Love is not something that you extend through space to someone else. Love is a willingness to be in the void—the void being that place which is empty of your judgments.

And when you are in this place where you are empty of your judgments, you experience yourself in your peace, and you also experience yourself in, shall I say, the Reality of you. Everyone thinks that peace is just a temporary alternative to the experience of anxiety, or emotions, or more charged dynamics, but this isn't true, it isn't just another emotional state.

When you connect with your peace, you are literally having a direct experience of your Being and its nature, and this causes you to have an entirely different perspective of yourself than you have when you are highly charged; whether it is charged positively or negatively, there is a wholeness to it. And because there is a wholeness to it, there is a stability to it that's unlike anything you experience when you are emotionally charged.

This stability you experience as unjustifiable invulnerability. And when you realize that you are experiencing yourself in these things, and you feel your utter safety, you are able to be defenseless. And those who are with you feel no need for defense. But more than that, it is absolutely obvious to you, it's inescapable to you that what you have found out about yourself is true about your fellow man.

And so, you have a new experience of your fellow man, regardless of whether he's still actively presenting an old ego dynamic. And so, you have arrived at that point where you are recognizing that which is Real in your fellow man, which is love. But it isn't something you have extended through space, it is something that has happened in the within of you where you find your unity with your brother, and there's no space to extend love through, because within you you are being the recognition of that which is Real in him. And it is an experience of union.

There is a difference between being love, and being loving. You be loving through space; it is a behavior. Loving, being loving is a kind of behavior. It's always calculated, no matter how good the motives are, it's always calculated. But when you connect in the silence within you—in your willingness to recognize what is Real—when you connect with the silence in you and you learn more about yourself, simultaneously learning about your fellow man, your perspective changes, and you know what is true about your fellow man. And that knowing which doesn't take thoughts is love.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again: The most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your Being. Because that's where all of you are one, that is where all of us are one. And that is the only place from which any of you can know each other truly, or love each other truly.

Now this isn't nearly as impossible as it might sound. But it really does require beginning to take time to be quiet, and not value thinking and conceptualizing so much. Because in the wordlessness of the quietness within you is utter obviousness that requires no words. And what is obvious to you is the truth. And this is when you begin to see through God's eyes.

Put simply, your behavior will change—what would be called your outward behavior—because you will not behave with any of the signs of self-protection, or of being on guard, or of being cautious, or doubtful, or untrusting. You will not give any of the signs that another will interpret as a call for defense on his or her part. That is why the other feels loved.

You want to know something? You feel loved when someone recognizes your innocence. Because, generally speaking, no one does.

So love is the recognition of another's innocence, the felt recognition of another's innocence. And when another has the experience of you feeling their innocence, they feel loved because they feel truly recognized. And when they're truly recognized, and they have someone, let us say, joining them in an acknowledgment of what is true of them, their need to defend their guilty sense of self vanishes. And that's why things transform.

Being loving is better than being hateful. So don't stop being loving. But understand that being love is different and more valuable, and cultivate that conscientiously. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: It certainly is a pleasure to be here with you this afternoon. The Course In Miracles has often been interpreted, at least from my experience, to deride the body.

ANSWER: Unfortunately.

QUESTION: For instance, sayings like: "I'm not a body, I'm free." "The body is just a communicator." And indeed, in many ancient texts it talks about the body being a real problem. I think the I Ching says that there's much turmoil that comes from having a body: it has to be clothed, and fed, and sheltered. So a lot of New Age people think about the body or disown the body or say, “Gee, I can’t wait until I’m free of the body through death or whatever, and then I’ll be truly free.”

For me, being a body worker, this has created somewhat of a quandary. The body as a communicator is quite obvious. However, in my work I look at the body as being one of the most magnificent biofeedback machines ever devised. Could you give me a little bit, give us a little bit more direction as to being free of the body? In other words, I guess it could all be summed up in saying, is there any advantage that comes from having a body?

ANSWER: You must ask the question first, do you have a choice?

QUESTION: You mean about having a body?

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Well, again I could say, well, all I have to do is pull the trigger and that takes care of the body.

ANSWER: That’s not true, though. Everybody else has to bury their accumulated sense of your identity as a body, but for you, you will experience no interruption of being visible and identifiable. And there have been many who have had a great surprise thinking that when they had pulled the trigger they would be free of the body.

So the fact is that you do not have a choice; therefore, to talk about the advantage or disadvantage of having a body is meaningless. It is the way it is. It would be like saying, “Is it an advantage for God’s Creation to be experienceable? Is it an advantage to God to create and have a Creation?” There’s no choice about it, because there is no separation between God and Creation, because God being God in the act of Being. In other words, the Movement that God is is Creation. Creation is not an effect of God. Creation is God Moving.

Now, “I am not a body, I am still free to be as God created me.” Well, that doesn’t contradict what I said. The statement does not say, “I do not have a body, I am free.” It says, “I am not a body.” Well, none of you are bodies, you are all mind. You are all consciousness, in which is embraced or experienced all form. This means that all form is mental, it is mind, it is the Movement of Mind which mind is experiencing. And this is what quantum theory is beginning to discover.

Mankind, generally speaking, is about forty years behind the times, because it has been well over forty years ago that your scientists discovered that there isn’t any matter, and there isn’t anything of substance, that it is all energy patterns. When they look through the electron microscope and they get down to the atom and then down to the electron, they don’t find any little billiard ball of solid matter. They simply find a discernible energy pattern, like a magnetic field is an energy pattern, which you cannot see until you have some iron filings.

So when they get right down to the basic building blocks of matter they find no matter, just a pattern of energy. Well, it isn’t going to take long for them to find out that the pattern is a mindful or mental pattern. And then they're going to find out that the mind, or the intelligence that is patterning the energy is God, or the Prime Mover, or whatever name you want to use.

So there is absolutely nothing concrete about the concrete. And there's nothing concrete about your body. It doesn't exist, it doesn't exist as a body of matter. There isn't any solidity to it at all. Now that's the "physical" fact, or the scientific fact, not going into any metaphysics of any kind. There simply isn't any body for you to claim to be. There isn't any body for you to believe that you are.

You have forever been Mind—pure awareness—experiencing the Movements of Mind, and misinterpreting those movements to be material forms. And then defining the one that has two legs, two arms, a head and a torso as you. So no, you are not a body. Not only that, there isn't even a body for you to be. But there is something going on.

In itself the realization that there is absolutely no solidity whatever to your body, or to the table, or to the planet, that realization can help you to grasp how it is that there could be a spontaneous and instantaneous healing, because there's no matter that you have to wait for so that it can go through physical processes to arrive at a new configuration. And I'm not even talking spiritually here, I'm talking pure "physical" science.

And, of course, you're free to be as God created you. Because you aren't now and you never were a body. And now you know that there isn't even a body of that sort right there where you can see visibility and tangibility. It's the visibility and tangibility of Mind. The infinite Mind Moves, and its Movement has substance to it from its standpoint. Its ideas have substance. But that doesn't make them solid, it doesn't make them matter. They are still entirely mental.

And so, the simple fact is, that every sensory so-called physical experience that you are having at this instant is purely mental, and except for your misinterpretations of it, it is real. The Mind that God is is not deluded, and its experience of the substance of its infinite ideas is Real and unconflicted, genuine and eternal.

You are experiencing the eternal at this very moment, except that your conditioning says that you are in a universe, and you are a vulnerable mortal body—meaning that it will eventually die—and you are amongst a lot of other physical objects, which if one were to fall on you could kill you, and therefore you live in a dangerous environment. These are the ways all of you are misinterpreting an absolutely mental experience of Mind and its Movement, God and the Movement that God is.

You, all of you individually are...well, it's been said that you're God's offspring. But not offspring in the sense that you have children, and they are separate from you to run around to do their own little willfulnesses. You are the extension, as the Course uses the word, you are God's Love extended. Well, what is God's Love when it's extended? It isn't you being love. It's still God's Love. It's still God. It hasn't changed into anything else, even though it's you.

I'm doing my best to express ideas for which you do not have words in the language, but you are grasping the idea and the Meaning.

As each of you begins to have less investment in surviving as a body, and as you begin to switch your allegiance from body identification to mind identification, you will begin to find so called matter reconfiguring, because you are not resisting it, or holding it in a pattern that is untrue of it by virtue of misinterpretations that you are absolutely confident about.

Now even though there's absolutely nothing substantial about anything you are experiencing, nothing physically dependable about it, it does not mean that you need to be frightened now that maybe your chair will have a little glitch in its energy pattern, and you will find yourself on the floor because you passed through it, it didn't support you. Because Creation is the visibility and tangibility of God and there are no glitches in God.

So your world and universe and body all embody the indivisibility of God. And if God cannot be divided, there can be no conflict, no opposites, therefore no chance.

So it's true, you are not a body, and you are still free, have been forever. You are still free to shift from body identification to mind identification, and experience everything from a new vantage point that is more true. But you see, the body won't disappear, and Creation won't disappear—just what you are identifying with and investing your survival energies in. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: I think I'm going to take us from the nice wonderful mind back to the body. Because when I heard you answering that question before, I felt, well, if we are the creative expression of God, then maybe all of these diseases, maybe we're supposed to just love them and accept them as being the Will of God. Is that true?

ANSWER: No, indeed. But you're not to hate them either. You're not to have any response to them. Let us say, that it is a disease that has a physical manifestation that you can see with your eyes. And you look at the manifestation of it. You do not say, "I love that."

You see love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real. There is something Real here, but it's not the disease. So you don't love the disease, and you don't hate the disease. You don't engage with the disease, you engage with the Father that must be being Meaningful right here in order for there to be any experience of any kind right here.

Your devotion is to the Father, everywhere. And what doesn't represent the Father doesn't distract you from acknowledging the Father right there, acknowledging what is Real right there. When you see something that is apparently conflicted, you may know that it is an illusion.

If you are driving down a highway and it is a very hot day and you see the road covered with water five miles up, what do you do about it? Do you love the water? Well, actually, if you were asleep in the car and hadn't even seen it, it would have made no difference to your getting where you were going.

In other words, the illusion doesn't require anything to be done with it. It is a misperception, even if it seems quite tangible, even if it can be recorded by a camera. No matter how much it looks like the road is flooded ahead of you, there is not a drop of water on it. And even if you had tangible proof of its existence, by virtue of a photograph, the road has not a drop of water on it.

So when you see that, what do you do? You say, "well, I'm just going to keep on keeping on, because there's nothing there for me to deal with, and you go to your destination. And so, you look here at the seeming evidence of conflict, and that which cannot be an expression of God, because it is conflicted, and you say, "I'm not going to be sidetracked by that. If there's anything here, God has to be here. If there's anything to be experienced here, it has to be God expressing His Meanings for His unconflicted purpose of fulfillment. And I'm going to keep on keeping on, in terms of recognizing that."

No, you do not love what is obviously false, and anything conflicted is false. With people, behavior may be conflicted, but that which is doing the behaving is Real. So love is the willingness to look past the behavior to that which is Real. And really doing that, the way I described earlier, right through the center of your Being, means that you will not react to the other one and his presentation of engaging in unloving behavior.

You will not judge that person according to his behavior, knowing that his behavior is arising from ignorance, that it's inappropriate for him to be bound by. And your inner recognition of his freedom from being bound that way, and the behavior that spontaneously follows that kind of recognition of innocence, makes it easier for that one to abandon his confidence in his misperception.

Also, please, none of you abandon your common sense as you move forward on your spiritual path. Indeed, you may have to be open to that which is unreasonable according to your current conditioning, but never abandon what you call reasonability until you have abided with the unreasonable long enough to embrace its fuller meaning, so that it has become reasonable to you and constitutes part of your common sense at a new level.

You all know what hurts! And you all know what feels good! At the bottom line: What hurts is conflicted. What feels good is not. And when you see something that you know is wrong, is conflicted, cannot be of God, do not love it. But don't become sidetracked by it either. Desire from the "withinness" of you to see that apparently conflicted area—whether it's a whole individual, or an evidence of disease—and want to see through God’s eyes so that you can see God there with no evidence of conflict. Is that clear?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Your spiritual paths really don’t require you to become stupid.

QUESTION: I would like to address... It seemed you started to touch upon vibration when you were talking about leaving the body, becoming the mind. People have begun doing work on ascending in this lifetime, regenetically constructing themselves, bringing in certain strands of DNA, vibrating into another dimension, fourth-dimension. And I would like to have some feedback on those things.

ANSWER: First of all, I said nothing about leaving the body. If anyone thought I did, let me be perfectly clear. If you can manage to escape the visibility and tangibility of your individuality, you will have succeeded in ceasing to exist.

QUESTION: In this dimension. Ceasing to exist in this... Well, all right, I’m talking about vibrations stuff.

ANSWER: Period. I simply want to make it clear that shifting from identification with the body to identification with mind does not cause body and world and universe to disappear. But the shift causes you to experience it from an entirely different vantage point. And this vantage point is one in which you recognize yourself in everything. And so, you will find that you have not left the body, but that you not only have an experience of being yourself—I was going to say, an experience of identity—you not only have the experience of being yourself and recognizing yourself with specific identification, but you have the experience of yourself in and through all things universally, infinitely.

So you don’t escape one little part of the universe into some sort of nebulous void, you keep it and get all of the rest as well, including the whole Brotherhood, in whom you recognize yourself, and feel your Oneness with and Wholeness with.

No one is escaping anything. And I’m going to tell you some wonderful news that may be disappointing. There aren’t any other dimensions. There ain’t no place to go. You’re here. You’re Home. You’re in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and the only thing that can confront you at any given moment is the Kingdom of Heaven and the Sons and Daughters of God. That’s all that’s happening at this moment, and any moment. There’s no place to get to. You just have to open up your eyes, and stop having a private little dream that provides a biased perspective of who you are and what the Kingdom of Heaven is.

You can work with strands of DNA mentally, and all of the other fantastic imaginative stuff, but there’s only one thing required for waking up, and that is curiosity—just enough to open your peepers!

What’s good about the good news is that, because you never left Home, it’s been ever presently waiting for you to be curious to look at it. And, therefore, in spite of all the concepts about refining one's Soul through lifetime after lifetime after lifetime, in order to become worthy of waking up by the grace of God—which makes things sort of questionable too—it means that all along, and even right now, all that's been necessary is curiosity about the Reality or truth of the moment you're in, because it's all present confronting you and nothing else is. Therefore, there isn't any process for you to go through before you're worthy. Every single one of you already knows how to be curious. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: That's wonderful, thank you. I'm glad to know that it's all here and everything is perfect. Thank you.

ANSWER: It is, and if you are not seeing its perfection, if you are recognizing obvious instances of imperfection, all it means is that you need to bring a little bit of curiosity into play to get beyond the misperception. And as I mentioned earlier, that which is Real has an intent, a powerful intent to register with you because you and it are not separate. And the wholeness of you and it is embraced in your being conscious of it, rather than unconscious of it.

QUESTION: When I was eighteen, I had an experience where I felt the veil was lifted, and I experienced incredible oneness, deep compassion, totally felt at peace, and had glimpses of it later in my life. But I had lost that perception, and I really felt that was like a guiding. I had asked to know the deepest depth of my Beingness, and this experience happened to me.

And so, it is very magical, stepping into that perception, because I didn't really have to do anything except let go or surrender to get to that place, although it still remains. I know I'm not there, because I know what it's like to be there, but it...

ANSWER: But you know it's here whether you're seeing it or not, and that is the value of it.

QUESTION: Yes! Exactly! Absolutely right! Right! So yes! So someday when I get curious enough I suppose it will be there again. That's the impulse I live with all the time, is to be in that space, or be here.

QUESTION: In handling this illegitimate process called disease, I've got a little dissonance between your statements about how to deal with it and previous statements, which suggest that the use of common sense, using the clay that is at hand, using the disease intervention processes, doctors, what have you, that are available, how do I reconcile those two approaches? What context do we put them in? Do we do all of the above, or only one, or both, or what?

ANSWER: Everyone has the thought that if they listen within they will get the answer. And everyone thinks of the word "answer" in terms of permanence. In other words, when you get "the answer" it will be a forever permanent answer.

You will have arrived at knowing, and knowing will be forever unchanged. This isn't true.

Being is exactly like riding a surfboard, and God is the wave, you might say. (You cannot take this totally literally, but I am using it because it has value.) When you are riding the surfboard, you don't say, "What is the answer to this speed of the wave, this height of the wave, the length of my board, or the shortness of it, and the balance? What is the answer?" You do not ask that so that you may permanently employ that, because the next moment the angle, the height, etc., will have changed, and your going to have to ask again relative to where the movement is at that moment.

So, absolutely speaking, you cannot speak in absolutes. How do you like that? Absolutely speaking, you cannot speak in absolutes. So you will not say, "Well, when I have become aware of the truth about this, I will no longer go to doctors. And I will always rely on the Holy Spirit, or the Father, or my clear thinking, whatever." And you will block things off into fixed patterns of behavior, and this you don't do and that you do do.

There is another aspect of this that you must understand, and that is that because you never left the Kingdom of Heaven, and because you never stopped being the Son or Daughter of God—the Christ, even in your limited self-concept what you divinely are has continued to be the Reality of you, undisturbed, and unaltered by your limited perception.

As a result, no matter where you are in your process of realization, in your state of limited self-awareness, the wholeness of you is still the wholeness of you. And because it is the fact of you, it can be experienced as your need being met in the language of your present perception. Which is another way of saying what the Course says about the Holy Spirit using every circumstance to your advantage. The only reason it can be used, or turned to your advantage is because what you divinely are, you still divinely are, and that, as I said earlier, is the dominating factor.

And if there's the slightest bit of willingness on your part, on any of your parts, to be open to what is appropriate at any given moment, the circumstance will be turned to your advantage, and in one instance it might appear as though a surgeon did it, another instance it might appear that an Advil did it, and in another situation it might appear that a simple "Ah, ha" did it. But you will not try to categorize them and say, "One of them was right, and the other two were wrong, which was it?" And then make a life long study. So you listen in the moment to what is appropriate. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: You said before that if we love the body, we look at it and try and see what's Real in it, and also we can discern what's false in it. The Course as I understand it says that...

ANSWER: But you will discern what is false in it disappearing. Continue.

QUESTION: My understanding of the Course is that the body is neutral, it is neither to be loved nor hated, it is a means of communication. Being neutral, it should serve you no pain, nor should it be a source of joy. That the mind decides whether it is a source of joy or a source of pain. And that as an illusion, God did not make the body, nor did he make the world. Now these understandings of mine seem to be somewhat confused with what I heard here this morning and this afternoon. And I would like to see some clarification please.

ANSWER: I think I can sum it up simply in these words, which are the words used in the Course: “The world you made is an illusion.” And I have described the way in which one says, “But, Father, I would rather do it myself. I would rather have my unique perception of it all.” And by virtue of bringing into play a biased perception of the world, you have made the world.

But it is a world of the imagination, it is a slanted perspective of God’s Creation. Your slant is the world you made, and it is an illusion, and God did not make it. But take away the slant you have given to it, the bias you have given to it, by asking of God, “what is there?”, by being curious to see creation as it is; and then you will have unmade your world, you will have released Reality from your bias, or you will have released your experience of Reality from your bias and you will be able to see the world of God’s Creation.

QUESTION: Well, Raj, this takes me back five years ago. This is a very personal question. I had a reading with Paul, and that was when I was deciding whether I was coming to Kauai. And, Raj, at that time you told me I was at a threshold, that I was coming into my Beingness. And I thought, “Oh, good, I’ll come to Kauai and come into my Beingness.” So my question is, how am I doing?

ANSWER: Beautifully! Whether you believe it or not, beautifully. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon. This is another sick and tired question. In the spring of 1992, I asked you for some help on two incapacitating problems that I had. One was allergies. The other was chronic fatigue or flu-like problems. And at that time, within a period of about ten minutes, the allergy problem disappeared, and it was a severe allergy problem—incapacitating. And I was quite pleased about that and it allowed me to keep functioning in some normal sense. But I didn’t do anything, I didn’t change any mindset at that time. It happened so fast, I didn’t release an investment in being allergic, I didn’t do anything. It just happened.

But the chronic fatigue and flu-like symptoms and sore throat and so on kept up. So I have been trying to do the things that you mentioned, perhaps too hard, perhaps like my life depended on it, I’ve been trying to do those things. First, I’d be happy to have that experience repeated, and just simply be relieved of feeling really terrible. That would be great. If however, there's something, some aspect of this that I'm supposed to participate in I'd like to know specifically what that is, if that's appropriate. And I'd like that to take place as soon as possible. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

I do not want an answer to this question, but I want you to consider it. Do you know how much you are loved? You are greatly companioned with. You are not a special case, it is not that this doesn't apply to anyone else. But the specific thing you need to know is that you are not alone. And you have, what I will call, mighty companions with you—your guide, and others working with your guide on your behalf. And you are embraced with unlimited good, unlimited love, actively embraced by it.

What you need to know is that you are not alone. And what has kept this going has been an ongoing sense of aloneness, even though, in terms of friends and people in your life you are not alone. You have felt alone in regard to this healing. And because the problem seems to be so all inclusive, it seems like it must be more difficult to cope with than something that is more localized.

I invite you, and I encourage you to let in the love with which you are being loved. I encourage you to be as consistently, consciously aware that you are not alone as you can be, even if you have to use a watch that beeps once an hour, or once a half an hour, do it to remind yourself, to remember that you are not alone, and that you are so warmly loved because you are innocent, because you are a brother.

Those who are Awake, who work with you and work with everyone, do it because they experience you, and all of you, as their brother and their sister. In other words, they love you because they care. It is not as though you have dragged yourself in off the street and they don't know you from Adam, but it's their job to love you and so they do. They love you because they know you. The whole Brotherhood knows the whole Brotherhood, except those of you who are insisting upon having this privately biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Let them in. Remind yourself that they are there. And remember, if your whole body is actually not solid in any way, obviously whatever doesn't identify God has ample opportunity to slip out. There's nothing holding in what doesn't identify you. The love you are embraced by will do the trick, if you will remind yourself that you are loved. And we will see on Wednesday night how long it took.

Let yourself be embraced, all of you. Let yourself be embraced, because none of you are alone. And it is the act of letting yourself be embraced, letting someone or something else into your space that counteracts the act of assertive independence, in which you, for whatever reason, chose to look at things a little bit differently than God. It undoes the declaration of independence. And so, it's even more meaningful than just a healing of a symptom. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: A few years ago I moved to Kauai, and for the last few years, including Kauai, I've been having hard times. But I've also experienced a lot of healing. I feel like that's one of the reasons I came here. And I feel like I'm at the end of a... I don't know, some sort of a cycle, and I'm finally ready to get on with my commitment for my mission. And I need to know specifically where I'm supposed to do this.

I have been having dreams the last few months of... that Washington State was my true home, and I feel a great nostalgia to move back there. But every time I ask within, I'm told that I need to stay here on Kauai. So I'm confused. And I'd like to know...

ANSWER: Only because your choosing to listen to yourself.

QUESTION: But, which is the self?

ANSWER: You are not listening to guidance. You think you have some option. Whenever you think you have an option, you are confused. Whenever you recognize that you have no option, you are clear.

Now if you are asking for guidance, and your guidance says stay here, that this is the place for you to be, don't just lump it, don't just stuff it, say, "Why? What is the blessing here? What is the fulfillment here?" And persist until the answer that this is where you are supposed to be is clear and makes sense, and is reasonable and comfortable for you.

You are feeling some nostalgia. The desire and feeling about going to Washington is arising out of memory, but your guidance is arising out of a connectedness with now, and is reflecting the Father's Will, and has nothing to do with memory, or the past. I understand that nostalgia has a seductive feeling with it that feels like it has depth. But the clarity and the peace that accompanies the guidance you get is what is dependable, and is the sign that it is really clarity, and really appropriate.

So don't try to finesse the universe into getting what you want. Because what you want is what the Father is unfolding for you now, because it will identify and be felt by you as fulfillment. Not fulfillment that's beyond your ability to grasp, or a wonderfulness that your guide says is wonderful, but you don't know what your guide is talking about. It will be fulfillment that you will recognize.

I understand that sometimes it seems reasonable to think that your really wholesome desires, if expressed, may just get the "powers that be" to accommodate you. But you really want to accommodate the powers that be if, indeed, the powers that be are intent upon you waking up, coming back into your right mind, your sanity, your ability to experience truth in everything around you, whether it's here or Washington.

So I encourage you to stand by that which holds the promise of your release from dreams and ignorance. And to be very frank with you, if you want to indulge in a little nostalgia, even a little melancholy—of course, if the melancholy is felt as a warm, longing sadness for something meaningful, but no matter how well you dress up the description so that it sounds good, it's really not being present with and available to the now, in which God is insisting on your being Awake.

I am glad that you are paying attention to the guidance, even though you're gently twisting its arm. You're right where you belong. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I think I'm getting pretty clear on the message about how all this works. I have a big why question. I kind of feel like we're God's Edsel, except I know he creates nothing but perfection, so I guess we're not a mistake. We're created in perfection and we're given a willfulness and a freedom of choice by which we all go about mucking it up. I guess my question is why are we here going through the difficulties of trying to figure this all out, so that we can quit mucking it up?

ANSWER: There are two ways that I can answer it, both equally helpful. One is it doesn't matter how you got here, here is where you are and waking up is the only opportunity, the only real opportunity you are faced with. And that is a helpful explanation. Pay attention to what is on the dish in front of you instead of wondering why the dish is there.

Now the other answer is that for example right now you are experiencing a three-dimensional universe; if you understood how to shift your attention, or the focus of your attention to a two-dimensional experience of what is going on right here, you could shift into that and doing so would not constitute a disobedience, it wouldn't be wrong. But the moment you move into it your new experience would have limits, of a sort, that would tend to obscure the larger three-dimensional perception that you are currently experiencing. And because of that obscuration you would tend to forget that you had the option to, let us say, wake up to what is presently your normal three-dimensional perception of reality.

Well, when the Son of God, and actually it was two—because there has to be a joining, whether you are dreaming a dream or beginning a dream, and it takes two to wake up—when the two of you decided to join in having a different point of view from the Father's point of view, it caused a loss of the infinite view—the all inclusive whole experience of conscious oneness with everyone and everything. And the very limitations of that, shall I say, biased view did two things: it made it difficult to remember that you could go Home; that you could abandon the point of view. The second thing it did was cause a sense of guilt, which meant that any return Home would in all likelihood involve punishment. This is not true, but from the separated standpoint that is an inevitable conclusion. And that inhibits coming Home. Who wants to come Home if there's only punishment awaiting.

So, you are where you are because, you might even say, you decided to do a little experiment, and see what it's like when you're having your own point of view. Well, there's nothing wrong with that, everyone has that capacity. And so, there's no judgment placed upon you, and you are not guilty of anything. And now that you are here you simply need to undo it, retrace your steps. And that is why guidance is available to you.

The moment you engaged in this declaration of independence you were assigned one who was Awake to stand with you, to help you not forget Home, or to help you remember Home, so that you have the support of one not experiencing your limited perceptions and the false conclusions that arise from them, who could illuminate the truth to you and help you remember so that you could dare to want to come back Home, or to wake up. It really isn't anymore complicated than that.

QUESTION: So what you're saying is that we're here because we chose to have this experience.

ANSWER: Well, remember where here is. Here is in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

QUESTION: We're in this mindset then, because we chose to have this experience, and that's all it's about.

ANSWER: Because you chose to have a mindset, instead of the infinite view. Yes.

QUESTION: So there's no big prize at the end of the game? I mean it is a big prize, but basically we're here to do it because we chose to be here to do it. So just get with it and do it.

ANSWER: That is a common sense way of expressing it, yes. I like that. You see, it appears to you that you have some gigantic breakthrough that you have to become equal to, which would seem to be justification for a lot of praise once you have done it. But once you have done it, you will recognize who you are, and you will feel normal—in your right Mind again, Sane—and you will know it. And then it will seem like a ridiculous thing to get praise for neglecting to expend the energy it takes to be out of your mind.

So yes, there really is no great promise, even though you will have the joy, the deep grounded joy of being in your right mind and knowing it, along with all of the undistorted experience of Reality that will be yours, and will be, you would say, amazing, but only momentarily, because then you will recognize, "Why yes how on earth could I have forgotten." Thank you.

QUESTION: I just wanted to ask you if you could share your clarity on an experience I had a couple of nights ago? As we were getting ready to go to sleep, I turned out the lights and a rectangle appeared right by the side of the bed, my side of the bed. And it was a network of orange and beautiful blue luminescent lights over this rectangle. And I didn't know what it meant, but I was awake, I wasn't asleep, it wasn't a dream. And as I settled down into the pillow, I felt that the fabric of the rectangle was—this sounds crazy—but it felt like I was part of the fabric and Al was part of the fabric. It felt like everything was... our Being was part of this.

And then as I was looking at it, it slowly turned inside out. It sounds crazy to say it, but that's what it did. And then it started filtering into the air, it dissipated. But as I was experiencing it, it was very lovely. I had the distinct recollection that this was the third night that this has happened. Only this time it seemed more active. I just wanted to ask you what was the feeling behind this, what was going on?

ANSWER: It was an experience of illumination. I like your use of the word fabric, in the same sense that I like the use of the word fabric in the phrase “the fabric of Being.” Because although one thinks of fabric as tangible and fixed, the fabric of Being is moving. It is also illuminated, and it is illuminated because love is the substance of it, and love is light—literally.

It was a moment of illumination in which you had the experience of how everything fits. And yet, because nothing remained the same the fit had nothing to do with size. The fit had to do with the indivisibility of the Movement of Being. And always when you experience the way things fit, you experience how you fit in, which constitutes the experience of union.

If any of the rest of you wish to facilitate the abandonment of independence, just say, “Father, where do I fit in?” Oh, boy your ego won't stand for that for very long. But it is a key. “Where do I fit in?”

I understand the turning inside out, and indeed there are no words to elaborate on it so that it might be understandable. And as it broke up it was an indicator of the end of the illumination, rather than an indication of something happening to the fabric of Being. There was an experience of love that you had, correct?

QUESTION: Oh, yes.

ANSWER: Indeed. That is it, it was a wonderful experience of illumination. Don't try to make something out of it.

QUESTION: No, I'm not. I'm quite content. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. All of you need to become like children, little children who are given an ice cream cone. They don't care where it came from. They don't care how it was made. They don't care what went into it. They just enjoy the experience of eating it.

Learn to be open to experiences of illumination, to experiences of Reality without demanding an explanation or an understanding of it. If you don't waste your time trying to gain an understanding you will have more ice cream cones.

QUESTION: It's great happiness that I can hear your voice here, Raj. I know you're always there, and this leads me into the question that I'm going to ask you now. I feel having read a tremendous amount of so called spiritual matter, and the Course In Miracles, and listened to your material, and of course the Course as well, a great desire just to listen, merely to hear. And I would ask for your support in this, that although I know that the result very often is one of peace, and therefore of having the answer, I would like to really hear a little of what I need to do in any and every circumstance. Thank you.

ANSWER: Well, please understand that the guidance that you seek is seeking you. You already are not alone, and you were not alone before you were seeking guidance. And your guidance is intent upon registering with you. And because it is already, shall I say, ordained, already in the plan, already the way things work, you may know that it is not as complicated as you might think. In fact, you have neglected to share that you have on occasion heard guidance. And although you tend to think that maybe it wasn't full on guidance, it was. And I'm telling you that so that you might not feel that you are in any way hearing inadequately.

Guidance meets you right where you are. Your guide knows you so well, that he can approach you with every confidence of success because he can speak to you in a way that doesn't frighten you. Because of that, guidance often seems quite simplistic. But there is a reason: Together with the simplicity of the guidance that is given comes an experience of being loved also. And the combination of the two allows you to relax and persist in asking for guidance.

If you want more consistent guidance, ask for it more consistently. And know that you will not be considered a pest. Know also that there is nothing that you can ask that is too inconsequential.

You have my support. You also have your guides support. And as I briefly touched on earlier, there is almost without exception always more than one individuality working with you on behalf of your Awakening, even though only one has been assigned.

So persist in listening. And do listen about inconsequential things, about little things that don't matter a great deal as far as you're concerned, just so that you can become at ease with hearing. And the more at ease you become, the more clearly you will hear and the more detailed the information can become, because your trust level is not as low.

Now, let's do as I mentioned earlier about the physician, or the Advil, or the "ah-ha," the riding of the wave where you don't lock yourself into absolutes. Don't swear off reading, or listening to tapes, because now you are going to listen. Listen to tapes, read books, and listen. Don't make a work ethic out of it. Your guide is easy. Hearing guidance is easy. And it can be engaged in for easy reasons. It can be done with gentleness rather than firm resolve.

You can afford to release some of the British in you. You're already doing the right thing, and I'm encouraging you to persist and be easy about the whole thing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I want to thank you first, Raj, for the tapes that I've heard, which has been less than a year. And you introduced me to The Course In Miracles. And they've both been very important in where I am.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. And the question I would like to ask you is that I left a marriage of over forty years because I really couldn't be my own self. I felt my integrity was really being violated. So I left the marriage and I got a divorce about two years ago. But I still feel a strong pull and a strong loyalty to my ex-husband, which I can't understand. And I wondered if you could help me on that?

ANSWER: Well, I'm going to be very blunt with you, it is an example of stupid co-dependence. And I say it because I can say it, and you can take it. I put it that way so that you might understand that it doesn't arise out of a healthy place, or a place that you should honor. The clarity with which you left the relationship embodied the health.

And you're going to have to use a little self-discipline. And when you find yourself feeling the draw, you're going to have to tell it to shut up, because it is not a manifestation of intelligence but rather that which would draw you into loss of integrity. That's the simplest way it can be put. And are you going to give the time of day to that which would draw you into loss of integrity? No, you are too intelligent for that. And you will not engage in such stupidity.

The clarity with which you left the relationship is still your clarity; you have not abandoned it. But you are tending to honor it. And then without looking at the integrity with which you left the relationship, you are off to the side here toying with this attraction. Well, stop playing with it; kick it out, dismiss it, dismiss it from your experience. Dismiss it with some authority, as a teacher would dismiss her class, and expect as a result of the dismissal, that everyone would leave. Dismiss it, and remind yourself of the clarity you have and the step that you took that embodied your integrity and your clarity and your healthy mindedness.

Now you can spend many a lonely, miserable, sad night ruminating over what there is in you that causes you to feel this draw. It will play into the dynamic your marriage played into and cause you to feel that there is some flaw in you that you probably can't do much about. And then you will, nevertheless, try to find it, to no avail, because it isn't there. And you could avoid that whole miserable process by dismissing it when it first presents itself to you.

I do want you to begin to think of it this way: just because an idea pops into your head doesn't mean you consciously chose to think that idea. The idea presents itself to you just as someone knocks on your front door. And when it presents itself you can say, "Wait a minute, is this my thought, or not? And whether it is or not, do I want to invite it in and entertain it?" And you say, "No!"

And say it with the strength of the integrity with which you left the relationship. Continue to move forward in your strength. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: That's exactly what I thought I would hear, and I needed it. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I was not accommodating your expectation, however.

QUESTION: Raj, or Jesus, I bring greetings from the many wonderful people with whom I work. When you were talking awhile ago about the mind identification and the body identification, I'm well aware of the body identification and the five senses and so forth, but how would you describe yourself in comparison to how you would describe me in my present place of unfoldment? That's kind of a funny question, but... it's funny to me. But as we are Awakened how can we expect to be different? Am I going to see, hear, feel...

I had an experience last week and I had many helpers with me from the enlightened side, if I can say it that way. And I had the experience of...

ANSWER: The other side of your closed eyes.

QUESTION: Thank you. It was an experience of tremendous energy coming through my body. And as it came through, I had a feeling of connectedness with the total fabric. And as it went through my body I could feel in some parts of it, in particularly in my head area, a lot of density which was just being pushed through. One came in through my left side and went out through my right side. But it was a tremendous experience for me because it kind of gave me an idea of what may be an Awakened state, it's just a little prelude to may be what the Awakened state is like. Could you enlighten me?

ANSWER: This is called a cliffhanger ending of the day. There is no way I can do justice to your question in the amount of time we have left. And so everyone is going to wait for your answer along with you, and I will address it first thing in the morning. It is a wonderful question and I will be happy to share it with you.

ANSWER: Good morning. Another day with Jesus in paradise. Another day with your brother. That is the better way to think of it, because you do not have unreasonable conceptions of brotherhood. Brotherhood conveys to you equality, and that is the nature of our relationship. Which does not mean I am in the bad shape you are in. It means you are in the good shape I am in.

And the discrepancy between the shape you think you're in, and the shape I know you are in is what I am here to reconcile or diminish so that you all will cease arguing against your innocence, your purity, your integrity, your Sonship and Daughtership, the welcome that awaits you from all of the Awakened brotherhood, and the welcome that awaits you from God, rather than the judgment that so many feel is awaiting them.

Indeed, it is like somebody who wakes up in the morning, and the person who has called their name and awakened them says, “welcome back,” even though you have been there all along, even though you have been the Christ, the undistorted presence of the Father all along.

And so, I greet you in Brotherhood and Sisterhood, and encourage you to let go of your conceptions of Jesus, so they will not get in the way of your relationship with me as a brother and friend, your equal, your comrade. If you wish to think of me as an older brother, you may. But the only thing that could make me seem to be an older brother who might embrace you differently from a younger brother is your concept of yourself as being less, or a little bit younger, a little bit less mature. Again, this is just a concept you are holding about yourself, not totally a constructive concept you are holding about yourself, and one which I am going to constantly encourage you to abandon in favor of the way I see you and the way the Father sees you.

The Father’s benediction on all of you is the same as it was on me: “This is my beloved Son—or this is my beloved Daughter—in whom I am well pleased.” That is the forever benediction of the Father on His children, all of us. That is the Father’s benediction on His self-extension called Creation, and looks like you and me.

We ended yesterday with a question that there was insufficient time to answer. And the question basically was: If we are going to make a shift from identification with body to identification with and as mind, or conscious awareness, how is that shift going to register with us? In other words, what is the difference between the perceptions of the five physical senses, the body perceptions of everything, and the mind experience of someone who is Awake. And specifically it was said, how do things appear to you as opposed to us, who are still dreaming dreams?

And indeed, I have already begun the answer as I have shared with you about our equality and our brotherhood and sisterhood, and that the Father’s experience of you is one that is embodied in the words, “this is my beloved Son/Daughter in whom I am well pleased. Not, this is my beloved Son or Daughter with whom it takes a great deal of patience, but I love them.”

No. Indeed, it is perhaps easier to conceive of God as loving you, but having to have infinite God like patience to put up with you, but realize that that is based upon a weak, wimpy, self-concept that you are entertaining about yourselves, which necessarily would require God to have to have patience with you, and that it’s just a concept, not a fact, it’s just an idea that occurred to somebody who expressed it and found others who shared in the idea until it seems by agreement to be totally reasonable.

Well, we are here today, these three days, to perhaps have a new agreement, a new idea that we are willing to agree to together. If your concept of yourself was—regardless of your behavior, regardless of how you think you are to be judged, and that you are judgeable and so on—if your concept or idea of yourself arose out of an awareness that God’s benediction on you was that He was well pleased with you and claimed you as His own, if that was the measuring stick you were willing to use, you would begin to recognize how often you bring another kind of measuring stick into the picture that is incongruent with God’s measuring stick. And by virtue of being able to notice when you bring this other measuring stick into the picture you would be in a position of casting those measurements into the trash can, and not validating, embracing and embodying them.

So part and parcel of how you will experience everything, when you are identifying as consciousness or mind rather than body, will be an awareness that you are the beloved expression of God whom God has no reluctance to embrace whatsoever, and whom God has no trouble recognizing as worthy of His pleasure.

Now, that’s going to feel like something. And I will tell you that the major difference between the way you experience everything now, and the way you will experience the same everything when you are identifying with and as consciousness, is that you will feel the capital “M” Meaning of everything, instead of having, what I’m going to call, emotional reactions or responses to everything, which is what happens when you identify with and as the body.

Most all of your feelings that you experience about everything are governed by what degree of threat they provide to your security. And so, it is easy to love a rose, or a sunset, but it is not as easy to love the stem the rose is on. And so, you are a little reserved and self-protective. You see, most of what you call feelings about everything are not feelings at all, but an aspect of the means by which you protect yourself. And so, you are not connecting with the essential Meaning of the rose, or the essential Meaning of the stem, or the essential Meaning of the thorns on the stem.

So, as you begin to shift from body identification to mind identification, you will begin to experience Meaning that has nothing to do with survival or self-protection, because the Meanings that you will experience will be inherent in, inseparable from your peace, which I said yesterday, is inseparable from your absolute innocence and stability and invulnerability. Not invulnerability because you have a magnificent shield, but invulnerability because in this place you know for a fact that there is no threat.

Now, we spoke yesterday about the fact that there is no matter, even according to your scientists. There simply is nothing solid anywhere; it is all energy pattern, like the force field around a magnet. It’s there, but you can pass your hand through it, and it can pass through your hand.

But something is there. What's there? An idea. Where did the idea come from that this energy configures to identify? God, the infinite intelligence, the infinite mind, the universal consciousness, if you will, which you are the presence of even though you have reversed the picture, and said you have a mind confined within your skull, embraced by and carried around by something else called a physical body, constituted of matter, which now you know doesn't even exist as you perceive it.

Can you imagine mind moving, engaged in a mental activity that did not embody the nature of that Mind? Impossible. The nature of God is love. The Movement of Mind is love. The self-expression of that Mind, as it becomes patterned, if you will, to identify the thought of God must occur as an act of love, and the substance of it must be love. And love feels like something. It is Meaningful. It is Meaningful to God.

And I mentioned yesterday that love is light. At the bottom line, the energy that becomes patterned, or that configures to express the idea of God is light. And so, as you really, not theoretically, really begin to shift from body identification, in which your mind resides, to Mind identification which is infinite, and you have no other experience of conscious awareness than it being infinite, in which the experience of the Meaning of body and world lies, you will begin to see everything become less dense.

Your sense that your body and world are made up of solid building blocks of matter together with the need for self-defense, because you feel vulnerable because you have separated yourself from your source to act independently, has created a density that doesn't let the light out. And causes you to not see the light in everything else.

There are those of you, a few of you here, who have experienced moments of illumination, in which absolutely everything that you thought was solid physical matter, became truly obvious to you as living and moving, even though it held its shape, all of it was alive. And I'm not talking about an acid trip here, I'm talking about a state of illumination with no artificial inducements, in which this living moving substance that held a pattern and expressed a distinct idea was living love.

And further you have experienced yourself, not as standing apart from it observing it, even though there was a body here and an object there with seeming space in between—your experience of it was one of recognizing yourself in it. And even though there appeared to be a separation, the Meaningful experience was an actual experience of inseparable Oneness with it. And not only that, you felt the love that was emanating from it, because the substance of it is love.

This was a glimpse of how everything appears when you are not holding between you and that experience your definite judgments and conclusions about what it all is and about what you are. Those glimpses occur in moments of defenselessness.

For one of you at least, you not only realized that the form you were looking at was living, alive, moving, and the movement of it was love, because the substance of it was love, but that it was not different from you, and it was loving you. You had the additional recognition that although the thing you were looking at was beautiful, it could have been something that was not beautiful and the Meaning and the experience of it would not have changed.

What I mean by that is, that if the object had been a beautiful work of art—a vase—the realization was that the object could have been a book of matches or a rock, and its Meaningfulness as a divine expression would not have changed one iota.

So your experience of everything is not for the purpose of distinguishing it from something else, or of applying some sort of value to it. Everything becomes Meaningful. And none of it is experienced as isolated from any other part of it, or you, and yet there is still an infinite expression. Everything does not meld into one humongous globe of unidentified love. So everything becomes an experience of Meaning, with a capital “M”.

Now, as one becomes less and less defended against experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven as it really is—not as it appears right now, no matter how beautiful it appears right now—you will begin to see these forms glow. In other words, the light of it, you will begin to see the light that is living love, or the living love that is light. And the structural density that was associated with your ego viewpoint, or your limited perception, will begin to yield to the simple presence of love as light.

And you will find that there is color, glorious color. You think you see color now, you do not know the vibrancy and depth, and spectrum of color that is available. And the colors embody and express the Meaning beyond just the very whole experience of the love that is the substance, that is the light of everything. That in itself is a magnificent experience as you would judge it right now.

So that when you see a color... I’m going to use the example of a book of matches. On every book of matches there is a little staple that holds it together. The staple has a function. The matchbook cover has a function, a different meaning, or purpose than the staple and so on—the matches, the heads of the matches, etc. Each part of the book of matches has a different color that expresses or deepens the experience of its meaning. And things of similar meanings have similar colors.

Even though what I am saying may sound wonderful, I am limited by language in a way that causes my description to be very unrefined, incapable of expressing the infinite subtleties of the Meaning that God has expressed by means of His ideas that are seen in the way that I am describing.

And so, the colors that you see that express the subtlety of Meaning and purpose that is every aspect of each idea like a book of matches, as I said, gives more depth, a fuller experience of the Meaning. And what you cannot forget as I describe this is, that it isn't like you observing a book of matches here, it isn't you seeing a book of matches in a new way, because as I said, when you are in illumination, or when you are undefended against seeing everything through God's eyes, you have the undeniable experience of recognizing yourself in everything. And so, the full spectrum of Meaning that the book of matches embodies is known by you to be part of the full spectrum of you.

This experience of unity, this experience of an infinite breath of subtle Meaning, and that it's all you, and you're all it, is bliss.

I cannot express it completely as a mode of communication without talking for eternity. And we don't have that much time. We don't have that much time in this gathering, and we don't have that much time in terms of everyone's Awakening. There is not an eternity of time left before everyone will make this shift from body identification to mind identification, and wake up.

But just to share with you how this extends, and extends, and extends, I want you to realize that along with an entirely new way of experiencing the same old things, and experiencing unity and bliss without having lost the experience of conscious identity or individuality, you will—for lack of better words, and for purposes of description only—you will begin to notice that all of this that you are experiencing is in movement.

Oh, it's in transition, you might say, and because it's inseparable from you, you are moving. You, it, all is moving, it, all, you is moving. "Oh, well, this is a new experience, seeing everything this new way was sort of familiar, even though it was all new. But what's this movement bit?" And as you abide with it, you find that it's the Movement of Creation, it's the Movement of God, but it's the Movement of You, because you are inseparable from it.

And so you share the experience of being the Movement of Creation, which puts you squarely in the middle of the full experience of "Behold, I make all things new." It's like sitting on the edge, sitting on the leading edge, like in the first seat of a roller coaster, but not really scary. "Wow, infinity, standing at the threshold of infinity, forever engaging infinity, forever engaging, experiencing simultaneously with God the experience of the infinite Movement of Creation. "Well, that opens up yet another door as to what's coming next. Well, no one can second guess the Father, no one can second guess the Movement of Creation."

And you know what? All of this is experienced with absolute peace—no fear, no excitement, no thrill. Who needs an edge of fear to be attached to what they're doing, or what they're experiencing in order for it to seem to be meaningful, when the experience of bliss and joy are inseparable from being Awake. Conflict isn't needed to generate a little bit of excitement to make life seem worth living. But it's far from dull.

Now I have said this before in other gatherings, but I will say it again. As you dare to embrace the thought, the idea expressed in the first lesson of A Course In Miracles, which says, “nothing that I see means anything,” which really means, “nothing that I see means what I thought it meant, or what I think it means,” as one begins to embrace that, and one runs into the inner discomfort at conceiving that possibly everything doesn’t have any of the meanings that you have associated with it, as you get into the discomfort of that, you naturally move another step, “Well, it’s got to have meaning. What is its meaning aside from what I thought it was?”

As you begin to take that step, and there emerges a willingness to see everything with new eyes, minus the judgments and confidences you have had about that thing, or those things, you will indeed begin to see evidences of light streaming primarily from the edges of objects, to begin with. And it won’t be scary at all. In fact, it will be more like wondering, “how come I didn’t notice that before. Of course there’s light there.”

True it may generate a little bit of excitement in you, because it is novel in the context of your usual way of seeing things. But it will also be recognizable to you as utterly natural, you will remember at least that much of what you have blocked by means of your confident definitions about everything.

And so you see, you don’t have to wait until the by-and-by to expect to see things with new eyes, you can start right now. And the way you do it is to shift from identifying as a body to identifying as the conscious awareness, in which the experience of body, and world, and things is going on; an infiniteness, the boundaries of which you have never experienced because there are none, in which all things are being experienced.

And as a result of what I have shared with you yesterday, you are now able to begin to conceive, or embrace the idea that the things that you are seeing, the things that are embraced within the you that is conscious awareness do not have any matter to them, no solid substance to them, and are themselves ideas, which are perfectly tangible and visible to the mind that moved and created the pattern in order to express a Meaning that feels like something to the Mind that moved.

You don’t have to die to make this shift, nor do you have to live another ten thousand, or one hundred, or five lifetimes. All you have to do is stop being so confident that you know what everything is, and be willing to become as a little child and engage your curiosity again, so that you wake up every morning of the week wondering where you’re going to see light streaming off the edges of leaves, or the edge of the table, or the ends of your fingers, or what other aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven that you’re in is going to begin to register with you today.

There needs to be more delight. But, no, most of you get up in the morning, dead set sure that you know exactly what your boss is going to do, or the person sits next to you, or what the traffic is going to be like, and you start at the moment you wake up, in fact, before you wake up, bracing yourself for that which you are so confident will happen.

And so, you start out the day frozen in your confidences, and your every move reflects those confidences, and you have joined with everyone else who has the same confidences. And is anyone surprised that that's what happens in your day? No curiosity is there, because you know for a fact that nothing's going to change. And you lock yourself in.

You want to know something? Everybody would love to be able to change. Everybody would love to be with someone who was defenseless themselves. And by virtue of their defenselessness, as I said yesterday, communicating the fact that they feel your utter innocence. And that's why they can be defenseless. And to know that someone feels your innocence is experienced as love. And to be with someone who is so confident of your innocence means that you can dare to embrace your innocence, rather than defend a guilt which you're not really sure is yours but everyone has convinced you of, and your self-doubt has stood in full support of.

Everyone would love to be in the presence of one who sees his innocence, so that he or she could feel his or her own innocence without apology. And you know what? For those of you who are familiar with the hundredth monkey principle, when a certain number of the Brotherhood who are asleep begins to stir and withdraw their joining or union with everyone else in sleep, the strength of the ability to remain asleep lessens, until a threshold is reached wherein there are not enough remaining in sleep joined together to keep the sleep deep, and spontaneous rousing will occur with the rest.

So never underestimate the power of your willingness to become curious and see with new eyes, because every little bit of willingness that you bring to seeing everything new through God's eyes constitutes your withdrawal from the union of dreams, which weakens the union and contributes to the break up of the dreams and everyone's Awakening.

I am very glad you asked the question. There are some light bulbs that have gone on in everyone's awareness. And although I could go on and on, the real key is for there to be a little "ah, ha," that goes on within you that awakens in you a curiosity. Because it isn't my telling you how it is in every aspect that is important, because what is important is the little willingness you bring into play that opens your door, or your eyelids so that you're able to see what is and always has been right in front of you.

QUESTION: Okay, I have such difficulty and go through so much stress over decisions and choices. What can you say to help me with that?

ANSWER: Well, there is only one answer that hits the mark. The answer will never be multiple choice. The fact that there seem to be many potential answers—because the "problem" seems to be so complex—misleads you, misleads everyone. It will make it much easier if when you become still to listen for what is the answer, if you will realize that it is just going to be one answer.

The reason for becoming still so that you can listen for what is appropriate aside from all of your best judgments and your confusions, the reason it seems difficult to listen for the answer is because you expect the answer to be as complex as the problem appears to you to be. And the reason for listening is so that you can hear the one appropriate thing to do.

Therefore, the solution is simpler than what you initially expect, because you expect the answer to be as complex as you perceive the problem to be. If you realize this, then you will be more relaxed as you listen. And you will expect to be able to hear the answer because it's going to be simpler than what you are expecting.

You are used to solving your problems by virtue of thinking and reasoning, and weighing the pros and cons, etc. But the real and the easiest solution lies in daring to listen. Because at that particular moment, under those existing conditions there is one appropriate answer. And it is an answer that blesses everyone. It is not your responsibility to figure out how it can bless everyone. It is just your responsibility to take the simplest steps to arrive at the answer.

Always what makes for the confusion is the seeming abundance of alternative answers. Just remember that there is one answer, and all you are interested in is the one answer.

Now, it can be helpful for you to take your list of potential answers and, so to speak, hold them in your mind and consider them one by one. And imagine that there is a light at the beginning of each of the potential answers—a light that can flash red or green. Have no investment yourself in which answer should be the answer. And consider them one by one, and simply watch for a red light, or a green light, or no light.

You may find that there will be green lights on two or three of them. When that happens, discard the rest of the list and take those three, and ask about them. Because there is only going to be one that will be the answer.

This is a little technique you can use, which allows you to yield into the answer. It is a very helpful practice. You can also consider the list, and pay attention for which one seems highlighted. But the point is to dare to listen to know intuitively which is appropriate, rather than trying to figure it out for yourself. It is the surest way you have of arriving at, if not exactly the right answer, the closest approximation to it.

And I would suggest that you do this, as I said earlier, with things when you are not faced with a crisis so that there is a certain familiarity and ease with the process. There are other ways to gather an answer than specifically hearing your guide's voice, and hearing words, and this is one of them that you can employ.

Confusion is not your Birthright, and struggling through confusion is not the only alternative you have. But in order to experience the alternative to that, you must dare to assume that there is real valid and valuable guidance, or availability of the answer to you without your having to reason your way to a conclusion. And then listen for it.

I encourage you to experiment with this. It is a delightful experience. And if you do it at times when it doesn't matter significantly, you will be better prepared to deal with the situations that you have determined are extremely significant. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is sort of related. I seem to not necessarily believe, but come to an awareness that confusion is probably what our natural state is, at least the way we perceive things. What sort of effort are we supposed to put out in response to that awareness? I mean, in what way are we to proceed once we perceive that confusion?

ANSWER: Even though you may come to a reasonable conclusion that confusion is the normal state of affairs, you must be willing to challenge that. You must be willing to make a claim or assertion within yourself that indeed confusion is not your Birthright, but clarity is. What is called a sound mind is your Birthright. And you must make a choice for that, rather than just settling for confusion and making the best of it.

And then, even though initially it will just be an assumption on your part, with no conviction behind it, as I already indicated, dare to listen in the silence. Dare to become still and listen with, again, another assumption on your part that what I said yesterday is true, that what is Real, what is actual insists upon registering with you just as light insists upon dispelling darkness by its very nature; not because it is aware of darkness, not because it wants to get darkness, but because its very nature is to be the absence of darkness.

The very nature of your being, your very Birthright is intent upon your experiencing your clarity, because in its presence confusion is absent. But if you do not know that you have an alternative to the assumption that confusion is the normal state of affairs, you will not be curious to experience not being confused just because it's your Birthright.

But once you know that the choice is there, or once you are willing to embrace it as a possibility, you can practice or exercise your curiosity in the silence by listening with an expectation of forthcoming clarity. And when you begin to experience clarity coming forth, your assumption will begin to shift into conviction, confidence, if you will.

And then when confusion occurs you will know within yourself that that is not your only option. And you will gladly opt for listening again so that clarity can emerge, clarity that is relevant, practical, meaningful, and which does not cost anyone anything. What I mean by that is, that it will always be of a win-win nature, rather than a win-lose nature.

So I encourage you to dare to challenge the assumption that confusion is normal to you. It is not, and it never has been. Even if it may have been the only thing you have experienced as a general rule, that does not change the fact that it is not natural to you.

It's time to start taking some stands, not as acts of aggression, but as grounding actions that ground you in your experience of what is true about you, in the sense that I have been speaking about what is true about you, or in the sense that any of the great religions have expressed what is true about you.

If conflict, if polarization were the absolute fundamental normal of existence, the universe would long ago ceased to exist, because universal chaos cannot result in Order. Little pieces of chaos here and there can seem to exist without upsetting everything, but if chaos or conflict is a universal absolute, it would only be a universal absolute for a millisecond, because everything would—for lack of better words—explode or cease to exist by virtue of a universal conflict.

So if you are experiencing existence at this moment it means that there is no universal absolute of polarity. That in itself should buoy your spirits, and cause you to get up each day with more hope and expectation of good and fulfillment. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. I guess more in a specific nature on this type of question, when we see individuals or groups perpetrating things that we find are causing turmoil or harming other people, and we see that happening quite often, how do you quiet your reaction to that type of thing?

ANSWER: By making commitment to setting it aside, by valuing your peace enough to not find justification for indulging in reaction. If you engage in reaction, you join them, whoever they might be, by adding to the chaos or conflict in the world, and neglecting to be any sort of light of clarity, or peace, or intelligence. So the first step is to take care of yourself, and choose for your peace.

I will tell you and everyone something else: All of you will begin to practice great wisdom if you will refrain from dealing with the problem until you've gotten in your peace, even though the problem seems to say, "You don't have time to get into your peace. This must be addressed right now." Now certainly, if a child has walked into the street, it is not appropriate for you to sit down and meditate. But other than obvious things like that, what you run into in terms of problems on a daily basis are things that do not require reaction on the spot.

And if you would value peace first, and move into it before you address the problem or consider it, what you will do is move out of the space of reaction so that when you consider it from your peace, the consideration of it will not elicit reactions. And from that place of not reacting you have the presence of mind, the balance, or evenness of mind to be able to consider more truly, or hear more truly what is appropriate. And you will then tend to hit the mark consistently when it comes to actions that arise out of the clarity that you've gotten from your peace.

And your peace in expressing your clarity will cause those who are running around like chickens with their heads cut off, or those who are engaged in actions that are not constructive or kind, etc., to be able to reconsider, because you are not challenging them from a personal place, or from a place of reaction.

Now it is a fact that you will not always be met by a willing response. But you will not have contributed to the furtherance of the problem. And if you are not met with a willing response, then that's the next thing you take to that inner place of peace to listen about, so that you will know what is appropriate for you under the circumstances.

When you become highly aroused by the injustices that are going on, you have sacrificed that state of mind which is the only one that can be a corrective presence. And that is very important to remember. And so if you truly want to be contributive to the betterment of the world, or the betterment of mankind, etc., if you truly want to be contributive, don't forsake the one thing that will allow you to be contributive, just because your egos are so ready to jump into the fray and engage in the righteous battle.

I mentioned yesterday, that when you connect with your peace, it is not just a different emotional state, different from anxiety, or fear, etc., but rather you are having a direct experience of your Being, of your Self, with a capital "S", this Self who you're not totally familiar with at the moment, but which has always been you and has never been absent. It is a direct experience, it is you touching your Real Self, having a direct connection.

And as you begin to have that awareness, and you feel the safety that accompanies it, and you feel the joy and the love that accompanies it, you also have the realization that this unexpected experience of you is true, and it has to be true of everyone else. That realization about what is true about everyone else, that you have gathered from an inner experience of yourself, absolutely alters the way in which you behave with others; unless after having this experience you abandon it in favor of the surface reactive ego emotions that you earlier described as an ongoing state of confusion.

So, if you want to make a difference, and if you want to be appropriate, if you want to be in the world in a way that blesses everyone; value your peace enough to seek it first before you consider the problem, or shall I say, before you consider the solution, the absolutely appropriate step to take, or thing to do or say. And then if you cannot be an agent for change in the situation, you will find yourself not needing to be in the situation. And if you can be an agent for change, you will find yourself being there and change will occur. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I read a book recently, in which the author theorized that the reason for low back pain, was that there was an emotional problem, or crisis, or trouble in the mind. And that the body as a defense mechanism, not wanting to face the problem, would begin to tighten and ache so that it would distract us from the emotional problem that it was afraid to confront, or that that part of us was afraid to confront.

Now, I've always thought that the incidence of pain in the body was an indicator to wake up and look at something you're missing here, some emotional upset, or something that needs to be faced. So is it A, B, some of both, or none of the above?

ANSWER: It is like which came first the chicken or the egg? Pain is always the evidence of resistance. If resistance is occurring, there must be a call of some sort, there must be something requiring one's attention, otherwise there would be no occasion for resistance.

So in a sense, in a somewhat oblique way, your understanding that a pain was a wake up call is right. However, it is really the evidence of resistance to the wake up call. The wake up call doesn't manifest, it's the resistance to the wake up call. So the pain is not itself the call for attention, or greater consciousness, it is the evidence that the call for greater attention is being resisted.

Either way that you want to look at it it brings you to the requirement to pay attention to what isn't being looked at, which you have described as a wake up call. Do you understand?

QUESTION: Yes, I do.

ANSWER: I will elaborate a little bit further. If you say the pain is the wake up call, you can become sloppy in your thinking and begin to value pain. "I can't wait for the next wake up call. I used to hate pain, but now that I know what it is, bring it on, as long as it's not overwhelming, of course."

What you want to value is the wake up call. And you want to learn not to indulge in resistance for very long. If you acknowledge that pain is the evidence of resistance, you will never value it.

Don't become sloppy in your thinking. For example, A Course In Miracles says that the Holy Spirit can turn every problem to your advantage. Well, don't become so sloppy in your thinking that you invite problems so the Holy Spirit can turn it to your advantage. Thank your lucky stars that the Holy Spirit can turn it to your advantage, but desire not to be having circumstances, desire not to be employing the kind of thinking that creates the circumstances that the Holy Spirit can turn to your advantage.

And do this by perhaps inquiring of the Holy Spirit before there is any sense of anything to resist, "Is there anything I need to know today? Is there any clarity that would be helpful to me today? Help!" And then what needs to be uncovered, will be uncovered before you have a chance to resist it.

You see, in answer to your question specifically, pain is the indicator of the fact that avoidance of something has already occurred. And it's also the indicator that a wake up call has occurred, which is being avoided.

When I say be curious, I mean be actively curious, and ask your guidance, or ask the Holy Spirit, or ask the Father, "What do I need to know? As I go through my day today, if there is anything I need to know will you please get my attention, and point it out to me?" Or when you go to bed at night say to the Father, or the Holy Spirit, or your guide if you have enough trust, "I authorize you, I give you permission to use whatever means you have through the night to convey to me any idea that I need to be aware of that will facilitate my waking up, that will facilitate my clearer experience of fulfillment on a daily basis. I give you permission, and I invite you to do whatever you can to help me realize something that I need to be aware of." This is an active expression of curiosity.

And the other thing is that, again, it is an act that invites someone into your space—a joining, a conscious desire not to be alone, and an abandonment of an aggressive act of independence, which is, as I said yesterday, what constituted the fall. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have one last body question, if I might? On January 11th something began to happen in my own body, which was like a major realignment, and it seems to be continuing. What is that about?

ANSWER: Spontaneous healing. Embrace it as such. Do not resist it, and do not imagine otherwise. You passed over a threshold of significant lessening of doubt, and significant increase of trust, generally speaking. And so your perception of your body is shifting into closer alignment with what is true.

I'm glad you asked this question. I want everyone to realize that something really is going to happen when you embrace a willingness to see everything with new eyes. Adjustments are going to occur. Reconfigurations are going to occur, even as literally as Michael just described it, as a realignment of his bones.

It is not all a head trip. It's not all just thoughts. But it is the disappearance of the evidence of disease. And it is events of realignment of your physical structure. It is the disappearing of faulty elimination. It does constitute real evidential change. "Oh, well, I didn't expect that now. I'm very happy if I just get a new and more wonderful perception of everything, but if there are going to be actual changes that I didn't realize, I'm not so sure I want that. That's a little scary."

Well, it's not a little scary if it's cancer that's there. You'll take that. But what if you're a little short-waisted? That's not a disease. And all of your clothes fit your short waist. But what happens if reconfiguration occurs and a more proper symmetry emerges, and you might even hear pops and strange sounds as your short waist gets longer—not exactly as you saw it in "The Fly," but real change.

Symmetry and beauty and balance is your Birthright. That is not left for the creations of a sculptor to bring out in marble. And as you Awaken there is what the Course calls the coming forth of the happy dream, which comes before waking up.

And so, you need to embrace the possibility, please, that it is going to be something more than just a new frame of reference, a totally mental shift that has nothing to do with your body or with the world. Every single tree you see, every object you see, its substance is light. It is radiating light at this very moment. The illumination in this room is magnificent at this very moment, because it isn't the way you're seeing it at this moment, as dense and dark, unmoving, unalive, etc. Illumination is Soul satisfying, and all of the Meanings of it are Soul satisfying.

As you begin to see it more clearly, you will find that you can pass through the wall, or if it serves purpose, you can simply float down into the restaurant downstairs and have a bite to eat. And you will not be limited in the way that you are at the moment. You're going to have new experiences. And the beauty, the artistry of God, the infinite harmony of His self-expression will apply to you.

And so, if your legs are too long for your torso, and your head is too small for your body, and there is not utter artistry and beauty that would be recognizable to everyone, then you can expect to have changes occur, and experiences of growing that were absolutely normal to you from birth to, let us say, twenty-three or twenty-four years old. My God, you looked forward to being able to jump up and touch the top of the doorway finally. And you knew that you were going to get taller, longer, if you will, and also have more strength in your muscles. And you knew one day you would be able to do it. Or reach the low branch on the tree without standing on something.

Be ready for change. Be ready for balance and order and symmetry and alignment, etc. Be ready for evidences of these, because ultimately you are going to see everything as it is, and it is going to be beautiful. And whether or not you can phantom the depth of the meaning of the word beauty, all of you do recognize what is beautiful.

Your dreams have not caused you to lose all awareness of what is beautiful, what is loving, what is perfect. You are none of you totally asleep. But please, embrace in your consideration of your spiritual Awakening that what you have called the physical is not going to be left behind, because as we've discussed now the last two days, there ain't no physical to be left behind. There's the discovery of the fact that it was all mind to begin with. It's a different way of looking at it.

How many of you have watched science fiction movies, or read science fiction books, and read of force fields that you could turn on with the flick of a switch that would create walls, or a platform that you could stand on? Well, and you say, "Wow, that would be neat! I would know we were making progress. And it would be exciting to be able to experience a force field." Well, you know what?

The piece of glass in this window is nothing but a force field. And I'm using that example because it has the least density to it, you can see through it, it's as though it isn't there, and yet you can lean on it. Well, you say, "Yea, but it's glass and it has certain thickness, and because of its physical properties it supports me, even though it looks like nothing is there."

Well, that's not correct. It is a force field. You're already experiencing force fields, because all there is to it is an energy pattern that has a certain intent, and it fulfills that intent. And I'll tell you the moment the intent is withdrawn, it wouldn't break, it simply wouldn't have any density anymore.

The future is here. The Kingdom of Heaven is here. You simply need to wake up to it by having a willingness to let, for lack of better words, a new interpretation in. It isn't a good word, because you use interpretations for the purpose of becoming definite about something. And as we have been saying for the last two days, you need to learn how to ride the indefinite wave that is moving, and by virtue of its movement is indefinite, but also by virtue of its movement is identifiable as a wave.

So, be willing to, and be ready for the experience. Be willing to embrace and be ready for the experience of real change as part of your spiritual path, or as part of your Awakening. It isn't all going to be metaphysical. It's going to be whole, embracing everything, because the division of everything into spirit and matter never really occurred, except in the imagination, and a mutual agreement to adopt that belief and behave as though it were true. And down through the centuries belief upon belief has been added to that mutual agreement that didn't even make sense in the beginning, and didn't express truth in the beginning.

So again, be ready for literal change. That's the way you're going to find out that the world is mental, that it's all Mind. And therefore there isn't any polarity. Nothing has to be resisted, nothing has to be gotten away from. And as that becomes clearer, you will let down your defenses. You will not justify denial of the world. And you will no longer engage in attack on the world by virtue of your definite conviction that it isn't God, and therefore is utterly undesirable, and utterly illusory.

Something is going on, but your perception of it is not what it is. And your perception of it is deluded. And when you believe your delusion, your delusion becomes an illusion. And it is only in that sense that you can say that the body and the world are illusions. They are delusions about something Real that you believe are true. And what you believe is true is an illusion. The minute you withdraw your belief in it, it stops being an illusion and becomes a delusion. And from that standpoint it is actually easier to abandon the delusion.

As long as you believe the delusion is fact, you will make commitment to that delusion, and now you are caught in illusion. And because of the conviction necessary for delusion to become illusion, it is more difficult to shift, to yield to something other than that illusion.

Now you may think that I am playing with words here, but I am actually being very specific so as to allow a path for the mind that wants to reason everything out, to have an escape route and can reasonably dare to say, “The world may be Real, it may all be mind, and everything may all be mental, nothing solid to it in terms of physical matter.”

RAJ COMMENT: Before we go on to the next question, I want to ask: Why are we doing this? Why are Paul and I doing this? Because it is well not to have any misconceptions. Because your misconceptions can block your own spiritual growth. We are doing it fundamentally because it fulfills purpose—relative to me, relative to Paul, and relative to you.

But also, I will tell you what it is not. It is not an example of a special case, as though Paul has a special talent, which because he has it you are able to benefit from. It is rather an example of, well, I’m going to say a not even above average case. And I say this so that you might understand that aside from the value of what everyone experiences here, it is an example of what each of you is capable of. Each one of you is capable of hearing guidance, just as Paul is.

To tell you the truth as opposed to Paul having a special talent for this that allowed him to do it, you could say that he had a special stubbornness, which contributed to his being able to hear me. And his special stubbornness was a highly developed sense of personal metaphysical competence. When his business got squeezed out and collapsed, he was confronted with a situation that his clear metaphysical thinking had no effect on. All of his prayers availed him nothing. But he didn’t give up. And he persisted far past the point that was appropriate, to the point where even wedding rings were sold to try to keep the business afloat, even though it was already dead.

It took a lot for Paul to arrive at a point where he was willing to say that not only did he not have the answer, he didn’t want to have anything to do with his thinking, with his own best judgments, with all of the “knowledge” that he had acquired. You see, the business he had he had great plans for, and he had brilliant ideas as far as he was concerned. And he was going to make a mint. It wasn’t really his goal, because his preoccupation was with the ideas that were going to be transformational in this business. He just knew that it was such a good idea that he couldn’t help but benefit from it financially.

Nevertheless, he arrived at a point where he gave up, and he opened up in the absence of all of his confidences—self-confidence as well as confidence in the metaphysical system that he had grown up in. He was so fed up with it because it wasn’t working that he was left at a point of not just saying but feeling, “Help!” In other words, he arrived at a point where there was a willingness to let in.

This story is not the sign of someone with a special talent, or someone greatly further down the road than any of you. There is a saying that, “man’s extremity is God’s opportunity.” Well, not one of you has to wait for an extremity before you can embrace God’s opportunity to bless you.

There may be one or two of you here that will wait, but it’s not necessary. To listen, to be at a point of truly wanting to experience God’s love, of truly wanting to have clarity, enough so that you will let someone in who has the clarity, that’s the key. And all of you can do that without being pressed to the wall.

Now this doesn’t mean that if you start listening, as Paul did, that you will end up giving workshops and seminars, and traveling around, and everything that Paul is doing. Because your guidance will be specifically appropriate to you and your fulfillment of purpose as it relates to everyone else’s fulfillment of purpose.

And so you cannot preconceptualize what it will be like from watching Paul; except that you can count on it that when you dare to listen for guidance and get it, it will be meaningful for you and others. Because one way or another it will be extended, or the gift that has been received by virtue of listening will not be fully received. If it is not received and extended, it’s meaning hasn’t been experienced.

So what is happening here is not a special case that you happened to have been fortunate enough to be aware of and participate in. It is really very natural. And I haven’t shared for quite a long time with a group, the fact that you do not have to have arrived at a certain point of your spiritual growth before this can happen, before guidance can be experienced, because your guide is quite capable of connecting with you, and dialoging with you, whenever you arrive at a point where there is a genuine and humble desire for that communication to occur.

Now when I say humble, I mean where your reason for listening is not for confirmation of what you already think you know, or what you think you already know. Humility is when you are willing to listen, no matter what the answer is, no matter what the communication is.

So often one listens for guidance to find out, hopefully, that the listener is right, or was right before they listened. This is what the Course calls a pseudo question, because it has a bias to it in the asking. Just remember that after you have heard you can tear the answer to pieces. You can argue it, you can discuss it at length with your guidance.

But to listen humbly means to be willing to hear whatever is provided, whether it supports the position you think you hold, or the attitude you are practicing that seems valuable to you, no matter what. Listening humbly is a willingness to be loved on love’s terms. That’s the way you let in.

Some people, like Paul, arrive at that point as a result of tremendous frustration and humiliation, and a sense of being a total failure, which is most certainly uncomfortable. But even Paul found a new meaning to the word humiliation. For him it was the precursor of humility. And it was one of the kindest experiences he has ever had because it removed from him false trust, and it removed from him confidences that had gotten in the way of his being able to be on the beam, on the Homing beacon, if you will.

And so one can come to the point where humiliation is seen as a most valuable experience, because it leads to humility. Can I say that it leads to genuine helplessness, a horrible concept as far as the ego is concerned. But when one is genuinely helpless, one has no arrogance. And one also has no confidence in himself. Again, a terrible concept from the standpoint of the ego. But it is essential for a strong willed person to arrive at that point, so that his willfulness can no longer get in the way of his fulfillment.

Again, no one has to be pressed all the way to the wall. No one has to be, unless there is a strong will, and a great determination to express it. This is a kind of circumstance that the Holy Spirit can turn to your advantage. But in the turning of it to your advantage, you will say, “All hell has broken loose. I’m failing,” etc. But that’s the way breakthrough is experienced in the face of great determined self-confidence and willfulness.

You know something? Just being willing to assume that there is a source of clarity and wholeness and fulfillment that you are not personally responsible for, and which you do not have to bear the burden of, ought to be enough for you to begin to play with listening—not do play listening—but play with really listening on the outside chance that perhaps there might really be a God, there might really be those who are not suffering from whatever ignorance’s you might be, who stand ready to support you in discovering your wholeness just because you exist (not because you have earned it) that you will enjoy without the pressure of circumstances, shall I say, waking up with grace.

Do not distance yourself from experiencing the companionship, the divine companionship that is available to you by saying, “what’s happening with Paul is a special instance that somehow doesn’t apply to me.” That is an excellent way of distancing yourself from your own good, and your opportunity to experience your integrity.

And for those of you who are students of A Course In Miracles, I will take this opportunity to point out that my time spent with Helen Schucman was also not a special instance. And although there have been some expressions of the fact, or the idea—not the fact—the idea that everyone else can’t expect the same sort of relationship with me or with guidance that she experienced, is untrue. It is an attempt to elevate her, and to elevate the Course into a false position of religious respect, whether it is stated that way or not.

And again, if that is bought into, everyone who buys into it will be saying, “that can’t happen to me.” And your word will be your law. And you will distance yourself from it, whereas every student of the Course should by virtue of the very existence of the Course feel heartened, encouraged to be open to the same sort of guidance that Helen got. It doesn't mean you will write a book. But it does mean that you will have that companionship which will greatly help you in your process of Awakening, because you will have encouragement where you feel not the courage.

Who you really are and have always been, and can never stop being is constantly—because it is the truth—insisting upon being fully realized. And so, it is like the light constantly pressuring the darkness, constantly undoing your false sense of everything, or I will say, insisting upon undoing the ego concepts that blind you to who you are. Which is why the human experience is one of defending one's self, because the ego must constantly reinforce itself to overcome the constant undoing that is caused by the assertion of who you really are so that it may penetrate your present experience of being conscious, and cause you to remember fully who you are.

Because of this you could say that you have constant help at becoming a fully realized Being, if I may put it that way. Your very essential Being is insisting upon being fully realized. And so there is help and it comes when there is a little willingness. Willfulness blocks it absolutely.

So this is not a special instance, and when it happens to you it may seem quite amazing by comparison with what has been your normal experience. But that will pass, and it will begin to be very normal. Except that that normalcy will move you rapidly into fuller and fuller realization, into being more and more fully realized.

So there is nothing special about being in touch with guidance, even though the experience is wonderful beyond your imagination, because it moves you into being Awake.

ANSWER: Good afternoon. Is everyone awake? I mean I didn't put you to sleep, did I?

QUESTION: Raj, about four years ago, when Kurt and I came to you we had just come to Kauai, and one of our questions was, "What are we to do?" And you very eloquently said, "You are to do nothing. You are here to Be."

ANSWER: I remember.

QUESTION: Well, it was a very, very inspiring answer, although I didn't quite know what it meant at the time. But I really feel I have connected more with my Beingness in the last four years. And whenever I go into my doingness, I'm very conscious that I want to do from my Beingness. And my question is: What is your interpretation of doing from one's Beingness?

ANSWER: I'm sorry, I do not give interpretations.

QUESTION: Well, what is your insight, or how could you share your feelings about that?

ANSWER: When you are connected, when you are in the Being place, it is not a void, although initially it may simply seem to be a place of great peace with no activity per se. But as you know the more time you spend there the fuller it becomes. It is as though your eyes or your awareness has to adjust, and as it does you can see more of what is there. And one of the things that is there is joy, and when you feel it you smile, and your body sings, you might say, zings even.

And someone looking at you might say, “Why did you smile?” And you will say, “I didn’t even realize I smiled.” That’s an example of doing from Being. From your Being you will find yourself knowing what to do, not so much as an intellectual process, but as an experience of there not being anything else that’s appropriate.

Paul is sitting here with his hands in this position, not because he has listened to what I have said and then said, “Oh, well, this would be a good way for my hands to be when he says that.” But because there’s nothing else to do with his hands but this. He’s not even thinking about his body, he’s not unconscious of it, but he’s not thinking about how he appears. He’s experiencing the Meaning, and so he does what he does because it fits the Meaning, there is nothing else to do, nothing more appropriate.

So it isn’t as though you go into a connectedness with your Being and get instructions, and then move out into the area of doing and carry out the instructions. As it happens, that’s Paul scratching his cheek, it’s not me.

When you are connected with your Being and you feel what is appropriate, don’t abandon that place. Stay connected with it to the best of your ability as you “do” the only thing that is appropriate. That is the way you do it.

Let me tell you also—everyone—that coming from your Being will never have a charge to it, it will never have a thrill to it, it will never be exciting, but it won’t be meaningless. Emotional charges are ego reactions that are not present when you are coming from your Being.

But I will tell you something that is present. What is present is fearlessness, invulnerability—not from strength, but from a clarity that there is nothing about you that can be hurt. As a result, you are able to come from a totally genuine place. Not from the ego at all. And when any of you are coming from a totally genuine place, something truly Meaningful is happening, something that everyone is able to value, or at least find themselves liking.

So Paul is here, and a gathering is occurring. And he is sitting on this chair, and he is moving, and his mouth is working, and words are coming out, etc.. But none of it is being done from the body sitting in the chair. No self-awareness is occurring that has him placed in a corner of the room with everyone else in front. What is occurring is an experience of, for lack of better words, being on the beam, being on target, being utterly congruent. And so, there is no self-consciousness, fear.

Being from your genuineness means that no effort to influence is occurring, because there is no extension being made, no attempt at communication. We are indeed making a tape recording, and that could seem to prove, because of laughter and what is said from here, that indeed there's a give and take of communication. But there isn't. Truly the only thing that is going on here right now is communion; it is communion of all of us within each one's center. And the reason that is happening is because Paul is being from his center, and not attempting to be something for someone else, not attempting to teach anything, or be anything in particular. And so, none of you feel invaded, and none of you have to hold yourself in a defensive stance.

So what I'm trying to say is that when one is coming from his Being, things will be happening, but not from the standpoint of a doer, doing it. You will engage in conversation. You will appear to go to the store, or hold a workshop, or take a shower. Can you imagine what it would be like to be from your center where nothing you did had to be done out of fear, because there was no fear present. Glorious!

Well, that's one of the normal choices all of you have. And so you might ask yourself, "Should I choose for the experience of connectedness so that I can become comfortable with it and end up being in the world from that place, and experience fearlessness, utter fearlessness? Or should I choose for the right to think for myself, and author all of my own thoughts, and teach everyone the wonderfulness of my thoughts, and try to coerce them into having a better life by virtue of my wonderful thoughts?" And you know husbands teach wives, and wives teach husbands in this way, all as an attempt to control so that the other partner doesn't make waves and make you have to grow, or be alive to him or her.

So, do you want to choose for that, and by virtue of being ungrounded constantly engage in these activities out of fear, with an ongoing unguardedness? I want you to think about that. Or better, I'm going to ask you to feel into those two choices. Because although you might experience the high of authoring things yourself—authoring ideas and thoughts, and putting them together in a particularly uniquely interesting way—accompanying that act is an unavoidable experience of anxiety and fear. And embellished in everything you say will be subtle attempts to control the situation so that nothing will happen to increase this fear.

Are you going to choose for the high that you will get at that cost, or might you be willing to experiment at least with abandoning that approach, and becoming centered, connecting with your Being, going into your peace and being in the world from there—as Paul is doing at this instant. Mind you, although I am talking about him, he is here, and I am.

So it is not as though he has disappeared into the woodwork; this is his fulfillment as well. It is his peace, his experience of fearlessness that I have been talking about. And he can tell you that it has been an amazing thing to live, let us say, ninety percent of the time, ninety percent of a year without fear. I want you to feel about that prospect, because it might not seem worth it to sacrifice the hit of authoring everything yourself personally for something that you can't personally take credit for.

But you must ask yourself whether the cost of living the rest of your life in fear of some sort or another is an appropriate cost, or one you even want to pay, when you actually do have an alternative available to you? You might say that that alternative of experiencing fearlessness is a private one. But when you are experiencing fearlessness you are with everyone else in a new way that is Meaningful for everyone else, transformational even. And so it is not an empty experience, it's just empty of the thrill of fear. All of this awakening stuff is utterly simple, actually too boring for the ego.

Well, what I am meaning to convey to you here today is that what seems to be meaningless to the ego, is extremely Meaningful to the Christ that each one of you is, to the whole-Souled woman and man that each of you presently experiences yourself as—Soul satisfying. And when you let yourself have the experience and discover that you haven't disappeared, but that you are present in a way that is whole and wholesome, you will experience a greater inclination to avoid fear, since you really do have an alternative. It's so utterly simple that there really is nothing glamorous about it.

Some of you might have said, "I'm going all the way to Hawaii to hear Raj. Wow!" It may be meaningful to have come here, but it isn't special, it's absolutely normal.

You can ask Paul after the end of the day, if you wish, when he's being the sidekick, when he's being not from his connectedness, you can ask him just how great it is to be in touch with Jesus Christ. It's a pain in the ass! It's not glorious. Why? Because I won't agree with him when he wants me to believe that he's a poor, suffering, piss-ant.

So be careful not to play into false ideas of specialness for Paul, or for yourself, or for Helen Schucman, or for anyone. Being who you really are is significant—is significant—because you are the direct expression of God. But it's not special. And because it's not special, it is more easily available to you, because it's normal for who you really are.

Desiring to come from your Being, rather than a place of doing, is the means by which you begin to allow yourself to have an experience of, what I'm going to call, divine normalcy. When you do it, angels will not sing, and Gabriel will not blow his horn, and the word of God will not boom forth in Charlton Heston's voice and announce to the world, "this is my beloved daughter in whom I am well pleased." No. It is more like you will simply begin to glow with a warmth, with the warmth of your genuineness, and you will feel your Self, with a capital "S". And you will feel the fact of being on the beam and the congruence of it, and you will feel joy, but nothing special. Thank God! That is a little disillusioning and causes some to think, “Well, I must not really be on the path.”

In my very first conversation with Paul, my first words were, “My name is Rajpur, and I have been awaiting the right time to speak to you.” And Paul almost laughed in my face. And his immediate spontaneous thought was, “I could have come up with a better opening statement than that.” We didn’t need a better opening statement than that. How else does a brother speak to a brother? It’s simple, it’s natural, it’s normal, but it’s also Meaningful in a way that most of you do not experience meaningfulness from day to day. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: I have so many questions, but I’m going to limit it to one.

ANSWER: Why don’t you listen for which one to ask.

QUESTION: I did, but I still feel like my ego doesn’t want to shut up to let me just get to it.

ANSWER: I will tolerate a little bit of your ego.

QUESTION: Thank you. An interesting thing has been happening to me. In my mind’s eye I have been seeing a golden city that changes frames. It’s like watching a movie in my head. And I get a view of what looks like the front of the city, and then it’s like a kaleidoscopic image in my mind’s eye that is perfect in geometric form, and it changes, and then there’s another part of the city. And then other things have been happening, where I see a sea of blue—beautiful blue lights, and then that changes and it goes into colors—just the most amazing colors. And I wondered if you could speak about that, please?

ANSWER: Gladly. These also, like the one mentioned yesterday, are experiences of illumination—the penetration into your, we’ll say, current level of awareness of Meanings which convey Reality. I said Meanings that convey, I did not say images that convey. You do not have to understand experiences of illumination. They are not there to be understood or explained. They are there to be felt, because they trigger in you remembrance of Home and remembrance of the capital “F” Feeling you, that you are.

Just as an aside, feelings and emotions are two different things. Emotions are ego reactions. Feelings are Soul’s recognition of itself in what it is experiencing.

The images you experienced are there to trigger your feelings, to reawaken in you, apparently right here in your limitation of who you are, and of Home, a desire for Home greater than your fascination with the ego’s perception of Home.

So there is nothing for me to explain relative to the images, and there is nothing for you to get relative to the images. The images not only remain in your mind, but the feeling you experienced when you were having them remains there. So connect with the feelings, and let them do what they will. That’s the point. Nothing else. Unless you want to rejoice at having had the experiences.

I will end this answer by simply saying to you all: You value thinking and understanding too much. Use it until you have something to replace it. And then get about the business of having something to replace it with by practicing listening, by taking the time to become still. And as the Bible puts it, as I put it, going into your closet and praying to the Father in secret.

Every great religion teaches that in one form or another. Going into your closet means withdrawing from the business of thinking. And praying to your Father which is in secret, means praying to the Father, desiring to experience the Father's point of view in the silence. It doesn't mean keep it a secret from everybody. It means in that secret place, that place of silence—peace. How do you see this Father? Like a child asking his parents, “What's that? What's that? What's that?” incessantly. Ask your Father, “What is this really? I thought I knew what it was. I think I know what it is. But setting all of that aside for a moment, suspending all of my judgments and conclusions, Father, what is that? What does that mean? What meaning were you expressing? What meaning are you expressing right there where that is?”

This is the way, this is the way you make the shift from body identification to mind identification. This is the way you make the shift from doing to Being. This is the way you make the shift from fear to peace.

Now this really is the last thing I'm going to say. When you are being genuinely out from your peace, you are unavoidably being the presence of love. And everyone and everything is blessed.

To complete the subject matter we have been discussing, I would like to share from A Course In Miracles. This is from a section called Manual For Teachers, and it is in the section entitled What Is The Role Of Words In Healing:

“Strictly speaking, words play no part at all in healing.

“Is the teacher of God, then, to avoid the use of words in his teaching? No, indeed! There are many who must be reached through words, being as yet unable to hear in silence. The teacher of God must, however, learn to use words in a new way. Gradually, he learns how to let his words be chosen for him by ceasing to decide for himself what he will say. This process is merely a special case of the lesson in the workbook that says, “I will step back and let Him lead the way.” The teacher of God accepts the words which are offered him, and gives as he receives. He does not control the direction of his speaking. He listens and hears and speaks.

“A major hindrance in this aspect of his learning is the teacher of God's fear about the validity of what he hears. And what he hears may indeed be quite startling. It may also seem to be quite irrelevant to the presented problem as he perceives it, and may, in fact, confront the teacher with a situation that appears to be very embarrassing to him. All these are judgments that have no value. They are his own, coming from a shabby self-perception which he would leave behind. Judge not the words that come to you, but offer them in confidence. They are far wiser than your own. God's teachers have God's Word behind their symbols. And He Himself (meaning God) gives to the words they use the power of His Spirit, raising them from meaningless symbols to the Call of Heaven itself."

I share that with you because it illustrates that it is not a special gift to listen and hear and share, but in fact constitutes fulfillment of purpose of Being. It is the specific way one let's himself back into the Kingdom of Heaven. Because, as I said, it undoes the act of the declaration of independence that created the whole human condition.

QUESTION: I'm curious about something, Raj.

ANSWER: Excellent!

QUESTION: And it has to do with the timing of the publication of The Course In Miracles, and your emergence as a spokesperson for it in the late part of the twentieth century, when it seems like things are really getting violently out of hand. How come it took 2,000 years, or almost 2,000 years?

ANSWER: When the student is ready the teacher appears. I know you would like a more expansive answer than that, but it is that simple. It is that simple.

QUESTION: Thanks for the simplicity.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. There's been something that's been a concern for me most of my life, and it revolves around my weight. And I've tried numerous things. And have made many attempts, from many approaches, many angles, and nothing seems to have given me the satisfaction I might be looking for. I'm open to your input on this.

ANSWER: Here we have an instance where Paul is surprised at my answer, which he has neglected to voice, because he does not like it—and is questioning me.

Here is my answer: It becomes you. It perfectly identifies fulfillment of purpose for you to be exactly the shape you are. It is communicating a genuine presentation of you. And mind you, that doesn't mean you are a fat person, but it has significant value for others as well as you for you to have the appearance that you have. And because it fulfills purpose, it is perfect. And I encourage you to stop wishing that it were otherwise.

And I would encourage you to say, "I allow myself to appear as I appear as long as it fulfills Purpose, with a capital "P". If you will not resist, or be unwilling to embrace yourself as you appear at this moment, you will find that you will suffer physically in no way because of the weight.

Paul is arguing with me again. He feels that everything I said earlier about symmetry and balance and beauty contradicts what I am telling you now. He is being run up against his limits by what I am saying, because it is hard for him to conceive that you are beautiful right now. And therefore, his concept of beauty must be abandoned so that he may be present with fulfillment of purpose in whatever form it is appearing.

Now I will say that I cannot say this to everyone who has a, shall I say, noticeable presence. Because for most it is representative of either self-hate, or self-protection, or other manifestations of a lack of inner evenness. But this is not the case with you. It was not the case with Buddha. It would have been ridiculous for Buddha to have been skinny. There was purpose in it. I will not tell you what the purpose is. I will only tell you, embrace yourself, and know that you look perfect as identification of fulfillment of purpose in your life and in the lives of others. Don't let it make you miserable.

If you managed to look like you want to look, the particular fulfillment of purpose that you are to fulfill would not occur. Your appearance is not an aberration, or a distortion of perfection. And neither you nor Paul have to like it.

PAUL: I'll bite my tongue.

QUESTION: Well, half my question was just answered. The other part of that, which I felt has been connected with the physical aspect with my legs, is the self-esteem which I have seen now go back, at least, to the very beginning of this life—of being birthed—in a very simple sense of just having a sense of knowing that my mother wanted a girl. And I was the first born, and it kind of went on from there.

And so there has been the message from that time until now at 42 that continues to be with me, of again, not being good enough as I am, or what I do and what I express. So, what if there are things that would be positive that I would express, I wouldn't get, would never have any of the support for it. "Oh, that's nice," that kind of thing.

So I guess my question basically is, can such a long history like before even being able to formulate in words and actual thoughts this whole dynamic of that self-image—and I have been working on it for many years, but it's still there—what can be done now to heal that finally, and be in that wholeness and completeness of expression that on one level I'm aware of, but continues to be frustrated in the expression?

ANSWER: Paul can already tell that he likes the answer I am going to give.

You are actually further along, in terms of your healing, and you are aware that you are further along than you shared. Indeed, your self-esteem is blossoming, emerging, enlarging, filling you more completely. This condition has not served a purpose. You did not need it. You adopted it, by virtue of a decision to be an innocent victim, not knowing at the time that you had a choice. And so you squelched yourself.

But as your self-esteem re-emerges, because it never went anywhere—all of it is totally there where you are—as it re-emerges you are indeed going to find healing occurring—strength in the legs, substance to them. You are no longer finding value in the infirmity, or shall I say, milking it for the maximum benefit relative to your growth. And in your no longer valuing it in any way, you are in a position to release it completely.

To be experiencing yourself as you are currently experiencing yourself physically is illegitimate, an illegitimate imposition upon you. It was indeed brought upon through ignorance by your squelching yourself. This is not a call for judgment, it is just a call for noticing. And you have noticed, you have recognized the source, and you are not engaging in self-criticism or judgment. And this is excellent. You know what? The condition can't even seem to appear in any way, shape or form if you find it useless.

Now I do not mean by what I have said to suggest that you have a new holy grail to seek, as to what use you find in it. It is useless, because it doesn't render visible and tangible God's intent, which is for your body to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. All you have to know is that it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. Second, you have to authorize the release of it from your experience. And third, allow, let the reconfiguration occur.

You can't make it occur. You don't have to know what to do to make it occur. All you have to know is that it can happen and it will happen for no good reason. No good reason that is as far as anything you might do to try to make it happen. It will happen because there is a good reason, but it's not yours, it's God's.

I know you would like me to give you something more concrete. But all of the more concrete things that you have tried to utilize haven't worked. Does everybody begin to grasp that you wake up by grace? You are healed by grace. Just because. Not because of deserving it. Not because of anything you do. But for no good reason. By grace!

The real reason that you experience a healing is because you're already the Christ, you're already the Son or Daughter of God, you're already whole—literally. When, for whatever reason, there is a weakness in your resolve about what you think things are, the way things really are can register with you. It can penetrate the weakness of the resolve that you bring to your commitment as to what everything is, and how it has to be, and what can and can't happen. And that is why it is said that it happens by grace. And that is why when it happens somebody will say, "I have no idea what or why it happened. I wasn't doing anything special. It just happened." Yes!

Throughout these three days what am I doing? I am providing insightful information about how things are, so that there is greater potential for all of you to not be quite so committed to your present sense of how things are. Because in the absence of that commitment, penetration can occur and healing and regeneration and Awakening can occur by grace.

It's wonderful to study this book. It's wonderful to study the Bible. It's wonderful to study any logical progression of ideas leading to clarity. But please understand that the only reason you benefit from reading them is because in one way or another you have arrived at a place within yourself where there is trust, rather than fear, that there is a God, and if you let go of your personal control chaos will not be the result. And in that general frame of mind there is, what we will call, a weakness of the ego. And in the presence of the weakness of the ego penetration can occur of the ego structures, and by grace you remember more of who you are, and more of what is true, and there is healing and regeneration.

You need only continue to let this blossoming of self-respect and integrity occur. You're not making it occur. You're not blocking its occurring. And so it is easier for it to insinuate itself into your experience, and I will say, assert itself as a better visibility and tangibility. But do you realize that that means that it isn't that the erroneous or distorted image is being improved, it is rather the perfection of you coming more clearly into view and obscuring the erroneous image—replacing it.

That is why you do not have to do anything. That is why you have to let. Let your perfection present itself more and more clearly, by not objecting to it. And you are already engaged in this. And so I must say: Continue. It is a job well done so far—don't stop. Don't stop letting. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I bring greetings from Australia, especially from Valyn Kinsley and Gabriel.

ANSWER: I receive it.

QUESTION: My question is very different from everyone else's. I was wondering where Mary Magdalen is now? There never seems to be any information about her.

ANSWER: At Broadway and Forty-Second Street. (Laughter)

QUESTION: Well, good for her!

ANSWER: Not true.

QUESTION: I wonder if she's been with me at times, and I've refused to acknowledge this. Because I've often had a curiosity about her. And I don't know what else to say.

ANSWER: Indeed, your sense is absolutely correct. At the risk of, again, sounding sacrilegious, so what? She can be as much of a pain in the ass as I can.

QUESTION: Good, good.

ANSWER: Why do I say that? So that you will just be real with her, and not create within yourself a sense of separation from her, because she is a "significant other." She is Awake. And she is with you, and she is with others, being the Christ, being the door through which the Father's Will finds expression, and helping mankind relinquish its limited self-perceptions. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: I feel that maybe in the healing work, especially with oils, and perfumes and aromas, is she with me when I'm doing that sort of work?

ANSWER: When you let her be, yes. Let her be more consistently with you. You know, when you put people up on pedestals, whom you admire and love, you put yourself in a position of being embarrassed to be associated with them. And that is sad.

You believe they are great, but you don't want your friends to know that you are associating with someone GREAT, or that you have belief or experience Meanings in a very relevant and intimate way with someone great. And yet, all of this is going on in your own head. You have this outrageous perception, and then you say, "Well, I'm not going to let anyone else know that I'm associated with this one about whom I have an outrageous perception."

If you can manage to abandon a sense of greatness about any divine guidance, then in your more grounded relationship with it you will not feel self-conscious, or apologetic, and you will be able to be in the world in a way that allows other people to find guidance of value, to find communion of value. Because they cannot look at you and say, "what a dippy lady," or, "what a jerk," because there is groundness and substance that is obvious—and peace. They will not be uncomfortable with you. Why? Because you are not uncomfortable with your guidance. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: On being comfortable with guidance, often I feel extremely uncomfortable with my seeming inability to differentiate between guidance and my thoughts—ego. Recently, I have felt the experience of surrendering what appeared to be my stranglehold on guidance. Specifically, I had some pictures associated with my feelings of purpose. In the way I have spoken of it a couple of times, recently, is that when I let go of being the dictator of my guidance and allowed myself to be guided, wonders became wondrous.

Specifically, I have some feeling of being called to Kauai on purpose. I find myself hesitant to speak of it in this gathering. So many people have come to this island with visions of community, of centers, of whatever, yet I felt and continue to feel that no matter how I surrender, this wellspring of energy just keeps pouring through me. And I fear in moments that I'm attached to my picture of what I think it is, and am unable to hear clearly guidance truly guiding me. Help!

Actually, I have one addition to make to that. I've likened the experience that I have to that of a sculptor who feels some expression wishing to come into form, sort of like it doesn't matter whether it gets expressed in form or tangibility or not. Well, it does and it doesn't. And I've sat a long time with this expression. Back to help!

ANSWER: You will find yourself very uncomfortable if you introduce a personal investment in that which emerges as a result of listening. The moment Paul begins to care about how what is being said is being received, a dissonance is set up, which if he doesn't stop it will exhaust him physically within fifteen or twenty minutes. Caring about whether or not what is said is meaningful to somebody else, although it could seem to be an expression of caring, is an introduction of an ego element that is incongruent.

Now, your vision involves a concept of contributing to a more significant world order. A world order that comes about microcosmically through the orderly arrangement of a group of people. You have an investment in, you care about making a difference in the world. And this is what is hanging you up.

Paul doesn't care as a ego, or a channel, or as any presence of any kind. Paul does not care whether or not anyone has heard anything that has come out of his mouth. It will not disappoint him if no one values it, and it will not thrill him if everyone does value it. Because that sense of Paul is not in the picture.

Paul, right here, right now, is consciously devoted to listening. The moment he has an investment, another thing aside from the exhaustion that he would experience will happen. Another thing would happen, and that is—every single one of you would begin to feel uneasy and would appropriately, I will say, provide a little bit of defense against what you would perceive to be coercion, because you would sense that Paul had an investment in how you were experiencing it. If he has an investment, there is a level of control present.

If you have an investment in the outcome, an investment in, let us say, even global community and peace, if you have a personal investment in it then the element of control is present in what you are doing.

I am going to encourage you to stay with the vision, which was from guidance. And while staying with it, abandon your personal investment in it. When that is abandoned, the energy of the movement will be able to move forward and meet with response, because there will be no coercion present in it. You will also find that you will not invite into your experience those who would tangle with you about it. Because if you are exercising some, or practicing some control you will invite into your experience those who like to be a better controller than you're trying to be.

This has happened with you. And you have felt hurt, because how could they possibly misunderstand your good intentions. They recognized that attachment, that investment in outcome.

I encourage you to give some attention to releasing attachment to outcome as well as the desire to do good in the world. As Thoreau once said, "If I knew for a fact that someone was coming to do me some good, I would run for my life, for fear that some of their good would get done to me."

Paul has no goal here. And in the absence of a personal goal on his part, something Meaningful, something recognizably Meaningful can occur. When you drop a personal goal around this vision, it won't mean that nothing can happen. It means that's when something can really happen. So stay with the vision. Abandon the personal investment. And don't be afraid that there won't be any energy for movement of fruition without that personal investment. "Thy Will be done," needs to be your motto. "Thy Will be done." And then continue to listen to know what that Will is, without adding any personal investment to it. And watch what happens. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon. After some experience with A Course In Miracles I have found its application in my marriage and my children lending myself to become almost more judgmental than I did before The Course In Miracles.

ANSWER: A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

QUESTION: Which after many years of marriage, and perhaps control, I'm wondering why the difficulties in the marriage seem to be worse than ever. Issues of intimacy and love seem to be needing clarification. And that is my question.

PAUL: Issues around whether to be intimate or not?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Well, maybe we should have a conversation without talking. Or maybe we should sit down to dinner without any food on the plate. How can you love without expressing it? And how can you love without expressing it as affection? How can you be affectionate without being intimate? And whose measuring stick are you going to use to judge whether intimacy is appropriate?

It is not a fact that the more spiritually advanced one gets, the less intimacy there is. On the contrary, because there is less blocking the expression of love there is more expression of it.

It is too easy to get unreasonably metaphysical. I heard someone the other day say, if they left the island it wouldn't mean they would be apart from the person with whom they had been living, because they're one. That's mumbo-jumbo crap! If you want to be together, you had better be in the same place. If you want to express love, then there is going to be affection and intimacy. And the affection and intimacy is going to be the expression of love. And love is a gift. It isn't a process of getting. And so in intimacy it is a gifting, not a getting. Don't ever hesitate to gift gentle, sensitive love.

I tell you, the more and more spiritual you become, the more humane, the more down-to-earth real you will all become with each other.

Now I have talked about this before, but it is important, and I must talk about it again. Whether it is A Course In Miracles, or any other teaching, or any other system of thought that is extremely meaningful to you or anyone else, and if it is, it's the intent of that teaching, or book, etc., to eliminate the blocks to love. Then one doesn't have to be able to talk it. And the ones around you don't need to be able to talk it. Because talk isn't love. Talk is words. And discussions for the most part, where the use of words is important, is more an intellectual play of ideas than it is love.

As you know, the Course says, "Would you rather be right or happy?" To very many students of any thought system, or any revelation, or any teaching, it seems to become important to them to have someone with whom they can talk about truth, talk about concepts, talk about love, when love is wordless. The willingness to recognize in your mate that which is Real doesn't take words. And the willingness to not engage in judgment relative to her doesn't take words. And when you are neglecting to judge, and when simultaneously there is a willingness to recognize that which is Real, you will not be engaged in any act of control.

And as I said, your defenselessness with her will be felt by her as a recognition of her innocence, and she will feel loved. She will not say, "Oh, you see that I'm innocent." The words won't even occur to her. But she will feel loved, because she will feel that it is easy to be with you. Love isn't about words and concepts.

And as you know, the purpose of the Course is to remove the blocks to love. The purpose of the Course is not to give you a lot of wonderful things to talk about. It also is not the purpose of the Course to present you with an opportunity to be miserable, because nobody else will talk with you about it.

Do you love her? And I'm not asking you to answer me. Do you love her? If you do, then love her—be affectionate, be sensitive, be willing to be present with her, even if you are just taking out the trash together. Let the Course help you be more wordlessly loving.

You must remember that everybody recognizes love, everybody knows what love is. And the minute anyone is around who is being love it doesn't take a ten minute lecture about love to convince them that love is there.

Don't let the wonder of the principles, or the theory, or the logic of A Course In Miracles supersede being love yourself—or any teaching.

I want you to just abide with that, and we will see if there is time for a follow up on that if you have a follow up question sometime tomorrow. But for the moment, I want you to just abide as nonjudgmentally as you can with what I have said. And please understand that I have just been explaining the wonderfulness of the way things work, and I have not been engaging in judgment relative to you.

QUESTION: I really didn't come prepared for any type of a question, except probably just to know a little bit more about what I've been going through, and a little bit about the open space I've been availed to in my life.

And I guess where I should be looking towards, you know, right now and in the future?

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you, whenever you are on a leading edge, and you do not have a few feet of solid ground in front of you, it is well to not assume that you know anything, and not try to know anything imaginatively on your own. But rather, to allow yourself to be fully where you are and feel into the next step, even though it appears there is nothing to step onto. This circumstance is always the ideal opportunity for getting off the merry-go-round of life, where you do nothing but repetitively experience the past.

Almost everyone, even when they are at their leading edge tries to recreate the past in the next step, because that is what they are familiar with. But you cannot get off the wheel of history by doing that, nor can you come into the full realization of who you are and what life is. And so, you literally stand at the threshold of infinity. And what I'm going to tell you is, don't try to peg infinity.

Listen deeply, quietly, and do not let there be a bias to your listening. You know what? You hear a lot about the importance of desire, that that is your part in the creative movement of life. What no one has told you is, don't make up the desire yourself. You don't know what to desire. You will inadvertently desire what you are already familiar with, because you have no other resources from which to create a desire. And that is how the wheel of history is perpetuated.

What you need to do when you are at this threshold is what we have been talking about for the last two days, to go into the silence, to choose for your peace and move into the not knowing place, and listen.

You cannot use this illustration as an absolute. But I want you to imagine that you are in an underground cave, which has a river in it. And you are suspended from the ceiling—actually you and a small kayak that you are in are suspended from the ceiling—it's pitch black, there are no lights, this is like the void. When you lean into your peace, it is as though you let down the kayak until it rests on the water, the river, the current that is moving. And as you do this, you begin to feel the tug of the water on the kayak. And you let the kayak down the rest of the way, and let go of the rope. And the movement carries you.

Now, as you begin to feel the tug of the water on the kayak before the kayak has been released into the water you, for the first time since you have begun to let yourself down, are aware that there is a movement in what had seemed to be an empty void. This movement will be felt as impulse. And because the movement is moving with purpose, you will feel in that impulse, purpose. And you will recognize that it is the purpose of God, and therefore the purpose of your Being. And you will know that releasing yourself into the current is a more natural and full expression of you than being suspended above it with no awareness of its existence.

As you release yourself into the movement, and you feel its purpose, you then know what you desire, because movement with purpose is felt as your being on track, and it will be perfectly expressive of you. Now you know what to desire.

But there is another aspect to it. It won't be desire of the sort that you had while you were in suspension, or it won't be desire that you have experienced in what you would call your normal everyday life and your interactions with it and with others in your life, where your desire was a concept built upon past experience and your best judgments as to what is true and what is valuable. At that level your desires are efforts at control.

But from this place of connectedness with the Movement of your Being, your desire is not an attempt to have control. Your desire is really the experience of your union with the already existing purpose, or intent, or impulse of your Being, which is not experienced as an impulse that originated with your tiny sense of yourself, but rather an impulse that originates with the active thought of God that you are not separate from.

It is only in this sense that you could ever be called a co-creator with God. As a tiny separated entity you cannot possibly be a co-creator with God, because your sense of separateness constitutes a denial of God and an affirmation of you and your particular point of view, which by definition is at odds with, different from God's point of view.

Oh, yes, desire a swimming pool, desire a Rolls Royce, desire a beautiful home, and by virtue of your desire and the purity of your desire—meaning that it's not jumbled up with contradictory doubts and fears—you can demonstrate in your life wealth, and happiness, and an abundance of desirable things.

Well, focus isn't a bad thing. But what's the motivation for the focus? "Well, the Adams' just got a new car, and they're getting a new car every three years. You know what? I'm going to desire that we get a new car every two years." Are you keeping up with the Adams's or the Jones's? "Well, they don't have a tennis court. Let's get a tennis court, and be the first ones in the neighborhood. All we have to do is desire it with a pure desire, because we are co-creators with God." Well, tell me at what point did you let God into the picture before you decided to have the first tennis court in the neighborhood? Do you see what I mean?

Don't try to be the personal author of your desires. Find out what the Movement of your Being is, which is the Movement of the Father in you, as you. Then you will know what your desire is. And my illustration of the cavern, with the river in it, in which you were suspended—although it cannot be used absolutely—was well chosen. Because you are in a kayak, you are in a small vessel. And I did not say that you had any oars or paddles, so that when you let yourself down into this Movement, you are abandoning yourself to that Movement.

Or else, in some way, you are trying to author your course, or control it in some way. And that is still not being on course with your essential Being.

Now, I have said this before, but it needs to be said again for clarity here. Every desire includes within itself everything necessary to its fulfillment. So when you discover, by virtue of yielding into the Movement of your Being, when you discover as a result of that what you desire, and you have yielded into it already, you will find that because it is the Movement of fulfillment already, it includes within itself already that which constitutes its fulfillment, and therefore that which constitutes your fulfillment.

And you do not need to bring a little extra willfulness or intent to the process in order to have the experience of fulfillment that is already embodied in the Movement. So there will never be a point at which you, as a co-creator with God, add your own peculiar little twist to that movement. Adding your own peculiar little twist to the Movement of God is what created for you the human condition, the dream that you are all wanting to wake up from. You see?

So Peter, here you are suspended. It is as though anything is possible; patterns that existed before are not present, nothing is nudging you into a repeat of what has been before. And so you say, “What should I do? Where should I have my sights set?” Well, have your sights set on nothing, nothing but letting yourself into, actually letting yourself fully be in this place that has not much definition to it—suspended in the cavern, in other words—and without trying, through thinking and figuring out, to arrive at an appropriate new destination or direction. Let there be peace in the silence.

As far as the cavern is concerned it is like saying, let there be peace in the darkness, where you have nothing to gauge your position, and nothing to tell you where there is an outlet. Let yourself be there willingly. As you allow yourself to be there, the kayak lowers. You don’t know how to make it lower, or descend, there is nothing that you can get your hands on to make it happen. You must let it happen by letting yourself gladly be in this place of not knowing anything for sure about your future.

It is that willingness to be present with things as they are that allows the kayak to descend. And as it descends, as I said, and begins to touch the surface of the water, you feel movement, you feel the impulse. And then you know you’re not in the void—it is not empty. Value this threshold experience.

You will discover that once you have let yourself into the Movement and yielded to it, that you will continue to be on a threshold, because you are not personally responsible for where the Movement is going. You’re only responsible for being willing to be fully yielding into it. “Thy Will be done, not mine.”

Trusting that the Thou to whom you are yielding is nothing other than God, or your divinity, and therefore that you are yielding into something completely trustworthy.

Now what I have shared with Peter is true of everyone. And although Peter's circumstance is not perceived by him to be a crisis, what I have said applies equally to anyone when they are "in crisis," when the tendency is to panic, and grasp, and grapple for some means of controlling whatever the circumstance is that is causing the panic. In both cases, one that is not alarming in the least, and one that is greatly alarming—the call is for the same thing.

We started out this gathering speaking about peace, and we're still talking about it. It is the arena, if you will, for your experience, your truer experience of Reality, your truer experience of Love, and your truer experience of who you Are. None of you value peace as greatly as you should. None of you recognize how important it is, else you would never choose for panic, you would never choose for self-initiated authority over your experience.

I am not scolding you, that is not a judgment. But if I don't say that, none of you will realize that peace has more depth and breath and meaning than you imagined. And therefore, it is as though you have a gift in front of you, wrapped beautifully, that there is no reason for you not to tear the wrapping off, and lift the lid, and embrace what's in it.

There is no reason for you not to choose for your peace with great enthusiasm, and experience the greater depth of it, the greater significance of it so that you might begin to experience being "in this world" with more grace. And so that you might begin to see this world with new eyes, not colored by your definitions, and concepts, and confidences about what it is—this Kingdom of Heaven that is really the only presence that you could ever be confronted with—because if God is omnipotent and omnipresent, there is nothing else present for you to be confronted with. And therefore, there is nothing for you to escape, except the determination you have to see it differently from the way God sees it.

So Peter, you stand on a threshold of infinity, you stand on a threshold of capital "S" Self discovery, you stand at the threshold of waking up. And however much of that you are willing to yield to, you will experience. And if you do not wake up totally, if you do not become fully realized in the next moment, it doesn't matter, because it's not a test, and you're not going to be graded, and you can't fail. All you can do is delay a little bit longer what's already yours; you can delay experiencing what is already yours and what is already in front of you.

So if you have taken the ribbon off—bravo! And if you have taken the ribbon off and torn off the wrapping paper—bravo! And if you've lifted the lid and you see the peace that's in there—congratulations! And if you have embraced it and let yourself into it totally, we will say, "welcome Home," and you will understand what we mean.

So embrace as much of your good as you are able to, and feel good about it. And if you have not embraced all of it, feel good about what you have embraced.

And do not use what you have not embraced as a means of justifying lack of self-appreciation.

Now I must get serious, practical. It is wonderful to go around the world and hear guru's speak—teachers of note. And it is wonderful to read books that have very little distraction in them from what is essentially important to your Awakening. But you know what? There comes a point where each one of you must practice trust, in the aloneness of your Being, no matter what anyone else has done or said.

There is a point that all of you must come to where you actually make that investment of commitment to the unknown. If you don't do that, all you will continue to get is the known, which is the past, which is the wheel of history, and that's not your Birthright, that's not who you Are, and that's not what you were meant to be. "Oh, but it's scary to be in that place. God only knows what will happen." Yes, isn't that wonderful. How well do you like what you've gotten when you've gotten what you know?

There's great exhaustion in the world today, great tiredness with the known. And it's depressing to many, it's depressing to most. Why? Because they're unaware that there's an alternative, that's why. And I could say that there are many on the globe who are raising their fists in anger at God and at me. But you know what? Every single one of you in this room, in one way or another, has done that also.

Paul did it this morning before he got here. That is why the silence was longer than usual before we began. In spite of his feeling justified at raising his fist—figuratively speaking—he knew that nothing of value would happen today if he stayed in that place.

You know what? Nothing of value will happen for any of you if you insist on staying in that place, because you are confident that the unfairness that you see in the world is real, and you have no choice but to endure it, you have no alternative to it, that there is not another way to look at this. And as I said, that means another vantage point from which to see it all, rather than another way to conceptualize it.

It just perpetuates the past—the wheel of history—to value your right to be upset, and angry, and tired of suffering. You must ultimately abandon that right to raise your fists to the Heavens, and say within yourself, "Help me to see from a different vantage point. Help me to see with your eyes." And then commit to having a realization of the Meaning of everything that is utterly new to you, not embraced in your past, even though that takes trust when there seems to be no justification for it.

All the time you think you trust, but what you are doing is having confidence in what is already known. Trust is committing to what you don't yet know. It is, therefore, committing to everything that you made a commitment not to look at a long time ago when you said, “I choose, Father, to look at it in my way.”

And so, what you are so afraid to commit to, because it is unknown, is really all the rest of what you Are. And in spite of the fact that you have lived a fearful existence in your sense of being separate from God, and separate from the way things are, you bring this habit of fear into whatever little willingness you are able to bring to bear upon the situation by saying, “help me to see things the way you see them, rather than the way I see them,” or even, “help me to improve the way I am seeing everything.”

When you say to God, “help me to see everything, help me to improve the way I am seeing,” there isn’t yielding yet. But when you say, “help me to see things the way you see them,” you are abandoning an investment in your having a way of your own to see it, whether it is lousy or improved. You don’t want to see things your way, but just better; because having a way of your own to look at everything is what automatically causes the distorted perception of it, the misperception, the delusion about what is Real.

I cannot relieve you, God cannot relieve you, nothing can relieve you of your own investment of the energy it takes to actually practice trust.

And as I said yesterday, you can wait as Paul did until the bitter last moment, stubbornly holding on to whatever vestige of authority you think you might have to make things better, or you can, with lightness and without the stress of circumstances, begin to dare to make that investment of trust when you are not feeling vulnerable, and therefore when your level of fear is not great and seeming to control you.

If Paul were not willing to abandon any authority whatsoever for his thoughts and words and actions here, I promise you, and even Paul could tell you that you would hear very little of value. In fact, you would leave, because from his ego standpoint he’s not any better off than you are, and you could do better to be down at the beach enjoying the Kingdom of Heaven without the distraction of his personal, petty struggle and point of view.

Dare! I invite you to practice trusting into that which you don’t have the faintest idea about. Suspend your commitment to your best thinking and your best judgments, even your best understanding of A Course In Miracles, or the Bible, or any other holy book, or spiritual teaching. All that they’re there for is to help you come to that point of willingly abandoning them as well as your best thinking. They’re there to help convey to you the significant Allness of God that means that it must be safe for you to yield into the presence that God is, and let it fill you.

This really is an answer to your question, Peter. But your question is everyone’s question, always. And just because everyone may think that they know the lay of the land for the next quarter of a mile in front of them, and therefore there’s really no need to make this investment of trust into the unknown for a quarter of mile, I'm going to suggest to you that the quarter of a mile that you think is in front of you is a quarter of a mile of history, it's a quarter of a mile of the past. And although it might delay any need to yield into something beyond your present sense of yourself, yes, I am going to say it is illusion. And it doesn't really mean safety from having to yield into the actual Movement of your Being—capital "B" Being.

So if you want to hold on to that quarter of a mile, okay. But I encourage all of you to say, "Gee, whiz, if I don't have to wait for a quarter of a mile to begin to experience the Reality of myself and of everything else, why am I doing it? Why should I waste my time? Why not get on with it right now so that whatever is really there in that quarter of a mile, that I think I know the meaning of, can begin to register with me, and I can experience my bliss now, instead of a quarter of a mile down the road." Because there IS something Real there that is not an illusion.

What makes it an illusion is an overlay of the past, which you are using to provide a sense of safety and security because it's familiar. The overlay is an illusion, but it's an overlay on something Real. And part of that Reality that is overlaid is You. And that overlay obscures You to yourself. And so there really, at every single moment, is more fulfillment present because you are all there really. The totality of what you are as God sees you and is being you is there.

And so, every moment holds promise, not promise for the future, promise for the very instant you are always in. But in order to see it, in order to experience it, you must be willing to look at everything and say, "nothing that I see means what I think it means." That is your means of release. It isn't the way to make everything meaningless. But it is the way to undo the meanings you have given it.

And the meanings you have given it are always biased by the fear and self-protection that must come into play when you have said, "Father I want to look at it the way I want to see it." Therefore, always the way you will want to see it will appear to be hostile; what you see will appear to be hostile, because your way of seeing it has arisen out of a fearful place, because you've chosen to do it alone.

This is not a judgment. If you understand the simple facts that are going on, you will find that there is no call for criticizing yourself. When you see the facts, it's very easy to make a different choice. That's all!

I cannot say it often enough: It's all so much simpler than any of you think. Of course, why would anybody get a gold star for doing something utterly simple? What's the payoff? Well, see, the ego needs a payoff, the doers need a payoff. That's why they do the doing instead of Being, yielding into the already existing Movement, because there's a payoff. And you know what the payoff is?

Gee whiz, do you think I could go on talking forever and ever? I could! And I would until you get it, if you cared to listen.

The reason you stay at the level of doing is so that you can get credit for what is done. That's why you stay in the dream. It is for the hit of pride for self-accomplishment. It is as though you are at a universal academy award of some sort, and you want the prize for your particularly creative bias, or particularly creative biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven. Wow! You would sacrifice the actual experience of Reality for the hit of being able to take credit for having a point of view of your own that's better than the Adams' or the Jones's.

And it causes you to sacrifice your peace, and it causes you to sacrifice your sanity—your whole mindedness. It's too much of a cost, and it's not your Birthright, and you have another choice that is utterly simple, and there is no academy award for it.

But as I've said in Graduation, The End Of Illusions, in your discovery of who you are—not an intellectual discovery, because you've made the intellectual discovery in the last two days, I have made it so utterly clear—but when you have the experience of realization of who and what you Are, it is like the gold card that allows you admittance into the Kingdom of Heaven, back into the Kingdom of Heaven.

That which lets you into the experience of your membership in the Brotherhood of God is your recognition of who you Are. It was your claim to a right to be something different from what you are that caused you to be in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and believe that you were somewhere else; and thus, you deprived yourself of the experience of Reality, Reality of Creation and Reality of who You Are.

Well, when you've had, let us say, what seems to be centuries and lifetimes of dreams of accomplishment with the great motivation to win the prize so you could experience self-appreciation, when that has been the motivation, or seems to be in this dream you are having that can be described or conceptualized as lifetimes, it is utterly opposite to all of the energy that you have brought to bear in these dreams to do something for which there is no academy award. It will appear to be utterly meaningless to do it.

The ego does know that the minute you realize who and what You Are, you will realize that you have been doing utterly nothing all of these lifetimes except having imaginations, because you have always been in the Kingdom of Heaven being the full embodiment of what God is Being right where you are. And so, all of the fantastic accomplishments you think you might have done were so much nothingness.

The ego, without words, conveys to you that waking up, therefore, is not only meaningless, but will cause you to be very depressed. And it implies that you will experience guilt and self-depreciation, because the truth will uncover how meaningless you have been. And so, truth will convict you, judge you to be the piss ant that you thought you were, that you will not be embraced with joy as the Prodigal Son was, with no thought to the wasted living that he had engaged in.

And so everyone is not only reluctant to make that investment of trust, they are afraid to because of the consequences.

But I said just a few minutes ago, that when you let yourself into the unknown, you are letting yourself into the rest of your Self. And in that experience of wholeness what was nothing will be apparent as nothing, and how can one be guilty of something that was truly nothing. You will be consumed in the joy of being in your right Mind. To be and to know that you are Sane is pure joy, in spite of what the voice of your insanity says about regaining your Sanity.

The Christ, your divinity, the Christhood that is expressed by each one of your guides, is there for you in exactly the same way I have been here for you, to encourage you not to believe the voice for your insanity that says beware of being Sane. The Christ is available to every single one of you for the purpose of encouraging you not to be afraid of the meaningless, which at the moment seems meaningful to you.

And we are here to say over and over and over again, endlessly, whatever it takes to buoy your willingness to commit to the unknown. And to remind you that the known is just the past, embraced in memory. And if you keep bringing it forth and repeating it, you stay on the wheel of history, you stay on the merry-go-round, and there is no originality whatsoever to your existence, and that isn't your Birthright.

How can we judge you for doing nothing, even though you think you are doing something and that it is judgeable. Truth does not convict you, it releases you. And it releases you with love. As I said yesterday, sometimes that love feels like a pain in the ass. But it's not because it is a pain in the ass, it's because when you experience it that way you are holding on to a treasured belief that has to be let go of, and you don't want to let go of it yet. That's all.

Thank you Peter for your question. As I said, it is everyone's question and it is everyone's answer. And we could end the workshop right now, because all that we will say for the rest of the workshop is what I just said. And what I just said is all I have said for the past two days. But I know all of you will enjoy asking your particular question so that you can hear the truth from a slightly different point of view. And so we are not going to end, but we are going to take a break.

QUESTION: Okay, this is sort of a different way of wording this question. But okay, picture this: A room filled with books like A Course In Miracles, a prayer gong, visionary art, little chimes, a little statue of Buddha, Raj workshop albums all over the place—all of which are very meaningful. Also picture a delightful supportive husband who when he learned of you four years ago, took to you practically instantly and loves the work of you and Paul.

Okay, no problem so far. Now, picture very intelligent twin stepsons, one of whom is a Catholic parish priest, and the other an aggressive pulpit pounding evangelical force for Assembly of God preacher, with a belief in evil, the devil, and hell.

Okay, I love both of these fellows, they're really great, and they're really intelligent and very, very sweet, and they've been very, very supportive...

ANSWER: It sounds like you have been describing life.

QUESTION: Yea, just about. They've been very happy about our marriage. We got married four years ago. And so the problem here is me. I have a very defensive feeling of not wanting these two stepsons to enter my precious quiet room to view my meaningful things. The Assembly of God preacher has already voiced disapproval of the Course. His dad is the one who mentioned it to him in the first place, and he also had told him something about you, and, of course, he thinks the whole thing is not too good.

So this defensiveness I have about this has gotten so bad that one weekend the fellow who's the parish priest was coming down from Canada, where his parish is and he was going to stay all night with us, and somebody else was going to be using the guest room, so he was going to stay in my quiet room on a futon on the floor.

I told my husband that I cannot leave all these things in here, because it's just, you know, I don't want them to be looked at with a critical eye, because they're meaningful to me.

So I packed everything up. And that was a big job. I took it all out to the garage and saying to Bob, "this is a lot of work." And he said, "just leave it there, so what." I said, "I can't do that. I don't want anyone looking at these with a critical eye."

So he was supportive of that. And so all went well, everything was out of there, and it looked kind of normal in there. So after Donald had gone home, Bob very nicely helped me move everything back in there. And I said, "this is the last time I'm going to do this. This is ridiculous."

But you know, Raj, I just can't relax and just let these guys go in there, look at everything, be mad, or unhappy, or whatever, and let the chips fall where they may. What do I need to know here to let that go? I can't... in my own house I have to hide my secrets? It's really ridiculous, and it's gotten to be kind of a phobia almost. So can you help me? I hope.

ANSWER: That room is your sanctuary. That room by virtue of your use of it has an intent, a purpose. It is your right to have a room in your house that is sacred. If there is not a lock in the door, have one installed. And when the company comes lock the door.

You know it doesn't really matter what the items are that are in there. Does anyone who comes in your house, just anyone who comes in your house have the right to go into your bedroom closet and look at all of the things on the shelf, or into the drawers of your dresser? Obviously you do not think of panties and pantyhose and bras and girdles as holy items, but you do not let just anyone come in and look at them, no matter what they might think about it.

You put a lock on the door, and if there is extra company they can sleep on a futon in the living room, or the kitchen, or in the garage. And be through with this frustration. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'd like to clarify what has seemed to me to be a space I've been in for approximately six months. It began when we finished the foundation of the home that we are building here. And since that time I've felt like I'm totally in what you were calling a neutral place, I hope. Or is it possibly an inertia on my part, as I don't seem to be willing, or knowing possibly what is appropriate to do, whether to seek financing through a mortgage situation, or...

I really don't understand what's happening, so I wonder if you might clarify the present situation with myself and our family, regarding the home and where I am coming from in all of this?

ANSWER: Indeed, and the answer is much more hopeful than you are conceiving it to be. I want you to imagine a conductor of a symphony standing on the podium with the conductor's copy of the music in front of him—the conductor's score. And there is a line for the violins: the first, second, third, fourth violins; first viola, second viola, cellos, etc., etc. It is as though you are the line that says violas. And the music starts and the violas play, and the music is beautiful.

And then all of a sudden there are thirty two bars of rests for the violas. Well, if you look at it personally, you might say, "What did I do wrong? How come I'm not being allowed to play here? Oh, I know, the composer doesn't like violas." And on and on and on the thinking can go. But it's just that in the overall beauty that the symphony is expressing, the violas go in and out, they play and they don't play. And when they are playing, they are contributing. And when they are not playing, they are contributing to the symphony.

And so, you have a period of rest here that is in perfect order. But indeed, since there is an ethic of doing that everyone finds themselves suffering from, you are saying, "But there must be some way for me to do, some way for me to play. I am a viola player, not a viola reater. I didn't spend all of these years practicing so that I could sit here twiddling my thumbs."

Well, surprise! that's exactly what you did. You learned how to play, how to be, so that you could do and not do in the way that contributes uniquely to the universal score, if you will. "Well, I don't know how long I can put up with measure after measure after measure of rests. Hey conductor, speed it up a little bit, please. Make these next thirty two bars go by a little bit faster so I can feel my fulfillment of purpose." But there is fulfillment of purpose in the measures that have rest. And if you were playing, if you were doing something in the world during those measures of rest, it would not be the same symphony.

What you really need to know is that there really are measures of rest. It isn't that there are notes there that you are supposed to be playing, that you have been distracted from, and therefore you somehow need help to have your attention brought back to where it belongs so that you can be doing what you are supposed to be doing. And so I am telling you there are indeed rests in these measures. And in order for you to be fulfilling purpose right now, you need to allow for this silence, or this period of not doing.

And so I am confirming to you that there are rests in those measures. You are not neglecting or overlooking anything, and in spite of what your best judgment says, I encourage you to abandon your best thinking, so that it doesn't interfere with your feeling into the moment, so that you yourself have inner confirmation that there are rests, and that you can appropriately not take any steps at the present time.

Do all of you realize that when the conductor raises his hands, and everybody brings their instruments into position, they aren't doing it so that they can get to the end of the concert. They're doing it so that they can be the concert in process. They are not goal oriented in terms of wanting to get from the beginning to the end. They are goal oriented in terms of expressing beauty at every moment, being in the moment, and playing the note that is there in the moment. And it is a disappointment in a way to get to the end, except there is the satisfaction of having expressed a wholeness.

You want your home to be completed so that you can move in. Don't rush the concert. The beginning of things is not when you move in, the beginning of things was already. And the concert, the building of the home is occurring. You just thought it was Bolero that was being concertized. Surprise!

But the concert that is being played is perfect; and if you will not let your concept of what you thought the piece was get in the way of the piece that it is, you will have your peace.

Everything is all right, in spite of your ego's vehement suggestion that things are not all right. "Well, I don't know if I've got as many years left as it's going to take to finish the house." The ego is a dirty scoundrel.

You know the statement, "Infinite patience brings immediate results." Being at peace will allow the perfection of the moment to appear and be felt, even if the perfection of the moment is a measure of rest. Stop fussing about it! And don't waste your time not liking my answer. I love you.

QUESTION: I love you too, Raj. Thank you so much. And let me also say, I thought I had dropped that idea about not having enough time left, for no matter what, I thought I had passed that way of thinking about things.

ANSWER: It is just off stage in the wings, ready to come out. I have forewarned you.

QUESTION: Okay, forewarned is forearmed, so to speak. I don't want to become defensive here. Thanks again, Raj. I appreciate very much. And thank you for being here with every one of us today.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: It's good to be here, and to be able to converse with you. I have enjoyed these past two days. I have several questions, but the one that keeps coming back to me to ask is in regard to a subject... One of the first questions that came up is a gentleman stated that he found that there were two situations in his experience. One was with his introduction to our thought here. One seemed to not be too serious, and another one quite serious.

ANSWER: You are speaking of a physical condition?

QUESTION: Physical condition, yes. And the one was healed instantaneously with no apparent change of thought to his awareness. But the other situation has continued. I, too, at one time, had a situation going that I'd been told would require surgery, and ultimately was worked out in that manner. But at the time I asked if there was a period of time that I could wait, which my husband and I had felt we would like to spend attempting (I don't know if that's quite right) but what we wanted to do and hoped to do was to be able to work this out metaphysically through total reliance on prayer. We had many experiences in our family of healing.

During this six month period that was allowed there were many healings, not necessarily physical ones, but adjustments in the family, activities became available to us—we were in a new area. And all the time this kept our spirit....you know, we were recognizing God is on the field. He is correcting our false or limiting beliefs. But this other condition persisted.

There was advantage to this as far as mental growth was concerned, or spiritual growth. Because I learned when I went into the hospital that in truth there was no spot where God was not. My spiritual understanding or beliefs were honored by the physician. And he did not lay down laws. He said, as you are aware of your ability to be responsible for your actions, let me know, and that's fine. And that's the way it worked out. And there was a great deal of love expressed.

Also a nurse, who had taken exception to this and was quite indignant, when I left, took time on her day off to come in and tell me that she was sorry she had been so rude and abrupt in the beginning, but she'd never really had an experience like this. And she would never again ever question anybody's reliance on the healing power of God.

So this was good. But my question really is, what is it that when there is evidence of healing almost effortlessly, or even unasked for, when with your whole heart's desire you are reaching out to God for healing....

Now this is my question: I would like you in your role as Jesus, who came to raise our thought, our level of thought, and to make us aware of God's love, and the ability to heal, as you did—you raised the lame man, you healed the leper, you raised Lazarus, as well as others who had social problems to give us some enlightenment on that point?

ANSWER: One of the aspects of your question has to do with the authority issue, because it is obvious from what you read in the Bible that I expressed authority over the human condition, whether it was of physical bodies, whether it was of the ocean, whether it was the laws of gravity. “And the word was spoken, and it was done.” No process. “The word of God is quick and powerful, and mightier than a two-edged sword,” and that is what was being demonstrated.

But! It was being demonstrated in a different time and place. No, it was being demonstrated in a different frame of mind. You might say, “the frame of mind of the time”—a time when people were not even sure how many gods there were, or what God was really like. It was a time when sacrifices were made as an appeasement to God, or to the gods. There was not even a clarity about the singularity of God.

True, there was a history available, at least to the Jews, wherein the singularity of God was already an acknowledged fact. But the Gentiles had no such assurance, confidence, or even conception, much less that this singular God was omnipotent. It is an easy concept today for most, even though you might say there is a waning belief in God, the belief is a belief of singularity of the Godhead. But this was not the common sense of God that people had in common.

And so, the function of the Christ then was to anchor, if you will, the awareness of the singularity of God, the omnipotence and relevance of God to them in their daily lives. And as has since been said, “one with God is a majority.” And therefore, they did not have to continue seeming to be the innocent victims of gods whom they could appease through certain process such as sacrifices. The function was different then of the Christ than it is today of the Christ, because of the frame of the mind of the time now.

We have spoken at some length here about the authority issue. This is not the time for embodying the authority of God as an expressed authority of each of you, or any of you. The point of spiritual growth that mankind is at, at this moment—even in the level of ignorance that everyone is embodying... let's put it this way—it is a much higher level of ignorance than it was 2,000 years ago. It is a different ignorance. And so, the truth that corrects it is different.

There is someone in the room who asked some years ago about the statement, my statement, that, “if ye have the faith of a grain of mustard seed, you can say unto this mountain, ‘get thee hence,’ and the mountain will move.” And I told him, “You can’t move a mountain that isn’t already moving”—meaning what I shared earlier this morning when I used the illustration of the kayak being let down into the river. You cannot desire and participate in co-creation of that desire if you haven’t yielded into the Movement that is already occurring.

The false sense of authority has become very strong in terms of the ego. And it is utilizing all of the modern spiritual teachings called “metaphysics” to exercise this authority in the name of God without consulting God; you see—without yielding into the Movement.

And so, I am not, generally speaking, telling anyone to say to this disease or that disease, “get thee hence!” and assert a divine authority that they have. Because I will tell you something: Everyone is closer to Home today! Closer to that point of becoming fully realized than was the case 2,000 years ago. And, you are getting close to retracing the first step away from Home, which was an assertion of independence. And the undoing, the specific undoing of that assertion of independence is succumbing to, yielding to the Father’s Will once again—willingly. Not as a means of exercising authority to get through the gates of the Kingdom of Heaven, but as a means of abandoning a private intent, so that in its place the Intent of God can register, be felt as the impulse, as I said, and carry you into your Sanity.

Whether this seems reasonable, and whether anyone likes it or not, especially those who are currently practicing one form or another of metaphysics, it is the truth. And I’m not hanging crepe here. I’m telling you the truth, even though it might seem that I am putting a negative into the air that will be a self-fulfilling negative prophecy.

I will tell you, if I did not say it, it would happen anyway. And so, I am telling you so that you will not be surprised, and so that when you find out that you’re on a road that has a dead end, you can turn around rather than going all the way to the dead end and then turning around.

The conscious practice of authority over the world, the conscious practice of claiming your dominion over the world through metaphysical steps, is beginning to fail, and will continue to increasingly fail. Why? Because you’ve already learned from it what you were meant to learn from it.

First, everyone had to learn that there was a singular God—not gods many, not gods in the trees, and not gods in the lakes, etc., not gods in the animals—but a singular all-inclusive infinite intelligence that was Love, the Movement of which constituted Creation, and there were no other gods beside God. You see? That’s the singularity.

Then, you needed to know that this God was relevant. This is in the “evolution of conscious awareness.” I’m putting it in quotes because this movement is an accommodation to the fact that everyone has chosen to have a biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven. So there is going to appear to be a moving away from clarity and a return to clarity, even though all that happened within it never happened. So I am speaking in terms of accommodations here, so that there is an understanding of the seeming departure and return of the Prodigal Sons and Daughters.

So I came along demonstrating the pertinence, the relevance of God to the here and now. And when I said the word, the word was done. And the people experienced the relevance. It wasn't a head trip. They saw this lame man that they had seen for years—they knew him the moment he was born—and they saw him healed. This was an experience of the presence and the power of God, and the practice or exercise of a dominion over all the earth that God gave man.

It was still an accommodation. It addressed the mind in its frame of reference at the moment. And it was essential to do this in order to educate the mind—begin the educative process out of its beliefs.

And what else? I said, "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." My disciples knew that when I said that, the same truth was true about them. If you have seen each other, you have seen the Father.

You see the Father, as opposed to being a singular God, as opposed to multiple gods, was being presented as also a God of love and not a God of wrath. This was new. A God of relevance that one did not need to be afraid of. A God who was on your side, whom you could call upon. It was the language of that day in which the ideas that I have expressed here were brought out that you have a powerful ally, a powerful companion with you in unity. It was impossible at that time for the imminence of God to be fully expressed, because of the fact that there hadn't even yet fully registered the fact that there was a singular God, whether imminent or not.

It fulfilled purpose for healings to occur—instantaneous healings, demonstrating the relevance in the moment, and the power in the moment, of God.

In a way, everything that was said was in code. That's what I mean by "accommodations." You understand that the parables were the Truth coded in language that could be grasped. Even today, I am speaking in codes—symbols that elicit, trigger realization so that you might arrive at a point of this commitment to trust what we were talking about, which was the same motive then. It's always the same function of the Christ no matter what the words are.

So, there has been this development. And metaphysics came into the picture 150 years ago. And what it did was to uncover just how close the imminence of God was. Because God as the infinite Mind, everyone could connect with themselves as mind, and they could grasp that perhaps what was fouling everything up was the thinking they were indulging in that God never did indulge in. And so, everyone learned that if they thought clearly and intelligently, it made a difference in their lives, a demonstrable difference. But this was still an accommodation.

Why did everyone need to learn that? Not that everyone has, but why did everyone who was ready for it need to learn it? They needed to learn it so that they could at an experiential level see that intelligence embodied with clarity at the level of consciousness had a direct and beneficial effect.

Why is that important? Well, if the next step is for you to yield into the infinite Mind that is God, where are you going to get the courage to do it if your concept of God is one of a loving and wrathful God, one who by grace, occasionally, not very often, but by grace blesses you, and at other times inflicts suffering upon you, for your growth! That's the absurd lie or assumption that has come out of the fearful ego place.

It really is only when you arrive at a point where you understand not only the singularity of God, but the fact that God is the infinite Mind, which it's very easy for you to conceive is able to be filled with all the conscious experiences that are available, no matter how it looks. It's only in that awareness of God that you could identify yourself, and then as a result of your experience of seeing the result of clear intelligent thinking, it's only as a result of that experience that you could dare to abandon your clear correct thinking, or assertion of authority, mentally speaking, and yield into the infinite mind that God is, which is really your right Mind, your Home.

You had to know the nature and character of God by demonstration so that you could arrive at the point of abandoning demonstrating it, and yielding into it with trust. And to continue to be able to seem to express authority over, or dominion over the world, authority over diseases, by continuing to be able to exercise that you would not arrive at the significant point of abandoning the separated sense of self that up to now was what was exercising the authority, and thereby embodying the truth of God.

Now I have not said embrace disease. The other day someone asked, and I said, "No you do not love your problems, and you do not love your illnesses." Indeed, you recognize them to be illegitimate impositions upon the Son of God, but you don't then do something highly metaphysical with a sense of authority coming from your present sense of yourself to get rid of it. You recognize that it is an illegitimate imposition upon the Son of God, and then you get into that place where the Son of God that you are is able to register with you because you are not claiming a separate private vantage point from which to reflect God authoritatively! You see?

So you do not agree with that which is illegitimate and doesn't reflect God. You disagree with it. But not with fear. You just recognize that it doesn't fit, and therefore it must be an illusion. And then, as I said, you let yourself into that place where you have the capacity to recognize the Real Meaning that is the presence of God in that place, and you will see healing. Not because of any authority you have exercised, but because there is really nothing going on there requiring authority to get rid of it. And so, you yield into that place where your awareness of God's perfection is apparent to you because you have abandoned a separate vantage point, viewing place, and you are willing to let God's View fill you and be you in your right Mind.

This is very important, and I'm very glad you have asked the question. Because "the times they are a changing." Which really means the mental frame of reference is a changing. It's not as dense as it was. And it's not as elementary as it was, so that one must speak in parables of great simplicity such as I had to 2,000 years ago.

Yes, I do speak in parables today. And I must do it so that what I say relates to your present experience of yourself, but also releases you from it more quickly, with less process to it. It is much easier today, I promise you. The truth does not have to be as hidden in order for it to be able to be said without being totally rejected.

I thank you again for the question, and everyone who will have the opportunity to hear the answer will say thank you also.

ANSWER: As an addendum to the answer that I was giving before we broke for lunch, I will add this: During the latter days of my life 2,000 years ago, I made the following statement, "The works that I do, shall ye do also. And greater works than these, because I go unto the Father." It is an interesting statement is it not?

I want you to be aware that besides the teaching about God that my life embodied, and the teaching about who man really is, which my life embodied, my life itself illustrates the movement of everyone's process of Awakening. My statement referred to the works that I had done—the healing, the instantaneous healing, the giving of the word that was immediately manifest. It is the last part of the phrase that none of you truly understand. It is the first part of the phrase that has strengthened you in the metaphysical aspect of your development.

"The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these, because I go unto the Father."

What have we been talking about all of these three days? We have been talking about "going unto the Father." That is what "going into the silence" means. Because I, shall I say, went unto the Father and stayed there, and anchored in human consciousness by so doing, everything that my life had embodied, everyone had the clearer opportunity to say the word and have it be so, as expression of transformational love called healing. But, everyone must, as I indicated, arrive at the point where they stop "giving the word" from the point of their present sense of themselves and also go unto the Father. That is the significance of that statement. And that is where everyone is now, because that's the last step Home that undoes the separation from the Father.

It literally is almost possible for us to say to you all, “Welcome Home!” And we are encouraging those who are still intent upon doing the “works” and the “greater works” to not persist overly long in that stage of their growth, but to let it go. Willingly let it go in favor of going unto the Father.

You see, all Paul is doing is “not blocking the door.” In Psalms, in the Bible, it says, “Lift up your heads, all ye gates and doors,” you are the place where God shines through. That is the function of the Son or Daughter of God. And so, when any of you goes within to listen, you are being willing to stand as the Door.

I am standing as the Door, also, with Paul. And it is the Father you hear. And it is the Father you see when you look at Paul when he is standing as the Door. And it is the Father you see when you look at each other, whether you are standing as the Doors or not. But when you are standing as the Doors, the Presence of the Father is what is there to be experienced.

When you “go to the Father,” you come Home to Who and What You Are. And Who and What You Are is the Father being the conscious Individuality that You Are. And although the words I have to use speak of the Father and what You are—which sounds like “two”—the experience is an inseparable experience of Unity which has not caused any loss of identity, except that that word “identity” now has an infinitely new Meaning—God.

It’s not the word “God” that you are. It’s the Movement, the conscious experience of the Movement of God that is You. It is you at this moment. You won’t graduate into bigness from smallness. You will just discover that the smallness that you thought was real was an illusion. And that will uncover the bigness of you, the wholeness of you that you have always been.

So, mankind, as a whole, is at the experiential point of “going to the Father.” Why? Why, when you may not be consciously choosing it with commitment? Because there are too few of you committed to dreams to give enough substance to the dreams that the dreams will hold together. And the dreams are losing integrity because of the lack of commitment within the whole Brotherhood to dreams.

And so, literally—and perhaps exasperatingly—like the laborers in the vineyard, the Johnny-come-latelys will wake up along with you, who came early in the morning and labored relative to your Awakening, because there is not enough commitment within the Brotherhood as a whole, there are not enough dreaming dreams with commitment to the dreams to create a sense of integrity to the dream state.

So, what I am sharing with you, and have been sharing with you, is not only that which will help further the breakup of the dreams, but it is also to promote a conscious choice on your part to participate in waking up with conscious volition—by choice—even though the choice, as we have said, involves choosing not to use your will. It is a choice to consciously give up “choices” arrived at from the standpoint of your best reasoning and thinking.

So, it is a marvelous time you live in. Not at all like the time 2,000 years ago. And what the Christ says to one who is very close to Awakening is very different from one who is just barely stirring from their dream.

I'm going to take this opportunity, it does not address an issue that any of you have presented here, but it does address an issue that is presenting itself in the world, especially with regard to A Course In Miracles:

The suggestion is being made that A Course In Miracles is a divine event in the world—a penetration of the dream—that is absolutely unique, relative to nothing else. Even though it is obvious that I am the author from reading it, it is now being suggested that the Jesus of the Course is irreconcilable with the Jesus of the Bible. And I would ask you, “If they are irreconcilable, then why wasn't the Jesus of the Course called Henrietta? Why is there any reference at all to Jesus? Why, in the Course, did I make reference to my disciples or things that I said that are in the Bible? The reason is, because there is a relationship between the Jesus of the Course and the Jesus of the Bible. And the correspondence establishes, what I'm going to call, the chain of real Being that unites the centuries. In other words, the belief of time in the design of God—a design that is from outside of time.

No matter how well-intentioned the attempt is—because of the great love for the Course that exists in the ones making this suggestion—it is unintelligent to try and make the Christ, who spoke relative to the deep sleep that everyone was in 2,000 years ago, and the same Christ who speaks to those just about to enter Home today.

It is essential for all of you to know that there is a relevance, a continuity of the design of God, no matter how much that unitary, unified design of God seems to have been broken up in your consciousness into lifetimes that seem to be absolutely disconnected.

I say this because, as we discussed in the last two days, one can, through the use of logic and reason, arrive at a provable postulate that you don't exist. It isn't true, but you can reason your very existence away! And such an exercise is not only useless, it is demoralizing, depressing, and creates for the one who embraces it, misery. And that is not the sign or the evidence of Truth.

What makes A Course In Miracles meaningful is that, indeed, it unites the Christ of the Course with the Christ of the Bible, embodying and establishing the unity, the uninterrupted unity of the presence of God, and the intent of Those of the Brotherhood Who are Awake to reflect God's Will and stand ready to be the presence of Love that supports each of you as you begin to stir and wish so dearly that you could push a divine snooze button and get ten more minutes sleep, ten more minutes of dreams, those who will stand there, encouraging you, whatever little willingness you bring to Awakening, and support you in actually rousing totally!

It is the fact that the Christ of the Bible and the Christ of the Course are the same Christ that makes the Course of value, it is not creating a concept of the Course as a special instance of divine intervention that has nothing to do with anything else that makes it important, or meaningful, or significant.

Any book, any book that is written that supports your becoming a fully realized Christ, the fully realized Son or Daughter of God, is valuable. But one that triggers in you the awareness that the Christ has been an ever-present Presence in the dream, in the human experience, with the absolute continuity which illustrates the grand design of God as a Fact that has never changed, that is real significance! Anyone may believe whatever they want to believe. You do not have to believe me. But I am telling you the truth. That's the end of the comments.

QUESTION: I'm not very mechanical. Hi, Raj. How are you today?

ANSWER: You are wonderfully unmechanical. I am fine.

QUESTION: I thought when I got this microphone I would say the most wonderful question of all. But I guess what I would really...

ANSWER: I can make any question wonderful.

QUESTION: The past six weeks of my life have been a period of unrest for me. And sometimes I see people's eyes rolling back in their head, and saying, "Oh, this woman is going to ask another question like this." But, my body seems to be changing, and not supporting the state that I'm in, and on a financial level I'm not happy with what I'm doing, and on an emotional level...

ANSWER: Oh, forget the emotional level.

QUESTION: Forget the emotional level, all right, feeling level. I seem to be always on the path, but when I wander off I get a gentle hit along side the head that kind of turns me around and brings me back to the Father. And I think during this lunch break I've been realizing that I shouldn't be thinking, and I'm still confused, I know that you said that it's not our Birthright, that it's clarity. And I would like to know what this last six weeks of physiological change means, if anything?

ANSWER: To be very frank with you, it has required you to get out of your head and become very practical and love yourself enough to pay attention to where you are, and discover what really being loving towards yourself means, so that you are not disregarding the visibility and tangibility of you as though it is meaningless, or inconsequential, or not worthy of attention or appreciation.

It's a call for love, because it has been unloved. It has been unloved by virtue of being ignored as though it is somewhere tenth or twentieth down the list of importance of things to pay attention to. And when it gets that far down the list, you begin to be dissociated, you might say, disconnected. And that disconnection feels like disintegration. Well, that will get your attention! It works every time!

It does not mean you've done something wrong. It does not mean you are falling apart. It just means that there is a call for you to be practical enough, to have your feet firmly enough on the ground that you don't forget that you're not supposed to neglect yourself, or shall I say, so that you remember to love yourself, and be present with yourself, be present with your body. I didn't say attached to it. I didn't say identifying with it. But present with it.

I don't know if you have been Rolfed, but for those of you who know the massage technique called Rolfing, which is a deep muscle massage that is extremely uncomfortable sometimes because of the degree of holding tight that one has engaged in as part of his means of self-defense, but when that blockage has been released, you can literally feel your body saying, "Thank you!" And feel the joy it has to not be held in a manner that constricts its identifying its purpose for being there.

Now the past six weeks has not been a call for Rolfing, but it has been a call for being willing not to be so distracted by other things that you forget to be present with your body, with love, thoughtfulness, consideration, affection. I haven't use the word affection a lot this weekend—a couple of times—but I would like for you to go home thinking that I used it 5,000 times, so that it might be a word to significantly remember and contemplate the meaning of. Let's not forget to practice affection.

And remember what Paul shared during the quiet time before this morning's session, where what he said was with reference to God: "And may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them." Affections are not all intimate with one other individual. And I encourage you all to get the dictionary out and look up the word affection and look at all of the meanings that are given there, so that you may have that breadth of understanding of the meaning of the word affection, as you let it be a more significant meaning in your conscious awareness.

What's been going on during the past six weeks, relative to your body, has been a demand, a demand to be and embody humaneness starting with yourself. That's all! It's wonderful! Discover that you do have time to do that, and there aren't all these other things that are really more important. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to ask of you anything you can share with me about a golden energy around me that wishes to be channeled through me. And also, anything that I need to be aware of at this moment.

ANSWER: This isn't exactly what you wanted to hear. But what you need to know at this moment is that you need to ask the energy itself what it wants to say through you, and then listen. That's the lesson, if you will. That's the call for commitment to the unknown that I spoke of earlier. The arriving at the point within yourself where you are willing to invest the trust necessary to hear.

And if it doesn't come, it simply means that there needs to be a little more trust, a little more letting go, a little bit more yielding, a little less willfulness. And remember that a strong desire that is coming from your present sense of yourself is an act of willfulness. So you must even abandon the desire, or you must abandon any extra spin that you give the ball as you throw it and release it. Just feel the desire and let it go, and abide in the quiet. And let it come or not come, until it comes. That is what you need to know.

QUESTION: I want to say thank you for everybody whose already retrieved all the answers to those questions I had.

ANSWER: They say, you're welcome.

QUESTION: I also want to say thank you to you for reaffirming that it's okay to be that little boy that I always am, everyday. Those people who know me, know what I'm talking about. Peter Pan has nothing on me. And it's okay for me to see those colors out of everything and watch Paul dissolve into those mini-blinds. I'm serious! until the ego yesterday slapped my hand up to go, "Wait a minute!"

So I have a question left that would be basically: what thing or things is or are most optimal for me to know now?

ANSWER: Aside from everything I have already said?

QUESTION: Yea, my slant.

ANSWER: Don't under any circumstances buy into the suggestion that if indeed you go within and listen you will grow up, that you will suddenly become responsible for great wisdom; else you will avoid great wisdom at all cost, because you so value being as a little child. Inquisitiveness, curiosity will not get you into trouble, and will not force you to fit into the mold that everyone else seems to fall into so easily, and who are ready at a drop of a hat to tell you how to lose your innocence and become a responsible and guilty adult. That's all.

QUESTION: I thank you for your presence and your love. And all the people who have asked questions, they have all responded to something in me that needed to be answered. I would like to ask you to give me a question to ask myself when I am with you. I know that you're with me always, but I live with a split mind. And so there's many times that I forget that you're with me always. And I don't want to keep living from that place of being split off from you, because I forget. So rather than me asking you a question, I'm asking you to ask me a question to ask myself to get me back to the place of communing with you.

ANSWER: I will give you one question to ask me in the withinness of yourself. It is this: "Where do I fit in?" The very question constitutes a contradiction of the concept or sense of being separate. I encourage you to ask that question, and let there be a long period of silence in which you give my answer time to register with you.

And I invite you to ask that question ongoingly. Because, like I said on Monday, when the answer comes, it is like knowing at that moment the angle of the surfboard against the wave, but in the next moment you must ask, “Where do I fit in.” In other words, “What is the angle now? How far forward on the board do I stand, or do I move back, or do I stay where I am?” Continue to ask the question “Where do I fit in?”

You might do that at least three times a day, daily. And perhaps give yourself as much as two to five minutes to quietly listen, not for your answer, but mine. And then perhaps once a day or twice a day in addition to that, you might ask, “Where do I fit in with you?”—meaning me. Or, “Where do I fit in with so-and-so? Where do I fit in with this? Where do I fit in with that?” The tendency is to get everything else to fit in with you. But the need is to know where you fit in, because you are not alone.

And I will enjoy the communion. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. I had the vision when you first said that, I had the vision of when you go to an eye doctor and they say look at these two objects until they come close together. But I wasn’t sure which eye, but I hope I can live to the point where there isn’t a separation of those two eyes.

ANSWER: I will tell you right now that there is no separation; it is only an apparent separation. The genuine desire to know where you fit in is what will diminish any illusion, or manifestation, or expression of separation. But it will take humility. It is arrogance which says, “Everything must fit in with me.” It is arrogance that says, “I don’t fit in with anything else.” It is genuine humility that brings that which seems to be two into the one that it really is.

QUESTION: Good afternoon. Well, as usual I don’t really have an agenda or question. So it doesn’t matter what the question is. I just need to know what the next step is.

ANSWER: I want you to feel a little deeper for a question; something specific.

QUESTION: Well, I would say the trusting of who I am in the face of insanity.

ANSWER: Yours or everyone else’s?

QUESTION: No, my insanity comes later. But that’s the reaction.

ANSWER: Indeed, everyone else’s insanity tends to find a resonance spot in you that creates irate responses. But that place of resonance with you is not the only place in you. It’s not the only vantage point from which you can observe things and “determine” what they are.

The call is always for you and everyone to moment by moment choose to come from your best centered place. Because that, as I have said over and over again, is where you have available to you the clarity that can remove the need for the insanity.

The only reason everyone is behaving like a chicken with its head cut off is because they don't realize they have another vantage point from which to look at things.

And so, they are in need of good company. They are in need of you choosing to come from your best centered place, so that you might recognize the simple answer that has escaped their attention, which they will more than gladly embrace if it's there for them to choose for. You see?

In the meantime, by virtue of your choosing for your best centered place, and being in the world out from that place, you will have cut all the loops on your Velcro and there will be nothing for their hooks to connect with. And you will find yourself unaffected by their behavior.

It is like a question that was asked on Monday, or a comment that was made: "You mean that we're simply to love our body?" And I said, "What other choice do you have?" Or I would say, "What other reasonable choice do you have?" What other reasonable choice do you have than to choose to be in every situation from your best centered connected place, even if it isn't the ultimate centeredness—what reasonable alternative?

You know that you quite obviously have an alternative. And you know that through the years you have enjoyed a lot of righteous satisfaction. But you also know that it costs you. And as that has become more apparent to you, you have opted for that less.

Well, I'm simply telling you today that there isn't a new answer to your question; it's still the same one, there is consistency here. Be a good buddy. Be a good companion. Be good company for the insane to be with. Be the good company that neglects to determine them to be insane. Be the good company that can discern an answer, a sane answer, that relieves those around you from feeling the need to act insanely.

Be the light by being grounded, not by spouting metaphysical truths. But by listening, and by virtue of listening, hearing the practical answer that negates the apparent need for crazy responses. And share it, knowing that it's not your responsibility to see to it that it is received, or received with the intent embodied in its meaning. The value will be there and remain to be recognized.

And you in the process will have your peace, and you will have been a sister, and you will have been Real, and you will have been Meaningful, and you will not have involved your very energy in the depleting elements of reaction.

Just keep on truckin'. You're doing it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: In these last few days I have experienced what I would call healing. And the difference that is in the air. And it has allowed me to be more present with, and with the joy of something that we shared recently about my having broken my luggage. And the fact that a smaller set of luggage fell out of that.

ANSWER: This is for the sake of everyone else: it's figurative luggage. Continue.

QUESTION: And the smaller set having fallen out, and this being significant with the twelfth seal, moving from the eleventh to the twelfth...

ANSWER: The last step, in other words.

QUESTION: The last step. And I wish to be now willing to let the Father take this last step. Because I really have nothing to do, and nowhere to go, but to release and leave this smaller luggage in the unclaimed baggage department, and truly release. I would like your reflection on this for me.

ANSWER: At the risk of seeming repetitive, at this point in your experience the call is for simply being present with everything, with a curiosity to see what emerges. The wonderful thing is that you haven't the foggiest notion of where to go or what to do next. That is your blessing.

The tendency would be to open up this new set of luggage to see if it has anything in it to tell you where you are going or what to do next. Do, indeed, leave it in the unclaimed baggage section. And dare to trust—dare to entrust yourself to the present. Dare to be present with it and conscious, simply conscious with a curiosity to feel the Movement and Its direction. And don't try to rush the process. Don't indulge in impatience, because there will be a tendency to do that.

Don't say, "Father, do you see me? I'm here, I'm here, take the last step with me." No, don't try to rush it. The simple answer is: It is now time to be willing to be present with the moment you are in and everything within it, with gentle curiosity to see what is unfolding. You can dare to entrust yourself to that moment.

There's been a lot of drama. In the absence of it, it will seem a little boring. Don't try to drum up a little drama to make it feel like something is happening.

I encourage you to enjoy the peace and the love that you can feel is embracing you. That's what is needed at this moment, at this point. That's the call. And know that you have unseen and seen friends who are willing to encourage you to be present with the moment you are in, so that you might begin to discern the fullness of it, your fullness. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I am going to ask you the same question I asked in the last Princeville gathering which was: what do I need to know now?

ANSWER: The great need with everyone is to let someone else in. To let someone Awake in. To lean into guidance. And this is what you need to do now. But it's more important for you to do it now than even sometime in the past, because you have already made the connection. But the trust is weak, and it needs to be strengthened. Because it is in the unity of companionship that the sense of separation and isolation is undone.

I desire of you, and I encourage you to let there be more trust. And to more constantly and consistently companion with your guide. And to more constantly and consistently let the love that is there embrace you and support you in your process of becoming grounded in your right Mind, grounded in the Kingdom of Heaven.

You see, when you are so close to Home, it is the time when it is least appropriate to be reluctant. It's one thing if you're 110 miles away from Home, and you are reluctant. But it's when you are so close that reluctance is incongruent.

I encourage you to entrust yourself to the love that embraces you with more willingness and more trust. I, as I said before, encourage you and I desire this of you. The clarity of your union with guidance is needed. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: A little over a week ago in that place of peace, I was shown a picture. It felt like it was coming from you. And the meaning of it is what I want to be clear about. It seemed to suggest that the form had changed, and there was some work I needed to do with the pictures.

ANSWER: You mean by that, literal drawing type pictures?

QUESTION: Yea, right, right. I just want to be sure that my meaning of it is correct.

ANSWER: Why is there doubt?

QUESTION: Because of something you had said a couple years ago. I see, is this a reconfiguration, or are there two things going on here?

ANSWER: It is a reconfiguration that embraces more. It is not a reconfiguration that excludes or exchanges anything. You can trust it.

ANSWER: I am so glad you came today.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'm really very happy to be here. I'm here. I expressed earlier I have absolutely no questions, and I've dug, and I've dug, and I've dug, even before coming here. And I thought well maybe I should just ask, where am I now, what is unfolding now, or what is to unfold next. And then I thought well there was a question I asked you some years ago, and you said to allow it to be on the back burner for awhile. And that question was: After the year 2000 what will we do as Bodies of Light? Where will we go, and what will we experience? Shall I leave that on the back burner?

ANSWER: Well, you do not need to leave it on the back burner, it happens that it was answered yesterday. So you will have the opportunity to hear the answer if you buy the tapes.

I will add to that that it is not appropriate to assume that everyone will have to wait until after the year 2000 to have this experience.

If every single one of you is at this instant sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinched up saying, "I can't see the perfection," what does time have to do with seeing the perfection? At any moment you can open your eyes.

And as I said in the last Princeville workshop, the only distance there is between you and the Kingdom of Heaven is the thickness of your eyelid, or the time between your decision to have your eyes closed, and your decision to have your eyes opened. It's not far away. It isn't off in the future. And it doesn't take understanding to get there.

Heaven help Paul if he had to gain some understanding before he could open his eyes to drive home this evening. You see? And the only thing that keeps it from happening in this instant are the convictions you have that say it can't. Your deep-seated, or long standing beliefs that it's something you have to work towards.

So it's handy to think in terms of the year 2000, because it's the turn of the century. Actually it'll just be the 31st and the 1st, like every other month, or every other year. But it's sort of convenient, and "Oh, the turn of the century." Well, it's easier to conceive that there might be a major change, since all of the numbers change—every single one of the numbers change.

Nevertheless, as silly as that is, it is a point at which people are willing to give permission for something new to happen, and very often something new does, because they withdrew their confidence that it wouldn't change. And thus, the ever-present Movement of God can register a little more clearly.

Well, there are quite a number of months this year that go from the 31st to the 1st. So treat everyone of those months as the turn of the century, or whatever will allow you to give the greatest amount of permission not to resist.

There will be on a calendar a day when Awakening will be over, because everyone will be fully realized—only for an instant, and then calendars will be nonsensical. But there is a day, there will be a day. And it is not in the far distant future. It's very close. But so what? You have this moment, and the next moment, and the next moment, and the next moment to give that permission.

So don't put it off in the distance. Oh, you know what that means? Some of you who are studying the Course for the first time won't get to the last lesson. Interesting? And those of you who know that for lifetime after lifetime you've been refining your Soul—and you know what it is you're working on this time—won't get to finish.

All of these funny little things are the ways in which you justify not waking up now. "Gee, I want to get everything I can out of the Course." You see, it really is funny. And it is ridiculous little things that inhibit our giving unequivocal permission this moment. But you can! And some of you will. And in a way, for a moment—only a moment—you'll be surprised, "Why I thought I had to do that first. Obviously I don't."

Don't let your Movement of Awakening become an ethic, or a process that you have pegged. Begin to embrace it as something that can be a spontaneous event, a spontaneous event that will take advantage of a weak point in your ego's defenses, a weak point in all of the confidences you have about what everything is.

You see, I can turn any question into a wonderful question. I'm going to ramble a little.

There are no such things as stupid questions, even though they're all ignorant, even though they all express a believed ignorance. If you weren't ignorant, you wouldn't ask the question. Value all your questions. And know that as you begin to connect and yield into guidance, every single question is the leading edge of an answer that is available to you.

That is very encouraging. That is very hope building. That is very assuring to know that questions aren't deadends, even though most of the questions you ask are really a statement of a feeling of "dead-endedness." "What do I do now?" is really not saying, "I know there's an answer," it's really saying, "I give up. I can't do anything." You see?

But when, through having the continuous experience of emerging answers to your questions, you begin to realize that this is normal, and that therefore there is no situation anywhere that could leave you without an answer—what a new outlook on life you will have.

Paul is demonstrating it this afternoon, this morning, yesterday, and the day before. Never in his right mind would he invite people from all over the world to come, and get up in front of them without an agenda of any sort and assume the he would have the answer to every single question that anyone might throw at him. As a puny little piss-ant mortal ego, he doesn't, and neither do you. But none of you are puny little piss-ant mortals, and that's the point. Not only that, answers are available to every question you ask, and they don't just answer the question, they transform you by uncovering at an experiential level the divine one that you really are.

Just remember, questions are leading edges of answers. Questions are leading edges of answers, unless you use a question as a denial of an answer, which again is what the Course calls a pseudo question. It's not a real question. It's really an expression of anger, arrogance.

And you know what? The only prerequisite there is to experiencing the fact that there is a transformational and practical answer to any question you have, the only prerequisite to experiencing that, is arriving at a point where you are willing to genuinely ask a question and listen. That's the only prerequisite.

You can be a down-and-out alcoholic who has just come off of a binge, just barely back into a clear frame of mind, but in agony and misery, certainly not experiencing any sense of spirituality or worth, and you can, if you genuinely ask a question and listen, the answer will be there for you. You don't even have to go and take a shower first. Nothing, no prerequisite other than genuinely and humbly asking and shutting up and listening.

As I said the other day, there is nothing special about what Paul and I are doing. And we are both doing the same thing. Shutting up and listening and speaking what emerges. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Just as a follow up to that question, several years ago someone asked the question about waking up. And you said, if I heard it right, “no one has woken up while physically incarnated on the earth plane...

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: ...since Jesus did, but it would be unlikely that we reach the year 1994 before at least one has done so.”

ANSWER: Not yet! I mean it is not that I cannot tell you yet, it is that it hasn't happened yet. But 1994 is not over. Are you willing to be the one? It's a good question. Are any of you willing to be the one? Ah, but what if it makes you stand out like a sore thumb?

I'm not trying to discourage you. I'm just pointing out that you will find if you were to really consider the “yes” answer, and you were really to begin to embrace it as a possibility, you would begin to hear the ego's litany of reasons why not to.

And so, actually I'm going to encourage all of you, over the next few months, to consider your answer to that question: Would you be willing to be the one who Awakens in 1994? Why? So that as the ego begins its litany, you can dismiss the suggestions and be rid of them.

The litany that the ego would present to you is a list already harbored by you, not the divine you, but the you that feels its self to be Awakening. And you see, until you ask that question, that particular list won't come to the surface because the ego isn't threatened. If you don't want to be the one, the ego feels pretty safe. But if you will really consider that question and an affirmative answer, a genuine affirmative answer on your part and begin to let the feeling of that abide in you, then the ego will be threatened, and all of its justifications for not doing it will rise.

Now I know that sometimes I am repetitive, but there are too many wonderful examples that fit the bill and I use them over and over again. As these suggestions present themselves to you, they are like the gunk that comes off of soup bones when you are boiling them for the base or the stock for your soup or whatever you are making. And what do you do with the gunk that surfaces? You take a spoon and you ladle it off, and you trash it. You don't say, “Ooh, where'd this come from? Wonder what it means? Where'd I pick that up? What does this say about me?” So when the ego begins its litany, its list, be real practical, just ladle it off and dump it. Just ladle it off and dump it.

Another way of putting it is: When you are meditating and you are using a mantra, and suddenly you find yourself thinking a thought, suddenly a stream of thoughts just presents itself and you become distracted from your mantra. What do you do? You notice it. That's all—you just notice it—and gently bring your attention back to the mantra. You don't pick it up and say, "What does this mean about me?" You don't say, "Well, this is worthy of my attention for a moment, or it must have come to the surface for some good reason." None of that! You just notice it! You realize you are not saying your mantra, and you bring your attention back gently without kicking yourself in the derriere and stay with your mantra.

You don't have to listen to the ego. Notice that it's doing its little jig, and bring your attention back to being on the beam, bring your attention back to the affirmative answer, to the question: Are you willing to be the one to wake up in 1994?

QUESTION: Maybe we're already Awake, and we're just denying it.

ANSWER: That's right! At the bottom line it means: "Am I willing to open up my eyes in 1994? Am I willing to let in the rest of me, the All of me that I've been ignoring? Am I willing to experience the joy of a sound Mind?" That's what it means.

Keep remembering—it's easier than any of you have been imagining. It really is!

QUESTION: Well, Paul, Raj, I really don't know what to ask, so I can only say, do you have a message for me, please?

ANSWER: No, no messages have been left for you.

QUESTION: Well, make one up then.

ANSWER: But, you had a telephone call.

I have appreciated your presence here and I am so glad you could come. And I wish to thank you for everything you did to make the Melbourne workshop a success. This is a brotherly, sisterly chat. Then so, my message for you is—I love you.

ANSWER: And that answer embodies everything that has been said this weekend. Do not think, and I am speaking to everyone, do not think that a meaningful answer has to be profound. Or put another way, do not think that the simplicity of an intimate interchange that is from the heart is not the ultimate.

QUESTION: I had two questions I was going to ask. One with regard to relationships, and the other with an experience that I've been having when I'm channeling. So I wasn't sure which question to ask. I'm feeling the need to ask the question about relationships. I seem to be in a place right now where I'm a bit confused, in particular with honoring my integrity in my relationship, and taking the other persons feelings into consideration, and trying to be loving in all respects, and patient...

ANSWER: I want to interrupt you a moment. Do not labor under the misperception that the embodiment or expression of your integrity will not be considerate of, or take into consideration another's point of view, or another's feelings. Integrity is not like cold principles. Integrity emerges from love. And so, your expression of your integrity will honor you and it will be sensitive to and honor another. But please continue.

QUESTION: That was what I needed to hear.

ANSWER: But I would like for you to go ahead and say what you were going to say if I hadn't interrupted you. How have you experienced the dilemma?

QUESTION: I guess what I've been experiencing is reactions from my partner coming from a place of not understanding when I try to honor my integrity, and taking everything personally and becoming quite upset. And I'm trying to be patient and come from a loving place and explain where I'm at in this relationship. And I don't want it to be based on what we think a relationship ought to be. I would like it to unfold. I would love miracles to unfold for both of us, and whatever God's Will is here to happen, and I'm trusting in that. And I guess I'm in a place of... I'm not sure if I'm explaining this correctly.

ANSWER: You are explaining it well enough. And I will let you off the hook.

In a relationship you need to embrace the other partner in the relationship with an allowingness. You need to let your partner, if he is distressed, or if he is misunderstanding, express his misunderstanding.

If he is taking it personally when it is not meant personally, allow that expression of discomfort to come forth, then see to it that you don't take it personally. Continue to stay connected with your integrity, which is your capacity to feel the real meaning, and because the expression of your integrity is an expression of caring, because it's love, you will be able to find the words that reduce the discomfort by replacing the misunderstanding with understanding.

The very fact that you do not join him in his discomfort, by being uncomfortable yourself will be experienced as love. And the fact that your intent or desire is to be able to put him at ease as he fumbles his way through a new understanding will... it will be that expression of affection that I have spoken of during the past three days—the embodied extension of love.

If he takes your expression of your clarity, if he takes it personally, it only means that he hasn't found within himself the means of giving himself permission to hear it differently. Because you have integrity, and because you are interested in coming out from it, and because the nature of integrity is love, then you will listen within to hear what it is that will put him at ease; what it is that will be the unique little thing that he can take and which will allow him to give himself permission to see it a different way and not engage awkwardly.

So be sure in your relationship that you make room for, make allowance for a distressed response. And realize that you don't then have to respond in like manner, but let the caring that was first expressed come forth in a different way, so that you may both enjoy a resulting friendship, because the commitment has been there to not defend yourself, but to be the extension of love that resolves the discomfort.

You know, I use words sometimes in a way that most people don't use them. And over the past three days now, there are some words I have used that could possibly be misunderstood. I have spoken of love as defenselessness, not something that you extend from yourself to another through space.

I have said that love is wordless and thoughtless. Well, that could sound as though love is a totally private thing. It's you not being defended; it's wordless and it's thoughtless. Ooh, thoughtless... must be careful with that one. I mean that its expression isn't premeditated, it's not planned. It doesn't come out as a result of thought—that's what I mean. But one could think that—from listening to me—one could think that love is something you do all by yourself.

I said that if you are defenseless with another, that other will feel loved. Why? Because when you are in the presence of someone who is defenseless with you, you are able to feel that you must be innocent, truly innocent, else there would be defenses. And to have that experience is the experience of being loved. Okay?

So it sounds as though this other one in the relationship is having this experience of feeling loved all by himself. And you, being defenseless, and being love wordlessly and thoughtlessly, are doing something all by yourself.

But you know what? There was another key thing I said that can't be left out. Love unexpressed is nonexistent love. Love felt is expressed as affection—affection in actions, affections in words perhaps, but not calculated words. It might be taking the first bit of dinner and saying, “u-u-u-m-m, u-um!” But it is an expression, an extension of affection. Love considers others. Love is thoughtful of others.

I'm contradicting myself aren't I—thoughtless, thoughtful. What I means is Paul could care less at this very moment whether you are here, whether you are understanding; all he cares about at the moment is listening to me. Well, he could do that by himself in his house, or out on the bluff. Why is he here with you? Because love is extended and embraces everything.

And so, he has a devotion to being out from his center; not to make an impression, not to be somebody, but to simply be the presence of clarity. Why? Because when he does he knows that he is experiencing himself being Real. He knows that in spite of the fact that he might not be fully realized and be enjoying his whole mindedness, he is enjoying a level of sanity that is unavailable to him in any other way, and he opts for his sanity and he can't do it by himself.

And so, although he is not doing anything for your benefit, he is doing it without excluding you. And as a result of doing it over the past twelve years, the feedback he has gotten has said in so many words, “I feel so loved when I am with you being with Raj. And my life has been transformed. And it has been so meaningful to me,” and so on. This never happened when he was being loving through space where he cared about, as well as worried about, what everyone thought.

Love is not thoughtless in the sense of not taking anyone else into consideration, but being true to one's Self. Again, it is possible through the use of logic to make something like that seem reasonable. But just as you couldn't establish the dream all alone, you can't wake up to your whole-mindedness alone. And even though you will not engage with others from a self-conscious, an ego self-conscious place, where you are constantly checking with them to see whether you are making the right impression so you can know whether to continue or modify your plans. It almost sounds like a "war games," doesn't it? But that is what everybody engages in.

Instead of doing that, being love is being in that place where one is not self-conscious, feeling no need of self-protection. And as a result, being a meaningful presence that embraces others and puts them at ease, because you have communicated to them their innocence by virtue of your neglecting to engage in self-protection. And so it is a union, but not a calculated union through space. And although love can be wordless, and thoughtless, and although it is the absence of judgment on your part, and although you do not do this to make an impression on somebody else so that they do feel loved—they will feel loved.

And so, you cannot say, "Well, I am coming from my integrity, and if you are hurting, well, you're going to have to deal with that; that's your problem." You see, that is not an expression of integrity, because there's no love in it.

I know every single one of you, in one way or another, is hurting, and you don't want to hurt. And I know that your hurt is illegitimate, not your Birthright. And so I let you say in whatever way you do, "I hurt, and I don't want to hurt." And I let myself be present with you, apparently in your hurt while you are hurting, while you're not clear, and I do not confirm your pain. I confirm to you that which is true in you, so that you may release the justifications you have had for feeling the pain. If you don't get it, I don't worry about it. But I don't think there's no further need.

And I have confidence that the divinity of you will recognize whatever there has been of value that I have said, because I said it with no attempt to coerce you into discovering the truth. If I attempted to coerce you, you would immediately recognize that my concept of you was that you were resistant. That's not a communication of innocence. Love is a communication of innocence and a confirmation of it, and that doesn't put other people in an uncomfortable situation, unless they are holding on to some false concept themselves. And if they are and express it? It just means, be willing to be with them listening further, so that that which gives them permission to release the reason they are holding that is causing their discomfort might come forth. You see? Not because you're trying to change them, but because their pain is illegitimate.

Love is love. And if you haven't managed to clearly convey another's innocence to him, by not engaging in judgment yourself, you're not in touch with your integrity yet. When you are in touch with your integrity, you will know if you have conveyed, extended to another an acknowledgment of their innocence. And then if they don't receive it, if they refuse to receive it, you will know that you have done what you could, and you will persist in being there for that one. It's that simple.

This afternoon someone mentioned that I used the word integrity a great deal. And they wondered how that connected with the word meaning, which I also use often. And if you were to see it on a printed page you would see that the word Meaning has a capital "M", because meaning is God's idea embodied, and God's idea is a Meaning—it has Meaning.

Well, when I use the word Meaning it means: The experience of the integrity of a thing, but it's not a head trip, it is the felt experience of the Meaning embodied in any given thing. This is also important to understand: To feel the integrity of a thing is to experience its Meaning. And its Meaning is not intellectual, but felt.

Integrity alone, without connection to Meaning, is like a steel blade—unyielding and hurtful. And if one thinks that the expression of love, as the absence of judgment, the presence of defenselessness, is an inside job—private—that somehow is supposed to heal and transform and be Meaningful without feeling love, then you don't understand what I have been saying. And you will think that love is what you are doing when you are really being cold, and harsh and truly thoughtless, uncaring, just holding to your integrity.

Your integrity will always convey innocence. It will always be an extension of the fact that judgment is absent. It's just that this won't happen for the reasons that you used to be loving. But you know what? The experience of being loved will be truer and deeper and healing, because it's not coming from the place, or for the reasons that it used to.

And I wanted to be very sure that all of you understood this before we finished and left and went our separate ways.

We have sung together these three days. Our hearts have flown together. And the lightness of us has been felt by us. And the fact that maybe there isn't one speck of matter to you has been more than thought, but felt in the lightness of us.

I love you all. And it has meant a great deal to me to be with you.

Gathering In Hood River, Oregon –1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENT: Good morning. You may have to bear with, let us say, an unsteady delivery here for a few minutes, because as Paul mentioned I have asked him to speak with his eyes open. It is an interesting thing, the use you all give to your sight. It escapes your notice that you use your sight for the most part, to gather data, to get something. You use your sight to get the lay of the land, to know where you stand. In other words, sight is used for self-protection.

And what causes it to seem difficult for Paul to listen to me with his eyes open is the fact that he doesn't want to see the wrong thing. He doesn't want to see frowns. He doesn't want to see signs of disagreement with what I'm saying, because his habit, as is everyone's habit, is to take those indicators as some sort of statement about him, rather than a statement about the person making the face. And then if he begins to engage in self-defense it makes it difficult for him to listen. And I will tell all of you that when you are engaged in self-defense it is difficult for you to hear as well. And yet, it's the answer to all of your problems. It's the vestibule of Awakening. You see, as long as you are being self-defensive you are in, or exercising, or practicing an act of independence, which causes you to be separate from Home base, separate from your peace, separate from a direct experience of innate integrity—ah, and your innate innocence.

So I indicated to Paul this morning that there was something that I wanted to speak about, although I didn't go into details with him, and when I started speaking just now I surprised him by talking about something else. But now he sees that I have a way because I have lead into what I want to share. And I'm going to have Paul stand up. We're going to get him to practice more trust. I'll let him use the chair for support. You see the more one is called into the act of trust, which is the opposite of an act of independence the more deeply one can connect with truth, connect with what is real about himself, connect with God. And so I am pushing Paul's limits this morning. And it is also a kindness to you to be able to not have to get a crick in your neck looking.

So we had come on the subject of innocence. We have people from Holland and England and the East Coast and the West Coast here today, and whether all of you got hooked by this monumental and grand display of the process of justice called the O.J. trial, I doubt if any of you are unaware of the event of the trial.

Now the issue seems to be justice, and whether any of you know it or not any of the distresses, any of the problems, any of the questions that bear directly to your life that you may ask during the course of this weekend it's going to evolve around justice. And if there's one thing I want all of you to remember from this gathering it is that the only reason that justice is important to you is because you don't know how to heal sin, sickness and death. Justice is a substitute for healing. It's a suffer it to be so now, you might say. It's the best you can do under the circumstances. And something must be done! This is true, this is practical. But you know, if all you are going to come this weekend was a better way to get justice, you might as well not have come. Because what is needed is healing. What is needed is something more radical than justice.

Now, please don't sit there and say, "Oh God, I'd better not even ask my question now, because it's going to be so obvious that justice is what I was after." No, here or in the privacy of your own mind when you are leaning into guidance to listen for the truth, bring whatever your current questions are, whether they will—after you've gotten the answer—be proved to be really stupid questions. You see? Bring them anyway, because that is how you will get past them. And don't judge your question or you are already in the realm of justice. And what that really means is you are in the realm of guilt, because in order to have justice there has to be someone innocent and there has to be someone guilty. And I'm going to point out something else: As long as the guilty person is proven to be guilty you prove your own victimization—you have established it for sure and you are not healed! You also are not engaged in love.

Justice, the system of justice, the systems of justice—because there are many around your globe—have had their place. But it's time for something new. Not because the old stuff's getting old and boring, not because we need to be modern, but because there really is a shift of consciousness occurring, there really is what you might call a process of maturation—of maturing, you can call it perhaps spiritual maturing. But I tell you, drop the word spiritual, it's so egotistical these days. "I'm becoming more spiritual." No! It doesn't come out that way does it? It comes out as: "Since I started studying the Course, I've had so many miracles happen and there's been so much shifting in me and it is so wonderful. Now, can I teach you about the Course? You know it says in here... Well, that doesn't agree with the Course." Now I'm not making fun of the Course. I'm pointing out the ego habit of turning that which is meaningful into that which enhances our practice of justice, instead of lifting us beyond justice into a frame of reference that heals.

And so this weekend, as with any other time I've spoken with anyone, the real issue is going to be a radical issue of a new point of view. And you know what? Everyone thinks that a new point of view is a different way of thinking about things. And it doesn't have anything to do with thinking at all! A different point of view is a different vantage point from which to observe! And it also involves a different function as the definition of observation. See how I can tie this all together? What is the purpose of vision? What is the purpose of seeing if it isn't to gather data for you self-protection? The purpose of sight is to be able to acknowledge what you're seeing! It's the opportunity to see and say "thank you for being," whether it's another individual, whether it is a strand of hair on her head, whether it's a bald spot, whether it's the shine on the bald spot, whether it's a flower. It's for the purpose of giving, sight is. But you know it's literal—I've said it before and I've meant it literally—the ego always operates 180 degrees out of sync. And so you see and you listen and you taste, at the bottom line, to get instead of to give.

I'll give you all a little practice. Sometime when you are not in the middle of traffic, let us say, and where things are dynamic and you're really having to pay attention, but when things are more peaceful I'm going to suggest that you just look, and whatever your eyes fall upon say, "thank you." And move quickly, don't sit there and say, "thank you, thank you, thank you" you know. Just say, "Thank you. Thank you," and let it be anything that catches your eye.

You will find that when you engage in this, first of all you won't be filled up with a giddy gratitude. It will be interesting for you because you'll find that there is a quietness that you are experiencing. And when you aren't selecting what you're going to look at to say thank you to as an acknowledgment of its existence, you'll begin to feel safe, surprisingly enough, not what you would expect. Why? Because you aren't engaged in an act of self-protection. Self-protection holds you apart. And the minute you begin to do this simple, perhaps silly thing of spontaneously looking from here to there in an erratic manner and just saying, "Thank you to that spot. Thank you to that spot. Thank you to that speck of dirt. Thank you to the column. Thank you to the corner of the column. Thank you to the nail that is sticking out up here," etc. You are not in an act of self-protection and you are therefore not holding yourself separate. And holding yourself separate is what makes you feel vulnerable.

It's not what's out there that makes you feel vulnerable, it's how you are treating everything out there—as something to gather facts about so you'll know how to behave, or as something out there that no one but God is responsible for that is there for a presence to be acknowledged with gratitude. And you see thinking comes in, "well, how can I say that that nail up there, which is a blemish on the piece of wood, how can that be something that I should be grateful for?” And you’re lost! It doesn’t matter. It’s something that catches your attention. It’s there to be experienced. If your thinking makes you miserable and keeps you separated, not just from your world but from your own experience of safety then why value it so much.

Don’t worry you’ll all get a chance to ask some questions. Another thing I’m going to encourage you to do is to find if you are going to thinking, to find new words to think with. Thinking is for the most part habitual! I don’t know if anyone still reads the Reader’s Digest and enjoys the opportunity to increase his word power, but very few of you actively engage in expanding your vocabulary and that locks you in, just like a language does. You know why so many small areas of land in Europe could keep their identity through centuries? Because their language provided a barrier. And so other’s couldn’t melt in if they didn’t learn the language. And so individual identity of people and countries was accomplished by simple language. It’s important to know that your language can be your prison.

I don’t know how many of you are students of A Course In Miracles, but one of the things I’m intent upon is to let you know not to indulge in the habit of letting the language of the Course become your new prison—the very thing that separates you from “them,” those who are not familiar with the Course yet. But you know one of the primary values of the Course is that if it is read regularly it helps you increase your vocabulary. How many of you went out and bought a dictionary just so you could read the Course? And new language allows you to break the habit of your old vocabulary that locked you into suffering, locked you into sin, disease and death. But you know, I also don’t want anyone who studies the Course, and this can apply to any holy book or any spiritual path, it applies to every single one of you no matter what you find valuable, ultimately the real benefit of the Course in this day and age is that it gives you words, pretty contemporary words, that allow you to grasp the fact that God Is Truly All, Omnipresent, Omnipotent, the Source and Meaning of everything. These words help you grasp that fact enough that perhaps you can dare to abandon words and pay attention.

If you want to see innocence, you must look with innocent eyes, which means you must look from a vantage point which is innocent of definitions, already established definitions, innocent of judgment. Innocent, I’m using it in the same sense of absent of. You see a pure glass of water is a glass that holds nothing but water. Innocence is being free of preconceptions that color your every experience, because those preconceptions stand between you and what you are experiencing. Your purity, your absolute unalterable innocence never leaves you. It is you absent of confidences that you know what everything is, how it works, what it’s for and how you must deal with it.

So we have a system of justice. And the system of justice says, “if someone is intent upon bringing harm to someone else, they must be stopped, they must be restrained. That isn’t a bad idea, but that doesn’t solve the problem. It’s time for the solving of problems and so again I want to reiterate, the only reason that justice is important to any of you is because you haven’t learned how to heal sin, sickness and death.

So then the answer is learning how. And the first step is what I’ve talked about, a willingness to look with innocent eyes not to gather data but to say, “thank you.” Not for any reason, not with justifications, but just because. There’s a song that most all of you are familiar with that says, “let there be peace on earth and let it begin with me.” Your experience of safety, your experience of healing, your experience of a world where justice is not needed all starts with you. And my promise to you is that it begins with you and you can feel confident that you will experience the fulfillment of it. It is not so insurmountable that it begins with you but long after you die the little bit that you’ve done will promote the final outcome, because your experience of danger is absolutely governed by you, by your prison of language, by your confidence that you understand well enough how everything works that you don’t need to be open to more, on a daily momentary basis.

There is such a thing as instantaneous healing. I know most of you definitely believe that there is such a thing as spiritual healing—healing that is not the result of invasion (what they call invasive surgery or manipulation). Well, yes, spiritual healing is possible! Instantaneous healing is possible! And you know what? Instantaneous healing depends on no one else. It only takes one! What is the saying? One with God is a majority! Well instantaneous healing—sin, disease and death—you call that miraculous! Yes! If miracles are radical then I am challenging you all to answer the call to that which is radical.

Can I see some smiles? You know that which is meaningful doesn’t have to be serious! And a little bit of joy goes a long way in uplifting the heart and reducing a sense of vulnerability that causes one to feel a need for defense.

What a wonderful name, Jean Smilely! We will take a break and when we resume we can talk.

QUESTION/ ANSWER: During the break someone came up to be and said, “are you saying that it doesn’t matter what the verdict was?” I’m going to answer the question this way: Well, someone says to someone else, “well, what was the doctors verdict”? “Oh, he said I have six months to live.” Well, do we want justice or healing? I’m not going to answer every little detail for you because there needs to be a certain willingness to allow a new way of looking at this, whatever it might be, to be nurtured within yourselves and allowed to come forth as your own clarity.

The real question is, does the verdict have anything to do with justice no matter what the verdict is? You know what the Father's verdict is? "You are my beloved Son/Daughter in whom I am well pleased." And you know if every single one of you believed that, if everyone on the globe believed that there wouldn't be any murders, there wouldn't be any stealing, there wouldn't be any acts of self-defense against the system or the victimizer or the lack. You see? If you know that you are the beloved expression of the Mover, the Prime Mover of Life, with a capital "L", then you feel loved and you feel dignity and your actions arise out of feeling loved, and your actions arise out of dignity that you feel, and your actions arise out of an undeniable experience of safety.

So who has a question?

QUESTION: I'm Camilla. And I thought I would get this over with so I could be present for the rest of the weekend. I'm open for a miracle and my ego wants to have a lot of questions answered. And it seems I've created some illness in my body and I don't know how I did that, or why. And I have a belief that when it's your time to leave the planet you have to have something to take you off. And so like I'm just sort of waffling now about is it time for healing or am I going to go? So what's going on? What do I need to do to come into peace... well, I feel peaceful about all of that.

ANSWER: It is so funny. I know someone who has said, who is in her mid-seventies, "I've had a good life. I don't want to be here another seventy years." Isn't this hilarious? What do you think your options are? (laughter) You know, either you wake up now or you wake up later! Maybe it isn't your time to go, maybe it's your time to wake up! If you go, the one thing that you will discover is that the cause of you leaving didn't kill you, and you will be healed of that belief. But you will still have the opportunity to let go of what seemed to create for you the opportunity to go.

There's order to everything. This is not an answer I would give to every single person here just to keep the theme going, as it were. What seems to have created the inner distress—I'm not talking about the physical symptoms, but the inner distress—has been a very strong feeling that you are guilty. In other words, it has been almost impossible for you to feel innocent. You know when you don't feel innocent you feel that you have to account for yourself. You feel that you always have to be proving something, to give a good account of yourself. And it's always an uphill climb, because it feels like the guilt you are carrying is a given... it is something that's just with you, when it isn't! But nobody has come up to you and said, "it isn't just in you." And they haven't confronted you with it day after day.

Hey, I'll be very frank with you, as a child my mother, Mary, had to constantly remind me of my heritage, if you will, who my Father was, who I was. There were times when I wanted to play! There were times when I wanted to get into mischief! I did not want to know who I really was! One could have attributed her to haranguing me with the truth about myself, they could have attributed that to her being a Jewish mother. But it would have been well for you if you had had a Jewish mother or a friend who was constantly calling into question and making sound ridiculous the feeling you had of being guilty, inadequate.

You have worked hard to be good. But it's been to cover up a bad, a feeling that good was something you had to be rather than something you were. And so being good was a defense. If you remember nothing from this weekend other than this it will be excellent. And this is that if you will let yourself fail at being good, if you will give up on trying to be good, if you will let it go of your tendency to be precise in what you do, and if you will let whatever is left there where you sit sigh and not try to do anything with your life, you will find that what is sitting there is the Daughter of God, what you will find sitting there is innocent, what is sitting there is being infilled with joy.

You have been suffering from a lie that has been believed to be true! This is absolutely true of every single one of you. You're all so conditioned, "Well, where are your credentials? May I see your resume? What have you been doing for the past ten years? Oh, you've just been a housewife? You mean you haven't been steadily employed? I'm sorry you didn't account for yourself! You didn't manage to clean up your house yesterday?" (lots of giggles) The you that feels like shrinking into the bathroom, isn't you! The you who actually feels chagrined and miserable because you haven't worked steadily in the last ten years, this isn't you!

There's a real call for everyone to begin to feel and express the qualities of one who has integrity for no good reason at all! Well, somebody says, "Well, what right do you have to be happy? And YOU feel like answering the questions(!?)"

Now I want you to understand something, I've been talking about the essential you that is guiltless, that has integrity no matter what you think, no matter what anyone else thinks. But I want you to know something: How could the purpose of vision be to acknowledge if there was nothing there to acknowledge? God Moved, it says in Genesis. And God saw the Movement that He was and acknowledged it is very good, meaning it's Me, it's verily God! The Movement is something recognizable to which the acknowledgment of what it is can be given. And that's Creation! And that's what's happening at this very moment, is Creation, God Moving and recognizing Himself in the Movement and it looks like this! It really looks like more than this! But this is It seen through a glass darkly, or with a greater willingness to acknowledge it in its fullness. Therefore, this that seems to be sitting on a chair is part of the Whole, it's the visibility and tangibility, it's the recognizability of the Movement of God, of the presence of you that the Movement of God is Being right there. Therefore (and I want this to sink in) your body is eternal! If you were to pass on at this instant you would find yourself identified. You would not be a bodiless Spirit, lofting through the ethers of the Kingdom of Heaven. You would be absolutely identifiable and recognizable.

You know what? The more of your innocence that each of you begins to feel the more beautiful the visibility will be. If your distress that is embodied physically is the result of not recognizing your innocence, of not feeling your innocence, of not giving yourself credit to say, “I just might be innocent of all this shit!” If you were willing to do that, if you will be willing to do that so that you’re not constantly confirming to yourself your guilt then you’re going to see that which is recognizable about you begin to reflect less and less of the density of, what I’m going to call the heartache of your Soul. And please understand and don’t take everything I say literally. I know that the Soul being the direct presence of God can’t possibly have a heartache! Okay?

But you know, there is in each of you a Sanity, with a capital “S”, no matter how insane you insist upon behaving. That’s another way of saying, there’s an innocence in you no matter how guilty you insist on behaving. That Sanity in you does not allow any of you to be comfortable or at peace when you’re insisting on embodying mentally or physically a guilt that isn’t real. You can’t be insane and feel good, because there is an ever present unchangeable Sanity of your Being that is always actively insisting upon, insinuating its way into your conscious awareness so as to replace the insanity, to inspire you to let go of your great confidence in your beliefs. This means that this body that is sitting there, the recognizability of your presence has—and I’ve said this before, but you can all stand to hear it again—it has an intent, it has a reason for existing! You know, how could the last verse of the first chapter of Genesis say, “And God didn’t see everything that he had made, and He thought it was good.”

Your body has the intent just as the Movement of God has the intent to express the Mover. It has the intent, the Movement of God has the intent of identifying God perfectly. That which identifies you has the intent of identifying you perfectly. It’s on your side! It has no capacity to act at odds with you! It is as innocent as you are! It is as innocent as you are! Paul is standing here wishing his innocence showed right here. But you know something, and you can ask his wife to verify this, when he stays with me as he is doing right now and seeing with the eyes of innocence at any workshop or gathering this begins to go away (probably indicating his stomach) and he doesn’t change the way he eats at all.

What’s going to be your vantage point? Your habitual thinking processes? I hope—I hope—that you’re inspired by having let’s say a Jewish brother tell you today—and I know in the Kingdom of Heaven there aren’t Jews or Gentiles or Italians or anything else—but I am reminding you right now of the truth about you and about the recognizability of you that you call a body. If you have to tell yourself every hour of the day, “Raj said I was innocent! Raj said I was innocent! Raj said I am innocence itself! I am like the pure water in the glass, and I’m not going to muddy it up with extraneous crap! I am not going to muddy it up with my old habitual ways of thinking about myself and my body!”

You see, that which moves and the Movement can’t in anyway be two separate things. The Movement of Creation cannot be different from that which Moved. God did not create an objective Universe that is something separate from Him that He set into motion, which depending on what happens may keep going and may run down unless He tends to it. The Movement and that which Moved are one in the same. Your identity, the presence of the consciousness that you are is the Movement that everyone is able to recognize right there in that chair. And then I must take it a step further so that you don’t just think that this Movement is a Movement of a puny little mind that God Created, because God can’t Create something separate from Himself/Herself.

The Movement of God looks like you! The Movement of God, the Movement of Intelligence is the very intelligence that you experience being from time to time. And at the other times it is still there, but you’re dabbling with unintelligence, like a child plays with poop from his diapers, or tastes a worm. You see?

It’s all about forgiveness. And I love to be able to say this over and over, forgiveness is not something that you give to yourself or to someone else in spite of what they did! Forgiveness is the withdrawal on your part of judgment being applied to you or to them for what they did. It just means not judging anymore! Do you have any idea what happens when you abandoned judgment? Well, you have the opportunity to say, “thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you. Thank you for the uneven knitting in the sweater that looks like something that attracts my attention. Thank you, thank you, thank you.” In the absence of judgment you have the opportunity to feel your safety.

As I said earlier, the practice of forgiveness is a matter of abandoning the arrogance that says, “I stand in a position to render a verdict.” Maybe the physician has reflected back to you by his verdict, the verdict that you have been applying to yourself! And maybe both of you are dead wrong!

Remember One with God is a majority! So nobody else in the world has to agree with your assessment of your innocence, with your assessment of yourself as innocent—not a single soul! In fact if you think that they do have to agree then you will have to account for yourself and prove it to them. You don’t want to waste that time missing the joy of experiencing unreasonable happiness that no one else can understand why you’re feeling.

So you are innocent. You don't have to keep trying to prove that you aren't by being so good. And your body is your friend. That about you which is recognizable is your friend because it has one pure intent and that is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly! Even humanly speaking, it is programmed that way. And that is why when you cut yourself it heals.

Given free rein by being released from your distrust of it, it will do its function perfectly and healing will occur. And the physician with his vast experience will say in so many words, "why you had a spontaneous remission from whatever the problem was. But of course, we don't know if that's permanent." If he wants to misinterpret what it is, fine. He can call it whatever he wants. But your daring to embrace and allow your innocence to embody itself because that's what reflects what's real about you. That will be followed by healing. And you will know why the healing occurred. And whatever the doctor says will be seen as an expression of his current ignorance, and that's all.

I want for all of you to grasp the fact that you're bound, you are all bound to get well! You're all bound to wake up! There really is no choice because you cannot forever deny who you are. You can for awhile and enjoy the thrill, the frightful thrill of a distorted perception. But you can't stop being who your Are! You can't stop being divine. And so if you're bound to wake up sooner or later, you can opt for sooner. If you can conceive that you will ultimately come into a realization that you're the direct expression of an indivisible God that is Love, if you can conceive that you will come into a conscious awareness that that's what you are in spite of all of your actions to the contrary for eons perhaps it will become obvious to you that it has less to do with earning it and more to do with breaking down and giving up and just saying "okay" to what you've been all along. That's what will happen at some point.

So do it now! No more than that, let it in now. Because it won't be an accomplishment. It will be what's left when you have abandoned trying to accomplish something else.

Do you have a "yes, but?"

QUESTION: No, I don't have a "yes, but," but it's "yes, and then."

ANSWER: No it's "yes and now."

QUESTION: "Yes and now," yeah. It's like I need a new purpose.

ANSWER: When you abandon whatever purpose you have had in mind, you will find that in its absence the purpose God has set for you will begin to register with you. You see? Let it in. When you give up goals, when you give up all attempts to achieve in order to demonstrate your accountability and respectability, you do not become a meaningless blob, unmotivated, just sogging there. You feel more life. You may feel more vitality, and more motivation and on top of that you have the marvelous experience of experiencing a willingness to follow through to stay with that motivation because there's no fear of consequences. That's sheer joy! But what I mean to convey to all of you is that this is not an accomplishment.

I keep saying it and I'm going to say it again, it is when you come to that place of utter frustration, where you are worn out from trying and not making it. It's when you hit the bottom of the barrel and you really give up! When there is no more motivation to try to account for yourself. When this horrible situation is arrived at and not resisted any further then in the absence of your willfulness the Father's Will that has been underlying and undergirding you all along begins to be felt. I cannot adequately express in words the value of failure as an ego.

And I will finish with this: When you arrive at this point as failure as an ego, with no energy to energize it, you open up—all of you—you become undefended. Very often you actually ask for help. But even if you don't in the absence of the energy to continue willfully to be the boundary of the ego disappears. And that's why there are sayings like, "man's extremity is God's opportunity," because joining occurs. When there's no more energy being expended to hold yourself separate, there's only one inevitable experience that can occur. And that is an experience of union. This is why the thing you all work so hard to avoid is your salvation.

At this very moment Paul is failing beautifully at being an ego. He is not energizing it. Even as I speak of him he is not becoming self-conscious, because that's not where it's at for him. I bring this up so that you might understand, all of you, that if you fail as an ego you will not become dysfunctional in the world. You will not become useless and meaningless. You said, you're going to have a new purpose. You are seeing evidence of purpose that Paul from his separated sense of self never experienced and yet it is not a purpose he has for himself at this moment. In the absence of him having any purpose for himself, purpose is occurring! And it's called us acknowledging the truth—us being in communion. You see?

The experience of being is not only utterly benign when one is experiencing union, it is also (there is not really one word for it) it is embracing, nurturing. It is like a family, an ideal family, the way it embraces and yet leaves free everyone within it's structure, if you will. And it is the same with every atom and molecule in your body, it's all family. And it's the same in this room, it's all family. And those in this room, and the substance of the pillars, and the view out the window it's all one thing, it's family. It's utterly safe. But it's also Love, reflected in Love. It's a Movement of Love. And so it's not just not harmful, it's, for lack of better words, a seething presence of love extended by means of constant acknowledgment in all directions. And this can be experienced by you here—by you all, here and now.

You have the feeling? Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you Paul, and Jesus. I love you dearly.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Now I'm scared to death! (He starts crying) Maybe that's all I needed!

ANSWER: Well, I think you need one more thing! (Raj gives him a hug and he begins to cry again) (Everyone applauds!) You make me stretch on my tip-toes to embrace you!

What a wonderful thing to think about. It's worth it to stretch to embrace each other, beyond whatever concepts may cause you to feel inclined to withdraw.

QUESTION: That's beautiful. I'm losing control completely and I had this sense of communion more and more. But the more I have this sense the more that this part that comes up that says, "how am I this one, you know, how am I this one?" And you are all... you.

ANSWER: Well you've carried the answer with you right on the front of your shirt—it means Truth, that's how you are. And to the degree that you allow yourself to be with that you will find yourself knowing that that's the undeniable truth of them too. And so you won't check with them to find out. And when you stop checking with them to find out they're not going to be afraid of you.

QUESTION: It's be the other way around, I'll be afraid of them! (he laughs)

ANSWER: But you all need to understand that when you approach someone else defensively they feel it. And so they know, "Oh well, when I'm around them I will have to be on the defensive also." You see? And so yes you will feel no need for defense. You will feel peace. But that means that you are giving no signs to the world that they need to be careful of you being defensive on your behalf. You see? But this is where it's at, the truth... the truth of your innocence... more than that, the truth that God loves you in spite of you tells you that God loves her and her and him in spite of them. And now you know something about them that is Real, and your opinion of them can't be the same again. And your new perspective of them allows them perhaps to have enough peace within themselves to discover the same thing for themselves.

Justice... Justice will... Justice will put you in prison every time! Do not be surprised that there are people who are afraid of what justice will do to them. But truth felt, ah, says, "you don't have to be afraid, because there is no one to account to." And then no one has to play out the part of making you account for yourself. And if they do and you say, "What? What? I don't understand, and I've got some things to do. I'll see you later." That will begin to help them realize that maybe what they were valuing so much doesn't mean that much. You see? And so it all begins to work together in support of love and innocence.

I'm very glad you wore that shirt. There really are no coincidences are there?

QUESTION: Well someone asked me in the break, "what would Harvard think of you being there?" And I said, "Well, I've never been there, I wouldn't know." And I said, "they'll probably welcome you to the "Hasty (it sounded like "hasty" but could it be "tasty"?) Pudding Club".

ANSWER: I am glad you are here.

QUESTION: Thank you, I'm glad to be here.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Pardon?

(Someone must have asked what kind of a sweatshirt it was)

QUESTION: This is a Harvard sweat shirt.

ANSWER: And it has a shield right in the center where he actually pointed when he was talking about feeling in here. It says (?) Truth.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My question I think is about, to ask you to talk about transition. I work for Hospice. I work with people who have accepted on some level the information that they have six months or less to live. I also participate a lot in the community politically. And there I see a lot of transition happening. I see a lot of fear. I feel a lot of fear from folks. And I feel incredibly blessed to be in these environments. Would you speak to me about transition I think?

ANSWER: As though life itself speaks not of transition to you all the time? Transition is the way ego's refer to the Movement of Life, except that they see it as a span of time which lies between periods of time that are fairly static and unchanging. At least that is what they spend those periods of time trying to insure happens—nothing! It is almost as though the periods of time between transition are death. And the time of transition is when life has managed to break free of the control that has been brought into play to keep life within limits.

It's really what we have been talking about all day today—the answer to your question is. The problem is that everyone conceives transition real free uncontrolled transition as something that ends in death. Usually because there is such great fear of real change. If there's anything I'm engaged in with all of you it is to help reduce the fear associated with allowing change to occur so that you do not see death as the inevitable outcome to life. And to get you to be willing to abandon the idea that what you call life, which is this period of time in which you try to keep change from occurring. To encourage you to see that that doesn't embrace the wholeness of the Meaning of Being. So that you don't value with such conviction experience that doesn't surprise you.

Oh I know, you all want to experience life to the fullest, “but please no change!” The word God stands for a Movement, and that Movement is embodied in the meaning of the words, “Behold, I make all things new!” Wow! He says, “Okay, but not too fast! You got to give me time to adjust!” Hell, just flow with it, don’t fight for the right to adjust! The person on the surfboard doesn’t say, “Wow, I went by that so fast I didn’t have a chance to experience it!” Because the experience of riding the wave really involves constantly being at that point of balance with the forward movement of the wave.

Now, your task in working with those through Hospice, who are—for lack of better words—dying, is very much like my work with all of you. (laughter) It isn’t that you are really helping them die and therefore substantiating the belief in death. If you will look back over the day today you will find that fundamentally I have said, “be kind to yourselves. Stop judging yourselves. Love yourselves. Dare to trust that life is Life affirming so that you can relax in the middle of whatever Movement you are experiencing, and by virtue of that peace, being available to the divine Meaning of the Movement that is occurring and experiencing bliss. And in one way or another that is what anyone working with Hospice is fundamentally doing. You can’t tell me that in working with Hospice you aren’t called upon to really listen within. It cannot be done from a textbook. And sometimes you have to not be sweet and gentle and nurturing and utterly considerate of this poor one’s pitiful situation. Indeed that’s what I have to do too. You can’t... I can’t scare you into waking up. I can’t threaten you with disaster if you don’t get on your spiritual path. And you can’t walk up to someone who is dying and say, “Get over it!” (much laughter)

To be involved with those who are “dying,” who are going through their process of yielding what has been control issues and to help them not be afraid not to have control is essential to their healing, whether they embrace it fully—shall I say—so that the recognizableness of them reflects their peace and there is no death. That is all I have to say.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. Now a lot of this question you’ve already answered. I’ve learned a lot today. The way that I feel the dilemma is that... although I have a wonderful life...

ANSWER: Although, you have a what?

QUESTION: More and more my life feels like it’s expressing who I am, and I appreciate that a lot. But there seems to be this infinite reservoir of anger that I manage to poison my relationships with, manage to create separation. Intellectually I’ve got it that it is really stupid, but I do it anyway. I don’t necessarily think that... I try not to think of it as being a fault, but I sure would like to figure out another way to work with that energy.

ANSWER: You want to know why it feels like it's an infinite reservoir of anger?

QUESTION: Tell me.

ANSWER: Because it's really love, except you have a cork on it! The elements of anger are the cork. The cork isn't infinite, it's a little tiny cork! But you're saying, "I have all this love that I want to give, because when I give it it fulfills my nature. And this is a true knowing. But there's this decision that has said, "I'm going to cork it until I get justice." There is a satisfaction that you're holding out for. It is a the satisfaction of getting to express your sense of injustice. It's like you want to have your say, and once you get your say then you can get on with what you really want to do, which is to let this infinite reservoir of love that is you to find expression, to come forth.

Now you have two choices—two simple, very practical choices. One is to go to a therapist, one who is not heavily into psychological phenomena, but one who can facilitate the expression of the anger so that you can just practice in a safe environment expressing it exquisitely well. Because I promise you that the moment you let it start being expressed and it feels to you like it is going to take eternity for it all to come out perfectly, and you're willing for it to take eternity to express it perfectly. When you give that kind of permission in a safe environment to let it out, you'll find how small the cork was. It might only be a matter of 15 or 20 minutes before the cork is gone and this rush of hate shifts into this perfect embracing love, which was what was blocked behind the cork. There is something infinite there—unending—but it's that in you which is good that will bless everyone.

The other thing you can do is a little bit more of a head trip. The other thing you can do is to realize that the ego, that your conditioned thinking, that your mindset is a liar. And that the suggested satisfaction at getting your say so clearly said that it will be unmistakably heard, that that satisfaction will not come. It is a suggestion that is a lie. Mind you, if you go through the psychological process with a therapist you will find that you will never really finish expressing the anger to your satisfaction because once permission is given for it it will transform because you will have released the cork.

So let's take a look at what the cork is. The cork is a promise that the ego has given you that there is satisfaction where there isn't satisfaction, that the justification for holding off on your fulfillment by holding off on expressing the love that you are is not justifiable. It isn't true. It isn't valuable. It isn't worth persisting in. And then don't argue against all the reasons that come to you for persisting in getting the satisfaction. Don't fight against that, instead make a decision to do what I suggested this morning when I said, “what is the purpose of vision?” To say, “thank you, thank you, thank you. Thank you for the dead moth in the spider web. Thank you for the spider web. Thank you, thank you, thank you.” Because this is another way you don’t fight the ego, but you disregard it and you do something else. If you realize that as long as blocking the love is justified you are holding yourself and your experience of wholeness and bliss at a distance from yourself, then it becomes easier to decide in little ways to express gratitude. And there is an old hymn that I quote often: “A grateful heart a garden is. Where there is always room for every lovely God like grace to come to perfect bloom.”

So you can for no good reason at all begin to engage in expressions of gratitude, simple, relevant expressions of gratitude. Doing that will begin to break the habit of reinforcing the cork. And as that habit is broken just by a simple practice of conscious gratitude, the cork, like any good cork on a bottle of wine will scoot out under pressure, under the pressure of the love that’s behind it. If you understand that the ego is holding you hostage to a promise of satisfaction that will never be there, you will be less inclined to nurture the anger. It will be more reasonable to you to begin to express gratitude. And again, it needs to be done like I said, at random and rapidly, so that you do not pick justifiable things to say thank you for.

If anything from now on whenever the words come to you that you have an infinite reservoir of anger, you can remember that I said, “no, it’s an infinite reservoir of love backed up behind a puny little inconsequential cork, that you don’t have to keep fattening up in the neck of the bottle, so to speak.” There ain’t no satisfaction!

QUESTION: There’s certainly no satisfaction in being right!

ANSWER: As the Course says, “would you rather be right, or happy?” Another way of putting that is would you rather have justice or healing? Justice is a false hope! An eye-for-an-eye, a tooth-for-a-tooth, a death-for-a-death. Well, shall we come up here and let’s take a look at your life or anyone else’s life and shall we look for justice on the basis of an eye-for-an-eye, and a tooth-for-a-tooth? Shall we extract from anyone of you what justice would call for from someone else, or shall we have healing?

Your question expresses to one degree or another what everyone else is having to deal with too. And like I said this morning we need something radical, not a more precise way of an eye-for-an-eye and a tooth-for-a-tooth, but a way for healing so that the victim and the victimizer are both healed. It’s time to grow. There was a time when an eye-for-an-eye and a tooth-for-a-tooth in a very simple fundamental society worked and was valuable, but it’s time to move beyond. And the means to move beyond is available. And the justification or the intelligence that allows for moving beyond it lies in the awareness that you are not alone and everything is not in your hands and there is a God and there is the Brotherhood to join with, and by virtue of abandoning your joy at being independent and a success of being independent that the ego promises you, that in the abandoning of that and in the joining you come back into your Sanity.

The shift, the shift, the satisfaction if you will, that you're looking for won't come from succeeding in getting justice, but will come from the willingness to blend, the willingness to fit in, the willingness to be a part of and let everything else be with you also. The insanity that everyone suffers from is the constant conscious intent to do things your way and see things your way. And the solution to it lies in the words, "not my will, but Thine be done." Well, this doesn't set well with the ego because, "What, I'm going to do what you say? Who are you that I should do that? I'm going to turn my power over?" Ultimately you will. Ultimately you will stop holding yourself—and I'm really speaking to everyone—but ultimately you will stop holding yourself apart with an independent decision to be angry or to hate. And you will join, you will let something or someone else in. And the moment that happens your Sanity will return and you'll see that you haven't deferred to anything, you haven't yielded authority to anything separate from yourself. And you'll feel, for lack of better words, the unity of your will with the Father's Will. And you won't feel usurped of integrity but imbued with integrity that is undefileable.

I've gone on at some length, but at the bottom line the problem is an itty-bitty little cork constituted of a decision to hold off on letting the love that you are find expression because there is a false promise of satisfaction at getting justice. 'Tain't so!

So those are the two ways that you can approach it. Either way will work! And if you want to go the more mechanical route if you will of exquisitely expressing that anger the transition will occur, the shift of perception will occur and you will find yourself filled with and becoming the channel for an unlimited expression of love. And those who are Awake do not misunderstand you, even though you are misunderstanding yourself. And you are supported in the courage to dare to abandon the promise of satisfaction and let the love out.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. I would like to ask you if in one sense you would tell us what the most important thing you could say to us would be.

ANSWER: Then can we go home?

It isn't one thing for you to know, it's one thing for you to do. And so we're going to take a couple of minutes to do it. I'm going to ask you all to just sit in your chairs in a relaxed fashion. And with the feeling of love that you already find yourself experiencing embrace everyone—more than embracing them, I'm going to invite you to lower any resistance's you have to letting everyone in. Embrace does involve a little of control, or can. But if you will let this love give you the courage to become less defensive or even defenseless so that everyone is let into your space that is the one most important thing for you to not know, but do.

...It doesn't matter if you don't know whether you are doing it well.

...Does anyone notice it getting warm in here?

Okay. Love like forgiveness isn't something you give to someone else. If forgiving is you neglecting to judge then love rather than being something you extend to someone else is a state of being within you where you are not holding anything at a distance from yourself, where you let in. Indeed when I said look around and say thank you, thank you, thank you, you're letting in, especially if you are doing it rapidly without any conscious choices being made but just with whatever irregularity or whatever catches your eye, you let it in. When someone lets you in you feel loved if you stop and think about it. What a gift to have someone let you in. What a gift therefore for you to let someone in. And it's so effortless. Extending love is reaching out, but if you drop your barriers so that another can reach you, what a gift, really what a gift. Thank your for your question.

QUESTION: Thank you, thank you, thank you.

QUESTION: I'm wondering, I know you say that life is eternal, that death is just passing from one to another, but I'm wondering if you can tell me about the experience that people seem to have which we term "life after death" experiences? What if that is since it's from children to adults that seem to have the same type of experience, is that an actual experience that they're having? That's pretty much my question.

ANSWER: It's not a coincidence that they all give you the same report. Is that all you wanted to know?

QUESTION: Is that my answer? No, there's probably a million things I could sit here and ask, but...

ANSWER: Is there more that you wanted to know relative to that question?

QUESTION: Oh, no I think if you could make that clear to me whether that is an actual experience that those people are going through.

ANSWER: Indeed. It is the perceived circumstance may be different, but the same path is traveled, if I may put it that way, a movement toward the light, an extreme experience of well being. Now for instance on one occasion someone asked about a loved one who had drowned in the Northern Atlantic. And I explained to her that this loved one still found herself in water, and moving toward light, and that the water had changed from icy cold to wonderfully warm and had no choking effect what so ever. In other words, the perceived circumstance of death or the cause of death was immediately replaced with an opposite experience as she moved toward the light. She found herself emerging from water, not in the ocean but in a pool that was luminescent and was as though normal and able to step out of the pool and was met by others, welcomed, not by family but by the other side of “Hospice.”

Always one when arriving at the light finds themselves in a place of beauty, a place where they are welcomed. It is not a halfway house, but it is a point of reception. Many times individuals will choose to stay in this area of reception before going on to meet loved ones who have already passed on, who do gather to welcome.

On one occasion that I answered someone’s question upon, the gentleman who had passed on had suffered great pain for a year or year and a half before he passed on. He actually spent almost a year in this place just feeling what it felt like not to be hurting. And that kind of freedom is what one is met with. There is not an agenda for them. And so there is this opportunity to be nurtured and to not do anything they do not feel like doing. No one stays there indefinitely because the motivation to be and be actively is still there at whatever time they decide they are ready those loved one’s who were there at arrival will greet them. They then get on with the same sort of expanding of their borders that all of you are faced with here. There are what you might call guidance counselors available to them to help them facilitate implementation of what they find themselves motivated to do. Again, this happens as the desire is felt by the individual.

One thing you all need to know is that when one apparently passes on it is not the threshold of enlightenment. The only thing that you will find yourself enlightened about is that whatever you thought caused your death didn’t. That has great impact on one, because if that didn’t kill them what else could? And in that sense the experience promotes a more rapid release of other beliefs that are binding. Nevertheless there are a few diehards, who want another fling at life, like your experiencing, like they were experiencing. And they can choose to return to do it again.

However, and this is taking us to a different subject. The fact is that Awakening is happening and everyone is involved in it whether they’re even conscious of it at this point or not. And so there is not the opportunity to return that there used to be. So not all of those who would chose to come back and do it again will have the opportunity.

To be complete in my answer to your question, the experience one has after they have passed on is immediately, or immediately involves healing processes—such as, icy water that drowned you becoming warm and experientially nurturing, so that one is not left with an enduring fear of water without understanding why. It is nothing to be afraid of. I am not spending time suggesting to you that you all wake up so that you can avoid an unpleasant experience. I am encouraging you to wake up because you are going to do it here or hereafter and there is no need to wait.

Indeed, along with the experience of a nurturing movement toward light in which there is an overwhelming experience of well-being, along with that is a conscious awareness that you know more than you thought you did, an emerging conscious awareness of the availability of more if you will just to pay attention to it a little bit. There is a clearer experience of who the Christ is. And there is a clearer experience of a relationship with God. And this does help support the decision to wake up. And that is all I will say at this point. We could go on. And I'm not teasing you.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

Paul closed his eyes out of habit, forgetting that that's no longer normal. I simply want to thank you for the love that you are all radiant with that embraces me and which embraces each other. It is a joy to be with you and to have been with you today. And I look forward to be with you tomorrow. And before you leave I would ask that you give me an opportunity to get to the back door before you leave so that I can greet you individually, which I haven't been able to do with each one of you today.

SUNDAY MORNING:

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: I waited to begin until there was peace, what you might call quietness, where the energy was one of peace here in the room, here in your minds. I encourage all of you to value this state of quietness that you are experiencing right now. And I encourage you to value it enough that you would prefer—I won't make a total demand of you—that you would prefer not to respond to anything in your day from any other place than this place of peace. Because when you are experiencing peace you are not likely to give a knee-jerk response to the event in your day. And I promise you that any time you give a spontaneous knee-jerk response to anything that is going on, that response is arising out of memory and not out of an actual connectedness with the event. And as a result, your expression of what is really a habit is likely not to hit the mark. And because you have not valued the peace enough to prefer to have it you are more likely to become emotional, which will aggravate any discrepancy that might exist between your expression of habit and what's really happening. "Oh well, too many things are going on for me to choose for my peace right now. Well, nobody else is doing it, and they expect me to come up with an answer." Well that's another one of those things that I was talking about yesterday that you could learn to chuckle at. Well, so what if everybody expects you to come up... you can prefer to respond from your peace, right in the office, right when the boss is yelling. Or if you're the boss, before you're inclined to yell.

It is very difficult to experience truth when you are upset. And yet truth is the answer or the attitude of preference for your peace puts you in the place where truth can be experienced and you are able to be utterly appropriate in that moment in that circumstance with that irritable woman or arrogant man. There really is more value in a response from your peace than there is satisfaction at responding from your conditioned thinking—your anger, your concept of who you're dealing with, what you're dealing with. But you know more than how valuable it is to the circumstances it's really a heck of a lot more pleasant not to be experiencing a knot in the pit of your stomach.

You all can live without fear! And it has nothing to do with whether or not there are circumstances that seem to justify fear, they are not what is causing you to be afraid. What's causing you to be afraid is a choice you are making to be reactive to the circumstance rather than making a choice for, or preferring your peace. It's just a habit that you are reactive. You say, "no, it's instinct." No it's habit. And if you will dare to believe that that might be true and just experiment with making a choice instead of following your instinct you'll find that indeed you have the option at every moment to come from your peace. It's a choice!

The room was bubbling with vital conversation and joy and enthusiasm and anticipation and you all sat down and you made a choice to do something else. You made a choice to be still. I believe there is still justification for joy. It is not that it went away, but you made a choice to experience being here from your peace rather than riding on the froth of your enthusiasm. And if you'll pay attention right now—in the peace—the joy is there. What's missing is an edge of excitement. The joy is still here. The edge of excitement is the edge of fear, you see. And you can have joy without an edge to it—without an edginess to it.

This is really important because it's the way you access sovereignty that you didn't think you had. And the only reason you didn't think you had it was because you didn't know that your peace was a simple matter of choice. You didn't know that fear was a matter of choice. And if you realized that it really is a matter of choice you can choose differently than you have in the past. Let us say there is a circumstance which you could almost truthfully say was a frightful circumstance. The simple fact is that if you are able to have the presence of mind necessary—the presence of mind necessary—to choose for your peace you will be a much more rational and appropriate presence in the midst of that circumstance that needs to be dealt with. And you will be of more value to more of those involved in the circumstance than you will if you join them and run around like a chicken with its head cut off.

You know, if Paul wants to hear me he has to shut up. He has to be still. In being still he doesn't disappear, he's just there as a presence of attention— attentiveness. If any of you want to experience your peace you have to be a presence of attentiveness to it. It's a simple choice. Can you imagine living for a whole year without experiencing one pang of fear? It's easy!

The world does not have to change in order for you to live a whole year without any experience of fear. People can still apparently die. There can still be accidents. Nothing has to change out there in order for you to experience peace. The only thing that needs to happen is that you make a choice for it, that you don't value some right you think you have to get excited about what's happening and give your two cents worth of the excitement!

We started out yesterday talking about the fact that justice is really a substitute for healing. Preoccupation with justice is the way one avoids the joy of being whole without somebody else having to pay for it. I'm just going to let you think about that for a moment. The preoccupation with justice is a way of avoiding the experience of wholeness without someone else having to pay for it.

Has anybody gotten it yet? You see, it's simple, as long as you think somebody else has the keys to your fulfillment. As long as you think someone else has the power and controls whether you can feel whole or not then they have taken something away from you and they must pay for it in the process of your getting it back from them. And that is why there is a system of justice, so that you can get your due, if you will. So that you can get even. And even doesn't mean in balance, it means extracting, as I said yesterday, an eye-for-an-eye and a tooth-for-a-tooth. But if you've lost an eye and you take away another one's eye both of you are blind! That is why the answer is healing! And in order to heal, as I said yesterday, you must find yourself guiltless as well as the one that seemed to have taken something away from you, else their conviction convicts you as a victim.

In your healing you set your brother free. You do not in your healing incarcerate him for life, or take his life away. In your healing your brother is healed. And so that makes it very clear what justice is really about. It's not about love, it's about getting even.

Now if your peace is always available to you and is a matter of choice and circumstance then your wholeness is always available to you and it's a matter of choice not circumstance. Actually, what is a matter of choice is your experience of it. The wholeness is not a matter of choice, it is an absolute unalterable fact. Whether or not you're going to experience it, let it in, is a matter of choice.

I'm just letting it rest there. So often full-fledged adults are like children at Disneyland, where there are delightful things going on and while there even standing in the line for one thing they say, "what are we going on after this?" And what I'm trying to say is that as something meaningful is shared and light-bulbs go on, instead of being with that awareness you say, “Give me more, give me more, give me more,” and you race through. And so I’m letting there be time to be with the thought, with the idea.

If right now all of you at this very instant are the direct expression of the Movement of Creation—the Father, God, Buddha, whatever you want to call it, the Prime Mover—if you are then your full experience of it is available to you and it is a matter of choice whether you experience it or not. And if you are engaged in achieving justice, whether it’s a war you’re having with your body, whether it’s a tangle you’re having with a neighbor or a mate or a son or a daughter, as long as you’re preoccupied with justice you are blocked from this ever available direct experience of your Sonship or Daughtership, of your Birthright, of the experience of who you Are.

Peace is the bridge you might say, to that experience. Because in your peace you are being silent, you’re not making the choice for war or justice or getting even.

Just for perspective, there are places on this planet where life is not nearly as frenetic as it is here—not just in Hood River but I am saying in the United States. And as I said yesterday there is an unspoken coercion that is communicated silently and by behavior. And so it seems utterly normal not to be at peace. But it isn’t! It’s just a life-style! It’s a decision! And you know what? You can change your mind. And as I said yesterday, to be coming from your peace, to be able to be perfectly appropriate in any given circumstance does not make you dysfunctional in a frenetic world. What it does is, it causes you to be a presence of transformation that is recognizable to everyone who is in a frenetic mode as solutions, as what works. “Why didn’t I come up with that,” the frenetic one says? Well.... But it’s recognizable as valuable. And so you do not need to be afraid that if you are choosing for your peace that you will become an odd-ball. It’s not true.

I must say something else. Do not assume that because Paul is listening to guidance and Paul travels around and speaks to groups that if you get in touch with your guidance you’re going to end up traveling around and talking to groups. If Paul had known ahead of time that that was going to happen we probably wouldn’t have had many conversations. But this happens to be what is appropriate for Paul. This is the way being transformational looks for Paul. But being transformational for you may be having the most wonderful restaurant for people to enjoy, and for other’s to be the most wonderful accountants who are able to set their clients minds at peace about the IRS involvement’s, or being a Minister of a church. It will amount to your being appropriate in the moment.

This is not the only way Paul is appropriate. He is able to be appropriate in a grocery store too, where no conversation about the Kingdom of Heaven occurs. But the key lies in your at least having a preference for peace. So that you remember that the choice is available to you. And hopefully you will make the choice more and more often! You will dare to experiment and say, “well, ordinarily under this circumstance I would be flying higher than a kite, but I’m going to try it differently this time and let’s just see what happens.” You can dare to be an explorer, an adventurer, if you will!

So that’s enough. Who has a question?

Yes, over here with the beard. I will just share with you that I selected him and Paul said, “Oh,” thinking I made a mistake.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj and Paul. First of all I want to thank you for a wonderful healing yesterday, and everybody, I want to thank you it was a wonderful day yesterday. Today I want to ask a question about another. And I’m sitting here with my friends because we were talking about that other person. And the reason I want to ask about this other person is because this person has been instrumental in my life and ours. And he’s truly one of the highest beings that I’ve every been around that walks around as an ego, I guess you’d want to say it—you might classify it as. And by I guess trepidation is in my gratitude to him I feel like it’s my turn to respond to him. And I don’t know how to do it. I know that he has his path and I trust that path just as I’ve trusted my own. And I’ve trusted his help with me. And I guess I’m saying this with a little fear as I see him pursue what he’s doing. And in that gratitude it has always helped me and yet there’s... it feels like it’s a time for me to share with him.

ANSWER: And when you say share with him, what does that mean?

QUESTION: I mean there’s a time... you know it’s not justice, it’s just there’s a time for healing.

ANSWER: There’s a rift?

QUESTION: No it’s not a rift, a concern. It’s a barrier. There’s communication that goes one way, from him to me. And I want the barrier to dissolve so I can talk to him as a brother. And I was wondering if you could speak to that, Raj?

ANSWER: It is very simple. You must wait for an invitation. And you are not to turn the fact that there isn’t an invitation into an issue to have judgment about. And let the value that you have received from him lift you, and buoy you and carry you forward being whole yourself.

It is an interesting dilemma you might say. I cannot speak to Paul if he does not invite me. And I’ve said before relative to him and everyone else that those of us who are Awake and are standing in service to all of you cannot inflict your good upon you.

QUESTION: It is an infliction if you don’t ask for it?

ANSWER: Absolutely! That is why David Thoreau said, “If I knew for a fact that someone was coming to do me some good, I would run for my life for fear that some of their good would get done to me.”

If I honor you or any of you right where you are, which is the furthest forward on your leading edge that you can dare to stand—that’s the truth at any given moment, you’re always standing the furthest forward on your leading edge as you can dare to stand—if I can honor you there then you can honor your brother, even if you’d rather have your druthers and have it be different.

Do you see that when one honors your right where you are you relax? And the minute you experience comfort and safety you feel like moving. I didn’t say you feel like being moved. Thank you for asking.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

And before you say anything: As you’ve probably noticed I do not speak assertively. I do not suggest that any of you assert yourselves. The key in the process of Awakening, the key in the process of your coming back into your Right Mind is a matter of allowing, of letting. When you assert yourself without having listened first to know what is appropriate, what follows can only be described as human will. Waking up is absolutely effortless! “Well, that’s hard! How do I do it?” Go ahead.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I’m just basically going to ask you for a confirmation about the voice I’m hear—been hearing for awhile—as to who or what it is, as it’s sort of identified itself to me in a humorous way. But I’d like to ask for some confirmation as to who and/or what I’m hearing. I’d also like to ask...

ANSWER: Let us just not do run on questions. The answer to your first question is, actually that this is one who is working with you in conjunction with your guide. And it’s a Real experience. Go ahead.

QUESTION: Thank you. The other thing is often when I’m hearing or getting words it will be like there’s two sets of words.

ANSWER: Oh yeah, they can say many things at the same time.

QUESTION: Sometimes there’s the sense that sometimes they need to finish sentences for some people. But sometimes there’s like a couple sets of words. And if you have any suggestions about that or comments?

ANSWER: Enjoy the experience. Nothing needs to be done with it. Paul has that experience often. I not only can say two things to him at the same time, I can answer everyone else’s call as well.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Loosen up! Don’t be so confined in terms of possibilities. And learn to be with the out-of-the-ordinary, if you will, with what you aren't used to. Learn to just be with it. Much of what you will learn will never be said to you directly, but will simply come from the experience.

Yesterday there was a conversation at one of the breaks, and Paul was sharing an experience that he had, or an awareness that he had come to as a result of his ongoing experience with me. His background, like everyone else's, was that when you know something it becomes knowledge and knowledge is stored away for future use. And to make a long story short, after 13 years of hearing, saying what I had to say he realized he remembers almost nothing of it. In fact, 24 hours after a gathering he cannot tell you what happened until he hears a tape of it. And he thought perhaps he was missing the boat while everyone else was getting the benefit, because he had no knowledge stored up.

But as a result of the ongoing experience of being able to be appropriate in any given moment as a result of listening, and having the experience of knowing at any given moment, it became clear to him not in a blinding flash of light, but in a gradual way, that what I was saying was not something for him to store away as knowledge. At the experience of knowing at any given moment is what is the normal state of being. I did not tell him that. That just became obvious from the experience. You see? Some things you have to abide with and feel, and then you find yourself knowing. And in this case the knowing was that knowledge is not what any of this is all about.

And I am sharing that with you so that you might not go home and think that knowledge, the gaining of knowledge this weekend was what this weekend was about. It is not the acquiring of knowledge that now you will be able to use to control your life better. What it is is the provision of an impulse, if you will, to get you to let go of controlling your life and let go of your memory banks and have enough trust in the innate life affirming nature of All That Is that you can dare to be still and dare to let down your defenses and let in, so that you might experience being whole and being able to be right where you are from that experience. You see?

TAPE FOUR:

I want you to imagine if you will—a contradiction in terms—but an infinite blackboard. This infinite blackboard is life. This infinite blackboard is the conscious awareness that you are, each one of you are. There's only one infinite blackboard, but it is the constitution of each one of you. And each one of you somewhere on this infinite blackboard has marked off your territory. It is a silly concept. You are the territory! But you mark off a little square, let us say, and you say, "This is my territory. This is me." And the boundary, the line around it is constituted of the definitions you have given yourself and you have given life. Well, since you are the whole blackboard, since you are infinite yourself, inevitably the experience of the tininess of this territory you've marked off as yours begins to feel uncomfortable. But when you begin to feel uncomfortable you have forgotten that the rest of the blackboard is there. and now you think you have to enlarge your square.

I've used the terms enlarging the borders of your tents. This seems like hard work to make your square bigger, because by definition the square is... there aren't a lot of resources inside the square. And so you're always working against the odds. It's a struggle to make that square bigger. And yet most of you call this process "being on your spiritual path." And you have high hopes, great confidence and a lot of faith. You wonder at times whether it's even worth it.

But you see the answer is not to make the square larger. It isn't really a matter of enlarging the boundaries of your tent. It's really a matter of tearing down the tent. It's really a matter of erasing the boundary line that you have created, because the tent was sitting somewhere and there was something outside the boundary of the tent. And every time you managed to enlarge the boundary of your tent you were simply embracing more of what had been sitting outside all along. You know it's a joke in the old time movies where the fellow is sitting in the outhouse and the walls fall down. But that's what waking up is about. (laughter) It's not about remodeling and making a bigger bathroom.

That's why as strange as it seems, as unreasonable as it seems the concept of letting go, the concept of allowing is so important. Because letting is a matter of undermining the structural integrity of the boundary you have created. Letting is the opposite of what gave structure to the boundary.

Well, you all knew you were in prison, now you know what your prison is: An outhouse!

In the silence within you, in the silence that you choose for—that I'm going to say in the silence of your Being—is where insight occurs. It's been known for centuries, but everyone leaves it up to the monks. It is somewhat understandable, because who wants to live that kind of life. You see what you don't understand and what many monks don't understand is that while you're sitting in the outhouse being quiet it isn't just a matter of being at peace in the stink! It isn't just a matter of sitting in peace but still confined. What we need now are for the monks to come out of their solitary confinement and be in the world from their peace, if you need to have role models for what it's really about. That isn't likely to happen, however.

And so now that you know that you have been sitting in your outhouse without the wonderful label of monk, but no different from the monks, you can have a little more self-appreciation, a little more self-honoring and you can be aware that the call at this time is to be in your peace in the marketplace—to be in your peace in the world, to be in your peace so that the infilling of Spirit, if you will, or the disintegration of the walls of the outhouse can occur. And you can be in your peace wholly so that the infiniteness of you is no longer artificially separated from itself by some definition you are holding about yourself and about what the world is. The reason you end up being appropriate when you are in your peace is because you are not holding and you cannot hold yourself separate from All That Is. That takes a conscious decision. And when you are being still no conscious decision can be made.

So you say, “well if no conscious decision can be made why would I ever get up off the pot? Wouldn’t I just sit here forever?”—well, that’s what the monks haven’t found out yet. No, because as I pointed out yesterday, when you are in touch with your peace you begin to feel the energy of being on the beam, you begin to feel energized. But the tendency toward moment will not be arising out of memory, it will not be arising out of thoughts you had about why you would move. The impulse to move is the Movement of God. And you will Move! But again, the Movement will blend with, will be in harmony with, will be utterly appropriate with regard to all the circumstances around you and everyone will be blessed. And again you will not stand out like a sore thumb.

Did that answer your question.

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

RAJ OPEN COMMENT: (After a break) I’m so glad that Paul did that. In other words, making an announcement that I could have made because he felt he could handle it. But the point is he didn’t need to do it alone. None of you need to do anything alone. I will ask you a question that I asked Paul. And that question is: Do you want a friend? Do you need a friend? You know, no matter how self-sufficient you become, no matter how self-confident you become why be sufficient alone?

I’ve spoken rather consistently since yesterday morning about becoming defenseless. And now this morning in the outhouse illustration or the blackboard illustration I pointed out that rather than enlarging the square that gives you definition that you call your territory, all you need to do is to erase the boundary that you have designated as that which states the place of your territory. And yesterday when we spent some time being still and experiencing the love that we were experiencing, but becoming defenseless so as to let in everyone else who was in the room into your space, I have presented a picture in a general way that I want to be a little more specific about this morning, and it ties in with “do you need a friend.”

When you value your peace enough to shut up your thinking, you are shutting up that which gives apparent structural integrity to your boundary. As that boundary dissolves that which was always outside of it can begin to penetrate where the boundary was and register with you. When the boundary is gone you have let in all the rest. And I don't want this to be just an intellectual exercise or just a concept that you get the hang of. Because when you neglect the repair and the constant shoring up of your boundaries and they begin to dissolve and you begin to feel some of the integrity of your being, and you begin to feel no fear, it isn't just a better private experience. Because what you let in, like the Self you really Are, is Love embodied. And so what you let in you are going to feel loved by. It will be an experience, a Soul experiencing with Meaning, with a capital "M". And I think at this moment the best word that conveys the fullest meaning is that you will let in the experience of having a friend.

What is a friend? A friend is someone you don't have to put up a front for. A friend is someone who is unconditionally with you. More than that, a friend is the experience of being Loved—you having the experience of being Loved.

Now Paul could make the announcement about the truck with its lights on... big deal if he did it alone. But why not do it with the experience of being Loved in the process? Why continue to assert the right to a time and a place to do something he can do well enough by himself, especially if the experience of love doesn't accompany it.

Now I'm not going to play on your heart strings, but when we talk about waking up, it isn't like you've had some spiritual shot of Java where suddenly you are aware! It's so much more than that, because the value, the divine integrity of everything that you are aware of registers with you. And it registers with you as being just like you. And so in registering with you as what it really is it illuminates what you Really Are to your self. And that's not just a conceptual or intellectual experience. It feels, for lack of better words, like Home. Not only does it feel like you, you know that it is you, and you know that you are infinite. And that doesn't make you feel important. It doesn't make you feel terrific about yourself. It makes you feel... it just makes you feel in your Right Mind. And it feels good not to be crazy anymore. But it's a profound feeling of being Sane.

So we have talked about the importance of setting aside defenses. There is a way to have intent to set aside defenses. Again, defenses are called for and are important only to one who sees himself as tiny and separated from everything else. Now one does not get rid of defenses by becoming defensive against defensiveness. One abandons defensiveness by doing something different. One does it by inviting someone or something in, making room, making a point of entry, if you will, in the boundary that you have created to define your territory. Unfortunately for the ego in order to make that doorway it means that your boundary is that much less well defined.

And so that is why I am talking about "do you need a friend." Do you really need to do anything all alone? I don't care whether you're doing dishes, or whether Paul is letting somebody know that they left their lights on in the car, you can do it joined—consciously aware of not being alone. You can ask me. You can ask the Holy Spirit. You can ask the Christ Mind to be with you. You can welcome friendship. And even if you don't hear an answer you can throughout the day persist in making the invitation. Because you know what? The infinity of you didn't create the boundary. The one inside the boundary created the boundary. And even if your boundary is still solid enough to keep you from hearing a response, your persistent expression of a desire to be joined with someone who is Awake, someone who is expressing a more infinite intelligence than you are currently accessing, that desire felt within you begins to cause the boundary to deteriorate.

You who made the boundary can unmake the boundary with a conscious desire to be accompanied in whatever you do with a desire to have a conscious experience of that companionship. If you desire to have established in your life a union, a joining with one who is expressing the Father's Will and who therefore has no intent that can be harmful to you, that is the way, that is the way you undo your isolation.

One of the lessons in A Course In Miracles says, "today I will make no decisions by myself." Well, who in the hey are you going to make them with? Who's available? Well you either have your memory to join with to deal with your day. Or you have something outside the boundary of your current frame of reference. And so if you're going to not make any decisions today by yourself, you need to ask. "Well that's such a marvelous concept, asking... asking." It's the way you penetrate the boundary you have created around yourself. You are not alone. I had Paul make a little yellow sticker and put it on his computer. It says, "do you need a friend?" to remind him, not how needed he was, but that he didn't need to do anything alone. And that in fact to the degree that he stayed in communion with me he was undoing his experiences of limitation and promoting his awakening, not by his design but by the Father's design.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I seem to have some difficulties both on a physical level and on a mental or emotion level that feel like real limitations. And they seem to be getting maybe more intense or more sever. I've been going through what I would term a period of recovery from the ending of like a 15 year long relationship. And I would kind of thin that you know at the getting on to 3 years that would be improving but it seems to be getting worse. And physically I seem to be having more and more difficulty with like cigarette smoke, additives in food. If I go into a room where there's been a lot of smoking like some of the areas here, you know my throat will close off, my eyes just burn and itch constantly. And the longer I stay in it the worse it seems to get.

So on several levels it seems like an isolation or more isolation. And I think I've done a lot of work and attempted to get healed in both those areas. But when you said yesterday about people leaving here and going to a place where they just might be pain free for a year, you know that sounds really good to me to be not in this struggle anymore. And not having these... it almost feels like the physical things are an invasion or an attack on me. The cigarette smoke is real debilitating to me, fumes or pollution are real debilitating to me. And I do kind of live in an isolated rural area so from that I can kind of retreat into that and get some respite from it. But all the things you know feel like they're so heavy and so demoralizing that I'd rather be in a place of peace out of here than I would you know continue to go through this.

ANSWER: I'm glad you asked this. If ultimately you are going to find, as I described a little bit ago, that everything you see is just like you and that you will feel loved by it, obviously the very things that you have described which are irritating to your system or to your thoughts, those very things will be the things that will confirm to you your Sanity and your Divinity, but you will be seeing them differently.

One of the things that I did not describe to you was the fact that everything that you will see will obviously be to you constituted of Living Light. That does not mean it will not have definition. That does not mean it will not be recognizable, whether it's a body or a tree or a universe. But it will be obvious to you that the substance of it is Light. Not only that, you will find yourself spontaneously aware that the Light is Living Love.

Now why am I telling you this? I am telling you this because at this very moment everything you see, the wallpaper, the wood, the chairs, the other people are vibrant Living Light/Love. And that means that any cigarette smoke that you might see in this room, or any of the other irritating things that you experience would be seen as that which was utterly loving you because its substance was not nicotine and tars, but Love.

Now you know another way to begin to break down this boundary, this small portion of the infinity of you that you've claimed as your territory? It is to invite a new experience. That's like wanting a friend—that's inviting a new experience. I'm telling you that right here, right now there is a new experience awaiting you. Ultimately it is the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, because that's what you're right in the middle of. But your little territory that you have defined as your territory causes you not to see the whole territory as it is, but only in terms of the definitions of the territory you have claimed as yours.

Now if you want to escape all of these irritating things, all that you will do will be to move from this part of the Kingdom of Heaven to another part of the Kingdom of Heaven, from this place where the Light of Living Love that is the substance of all form that identifies the Presence of and Movement of God to another place where there is the same thing to experience. But you won't experience it there unless you invite a bigger experience of it than whatever definition you are giving to it. The real need here is to realize that defense is not needed right here. Your bodies reaction is reflecting the feeling of a need for defense, a need for something, some conditions or circumstances to provide you with a feeling of safety.

Now I said yesterday that because justice is the substitute that is used for healing, and that healing is what is called for, something radical is called for. And I am talking right now in terms of being radical. The answer doesn't lie in going to a place where conditions are improved, because those conditions will just be other conditions that you have defined as being safer for you. But you're still going to be there in a state, circumscribed by definitions and your tent will still be the same size and you will be no more able to discover the Kingdom of Heaven, the Reality of Living Love identifying the Movement of God. It's right here! And this is the radical approach, if you will, that needs to be taken. Instead of fearing what these elements and circumstances can do to you, dare to have the curiosity to feel the Love that has to be the substance of anything you are experiencing.

And that's why I said yesterday, at random say, "thank you, thank you, thank you," to whatever catches your eye. And you are saying thank you to being, because that is the way without control you let in a new experience. You see you are not going to have a new experience until you let yourself see it a new way. You don't have to wait for the circumstances to change. "Yeah, but I can't control my body reacting to this and reacting to that, it just happens." No, that's just another definition or concept that you have applied to it. Your body, as I said yesterday, is the visibility and tangibility of the presence of your Individuality. And the presence of your Individuality is the Presence of God expressed and seen where you are. And your body has only one function: to identify your Presence perfectly. It has no capacity to act independent of you, of your presence, of your divine Presence. You can however, in a separated self-awareness experience fear and then use your body as a defense, tensing it up, densifying it, doing what is unnatural to it, and you call it physical problem—disease.

So do you need a friend? Well, you sure need your body to be a friend instead of an enemy. And so I encourage you to invite your body to register with you in its true intent. I'm not asking you to ask your body to be different, or to do something different. If you ask that you're asking your body to do what it's been doing all along. And while you're asking it to perform its divine Function of registering with you what it truly is you will be neglecting to energize fear about what it's going to do next. And in the absence of that fear you will not be using it defensively and you will find the density dedensifying and you will find healing occurring.

But you all have got to start right where you are with a willingness and a curiosity to see what in Heaven's name is really going on here and looking like wallpaper, and wood, and bodies, and ego's. "What is really going on here?" That's the way the boundary breaks down. It breaks down through sheer neglect of being taken care of, reinforced. It is not able to keep itself together. It has to be daily maintained.

Specifically the answer for you relative to all of these things you mentioned in your question is to be willing to have a curiosity to see what's really there—what's Really Divinely there. Are you afraid to find—and I'm not asking you to answer this question, but are you afraid to find that the need for a divorce and the struggle through the divorce might somehow be able to be identified as whollizing and divine? Are you afraid to find cigarette smoke to be harmless? Are you afraid to find that those things that had justified great self-righteous indignation to be something functioning divinely on your behalf beyond your current sense of what was best for you? Ultimately you'll see that the only that was ever going on was the Kingdom of Heaven. Ultimately everything going on identified your fulfillment—not the way you were interpreting it.

It comes back to this issue of justice or healing. You know the last person to wake up, the last person to suddenly see the Kingdom of Heaven right where he is—Paul just thought, "will probably be me," because he already knew what I was going to say—will be one who says in his last ditch attempt that, "I have a right at least once in awhile, to be able to see things the way I want to see them." And so, everyone else will be in bliss and right in the middle will be this one individual who will inevitably still be protecting himself against elements, cigarette smoke, smells. He will still be trying to be at peace in the atmosphere of the stink of his shit in the outhouse, you see. "My way to wake up is to be at one with my shit! I know it to be true and therefore I'm sticking to my guns."

You see as long as you don't find tobacco smoke and other elements to be guilty of imposing upon your freedom, you will not be in a position of having the curiosity necessary to see the divine event going on right there that will exonerate them and free you. And so the radical stance that is required here in order to have healing is to allow the elements you find objectionable to be redefined by the Holy Spirit, if you will, so that you can forgive them by withdrawing your judgment upon them and thus blessing yourself with healing. That's the radical stance that will get you off of this scale of justice.

It is appropriate to take a break.

QUESTION: I want to say thank you, thank you, thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: Are there that many of me?

QUESTION: Well you said to say, “thank you, thank you, thank you” for talking to us. And on many of the tapes I’ve heard you mention the “healing team” and I really want to know more about it. What it is? How we call on them? Do we need them?

ANSWER: Well, do you want them?

QUESTION: Well, what I mean is can we do this by our self, if we just acknowledge our divinity, or do we need help?

ANSWER: That is a good question. Tell me how would you know how to acknowledge your divinity without some help?

QUESTION: Are you asking me?

ANSWER: No, it is a rhetorical question. You see you don’t really know something until you experience that something. It is of course a start in the right direction to know intellectually that you are divine, because that gives you a reason to ask what it means.

So you can’t do anything alone. You can’t do anything by yourself. It’s always been the attempt to do something by yourself that has caused the sense of separation from your Source and has caused your direct experience of Who you Really Are to be unavailable to you. So the only way you can move in the right direction is to stop doing stuff by yourself.

The fall was a declaration of independence. So if you’re going to come back into your full stature as the divine one that you are you’re going to have to revoke that declaration of independence.

So if you wish you can acknowledge that you are divine, but then ask to have the Meaning of that to be disclosed to you. You can say, “I am divine. And I desire to have the full experience of what that Means. I ask for help in releasing whatever blocks me from the direct and full experience from what that Means.” Or to be even more straight about it you can say, “I know I am divine, but I also know that I don’t have the faintest idea of what that means. And I want to know what it Means. Please fill me with the experience of what that Means. Please help me release whatever I am doing that blocks that experience.”

So what is the “healing team”? Well, you would be amazed to know how much help you have available to you. You would be amazed to know how many there are who are Awake who stand at the ready, you might say, to help you remember who you Are. And part of you are remembering who you Are is the rediscovery of what your body really is, as that which is the recognizable part of the expression of God. Like I told Paul, your guide you could say is there to help wash the windows of your mind. And what has come to be called the “healing team” are those who are Awake, who work in conjunction with your guide on your behalf in terms of clearing your perception of your body.

Now the fact is that the misperceptions that you call disease are just that, misperceptions. And so the healing team doesn't actually manipulate your body, but helps bring to the surface those beliefs that are contributing to the acts of self-defense that you employ that create density where all there really is is Light.

So you need someone or something to illuminate you. As I said earlier, you need a friend. And you need to discover the emptiness of being alone, so that it holds no attraction for you, so that you can honestly recognize that you do need a friend. You see, in a way spiritual growth can easily be ego satisfying, because the better you get at your metaphysics, or the better you get at knowing the truth the better supposedly you get at being able to do that which sets yourself free. But you know what it says, "it's the truth that shall set you free," not your knowing of the truth that shall set you free. And if you want to know the truth you have to listen. You can't be the declarer of truth. Truth declares itself.

You see, one of the statements that Mary Baker Eddy made was that "Truth is revealed, it needs only to be practiced." And the followers have interpreted that to mean that the Truth has been revealed, its Christian Science. And it only needs to be practiced. No, Truth is revealed, which means that for every single individual Truth is a revelation.

And what does Truth do? It reveals Itself. Well, when Truth reveals Itself you say, "Oh, yes!" And rather than it being something you have to practice you've already changed. You are not ignorant anymore in that specific regard. And the inclination to be on this new basis is natural and spontaneous. So you don't want to become practitioners of Truth, you want to be listening at every moment as Truth reveals Itself anew, because Truth is a synonym for God.

So you know you can't just listen alone. It's not an isolated activity, because it's an invitation for something "other than yourself" to you. So it immediately is an active embrace. So, yes you do need the "healing team," or you do need God, or you do need the Christ, or you do need one who is Awake, because that joining must occur that undoes the act of separation that caused you to be in a frame of mind where fear was available to you to experience that justified your self protection that you are experiencing physically as a disease. There's no way out of it.

TAPE FIVE:

And the fact is that I'm sure every single one of you to one degree or another has pursued something on your own right up till the bitter end and finally you have succumbed and said "Help, I can't do this all by myself." And when you've said "help" help has come. The reason it has come is because the declaration of independence was revoked and a joining was invited, allowed and it occurred.

Now it doesn't matter whether you think of it as "the healing team" or the angels or the Holy Spirit or me, it only matters that the invitation is extended. That is a prerequisite. That is the only way healing occurs. Anything else ends up being manipulation or rearrangement of the physical, while the reason the physical needed to be rearranged continues unchecked because you're still in a state of independence—so called independence.

Somebody asked me if I would say what you all look like to me. And you know I can't answer that in that limited way. Because you know what? Wherever you are you are accompanied by a company of helpers. And this room is full. Yes, if you could see this room is illuminated, not only by the Light that you are but by the Light of those who have accompanied you, who stand in support of you. But more than that everything you see in this room, every structure you see in this room is illuminated.

Now, what you will come to discover is that—and this is a difficult thing to put into words—all Light is white and yet there is color. The color embodies and expresses the intent of—for lack of better words—the idea that is formed. In other words, the function of the form is indicated by color of the Light. And what I mean to try to convey is that at the very same time that you see a color you see it as colorless—as white, in other words. And so when you look at these glasses the frames are a different color from the glass. And the screws holding the ear piece to the frame of the glass is a different color. It is a rose color. It is a particular shade of rose that says the intent or function of this screw is different from the intent or function of the cross brace here, which is a very, very, very light, almost white-yellow. And so there is what some have described as a blaze of color. But it's not chaotic. but colors that I cannot even describe to you because you cannot image what I would describe as a color.

So this room is illuminated. And the illumination, it's intent, it's function is conveyed by means of its color, and its color relative to the whole. You would say it is quite amazing. And no, Paul is not seeing what I am describing, but it is available to him.

So, you know really you asked, “Do I need the ‘healing team’.” Well, whether you need them or not, you've got them. And they're here. And all of them are here for each of you. Gee, that means you don't have any privacy doesn't it? Maybe that's why you're not Awake, you still want some privacy. You know what that really means? It means you want something that's totally yours... Something that's totally yours... That you would withhold rather than share freely.

I'm going to ask all of you to consider asking within to have revealed to you why might it be a wonderful thing not to have any privacy. That will set things working in a new direction. You see you need to become curious about the things, not hoity-toity, high-flatulent spiritual things but you need to start asking strange questions about everyday things. You need to be curious about a new way of experiencing what you're seeing everyday.

Well if you don't have privacy then you might feel quite vulnerable. But you know what? The fact is that if you didn't have any privacy you would feel absolutely invulnerable. The only thing you can feel vulnerable about is losing something that is your exclusive possession. And so the Course says, "to have, give all to all." The only thing you can feel vulnerable about is losing something that is exclusively yours.

To give up privacy automatically releases you to your experience of absolute invulnerable. "Well, yeah, but I've been studying all these years and I've gotten these things clear in my mind, and things are just now beginning to go well for me, and it's proving that everything I was doing was on the right track and I really know I'm making headway, and now you tell me that managing to do it all by myself isn't where it's at?" No, I won't tell you that. You can do it for another couple of lifetimes if you want. Yes, I will tell you that.

You can't get into the Kingdom of Heaven by lifting yourself up by your own boot straps. You've got to let yourself down and you've got to let in—figuratively speaking—you've got to let the ground support you. And in that willingness to join and be a part of and be in partnership with something else, the act or the declaration of independence is broken. And no I don't get tired of saying it over and over again, because the expression of truth is like a breeze of light. And it is a sheer pleasure to have your being be visible as that which is the source of great joy. Every intention that arises out of one's unblocked connection with Reality is a source of joy, a recognizable source of joy universally, because there is no such thing as a private experience.

Everyone who is consciously Awake at this moment in addition to everything else they are experiencing are experiencing everything that is going on here this afternoon. I mean everything, everything about each one of you right down to the tips of your toes, because no matter how much you think that body sitting there is yours, it's not!

In a way you tend to, some of you tend to feel pretty good when you come to the lesson in the Course where it says, "today I will make no decisions by myself," like today you're going to do something new. Yesterday you made no decisions by yourself. What's the difference though? The difference is that today you will make no decisions alone and you will have chosen who you're going to make your decisions with.

You really only have two choices. You have the choice to join with one who is Awake or you have the choice to join with your definition of who you are and the memory banks that it has established. And you're either going to be being based on your past, or you are going to be being based on God's present. And those are the only two choices you have. And another way you could say it is one way or the other your channeling something. And you want to know something? It's never you! I'm going to let you think about that.

You say, "Oh well, I was just being me." Like hell you were. As long as you're inside this little tiny box that has partitioned off the inside from the rest of the infinity of who you Are you have a way of thinking of yourself and looking at yourself and looking at how things work and you think you have a self—you think you have a self. And then you say, "I'm being myself." But when that boundary disintegrates you'll no longer talk about having a self. You'll no longer think in those terms.

Right now, Paul is here and he is not having an experience of self. I mean by that that where in his "ordinary frame of mind" he would think of a self who was here on this platform separate from you—and now he is becoming self-conscious—where in is "normal frame of reference" he would think of himself as a self here on the platform different from you when he's self-conscious. And when he's self-conscious it's difficult for him... Well, it's difficult for him to be appropriate, but more than that it's difficult for him to experience the flow of the appropriateness that is all involving. When he is self-conscious he is conscious of a self that is located in space, that only involves the space that his body occupies.

Is this manifestation of self-consciousness not frustrating to you? Would you not rather have the uninhibited flow of the Movement that you've been experiencing all weekend? Well, I'm going to zap ya! Everybody else would like the same thing from you, not just you, but you and you and you and everyone. The Gift of Who you Are is what blesses everyone.

You see, Paul cannot remember what we were talking about. But he doesn't have to remember what we were talking about because I know what we were talking about, and when his sense of himself gets out of the way he will know what we are talking about.

(Long pause) And now he's dabbling in embarrassment, even though it has no value whatsoever. And why do all of this in front of you? Because you're going to have the same experiences of losing it and feeling foolish. And you need to understand that as long as you're intent to listen, to have that friend, as long as that intent is greater than the degree to which you want to play the role of embarrassed one, then being embarrassed or feeling foolish for having lost your center will not govern and guide what will happen.

Okay what were we talking about when Paul lost it through self-consciousness? I am asking for a response, I am not going to put Paul through the paces of getting past the block.

(There was no microphone used so I can't hear the responses.) Indeed. Indeed. Now he's not hiding. We'll see if we can do it again.

When Paul is letting the words flow, when he is joined with me and is not self-conscious, he's in a Movement. And it is in a Movement that he is in and all of you are in. It is a Movement that is a Wholeness. It is a Movement of clarity. It is a Movement of expression that is healing, not because healing is being attempted, but because the expression of truth is healing and transformational. What I am meaning to convey is that you don't have a self. You are either the direct expression of the intelligence that God is being at this moment, and therefore God is what is being at this moment, or you seem to be a simple expression of stored memories and habit patterns. When things were flowing smoothly Paul was not having an experience of self, but he was having a full experience of being and of being consciousness that in no way held itself separate from any of you, and who experienced no separateness.

Now the simple fact is that through out this awkward period you haven't changed from attentive and warm and interested people to individuals ready to point the finger and Paul and say, "see you goofed." Paul's experience of self-consciousness, or of a self needing to be defensive went on entirely in Paul's mind. Now this is an important thing to understand for two reasons. One is that very often as one engages in his or her spiritual path you think that it is a process of self-improvement. And as long as you think you have a self of the kind we're talking about, that can be improved or who can be uncomfortable you are experiencing an illusion.

(Another long pause.) I just told Paul, "no they don't have to pay more for this kind of a show." (laughter)

We're going to back up. I said that you are always channeling something. Another way of putting it is that you are always giving expression to something. And what you're giving expression to is never you. You see we're moving into new territory for Paul too, and he is letting it in very slowly. Paul's going to grow right in front of you. You see the only place, the only circumstance under which you could think that you have a self is from within this boundary of the infinitude of you that you have drawn and claimed as your territory. The territory that is yours belongs to a you that is no longer the infinite but that which is defined by the territory, by the boundaries of the territory claimed. And this you who has claimed the territory can now under these circumstances be called a self, but it's not You, the Whole Infinite One that you Are.

Now as long as you are not totally Awake and you are experiencing everything from within the boundaries of the definition of yourself that has been given to you by virtue of the boundary having been drawn and claimed as yours you have only two experiences of, what I'm going to call communication available to you. One of them is constituted of stored memories and data within the boundary. And the other is the Whole Self that you Are that extends infinitely beyond the boundaries, which is a Wholeness in which all of the Brotherhood exists Wholly and unseparately. And so you are either from your tiny vantage point going to be letting in a Brother or a Sister providing clarity to you because you have said you want a friend and you don't want to be alone. You are either letting that in or you are letting in old tapes, so to speak, old recordings, old experiencing and extrapolating from them what the meaning of a thing is or what you ought to be doing.

You see, I will tell you the reason I am bringing this up is because—as with Paul, but not at this moment—it is with you, you will think that there is a you that has the choice to listen to your ego or the Holy Spirit. And there is no in-between place. There is not this third vantage point called the self that can choose to listen to the ego or choose to listen to Truth or the Holy Spirit.

As long as you think there is this third place from which to observe you can say, “well, today I'm not going to listen to my ego and I'm not going to listen to my guidance either. I'm just going to hang out for awhile, and I'm just going to be me.” And there ain't such critter! If you understand that your choice really is between something and nothing, between your union with that which is Real and a nonunion with a purely imaginary sense of self then you will have the perspective necessary to not value nothing, and to not value being alone. Meaning that you value more having the experience of a friend, that you value the experience of union that connects you with the Movement of Being that is far more fulfilling for you to experience and far more fulfilling for everyone else to experience right where you are than it is when you're just being you.

Somebody asked also earlier today, “do we have a purpose? What about finding our purpose in life?” Well, again it's like saying “what's my purpose within the box, within this boundary that gives my life definition.” Well your purpose has nothing to do with that box. Your purpose has nothing to do with this lifetime. If you have the realization that you don't have a self that can have a purpose, you will find the experience of purpose happening right where you are that embraces all of the universe and helps to disclose to those who think they have a self that has a purpose that they don't and that the giving up of that concept will allow them to have the wonderful experience that they see you having.

Now I have said it completely, although it did not come out smoothly. And we're going to take a break, and I do not mind if you chat. But if there are niggling questions or if there is a feeling that you haven't quite gotten this, I would invite you to be still. Don't try to figure it out but be present with what I've said, inviting it to illuminate itself more completely to you. Because it is very important.

ANSWER: I must explain to you that Paul became self-conscious because he was afraid that his interference by being distracted got in the way of your being able to clearly hear what I was saying and that therefore the point was not successfully made. I am going to suggest that we take a few moments for you to share—anyone who feels like it—whether you got the point, what you experienced from this little episode. Is there anyone who would like to do that?

QUESTION: My name is Ted. My interests particularly keened up when you mentioned, tied it in with the question about purpose which was one that I had asked. And my sense about what was being said was that we could either channel or choose to participate with two experiences. One being from within the limited boundaries that we draw for ourselves to define ourselves, or that of Truth, God the whole blackboard, our guides, whatever we choose to call it. And that it might be very easy to say since something or someone is choosing one of those two there must be a third thing—the one who is choosing. And you were saying no there is no such third thing, it's just one of the other two.

And then as far as the talk about purpose, I was hearing that there was no such thing as purpose from the limited perspective of being within the boundaries, the small circle we draw around what we call ourselves. And the larger, the entire blackboard is perhaps purpose itself as it Moves.

QUESTION: I would like to, if I may, Paul and Raj share what I experienced when that happened with you. I've experienced since being here watching movement to Paul's right. And this movement is always been more animated than Paul. And I have identified that as Raj from the moment I experienced it. But what I watched was prior to Paul standing and becoming animated, more animated than he had been previously was Raj moved in directly behind Paul and then they were one. And then Paul become animated as Raj was animated. And I say that there was no mistake it taught us all very much and taught us all that we are truly one with, not only each other but one with our guides. And they're within us. And that merging we let go of our iron bound identity of the outline of our body and feel and know that we are one, physically, mentally and above all spiritually. And I thank you very much, Raj. And I thank you so much, Paul. I've learned a deep lesson here today and I can't be grateful enough. Thank you.

ANSWER: And I thank you.

QUESTION: My experience of the event was the universe changing. And I want to say that in a way that in your description of the dissolving of the ego I'm reminded of a place in the Course where it says it only takes one to do his part completely. And I have the experience of you offering Paul or any one of us... you actually were a blueprint I guess you might say for each one of us to do our part completely.

QUESTION: My experience was to see that you don't overwhelm Paul, that you don't take over, in the sense that it's a partnership and really is on both your parts. And that means a lot to me, because that's what I'm trying to do. And I love the thought that I don't just have to just disappear, but that I'm a part of something and that I really matter. And I'm very grateful that your willing to go through this with us.

QUESTION: I too am very grateful for what I've experienced here today. The thing that is really come to my attention, points that stood out were that we really need a friend. And I like the way you presented that, that you are truly our friend, and that this is really a personal journey between friends, and it's not really an abstract experience. And that the more that we allow ourselves not to be private, that there are no private... I think that's another thing I got real loud and clear too, that we're really all in this together is very important, I mean we're all doing this together so if we're feeling the oneness... or that we are all in this together if we don't feel self-conscious. And I was observing what was transpiring between you and Paul and you were saying that Paul was feeling self-conscious but yet I didn't observe Paul feeling self-conscious, which was very interesting, because he was feeling something, but I wasn't seeing that happening. I thought the clarity was flowing fairly well in spite of the inner dialog that was transpiring. I also saw the inner dialog going on but I wasn't aware of quite what that was.

And I think that's really nice, because I also... I'm getting from this is that we have a trail sweep here with the Holy Spirit, we can be screwing up, but it may not be visible to everybody.

QUESTION: I think I must have heard a different question than what I'm hearing answers for. The question that I heard when you asked was well that the point hadn't been completely expressed that you were trying to make and that you wanted to know what we thought we had gotten from it.

ANSWER: It was not that it was not completely expressed, but Paul was concerned that what he was experiencing had gotten in the way of it being completely expressed, and therefore, the question was: I will say, "do you feel that you got what was being said?"

QUESTION: Well, what I got was a major jolt! I guess I had always thought that there was what I thought of as the little self that could choose God or could choose the ego—I could choose to hear one or the other. So to hear that there wasn't something in the center of whatever, choosing was quite a jolt to me. So what I heard was we are either always expressing God and letting God be God, or we're trying to prove that we're something else, and that there isn't a middle thing choosing.

ANSWER: Indeed that is what I said.

QUESTION: Well I guess I'm going to have to ask this. I've been talking to everybody else about this and thinking that I wasn't going to have to address Raj. I think my question is with the joining. I had always thought that once we are able to let down those barriers and those blocks that keep us from experiencing this glorious blackboard of infinitude that as I stand here in this body that that knowledge and infinitude, that great body of Love will be able to be moved through me. And I never really took into consideration that I might need a guide or that joining was necessary, that why can't I just be open, receptive and let my ego go. And so I guess that's my question.

ANSWER: Before we go on to that question is there anyone else who wanted to respond to the other...

QUESTION: My first hit was similar to yours, what happened to this individuality that I've been hearing for years? But then when I came back in here and sat down I realized that the gift was something else, that what I was really experiencing was an act in progress, that we were seeing the gift of the self united. And that what Paul was experiencing was for our benefit. And your seeing Raj supporting him was for our benefit. And your sharing that because we're all going to be experiencing that same thing. And I'm so grateful that I finally saw that. And if I'm wrong please correct me.

ANSWER: You are not wrong.

QUESTION: I think it was really interesting to me and listening to what everybody said what it meant for them. It meant two things for me and I think it's interesting how we learn and the fact it all happened we all learn something and will remember that no matter what. And it's interesting the way it happened. Another thing that happened for me that I think that the sense of humor that things were being present by happened also because this morning you said that Paul would be the last to know. And for me I was thinking, "okay this just happened," and then I saw all the love from everybody going to Paul. And knowing that that's the humanity in us and that it was just beautiful. And then listening to everybody at the break talking about what it meant for them, I thought that was like probably the highlight of the whole weekend. Thank you.

QUESTION: I think I understood what Raj was saying when I walked outside and I looked over the wall at the beauty of nature and a totality of that beauty. And there were all the contrasts of the little single parts—the little rocks and the waterfall and the flowers and the different colors in the trees—and I didn't see one single little self-conscious leaf. And I also understand I think from the feeling that I get from being here that all of you have contributed to my weekend, and the gifts that you all brought. And I thank each one of you.

QUESTION: I thought there were... for me there were two points, one that I got and one that I didn't. The one that I got was that self-consciousness is another form of distraction, that my puny mind can only focus on one thing at a time. And so if I'm focusing on myself, placing my consciousness on myself I'm self-conscious and then I can't pay attention to anything else. That was the point that I got. The point that I didn't get... I have to say this, Raj, that the very first time I listened to you I was in amazement of how extremely articulate you are, and what a command of our language you have, and how you can explain almost anything without wasting words. So while you were trying to explain this thing about our two choices were either one or the other, it wasn't coming across to me very well. And I was thinking this is demanding a lot of my intellect and what does my intellect know. So I'm just going to let it go and not worry about it. So I stopped trying so hard to understand what you were saying, because understanding is just the booby prize anyway. And I figure if it's important I'll get it later on. And if it's not, it's no big deal.

QUESTION: I was asking what I thought was the question that Raj posed at the end which was, "what is doing the choosing." And we've learned in A Course In Miracles, if choosing the ego or the higher self at any time, what is it that is doing the choosing doesn't even exist. And it boggled my mind. At the same time for the last maybe three weeks I've devoted full time to be in my Higher Self in every moment, choosing, making that choice and often failing, and wondering, "well, what is it in me that's trying to make that choice? If it doesn't exist what is it, what isn't it?" And then I remembered since Raj speaks in metaphors so often a metaphor came to mind, that also for the last three weeks I've been in computer hell. Because three weeks ago the stuff on my computer started to act up, and I started calling hot-lines, and finally got some help from someone who said, "the problem is your chooser has been corrupted."

ANSWER: Your what has been corrupted?

QUESTION: My chooser has been corrupted and you have to reinstall your entire system. And the reason I've been in computer hell is that I did reinstall my entire system, went to a higher level system in fact, and ever since then nothing that I've been familiar with on my computer has worked the way I've become accustomed to using it. So my chooser was corrupted, I had to go to a Higher level system and now nothing looks familiar. And I guess that's what I got out of what happened earlier. Thank you.

QUESTION: I was one of the one's that thought well if the person who's choosing is not me I don't think I like that. And I went outside and sat in the garden and there's this very solid hotel and beautiful garden and yet right next to it is this freeway with these things just whizzing by, they never stop, they never look and they never notice. And then at the same time the breeze was blowing the leaves towards me and they were sort of swirling around going past. And I had this sense of forlornness but it was also comforting the same time, like something was passing, swirling away, whether it was... I don't know what it was. I was trying to figure out what it was. But the sense and the feeling was something new is happening here.

ANSWER: You are very correct.

QUESTION: I have such great desire to truly be who I am. I think you have just kind of taken that platform from under my feet, because this person or entity that has this great desire has a self-concept that it has this great desire. I realized somehow that I need to see that all of it has already been accomplished. But the emptiness that propels this desire to know, to be is there. If I can't stand on that, if the platform is going, and I'm now floating and I need for you to bring me back before I drive down to I-5, to at least one of the... I don't know what it would be but it could be either to learn not to hang on to anything and float and find that that's okay, or to get a handle to hang on to and that would be okay. So I don't know where I am. I don't know what I do. And I don't know what anything is for. (Applauds)

ANSWER: Thank God.

QUESTION: For the longest time in my life and I've decided that I've never had a thing called free will. I don't know about anybody else, just me. And I've found that a whole lot of things that happened to me in my life that have been good, and a whole lot of things in my life that have happened to me have been bad. And yet because of those things I've learned so much, I've turn them all into learning experiences instead of beating myself up with them. The thing that I could never quite understand is is it me or is it just the I guess the big picture. I think I asked you one time about intent, how powerful was it? Do I make my future on my intent, or is it just part of the big picture, part of the big program. It's very difficult to try to put that together other than the fact I keep winding up getting mixed messages from wherever I go. And I just finally had to decide that there is just me, me as the all-encompassing me, not just me as an individual—it's part of the big program, the big picture. That's kind of what I got out of it.

QUESTION: And part of the process as I remember was rest or reflect on what we heard and ask for it to be revealed to us. And I did that. And right away I heard as I was passing the front desk some words—and that's all I heard—"it would be good to wake up."

QUESTION: I would like to say that what I sensed that is happening here is that love is being expressed. And I do not see love as an individual expression, and yet it might look like that as we hear each other's voices express our love to Paul and to Raj. What is really happening here seems to be Love with a big "L" is being expressed, whether that ends up in learning, whether that ends up in questions or whether that ends up in simple peace makes no difference. What I see is Love is being expressed, and that's important to me.

QUESTION: Well I wanted to add to that the sense I have of making fertile ground for the innocence in returning to one of our starting ideas that we started out with yesterday that through this dismantling of the cage and the dismantling of the ego and letting go of the control of the ego we are making fertile ground for the innocence.

ANSWER: Beautifully put, thank you.

It is all right for you to be floating. What you called yourself wasn't what anchored you. And I will tell you that the motivation you have for waking up didn't come from the sense of self that I just said you didn't have. And with that platform knocked out from under you you will find that the motivation has not disappeared, that the desire has not disappeared. And that what is desired will continue to pull you toward itself. You see? When there is preoccupation with the self very often, in fact most of the time the divine impulse is attributed to this self you think you are. And so it seems as though you have made a decision to grow that will cause growth to occur. Where as the fact is that the impulse felt has a desire, is instigated by the fulfillment of the desire.

It is very much like I have described in the past, that it appears that the tulip plant sends up shoots from the bulb and leaves and a stem as though it is all geared toward the ultimate of the... I'm sorry the daffodil... all geared toward the daffodil blossom appearing. When the fact is that the blossom, the stem and the bulb are always present. And if we were to describe the event you are seeing more correctly, we would say that the blossom is drawing the shoots and the leaves and the stem toward it, as though it is bringing itself from the standpoint of its completion into the picture. Your desire to be Awake comes from the fact that you are already the whole blackboard and it is constantly insinuating itself into the box that has been drawn. That is why the box called the ego structures has to be constantly reinforced.

And so the fact is that your waking up will never be the result of a self that you think you are from within the box that has decided to do this marvelously intelligent thing called waking up. It happens because the whole one that you are is insisting upon dissolving an abortion, dissolving an illusion. And so you can dare to float, because floating simply means that you are engaged in reinforcing the very thing that causes you to seem to be small, and thus you are not feeling an anchor from a tiny personal standpoint. And in the absence of an expression of authority, a supposed expression of authority by a self that doesn't even exist, in the absence of that you will find that you will gravitate toward the blossom, the fulfillment of that desire. The desire could be best described as the wholeness of you insisting upon its wholeness, and penetrating this little area, this little territory that has been claimed, drawing that of you which is Real into the fuller experience of yourself.

You see, as long as a self that is improving itself is important to the process you will devote yourself to it and that will prolong the process.

If you all grasped the fact that waking up is absolutely effortless—absolutely effortless—you would find no use for a self. If you would consider, conceiving the possibility that your fulfillment really is your birthright you could conceive of no reason for a self to achieve it.

Now I am pushing your limits. I am telling you something radical! And yes it throws what you believed into chaos to one degree or another. But unless you outright deny what I have said and you outright disagree to consider it whatsoever you will find that a state of flux, or let us say a state of flexibility, has been created in which change can occur gracefully.

Now to be practical and to not leave you utterly ungrounded—ungrounded in the field of infinite possibilities—I will say this: As long as there seems to be a chooser then choose to be joined. Because that is an act that undoes your commitment to being separate, well defined in your claimed territory. But I know that more than any time in your past lives (I mean that your current past life, each one of you, here this time) more than any other time in this lifetime it is somewhat reasonable to you that if you abandon control, if you abandon expressions of authority and you do not feel well anchored in familiar territory the likelihood is—and I only say that because it isn't a real confidence yet—rather you have a feeling that the likelihood is that because of what you divinely Are you will come into your Right Mind without a sense of self calling the shots, providing the directions and seeing to it that it's accomplished.

Now who then are you? Well, you aren't your thoughts. You aren't a collection of thoughts that provide a description that you can call yourself. When you become absolutely silent you don't disappear, do you? You don't become unconscious, do you? And yet when you allow yourself to be in the perfect silence there are no definitions being employed. You see? Definitions have been employed for the purpose of your thought, giving you a sense of being alive, of existing. And so, what I am saying is that you are the Presence of Mind. That's what you are, the Presence of Mind, the presenting Presence of Mind. But you're not an object. You're not a definition. You're not a concept. And so when those things are abandoned by we will say, letting yourself be in perfect silence you are still present, the Presence of Mind.

Now, when you are having the experience of perfect peace in the silence nothing else disappears either. But in the silence, in the experience of being the Presence of Mind, not the presence of a mind, just the Presence of Mind, which you would call consciousness, in that presence everything is available to be experienced on the basis of what it was intended to be by virtue of the impulse of God that called it into the level of experience.

Now, I will accommodate the need here as long as there seems to be a chooser and a need to make a choice, then make the choice for not being alone. Choose to join and do it by inviting companionship, whether it's inviting God, whether it's inviting the Holy Spirit, whether it's inviting an angel, whether it's inviting me, make the invitation! Because an invitation is always extended beyond the boundary of your claimed territory which penetrates it and weakens its apparent structural stability. But understand that when you experience the companionship, when you experience the friendship, not as an idea but as an experience, the boundary through which you reached to have the experience will break down and along with it will be the breakdown or the disappearance of the chooser.

The only place a chooser could have seemed to exist to choose was from a place that didn't represent you, which was more whole than that little claimed territory. And so the chooser is transitory. The problem is that you could say for lifetimes you have experienced being the chooser and as a result of what you might call a persistence of experience it seems very definitely real to each one of you—just absolutely you. I have broken that concept today. And it is an essential part of waking up for you to recognize that no matter how permanent it seemed to you it has been transitory, because it never was actual. And even more than that from this point on it will be so transitory that it will probably be within this lifetime that it snuffs out of existence because you've joined and allowed the experience of the wholeness of you as the Presence of Mind to be the fullness of the meaning of you.

Now, will the visibility, will the recognizability of you that I've talked about this weekend disappear? I did say it was eternal, didn't I? So this doesn't make sense, because isn't this finite? Doesn't it have a boundary? And it's not this, and it's not that, and it's here, it's not there. Well, you've got to learn to look at un-understandable things with an expectation that maybe there is a way to understand that just goes beyond the limits that you have been willing to employ. Because what if this wall is part of the recognizability of you?> What if you have separated out from the infinite expression of Creation one aspect of it and claimed it has your private possession—and it's this body? All you've done is denied all the rest of you, and left it in limbo. And by virtue of this choice that this is the definition is you you have forgotten that all the rest of it is you as well. You see?

It takes infinity to embrace that which is infinite. And so this will still be recognizably you. But you won't be confused by thinking that nothing else is recognizably you. And you won't be confused that somebody else is not recognizably you. And thus, no one will disappear, but the focus of attention will shift. And you will rejoice in the infinite Movement of your Being of which this is apart. And you will not be able to become self-conscious on behalf of this part that you have claimed is exclusively you and exclusively yours. You see?

You asked whether you had to join, whether you had to avail yourself of a guide, can't you just open up and desire, to have the desire, and I ask you open up to what? You're going to have to open up to something. Now you might say, "I'm opening up to Reality." Fine! This is just fine! You are going to have to join by letting it in and not holding it at a distance from you anymore. Open up to the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven right here. But you cannot open to a vague nothingness. And so you will join with that which you desire to have the experience of. All I'm saying is, desire to open up to the ultimate. Don't just desire to open up to uncle Henry or aunt Mary who passed on six months ago to find out how they are. Desire to join with one who is Awake.

At the beginning of every session here Paul has sat down and said, "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being, with a capital "B", the Father's will." And he continues, "In other words, Thy Will not mine be done. Let the reign of divine Truth, Life and Love be established—be established—in me and rule out of me all self will. And may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them." There is a joining, and it is a joining with the ultimate. And in order for the joining to occur you not only have to make the invitation you have to welcome and let in. And you cannot join and still be separate. You can't join by yourself. And you can't undo the territory that you have claimed for yourself by yourself. And you will not experience a loss of integrity by having abandoned being self-sufficient.

Guess what? It's over! I love every single one of you. I am not confused about my identity. I am not confused by the presence of an abundance of you, because it's all us, it's all One. We have sung together this weekend is the only way I can put it. And the light of the singing, the light of the union has been seen everywhere. I do not say this so you can feel really good about yourselves, but to remind you that you don't do anything alone.

And the last thing I want to say in this respect is that all of those who have experienced you all of their experiences are available to you. It isn't just that everyone else gets to enjoy experiencing you. You wonder about joining with just one guide. You have waiting for you the experience of union with every expression of God that exists. And you're worrying about just one connection? Be wonderful. Thank you.

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good afternoon. It is good to be here. And before we open this up to questions I would like to make some comments about why we are here today, and why I am speaking with you, so that you do not walk away from here disempowered by virtue of being here.

There is really only one thing truly of value that you will walk away with today. You will say there are many things, but the one key thing is that you have seen evidence of the fact that there is available to Paul and therefore that there is available to each and every one of you an experience of communion that you would best describe as divine guidance, spiritual guidance or in brass tack terms “meaningful help” relevant to where you find yourself. Because I promise you that there is absolutely nothing special or unique about Paul.

The great lesson that everyone is standing at the brink of learning is that everything that you see, everything that you are confronted with, whether you are interpreting it this way or not is the one and only thing that can be present for you to experience and that is the Kingdom of Heaven. God, the Prime Mover is infinite and infinitely expressed. And there is no vacant spot for some other creation to occupy, no other empty space for something else to be occurring in.

Now the marvelous thing that you are having evidence of at this very moment is that you, as with Paul, stand at the threshold of seeing more clearly the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are. And you have something or someone standing with you, which for lack of better words we will call your guide and perhaps a more palatable word would be an angel, who stand with you to help you get past or beyond whatever definitions you are holding about what everything is that blocks your experience of what it really is.

This is empowering, because you can walk away from here today with perhaps a greater willingness to listen with an expectation of hearing something in the silence of your listening. It is not your birthright to be ignorant of Heaven here and now. It is your birthright to be experiencing it without distortion. And because that is your birthright you might say that everything in the universe actually stands at the ready, ready to help you experience your birthright of seeing things clearly, and of having tragedy transformed into a miracle, of having fear give place to love, of having sadness yield to joy.

In other words, you stand confronted with the Kingdom of Heaven thinking that you are just seeing a material world and therefore when you look at anything at any moment during the day you stand at an opportunity to have what you think you're seeing transformed into what it really is. And so the promise of life, if you will, is not off in the future and it's not in a different place, it's in the moment you're in, in the place you're in.

Now most of you are devoted to your definitions, devoted to the way you are seeing things, whether it's your wife or your husband, whether it's your children, whether it's your job, whether it's the place you live, etc. And your devotion to your definitions is going to have to be willingly abandoned in order for a new definition, or a new clearer experience of that thing to register with you.

Now let's not get hung up on the reasons you have such commitment to your definitions. Let's just remember that no matter what your definitions are and no matter how great your commitment is to them the thing you have a definition about sits there in the perfection of the intent that God expressed that gave rise to the existence of that thing. And it awaits your recognition of it. No matter how sure you are that a thing, or a situation, or a person is what you say they are, in spite of that, they stand there, present as what they divinely are awaiting your recognition. And your willingness to recognize it is what allows instantaneous transformation.

Now I am not going to suggest that all of you go on internal "witch hunts" to find out what the reason is that you are holding to your definition. I am going to encourage all of you to lighten up and become a little playful. "What if, what if she really isn't the bitch I think she is?" "What if he isn't the bastard I thought he was?" "What if he isn't the bastard his actions for the last ten years have proved himself to be?" "What if living in Washington isn't worst than living in Hawaii?" You see?

Let there be a little willingness to lighten up and be playful. You know what? Your ego conditioning really can't object to that. And you're likely to experience spontaneous breakthroughs just because you didn't take this spiritual growth stuff quite so seriously and let it be a little fun.

So know that you have one standing with you ready to make light of it all—and you may take that in whatever way you wish—One who stands ready to support you in abandoning your convictions about what everything is, and ready to confirm to you the truth of what you find yourself seeing if in case it happens to be so radical or so fresh that it seems impossible to you. You each have a Friend, with a capital "F". And as I asked Paul, "Do you want to have a friend? Do you need a friend?" And I ask you that. And I tell you that your Friend says, "Let me in. I am here for you. I am here to stand with you on be half of who you really are, and because I am not afraid of who I really am and because I know who you really are, my fearless embrace of you will make it easier for you to fearlessly embrace who you really are.”

You know you can go and hear a lot of speakers, and it can be wonderfully stimulating and uplifting, but I want you all to begin to realize that the greatest speaker that you can hear is within you—that is the best way I can put it—in the withinness of you, in the quiet stillness of your Being awaiting your acknowledgment. It is the comforter, it is the Holy Spirit, it is your guide, it is an angel. It stands with you at God’s direction without ego motives, to help you remember the truth and experience—for lack of better words—your salvation, your natural sanity.

Now if you let the experience in and you find this great speaker to be ever presently with you you will still find it appropriate from time to time to go and hear speakers, but you will not in anyway find the experience leaving you feeling empty of value yourself.

My intent in sharing this with you is so that you might leave here today being very clear that you are Paul’s equal and Paul is yours, that I am your equal and you are mine, and your guides are your equal and you are theirs. And that no one has a leg up on reality, enlightenment or being Awakened. Why? Because you never for an instant stop being who you really are. And so you don’t have to regain it. You just have to dare to realize that it, just like the Kingdom of Heaven stands at the threshold of your conscious awareness of things, and your conscious awareness of yourself and that nothing more than a little willingness, a little curiosity and a letting in of someone to stand with you in your discovery is all that is needed.

This last point is really a key point, because you will not become whole alone. You must let someone in, you must join, because the whole human condition, the whole misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven that everyone is suffering from to one degree or another is a result of having joined with another in an agreed upon decision to define things differently from the way God is being them. You can’t be ignorant alone, and you can’t be Awake alone.

The agreement with another to see everything in a distorted and distressing way was not an agreement to see things in a distorted and distressing way, it really was an agreement to have a point of view different from the Father’s, to have an original thought, to have the experience of being the author, the independent author of something.

So the reason you have a Friend standing with you is because it’s impossible for you to wake up, to become enlightened alone. And so, because that’s the way it works, that’s the way it is. You have a companion a Friend who is Awake.

So I could go on, but you all get the point. And it is a joyful point. And I want you to be light about it. And I want you to be willing to be a little playful each day. Playful in the sense of saying, “What if it’s not as bad as I think it is? What if what is distressing me isn’t what I think it is? What if it is something deeper, what if it is something more, what if it is something essentially good that I am blocking by virtue of having an opinion or a definition of my own. What if....?” And then let the void, let the absence of your conviction allow something to emerge. Because in the absence of your definition what is really there has the opportunity to register with you.

So again I welcome you, and I am glad to be with you.

I think that you will not disagree with me when I say that the world is in need of a new way of looking at things. Well, let’s all of us begin to be the world willing to see things with new eyes, willing to look at everything with innocence.

Now, because in the amount of time we have it really will not be possible for the microphone to get to everyone. I’m going to ask you to raise your hand if you have a question and I will select. And so who would like to...

RAJ: Steve.

QUESTION: Thank you. My energy level has fluctuated dramatically at times. Sometimes I feel completely energetic, while other times I feel heavy headed, very low energy and physically weak, even dizzy. At these times I also feel spacy, out of sorts mentally and generally weird. I’ve had candida for years, which I know you said is a fad, but I can’t seem to get rid of it. I want to be fully present with my physical energy. I’m wondering if these energy fluctuations have to do with candida, hypoglycemia, previous cannabis or alcohol abuse or allergies. Will you please tell me what is causing these energy fluctuations and what specifically I need to do on a spiritual, mental, emotion or physical level to heal? Thank you.

RAJ: It is really simple. Low energy is a manifestation of an unwillingness to be present with your world. Just a moment... When you withdraw, when you resist the world, when you want not to be connected to it, you are actually saying, “I want to dissociate myself from the rest of my infinitude.” When you do that you lose the vitality of being. I know, if you don’t withdraw from it it will be too hard to take, it will hurt too much, it will be too unpleasant. And now we’re getting down to brass tacks. The thing that seems so unpleasant to you is a specific part of your being that you are saying, “I do not want to see it.” And with more focused resistance to it, which is a more focused resistance to yourself, it feels very uncomfortable and you say, “there is something there I need to get rid of,” not realizing that the thing you need to get rid of that is making you so uncomfortable is your active resistance to being present with it.

“Well, it’s such an overwhelming problem, such an unresolvable problem that if I let myself be present with it, if I let myself feel it, it will consume me, it will depress me even more.” And your justification keeps the resistance focused, pointed and uncomfortable. The feeling is, if you were willing to take a look at it, “I am a failure.” If you really got into the thing you want to avoid paying attention to it’s the feeling, “I’m a failure.” And you are afraid that if you really take a look at it, the willingness to look at it will cause proof to be provided to you that you are a failure.

But here’s an example of what I was talking about in my opening remarks. That place in you which is convinced of its failurehood, its already having gone long past the point of any kind of failure that could be corrected, that inner experience can only be one of two things. It either has to be the presence of God, called you in that spot, or your conviction as to a definition about you that is super imposed upon what God is being right there. And you know what? As long as you succeed in not being present with what you initially call a feeling of failure, as long as you successfully avoid being with that you avoid being in the spot where the God, being all there really is there, can register with you as a transformational experience of who you are and a release from the confidence you have that all that is really there is a failure. It is not a comfortable process. But it is most rewarding.

Everybody loves to avoid, everyone is committed to avoiding things about themselves that they’re uncomfortable with that—and I am not referring to you here—but underneath the picture they present to themselves and everyone else; they love someone of the same sex, or they love to do something which they have been taught is wrong. But you know what? Everyone is uncomfortable about something they are presently ignorant of. And because they are ignorant of it and do not know how to cope with it or embrace it in a balanced way they avoid it and feel shame for needing to avoid something in themselves.

When you or anyone else get in that place where they’re able to be fully present with their sorrow or their feelings of failure and they manage to find a means to be present with it without guilt and without shame you know what happens to them? Freedom occurs! Transformation occurs! An inner balance and equilibrium returns. And they are able to be come genuine and therefore able to be truly present as Love, because they are not trying to live up to some educated concept of themselves and who they ought to be. Why? Because in letting themselves abide in a feeling that they have without apologizing for it, without feeling guilty for it they have the opportunity, how shall I put it, they have the opportunity to learn something more of the expansiveness of their capacity to live fully and embrace fully. And what before had involved ignorance and therefore fear, becomes something one is able to embrace with peace and cope with because it wasn’t what they feared it was going to be.

You know why all of you just see the world as you see it instead of the Kingdom of Heaven? Because you don’t understand what the experience of it would be if you experienced it as the Kingdom of Heaven. And if you let the reality of it all come in just a little bit you would lose control, you wouldn't be able to be in charge of it, in charge of yourself, you wouldn't be able to keep yourself safe, because you are ignorant at the moment of It.

I will come back to this thing about failure. And I'm spending this time because there are a number of other people in this room, for whom this answer is specifically valuable to them.

When any of you hit the bottom of the barrel, when you let yourself feel fully that you are a failure and you realize that there is nothing that you can do, you stand at the threshold of discovering that because there is nothing that you can do, there's nothing that you need to try to do, and if you can stay in that clarity without panicking you find that there is a great relief at realizing that you cannot do what you cannot do. And that instead of it being a statement of lack it is an emancipating statement of fact. And you realize, "my god, I've been killing myself trying to do something I can't do. And I don't need to do that anymore." And then you realize that you didn't disappear, that you didn't cease to exist, except that you are not burdened with an obligation not to be a failure. You're free! You're free to be and to be new.

To let yourself be fully with failure, the feeling of failure is to allow yourself to be in that place where all of your definitions of success can be seen as a burden, an unwarranted and unkind burden that you had been living your life under the rule of. You see? But you can't find out that it was an unjust burden that you were letting rule your life until you let yourself find out the absolute impossibility of succeeding under that illegitimate burden.

Now it's not always necessary to get to the point of total abject failure to discover that, but if it does then embrace the opportunity to be with it, so that what isn't valid, what isn't validly governing you can be easily dismissed by you and released so that you can be free to be the genuine you, the new you, the closer approximation of who you divinely are that is not subject to illegitimate and unjust conceptual laws of behavior.

To be without energy is a sign to you that you are avoiding your Self ultimately. and the inclination to use substances to dull your opportunities to discover your divine Self are also not really justifiable, they are just objective means of not being in touch, not being present with the way things appear or the way things feel, and thereby depriving yourself of the discovery of what is really there that you are seeing and what is really underneath this feeling you are feeling.

You know I said earlier to be light and not go on internal "witch hunts." And now it sounds to many of you as though I'm saying, "Oh we're supposed to get into our feelings of failure and our feelings of grief and all of the really bad things that are lurking in me." Well, no I'm not saying go and search them out. But when you are taking specific steps to avoid something it means that it's right up there on the surface for you to engage with, and it takes no hunt to find it. And so, when I am saying when it's on your table, be with it.

For years I have been saying be present with your world, stop denying it, stop trying to rise above it, because what you are seeing whether correctly or incorrectly is the Kingdom of Heaven, it is Reality. And if you are seeing it incorrectly, then by at least paying attention to it rather than denying it and trying to get away from it, you are in exactly the spot where discovery, where clarification can occur and you can see it with new eyes. And so when it's on your table be with it.

I fully understand Steven, that you are convinced that if you are present with it fully it will be an absolute indictment against you, proving for all time and forever more that you aren't shit. But that is not what awaits you on the other side of abiding with it. What awaits you on the other side of the world you see is not more earthquakes, not more tragedy, not more suffering, not Armageddon, not horror. What's on the other side of whatever you're looking at is Reality, perfect, harmonious, lovely, joyful Reality. And what's on the other side of each one of your demons in you, is the flawless presence of your Self, which at the moment you are not embracing.

When you are willing to be with your demons, when you are willing to be with your sense of failure this is when it's great to have the Friend I was talking about earlier. And in many cases this is the first time anyone lets that in because it's the first time that one has dared to be honest enough to say, "I can't do it myself. Help!" Oh, what a horrible place to be. That's where Paul was when I came along. Years of feeling so competent. Years of feeling that he had a metaphysical training and teaching that gave him control because of clear correct thinking had kept him quite independent, aloof, not needing to say "help!" Well, that in itself was a sign of failure.

So, I want you to pay attention to the fact that when you are feeling low energy and when you are feeling the need for something that will dull your awareness of what you don't like, that you are feeling very independent and you are claiming a right to be without consideration for another soul. You are claiming a right to your space, a right to be whatever you want to be and do whatever you want to do. It is this assertion of independence that constitutes the point to the focused definition that you are hurting from, that is running you through, so to speak.

So, you know what? You can say "help" when nothing is hurting. You can say "help" when you're having fun, because saying, "hey, I don't want to be doing this alone," that is a way of experiencing companionship and sharing, and it is what undoes the separation that was called "the fall."

So, I want to end the answer to your question by pointing out that whatever work it is you think you will be confronted with, whatever amount of time you think that it will take to work your way through this failureship will be, do it any way! It's worth it!

I will tell you something else, the only thing that makes that kind of a process long and drawn out is a reluctance to let go and be fully present, because when you let go and be fully present you know what happens? The sense of failure is spontaneously transformed, and it happens very rapidly. It just melts and you say, "of course," because it's so clear to you that your real sovereignty that exists independent of this burden of concepts of success, it's so clear that this sovereign one that you are is sovereign and all the rest that you have been burdened with was nonsense. And if it is hate and anger that you seem to let yourself be with, a marvelous thing happens, it spontaneously reconfigures and where all of this hate, all of this seething anger was with such power, becomes obvious to you as the power of an infinite love that you have that is now coming forth. And you see that the suffering that you were so angry about was caused by a blocking of this universe full of love that was you, that is you, was waiting behind to come forth. And it just spontaneously and effortlessly becomes clear to you. But not if you are unwilling to be present with your demon, your fear, your anger.

So, I've covered a broad spectrum here. It is not always a deep sense of failure or hate or whatever, it is not always a big demon that manifests as fluctuating energy. But it's always, it's always with everyone the evidence of an unwillingness to be present with some part of You. A part of you that is perfect and flawless, but which you are misperceiving and defining falsely, because you are afraid of it, because you have not the experience with it that allows you to be comfortable in that territory.

So, that is the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. Could I ask one small clarification?

RAJ: You may.

QUESTION: That hit home for me. And just so I don't think about this later, I'm wanting to know is with my energy issue is it all in that focus or is it something that I am not eating that I should be, or something that I'm eating that I shouldn't be? Just so I can get that part out of my mind and then I can focus on what you said.

RAJ: If you ask me five years from now I will tell you again, it has nothing to do with what you are eating. There is no other culprit Steven!

QUESTION: I had to ask just to make sure. I don't want to spend time thinking.

RAJ: I understand.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I've been on a search for a doctor for our family, to minister to our medical needs, there's four of us. And I'm looking for someone who's able to diagnose using methods that are not so physically invasive, like radio-active dye studies, powerful antibiotics and synthetic drugs—we've been through all that. And also someone who uses methods other than only the intellect to treat.

PAUL: I'm sorry, someone who?

QUESTION: Someone who uses something other than their intellect to treat and diagnose. Someone who uses something other than figuring out, based on their education and what not. So at any rate, I found a woman who is a nature path and a chiropractor, who is very experienced at using what is called applied kinesiology, which is asking the body what it wants.

RAJ: I understand.

QUESTION: And I didn't know about that before. But anyway, she uses it to diagnose hidden sources of difficulty like earth trauma and allergies. And besides that I really like her. And I think my kids will be okay with her. And we've been doing well with this woman since September, but the last two visits she's not been able to diagnose one of my daughters, the two year old at all, saying that she as well as myself were energetically blocked. And she's confused us to what to do, so she's sending us to a different practitioner.

And my question really is, is our family on the right track with using this kind of asking the body what it wants? And should I go ahead and take myself and my children to the new less experienced practitioner? And should I myself continue with the rebirthing therapy that this woman said my body wanted to release the blocks?

And incidentally the toddler gets tested through me, and she's too young to cooperate with muscle testing and hand symbols. So does it have to do with me getting unblocked so my children can get unblocked? Should we go to the new less experienced person? Should we stay with the experienced person who I love? And this has just been going through my head for like a long time and it's stressful.

RAJ: I encourage you relative to this one issue to go to the new less experienced doctor. But continue with the one you have been with on an overall ongoing basis.

It is a most reasonable thing to be working with this doctor. Every cell and every atom in your body is constituted of energy. And that energy is the energy of intelligence. It is therefore a conscious energy, and it is therefore quite capable of expressing its intent for being what it is as intelligence, and therefore applied kinesiology is not radical or unreasonable.

Now it is important for you to not override your clarity. In other words, as you work with this physician I want you to pay attention as well, in the same way that she is paying attention. And if you have any question, bring it up, value it. And indeed, let it be embraced in the process of kinesiology. I'm just saying, even though you feel confident with her do not give your power away by not paying attention yourself, any more than you should do that with any other kind of practitioner, even with me. I just wanted to remind you of that.

It is also not unreasonable for the testing for your child to be done on you. And I will tell you that the intelligence of your body is quite capable of not being confused about whose body the information is about. And so the information about your daughter will not be distorted.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I just have a little tiny question. My little one, the two year old, is she healed from her potential for seizures and kidney infections, or not quite?

RAJ: Almost.

QUESTION: Almost. Thank you very much.

RAJ: Moving toward completion yes.

QUESTION: Thank you so much, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I've been on a spiritual path for a long time. And I followed you for a long time, but I just recently started the Course of Miracles," and I've run into a little snag, which I was hoping perhaps that you could shed some light on. And I'm going to read to you what the paragraph in which it appears. It says.... Well, for one thing it is the word "create" and "creation," which they use frequently. And in the preface it states: "Truth is unalterable, eternal and unambiguous. It can be unrecognized, but it cannot be changed. It applies to everything that God created, and only what He created is real. It is beyond learning because it is beyond time and process. It has no opposite; no beginning and no end. It merely is."

Now I believe that God does not create, because if it did it would take that time and process that they talk about, and it would require a beginning. And I believe as it says there, it merely is. What is your viewpoint on that, and the use of the word "creation"?

RAJ: Would you read it one more time please?

QUESTION: All right. "Truth is unalterable, eternal and unambiguous. It can be unrecognized, but it cannot be changed. It applies to everything that God created, and only what He created is real. It is beyond learning because it is beyond time and process. It has no opposite; no beginning and no end. It merely is.”

RAJ: Then you have the wonderful opportunity to discover how creation occurs without time. Another word for God is “being.” And very often the word “being” relative to God is seen as a noun, but the word “being” relative to God is really a verb. God is a verb. That is why there is Life. God is the Movement of being, not the movement of a supreme being, but the movement of be-ing the verb—the movement of existing, except “being” is the more accurate word.

Movement does not take time. Why? Because contrary to the way you are perceiving at the present time, it isn't occurring in space. And space is the only place where time can exist. So where is life happening? It's all happening in the conscious experience of its happening. In other words, it's all in Mind, if you will. But Mind is God. God is Mind, God is Life, God is Truth. So the Movement of Being is the Movement of Mind. And the Movement of Mind is the experience of consciousness. And Mind does not occupy space, but it is inseparable from the experience of consciousness. What is there for consciousness to be conscious of? Only itself, because it is the presence that is God, it is the Movement of Being.

The Movement is infinite, therefore there is no place for the Movement to go. And yet the experience of being occurs. Time has nothing to do with it, space has nothing to do with it. And truly the process of awakening involves making a shift from the perception of things—which are really ideas experienced in mind—it is the shifting from the perception of things in space to the experience of them being the inseparable presence of you. And to make that more meaningful, or shall I say more relevant, when you wake up, or as you become more and more clearly awake, you will begin to recognize yourself in everything. You will see it and you will say, “Ahh, it's just like me.” In other words, there is nothing about it that is foreign or at odds with you.

Right now you all have experiences of seeing something and recognizing its beauty immediately. There's just no question about its being beautiful. This experience of beauty is an experience of recognizing yourself in that thing. In other words, there is nothing about the beauty of that thing which is at odds with your ability to recognize beauty.

Now that's just an example of what I mean when I say you will say, “it's just like me,” except as you wake up it will be more than the recognition of beauty. It is as though every constituent part of that thing, whether it's the view out the window, or an object that is smaller in your hand. It will be a recognition that every constituent part of what you are seeing, whether it's water, whether it's land, whether it's trees that have pine needles and leaves and bark and ants crawling up, all the constituent parts of what you see are just like you. In other words, are not in any way unrecognizable to you as that which is completely in harmony with who and what you are at the very depth of your being. These are inadequate words that I am using to express the wholeness of the experience, but they express the feeling and convey the idea.

You will be aware not just at an overall whole view, but of every constituent part of what is there. And you will recognize yourself in it—it's just like you, or you are just like it. There is nothing out of sync in any way.

Now this experience still leaves everything appearing to be in space with the mountains across the water, and trees on the mountains, and snow on the mountains, etc., with other things closer to you. But space does not remain a factor that is relevant to you. Because you know what? The apparent space between you and those things, and the apparent space between the ants and the needles on the trees and the bark, etc., the very space is just like you. It is a constituent part of the conscious experience you are having.

And so the experience of Life becomes integrated, unified, one and it's just like you and you're just like it. But everything's still apparently is not all jumbled together into an undistinguishable ball of infinite manifestation of God. You see. In this recognition of yourself, it becomes obvious that it's all a conscious experience, which in itself involves no time, and involves no space. But nevertheless, what is being experienced moves because Mind, you might say in the act of being conscious of itself moves and is experienced as something by itself. And that self is you and that self is the needle on the tree and it is the space in between, and yet none of it is segregate or separate from anything else. It takes infinity for that which is timeless and spaceless to be fully realized, or to be realizing itself forever.

So I encourage you to begin to consider creation as something that does occur, but something which does not bring into play time and space and does not take time and space in which to occur. And then as you look at everything, begin to let loose of the sense of time and space to what you are seeing and remember that it is a conscious experience that you are having. And if it is a conscious experience that you are having it must necessarily be an experience of God, even if you have some misinterpretations involved. And then become curious to see God in the Movement that seems to be taking time and have the sense of time that's involved disappear out of the picture.

There you go, that is something you can be curious about. That is something you can play with, as I said earlier, "what if, what if there is no space to this experience of a world I'm having? What if there is no time to the experience of this world I'm seeing?" Ah! Hey, play with that if you want to learn to teleport. Play with that so that you can play with teleportation. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes and no. I still argue with the idea that....

RAJ: Well, we're not going to look with the no part.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: No, we're going to jump right into the middle of the no part, as I suggested to Steven earlier, spit it out.

QUESTION: Okay. I guess it's that God Created us, and I feel that since God is All There Is there never was a time when we were not God.

RAJ: Indeed, God is being you. God is being it all. In that sense you did not evolve yourself, and that is the sense in which God's having created you makes sense. It means you did not create yourself, you are not self-responsible. However, the more correct statement is that God is Being You.

QUESTION: Thank you, that's what I wanted to hear.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well, number one, I am sick and tired of being sick and tired.

RAJ: How long is your list?

QUESTION: Infinite. And I don't think this is divorced from this statement, we are hearing from the doomsdayers about the plagues about the bankruptcy of the whole world. We're all familiar with the headlines in the newspapers, and on the back pages where all the experts tell us what's going to happen. And I would just like to hear some comment on that. I'm not worried about it, I'm curious as hell! That's my question. You can take either end.

RAJ: I hope you're not paying to hear what they have to say. Well, every spring you turn on the TV and they tell you to get ready for Summer colds. And every Summer you turn on the TV and it tells you to get ready for the Winter colds. Expressions of ignorance of how things really work constantly confront you. And it is well for you not to pay anymore attention to the ultimate "doomsdayers" than you do to the temporary "doomsdayers."

You know there just isn't a world out there running on its own that's going to follow a course and end up at a certain point. There is the Kingdom of Heaven out there being seen clearly or unclearly. If it is being seen unclearly, then it is being seen from an uncentered place, and what is seen will be conflicted. But it doesn't change what it is in truth.

You are far along enough in your spiritual path, or your process of awakening to know that you need to dare to have a curiosity based on the premise that there is another way to look at this. And you already have a different way of looking at what is called the “end times.” And that is satisfactory to you. So it is irrelevant to what the “doomsdayers” are saying.

QUESTION: I was think of the earthquake in Japan...

RAJ: What about it?

QUESTION: Well, there’s a lot of individuals having to (I can’t hear this clearly enough to transcribe it.) I see it as not being a physical devastation that is going on. In other words, an idea—a false idea.

RAJ: And what is the question about it?

QUESTION: These individuals are still having that experience, even though it is a illegitimate, you might say, experience. There still feeling bad. I feel great compassion.

RAJ: Indeed! What is your point?

QUESTION: I don’t really know. I don’t really know. I can’t tell you what my point is. I just wanted some comment on it. And I think that it’s been very satisfactory, the comment.

RAJ: I’m going to put it very simply. Don’t waste your time considering that which isn’t relevant or meaningful to you, even though it might be an interesting mental exercise for you.

Now is there someone else in the room for whom this earthquake is relevant at a feeling level? Then there is nothing to pursue here.

QUESTION: Well then, I take the same attitude toward my being sick and tired.

RAJ: Good idea!

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I just wanted to share that on Sunday my friend from Hawaii called and she was doing a meditation and she was feeling a rumble, which she usually feels because she lives on the edge of the cliff and the waves are big this time of year and they were coming up against the cliffs. But her guidance said that this was more than just that, that there was a movement happening in the earth. So she called and we checked in with Raj, and Raj said, “you are having a knowing.”

So I guess I just want to add, “gee, we should have pursued it further and maybe we should have let someone know.” So I guess in regards to earth changes or seeming lots of activity going on with the weather and the environment I think it is relating to the fact that we don’t have to be at odds we can have a knowing, not without fear. But we can know where to be or who to call if we have loved ones, or that sort of thing. So I think for me I would like the idea of knowing explored and how relevant it really can be versus when it’s fear.

RAJ: Indeed! Your relationship with your friend, the one you meet in the quietness of your being, the one who stands there on behalf of your awakening and your clarity. This relationship does need to be engaged in relative to everything. And in the ongoingness of this conscious relationship, indeed you may ask and be told things that are relevant to your experience of harmony, your experience of wholeness, your experience of sovereignty as opposed to victimization.

As it was Susan there was no need for you to pursued that subject any further on the evening when we spoke about it or I would have mentioned it to you. I would have brought it to your attention.

Does that answer your comment and question?

QUESTION:

RAJ: What about the not basically part?

QUESTION: I just really don't want to take anymore of this time. So if anyone else would like to add anything that they might feel led to say, I really don't feel that it's appropriate for me to pursued this any longer.

RAJ: Okay.

QUESTION: I am recently married to a man that sounds to be at this time for all of the talk about his spiritual path something equivalent to what Paul might have been some time ago.

RAJ: Meaning?

QUESTION: Mention of Paul, although I don't know him at all, was made reference to in answer to Steven, about low energy... And I'm having a really hard time. And the only time he will listen to me is when I channel an entity, but he will not listen to me as a woman. And my purpose in being married is not to live channeling. And it never occurred to me that it would turn out this way. And I am keenly aware that we are both God, not just us, but all of us. I'm also keenly aware that in the expression of Ellory.

RAJ: You are keenly aware of?

QUESTION: As in the expression of the humanness named Ellory I have a deep desire to be heard by my husband. And I'm ready to leave...

RAJ: The relationship?

QUESTION: Yes. And I hold on to the idea that maybe I don't have to. And I heard Steven's question and the answer about the lack of energy, which my husband clearly has repeatedly. And I'm trying to be understanding. And I don't find that inside of myself anymore.

RAJ: You don't find what inside of yourself anymore?

QUESTION: The patience or the understanding. And I also deeply resent being heard when it's channeled, not just from me but from any channel. And not being heard as his wife. And I don't know what to do. And if I'm to be bigger, I don't know how to be bigger. Over the last year I've asked myself what is my lesson? How do I get bigger? And I don't know how.

RAJ: And I would ask, what keeps you from leaving the relationship?

QUESTION: Because it's so new. And I waited years. I thought that I had chosen wisely. And it's a bit of a surprise to see what's happened.

RAJ: You feel that he married you so as to have constant contact, not with you but with the guidance that comes through you?

QUESTION: That appears to be true, yes.

RAJ: Why do you channel? Why do you listen to this guidance, yourself?

QUESTION: To myself?

RAJ: Why do you yourself engage in Listening, with a capital "L"?

QUESTION: To grow.

RAJ: And if your husband were not around would you continue to listen to this guidance?

QUESTION: Of course! I listened to it before I knew him.

RAJ: So, who is the one who wants recognition? Who is the one who wants not to be squeezed out of the picture? I'm going to put this a different way. Which of these two explanations strikes you as being more correct, more desirable? You connected with guidance, or you connected with yourself? I'm just going to put it simply. Which of the two if you had to choose between them is the more valuable to you?

QUESTION: To be connected to me.

RAJ: Is more valuable than you being connected with your guidance? That is what you are saying?

QUESTION: It's not more valuable as long as I'm truly connected with me I don't deny the guidance.

RAJ: When you are connected with you and no guidance is that as valuable an experience to you as when you are listening, joined with guidance? Does it promote boundary breaking experience? Does it promote breakthroughs, clarifications, light bulbs going on, transformations in your life? Does this happen when you are listening exclusively yourself, or just...

QUESTION: You mean my little self?

RAJ: The you not connected with guidance?

QUESTION: Being connected with guidance.

RAJ: Not being connected with guidance?

QUESTION: Not being connected with guidance, when I forget that I am always connected with guidance is not transforming.

RAJ: Correct! So you find your experienced enriched and transformed by listening for guidance, correct?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: And your husband finds you to be more meaningful in his life when you are listening for guidance? He has the same recognition of value that you have.

QUESTION: All right.

RAJ: I'm going to suggest a possible scenario that you will have to eventually look at. And that is, that if you have a choice to experience communion with infinite wisdom, with what I'm going to call God's point of view, and you also have a choice to be unconscious of that wisdom, not having God's perspective available to you as yours, if you have those two choices, tell me how long are you going to be able to justify continuing to choose for the option which is the one of ignorance?

QUESTION: Well not long.

RAJ: But your husband has already opted for not being with you in that mode. And you are claiming the right to have some space to continue to be ignorantly, if I may put it that way, to be without the wisdom of your Being being accessed by you.

Now, who are you? Are you the one who enjoys the right to be ignorant of her Birthright? Or is that just an acquired sense of yourself that came into being because you didn't know there was the alternative of experiencing your Birthright? And once having become aware that there was an alternative, and that the alternative was that of experiencing your Birthright and having available to you the means of beginning to feel the normalcy, the naturalness of having no other perspective of things than the Father's perspective, having become aware of that option and having availed yourself of it, might this not be you coming into a clearer experience of you divinely speaking? And might it not mean that the day will come when you will choose to abandon the choice for ignorance, even though that at one time felt utterly normal to you, and so normal that you claimed the right to be in that state of ignorance and have your husband honor you in that state?

Are you following what I'm saying?

At the bottom line what I am saying is that in the process of your spiritual path, in your process of discovering that there is a Birthright that belongs to all of you and that that Birthright is to be conscious of the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are, not ignorant of it, conscious of Reality, not having an experience of unreality and you begin to open up to the experience of it and begin to have it, that is you transformed. But what it really is, is you regaining your sanity. But because in your insanity your sanity seems to be unreal and far-out, it doesn't feel natural as you begin to accept it. And so you still distance it a little bit. And you call it a revelation that is coming to you, or an opportunity that you have that you didn't have. When all along it's the clearer view and a clearer experience of who you've always been and there isn't something new coming into your experience.

Now, because it doesn't feel familiar at first, it doesn't feel like you. In "My Fair Lady" the flower girl didn't feel like a lady, when at the heart of her she was.

Now, bear with me. As you begin to wake up, as you begin to experience increased clarity about your divinity, you're going to find that what you had called your humanity, you're going to find that it is something you have an addiction to. And to put it very bluntly, as you come to the point where you have a choice for your sanity, and you are going to forever abandon your insanity, you will find that in the insane part of you, if you will, will fight for the right to exist a little bit longer.

Why would you not want to come from the clarity that you experience in the joining with your guide? Why would you opt for, what you called a relationship where your husband honored you as a woman, not as a woman with wisdom who chooses to be from her wisdom at all times, because it is more meaningful for her to be in that place of communion.

QUESTION: That is what I opt for. And that is what I have been asking for. And I have not believed that I am separate from that. I'm having a very difficult time hearing from a man how lucky I should think me to be. How many other women really are lining up to get into his house. I'm really having a hard time.

RAJ: And do you let, do you respond from a joined place with your guidance, or do you opt to respond as a woman, which at the bottom line means, do you opt to respond as an ego? Because if you opt to respond as an ego or as "a woman," you will lose your groundedness, you will lose your clarity and you will not understand what the issue is. What I mean is that if you were to remain joined with the guidance and respond from there the issue, the real issue would be addressed and the drama would be brought to a halt.

How do you honor yourself? Well, don't honor yourself as "a woman," that's a concept. Honor yourself as a whole Souled individuality by insisting upon being present in your husband's experience from that place where wisdom and clarity that cuts through illusion is available, where that which heals, transforms is available.

QUESTION: My sense is that a great deal of the time that is where I'm coming from. And I don't in this time I'm not always able... I can't even describe the ambushes....

RAJ: The ambushes?

QUESTION: Um hum, the surprises. And I understand that if I stayed always calling upon the divine guidance moment to moment, I understand what you're saying. I do not live in that every single moment. If I show the pain of something that's said, I'm not spiritual enough. If I don't want to meet his girl friends, I'm not spiritual enough. I don't know how to be spiritual enough. And quite frankly, I don't think that's being spiritual enough. And I stay steadfast with the truth that... I don't know I can't describe how deep it is.

RAJ: Your guidance does not require you to be a doormat. Now, the hooker for you is your wanting respect from him, and that his respect be for you as a woman. That is causing you to abandon your commitment to your capacity to know the truth as a result of listening. And so I am telling you, don't abandon it and stay with it as steadfastly as you can, especially with respect to learning more clearly about your integrity and not, not sacrificing it.

(tape sounds like it was cut here. It stops and then there is another person talking. I'm think that was probably the end of the answer, but you didn't say, "that's the end of the answer." Just to let you know, if you are not listening to the tape.)

QUESTION: ... thing is that it is a great delight for me to be with you this way instead of sitting in the stillness going, "Raj, is that you? Raj, is that you?"

RAJ: But it is good practice for you to sit in the silence and ask that question, because it offers me the opportunity to respond, and for you to hear, and in the process it becomes more natural and more comfortable for you. Don't belittle this little seemingly meaningless interchange. You would be surprised at how often Paul says, "Raj, are you there? Is that really you?" etc. Keep up the good work.

QUESTION: I hear you, thank you. My questions about a recurring dream theme. I'm aware that I'm being stripped of my sense of responsibility, while the outcome is delightful the stripping feels like my skin being flayed usually. Part of that seems to be a serious of dreams I've had over about the last couple of years with the recurring theme of being responsible for the flowers at a wedding and not shopping, not having them, realizing I've waited too long. And I'm not sure what to do with that or where to go with that or what part of my hanging on to responsibility that relates to and how to drop it, because in the dream, as indeed in life earlier I was responsible for the flowers at the wedding. I'm getting clearer in conscious life that I need do nothing and I can come with empty hands. But in the dreams I'm still supposed the be doing the damn flowers and I've waited till the last minute. So would you speak to that please?

RAJ: Old habits die hard! Indeed there is a God. And indeed God is in charge. And indeed as each one allows spiritual maturity to occur he or she more and more asks, "where do I fit in?" In other words, "where do I fit into the Movement that God is Being that constitutes my Being? Where do I fit into His plan?” And of course, this is an outrageous insult to the ego, who wants to make the plans, or who wants to get the prize for carrying the responsibility well.

But the more one grows and matures spiritually, and the more one asks, “where do I fit in,” well you know what, the more there is the opportunity for that one to do what I said earlier, look out and say, “Oh, it’s just like me.” And so what to the ego sounded outrageously insulting. “Where do I fit in? Man, I don’t fit in, I make things happen!” But where that outrageously insulting idea of “where do I fit in,” I will put it this way. The value of that outrageously, insulting idea, “where do I fit in,” lies in the fact that when it is asked genuinely one opens himself or herself up to the experience of union that I mentioned earlier, where every constituent part is just like you. And so the prize for abandoning the intent to be separate is complete union and complete peace, with absolutely everything infinitely and being inseparable from the Movement of Being that we were talking about earlier, which is the Movement of Creation. And so one comes into the experience of her wholeness as a result of asking, “where do I fit in,” and then discovering, “it’s all like me.” But that discovery can’t occur when one is not willing or interested in fitting in.

So, because there is a God, and because you therefore are not in charge and cannot therefore truly be responsible, you will naturally have dreams illustrating this. And you know what? You don’t have to use those dreams for anything because you can use your interest in discovering the fact that there really is a God as the motivater for letting go of responsibility.

Now, just a word of caution to everyone. To say, “I need do nothing,” to say, “I am not responsible,” does not mean that you will do nothing, and that you will be a meaningless presence. It means that when you don’t usurp God’s position by claiming an ability to authorize or author events in life you have the opportunity to discover that something is already in charge. And in the great relief of discovering that you are able to relax and say, “well, where’s the flow? Where is the Movement? Where do I fit in?” And that is what then allows you to become congruent enough with everything to be able to say, “It’s all like me. It’s just like me. I am not at odds with it and it is not at odds with me, and in every respect we are One as an experience of being.”

So let what motivates you to abandon responsibility be the willingness to acknowledge that God is in charge, so that you might find out where you fit in and then you will be able to be congruent with the Movement. And you know what? Others may look at you and say, “My, what a responsible person she is.” And they will be misunderstanding completely, because you aren’t trying to be responsible at all. You are by virtue of fitting in being in that place which identifies fulfillment of purpose for everyone and everything concerned, but without a feeling of responsibility and potential guilt and punishment for failure to carry out that responsibility well.

Thank you for asking.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well, this is simple. I'm just curious to know how long we get to stay in the house that we're living in right now?

RAJ: Until you are ready to move.

QUESTION: Can you expand on that? Okay, can I ask this a different way?

RAJ: You may.

QUESTION: How long can we stay in the house gracefully and easily being able to pay the mortgage payments and have everything be peaceful. In that way. Right, and here's the amendment to that, or the(?): I'm wanting to build my jewelry studio and get that off the ground. And I'm feeling nervous about putting energy into that, not knowing how long we're going to be in the house.

RAJ: I am sorry, you are going to have to choose for your peace without justification. And you are going to have to dare to begin the studio because it is your love and not because circumstances are right or wrong. You are going to need to dare to be with the flow of what is emerging from within you, rather than governing your actions on external circumstances.

And I will tell you something else. The more both of you let what you love come forth without complicating it with details and externals the more at peace you will be, the more your love will flow and the more your experience will be harmonious, with your mortgage paid and without stress and so on. And then when it is time for you to move because it fulfills purpose and you want to, that will happen with grace too. But you must choose to be at peace first. Because then your love can begin to move. And that's when the harmony will become more clearly evident. Trust me.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I realize we aren't in a congress but may I use my time to my wife? (I'm not sure I heard this correctly.)

RAJ: You may indeed.

QUESTION: Raj, I have been taking sleeping medication for many, many years. Besides the fact that the medication isn't really working anymore and helping me, I feel very strongly that my bodies saying, "get rid of that stuff." I have tried a year ago for several months, and it was a struggle. I was wondering how you can help me?

RAJ: I am very simply going to suggest to you that you stop taking them, that you ask me or your guide each night when you retire to help you experience your peace. And to help you give permission to yourself to relax into nurturing rest. I also ask you to be sure to ask them to help readjust your body as it finds itself absent the chemicals in the pills you were taking, so as to facilitate rapid and easy adjustment to rest. It is your Birthright to rest easily without forcing it. I encourage you to claim that Birthright in the manner that I have described.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: May I pass it back to my husband? He has just a quick question.

RAJ: You may ask your quick question.

QUESTION: Well I have a question of conscience. We have an old dog at home, and my doctor and I were decided it's time for him to go. Having gone through similar situations in Europe during the second World War, my question is, do I have a right to make that decision?

RAJ: If you have a question as to whether you have the right, it is not time. When it is clear to you that it is right, that will be the time.

QUESTION: Well, thank you.

RAJ: I want you to trust that your capacity to love will not injure your integrity or your dog, will not injure your integrity by causing you to delay that which is appropriate, and will not injure your dog by causing you to act prematurely, when there would be no love in it. Trust yourself.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Greetings, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon, and could you speak up so that everyone can hear.

QUESTION: Yes, indeed. Okay, many years ago, almost eight now, I met the Healing Team in a very graphic way. Really changed my life, that one encounter. I've been so grateful for you and the Healing Team all these years since. And now and during this past year I've learned Reike. And I would like you to expand my understanding of Reike a little bit, as to how maybe the Reike energy is connected with the Healing Team. I know healing is healing.

RAJ: I'm going to ask you to ask another question.

QUESTION: Oh! On a different subject?

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: Oh! May I have just a moment here?

RAJ: You may. I know you have another question.

QUESTION: All right! It can't be about Reike at all?

RAJ: That is correct.

QUESTION: Is there something I need to know in order to release judgment of anyone or anything, in spite of the fact that I think that I'm perfectly justified in judging. But I don't like myself when I do this, you see. And I feel like I'm a little kid on the inside, jumping up and down and stamping my feet. And I would really like to let this go, but somehow or another there are little things that pop up that remind me that I've got a long way to go. I guess that's my question.

RAJ: Well, if you have a long way to go, it means that you have a lot to discover. Do not use the idea that you have a long way to go as a judgment against yourself, but rather you can turn it around to illustrate the fact that there is much opportunity for discovery. Then ask yourself, "what might I discover where I see something worthy of judgment, if I abandon the judgment?" If the only thing that you are ever confronted with is Reality, is the Kingdom of Heaven, right here in the human experience, if the only thing you are being confronted with is Reality, then in the act of the withdrawal of your judgment you set yourself up for discovering what the literal presence of God right there. Well as I said earlier, the potential there is for you to say, "why it's just like me."

So if you want to look at it this way, a good reason to abandon judgment is because ultimately it provides you with the opportunity to experience your unity with God. In the process, if indeed there is a process, you will be experience as the presence of love. Other's will say, "you obviously love me in a way that makes me feel safe enough that I don't have to defend myself any longer, which means I no longer have to be difficult to get along with." And transformation occurs. If you are unwilling to say, or imagine that there is a different way to look at this, if you're unwilling to do that, then you are absolutely blocked from experiencing God right there, and you will continue to be ignorant of the reality of things that is present for you at this moment to see.

Now, it used to be that I could have said you could go through another 3 or 4 lifetimes staying closed to your good. But I can't do that now, because the time has come, and everyone is going to Awaken. Because, as I've said before, there are not enough individuals asleep and dreaming to substantiate the dream on an ongoing basis. And so arousal is occurring. The dreams, the state of dreaming, doesn't have the apparent integrity it used to have because there are too many who have woken up.

So instead of saying, "well, one of these lifetimes I'll get it," I would encourage you to say, "I don't have much time left, and so I guess maybe I can afford to do what Raj said and lighten up a little bit and play with the possibility 'what if? What if God is right here? What if right where that justifiable so-and-so is, what if right there there's God? And what if right there in my recognition of God is my recognition of my Self, with a capital 'S'. Wow!'" But that's the truth. “Well, I don’t know if I’m that interested in waking up today—tomorrow—I’m going to be angry just a little bit longer cause, you know, it won’t hurt anything for another 24 hours.” No it won’t, but it also won’t help anything and you won’t have the joy of seeing things change for the better. You won’t have the opportunity to experience the healing of a relationship. And you won’t have the experience that will justifying your doing it again and again and again and again, each time with greater joy than before.

So, if I say anything more I will move into the mode of convincing you of something that you alone can make a decision about. So, I’m going to stop and leave you to your decision.

QUESTION: Great! I guess I will add a bunch of humor in there too. Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

BILL HENLEY: I would like to know what does 1995 bode for us?

RAJ: It is what I am going to call the year of “incorporation.” It literally is a year in which everyone is going to find themselves called upon to put into practice what they deeply feel the truth to be.

Now, I do not mean to imply that it is going to be a year of trials in which you are going to be called upon to practice what you preach, or put your money where your mouth is. What I mean is that it is going to be a year in which it is going to be easier to practice what you preach, easier to “risk” the chance that what you know to be true is true, and to live it. There’s going to be a little bit more courage spontaneously and naturally present with everyone to do this. It means that everyone—and I’m speaking globally—everyone will feel more strength, causing him or her to feel less cowardly, less inclination to blend into the woodwork.

This does not mean everyone is going to go out with a staff and lead everyone else. But it means that what I’m going to call a natural conviction in the reality of good, or of goodness, the reality of Love will be felt. And everyone will feel less timid and more able to speak up about the value of Love. I’m not talking about anyone becoming preachy or “talking spiritual talk,” but really being able to express loving ideas as though it’s the most practical thing in the world rather than the most spiritual or romantic.

So, everyone is going to be called upon to practice what they believe. But the reason they’re going to be called upon to do it is because the courage and strength to do it will be there, and the naturalness of doing it will make it inevitable, will make it easy. And, do you know what? It doesn’t matter where you are in your spiritual maturity. Whatever degree of love, whatever degree of maturity you’re at is what you will find yourself able to express or bring into play.

The year of incorporation, of bringing into relevance the truth the love the spirituality that you all value, and yet you will be able to do it in the vernacular of the day without appearing to be a “Jesus freak” or an “odd ball”. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you for being with me all those years, even though I forgot you were there—a lot of it. I have a couple of quick questions. One we buried my cousin and her husband this afternoon. And I want to know how she is.

RAJ: Experiencing grace. Just a moment...

PAUL: This is me, Paul. There is some imagery, without words, so I’m going to have to share the images, and there is some feelings. It’s as though they’re experiencing peace, not engaged in movement of any kind. I mean that in the sense of not like moving toward the light, it’s like... that kind of thing is already done. It’s as though they’re taking time to be still. The opportunity for activity of some sort is present, but literally the feeling is that they are, it’s like relishing the opportunity not to be driven. I mean by that not to be in a state of bustle, hustle, in being driven in that sense. It’s like they’re enjoying being able to sigh a sigh of relief, sigh, let go of tension, whatever. And that is more enjoyable to them at this moment than engaging in activities with others that is available to them. That’s the best way I can put it into words.

QUESTION: May I ask a quick follow up?

RAJ: Okay.

QUESTION: Should I convey this to her sisters?

RAJ: You are welcome to, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: I wonder, Raj, if you might help me look at Fred’s disability in a new perspective or a different perspective that could help... Well, I feel like if I had the opportunity to maybe look at Fred’s disability differently it might be helpful to not just me, but also to him. Is there anything that you could share with me around that?

RAJ: We are dealing here with the same thing we were dealing with with Steven. You cannot afford to look at this as a disability, but rather as a point in his life when he is resisting a shift, a graduation, if you will, a movement that constitutes a significant departure from what was going on before. Therefore, it is something that you need to see as an inappropriate reluctance that he is faced with recognizing as inappropriate so that he can get past it. It is not a disability and the label needs to cease being heard in your house! It’s a threshold. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hey, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Thank you. My husband and I've been married for almost 10 years now. And you've been talking about union and peace and communion and all these words I relate to. And we've done a lot of work, and we've come a long way I feel, but on the other hand we can regress back into the same negative kind of spirals I guess. And we did that this last weekend. I'm just hoping you could share some insight with me on what it is I or we need to do to break through that?

RAJ: Well, something new would be for one or the other of you—it does not require both of you to do this—but one or the other of you when this kind of spiral or pattern begins, to catch yourself and say, “wait a minute. What would I hear about this if I were listening? What would I find was appropriate to say or to do?”

You see the spirals or the patterns are just habits, habits that the two of you have practiced. And you have it down pretty good. You can break the pattern of the habit by not relying upon each others conditioned responses, but by being willing to step aside from them for the clarity of a larger point of view. If either one of you does this and shares the result, it is not likely to get an ego response from the one who didn't do it. Because the clarity that comes from listening never has a pay-off in it to the benefit of one and the disadvantage of another.

It's very simple, a very simple thing to do. Just be willing to hesitate, hiccup a little bit in that habit pattern that comes out, let there be an interruption of it momentarily to say, “what does my guidance say about this? What does the one who is with me who has no ax to grind and who has no favorites here say?” And then listen. It will be transforming and meaningful. And the two of you are likely to get the hang of it rather quickly so that you will begin to move through these things in a new way and come out in a new place. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

I have enjoyed being with all of you today. You realize that you have brought something as well. It has felt good to be with you, your energy as it were has been wonderful. And I look forward to the opportunity to be with all of you again.

One last thing. When you leave remember what I said about there being no space which existence occupies. It is because of this fact that the Movement of Being does not take up space that I am, it is because of that I am with all of you always simultaneously, if you will—poor choice of words, but it expresses the idea. It likewise means that you are all with each other constantly. But my reason for bringing this up is because any thought that you address to me at any time I hear and I respond to. And whether you hear the response or not I want you to know that the response has been given. That attention was there with you when you asked.

You may also know—and this is true of your guide as well—you may also know that in my response is everything necessary for that response to register with you in some way. So it isn't as though I respond in an off-handed way, whether you hear it or not. The response is given with a conscious intent for it to register with you. I say this so that you might listen or be attentive to the response a little bit longer than you otherwise would.

You are all loved because you are. The expression of the Movement of Being, which is another way of saying the Children of God, the Sons and Daughters of God, the expression of God. And I encourage you all to dare to set aside the justifications against what I am saying so that you might let that love in, and let it begin to register with you and help provide you with that strength I mentioned that will allow you to put your money where your mouth is during 1995. And be the transformational presence that will heal the world by making it easier for what it really is to register, not only with you, but with everyone. Good evening.

ALL: Thank you

RAJ: You are welcome.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – March 26th, 1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

QUESTION: Raj, I would like to learn how to teleport myself. I have a son that will be in Japan for the rest of the year, I have a friend in Cypriot. And there's some part of me that just seems to feel that this would be a natural thing to do, but when I think about it I don't want to show up in my friend's kitchen and scare her to death or something. So would you talk to me about this, thank you.

RAJ: It has been a long time since anyone has asked a question about this. The first thing you need to know is, that you, everyone, will never teleport by a sheer act of will of your own. I mean by that, that a decision that you make at a given instant will not be what will cause the event to occur. Just as with guidance, one must be joined with another who is Awake—Totally Awakened. The event called teleportation will only occur when one is joined with one who is Totally Awake. You see, in order for anything meaningful, truly meaningful to happen, it must be congruent with the Father's Will.

Now let's take this out of a religious context. It must be congruent with the Movement of Creation—the ongoing current Movement of Creation. When you or anyone else acts independently, by virtue of authorizing an event, or activity, or a thought on your own, that which has been authorized does not have congruence. It doesn't fit in, because the one who has exercised this authority didn't bother to check in, you might say, with the Movement of Creation to see whether it fit.

Now, before you take long jaunts I would encourage you to start going from the living room to the bedroom, or the bedroom to the living room, preferably when no one else is around. For two reasons (1) it might frighten them and (2) you would become self-conscious in the process, and you need to be in your peace. And so literally, I would encourage you to sit down somewhere and meditate, become still, as still as possible, and then in an attitude of reaching out to your guide, express your desire to move to the living room, to another chair, if you will. Let it be from one place to another place that is like the first place—chair to chair, you see. Or sit on the floor and go from the floor of the bedroom to the floor of the living room.

Do not try to will yourself there, because literally the only thing that will happen is a shift of attention. But again, don't sit in the bedroom trying to move your attention to the living room. This is still you trying to participate in the act of authorizing the Movement. You ask for guidance, you ask your guide, or you ask the Holy Spirit to move you.

Now you will find some subtle things occurring in your mind. One of which will be, “Well, if I really relinquish this even to the governance of the Holy Spirit, who knows where I’ll end up? What if I don’t end up in the living room?” Now all that amounts to is one last little attempt to justify exercising some authority over the event. It also is a way of justifying not trusting. And just as with listening to guidance where trust is essential, trust is essential to moving from one place to another by a simple shift of the attention.

What I am telling you is that you must ask the Holy Spirit or your guide to facilitate the shift of attention. Because until it is done for you you will have a preconception of what that means. It isn’t until you yield to the support of the Holy Spirit and have the experience that you will understand what the shifting of attention really means, especially since at this point you think that the shifting of attention is always an act of will—a decision of your own. And yet, shifting the attention can occur without an act of will, and I cannot explain to you how that can be, you must ask for the experience that you cannot be in charge of so that the experience can be had again without your being in charge of it but with your knowing what it means to shift the attention in a way that causes you to one instant be in the bedroom and in another instant to be in the living room.

Now I am not meaning to make this sound complicated or as though it were something you could never achieve. Since 1988 it has been possible, prior to that time it was not possible for anyone on the face of your globe to do it because of the density of the thought, globally speaking. In 1988 a threshold was moved over in which it became possible. And so you can indeed approach this with a clear sense of its possibility, even though you don’t have the foggiest notion of how to make it happen. And you know what, I encourage everyone else to give permission for his kind of experience.

I want you also to realize that if indeed everyone were able to move anywhere instantaneously privacy would forever be gone. Safety of your belongings would forever be lost. I mean by that, that it would be very easy for someone to teleport into your house, pick something up, teleport out with it. This is why it will not happen as an act of will. You see? And those who are willing to allow the experience to occur with the help of the Holy Spirit, will never find themselves being able to teleport for an inappropriate reason.

Nevertheless, as individuals begin to give permission for the experience and the experience occurs, everyone will be faced with the opportunity (surprise, surprise) to experience the real meaning of community. It will be something that will draw people together because in the face of it defense will become nonsensical. If you stop and think about it privacy is for the purpose of defense. You defend your space when you maintain privacy.

As the ability to move anywhere instantaneously begins to occur, everyone will find it an absolute requirement for them to stop defining their fellow man as enemy, as someone to protect themselves against, because if they don't abandon it they will live in a constant state of fear. A fear so tremendous that they will find ultimately that they have no other choice than to abandon it and embrace and love and let in their fellow man.

If everybody—I'm coming back to this illustration that I said couldn't actually happen—but if everybody, anybody and everybody could have access to your privacy it would be an overwhelmingly scary thing. And yet the act of maintaining privacy is the act of constantly resubstantiating separateness, lack of trust. And lack of trust about your fellow man is what each one has to abandon, whether it's because teleportation is beginning to happen or perhaps just because it's the only intelligent thing to do. It's the only intelligent thing to do because to do otherwise means that you are maintaining a definition of your fellow man. And in maintaining it you are holding your fellow man hostage to your definition of him or her as enemy, whom you are justified to keep out of your space, out of your privacy.

Now, I just am trying to point out to you that the freedom to be anywhere you want is going to take away privacy. In other words, it's going to require some major changes of how you treat your fellow man and of how you conceive your world. And it is another one of those disintegrating structures that seems very valuable, but isn't, that many people will work through, I will even say, suffer through, because they cannot conceive that what is behind the structure of privacy is desirable. But what is really behind the structure of privacy is communion, is love.

Now, (Raj laughs) you may also wonder whether you want to be the first one to teleport and set all of this into motion. And I encourage you not to be that conscientious or serious about doing it. I encourage you to be light about it. I encourage you to have an expectation. I encourage you to give permission for it. And remember that you must join with your guide or the Holy Spirit and you must say, "This is my desire, Thy Will be done."

I will tell you that your capacity to teleport is natural. It is your birthright. It is therefore something that there is no justification for not being able to experience. There is no justification for it not happening. The only thing is that it must happen according to Thy Will, His Will, the Father's Will. It must be congruent with the Movement of Creation that is going on at this moment. It must fit in.

So be a light hearted explorer in this regard. If it could have happened anytime since 1988 then whatever “impact” it may have on the world, the world is ready for. I am glad you asked the question.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You ready for this one?

RAJ: Always!

QUESTION: What you were talking to Will I kind of related to because I’m going through some transitions myself. The tough part is living in this people world and trying to live in Spirit at the same time. I’m really having a tough time with that one. And I’d like some direction.

RAJ: Well, are you a people in a people world, or are you a divine presence in a people world?

QUESTION: I flip-flop in and out.

RAJ: Indeed, and so does everyone else. There is no such thing as an absolute people world. There is a world in which divine beings flip-flop more and more, back and forth between a sense of being only a people and an experience of being divine. Indeed, there are many who are not yet flip-flopping back and forth, but they are divine ones who aren’t flip-flopping back and forth right along with divine ones who are flip-flopping back and forth. Do you see what I mean? You really must stop conceptualizing the world as though it’s different. When it comes to people, it’s all the same. It’s people either not flip-flopping, or people flip-flopping. Or more accurately, it is divine ones not flip-flopping, or divine ones flip-flopping. And the day will come when there are divine ones who are not flip-flopping, divine ones who are flip-flopping and divine ones who are not flip-flopping but think they’re just people.

Do you see what I’m conveying here? No matter how any of you see yourselves, either not flip-flopping because you know you’re divine, or flip-flopping because you don’t know for sure, or not flip-flopping because you are sure you’re just human. It’s all the same thing. Do you see?

I say this so that you may release yourself from a conception of your own that says, “This people world really isn’t divine. And I know from time to time that I am. And therefore, I don’t fit. I’m a fish out of water.” That concept causes you to feel as though—as it has been said, “you are a stranger in a strange land”—you are someone in foreign territory. And if that concept continues to be the context of your vision, you will push the rest of the world, the foreigners away and become more isolated. When the fact is that you’re all the same, you’re all divine. The pushing away can be called hate, because love is embrace. Pushing away is the opposite.

The moment you begin to really grasp that everyone else is as divine as you have discovered from time to time that you are, you will have more compassion and love for all of them. You will not feel like a stranger in a strange land. You will not be amongst foreigners who because they are so different constitute a threat to you. And so your process of Awakening to your divinity will uncover their divinity as well. And you will start treating them differently.

You are not a divine one in a people world. You're a divine one right here in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, who sometimes forgets that she is a divine one, and thinks she is in just a world with others who have forgotten that they are divine and that they are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. You see?

There isn't some place else where reality is. The Kingdom of Heaven is not off in the future or after you die, it's the only event there is, and it is a universal all-inclusive event. And so all of these people in this people world are really, what I'm going to call Awakened or sleeping Christ's, experiencing or not experiencing the only thing there is to experience, the Kingdom of Heaven.

You are not a stranger in a strange land and all of these people in this people world are really your brothers and sisters. And this world that they are people in is the Kingdom of Heaven.

I am so glad you are flip-flopping. When you are flip-flopping, you are not locked into ignorance of who you Are. And every time you flop from a people person to a divine being, that experience of your divinity becomes more substantiated in your awareness. And I will tell you that the flip-flopping will become more dominated by your experience of your divinity. And your periods of time as a people in a people world will become of shorter duration—further apart—until finally you get it, finally it gels with you, and you never forget again.

Please don't delay your joy by thinking that this is a people world that has nothing to do with reality, and that those around you really are not divine, but just people. They're just like you, thank God. And you know what, if they aren't aware of it, they need more people like you who are flip-flopping, just like they need more people who are Awake and not flip-flopping that they are willing to commune with, because this is what helps facilitate their letting go of their feeling that it's just a people world too. You see?

Don't resent where you are. Become ever more curious to see what it really is. Be ever more curious to see glimpses out of the corner of your eye of the Kingdom of Heaven—not quite where you can nail it with a straight on look, but there enough that it registers with you. Give the people in this people world and this world that is really Heaven the opportunity to register with you, even if it is just out of the corner of your eye, as what It really is and what they really Are. Let that curiosity and willingness be there, because it weakens whatever confidence you have had that it's all just a people world. And you contribute by virtue of that willingness to everyone else's ability to be willing also. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Well, being a flip-flopper when I'm a people I kind of have a tendency to feel like I have to make a living. And I probably haven't done that real well in the last few years. But I've got something that I'm doing that seems like it's been going quite nicely. In other words, it's been comfortable. But I guess I still have the question, is this something that... Oh gosh I don't know how to put it. Am I just kind of going in the wrong direction, or is it something that I can do and really enjoy and actually make a living from?

RAJ: It is a good question. It doesn't really matter what it is you are doing, and so my answer will be relevant to you and to everyone else, no matter what their current activity is. The key here is, for you to take whatever it is you are currently doing and ask for, listen for inspiration regarding it's movement, it's presence, it's active place, recognizable place in your experience and the experience of others. In other words, what I'm saying is, don't any of you take what you are doing and try to decide whether it in itself is a right or a wrong thing to be doing. It doesn't even matter if you are doing it for the right or the wrong reasons, if you constantly invite inspiration and intuition into the arena of the activity you are engaged in. To whatever degree that you invite inspiration you are abandoning the attempts to authorize what will happen. And in your willingness to not be totally in control, no matter what it is you are engaged in, you leave room for the penetration of inspiration. And if you act on the inspiration, the activity becomes a joint activity, if you will, even though the inspiration you will not be able to take credit for.

By virtue of the joining and by virtue of the experience of inspiration, you will find yourself no longer doing the wrong thing, if indeed you were doing the wrong thing, because the inspiration will change the direction and transform what you are doing. Or if you were doing it for the wrong reason, you will find yourself doing it for the right reason, because in the act of listening, and acting upon the inspiration that results, you have stopped doing it for whatever reason you had been doing it. You see? In fact, you stopped doing it for any reason of yours, because the inspiration that you were not responsible for is reason enough, is intelligent enough, is obviously right enough for you to act upon it even though you didn't author it. You see what I mean?

QUESTION: Yeah, I think so.

RAJ: The point is, it's not complicated. Just don't try to do it all by yourself. Invite, ongoingly, clarification through inspiration, rather than trying to arrive at a clearer sense of what to do based on your figuring it out.

What you are doing right now you are not totally responsible for. What I mean by that is that it's not the result of your cognitive processes of reason and argument and coming to conclusions through the use of intelligence, as a consciously controlled process. And so, you are already to some degree doing what I'm describing. And I just encourage you to yield even more fully to insight and inspiration. Invite it and let it happen even more.

You will find yourself active and busy. And anyone watching you will say that you have, "Oh and a clear and an obvious sense of purpose in life." And you will know better. You will know from experience that capital "P" Purpose is informing you—informing you and your activities. And there will be form, but you personally from a private tiny perspective will not have formed it. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you so much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: That was really touching. I feel like this question may be a variation on a theme here. I have been experiencing a great and expanded flow of good in my life. And I'm really grateful, but I have one last trick. Well, it's a discount card.

RAJ: Up your sleeve?

QUESTION: Well, over my head or something. It's not asking about time or where I am. I'm flowing through that. But sometimes it's when I'm experiencing (poof! this feels like ego thing) when I'm experiencing expanded, I want to say powers or maybe it's an effect, an effect that I would have, then there's something about it that causes me to discount it. And I got called on it recently by a very wise prisoner. And I'm wondering if... I guess my question is if you have a suggestion for recognizing that trick sooner?

RAJ: I'm going to give you pretty much the same answer as I gave your husband. Don't watch for, don't try to learn to be more efficient at noticing when the discounting starts, just consistently as possible invite, be curious about, have an interest in the expanded awareness. Invite it in.

You see, the divinity of you, the purpose you have which was set into motion by the Father, which is set into the motion by the Movement of Creation at every instant is a dynamic presence, because it embodies the Will of God. Therefore, it is intent upon penetrating whatever stands between you and your conscious awareness of it. Because it is God's Will that your Birthright be consciously experienced. Therefore, when you invite inspiration, intuition, spontaneous clarification of whatever you might be interested in, you create an environment in which the intent of your divinity can enter. You see?

Many of you spend months or years of your life trying to find out what the blocks are. And you know what? By giving yourself the task of finding, of uncovering the blocks, you in effect say to your Birthright, “Just a minute, I’ve got to get this finished first! Just a minute! Stop bugging me, I’ve almost got it! I know this is the last closet and the last... Just a minute!” You see? And all of the time your integrity, your Birthright is assertively insisting upon registering with you. Don’t become so committed to finding out what’s wrong with you and why things aren’t working out and what you must be doing wrong, that you neglect to invite the inspiration, the insight that is constituted of your Birthright connecting with you because you are supposed to be experiencing it fully. You see what I mean?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: You can all get caught up in interminable inner witch hunts trying to fare it out the last culprit at keeping you from waking up. Well I’ll tell you what, if you actually managed to get rid of all of them, you would still be faced with having to invite the insight. You see? Do that first! Because the insight, the revelation, the inspiration will illuminate the skeletons for what they are—NOTHING! It will illuminate the bogeymen who hovered in the absence of the light of your conscious experience of inspiration. And you will not have to rout them out. They will be apparent to you as the nonsense that they always were, but which wasn’t apparent to you in the dim light of ignorance. Insight, inspiration is you flooded with the light of clarity.

So you might all save yourselves a great deal of time if you will stop working on your problems and start inviting the inspiration that will illuminate the fact that your problems were not real, that you problems were based on ignorance and were truly nonsensically. Invite the light that shows you there aren’t any bogeyman men because there aren’t any shadows in which anything can be misconstrued. Thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: You’ve answered most all my questions that I was going to ask you. My problem has always been migraine headaches, very severe ones. But many things you have said, I’ll have to go home and think about those. Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: A few weeks ago I heard a wonderful little thought. And so I’d like to tell you what the thought is and then connect my question to it. The thought is this: “Out behind all ideas of right doing and wrong doing there is a beautiful field. I’ll meet you there.” Would you talk to us about the communion that occurs in meditation, the meaningfulness of it and anything else we might need to be reminded of on this subject?

RAJ: Well, first of all, far too many people feel that they have arrived at a point where they can be alone and not be too unhappy. The first and most basic part or element of communion is the experience of not being alone, and how good it feels. It is in the state of feeling alone that fear arises. And it is in the experience of not being alone that fear subsides. And do you know what? It is not necessary for any of you to be able to dialog with your guidance or with the Holy Spirit in order to experience communion. It is not necessary for you to be able to hear what the Holy Spirit is saying in order for you to feel the Holy Spirit's presence embracing you in a way that is unlike any other embrace from any person you know. The reason being, that in that embrace you need exercise no self-protection whatsoever. And this you cannot say one hundred percent relative to anyone you know—any incarnated one you know.

You know, the state of communion that you experience when you are willing to join with the Father or the Holy Spirit, that joining, as I said, provides you with an experience of fearlessness. Now I do not mean fearlessness as boldness, I mean the simple absence of fear. In other words, peace coupled with the embrace of love. It isn't really so much what happens to you in the communion with your guide or the Holy Spirit as it is that what happens there causes your relationships with your fellow men to begin to change.

Many of you might have thought that getting in touch with your guidance was a way of getting away from the people world, a way of connecting with something real that might well substitute for having to relate with the people in the people world, you see, who are so miserable to have to cope with. But you see the reason I'm answering it this way, is because the real focus is not on what happens in the experience of communion, it's what happens as a result of the experience of communion in you and your relationships with each other. Because in the embrace of love, that is the one truly recognizable element of communion, even though you have no physical or tangible demonstration that the communion is real, this undeniable experience of not being alone, as I said, brings about the experience of no fear present.

And when no fear is present you know what? You cannot see your fellow man in a fearful way, or as an enemy. And you know that because you're no different than your fellow man this experience of fearlessness and of being loved is your fellow man's Birthright also. You know something new about your fellow man. You cannot say, “He's just an arrogant people in a people world!” No he's just like you, a divine one who may not yet have had the experience of joining that uncovers his Birthright of the experience of union, communion and the absence of a justification for fear.

This place behind every idea, this field is the field that you're in at this very moment. I'm not talking about an energetic field or an etheric field, I'm talking about, let us say, a field with weeds and earth and bugs and butterflies, you see. And you're not in a field, but you are here. And I'm talking about fields that are here—the field behind the idea that maybe right or maybe wrong is right here. The field is the Kingdom of Heaven that is behind the ideas that you have created that say, "it's not the Kingdom of Heaven, it's a people world, with people in it." You see? That's the idea that stands between you and your experience of the field of reality, if you will. You see?

Sometimes everyone gets a little too metaphysical, and so they say, "I have an idea of a tuning fork, a chime with the clearest tone you can imagine." And then you say, "well behind that idea must be something divine or I wouldn't have gotten the idea." Well, I'll tell you something: This stereo is here as something real. You all think it's a stereo, that's your idea. And behind that idea right here is something Real. Do you see what I'm saying? The behindness spoken of as that which is behind the idea is not intangible and etheric and other-worldly. Every single object you see is something real and between it and you as the perceiver of it, you have all introduced ideas called definitions of that thing. You see? And you believe your definition and never get in touch with the thing behind the definition.

What I'm trying to convey is the immediacy of Reality—the immediacy right here in your experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Movement of Creation that God is being at this instants. That is an immediate thing that confronts you at this instant. But then you have an idea about it, "Oh, that's nice! Oh, I don't like that!" You have an idea that you can take credit for, that's one of the reasons that you hold on these ideas that stand between you and the field—the field in your immediate experience that's behind the idea or definition you create. You hold on to these definitions and value them because you were their author—you can take credit for them. They are the case you have built in the world to prove your worth. You see?

So let's not get too metaphysical or too esoteric, the field behind a thing where we would join is the place you are right now, with the carpeting and the walls and the earth that's underneath it and the weeds that would grow if the sun could get to them, etc. There is something Real going on here. You are not seeing it because you are holding it out of view behind definitions you have authored and which you are holding on to because they give you a sense of your worth. But you know what? Today we really are meeting in that field behind the ideas that all of you have created. We really are joined in that place that has never been altered by your quirky biased perception of it all. And I am telling you that there is more for you to see in this field that is delightful—infinately more.

We've talked today about joining with the Holy Spirit, about the need to join with guidance, join with the stereo, join with the carpet, join with the weeds and ask for inspiration to experience what they really are, so that you can experience the field that you're standing in that's held out of sight, right there in front of your nose, by virtue of your confidence that you know what all of this really is and that it isn't spiritual, it's just a people world, with people and things. You see?

I know that isn't what you expected to hear, but I'm very glad that you asked the question. You see, I don't want any of you to carry forward the idea that behind all of this is a reality that's different, somewhere else in some other kind of continuum. The place to meet that is Reality is where you are. And the fact is that at this very moment we are all gathered in this place that is Reality, even though you are still seeing it with biases. The one thing that you are allowing to register with you is my voice and my words, and to that degree, not only Paul is penetrating perceptual blocks, you are as well.

And so to the extent that you hear my words, and to the extent that you feel my presence you are having an experience, that I will call, that is fourth-dimensional. You are having an experience of the Kingdom of Heaven, even though it is in a limited way. You are experiencing something of the Kingdom of Heaven, that is really right here, as you would put it, on earth, not off in the future, but at this moment.

We are meeting in the field behind the ideas that seem to block you from experiencing it. And that field is what you are experiencing at this moment and calling gravity and the feel of furniture and the temperature of the air, etc. As your false sense of what it is is abandoned, is released, and if you were all to do it at this moment, you would, as it were (and I do not want you to take this too literally) see a group of angels, the presence of the Christ, embodied, identified as each of you, with Bodies of Light, in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven in which almost everything you are seeing and calling a material object would be seen for the Meaning that was set into motion by the Father's Intent and called Creation.

It's this world that you will discover through truer sight is the Kingdom of Heaven. It's that immediate. It's that much in your face. It's that available. And what I do want you not to forget is that to the degree that you are hearing my voice, hearing my words, and experiencing my presence—and I don't mean through Paul, I mean experiencing my presence because I am present with you here in the Kingdom of Heaven—to that degree you are experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven, even though it's in a very limited fashion. And so the experience of Heaven is not obviously beyond your capacity to experience here and now. That fact, embraced within yourselves and allowed to be there without using the discount card, will be a breakthrough that will allow for further inspiration and insight to occur to you as encounters with the Christ when you just thought it was the grocery store clerk. It might be momentary glimpses or momentary reminders, “Oh this is some part of what is Real, even though all of my interpretations say it isn’t.”

The field behind the idea, the reality behind the concept, Heaven behind what appears to be earth, is not in a beyond place. It’s in this place. It’s in whatever place you are.

I will keep harping on this until everyone is Awake. The only thing confronting you, the only thing in your face is the only thing that’s going on. And the only thing that’s going on is the Movement of God, called Creation. Therefore, even though you call it the earth, the people place, a material world, it doesn’t change the fact that this material world that you are bumping into, or that is engaging you is really the Kingdom of Heaven engaging you and being misinterpreted by you.

The immediacy of Heaven is a fact. And to the degree that you dare to embrace that as a fact and become curious to see it now and here, rather than in a place behind it, you see, you will as I’ve said be the giving of permission that constitutes the invitation for inspiration, insight, revelation.

Now we will take a break and you can mull that over.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj, that was quite an expansive answer.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thanks.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I’m just going to be a man of few words today. I’m just grateful that you brought Joanne and I together and now I’ll pass the mic along to the next person.

RAJ: Thank you.

QUESTION: I don’t really have a question. I’d just like to also make a short comment. And that’s in all the years that I’ve known you and known Paul and had access to your answers, it’s always been patient and it’s always been kind and I’m grateful for the presence that you are. And I just wanted to tell you that. Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. You are also a gentle and loving presence.

QUESTION: I think so too. I do have a question. My question has to do with what I might practice or do in order to allow more of what our family needs to get by—to be there for us.

RAJ: The biggest thing you can do is to stop feeling responsible for it. That which meets your need, everyone’s need is like inspiration. It is insisting upon penetrating whatever it is that blocks your conscious experience of it, your ability to have your needs met instead of unfulfilled is your Birthright. It is everyone's Birthright. It is the natural state of Being. And it is intent upon registering with you. If however, it is part of what gives you a feeling of self-worth to be the one who creates your fulfillment, then you are in the situation I described earlier when you say, "Just a minute, just a minute," to your fulfillment, "I'm busy trying to create my fulfillment myself, just a minute!" You see?

So you got the message.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Somebody might know it, and if you don't know I'll tell you, I've been in Ireland for the last three, four years writing a book on the fairy faith, and the fairies and other miraculous goings on in that beautiful land. And I just wondered, Raj, if just for the group here you'd share your insights on the nature kingdoms.

RAJ: Surprise! This Kingdom of Heaven that's right in your face, which you aren't seeing the whole of because you're so sure of what it is, and that it's just the earth—the people place—has illimitable expressions of Spirit, with a capital "S", which is God. You all are Spirit expressed! And so, when I suggested that you be willing to be present with the weed, don't be surprised if there is something else there with the weed that you would call a nature Spirit, or what have been called diva's, etc. Do you realize that if aloneness is not the natural state of being, but communion is, togetherness is, that means that every single thing—every single distinguishable thing that you have ever seen, and much that you have never seen yet—is always companioned with, is never alone.

Now I know everybody's much too educated and intelligent to think that there might be fairies, but don't be too sure. Do you see that you can be a whole lot more unlimited in your willingness to see? I know every one of you here is not used to being told that instead of just the earth here, as opposed to Heaven somewhere else, you are confronted with Heaven and you are misinterpreting it and calling it just the earth—the people place. I know that although you're not used to that almost all of you are able to take that idea and consider it without feeling weird. And yet there are many who would find that too unreasonable a concept. Well, now as a result of this lady here, you are confronted with the opportunity to realize that in your openness, in your willingness to be present to see the Kingdom of Heaven, maybe your safe concept of the Kingdom of Heaven (I mean safe, in that it is one that you feel comfortable with) there just might be some unexpected things like fairies, and who knows what else. Do you see what I mean?

Even when you think you're being expansive, you're still being limited. Even when you think you're being expansive, you're still being limited. Now why would it be valuable to know that? It might give one person cause to think, "Well, what's the use then. I get as expansive as I can be and you tell me I'm still limited." But the reason I'm saying it is so that when you think you are being extremely expansive to the point of being so unreasonable that you doubt your sanity, let's put it that way, because I have said that you are still being limited you can dare to take your openness and soft-pedal it a little bit. You see? "This may seem unreasonably expansive to me, but maybe it isn't. So maybe I don't have to be open to it quite so tentatively. Do you see what I mean? I am saying it so that you might be less cautious, less doubtful.

The bigger you seem to make the leap that's in front of you, the less enthusiastically you will make the leap. And so if I tell you that it is still not humungous, it can allow you to take the leap with a little more grace and ease, because there's really only one thing going on the Movement of Creation or the Kingdom of Heaven. You can count on it, that whatever you abandon yourself to by virtue of letting go of your confidences in your current definitions of everything, the result will be a more sane experience, a more harmonious experience, a more intelligent experience and a safer experience because you are not authoring it. And when you are authoring your experience you will always feel vulnerable.

Fairies do two things, as opposed to diva's and other nature Spirits. They do indeed serve a function in the world of nature, as indeed you postulated, Kay, that they serve to preserve the earth, or specific places. In other words, they are the companion of that place, that makes that place not be alone, and makes them not be alone. But they also have a function that diva's do not have. And it is a function that mankind has by virtue of its mask of education pushed out of their experience. That function has been very much like my function—in other words, a Christly function—to reconcile man with the earth, and to reconcile man with what some people will not like me calling it, magic. The unreasonable, the spontaneous happening of unreasonableness, but always in a positive sense. The spontaneous occurrence of that which is not embraced within your current concept of what is acceptable, such as insight and revelation and real inspiration that moves you beyond your current limited thinking.

There are many who are distressed that I keep bringing the focus back to the earth, and back to human beings, instead of some etheric form of conscious experience and life that we need to be rising into. But if the only thing that is confronting you is the Kingdom of Heaven and if you are calling it the earth and trying to get away from it or rise above it, you are attempting to cause yourself to be more deeply ignorant of the Kingdom of Heaven because you are refusing to look where it actually is present to be experienced. And likewise the fairies had this function, to draw the attention, to an honoring of the Kingdom of Heaven, as the Kingdom of Heaven, not just matter, not just a material world.

So, you know what? Opening up and letting in inspiration and insight is going to be a really interesting experience. It's going to be full of elements of fun as well as element of exquisite beauty and harmony.

We have covered quite a bit today, and in a way we only covered one thing today. But if nothing else I hope you leave here with a heightened inquisitiveness and less fear around the invitation of inspiration and insight and guidance and the attending experiences' of discerning Reality today, here, now, right where you thought it wasn't available, not as an annihilation of anything that you're aware of, but as a transformed experience of it, because you simply weren't experiencing it with clarity.

I have enjoyed being with all of you. And all of you will find that your questions have been addressed whether it has been as fully as you would like or not. But if you will abide with the part that has addressed you just let it, I'm going to say percolate, I am not going to say think about it. Just let it be present with you so that it might expand itself more completely. And we will do this again sometime.

Thank you again.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – April 9th, 1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENT: Good afternoon. It is good to be with you, and we will not waste any time. We will get right into any questions and comments that you might have. So who would like to go first?

QUESTION: Thank you for getting me here, Raj. And I have a deep desire to experience myself as I truly am, and to experience my life as it truly is. And I've been really struggling with my ego lately in experiencing tremendous fear. So I would like help in restoring my faith.

RAJ: Well, you see, you have decided that what is happening, or shall I say this period in which it doesn't seem like anything is happening is out of order. And that you are therefore missing something that should be registering with you, or that in some way you are failing to claim your Birthright. You are not the only one in this room experiencing this difficulty. And what I encourage all of you to do is to learn to be patient, to learn to value the time when things just don't seem to be occurring at the rate you think they ought to be occurring, or even at the rate that friends, relatives, neighbors, organizations you belong to think it ought to be occurring. You know if you don't learn to be quiet, if you don't learn to allow for quietness, the absence of busyness, you don't have the opportunity to notice that there is an actually graceful shifting occurring, which is essential.

You are experiencing a time of incorporation. Not an incorporation of activities, but an incorporation of a clearer experience of who you are. There has been a shift in your experience. And you are now having time for that shift to register with you, so that you might find out who you are. Now, who you are free of old patternings that you embodied. Well of course, your ego says, "Get on the ball! Get it done now! Find out who you are quickly!" In fact, "Create a new you! Figure out who you want to be and then become it, bring it into your experiences, embody it, manifest it, express authority by creating a new you." But all the time the ego is doing this, and all the time the ego, or your conditioned thinking is telling you that you ought to be getting a hold of things in this quietness that seems to be relatively inactive, the shifting is occurring, the uncovering of who you are before you do a thing is being uncovered to you.

“Oh but I’ve got to do things to be valid in the world!” No, to be valid in the world you must find out who you are. And the only way to find out who you are is to stop trying to create an identity and in the quietness that is existing pay attention to the you that is there before any creativity is exercised personally.

“But I need to make a living! Well, how can I make a living if I don’t know who it is that’s making the living?” Always we get the cart before the horse. If you don’t know who you are, if you haven’t allowed yourself the essential step, not the luxury, but the essential step of being quiet so that you can be with yourself, if you do that you experience peace, which is really the peace of your being, the essential peace of the essential you, and in that peace you feel your safety. And in your safety you begin to notice that there is movement within you, not movement coming from an idea that you had, but movement arising out of the peace of your essential being and the safety of your essential self. And in the presence of that peace and in the presence of that experience of safety whatever you choose to do will be congruent with you. Because it won’t be arising out of a sense of yourself that feels incomplete, that must do something to create an identity to make a living to survive. You see?

Again, I am not speaking only to you in this room. To be clear without pointing fingers, I am also not speaking to everyone in this room, although this is the truth that applies to everyone at one time or another, when a situation arises where nothing you seem to be able to do will get the show on the road.

You are held very closely in the divine order of your life. And you are not really about to become financially destitute, but the ego uses whatever your current financial state is to attempt to scare you into taking the bull by the horns and creating a new life for yourself. So just tell it to “shut up,” and be with the time, you might say, that you have and that it takes in order to integrate, in order to be present in your peace so that you might feel your safety and so that you might feel the Movement of your Being that will arise out of safety and peace, rather than fear and the need to authorize a new life. And things will begin to happen in their perfect timing. And the things happening in their perfect timing will always identify your fulfillment perfectly. And the other thing is that it will fulfill it in ways that you from your puny limited ego standpoint would never have dreamed possible.

There is nothing out of order here, except the tendency to be impatient to get the show on the road. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj. You know the problem, right? I’d like...

RAJ: I’d like to interrupt.

QUESTION: <ggggg> Okay.

RAJ: I know the answer. And what you need to know is that you know the answer, and that the answer is more important than the problem. The answer is more valuable than the problem. It is so easy for everyone to become preoccupied with the problem, so preoccupied with the problem that you never get to the point, or you delay getting to the point of saying, “there must be an answer here.” You let the problem be the focus for so long that your experience becomes so miserable that you will finally abandon the problem in favor of the answer. You forget that the answer is like the flip side of the coin that the problem is the other side of. And so always with the problem is the answer. And the more bold the problem seems to be the more boldly present the answer is. And the real requirement is to value the answer more than the problem so that your permission is given for it to begin to register with you, rather than the seriousness and the awfulness and the intolerableness of the problem.

But continue.

QUESTION: Well, good thing I don't scare easy, huh? All right well then...

RAJ: It is an interesting thing that each one of you uses fear only to the point that you can tolerate it. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay, so I have the beginning glimmerings of the answer, but I would like a little bit of a drop kick a little farther into the answer. I want to know how it is that differentiation exists without separation and how we have or express a unique individuality, each one of which is necessary and perfect without that being a different point of view, so to speak.

RAJ: Different in the sense of being oppositional?

QUESTION: Yes, how can each uniqueness reflect uniqueness without being different?

RAJ: This is a difficult thing to express in language, but there is really a simple way to convey the meaning. Distinctness that is separate is like looking at a diamond held in a pair of tweezers or in a ring that you are looking at. There are many facets, and each facet is different from the other—it has a different angle, it has a different shape, it's in a different position. And from this standpoint, if one facet wanted to communicate with another facet, the communication would somehow have to go through space, above the diamond over to the other facet. But multiplicity in unity can be grasped if you think of this diamond, or view it from its interior. From its interior there is only one interior, you see. This interior however has facets. And if you were to identify, let us say, with one of the facets from the interior of the diamond you would see how you were connected with every other facet. In fact, you would be able to understand how it could be that identity is really the whole interior of the diamond, even though your point of experiencing your identity is a particular facet.

This means that the substance or being of every other facet is the same as yours, it is the interior of the diamond. The interior is the, you might say body of the facet. And there's only one body which all facets share. And so each facet is definitely distinct, but not different, not different as separate. And so the unity of being is the conscious experience of every single facet, while at the same time, you might say, having specific identity.

Now the problem is that although this description I have just given of the interior of the diamond and the facets, although this is the fact about every single one of you at this very instant, you tend to look at yourselves from the outside of the diamond where there is a facet here that is not connected in any way with a facet on the other side of the room. And you try to communicate through space to each other, not realizing that in the peace of your Being that I was just talking about, in the centered peace of your Being you are at one with everyone in the room, without any loss of identity, of specific individuality.

You cannot use the example of the diamond in absolute terms. But God is like an infinite diamond, meaning immeasurably huge with, you might say, billions of facets. And each facet constitutes a specific expression of what the whole interior of the diamond is, which is God. And the whole interior of the diamond is the presence of each of you specifically identified as the facets.

And so you are all One. And I have said before, that the most direct route to your fellow man is right through the center of your Being. But you know what? You can't allow for that connection, that interior of the diamond connection to register with you if you are afraid of your brother or your sister. And indeed when you look from outside the diamond and you feel separate rather than unified, your view of all of the other facets is going to necessarily involve fear, because your feeling of tininess is going to cause you to feel insecure and therefore vulnerable to anything you look at externally, if I may put it that way.

All of you have heard a great deal about forgiveness. And forgiveness is very important, because it's the way you withdraw your judgment upon your brother that says he's an enemy, or he's a threat, or she's a witch, etc. Forgiveness is withdrawing your judgment that causes you to be afraid to connect with your brother, because you have chosen to see him as innocent, or to see her as innocent. It is essential for you to be willing to give permission for this experience of your brother's and sister's innocence in order to know that you don't have to maintain a guarded stance from the outer surface of the diamond that is your facet. And when you don't need to guard, you can shift from the outer surface to the inner surface of the facet that you are, in which it becomes obvious to you, that what? The interior of the diamond that constitutes the wholeness of you is what constitutes the wholeness of this other facet too. And more than that, this interior of the diamond is God. And you are inseparable from God. And therefore, God, the Movement of Creation is what really constitutes you. This just can't be seen, comprehended or experienced as long as you are seeing the facet that you are from the outside of the diamond.

God is both universal and specific. And that means that you must be at one in the same time, universal and specific. But your specificness does not constitute a means of identifying you, yourself separate from, in any way, anyone or anything else. Do you see?

QUESTION: Yes, but...

RAJ: Yes, but's are allowed, within reason. Continue.

QUESTION: Yes, but what's the utility of facet?

RAJ: When you, right now, listen for the possible answer, what comes to you?

QUESTION: Infinite expression.

RAJ: Infinite expression without division. God infinitely expressed is still infinitely One.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. Why did you ask the question?

QUESTION: Raj, do you have a "yes, but?" <ggggg> Well, I asked the question because I was feeling worthless, and like this facet was of no particular use.

RAJ: I asked you why you asked the question, because you're saying it makes the answer relevant for everyone, more relevant than just grasping how multiplicity can be unity.

QUESTION: That's a lot to ask for, Raj.

RAJ: It's already the way it is. It isn't asking for something that you might get or you might not get.

QUESTION: No, I meant asking me to say it out loud.

RAJ: But you're not so unique...

QUESTION: No shit!

RAJ: ...that you're the only one who ever has felt worthless. Nevertheless, I appreciate the courage you expressed by sharing it. Now, how worthless do you feel compared to before asking the question? In other words, has the answer helped?

QUESTION: Well, you'll no doubt be amused that it's satisfied my logic, which is to say I understand in a logical way that there isn't a way out, no there's not a way out of being a facet. My ego can't find a way out of being a facet. I anticipate that joy will come some time later.

RAJ: I would like to continue a moment regarding this illustration of the diamond and the facets. Why does God's self-expression become expressed as facets? Because in order for God to be fully expressed and fully expressing, it takes infinite expressions.

Now if the interior of the diamond, if the interior volume of the diamond is what constitutes the volume of the presence that you are, then every other facet is essential to your wholeness, and contributes to it, substantiates it. And I am bringing this out because it is important for you to know specifically that when another facet seems to be obviously fulfilled it has to be your fulfillment too.

Every single member of the Brotherhood, whether incarnated, whether they have passed on, whether they are totally Awake or whether they are still dreaming, every single one is absolutely essential to your completeness. And therefore, their fulfillments are part of your fulfillment. And no one needs to ever be jealous of another's good, because if nothing else it does provide for you the proof that fulfillment is possible no matter how conditioned you might be to the impossibility of your fulfillment. Rejoice in anyone's experience of fulfillment. Just remember to look at it from the interior side of the facet of the diamond. And then you will see that that person's good is not going on over there out through space, but right in the volume of the presence of your Being that is the interior of the diamond. And then you will begin to feel that one's joy as your joy, in exactly the same way that when you say "yes" to God and let God's point of view in, you experience God's joy at the Movement of His Being that is Creation. Because you're not looking at it from the outside where all there seems to be to you is just the little surface of a facet that is definitely separated from the other facets by very specific lines. You all need each other, because you are all facets of the Wholeness of what you each are if you are looking at yourself from the interior side of the facet, and where the volume of the Wholeness of the infinite manifestation of God is obviously your Wholeness.

There is a different way to look at relationships, and I have just describe it—and everything. Because every blade of grass, and every leaf and every flower and every pedal is a facet as well. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: You're welcome.

QUESTION: In your article you mentioned forgiving our perceptions. And what came to my mind, for instances, were things that I've always kind of held against God. I've had trouble with the way animals eat each other for food. And I know when my pet died you told me nothing happened, and in that sense... I mean I could get that in my head, but I'm wondering if this isn't an area where, this is a perception I have that there's this terrible thing going on, animal death or whatever, and that's a perception

I need to forgive that I made up. I guess basically I'd like you to talk about this idea of forgiving our perceptions.

RAJ: Sometimes you are not the one who made the perception up, but it is one you have borrowed and accepted and validated. In that sense that you validated it for yourself you could say you have created it for yourself. But I would encourage all of you to be very careful about claiming authorship for illusion. Because if you are the author of it, then because you are looking at everything from an illusory standpoint it is almost impossible not to take on a sense of guilt for having created the illusion. And once you have taken on guilt, once you have decided to validate your guilt your ability to arrive once again at the conscious experience of your innocence is seriously impeded, it become extremely difficult.

It is not so important whether you created it as it is to recognize that when you are looking at a thing, when you are looking at a circumstance, a situation, a relationship, a behavior, you are in all likelihood looking at it through the lens of memory of past experience. And the past experience is coloring whatever is really happening in front of you. If you know that, if you will take that as a given, in other words, that anything you are experiencing it is likely you are not experiencing the way God is being it. Then there is no necessity to get involved in a side trip of guilt and self-improvement. And you can begin to initiate some curiosity. "Well, if what I'm looking at, even though I'm really familiar with it because it may not be the way I'm seeing it, may not be the way God is being it, then I wonder how God is being it?" And that exercise of curiosity is the giving of permission that is necessary in order for whatever false way you are seeing it to vanish, to melt, and to be replaced with a clearer experience of that thing, that circumstance, that relationship, that behavior.

How do you forgive anything? You forgive it, and this is very important, you forgive it by withdrawing your judgment against it, or the judgment that you have placed upon it. It isn't saying, "You're a bastard, but I love you anyway." It's saying within yourself, "If there is someone there, God must be Being right there. And so what is right there cannot possibly be the bastard I am seeing. I wonder what's really there?" In the wondering you have shifted from a committed conviction as to there being a bastard to a place of being willing to see something new. So you have withdrawn judgment. So instead of saying, "you're a bastard but I forgive you," you say, "although I have been seeing you as a bastard, and I can talk for three days proving that you are what I see you to be, I am willing to consider the fact that if anything's going on at all right there where you are it has to be God, first. And so I'm curious, I really am willing to see what there is of God there where I have been seeing a bastard." That's forgiveness, you shifting from your very, definite definition of that one and saying, "I know what I think it is, but it can't be God, and yet God is the only thing that can be there. So I want to be curious to see God there." That's forgiveness.

It isn't you saying anything to that person about himself or herself. It's letting go of the definition that you have developed and have a firm commitment to. The minute you look at the wall or the ceiling and say, "well, maybe what's there isn't a wall and a ceiling as I think of it. Maybe it's God, but I don't know what that would mean. Huh? This is interesting, all of a sudden something as common and ordinary as plaster board and nails and paint becomes an arena in which God can be discovered." And indeed every single form, every single tangible thing you see is energy. Science has proven that. But science has not discovered that the energy is Love, and that the Love is patterned by God having an idea. And that the pattern is held together by the integrity of the idea that God has had. And so indeed, I confirm to you that there is a new experience awaiting you of a ceiling or a wall, or anything else you look at.

So when you forgive your perception, you know what it actually means? It means that you're willing to withdraw your perception, you're willing no longer to hold what you called the wall and the ceiling captive to your definition of it. You see?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well, I loved your description of the diamond and the facets and being on the inside looking out. And I think... I have this great longing to be instead of on the outside looking in, to be in the inside looking out and knowing that's it's there, but never experiencing it. I think that intellectually that makes a lot of sense and I accept it and I know it's there, and that's where the frustration is with me, is being on the outside knowing that there's that inside looking out. And just some more clarification on that.

RAJ: But what helps all of you to shift to that interior view is abandoning your independence. The assertion of independence is what flips one to the outside of the facet. and so when you say, "help," when you say, "God help me," or when you say, "Holy Spirit show me what I need to know," whenever you break the act of independence by joining with the Father, with the Holy Spirit, with an Awakened One you, if you are genuinely joining will find that you have slipped to the inside. The only thing that causes there to seem to be an outside of infinity, an outside to God, is when one asserts authority separate from God—an independent authority or independence. You see?

It isn't going to take a lot of education or a lot of learning. It isn't going to be difficult to slip to the interior of you. All it requires is a real desire to be led by One who Knows, with a capital "K". And I will tell you that those of the Brotherhood who are Awake gladly and joyfully await the request from anyone for help. The interest that anyone might express to not be alone, because they know that not only is that the way the one who is suffering from independence will come back into his Wholeness, but it is also the way the Wholeness of the Brotherhood, or shall I say the Wholeness of the infinite expression of God will come closer and closer and closer to experiencing its Wholeness, Oneness consciously.

And so, you might say from the interior of the diamond there is a resounding joy whenever there is the first indication that an independent one wants to come Home, and is expressing the first step toward Home by saying, “help,” by saying, “I don’t want to be alone anymore, someone join me,” not, “someone join me in my independence so that I can know my independence is right on,” but, “someone help me by joining with me so that I am no longer alone.”

So there is an abundance of joyous help or support available to everyone the moment they desire to let someone else in—someone who is Awake, someone who Knows, with a capital “K”. Just remember the only thing that causes you to be on the outside looking in, is a decision to be independent. And it’s very easy to stop being independent. All one has to say is, “Help!” All one has to do is say, “God.” No more even needs to be said. The very act of saying, “God,” means that you are addressing something other than yourself, that there is something more important to you than what you think and what you feel, and what you think everything is supposed to mean. The moment you address anyone other than yourself, you have said, “I am not alone.” And the flip, the shift from the outside of the facet to the inside of the facet can happen.

There is a lesson in the Course that says, “today I will make no decisions by myself.” Ah, that’s the way the flip or the shift from the outside looking in to the inside experiencing infinity occurs. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well, I’ve asked this question before of somebody else. I’d like to ask you. I’ve had this series of vibrations that have come over me over the past probably 12 years at night. And there pretty much harmless, but they actually paralyze my body when they happen. And I’m just wondering what your take on that is, and whether you can give me some idea of what’s behind them?

RAJ: It is a response to a request that you have made, not a formal request, but an unspoken desire, a desire to experience confirmation of not being alone in the universe. It is a desire that has been expressed (in using the illustration that I have been using today) from the outside of the diamond.

But nevertheless, it has been a desire for confirmation that you are not alone. Indeed, the simplest way I can put it is that at those times you have been being scanned. And we will say that you have been being scanned by members of the Brotherhood (Awakened members of the Brotherhood) who in one way or another have been identified as the “space brothers.” This is not in any way, shape or form related to the sorts of things that have been shared in books like “Communion.” You have been scanned. It is almost like the scanning of the picture tube on your television set.

And in the process of the scan there has been, what I’m going to call cleansing, there has been a bringing into order of little disorderlinesses. But more than anything they have connected with you at a level of inner recognition. You are aware that contact of some sort has occurred and that it hasn’t just been a physical event. And the contact has been benign and reassuring and has confirmed the request or the desire.

What I want you to know is that these are not “aliens,” and are not contacts that establish anything other than Oneness with the Brotherhood of Man, the Sons and Daughters of God. In other words, it has been a divine experience.

QUESTION: So is there a purpose or a direction, or is simply the confirmation the purpose? I mean, is there...

RAJ: The confirmation was all the desire was for. And that is the point of it. It opens the door for new desires, but that was not its purpose. It’s purpose was confirmation.

QUESTION: If it continues after I’m consciously aware of the fact that it’s there for confirmation is it just served it’s purpose in a sense? Is there a reason for it to continue?

RAJ: No purpose that is originating with the “space brothers.” It is always reflecting a purpose you have. If it continues it is because a new desire has been forthcoming within you.

PAUL: This is me Paul. All I can say is that there’s like this feeling of a big smile, and it’s like you know what it is and go for it.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well, I have something that’s bothered be for a good many years. I’ve been in the Course 8 years, but I imagine with a lot of like us old people that have been raised with a church and that you’re Christian teachings there were so, meant a lot to you and you grasped so many of them then having a hard time getting rid of ‘em. I’m getting rid of an awful lot, and awful lot. And I am thankful.

RAJ: And there is a lot that you don’t have to release.

QUESTION: I know, yep, I know. But then you know you still hang on to it. Then that is the main part of my question. And the Course tells us that it never happened. And I go back and think of these teachings, and thinking about different things that have happened in my life as if it never happened. I have not yet been able to say it never happened. I have to say it's like it never happened. And that's about as close as I've been able to come to it. And I know this is a dream. I can have a dream and I can wake up and I start mulling it over in my mind and then I have to say, "Oh for heaven sakes, it's just a silly dream. It never happened." But I can't tell myself so far, that that is the way my past life is. And I can't get past that little hurtle.

RAJ: Well your past life, your life experience, your existence having what you would call a life experience did happen. There is something real. It's you. Whether you were understanding and perceiving everything as it truly was is a different matter. But there has been something real. And every expression of love that you have expressed has been real. You cannot just wipe out a lifetime.

QUESTION: That's what gets me, when they tell me, "Oh it never happened." I can't think that. There's too much that you feel and a lot of it is love and...

RAJ: Let's put it this way, what wasn't real that you thought was real didn't happen. If you are in a funky mood, experiencing the blues, and somebody comes in and makes a simple remark that has no particular meaning to it, but because of your frame of mind you heard it, let us say, as though your mother was saying it to you. What you heard didn't happen, the thing that was as though your mother said it to you isn't what happened. The benign remark was what happened, or perhaps even an expression of love was what happened. But because you were in a funky mood and it had the sound just like when your mother said it to you, you reacted. That didn't happen. But something did! The misperception of everything that you think is the way it really happened, never happened, but Reality has been going on all along.

You will also find that in the Course that it says that the Holy Spirit has held every expression of love that you have ever expressed, has held it in tact for you to see when what hasn't ever happened fades from your sight and then you will be able to see all of the Real things that happened because they won't be obscured anymore. Do you see what I mean?

QUESTION: In think so. All the things that are tied up with the negative things I could probably say never happened. But I want to hang on to the Real love part. And I don't have to let go of that? I mean when I had some real expression of love from a person, I don't mean by that person giving me things or anything else, but showing me... Well, I suppose showing me the face of Christ where I didn't see it before. And that I don't have to let go of?

RAJ: Of course not. Even if you let go of it, it won't go away.

QUESTION: Yeah, it's still there. Okay, that'll give me another thing to think about.

RAJ: And really just be more actively curious to see the face of God in your brother and to see what is Real wherever you are looking. I'm sorry, but no matter how many people use the Course to wipe everything out, you cannot say that the stirring of your Soul when you look at a beautiful sunset, or the Soul response in you when you walk through Bushard (?spelling?) Gardens is not happening and is not Real. You cannot say that. And you cannot say that there is nothing going on there to have illicited this Soul response. Soul has to be there to be met by Souls response in you.

QUESTION: I suppose that's why I want to say it's like it never happened and yet I don't want to feel that it didn't, that I had no... And again, you can't put into words what... Ah, that's what gets me, I can't put into words what I really feel. But the real feeling within me, like you say when you look at a beautiful sunset or a beautiful flower, there isn't a reason in the world why you have to say, "well, that didn't happen." But I think I can let go and say the bad things never happen. I think I could do that a little better.

RAJ: Can God, who is indivisible and therefore incapable of experiencing friction or dissonance. It takes two to be dissonant. If God is incapable of being divided, then God is incapable by virtue of His infinite self-expression, He is incapable of manifesting inharmony, unloveliness, dissonance, sin, disease and death. And so if you are seeing any of those things, you may know that they are not of God. And if they are not of God, they are not real, but are an imposition upon your sanity by insane thoughts—an illegitimate imposition because you are the Daughter of God. You see?

QUESTION: Yeah, I thank you.

RAJ: You see the fact is that as you recognize the unreality of what seems to be going on but God could not possibly have Created, as you begin to see the unreality of these things because God is not their Source and, God is the only Source of anything that is Real, you cease to fear those things. And in the absence of your fear, which seems to give them life, they disappear and you have healing, or you have an improvement in your life. Why? Because you are being with Life with less fear, or with no fear. You get the point?

The purpose of the Course is not to deny Life, but to deny the blocks to the experience of It's Perfection.

Now you know, when you see a beautiful sunset, or you see a beautiful flower you can still say, "Maybe, in spite of my Soul response to this, maybe I'm still not seeing All that God is Being here. And so, even though this is so Soul satisfying, I'm going to be curious, I'm going to say, 'God if there's more of what you are meaning by this experience I am having, please disclose it to me. I won't even hold on to the perfection of this moment as though it's the ultimate. I accept it fully, but if there's more let me experience it.'"

The exercise of genuine curiosity, curiosity to see greater good than even the best that you're experiencing is what will promote your Awakening. The purpose of the Course is not just an internal witch hunt to get rid of illusion, but to inspire in you the desire to see more of God everywhere. Because one of the other services that the Course provides is that it does in a way that most everyone can understand, provide a realization that maybe the way everything is being experienced is not a true experience. Well that shouldn't make one scared, that is not the purpose of the Course, and it is not to put one into a grand state of denial, but rather that, "if indeed everything is not truly the way I think it is I can be curious, more curious than ever before to experience it the way it is. And I will ask God, rather than my memory, or I will ask the Holy Spirit rather than my experience to define it anew to me, so that I can see it with less misperception.

The purpose of the Course is not to uncover the fact that everyone has been misperceiving. All that could do would be to create guilt. It is to say, "there is another way to look at this." You see? There is another way to look at this. Who has been looking at it the way they had been looking at it is really not important. What is important and inspiring is there is another way to look at this. There is the way God is Meaning it all—Meaning it all to be. So that one can say, "Oh, I would be interested in experiencing that."

The Course is not a practice of denial. It's purpose is to inspire curiosity so that one abandons more easily his convictions about things and can let in God's point of view.

QUESTION: And with lesson, "I can look at it differently," has been one of the biggest helps in the Course to me, because I don't know how often I come up against something and I say, "I can look at this differently." And I usually can.

RAJ: Indeed, now remember that not only can you from your thinking place look at it differently, there are usually multiple different points of view that one can have without ever asking God for His. You see what I mean? So it's not just a matter of shifting to another mindset that's more positive. Although shifting to a more positive mindset is certainly intelligent, but when you say there is another way to look at this, let it mean there is God's way of looking at this. And there is always a different way of looking at it until you are seeing it God's way.

You see, you cannot have a misperception of nothing. So there is always an answer to your misperceptions. A problem is a misperception of something Real. And so there's always an answer to the problem, there's always the Real thing not covered over with a misperception. There's always an answer to every problem, because a problem is a misperception of something Real, something God Created.

QUESTION: Since the last time I asked you a question, Raj, it's been a fascinating year. And the question I have is...

RAJ: And rather than rising above your relationships, have they become more real, more humane?

QUESTION: They have, from a different perspective all together. Perhaps I'm still a little gun shy, because the last time I asked you a question it was like an avalanche, and just let loose. Perhaps not everyone else around knew that, but I certainly felt the avalanche. And it took several months for the avalanche to have it's impact. And the impact was, the only choice was to turn the avalanche over to the loving presence of the Holy Spirit. And it was just too big to handle.

RAJ: You have something to share with everyone, whether you thought you did or not. I would ask you this: You had understood the Course to seemingly justify disengaging yourself from personal relationships, or the personal dynamics of relationships because they were of the ego. And my instruction, or what I shared with you could have been interpreted to say that I was saying, "value ego relationships. Value human, humane relationships. Let this be your focus, rather than utterly clear, divine perceptions, or awarenesses of Reality." Now, have you found, or what have you found about actually being involved in relationships in a more humane way, what have you found from doing that relative to your understanding of the Course? Do you understand my question? In other words, has it validated or invalidated the Course for you to be more really present, humanly, lovingly, kindly with those around you?

QUESTION: That's what's made the year so fascinating. When I come to the table empty handed, so to speak, there is nothing in the relationship to be seen. When I come to the table with the loving presence of the humaneness of myself the experience is something that I didn't have clue would be there. What I mean is the extraordinary love that's present that I never noticed there before neutralized the crap, and it didn't notice anything else there but the presence of love. So yes, the entire year has been one experience of continuous failure, and the constant turning around of that ego address of saying, "oh another failure," and taking that moment of readdressing nearly every issue that I had failed in. And it has made the year an entirely different year. And it's so difficult to get into specifics, except that they're just continuous.

So I appreciated that. It was not an easy year to constantly readdress.

RAJ: You mean, you really had to change?

QUESTION: Yeah, and it was not....

RAJ: Or change was an inevitable part of the process, which you experienced both gracefully and ungracefully from time to time? Is that correct?

QUESTION: That's correct.

RAJ: Sometimes everyone gets a little too spiritual, and they think that somehow enlightenment will occur, but thank God you won't have to change. And yet enlightenment eradicates endarkenment. And so what couldn't be seen clearly can now be seen clearly. And in other words, lack of clarity is replaced with clarity, that's a shift within you. And if for example, you think that clarity is going to bring along with it greater responsibility then as much as you proclaim that you want to experience enlightenment you will not let it happen, because you think it's going to bring responsibility with it that you are unwilling to take yet—let you play a little longer you think before dealing with the responsibility. And yet clarity doesn't bring responsibility. And I realize it is going to sound like I am playing with words, but clarity doesn't bring responsibility but it does increase your ability to respond with joy. And so it's not work.

Now, you were going to ask a question.

QUESTION: That's true. Perhaps is it... This might be a subtle shift away from where we just were, and I would like to thank you for your answer to that point. The question is, did anybody Awaken in 1994? And do I get to be last? <gggg>

RAJ: Many Awoke, but not on your globe. May you be last? Probably not, although at times you tread water in the same place you really don't have an anchor tethered to your ankle. And so the Movement will embrace you and you will let it. So...

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

RAJ: I'm going to answer a question that one of you is reluctant to hold the mic and ask out loud. It relates to the answers earlier about how does one forgive one's perceptions, which could also mean, how does one forgive his brother, his world, God, whatever. The question is, how does one forgive a brother who has not forgiven you, and is perhaps even aggressively extracting or attempting to extract justice based on his or her misperception, based on his or her unwillingness to withdraw their judgment.

I'm going to answer it this way. Whenever Paul wants to speak with me and before every gathering, when Paul is being quiet and having everyone else be still too, he dedicates his attention, and he does it by saying—and these are his own words—"I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the capital "P" Purpose of capital "B" Being the Father's Will." And then he repeats something that he had memorized as a youngster. It goes like this, and he says it because to him it expresses the same idea in different words, words that he was familiar with, and it goes like this: "Thy will not mine be done. Let the reign, r-e-i-g-n, let the reign of divine truth, life and love be established in me and rule out of me all self-will, and may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them.” Implying that it is his intent to let His word, God’s word enrich his, Paul’s affections, and he has that same wish for everyone else.

Now the point is that if Paul or any of you value your own limited, self-righteous, judgmental thinking that is all you will hear. It is what “A Course In Miracles” refers to as the “voice for the ego.” And the Course teaches, correctly teaches, that there are only two voices: the Voice for Truth and the voice for the ego. The Voice for Truth is the voice which is expressed by one who is Awake, meaning one who is not claiming a personal private point of view of his own separate from the Father’s point of view. When you are listening to the voice of the ego whatever occurs does not embody divine Meaning. When you are saying in effect, “my will, not Thine be done,” you will not experience His Will. In other words, you will not let it in so that it can register with you. When you say, “Thy Will, not mine,” then His Will is what becomes available to you.

So, in order for Paul to hear the Voice for Truth and share it, he has made a decision not to listen to the voice for the ego. In effect he says, “I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the capital ‘P’ Purpose of capital ‘B’ Being, God.”

So, let us say that you are not engaging in judgments regarding your brother, you have withdrawn judgment, and so you are standing free of that which would bias your behavior toward your brother negatively. But for your brother’s reasons, he or she holds a grudge, embodies a judgment against you and insists on attempting to, as I said, extract justice. What do you do then? Well the first thing you have to do is be humble enough to recognize that you have been in that spot before too, and it seemed totally reasonable to you when you were engaging in it. Do you see what that does? That joins the two of you in what I’m going to call reasonableness. There’s no self-righteousness in it, no front that says, “Well, you can behave like an asshole, but I’m not going to!” Well, there’s judgment there. When you recognize that that individual for whatever reasons is behaving that way because it seems totally justifiable, and you remember that there were times like that for you, it means you understand. It doesn’t mean you agree. But it establishes for you a common bond of compassion, and hate and judgment can’t enter in to what follows.

If this one is being abusive and confrontive in the attempt to extract justice, you must be as selective as Paul is when he sits down to talk with me, “I will allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the Father’s Purpose.” And if what this individual wishes to express is not expressing anything consistent with the Father’s Will, you must agree to disagree. You must say, “No, I will not join with you in this pattern of behavior. I hold nothing against you for it, but I'm not going to confirm your point of view by getting into a cat and dog fight. You must stop this behavior with me. And if you insist in continuing it you must get out of my presence."

You have to learn to say the word "no." Paul has to say the word "no" to his own thinking and his own judgments that might crop up in the course of things I have to say. He must say "no" to them if he wants to continue hearing what I have to say. When I'm finished, of course, he can explore whatever his ego has suggested was important. But if he wants to hear that which is transformational and healing he has to not value his conditioned responses no matter how justifiable they seem to be.

It is not your responsibility to try to heal your brother, or change your brother's mind. But it is your responsibility to say "no" when that one is practicing fear that has grown to a point of hate. If that one does not want to hear the truth that will melt the fear and the hate, and insists upon the right to just vent anger in hopes of establishing an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, you must say, "Stop! I will not participate! I am not available for this, period!"

Now sometimes the ego is really sneaky and it says, "Well, the Course says that you must forgive me for what I have not done." Well I will tell you something, until that one stops doing it the Course does not require you to be an idiot. It requires you to be the love that says, "I am not available to confirm to you the rightness of your hateful, judgmental position by tangling with you. And so you must stop until you are willing to embrace the fact that there is another way to look at this." That is Love.

To tangle will cause you both to muck around in miserable experience. The only thing that will transform an unjust situation is to abandon the call for justice and withdraw judgment, and in so many words say, "I allow only for that coming from you that expresses and confirms your divinity in which your justification for hate can find no foothold. And I will be there for you in support of your discovery of that. But if you insist upon avoiding that, and just expressing your hate, I am not available." Just because you study the Course and have heard the words unconditional love, does not mean you are to tolerate abuse.

QUESTION: Oh, what if in a situation where you have a silence and avoidance, instead of confrontation, verbal confrontation? How would you interpret those actions?

RAJ: Is it comfortable for you?

QUESTION: No, it's...

RAJ: Is it meant to be comfortable. When someone is being silent, they are being silent for a reason, many times to get to you, or if it is...

QUESTION: Right but this is like a long... We're not together very often, but whenever the attempts are made to get together the avoidance and the silence has been constant, so you tend to kind of say, “well, the heck with it. I don’t want to deal with it. What’s the problem? I don’t know what’s going on, so and so forth.” What’s another way to look at it to interpret those....

RAJ: Well, it can be summed up very simply: Don’t do what you don’t like. Don’t do what doesn’t feel good. Don’t try to work it around in your head to make everything fit together in a way that will make things become the way you would like them to be. Don’t do what you don’t like.

QUESTION: So you say just let it go?

RAJ: If it’s no fun, let it go! Yes, it isn’t complicated. Your simple common sense says, “If liver doesn’t taste good, don’t eat it.” Keep it simple. You will find that when you stop doing what you don’t like, things that you don’t like will stop happening. You will have fewer experiences that you don’t like.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You’re welcome. There will be a time when what I have said will sound like a most wonderful and happy thing. And I hope it will not be too long.

QUESTION: Well, I understand letting go. It’s just wondering why these actions take place, when we’re totally innocent to the situation. And kind of wondering why...

RAJ: That’s the bait! And so, you see, then you end up having to figure out what you did that brought this upon you, and you’re still hooked into something you don’t like. Don’t do what you don’t like. Don’t do what isn’t enjoyable. And don’t say, “well, I ought to be able to do it. And if I were able to do it things might change.” There’s something real simple, and something very full of integrity that is embodied when you pay attention to your gut level feelings, the things that don’t come with a lot of head explanation: You try liver. You don’t like liver. You don’t bother to eat it again. It didn’t have anything to do with interpretations or thoughts. There is something that is full of integrity that is embodied in your paying attention to what feels good and what doesn’t, not what you think is supposed to feel good and what you think isn’t supposed to feel good. Don’t do what doesn’t feel good.

So remember the key is choice. You must make the choice between the voice for the ego and the Voice for Truth. The Voice for Truth heals, is transformational, is illuminating, enlightening and will give you the experience that will trigger your Awakening. Listening to the voice for the ego, no matter who it’s coming from does the opposite, and has the opposite as its goal. And through it all remember that your brother is not the ego any more than you are the ego. But your brother or sister at times is confused and is listening to the voice for the ego, just has you have. So you can love the one who is there, who is the Christ, while refusing to embrace behavior that is not enjoyable. And that is love.

When a child is thoughtless and hurtful, you say, “No!” You don’t reason it out, and you don’t give a long explanation about the theory of kindness. You say, “No, this behavior is unacceptable!” You see? You must do this with yourself too. And in this way you will not end up being abused. And you will not join with a brother or a sister in confirming their fear by becoming fearful and attacking in response. And it is not unloving to say, “I will not attack you. But you must stop attacking me until you’ve got your peace of mind back.” That is love.

And I will leave you with that today. We will meet again two weeks from today if you would like to come. I have enjoyed being with you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – April 23, 1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ: Good afternoon. I had thought to say something before we begin with questions and answers, but I will not. And so who would like to ask a question?

QUESTION: Marin and I are separating after 10 years of marriage. Our relationship has regressed to being mostly ego reactivity, although we still have love for each other. And there is a lot of stuckness here, a good portion of which lies with me. You said in the past that it was appropriate for us to be together, although we had loaded the cart quite full. Will you specifically answer and tell us if this separation and probable divorce is appropriate for us at this time?

RAJ: Well let us not jump the gun here. You can leave off the part about the probable divorce. Yes, it is completely appropriate for a separation to occur at this time. It is appropriate for the two of you to be able to be in an uncharged space, so that both of you might in the absence of the friction that generates the charge, be able to regain your composure and your peace and see things more clearly. I encourage you to do it without conceptualizing what the end result will be. Recognize it as a pertinent step, an appropriate step which will provide you with the space in which to be still enough to connect with what really means something to you, what means something to you relative to your integrity, your substance, your worth.

Right now you are tending to bounce off of each other and that becomes the issue to be dealt with and it distracts you from finding out who you are, so that you might arrive at a place where you feel the peace that it's your Birthright to be experiencing. And so that you might find that place in you where your invulnerability is present to be experienced. Because when you are not in touch with that you are necessarily experiencing some level of fear and that colors your perceptions and your reactions to everything.

And so this plan to separate, this decision to separate, is intelligent, constructive to the relationship. Again, do not assume that this intelligent step has as its end result a divorce. And so take this step with peace, not fear. And simply see it as one of the continuing steps of healing. If there's going to be a healing of the relationship there's going to be a healing of those in the relationship. So healing is what will be the end result, whether it looks like divorce or not. So make no assumptions.

Do it easily. Be easy with it. In the end you will find that there is no bad guy, there are only those who were suffering from a degree of ignorance that has been replaced with clarity and understanding. And that's where absolutely everyone is. Everyone stands at the threshold of greater clarity, which means that where they were before was less clear, more ignorant. And one can say, "boy, I was really stupid," or one can say, "Thank God I listened. Thank God I paid attention. Thank God for the clarity that has moved me forward." Everyone who goes to school, you might say starts ignorant. And in the process of going becomes educated. And there is a certain joy in that process of learning. No one becomes preoccupied with how ignorant they must have been when they entered kindergarten.

So this threshold which will be facilitated by your separation is a threshold of expansion and healing, and there will be no bad guy uncovered in the process, only you, only Marin in your greater potential, which you will have allowed to come forth by ceasing to engage in a way that distracts you from the healing. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: So in line with not jumping the gun, is it appropriate to make it like a full and complete separation so there's as little entanglement as possible?

RAJ: That is a good starting point, yes. You can always modify it later.

QUESTION: One last thing. We have a very nice house in Woodenville, which is a wonderful environment for our son Nicholas. I cannot support two households financially, and Marin seems unable to generate any income to spite being a talented artist and jeweler. Should Marin focus on getting up her income level or is it appropriate for us to sell the house at this time?

RAJ: Until it has become clear to you that a divorce is the appropriate final step, both of you should do everything you can to maintain your—I say that in the plural—your home. At this point you are not abandoning the marriage, you are abandoning the arrangement that distracts you from becoming clear.

QUESTION: Well, I'm having a lot of difficulty keeping up with the intensity of my work. And I'm actually taking next week off, which is going to be helpful, but I'm just fearful about being able to continue shouldering the load of the finances here. That's why I'm specifically asking this.

RAJ: Well, then a creative answer is needed. And I encourage both of you to listen knowing that there is an answer. And I'm going to encourage both of you to listen in the context of there still being a family that is valued even though the two of you are allowing enough space for there not to be distracting interactions. Continue to honor the family unit that exists, even though you are not occupying the same space.

QUESTION: Thank you very much, Raj.

QUESTION: I am a bit puzzled. And I have watched whatever I go through a number of struggles and within that it has become clear that sometimes the Awakened beings such as yourself will sometimes say things that are not perceived by us to be true, but rather are meant to move people in the right direction. But this brings up a more fundamental concern that I have, which is, if what is said is not necessarily true, then how do we know that anything is true? How do we know what to take as being meaningful? And I have a hard time allowing myself to listen fully, knowing that what I'm hearing may not be true.

RAJ: Well, I will tell you one thing, Listening, with a capital "L", Listening within for guidance can only increase in, I'm going to say accuracy through practice, through willingness. How much of an adventurer are you? What I mean by that is, are you enough of an adventurer to listen for the hell of it, just because it's an interesting thing to explore the potential of? That is one way you can do it. And by persisting in doing it you will acquire a back log of experience that will begin to register with you as to the meaningfulness of the experience and the value of it.

There's another aspect however that has nothing to do with being an adventurer. It really has to do with something far more fundamental and basic. One can engage at this more fundamental level as a result of great stress, or just because without a stressful circumstance one finds himself or herself motivated to do so. It comes from paying attention to the obvious. And the obvious is that you exist and you don't know everything. You exist and you experience want, whether it's wanting to understand, whether it's wanting to be more comfortable it doesn't matter. It is a fact that you exist, you are conscious and you don't know everything. And not knowing everything is not something any of you can be totally at peace with. And so there is always somewhere in you an undercurrent of uneasiness, of unsettledness.

So if you are in the middle of a very stressful life, if your life is being very wearing, very strenuous, you come to a point where you recognize—sooner or later—that you're incapable of continuing to cope this way. Under these circumstances there is more motivation for somehow escaping this strenuousness that you cannot embrace anymore with willingness. And at this point one either takes some ultimate step to relieve himself or herself of the strain, such as committing suicide, or living with such anger that it begins to be debilitating to one's health and one soon expires.

These steps are taken as a last act of authority, if you will, an act of authority that precludes that one from engaging the curiosity to know that goes beyond his figuring everything out, or that one who is too exhausted to continue being authoritative under the strenuous circumstances, gives up—not gives up through an act of will, like committing suicide, but gives up in the sense of stopping all of his or her attempts to figure out the answer. And at this point that one reaches out, not always to the same conceptual place, but that one says, “help!” And at that point that one says, “help,” one begins to listen.

So the point is that whether you are in a strenuous circumstance, or whether you are in a comfortable circumstance, you exist and you don’t know everything. And in either case you can or will arrive at a point where you must give up attempting to do it yourself and say, “help!”

Now it really is that simple. It really is that fundamental. To arrive at that point where you’re willing to say, “help,” is most often experienced by everyone as a place of personal failure. Because saying “help” means you are not being self-competent—it’s an abandonment of feeling competent. But the simple fact is that the estrangement that everyone feels from life is a result of an attempt to author one’s experience. The feeling of separateness and the experience of not knowing everything is a result of having claimed a place of authority in life and a right to be responsible for it all. And the moment that assertion of authority was expressed, each one that expressed it experienced a loss of knowing everything and therefore an experience of isolation from everything and all of the Brotherhood.

So to tell you the truth, whether what you hear is the truth or not is not the issue. The issue is whether or not you are abandoning the position of authorizer. Once you do that and you dare to listen and you experience guidance, that guidance will be geared to your rapid complete release of the inclination to be in charge of your life.

I have said it before and I will say it again, I am not a universal answering machine. And neither are any of your guides. We are very specifically present on your behalf in terms of promoting your relinquishment of that which hasn’t been working for you, but which you believed was. And we will do whatever works!

I realize that knowing this means that you have to have even greater trust than you thought, because if indeed the one you were listening to was trustworthy because that one would never surprise you, that would make it easy for you to trust, to entrust yourself, turn yourself over to that one’s guidance. You see? But if that one is not going to dependably tell you what will allow you to maintain the status-quo with some gracefulness, ah, that’s another level of trust. But do you see that the latter scenario which I just described really is an attempt on your part or anyone’s part to still exercise a little bit of control in the process of your waking up, in the process of your coming back into your right mind. And what that means is, that it is an attempt to keep active a little bit of you not in your right mind in the process of coming back into your right mind.

Each one of you walked away from the Kingdom of Heaven, or I will put it this way, each one of you turned your back on Reality, or each one of you closed your eyes to Reality as a specific act of will on your part because you said, in one way or another, “Father, I’d rather do it myself. Father, I’d rather see it my way. I’d rather do it my way.”

Now you are going to have to come back Home with the same degree of commitment from within yourself. You’re going to have to do it for your reasons. And again, at the bottom line, the reason is, you exist and you don’t know everything and you can’t be totally at peace when you don’t know everything—when you are not experiencing your union with All That Is as a totally conscious experience.

If you are going to get absolutely trustworthy answers that would allow you to yield the authority for your experience over to whoever that truthful one was who was providing you with answers, that does not constitute you in your integrity making your commitment to seeing everything clearly. And doing it because why? Because it’s uncomfortable for you not to know everything. And you don’t want that experience anymore.

If you could absolutely trust your guidance to not throw you a curve, but to be absolutely dependable so your sense of the status-quo wouldn’t be upset, and you did in fact give your power away, a time would have to come when you would say, “what I am experiencing, which I do not like is your fault.”

So I’m not going to let you off the hook by saying that guidance is absolutely truthful. And therefore, you cannot check out of the process by turning everything over to your guidance. If you haven’t felt a motivation within you that has arisen from your uncomfortableness with not being at one with everything and not understanding everything, then don’t listen for guidance. Don’t engage in this. And don’t start a game with your guide or anyone else’s guide, where you are passing the buck, giving away your authority, and saying, “well, I can dare to do this because that one is expressing the Will of the Father. And the Will of the Father would not lie to me, would not be expressed as a lie.”

Well, I’ll tell you what, it is the Will of the Father for you to be in your right mind—every single one of you. It is the Will of the Father for you not to be experiencing any form of insanity. And if because you are experiencing a sense of isolation that isn’t real, and separation that isn’t real, you want to govern the way in which the Father loves you so that it won’t upset your insanity or your inclination toward misperception, well I tell you the Will of the Father will upset you, will be that which will undermined your intent to hold on to a little bit of your insanity. Why? Because your insanity must be broken, it must break down, it’s seeming integrity must lose its integrity.

And so the Will of the Father, because it is for you to be experiencing your capital “S” Sanity, will not honor your ego’s rules. But because it is the Father’s Will that is being expressed by means of the guidance you reach out for, you can count on it that what transpires will not strengthen your ego and put you in a deeper level of insanity or ignorance. In that sense, it is capital “L” Love expressed implicitly and specifically because it promotes the breakdown of your craziness. And you can depend upon that!

Generally speaking one starts to reach out for guidance as a means for improving his ego experience. But that is not its purpose. Its purpose is to free you from misperceptions that you didn't know you were experiencing, so that you might come back into inner balance, clear perspective that doesn't misunderstand anything.

There are those who also listen for guidance just as you are listening at this moment. I mean by that, that you listen for guidance and it is not direct within yourself, but as it is being shared by someone else who is listening. And you can have your reasons for doing it that may not be at all ethical or honest. Why? Because it is happening, I will put it this way, it is not happening as a result of an awareness that has arisen in you that you exist and you don't know everything, and you are not comfortable with that state of affairs. Well, you say, "I'm really doing okay. My life isn't awful. In fact it's much better than many people I know. I just want to listen to improve things a little bit. But I don't want you to rock the boat too much." Well, if that's the case and you really are listening, you really are allowing guidance to register with you, you can count on it that your pleasant little life is going to be upset. Because at the bottom line, your pleasant little life is the equivalent of someone in a mental institution who has adjusted to being there.

So all I can say to you is, find out why you are listening. Find out whether you have any motivation to listen really, or whether you are listening because other people are doing it and it seems to be the "in" thing. "Guidance is pretty big these days and many respectable people are speaking of it positively." Well, I will tell you, that's not a good reason to listen. However even if you listen for the wrong reason, if you truly let the responses register with you, you will be by hook or crook, through honesty or dishonesty, truthful or untruthful answers moved toward that place where you will feel the fact that you exist and you don't know everything and you are not comfortable with that state of affairs. And this is part of your return to your Sanity, And it is part of what will ground you where the experience of guidance can really begin to move you away from the valuing of insane ideas and the recognition that they never were really yours, and your connection with your essential being which is not separated from anything, including the conscious experience of knowing everything—not as an intellectual knowledge, but a direct actual connected experience of everything all at the same time with nothing unavailable to your conscious awareness, not even for a millisecond. And that is the place where you will feel your Wholeness. There will not be any dissatisfaction with the state of affairs.

So again, all I can say to you is find out why you want to listen. And let it be the most genuine reason you can find within yourself, the simplest reason. I have said, and I will say it again, the simplest reason is that you exist and you don't know everything and you are not comfortable with that state of affairs. But now don't take those words that I have said and say, "Well, they make sense, so I am going to start listening." I don't want the words to make sense, I want you to connect with that place in you where those words arose from. Then when you listen, because it is coming from a humble and genuine place of self-awareness, your experience of guidance will be able to be more transformational, because there's less game playing going on in the process of your listening. There's less tendency to require the guidance to conform to your insane perceptions of things so that they won't upset the status-quo more than you can bear.

Do you have a follow up question?

QUESTION: The main message that I hear is that we are all separated and that that separation is what creates the illusion that we call reality.

RAJ: The illusion you call?

QUESTION: Reality, with a little "r". And that the direction to go is toward Awakening and become at one with the Father...

RAJ: Which means becoming one with what all of this really is, rather than the misperception of it that you are inserting between yourself and the experience of what it really is.

QUESTION: But the only evidence that I see that that is the case is words from people such as yourself. And once again there's the conundrum that I don't know whether any of this that is being talked about is reality or whether it is just the direction some people need to move for their growth. As a side note to this, as an example: A number of people who have been experiencing guidance have been saying that there'll be massive changes to the face of the planet and various areas of land will be sunk beneath the oceans, etc., etc. And others have said that these things won't happen. And it is very difficult to look at this and try and get any kind of a coherent picture. I guess it's the lack of coherency that disturbs me.

RAJ: Now, I'm going to ask you: are you saying that that lack of coherency that you observe in channeled information is your justification for not engaging in the experience of listening for guidance yourself?

QUESTION: No, it's not a justification for not engaging...

RAJ: I'm simply going to say that the discrepancies that you see cause you to have questions, cause you to want some understanding that will put to rest the distress that you are feeling regarding the inconsistency. I am saying that that is the equivalent of your knowing that you exist and that you don't know everything and not being comfortable with that state of affairs.

So you have described something to me which you could perceive as a call for or a justification for finding out for yourself, rather than saying that everyone else is saying "one plus one equals three," an inconsistent answer. Therefore, "I will not engage in having a question which I will pursue by listening."

QUESTION: An interesting thought.

RAJ: Now the simple fact is that you are not required to do anything. You're not required to listen. You're not required to join the masses who are finding themselves very stimulated at the thought of actually connecting with something beyond their present awareness of everything.

So don't do what you don't feel motivated to do. And when you do feel motivated to do it, do it, and own it! I will tell you that the minute you own it for yourself you will become very practical. But as long as you are letting someone else do it for you you are likely to abandon that level of practicality. And then because you have given away your power, what you hear is going to trip you up, because it will not support your increasing your insanity by giving your power away.

QUESTION: One thing that I don't understand is it seems that on the one hand you're saying to give up, to ask for help, to admit that you don't know everything—that I don't know. And on the other hand... No on that first hand, that one needs to go back to the Father and become one with the Father again. On the other hand you're saying that in order to do that one must keep one's power, which seems to be very much an act of ego and of remaining separate and in control of oneself. Those seem very contradictory goals.

RAJ: When you do something for someone else's reasons you are in an unhealthy state of mind. When you do something for your reasons it promotes Sanity. I am saying don't listen because everybody else says it's the right thing to do. And don't listen because you've been told that all of the answers will be true answers. I am saying pay attention to the obvious about you at this very moment—you exist, you don't know everything and you are uncomfortable with that state of affairs.

Now this I, who exists, who is aware of existing and doesn't seem to know everything and is uncomfortable with that state of affairs, is Real—Real with a capital "R". It is the essential you that is the presence of the Father, because no matter how insane you become, no matter how gross the misperceptions you are experiencing, you cannot stop being the essential being that you are, which is the presence of God. And so you must start where you are. And what I am saying is disengage from the game playing and the manipulation that you do with others. Don't do things for other people's reason. Don't give your power away in that manner.

Yes, keep your power by being in touch with yourself enough to know that you don't know, and that you want to know. And then from that little bit of Sanity listen or reach out beyond all of the games you have learned, all of the means of manipulating your world that you have developed, all of the skills that you have developed to authorize a happy life—whatever your definition of happy is—and give yourself the opportunity to experience an influx of clarity and inspiration and enlightenment that will reveal the wholeness of this essential Self that has felt dissatisfied, so that the tiny dissatisfied part can begin to crumble and disclose the wholeness of you that it is your Birthright to be experiencing.

So yes, you have to own your power so that you can be grounded enough to make a conscious choice to listen for whatever is available to you beyond your current sense of limits. And in that process of saying “help,” or of inviting an influx of that which you are not presently aware, you are abandoning the position of the independent authorizer and you are letting something else in. That is also an essential part of your regaining your Sanity, coming back into you whole-mindedness.

Indeed it is very similar to one in a mental institution. The one who is there experiencing whatever they are experiencing is essentially the real individual. And the real individual who is there covered over by, distracted by great amounts of unintelligence, or unintelligent connections, if you will, that one must arrive at a point of being willing to reach beyond the current perceptions they are employing. And you could say that that takes an act of will, of that one owning his or her power. But the power is used for the purpose of neglecting to reinforce the crazy perceptions and behaviors in favor of something beyond it, that that one doesn't really comprehend in the middle of the craziness. And until that one makes the conscious choice for Sanity from somewhere in the middle of insanity it doesn't matter what all of the helpers do. You see?

QUESTION: I think that I do see and I think that my sense of playing games, if you will, is strong enough that I can also see that if you invert all the arguments they still work. And that the choosing as you're suggesting can also be choosing to walk into a state of insanity, rather than out of it.

RAJ: Indeed. But the process of walking into insanity is a process of increased isolation. And this is why the element of joining is essential to walking out of insanity into one's Sanity.

Now you have enough food for thought.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: First of all, I want to thank you. I can't believe how this previous question completely in a few sentences refocused my question.

RAJ: Quite a few sentences.

QUESTION: Well the first few completely refocused my question and really made it clear to me what I needed to ask. In my particular mental institution, (great laughter) my whole life I've been associated with the creation of materials out of water.

RAJ: Out of?

QUESTION: Water, working with the associative properties of water, if I may call them that. And I'm not necessarily uncomfortable with that, but I have a terrific curiosity about going a little farther than working with the associative properties of water toward working with what I would call the altered states of water. So what I'm looking for is some guidance about how to begin to work with what I'd called the altered states of water, and to give you so I'm specific about the examples: I'm thinking about the property of water with homeopathic delusions, where upon successive homeopathic delusions the strength of the preparation increases. And I'm thinking about the living water of Victor Schomburger and of what's called magnetic water, and charged water, etc., etc., there are thousands of examples.

So I'm looking for some guidance about how to... What's going on here? How do I start to work with something like that?

RAJ: That is what you need to become still with and inquire within about. Any answer I might give you would trigger intellectual processes. And yet it is the influx of inspiration that will connect you with the knowing that you are asking about. One of the marvelous things about listening for guidance is that you have absolutely no idea about what might be said, infinity becomes the possibility. And yet the conveyance of meanings which go beyond anything you are comprehending can always be presented in a way that registers with you intelligently and meaningfully.

You may think that I am copping out by not answering your question specifically, even though you asked the question specifically. But the answer really for you is, take this question into the silence within you, ask it, then be still and listen expecting an answer, without expecting what the answer will be. And if after a reasonable amount of time the answer hasn't come and you must get on with other things, do not mentally shut off the question, leave the question and its placement and the process of receiving inspiration open, because it can come at any time and usually when you least expect it.

I will say that the curiosity you are experiencing is an appropriate one. It does not constitute a side trip or an irrelevancy. And I encourage you to engage the curiosity and the willingness to hear. It is an appropriate endeavor. It is on target for you. And that is a true answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I think it's long overdue for a tune-up on remembering how much help with coaching when I was first getting in touch with my guide to understand what was my stuff and what was clarity. And then working with my guide on obedience. And what I'd like to know is I'd like an evaluation of how well I'm listening, because I know I'm standing on the edge of greater clarity.

RAJ: Well, I'm going to put you on the spot. I'm going to ask you, since you really are in a quiet enough space to ask your guide that question and share with me the answer.

QUESTION: I did before, but I'll do it again. I got 90%.

RAJ: Ninety percent of what?

QUESTION: Of that I'm listening without interfering. And that seemed high so I wanted to ask you. And I also really feel like there's... that I have difficulty with the willingness to be obedient, not so much the follow-through on it, but the willingness.

RAJ: I will confirm the 90%. The real question is not how accurately you are listening but how consistently. And I will not ask you to ask that and share it with everyone else. I encourage you to increase the frequency of listening, not because you need to do better, but because a more consistent experience of fulfillment and of the confirmation of being on the beam is your Birthright. And it is a shame for you not to be experiencing it more consistently.

Ah, the willingness to be obedient. If you would like we can arrange for you to experience a greater need for willingness.

QUESTION: I trust you. Though I haven't noticed a slack (Paul, I'm not sure of this word?)

RAJ: I'm also going to ask you for the sake of everyone else to elaborate a little bit on what you mean by the word obedience.

QUESTION: When I first started listening to my guide it was entertaining and meaningful, but it was almost like, "thank you for sharing," like I would listen and I felt a distance from anything other than, "here's a wise person sharing something." And there was a big "ah, hah" at some point where I realized I was supposed to do something about what I was getting. And that was another major increment of actually, in fact, acting on it. So I became selective about what I asked for guidance on, because the thing I think you told me is that I would get much greater information if I was willing to follow it—that they weren't going to waste it on me. So I got in the habit of only asking when I was willing to be obedient. And I think I've moved on. I really want to be fully aligned.

RAJ: Let me interrupt. I am asking for this point to be brought out more fully, because your use of the word obedient can tie into the earlier question relative to giving your power away, which is not exactly what you are meaning. And so....

QUESTION: I understand.

RAJ: ...for the benefit of those who do not understand the difference I'm asking you to share.

QUESTION: Starting by working with you and then my own guide, I found it worked for me to act as if it were true based on what I could understand. It worked best just to go along with it. And I actually do mean it fairly literally, like what job I should take. I use the guidance in my work for how I should proceed and it's the best advice consistently that I've ever had. So for me the issue that was brought up before isn't something I trouble with, cause it has been consistently useful, not consistently predictively accurate which may be what you are distinguishing, but worth following. Whatever it seems to mean to me, if I follow that, it works out to my best interest. And that's what I mean by obedience, is going along with it. And what I struggle with is...

RAJ: You are speaking of valuing it and acting consistent with what you value.

QUESTION: Right, aligning with it.

RAJ: And so there is a conscious willingness on your part, which you will take responsibility for, correct?

QUESTION: I do, but I've made a pretty heavy-duty commitment to move toward having no boundary.

RAJ: But again, that is your commitment, the consequences of which you are willing to be responsibility for instead of blaming something else, if "something goes wrong," correct?

QUESTION: I understand what you are saying. I don't feel a distinction.

RAJ: You are not...

QUESTION: The me that would worry about that is not of the me that I value a lot.

RAJ: Exactly! Continue.

QUESTION: So in addition you are absolutely right. To the frequency of the listening I feel like I would like to have the emotional struggle of aligning to be easier. I would like to simply align... For example, if she says, "don't worry," I'd like to not worry—or to still have a lot of resistance

RAJ: There really is no way to that you can will yourself to be more willing. And I'm going to suggest that you ask for help, that you ask your guide and anyone who is working with you on behalf of your Awakening to help provide whatever kind of support it takes to cause willingness to seem to be more inviting, or obedience as you put it. And then I encourage you to be alert and watch for any inclination you have from the standpoint of conditioned thinking to criticize yourself in terms of that you're not doing as well as you ought to, or you ought to be more consistent, or that there must be something wrong with you because there is an unwillingness there and so on. This is a side-tracking technique of the ego.

I will tell you that those of us who are watching you are not experiencing the concern you are, but are experiencing joy at the degree to which you do listen and do act and do value your guidance—the experience of the communion, the experience of joining. And I will tell you that if you will indulge in a little bit more gratitude and self-appreciation you will find that that will pave the way for increased willingness. In other words, I want you to be a little kinder to yourself, and let there be a little bit more appreciation for just exactly as much as you are doing. When you are at peace about where you are, reluctance to expand or reluctance to move forward will diminish. And it will happen naturally, spontaneously. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have a letter that was, or a question that was hand written by a friend of mine.

RAJ: I will interrupt you. This is not the time.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: If you have a question I will be glad to respond. I will ask you to leave that question with Paul or Susan.

QUESTION: Oh, okay, okay, that sounds good. I can't really think of anything to ask, I hate to give up the opportunity, but... Ah, ah! Steve's grabbing the microphone from me. I just want to thank you for being here for us all. And I just want to say that this is just a wonderful day for me, I just love everyone whose here and I'm just really grateful.

RAJ: It is the felt.

QUESTION: Hi, I'm Cynthia, and it's the first time I've been here.

RAJ: But it is not the first time that we have connected.

QUESTION: Right.

RAJ: It is good to have you here.

QUESTION: Nice to be here, thank you for coming.

RAJ: It is personal, then it will relate to everyone.

QUESTION: I'm needing some information about some occurrences that have been particularly strong in the last two weeks. They come in the form of ticker-tape.

RAJ: Across your mind's eye?

QUESTION: Yes. And they relate to information I don't know why I should have, or be receiving and it many ways would prefer not to know. And they relate to people moving to this world to the other. And some I know and some I've never met. But they appear in the paper.

RAJ: You mean in the obituary column?

QUESTION: Usually in the headlines. And I'd like the information as to how to integrate it, so that I don't feel that I carry it. And it's not something I talk about. And I was hesitant to talk about it today. But it's been particularly difficult in the last couple of weeks. And also particularly wonderful. But it's hard to separate the wonderful from the difficulty.

RAJ: How does the wonderfulness register with you?

QUESTION: Well, a dear friend of mine died two weeks ago. I knew he was going to go, and I said to him, though I wasn't speaking to him, "I have to see you before you go. I don't want you to go without my seeing you." So, I'm hesitant to tell this.

RAJ: But I encourage you not to leave everyone with the feeling that it is a burden and heavy and totally negative experience.

QUESTION: Okay, that's not a problem.

RAJ: And we will not be calling the National Enquirer in the morning.

QUESTION: Well, you know it's funny you should say that, because there are times I wanted to call and say this, but I don't. Well, what's wonderful is I was able to go and see him. He's in San Diego, but I wasn't I was in Bellingham. And I went and saw him just before he died. But I don't really know how, but we talked and he said he was going. So part of it is very wonderful.

RAJ: This visit was not a physical visit?

QUESTION: No. It didn't take frequent flyer miles or anything like that.

RAJ: What meaning is this experience having for you, if you were totally honest with all of us? In other words, if you felt no inclination whatsoever to squelch any of what this means for you. In other words, I would like to share with you the sense you have made out of it, even if you feel that it may be wrong.

QUESTION: It keeps me on both sides of the wall. I keeps me with the sense of wonder and connection. And it keeps me in chaos. So the wonderful part is exquisitely wonderful, because I feel like I can ask for what I like and it can be there. And then the real difficult side is that it seems to be chronically about people dying, not about people being born or going to a birthday party or something. So it seems like it kind of keeps on that teeter-totter, sometimes it's exquisite wonder and then the real serious downside of total unknowing and not being able to make any sense of what's going on.

RAJ: It is as though you step out of your, your, mental institution onto the front porch and have an experience of clarity that is meaningful. And then you go back inside where your thinking is not clear and then from that unclear thinking you try to make sense of the clarity you experienced. And you cannot, because for example, when you are experiencing the more infinite view it becomes obvious to you that whether or not a physical death seems to occur, nothing of consequence has happened. No interruption of anything has occurred for that individual. And so the knowledge that there is a threshold almost here, is not alarming, is not upsetting. It is like knowing that next Friday so-and-so is going to go to Los Angeles for a week—out of your sight, but being about his business.

But when you step back inside your usual mindset, then because this mindset that all of you are in—not just you—because this mindset is one in which authorizing things is the primary characteristic you are immediately face with the thought, “ah, I am supposed to do something with this.” Mind you that thought occurs when you have walked back in the institution. It was not part of the experience when you were standing outside.

Now after the thought that it is your responsibility to do something with this awareness comes fear, “what if I don’t? What if I do?” And that’s what becomes a burden, because suddenly you are feeling guilty for the results of an unasked for experience of clarity, of Knowing, with a capital “K”.

Now the solution to this is to remember the experience. In other words, you have the experience—the ticker tape—it isn’t just a ticker tape it’s an experience of meaning and it has a feeling and it’s not conflicted. So when you step back in and a false sense of obligation and responsibility is laid on you and an accompanying experience of guilt, I want you to remember the experience, because what was present there is the only thing that has meaning for you. If in that experience you felt no knowing of something to do, there is nothing for you to do. Let the experience be the measuring stick. Do not raise the sense of responsibility that you experience when you come back into your limited frame of reference. Do not raise that to the level of highly valued and important knowledge. The only thing that was valuable was what was present in the ticker-tape experience.

“Well, why would I have that experience if I wasn’t supposed to do something with it?” Well remember I told you earlier today, all of you, that when you are in your Right Mind, when you are experiencing Whole Mindedness, you Know everything—you Know everything. Well you conditioning says that knowledge is the essential element of success. Knowledge is money! Knowledge is something you have and if you don’t use it you are irresponsible, you are unintelligent, you are reprehensible. Your conditioning teaches you that knowledge is a curse. But I will tell you something, that Knowing, with a capital “K” is an ongoing on-the-spot experience of connectedness with All That Is, and it doesn’t call upon you to do anything. And because you do not have to accumulate your experiences of Knowing as bits and pieces of knowledge to hold in memory and use well or be convicted of stupidity. Because of that you can dare to disqualify the suggestion that there must be something that you are to do with this information, and if you didn’t do whatever it was you are guilty of something and that you will have to pay a penalty. It’s all bull shit! Whatever happens when you come back in the door is all bull shit!

So, I encourage all of you to be ready for experiences of Knowing that go beyond anything you are presently experiencing. There are many people who avoid Awakening because they think it is going to bring ultimate and infinite responsibility on their shoulders. When in actuality it is going to uncover the fact that they are not tiny but All Embracing with All That Is Embraced within the infiniteness that they Are. And that therefore, there is not one tiny little thing amongst a million little tiny things with a responsibility to them all, you see.

So I am glad that you asked so that you might have a perspective that will allow you to let this experience be what it is and so that you can equally let these conditioned responses be what they are without taking the bait—without taking the bait and spontaneously and obediently feeling guilt or burden.

In the process of Awakening you are likely to have a split screen experience in which you see reality through the lens of your ego, and through the lens of your clarity—your inherent clarity. And you're likely to think that you are confused by the two images. But you see it was when you were only seeing a full screen of the ego images that you were truly confused. The fact that you begin to have a split screen experience means that your confusion is breaking down, it is losing whatever structural integrity it seemed to have so that now you are getting a split screen experience. And you will find that the ego screen will begin to appear less and less until the screen yields to the view of Reality as it is. Do not misinterpret this in between stage where it seems as though it's neither Real, with a capital "R", or real with a small "r" for sure. That is the wonderful place where the break down of illusion is occurring and when it breaks down the Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven, God being all will be all that is left. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Just because I'm a chicken, one final footnote: That doesn't mean once the more I learn that I'm dead.

RAJ: That is absolutely right.

QUESTION: That's appreciated. Okay.

RAJ: The end result is being alive without any capacity to be dead, without any suggestion of the potential of death. An experience of life that is absolute and unequivocal with no alternative to it. Now the fact is that that's all you have right now. All you have right now is unalterable life, even if there seems to be a line called death, you know that it is an artificial scoring or drawing of a line over an interruptible movement of life that remains uninterrupted by this insane little line.

So all you have available to you right now and all you are living at this moment is the uninterrupted life that cannot actually be subject to anything at variance with it. The difference is you will arrive at a point of knowing that and the line or even the suggestion of a line will not even continue to present itself.

But I'm glad you asked the question. And please understand that the only thing that keeps any of you from waking up at this moment are truly little insane fears like that—little, stupid expressions of insanity—that would cause you to say, "I'll wake up tomorrow or the next day."

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. I have invited Paul to let me respond to everything. (A loud ship horn sounds) Talking about obedience or shall I say the unwillingness to be obedient. It's right here. And this is Raj speaking not Paul. He is unwilling to let me respond to everything, which means he is unwilling to let himself be in that place where he is no longer asserting this sense of self that you mentioned you were not valuing so much anymore. He's still valuing it. And I say this with love, of course. One of the reasons that he has been reluctant to do that is because he has felt like he will be no longer present as father, husband, the jovial self he thinks he is. And he doesn't realize that he's not going to disappear. He doesn't realize that he really won't stop being the presence of meaningfulness with even more depth. And so, he's not being the adventurer that I spoke to you of earlier. And as I said to you, there's nothing I can do until he feels the motivation.

So please remember that although you would think—all of you would think—that the things that keep you from waking up are major things of consequence they are really little insane ideas, which if you looked at them you would say yourself that they were crazy. So, why do I say this? Because you need to know that it's not some huge wall 30 feet high, 10 feet thick that keeps you out of your Right Mind. They are flimsy tatters blowing in the wind that have no means of keeping you out of your Right Mind. You do not have a huge mountain to surmount in order to wake up. And it's important for you to know that. If you would just lean against the wall from sheer exhaustion you would fall through. It's important for you to know that.

QUESTION: This is not really a question I guess just a lot of things. (crying) And I'm here with these people that I really love and it's pretty overwhelming I guess. You know sometimes it seems like such a great struggle to try to just be something significant on this plane. But it's just a.... I'm just noticing an inward desire to take that next step of, I guess it's thankfulness, greater joy.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: And it's really, I guess it really is literally overwhelming.

RAJ: Fill-fulling!

QUESTION: Yeah, yeah, right! (laughing) And fill your little pots and it flows over. And I guess you just hope there's a bigger pot, huh?

RAJ: As it fills you up, you will discover how big you Are.

QUESTION: Hum, yeah. So I appreciate this opportunity just to say that. And just as a kind of time to note my willingness to take my next step, whatever that might be.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Perhaps on a lighter side for just a moment, guidance can be a terrific pain in the neck.

RAJ: Thank God.

QUESTION: Amen. Which leads me to...

RAJ: Because it's your ego's neck that gets the pain.

QUESTION: Yes, and that was where I was going to come from a short while back on my way home. I'll make this fairly brief, it was on my way back from Princeville. And I had a wonderful presence and conversation with guidance on the way home. And I was however was struggling with an individual question of identity. And the information that was shared at that moment was so humbling that my ego or was an ego experience itself. And so I present to you the information that was given to me at that moment. It certainly changed the direction of everything since that time. Was that imagination or was it an ego experience?

RAJ: This experience that changed your life, was it an ego experience?

QUESTION: That was my question.

RAJ: If you pay attention to the obvious, which must it have been?

QUESTION: It was the Father's experience.

RAJ: It could not have been otherwise.

QUESTION: I needed validation, that was my only concern on that issue. It felt right at home, thank you for doing that.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: It adds a dimension of true appreciation for everyone in this room. Well when Raj says to you all how much you're loved, that always placed a question in my heart—how much could I be loved. It wasn't just a personal note, it was just an inquiry. And then when he'd go on to say that he is pleased with all that he sees, I now can understand from what is shared on an ongoing basis of how pleased he truly must be with all of his children. And it brings a dimension of life when you allow that—when I allow that—that it's like nothing else to be experienced in the ego state.

RAJ: And what is it you allow?

QUESTION: The greatness of what I am, the greatness of what the Father has Created, and the greatness of his children, and being so willing to give so much of themselves.

RAJ: Indeed, few of you dare to let yourself be flooded with, infilled with the love that it is your inheritance, your birthright to be feeling. And I invite you all to dare to let the experience happen by inviting it. And again, when you invite it do not misunderstand and think that I am saying that I'm giving you something to authorize into your experience. It is not something that gives you another opportunity to be an authority in your life. Invite the experience in without any requirement upon it. You might say, "If God loves me, I would like to have an experience of what that means"—not an understanding of what that means, but an experience of what it means. And then treat that request like a seed that you have planted and let it bring itself forth without any attempt on your part to coerce it forth. Let. Let. Let. Let in. Even if the experience last only a moment you are likely to feel overwhelmed or filled-full. And even if it disappears from your experience, it will remain with you, it will not disappear from your awareness entirely. And it will indeed constitute a marker in your life after which, never again could you ever return to a sense of yourself and of your brothers and of life the way it was before that marker for you.

And you know what? It means that never again will you ever be able to feel quite as guilty as you did before. And it will undermine any ongoing inclination you might have to continue to indulge in guilt. Thank you for sharing.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ CLOSING THOUGHTS: You are welcome. If you were all sheep, you would have been engaging today in a national day of mourning. Somebody got the idea that it was appropriate for you sheep to be guided into a therapeutic healing process which you were in need of because those who decided to have it deluged you with other leadings, other suggestions, other perceptions of events that created great distress. The event itself was not that distressing. I am not meaning in any way to minimize the sense of loss that has been experienced in the immediate families of those who died in the blast. But I want you to be very aware that this thing here is not a window on the world as much as it is a means for your minds to be guided in a manner that generates income and where money is the bottom line of everything that appears on this tube.

I want you to understand that terrorism had nothing to do with this event. And yet, you have been frightened by—not necessarily you specifically, or all of you—but you have been guided to perceive it as terrorism. I will tell you that there was a meeting in the CNN agencies where it was decided what words were going to be used. Very little of what you saw was spontaneous. Very little of what you heard was spontaneous. I bring this out so that you will be alert and not be led like sheep. Don't let your perceptions be decided for you. And don't assume anymore than you are to assume that your guide tells you the absolute truth. Do not assume that truth is what comes out of this tube.

For example, I will share that there was an issue of Time magazine which came out with a very negative spread about Ramtha and channeling in general. Time magazine: Thumbs down on channeling, it's unscrupulous, etc. Then out of the other side of its mouth it comes out with a series of books in which communications and the occult are shared. This set of books is an educational set of books. So they speak out of both sides of their mouths because it makes them money. And they don't speak always with integrity.

Now, I'm ending on this note because it is pertinent because of the particular time and the particular events. What I want everybody to understand is that terrorism doesn't happen out there. It is not events that terrorize and it's not people that terrorize. The terrorizer is your own conditioned thinking and your own tendency to be led around like sheep, your own tendency to allow your memory to create conclusions about what is happening in the present instead of paying attention to what is actually happening in the present and discovering what is really going on.

And as I've said before, you use your memory to hold your world hostage to your concepts about it. In that sense you terrorize your world and your brothers and your sisters and your parents and your children, etc., by holding them to your best or worst last experience of them, instead of paying attention to who they are in the moment now. And paying attention to them in the moment now is the only thing that can possibly uncover their innocence or the innocence of your world, which is really the Kingdom of Heaven and not just the world.

Forgiveness is withdrawing the judgments and the memories that you insert between yourself and everything you see, holding what is really there hostage to your definitions.

Now when you are willing to spontaneously avail yourself of your best thinking, your best judgments and your best memory and you are not paying attention to what is really in your face, you have abandoned your ability to experience your oneness with everything, your wholeness. And that act, that decision is the terrorizer. You use that rather than opting for your peace, rather than opting for the clarity that comes to you when you set aside your best thinking, your best judgments and your best memory.

We all need to be very practical. None of you are Awake at the moment and so there is going to be illusion that you are experiencing. That was the fact before you ever thought about being on a spiritual path or waking up. So as far as illusion goes, no matter what its nature, or what its apparent size it's the same old story, so let's not be shocked and self-righteously hurt or claim that it's so much of a surprise that it has undermined our capacity to have faith in God. There is nothing new about it. And whether it seems cruel, thoughtless, malicious and you can add a lot of emotional terms to it, it still amounts to a misperception of the only thing that's going on—Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven. And if you could see like I can that there was an absolutely uninterrupted experience for everyone who apparently died in that explosion, you would not be able to respond to what comes out of this tube that pulls on your heart-strings and suggests that grief is valid and fear for your safety is justifiable.

The only way anything coming out of this tube could get to you, is if there is something in you that opts for abandoning your peace in favor of the pleasure and satisfaction of reaction. And that's where the terrorizer acts. And it's in your very own decision and nothing out there can make you make that decision.

Being clear like this doesn't mean being insensitive, it doesn't mean that you say, "none of that was real. Nothing is called for from me, except to see that it wasn't real." No, when you choose for your peace, when you choose for being in that place where you can listen and hear intelligence and love will dominate. Intelligence will not be overridden by emotion and reaction that would cause inappropriate behavior. There is a call for help on the part of those who were injured, and whether you like it or not, on the part of the perpetrators.

And so intelligence will respond with that which helps binding up the broken bones, bandaging the wounds, getting the people to the place where care and comfort can be given, extending, nurturing, compassionate love to those who are grieving. But the compassion and the nurturing and loving response that is given will not be tinged with or riddled throughout with anger, and a call for justice—an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. It will not be, “you poor soul, look at what that bastard has done to you.” It will be love that says, “I love you. I embrace you. I know you are hurting. I want to do whatever I can to let you know that you are not alone. I am with you, warmly, lovingly with you, even though you feel you have been abandoned by the dependability of your world and abandoned by whoever you lost. You are not alone.” You will be intelligent and appropriate but not with vindictiveness, because the minute you choose for vindictiveness, you have moved back into the mental institution, you have moved back into the insanity where two powers seem to exist, and the ability to be separate from God exist, where misery exists.

The terrorizer is or lies in the decision you make within yourself to abandon your peace and the clarity and love that reside within you that allow you to be nurturing, and appropriate, and intelligent, and helpful in every way imaginable humanly speaking.

Now I truly am not feeling heavily serious in what I am saying. And I am so glad that those of you who came today, did not come to celebrate a day of national mourning. It has been for us a day of recognizing truth, of recognizing love, of being willing to consider the possibility that life is not fundamentally conflicted and that there is a way to have the experience of that unconflictedness, that there is a way to become sane again. And becoming Sane again, which means not indulging in that act of terrorism that is the inner decision to abandon your peace, that this is what will cause healing in the world. Healing in the world is not actually going to be a matter of changing a bad unhealthy world into a good healthy world. It is going to be a matter of, as I've said before, abandoning your confidences about what this world is so that what it really is can begin to register with you.

The simple fact is that if everyone let what was really there register the building would be whole again. But I'll tell you something else, it would have different tenants. What I mean by that is that government would be God expressed. And there would be none of those agencies existing to occupy it.

So I will leave you with that thought. There is much that is marvelous and wonderful awaiting your willingness to see. And I smile because you have such treats in store for you, and you might as well begin to be curious the moment you walk out the front door. Thank you.

QUESTION: I just had this one question. I've looked and looked and looked through a lot of metaphysical sources and things trying to find someone who would address this issue, and it's very hard to find information on ... there ... It's a controversial subject, so ... It's about homosexuality, and I just wanted to know, wanted to hear something positive ... any kind of comment in any direction you want to take.

It's just extremely difficult to find information that's positive. I do a newsletter so I'm just kind of looking for a positive something RAJ: Well, it's very simple. This is an area where the borders of everyone's tents need to be enlarged. It just hasn't started yet.

QUESTION: Is the outcry of the so-called religious right or the radical right basically a resistance to this invitation to enlarge one's tent?

RAJ: Absolutely. Absolutely. Ahhh. Although you experience as a strenuous thing, it is a breath of fresh air. Or shall I say it is the making of the crack through which fresh air can flow, bringing new definition, new meaning, new clarity to what religion is all about, to what relationships are all about. To what Love is all about. And at the bottom line, it is a gross misunderstanding of what Love is about that causes the judgment, the negativity associated with homosexuality.

So, it will be awhile before there is literature of that sort, because there can only be as much clarity expressed in print as there is clarity allowed to penetrate one's conscious awareness.

And if it's not being allowed, it won't be in print, even though it ought to be.

QUESTION: But being a part of the gay civil rights movement is kind of helping all of us move in the right direction?

RAJ: That is correct.

QUESTION: Without being in your face, so to speak? [small laugh]

RAJ: That is correct. But sometimes it needs to be quote "in your face" unquote.

QUESTION: Well, when we walk down the street holding hands, it's called flaunting. With everyone else, it's called, "Isn't that cute." So .. I hope that ...

RAJ: It is an ignorant attempt to avoid enlarging the definition of Love, of humaneness, of kindness. You see?

QUESTION: There is one ... another question in there ... A lot of groups use the Bible to condemn homosexuals and everybody who said that RAJ: Hmm. I will tell you that there are Bible students who condemn A Course in Miracles too.

QUESTION: Oh, absolutely. That's the other one. I've kind of been two wrong, got my one foot in two wrong camps, but that's all the feet I have so, that's all I'm going to do for now. But one RAJ: So my question is ...

QUESTION: Question is ...

RAJ: My QUESTION:

QUESTION: Oh, your question is ...

RAJ: So what?

QUESTION: True. So what. If I had another foot, I'd put it somewhere else. So, one of things is that is ... that group of people says is that Jesus never addressed homosexuality in the Bible. However, some people say that it was addressed at one point in the verses concerning eunuchs. Could you address that?

RAJ: Nope. [audience laughter]

QUESTION: Okay. [laughing]

RAJ: Love your neighbor as yourself. Love your neighbor as yourself. That's what I said. And it was two human beings about being humane. And that's the simple truth.

QUESTION: That makes a lot more sense than arguments on either side, actually.

RAJ: Amen.

QUESTION: I think that's about all I had on that. If anybody has ...

RAJ: It is a good place to end. We started out with: How do you live in a world that seems to be becoming violent, and we've ended it with love your neighbor as yourself. It is such a simple thing.

But remember that loving yourself means getting in touch with your peace, connecting with your peace, and being in the world from that place of peace. Because that's where your capacity to be love lies. It doesn't lie in all these concepts about right and wrong. It doesn't lie in getting everyone to conform or cooperate according to a certain standard so that there can be quote "harmony" unquote.

Everybody is learning how to be real. And because it requites the abandonment of conditioned thinking and conditioned responses, there is great resistance. But, as I said a moment ago, so what?

The answer's here. How to do it is here. And what is essential has uninterruptedly been right in the center of your being.

As always, I have enjoyed being with you. I thank you.
AUDIENCE VOICE. Thank you.

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good afternoon. I welcome you and I want to share with you that I always enjoy being together with you in this manner. What I want all of you to grasp more completely is that I am with you all the time, that you are always companioned with both me as well as your own guide. And I encourage you to take time during your days to at least stop and remember and acknowledge our presence. Just take a moment to remember that you are truly not alone.

I am not suggesting that you must listen to what we have to say. I am not suggesting that you have to ask questions or engage in conversation, but at least, at least hesitate any number of times during the day just to acknowledge and remember our presence and the fact that you're not alone.

You would be surprised how much difference that pause and acknowledgment will make in your life. Because although most of you don't deal with loneliness, and most of you never feel alone because you are with others—many others in some cases—everyday, it makes a difference to know that there are those companioning with you who are Awake, whose perspective is not biased by ego dynamics, who are therefore available to you to help you abandon your ego perspectives that get in the way of your knowing how to truly be appropriate. Appropriate, meaning being able to be a transformational presence, being able to be that which cuts through unpleasant ego dynamics to resolution, that which communicates an absence of fear that puts everyone else at ease. And I could go on and on.

The primary benefit for you in taking these moments to acknowledge that you are not alone is that if nothing else you are remembering that there are those available to you who have a perspective that they can share with you that can lift you out of what seems to be the prisons of limited perspective and hide bound beliefs. And if you remember nothing other than that a number of times during the day, you will find greater peace being experienced, generally speaking, without your having had to learn anything or do anything other than remembering that you're not alone.

So let us begin. Who has a question.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: There are many things that I would bring to our conversation. One in light vein I had a song come to me on my way up after we'd locked up our differential on the Freeway, but only a 45 minute wait we were able to change to my brother-in-law's car. The car was carried away and I do acknowledge though that I wasn't listening last week when I was told to put fluid in it. So the song that came to me was:

99 lessons of trust on the wall,
99 lessons of trust.
He takes one down,
we walk right through.
98 lessons of trust on the wall

RAJ: (Raj, chuckles)

QUESTION: Although it didn't ring totally clear as I was trying to meditate. I have two questions. One very short: Is it to you I have been speaking the last three and a half years or two and a half years on my writing?

RAJ: It is, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: The question I have is not clear. I tried to draw it together our previous meeting a month ago. So please hear my heart as my words try to put it together. To try to gather my guidance it is sort of, "shut up, listen and yield." When I have come to the point, as I have tried to acknowledge, that being that all things are provided unto me in support. And yet this continues to be my issue. I'm sure I'm making it my issue, and I cannot see by that. But that's not what I'm asking you. What I would like to ask is, is there a point where we as co-creators with the Father join together in co-creation and intent but are not exercising willfulness in our eagerness to be one in the Creation of that which the Father has given us to create? Am I being clear?

RAJ: Indeed. There is a point, yes. It is the point where you really yield. When you really yield you abandon any agendas you as the limited one you currently perceive yourself to be... just a moment... When you yield you abandon the one you have thought you were together with its goals no matter how excellent they were. And in the abandonment of the agendas that that one has had one becomes infilled with what you would call the Father's agenda, which you find yourself in the midst of, inseparable from and therefore part of, you might say.

But don't take these words too absolutely, because when this yielding occurs, when this abandonment of personal agendas occurs, the infilling I spoke of is really constituted of having nothing going on in your experience that distracts you from the Movement of Creation that God is being. And if you are not distracted from it in any way then you can find no boundary between it and you.

And so it is as though you are caught up in an infinite Movement that you can't identify as anything other than you, and yet not exclusively you. And in the sense that you are no longer acting in anyway at odds with the Movement of God you find that the Movement of God is the Movement of You. In that sense you are co-creators.

And I know this word has been used a lot in New Age philosophies and is also used in A Course In Miracles, but you must be careful because the ego would love to be a co-creator with God. And so when one is coming out of the ego frame of reference but still in it one can feel inspired to seek God because it will mean that one is going to be able to become a co-creator, as though you and God are going to sit down at the drawing board and discuss together what the potentials are and what will come out of those potentials by virtue of a mutual agreement between you and God. You see?

That is quite an empowering idea, is it not, that you could sit down at the drafting board with God. Well, forget it. Because when you abandon the sense of yourself that has agendas so that you may yield, so that you may yield to God, so that you may yield to Reality, this one who would sit down at the table with God disappears and you experience no separation from God whatsoever as something which can negotiate with God about what Creation will be. And yet, you will still be you. You will still experience identity, it's just that it won't be identity separate and different from other identities, even though everyone else experiencing identity also will continue to recognize themselves, but unseparated from you.

The key word is the word "yield." Another way of putting it is submit—insulting words to the ego, demeaning to most everyone's conditioned thinking. It's demeaning because the words are so absolute, the yielding must be so complete, total. The words really mean what they mean, because it is the exercise of will separate from the Father's will that seems to have created for you an experience of an existence of independence and authority, an authority which when you try and exercise it gives you a hit, a thrill that keeps you coming back for more.

And yet this exercise of authority or will separate from the Father's forever denies you the infinite experience of the Movement of Creation that it is your Birthright to experience as something inseparable from you, something with which you experience complete unity. This exercise of will also deprives you of peace. Because as long as you are in a state of self-denial, as long as you are denying God's point of view in favor of a point of view that you yourself are creating you are not in balance. And not being in balance is like walking a tight-rope. It is scary, at the least it is an uneasy experience. And in the presence of that uneasy experience there is no joy. There may be excitement. But there is not joy. Because joy is inseparable from peace. And joy is not thrilling.

Now, I do want to share with all of you today that peace is your most valuable asset. I did say asset because it is uninterruptedly yours. An asset is something that one says they own, it is something they possess. An asset is not something that you go out and get. An asset is something that is already yours. Peace is always and forever yours. It is built in, if you will. But it is unavailable to you as a conscious experience when you are engaged in exercising will—personal, private, authority—in which you never inquire to see what God’s point of view or perspective is, or what God is really being right where you are attempting to authoritatively create your life.

Now I am bringing this up because waking up is never ego satisfying. It’s never exciting. It may be moving, it may leave you in a state of awe and wonder, but it is not exciting, it is therefore never attractive to the ego frame of reference. It is by contrast boring. What arises out of the peace once you experience and abide with it is meaningful beyond anything you can imagine. But the choice for peace and the accessing of your peace is totally unsatisfying to your current way of thinking about everything, which is the reason that few people choose for their peace and choose for that step which opens the door to their being able to listen, hear, feel the peace of their being and in the absence of fear understand deeply that it is safe to yield.

And that’s just the beginning. But getting to that threshold where you recognize that it is safe and that you can yield is something you must choose for consciously and persist in arriving at without a pay off. It is important for you to understand that it will not be particularly interesting, it will most certainly not be stimulating, because the only thing that is stimulating is that which the ego thrives on to keep itself alive, or seeming to be alive.

Now I’m not meaning to paint a bleak picture. What I am meaning to do is to explain to you how it works so that when the ego comes up afterwards and says, “well, that can’t possibly be the way Home, with a capital “H”, because if it was it would be more dynamic. You would begin to hear the music of the spheres. You would begin to hear angels. And your guidance would come with a deep resounding voice that is unmistakably divine.” You see? And if you know that, it’s not going to be any of those things, because I have shared it with you. And then you find out that it isn’t any of those things, your ego will not be able to distract you from pursuing it by telling you how it ought to be if it really is a divine thing.

Almost no one who is here today has embarked upon their spiritual path for ego reasons. There is a motivation present that has not come out of life experience, but rather has come out of a deep place in which the Movement of your Spirit is occurring and is not escaping your attention. Some of you are experiencing this Movement because your experience of the world has caused you to lose faith in it and caused you to look deeper or further beyond what you thought it was all about.

And others of you have not seemed to need life experiences that cause you to lose faith in what you thought life was. And if you stay in touch with this, that is, coming from a little bit of you that is experiencing its capital “S” Sanity, you will find the apparent dullness or boredom of connecting with your peace not bothersome. You will persist for deeper reasons because there is an impulse in you that you are experiencing.

Now why am I telling you all of this in response to your simple question? Because, the idea of becoming a co-creator is of interest only to the ego. But your impulse to wake up, your impulse to uncover and experience what is divinely Real about everything isn’t coming from your egos. It is coming from that divine energy or Spirit in you that is not totally covered over. That part of you is not seeking to become a co-creator with God. That part of you is already at One with God. That part of you is already experiencing the Movement of Creation that God is without any experience of separation from it. And that’s why it has the power, even though it is so seemingly minuscule within your current sense of yourself, that is why it is powerfully enough, I will say, to give you the courage, to persist in the face of a process that seems particularly nonstimulating, and certainly a process that is not justifiable in the world’s terms.

And as that little part is allowed to expand by virtue of your giving your attention to it and valuing it for the unreasonable reasons that are coming from this Movement of Spirit in you, you will find your interest in being or becoming a co-creator with God being replaced with the discovery that you never were separate from God to become a co-creator. And that you will never be able to sign your name at the bottom of the work of art called the Movement of Creation.

What is boring to the ego is the peace of your Being, with a capital “B”, that your Soul is experiencing, which is providing you with the impulse to let go of a little bit more of your exercise of authority of willfulness, or the conscious act of will, which is providing the environment in which you experience enough safety to know that you can yield your exercise of authority.

It’s already happening. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Well it relieves me of the responsibility to have a co-creative spark. But the question that comes as I was drawn to an organization in southern Nevada... All the words were right and the gentleman said, “what is it you want? Do you want to be in this movement of creating dreams and making things happen?” And I said, “yes, but only if I’m led.” And therefore, the question in “new thought” and so forth, is we’re taught to... “What is it you want? What is it your intent? Where do you put your attention to other than only seeking the peace of God?” And I’m in dichotomy of one is willful and one is not. I guess I thought there was some co-creation issues in there, but maybe my question is much simpler.

RAJ: The only answer there can be to the question, “what do you want,” is, “I don’t know what I want until I check in with God.” There isn’t any me present to want anything that means anything until I let God through. And then that point through which God is flowing has Meaning. And then by virtue of experiencing the Movement of God through me, as me, I will know what I want. Because what I want is what the Movement of Creation in the act of. You see?

The impulse of creation could be called the establishment of a desire which fulfills itself, and the fulfillment is creation. And This does not occur in time. So you do not have one who then experiences a desire which then becomes manifest as creation. God experiencing being God is the experience of an impulse which is a desire, the function of which is to move into completion. And all of that is instantaneous. And it is, for lack of better words, constant, although that implies time.

What I am saying is that Being is a Movement that could be described as an impulse called a desire, the function of which is to fulfill itself, and the fulfillment is called Expression or Creation. That is the Movement of Being, not moving from here to there, but being the Movement that is Creation—I want to say endlessly, but again that implies time. Being, being a Movement that is ever Moving, let’s put it that way.

Now you can’t possibly know what you want until you abandon what the you you presently think you are wants and let in the Movement of Being. Then right where the you that would have wants like a swimming pool, or a car, or a big house, or freedom from debt, right there where the you wanted those things will be you experiencing the impulse, called a desire, the function of which is to move into fulfillment, and the fulfillment which constitutes Creation. When you feel that impulse, which for lack of better words we will say is God’s experience of impulse, that’s when you know what you want. And that impulse is what you want.

What that impulse is leading towards, and these are poor words, but when you feel that impulse you will know that what it is leading toward is what you want and you would no more stand in the way of the conscious experience of it. You would not stand in the way of it! You see? That involves yielding. But to ask what do you want, or as a current slogan says, “where do you want to go today,” you see, these things appeal to the current sense of yourself that all of you are entertaining. And so you say, “yes, what do I want?” And immediately considering that question as though it could mean something creates in you a sense of power of violable presence that could make a difference to you in your life. But what it does is, it distracts you a little longer from becoming still and saying in effect what does God want, more than that, what is God being? Another way of saying it that might seem less imposing is “what is Really happening here, right now—Really, with a capital “R” happening right here, right now.” That gets you beyond any little personal wants.

That kind of question, “what is Really going on here now,” is a bridge out of a sense of private selfhood that has been substantiated for eons by your personal acts of will. It’s the bridge out of that, as I said, so that you can be still enough to experience the impulse, the Movement of Creation that is the Movement of You, that is the Movement of Your fulfillment, but not you tiny, You as the expression of God, You as who you truly Are.

The bridge out is to stop asking the question, “what do you want,” or, “where do you want to go today.” Another way of asking the correct question is, “where am I today?” “Where am I Really today?” Because if you are indeed at this very instant the direct expression of God, you must be somewhere, and you must be somewhere divine, and you must be somewhere in your integrity. You must be somewhere in the power of the presence of your Real Being.

To want to know where that is, where you are today is another bridge out of the realm in which you would say, “What do I want? Where do I want to be today,” which keeps you blind to your Birthright.

We will take a break and if you have a “yes, but,” we will pursue it after the break.

QUESTION: Okay.

QUESTION: You asked the question do you have a “yes, but.” And the question is how... If my question is how can I see where I am more clearly, where am I blocking. I feel like I am going through the ninety-nine lessons on the wall. And I want to see it differently... Where am I blocking?

RAJ: Ah-ha! Ah, that is not what I said to ask.

QUESTION: No, okay, I’ll ask. I’ll ask. Where am I in the Kingdom today? I know I’m in the Kingdom today with my eyes all scrunched up wondering why the pile of bills... they’re coming to shut the utilities off. The Mercedes was dragged off the highway... it seems to be the same lesson over and over and over. And why am I blocking, or where am I blocking?

RAJ: Or the same opportunity over and over...

QUESTION: Yes. I was trying to be much more philosophical. But, belly to belly (?sounds like?) where can we go differently?

RAJ: First of all, when you ask, “where am I blocking,” it is like looking for the end of the string, or looking for the end of the spaghetti in a ball of spaghetti that is made up of thousands of pieces of spaghetti and therefore there are at least 2000 ends. And if you are looking for the absolute end of the ball you will never find it, you will keep finding another piece of spaghetti. The ego will constantly supply you with explanations of why you aren’t seeing what’s really there, or why you aren’t experiencing where you really are, you see. It will be endless.

So do not ask, “where am I blocking,” ask “where am I”. Two things will happen: You will have the opportunity to listen. And I want to encourage all of you when you listen, don’t always listen for an explanation. I encourage you to listen for an experience.

Now two things will happen. One is you will be in alignment for clarification, whether it is words or whether it is an experience. Secondly, you will by virtue of asking, “where am I Really,” you will find arguments presenting themselves against your getting the answer. And these arguments will uncover to you where you are blocking. You will not have had to ask, “where am I blocking.” All you have to ask for is the ultimate, “where am I Really,” or, “what is Really going on.” All you have to do is to ask for the ultimate in order to have your blocks to the answer present themselves. So you don’t have to go on an internal witch hunt. All you have to do is ask for an ultimate.

Now either you can engage in examining the blocks that do come up, or you can say, “I’ll deal with you later, I’m listening for the answer.” “Where am I Really?” Say to yourself, “aside from all of my best conditioned thinking, aside from all of my excellent assumptions as to what Reality must be like, I am for the moment going to assume that I don’t know anything valid about it, and therefore I cannot possibly be listening for anything I already have an experience of. And so I’m going to listen for what I don’t know anything about. My desire is to be infilled with clarity I have never experienced before.” And then comes the boring part. The willingness to sit in the silence with no answer. The willingness to sit in the silence with no answer. This is where you find out how much willfulness you’re bringing into the process. Because if you are free of willfulness you will not say, “Hmmm, well I’ve been listening for twenty minutes nothing has happened. Hmmm, come on, come on, I have other things to do.” If you are willing to value the silence of not knowing, you will have provided the environment in which clarification can come.

What it is important for you all to know is that because it is your Birthright to be experiencing yourself in your total Sanity, which is another way of saying, experiencing your Birthright of not being ignorant of any aspect of the wholeness of the Movement of Creation, because that is your Birthright, everything is actually conspiring toward the end of your experiencing your Sanity and experiencing where you Really are. Like any healthy organism that immediately goes to work to heal an injury Creation is intent upon not being misunderstood, if I may put it that way. And so when you let yourself into the silence and the void of not-knowing, willingly, this intent of the infiniteness of Creation to register with you without your experiencing any misunderstanding of it has a fair chance of succeeding. You see?

It isn’t a matter of how well you are willing. It has nothing to do with skill. All it has to do with is a certain degree of genuineness you bring to your desire to know the truth, which as I've said, is something different from knowing where you're blocking the truth. This is a most important point. Wanting to know the truth is different than wanting to know where you are blocking the truth. Wanting to know the truth is going for the ultimate. You see?

So, this piss-ant little self that might have thought that it wanted to be a co-creator with God doesn't have to have any skill whatsoever. Somewhere in the middle of this piss-ant little separated sense of self is what has been called the "divine spark", the energy of the Spirit of you that is Moving, that is the Sanity of your divine Self. And your willingness to be in the silence rises out of that little bit of capital "S" Sanity in you. And when you allow the silence, and you allow the not-knowing, and you have no vested interest in the outcome or what the answer will be, there is nothing present to block the experience of truth. And Creation, because it is its intent to register with you without any misunderstanding, has a place to fulfill its intent. So everything is on your side and will work on your behalf when you yield.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: Do we have anyone with a question that will have a short answer?
(chuckle)

QUESTION: Gosh, my ego was busy telling me that my question wasn't that important, and yet it is to me personally. I have a problem being in a quiet space listening, and so for the past year or so I have been using—what I'll describe as a crutch then—I use a pendulum at times to ask questions of myself. And the answers that I get, it has been my perception that those are from my guide. And can you tell me if that is legitimate?

RAJ: It is indeed. It is a manner of becoming still because you are reaching beyond your reasoning, you are reaching beyond your thinking. In affect you are not sitting there trying to figure out the answer, are you? That is called silence, you see. You will find ultimately that it will lead to your capacity to experience the answers without the pendulum. In other words, you will not be stuck forever having to use a pendulum to access the truth. But in the meantime it is a manner of approaching truth which bypasses the tendency to block and lets you access that which is beyond your best judgment and your best thinking. Use it! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

You see—and I'm speaking to everyone—because Creation is intent upon registering with you without your experiencing any misunderstanding. You could say that it is constantly conspiring on your behalf and will reach you, will connect with you in whatever way you allow, wherever you create let us say an open door. And you're just allowing an open door in this fashion. Others do it in other ways.

They visualize a street light, a signal, red, yellow, green. And they let the light light up for yes or no or maybe.

Sometimes when Paul is afraid that he is getting in the way of an answer, he will ask me to answer the question yes or no in another language. And so I will do that, because he's not thinking, he's not listening for the answer in that language and is not projecting his expectation.

Wherever you open the door the conspiring Creation will register with you, because it is its intent and ultimately it is your intent for you to experience Reality without misunderstanding. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: This question relates to kind of a life long issue of the way I perceive it, kind of a limitation in my capacity to be around people for long periods or even as long as periods as most people I think can comfortably be with people. I'm just wondering what is the meaning of this limitation for me and what can I do, if necessary, to work through it or learn to live with it even better than I... I feel like I've already made progress with it, but learn to live with it better? It has to do basically with the capacity to be with people, comfortably with people for long periods of time.

RAJ: Long periods of time, meaning hours or days?

QUESTION: Well, for instance, I can spend easily a full day with work and enjoy it, you know and enjoy all the people. But when I come home in the evenings I feel a very strong need to be alone and for what I think is for longer periods than what would normally be required. Most people might come home to families and still feel or have the capacity to relate in a somewhat balanced way without feeling inner tension, whereas I feel a strong need to withdraw and a very strong need to... I have to, otherwise I get very anxious and tense.

RAJ: What is the question underneath that question?

QUESTION: Because of what I feel is a need for more solitude than most people would need I guess the bottom question to me is it makes me feel something is wrong when maybe not, but maybe so. And if so what can I do about it, if there is something wrong—there might not be.

RAJ: No there is nothing wrong with it. And that is what needs to be put to rest in you. You are not handicapped. You are experiencing an inconsistency, an incompatibility, if you will. You recognize or sense energy. And the energy of competition, I'm going to say the energy of business is incompatible with your normal level of equilibrium. That you feel uncomfortable is appropriate. Everyone else should be feeling uncomfortable too, but their deep level of Sanity is covered over by their assumption that this is the way they must behave.

Now there is something you can do here because your ability to function in the world should not be incapacitated by what I'm going to call a greater experience of your Sanity. I want you from now on when you come home and you take time to be alone to value it without an accompanying feeling of guilt as though there is something wrong with you. It is when you take this time to be alone that you ground yourself again in your Sanity. It is when you get your equilibrium back. What I want you to begin to do now is when you get your equilibrium back, hold on to it. In other words, do not abandon it when you once again engage with others. I encourage you to carry forward with you that groundedness. I want you to understand that you do not have to abandon it just because you feel an energy of inappropriateness.

You have gone out into your day, you have subtly shifted and you have become more uncomfortable and you have joined them in so many words, and then you come home and you bring it with you and you abandon it consciously by your choice to be quiet and alone. We need to reverse this. You need to ground yourself as you do and then don't abandon that, carry that forward with you into your day.

What you haven't realized is that you are not required to join the rat-race. You are not required to join with or defend yourself against the energy you feel around you. What you have to do is leave it to be what it is and you stay with your groundedness and bring that forward. You will find that as you do this and you're no longer burdened with a sense that there is something wrong with you—that perhaps you are too sensitive for your own good—you will find your ability to come from your groundedness extending further and further into your day. You will discover how exactly correct I am in my statement that you don't have to join them, and you never did.

You will then learn how to stay in your peace no matter what the energy is. And you will less and less need to isolate yourself to regroup yourself. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Now I'm nervous. My question is sort of, it sounds like a silly kind... to me it sounds like a silly question, except knowing my history: I've had a lot of loss in the last ten years through death of my family and friends and have sort of a narrow system in my children only. My question is...

RAJ: I didn't hear that.

QUESTION: Now the system is that I only have my children now as my family. And my sense is that I want to know if I'm going to ever find someone that I can have a loving, healthy marriage with, or if I'm going to continue to have to struggle by myself in doing the things that I'm doing?

RAJ: I'm going to put it this way, it is not the way the things are unfolding for you to not ever be in a close, warm, loving, supportive relationship. However, something beyond your being in or out of a relationship is occurring. You have, in terms of past lives, provided yourself with ongoing experiences of use and abuse. You have provided yourself with ongoing experiences of use and abuse. You have provided yourself with life experiences in which you were always subject to the will of others, especially men. And of course, you lived in times when as a woman you had no voice.

You are in the process of emancipation from that self-image or self-concept. You are in a process of breaking out of it and coming into a clearer experience of your sovereignty, of you wholeness, of your integrity that isn't subject to the opinions of others. And until this strength is more fully realized—and I will let you know that you are learning very rapidly—until this is more fully learned you will not be distracted by the kind of relationship you are asking for. Because if you have it too soon you will give your power away again.

Now I told you on purpose that you are learning very rapidly. I want you to be concerned less with how soon you will be able to be in a fulfilling relationship. I want you to replace that with the valuing with what you're learning, so that you may let it be fully incorporated. Don't water it down or drain off its energy by constantly wondering and fretting about why you don't have a fulfilling relationship. You don't have a fulfilling relationship because that's not what's on your plate. What's on your plate is the establishment, if you will of, or the substantiation of a woman with integrity, so that this woman with integrity is what you bring to your next relationship. That is what is happening here.

Now, you can put to rest the idea that it must be that there's something wrong with you, and that's why you're not in a new relationship—that you must be blocking it in some way. No, the coming forth of your integrity is what's blocking whatever would degrade that blossoming of your integrity and your conscious experience of your wholeness, you see.

So relax about this issue and let the establishment of your integrity take place without being drained of its impulse by your fretting about when and if there will be a relationship, and why isn't there a relationship and on and on and on, you see.

Those of us watching you who can see the larger picture watch with great joy as you break this habit of some lifetimes duration. It is taking courage, but the resolve to complete it is there. Then we say "Bravo!" That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have a personal question and I'll try to keep it brief and keep emotion out of it. But it's something that's been very heavy on my heart for a very long time, and it's causing me a great deal of turmoil and I'm not experiencing peace. And it has to do with a relationship and a marriage that I'm in. And my husband and I are separated and we've been separated for two years and he lives in another country and we have a little boy together.

RAJ: He is with you or your husband?

QUESTION: Our son is with me. And I have been wrestling with God's Will for me for such a long time in the relationship, now whether I need to be with my husband or whether I need to let it go and get a divorce. I pray and I want to do what God wants me to do, but I'm just not getting any answers.

RAJ: What are the arguments that present themselves to you against getting a divorce?

QUESTION: There's quite a history of it in my family. Both my mom and dad are each on their fourth marriages. My son is the main thing. I guess I want him to have maybe what I didn't. I don't know if it's my ego that's telling me to go or to stay or what. I'm just so confused. And it's been like this for so long. I have to make a decision because it's just tearing me apart and I can't get on with my life, and my husband can't get on with his.

RAJ: You know what your son needs? The same thing you need. He needs you to get off the fence. You need you to get off the fence. He needs you to stop being in a circumstance that hurts. Because as long as you keep yourself in a circumstance that hurts you are teaching him, as well as yourself, that suffering is a part of life, that it must be tolerated, that—and this the most important part of the mislearning—that you have not the right to challenge it. Well, there's a phrase for it, it is a "suffer it to be so now," suffer it to be so, instead of refuse to indulge in it longer, you see. So you are teaching yourself something and you are teaching him something. And what you're teaching the two of you is confusion. And he needs clarity, you need clarity.

You're sitting on the fence undecided about staying in the marriage or getting out of it. You in your simple common sense—I'm not talking about your highfalutin ideas and best judgments—but you in your simple common sense know that it is not congruent for you to get off the fence on the side of maintaining the marriage.

There is a wonderful story which I will be very brief in describing. It is a story about a young woman who got married and whenever she made a roast she cut off the ends before she put it in the oven. Finally one day her husband asked her, "why do you cut off the end of the roast?" She says, "I don't know what the reason is, but my mother always did it and I assumed that it made the roast tender or more tasty or something. So I've always done it." So he asked his wife's mother the next time they were together. And she likewise said she didn't really know but her mother had always done it. Well finally one time when they were at a family gathering and his wife's grandmother was there, he cornered her and said, "I must know, everybody cuts off the ends of their roasts because you did." Why did you cut off the ends of the roast?” And she said, “Oh it was very simple. My pan was too small.”

Now I’m telling you this because part of your dilemma is that historically it seems as though your family is not able to maintain marriages of any great duration. I’m going to ask you what if in each of those cases they got a divorce because it was profoundly clear to them that it was inappropriate for them to be married? I’m also going to say that it doesn’t matter what their reasons are or were but in this case, your case, you must be sure that you are staying in the marriage for intelligent reasons or getting out of the marriage for intelligent reasons whether anyone else did it or not, and whether it makes it look like you are continuing a chain of established patterns.

You may not know why they got divorced any more than the young bride knew why she cut off the ends of the roast or her mother or her grandmother. Don’t stay married based of assumptions about what went before. Stay married or get divorced because it expresses intelligence now. And you will be teaching your son something else besides the fact that you can say no to ongoing suffering. You will be teaching him that intelligence acted upon in the present is more important than what it’s going to look like, or what people will think.

It is time for some decisiveness. It is time to get off the fence. It is not justifiable for you to continue to “suffer it to be so now.” Because you have a life and you have freedom that it’s your Birthright to be experiencing. But you’re going to have to take hold of it. I am not meaning that you are needing to express authority and willfulness. I am saying that you need to be willing to fit into a picture of yourself, if you will, as one who has freedom and one who has integrity, and one who can dare to act on the basis of intelligence, and one who can say, “stop” to your suffering and not justify it. Absolutely no one involved is being blessed by your indecision. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Well my wife and I have been reading in... I guess it’s a letter, isn’t it? ...from a humanity thing in Los Angeles, I think about this Photon belt that the planet seems to be entering. And according to the scientist in the article there seem to be a whole lot of effect on us from this, I mean it can even change the DNA patterns it says. I’m just wondering if we should be concerned about it or not?

RAJ: No concern is called for. Relax.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This should be a real short answer. I have all the documentation necessary to remove myself from various government control. I tried to do this with a lot of peace and love in this, but the repercussions could be quite serious. But I guess the question is, is it appropriate?

RAJ: The control does not serve you, sovereignty does. It is appropriate, yes.

QUESTION: (Laughing) Right on!

RAJ: Your question brings up an interesting point that others can benefit from as well. The suggestion is that if you claim your sovereignty it can have consequences. The thought is, if you get off the fence it can have consequences. The thought is, if you yield and abandon the exercise of authority it can have consequences. And mind you the word consequences does not have a good meaning as it is being used here. The thought is, if you actually woke up, if you became fully enlightened it would have consequences. Mind you, the ego which is saying this never gives you specifics, it is just suggestions, “well, if you wake up you may ascend and never see your family again.” “If you wake up you will be dysfunctional in the world.” “If you wake up, people will be jealous of you and you will get the brunt of their jealousy.” “If you get a divorce, how will you take care of yourself?” You will give up perhaps what little bit of a reasonable life you have. In other words, if you actually followed the intelligent guidance that comes at the deepest levels of your being you will have to pay for it. It’s like if you are guiltless you have a problem, but if you are guilty you are part of the crowd and you are safe. You see?

“Nobody likes a nice guy.” “Nobody likes somebody whose Awake.” “Nobody likes somebody whose really intelligent.” “Nobody likes someone whose really sovereign.” You see? However you don’t like yourself when you’re not sovereign. You don’t like yourself when you’re not Awake. You don’t like yourself when you’re not expressing intelligence. So nobody is really in a rush to be too intelligent, or too Awake or too sovereign. And that’s the fact.

But do you know what? Anyone who takes small steps and incorporates intelligence and enlightenment that is experienced, and sovereignty, anyone who does not violate their integrity begins to feel less fear, begins to feel a capacity to be at peace with themselves. And as a result they begin to be more appropriate. And they don’t stand out like a sore thumb. And they don’t become the object of jealousy and attack.

I’ve told Paul a long time ago that as you get near the gates of Heaven the ego superimposes gargoyles all around the gate, implying that it is a fearful place to try to gain entrance to. And so when these arguments against sovereignty and against one’s integrity, and against one’s enlightenment and against one’s Awakening present themselves to you remember that it is just gargoyles attempting to scare you away. And I want you to ask yourselves, “why would the ego put gargoyles up?” Because you’re headed in the right direction. That’s why! And that direction threatens the existence of your ego—your sense of who you are, which isn’t who you Really Are.

So as some of you have found out, and some of you will find out the process of Awakening, the actual Movement of coming Home involved violating the ego's rules, violating the ego's incursion of frightening images or frightening thoughts that say, "if you do assert or express integrity you're going to pay for it." So you have to violate those and walk right through the images it presents. The consequences of intelligence are harmony and peace. The consequences of Awakening are finding that you fit into everything and everything fits into you—that you belong, if you will. The consequence of sovereignty has no more co-dependence. The consequence of sovereignty is fearlessness. The consequence of sovereignty is that there's no call to exercise power.

So I'm glad you asked that question.

QUESTION: Well knowing that you and my guide are with me will make this easier.

RAJ: That is what I said in the beginning today, yes, yes, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you for being with us. The question that I have today is a difficult one for me. It involved divinity versus being human. And I have a son who is struggling with manic depression at the moment. And I don't know, he could be in a struggle for choosing to stay and live or not. And I need to know when I feel the pain of it...am I allowed to feel the pain of it, because it seems to me that what you're saying is if we relax into our own divine nature you don't feel that kind of thing. So the question is, is he struggling for his life? Am I being appropriate? And what do you do when you feel the pain and you don't think that you're supposed to?

RAJ: Well, to speak very practically, you will feel the pain whether you ought to or not until it has worn you out, until you discover that it is not having any real meaning, that it is not accomplishing anything except that it is debilitating you. You can save yourself grief by realizing that it is not going to change one thing. Ahhh, so then why does one indulge in it? Ahhh, it's because you can't do anything about it. You can't do anything about his struggle with life and you want to be able to. You want to be able to save him. You don't want him to hurt and you want to be able to be the reason he doesn't hurt. But you cannot be. And if you cannot be, then you are left with only feeling guilty or you are left with feeling innocent with no accompanying grief.

Everyone is struggling with life as long as they are not Awake. And no matter how much help any of you have had you have not done your growing until you said okay. And then when you said okay you may have used the teachings, or the wisdom or the friendships that have been shared with you as you take your growing steps. But each one of you is the only one who is responsible for letting the growth happen. Just as you are the only ones responsible for blocking it, resisting it, delaying it. I know, it's because you're a mother. No it's not! That's just an excuse for justifying a belief that you ought to be able to be an affective presence in someone else's life.

You know, I know that you know that I have spoken before about what happens when you begin to listen, that you become a transformational presence. I've said that haven't I? (no one responds) Hello!

QUESTION: You have!

RAJ: So now it sounds as though I'm saying you cannot be a transformational presence. Well, the only time you would be a transformational presence is when you're not trying to be a transformational presence. But you are being the unfolding of what is happening as Paul is doing at this very moment, which you have no tiny personal responsibility for. This means that when you are being a transformational presence you are not engaged in outcomes. You cannot set the agenda as to what the outcome will be, what the particular transformation will be. You cannot say, "I am going to be a transformational presence for him or her."

You become a transformational presence because there is no exercise of control coming into play and the other's have the space in which, for their reasons, to come to a realization that they are safe enough to let go of their cages that have provided them with a sense of structure and safety, but which have constituted a prison. But they are the one's who give permission for the clarity. They are the one's who say, "well, I'm going to try opening up the cage door and stepping out for awhile because I feel the confidence to do it." They will do it themselves, just as you take every step yourself when you're ready, and you give the word no matter how much help there has been.

Mr. Thoreau expressed a great wisdom when he said, "If I knew for a fact that someone was coming to do me some good, I would run for my life for fear that some of their good would get done to me."

Your son, or anyone any of you care about, has divine integrity just as each one of you does, but those whom you care about are not any different from each of you. And they will take their steps in the way they say they will take them just as you do. What you must understand is that their integrity is God derived whether they're ignoring it or not. And you must entrust them to their integrity because that's where the impulse of their being is coming from, not from you.

Now, I'm being very blunt, very clear and I'm not mincing words and I may sound as though I lack compassion. Shall I express a little bit of compassion and tell you to suffer, give you permission to feel grief, heartache, so that you may take an hour, a day, a month, a year to find out that you're sick and tired of engaging in this activity? And no matter how much you associated it with being a mother or a caring person, you've got to stop it because it's unprofitable. I won't do it! I encourage you to grow up. And not be fooled into believing that you're capable of fulfilling something that it's impossible for you to do and to realize the realization that you can't do it doesn't make you guilty. It's your freedom from spending an hour, a day, a month or a year suffering needlessly in the name of love and motherhood.

I love you enough to put it to you straight.

QUESTION: I have two things to say. Can I give you a "yes, but?"

RAJ: Of course.

QUESTION: Well one of them is I'd like you to come live in my float home for awhile so you could enjoy the dynamics with me. And the other one is that there's a point that I've come very close to this last Thursday where there was like an anger inside. And although it wasn't an anger it was just like a very strong sense inside that would hold me up and give me some relief and some freedom with the dynamics that were going on. And I chose not to experience that, but it chose to flow through and come out into a joyous life instead. What was that? Did I make the wrong choice?

RAJ: Would you briefly restate the question?

QUESTION: There was a point at which I felt an anger rising in me. And it would have been an anger that would make me strong and be able not to feel the pain as I saw him struggle. And I chose not to experience that anger, but I chose to experience the joy instead. What was that? I mean did I make the wrong choice?

RAJ: Very simply you stopped overriding your integrity. You stopped trying to do the impossible, and you felt your freedom. Very often when all of you feel anger and tend to criticize yourself as having gotten caught up in the ego and lost control, you are really feeling from the tips of your toes what is principled, not as a principle but as part of the substance of you. And the anger is your misinterpretation of your direct experience of your integrity.

That is what happened to you.

QUESTION: Thank you, I got it.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Welcome.

QUESTION: I would like you to comment on a concept that I had that seemed at least to me very illuminating. And it had to do with the idea of a matrix for the Soul. And that matrix would be unique for each individual but yet a part of the Totality of God or Consciousness, or whatever you wish. And that perhaps in order to somehow walk through many lifetimes, if we could somehow get a glimpse of this matrix of our own Soul, perhaps it would ease our trip a little bit, if you will. Would you please comment on that?

RAJ: I cannot improve on expressing clearly what you have just expressed. It is true. I will only say that for those of you who are familiar with fractals—and I'm not going to explain fractals, and you can explore it on your own at another time—but fractals are pattern that is repeated and repeated and repeated and repeated. A fern leaf is very much a manifestation of what is being called a fractal design, because you can take the whole leaf and then you can take a branch and you will see that the branch is a smaller version of the whole leaf. And on the branch there are other branches that are smaller copies of the branch. And no matter how far you go into the minuscule you find that it is the same pattern. And yet, the repetition of the pattern at varying sizes expresses more infinitely the basic pattern and cannot be called unnecessary, or shall I say unnecessary repetition, because in the repetition it is something different.

I will not go any further into that. But the point is that there is a divine pattern which is infinitely self-expressed and everything and everyone are that pattern infinitely expressed.

And you do not understand the seeming variation in forms, but that which the forms identify or render visible—in other words the Soul or Spirit or Mind, the identity of each of you—is identical. And I have spoken before on these Sunday afternoons about the fact that everything and everyone is at the same time universal and specific.

Now, I really have distracted everyone from the simplicity of what you expressed, and that was not my intent. But there is unity and diversity. And the separation you all experience between things is not actually there as a fact. That is why as you begin to Awaken, you begin to recognize yourself in everything no matter what you're looking at, whether it is a broad view or a tiny focused view you will feel the words, "it's just like me." You will have at one and the same time an experience of identification with the smallest particle and the infinite manifestation of Creation. And for lack of better words, in that full scope, from the infinitesimal to the infinite you experience being the Movement of Creation that is God, and you have become the co-creator that we spoke of at the beginning—co-creator because in the full spectrum, from the infinitesimal to the infinite you recognize yourself in it. And what it is that you recognize yourself in is the Movement of Creation, called God.

I thank you all for sharing your time with me. It has been a pleasure being with you.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome. I look forward to the next time.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – August 27, 1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good afternoon. In one way or another all of you are reaching beyond whatever the norm is in your lives. You call it being on your spiritual path. You call it being religious. You call it by any number of names. Many of you are pursuing this because there is what you would call an unexplainable love of God—even though you cannot tell me what the word God means—or an unreasonable and unexplainable valuing of that which is spiritual, that which is divine. Some of you, and more often than not this is the case, generally speaking, one is religious, one is on their spiritual path because life is being experienced as difficult, rough, a hardship and you want relief. And so to put it in a nutshell, very often you are on your spiritual path to improve your life.

Now, most of you have an underlying feeling that suffering is illegitimate, that it's not your birthright and that you are bound to experience freedom from it. And this feeling comes from a deep knowing in you—it is a remembrance of the Truth. No matter what your reasons for being on your spiritual path, if I may put it this way, successfully being on your spiritual path is going to involve one thing—transformation! The Biblical injunction is: “Be ye transformed.” And then it continues: “By the renewing of your mind.” “Oh, I just wanted my life transformed. I just wanted my experience transformed. How involved do I have to get? How much does my mind have to change in order to experience an improvement in my life?” Well, you know what, I'm not going to answer that question. It doesn't matter how much it's going to have to change. It matters that you recognize that that's where the changing is going to occur. And then let it occur, no matter how tiny the steps are that you take.

The reason for prayer, the reason for asking for guidance, the reason for reaching out to the Holy Spirit or God or whatever you feel the Prime Mover is, the reason for doing it is so that what is beyond your present mindsets might gain entrance into your awareness so that you have a means of escaping the bondage of your habitual thinking—the boundaries, the definitions that you are currently using to define everything. And you see the fact is that as long as you are relying upon your current definitions, your current understandings of things there is nothing new present. And so the re-newing of your mind can't occur. Prayer or asking your guides specifically for guidance is the means by which you create a weakness in the boundaries that you have established by means of your definitions, your confidences as to how things work and what they are. When you ask for help, you abandon a self-determined, self-responsible stance, which is the very thing that blocks the renewing of your mind.

One of the primary themes of A Course In Miracles is expressed in the words, “there is another way to look at this,” and this, and this, and this, and that and the other thing. This is another way of weakening the definiteness of your definitions. It is the way that you become defenseless. And if you want, you can spell fence, f-e-n-c-e... de-fence-less, boundary-less.

“Well, can’t I just have an understanding of what’s right, of what’s appropriate, and still just be me? This renewing of my mind stuff sounds like I might have to change and experience myself differently. That’s scarier than having a different understanding of something—still being who I think I am and who I want to be.” No, being on your spiritual path means allowing your experience of who you are to be transformed. And you know what? You can have no preconception of what the transformed you will be before you allow the transformation to begin!

Why am I saying this? I’m saying it because it’s important for you to understand that Awakening, Enlightenment isn’t an intellectual process, but it is a transformational process that begins at the very essential center of you and comes forth like the center of a flower that pushes the petals back and comes out into the foreground, showing the flower in its fullness. I chose that example because it truly expresses what transformation is about when you allow transformation that you cannot be in control of to occur.

Transformation does not mean you are going to be changed into something that someone else has decided you ought to be. Transformation is the process by which the essential divine you that you already are begins to emerge, coming forward into clear view—not just to everyone else, but to yourself as well! You see? And so what will come forth is pre-ordained, because you already are who you divinely are. You already are what you essentially and Really are, with a capital “R”.

And so this abandonment of definite definitions as to what everything is and who you are does not make you subject to something beyond you that might control you. It makes you subject to the essential you, the divine you that you already are, but which you have forgotten you are.

Now, what I am meaning to convey to you today about Awakening, Enlightenment and transformation is that it will not just be a new way of interpreting everything else, it will constitute real change in your experience of who you are. Your behavior will change because your attitude will change. Your behavior will change because your experience of your unity with All That Is will be different, a different experience from the isolated, vulnerable, tiny sense of yourself that finds itself to be very uncomfortable and needing relief. And you see it’s the relinquishment of your definite definitions, and it is the yielding into that which you are not in control over that seems to be fearful, seems to be risky, which is why no one voluntarily rushes into the experience. It is also the reason that most people engage in their spiritual path for the purpose of rearranging circumstances or improving conditions so that this fearful one, this isolated and vulnerable one might feel more safe without having to abandon that vulnerable sense of self. You see? But the change involves letting the essential you come forth onto center stage, as it were, like the center of the flower does, which is a new experience of who you are.

Very often when one gets near this place of relinquishing control and yielding there is an uprising of fear. And it is because there is an abandonment of control that you are on the verge of activating, if I may put it that way. And one says, “Well, this can’t have anything to do truly with Awakening. I must be on the wrong track, because fear wouldn’t be present in a genuine experience of Awakening.” And so I am making it clear to you that although it isn’t an integral part of Awakening it is something that every one of you will likely not escape the experience of.

And if you understand that that fear is simply a fear of losing control when the fact is that control is not essential to your experience of fulfillment, you will dare to risk the chance that letting go of the fear provoked control will in fact allow the even more essential you that you really are to become illuminated and brought forth as an experience of invulnerability, as an experience of peace and as an experience of what I’m going to call grounded purpose. And I simply mean by that a grounded experience of the impulse of life to express itself. In other words, fundamental motivation. Not motivation of the sort that you felt as a fearful, tiny entity, but the motivation of your essential being that is nothing other than the impulse of Creation that God is being, that you are not different from.

And so yes, because you are emerging from a well-fortified sense of tininess which is motivated by fear, you will find that fear aggravated as you dare to abandon it. And it is the abandonment that is the reason, it is the step needing to be taken that your spiritual path promotes, it is the stepping off the edge, as it were, that guidance is with you for the purpose of activating or impelling. Your limited thinking and your general defensiveness says that the taking of that leap, the yielding into the total absence of control is a suicidal act! It is absolutely insane! It is irresponsible! But it is lying!

All of your very definite definitions as to what everything is, and who you are and how everything works is like a crust, a spherical crust that has formed around your heart... I do not mean the organ in your body—your Soul, your heart, you know what I mean, your innocence, your capacity to have trust without doubt. And that crust is experienced by you as your safety, your moat around your castle, your line of defense, that which saves you from destruction.

Your spiritual path no matter what it's approach, as well as your willingness to experience the influx of Spirit has only one goal. And that is to crumble, to undo the seeming integrity, structural integrity of that crust, so that your heart might be able to extend itself without running into the barrier of that crust. And so that it might connect with the heart of everything and everyone else without running into that crust.

The crust is constituted of your very definite definitions. And your very definite definitions are what you use to tell you who you are. And so if that crust of definite definitions as to who you are is going to crumble, why you're going to have to let a new you come forth, or at least that's the way it will seem. But remember that I pointed out that the only thing that can come forth is pre-ordained. Because there is only one thing that is underneath that crust and it's your heart. You see? It's that which is Real about you that is not different from what God is and has always been.

And so, my point in bringing this up today is to reassure you that when you get to that point where fear arises because you know you're moving into a place that your conditioned thinking tells you will make you extremely vulnerable, you can dare to continue forward the millimeter or two that it will take to get past the edge of your practice of control, so that you can experience your heart, so that you can experience the love that you are, so that you can experience a new experience of you, indeed, a new experience of you that is in actuality the experience of who you anciently are, who you have always been. And you will sigh a sigh of relief because you will feel more like you than you have since you started this little adventure, this little excursion into self-will, into the experiment at having perceptions of your own of creation different from the Father's point of view.

So don't be so ready to step back from this place where fear arises in you. I know I get to be repetitious on this point, but I will say it again because it describes what I'm saying. As you get to the edge of the ego boundaries, no matter where along the boundary you come to the boundary you stand at the threshold to the Kingdom of Heaven. And so the boundary of your ego definitions of yourselves is covered, painted, illustrated if you will by the ego with gargoyles, scary figures. Why? Because the old sense of you is going to fail if you go beyond. The limited sense of yourself will crumble if you go beyond it.

So if you know that the gate to the Kingdom of Heaven are not Pearly gates but are gates with gargoyles around them to keep you, to scare you back, to keep you away from moving across that threshold you will not say, "Oh, this must be the gate to hell. These aren't Pearly gates." You'll say, "Ah, this must be the gate to the Kingdom of Heaven because this is the only place the ego would feel called upon to throw such a fright into me. This must be the place where the end of its existence will occur." And you will have the courage to move through the gargoyles and be transformed, be changed, be changed in a way that causes you to experience your integrity to the tips of your toes, rather than in your little finger or in what you define to be a fanciful thought.

So be aware that Awakening involves the transforming of your mind. And that when you get to the verge of the transformation you will experience fear and that this is a signal to you that you are at a place where the ego is feeling threatened. And the only time it feels threatened is when you are close to the discovery of who you divinely are. And then take this as the justification for moving forward, rather than retreating. If you understand this you will not be thwarted in your reason for being on your spiritual path. Nor will you be discouraged by the idea that if what you're doing is a result of guidance it won't have at any time any vestiges of fear associated with it. I guarantee you that one who is providing you with an Enlightened divine perspective, which will inevitably undo the ego's limited perception of everything, the ego is going to say, "There is an enemy! There is an enemy! There is an enemy! Be on guard! Be on guard!" The alarm bells will go off and the ego will do everything it can to save you from what it sees to be the horror of being governed by God. This is inevitable!

I'm telling it to you straight so that you will not back off, and you will not abandon for a time your spiritual growth because it isn't what you thought it would be. I am saving you time by telling you where it will apparently not be easy when you had expected that perhaps it would be a piece of cake, because it was a divine process.

If you will remember that the Father did not banish you from the Kingdom of Heaven—from your Right Mind—and that you abandoned your Right Mind by saying, "I would like to experiment with having different perspectives of Creation," then you will begin to understand that this one who stepped aside from the Father's perspective of Creation to create new perspectives, new perceptions, this one has to abandon itself. You see? The creator of perceptions has to abandon its stance as a creator of perceptions. You will understand why that sacrifice of identity will seem to be scary. But you'll also understand that that sense of identity as creator of perceptions is not who you truly are. And has constituted a limited experience of divine being, of your being the Son or Daughter of God, the offspring, the direct expression, the presence of God manifest. You see? Which is the center of the flower which is going to come out as the transformation of your mind, the renewal of your mind occurs as you let your Right Mind emerge.

Now, we will take a break and when we return we will have a question and answer format. I wanted to take this time today to share this because very often in this question and answer format the questions have to do with rearranging the furniture, as it were, with how do I improve this situation or circumstance or how do I get out of the suffering that I am in. And I wanted to remind you that although I will answer those questions, my function is not just to help you have a better dream. And to remind you of what your spiritual path is really about, what Enlightenment and Awakening is really about, what coming back into your Right Mind is all about, and that IS what it is all about, not just the improving of “the human experience.”

Lastly, the human experience is not useless or meaningless, it is the Kingdom of Heaven seen through a glass darkly. And so as the renewing of your mind occurs and as you come back into your Right Mind, the Kingdom of Heaven that you call the “human condition” will become obvious to you as the Kingdom of Heaven and therefore as an improved experience. If the human experience, the suffering, the pain, the sin, disease and death is a misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven, then the correction of it doesn’t involve manipulating the misperception but healing the misperceiver. You see that? Of all of you coming back into your Right Mind by the renewing of your mind, because somewhere in you you’ve said, “yes, I will let the essential me come forth and I will do it by ceasing to exercise absolute control over my experience.”

We will take a break.

RAJ: Before going into questions that you might have brought with you, does anyone have comments or “yes, buts” or questions that my comments brought forth? If you do, if you’ll raise your hands.

QUESTION: Well, I do have a comment on that is that for the past week or ten days I have been in an absolute funk, which I would equate as fear. And the only thing I had is thank you for your words, cause I feel they were directed really at my specific situation I was in the last ten days. So I thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. But you cannot take all the credit.

QUESTION: I didn’t take it all, just a little bit.

QUESTION: With regard to being transformed or like what you said, can you explain the disengagement, the detachment with which the world can be viewed if you are transforming. Boy is that ever an awful way to put what I’m trying to get across. My experience is that the world around me keeps on going and I don’t much care. And this would appear to be harsh. But I can’t help that.

RAJ: Your words are expressing the attitude or feeling you experience when you are not hooked? Correct?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: When you say I can’t much help that it is not like you are summing the world, you are saying that that is literally the experience. You have no need to apologize for the fact that you are not hooked?

QUESTION: Sometimes I feel the need to apologize.

RAJ: But that is not what you expressed in those terms just now?

QUESTION: That’s right!

RAJ: Indeed. Oh, yes! Now, one does not have to be totally Awake, one does not have to be totally transformed forevermore in order to experience perspective, in order to experience balance of the mind in which one isn't hooked by those things which before hooked you. The means by which one can experience this is really simple. It is through meditation. Now I am speaking of meditation that is not guided. I am speaking of meditation that does not have a focus, a purpose like healing the world, or blessing someone who is suffering and so on. I am talking of meditation such as TM. I am talking of meditation where one pays attention to the flame of a candle. I am speaking of meditation where one sits quietly and pays attention to the sensation of breathing in and out. A meditation that does not have an intellectual focus.

When one utilizes this kind of meditation it very rapidly moves that one into his or her peace. In other words, that's all the more complicated it is to move into that place that we could call the center of you. Into that place where you have escaped the hooks of the ego.

I've said before that the only thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. All forms of attack, all forms of manipulation, all attempts to get rid of the ego by one means or another the ego can successfully defend itself against. Why? Because the ego is itself a defense mechanism. It is the means by which each of you, unconsciously now, denies yourself the experience of the Father's perspective. It is the means by which you deny yourself the direct perception of Reality. Meditation of the sort I described doesn't deal with the ego at all. In fact, it moves you out of all intellectual or conceptual processes. And the ego cannot defend itself against that and you find yourself moving into your peace.

And I've said before that this peace is not just a physical peace, it is not just a movement from an experience of tension to an experience of relaxation. It is a movement into a direct experience of your essential being. And so this peace that you experience is literally you touching, having an almost sensory experience of and a direct experience of the very self that you are, which is the presence of God. And then I have mentioned that what emerges out of that without any coercion is an experience of joy, not giddy emotional joy, but it is an illumination of the peace that is vital and alive. And then comes Love. And at each point you feel your inseparableness from it.

Now I am getting off the subject, but I wanted to explain that. My point is that we are not talking about some complex process that leads to Awakening or that helps to move you from a state of reaction to your circumstances to a place where your circumstances do not govern you. It is a simple thought-less process. Meaning a process in which thoughts play no part. And it is available to all of you at any moment that you choose to abandon thinking because the inevitable result of the abandonment of thinking is this slipping through what the Course refers to as the little gap. And when you slip through it, which is something that is never the result of effort, one finds himself or herself in her or his peace. In other words, having a direct experience of the divine one that you are, all be it, a limited experience of it, as I mentioned, because then comes joy and then comes love and I haven't told you what comes next, and that's not what we're going to talk about today.

In your peace, indeed, the Kingdom of Heaven continues to be the Kingdom of Heaven, or as you said the world goes on, but you don't care. What you mean is that you don't care on the basis that you had cared when you were not in your peace. And to be very honest with you—or if you are very honest with yourself—you will find that the reason you cared when you were not in your peace was because you felt guilty and responsible in some way for correcting that which you were guilty of. And maybe the only thing you were guilty of is the fact that you haven't yet corrected the situation, even though it might not be your responsibility.

Well obviously your reaction to circumstances when you are not in your peace is a reaction of confusion. Now when you are in your peace you are incapable of reacting. But you are capable of being conscious of everything that is going on. And from there, which is the place of your integrity, you truly are able to know what needs to be responded to and what does not. And so, there will be much that you will not respond to that when you were not in your peace you would have responded to. The difficult part of this is that this place of reacting to life's circumstances because you are not in your peace is something everybody is engaged in and everybody has taught everybody else what the rules of reaction are. And these rules of reaction all fall under the heading of “being responsible, a responsible individual with integrity.”

And so when you find yourself in this experience, this direct experience of the peace of your being, and there is much that you would have responded to reactively that you find yourself experiencing no reactive response to, you have stepped out of the mutual agreement as to the rules of the game. And those who are insisting upon reinforcing those rules will look at you and say, “You are being irresponsible.” They will say, “Well, if this is what the spiritual path is about I want nothing to do with it because there is no love in it.” And what it means is that, “you are not reinforcing my need to be able to prove to you that you are guilty and put the responsibility for me off on you.” And I guarantee you that that is really the general definition of what love is in the world today. Love is you behaving in a way that you are responsible for my confusion and the results of my confusion, and as long as you play that game I don't need to feel guilty because you're doing it for me. You see? That's the definition of love, generally speaking.

And so, I'm glad you brought this up because this is another unexpected aspect of becoming clear, of Awakening, because you find that in your clarity and your peace and your ability to be absolutely appropriate you aren't received with open arms. And you aren't necessarily received by an acknowledgment of the value, the divine value of what you're expressing. And so you are likely to say again, “Well, this can't really be the true path of Awakening because I'm running into more problems, more difficulties.” Well I’ll tell you that the only reason it’s a difficulty because you haven’t yet hung out as it were, you haven’t abided in this experience of “not caring” in the manner that you cared when you were in a reactive state. And because you haven’t abode there long enough to get the feel of it you cannot feel the integrity of standing in that place where you are not reinforcing insanity. And so you do not feel at peace about it!

And so I will tell you that when that happens you first of all need to back off from the attack on you or on your new vantage point, made by those who used to play the game with you, and you need to say, “What is the nature of my experience here where I am not reacting to what I used to react to? What am I experiencing in this place where I apparently don’t care anymore about what I used to care about and react to?” And when you pay attention to the experience, aside from the reactions of others, you will find that it is still the experience of your peace. And that even though you aren’t able to express in words very well the fullness and depth of the experience there is something—well I used earlier the word grounded—there is a groundedness, there is in you permeating you, not just peace but what I’m going to call an infinite stability that you can’t personally account for. In other words, you can’t personally account for it because you didn’t in any way or means generate it. You might say it’s an experience of bigness! But that is an inadequate word. It is an infinite stability that constitutes a support for your not abandoning it, not abandoning your peace to get back into a reactionary interchange that is part of this mutual agreement with everyone, because everyone’s decided what the rules are.

This infinite stability is very often felt to be you being Loved by God. What it is is you feeling union with God. But as long as you want to use the words, “It feels like God is Loving me,” use those words. Because what you are feeling and describing with those words is the experience of atonement, even though the fullness of what atonement is hasn’t yet registered with you.

If you will pay attention to the experience you are having in your peace that causes you not to care anymore in the way you used to care, you will not be easily distracted from that experience of integrity and you will not abandon it to engage once again in reaction from an uncentered level. And everyone else who might be distressed because you’ve abandoned the game of the mutual agreement as to what the rules are and what everything means... when those who are frustrated with you because you have abandoned the game, react and attack you verbally or emotionally or in whatever way, you, if you stay in that place of your peace and the feeling of this infinite stability will recognize that you are not there to relieve them of their frustration by rejoining the game and indeed you will have to continue to apparently not care anymore. You see? That’s something that you don’t expect to be a part of becoming clear.

But you see, as you withdraw your participation in a game of active ignorance the group of those consciously engaged in active ignorance diminishes and that group loses power. And so their practice of active ignorance, not having as wide an acceptance now, is less reinforced and thus it is a little bit less dense. Which means the individualities who have devoted themselves to this game are a little less dense. That is the evidence of healing whether they wanted it or not. And so you have cared, you have been a presence, the effective of which is love. And that's what you need to become aware of, so that you rest more easily in your "not caring anymore" in the manner that you cared before.

And so you see because I have expressed this to you and to others who may not have arrived yet at the point of that experience you will not be surprised and thrown off guard when it happens. And if you are not thrown off guard when it happens it will not be a point of distress for you. You'll say, "Oh yes, Raj said that this would happen. And here it is. I see it. It's clear as a bell." And you will experience less distress in your process of Awakening than one who has not heard this yet.

Did that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes it did, thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I don't know how much I can add to that, but I think I'm experiencing what you're talking about right now. And that it feels very good. And it's exactly like you said, the more people engaged in coming from their integrity the more that seems like a snowball effect. And other people pick it up and carry it a little bit further and a little bit further until the other's who want to engage in that smaller place end up getting backed into a corner. But the rest of us can continue on in that expanding growth kind of a thing and the peace. And the others that got backed in the corner can either join us and drop there stuff or just stay in the corner...

RAJ: Or leave.

QUESTION: Or leave that would be a nice choice, but...

RAJ: Indeed, and whoever they may be they will stay in the corner until they are willing to abandon their commitment to staying in the corner.

QUESTION: Right! I was once in the corner myself, so I understand where they're at! That's all.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: That's all I have to say!

RAJ: There is another important aspect to this here and that is that when you stay in touch with the experience of your centeredness and your peace, and you feel this infinite stability, you realize that there is a whole lot of self-justification that you used to engage in that is simply unnecessary, and thus when those with whom you used to play the game get frustrated with you and demand that you account for yourself you will not feel threatened by that demand because you will recognize that you simply don't have to account for yourself.

QUESTION: That's true.

RAJ: And the reason you realize that you don't have to account for yourself is because you're not experiencing guilt.

Any other questions?

QUESTION: Great since you've already answered the question, actually it's not a question it's just a point of clarity. In my community there's a great deal of poverty. I sense a tremendous amount of sorrow but no guilt. Can you... in your explanations...

RAJ: You yourself are experiencing sorrow, but no guilt?

QUESTION: Yes, but not guilt. I don't feel responsible for their poverty. But I'm not blind to their experience.

RAJ: Indeed, you express the sentiments of all of those who are Awake observing you—and not just you but everyone. And I know that there are those who will say, “well, those who are totally Awake couldn't possibly feel sorrow.” And indeed, it is not the best word. When a member of the family leaves, like the Prodigal Son, the family notices and feels the absence of the active presence and the participation of an aspect of its wholeness. And it is not happy, if I may put it that way. The void which is not representative of Reality is recognized and felt as (I am trying to think of a word that will not have any ego aspects to it) an inability to express love that is recognized by the one loved as having been extended. One could say, “it doesn't feel right,” but I don't mean that it feels wrong. One could say that it doesn't feel comfortable. It simply means that there is an experience of a desire to have that one who is not feeling the embrace of love to feel it once again, so that the communion, so that the union of being can be felt by all.

And so although it is not totally appropriate to say that the Awakened ones feel sorrow they do feel the fact that the Brotherhood yet has the opportunity to feel its unity fully, and desires that because that is the Birthright of God's infinite self-expression. So it elicits a conscious desire for this unity to be totally and absolutely experienced without any of the Brotherhood ignoring their place in that unity.

So I understand completely what you are saying, yes. We also recognize that it is not our responsibility to change your mind or force you back Home into your Right Mind. And so we do not feel responsible for whatever you might be experiencing in your choice to see Creation with a perspective you have created that is not all inclusive as the Father's perspective is. But we are ever presently alert and available ready to recognize the first slight indication on the part of any of you to want to come back Home—that the slightest indication with any of you that you are becoming dissatisfied with the perceptions you have created, and where there is waning commitment to the definitions you have evolved—and when that slightest weakening occurs, and there is just the slightest opportunity that the love that we are expressing might register with you, you are greatly supported so that there might be greater and greater courage on your part to abandon the rules and the concepts and the definitions which seemed to have comforted you and which seemed to have given you definition.

And although we cannot take one step for you we can be there to say, “go on take one more step! Good! Now take one more step it’s safe! Good!” You see? We are there! And we are there because it is our Birthright to experience you experiencing us as we are, and yourself as you are truly, so that the Whole of the Brotherhood experiences its integrity consciously. So, although you may not feel responsible, although all of you may not feel responsible for another’s circumstances or for resolving them for them, you can recognize what the circumstances appear to be and be available when there is the slightest indication that a renewing of their mind is becoming of interest to them. So that you may encourage them even though you cannot take one step for them. And most certainly without ever taking on a personal sense of responsibility for getting them Home. The feet that took them away have to bring them back!

The decisions used to justify creating a different perspective of Creation have to be undecided, if you will, abandoned. You see? Any other questions?

QUESTION: I would like to know what I most need to know at this time in my life. And I would also like to know also what I most need to do. Thank you. (This sounded like a lady that was visiting that I think Judy said was over 100 years (young).)

RAJ: Well, the thing you most need to know “at this time in your life” is that this time in your life is no different from this time in the life of one who is just two days old. It has nothing to do with the time in your life, it has to do with where you are standing. And always where you are standing is at a threshold, which you either can neglect to step over or step over. And it is the same thing with one who is two days old or one who is twenty years old. They stand on the threshold of abandoning themselves to that which is beyond any current definition of themselves that they have acquired and used to define themselves.

And so what you need to know is—and you do know this—that at this point in your life you do not, you cannot intelligently say, “I probably don’t have time to wake up.” It has nothing to do with time. It has to do with, if you want to call it this, it has to do with space. It has to do with whether you’re going to stand where you’re standing or move the fraction of an inch that it takes to be just a little bit beyond where you are, where you abandon yourselves to the renewing of your mind and transformation.

You at this instant, and everyone else at this instant stand literally at the threshold of the unknown. Except as I pointed out to you earlier, the unknown that you stand on the threshold of is the essential you, the center of the flower, which inevitably must come forth!

Now I said earlier that you don't have to attack the ego, in fact I said that if you attack the ego or any of the ego perceptions the ego would be able to defend itself flat out, and that the only thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. You realize how little effort one needs to put into the act of disregard? That's all the effort it takes to wake up! No effort at all! The absence of effort, and I pointed out that when one meditates one slips through the little gap, one doesn't climb into it, then no effort occurs, one slips into it.

And so moving the millimeter or so that it takes to embrace the unknown is an effortless thing that occurs by virtue of becoming centered and letting in the greater experience of the divinity of you, the greater experience of who you are, which is ageless. And the agelessness of you will replace what you called "this time in my life" right here! And the infant who is two days old or the youngster who is twenty years old who makes this same transforming renewal of mind will find that the time in his life or her life that they would refer to will be replaced by the agelessness of them and the limits of being a two year old and twenty year old will dissolve.

So what you need to know right now, and it has nothing to do with this time in your life, it has everything to do with the fact that now is the only moment you have. And what you need to know now is that you, right as you sit there, right as you are being conscious in this instant, stand at the threshold! The same place everyone else is standing, with the same opportunity to have your mind renewed and your experience of being conscious.

We will take a break.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In the past you had confirmed my feeling that a marital separation was needed. It would appear that we don't have enough money to support two households, and my wife is dragging her feet as far as generating income. My question is this: Should I simply move out and let the financial chips fall where they may?

RAJ: Meaning what?

QUESTION: Well we're wanting to keep the house we have in the neighborhood we have and my son in the school he is in. And is it appropriate to me simply to, since I'm the one generating the income just go out and get a place for myself that's, you know, a simple means of existence and essentially give her the rest and in a sense put more of the pressure on her to come up with the rest in order to keep that going, or do I need to stay until she gets it together to get more money?

RAJ: Well if you want to have a healthy, wholesome, balanced and I'm going to say an abundant experience then do not approach this in any way with a control issue. You do not want to force her to do anything. You do not want to force anything. But you do want to be intelligent. I have indicated, as you said, that it is important for you to have some space in which to allow further clarification to occur. I would encourage you to do exactly what you described and when you say let the chips fall where they may, let that include the possibility that the chips falling where they may might involve an increase in your income that allows the needs to be met while you become further clarified about your fulfillment.

To think somebody needs to learn a lesson here other than you will put you in a position of acting so as to cause leverage, to cause justice to come into play, when at all times when you are engaged in the resolution of a problem by virtue of... (A noise occurred that some button had to be pushed to stop the noise. And then he came back saying...) My point is that justice is what is already occurring! Creation, as I've said, is the only thing going on on God's terms, and therefore what you are engaged in here is the process of letting yourself into the awareness of what the already existing justice is, which is justice for ALL. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: What you say makes complete sense. I guess you know I was just wanting to really get a specific answer if I should... It's like making the move and let the Universe do its thing, instead of me trying to get it together before I make the move. So you were saying I should make the move?

RAJ: It is appropriate, yes.

QUESTION: Is everything in order with my alignment on my relationship with my son regarding this? I have a little difficulty in that I project some of the rejection that I felt from my father on to this, that I will not be living in the same house with my son and that creates a lot of pain for me.

RAJ: You're thinking entirely too much! Take one step at a time. This step has to do with you coming into a clearer experience of your integrity and that will bless him.

QUESTION: Great. Finally, the last three times I've been here you've given me very profound answers that have effected me deeply, is there anything else along those lines that you want to tell me at this point?

RAJ: No, what I had to say today about the transformation of each of you by allowing of the renewing of your minds is where it's at for you! You've gotten your message for today!

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Hi, thanks. Where do I begin, I've got about a thousand questions for you, so let me try and make this short and sweet. In the last month and a half has been a very trying time, I lost a relationship and a death of a real close relative. And you mentioned about being on the edge, and I felt that I'm on the edge looking for something else but it's so foggy I can't see! I'm hoping you can shed a little light through this fog and give me some guidance as to where I should be going next.

RAJ: Your fulfillment comes to you! You see, like the Prodigal whose fulfillment was already present with him, everyone at one point or another decided to turn their back on it and look for it on their terms! There is a great deal of pride which is encouraged around setting your goals and creating your future and accomplishing things. You set a goal, you give yourself a direction to go in to get or achieve that goal—to get your fulfillment. And it's all predicated on the idea that you have to create your fulfillment, when the fact is that your fulfillment is your Birthright. And the moment you stop going for it and succumb into the presence of you in the moment you're in your fulfillment begins to register with you. It seems to come to you, again very much like the example of the Prodigal Son who upon abandoning his intent to do it his way and started for home found that his Father came to meet him. You see? Your fulfillment comes to you, because it never was taken away from you. You've always taken who you are truly with you wherever you have gone in the attempt to become what you think you ought to be!

And that statement should be printed and hung on your refrigerator where you can see it everyday!

So instead of thinking that now you must have a new direction to go in, I encourage you to adopt an attitude of, "Well, it 's going to be interesting to see how the Universe, or the nature of things, or if you will God, unfolds my experience of the fulfillment of my being now!" That very thought is like prayer. It is the way in which you abandon self-sufficiency and let something else in by becoming curious about movement that is going on outside of your consciously directed life. That's joining. That is abandoning independence.

Fulfillment is the nature of the Movement of Creation. It is therefore, the nature of Being, it's the nature of existence. And so if you're feeling antsy to get on with it, let that antsiness motivate you not to get your feet moving but to in effect sit down and relax and watch to see how it comes to you. This is not laziness! This is a truer attitude! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: So I should just shut up, sit down and it will come to me?

RAJ: Ah, but let there be interest, interest so that you are paying attention. Let there be expectancy—not expectancy of something that you have formulated and put out into the ethers to let the energies gather around and give form to, not something you have in anyway set into motion yourself. Sit down only figuratively speaking as the means by which you become allowing of your fulfillment registering with you and then be curious, which mean attentive so that you will recognize it when it happens. You see? So it is passive in the sense that you will not decide what it is you want and go after it, but it is active in the sense that you are remaining alertly conscious with interest to see—for lack of better words—what God is unfolding, or what the nature of being is unfolding, or what the Universe is bringing forth to identify your fulfillment. You see?

QUESTION: I think I understand, thank you very much.

RAJ: You do understand, and you are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I was married 25 years before I dared to leave that was two years ago and since I have gained a little bit of distance. But what I have not been able to perceive is what this marriage meant for me. I have the feeling, I mean it was a long painful experience and I have the feeling I missed the point, or I did not learn a lesson. Therefore, I wanted to ask you whether you can help me with this.

RAJ: And you are afraid you will repeat the mistake?

QUESTION: I would not dare to do that again!

RAJ: Oh it did not escape you. It was the way in which you learned the meaning of sovereignty. It is the way in which you learned finally to how to say “no.” It is the way you laboriously, but inexorably, persistently moved to the point where you no longer sacrificed your integrity for the sake of a principle. A most valuable experience no matter how long it took. And it is a learning that is fraught with what I am going to call transfer-value that is affecting and will continue to affect most of the other areas of your life.

It has been a process of emancipation. It has been a process of growing up. You made a shift from being a child to being an adult, if I may put it that way. And when you left the marriage it was the equivalent of what everyone thinks arriving at 21 years old means. And you know what? Whenever anyone does that it is worth applauds whether it does occur at 21 or whether it occurs at 58, you see, and so you can be pleased. You can be as happy as day of graduation. It doesn't matter whether you went to school a lot longer than everyone else before you graduated. The meaning of graduation is honorable. And I honor you and I encourage you to honor yourself.

What more can I say? It doesn't matter that there's yet a lot that you don't know about some things. It simply means that there are wonderful thresholds of discovery. But there's one thing that you don't have to be afraid of and that is, you don't have to be afraid that in the process of wonderful discovery you will suffer from the disastrous results of etiquette, of being a good boy, of living up to other people's expectations. At the bottom line you will not have to suffer from giving preference to anything and everything other than your deeply felt integrity. This is wonderful! You are at a point where you are unwilling to become dishonest in favor of not upsetting anyone else.

I want to say congratulations, but I embrace you with love and acknowledgment instead. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. Much I did know in my heart, but the moral concepts of my up-bringing I think contradicted it, so I got a bit confused. May I just ask a connecting question. What is the future of the family, because so many people are separating and it's always painful regarding the children and so on and there must be something in the making which I can...

RAJ: Oh I will tell you that your children were much clearer about this than either you or your wife were a long time ago and they are not suffering from this but relieved. In spite of your conditioning, which tends to over-shadow your clarity, the honesty that I spoke of, of your actions blesses them. And they will dare to be honest themselves because of it. And that will bless everyone they are associated with. Is there any other guilt that you would like me to...

QUESTION: No, thank you very much. That was totally to the point! Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: At the last gathering Debra asked you what she should know, what it is you would tell her. And you asked her what she would be most afraid to know. And so I would like to ask the question that I'm most afraid to hear the answer to. And that is can you tell me the truth about the Angel project?

RAJ: I can, but we must do that privately.

QUESTION: Can I have an ETA for that? I'm at your disposable!

RAJ: <ggg> Between now and Wednesday.

QUESTION: That works for me.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: You seem to be having a very good time this afternoon. And I'm enjoying it also. You are so expressive and I appreciate and acknowledge that.

RAJ: You do not know how much of a work out it has been on previous Sundays.

QUESTION: It's showing! I don't know how specific this is, or appropriate, but I'm going to ask it anyway. A month ago I was told by my guidance to prepare to go to Las Vegas to attend a seminar. I got all the point to pack and get ready to go and the wear-with-all didn't show up. And the invitation has reentered my life but the wear-with-all has not shown up and I'm just curious. Am I being lead towards Sage or away from, or anything to do with Sage seminars?

RAJ: It is inappropriate for me to speak of this while you are still in the middle of the learning. I do encourage you to trust the process! Because it is geared toward your experience of clarification, the renewing of your mind. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you and that is appropriate.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have a lot of questions going through my mind right now, but I had one narrowed down but it's being overwhelmed by another. I'm at a point in my progression as far as my spirituality goes where I'm asking a lot of questions. And how I was raised, that wasn't appropriate. You know it wasn't...

RAJ: Are you also taking time to listen for the answers?

QUESTION: I hope!

RAJ: Continue.

QUESTION: I'm trying. And I catch myself often getting a feeling of something, and I don't want to hear it so I move on to my next question.

RAJ: I just want to mention to those who haven't discovered it yet, that asking question is an excellent way of avoiding answers. Continue. I appreciate your honesty there.

RAJ: Can you be a little more specific so that... QUESTION: Okay. I guess more of that... I guess in myself it's just questioning... not necessarily verbalizing any questions, but saying in myself... asking (that's not the word I want I guess) questioning if I'm following on a path that I actually believe or if I'm following on borrowed light so to speak. But the thing that I'm really struggling with right now is, I've finished a stage in my life as far as schooling and that part of my life goes and I'm moving on to something new and very frightening to me. And I'm being pulled in many different directions and at different times they all seem okay.

QUESTION: Yeah. I moved from Utah and I moved up here to Oregon. And I've had a lot of criticism for that from my father and my family. And I'm curious, right now I'm deciding whether it's something that I want to stay in Oregon, because I'm feeling some great enlightenment happening in myself, or do I want to... or I guess I should say do I need to stay and complete that process that I feel like is happening, or do I want to go and perhaps begin a new one and go back to Utah?

RAJ: And you are aware that possibly to move on to a new one is a way of avoiding the fullness of this one?

QUESTION: Right! I think! Yeah, I feel as a big part of that of me staying I feel a lot of fear around a relationship that I'm feeling a lot of emotions around. And I'm wondering if it's something I need to stay and deal with what's happening as far as my relationship goes with this person, or do I need to get away from it?

RAJ: I encourage you to stay. And I encourage you to stay with the intent of confirming in your integrity in your actions relative to this relationship, no matter which way it goes. What I mean by that is if it is appropriate for the relationship to continue and grow because it's in harmony with your integrity, you need to do that. If the relationship must end because that is what is in harmony with your integrity then that is what needs to be done. But whichever way it goes—which you will discover what is appropriate—whichever way it goes it needs to be followed through so that at the conclusion of the unsureness you move forward with your integrity in tact. If you leave now you will simply be avoiding the demand for the strengthening of your integrity that confronts you. I said the demand for the strengthening of your integrity, another way of putting it would be the opportunity to feel your sovereignty or strength more fully, with greater self-respect. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. You see, it isn't just a matter of sticking it out to resolve it—to resolve IT! It has to do with an inner process of experiencing your substance—the substantiality of you. And it would be a shame to miss that since the opportunity is in front of you to have it illuminated. That's all.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm thrilled to be here and be having this experience. And all I can say is I'm full, not only with food. Is there anything I need to hear from you?

RAJ: You might be surprised to hear this, but not today!

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Can you tell me why I am at Campfire and particular what role I play with those who encourage parents to get involved with their children. I kind of feel like I've talked myself into a circle and helped everybody off the hook and I'll kind of do it myself. And they can do all the taking the brochures to the schools and gathering everything and I'll come out... And that doesn't sound right either. But when I tell them listen to what people are saying and put it back in front of them and say if you want to get involved with your own children, do it! And we'll show you a way of doing that, or we'll give you tools to help that happen. But since all the staff have left and no one's stepped forward to take their places I'm at a point of maybe I should be rethinking how I'm doing it, or what I'm doing there or what the programs for?

RAJ: The simplest way I can put it is that at the moment there is nothing for you to do, except to pay attention, ready as I said earlier to respond to the slightest bit of interest that is given when someone wakes up to the fact that they have a want or a need and they are turning for help. Do not attempt to force life back into this present void. And do not attempt to do what everyone else would have done all by yourself. At the moment it is appropriate to let things lie taking no steps. I will say that within a month to six weeks it will be appropriate for you to let it be known, preferably with letter or letters to others that you are present and willing to work with anyone who is interested in participating. But do it without conveying in any way any kind of judgment on those who seem not to have shown any interest at all. And above all do not think that everyone else has thwarted you in doing what you are able or capable of doing or contributing.

In other words, do not provide a charge to the situation by interpreting, period. Those who need to participate won't recognize that they are needed until their lack of participation begins to show up as, shall I say, a less than desirable circumstance. Once they have that recognition then when you speak, when you contribute it will be received and responded to with camaraderie. I know that at the moment it seems like it would be the responsible thing to find some way to inspire or generate interest. Don't do it!

I do not answer questions for Paul that Paul does not ask. And I've shared before a fairly well known saying that "a mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still." You have to wait without judgment, without opinion, until a mind is present that is interested in change, that has a want. You see? And this interim here while you are waiting for that want to be expressed is an essential part of the want coming forth. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Can I ask a question of clarification?

RAJ: Yes.

QUESTION: Are you talking about potential members coming forward, or are you talking about a specific unit that is leaderless right now, or about my not having...

RAJ: The former.

QUESTION: Okay, that helps.

RAJ: What can I say? There has been a great unity and cohesiveness that we all have been together today. And it has felt good! And it has been my pleasure to participate in this mutual unfolding of love and clarity. Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – December 10, 1995

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ OPENING COMMENT: Good afternoon. I would like to ask you a question. And that question is: Have you had an interesting time contemplating the answer to your question about thinking, since the last get-together?

QUESTION: Oh, me? I get to ask a question later, okay?

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: Ah, thinking...

RAJ: Understanding

QUESTION: Well, understanding is coming. I've just had an experience a short while ago where I lent a fellow $50 and he's never paid me back and since then a whole lot of what most people were to consider miracles has occurred to me. And I'm starting to understand how the system works basically. I don't think so much understanding as accepting. I don't really need to understand, it's just a matter of accepting what's there. I don't feel like... My question today has to do with understanding, but...

RAJ: Then let us go ahead with your question.

QUESTION: Okay. You talk a lot about sin, sickness and death, and I have a layman's understanding to sickness and death. And in the Bible it says, "go forth and sin no more." that I can understand. However, then it says don't do things to allow your brothers to sin. And my next question is, don't do what? And my question is, what makes a sin a sin? I have no idea! I mean as far as me I think sin is related to stress, but I don't know how I can control anybody else's stress or have anything to do with stress or do I walk down the street and stress out people? I don't know. And if so am I responsible for that? Thank you.

RAJ: It is really very simple. Sin is whenever you engage in an act of Self-denial—and the "S" must have a capital, the word Self must have a capital "S". Whenever you engage in a denial of your essential divine Selfhood you are committing a sin. I say that because it always has detrimental effects. Now the question is, "How does one deny is divine Selfhood? And again the answer is really simple. One denies his or her divine Selfhood by claiming to be something else, or by believing with commitment that you are something else. "Well, I'm just a human being. Well, I came from a sperm and an egg. My existence is pure happenstance. The purpose of my life is to make the best of a bad situation. There wasn't anything before my birth and there isn't anything after my birth, I am just a temporary, physical event." First of all, all of these ideas are false. Secondly when these false ideas are held to be the truth and you live your life with commitment to them you are actively denying who and what you really are.

Now I am not using the word sin in the awful way that religion has tended to use the word. But as we also spoke about the last time we had a gathering, when one is in a state of Self-denial, one is actually denying his or her connection with a Prime Mover—God. In the denial of your divinity, which is a fact because you are the direct expression of God, you forfeit the conscious awareness that spontaneously accompanies a conviction that you have as to your divinity and your inseparability from a divine Source. And in the absence of that conscious experience of what it means to be divine—not what it intellectually means, but what it experientially means—you cannot help but feel small, independent, alone and vulnerable. And as a result of this your living of your life is expressed from that place of awful limitation, and your life becomes a defense against all that makes you feel vulnerable. Inseparable from this experience, this false experience of separateness from the whole life becomes a struggle to overcome sickness, death and the fundamental sin, you might say, of not knowing of your divine origin.

And I enjoy playing with words, especially if it conveys enlightening meaning. The accent has always been wrong when the original sin is referred to. It's not the original sin as in the very first sin—it's the original sin, it's the mistaken belief about one's origin. And it is something that everyone practices now, not way back with Adam and Eve. You see. And when you don't know of your divine origin and as a result of knowing of it being curious to have a greater experience of it then you will find yourself suffering from the original misunderstanding or sin.

In the state of ignorance that results from the original sin, sin, sickness and death are what you are bound to cope with. But as you become, for whatever reason, aware that you have a divine origin and that there is a God, there is a Prime Mover that is divine intelligence and whose every act is an act self-extension or love then you seem to become free of the effects of or the practice of sin, sickness and death.

So sin is simply a misunderstanding about your origin and a commitment to that misunderstanding and the intent to live your life on the basis of that misunderstanding. As a result of this, in addition to what I've already said, it causes you to be unaware of the fact that right here and right now you're in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, you're in the middle of the only thing that can be confronting you because God is the only Presence and Power. And just as you don't have a curiosity to know the meaning and the experience of your divine origin if you think you don't have one, you likewise find yourself experiencing no curiosity about your world and universe as the Kingdom of Heaven when you think that it is also a fluke of nature—a temporary physical event.

And so all day long as you are attending to life as you perceive it to be you are neglecting, you are neglecting with commitment because of your focus on what you think it is. You are neglecting with commitment to be curious to see the Presence of God and the Kingdom of Heaven right here. That amounts to a denial of it. When you are not looking to see what's really there because you are committed to what you think is there, you are by virtue of your focused attention on what you think is there, blocking out and in that sense denying the Kingdom of Heaven. And so I have talked endlessly about the necessity of developing a curiosity to look at everything with innocent eyes. And you could say sinless eyes. Eyes that are not biased by a misunderstanding of your origin or the origin of All That Is.

I fully understand that at times you look out at your world, and you are absolutely convinced that God isn't here, and that the world as you perceive it is an absolute that is governing your experience and therefore the injustice that you are experiencing you have no escape from. I understand that that is the way it appears sometimes based upon what you are committed to believe about your world. But when you are willing to let there be a little weakness in your commitment to what you think you are, when you are willing to even just play with the idea that maybe right here and right now you are an utterly divine presence, that you are at this moment the forever fresh expression of God, if you're just willing to play with that idea even though it seems totally unreasonable, do you see that your commitment to your definition of what you are and what everything is has been weakened because you are willing to consider another possibility.

And when that weakness in what you had been totally committed to before occurs the penetration of Reality has a chance of occurring and you will experience transformation. Your world will begin to reflect back to you a closer approximation of the Kingdom of Heaven than you had allowed yourself to see before because you were so sure it was something else—something else that couldn't possibly have as it's underlying makeup essential Love, the Love expressed by the Father in His/Her expression of His/Her integrity, indivisible integrity.

I want to bring out one other point in regard to this as well, and that is that at the times when you are so firmly convinced that there is no God and that crisis is going to grind you into nothing, at the very moment when you are feeling this with such great conviction that is the time when there is the greatest potential for breakthrough of what is really going on.

To tell you the truth it's when you are all having a really good experience with no threat that you go through your days with a self-confidence that the way you understand everything to be is the way it is and that therefore there's absolutely no need whatsoever for you to consider any other possibility. Why make waves? If everything's going smoothly leave it alone, you see. That attempt to keep everything on an even keel when it is going fairly well means that you are consciously insisting upon stability, solidity. But do you realize that if you actually were able to bring everything into an unchanging state of perfection let's say, that that would be death. You would have taken life and made it absolutely dependably unchanging, which is not the definition of life.

“Behold I make all things new!” This is the dictum of the Prime Mover, of God. That means there is going to be forever unfoldment of that which you weren't expecting. Now that's not called stability. And yet because it is the expression of an indivisible and therefore undivided intelligence called God there cannot be polarities. There can't be contests. There can't be war. There can't be conflict. And therefore this Movement of “Behold I make all things new” is utterly safe. And so you don't need to get it to stop moving in order to feel safe.

Who of you would take this delightful 18 month old child that you see in front of you and say, “Stop! Hold it there. No more growth! You are so perfect I want to enjoy you just as you are and I do not want you to change so that I have to change. The perfection of you is so delightful I want to capture it.” Well, you don't want to capture life either. But what you want to do is you want to become free of this original sin, this original mistake so that your no longer feeling separate from this impulse, this intelligent conscious impulse of “Behold I make all things new.” Because when you are not experiencing yourself as separate from it then it is the Movement of your Being. When you are not holding your conscious awareness of self separate from God then the Mind that God is becomes revealed to you as yours. And in that radical experience the forever Movement of “Behold I make all things new,” is not longer something happening to you, but for you it is You happening.

I do not want to belabor this point but it is important. I do not mean that you separate from God experience having the Mind of God, being able to do the things that God does. When all of you wake up and the original mistake about or misunderstanding about who you are vanishes you find that the infinite Creation of God that you have called mankind, and which I will call the Brotherhood and Sisterhood of Man/Woman (we can get very complicated) the infinite expression of God is still infinitely expressed. But no part of the infinite expression of God is claiming that it is existing on its own. And so the whole Brotherhood, the whole Family of God experiences simultaneously being specific and Universal.

And so you do not get swallowed up in God, but you do come to the experience of the fact that God is All There Is of You. And you have abandoned thinking that you can act on your own. And you realize that if you are acting it is because God is Moving.

You each came from various points on this part of your globe, quite independent of each other you think. But God Moved and you are here. God Moved and I am here. Why? Because for everyone here this time, this moment identifies fulfillment of purpose for each one of you. Likewise, an hour before you all got here, wherever you were you were still as a group you might say, acting in concert, all intending to come here, or all in the process of coming here because there was a Movement of God. And that is why you cried, because you were paying attention beyond the limits of just a puny little human being saying, “I’m going to a Raj afternoon.”

So I do mean to convey to you that this moment isn’t any more divine and is not any more geared toward the experience of fulfillment of God’s purpose than that of an hour ago or a week ago of each of you individually. I want you to understand that whether you have your world reflecting back to you as clearly as you do at this moment that you are the Presence of the Movement of God in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. Again, whether your world is reflecting this back to you as clearly as it is right now all the time that is still the fact all the time.

Because of expectations and hopes many people find themselves experiencing light bulbs going on regarding their divinity, regarding their essential worth, regarding their integrity when they come to one of these gatherings or to a meditation retreat or any other single function that has as its motivation self-help. Why? Why does it happen there and not during the week when you’re in the middle of your work? It isn’t because the event held that in store for you, because every moment holds that in store for you. It’s just that you opened the door of your curiosity.

And I’m saying let your curiosity be present while you are opening the mail or typing the boss’s letter, or correcting an employee, or filling out your tax forms. Because if God isn’t doing it it isn’t happening. But something is happening and so God has to be in it. If you’re having a conscious experience God has to be in it, whether you are misinterpreting the experience or not. And whether you’re misinterpreting who you are doing it or not.

Now you know it’s not really going to be possible to understand your holiness, because your divinity, your Sonship and Daughtership, your Christhood, your innocence isn’t constituted of ideas—there’s not a spiritual way to say it’s in your genes—but it is in your essential presence which you experience as being conscious. So what I am enticing, what I am inviting you to do by saying be curious about your divinity, is not to be curious to have an explanation of your divinity unfold to you so that you can understand it.

I want you to be curious to have an influx of an experience of it, like an intangible infilling of Love that let you feel undeniable that you are not alone and your fear that you’re alone is what governs almost all of your actions. Because once you know you’re not alone, and that what accompanies you, the presence with you is a presence of Love that is so pure that it discloses to you your innocence, because only that which is innocent can be that purely loved. That... that is what I am talking about becoming curious about. That is what will replace the original misunderstanding, which became identified as a sin, or identifiable as sin when commitment to it occurred.

We will take a break.

QUESTION: Okay Raj, the second part of my question is in scripture it says don't do things to allow your brother to sin. Now don't do what, or am I not responsible for what they think they do?

RAJ: Again.

QUESTION: Okay in scripture it says, don't do things that would make your fellow man sin. Now even being here some people would consider a sin—my being here. Am I responsible for that? And to what degree am I responsible or not responsible?

RAJ: It is impossible for you to be responsible for another's actions. The saying, "the devil made me do it," is a cop out. Each one does what he does for his or her own reasons, always.

So, what responsibility if any do you have? Well, what you see is what you get. What you see is what you get. And when what you see changes, so does what you get. What kind of eyes are you going to look through at your brother? The eyes of innocence? If so, what you will see will be innocence. If your brother sees himself, and what he sees is based on his original misunderstanding, then his actions are going to arise out of that misunderstanding and will be inappropriate. But if you are looking through innocent eyes, if you are not suffering from that original misunderstanding, you will not confirm to your brother his misunderstanding.

So if you do not want to "contribute to your brother sinning," you will be very careful about what eyes you look through so that you do not confirm to your brother that his actions, based on a misunderstanding are valid. And if you are not confirming to him his misunderstanding, which is most certainly what he expects from you, you could say it throws him a curve because you didn't do the expected. And if you didn't do the expected and he didn't get the confirmation of his sense of himself, you have provided what I will call fertile soil for him to realize that maybe he's wrong about who he thinks he is. Yes, because you did not confirm... (I could not hear some dialog here with the questioner.) ...indeed.

When you looking through innocent eyes respond to him on the basis of the innocence you see, which is not the response that he expects then you have provided the fertile ground for him to realize that maybe the way he is seeing himself is not absolute. "Well, if you see something in me that I don't see, that you must because of the way you responded, maybe there is another way to look at this." And that is the weakness in his commitment to his sense of himself that is all that is necessary, it is a minimal level of curiosity you might say. But that is exactly when opportunity for insight can occur. You see?

Now if he doesn't take the hint and doesn't get the insight and continues that is his decision. He is responsible from his act from that point on, just as he was before. It simply means that he missed an opportunity to have a new reason for doing something. It's not your responsibility to see to it that he got the point.

All I am ever doing when I am relating to any of you is reflecting back to you that which you weren't expecting. Because I am not confirming to you your current sense of yourself. And until each one of you is Awake your guidance, whether it is me or whoever, your guidance will always be reflecting back to you a clearer sense of who you are than what you are expecting. Because the point is for you not to continue to miss the experience of your Birthright.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: My question is of a personal nature. I experience preoccupation and anxiety around eating. I wonder if you could comment on my relationship with food?

RAJ: It certainly needs to be improved. Specifically how does the fear present itself to you?

QUESTION: I feel I have hunger I'm trying to fill. I'll eat too much, or too fast or the wrong things that I know won't agree with me. I love food and I love preparing it and I feel lustful about it sometimes. I think about it a lot...

RAJ: You know what?

QUESTION: What?

RAJ: I'm glad you love something. Why the sense of it being lustful? Only because you love something you think you're not supposed to have. And when somebody wants something that they're not supposed to have it's called lust. You need a better relationship with food. I want you to just consider the possibility that your relationship with food should appropriately be one of loving it.

Now if God is indivisible, then God is undivided. And that means that His self-expression, Her self-expression is not divided. Anything that is not divided is incapable of acting against something else. It is impossible for that which reflects unity to be at odds—the very concept of being at odds is nonsense.

“Well, the food is food and my body is my body and they're obviously not the same thing. The food doesn't live off of me but my body lives off the food. They have different functions. They are different things. And of course, I'm having a problem with this fundamental original misunderstanding, which means that everything I look at is bound to reflect the sense of vulnerability I'm experiencing because I feel separated from the whole. So I guess I'm just bound to experience threat and potential harm, whether it's from food or whether it's from circumstances or whatever. I guess I'm just bound to have to deal with that until I wake up.”

But you see, the infinite expression of God is not polarized. And whether you have completely awakened or not any aspect of your experience that you are willing to embrace without defense will tend to sit with you, abide with you harmlessly. Because when you are not approaching it with defense you are being a benign presence itself. And when you are being a benign presence, the presence of your world becomes benign for you because it was always expressing unity even though your misunderstanding caused you to believe otherwise and respond to it as though it were an enemy. And when you do that you are in a mode of attack, because you are saying, “you cannot express a unity, you are not expressing a unity, you are not what you are and I reject you.” You see? And then you experience it rejecting you. And it’s all a lie.

Now the reason I can say it’s a lie is because the moment you lower your defenses, the moment you are willing to experiment with looking with innocent eyes instead of giving the thing the definition that you have made up, the minute you do that you have practiced forgiveness. Which really means that you’ve withdrawn your judgment. And in the absence of judgment you as the perceiver and it as the perceived, or you as the eater and it as the eaten are able to be experienced in the unity that it has.

You know one only compulsively clutches for something they think they cannot have. And you think you cannot have it because you are not supposed to have it and the fact that you really want it is lustful. And what does that say about your character. And it’s all bull shit!

You do not have to be afraid that if you let yourself thoroughly enjoy your food without guilt that you will soon become a blimp. Because I will tell you that when you are really loving it from your peace there will be no compulsion present.

Now initially you may have to exercise a little bit of common sense so that you do not gorge yourself. You see I want you to know that when you dare to embrace and express love without fear, love without guilt for your food the ego could say, “Well, Raj says it’s all a unity, and if it’s all a unity you can eat enough for five people and there cannot be a conflicted result.” But your just one people, so use common sense as you dare to love. Because as you dare to love the habit will fade. But until it has faded completely you will have to simply exercise common sense just as you would with a child that you know has had enough to sustain him, but who wants more cake. You see?

I meant it when I said I was glad you had something to love. What you need to do is stop seeing that which you love as that which you cannot have. And then try to live in the contest between those two things.

If this world and universe is the Kingdom of Heaven and if it is true that it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, to give you all of it then it is here for your pleasure, it is here to be enjoyed. It’s essential perfection and love and divinity is not supposed to escape you. The experience of food is not supposed to meaningless. The experience of relationships is not supposed to be meaningless. And God saw all that he had made and not only was it not meaningless, it was very good! There is no sin here. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I'm embarking on what feels like the biggest project in my outer world that I've ever done. It's called the "Listening Project." And last week I experienced some paralysis about getting started with it. And the words weren't coming when I sat down to type and etc. And even though I feel 99% sure this 1% of the place where I'm unsure with how I'm going forward with it frightens me a lot. And there's questions that I have that the risks seem very great.

RAJ: When you speak of listening, you mean listening for guidance?

QUESTION: Listening to other people, listening to other people as a form of conflict resolution. Giving the gift of listening. And I've had lots of challenges from people saying, "no it needs to be a dialog project," and I feel very, very certain, I feel 99% certain that it needs to be the gift of listening. And that one percent of uncertainty feels so big to me and I want to just trust myself and go forward.

RAJ: Well, you know what, you're just going to have to go forward even though that one present is there. You must also understand that although it feels like the 99% is the hardest it is really the last 1%. Because the last 1% is where commitment occurs, 99% is still safe, but it's when that last 1% is given up that's when commitment has occurred. That last 1% is the part the ego thinks will save its ass. But if you will let that 1% be there and if you will just notice the ego doing its little jig, expressing its doubts, whatever, and you say, "Oh, there goes the ego doing its little jig," and you bring your attention back to the 99% you will billed over time an experience of the value of that 99%. And that experience will be what will allow you to completely disregard the 1%. And in completely disregarding it it will disappear.

As I said earlier, each of you do what you do for your own reasons, never for other peoples reasons. And you will not let go of that 1% until you can do it for your reasons. And you will not have the courage to do it for your reason until the other 99% has become so obviously valuable to you that the 1% is obviously useless. And then for your reason you will release it. And in this way the integrity of you will have accompanied you to this new level of commitment because you did it for your reason. You see what I mean?

So you're going to have to let that 1% be there and honor the other 99% enough to give it a chance to prove its value. That's the simplest way I can put it. And there's no magic way out of it. Any other way would require you to violate or abandon your integrity because you would be doing it without knowing why, you would be doing it not for your reasons—that's what I mean.

So continue valuing the 99% and let the ego whine!

QUESTION: I was told several years ago that I would have healing energy coming from the palms of my hands. And I've had several experiences demonstrating that that has happened, but it's not consistently apparent. Then I was given a very powerful guide and you've confirmed that she was to teach me about healing under your supervision. But I have not pursued it, there is some reluctance on my part—some reluctance there, some unwillingness. And my question is am I to move ahead exploring this potential and I am to work with her, and if so, how?

RAJ: It's so important to pay attention to the obvious. It's so important to pay attention to what is obvious before you have taken the time to think about what is obvious. If the motivation isn't there, it isn't there. It means the Movement isn't there yet—that's the obvious. When the Movement is there you will Move! It's only after paying attention to the fact that the Movement isn't there that then you can say, "well, but it's supposed to be there, somebody told me it was there. I must be missing it. What's wrong with me?" But the truth was present in what was simply obvious. The Father's Will was present in the simply obvious. So there is no problem. And when you feel the Movement you'll Move, not because somebody said it would be there, but because it's there. You see?

QUESTION: It feels like laziness sometimes.

RAJ: When the Movement is there, you'll Move.

QUESTION: It also feels like sometimes I get ahead of the guidance and my timings not the same as God's timing. And that sounds like what you're saying.

RAJ: You've heard the joke, "if you want to make God laugh tell him your plans." It is a truism.

Somewhere along the line all of you have to begin to get the glimmer of the fact that there is divine order now. You also have to come to a time when you realize that you don't want to understand the truth to correct anything, you want to understand the truth so that you can see things as they truly are where nothing requires correction, else your quest for truth will be based upon this original misunderstanding in which you feel small and vulnerable, in which the Kingdom of Heaven and Reality appears to be polarized and therefore in which it's your task to overcome. And so your quest for truth will always be seen as a better means of overcoming instead of that which uncovers the falsity, the nonsense of this original misunderstanding—which always will free you up to experience curiosity and the willingness to look with innocent eyes.

And of course, it is a fact that when that curiosity is practiced and allowed and you are not defended against seeing everything with new eyes, it will certainly look like there's correction occurring because your view will be transformed—and where there was illness there will not be, and where there was imperfection there will not be, and where there was ugliness there will be beauty. But it will not be because truth transformed the ugly into the beautiful, or the sick into the well, but because the misunderstanding which was the basis of your perception of everything will have been released—and in Biblical terms the scales will fall from your eyes and you will see everything as it was all along.

So you really have no idea what it means that there will be healing in your hands. And you'll have to wait until the Movement occurs to find out. Obviously it will not be to change an unhealed thing into a healed thing. And you don't know whether it will be well or useful for it to last for 3 seconds or 30 years or be continuous or intermitted. If it happens, it will happen as an integral part of your breakthroughs relative to the original misunderstanding.

Another wonderful thing about it is that you will not be able to ever understand how Love works, but you'll be able to feel it. And that's how you will come to know who you are and abandon who you thought you were.

I will keep reminding everyone that waking up, becoming enlightened, coming back into your Right Mind is not going to be an intellectual process. It is going to be, for lack of better words, an experience of the heart or an experience of the Soul. And it happens when you're not doing anything else, it happens when you are not "being a healer," it happens when you aren't "laying on hands," it happens when you aren't studying "A Course In Miracles," even though your study of the Course or any other holy book may help bring you to the point where you can stop doing anything else because there has grown enough trust that there is a God and that God is omnipotent and omnipresent that therefore you can feel safe enough not to be doing anything other or different from what God is being you at that moment.

We are going to take another break, and I want all of you to understand that these breaks are occurring because they are appropriate even though you would love to have me speak at greater length and perhaps have more questions asked. But just as all of you 2 hours before you arrived here were acting in concert because God was being the Movement, everything that is happening here including the breaks is part of the concert. And it's absolutely perfect. So we will take another break.

QUESTION: I just wanted to ask of your confirmation on a couple of things. One is, I understand from my guide his name is George, so I wanted to ask you of your confirmation. And the other is...

RAJ: Let us do one at a time.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: You have heard correctly.

QUESTION: Thank you, and I like him a lot.

RAJ: That is helpful.

QUESTION: And he's very humorous. And the other thing that I wanted to ask...

RAJ: I will interrupt. It is important for you to know, all of you, as you open up to the experience of guidance that the communion because it is communion is very intimate and it's going to be perfect for you. Listening requires defenselessness. And defenseless means not having any control. The reason I'm saying this is that if you are opening up you are becoming curious and you're willing to allow yourself to experience guidance, if you expect the guidance to sound like me that is a defense. It is a defense in that your expectation doesn't leave the field wide open for the experience of that which is perfect for you.

There have been occasions when individuals have not heard their guides because they were expecting their guide to sound like me. On one occasion their guide finally spoke in someone else's voice, a girl friend's voice, which got his attention. And then after 3 or 4 days of conversations his guide, which was female, dropped the other voice—his girl friend's voice, but he didn't hear because he had an expectation.

I can be funny at times, but your guide is funnier. And so I want you to understand that the experience is a very original experience for each one of you. So comparisons are useless. That's what I wanted to convey.

QUESTION: And the other confirmation that I wanted to hear: from the tapes (which by the way are so important to me, I have no clue what my life would be like without the messages on the tapes) but what I've been hearing in the last month or two is the message that "I am God being Jean." And it's pretty overwhelming to me. Just as you are God being Paul, etc.

RAJ: I tend to be very, very careful, instead of saying, "I am God being Jean," say, "God being Jean is All There Is of Me." The reason being that when you use the word "I" it is almost impossible for that word not to mean or at least greatly include all of your prior definitions of you. And you as you have perceived yourself are not God. Who you are as God being You is unbelievable, magnificent, whole, indescribable. And after you have had the experience then you can use the word "I" in the way that you used it, except that you're not even likely to say, "I am God being Jean," it will be, "I AM" and it will mean All including Jean. You see?

QUESTION: And that in truth is how we're all connected? And that's how you can be with so many people at the same time?

RAJ: Indeed. What you don't realize is that you are constantly with all of the Brotherhood and Sisterhood at the same time, at this moment. It is just that you are very focused on this specific aspect of the infinitude of you that is identified so closely with this part of your infinite body.

As I said earlier, God is both specific and universal at one and the same time, therefore all that God is being is specific and universal. You might say, and this is inconsistent and poor language, you might say that every expression of God is at one in the same time specific and universal. It is just that at this moment you are focused, highly focused on the specificness of your being and not paying any attention to the universalness of your being.

QUESTION: Is that my own ego that gets in the way of...?

RAJ: Let me put it this way, the choice to be focused on only the specific aspect of the universal You is what can be called the ego. Because in that highly focused context, which is an exclusive context—it's just this and not everything else—in that context you still experience yourself as conscious or consciousness. And that highly focused consciousness of things when it thinks it is the whole of you is again our original misunderstanding. And the sense of self that utilizes this original misunderstanding as the basis for understanding everything, that is called the ego. It's like a lap. When I stand up where does my lap go? It's not an actual object or presence, and neither is the ego. The ego is just what seems to be when one's attention is highly focused on the specific presence of one's self to the exclusion of the Self which is all inclusive and Whole.

QUESTION: Well, do you have some advice on how to get there quicker—short cuts?

RAJ: Absolutely! You've been getting them all afternoon. The very act of curiosity that constitutes the making of a crack in the door, or a crack in the dike, you might say—a whole in the dike—that act right where you are of curiosity to see the Kingdom of Heaven where you thought there was just “a world and universe that started from a big bang,” and the willingness to be open to the influx of love that illuminates your innocence to you so completely that you can let go of all defense, that is the short-cut.

QUESTION: I'll sign up! Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Wow, I didn't expect that Raj, thank you.

RAJ: Then you may pass the microphone on.

QUESTION: No!

RAJ: You see when you let go of expectations... Continue.

QUESTION: All right. It seems that the time is now for Fred and I to be at a crossroads in our relationship. Both of us no longer...

RAJ: There is no seeming to it.

QUESTION: Right!

RAJ: It is one of those simply obvious things. Continue.

QUESTION: It's been challenging to say the least. And also I've been celebrating in a sense that it's here, because there's so much that we're both getting from it and there's so much more that we hope will happen, but along with that I experience anxiety, fear, sadness.

RAJ: I will tell you right now that anxiety, fear and sadness arise out of an assumption on your part that you know what's going on.

QUESTION: Then I guess it's true I really don't know what's going on, I only know how I feel. And how I feel is that this is an opportunity for us to both let go into something deeper between us...

RAJ: Whatever that might be.

QUESTION: Whatever that might be.

RAJ: And I say this because this also applies when one is letting one's self into a relationship with one's guide. Any preconceptions you bring to the event, whether it's opening up to guidance or whether it is abiding with the simply obvious thing that's happening, any expectation you bring to it makes it very difficult for the originality of the Movement of God that is really happening to register with you.

Sometimes Paul would say, "hello Raj," or "good evening Raj," and sit and listen and would hear nothing. And he would begin to think, "Oh, I'm blocking. I'm doing something wrong. Well, maybe today is the day I find out that it was all a fluke," and so on. And then he would think to ask, "are you saying anything?" And I would say, "No." The simply obvious escaped him because assumptions came into the picture. You see what I mean?

If any of you want to experience the originality of God's Self-expression, which always identifies fulfillment you are always going to have to assume that you don't have enough information yet to make any assumptions. And then listen innocently. Be present innocently. You see? Continue.

QUESTION: So how would you say I'm doing?

RAJ: Well, I love you. It's not a test. You are loved. You know what? You're going to get the fulfillment know matter how you do.

QUESTION: Oh, boy!

RAJ: So don't distract yourself with that kind of a question, "how am I doing." Hopefully the question is, "how is God doing."

Now by the same token if there were something you needed to be doing differently you would hear me sitting here telling you. Continue to engage in trust as you have been—not trust in Fred, not trust in yourself, not trust in circumstances—but trust that if anything is happening at all it's God Moving. And as I said earlier because God is indivisible then His Movement is unconflicted and therefore has to identify that which is Soul satisfying for everyone concerned.

And so I have a feeling, I know that in the next weeks to come you are going to have that question come to you again, "how am I doing," or the suggestion will come, "I'm not dealing with this to well." When that comes to you remember my answer to your question, "how am I doing." And my answer was and will be, "I love you." That's all you need to know.

QUESTION: Thank you for your answer last month. I am practicing complete sobriety now. My question is this therapist I'm working with has suggested that I was using to cover up depression caused by chemical imbalance and they want me to take anti-depressants, which I do not want to take. And what I'm wanting to do you know you talked about...

RAJ: I'm going to encourage you to refuse to take them, but agree to continue to work with the therapist in all other respects relative to the issues that need to be dealt with. I ask you to ask him to give you a period of time--3 to 4 months—at the end of which you are willing to sit down and talk with him and get his evaluation as to whether or not he still feels they would be helpful. That degree of reasonableness coming from you he will be able to agree with, cooperate with. Whereas if you just say, “no, I'm not going to do it,” he will suggest that you both look into why it is that you feel so strongly and unreasonably on this situation. Continue.

QUESTION: After they suggested the issue of depression I started reading up on it and when they said there are 10 symptoms and I have 8 of them...

RAJ: Um, are you one of those ones who is going to become a text book client?

QUESTION: No I'm not. But my question is this: Do I have chemical imbalance does it need to be addresses from a naturopathic perspective? And should I pursue that? Because when I talk to my naturopath about that he said, “no, no, no, don't use anti-depressants,” and he wanted to run a blood test just to see if there's other things. Because I do have lots of odd physical symptoms, energy fluctuations and spaciness and odd things that I'm weary of dealing with.

RAJ: Sobriety as you called it, will cause the diminishment of these various symptoms. No you do not... as I've been telling you for some time you do not have anything physically wrong with you—I mean that needs to be addressed. And finally you are addressing what needs to be addressed. So continue without becoming scattered by researching other avenues and let the appropriateness of what you're doing have time to become identified as your healing process.

And remember that healing is always a revealing, an uncovering of the divine One that you have been all along. We're not going to turn a sow's ear into a silk purse. If you realize that you will also realize then that discovering that a silk purse was a silk purse to begin with does not involve a great deal of work. Changing a sow's ear into a silk purse is quite a job.

I want you to be aware that these next few months are going to require patience on your part. You see, it isn't something that we need to get done! There needs to be enough absence of getting things done so that there is a level of inactivity, a level of quiet or peace in which the Whole you, the in-balance you to begin to register with you. It is again like coming in from a bright beach into a bungalow where the drapes are drawn and you can't see because of the contrast. This is not a time to rush around trying to overcome your blindness. You have to just stand still in the lesser light and let what will naturally happen, happen—your eyes adjust and then you will see.

So, you're in a process of coming down from a high, a false high and a false experience of who you Are. There's no rush to it. When I first came along or shortly there after, Paul asked for healing of an arthritic pain in both shoulders, but especially the right shoulder. I said, "Okay." And so he laid down at a specific time and for lack of better words we had a healing session. And when I told him it was over and he sat up and it wasn't gone he thought something was wrong. He thought that if we were the clear presence of the Father's will that we should be able to eradicate what was an illegitimate imposition upon one of God's Sons, him. An illusion should just disappear in the presence of divine clarity. But it wasn't.

And he realized, as I was sharing a few moments ago, that out of the blue he had expectations, even though just talking to his guide was a mind blowing new experience for him and to have healing work done by those who are awake was equally new to him. And where did he get his expectation from? It actually took 90 days. At the end of 90 days and ever since there has not been a twinge of discomfort in his shoulders. And at the end of 90 days he realized what had he been quibbling about? It was amazing that it was gone in 90 days. You see.

You don't have to waste your time with, "why isn't it going faster, what am I doing to block it?" That's more trying. That's more efforting. That's more of this busyness that constitutes a willfulness that is the opposite of yielding. And you yield into your healing. You yield into the adjustment of your eyes when you come in from a bright place into a dark place. You see?

So, you're going to have to exercise patience, not so that you can get to the end result faster, but so that you can be in the frame of mind that allows you to experience more innocent vision and therefore clearer perception of the perfect you. And maybe you'll never stop doing that. Maybe learning to yield into the allowing of the experience of your divinity is not something you will do for 90 days so that you can be healed of addiction, maybe it's something that you will do forever because that's what's natural to you. And in the process, which didn't represent you truly, will disappear along with many other things.

QUESTION: I'm for it.

RAJ: I know you are.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ CLOSING COMMENTS: Thank you, it has been another wonderful afternoon. God did it perfectly. In concert God did it perfectly. And it wasn't meaningless. And I'll be very frank with you I enjoyed it and it felt good and it's supposed to. And I hope, I hope, I hope that you will let yourself enjoy eating and feel good about the fact that you have the capacity to let in your joy, to let in the delight of experiencing good food.

You see when the alarm on the septic system when off, Paul didn't get up and turn it off, I got up and turned it off. It's very important for you to know that your divinity is relevant to your humanity right down to the shoveling of shit. Nothing is outside the perfect Movement of God. And you aren't outside your capacity because of your divinity to be appropriate at every moment, right where you are. And as you get the hang of it, as you get the idea you will realize, "of course, how could I possibly have clarified vision of the Kingdom of Heaven if I'm not willing to look where it is. And if it's the only thing going on, it's got to be right there on the alarm on the septic tank, or eating, or letting go of addiction. You see?"

Some of you might think, "Oh, that brings God too close for comfort—right here." Thank God, because it means that the trek home is a journey without distance.

Thank you for being with me.

QUESTION: I'm concerned about my ability to be a full time parent and still pursue a career that would allow for an economically stable life and financial independence from Steven. I'm wanting to realize more income through my artwork and how should I approach that?

RAJ: Well first of all, I encourage you to be open to the possibility that your fulfillment may come in other terms than the one's you just described. You see for everyone it is so easy to say to one's self, "I know that such-and-such would be the appropriate and intelligent and loving way for things to work. Father please help me to have it this way." When the key is, literally, to start out by saying, "Thy will not mine be done. And I am very curious Father to know what Your Will is." And you can replace the word Father with Mother or Universe or Prime Mover. But the point is that no matter what word you use you want to express a desire to be providing no biases to the registering of your experience of fulfillment in your mind.

You cannot say, "Father I know this would be good, and so this is where I will be looking for your answer," because this means I will not be looking anywhere else. You see, when you do this you are yielding rather than controlling—you are inviting rather than determining how things ought to be.

What you want is not what you think you want. What you want is what works! Well, what works, what does that mean "what works"? In what respect? When I say, "What you want is what works," I mean what you want is that which identifies fulfillment for everyone with whom you are involved with—yourself, your children, your husband who you are separated from, your possible or probable employer, etc. What you want is to know where you are supposed to be so that your being there truly identifies fulfillment for everyone.

Now I want to be very clear, when I said that you needed to be open to that which was beyond your concept of what would meet your need, I did not mean to imply that what you described is not the way it will turn out. But if you want to see it turn out the way it is supposed to turn out because it identifies your fulfillment, you must be willing from the outset to set aside any concept you have as to how it ought to work out so that you can let go of any tininess that you are entertaining about yourself—and for lack of better words—tap into the larger picture, tap into the fulfillment of purpose that it is your Birthright to be experiencing, not because you think you know what it is but because the Father is being it at this very instant and it is awaiting your conscious awareness of it. And so when you are saying, “here is what I need Father,” you are sending a message rather than being in an attitude of attentiveness, whereby what the Father is giving can penetrate whatever wall may be there and register with you.

So I am addressing here an attitude. It is the very same thing I have been talking to Steven about. And what blesses him will bless you. What I have been telling him that has been the truth will bless you because the principle is the same for you.

When you say, “Thy will not mine be done,” it could feel as though you are opening yourself up to infinite possibilities. What I want you to understand is that what you let in, that what the Father will respond with will not be an infinity of opportunities. It will be very specific!

And so, in abandoning any preconceptions you have as to how it ought to work out you will not be opening yourself up to a confusing array of potentials. All you will really be doing is abandoning a focus that you were bringing to the process that itself constituted a limit to the possibilities. So it’s the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, it is your Birthright to not be experiencing a lack in any area at any time. And so when you say, “Thy will, not mine be done,” you are saying, “share with me that which specifically identifies needs met,” know that it’s your Birthright. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello, it’s good to be here in Washington.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: This is a time of transition for me. Meg Wheatly might say I’m in a state of chaos, reorganizing through a higher order. And I hope this is true.

RAJ: You can count on it! There really is no other option!

QUESTION: I’ve been feeling lost and unsure of my next step. I feel the urge to move but I don’t know where.

RAJ: Then don’t move until you know.

QUESTION: I need to earn money, but have been unwilling to do work that seems menial to me.

RAJ: And you will continue not to have money as long as you make that decision.

QUESTION: This is good! I’ve written a book but I don’t understand where it belongs. I have a lot of energy and I don’t know where to focus it. I’ve been feeling tired and angry and feeling what I have to give is invisible or invaluable. I feel caught between what is true inside and the way life works on the outside.

RAJ: You remind me of Paul!

QUESTION: Is there a reason for me to be on the planet right now?

I want to live and I...

RAJ: Well, what is your alternative? I am not being smart here! But I am asking you so that you might realize that the question really means nothing, “why am I on the planet right now”. If you truly have no alternative then you might as well pay attention to being here. Because obviously if this is where your presence of mind is being aware, then this is where to give your attention—this is where to be curious. But continue...

QUESTION: I want to live and I want to thrive...

RAJ: You want to live, did you say?

QUESTION: Yeah.

RAJ: I know you can take this. I am very glad that you want to live, because again you have no other choice. Don't want to live if you are already living. Continue...

QUESTION: Do you have any suggestions that will help me to proceed?

RAJ: Well, I will tell you that all of the things that you just talked about are nothing but distractions you are providing yourself with, distracting you from allowing yourself to be fully present in the moment as who you Are. They are distractions from your allowing yourself to be present in the moment fully enough and quietly enough to have the opportunity to experience what this presence is that you Are. You do not have to be afraid of finding out. You do not have to be afraid that you will find out that there is nothing really here of any value.

As reconfiguration occurs little elements of your life will seem to no longer relate to each other in a way that secures a sense of identity for you. And yet you will find yourself still present observing these elements that had provided you with a sense of identity and substance no longer being cohesive. You will find yourself still observing these elements no longer seeming to be cohesive. They're disbanding, as it were, from that which seemed to hold you together and will not disrupt you from being the presence of awareness or the presence of mind that is watching them do this. You will remain absolutely permanently present! As these things which you had used in order to have a sense of identity seem to fragment and float away from you, you will find there is less covering You up from your Self.

You know what's there underneath all these things? What is there about you that is eternal, forever present? It is Love! You know we talk a lot about Awakening, you hear talk about resurrection, I have spoken about coming Home with a capital “H”, Remembering with a capital “R” the truth about yourself—and

I'm not just addressing her, this is true of every single one of you. And I know some of you have wondered, "what is it, what is it that I have forgotten that something in me is moving me to remember? What is it?" I will put it this way, what you have forgotten is how to Love! And what you will remember is how to Love!

Some of you have felt out of place, you might say, since you were three months old, one year old, two years old. Some of you have never felt happy here. Well, I'll tell you something, it isn't because it's such an awful place. It's because you have forgotten how to Love. You have forgotten how to Be Love.

I'm going to take a few moments to share some things with you. There is something quite essential to Being the Presence of Love. And what it is that is essential to it is a lot less than what you are bringing to the living of your life. In order to let the Love that you are move into expression you must give up some things—some excess baggage. For example, defense, judgment, plans of your own, insecurity. Interesting, you thought insecurity was something you had because you gave up security and now I'm saying you must give up insecurity? Yes, insecurity felt and practiced is a defense. It is a way to keep yourselves preoccupied so that you don't find out what's underneath this thing called insecurity. And what's underneath it is this Love that each one of you Are—your essential Being. Fear is another thing that you will have to drop from your knapsack! Pride... Personal success...

Now I agree that this is nothing new. And yet it is very important for me to reestablish in your awareness that all of these things stand in the way of your being quiet enough, being present enough with this presence of mind that you are that you would have the opportunity to discover the feeling of the presence that you Are, which is a Movement of Love.

This book or yours, this opportunity to work and have income, what are they if they're not the opportunity to be in the Movement of the Love that you Are so that you might let it find expression. They are not means of getting anything! Who are all of these people who for whatever reason don't find value in anything you have to share? Well, they aren't somebody there to validate you by finding value in what you have to share. They are, I'm going to say, the opportunities you have to share and fulfill your purpose for being in the giving, whether it's received, whether it's understood, whether it's valued or not. Because I want to tell you something: more than the items that you would share it's the fact that you were giving without self-protection, without fear, without judgment, without self-righteousness that constituted the real gift. The real gift is when you are being present not covered over by anything whatsoever!

I want to come back to the fact that any distress you might be feeling is not because of circumstances—any of the list that you read off, so to speak, at the beginning, but because you have forgotten something. And this is true of everyone in any aspect of their lives. You are afraid, you are judgmental, you are defensive, you are unforgiving, and on and on. Why? Because you have forgotten something, not because there are justifications for these things—it is because you have forgotten something. And so, the answer lies in your remembering. And this is what you could call a reconfiguration at a higher level, we could say reconfiguration at a more fundamental level. And that which is more fundamental is more universal, it is therefore more natural. It is not something you are working towards but something you are letting yourself into.

Remember, all of you please remember that you cover over the fundamental Presence of your Being which is the impulse of Love which has its source in God. It is a matter of covering it over with distractions of fear, judgment, hate, self-righteousness, goal seeking, willfulness, doing good based upon thinking rather than the good that you would spontaneously do as a result of being Conscious of your Self as the Presence of Love. You cover over the Love that you Are with things which you have come to conclude are essential to survival. And because you think they are essential to survival they are worth every ounce of energy you can bring to them so that you can survive. And yet you have no choice but to survive because you Are the Essence and Presence of Life in action already.

The things you were concerned about in the expression of your question all had to do with survival—survival relative to the dynamics of relationships and the power they seem to hold over the ease or lack of ease of your survival. And I am giving you a new point of attention. The point of attention that I am drawing your attention to, is that in you which is underneath all of these distractions, which is the Presence of God which I am calling the Presence of Love. And you being the Presence of Love are the absence of fear, hate, anxiety, judgment and on and on and on. Therefore, this that I am redirecting your attention to is something very valuable, because it is you experiencing the Essential Integrity of your Being so completely that fear and all that follows fear is nothing but nonsense, is nothing to attend to because you are not blocked in anyway from being the fulfillment of purpose that God has in Mind in being you at this very instant.

I want you also to understand that although this could sound like a dissertation on the spirituality of Being, I am describing the actuality of being right here in this very instant, which is absolutely relevant to right where you are—right where everyone of you is. I'm expressing the truth of the instant you're in and the truth of you in this instant. But you say, "Well I understand what you're saying. But when I leave this room and go back into the world, what you've said isn't going to mean beans, because I'm going to have to relate to the world the way the world says I'm going to have to relate to it."

Well, there's another one of those distractions again. It's not true. There is no reason for you to abandon the genuineness of the Presence of You that is Love and cover it over with a disguise and pretend that you are somebody else and forget who you Really Are and never make the full Gift of your Self. There is no requirement for you to do that! I'm not really picking on you, but you did ask the question. There is no requirement for you to be ingénue! You can be Present in a new way.

And the discovery all of you have waiting you is that when you refuse to be present in the world covered over by fear and defense you will not become dysfunctional. That's the discovery you have awaiting for you. You will not become such a radical presence that no one will understand you. You will be even more meaningful. And the primary reason that you will be more meaningful is because in your expression of your Self there will be no apology for what you are expressing because there will be no fear there. And when there's no fear, people know they are safe. And when people know they are safe they lower their defenses and they let something in. And what could possibly cause someone to lower their defenses but the Presence of Love?

It was important for all of you to hear this today. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Raj, I've discovered that my basic needs are food, clothing, shelter, oxygen, water, love and self-esteem. And I'm trying to take care of them physically, emotionally, mentally and spiritually. Am I missing anything?

RAJ: Yes, indeed! You missed the answer that occurred just before the break! The things that you listed are not your needs. Your need is to remember how to Love. And when you remember how to Love then all of those things that you listed will spontaneously be dealt with appropriately.

All of those things that you mentioned are what I'm going to call the things of the world, that all of you when you leave here will be inclined to think you must attend to and that they have more importance than your finding every way you can to be still within yourself so that you might feel the Movement of Love that is the Movement of You. And then dare to make the Gift of That as you attend to the activities and the things you listed.

QUESTION: One of them was love.

RAJ: However, when you used the word love in that list it did not mean Love as I am talking about. It meant love as you or others conceive love to be. Being in the Movement, being the Conscious experience of the Movement of Love that you Are does not fit any format at all. In fact, it won't be something you do for someone. And you will not see it as something that comes to you from another. If it is the presence of utter safety, if it's the presence of the integrity of you that can't be violated, and therefore you aren't experiencing even a suggestion of violation in anyway—or threat would be another way of referring to the word “violation”—if you are not experiencing that in anyway then your very presence and your actions will be spontaneous rather than premeditated. They will be goal-less rather than goal oriented.

And so you won't love for a reason you will just be the Presence... well as crazy as it sounds, the presence of beingness, which almost sounds like no presence at all. You have no idea how powerful the presence of beingness is, how powerful the presence of no threat is. Why? Because it puts everyone and everything in your vicinity at rest. It puts everyone and everything in your vicinity in a conscious state of an actual awareness that they don't need to be defensive. And this will be the effect of your Presence, even if you were lying on the couch sound asleep, expressing nothing—willfully!

You know what? Everyone and everything—and when I say everything I mean the plants, the animals, even the walls, the furniture, everything—will have an actual experience of feeling Loved. If you stop and think about it, if somebody could walk up to you and by their very presence cause you to have an experience of utter safety, of fearlessness, that would be experienced by you as the most loving thing that has ever happened to you. And yet that one will not be trying to love you! You see?

The list that came out of your mouth so rapidly is the rat race that everyone is caught up in—keeping so busy, keeping everything in order that they say they don't have time to be still and feel the Presence of them Selves that is there underneath all the busyness. Fortunately whether any of you or all of you have the time or think you have the time to become still, you will find that reconfiguration will occur of the sort that prompted your question. And all of these things requiring your attention will seem to fragment and it will be harder and harder for you to keep juggling all of the factors and keeping them straight, until finally they fly out of your hands and your caring for this long list that you were so sure of will become unachievable for you. That can be very disconcerting.

But I have shared with you today what the facts are. And as a result you don't have to wait for an unasked for reconfiguration to occur. You can begin to be less attentive to that list and more attentive to what's there in the Presence of You underneath all the busyness of taking care of these things so that you can ultimately attend to them from that Genuineness of You. That will promote reconfiguration without the stress. The reconfiguration will be more graceful.

I'm glad you asked the question.

QUESTION: So am I.

QUESTION: Well the question that I had spent some time on for quite a long time... I'm sorry, your name?

QUESTION: Henley.

QUESTION: The answer that you gave to Henley was for me too. But let me just run through this. I'm feeling really out of sync—just way out. I don't know what's going on. This past year has been the pits! And I've had some physical problems that are very distressing, particularly with my eyes, neck and circulation. And I think all this could become resolved if I could become still, but I'm having a lot of problem with that. I can't shut up long enough for meditation anymore. And all the things that... the answer that you gave to Henley... My question is, I know that..

RAJ: Before you continue, I'm going to suggest that you learn from someone a chant.

QUESTION: A mantra?

RAJ: No a chant! Like a Buddhist chant, where instead of being silent you must with your voice repeat the chant.

QUESTION: My husband would put me away. Which is not a bad idea. (laughter)

RAJ: I did not say that you had to shout the chant! The activity of saying the word out loud or the words out loud will cause you to be unable to be noisy in your mind. It will silence the thinking and will help you move into a place of quietness so that you can then stop the chant and pay attention to the silence. This will be very helpful for you. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay part of my problem in being still is being uncomfortable and trying to get past the discomfort and become still...

RAJ: Physically?

QUESTION: Yes. And it's a vicious circle. I think that the answer that you gave to Henley... My question is how do we do this? How do we drop all these things, all this baggage?

RAJ: There is a place in you, and there is a place in each of you that longs to remember. Your Sanity accompanies you no matter how far into insanity you willfully move. It is impossible to totally forget who and what you are and what your purpose is—your reason for existing. I don't mean reason for existing in this lifetime on this planet, I mean your reason for Existing period, with a capital "E". "Well, I'm here to help my husband on his spiritual path." "I'm here to help my wife." "I'm here to save the dolphins." You are here because God is expressing Himself/Herself and it looks like you and you and you and you. And the Presence of God, which is the Presence of You cannot be totally denied, not even in the imagination. So there is that in you which longs to remember, longs to have the experience of Who and what you Are so that Your/Its fulfillment isn't denied and isn't buried but is being consciously experienced.

So no matter how faint it is you are not unconscious of it. Connect with it. I've said it before, whenever Paul sits down to speak with me he says, "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness." "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of capital "B" Being, the Father's Will." In other words, he expresses a desire, a focus if you will, an intent for what is to follow, for the time that is to follow. And then he says, "Thy Will not mine be done. Let the reign (r-e-i-g-n) the divine truth, Life and Love be established in me and rule out of me all self-will. And may Thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them." Not meaning the words that are going to come out of his mouth, but may His word enrich the affections of anyone else who has and expresses the same desire that He has expressed and govern them.

So feel, no matter how faintly the feeling is, the desire that you have to remember Who you Are. And then say something similar to what Paul has said. "I allow nothing else.."

QUESTION: I use the exact words!

RAJ: Okay. Do it often. But like I said, do find someone who can share with you a chant, not a long one, a short one that you can repeat over and over. And perhaps have them sing it or say it so that you can get the feeling for inflection. In your occupying yourself with saying this chant you will not be able to occupy your mind with thinking and you will find it to be a very effective way of moving you into, we will say, another space, which is another way of saying moving you into a state of peace that you wouldn't think this little practice would accomplish.

Now I want you to remember that no matter how much you have become used to thinking, reasoning and coming to conclusions in an orderly manner so that you might have an orderly life God has still been the one in charge. And if you abandon the sense of personal responsibility for keeping everything orderly, chaos will not result because God will continue to be in charge. But in the quietness of the inactivity, you might say, of not keeping everything straight yourself, you will be able to experience more peace, and you will find yourself able to attend to what needs to be done. More than that, you will find yourself feeling without going through a thinking process, you will find yourself feeling a knowing of what is appropriate when it comes to dealing with those things. And as that begins to happen you'll feel more secure. And you will feel even less need for being in charge by means of orderly thinking.

It is difficult for many to let go of being in charge, especially if they have been excellent at it—especially if the practice has contributed to their sense of being valuable. Being valuable... But there's a blessing that you have been missing, there is a blessing that all of you have been missing who have become pretty efficient of your being in charge of your long lists of things. And that blessing is, the blessing that has been missed is that God Loves you. And that it hasn't been necessary for you to scrounge through life like a common man when by Birthright you are Royalty and your fulfillment is your Birthright.

So, as you express this desire I want you specifically to include the desire to experience God's Order in your life without your having to create the order yourself. As I said on another occasion, you might say, "If indeed I am loved by God, might I be given an experience of what that feels like."

The distresses physically that you have spoken of are an attempt on your part to try to be responsible when you are losing the ability to be responsible. Here's the way it works: You have gone along in your life and things have been relatively smooth and now it seems that things like eye sight and aspects of your physical body are, well I'm going to say, failing in one way or another, to one degree or another and then you say, "well I've got to get control of this." And it's not working! What you didn't know in the beginning was you weren't responsible to begin with for the perfect or smooth functioning of your body.

Now as I mentioned to Henley, when things start seeming to move out of your control, no matter what the details are whether they're physical, whether they're circumstantial, whatever, it means that reconfiguration is occurring. And I am not speaking of a reconfiguration called death—ultimately! It's a point of growth where there truly is a Movement occurring from the essence of you that says, "You've got to let go of control. You've got to let go of this wrapping, this garment of responsibility that you have wrapped around yourself and hidden yourself in the fullness of your Birthright with. And so I am assuring you that what is happening is not a call for fear—and do not be frightened by this word—it is a call for succumbing to the fundamental You who has slipped your mind for a lifetime or so, but whom it is time for you to remember.

Your desire that arises out of something in you that knows that there's something you have forgotten and therefore there is something for you to remember, your desire to feel that and let that be the springboard for inviting inspiration and revelation, that is what will allow the graceful move into a greater experience of fulfillment. And I mean by that: More health, clearer vision, no glasses, no systemic irregularities and on and on.

Now if discomfort seems to get in the way, I am not going to suggest as many do that you continue to sit there being uncomfortable as though that is nothing but a distraction that you must get past as part of your practice of meditation, of becoming still. Change your position, be radical and get up and move around as you continue the chant. Do the chant while you wash dishes. Allow spontaneity and freedom and common sense to be part of this. Don't sit there and endure discomfort—move—but stay with the desire, stay with the chant!

You see?

I can't say this too often, "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom"—the whole Kingdom! All that God is God gives to you as your Self. It is like having a bank account that has all there is of the wealth of the Universe in it and it awaits your going to the teller—to the window as it were—and saying, "I am ready to make a withdrawal." It's waiting for you! It's gifted to you! But you will not enjoy the gift until you say, "Yes, I'm ready to receive it!" It is inevitable because this wholeness is part of the Sanity of You that accompanies you into whatever degree of sanity you enter into. It's because it accompanies you that it is inevitable that it will finally override the willful insistence upon lack of any kind—the willful insistence upon working for your wholeness when it's an appropried gift that you couldn't abandon even if you tried, and therefore you haven't succeeded in abandoning since you have tried.

And so it is inevitable that transfiguration will occur. It is inevitable that you will wake up. And it's inevitable right now, you see. It's not in a CD that you can't cash out without a penalty until three more years has elapsed,. You see? I tell you this so that when you become discouraged and argue against the possibility of your experiencing it in this lifetime that you might be able to say, "No, Raj says the Whole gift has been made and is mine and it is inevitable that it will register with me and therefore I will persist with my desire. My desire to say, 'Yes, Father, I'm willing to receive it.'"

And you know, no matter when you finally say, "yes," whether it's here or here-after, whenever you do it for you it will be now. And since whenever you do it will be now, let now be the now! You see what I mean? It doesn't have to be the next lifetime. It doesn't have to be a year or two down the road after you have spiritually grown to the point where you deserve it. Whenever the now is that you do it, because you're not yet awake when you make that decision you will feel that you have not grown equal to it. So even if you wait two lifetimes from now to say "yes" you will still feel no more worthy of it. And so I am saying to you that concept is bull shit. Any now that you choose to say "yes" you will get it. Because... well the vault is full of your abundance, of your fulfillment, and the vault is straining at the seams, intent upon your recognizing it and saying "yes I will receive."

I said earlier that the thing you all have forgotten is how to Love. Well, the Father hasn't forgotten how to Love and the Love with which you are Loved by the Father is what is in the vault and it cannot be contained. And so it insists its way through the walls of the vault that you have built in order to keep it at a distance from you so that you might have this glorious experience of creating your own success on your own. You see?

And so when I said you need to become quiet and you need to let go of all of this excess baggage so that you might experience the essential genuine presence of you and discover that this Presence is the capacity of Love, the capacity to Love which isn't blocked in any manner, what I am saying is that you will have remembered to let the Presence of God in where you are. And the Presence of God is what is really right there where you are. And it is God's purpose that is your purpose, your reason for being here, wherever here might be, however infinite here might be.

A Course In Miracles says that love cannot be taught. That means that love cannot be practiced. And the reason love cannot be taught is because it is the Movement of God, the present, spontaneous, genuine Movement of God right where you are—the Movement of Love being the Movement of Creation in this instant.

It's all the things I described earlier. So when you are remembering who you are and what you are, it means that you have become defenseless against God. That's what the quietness is—the stillness. And the Movement you begin to feel which has nothing to do with fear, or goals, or justice, or any of the long list of things, the Movement you feel which feels like being Loved and is the impulse for being without fear and without righteousness and without defense, this is the way you come home into your Sanity.

Now I have described something that in a way could seem magnificent, but I don't want it to be turned into a lofty idea. Here's the practicality of it: When you say, "If I am loved then I desire to have an experience of what that means," we are talking about something that will allow you to sit next to Henley without any defenses yourself. And whether Henley knows where it's coming from or not she will involuntarily find herself feeling no need for defense either. To remember who you Are, to have the experience of being Loved by God allows you to be able to be a presence that is recognizably new to your Brother, to your husband, to someone sitting next to you who you've met for the first time today and be a transformational Presence. You could say in the simplest of terms that remembering how to be Loved is remembering how to be present with your fellow man—uncovered by anything that blocks you from making the Gift of what you Are.

And so you could say it is as though there is a veil and you are on one side and God making the Gift of Himself to you is on the other—God making the gift of Himself that is the Presence of You is on the other side—and what God is insisting upon penetrating the veil. And when you on the other side are saying, "I desire to remember what it is I forgot," you are making an invitation, you might say against the veil also that is in harmony with, which is synchronous with what the Father is intending. And when that happens there is less of what it took to maintain the veil.

Now that's not the whole picture though, because the reason for desiring it, the reason for remembering who you are is so that you can be that with your fellow man, here. You see? It isn't something between you and God and to hell with everyone else. If you have forgotten how to BE Love you have forgotten how to Love your Brother. It hurts your heart not to be able to Love your Brother. That is the fundamental thing that everyone is suffering from. They just didn't know it was their function—they forgot it was their function.

You could say, "Father help me not be in a way that causes my Brother to constantly feel the need to reinforce his defenses. Help me remember what I have forgotten. Fill me today with all Thou Art. Because I know when you do I will remember who I Am. And when I remember who I Am I will be able to be Me. I will be able to be Me with joy. I will be able to be Me with my Brother."

I'm going to end the answer to your question by simply stating this for everyone: Be careful you don't get sucked into believing that the world is an illusion and everything in it that you see, because if you do you will have no brother to be the fulfillment of your capacity to be Love. You will have no reason to remember what you have forgotten. This is very important. We'll take a break.

QUESTION: You've probably gone around my question all afternoon today, but I'm feeling dense I guess, so I still have nibbling feelings. Lately I'm experiencing a lot of fear and anxiety over money. And I'm going to school full-time and not employed at this time. And my time seems to be very full with school and related things. And I think it's my ego telling me I'm not being responsible, I need to do something about this, I need to get myself better organized. And when I put that together with things I'm reading and hearing about the economy and then I get into all this fear stuff about my future. And I'd like to know how to get rid of this fear?

RAJ: Like a trick-or-treater hold up your bag. The Father knows nothing about the economy. What I'm going to encourage you to do is when there is something you need write it on a piece of paper. I am not saying that if you need money to pay the rent that you write down money, I am saying write down rent. Write down the thing that's needed. And once you have written it down—and I would suggest putting it on your refrigerator door or on the wall across from your toilet where you can see it frequently. Once you have written it down say, "It will be interesting to see how the Father unfolds this." You see? Do not take personal responsibility for its solution yourself. You may well do something, you may well be involved in its coming into your experience. You may be driving the car and see a garage sale sign and feel like going, and go and find the very thing you need in excellent condition, perfect for you. But you will not have taken on a false sense of personal responsibility, so that you can afterwards claim that you have been a responsible person. You see?

“It is the Father’s good pleasure to give you everything that meets your need.” But few of you consistently practice turning it over to the Father and you justify it by saying, “God helps those who help themselves.” Well that’s the ego saving its ass.

You don’t need a more profound answer than that.

QUESTION: It was brought to my attention that perhaps there’s one more step around all of the talk today in realizing your love—realizing Love. And I guess I can in a sense talk from my own experience, but I’ve felt before that when I’ve been free of defense, free of judgment and insecurity and a number of those things that you listed, and felt that Love, I’ve also felt that the person with whom I was communicating was sort of attacking me.

Now first of all, does that mean that I wasn’t experiencing that. And second of all, if I was, what is a person to do in a situation like that, because your first tendency is to become defensive?

RAJ: Well of course, before acting in response to someone who seems to be attacking you, you need to answer this question: “Is what is happening, whether real or not, justification for me to abandon being the Presence of Love? Is it truly justification for me to abandon the peace, the fearlessness I am experiencing? Is it truly justification for me to engage defense knowing as I do now that my act of defense causes me to hurt because I shut myself off from the experience of who I Am?” That’s the real issue at that moment.

Now if you make—I do not need to describe what would follow your making the decision to become defensive, because you’re familiar with that experience—if the decision is made for not abandoning this experience of being at Home, this experience of perfection about you that you’re experiencing, if you don’t abandon that you will then learn what you will do under those circumstances. You will learn on the spot! And you will be IT on the spot! I will tell you this, that you will not respond in an abusive way, you will not respond defensively. But you will also not respond in a way that confirms the attackers stance to himself and seems to put you in an ongoing circumstance of being abused. Because I’ll tell you something, when you’re not covered over by a false sense of what appropriate behavior is, you know how to be appropriate. In your clarity, in the clarity of mind that you experience there in that connectedness with the Love that you Are you will not allow abuse to occur, you will not subject yourself to the attack.

I can only talk around this because being the Presence of the Christ, or being the unblocked Presence of God expressing Himself/Herself will always be original and specifically appropriate to the apparent circumstances of the moment. And part of the whole thing that we have been talking about today is the fact that it's never premeditated. And what you do in that moment with utter appropriateness will not become a bit of learning that you will log in the file to be brought up as an appropriate response the next time you seem to be faced with attack.

What you need to know in order to dare to make commitment to not abandoning your connectedness, your connectedness with the experience of what you are—Love—will never put you in jeopardy. Your connectedness with it will never put you in jeopardy, nor will it allow you to be a participant in someone else putting themselves in jeopardy. It will never cause you to become dysfunctional so that you might say, “the hurt you want to inflict on me is an illusion therefore go to it.” You see? You need to know that love is not and cannot be something else! Love is not standing there and taking it. Just as love is not standing there and dishing it out.

Basically I have answered this question before, and on general principles, if someone says or acts out the intent to injure you, you must say, “no.” And if they say, “but if you're the presence of unconditional Love you wouldn't tell me to stop,” and try to hook you with your own spirituality, but if you're not off balance because you're grounded in the genuineness—you are grounded genuinely in the essence of You—you will never agree to such a ploy and you will not remain and continue to provide the opportunity for one who is committed to their attack, because they aren't ready to be defenseless.

That is really the most I can say about it. The key for you to remember is that we have been talking today about remembering that you are the Presence of Love, remembering how to Love. And that it takes a commitment to letting go of everything else—the defense, the self-righteousness, the fear and on and on. And you are not doing this for your Brother, you are doing it for your own Sanity, because it hurts not to have remembered Who you Are.

Now I know this seems to contradict what I said a moment ago, but I'm going to break it down, it seems experientially as though there are two parts to it. The first is that you want to stop hurting yourself! You want the struggle that life seems to be to one degree or another to not be your experience anymore. And the first stage of the solution to that is remembering that your function is Love, and that you have forgotten how to Love. And because of that you by your choice have blocked yourself from your experience of Who you Are.

The second stage of that does involve realizing that the reason, ultimately, that you want to experience your Sanity is so that you can express this Love that you have forgotten how to express, and who you will be expressing it to is your Brother. But you don't do it because your Brother needs it, you do it because if you're not doing it you continue to hurt, you continue not to be Sane. You see? And your Brother or Sister is faced with the same two steps. It's not your responsibility to convince them about their step. It's essential one-by-one for each of you to come back into this conscious experience of your capital "F" Function, your capacity to Love.

This has been your subject today. I did not have an agenda. What you brought out of our gathering together today has been a wonderful gift to each other. It's been my pleasure to participate. Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – February 25, 1996

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ: Good afternoon.

ALL: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: This question promises to be as long as some of your answers can you cope?

RAJ: Try me.

QUESTION: Well, just so that I didn't forget anything I sort of wrote it down on the ferry on the way over.

RAJ: It is a small book?

QUESTION: I told you it was as long as some of your answers. I will have to say that there are two stories that have happened in my life in recent months that sort of typify the kinds of things that are going on and I may or may not tell the stories, but what's happened is my life is filled with miracles on a daily basis. And they're miracles of awareness.

RAJ: And how are you coping with the miracles?

QUESTION: That's what we're here to talk about. What's happening I'm feeling layers of things that are happening. I have an awareness of things.. The miracles are the harmonies and the synchronicities that happen in my daily life that I'm aware of now. They're not just the parking places that you find but the people that I meet.

One story is of... I have this wonderful $2 vest that I bought from the Salvation Army. I was going up to do a location survey and I lost the vest. I didn't realize I had lost it until I went into a period of extreme anger at an event that occurred when we were on this location survey in which the producer who was with me did not acknowledge the need for his presence to complete the survey properly. And I was righteously angered. I couldn't sleep because of that anger and I suffered a lot for two days until I could get back down from the interior into Vancouver. And I recognized somewhere during this journey that I had lost this precious $2 jacket. I knew it could only be in one of two places, probably a restaurant that I'd had breakfast at or at a sleazy motel that I'd slept at on the way up.

I drove down the highway through the mountains—it was beautiful. I had a choice—I came to a fork in the road—I had a choice, I could go to the restaurant or I could go to the motel. The car turned itself and we went to the motel. I rang the bell of this sleazy little motel and no one answered. I rang again and a fellow came out scratching, I'd gotten him out of bed and he opened the door and I went in and I said, "Hi," did you have my vest? And he scratched some more and said, "I don't know, I'll go have a look." And he went in to see his wife and out came and out came a puppy. And it was just a little ball of fur that came out. And puppies to me mean unconditional love. They mean everything to me if there is one thing that epitomizes all that's good and enthusiastic and loving it's a puppy. I picked the puppy up and we had a wonderful cuddle. And the man walked out with my vest. And I walked out of the motel with my vest in my hand having had a few moments with this precious puppy. And I cried as I am now on my way into Vancouver because it meant so much to me to know that I'd been touched in that way.

These are the miracles I'm having trouble coping with. It meant so much. And you said in one of your tapes, "do you realized how much you're loved?" And so these things are happening to me every day. And lines are getting blurred. And I'm coming up out of these things feeling... it's so focused. And I'm not understanding why the world isn't with me. Or maybe it is, I don't know, there's lines that are being blurred. That's one part can you address that for me and tell me?

RAJ: I want you to share the other part as well.

QUESTION: Which other part? This is very hard. Well there's been a shift, I've experienced a real shift since December. And the shift has brought me into a place I never thought I'd come. It's a place of clarity, an ability to focus and to speak without me getting so much involved. And I keep waiting for that to end and I keep waiting for me to go back to the way I was but I haven't. So there's a new trust. And I'm seeing the miracles and I'm feeling them every day and I'm seeing the change in people. As Trish said, she's seeing it, we're seeing the change.

The other story is about a standoff, there was a potentially violent standoff in British Columbia. A group of natives had taken over a ranch and there were guns involved and it was very dangerous. I was driving in town when the standoff ended and it came over the news and I was listening to it paying absolutely no attention whatever. The standoff was over and they had left a sun dancer on the spot where the standoff had occurred. The sun dancer, the native sun dancer was brought up from the states and left on the site in order to cleanse the sight and heal it and I exploded in tears. I didn't know where it came from. I don't what happened, I erupted and I was sobbing wrapped with sobs and it was a relief. And it's happened to me like that several times. And it happened yesterday, but now I didn't erupt. What happened yesterday was a some thought came through my mind and all of a sudden in my body there was a sting and tears came and I felt the potential. It was like the potential of it and the awakening was in every cell of my body. And this is so silly but I'm getting tired—on one level I'm tired—on another level I'm energized. There's no going back. So?

RAJ: This is the Age of Aquarius, not the dawning of the Age of Aquarius, but the Age of Aquarius itself. And you know I'm not speaking astrologically. There is a shift that has occurred. A point of critical mass has been reached and things are a changing. And everyone is going to experience this year as being very different from prior years. And it's not going to end at the end of this year. What you have loved, what you have hoped for, the Awakening that everyone has desired to have a comprehension of these are occurring.

If you thought at any time during the past 10 years that these are wonderful times to be living in this year you will say, "has been the most wonderful time to be alive in." You are not going to have to seem to earn your joy or your healing or the resolution of long standing problems. They will seem to come for no good reason, no reason you can personally account for, no reason that you can take credit for.

This is going to be very frightening for some who have felt it essential to be able to take credit for their good and to account for what they have. But you know the only thing that you can't lose is what's already yours. I mean you cannot lose what you haven't acquired. Whatever you gain that you take credit for that you can feel good about yourself because you have achieved it, that you can lose. But what is yours when the grabber stands empty handed is the whole Kingdom that it was the Father's good pleasure to give you.

A lot of you may find yourself spontaneously crying a lot during this next year, tears of love, tears of rising joy that are an experience of being in your Right Mind, an experience of being Home, an experience of not being out of your mind. And in that crying you will not be denying your softness, which beforehand you called your vulnerability, that things which required defense. Not only will you not hide it behind a defense you will let it show. It is as though the universe will conspire to surprise you with the trigger that allows breakthrough to occur, like the puppy walking out in the middle of a sleazy hotel, in the middle of that spot where you thought the presence of unconditional love would most likely not be there waiting for you.

All of you, this means that those things about which you feel justifiably guilty, those situations in which you find yourself that cause you to feel justifiably guilty will be the very place where your innocence can present itself to you in a manner that wipes away your defense and can be experienced as healing. In other words, in the very place where you feel the least worthy of being blessed is where the blessing will trot itself out in its little fluffiness asking for nothing but giving its innocence and uncovering yours to you.

This part of you that's getting tired is of no consequence. It doesn't matter. It will stop presenting itself. The part of you that is energized is the part of you that is recognizing God's Presence presenting Itself in that place where you can recognize your Self in It.

You see this does not mean that before "the Age of Aquarius" God has not been presenting Himself. But the Presence of God will register with you—with you all—more easily, more spontaneously, partly because this part of you that is tired is not being able to maintain the defenses that have blocked the experience of the Presence of God in the past. And when I say "the Presence of God," I mean the Presence of that which is Real in each and everything. Obviously for this little ball of unconditional love to be present in the middle of a sleazy motel means that there were something more than a sleazy motel there. And so however you might be judging a building or a character in the building or even yourself there's something more there. And you know what? The Presence of God, the transforming Presence of God is always going to show up in the world, not from outside the world penetrating the world, but right in the middle of the world. And that's why I have for so long a time been encouraging all of you to be willing to recognize that which is Real in each and every thing!

So your good is going to start registering with you spontaneously in a way that you can't take credit for. And if it happens too often, too rapidly you are likely to say, "I can't take this. This is too much good. I can't absorb it all. Stop long enough to catch my breath." Which means the ego is saying, "stop until I can figure out a way to utilize this good to reestablish my place." I simply point that out to you so that you might remember when it occurs what I am saying now. You tell that thought, "wait, Raj said, I don't have to absorb it. I don't have to incorporate it. All it is is the rest of me. It isn't something I need to process. All it is is something I need to let be."

Another interesting point is that you're going to find that others are experiencing their good against whom you hold or have held a grievance. And you're going to say, "that's not fair."

You know what? God isn't just. God doesn't enforce justice. God is fun. God is funny. God is playful. Where is the consistency and justice of a little ball of fluffy unconditional love appearing in the middle of a sleazy motel? There's nothing consistent about that, conceptually speaking. That wasn't the place for unconditional love to present itself, it was incongruent. Well, the fact is that waking up is healing occurring. And as I have brought out before justice is the substitute for healing. So your experience of spontaneous release from justified anger didn't make sense at all. There's no logic for it whatsoever. Did you do penance in order to deserve release? No, God isn't just. God is the love that penetrates the need for justice and heals your mind. It doesn't have anything to do with being fair. It has to do with what is right according to God's measuring stick, not some ego's measuring stick of what is right and wrong.

And if indeed you look at your brother against whom you have a grudge, and his good comes or her good comes, but they haven't paid yet for your grievance be quick to say, "God isn't just I see it." Because if you require justice for your brother you will hold yourself in that same vice. And you can spell it v-i-c-e or v-i-s-e. I meant it v-i-s-e.

What a shame it would be to kick against the glory of this coming year because it proved to you that there was no justice. And I'm not speaking entirely to you. Everyone needs to hear this good news.

There was great joy experienced by those observing you as you felt the joy that came out as tears, the soft undefended innocent Presence of You that let itself out. Can you begin to see that you have no idea what waking up is about? And therefore if you have thought that you did know what it was about you can afford to throw it in the circular file—the waste basket—and be curious about that which you haven't the foggiest notion of. You see?

QUESTION: It's getting goofy.

RAJ: Certainly the concrete experience of the Presence of God is not going to conform Itself to the craziness that all of you have defined as normalcy. And so indeed it is going to be divinely goofy.

QUESTION: Can I just ask you when I was collecting the tension in my body, and through my shoulders, and I seem to hold on to it very strongly what that was? What did it have anything to do with the righteous anger I felt and what was I holding off something, was I holding away something? It released with an acupuncture treatment yesterday. But I seemed to feel it gathering and it was like steel.

RAJ: Of course it takes a lot of energy to be insane. And everyone uses their body, like clenching your teeth to hold even, to maintain an evenness in the unnatural act of hate. Of course!

QUESTION: Was that hate? And if it was hate what was it...

RAJ: Was it love?

QUESTION: No, but I don't understand what I was...

RAJ: There are only two choices.

QUESTION: What was I hating? I mean I didn't feel any hate from my heart. If it was hate was in not more fear of what life was? I don't know. I don't know the tension was extreme.

RAJ: Whenever that you feel that your dignity and intelligence and honor has been insulted your conditioning says that the appropriate response is resentment, and steps to get even, to get recompense. That is hate. It is the blocking of your function which is to be Love extending. And so you are engaging in an unnatural act you might say. It takes a lot of energy. And your body becomes the tool you use to create the sense of having enough substance to get even, to bring about justice.

QUESTION: Then was the righteous anger that I felt and the ultimate clearing of that anger in a form with the people involved was that inappropriate?

RAJ: Of course, you put yourself in a state of self-denial because you were insisting upon justice rather than being the Presence of Love that found no fault in her Brother.

QUESTION: There was a clearing in the expressing of what I felt and an understanding, could that have been handled in another way?

RAJ: Of course!

QUESTION: Well, tell me which way it could have been handled then?

RAJ: You would have found it very easy to creatively express that which brought about resolution without calling another's dignity and integrity into question. You would have found a way to express yourself that presented what to that one would be a reasonable other way to look at it and change his mind. But that kind of spontaneous creativity comes when you are not in a state of self-defense.

QUESTION: I'm going to have to let that one sit for a while, because I think there's a deeper clearing that has to go on.

RAJ: I want you all to remember that whenever there seems to be a call, a justified call for justice, that isn't what it is, it is a call for healing that exonerates all parties—that illuminates the innocence of all concerned.

QUESTION: That's pretty interesting.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: I mean I know that, but I haven't experienced in that form.
Wow!

RAJ: Well, next time you need to be the puppy.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: And I will tell you that you make a darn good puppy!

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj, and I am absolutely overjoyed to be here and able to ask you something that has been bothering me for quite awhile. For a long time...

RAJ: I am going to interrupt you. We are going to take a short break and then we will take your question:

QUESTION: Kenneth Wapnik has indicated in his dissertations on the Course In Miracles on one of the tapes that I remember him stating as he began is that God only creates like Himself, Eternal, formless and light. And when the Mind of Christ seemed to split, which was the fall, that the material universe—somehow the collective ego created the material universe—and on our separate concept of ourselves in the separate state that the physical body also was a part of that. My question is kind of two parts here. When did God in fact Create the material universe and “the flesh body?” And number two, the second part of that, if you’d like me to continue with the second part...

RAJ: You may continue with the second part.

QUESTION: In the Course you state that the body’s only function—and I’m assuming the physical body—is to extend love. And when its function is finished it will be lovingly laid aside, we will be told and it will be lovingly laid aside. You have also stated on some of these tapes I heard recently that passing away, physical death is a decision, an act of suicide. Now if we are in this state of pure love, that the bodies function is correctly extending and therefore its sacrosanct what causes aging and deterioration? And will we be able to avert this as we’re coming into this new awareness or is this a given? And could you please elaborate on all that.

RAJ: It really doesn’t matter who expresses this idea and this idea is not new. What matters is whether it is true. Did God Create the material world? First of all you will have to point out to me where this material world is that we’re talking about. I realize you were not the one who made this statement but...

QUESTION: That’s why I’m asking the question.

RAJ: I understand.

QUESTION: I’m in total confusion.

RAJ: But whoever takes that statement and believes it ought to ask themselves where is this material world that the question refers to, because it is an assumption that all that you are experience as a world and universe is material, you see. An interpretation has been given to a conscious experience, an experience of consciousness. And the assumption has said that this is not an experience of consciousness. In other words it is not a mental experience, it is a physical experience, it is an experience of something physical separate and apart from mind, separate and apart from consciousness.

Again did God Create this body of flesh and blood? Well, it all depends on the vantage point from which you are looking at it whether it is a body of flesh and blood, or whether it is the visibility and tangibility of God self-expressed which is purely mental. You see the moment one chooses to have a perception of the Movement of God called Creation and defines that perception as anything other than what it is he's claiming a mind separate from the Mind of which it is all the evidence, the visible, tangible evidence. And when I say tangible I mean that ideas are perfectly tangible to the mind that formed them, ideas are perfectly tangible to the mind that formed them. And so for ideas to be experienced tangibly does not require that somehow they have become something called matter, something no mental called physical.

The moment a point of view different from the Father's is embraced by anyone one has lost his capital "M" Mind. One also has lost the infinity of the conscious experience of Being. Now I can put it a different way, but it was important to say that first. One has lost his conscious experience of identity. Now I stated it more clearly when I said he's lost the conscious experience of Being, because divinely speaking identity is the infinite conscious experience of what God is and what God is Being.

In other words, the conscious experience of Being is the experience of God's point of view, because no different perception has been created and brought into play. And so the conscious experience of Identity with a capital "I", you might say, is an infinite experience of conscious presence in which all that is being experienced is the experience of one's Self. But when a perception different from the Father's experience of being All There Is is employed one loses the infinite experience of identity and seems to be identified specifically and only with what you call the body. The infinite body called Creation is no longer being experienced as the vantage point. And just the perspective from the specific manifestation of what you call your body becomes the new vantage point. This is a finite vantage point in which because one has lost the infinite experience of himself he feels small, separated, vulnerable and therefore called upon to defend himself against that which would take advantage of his vulnerability.

Now the fact is that when I said a time will come when the body has fulfilled its purpose and it will be gently laid aside, that means that there will come a point when the use of the body as a means of defense will no longer seem to fulfill purpose. And the body as the vantage point from which to experience Creation will be laid aside in favor of re-embracing God's perspective and once again experiencing one's Wholeness. The body that you had before identified exclusively with and used as a finite vantage point that you fooled yourself into believing was the whole vantage point, that use will be laid aside, but that part of Creation will not disappear. It is the use of it as a place from which to view Creation that will be laid aside. And it is the use of that aspect of Creation that will no longer be used as a means of defense because one will have abandoned a perspective separate from the Father's in favor of the Father's perspective which is Whole, All Inclusive.

Now the universe is not going to disappear and that aspect of what you are infinitely which is specifically identified as body that will not disappear and Creation will not disappear. But you also will no longer ascertain what you are experiencing from an exclusive vantage point of one spot in the middle of infinity called this body.

QUESTION: I won't be confined to inside my head looking out of my eyes.

RAJ: You will not be confined to the belief that you have been looking from inside your head and actively excluding everything else.

QUESTION: That's going to take some doing.

RAJ: That's going to take some letting. You see your Sanity hasn't gone anywhere so it does not need to be recreated. It's simply being ignored at the moment in favor of an exclusive perception of everything. And as I said last night, it isn't going to take some process or some system of behavior—mental or physical—to arrive at the experience of your Whole Mind. All it takes is from moment to moment to remember to be curious because somewhere you heard that there is more to everything that you are seeing than you are seeing at the moment, and you are wondering what that more might be.

Again, it has nothing to do with a process of learning. It just has to do with a simple practice of curiosity. "Well, I think I know what the television really means," or "I think I know what the lamp really means. But if I'm not really experiencing all of the real meaning that is there, I wonder what it really means?" That simple wonder, that simple act of wondering is what opens the door.

QUESTION: And then our experience changes.

RAJ: Of course. A shift of perception happens.

QUESTION: So this is what we can look forward to this year?

RAJ: That is what you can look forward to this afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm willing. Can you help?

RAJ: I am.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: Shifting is already occurring. But it's not your responsibility to categorize it and place it in logical sequential order so that you might comprehend its full meaning. In many ways it will be tomorrow or a week from tomorrow that you will realize that something you were concerned about yesterday, I mean yesterday, Saturday, you're no longer concerned with—it's gone. "Oh, a shift occurred. I'm experiencing a freedom that I wasn't experiencing before. Well, now if I didn't make it happen and I didn't even notice it disappear how am I going to do it again?" You're going to let it happen again by being simply curious.

This just isn't about an intellectual process of gaining more understanding that you can apply to everything you see. If you will just be curious everything will convey to you what it means because its meaning is God in action, in that spot expressing Itself. Why? So it can be experienced as a conscious experience. It is extending Its meaning. And if you are allowing just the littlest bit of curiosity to abide in your awareness you open the door for that extending of meaning to register with you. And ultimately what you find registering with you is not just what God is Meaning there, but you will recognize yourself, "Oh you're just like me. We're One! You're not different from me. I really don't have to be defended against what I thought you were. I really don't have to be defended against you. I love you. I realize I love you." And Wholeness becomes the characteristic of your experience of that thing. Your Wholeness becomes represented, you might say, in that thing. But not really represented, re-presented, it is embodied in that thing, not presented again, re-presented.

QUESTION: When I'm experience with what you're saying then is that I'm finding that things are beginning to resonate. I mean I feel a vibration of resonate... It's resonating.

RAJ: That is a wonderful fundamental way of expressing an experience of Oneness. Yes! It will expand. It will become more than that.

QUESTION: I'm beginning to experience this with people—thank goodness. And in some animate objects, like my car I'm beginning to feel is alive. I mean please don't laugh. I mean we have an agreement...

RAJ: I am not laughing. I mean it is an idea. Is it not an idea?

QUESTION: And if I take care of it it doesn't let me down in places where I can't take care of it, or something isn't available. And so far this has been happening.

RAJ: It does not have an intent of its own any more than you truly have a private intent of your own. You and the car always represent the Father's intent, unless you are claiming private, separate perspective on everything where you are giving the definitions to it. And then God does not stop being the intent behind you and the vehicle, but because you are preoccupied with your perception and disregarding the Father's then you can seem to experience fragmenting of your experience.

QUESTION: I call it discord.

RAJ: Yes, where one thing is not in support of another thing.

QUESTION: Now I am also experiencing when this is happening we're in harmony. The car and I with the purpose that we have together. I can go down the highway blindly not concerned about getting stuck, none of those things even occur to me. And this is how my life now is...?

RAJ: Or if losing your sweater before an eruption occurs cause you after the disruption occurs to be in the place where the undoing of your disruption can occur, because God never stopped being the intent behind your life, you will lose your sweater or you may get stuck on the freeway.

QUESTION: This is why I wanted to finish. It happened. And what was interesting is God showed up to get me off the—I'm not kidding—highway and got me home. And the next day the car malfunctioned again in a place where I could get it repaired, and because it was electrical and you can't see these problems while the car is running perfectly—which it was doing—I asked the new mechanic, it was a husband and wife team, wonderful people that I was guided to... And I said could we please ask, meditate and to be shown where the problem is and they were absolutely agreeable for that. And they found it. I mean, so this has just been with really minimal imposition to me.

RAJ: So the fact that God is love, and therefore everything that happens must at the bottom line identify the fact that you are loved it will seem as though the car is working with you and your body is working with you and the gas station attendant is working with you and the mechanic is working with you so that you might understand how closely held you are in the Allness of God's Love and the experience of this is able to demonstrate to you in practical terms that your fear of the opposite of love is groundless and therefore you may dare to abandon your defense mechanisms which you always keep functioning just in case the opposite of love thrust itself into your experience.

QUESTION: It's like we're being asked to get rid of backups now.

RAJ: Oh, indeed. As I've said before, if you save for a rainy day you are bound to have a rainy day.

QUESTION: It's better to be in debt that way you'll always be working. (laughter) Yeah, we're starting to look at this wholly differently, every negative now is a positive for living (not sure of the last word in this sentence).

RAJ: Every negative is a positive misunderstood or misinterpreted, because there's only one thing going on. This is why the Course can say that the Holy Spirit turns every experience to your advantage. It's really because it always was on your behalf but your conviction to the contrary has caused you to be defended against that which has always been present on your behalf.

QUESTION: And my conviction to the contrary arose out of believing the misperceptions that everyone else had believed and therefore this had come about in their lives—it's called the news.

RAJ: Yes, you could say that the misperception has been a result of never having asked God for His. And that's what curiosity really is. "Father, what is your perception of this? Father, what is really going on here?" And very often when any of you ask for the Father's perspective on what is really going on here you are asking the Father to disclose to you the deceitful, thoughtless, mean processes that those around you are engaging in so you will know how to have a better defense. "Father, how do I protect myself against these bastards—or these unscrupulous people?" That isn't asking for what is really going on here. That is asking for help to get rid of the monster in your dream.

You see, the real question is: "How do I wake up so that I can see that the monster isn't real in the first place?" So when you ask for the Father's perspective, these unscrupulous bastards who are out to screw you will suddenly be the obvious presence of the Christ. Your perception will shift. And in that experience of what they divinely are the picture they are presenting to you will constitute absurd nonsense that wouldn't engage you in reaction at all. And in the presence of the innocence of your vision of them they will not have the mutual agreement from you any longer to support their misperception of themselves. And that is when the picture can and will change so that that which seemed to be unscrupulous and that which was intended on their part to be unscrupulous will not be a reasonable thing for them to continue forward with with you.

QUESTION: I have experienced this already. And I do understand what you're saying. And it has to be expanded to everything.

RAJ: Well here we're getting into a system again or a process.

QUESTION: I know, I caught myself as I was saying understand...

RAJ: When you're having this experience there's a spontaneous, not a spontaneous tendency—but I'm going to use the word—there's a spontaneous tendency to see everything else clearly as well. "Wow, if my brother here is the Christ and I had thought he was something else, well what is this table we're all sitting at, what is this lamp, what is this community that I'm in?" Curiosity grows exponentially. You see?

QUESTION: It's interesting you said that, because you say that metaphysics—I had been using metaphysics from a vantage point which you said worked for awhile in order to bring us to a certain awareness. And so I've kind of stumbled onto these experiences not fully grasping the meaning of it all, but I've seen the response when I take a different attitude, a loving attitude I see people melt in their misperceptions and change their attitude. However, I haven't seen the big picture. I've just maybe experienced the breakthrough which needs to be more cultivated is what I'm here with you experiencing.

RAJ: Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I've been experiencing a year quite opposite to what was mentioned earlier where it seems that everything is going wrong.

RAJ: You are speaking of the last six weeks?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: Yes, miracles often appear to be catastrophes.

QUESTION: So I wonder if you would elaborate on that—on what the Father's perspective is on what seems to be happening.

RAJ: Would you share the script, the details which your ego is describing the miracle by means of? I mean, to Paul it appears that the catastrophe is an IRS agent absconding with all of the Foundations funds. It doesn't look like a miracle or a healing, but it is. What are your details?

QUESTION: They seem somewhat petty compared to an IRS agent.

RAJ: Someone said the other day that every time they get to thinking that their life is a little tough, they get a letter from me! And they feel much better. You see, this is part of the wonder of it, that just as there is no order of difficulty in miracles, there's no order of degree of illusions. It doesn't matter how petty yours seems by comparison. Its ability to hook you is the same. As I've also said before, it matters not how small the bait is, you always get the whole hook.

So, what are your details?

QUESTION: I thought I was going to get away with not having to tell you this. A repetitive, irritating, not major health problem; a break-up of a relationship that I know needed to happen, but it doesn't feel very good; interactions at my job with someone who seems to be pretty blatantly an idiot—that's probably the nicest word I can say right now—a patient who is going through something very serious legally that needs my help, and I don't know that I can do much for her; my parents are experiencing health problems that seem to be worsening, not getting better.

It's felt like it's just turned into a litany lately. And while I'm here, I sort of experience that things are fine and will be fine, and life is changing and it's okay. But when I go home, I lose that sense, and so I got in an argument with someone last week, knowing that I was engaging in something that wasn't helpful, that felt like it needed limits put on it—speaking of the interaction at work.

RAJ: At the bottom line, crisis—whether it seems petty by comparison with another—puts each one of you in the position of making a choice for whether or not you are going to make the Gift of your Self or whether you are going to withhold It so that you can carry a grievance. In other words, every crisis brings each one of you to a point of decision: “Which of the two voices am I going to listen to? The Voice for Truth or the voice for fear?” If it’s a “medium” crisis, you might opt for the voice for fear. But if the crisis is one where you’re really down to brass tacks, you will opt for the Voice for Truth.

Now, you say when you’re here, like today, you have a feeling that everything will be all right. Why do you have that feeling? You have that feeling because Paul, in the midst of his crisis has not opted for the voice for fear. You see? He did not say, “This is too much for me to handle”—I mean, momentarily from time to time, he did—but he did not say, “This is more than I can take, and therefore I’m canceling Sunday afternoon.” He did not say, “Raj, I am where I am because I’ve been listening to you. Therefore, I’m not going to allow you to mislead everyone else by having a Gathering on Sunday.”

All of these are thoughts that one of the two voices expressed over the last week and a half. But at the bottom line, he came to a decision that no matter what happened, no matter how unreasonable or unfair it seemed he was not going to stop listening to me. He was not going to choose for the other voice. And it is only because he is not emotionally embroiled in the “injustice” of all of this, and the “call for justice” which is inherent in it, that he is able to be in a way this afternoon which allows you to feel that maybe everything might not be what you thought it was.

If you will make a similar decision not to be the mouthpiece for the voice for fear—whether it’s your parents, whether it’s your client, whether it’s the idiot—your presence will convey the same experience which Paul’s presence is conveying to you, because he’s allowing the Voice for Truth and Love to not be blocked by some “right” he has to “get even” with an unjust situation. And your circumstance can fluctuate and change and reconfigure in your experience as it is reconfiguring for Paul in his experience.

It says in the Course, “To have, give all to all.” And there’s been a standing joke in this house for the last week and a half: “To have, give all to the IRS.” Now, one of the realizations which came out of that playful joke was the realization that it doesn’t mean to give all of your possessions away. It means to give from the place of one’s Allness. It is like an attack which seems to call for an attack in response. But the saying is to “turn the other cheek.” As I have said before, it means instead of giving attack for attack, give Love for attack. The “other” cheek is Love. It’s the other Voice.

To have—to experience one’s Wholeness—one must be present in the world from one’s Wholeness, to the best of one’s ability—which, again, Paul is doing this afternoon, and which he has been doing most of the time during the last week and a half when he has not chosen for the voice for smallness, for tiny separate vulnerable mistreated self-hood. To have, give All—give Wholeness—to all. Give Love to all. Give the willingness to see with the Father’s point of view.

What is happening for the Foundation and for Paul is healing. The presence of the threat of that which can undermine his peace and his ability to flow smoothly with the Movement of god, the Movement of Being, is ending right at the point where it seems to be asserting itself. And he is being able to grasp, at a level of meaning rather than a level of reasoning, that the way for him to see the healing here, rather than what his ego interpreted it as, lies in his refusing to abandon the Voice for Truth in favor of the “satisfaction” of listening to the voice for fear and “getting even.”

So, if there is resolve and commitment on your part when you leave, to not abandon that in you which holds sacred and safe your invulnerability and Wholeness, you will find everyone around you being blessed, and you will see satisfying fulfillment manifesting in your experience as your healed experience.

If you slip and become reactive, be gentle with yourself. The habit is a long-standing habit of justifiable self-righteousness with all of you, and it is very easy to be triggered into reaction. But, if you catch yourself and consciously abandon it again, your suffering will be very brief, and the grace of the healing will be able to continue to increasingly register with you.

Paul has slipped many times in the last week and a half. He would love to have a reason to go back to Hawaii. And this appears to be a very reasonable reason. “It’s not fair here on the Mainland.” And so he has slipped, but he has not used that as a means of putting himself down. He’s caught himself and he has sat down and gotten back on the beam. And although he cannot share with you the fullness of the fulfillment yet, he is experiencing it increasingly. And that’s the promise for you as well.

QUESTION: I fear sometimes that when I think I’m listening, and then things don’t go right, that I’m not really listening.

RAJ: Oh, indeed, yes. You see, for Paul, part of the justification for feeling injustice was that on my guidance he had, through the Foundation’s accountant, established an apparently working relationship with the agent from the IRS, and then, boom, out of the blue, the IRS agent behaved in a way inconsistent with the apparent working relationship.

I must share this, just for perspective, because this is not only a healing relative to the Foundation and those who support it, but it is also a healing for Paul relative to his relationship with the Foundation and Paul personally.

When I first came along, the only reason Paul was willing to listen for my voice was because he was in the midst of crisis that none of his metaphysically correct thinking was resolving. And during that period of time, he was what you could call “struggling,” according to everyone else’s perspective—little income, unemployed. As many of you know, when I told him it was time to allow people to ask me questions, he felt too uncomfortable with it, and I pointed out to him that he wouldn’t be able to find other work. For six months he insisted on trying to find other work, and did not.

So, there was a period of a couple of years where, for lack of better words, adjustment took place, and he yielded from a place of the exercise of great personal control over his life to a place of allowing Guidance—what you might call “the Father’s perspective”—to lead him.

During this period of time he did not file his personal income taxes, because there was no money to do that. His family, for a period of time, lived in other people’s homes because he was not employed. And yet, through all of this, we were constantly conversing, and for him this was a period of great transformation and enlightenment and growth. And he experienced no self-pity, and everything got progressively better.

To make a long story short, although the amount due was small when he finally filed returns, he immediately got a notice that he owed penalties of $70,000. Now, why am I saying this? I’m saying this because this has been something hanging over his head for 14 years or so, unresolved, with no apparent means to resolve it. He has endured demands of an agency that he perceived as ongoingly insulting to his dignity.

Last, week, after the Foundation’s funds were seized—which are not justifiably due the IRS—the IRS agent said, “What I want to hear from you by March 15th regarding your personal debt to the IRS is that you have gone to an attorney and bankrupted that debt”—something which, for years, he had been told could not be done.

I will tell you that that response was forthcoming from the agent because when Paul called him in response to the levy on the Foundation’s bank account, he took my lead, and although he expressed surprise at the levy occurring without advance warning, “we” said, “Nevertheless, we look forward to paying off the remaining $3,500 as soon as possible, and we anticipate that it will be a matter of weeks.” There was no antagonism expressed or felt by Paul. I had told him, “Be willing to pay this with joy!”—an unreasonable concept to his ego.

The means to pay it off will be present. And what amounts to $130,000 of penalties on Paul's personal income tax, which in the beginning only amounted to $19,000 of actual debt, will disappear. And he and the Foundation will move forward healed of ongoing threat.

I guarantee you that it would not be happening this way if he insisted upon listening to the voice for fear.

I will tell all of you something: What you call "crisis" is what happens—if you will imagine a balloon—when a balloon expands to a point where a weakness in the wall is not able to support further expansion. The balloon is the equivalent of the sphere which I have spoken of for many years as the ego structure, like a bubble, which is very thin, but most definitely presents a dividing point between the volume of air inside and the volume of air outside. The volume of air outside the sphere of ego structures is "the rest of you," your infinite Wholeness. And the volume inside the sphere is you—part of your infinite Wholeness.

A crisis is when the bubble is about to burst and the experience of total Whole Integrity will become available to you. And the ego defends its "cellular" wall and patches it up, brings in more soap, more bubble solution.

This is why when you arrive at a point of crisis, if you will not abandon the Voice for Truth, if you will not abandon commitment to being the Love that you Are, the Function of who you really Are will give you the courage to let the bubble pop, and come Home. In other words, not experience this film of separation between who you presently experience yourself to be—tiny and vulnerable—and what you Are already in your Totality, in your infinite Wholeness, which only seems to be separated by the flimsiest of boundaries.

Now, the reason I have gone on at some length here is because healing is never private, and healing is never localized to just one area of your life. The "crisis" may seem to apply to only one specific area in your life, but the healing, the resolution of the crisis, will embrace more of your life, and more of everyone's life, because you cannot experience healing without the whole Brotherhood becoming "less dense."

You all need to remember that at the bottom line, no matter what the details of the crisis are, it is always bait, intent upon distracting you from remembering that you are the presence of Love, and that that is your Function. And in that Function is your salvation, is your healing, is your Wholeness, and is your Awakening. That's the point!

QUESTION: You've talked a lot about in the time of crisis listening for the Voice for Truth, or I guess another way would be to say listening to your guide. Well I have an experience where I'll go to work, on the way to work I have time to collect my thoughts, listen to tapes from an older workshop, or just get centered and have a conversation with my guide, go up into my office, start working and at some point I lose that contact. And it's not a matter of crisis, but I'll get to the end of the day and realize that at some point I lost that contact. And then I get back in my car and start listening again. Do you have any tips on...

RAJ: How to stayed joined without needing the prod of a crisis?

QUESTION: Exactly, yes.

RAJ: Well I must say two things. First of all it is wonderful that on the way to work and on the way home you are remembering. And this is cause for your being at peace with yourself rather than feeling that you are not doing as well as you ought to be doing in terms of the commitment and consistency of listening throughout the day. You see, this is not about a practice. It is not about a system of behavior. I encourage you to ask your guide or the Holy Spirit or the Father to remind you from time to time. This is far better than your trying to figure out a way how to remind yourself. Because the very fact of inviting, the very act of inviting help is an expression of your desire not to be alone and independent. It also relieves you of a personal sense of responsibility which if you exercise well you can take credit for when you wake up.

You certainly can get yourself a wristwatch that will beep at you every 10 minutes or every hour as a little reminder, but I encourage you not to do that, and not to take any mechanical steps, but your relationship with your guide and your leaning into your relationship with your guide, let that be the source of your reminder. And in the meantime don't be distressed if you are not doing it 24 hours a day. Let there be a sense of appreciation for the fact that now instead of never being in touch with your guidance you are in the morning and the evening. There is a call with you for some self-appreciation, acknowledgment that you are doing well. And there is room for you to feel gratitude for the time and the times when you do remember to listen. I want you to engage more in appreciation than in finding ways to do better so that once you've done better you can engage in appreciation.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This isn't quite as long as the last one. My home is littered with dead bodies—it is! It's flies. The float home that I bought was unfinished and somehow flies have decided to make it their home and they're hatching in the windows and door frames all year round now. And I tried to make a deal, I tried to talk to the universe and ask them if they would please quit hatching because I didn't like killing them. They kept hatching anyway. And so every time I spray around the edges of it and the poor little gaffers die and it's not easy. And I feel I am very aware of each of these little creatures. And can you tell me how I can alleviate this to their benefit and mine?

RAJ: The only practical alternative you have to what you are doing is to move out. In other words, you are doing what must be done and you must not fuss about it.

QUESTION: That is very shocking to me, I mean on two levels. One is because at the moment there seems to be a Move of what to have me move over to the float home and there has been since December. And it's really interesting because in December I sat in the middle of this wonderful place and just loved it, I loved everything that was around me. Never have I loved a place that I'd been, I reveled in. And then there was an attack from the outside community. The community perceives float homes as not being desirable. And so I found myself in a movement to have our float homes legitimized. At the same time these little bodies are busy hatching around my windows and whatnot and I'm putting them out of my misery. And then the outside threat to the float home comes to the end and suddenly the person from whom I'm supposed to be buying it goes into bankruptcy. And I may lose my deposit and may move out. So when you say to me, you have to move out I'm thinking, "maybe I do, I don't know." And at the same time that you're talking about all of these things today and saying that you'll find... you said at one point that you'll find suddenly that something doesn't bother you anymore. It suddenly doesn't bother me if I have to leave that place that I admit that I love being. So...

RAJ: But being willing to leave and being guided to leave are two different things.

QUESTION: Or being pushed?

RAJ: Being pushed and being guided are two different things. Don't move an inch until guidance says, "now we will move." In the order of practical priorities dealing with the flies in a different way than you are dealing with them is very low on the priority list. That is the answer.

Now for example I did not share with you that although I have instructed Paul that it is appropriate to pay the IRS the amount they are demanding relative to the Foundation, and to do it with joy, I have throughout the years told Paul it is not appropriate for him to pay the penalties that were applied to him personally.

Now, if you try to find consistency in that, you will be lost. But if you realize that none of this is about consistency but all of it is about waking up, that all of it is about coming to a point of not basing one's actions on one's best limited judgments, but rather being willing to make commitment to "Thy will, not mine be done," then you will begin to understand how it works.

In Biblical terms, the ego is a liar, and the father of it, meaning the father of the lie. It is an illusion and the father of the illusion. It is incapable of being direct, honest. And for lack of better words, the undoing of illusion can only be accomplished by the Holy Spirit, and the undoing of the ego is always accomplished by misdirection.

You see, everyone thinks that the ego is going to be improved and ultimately spiritualized so that it will finally wake up. And everyone thinks they are an ego. However, the ego is nothing but a set of beliefs which are not based in fact, but are based on a fundamental sense of isolation, separateness, vulnerability. Therefore, its total function is self-defense. And its total function of self-defense is nonsensical in the presence of an all-pervading infinite Presence called God, and in the middle of Reality which is indivisible, therefore undivided, and therefore incapable of being in a state of conflict.

Your Self is not an ego. Your Self—You—are the presence of the Mind of God functioning perfectly. But a decision has been made to use this specific form [the body] as the vantage point from which to look at everything, which causes all of your perceptions of everything to be distorted because it can only be seen truly from the infinite vantage point, the all-inclusive vantage point.

When I say that the only way the ego can be dealt with is by misdirection, I mean that the undoing of it occurs by a sleight of hand. Many of you have listened to what I have said as though you were going to learn something from what I said, when much of the time I am speaking to the ego and non-verbally connecting with the Self of you, and illuminating It so that you feel your Self more fully.

What undoes your precious illusions...I will use Paul here: What will undo his firm convictions about the IRS, and maybe “government” itself, will not necessarily be the result of consistent, logical directions from me. And so, on the one hand, I say it is not appropriate, and on the other hand I say it is appropriate to pay. And what is Paul getting out of it? What he is getting out of it is that it’s not about right or wrong. It’s not about just or unjust. It’s about staying on the beam! It’s about commitment to listening to the Voice for Truth. It is about commitment to That in him Which is the presence of God. And it is about abandoning allegiance to that which seems to be in him, which seems to be him, which is pure illusion, called the ego.

Healing is the eradication of conflicting points of view, one or the other of which seems to need to be the victor—right-mindedness overcoming wrong-mindedness. And so in one dream I tell him, “You don’t need to run from the dragon,” and in another dream I say to him, “You need to run from the dragon, and I will help you.”

Guidance very often creates a state of frustration in you that causes you to throw up your hands and give up!

QUESTION: Is that where you want us to be? Is that where we're supposed to be, throwing up our hands...

RAJ: To give up?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: Absolutely! I not only want you to get to the end of your rope that you think you have to hang onto, I want you to let go of it, because until you let go of it, you will not find that there's no place to fall!

If you were careless and injured your body in some way you deserve to have a healing of that injury, because it's your birthright to experience your unchanging perfection. But what if your body said, "Wait a minute, why should she get to experience peace of mind without having paid for the injury I suffered the infliction of?" It's not logical, as I said earlier, it's not fair. Do you see that healing has nothing to do with what the ego calls logic and it has everything to do with your coming not into line with logic but into line with the Father's Will. And that means letting the Father's Will be your desire to experience more than logic, more than justice, more than fairness.

Right now very simply put, you have other areas where realization is where you stand on the threshold of realization and the flies aren't one of them.

QUESTION: I understand.

RAJ: Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. But also pay attention to the fact that when you think you know what guidance is supposed to tell you you're lost. Because all you are using guidance for is to confirm whatever your present ignorance is.

QUESTION: Am I getting it? Because right now I don't feel like I'm getting it. Did I get it?

RAJ: It slipped in.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well this isn't a burning question, but it's something that I experience. I live on a Bainbridge Island. I have a lot of very capable, respectable, bright people who are fighting all kinds of causes, either against or for—magnetic power, or schools or keeping the highway from being overrun by all this stuff that always goes on in a neighborhood. And I guess I'm feeling that I don't want to fight anything. And yet I have these people who tell me and want me to get involved and get in the ranks. And I've just kind of stayed away from it so far. And I guess maybe that's what I'll continue to do. What is all this about?

RAJ: Well, I will tell you that you are not being an ostrich putting its head in the sand ignoring what you ought to pay attention to. You are not acting inappropriately. And I encourage you to continue to pay attention to what you feel moving in you or not moving in you and be consistent with it without apology and without guilt.

QUESTION: Right because we live on a farm. It's an organic farm. I don't use poisons and try to stay away from all these things that people are so concerned about, just for my own reasons. I don't know. But it is confusing. I kind of stand and scratch my head when I see all this activity going on and wondering...

RAJ: Well as you just saw, Connie had an expectation of me not to say what I said. I'm not here to cater to what she wants to hear, I'm here to be genuinely expressing the Father's Will. And you are there to genuinely be the Presence of your Integrity, I will put it that way. You're not here to jump when a whole group of people have gotten revved up about jumping about something.

QUESTION: Yeah, I kind of feel that it's the presence of fear. That's about what's going on.

RAJ: Your perspective is true.

QUESTION: I guess I didn't have much of a question.

RAJ: It's important to know when you are on the beam. Indeed.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This is my first time here and I am just feeling overwhelmed. This is just incredible to me. And I will be back many, many times. My question is not specific it's very conceptual in nature. And that is that I have been experiencing more and more that Love is only of one kind, and I would like your comments about whether there is a distinction, and whether Love has different forms, different intensities, different levels. I just tend to see Love as Love, whether it's love with people, with family, within a relationship, with my pets, with my love for my work (when I do love my work) gardening, birds, nature. Could you please comment?

RAJ: You are quite correct. Instead of saying there is only one kind of Love, I would say there is only Love.

Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. Love is the acknowledgment of what is Real, and so it applies to the leaves, and the grass, and the grass cuttings, and the animals, and the work, and on and on and on.

Again, that which is Real in each and every thing is God's intent, God's Presence in it. And so, to be recognizing God, acknowledging God, actually experiencing the Presence of God because you have invited the experience in each and everything, that is Love. They are not different kinds of Love because they are different things. The purpose of Love is not different from thing to thing. And Love is never a matter of getting. It's always this act of acknowledging, of giving recognition to God—there, there, there, there, there. You see?

QUESTION: Should I never be using the word “reciprocity”?

RAJ: Love is never exchanged. Love is always a gift. And because the giving of that gift is your Function, it is also your fulfillment. And it doesn't matter whether anyone or anything else seems to be returning it. Their returning it is their fulfillment of their Function, in which lies their experience of Wholeness. You see?

QUESTION: So you're saying that their or its love could be going in another direction and be fulfilling that which is giving the love?

RAJ: No. What I am conveying to you is that whether Love seems to be reciprocal or not is irrelevant to you. That is what I am saying.

If you are making distinctions between things, and you are willing to recognize that which is Real in “this” thing but not “that” thing, you are missing the point and you are missing your fulfillment. When you are truly being loving, when you are truly being Love and fulfilling your Function, absolutely nothing is untouched universally.

QUESTION: I would just like to comment that I don't believe I am doing that. I believe I'm feeling the love equally throughout. And like you say, Love is Love. In every relationship I've had in the past, I feel that I've really had the expectation of reciprocity, and I don't now. And I guess I just needed to hear what you had to say about it, because so many people I know want a partnership with reciprocity, and I wondered if I was off base.

RAJ: Oh, no. Relationships are almost always for purposes of control.

QUESTION: Thank you

QUESTION: This is widely different topic, but it's been something fascinating to me so I'll ask it. Could you comment on this face on Mars that seems to have been built by somebody at sometime. I guess it was our voyager satellite that picked up pictures of it.

RAJ: .It is enough for you all—I do not mean just you here in the room but for all of you on the globe—it is important for all of you to know that you are not alone. But at this time it is not appropriate for me to say anything more than that. It is a structure rather than a natural occurrence. That's the end of the answer.

I thank you for asking though, and not feeling confined in your subject matter.

QUESTION: Quite awhile ago I sort of figured that love belonged to the lover, that that was my way of experiencing the extension of love in that it didn't matter whether you felt it or not. It belonged to me and I was grateful for the feeling of it. So those things in my life which unlocked that feeling were very valued. And so there's a couple of measures of where I'm at in extending my love, and they happened to be how much I love insects—I mean the fly question was not altogether inappropriate.

RAJ: You notice that I did not tell you to stop inviting them to find some other place to be. And do not doubt that that communication is complete, that the connection is made. But again as I said, this is not where the threshold of breakthrough awaits you.

QUESTION: I understand. I mean I really do understand.

RAJ: For someone else or for yourself at another time this could be the threshold and my answer would not be the same. Don't want your thresholds to be different from what they are. Don't prefer this one.

QUESTION: This one is easier. The flies are easier believe me. However, the thing that I wanted to get at with love is the extension of love: When I see you and I love you, and I see Paul and I love him, when I see people that I know that I love I feel the love going out and I know that it's there. My desire is that everything I see I feel that same thing for. So when I'm not feeling that same thing we have this special relationship vs. the holy relationship and...

RAJ: No, when you get into reciprocity you have a special relationship—contractual reciprocity.

QUESTION: Ah, no kidding. I never made that connection. So let's go one further. So there's not that reciprocity, but when I look at people that I don't know I don't often love them instantly the way I love people that I know and that I have developed with. I mean sometimes I will. Sometimes I'll see someone and immediately I'm in love with them. And this is really weird, I mean I discovered how much I loved a worm one day. And truly that is the measure of my Awakening is when I can see the dragon fly that I was terrified by and wouldn't mind if it touched me or landed on me. So what I'm saying, my question to you is, when I feel nothing when I look at something or someone what is that? Is that a closing down?

RAJ: We can look at the half full glass or the half empty glass. It is an opportunity to engage curiosity about the feeling of love that is within you but unrecognized at the moment for this thing. And one of the ways to awaken the love in you is to be curious to know what its capital "M" Meaning is. "Where in the infinite intent of the Father is the glorious in this thing?"

QUESTION: Which means the TV set. Which means the bookcase, the books, the trees, the rug. It's possible to feel that same extension for all of these things?

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: That answered my question.

RAJ: Because if something is there it's the Kingdom of Heaven experienced without distortion or experienced with distortion—seen clearly or seen through a glass darkly in Biblical terms.

QUESTION: Can we go another step?

RAJ: We may.

QUESTION: Okay. When I see it and I feel it and it's unblocked and it's flowing I'm still seeing it as what it is. When I look at the TV set I'm seeing it as a TV set, and yet if the love was unlocked I would feel the same thing, the same love flowing and I would feel it differently. I'm not seeing with my physical eyes what I'm feeling with my heart. So in view of the fact you've said at some point you'll see light streaming from things, I'm feeling light streaming from the things that I see that I love in my heart, but I'm not seeing in my eyes. And I'm judging myself for that.

Well then be curious about what is Meaningful in you. In other words, you are extending the willingness to see that which is lovable in the TV, now turn your gaze, your inner gaze on yourself to see what is lovable there. And you will not waste time with penance and.. well reorientation and resolution. In other words, you will not engage a process which will bring you to a place of loving yourself. Just be willing to look at yourself the way you are looking at the TV. Might you not, might you not be as worthy as the worm that you discovered love for. Might it not be that easy to feel love for yourself without going through a rehabilitation therapy process? Indeed.

QUESTION: I got it. Thank you.

RAJ: We will end with that. Thank you, I have enjoyed being with all of you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –March 17th, 1996

By: Raj Christ Jesus –

RAJ: Well without any preamble we will go directly into any questions or comments or concerns any of you might want to bring up for discussion.

QUESTION: Over the years I've asked you many questions pertaining to my relationship with my husband Steven. You've given me answers ranging from my needing to maintain my integrity and leave the situation, which felt to me dominated by Steven's drug and alcohol issues. You also told me at one point not to take this opportunity lightly, that if I could move through this challenge it could mean a good deal to my spiritual growth. Well Steven and I are seeing a mediator and are pursuing a divorce. I have mixed feelings over this even though I am moving on. But I don't want to have this become a rearranging of furniture, so to speak. I don't want to miss the point of my being with Steven. And I want very much to have guidance regarding what the next step is for me, where to my energies in a focused way about work

RAJ: Indeed, as I have said many times, it is always important to pay attention to the obvious, not what should happen, what ought to happen, what ought not to happen, but what is obvious. And what is obvious is that there are no longer two of you in the relationship bringing energy to the relationship. This is not right or wrong, it just is what is. And so you do not try to change it. You do not try to manipulate it into what you would like. At earlier times when you asked questions the arrangement of the energy, so to speak, was different and it was available to the two of you as a unit from each of you.

Now, the obvious calls for no judgment, it just calls for a willingness to not abandon that place in you where you can recognize the Movement of God in your life. Because that is where fulfillment is coming forth, very much like everything is coming forth because it is Spring right now. Your energy needs to be available to your children and it needs to be available indeed to that activity or those activities which will give expression to what you love, to your creativity. And yes I would fully encourage you to give your commitment to your jewelry making business. That is where the gathering of energies is occurring, which will come forth identified as activity, as income, as your joy.

I also encourage you—and not just you, but all of you—I encourage you to allow for an openness to the evidence of fulfillment and fruition this year, more than any other year so far. Because as I indicated last time we met, a shift has occurred, the equivalent of a breakthrough has occurred, which has released everyone and put them in the position of experiencing or of being able to experience unjustifiable good. This does not mean that those who are insisting on a very narrow vision that they have employed for years, it does not mean that they will suddenly experience unexpected good. Because with their blinders on they will not let themselves see the more that is available. And so this is why I am sharing it with everyone. So that they might say, “Oh, maybe I should open the blinders a little further, or maybe I should take them off entirely, and let any old good that might just happen to me happen.”

So I guess you could say if there is one thing I am meaning to convey to you it is to let go of the idea that you must do something to justify having good in your experience. At the bottom line, that is what everyone uses to hold their good away from them. “I haven’t earned it. I don’t deserve it.” And the flip side of that is, “I don’t want what I haven’t earned, because if I have something I haven’t earned it doesn’t say anything about me. It doesn’t give me credibility. It doesn’t demonstrate the fact that I can prove my worth. Give-aways are useless because I can’t use them to demonstrate what a responsible and good person I am.” You see? In other words one side of the coin is “I don’t deserve it,” and the other side of the coin is “I don’t want what I can’t use to prove something about me because it doesn’t serve me.”

So I won’t go any further into that side of the coin right now, but it will give you food for contemplation. How much do you require yourself to earn your good because you can use it to prove your integrity or your worth? And what would it be like if you had all and it said nothing about you, and its presence couldn’t be used to define you personally, what kind of an existence would you be having? It is an interesting and fruitful thing to contemplate. That is an aside from your question and the answer to your question—a bonus. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Just as a side bar I’ve taken care of that little situation we had last time we talked. Back in ’91 in Hood River I told you at that time I had no idea what I was doing or where I was going. Well I find myself in that same vein right now. I think or I feel...

RAJ: Did you think that although that is supposedly a good place to be because I said it is, did you suppose that if you allowed yourself into that place it would then move you into a place where you did know what you were doing and where you were going?

QUESTION: Well it hasn’t worked.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: Because that's where I am right now again.

RAJ: So things are still working on your behalf?

QUESTION: Well, yes, but being human I'm in this position that I was told last year I should be in, that was it fulfilled purpose for me to be here. And of course, I say being human, I'm really questioning that right now because I just don't feel like I should be here, not in this location but in the job I'm in right now, even though as you had said at one time it was not a job it was a vehicle, and look forward to be moving me elsewhere. I guess I'm just looking for a little confirmation that that elsewhere is still moving.

RAJ: Oh indeed. The place you are right now is not a stable place because it has no roots. It is a vehicle. It is a part of a Movement of your Being bringing you into a noticeably clearer experience of not only your stability and groundedness, but your practical fulfillment. And I encourage you not to get impatient and try to hurry the process along or abandon it because it isn't going fast enough for you. What the situation is calling for is you being alert and conscious to the moment you're in every moment. And when I say, being conscious I mean to be present in the moment not alone. In other words, whether you are hearing guidance or not I want you to be in every moment aware that you are [connected] (tape was blank for a word or two, so I put in a word that I thought fit) with, aware that whatever is occurring is not being seen by you alone, but by one or even those who see the whole picture and intend to bring the broadest view of it to your attention that you are willing to embrace. If you will attend to each moment you are in as though you truly aren't alone, that will open the door for insight and for reconfiguration to occur so that when at times you're experiencing imbalance momentarily balance will resume spontaneously and quickly with a feeling inside you of stability that isn't dependent upon circumstances—the circumstances of the moment.

Very often you and others want guidance so you can get off the spot, get off the dime, get rid of the hot potato so to speak, instead of learning to be with the hot potato or how to be on the spot from a new vantage point so that it becomes something you don't need to get away from, because you aren't unequal to it. And the moment you let yourself be present with the circumstance that your conditioning causes you to feel uncomfortable with, the moment you allow yourself to be present with it and there is nothing in you attempting to deny it, then that about it which your conditioning had found uncomfortable will be able to be seen in a new light which isn't frightening or unsteady to you. And this becomes a place now in which your balance is felt. And the amount of the universe that you can occupy comfortably has gotten larger, less objectionable.

Now I know that that might sound like you will become comfortable with an uncomfortable situation and because it's not uncomfortable you'll be stuck in it. But that is not what I'm talking about. When you don't need it any longer to move you into that willingness to be present and to not try to get away from the hot spot, then that spot which had always been apart of the Kingdom of Heaven ceases to be a hot spot, an uncomfortable place that you couldn't be comfortable. Now it becomes part of the Kingdom of Heaven that you can be comfortable in with no elements of distress associated with it. In other words, the apparent circumstance will transform.

As each of you wakes up there will be less and less of the universe that you will feel a need to get away from. And in your willingness to be present with it, what it Really is will begin to register with you. And that's called healing. It's called letting that Mind be in you which was also in me. It's called letting yourself have new eyes.

When you are resisting something in your world or in your life because you feel unequal to it, you create in that thing the elements which justify for you the need of getting away. And so you don't see it correctly. And because of your inappropriate response to it, you get responses from it that don't represent what is truly there.

When you look in you brother's eyes and you see somebody who cheats, someone who consistently lies, someone who you don't dare depend on because his history proves that he's undependable, you are looking at the Son of God and making those judgments and then acting on the basis of those judgments and you are likely to elicit that kind of behavior. But if as the Course says you are willing to look into your brother's eyes and see the face of God or remember the face of God, your behavior is going to be different. And even if that one had been expressing dishonesty and the other things I mentioned, if you are treating him as the Son of God, if you are seeing God there those kind of responses from him won't fit and will throw him into a quandary and cause him to be able to respond in a new way because he feels no threat from you.

But you have to be willing to stand there and be present with that one at the point where you are defining him negatively so that you can dare to let in a different point of view. You must love that one enough not to run away based on your judgments, but dare to see the Son of God there, dare to see the presence of God there. This is called Love—the willingness to recognize that which is Real in him. Your willingness opens your vision and as your vision changes then this one is no longer someone you have to get away from or be frightened of. And in your fearlessness that one feels safe. And feels no need to reinforce his defense. And his behavior changes. The same thing applies with jobs or circumstances.

You see?

QUESTION: Yes I do now. Thank you. That cleared up some “yes, buts” I was having along the way.

RAJ: Very well.

QUESTION: You've already spoken somewhat to what is going on with me. The one place where I really have trouble seeing the Son of God in a sense is my children. And they're not babies, there nearly thirty. But I tend to worry about them. It is the one area in my life where I can just lose all my belief systems so quickly...

RAJ: Lose all your what?

QUESTION: My belief systems, all my patterns, all these wonderful things I'm learning from you that working and making my life wonderful. But if I see something that looks to me as if it is threatening one of my sons I just go a muck.

Anyway my youngest son is twenty-five and he's going to Europe. And he's going to hike around Europe for a couple of months, and I just want to look at this differently. The old me would really, really worry and yet I don't think that's appropriate. And I think I'm hanging on to some beliefs that are not true.

RAJ: I will tell you this you will wear yourself out and make yourself miserable, while he has the most time of his life.

QUESTION: I have a feeling you're right. I mean I guess there's some part of me that really just wanted to come over here...

RAJ: Do you really have such free time that you can waste your time in this way?

QUESTION: No, I really do not have any free time.

RAJ: I am appealing here to your sense of practicality.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: Because you have a tendency to value what is practical more than you value your capacity to be emotional.

QUESTION: That's true.

RAJ: A little bit of self-discipline here will save you from the distress you will feel between the contacts you have when he is telling you what a wonderful time he's having.

QUESTION: Thank you. I think I needed to hear that. Thank you very much.

RAJ: You know you can't stop loving. And in a way this is directed toward mothers more than the men here. You can't stop loving, but you can stop being mothers. There is a point where emancipation must occur. And there is a point where mothers must agree to it occurring. It will occur whether you like it or not. But there is a point where the mantel of responsibility must shift from your shoulders to your children's shoulders, so that they might dare trust into themselves and feel the strength and integrity of their being that you are enjoying experiencing for yourself so much. And your taking hold of the idea that you have innate integrity that you can become still enough to feel, that process took some nerve, some trust, it wasn't easy. But to whatever degree that you invested the energy in it, you found yourself becoming more firmly grounded, I'm going to say in the universe rather than in your personal skills or your local circumstances.

A mother has to arrive at a point where her wisdom as a mother says, "I must be through being a mother. I must be through bearing the responsibility for what does or doesn't happen in my children's lives," so that they have no recourse but to lean into their essential integrity, so that they will put forth the energy and the effort that you had to put into it. Because in making that leap of faith they take the essential step that connects them with the God in them, so to speak. You see?

As I said it doesn't mean you stop loving them. But perhaps as a mother instead of saying, "you know, I don't think you ought to do that," or "from my experience, blah, blah, blah," you will begin to say, "you know, it's time for you to reach inside yourself. It's time for you to lean into the integrity that I see in you, and learn to feel for it." And you be the one teaching them to not lean on you, but to learn to rely on their fundamental inner substance. You become the one who gives a vote of confidence in their divine integrity by turning their life over to it. You see?

QUESTION: What a relief! Thank you.

RAJ: Indeed! You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have rather an opposite situation. I have a 97 year old mother who all my life has been concerned that I become saved in the way in which her fundamentalist belief thinks I should be saved. I probably should add that she's now at the place where she's somewhat mentally confused.

RAJ: She is not or she is?

QUESTION: She is becoming. Sometimes I feel... in fact she told me that she doesn't feel that she can... she wants the Lord to take her home, but she can't go until I get saved. And I've struggled with this all my life and recently have come to a place where I can just let it be. But I'd like some comments from you on this.

Just this morning... I don't go to church with her, I have someone pick her up and take her, someone who goes to her church. And when she came home this morning I was there and she said, "these people really know that you won't go to church with me." So obviously she informed them of her problem with her daughter, which I finally learned to just let it float off, I used to get very angry about it. But it's interesting it doesn't seem to ever stop. I don't expect it really will, but...

RAJ: There is a saying that the essential meaning of which is that when another shoots an arrow, or engages in attack, shoots an arrow towards you, you are the one who barbs it, who puts the point on it. Until you join in a mutual dance of attacker and victim. Until you join as victim, as attackee, the attack has no substance to it, it has no capacity in itself to affect you at all. But the minute you say, "Aha, that bitch did it again," you have joined the dance and the arrow has a point on it. And it hits you and you suffer and you say, "you so-and-so look at what you're doing to me." And yet there was no point on the arrow until you put it there.

Now you have learned not to put the point on the arrow. You can't stop her from shooting the arrows. Even though she feels she is doing something loving, you recognize that because it's inconsistent with your unfoldment it has no meaning for you and could be interpreted as an unkindness because she never lets up. But again, that judgment is the way the arrow, the point gets put on the arrow. You must just chuckle.

QUESTION: Well I pretty much learned to that but it just occurred to me in the last few weeks... before then I say no there's no way I'm going to go to church with her. I cannot handle it. I don't want to handle it. And I don't need to do it. I do everything else for her and she can have someone else take her. And it's occurred to me in the last couple of weeks that maybe I could go to church with her, and what is the big deal! I guess that's kind of where...

RAJ: I will be very practical with you, if you give an inch she will take a mile.

QUESTION: That's what I kind of thought...

RAJ: And I am not projecting a negative judgment on her. But there is an element of control here and if you yield she will try to do everything she can to bring you even closer to being saved. That is not the place in which, or the manner in which to share your love with her.

QUESTION: That's pretty much how I had thought it would happen. It's helpful to me to hear your thoughts about actually going this mile with her. I think then she would, as you say she would start working on some other area then if she got me to do that. And she's the one that's miserable about it. I'm from the place where I just let it roll off, you know, I just chuckle. But she keeps at it. And I don't know maybe I would just be adding to her discomfort if I kind of went along with her little by little. I don't know. That's my question.

RAJ: Just continue to be true to your highest sense of integrity for yourself. And share your love in the areas that don't entangle you in her agendas for you.

QUESTION: Thank you. That's a very helpful.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm Camila. And I'm a lot better than I was down at Hood canal and most grateful for all the information. And the latest problem that's come up is my eye sight with my left eye, which is an old problem coming back or something else going on at some level I'm not aware of.

RAJ: Problems are always current misunderstandings manifest.

QUESTION: Okay, so what am I not understanding?

RAJ: It is important to understand that, because if you say it is an old problem coming back then it seems to have the force of time on its side. It has a history to it, you see. But Creation is always the current expression of God. And distortions, distorted perceptions of Creation are always current misperceptions. So you problems are always arising out of the instant you're in and therefore haven't been around long enough to have gathered enough substance to resist correction--you see?--to resist healing. They are always the current manifestation of what has been a fleeting thought, a fleeting incorrect thought. Fleeting only because in an instant that's all the time there is for. You see? Continue.

QUESTION: Well, what do I need to correct the perception then, if I don't even know what's being misperceived?

RAJ: Well it will be helpful for you to understand that what you call your eyes have the intent to identify their reason for existing. And their reason for existing is to identify conscious experience, awareness. Awareness is Mind, God being conscious of what He infinitely Is. That is the meaning or function of vision. You might say that God in the act of Creation is the conscious experience of vision itself. Therefore, your eyeballs and every aspect of them has the divine intent to identify its reason for being perfectly. And I shared this with you before, relative to your body in Hood River: Your body has the intent or its function is to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. And your individuality is Mind. It's the conscious experience of being alive.

So if you understand that your body and your eyeballs are not just lumps of physical matter, but are indeed the visibility and tangibility of the divine intent of God, and that they are present to fulfill the identification of your presence perfectly, then instead of finding out what you personally can do better mentally or physically to heal yourself you could just for a moment become totally self-irresponsible so that the Presence of God might be the only thing there. Do you see what I'm saying? The Movement and the Intent behind the act of Creation, which has to be responsible for every single thing you're experiencing at this moment, called life in all its wonderful details... (I'm sorry, I lose it.) ...in the Presence of the Movement of Life in all of its marvelous details there is not call for you to bring anything to bear upon it. All you need to do is to get out of the way momentarily, so that the act of Creation, the assertion you might say of Mind/God... (I lost it again.) ...in getting out of the way so that the Movement of Creation or what you might call the assertion of God can be the only thing manifesting itself you will experience healing.

QUESTION: It's like God seeing Itself through me?

RAJ: Exactly, except when you get a personal, let us say metaphysical worker out of the way, a personal knower of the truth whose going to through the proper use of truth effect a healing, when that gets out of the way then God's being of perfect vision is all there is present where you are. So God isn't seeing through you, it's that this you that you thought you were separate from God is gone. And what is real about you remains. And what is real about you is God seeing everything that He/She has made and behold it is very good, very perfect, you see.

And this is important to understand because—you are familiar with the statement, “Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free”—what is often misunderstood is that you don't know what the truth is to know until you listen. You must listen on the spot, in the moment for the voice for truth, for God's Voice so that you might know the truth, so that you might know the truth to know.

There is another statement, "Truth is revealed, it needs only to be practiced." And that means that truth is always a revelation in the moment of conscious experience. And so if you want to know the truth that will make you free from illusion, you must become still enough in the moment to have the revelation. And again, the revelation is inevitable because God in the act of Creation, you could say, is asserting truth. And that assertion is bound to register whenever one is not asserting a mind of his or her own, and is quiet enough to be impressed by the assertion of God called the act of Creation in the moment. And when you know the truth as a result of revelation in the moment, all you have to do you could say is practice it or get with the program. You see? Flow with it, be with it, allow for it to be. You see?

Metaphysical work... those are perfect words. It is work! It's effort! And it's effort put forth that isn't the assertion of the Will of God in the act of Creation. It's a personal private little work that is done by a puny little mind that perceives itself as separate from God, that which because it is separate is vulnerable and subject to Heaven knows what. And so it must use the truth to protect itself from all that it sees which is fearful. And all that there is for it to see is what God is being. But of course, in its separated sense it doesn't know it's all God, and it misperceives. And in its sense of vulnerability it sees all of what God is as something to protect itself against, because if it doesn't keep its vigil strong God only knows what will happen. Again, perfect words. And this separated little ego is frightened to death to find out what God only knows.

So, "ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." And in order to know the truth you must become still enough for the revelation of truth in the moment to register with you. So that in the clarity of the experience of truth you might yield to it and allow it to be the Presence, the only Presence there where you are.

Now today so far we haven't talked about grand points of truth in any universal sense, the questions have all been mundane you might say of practical little nit-picking things that are a bother to each of you. Well, you see, these little nit-picking botherations are exactly those places where one must be willing to be still so as to be able to recognize the specific truth that heals the misperception around it.

Many people study metaphysics. Many people are on their spiritual paths so as to rise above and get away from all these nit-pick, chicken-shit botherations. And that's what I was referring earlier to you about, being willing to be present with these nit-pick, chicken-shit botherations. And be quietly present so that you can experience the revelation of truth that is pertinent and that cleans the lens through which you're looking at the only thing there is to see. You see?

QUESTION: That's part of it. The other half is is there some way that I could hear the full spectrum of the sound current, like I've never heard the flutes and I hear a lot but not... I don't know what's blocking that in the silence.

RAJ: Again, whether it's the eyeball or the eardrum or all of the structure of the outer and inner ear, the structure is there to identify the presence of you as conscious awareness perfectly. So that the Movement of God, the Being of God in all of its infinite variety can be experienced without distortion. This means that your ear, your eyes, your heart, your... every part of your body has a conscious intent of its own you might say, set in place in it by God's Will to identify you perfectly. It is constantly, every aspect of your body, is constantly insisting on registering with you in its perfection, whether you're thinking right thoughts or not. And the only thing that blocks any of you from experiencing perfect health is other thoughts, "I don't deserve it. Well, I mistreated my body. I abused it. I've done this. I've eaten that. Too much of this not enough of that. I don't deserve to experience perfect health. The body must have its justice and not let me off the hook too soon." These kinds of thoughts are the way each of you block your experience of the current moment by moment act of Creation that the Father is being perfectly and expressing perfectly.

You see it isn't so much an old problem coming up, it's an old mindset it's an old set of thoughts that is asserting itself, or seeming to be more valid to you. So, becoming silent is a very rich resource for enlightenment and healing, because when one is willing to become silent one ceases to assert private, personal misunderstandings in the face of God's assertion called Creation that is always happening in the instant fully and perfectly.

So I don't want you to try to find out what you are doing wrong. I want you to embrace consciously the idea that your body is intent at every part of your body is intent upon identifying perfectly what God is Being right there. And then inviting that in, inviting the revelation of that conscious experience whether you deserve it or not, whether you've treated your body well or not.

The last thing I want to do with you is give you something correct to do with your thoughts. There's very little trust that any of you expressed when you even clearly and correctly assert truth for yourselves. You do that because you're afraid there isn't a God whose already doing it, the evidence of which you will experience the moment you stop asserting truth on your behalf and listen in the moment for the revelation of truth that will set you free.

QUESTION: To experience it rather than...

RAJ: Exactly! Everything there is that's Real, with a capital "R", is geared toward your having the experience of your perfection when you have gotten out of the way. It is a perfectly safe thing to do, no matter how dangerous your ego perceives it to be.

So, 20/20 vision, 100% hearing, full spectrum... this is what is constantly insisting upon registering with you, this is what is constantly finding way to insinuate itself through your defenses into that place where you can recognize it. You don't have to create your health. It is already wanting you to experience it. You just have to dare not to try to hold the universe up with your own efforts, even though the ego says the moment you abandon that everything will be reduced to chaos.

QUESTION: So that could for financially too? To just allow it to come in, some funds somewhere?

RAJ: There is no other way. It doesn't mean you won't be involved, but in taking the time to be still so that your abundance can be revealed, whatever your participation is in it will be revealed as well, along with the motivation to be involved, not to make anything happen, but because it's a happening. You see? And you might huff and puff to keep up with the unfoldment of your abundance.

Of course, that brings us back to what I still will not go into in any detail, if your abundance comes and you are not responsible for it, and there's no way to use it to prove who you are then Who are you? What is the state of existing when your abundance is yours but you didn't create it?

QUESTION: Well, I have a rich Father in Heaven.

RAJ: Yes, you have a rich Father in Heaven but what about the Daughter who has a rich inheritance?

QUESTION: I'm ready! I'm ready! That doesn't mean to say I don't love my work.

RAJ: Indeed, I understand.

QUESTION: Okay, and I bring you some regards from Zeffer. And she's having some surgery on her nose in April and she'd like her healing angels to carry on the good work and she sends you her love and her gratitude.

RAJ: Indeed. Thank you.

QUESTION: And I thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: You've been with me a long time.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: What I seem to be mulling over right now, and I don't feel like I'm working at it too terribly hard but it's starting to concern me, I will be graduating this June. And I'm wanting to change my geographical residence upon graduation. And my question I guess is will it become apparent to me where that needs to be? Am I pursuing things as I should?

RAJ: I will tell you that you are a special case where it will not come to your attention. (laughter) No matter how hard you listen you will hear nothing. (laughter) This is one of those cases where you are going to be lost. (Paul/Raj laugh)

QUESTION: My ego is busy wanting to be in charge of choosing a place. And inside I guess I know that that's not necessary. And do I need to be sure, like put resumes and letters out to a lot of different places? Or is where I am looking at right now really appropriate for me?

RAJ: Every single thing that presents itself in your life is an opportunity for you to observe it in a state of being consciously joined with the Father or with your guide or with the Holy Spirit, all of which have an infinite view with which they are observing everything you look at. Every moment is an opportunity to be Awake, and I mean by that, alive to the fullness of anything you're giving your attention to. Every moment and everything that you consider is an opportunity to look with God, which is another way of saying it's an opportunity to experience the revelation of truth in it. This means that there is no "general rule of thumb" that you can just apply to living life.

And so, if there seem to be a number of places to send your resume, I would ask first of all are you aware that there are a number of places to send a resume because first you were still, and in the silence you became aware that there were a number of places? Or did you use your best logic and reasoning and come up with these? You see what I'm saying is that in each step and in every aspect take it to the Father, take it into the silence and listen for what the truth is here. And just keep doing it, and keep doing it, and keep doing it, and keep doing it, and keep doing it because that amounts to allowing yourself to be alive to the potential, or alive to the real meaning, the real living meaning of any little thing, everything that your day provides you with to experience. I'm trying to make this sound delightful, because it is delightful. It's the opportunity to be alive to the fullness of what God is being in the moment.

And you know this. And you know that you have been guided. The experience is not foreign to you. But I also understand that when you are faced with what you would call opportunities for major change it's like that means there are opportunities for major chaos as well. Which means that this is the kind of circumstance where a little bit of control might be wise. But I will tell you that if you are on the threshold of a major change you are on the threshold of—well for lack of better words—unlimited good.

And so I would ask you what I asked Paul and Susan many years ago at a point of change, what level of poverty would you rather establish than the level of infinite possibilities that it's the Father's good pleasure to present to you. Any attempt at personal control is going to establish invariably a level of poverty greater than the Father is preparing for you. Your level of poverty based on your prior experience maybe really wonderful, but it will always fall short of the wonderful that the Father prepares for you. You don't have to approach this as though it's a major change. It's just one where the potential is less restricted, where the good, where the order, where the harmony of its unfoldment can occur in wonderful ways beyond any structure that you might create by being in charge yourself.

So I encourage you to allow, that as I said a few moments ago, one's eyeballs, one's eardrums or any part of their body, they are intent upon, they have a function to fulfill, they are intent upon identifying what the Father is Being right there perfectly.

Well, your resumes have a reason for being. The places or the place you will be has a reason for being. All of this is intent upon coming into your range of vision, your conscious experience in their fullness. And I'm encouraging you to dare to believe it enough so that you might in the smallest way entrust yourself to that Movement of manifestation, that Movement of "coming into view" of the Father's Will.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. Hello, Raj...

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: ...and Paul. My question is will you, if you're willing, ask my question for me and then proceed to answer it? If not, I have a back-up.

RAJ: I will let you ask your question and I will let you answer it.

QUESTION: Okay, I'll try it.

RAJ: After you have asked the question I want you to listen for the answer.

QUESTION: May I then have a little guidance on how to listen? I feel I haven't been doing well on that score.

RAJ: That idol chit-chat is bullshit and simply saves you from having to be open to the experience a little bit longer. Listening doesn't take skill, it just takes silence. And I wouldn't be asking you to do something that would make you look foolish. So if you will verbalize your question.

QUESTION: My question, it goes basically like this...

RAJ: I'm going to interrupt you for a moment. I said that to you because your "excuse" is the sort of thing Paul engages in often when he's afraid of the answer or he has something he would rather do, or he thinks maybe he won't hear an answer. And it's like the solution to that dilemma is just say yes instead of all the words that are used that just delay having to listen. You just step up to the edge of the unknown and take one further step. You just say "yes" to being there.

The wisdom, the all knowing presence that is God is the presence of you in your actuality. And it is intent upon being your conscious experience of being you.

Now I will be quiet and let you ask your question.

QUESTION: I receive feedback around myself that goes something like, "you're still in the sandbox here. You haven't got out there and made anything of yourself or participated in the life's abundance, bringing wonderful... the fullness of life, you're in the small game still." And with this feedback I do the thing I usually do, which is, "it might be true, it might not be. I don't know." And then just proceed to do what I do. And my question goes something like, is it true that I could be proceeding along a lot better, you know getting higher marks in life 101 or whatever way you want to express it. I guess I'm asking, if God were sitting in front of me, I guess I'd say, "Hi, I'm Ted how am I doing so far?"

RAJ: And what does God say?

QUESTION: I don't know. I mean Ted doesn't know what God says about this.

RAJ: Close your eyes and let God be in front of you. God intends for you to know Him, experientially. Revelation may not be in words, it might be in feelings. But God at this instant is intend upon your having an experience of some sort of His presence.

QUESTION: So am I.

RAJ: And so I encourage you to relax and let whatever it is embrace you, enfold you within itself as an experience of meaning of some sort. And I simply ask you to verbalize in whatever way you can what the experience is.

QUESTION: The experience I have is kind of like a consciousness... (The tape was bad here and I can't hear the words well enough to transcribe.)

RAJ: I understand. Just let that be. Notice that it's occurring but while it's occurring you bring your attention back to God in front of you and what God might be conveying the meaning of to you. It's not a test. It's all right for you to misperceive.

QUESTION: What I perceive is kind of a blank, it's kind of a looking for something, listening for something. And putting out some energy towards keeping the distract from behind it, it starts trying think things or come up with things and be distracting and putting that aside and then kind of watching or listening for something, but not seeing or noticing or hearing or experiencing anything. It's kind of a void.

RAJ: Indeed. This is the way. Let us persist a little bit longer in the effortlessness of waiting for God to speak to you, or God to extend to you something that you are able to recognize.

QUESTION: I heard a nice bell.

RAJ: Indeed that was in the room here. Did it have a meaning for you.

QUESTION: It had a question, "What was that?"

RAJ: Pardon?

QUESTION: I don't think so. It just brought a question to my mind, "what was that?"

RAJ: A chime that is on top of the fireplace.

QUESTION: And it brought a thought that if it was that easy and that clear it would be great.

RAJ: It will be that clear. I realize you feel some self-consciousness.

You know you can't stop loving. And in a way this is directed toward mothers more than the men here. You can't stop loving, but you can stop being mothers. There is a point where emancipation must occur. And there is a point where mothers must agree to it occurring. It will occur whether you like it or not. But there is a point where the mantel of responsibility must shift from your shoulders to your children's shoulders, so that they might dare trust into themselves and feel the strength and integrity of their being that you are enjoying experiencing for yourself so much. And your taking hold of the idea that you have innate integrity that you can become still enough to feel, that process took some nerve, some trust, it wasn't easy. But to whatever degree that you invested the energy in it, you found yourself becoming more firmly grounded, I'm going to say in the universe rather than in your personal skills or your local circumstances.

A mother has to arrive at a point where her wisdom as a mother says, "I must be through being a mother. I must be through bearing the responsibility for what does or doesn't happen in my children's lives," so that they have no recourse but to lean into their essential integrity, so that they will put forth the energy and the effort that you had to put into it. Because in making that leap of faith they take the essential step that connects them with the God in them, so to speak. You see?

As I said it doesn't mean you stop loving them. But perhaps as a mother instead of saying, "you know, I don't think you ought to do that," or "from my experience, blah, blah, blah," you will begin to say, "you know, it's time for you to reach inside yourself. It's time for you to lean into the integrity that I see in you, and learn to feel for it." And you be the one teaching them to not lean on you, but to learn to rely on their fundamental inner substance. You become the one who gives a vote of confidence in their divine integrity by turning their life over to it because of others here and your not wanting to impose on their time by your "spiritual dullness." Which is your ego's assessment of you, not mine. What you are engaged in here, of giving your attention to one who is intent upon communicating with you and at the same time that you are doing this you are noticing thoughts and questions occur and you notice them but bring your attention back to this one who is intent upon communicating with you. This literally is the process of meditation, with the added depth that in the silence you desire to avail yourself of the experience of revelation, not just silence.

Now, the answer to how you are doing, God's answer is "I love you." The experience of that love awaits you. What I want to share with you is that the answer to "how am I doing" is not going to be an assessment of how you're doing. God is not going to say, "you're in the upper ninetieth percentile. You're already Home. You're already the Son of God. You're already Whole. And so the Father responds to you from the truth about you. And all he can say is, "I love you." You don't have to be able to jump three feet taller. You don't have to do this 10 percent better. You've already arrived. I know it sounds like I'm harping on a point, but what the ego has engaged everyone in for centuries is efforting to gain, to grow, to become more than you are, so that you might arrive at a point of achievement. When the fact is that from day one you had already arrived by virtue of being the presence of God expressed and nothing else. And waking up is a process, you might say, of letting go of all ideas and beliefs to the contrary. So that the exercise of effort to arrive at a point of achievement can be unemotionally abandoned. I mean abandoned without fear.

Opinions stink! When anyone wants to offer you their opinion politely listen and then in the absence of the person who has offered the opinion do what you would normally do with that which stinks—toss it in the trash can. And insist upon doing your own inner listening to a voice whose intent it is to get you to see the reasonableness of not trying harder, not learning how to do something a little bit better and in so doing constantly denying that you already have all the divine integrity there is for you to have.

QUESTION: Given that like point of arrival would be to be consciously aware of my own divinity or God expressing Itself, given that goal...

RAJ: Well you know what? Someone trying to climb out of a barrel has the top of the barrel as his goal. But the goal, if we're going to call it a goal of having the conscious experience of who you divinely are is the result of not only no longer climbing for the top but letting go of the side and yielding to gravity, if you will, and falling to the bottom of the barrel. Because in that place where whatever was trying to get to the top has yielded up all intent to get to the top all that's left there at the bottom of the barrel is the Son of God. And the Son of God discovers that the bottom of the barrel is Reality—the Kingdom of Heaven.

In the conscious experience of abject failure as an ego you in all of your sanity stand uncovered. This is true of everyone. So when you talk about a goal let it be a goal like, "I'm going to let gravity take over." You get the point?

QUESTION: That would be easy.

RAJ: Utterly! Your conditioning makes it seem scary. But as you recognize yielding to gravity is effortless. And all I am trying to do with anyone who will listen is to encourage them to yield to gravity, encouraging them to yield to the Movement of God which causes you to be nothing less than God expressed and having the conscious experience of it. And if you can only yield to gravity an inch at a time? Good! Again it's not a test. If you're losing an inch or a millimeter each time and not recovering it, you're on the right track. And inevitably as you lose control over and over and over a little bit at a time, and you discover that the universe doesn't collapse, and that you are feeling more sane although you cannot account for it, you find that you begin to have reinforcement that makes the next letting go less fearful. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: If there is going to be a "Second Coming" as predicted in Revelations will you be using Paul's body.

RAJ: I will be using yours and yours and yours and yours and yours...

QUESTION: So it's just a consciousness raising metaphor that's in the Bible?

RAJ: It refers to each one of the Brotherhood who are still sleeping waking up to their True identify.

QUESTION: Okay, Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, hello.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: You've been talking around this topic all day. I want to try to ask it in a different way. Last night Mike Tyson earned $30,000,000 for a fight that lasted 9 minutes. There's a lot written about manifestation, and I'd like to know more about abundance. I'm aware that there are things that are temporal and things that are spiritual, and that one might become distracted by too much money. I'm not aware how it works.

RAJ: Ordinarily when one talks about abundance and when one hears about prosperity and "prosperity consciousness," it refers to "temporal" things. It refers to "the world of form," and learning the skills necessary to cause the form to reconfigure in what is conceived to be a desirable way. And you know, it doesn't matter whether one is trying to manifest a million dollars or whether a slight variation of that is used where one tries to manifest a yacht or a tennis court or a mansion rather than the dollars that it takes, the point is that all of it is considered and dealt with at the point of effect. And always when it is dealt with at the point of effect, one is operating in a realm where gain and loss are forever partners.

Now, abundance is an inadequate way to refer to fulfillment. Fulfillment is not something that occurs at the point of effects. Fulfillment is something that is experienced at the "level" of the Source, of That which is Moving and which is seen at the level of effect or manifestation, form. I have spoken of the body as being the visibility and tangibility of each one's Individuality, and Individuality is the formless. The visibility and tangibility is the identification, or form.

You will find that individuals who, through good psychological or business practices, are able to achieve significant wealth, are as subject as anyone else to sudden loss of what they have achieved because it's something they can do "in the privacy of their mind." Fulfillment, on the other hand, is inseparable from one's abiding at the point of the Source, abiding at the level of the formless Movement, the Movement of essential Being, which is an experience available to everyone in the silence within them.

You see, everyone is very occupied with sensory data. Most everyone's life is primarily one of sensory data. And yet there is present with each individual an inner place. We've called it the Void, the not-knowing place, the silence, peace. And because everyone has devoted 99 and 99/100% of their lives occupied with visual and sensory data, when anyone says, "It is well for you to give attention to the Void, to the silence, to the peace that is within you," it seems like an alternative to something major.

If one begins to meditate, if one begins to value the silence, it begins to be a short time each day, or a couple of short times each day, not beginning in any way to equal the time or attention that is given to sensory data. And so, it isn't really grasped that this experience of peace, this experience of the Void is meant to be 100% of one's conscious experience of his days, and that this is what is divinely natural to him.

So, one seems to shift back and forth from the "inner" to the "outer," from the world of form to the level of Source, the level of essential Being. And as I said, the level of essential Being seems to be of minor importance compared to the majority of the time which is spent being preoccupied with sensory data.

Nevertheless, as one begins to value this inner place enough to let it become a regular part of his experience, he begins to find that its qualities bleed over into the periods of time when he is dealing with sensory data, the level of effect, and he begins to find his experience at that level becoming more harmonious, less stressful, where there is less lack.

Now, you asked for the truth about abundance, and so that is what I am telling you. At the level of Source, one of the first things you find is that you are not alone, whether it's the presence of God, or the Holy Spirit, or Guidance...or just the feeling of conscious Presence which is present with you on your behalf. You find that you are not alone.

In other words, one of the first experiences that comes right in the middle of the silence is one of relationship. And this relationship begins to add color to all relationships with those in what I'm going to call "the world of effect"—your daily activities as you experience them from an uncentered place.

Love begins to register with you as the fundamental of relationships, the real fundamental of relationships, and you begin to find yourself sharing Love which is arising from this centered place, this place of Source, rather than reacting to and manipulating at the level of effect, which you had before.

I am bringing this up because abundance or, more truly, fulfillment, comes into view as your conscious experience when the real meaning and function of relationships begins to be actively embodied from the level of Source—in other words, from that place of peace within you where the real meaning of Love begins to register with you and bleed over into your daily activities.

When the Movement of Love which identifies communion with your brothers begins to dominate your behavior "in the world," all that identifies fulfillment begins to manifest. However, unlike the manifesting of abundance which occurs at the level of form, you cannot take credit for it, because it isn't the end result of steps you have specifically taken to create that result. It is, rather, a side-effect, you might say, of daring to make the gift of You, which you can only discover and let out from the level of Source, from the essential level of Being, your Being.

This abundance, or fulfillment, cannot be achieved or taken away. In fact, it will never be accumulated, but will always be equal to whatever fulfillment of Purpose is at hand. And so, not only will you not feel personally responsible for having it, you will not be preoccupied with “having it,” because you will come to trust, from experience, the fact that more or less will be present depending upon whether more or less is needed to fulfill Purpose. And so the abundance, the joy of fulfillment, will be experienced, and measuring sticks of ability to create, measuring sticks of wealth, measuring sticks of personal competence, will have nothing to do with it.

You see, fulfillment/abundance will always simply be the flow of the Movement of your Being, being always equal to the full identification of Purpose. And so, you could say that if you have a goal at all, it is a goal to be on Purpose, rather than demonstrating or manifesting abundance. It is like being a boat, whose purpose is to float on water, and instead of trying to always ensure that there is enough water for it to float in, it stays where the current is. If it’s where the current is, it will always be where the water is. That is as specific as I can get.

At the bottom line, fulfillment/abundance will always be what you experience when you dare to make the gift of who you Are—who you divinely Are—because in abandoning the vantage point of the tiny separated ego, no matter how many wonderful skills it has, you cease operating at the level of effect where it’s always polarized—give and take, get and lose, have and not have, rich and poor—and you begin to be in the world from the silence, the formless.

Love is formless, and yet it is eternally identified in form. Learning to trust into the essential level of your Being means that you are disidentifying with the level of form, where you can be not only in the flow of the Movement of Being, but you can discover that you aren’t something separate from It to be in It or out of It. And in letting that Movement be all there is of you, there simply is nothing present to hide the fact that it is the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.

Everyone’s function is Love, the being of Love. And in being the Love that you Are, instead of a manipulator of effects, effects begin to fulfill their function, which is not to be the pawns of manipulators, but the visibility and tangibility of the Kingdom of Heaven evidencing the Father’s Will, evidencing the Movement of Love that each one of you is the presence of.

Again, this is not a spiritual answer that doesn’t have much relevance to the world you’re going to go back to when you leave this house. When one asks about abundance, one is usually asking about a way to be in the world that can be abundant. And what I am saying is: The answer is to be in the world Awake—which means to be in your peace instead of being in the world, to be increasingly from the level of your essential Being. And when you’re being from there, the world of form, no longer being tinkered with by manipulators, will begin to identify Source.

So, don’t leave here and go back into the world and try to cope with it. Leave here and stay in whatever peace you have allowed yourself to experience here, and be in your peace rather than in the world, so that you can make the gift of who you find yourself to be when you're in your peace in the world. And then you can say you are in it but not of it.

That is the answer, and it is enough for now.

QUESTION: Thank you. Thank you for being here with us.

RAJ: You are welcome. We will call it a day.

RAJ OPEN COMMENT: Good afternoon. Who would like to ask the first question?

QUESTION: I want to thank you for your answer to my question last time about parenting and worrying about my sons. What I think happened was you gave me the advise that all my friends have given me for years, so it seems to me that evidently something shifted in me. I mean I finally gave myself permission to believe it and stop worrying about them and a lot of things have happened and even my ex-husband couldn't believe how I really wasn't worried. And it's been a wonderful two weeks. So now I'm into thinking about the next thing that bothers me which I have a lot of mindsets about, that I keep thinking I have given up. But I wonder why I don't fall in love and get married again, it's been 10 years. I have a feeling it's me, of course, stopping this from happening. And one mindset that in particular that kind of nags me: when I married him I promised he would be the only one I would have in my life for the rest of my life. And now we're divorced and so, you know, I mean I don't want to walk around wishing he would hurry up and die so I could fall in love again. That sounds really stupid, but that thought goes through my mind... I have to wait till one of us is out of the picture. And I know that that is not logical.

ANSWER: Has he waited to have another relationship?

QUESTION: Well, he hasn't gotten married again either. No, I mean I know this is silly, but...

ANSWER: It sounds to me like you're already stepping out of the picture, being invisible as being a potential mate.

QUESTION: Yeah, I've really, really do... I just really have withdrawn. I'm surprised at myself. I just...

ANSWER: Well does your word mean anything or not?

QUESTION: I want it to.

ANSWER: Well, I suggest that you give that up.

QUESTION: Good grief! That really matters to me. I have to stop and think about that one.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Okay, I'll do that.

ANSWER: It is like saying, "I love this car so much I'm never going to let it go for the rest of my life." And then it dies on the freeway. How long are you going to sit there? What I'm trying to say is that your word has to be relevant to wisdom, it has to be relevant to intelligence. You cannot dare to let your word be relevant only to the fact that you said it. What else can I say?

QUESTION: That's what I was thinking. That's what I do when I'm really totally willing to forget that. That's great! Thank you so much.

ANSWER: What you have been doing is not uncommon to everyone in one way or another. The fact is that the reason no one is Awake is because you are honoring your own words—the meanings that you have given to the Kingdom of Heaven that cause Reality or the Kingdom of Heaven to appear to be just the Earth. You see? You've given a word about yourself, "I just started from a sperm and an egg. I'm just a human being, a chance result of the big bang, which was a chance result of God knows what." You see, it isn't your word and your honoring your word that keeps you safe. It isn't your word and your honoring your word that gives you integrity. You before you said a word were safe and had integrity because of Who you Really Are—the full expression of God embodying all of the integrity and all of the indivisibility of God. You abide by your word just as you abide by your laws to create order in a place that you are afraid is fundamentally chaotic. And to tell you the truth waking up is what happens when you dare to let go of that to see if indeed everything really collapses into pure chaos. Because that is when you have the opportunity in the absence of your definitions of everything to find out that God is already being it all, not only with perfect order but in a manner that causes everything that is created to embody and express love. Which means that as long as everyone is maintaining very rigid structures of definitions and words that they have given to things they miss out on the experience of being loved by God's Creation, which is the only thing really confronting them every moment of the day. And so, it turns out to be a rather empty experience, the emptiness of it seems to substantiate the need for a little bit of assertion of authority on your part. And so it becomes like a dog chasing its tail. And as long as its chasing its tail it doesn't notice that there is food on its plate, there is water for it to drink, that there is someone there who would love to pet it and love it. You see?

What if you sat down to play a game of chess with someone, and you love chess, and you love the ethics of the game, and you say, "I'm in this with you all the way?" And somewhere along the line the other one abandons his interest in the game and leaves. Well again, how long are you going to sit at the table?

QUESTION: Well it's been ten years.

ANSWER: Well, I have no pity for you after today.

QUESTION: I don't blame you. Thank you.

ANSWER: You deserve to enjoy companionship. Let it in. You see, if you were to stand back in the auditorium where the chess match was going on that you were playing in and the other person left and everyone watches you sit there for ten years do you think there saying, "what wisdom she has."

QUESTION: Integrity. Great integrity.

ANSWER: Again, let it in.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

Every single one of you denies the experience of your fulfillment by means of this simple sort of inner decision to honor your word, to stand on a principle. And I will put it this way, I've said it before, "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, withholding nothing." And all of this infinite Kingdom that you are not experiencing at this moment you are not experiencing because of some decision you will not release yourself from. That is one of the wonders of the first lesson in A Course In Miracles, which says, "Nothing that I see means anything." Which really means nothing that I am seeing the way I am choosing to see it and interpret it means what I have defined it as. Therefore, for all practical purposes it's meaningless. And the moment you can allow for it all to be meaningless, which simply means that you've abandoned all definitions you can think of to give it, what it really is has the opportunity to register with you as what it was the Father's good pleasure to give you, which was the experience of all of the Kingdom, all of your Right Mind, all of your Sanity.

Does someone else have a question?

QUESTION: I about three years ago stuck my arm in a moving machine at work and tried tearing my arm off, supposedly an accident but I want to know what kind of purpose that fulfilled.

ANSWER: I think that it basically taught you never to do it again.

QUESTION: Yeah.

ANSWER: I will tell you that it didn't come from some deep seated self-defeating element in you. It wasn't karma. It was just a loss of an awareness of what was appropriate at the moment and I wouldn't give it anymore significance than that. You may have learned something's in the process of recovery, but that was not because it happened for the purpose of teaching you something, but rather because the Holy Spirit can turn every circumstance to your advantage. That's it in a nutshell.

QUESTION: Right, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you for the healing team.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: No doubt you're aware of the time that I've had since we spoke last?

ANSWER: Oh, yes.

QUESTION: Oh, come on, it's been hard.

ANSWER: Hummmm, I know.

QUESTION: How close am I to coming out the other end of it? And that's one question. The other one is has it anything to do with hormones or is it a threshold? Oh, God.

ANSWER: Nothing is ever about hormones.

QUESTION: I knew that. I just needed to hear you say that. Now let's get on with it.

ANSWER: Entry points and exit points are arbitrary definitions given so that one might imagine that there's a way to get out of or to end up being out of the Now, the moment there in, the experience that is being had. The real question is, are you at a point where you can let yourself be fully present in the moment you're in without a desire to be out of it, so that in being fully present with it you might be where the new perspective can register with you about what? Not what's down the road "at the end of the tunnel" but what's going on of the Kingdom of Heaven at the moment and the place where you. So the issue isn't when is this going to be over, but when are you going to let yourself be fully present in it so that what is divinely happening there can begin to register with you because your attention isn't someplace else off in the future. You see?

Realization and aha's can happen at any moment. And it's going to happen in the moment you're in. Do you think that revelation and discovery isn't what you are in the middle of at this moment? Ah, but it's impatience. You want the full revelation now! And if it can't be now, then you're going to talk about the end of the tunnel, somewhere in the future. Let go of impatience, because impatience is just another way of exercising control and trying to twist God's arm, when all the time you're busy with your arms and hands twisting God's arm your hands aren't open to stand in receipt of the realization in the moment you're in.

What I'm trying to convey to you is that I want you to start valuing every moment in whatever apparent process you think you're in.

QUESTION: When I was going into... I had a sleepless night, where I was drifting in and out, and I was overwhelmed with fear, and it was just pulsating, and I went with it. I just said, "all right, you know, whatever it is I'll just be with it. Is that the kind of thing you're talking about, instead of fighting it?"

ANSWER: Yeah, that is what I am talking about. I'm talking about also paying full attention as you yield into it.

QUESTION: Well I was in and out of sleep at that point so I wasn't paying particular attention, but I felt the fear. I felt it's like I've retrograded into many, many years ago. And I'm feeling the full force of fear that I haven't felt for a long time. And at the same time as I look out I can see the world right around me, but that which is looking out is very shadowed and dark. So I'm noticing all of these things that are happening, and I'm feeling it, I'm not liking it. I'm trying not to fight it.

ANSWER: That is not the only thing that is noticeably happening. It isn't 100% of your experience.

QUESTION: Can you tell me what is 100% of my experience?

ANSWER: Nothing is 100% of your experience, yet because you are still split in where you're giving your attention to. But as you've said before, you are also experiencing miracles in your life.

QUESTION: Okay, no flies.

ANSWER: Wonderful. Now, you know, as you get closer—I will put it this way, making it sound like you're coming to the end of a tunnel—but as you are getting closer to saying, “Thy Will be done. Father I would like to see things the way You see them.” You are abandoning your ego, all of the conditioned responses that you have identified as yourself. And this sense of you is becoming very frightened because it's losing its life, because you are not devoted to it anymore. You are with some passion devoted to waking up, whether you know what that means or not. You are not constantly employing your conditioned thinking, your ego structures. And that sense of yourself is becoming very frightened.

So, what you will find if you are experiencing fear is that is you will let yourself into it, the elements of it will begin to register with you. It won't just be fear. It may take greater focus as a sense of injustice that you have no defense against. And when it becomes clear like that you will have the opportunity to look around you and say, “Wow, this really doesn't fit the circumstances.” And the elements of fear that seemed to be controlling you will be blatantly ridiculous and that will not be able to hook you anymore and the fear will disappear—simply melt. But you have to pay attention in doing this. I am not just saying let fear swallow you up, wallow in it, let it overcome you in its directionless, solutionless presence. I'm saying pay attention for the specific underlying the fear.

When you look at the elements of fear squarely in the face they are ridiculous and not scary. If you are at this moment the full direct expression of God and if where you are is in actuality the Kingdom of Heaven, then where you are at any moment, whatever is going on at any moment always stands as the threshold of your realizing where you Really are and what's Really going on. That's why I'm saying don't ask about the end of the tunnel.

Learn to value the moment you're in and whatever it is that you are perceiving is going on, value it enough to be fully present with it. And let there be curiosity present as well.

QUESTION: Have I been screwing up as I've been handling this?

ANSWER: That is a loaded question.

QUESTION: I can take it.

ANSWER: No, no, no! What I mean is that question has the cards stacked against you as it's asked.

QUESTION: I see. My feeling was that if I wasn't screwing up it might have been a little more graceful.

ANSWER: The undoing of an illusion will always occur in the most immaculate way that registers with you as ultra clear realization. So let it be whatever it is instead of saying maybe it could be easier. Maybe if it was easier the realization would not be as immaculately, sharply clear. I want you to have a sense that there is a perfection of things operating at the very moment that you have given the word that you are just an immature soul growing into its divine stature, who will someday arrive at the end of the tunnel. You see?

You can afford to look at yourself in the mirror with that same impish grin and laugh at yourself, and feel the joy, and let go of the seriousness of your Awakening process.

QUESTION: I didn't know whether I was trying to go back to sleep or whether I was trying to wake up?

ANSWER: I will tell you that you do not have the choice to go back to sleep. You are on a roll, like a snowball rolling down the hillside. Good luck on going back.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: And thank you for the peace that I've felt for the first time in quite a long time. Thank you.

ANSWER: Well like the first questioner, you are the one whose letting the peace register with you. And the peace is your peace, which is part of the wholeness of the Kingdom that has always been yours. I'm always glad to support anyone's process of giving themselves permission to feel good—to give it another word.

Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: When we got here, I said to my husband, "are there any questions?" And Ray said, "no," and I thought I couldn't think of any either. Anyway, I guess I was trying to bury this one. Our son, our youngest son is the second son I have had who is schizophrenic, and I want to look at it differently. And I'm having a great deal of trouble. (crying) We were talking about the new drug Quazine, and my son gave a very useful suggestion and he may not be far from wrong, he said, "Mom, maybe you'd better take it."

But I know we're on our own path, each one of us. All this I know intellectually and I can see some of the things he does actually I do myself, so I can see the projection. But it's so hard when he was this gifted child... and anyway if you could give me some help in looking at it differently.

ANSWER: He is not an extension of you. He is an expression of the Father. His inheritance is not from you, but from the Father.

Now what I want you to give your attention to is practicing entrusting him to his Father. Most of your suffering that you are experiencing is because you feel that there is some responsibility you may have either for the problem or for resolving the problem. And to that degree you are trying to take care of him, you are trying to be responsible. And to that degree you're fighting with God. Because God being your son's Source is the only one responsible. And I mean that He is the only one who can be responsible for the healing. You are trying to be responsible for a responsibility that was never put in your hands.

What can you do besides entrusting him, giving him willingly to the Father? You can simply love him. But you will not be able to try to be responsible for his happiness or his well-being without experiencing misery. I will tell you, that his healing is between himself and his Father—God. His healing like everyone else’s healing depends upon his arriving at a point where some word he has given he is willing to release, some definition, something that he’s unwilling to let go of because he has linked it with his sense of his own integrity—as in the first question. He must arrive at a point where he’s willing to let go of that whole structure and say, “What’s the Real truth here God? Reveal to me, infill me with the realization that embodies my freedom from this problem.”

You see everyone is “suffering” from their own belief about whatever it is they’re suffering from. That belief they put into place themselves by virtue of a decision. It is like they threw the switch and activated the belief—the belief structure—like “my word counts for something.” And you have no access to that switch. He has to arrive at a point where he wants to pull the switch.

There’s another thing: As long as you are trying to take responsibility and find a solution, you are teaching him overtly or covertly that maybe someone other than him can do it for him. That’s a disservice and will distract him from getting down to the business of getting his hand on that switch and pulling it himself.

I realize that what I am saying is difficult for you to let in fully so that it gives you full relief. But this is where your attention needs to be in order for you to get relief from a suffering that you are experiencing inappropriately.

It is a Jewish belief that it is a mother’s duty to suffer for her children—that is as part of her inherent dignity. There is no value for you in suffering for your son. And I want that to be utterly clear with you. It is not contributing to your being a more whole Souled woman. I’m not suggesting that this belief has been a strong one up front and out front, but it sits there quietly, and apparently without much force to it. It’s like when you look at a house and you don’t see the foundation, you see the house, but the foundation is there giving support to what’s built on top of it. So I encourage you to give that some attention, so that you may see how ridiculous it is. When it’s brought up to where you can see it you can say, “God, I didn’t know I was doing that, and I can’t justify it.” And the moment you say, “I can’t justify it,” the foundation is weakened that is supporting your suffering.

It will be more healing for him to experience you experiencing your joy than your sorrow. I’m glad you asked the question.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Like old times, Paul. I have two questions and if the answer to the first one is “no,” then the answer to the second one is immaterial.

The first—and I’ll read both—but the first one is, and my partner is Norm, and are Norm and I in the appropriate business? If the answer is “yes,” we’ve recently become aware of an event which appears to decrease our revenues by 60 to 80 percent. Part of me would like to express curiosity to see how these events would unfold so there’s no decrease or even an increase in revenues. My ego however is scared. My question comes from my sense of being in what I call “spiritual no-man’s land.” Aware enough to know that my old way of just putting my nose to the grindstone is inappropriate, but except for occasional visions like I had last week when we had a death in our family, I’m not connected on a regular basis.

You’ve said that there are four steps to being in touch with your guide and they are, being still, asking, listening and expecting an answer. My question is which part or parts do I need to be more allowing or pay more attention to?

ANSWER: The last part. You must let the words form. Just do it.

As to whether the two of you are in the right “business” the answer is “yes.” There will be a shift of emphasis but not a shift of the arena in which you are working. You will find yourselves nudged circumstantially into the new attitude or angle that you will blossom in, even if you don’t hear a specific answer when you are listening. I also encourage you when you are listening don’t let your only questions be about a major life change. Let that be something you ask about, but also ask other questions that do not seem to have as many consequences because then you will be more allowing. I encourage you to be more playful in your listening, or in your allowing the words to register with you. Do it with a light heart. Just because guidance tends to be more meaningful than other experiences does not mean it’s harder to experience. And if you will engage in it with a light touch it will help.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I’m about ready to enter the Peace Corp and I would like to enter Awake so that I could take advantage of the opportunities that are there. I would like your thoughts on the purpose, on my purpose of going and how I could benefit from the experience.

ANSWER: Well you are not valueless not being Awake. And I encourage you to go with whatever love you are able to bring with you, and whatever desire you have to extend it in meaningful ways that are also practical. I will tell you that your experiences, your involvement with the Peace Corp will contribute directly to your waking up. So rather than wanting to be Awake first, enjoy the meaning that you will get from participating in that arena.

You know, at the bottom line the shift called “Awakening” will only occur for any of you if you start where you are and dare to engage with your fellow man from your best centered place. You will never be able to wake up if you maintain a lack of involvement with your fellow man. You cannot wake up alone. So I encourage you to value every involvement you have with another. Or any involvement you have with anything. Because it’s in the absence of isolation and separateness that the elements necessary to Awakening occur. The dream is simply the way you experience being when you are choosing to view it from a private vantage point. It’s as simple as that. And so essential to Awakening is abandoning that decisive isolation and joining with another in love.

Now, one might think that all it takes to wake up is to enjoy a little sex, but I’m not speaking of love communicated body to body, I’m talking about relating to your fellow man or woman from a place within you that stands in conscious relationship to God, or conscious relationship to one who is Awake. Because the extension of love to your fellow man doesn’t start from who you see yourself to be as a separate, isolated entity.

The love that you extend to your fellow man must come from—it can only be put in this way—it comes from a choice you make to consciously love God enough to say, “Fill me with your perspective. I choose not to have a perspective, an interpretation, a judgment on my own about anything.” If in every encounter you were to ask, “God what would you have me do? What would you have me say? What’s appropriate here, because that’s what I want to extend into this relationship with another human being?” And you really mean it, you will be filled with knowing how to be and what to say. And because what you say and what you do isn’t arising from a sense of yourself that is separate and vulnerable and therefore in need of defense, there won’t be anything that you are inserting in the place of what the Father would reveal to you to be.

So, to put it very simply, your opportunity to Awaken is present in every potential relationship or every actual relationship you find yourself involved in. And therefore the first step in Awakening is going to occur while you are still “dreaming.” In other words, the first step will apparently be taken by someone who is not Awake. This is important to know, because it let’s all of you know that right where you are at this moment is right where the first step must be taken from. You see?

And so where you are in your apparent ignorance at this very moment is the most important place for you to be—not the most important place for you to stay, but the most important place for you to be. And so value it. Value going to do this work in the Peace Corp even if you aren’t Awake. Because the essential one who is in need of waking up is the one who is going, and is the one who will involve himself in relationships.

And so instead of assuming that you know from your life experience what would be the best way to relate to the people you become involved with always ask, “Father, what would really be appropriate here? What do I need to say?” In this way you might say that from a place of inner communion you join with your brother rather than joining with your brother from your life experience. You see what I’m saying? And all of your “learning” in this life experience. That is the path to enlightenment, is when you bring the Father into your relationship with another. When what you think and what you feel and what you believe isn’t more important to you than what the Father sees and knows and what the Father is that he would extend through you. That’s the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have been dealing with an issue for me—a long term issue—which is feeling comfortable in my body with my body. And couple of years ago I started asking my guidance and yourself for some advice. And I’ve come to a point—and my issue is weight—and I’ve come to a point where I eat without feeling guilty about eating too much, or too little or not eating appropriately. And as a result of following this for a couple of years my body has become much bigger. And I’ve started to feel very uncomfortable—feeling discomfort with the size of it, the way it reacts, my current illusion of it. And I’ve also come to realize that all that I’ve learned—all of my memory bank data about how to muscle it into what I used to think it should be—is no good. So I’ve come to a point of not knowing what to do. And I’m very curious to find out what’s really happening here, but I’m kind of at a loss and usually I think that’s a good place to be, but I don’t know what the next step is. So that’s what I’m asking for some advice on.

ANSWER: Well it’s reconfiguration. Don’t be concerned about the fluctuations. They are simply the visibility and tangibility of your letting go of control and yielding into a more fundamental order which isn’t completed yet—this yielding has not been fully realized yet. It is “in process.” It is as though you are watching healing in slow-motion. And so I encourage you to persist in listening for what is appropriate. I especially encourage you not to engage in any judgments about what it looks like is happening because you don’t have enough data to come to an intelligent conclusion. Because a Movement that is occurring beyond the scope of your data is happening. And so I encourage you to trust that a process is occurring here and everything you have been experiencing is essential. And the reconfiguration will involve more symmetry than you presently see. Just don’t rush God! It isn’t that God is really moving slowly. If you’re yielding that is happening in a gradual manner but you are also yielding as fast as you are able. And so things are not out of order. And also in saying to yourself, "I will let this reconfiguration happen in God's time" will mean that you are letting go of whatever degree of control you think you are able to authorize to speed things up. Yielding really means yielding, you see. And so if you will say, "Thy Will be done," the yielding will occur more rapidly because that is an act of yielding. If you are trying to help it along, you are still in there being an authoritative presence, or attempting to be. And the reconfiguration will only be the result of an absence of personal expressed authority. You see?

QUESTION: Yes I do.

ANSWER: So I can't tell you how to do it better because you doing it is what's disappearing from the picture. So you must say, "Thy Will be done, not mine. And I will continue to pay attention to what is appropriate without guilt," and now I'm going to add, "without impatience." "Infinite patience brings immediate results."

QUESTION: If I am in the middle of this physical uncomfortableness, which let's say one of the manifestations of it is I'm at work and I'm needing to do something which is not very exerting yet when I do it it looks like I've just run a mile because I've perspired and I'm feeling the results of just total discomfort, is that also the time to say, "Thy Will be done Father?"

ANSWER: Well it certainly isn't the time to really take things back into your own hands. Do you wonder how come he gets to be in the middle of a tunnel and you don't?

QUESTION: (Can't hear his wife's (?) comments clearly.).

ANSWER: At the bottom line I am telling him to be fully present without impatience and without bringing control into play. And until you are Awake everyone is in process. But if you don't become preoccupied with the end of the process you will be able to be where the process is happening, if I may put it that way, which is always in the moment you're in. And that's the place to value. The moment you're in is where the little gap is that you can slip through. The moment you're in is the moment about which you will have realization. It is the moment about which you will say, "Oh, I see!"

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I just want to keep it real short. I'm in a business where I'm receiving money and I want to know if that's appropriate at this time. And the guidance I'm receiving is that coming from a good source or my guide. That's really what I want to know.

ANSWER: The answer to both questions is yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Welcome back.

QUESTION: Thank you for all the help you've been giving me over the years. My question... well I kind of have two of them. My weight problem has been something that has been upper most on my mind for a long time. And what you say about control resonates with me and also I feel it's part of a defensive process because of the area, arena in my life where my leading edge is in relationships to men, which has never been very successful for me. And hopefully I'm moving in a direction where that is about to change, or is changing. And Susan and I were talking earlier today about the whole reason we're all here and the reason your here to help us is that it's all about falling in love with God, and He is our lover. And it is to be a passionate love affair that consumes us so that everything we do involves Him. I mean He's the first... well it's just like having a loving affair that I've experienced somewhat in my life at times.

ANSWER: He is your Sanity. He is your Right Mind. And so yes, what you're saying is absolutely true, except don't talk about Him as though He's somewhere else. He is your Right Mind. He is your Sanity. Go on.

QUESTION: Well, I feel I've been experiencing this. I'm on a journey experiencing it. It seems to becoming more clearer to me as I'm becoming aware of this relationship. And as I listen more things seem to flow. As you know I'm in a career which I love dearly and has allowed me to be fully present with trust in the service that I'm providing.

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you and I'm going to ask you and Gene, how many things do you have in your life that you use as goads to your progress, or that you use to "keep yourselves in line"?

QUESTION: How many things?

ANSWER: There are not many.

QUESTION: I have a lot. Well, I'm not clear on the question.

ANSWER: One who feels that he or she is from the get-go guilty—guilty from the get-go—finds it valuable to have things about himself or herself that can be identified as obvious flaws standing in need of correction so that they can use that to motivate themselves. Do you know what a goad is?

QUESTION: Something that irritates you, your attention.

ANSWER: Yes, or it is a huge hook that is used with an elephant to get him moving.

QUESTION: Yes, it's depressing.

ANSWER: It is uncomfortable.

QUESTION: Yes, very. (laughter)

ANSWER: The thing is that part of its use is to remind you that you are not whole respectable, that you are not standing there full of integrity. It is a way of putting yourself down, in other words, even though it is used to try to motivate the energy that it takes to wake up or to improve yourself. What I am saying to you is that both of you have been fooled into using your body weight as though it were a “problem” that does not speak well of you. In other words, it might even say that there is something self-destructive in each of you that needs to be attended to. And the peace of mind and the joy that needs to be present so that you might be ever more curious about the presence of God in your life takes the back seat. “I’ll dare to be joyfully engaged in being curious about what’s really going on once I get this burr out of my ass, called over weight and what it really does mean in my life.” You see?

QUESTION: Well like Gene, it’s very uncomfortable. It’s not beauty and symmetry. I mean I’ve seen myself beauty and symmetry.

ANSWER: I’m sorry are you trying to tell me that you are an ugly blob that’s there?

QUESTION: No, no, no, no, no! I’ve just seen it look better than it does now.

ANSWER: You want to know something? All afternoon Paul has been sitting here wishing that I would be more effective, that I would speak about more imprint things that I would be more stimulating. This is correct. And all the time that he is feeling like this really isn’t a rip-snorting-get-together, he is missing the fact that he could be experiencing the joy of what all of you are already aware of. That it isn’t a blah afternoon. Do you see what I’m saying?

QUESTION: Yes I do.

ANSWER: He by virtue of not wanting to be satisfied in the here and now with what is happening and being present with it, is blocking his conscious experience of how wonderful it is. And likewise as in your question and your question and your question you are letting the idea that it could be better relative to your bodies that you are missing the fact that joy is justified in this moment and that if you let go of this thing that’s always keeping you unsettled that says it could be better, if you could let go of that the wonder of what’s going on in your lives might register with you. And the joy you would experience would constitute the ability to further yield up willfulness on your part and watch reconfiguration take place.

Why has this been bothering you for years—for years? I mean has it done any good?

QUESTION: No, it’s kept me in a separated state, more painfully aware of being in a separated state. I don't like that feeling.

ANSWER: Maybe God is sufficient to the moment you're in with things exactly as they are or appear to be to you at the moment. maybe God is sufficient unto all of these circumstances. And if you weren't using your weight or some other thing as a means of motivating you, when at the same time it drags you down, you might discover the sufficiency of God in the moment, to reveal yourselves to you as who you Really Are with perfect symmetry. But the symmetry can't be the point. It's just the results. Do you see?

You don't have, neither one of you have a long list of things that have been bothering you that you actually activate. You see? The problem is not your weight! The problem is that your ego's are using it as a means of keeping you off balance.

QUESTION: I got that part. I'm clear on that.

ANSWER: That's the only part I'm talking about, because that's the problem not the weight.

QUESTION: Well I'm really willing to get rid of this. Can you help? ...this attitude, whatever it is.

ANSWER: You mean I didn't do good enough?

QUESTION: I think you're wonderful and you've been so helpful. Please let me rephrase my question. Am I moving in this direction of resolving this? Hopefully.

ANSWER: This what?

QUESTION: This misperception that I'm holding on to.

ANSWER: What misperception?

QUESTION: Of who I Truly Am.

ANSWER: That's not the issue. The issue is not to be hooked by the ego into using some judgment against your body as a means of keeping yourself off balance, and feeling like it could be better.

QUESTION: What you're saying then, this moment is as good as it gets, is based on my awareness.

ANSWER: You can see it more easily about Paul. What if he said, "You mean this is as good as it gets—with Raj? You mean it can't be more dynamic? It can't be more triggering than it is right now?" You would say to him, "Can't you see how triggering it is?" It gets no better than the Kingdom of Heaven. That is what's happening at this instant. The ultimate is happening. But you won't see the ultimate until you abandon the attempt to find things wrong in order create the motivation to see how good things are.

QUESTION: Well, that is really tricky. And that's what we're doing?

ANSWER: This has nothing to do with relationships with men. It has nothing to do with whether there's something in you that doesn't want relationships with men. It has nothing to do with hormones.

QUESTION: Well I knew that part.

ANSWER: It has to do with the fact that for the two of you you have allowed the ego to pick this issue and say, “You could be doing better. This could be better.” And of course, what does that mean? It means that the fact it is not better is because you’re falling short in some area—there’s something wrong with you.

Right here, as I see the two of you, the presence’s that you are are glorious. It doesn’t get any better than this. But as long as you let the ego distract you with body issues you won’t be curious to see what’s here that doesn’t get any better, and you’ll keep yourselves in a state of misery.

Now Paul is beginning to see and feel that it’s not a bad afternoon with Raj.

QUESTION: Please dear Raj, can you tell and Gene—or at least for me—how I can correct this?

ANSWER: When the ego suggests to you that your weight problem is an indicator of your neglect of your not being Awake, that there is something wrong with you and that concern is an appropriate thing for you to engage, tell it I said to shut up!

QUESTION: Thank you, thank you. (applauds)

ANSWER: Now the ego says, “well, so I’m just gonna be fat?” No! Fat isn’t the issue. It’s whether you’re listening to the ego or not. And if you’re not then either you’re going to be bored with the peace you’re experiencing, or you’re going to experience peace that has made room for curiosity to see what’s really true right here, not how much is wrong right here. You see?

QUESTION: I’ve never seen it from what you’ve... I haven’t been looking at it from the way you’ve described it, because I don’t...

ANSWER: It would have been of no value for me to have shared with you the way you have been seeing it. Of course, you’ve never thought of it this way.

QUESTION: No, I haven’t. And I know since you’ve facilitated healings on all those people who have asked for them from you, I am confident that mine will be in process. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You can count on it. I just encourage you not to be watching your body for the evidence of it. I want you to watch what happens in your mind. I want you to watch how you discover just how the ego introduces suggestions to you that cause you to become distracted by this problem you have that says something about your lack of integrity, so that you can say, “Oh, get thee behind me. Shut up! I choose to stay in that place where I’m not in turmoil, where I am feeling good and I have the perspicacity that it takes to look for my joy.”

QUESTION: Would it be helpful if I don’t look at myself in the mirror anymore?

ANSWER: As long as you don't wear make-up.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: No, it's not okay for you not to look in the mirror. You need to look in the mirror and not judge.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Because what you see doesn't matter. What I mean by that is, what you see isn't the issue. It's what you're seeing with. And are you looking through the lens of the ego or are you being curious to see what the Father is seeing there?

There just is not justification for judgment. What do you think the Father sees when you're standing there in all your glorious nudity in front of the mirror? No don't tell me.

QUESTION: I was going to say a Renoir painting.

ANSWER: This is my beloved Daughter in whom I am well pleased, period, bottom line.

QUESTION: (Can't hear this clearly) Thank you very much.

ANSWER: Let this percolate.

QUESTION: It just occurred to me that this is so ingrained, it's a feeling I don't even think I think it. That's how lack of aware I am on this issue.

ANSWER: Like I said, as a result of the healing team working with you, you can look forward to having little light bulbs going on so that it's not happening in a manner that you're unaware of. And you can say, "Oh my, shut up," and go on with your stuff.

QUESTION: And so the healing team will help me be more conscious when this is occurring.

ANSWER: If that's what you want?

QUESTION: I do! Puleeeaaassse!!!

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Thank you. Amen.

QUESTION: Just a couple questions. I was recently into the doctor for some intestinal problems, that I'm pretty sure is nothing serious or anything. But on second thought I canceled the appointment. It was supposed to follow for him to do a kind of invasive test which is unpleasant. And I canceled it think really that it probably was nothing serious. And I'm just wondering should I remake that appointment to follow through with it?

And the second question is I'm on the verge of starting a new business and I'm contemplating purposing to my employer that I work half time for three months you know to give myself a chance to get some income coming in. And I'm wondering if that's an appropriate time and way to do it, or should I just cut it off, or should it be one month, or some other pointers on how to get through that start up period? That's it.

ANSWER: I'm going to suggest that you not set up the appointment with the doctor again. At the same time I'm going to encourage you to be very much in touch with yourself, to be very in touch with your body so that you might always be loving it by doing what you recognize is kind. It's like keep the line of communication open between you and your body so that if you know that there is a call for rest you will rest, or if there is a call for having green leafy vegetables that you do that, not as a means of getting rid of something, but as a matter of being in balance with yourself. You see? No, don't listen for the best diet! (Laughter) Because we're not talking about manipulating the body. And with you, I'm saying we're not talking about manipulating the body, but we are talking about not being fragmented, so that you're not well connected and behaving in a way that honors all of you.

As far as the work is concerned, the idea of taking a three month period where you're working half time is the place to start. It isn't likely to be what will happen. But taking that step and peacefully watching, listening for any revisions that might work even better, paying attention for them to come to view is what is appropriate. There will be a transition and the transition will be relatively unlabored.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: It's very interesting that the direction my consciousness has been taking in the last couple of weeks. There's been a lot of things come up about "The Word" and the relationship of "The Word" to experience. And there's been quite a bit said today here too, about that. And the thought came to mind I don't what "holy book" this is in but there's a sentence, "In the beginning was the word and the word was God."

ANSWER: And the Word was God! Yes!

QUESTION: Okay. There's obviously a relationship to that and my word and experience. I mean it appears there must be some relationship there.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: Well, could you(?)

ANSWER: Well, "In the beginning was The Word, and The Word was with God, and The Word was God," that is the description of You in your Right Mind. Now, I do not mean that that is a description of you Willard sitting in that chair. I mean that that is the description of the presence that You are that can be specifically recognized in the form that is in that chair, but which itself is universally as present as God because God is the presenting presence that all of us call Willard. You see?

Now, the Fall was when you or anyone else said, “Aha, I am universal and I am specific at one in the same time. I wonder how everything looks from the specific vantage point?” And so you took a look. And you said, “Oh, this is interesting. I feel like a little god. I wonder what would happen if I—if I who I feel like I am from this vantage point—I wonder what would happen if I gave a word?” And so you gave a word. And let us say you said, “Oh, well this is just the world. Oh, this is just the universe, and it came from the big bang,” and on and on and on. And you gave your word.

Well, now, “there was in the beginning The Word and The Word was with God, and The Word was God,” and after the beginning there was Willard, (Raj laughs) and he gave a word and the word was with Willard, and the word was Willard. The word was Willard’s word and Willard’s experience of his word. But The Word is still with God and The Word is still God. And the word that’s with Willard is imaginary. And what everyone is on the verge of is remembering that he or she is at one in the same time (this time) specific and universal, not just specific. And waking up is saying, “I wonder what it looks like from the universal view?” But in order to do that one has to abandon... Willard has to abandon Willard’s words and ask, “what is the Father’s Word? What is this or that or the other thing as the expression of God’s intent to express Himself?” And so you have to invite in the larger view in order to have the larger experience, the universal experience of your being which you have forgotten in the wake of all of your voluminous words. You see?

It isn’t so much that your words have created things as much as it is that they have obscured The Word that was with God, that was God, that was You. You see? So in abandoning your words all you’re doing is no longer energizing that which obscures The Word that is God, that is You. So indeed, it’s very important.

QUESTION: That is obviously interpreted as the written word as being some sort of a written law. At least, anybody that I’ve spoken to that has mentioned that points to that as the Laws that God wrote.

ANSWER: But the word is God’s self-expression in this instant. God is giving the word that is expressing God right now. And your existence has arisen just now. The word isn’t written somewhere, Creation is the written word if you want to call it that.

QUESTION: Yeah, okay. It’s not written in script, it’s written in visibility.

ANSWER: It is like I’ve said before, that the statement was made, “truth is revealed, it needs only to be practice.” And a group of people believed that that referred to the religion which formed around the document in which that is one of the sentences. But the fact is, that truth is always and only a revelation experienced at the point of consciousness at every moment that one is listening. So the truth isn't even written. It's always a moving, conscious experience of what is Real about everything. You see?

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Thank you.

QUESTION: Raj, my husband made his transition recently and he was very fearful. I would like for him to tell me that he's at peace.

ANSWER: To his amazement he is! Part of him can't believe it and is waiting for the fear to come back. But it's not going to. And he's going to get tired of waiting and will dare to embrace the peace as a fact. In an almost child-like way he is experiencing a great deal of delight at the experience of existing—almost to the point of silliness.

QUESTION: I've seen him as an angel—a devilish angel.

ANSWER: He is well.

QUESTION: Raj, can you tell me if he has come to me and I've been oblivious to his coming, or if I have just hoping without hope?

ANSWER: What it is really important for all of you to understand is one's experience after one has passed on is a very consuming experience. I mean that there is very little time spent in idle thought or activity. If one looks at a rose it is as though the rose is the only thing existing. Whatever one gives one's attention to is experienced with a fullness that is new and not intense, but engrossing. And although this is not always the case most individuals who have passed on not only do not think about those they have left behind, they find themselves naturally involving themselves and being present in the experience they're having. This doesn't represent a lack of love. It doesn't mean that those who were left behind never meant much. It just means that the experience of being conscious is so much fuller that it is engrossing, as I've said.

And so, no he hasn't come back and you haven't missed any visit. If it fulfilled purpose it would be allowed. But what his visits, the service they would perform to you is not a service you have a need of. What I have said may not be very ego satisfying, but it's the truth and it's all right. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Very good. It has pleased me greatly, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. My question is as I'm embarking on, I would say a new relationship with a man, and I am a little frightened because I've been I guess told by a dear friend that I am in a sense self-centered, and I don't think about other people's feelings or I don't I guess engross myself enough in being in touch with other people. And it kind of confuses me because since childhood I have always I think pretty much relied on my guide simply because of my environment and situation with my parents, not I guess trusting them enough to be there—it's either God or my guide or something at a higher level that's always there. And I always say, "oh, oh!" when I was heading for something that I knew wasn't good. This relationship it feels so comfortable and I don't feel threatened in it, and it concerns me because I've always run off of this higher power feeling of being guided and I don't want to allow if it's true that I'm a self-centered person to harm this relationship, or to interfere and allow it to be a block, if it's true that I am this way.

ANSWER: Do you love him?

QUESTION: Deeply, very much, both him and his daughter.

ANSWER: That really is the key. Because if you love him you will naturally feel into your guidance, listening in the context of caring, you see. And thus it will be easier for you to experience inclusion, where you are including him and his daughter. And insensitivity is not likely to occur. Self-centeredness will not be a dividing factor in the relationship, because you will be listening for the guidance, as I said, in the context of togetherness rather than independence.

One of the things that will grow more fully in your experience will be your capacity to trust another. And that will allow your capacity to trust even more broadly to come into play.

QUESTION: Is my presence in his life helping him? I mean I know it's helping me, it must be at some level helping him too, but in what way?

ANSWER: It is, yes. But it is not appropriate to have a concept of it because then you will try to embellish the concept and become manipulative rather than being present with him from your heart, from your love. You see, you listen for guidance to know what is appropriate for you, what is in your best interest. And you will be listening to guidance to know what is appropriate for you relative to his best interest. That is inclusion, embrace.

QUESTION: He has really, really different viewpoints of Heaven, in fact, I'm always reminding him we're right here in Heaven. I'm always reminding him, be in the moment, all is well and perfect timing. He looks at me mystified sometimes and even asks me who writes your material. And I laugh. And I said, "Well, Jesus, who else, or God!" And there have been times I've really ruffled his feathers and really gotten him perturbed at me. And I often wonder, my goodness am I being too abrasive. And he's even told me my timings not always great! And I sit here thinking, "Oh, being myself is sometimes not always good obviously," he feels like he's just been knocked out with a sledge hammer. So I often wonder what good am I to him if he's always in the ready stance and he's even said to me, "you require a lot of energy." And I told him, "no, it's just thought, conscious thought!"

ANSWER: I encourage you very strongly to allow this relationship to continue and grow. And I encourage you not to have too many thoughts about it.

QUESTION: Well, thank you, Raj. I appreciate that.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I will keep on going.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: I've had two massive heart attacks, where not a doctor or nurse or hospital expected me to pull through. And I did! Why? I'm tired! Do I still have more things to learn or teach? And also the first one when I was experiencing a near death experiences, I was arguing with somebody like mad about their timing, was that you? Was that you I was balling out?

ANSWER: You can't imagine what I have to go through!

QUESTION: You can't imagine how I hate computer error. And that's what I was blaming it on.

ANSWER: Yes, it was me.

QUESTION: Good.

ANSWER: You can't possibly be where fulfillment of purpose isn't occurring. And as I said earlier today, where you are and how you're perceiving yourself at this moment or at any given moment is precisely the place where Awakening can occur. It is therefore the most valuable place for you to be giving your attention.

What makes you think there will be better than here to wake up? What makes you think you're not going to be tired there of the same old demand to pay attention? You see, you're not here just for your own good. You're here because the good of you is needed for those who are in your experience.

QUESTION: Then can you let me have some more energy. I'm all out. That last one took it all.

ANSWER: Will you stop resenting not having as much energy? That is what is tiring you out. You haven't really said, "Yes, God!" Is it not obvious to all of you how much you use weight or tiredness or your word as a way to not say "yes" to God? And not let your weight, if you will, be fully present on the step that you're on, imagining a stairway? Do you realize that if your weight isn't fully on that step you can't lift your foot to put it on the next step? If your weight is evenly distributed between two steps you can't lift either one of them. And so you have to shift and let all of your weight be in one place, then you can lift your other foot and movement become possible.

This is why I keep saying that love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. Where? Not at the end of the tunnel. Not after you pass on. Not after your ex-husband dies. You see? But right where you are. All of the materials, you might say, that it takes for you to wake up are staring you in the face, are underneath you and your sitting on it, is underneath the chair that you're sitting on, etc. All of reality as God is being it is what's here. But as long as you're looking to the end of the tunnel or over there or when you're thinner you have your attention somewhere else, somewhere other than where the opportunity to experience your fulfillment is.

Her ego keeps her unsettled by focusing on her "weight problem." Your ego keeps you unsettled by focusing on low-energy, easy exhaustion. It keeps you from being happy right where you are. It keeps you from discovering or having the revelation of all the joy and energy and companionship that is present, just as it kept Paul from feeling that something meaningful was happening this afternoon. You see?

And this is not a test for you to pass or fail at. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: One other question that bothered me and probably any other child who went through religious training in early youth: When the guides are looking down, your angels are looking down, when you're looking at us do you see our physical body, what color clothes we have on, or what are the Spirits actually viewing when they talk to us?

ANSWER: Someone asked last night in so many words whether you all were "Saturday Night Live" for us. It is difficult for you to comprehend that we are not looking in the same way that you look. We feel you and we feel the meaning of all things. We feel the meaning that finds expression in the fabric and the color. Everything means something divinely. You enjoy the varying textures of fabrics. Everyone, most everyone assigns meaning to silk sheets and pillow cases, and an entirely different meaning to cotton sheets and pillow cases. What you must understand is that colors have meaning that you would call or perhaps describe as emotional. And so color is felt for what intent it expresses, or renders experienceable. So we are experiencing everything that you are experiencing, except your false beliefs about everything, in a far more comprehensive way than you are experiencing it all.

First of all, none of it is unspiritual, or non-divine. This fabric in Paul's shirt is not material. It is meaning assigned by God. It isn't just something that Paul is wearing, but is an aspect of the infinitude of Paul's being and mine and yours. We do not look down on all of you, but for lack of better words, we look out from within everything. Rather than being present with objects, forms we are present with and experience the meanings that have found expression in the form. And the way in which all meanings, infinitely speaking, relate to each other as infinite points of expression of fulfillment that identify the wholeness of every single thing. Paul has no meaning independent from all of you and from every grain of sand out on the beach, every super Nova, every planet, every star, as well as the space apparently in between them. You see, all of the conscious experience of being is each one's wholeness.

So, where you look across space to see each other, to see each other we look from the presence of mind that each of you is, which is infinite—not one of you has experienced a boundary to your conscious awareness. And so we experience you, for lack of better words, from within you because you are everywhere. It is difficult to explain in words. We do not observe you. You are each some aspect of the infinitude of me. And I don't experience you as separate so I would have to look at you across space, or down from above, etc. This is why every thought you have is known to me and to every individuality who is totally Awake. Because when you let down this boundary which you have set in place by your word, not only will you no longer be alone but everyone will be you. You see, it isn't just that everyone will be with you, they will be, again, some aspect of the infinitude of your being, the conscious experience of which is totally available to you. It is an intimacy that you cannot imagine. It is also an intimacy which your present sense of isolation protects you from having to bare—at least the ego sees it as something that it needs to be protected from.

Being Awake is more than an invasion of privacy, it's an absence of privacy. So, does that answer your question?

QUESTION: (He wasn't using the mic, but he said something about sitting on the toilet.)

ANSWER: (Raj laughs with everyone) Is that how you see it? You see this... "Have I no privacy?"

QUESTION: I'm very curious about an experience I had a week ago. And I'd just like to know if you can give me some clarification about it. I had an opportunity to visit the Sea Aquarium in New Port, Oregon. And I went like many other people to see the whale that has recently moved there, Kako. And when I went down into the viewing area you are below water level and there's this wall of glass there and you can watch this big beautiful animal swim around. And when I got down there with all these people he was just coming around that end of the tank. And so when I looked up here he was coming right directly at me. And I had the most overwhelming experience at that time. And tears started running down my face and it was very emotional. And I found myself... I had to shut it off. It was just overwhelming. I felt like I could have just been a puddle on the floor there. And it was just very strange and yet very wonderful at the same time. And I guess I'm curious to know whether or not that animal shared that same experience with me?

ANSWER: Oh, yes! But from its vantage point it experienced your recognition that you were just like it, not that it was just like you, but what was happening with you was a realization that it wasn't foreign to you, that you were just like it. It was an aspect of what I was just mentioning, where it was an aspect of the infinitude of your being and all of a sudden you didn't feel your smallness.

And yet the identification wasn't with the whale's size or your size, it was that you were experiencing being aware of it at the level of its meaning, as I was just talking about. So, it had the experience of, in so many words, the light bulb going on in your mind and did indeed delight at the realization of unity that occurred with you. So, you just don't know how big you are. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In the six years that have past since you and I last spoke directly, I've been on this pathway that I feel like I'm nearing the end of least what appeared to be the goal to get this degree in Social Work, that's been laid out very nicely, in other words, it's been easy for me to get it. Now that I'm getting so close to it it's beginning to appear from external signs in the world that it was all a big mistake. And I'm kind of joking about that. But my real question has to do, first of all I think I need a little personal assurance that I really am following this pathway correctly. And secondly, if you would say something about this whole sense of mean spiritedness some people call it, that's going on in our Country that some people are suffering so much and it seems to be getting worse.

ANSWER: I am not going to talk about the "mean spiritedness." I am going to continue to talk about remembering that you are the presence of love, because each one who remembers that they are the presence of love, and that love is their function derived from the Father. It weakens the "mean spiritedness," because support for it is withdrawn as each of you make commitment to being the presence of love that you are.

So, I will say one thing: Evil, or misunderstanding—errors believed to be truths and acted upon will seem to grow in intensity—become more blatant. In so doing, all that might have seemed attractive about it will disappear. The meaninglessness of hate will become overtly obvious, and therefore, totally unattractive. And no one will be able to find any justification for it.

The only reason that hate has seemed to be able to exist is because what its real nature is has been kept vague, hidden. I want you to notice the super models—men and women in advertising—I want you to notice with many of them how the striking element of their physique is really an edge of hardness, just enough to "lend force" to their appearance and attract attention, but not enough, not so much that you can see that that element is ugly. You see what I'm meaning?

A man or a woman who uses hate skillfully appears to be a person who can express ideas with a cutting edge that doesn't hurt, and make a point and sway people—even for a good reason. That capacity that comes forth apparently as strength is really moderated cruelty. It is not essential to the expression of intelligence that other's can recognize the intelligence of and be changed by means of. It is in this way that hate is nurtured because its real nature is hidden and only the barest essentials of it a line of a profile, a characteristic to a voice that is a hard edge. It is because that the fact that it is hate is obscured by the minimal amount of it that is brought into play in order to make things happen, in order to get one's attention, in order to motivate you to look at an ad or whatever.

Now as the nice aspect of hate begins to be replaced by the obtuseness of hate one is no longer going to be able to say, "I buy that, I embrace that." When you watch the films in the last year that have come out, the violence, the cruelty is no longer moderated and one can find no justification for it having been presented. But when it is a half-way decent, skillful, brilliant criminal carries out the act of hate with some style it's interesting. And believe it or not it is a justifiable element of drama which is essential (they say) to conveying a meaningful idea or experience to the one observing the drama. Well, you see that's how hate is nurtured, because the fact that it's hate is obscured by bringing the barest, the minimal amount of it into one's conscious awareness, the minimal amount that it takes in order to make the experience of life meaningful. You see what I'm saying? The skillful use of hate can bring a drama to life.

So what I am saying here is that the more obtuse its presentation is the more unrelentingly cruel it is, the more obvious it becomes that one wants nothing to do with it, and that one cannot justify it. And as more and more of you are remembering that your function is love, the ego is going to get less and less of your attention, support and nurturing because you will not be calling upon it for guidance as to how to be a dynamic and forceful presence for good in your world—which is what it says its here for. And so it, in order to try to save its neck, will assert itself more blatantly. Thank God. Because as it does this, having abandoned its finesse, it will be even less attractive and make your commitment to be the presence of love more total.

Now, it's important for you not to misunderstand what I'm saying, because it could sound as though I'm saying that as more and more experience enlightenment evil is going to become more blatant, therefore a state of conflict will be your increased experience. No! You're all past the point of having your learning happen at the physical level. And so we are not going to see more and more terrorism. We are not going to see armed conflict between countries as the evidence of this more blatant expression of what hate really is. It is going to be at a more intellectual level such as your films, such as books, printed word and so on. It is going to present itself to you not at a level of physical reality and physical conflict, but the mental level. So do not expect a rugged ride in the world.

Be glad when you see or hear expressions of hate that are more and more coarse or attempts to pass laws or to legislate behaviors that are harsh and unintelligent because everybody is too smart now to buy into it. The simple fact is that the ego and all of its techniques are becoming too coarse for the more refined sensibilities of those who are remembering that their function is love. So this is not really going to constitute a contest. It's part of the healing because it will be so easy not to be fooled.

What do you think is uncovering the other hatefulness of hate? It really is the fact that there is an active conscious intent to value and embrace and embody love by more people on this globe, as well as individualities not incarnated here. So don't be alarmed. And do dare to be grateful when you see apparent evil blatantly present itself in its ugliness. You can be grateful because in the absence of finesse and skill it is, in terms of drama, engaging in its own death throws—which it would love for you to be alarmed about, but which you can rejoice at.

Now, regarding the first part of your question and your schooling, you haven't wasted any energy at all. And I don't care what the general trend is or what it might say about what you have done, you have grown. And your capacity to be meaningful in another person's life has increased. Your groundedness and your practicality has broadened. You're on target.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Paul is now convinced that it has been a good afternoon. I have enjoyed being with all of you. Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –April 28, 1996

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ: Good afternoon.

ALL: Good afternoon.

RAJ: Well we'll begin with questions. So...

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm not clear exactly how to put this question, but I'll do the best that I can. Why is it that our experience of the three-dimensional world has to make sense, given that it's not the truth, that it's a distortion of the truth? And yet when I heard you talk before it's as though there's always a rational answer to things that happen. For example, I was driving through Dunblain, that's a small town in Scotland, a few weeks ago where a whole class full of young children were plowed down by some crazy guy with guns. And I imagine your answer would be all death is suicide, which would be at least some rational explanation of that. Although I don't fully understand that one. But the general question is why does it have to make sense if it's a distortion? Why does our experience of the three-dimensional world have to have those sort of logical answers to it? Is it not just chaos? Is it not just a misperception of the truth? Does that make sense—the question?

RAJ: It makes enough sense. I do not know who it is that said that the three-dimensional world must make sense. But let us be very careful not to discount the third-dimensional frame of reference entirely. Because it is just three of the four dimensions that make up reality. And when you are not observing it from the standpoint of the fourth-dimension or what we could call totally Awakened consciousness, it is nevertheless, part of the four-dimensional continuum, if you will. So what you are seeing is real, but the way you are perceiving it from within the limits of the three-dimensional frame of reference is incomplete. And therefore the conclusions you come to about what you are seeing is false. And so therefore, it is in this sense that everything you see is illusion. It is that you are not able from within the three-dimensional frame of reference to understand what is there.

Now when someone asks me a question and I give an answer, and you say, or that person says, "Oh, I understand," what that really means is that what I have said has allowed them to come to a place of peace within themselves in which what they had been misperceiving is not successfully distracting them from their peace any longer. And in that place of balance that what I have said has brought them to, they are able by virtue of not being hooked by their misperception to experience what they had been perceiving in a new way. In other words, with more innocent eyes. And transformation can occur.

The problem is that everyone thinks that understanding is the goal. And so everyone reads to gain understanding, so that what is understood can be relied upon. When in actuality coming to a place of understanding means you've come to a place of peace, in which reality has the opportunity to penetrate the third-dimensional frame of reference and provide insight. And one can say, "Oh, now I know," even though what they know they might not be able to share with someone else. Everything is understandable. But the real perspective of understanding is only available from an awakened standpoint—from the fourth-dimensional conscious experience of being.

Because everything you are seeing is fourth-dimensional—even though from the third-dimensional frame of reference it appears to be limited—again, because everything is fourth-dimensional, no matter from what level you are observing it, what you are observing is always real. It is always there for being capable of being understood. Which means that it is not bound to forever be a mystery. Again, and I keep saying this over and over again: Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, with a capital "R", in each and everything. Therefore, the place for you to bring your attention is to the things that confront you in your daily life, because that's where something Real is happening, that's where "understanding" can occur. But the understanding will emerge in your awareness only as a result of releasing your confidence in what you believe a thing to be and listening, you might say for the Voice for Truth to reveal the Real meaning of that thing. So that you aren't forever responding to everything from what you think it is, from what you believe it is, from what you have been conditioned to know it is.

It is not an unreasonable thing to look at a relationship problem or a financial problem or a physical problem with curiosity to understand what is going on divinely there—that has nothing to do with the problem. You do not have your attention in the wrong place when you are looking to see the Kingdom of Heaven right where you are, because there is absolutely nothing in your face that isn't the fourth-dimension, that isn't God Moving, Being what is happening.

As a result, as you persist, let us say on your spiritual path, as you persist in your desire to Awake you can expect your experience of your finances, of your physical experience of everything that is in your world to improve. You can expect healing to occur. You cannot say, "none of this matters. None of this is real, therefore I can Awaken without any healing occurring. I can be healed and still have this rash. I can be happy in my limitation, because it's not real." It is a shame to buy into that thought. Because Awakening is a process, you might say, of beginning to observe everything with greater and greater clarity—less and less illusion, less and less misunderstanding or misperception.

When you look at the TV or the walls or the lampshade or the plastic cup and you say, "none of this matters," you have cut yourself off from the opportunity to experience the substance of that cup, which you say is Styrofoam, and the little drops of coffee that are around the rim, you are saying that those are just physical substances. But something is happening there. The form you see is held in a recognizable form by intelligence, else intelligence couldn't recognize it. But more than that, what is held in that shape by intelligence is Living Love. As a result—and this is not new I've said this before, but everyone needs to hear it again—every single form you see, being constituted of the energy of Love is radiating that Love—that Love is embracing you. And if you off-handedly say, "Well, that's just an illusion. It doesn't matter. That's not where I should give my attention," then you are cutting yourself off from the very intimate experience of being embraced in profound Love.

It is so important to look in this three-dimensional world as you currently define it with a curiosity to be able to recognize the radiate presence of God.

Everyone at one time or another says, "I don't feel loved. No one likes me. No one visits me. My children don't call me. Everywhere I turn everything feels meaningless." And yet they're sitting or standing in the middle of Love radiating and embracing them from every point of infinity and especially from everything in their immediate experience. And it's not a lampshade loving you, or a Styrofoam cup loving you, it's the presence of God embracing His own—You. Or you could say, the presence of God embracing Himself in His recognition of Himself right where you are. "This is my Beloved Son or Daughter in whom I am well pleased. I recognize Myself in him. I recognize Myself in her." Well, if everyone didn't so off-handedly discount every manifestation of the active presence of God's Love that is in their face at every moment, they would not say that I feel lonely.

You know that you're constantly being bombarded by gamma rays, let us say. Well, why don't you begin to think about the fact that you, as the separated one you think you are at this moment, are constantly being bombarded by the rays of Love, that you are capable of feeling, in fact it's your function to feel them. Well, one of the reasons people don't let that kind of love register with them is because they think in the illumination of it their piss-ant puniness and their flaws and their unlovableness will be highlighted and in the presence of love they will be convicted of their flaws. But you know something that none of you can afford to forget is that when you allow Universal Love, the infinite presence of God that is loving everything from everywhere in the Universe, when one lets that register with him it isn't a convicting experience, it's a whollizing experience. It feels good. And I'll tell you, it's the only thing that can convince you of your innocence. If you're going to be convicted of anything in that process, it will be your innocence that you will be convicted of.

Many people these days meditate to get into that quiet place where a Universal experience can be available to them. And that is a healthy and wonderful thing to engage in. But without meditating in the sense of closing your eyes and shutting out the world you can sit in your car on the road or in your chair at home and you can look at and notice every thing, remembering, even if it's just intellectually, that I said that the substance of it is Love, radiant Love that is the presence of the Father embracing you. And you can be open to a Universal experience while you're looking at something that seems to be finite.

You know, when you look at a plaque on the wall and you experience it as Living Love, even though it still appears to be solid and limited, what it appears to be becomes irrelevant to you because when that Love registers with you it illuminates the fact that you're Love to. And you say, "Oh, it's just like me." It won't matter if it looks finite because you will feel the infinite, or non-dimensional nature of the substance of it which is Love. And you will be so glad that there can be such an infinitude of apparent forms in which this absolutely unlimited Love is expressed and expressing.

Hmmmm, none of this will have to go anywhere. But you will become free of the belief that you have entertained as a fact that it's just a three-dimensional world that is an illusion, or that doesn't have any real meaning.

For students of the Course, I want to point out something: The Course does not in any place say God did not create the world. It does say God did not create a meaningless world. It is very important not to let that escape your attention. The meaning is never in the particular form you see, but it's in the substance of that form.

So you will begin to find that everything is Meaningful. The understanding relative to it will not be an intellectual understanding, but it will be in that recognition I spoke of, of the experience of feeling the Love that is embodied in that shape or form. And so you won't be fascinated with the form, but consumed with the Meaning with that Living Love that it is. And then, as I said, in that experience it discloses to you that you are the Presence of that Living Love too. And there you have the opportunity to have the experience, not an intellectual understanding that you, the form that you have identified yourself as, is no more important than the plaque on the wall, the form of the plaque on the wall, but the Movement of Love that is the Presence of your Individuality, which is the Presence of God, your infiniteness becomes opened up to you.

In the experience of that Love, ultimately everything you see will make sense. Ultimately everything you see will be seen in its utter perfection. But the particular forms you are seeing will no longer take precedence over what is finding expression in that form. You see? And it's all going to happen right here! It's all going to happen wherever you are! And so, yes, you will look at the un-understandable, which is practically everything you're seeing, and right in the midst of it you will understand. But you won't understand the thing, you'll understand the Meaning, the Movement of Love, which through the active presence of intelligence is recognizable. When it's recognizable you say it has form.

What's happening in the process of Awakening is that everyone is withdrawing their great attention that they have given to form. But it does not mean that form has been invalid. It just means that everyone has let form take precedence over meaning. And in the loss of meaning they have had to create a whole theory of what life is about. And then everyone has agreed on the theory and they're living in a dream—a mutually agreed upon misperception of Reality.

So when someone out of their ignorance behaves in way that seems to injure other people, or when there is a storm and a tree falls on a pet, one does not say, “there is another proof that this is a meaningless world, which God did not create, and therefore this doesn't exist.” And when one sees his brothers or sisters mistreating each other he does not say, “well I give up, this is a meaningless world.” He says, “I am not going to use the expression of ignorance that other's are expressing as justification for my ceasing to be curious to see what's Really here.” Because the other's who have expressed unintelligence have expressed it because they have already done that, they have already said, “I am not going to look for what is real here. It isn't real. It is meaningless. It frustrates the hell out of me. And I've got to express my frustration somehow.” You see?

So you can't take what's on the news as justification for any conclusion other than, “I want to see what's really here. I do not want to be confused. And so I am not going to adopt the set of conclusions that everyone else has adopted about events such as this. I am going to be curious, avidly curious to see the illumination of Love in everything I see.”

If someone at this incident that you spoke of had dared to explore, you might say of his or her capacity to recognize Love in the dead bodies—to recognize the presence of Love and intelligence that was seen as those forms, there would have been immediate resuscitation. But no, people reach into their memory banks and say, “This is an atrocity. This is horrible. There cannot be a God if this kind of thing can happen. I have full justification for being so upset that I can hardly keep from vomiting.” And everyone continues to stay asleep, or continue this mutual agreement to be ignorant. You can't take it as a justification for anything, not even proving that the world doesn't exist, that it isn't real, that it doesn't matter. You see?

Why listen for guidance? Because in listening for it you reach beyond your memory banks. You reach outside of the arena in which you keep yourself closed. And as a result you allow yourself to have one who is Awake share with you the Meaning of what is in your face so that you can be relieved of your ignorance. And in the absence of your ignorance you will say, "I understand." Except that what you will really mean is, "I know the truth here."

The third-dimensional frame of reference doesn't have to be understandable in an intellectual way. But it is spiritually understandable when it's looked at—as the song goes—from a distance, when you are willing to stand back from the third-dimensional definitions you have given it so that the fourth-dimensional Meaning can register with you. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I could use some help making some choices regarding kind of some financial pressures and what I feel is a need to go on a sabbatical, maybe even on a deeper level of a vision quest. I'm not feeling frantic about these issues as I might have in the past and I feel like I'm accepting it along the lines of failing, which actually feels good. Financially, I mean you know the changes I've been going through cause we've talked about it recently—but financially bills that are owed are going to come to the point where I either have to continue to work at pace that has become completely unacceptable to me and which feels like it's making me sick, or I'll have to choose bankruptcy or some type of protection here. What would you recommend along those lines?

RAJ: I like the idea of a vision quest. However, I would encourage you to go on a vision quest of the sort that I described in the answer to the first question. Don't go into a cave. Don't close your eyes, so that you are not confronted by "the distractions of the world." Let your vision quest be one that you engage in while you are actively working. Of course now you're going to find out whether it was really a vision quest you were interested in or relief. But there was a ring of truth about the vision quest. And what I am suggesting to you is appropriate for you.

Instead of trying to get relief from everything—your work—let your work be the place where you bring your attention to. Let it be the place where you have your eyes open. Look at everything. Look at every building. Look at every individual that you encounter in your work with a curiosity to see the substance of the form that is sitting there illuminating who you really are by virtue of being the love that it is. The building you inspect or the house you inspect sits there loving you with the love that will reveal who you truly are to you. But as long as you are resenting “the work” and the pace, it is the equivalent of discounting the Styrofoam cup by your foot, by saying, “It has no meaning in my vision quest. It has no meaning in my spiritual growth. It has nothing for me because it’s meaningless. And so I’m going to go on a vision quest looking for the experience of meaning.” Well, do it when you pick up the cup for your next sip of coffee. And do it on your way home. And do it as you engage in your work. Abandon the resentment. Be willing to let it go. It is not constructive in your process of Awakening.

If you will let go of the resentment and if you will truly be curious about everything that confronts you your perspective will change. And if indeed you are working too hard, you will back off. But you will not discount work any more than you would discount the cup. You’ll just be more appropriate relative to it in your expenditure of energy.

I’ll tell you something else: The love that you are embraced by and imbued with by every single thing you see has the capacity to uncover to you your capacity to embrace fulfillment—not create it, but let it in.

So I like this idea of a vision quest, but not as a means of escape. Let’s not say coffee is bad for you and stop enjoying coffee. Let’s not say the Styrofoam cup is just a form of matter that breaks down difficultly and therefore hurts the environment, so let’s dispense with the Styrofoam cup. Don’t discount your work. Don’t discount your world. Take every little bit of it that is in your experience and be willing at every moment to look at it with new eyes. Which simply means minus your conclusions about it. That’s how you forgive your world, by withdrawing the conclusions you have come to on your own about the Kingdom of Heaven, which have made it seem to be just the world—and a meaningless one at that.

So, I point this out to you so that you will not say, “well, if I go on this vision quest and continue to do my work and let my work be where my vision quest is going to occur, well whose to say that I’m not going to be even more burdened with problems,” you see—but able to not be bothered by the increase.

Love registering with you because you have let it in, brings balance, allows fulfillment to also register with you, and the intelligence, the divine intelligence that holds the forms together so that they are recognizable will not include unintelligent, aggressive, compulsive busyness. In other words, healing. The revealing of your good must accompany such a vision quest. Balance must come into the picture, not because you’ve said it must and not because you’re doing everything you can to see that balance comes into the picture, but because balance is inherent in Creation. And Creation is what is in your face no matter how you've been defining it, no matter how everyone's been defining it. And Creation is not a material world.

The very simple fact that isn't registering with the general public yet is that even your scientists have come to the conclusion that there is no matter and therefore there's no material world—there's no solid world here. But that doesn't mean it doesn't exist. It just doesn't exist as matter. It never did. The substance of everything is not matter, it is Love/Intelligence or Love coupled with Intelligence. You see?

So everyone here would benefit from this vision quest. And the whole world would benefit from it. Because as each one begins to bring his attention to the place where he or she is, with curiosity to have the real meaning revealed to you—stepping aside not from the world but from your current definitions of everything—you will begin to see anew. And you will have withdrawn your mutual agreement with everyone else that the world is exactly what you know it to be. And as you withdraw from the mutual agreement with everyone else as to what everything is and you begin to let in an actual experience of what it really is, the density of the Brotherhood who are dreaming lessens.

I am not popular because I do not lead you away from the material world. Everyone would love to be inspired to rise above all of this. And the reason so few are Awake is because that isn't the way it can happen. You have to look at what you've been misinterpreting with benign or innocent curiosity, so that you might begin to see what it Really is. That's what waking up is about.

The words vision quest is in itself a little bit inspiring, a little bit moving to most everyone. Let the inspiration of that word have reference to the activities of your everyday life. Because it's all of this that's all around you as well as yourself that you're going to become enlightened about. So it is a wonderful thing. You see as long as everyone wants a means of escape well, that's what the fall was about. Everybody that fell said, "I would like to escape this for awhile and have a different experience." So as long as everyone keeps trying to rise above the immediate conscious experience that they're having in all its infinite details, they are going to continue to be asleep. And so I'm bringing your attention to the very place where it must be in order to Awaken.

It's in your encounters with your brother's and sister's. It's in your encounters with your pets. It's in the encounters with horrible things happening on the road. You see? It's right there where the corrected vision awaits you. And as long as you're trying to get away from it, as long as you are resenting it your resenting the presence's of God and you will never find God there. And again, I'm saying that you will always and only find God HERE, wherever here is at the moment that you say, "OK," and with whatever details are going on at that moment whether they are defined as good or bad.

I don't know how to more completely inspire all of you to value every tangible experience that you're having at any given moment, because it's God awaiting your recognition. It's all that any of you have wanted to arrive at by virtue of a quest. But you've got to let yourself stop and be present with where you are nondefensively, without resentment—without saying, “this couldn't possibly be where God would appear.”

For as long as you have been dreaming dreams—in other words, having a confused experience of Reality—you have always been standing at the threshold of becoming unconfused. And wherever you are and whatever the details are at that moment are the elements about which you will become unconfused, which means that you will look at reality with a clear eye. You have always been at the most valuable spot there is. And that means at this moment you're at the most valuable spot there is. You've just believed yourselves for so long, that you are not practicing curiosity. That's your vision quest. It is going to be curiosity to see the order and Movement of God right in your work and right in your life. There are miracles, truly, awaiting you right in your current arena, Steve. And I am encouraging you to have a little optimism that will seem to justify a little curiosity, so that you don't feel called upon to deny it all as meaningless and useless.

Now I am not talking about having just a more pleasant experience of everything, where nothing bothers you any more. It is really an unexpressible experience of infinite meaning to see and experience everything as Living Love loving you. Drawing you into an experience of your unity with it. It's a profound experience. Something profound is occurring at this very instant right here—something profound is happening everywhere else too—but something profound is happening here at this very instant as an experience.

And so your vision quest needs to be the curiosity needed to give your attention to whatever is going on in the instant you're in, so that this profoundness can register with you, not just as a life where you're getting a divorce that isn't bothering you, but as a Movement for both of you, and a Movement in your work that is blissful, where the idea of it being too laborious becomes irrelevant in the experience of bliss. And which in that experience of bliss you will find yourself not expending one unnecessary unit of energy, because in the perfect order of Love you're always being perfectly appropriate.

Again, all of this that I'm talking about had better be relevant to every moment of the day that you're on the job—and for all of you—every moment of the day, whether you're cleaning toilets or whether you're enjoying a dinner at a restaurant. It isn't about time, it isn't about growth, it isn't about refining your Soul—Awakening isn't. It's about allowing a sudden shift of perception in the moment about the moment. And that is a wonderful definition of a vision quest.

Do you have a “yes, but?”

QUESTION: It was difficult to hear most of your answer because I do want relief. And while I hear what you say my overwhelming feeling is of hopelessness and sadness. I have attempted to bring my presence of mind to my work and serve the people I work with and be grateful for the opportunity to have it. I'm just feeling overwhelmed at this time and there's literally this tension that fills up in my body every time I do it, or literally the tension as I'm dragging myself under another filthy structure that ends up hurting my back more each time that I do it. And then what feels like the amount of bills that are coming in will require me to work full time. And when I get in that full time intensity work space I just lose myself and I just go over the edge. The feeling is just wanting to chuck it all.

RAJ: But you see the suggestion here is that all of the pieces of the puzzle that are in front of you do not belong to the same puzzle. And therefore, there is no point in trying to put them all in their place because you will not end up with a complete picture. You will not end up with balance and order and perfection. And I'm telling you that at any given moment all of the details that are in your experience are the perfect details, because aside from the meanings you are giving them, they are standing in the intent that God is meaning them. Therefore, they are the perfect pieces. And when allowed to be present in the manner that allows you to see the wholeness of the meaning that they represent you will find yourself experiencing bliss. Don't throw all of the pieces of the puzzle away to start over on a new puzzle because somewhere along the line the same suggestion will present itself to you that that puzzle is lacking pieces or has pieces that don't belong to it. And it's part of the ignorance.

The Kingdom of Heaven, or what God is Meaning by the Movement of His Being that's called Creation is totally present at this moment in every living detail. If you are giving them definition of your own, you will miss God's Meaning. And you will not experience your peace, nor will you experience what it is your function to experience, the joy of Being.

You want relief? Don't start a new puzzle!

QUESTION: I'm hearing you much clearer on that. I guess to bring it into a most direct focus for me, it's just the combination of all the events that are occurring for me at this time.

RAJ: And the definitions your ego is giving those events.

QUESTION: Correct.

RAJ: If an event is happening something is going on. And if something is going on, there's only one thing that it can be and that is God. It must be Reality occurring. And again, don't discount it all so easily and say, "I'd rather start over," because you'll just get another box of garbage.

QUESTION: I understand that. I don't want to start over. I'm real clear on that. I guess it's just a difficult time.

RAJ: Well, it is difficult in the sense that you can't find a way to get your nose away from the grind stone. That you can't find a way to avoid your Good with a capital "G", when your ego wants a variation on capital "G" Good, which can only be a combination of small "g" good and small "b" bad—conflict. And to be very frank with you what's making it difficult is that your ego suggests that you have an out, a means of escape and it is a call for justice, that something is going on and it's not fair—to someone it's not fair, to you it's not fair.

Well, I've said it before and I'll say it again: What is called for is not justice. What is called for is healing. And when one fights for justice, one fights for it because that's what they choose to have rather than healing. And healing means coming into your Right Mind, coming into your Sanity, where you're not confused, where you "understand" because you experienced the truth about it.

Paul is—and I've talked about this with you before—but Paul is engaged in somewhat the same ploy that you are, in that I have told him that his next step is for him to let me respond to everything. That is so insulting to his ego. And that's irrelevant! Which pisses his ego off even more. You see the suggestion is that in order for you to wake up you are going to have to sacrifice some private, personal integrity that you think you have. And that's where the need for justice presents itself.

Well, I am asking Paul to always be in that place where he's not confused, where clarity is always available to him and where it's possible for him to be the forever appropriate expression of Love that is transformational, so that he no longer appears to be a Styrofoam cup, let us say, but is obviously to everyone the Living dynamic Presence of Love that is the Father in Action. And that is his fulfillment. And that is his joy. And that is his bliss—to be in his Right Mind. But in order for him to have that experience he must stop fighting for the right to have some time to be who thinks he is on his own terms.

He sits sometimes and says, "Oh it was great, it was great when Raj first came along. It was such an exhilarating and uplifting experience and there was so much growth and expansion. You didn't tell me that I would have to sacrifice myself in the long run." Well, as long as he fights for the right to be confused, he will not experience his bliss, he will not experience the peace and fullness of being.

And as long as you are reaching for justice and certain rights, "to have not to endure this or that," because that seems to be important to the expression of the integrity of who you think you are, you will cut yourself off from the experience of your Birthright—the point, the real point of any vision quest you might engage in. And you'll just have a period of time in which conflicted living persists. Well there's nothing new about that, and you can do it, but you know that's not what this point in your life is about. Just as Paul having the right to experience a few more minutes of conflicted ignorance is not what his life is about at this point. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Okay I want to stop here. For the first time, it's real odd in ten years, I'm not connecting. I know you're probably telling me the truth. I don't feel it's not. But it's an odd sensation for me. But I want other people to get a chance... (?)

RAJ: Well, you're not in charge.

QUESTION: I'm well aware of that. It's no mystery to me at all.

RAJ: We will stop at this point. You have heard what you need to hear. And if you will listen to the tape you will find that what didn't make sense will make sense. It would be foolish of me to speak of that which you were incapable of grasping. And so I have spoken about that which you are capable of grasping. And although you're fighting it consciously at the moment it has registered with you and it has made sense.

When Paul gets pissed-off with me I am not bothered.

QUESTION: I'm not really angry at you, I'm just having a hard time.

RAJ: There is resistance. And it isn't resistance against me it's resistance against the truth. It's the equivalent of hitting the snooze button and pulling the covers back up, hoping for just a little bit longer. And that's okay.

I love you.

QUESTION: Me, you too.

RAJ: We will take a break.

QUESTION: I know you've said that we're all waking up and that waking up is not up to us, which is good, since if I knew how to do that it would already be accomplished. It does seem to me that I'm standing still. If progress is being made it must be so gradual that I'm not noticing it. Raj, how many on earth have reached this enlightened stage and where are they?

RAJ: Presently there is no one. There are two who are Awake but they did not incarnate and then Awaken. Of those who are presently incarnated no one has yet Awakened.

QUESTION: Are we the slow learner class?

RAJ: I will not indict you by saying "yes." Many of us are smiling at your question, because you're already Home. You are, for lack of better words, you are here with us even though you think you are here in a place different from us—those of us who are Awake. You're not on a journey. And I encourage you to abandon this concept of a process and of progress which could be slow or fast. If indeed, you are a slow learner you have two options: you can either ask what's wrong with you that you're slow, or how can you speed it up? And both of those things would be a distraction. Because what we're talking about is a shift of perception that can happen in the twinkling of an eye, not something long and drawn out. And the shift occurs by virtue of the practice of curiosity, which we have been talking about and which you most definitely are practicing.

You notice that throughout the years I've never given anyone steps for Awakening. I will put it this way, you are rousing. All that is called for on your part is gratitude. Try to hurry it up and you will have shifted into an ego mode of control. It will happen when no control is being exercised, when you are letting or allowing. One of the greatest values of being curious is that in the act of curiosity you are not maintaining definitions, conclusions or decisions, you are engaged in openness to something you have no experience of or knowledge of. You can't be curious about something you're already familiar with. You see?

And when you are opening the door to something beyond your present experience—apparently beyond your present experience—you're not practicing control. You could say you've laid your ego to rest. And in the absence of ego assertion the only real Movement there is can register with you.

So I do not give procedures and processes or steps to take, except to be curious. "Father what does this meaning? Father what do I need to know?" Or, "Holy Spirit what's the truth here, right here, right there in the loops of the carpet? What's the truth here? What is God being here? Open to me the experience of the meaning. I'm curious." Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: The last ten years it seems like Spirit has really come into my life and has been dismantling my ego. In the last ten years there's been a lot of difficult times. The last 10 months it seems like there's been this acceleration even more so in this regard. My question is about something I think that I was going through, it started about 10 months ago and lasted about 3 months or so. And I think it's a stage of spiritual—after you just said you don't talk about stages, I'm going to ask this question anyway—a stage of ego death is how I would term it. And it was after I went through this 3 month or so period that I came across a book called the "Kryon Writings." And in that book he talks about a neutral implant, which is a sort of fancy way of saying that you accept whatever comes into your life at any moment, and you just accept it, and there's no judgment about any of it. You're just neutral about whatever is there. And he calls this experience, in order for that to be accomplished you have to go through something that he calls the blackness. He said it's called that throughout the Universe.

And I want to ask you about that, if that's really real? And if I did go through that? Because what I went through, I happened to be starting this friendship with a woman. And it seemed to happen shortly after I met her. And I was given to sobbing all of a sudden. And I'm not a person who cries.

But I'd find myself driving down the street and all of a sudden I would start sobbing, I mean sobbing. And I'd wake up during the middle of the night and I'd be sobbing and I would feel totally dark and empty inside. And Kryon says that what is happening is that your Birth guide has left you. And in order to make room for what's the next phase. And when your birth guide leaves you it's as if your best friend and your only child die at the same time. And so I'd have to say that that's the kind of grief, although I've not had a best friend die or I don't have any children, so I can't say what it's like, but there was tremendous grief.

And also he says it's a period of fire. And I just recall there was a lot of anger and things I was making mountains out of molehills. And then he says there is a loss of direction. And during that 3 month period I feel like that's what I experienced. And after I came through it it was like there was a lot of peace. And I'm wondering if I'm making this up? I don't believe I am, but I would like to here your comments about that.

RAJ: You are not making the experience up. The interpretations or definitions given to it are not accurate. But the experience was real. It was a point you to where you lost faith in your best judgment. This wasn't necessarily a conscious decision. It is as though your faith in your ego failed. And this immediately gave you an apparent experience of a loss of direction, basically a loss of control. However, there wasn't an accompanying guilt at the loss of control. You were able to allow yourself to be in that space of having no control and letting or allowing.

It is very important for everyone to understand that as far as guides are concerned, they never leave you. What happens is that your dependence on your guide diminishes, because by virtue of your association and the learn that occurs with your guide you become reminded experientially of who you Are and what you Are. And as that begins to register with you and finally gels you no longer need the support of one who is Awake to provide you with the experience that helps you to remember. But at that point there's no disruption of the contact, as it were. Your connection with your guide, you could say is your first concrete persistent connection with something beyond your own realm of thought. To have been enclosed within the realm of your own thinking is not natural—was not natural to you, any of you. The preoccupation with one's thoughts and the meanings that you give them is what has distracted everyone from the infinite experience of their union with God and the whole Brotherhood.

And so your connection with your guide is like the first contact, the first breakthrough beyond the shell of the arena of your own thinking. All that can happen from there is for you to remember that you never were inside the arena of your own thinking, so that you remember being outside. In other words, you stop being trapped by your thoughts and remember/regain your infinite perspective which is your Birthright. At that point your connection with your guide ceases to be the only connection you have with the Brotherhood who is Awake and it embraces all of the Brotherhood, including your guide.

Now if you want to know who the mourning was for, it was the ego's loss of its hold on you. And it's a good wailer. It does its funeral well. It is well for one experiencing the tears to allow them, because there's something more than just the ego wailing, experiencing its loss of you as its mouth piece. The ego is a state of self-defense. It defends its sense of independent existence by defending itself against God.

Just a moment... That's okay, let it drop. Paul lost the train... Just a moment...

Now, if the ego's function is to be the denial of God or the resistance to God, because that is the only way it can seem to maintain a sense of special and independent existence, what is it blocking, what is it keeping hidden? What it's keeping hidden is the Movement of Love, which is the Movement of God. And so you will always find that when the ego is wailing and it comes out as tears (we're having trouble with the speakers. There we go) and so when you experience the wailing, the sobbing, the tears, it isn't just morbid it is extremely meaningful. This is because the Love, the flow and Movement of Love that it is your Birthright to be experiencing as your frame of Mind is being freed up to flow. And so it is like, you could say the two sides of a coin. And so it is meaningful, but not because there is something meaningful about the ego.

I will make no comment about Kryon or about what he has said. That is not my function. It is only my function to express myself clearly so that you are able to be more easily clear. My one caution to you is don't try to take back control. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Because of that period of time it felt like emotionally I was falling apart. And I was also doing about two and a half hours of yoga and meditation in the morning and about 20 minutes of that was this yoga series that is meant to raise the kundalini. And I was doing it more intensely than I ever had. And I found out later on, because I have had experiences from doing that particular exercises that have been Awakening experiences that didn't last, but they were there. But I think also that the kundalini energy can have the opposite effect...

RAJ: I understand what you are saying.

QUESTION: ...more fire. And I was involved with this woman and so it was this brief relationship that was very intense, very loving briefly and then it went in just the other direction. And I'm carrying a lot of anguish about that and it's been 7 months and I have not been able to let go of it.

And if you have any suggestions. And I constantly work at it, just letting go of it. But it's just there, all the time. It's because there's so much guilt for just the way things happened.

RAJ: Oh, you think you were responsible?

QUESTION: Well, I know, that's interesting... I know that the ultimate truth is that who I really Am has not and never will be effected by anything that's ever happened in this world, or anything that this form or any other form that I may have been in, have ever done. At least I think that's the truth.

RAJ: You are getting too lofty and intellectual here.

QUESTION: I am? Okay.

RAJ: You see the ego is simply hooking you again. You let go of control. No one ever does it gracefully. And so there was awkwardness that had good and bad aspects to it. But the reason it happened was because you yielded control. And staying in that place of yielding is the point, not what happens, or shall I say, not what happened. I could say let go of it, because it holds no meaning today. The Real Meaning lay in the yielding you were doing then. And the Real Meaning that is pertinent to you lays in any yielding you do today. There is nothing to feel guilty for. And there is no value from that experience for you in this moment. And so I say let it go. That does not mean that you will be able to be instantly free of it. When I say, "let it go," it is to convey to you that there is no reason whatsoever to hold on to it. It will fade. But you do not need to fuss with it, within yourself. Yield, in the sense of letting go and exercising no control either in the sense of holding it close because it's dear, or trying to force it out of your experience.

You know, it doesn't matter how graceful or how awkward any of you are in your breakthrough, that you have the breakthrough is what counts, is what is important. And then to stay, to value that place of being out of control enough to stay in it, is what it's about. Because then you find out that you never were in control. And you also find out that being out of control does not mean everything collapses. And this brings about an understanding, called a Knowing, with a capital "K", that there really is a God—meaning there is a cause, there is something actively supporting the experience of being.

And so if one is willing to stay in that place of no control long enough to have this discovery, that there really is a God, one has a fair chance of not succumbing to the ego's suggestion that you need to reemploy control. Control constitutes the defense, the shell that keeps you separated from the experience of God and from the experience of your unlimitedness.

Now the ego is sneaky. And once you have gotten the hang of abiding in the void, the absence of control, the ego says, "Well, is much happening? Are things really different in your life? This yielding and being in the space of no control must have some reason for being valuable. It must be a means you can use to promote your Awakening.” And so it suggests to you that it is an advanced form of control, that being in the not-knowing place, in the place of no control is valuable because it makes things better.

QUESTION: That’s the ego saying that?

RAJ: Exactly.

QUESTION: Isn’t that true? But maybe, maybe not, right? It is whatever it is.

RAJ: No, it is never a matter of it is what it is. It is always the Kingdom of Heaven. Everything is always Reality. That’s what everything is, whether you are perceiving it correctly or not. So you can’t just say it is what it is, because then it’s the equivalent of saying, “It is what I think it is.”

QUESTION: What I meant was that whatever experience comes to you, it’s a gift, it’s for the expansion of awareness. And whether my mind says it’s good or bad or there’s loss or gain here is not really relevant, that’s just the mind that there’s a process of healing. And I don’t really have the intelligence to judge the form of it. That’s what I meant by, “it is what it is.”

RAJ: That is correct, yes. So, one has a breakthrough because there’s a failure in, let us say, the flow of energy necessary to keep feeding the ego. And one experiences collapse, breakdown, which is really breakthrough. Now, one becomes accustomed to and feels the naturalness of that degree of not being in control. And it feels indeed as though control was totally abandoned. And then boom, the bottom falls out again, because there is further yielding. And if one is not familiar with this, one could say, “Oh boy, I’m back to square one. I thought I had made all of this progress, you see, and boom we had more collapse.” Well, you don’t let go all at once, even though each time you let go it feels as though it were total.

QUESTION: It’s very dark. It’s hard for me to say. All I know is that there is been times lately, in the not too distant past, where it’s very dark. And what I see is the absolute worst aspects of the personality that is called Randy. And that’s all I see. And I think that’s what is happening in the collapse. I don’t know whose seeing what, if the ego’s seeing itself or what, but that’s when the yielding is happening, when it’s the darkest. Would that be correct?

RAJ: Oh, yes. Everyone values the word humility. But the way you get to humility is through humiliation, you see, which is the collapse and the failure of that of you which isn’t Real. If you know that, you can hang in there through the humiliation. When the ego realizes that it’s not in control and it’s not getting control, and then in the absence of the control where humiliation is being experienced, one discovers that the world doesn't collapse. Then the "Ah, ha," that comes from that is not one of pride or arrogance, but it is an acknowledgment of a much more grounded simplicity, and it's called humility. And when one speaks from that place, everyone else recognizes humility there.

Again, everyone wants to be told a way to escape such stuff as humiliation. They want to go straight to humility. And I won't give you that kind of option, because there is none. And I won't kid you into thinking that there ought to be or there is. Because if you don't have that period in which you feel humiliated and dark, and where you're out of control, if you don't have the period in which to find out that the Universe doesn't collapse and you are not lost, you won't have the opportunity to recognize there is a God and you don't need to hold everything together. And when you have that realization there's humility.

So don't be surprised if there are further humiliations. Having discovered the value of humiliation that results in humility you will more gracefully encounter the next humiliation, you see. And you will be more allowing of it. And its span of time in your experience will be shortened. You will move through it more gracefully.

QUESTION: I find that during those dark times that I was going to say I want to kill this body, but I think it would be more correctly to say that the ego wants to terminate. Because I'm being very frank, that's what goes through me sometimes. It's like what Steve was talking about—escape—the wanting to escape.

RAJ: The ego never wants to terminate—never wants to terminate. The motivation to do something to kill the body is an overt attempt to take control again. It's a temptation presented to you saying, "you can do something that will have an effect and demonstrate your competence." Well, everyone whose ever done it had an uninterrupted experience of a body and of an ego that was in control that still needed to be released. They may not have had ongoing contact with those that had been in their experience, but it didn't further their spiritual progress one bit or change anything in any practical way.

So I want you to be aware that it is a temptation if you want to put it that way. It's a suggestion whispered in your ear that says, "this is bull shit you can exercise control." And you must say, "I'm not going to do it." You can't make the ego stop talking to you, but you can neglect to rise to the occasion it presents. And as I've said before, the only thing the ego cannot defend itself against is neglect. Attack the ego and it will always win. Neglect it and it has no foundation from which to operate, you see.

QUESTION: Does it ever die completely?

RAJ: Absolutely! It never really had an existence to give up. It's an imagined perspective. It's a self concept, you see. "I am a man of importance," or, "I am a man with great respect." And one can conduct his life as though that concept is true. But the only thing that is true is the very first part of the sentence, "I am," you see.

So the ego doesn't have an existence, an actual existence that it can give up. But one can begin to live in one's self-concept and govern every action of his life upon that concept. And if he is one of great respectability and suddenly no one is giving him respect he thinks he's lost, he thinks he's failed, life isn't worth living, you see. It's not true! Because he never was that thing, even though he and everyone around him may for a long period of time have danced this dance of mutual agreement, where they played into each other's need to have someone to respect and to be respectable. You see.

This is what is being very difficult for Paul to grasp is that when I say to him let me respond to everything, in other words, be in that place where everything you do comes out of clarity, that it doesn't mean he is sacrificing himself. The only thing he can sacrifice is a pattern of behaviors that he developed based upon a pattern of ideas about he was that he developed in order to function in the world in a way that everyone else could agree with, you see. But the self-concept and its seeming vibrant integrity is purely imaginary. And it's not a sacrifice at all. He's arguing with me at this very moment.

The ego is an addiction. And it is that which promotes the addiction. And although I have spoken of it just now as though it is a thing that is capable of acting, it's nothing. It has no real existence. But that which is sitting here, knowing the self-concept, that wants to hold on to itself, is not the concept. In other words, Paul is not the concept, he is the presence of mind that can be either Sane or insane, clear or confused.

QUESTION: That brings up a question for me then, when you say just the presence of mind, and if he's in his Right Mind he's out of control, he's not in control. So that means that any behaviors or actions that come out of his body society still holds him responsible. And yet he is not in control, right? And so that's true, and yet this body will still be held responsible for whatever it does, even though there's nobody here in control. So in other words, if you don't pay your bills they're going to come and take your things. I mean even though you may have been in your Rightest Mind. I'm making sense, right?

RAJ: Relatively speaking. Why, if one is out of control, why do you think that the result would not be utter appropriateness?

QUESTION: That's been a question in my mind lately. As if I've wondered, because I've come to that conclusion that I'm out of control... It's fear, it just comes from fear.

RAJ: You see, if everything that you see is the visibility and tangibility of the Movement of Intelligence, the substance of which is Love that we were speaking of earlier, relative to every form, if it is intelligence why would it behave in a way that wasn't recognizably intelligent?

QUESTION: I think it comes from a lack of faith, a lack of trust that there is a God or Goodness that somehow out of control there is something in charge. Because inside all there is is maybe a lot of conflicting emotions and feelings and doubts and fears...

RAJ: This is why the humiliation aspect of arriving at humility is so essential. Because without it one doesn't have the time to discover that there is a God, which once it is experienced as a knowing, not an understanding, relieves you of the confused jumble of anxious fearful emotions. You see? So you are on the right track. I just encourage you to persist in not taking control again.

QUESTIONS: A friend of my has asked me to ask a question. He's not well enough to be here. His name is Fritz. He has cancer and has had it for quite a bit of time, it's in an advanced status now. He has gone through chemotherapy and he's also spent a good deal of time with a healer. And I talked to him a couple of days ago and his question is... Oh, just one other thing, his oncologist has basically given up, so I think now he just has medication for pain control, which is not a 100% effective. His question is, is he going to die of this? And is there anything he should know or could do? I think when he said his doctor had given up he said—and this is a quote—"now it's up to me." And anything you could say to Fritz I would appreciate and so would he.

RAJ: The only way he will die of this is if he gives the word. His doctor has given up. I hope this is true. And I hope he will give up his faith in the doctors opinion.

Now I encourage you to not only share with him the answer I am giving now, but to also share with him the tape of the whole conversation of the whole gathering today. He can have his vision quest with his body. The curiosity to experience what is Real right there. The willingness to be attentive to the breaking into view of the lovableness of his body, because the substance of the form that he calls his body is Love, which is loving him even though the road he has traveled has caused him to be afraid and almost convinced that his body is killing him, not loving him.

It is his bodies intent, it's reason for existing, to identify the presence of his Individuality perfectly. That's the truth. That is God's intent set into motion that appears as his body. And whether he passes on or not, he will forever have a body. He will forever be recognizable. And that's what form is, the recognizability of an intent being set into motion by the Father as the Movement of Creation. Another thing is that Creation is always current. Creation wasn't umpteen billion years ago. And life isn't just a perpetual motion machine. The originality and vitality of the Creative Movement of Love is always occurring now.

So healing is always possible. He stands on the threshold of healing at every moment, just as I said all of you stand at the threshold of, let us say revelation and Awakening in every moment. And every single moment, and every single detail of any given moment is exactly the perfect opportunity for this revelation to occur. It's the intent of his being, that which God Created that constitutes him, to experience what he is flawlessly. Therefore, the fact is that everything about his body is geared to manifesting that which is utterly blissful to Fritz, just as yours is to you.

And so I encourage him not to believe what his doctors have said, when their current level of ignorance has been expressed as though it were law.

I will say to Fritz, don't say that it's not fair that I should have to go through this. Well, I'll tell you, whatever the puzzle pieces are that are on the table are the perfect ones. And generally speaking, and just because the perfect puzzle pieces tend to bring about the humiliation we were speaking of, and are uncomfortable, but lead perfectly to a state of real humility and the opportunity for healing, doesn't mean that there is less reason to bring full joyous commitment to the puzzle pieces that are on the table.

Every healing, in one way or another, involves humiliation and resultant humility. And so what I am saying is, value the puzzle pieces that are on the table because they are specifically contributive to healing and the experience of bliss. I'm telling Fritz not to be angry and frustrated by the circumstances, the details aren't what are relevant. It's the fact that underlying the interpretations, the current interpretations of those details is the Presence of God illuminating Fritz's divinity which will register with him if he'll stop being angry at his puzzle. And he will understand what I am saying if he has been able to listen to the whole tape of this afternoon. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Is there any physical steps that would be helpful?

RAJ: No, what I have shared will be immediately regenerative.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome. Today has been pregnant with Meaning. And I hope you are all able to get home before your water breaks. (Much laughter)

Thanks you.

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

ANSWER: Good morning.

ALL: Good morning.

ANSWER: I'm very glad to be here with all of you. And without further ado we will open it up for any questions or comments you may have.

QUESTION: I'm so nervous I have to write it down and read it. In romantic relationships I seem to wind up always confused and disturbed. The confusion takes the shape of not knowing how I feel about the person after awhile. And I wonder is it all worth the work, getting through all the garbage and staying there. I get confused about my motives. And I get into this dilemma of what to do, should I stay, should I go. So I'm wondering if you could elaborate on what constitutes a good relationship? How important are things like common interest, compatible temperaments, I like evenings, he likes mornings, he wants hamburgers, I want carrots, he's a city person, I'm a country person? And my particular pattern seems to be initial excitement, then disillusionment, anger, thoughts of leaving, panic over leaving, confusion, questioning. And part of the panic is that I'm going to go somewhere else and have the same dilemma come up. And so this time in my seven year relationship I decided to learn how to forgive. And I'm making lots of progress, but I'm still unsure as to when it's appropriate to stay and when it's appropriate to go.

PAUL: I'm sorry, this is me Paul. Did you say you are in a seven year relationship?

QUESTION: Yes and I'm working on forgiveness. And I feel like I'm progressing. But I still have these questions as to when is it appropriate to stay and when is it not? And also I tend to take any answer given me and make it into a dilemma: Did he mean this, or did he mean that?

ANSWER: Well, we have three days! (much laughter) And there's no excuse for you to leave without having become clear about whatever it is I say.

At the bottom line, the issue with you is that you don't keep your integrity in tact, you don't keep your integrity clear within yourself, about yourself. And as a result of paying more attention to the other person in the relationship you override your integrity, you sacrifice it in other words. When I speak of integrity, your integrity, I'm really speaking about a very clear inner experience of who you are. I do not mean by that a female, a career person, I'm not talking about labels. I'm talking about, that sitting right there regardless of what you're wearing, what roles you've put on in this lifetime, that you are utterly Meaningful—and I mean that with a capital “M”—utterly Meaningful, because you are not the offspring of two human parents, but are at this instant and every instant the direct, active expression of God. You are a divine one sitting there, standing there, cooking, bathing, pumping your gas, whatever you are doing is extraneous to the divine one who is doing it—the utter Presence of God in His/Her fullness right there.

When you forget that, when you stop paying attention to it and you start being for someone else, trying perhaps to be for them what they feel is fulfilling for them, you disregard this utterly divine one that you are. And that's where you get into trouble. “Well, if I'm just who I really am that will ruin the relationship.” Well, better to ruin the relationship than to ruin your self-experience by overriding your own integrity. But there's something more than that here than just being able to say, “well, the relationship isn't worth overriding my integrity.” The more that's in it is the potential discovery that you will have, that when you do express your integrity it blesses rather than curses you and everyone else.

I will tell you that the whole world is waiting for all of you, for all of mankind, to stop being distracted from letting who they divinely are find expression. When any of you withhold the love that you are, when any of you block the expression of the Presence of God in you, the whole world suffers from that of God finding expression in you that's not getting expressed. “Well, if I do that I'm going to look like some kind of odd-ball.” Well, you see there you are deferring to “them,” the one's who would define you as an odd-ball. And so you don't express yourself clearly, your integrity is held back. And Everyone loses out.

Now, to one degree or another this does apply to everyone, it tend to apply more to women, and in some ways this is a key issue for you. You're not here to be someone else's servant. You're not here to make some man happy. That's not your function in the world. You're not here to save him, or whoever the partner might be in any relationship. Helpers—and I'm using this term loosely—helpers tend to sacrifice their integrity more than anyone else on this globe because they feel a sense of purpose in being present for others in a capacity that makes them whole. And then when you have others that look at you and say, “indeed that is your function. I agree with you. And here's how exactly you can help me.” They suck you in.

That is why it is so important for you to not forget that regardless of roles you have taken on, regardless of any roles you have been thinking about taking on, regardless of how others see you, you in your own right as you exist have integrity that is the integrity of God in you that you were not meant to override or ignore. You are meant to let it be embodied in every expression that you engage in throughout the day. You know what that means? That means being in touch with yourself enough all the time to recognize when you're not about to join with another in an activity that lacks integrity. "But he expects that of me." Tough luck!

The minute you find yourself seeming to be called upon to do something that you're not comfortable about, you must recognize that and stop doing it. No judgment about the call for an activity that lacks integrity needs to be brought into play. And this is the important point: If someone invites you to override your integrity, don't waste your time judging them. Just stay clear yourself. Be paying attention enough within yourself to notice that this is a call for you to over step the bounds of your comfort zone. And your rule of thumb should be a simple uncomplicated rule that says, "I don't have to do what is uncomfortable to me. And so I'm not going to do it. And that's it."

Now you said that in this relationship you are beginning to practice forgiveness as a new approach, a new style of relating. Forgiveness is never a matter of saying, "I forgive you for your thoughtlessness. I forgive you for your bad behavior and therefore if you engage in it it doesn't upset me." Do you see what I'm saying? Forgiveness is when you withdraw judgment. It's not when you withdraw intelligence. And so when you recognize that you're being called upon to do something that doesn't fit within your comfort zone, that asks you to override your integrity and you say I won't override my integrity, you are truly expressing love.

When you forgive another, which means when you withdraw judgment you have placed upon them for whatever reason, what that really means is you've only taken the first step. Because there's another step. By having disengaged from potential tension, by having withdrawn your judgment you are now able to say, "what is consistent with my integrity." In the absence of the tug-of-war that goes on when judgment is present you have the peace of mind, you have enough clarity to pay attention to what feels comfortable to you so that you can simply say "yes" to what does and "no" to what doesn't without judgment coming into the picture. You see?

I'm going a little beyond the scope of your question here. If someone hits you—and it really doesn't matter whether it's a woman hitting a man or a man hitting a woman, but I am pressing more from the standpoint of women who are hit by men—forgiveness is not just a matter of saying, "I forgive you for the bad treatment you have been dishing out. Forgiveness says, "I forgive you," which is the first step. And the second step is to pay attention to your own integrity and your own worth and your own decency as a direct expression of God. And then you say, "don't do it again." Whatever the mistreatment is you can withdraw the judgment so that you aren't caught up in the turmoil of judgment and then in your peace, which is a result of your forgiveness you can pay attention enough to your integrity to say, "No more!" You see?

You could say that the practice of forgiveness brings you into a frame of mind where simple dignity and intelligence regarding yourself can register with you and be the basis upon which you act. It may be a marvelous feat to forgive someone for something awful that they have done. But if that's all that happens the feat is a stupid feat.

The expression of dignity and integrity begets dignity and integrity in your world. That's very important. Your expression of your dignity and your integrity begets dignity and integrity in the world, just as love expressed begets love.

So the real question, the real crux of the issue for you is not, "when do I leave and when do I stay." The real crux is, "when do I override my integrity and when do I abide with it." Because when you can see the borderline and the points at which you cross over you can cross back into your integrity and not violate it. And by not violating it you will not withhold its expression from your world and your partners and your friends and your family will benefit. Sometimes they won't like it, but they will benefit.

So don't misunderstand and think that your expressing your integrity is always going to make everyone happy all the time. Because if they are used to having designs upon you and use you, and your integrity comes forth and makes you unavailable for use or abuse the users will say, "dirty pool, you're not playing the game right. The game says you yield. You let me use you." Well, that's when you say, "I'm sorry, I'm not available." And you don't defer to their expectations or their anger or their upset or disappointment in you, because you're keeping clear the boundary between your integrity and the abandonment of your integrity.

You're the Daughter of God and you are worthy, not worthless. And you have dignity by Birthright you could say. And you can learn to say "no" when there's a call for you to override and disregard your integrity.

The answer to your problem is not difficult. That is it and it is simple. The difficulty lies—in terms of practice—the difficulty is in the fact that you tend to want to be there for other people. And so you will defer to what they're expecting, or what they're saying they need.

People ask me for things all the time. And most of the time they are asking for what they want and not what they need. And when I give what they need, they don't recognize it because it's not what they were expecting. Oh, and then they get mad at me, and say, "why weren't you there for me." But I'm not here to cater to people's egos. I don't mean I'm not here in Yucaipa today to cater to your ego's, although that's true, but in a more universal sense I'm not available to anyone to cater to their ego's.

And you're not here to cater to other people's egos. You're here to dare to feel your integrity because of who you are—the Daughter of God—and to feel it and to not violate it. And let it be embodied in your daily life. It is a most lovable thing. It is a most respectable thing. And above all, because your embodiment or expression of it ends up being an expression of God's Will, it blesses and transforms the world beyond the scope of any single act you engage in because it's like the leaven that leavens the whole lump. It doesn't take much leaven to leaven the whole bunch of dough, you see. And so it blesses everyone, when any one of you lets your divine integrity into expression. It registers universally.

And It's important for you to know that, so that you don't say, "well, what can I do? I'm nobody!" Well, see right there you've forgotten your integrity, you've forgotten who you are. Each time anyone lets God through by honoring their integrity which is derived from the Father then the Father has found expression in the world and it is transforming and blesses everyone.

And I guess you could say if I have anything to say, and if I am here to say anything it is that which encourages all of you to feel your actual Birthright. And to encourage you to let it find expression, so that the end of suffering can happen, because it's everyone's Birthright not to be suffering. But as long as everyone is trying to keep the status quo and override their integrity in favor of what everyone else expects of them God is withheld from expression here. And it is such an unnatural state that everyone hurts from it. You see?

So I'm going to ask you, what is the essence of what I have said to you in my answer to you?

QUESTION: That I need to really stay with what I feel is comfortable and right for me.

ANSWER: And not override your integrity.

QUESTION: Right stay in touch with myself and my needs.

ANSWER: Yes. Now, that is the answer. And now I'm going to expand and address everyone a little bit more.

The intellect is a wonderful tool that the ego uses. And so some of you might already have found the suggestion being made to you, "well, if I'm going to pay attention to what feels good to me, might not some of what feels good to me be ego oriented? How can I trust what feels good to me?" The ego would analyze and call into question a simple motive that you might have to not behave in a manner inconsistent with your comfort zone. Don't let any intellectual processes distract you from what I'm going to call down-to-earth common sense. And don't let any arguments of the intellect distract you from whatever sense you currently have enough wits to have. Do you see what I mean?

The experience of revelation, of insight, of communion with truth is never a matter of standing taller than your humanness, like reaching for the stars, reaching for the brass ring a little bit further away even than just your common sense. "Well," the ego says, "you can't trust your common sense. You can't trust the human part of you."

You want to know why people who have experienced utter failure tend, ever after that, to be the wise one's that everyone will turn to? Because in their abject failure where all of their roles that had given them a sense of purpose and success, when all of those are gone, when all of their pride in anything is gone, when everything they had valued is gone they find that they are still there—there's something still present. And one of the aspects of real failure is that one is too exhausted to put on a front any more.

And part of the front that everyone puts on is a set of ideas that sound good but don't mean shit. And when one arrives at a point of failure where everything that had given them a sense of meaning isn't giving them meaning, and where all of the ideas that sounded good are seen not to be good any more, one finds oneself truly in touch with his common sense. And so, one, if one is not angry at the failure, but is allowing himself or herself to just be apparently nothing, one begins not to do anything that's not essential. One begins not to engage in anything that's meaningless. And their utter common sense and their wisdom that was there all along underneath the roles and the successes and the good ideas and everything that they had been employing, that comes forth and it blesses everyone.

You have common sense, all of you do. And so rather than rising above your problems, rather than standing taller and taller and taller, which simply gets you further and further away from your capacity to recognize truth, I encourage you all to start right where you are and value your comfort zone, whether it can be called ego oriented or not. Because you know what? No matter how far you get away from the Father's perspective you bring with you all of His wisdom because it's your Birthright, well because you are His/Her presence.

So value where you are. And value who you are. And value what you recognize to be comfortable. Because you all always have the capacity to feel what is comfortable. Comfort isn't intellectual, it's real. I can't put it more simply than that. We will elaborate on it as we got through the three days.

I will end up the answer here by pointing out that where your divinity lies to be found, where it is present to be discovered is right in the middle of your humanity. You do not rise above your humanity to connect with your divinity. You value your humanity and get in touch with it. And from there everyone is blessed. And from there you find—for lack of better words—the trap door or the little gap that you would slip through into the direct experience of your divinity. But it will not remove you from your humanity. It will open your humanity up into fuller expression.

Was your question relative to this? If you would pass the microphone to her.

QUESTION: May I ask a follow up?

ANSWER: I'll come back to you in just a moment.

QUESTION: What do you do with the fact that something very unhealthy may not only have become comfortable but the lack of it feels very uncomfortable?

ANSWER: We will address that, we will have a break in a moment and when we come back we will address that. I hear what you're saying. You had a follow up?

QUESTION: Yeah, sometimes something feels comfortable with me but since I get so much flack I begin to think well maybe I have a blind spot and my motives are not clear to me. For instance I read a "Dear Abby" once and the man had written in that his wife stays up half the night writing and doing all these things in her jogging clothes and when she finally falls asleep it's on the couch. And he wants her not to be doing this. And Abby wrote back and said, "well your wife is obviously afraid of intimacy." And so, since I'm an active person I like to connect with a lot of different people including old boyfriends—totally on a friendship level—and this upsets my boyfriend, I begin to think well maybe I have this problem, a fear of intimacy. And I'm not aware of my own motives in the things I choose that I really like to do. So, I'm wondering do I have a blind spot or do I really enjoy these things I think I enjoy?

ANSWER: Inseparable from your divine integrity is love. And so, when you are wanting to stay within your integrity and be in touch with it, you are wanting to be in touch with your capacity to be love expressed. And so in paying attention to what your integrity is and who you are you will be listening for and paying attention to what the expression of what love would be under this circumstance or that circumstance or this situation.

We are going to take a break. Your questions move beyond what I was specifically addressing, which was to value your comfort zone and to not violate it. Now it's an entirely different thing for you to expand your comfort zone or alter it, but to violate its limits because of what someone else wants is what brings confusion. And when you know that you have the right to pay attention to your comfort zone and honor it, you become comfortable. And in that comfort the opportunity to grow can occur without threat. And that's what we'll talk about when we come back from the break. And we'll take a break now.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: One of the last things you said was that you thought maybe I am afraid of intimacy. And my response to that is: So what? I mean it in the sense that everyone in the group has their own potential flaws or unseen flaws, and none of you say, "so what"! You take your flaws seriously. You know what? Maybe you are afraid of intimacy, but I love you anyway. Do you know what that means? And it's true of all of you. It means that in spite of and regardless of any of the things you need to learn you are lovable. And you know what that means? You can dare to get in your comfort zone.

Most all of you get out of your comfort zones to try to achieve lovability, credibility and respectability. And the only place you can get them from is from “them,”—those who have judged you as being unlovable as being this or that. Part of your innate integrity is the fact that you are at this very moment, with your thousands of flaws perhaps utterly lovable. And as each one of you hear that and let it sink in I know that it’s a relief. It is the truth. So from within yourselves you have the capacity to recognize the blessing of realizing that no matter how imperfect you think you are you are lovable.

“This is my beloved Son. This is my beloved Daughter in whom I am well pleased.” I am quoting. This is not God’s voice speaking to you. It is also not me calling you my daughters or sons. I had not ascended when my Father said that about me. That means there was still some growing for me to do, humanly speaking.

Now if each of you can in the slightest way feel the relief of knowing that one who is fully Awake finds you totally and utterly lovable, if each of you can feel the relief of knowing that, then we can go to step two, which is you have some comprehension of the meaningfulness of your finding your fellow man with all his or her faults utterly lovable, worthy of the extension of love, because that will be felt also.

As you open up to the Voice for God, let us say, the Holy Spirit, you will find that everything you learn about yourself you’ve learned about your brother. And the way you have been treated by the Holy Spirit is an example of the way you are to treat your fellow man. And because you have the experience of the communion of Love, and it’s not just a head trip, you have something substantial to base your valuing of the place you have to extend Love to your brother with all of their flaws at the moment, with all the things they have yet to learn.

Now I have not immediately gone into the subject we were going to talk about, because it’s important not to gloss over this first step of staying within your comfort zone. Let’s understand a little more fully what that means.

When you give yourselves permission to abide in your comfort zone—no matter how much the ego has provided definitions for that comfort—when you have given yourself permission to honor your comfort zone, what you’ve done is you’ve taken away any authority other’s have for letting you or not letting you be in your comfort zone. In psychological terms you could say you have become self-empowered rather than other-empowered. This is healthier than to be other-empowered.

Now the thing is that if you truly have given yourself permission to function within your comfort zone, you don’t have to be defensive about it. You don’t have to protect yourself against invitations by others to step out of your comfort zone. You can just say, “no, I don’t feel like that right now,” with no charge to it, positive or negative—just a simple statement of fact like two plus two is four. When you say two plus two is four you don’t feel that you have to prove it, nor do you have to defend it. It’s just the way it is.

When you are not having to defend your integrity your behavior changes. When you're not feeling as though you have to grab your integrity away from someone or something else who is holding the reins, there is no call for you to be angry, rude, impolite, argumentative, arrogant—"no, I don't feel like doing that right now. I just don't feel like doing it." Your behavior becomes more loving, because it becomes more genuine. You've slipped into that place where you are sort of the equivalent of being too tired to be polite—artificially polite is what I mean, standing on ceremony. There's no need to state anything more than the fact. "No, I don't feel like it right now. No, I don't feel like coming to bed right now. No, I don't feel like doing that." And when it is said without an edge to it, without any defense, without any arrogance, without any attempt to get even it can be more easily heard. Because the genuineness, the simple unhaughty genuineness of it is expressed.

You must value your comfort zones, whatever they are. Because until you value it and honor it by not attempting to be different from it, until you do that you can't help but try to defend it, you can't help but have an enemy and you aren't in your peace.

You realize Paul can't hear me until he becomes still, until he abandons the right to have the stage exclusively, if I may put it that way. That means he can't have the opportunity to grow until he abandons the right he thinks he has to provide his own opportunities for what he conceives growth to be.

So it's in the yielding, it's all in the yielding. And when you yield into your comfort zone you become more real and your behavior does change. It is kinder, even though one might say, "well, she really has to overcome this fear of being intimate." No one easily or gracefully overcomes a limit, when there isn't something first in them that they are able to honor. And so you start with your comfort zone at the moment to honor.

You must be able to find God in you. You must be able to find something worthwhile in yourself first before you expand the borders of your tent, so to speak, before you attempt to violate boundaries that the ego has established for you.

So that's why it's so very important to go ahead right where you are and honor your integrity where you find it in your present level of comfort in behavior in the world. When you know you are not vulnerable, because your comfort zone is just what it is.

You know when the phone rings you don't have to answer it. Did you know that? And likewise you don't have to defend your comfort zone. You really don't! There's no law! You don't have to defend your comfort zone, and you don't have to behave inconsistently with it. And when you realize that and risk the chance that it's true and simply be from it, as I said there won't be any anger, there won't be any haughtiness, there won't be any arrogance, there won't be any defense in the expression of it. And what a relief you will feel. And it's in that state of relief that you can then begin to look at areas in which you want to become free of limitations or impositions on your freedom that you have become bound by. But you don't try to break those boundaries, or violate those boundaries when you haven't even found anything about yourself that is respectable in your own terms. You see?

Indeed it's true that one can become comfortable doing what is out of sync with their integrity for whatever reason. And changes need to be made in what constitutes a real experience of comfort. But as I said, it's very difficult to change those things if you don't have a place of some substance within yourself where you feel okay about yourself. That really is the first step. Then what follows is not a time of testing, is not a time of struggle, but a time of discovery. From that place of self-honoring and peace you can begin to explore limits that you may not have thought you had, and limits that you do know that you have. And you can explore the potential for violating those limits. They're like fences, circular fences. You can only go so far and no further. But it's only when there's an experience of your own lovability that you can begin to find a natural inclination and desire and anticipation of the fun that will be involved in climbing that fence and moving beyond it, or leaning into it and finding out that it had no real substance to hold you back and you fall through and are able to move on.

Waking up is a divine adventure, an adventure in realizing, recognizing the infinite capacities that are your Birthright that for one reason or another you had overlooked, abandoned, ignored, but which are still there. Now I'm expressing it in very pleasant words that are inspiring, the fact is that some of it will be work, some of it will take persistence. But the courage to stay with the motivation to persist comes from that place in you that you decided to honor, which we've called your comfort zone this morning. You see? And an unwillingness to engage in trying to defend your comfort zone to another.

Would you like to bring your part of the question more into focus?

QUESTION: What do you do with this unhealthy situation that has become very comfortable, and in fact, without it you are very uncomfortable, but yet you know it is unhealthy even though it is my comfort zone as far as I can reach?

ANSWER: Well, you're going to have to become a little bit like the eight year old who has been told to play in the yard and not go outside the fence. You are going to have to let some curiosity about what's beyond the limits of this comfort zone that's uncomfortable for you now. And you're going to have to dare to find imaginative ways to get out without being caught. (laughter)

Now it isn't the threat of being caught that I want to emphasize here, because that isn't what you will find happening. What I am addressing is the need for playful curiosity to explore beyond the boundaries of the limit that is not healthy. You see? You need to engage that vitality within yourself that delights in being disobedient to the boundary, because it's a boundary of something unhealthy that does not in fact call for your obedience. You see? Instead of being the victim of it, and especially instead of being someone who has something psychologically dark within them that is self-defeating and has something wrong with them, you see, that they have to overcome. Bring the playfulness back in that the child in you has, that naturally does not want to abide by boundaries. And then when no one's looking, which means when your ego isn't looking, you dare to behave beyond the limits of the behavior that this unhealthy comfort says you must abide by.

You see, I'm encouraging you to let yourself be inspired out of the unhealthy comfort zone rather than fighting your way out, or somehow overcoming some supposed unhealthiness in you. It isn't the unhealthy behavior patterns of the comfort zone that is what's unhealthy, it's the fact that you have somewhere along the line abandoned the inquisitive rule breaking child in yourself which needs to be resurrected so that you might explore being in a new way. You see?

There are many ways to skin a cat. There are many ways to wake up. The simplest way, the simplest way to wake up is just to say, "Yes," to God, "Thy Will be done." It can be done in the twinkling of an eye with a little willingness. You may think that there are so many psychological factors bearing on this unhealthy comfort zone that it must be very complicated, and take a lot of straightening out of your thinking to wake up. And then there are others of you who are studying the Course who think that you have to get to lesson 365 before you can wake up.

The steps, the lessons will certainly help. And any psychological steps you take to bring yourself to a point where you can say yes to a new behavior will help. But that approach tends to become one full of studious behavior which lacks this vital, essential, rule breaking nature within you that finds itself unable to comprehend any sanity in limits.

And so I encourage you always to try to skin the cat in the way that has the least process to it, even if in addition to that you utilize processes. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I have a feeling that... I have a feeling that we are not leaving this subject permanently.

QUESTION: Raj, I think I find I have brief moments of peace that are interrupted by sort of the rantings of my ego, which has taken on the guise of—it has many disguises—but the one it takes on is that of a medical expert or something. So that if I just have a headache, it's a brain tumor; or if I have something else it's prostrate cancer; or if I get a freckle, it's skin cancer. So that everything becomes just exaggerated, it's like this hysteric that seems to, usually whenever I'm happy for just a few moments, these little bulletins or medical alerts or whatever they are kind of come along. Even though I'm a student of the Course I find myself somehow paying undue attention to them and really letting them sort of run my life. And it's just kind of like it's always there, around the corner. And I was wondering what is the best way to deal with these, to put them in perspective, or in their place—besides outlive them, which I've managed to do?

ANSWER: The first thing you can do when these medical alerts come is to tell your ego, "I'm a Christian Scientist." Being a comedian yourself you could begin to define the ego as a comedian also and learn to laugh at whatever it says. Don't argue with it, just laugh at it.

Now you've gotten all you need and you can go home.

What I've already told you is all that it takes. But I will give you a little more than all that it takes.

If you're going to be a student then you had better decide who your teacher's going to be. If someone came to your door and in all seriousness in a business suit, briefcase, very official looking, and said, "please let me in, I am here to teach you how to sin, suffer and die." Would you let them in?

QUESTION: No.

ANSWER: Then use at least half as much common sense as that. And when the ego suggests these things, say, "No thank you." And then ask within yourself, "What does Love say—capital 'L' Love? What does the Father's perspective say?" It may say, "wash your face more frequently, so you don't have a pimple." It may say, "change your eating habits." Yes, divine guidance is very practical, relevant, or it may say, "you've got to let go of this anger that you are holding towards so-and-so," or, "you must abandon this cause you have for gaining justice in your life," or whatever. But it will be an answer that expresses love and that will be reflected in evidences of perfection manifesting, including the disappearance of the inclination to be fascinated with an advisor who is the epitome of unintelligence.

Most of all I want you to work on finding your capacity to laugh from the tips of your toes when the ego's up to its dirty business the next time and the next time. Laughter is not a defense, but it is an absence of engaging with serious response that seems to validate the teacher or what the teacher has said.

Again, you will find that I am suggesting to you that you do something which doesn't bring discipline into play. If you can manage to skin the cat without bringing discipline into play you will save yourself from bringing all the other elements that you have acquired in your life around the practice of discipline. One of which is seriousness, studiousness, fear of the grade that is going to be received, and on-and-on. The fascination with coping with a bad teacher is compounded by the seriousness that you bring to the process. The quickest thing to heal an illness is laughter, is joy!

When I was tempted, I said, “get thee behind me Satan!” That was the word in those days that meant the same thing as the, “ego get thee behind me—get thee behind... behind me! I’m going to be at the head of the line. If you’re going to be there, you’re going to be in second place.” You see? I put him in his place. But really what I did was I kept myself present with the preference.

You see, even though Paul is not originating anything at this moment, he is being fully present in his presence, but the personality Paul has been put back there so to speak. You see what I mean? And so what Paul really is can be present. But Paul isn’t really anything unjoined with the Father. And when he’s joined with me he’s joined with the Father, because I’m joined with the Father.

So choose your teacher well. And if you choose for the teacher of small mindedness, be aware that you are choosing for it. Everything that follows will be invalid, no matter how frightening it is. But being a comedian you have the capacity to turn the tables and laugh. You see? But you’ll have to make the decision, you’ll have to make the choice. All of you are always making the choice because there are only two teachers. And the ego, to put it simply, is nothing but memory.

As each of you grew up you tried out different ways of behavior and you finally decided on certain ways of behavior that felt good to you and have come to identify you. And so you engage in those behaviors thinking that they are arising out of the moment, when actually they are arising out of the past. You’re Fifth Grade teacher said you were lousy in math and you would never make it in math. And to this day you’ve said, “I’m lousy at math.” You think you’re stating it in the now, but your statement is from the past, it’s memory, it’s locked you in and it squelches any little bit of curiosity that might arise in you to explore something mathematical like balancing your checkbook without fear. You see?

And so your present is governed by the past. The sense of yourself that you have acquired, tried on, modified and finally settled on, that’s all there is to the ego. It’s not an intelligent presence with a life of its own and an ability to assert itself. But either you are acting in the present from memory, which means you’re not responding to what’s really happening in the present, or you are abandoning memory with a willingness to be in the moment with innocent eyes—with eyes that have no assumptions about the moment. And then the Moment, which always has a capital “M”, has the opportunity to register with you and you find yourself being taught by the Holy Spirit.

And what the Holy Spirit is disclosing to you is the presence of God that is what is really going on in this Moment. And you say, “my eyes have been opened. It’s mind boggling! It’s wonderful!” And then if you’re not careful you take that wonderful experience and you add it to your memory banks, and you let that experience become what prompts your actions in the moment instead of continuing to stay at the threshold of an experience of “behold I make all things new,” where what happens isn't what you expected because it expresses the ongoing originality of the Movement of Creation that God is Being and which is the only thing going on.

So, there's always one of two teachers that you are allowing to guide you. You are never authorizing anything yourself. You're always being lead around by the nose—flat out! There is no alternative to that. And part of Awakening is the humiliating revelation of that fact, and then the empowerment or the clearer experience of your integrity that comes from expecting it, so that you pay attention to who the teacher is, so that you let yourself be lead around by the only Real presence there is, which is the Movement of God. You see?

And that's how everyone is going to wake up. So you must make the choice consciously and close the door on the teacher you don't want to hear from. Or choosing for that one, do it knowing that you're choosing for it and that what will follow will not be true, although probably terrifyingly exciting! Until you become exhausted from being terrified and you decide to abandon that teacher and ask again, "what's really going on here." You see?

QUESTION: How can it be that one can be really fascinated by evil? If you know it's evil, I mean how can it be fascinating? Why doesn't it become repellent the minute you know what it is always?

Because it always appeals to your need for security. It seduces you by suggesting that what it has to offer you is protection. You see, when you are feeling separated from God, which really means when you are feeling separated from your direct experience of your own integrity, there's only one thing available to you and that is a feeling of vulnerability. That means that the prime thing on your list of things to attend to is defense. And the ego seduces you by providing you with what it calls defenses. And so you play into it because it promises relief. You see?

QUESTION: If you're feeling very frightened it offers you, "if you do this you will feel safe."

ANSWER: Exactly! If someone threatens you, if someone is rude, unkind and behaves in a way that is threatening to you, it is really that one's cry for help—that one is feeling vulnerable and is reaching for help, for safety in the only way that seems reasonable. And it feels reasonable to behave in an offensive way. So really what that one is doing is making a call for love. That one is behaving in a way to try to get an experience of safety. If you see it as an attack then your ego will say, "the response needed here is defense." And you may slam the door in that person's face, you may tell them to shut up, you may punch them in the jaw, you may take any number of defensive actions, when what might really be needed is for you to walk up to that one and put your arms around them and say, "It's okay, you don't need to be upset around me." You see?

So often when children are cantankerous they're really asking for a hug and they don't even know it. But when the mother recognizes that the way they are behaving is not really a call for discipline but a call for love, and provides the love, the behavior ceases because the need is met. You see?

And so, indeed, part of the unhealthy comfort zone that everyone is at the threshold of learning and the change of behavior that is coming lies in the realization that the appropriate response to unbecoming behavior is love rather than defense. That isn't necessarily easy when one has been so conditioned to using defense in order to feel safe. Because in order to love one has to let down the defense or it cannot reach the one being loved. And as long as the conditioning towards defensiveness is still very strong, the learning is that the only appropriate response to attack is love.

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes it is, but I do not know. If I don't see the situation with complete clarity how not sometimes encourage in a child particularly behavior that will not serve them at all if I response with love when they like whack their next door kid on the head with a toy. They think, "wow, if I whack three more kids on the head I'll get a lot of love." I mean it sounds funny but they do.

ANSWER: Again, it's like forgiveness. Forgiveness isn't saying when somebody has whacked you over the head, "thanks, I needed that, I forgive you." One says, "I forgive you and don't do it again." And you love the child by not calling his integrity into question, while at the same time teaching him that it is an inappropriate behavior and not to do it again. You can teach someone what is not appropriate without calling their integrity into question. You can teach something what is appropriate and inspire in them the fact that they have the integrity to recognize the truth of what they are saying. You see?

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have trouble forgiving myself and judging myself for things of the past. I can't get beyond that. What do you have to offer on that?

ANSWER: It all depends on what you're identifying yourself with. And the only two things you have to identify with is either the Voice for Truth or the voice of the ego. Now the fact is that you have forgiven yourself a lot. And it would be well for everyone to learn to look at the donut instead of the hole. It's so easy to look at what one hasn't yet accomplished and treat that as though it were the whole truth about you, when the progress that has been made has in many instances been miraculous and makes the bigger statement about you that is worth paying attention to.

What's the one biggest thing you can't forgive yourself for?

QUESTION: Actions against others.

ANSWER: Actions that you have taken?

QUESTION: Yes, against others.

ANSWER: If you had known better, would you have done better?

QUESTION: No!

ANSWER: That's not true. If you had known better at the time you would have behaved differently. At any given moment you always behave the best you can. At all times you are doing what you believe is the very best thing you could do, as I said earlier, to provide yourself with the sense of safety that you think you need, or that the ego has told you that you need because you are a vulnerable piss-ant mortal. And if you had known better, in other words, if it had been clearer to you that you aren't a no-good piss-ant mortal you would have behaved differently.

Now, maybe you can look at yourself today and say, "there isn't nearly as much about my living that I can't forgive myself for as there was twenty years ago." But there is going to be a point sometime in the near future where you will look back and you will say, "wow, if I had known this then I would have behaved differently. And by contrast I can see that I behaved poorly, poorly in the sense that the behavior I expressed didn't promote the maximal blessing."

Now, we started out the day today talking about the fact that everyone has flaws. And my response was what?

QUESTION: God loves us regardless of our flaws.

ANSWER: But I said, "so what, you're still lovable."

Now, it will help greatly if you can grasp that everything that you did no matter how unloving it was was perfectly understandable under the circumstances. Then you will begin to grasp that there is less that is horrible about you that has to be forgiven.

Again, forgiveness so often is related in everyone's minds as somehow within yourselves becoming equal to whatever degree of horribleness you expressed or that was expressed towards you. The factors are, an act of forgiveness and something horrible needing to be forgiven. When that isn't the arena in which forgiveness occurs and those are not the factors, forgiveness is an inner act that has to do with your arriving at a point where you're saying, "I refuse to let my mind and my emotions be used to create and maintain a state of conflict in me that inhibits me from experiencing my peace." You see?

That has nothing to do with someone here engaging in an act of forgiveness about another thing out here that was horrible. It has to do—for lack of better words—with a decision not to function in a split state of mind. It's the abandoning of a willingness to practice judgment, to be the decider between good and bad and the weigher—the one who weighs the factors—and comes to a judgment. You see? It's abandoning that and it's saying, "no matter what happened I am no longer willing to continue to exist with a state of conflict in me that I am validating and energizing. I am going to choose for my peace." You see? Forgiveness is the withdrawal of judgment, the abandoning of engaging in the practice of judgment.

It doesn't change what apparently was done. And it doesn't change the one to whom it was apparently done. But the real you that is present at this moment changes because you've decided not to practice aggressively judgment. Why do you practice judgment—any of you? The only reason you practice judgment is so that you can get justice. And like I brought out before, the only reason justice is important to you is because you don't know how to heal sin, sickness and death. What that means is then that where the attention needs to be is on healing not on justice. You see?

Where is healing going to occur? Not in the past! And not between actors and actions. It's going to occur within you and it's going to occur when you cease seeking justice and instead you desire to experience healing. Healing is only going to occur where there is peace. And again, that's why we started out this morning talking about your comfort zone, no matter how flawed it might seem to be and no matter how much the definitions of your comfort have been established by the ego. It doesn't matter. Arriving at a place within yourself where there is something in you that you can honor allows you then to abandon the search for justice and experience your peace in which the healing can occur. In the absence of judgment on yourself, presently or in the past, you'll find that the forgiveness, the experience of balance within you will simply emerge as an experience as yours. And you'll see that there's nothing to forgive.

So forgiveness isn't some heroic action that expresses the greatness of your love for something awful, or for someone who did something awful. It's a very simple, in itself, unprofound shift in which you abandon the act of judgment. That's a lot easier to do than what everyone thought forgiveness was all about.

Everyone's on their leading edge, literally everyone is as far forward in terms of their spiritual growth as they can stand to be. And in a way it is like standing at the edge of a cliff and you don't know what's next. And so everyone moves forward gingerly. And they behave where they are standing—I'm going to put it this way—with the least amount of defense that they are able to practice. But they are still practicing defense because until you're awake the feeling of vulnerability is going to be present. Now you don't ask yourself, "well, why am I feeling vulnerable? What did I do wrong? I must be creating this for myself." Because that's nothing but a distraction from the willingness to lean into what is immediately ahead of you, which is the unknown, which is your expansion, which is your enlightenment, which is increased clarity, which is always a bigger experience of being loved and therefore safe.

Forgiveness doesn't exonerate the perpetrator of an evil act. Forgiveness heals the one who saw something less than God appearing there, by dissolving the practice of judgment. You see? Forgiveness is always about the forgiver. I'm sure that in one way or another all of you have had the experience of someone else withdrawing their negative judgment of you. It's a blessing when someone else abandons their quest for justice relative to you. It's always a relief.

So you see, it isn't about you being big enough to be equal to the horribleness of someone else's act so that you can somehow express the fact that you weren't hurt by it.

If your eye be single your body shall be full of light. If you refuse to be in a state of conflict within yourself so that there is a singleness of the experience of yourself and a singleness of intent, no conflict there, indeed you become as a light. And the one that the old concept of forgiveness would have forgiven will be seen by you as someone who never called for judgment. And in the absence of your judgment there will be something there—utter Love.

No matter how hard anyone's leading edge is at this very instant, no matter how hard it is for them, and no matter how awkwardly they are dealing with it, you know what? They're literally at the same spot that everyone else is, everyone else's leading edge. Are you going to look at the half empty glass or the half full glass? Are you going to judge them for their leading edge? Or are you going to be humane enough and compassionate enough to understand that although their issues are different from yours you're not in any better place than they are. And that you're both, or that you are all standing at the threshold of discovery, enlightenment, a clearer experience of love and a more substantial experience of your safety and therefore invulnerability.

And if you find yourself unable to abandon the practice of judgment, if you find judgment, words of judgment, thoughts of judgment running through your mind then I encourage you to ask for help, ask the Holy Spirit. All of you are so surrounded with those who are ready to help you that it is amazing you don't ask for help more than you do—with a belief at least that someone is hearing and responding. But ask for help to not be distracted by your peace by the constant rhetoric of the ego claiming that justice is indeed what is called for and it will help you get it.

Again, it's sort of a matter of choosing your teacher—which voice is going to be your teacher. There's always arrogance in judgment. And the one's practicing judgment are the one's who need healing. And in their healing the world will be healed.

I'll tell you all something else. At any point in your lives the awkward and perhaps unkind and thoughtless things that you have done when you were on your leading edge... (just a moment)

When Paul got distracted with what I was in the midst of saying he lost the train and now he is trying too hard to catch the train again. And so I will slip it in. But we will not pursue the continuation of that sentence right now.

You understand what I have been saying however?

QUESTION: Absolutely. Right on target!

ANSWER: Being on your leading edge no matter how awkwardly you be there is not a cause for self-evaluation. It's the threshold of discovery. It is as though Paul were to walk up to the step here and say, "I'm not standing squarely on both feet. All the weight is on this leg. Is there something in your nature that doesn't want to face life squarely on both feet," you see, and get into an evaluation of how one is standing on the leading edge when the reason for being here is to take the next step. You see? That is what I was about to say when Paul got distracted. How well, or how poorly you are behaving when you're on your leading edge is not what matters. What matters is whether you take the next step. Whether you embrace greater fulfillment. Whether you embrace and make room for revelation, you see.

I could look at you all on your leading edges and I could say this looks like a circus of clowns. There is so little grace to it. Now I didn't just slip one under the door to you so that you could go home and worry about how badly you look like a clown. I simply mention it because whatever degree of awkwardness you're exhibiting is so irrelevant to the fact that you're daring to be on your leading edge and right in front of you, one millimeter in front of you is insight—clarity! And an even greater experience of your innocence. So where is the call for judgment? And really, where is the call for this thing called forgiveness in the sense that forgiveness has been conceived for so long?

One hears of miracles like a mother and a father and a daughter who were in an automobile accident, the result evidently of the carelessness of a young man driving the other vehicle. And in the process of the accident the daughter falls out of the car and the car lands on top of her and she is killed. And the mother is healed of her judgment and forgives this young man and goes so far as to become friends, so as to truly convey to him that he need not judge himself. And one says, "my, that was a forgiveness of something that is almost impossible to forgive." In other words, it was a great forgiveness.

Again, this is using the act of forgiveness and the thing needing to be forgiven, it is utilizing them as the factors involved. And one might say, "I could never do that. That is just something that I could never forgive." But if we become a little more grounded in our consideration and you realize that all the time you are not forgiving you are actively engaged in the practice of judgment, and that you are keeping alive a memory that calls for justice and that this amounts to a ball of conflict within yourself, and then you think about carrying that ball of conflict—an inner war waged within you—for ten years, fifteen years, twenty years, and like an alcoholic whose addicted to the war your life begins to fall apart. Because the hate that you're practicing is unrelenting. There's going to come a point where you're going to say, "this call for justice is too expensive. It's costing me my life. It's costing me my joy. I can't do it anymore."

We talked about failure this morning, because when one comes to that point one can feel like a failure with regard to what as a parent you feel you owe to your daughter, and all kinds of obligations that somehow contribute to or detract from your felt integrity. But you come to that point where the honest fact is you don't have the energy any longer to actively engage in this inner conflict and you give it up—truly give it up. When you do that, where you thought there would just be a void, a humiliating void you find instead love embracing you and filling you, and joy, and that's when the forgiveness has occurred—not of the person who was driving the other car—that's when the withdrawal of judgment has occurred and your capacity to be the presence of love has returned to your life. Certainly it is going to bless the young man who was driving the car. It's also going to bless your whole world because you have ceased claiming the right to maintain a personal vendetta for the purpose of getting justice.

Each one has the experience of love waiting for you when each of you abandons the practice of judgment. You don't have to become equal to a horrible act that calls for forgiveness. What you really have to do is to have enough common sense not to engage in judgment to begin with. And if you have engaged in it and carried it forward pay attention to what it is doing to you. Now it will become easier to let go of it. Because not one of you can tell me that it reflects the Will of God for you to keep yourself in an unmerciful ongoing state of conflict that distracts you from the experience of God's Love for you, because you're so busy keeping on the quest of justice. You see? You can't tell me that. And so now common sense and intelligence says to you, "there's no valid reason for me to do this any longer and I'm going to give it up." That's much easier.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I have a big question and a mundane question. The big question is, this is something that's in the back of my mind a lot: I don't understand why we're here having to go through often times nightmarish things, but I understand I want to Awaken, and you are Awakened and there are people from my perception that are less Awakened than me and maybe there are people beyond you who are more Awakened than you. It just sometimes seems like this big conveyor belt and we all want to Awaken... Okay, once we Awaken then go on to greater levels at one time you said. You've got 2000 years of experience—I don't know if that's the right word or not—but why, what is this all moving towards. And then once God is Awakened and pulled all the parts of Him back then does it all start over. And I don't understand that big picture or if it's understandable or worth thinking about. But I do think about it a lot and I don't know why. I'd love clarity. Why bother to work so hard to Awaken now when I get to that level I'm just going to have to work hard to Awaken to the next level and then does this ever stop? Why can't I just relax and not come down and sit on a bench for three days, even though I like doing it.

ANSWER: I will be glad when I don't have to come here anymore either.

QUESTION: I know you would be. I would be if I was you.

ANSWER: To be Awake does not mean that you have Awakened into another dream from which you will need to Awaken. You see, add infinitum. You know, I could speak to a packed crowd if I would give 12 steps to wake up by. You think that it would be easier for you to wake up if I would tell you what's coming once you're Awake. That is because your perception of existing is one of a linear movement, which is dependable and predictable. I cannot tell you what is coming. Because being Awake is not about a future.

I will do my best to try to put into words here what will answer your question. Because you think linearly, because education was a linear experience, dependable—1st grade, 2nd grade, 3rd grade, 4th grade, etc.—and you could even find out if you talked to the right person what you would be learning in the 10th grade, what would be covered and then in the 1st year of college, etc. Awakening isn't about what's coming. Awakening is about being, which is always a now experience. Waking up is about remembering, but it's not about remembering something from the past. It's about remembering how to be Love.

When you drop a pebble into a pond that is still it creates a ripple that goes out on the surface of the water. And if it met no resistance the ripple would go to infinity on a plane surface. Being Love is like a Movement that moves like a sphere that's getting larger and larger, which if it meets no resistance goes to infinity. What I'm saying is not literal, but figurative.

The Movement of God is Love, which extends at infinitum. The impulse of Love will never arise from you personally, or you individually. The impulse of Love is always God in the act of being Love. And when you're no longer claiming any presence or mind separate from God—in effect when you let that Mind which is God be all there is to you—then you become the experience of God being the impulse of Love. Time and space have nothing to do with anything any longer. And there is nothing linear, nothing predictable. The impulse of Love that finds expression and which is not experienced by you as something you are individually expressing, constitutes an experience of bliss.

Always the impulse of God—and impulse is not the best word because it implies a starting and a stopping of a movement, but it comes close to being as good a word as the word expression of God because there is an authority to the expression that the word impulse implies a little bit better than the word expression—this impulse/expression of Love is Creation. And the Movement of God is perceptible to God as the embodiment of His Will expressed in infinite variety. Being is no longer progressive. And because the impulse of God that constitutes Creation is God in action all of the variety of expression is experienced in a unity, not implying distinct, self-existent presence. God you could say is the conscious experience of being it all. This means that when you are not claiming the right as Paul does from time to time to have your own point of view about things you have available to you the true experience of being One with All That Is even though there is still distinct and identifiable Creation to experience.

What this means is—and it's difficult to translate these things into terms that will not be misleading—what it means is that perhaps it might appear that Paul would be sitting on a chair. But because it's an experience of unity he would experience what the chair was experiencing of Paul sitting on it, as well as having the experience of being Paul being supported by the chair. You see? Or conversely because there is no density to anything, Paul could pass his arm through the arm of the chair, or the two of you could pass through each other and experience the interaction from both standpoints, because there isn't a private experience. In fact, the experience of the two of you passing through each other would not only be experienced by each of you as a total experience of what's happening, but all of the brotherhood not passing through the two of you would experience your experience. What is difficult to communicate in words is that when you are Awake experience is always infinite, even though there is an infinite variety of specific manifestations of this Movement of Love that is Creation. It is far from dull.

And as I have brought out before, all of you value your privacy greatly, but in Awakening you let in, you lose privacy. You don't need it for protection. That gives you a clue as to what Love really is. It's letting in, not just one thing at a time, not just one person at a time. It is actually a matter of abandoning the defense that fools you into believing that you can have a private experience and that everyone else can and is having private experiences also.

The Movement of Creation is not progressive. God isn't practicing at becoming a better Creator. Creation is incredibly flawlessly, perfect and infinite. Again—because there are not good words for this—when you are Awake and claiming no right to have a different perspective from the Father's you will find that you will be experiencing infinity from every possible angle simultaneously and you will not be confused by it.

Now why should you endure three days here?

QUESTION: (He's not using the microphone and I can't hear his comment.)

ANSWER: Or this lifetime, yes. Well, because you don't have any other choice. You're right in the middle of this experience of being Awake and of Reality—you're right in the middle of it. And so every moment is the opportunity to let it in more fully. Because you can't be outside of the Movement of God there is no alternative to the moment you're faced with. And the only thing that can alter your experience of it is your remembering that you are the Presence of Love, which is the absence of defense and remembering it significantly enough for you to let down your guard so that more of it can be experienced and you may come back into your Right Mind, if I may put it that way, where you are having God's experience.

But I will tell you that waking up from here is not level one into level two and then you've got to go to level three and four add infinitum. You either are experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven or Reality as it is or you are not. And there aren't any other choices. That would imply that there are states and stages of being Awake and it would still be a linear process—you're at three, not at two and the next one is four. No!

Again, it all revolves around the real meaning of the word Love. You cannot hear too much about Love. The importance of it is centuries old if we want to speak in linear terms. And I don't care how New Age things become, if it's the truth you're hearing it's going to be talking about the same old thing—Love—and getting over being afraid to be embraced by it and letting it become embodied and finding expression through you right here. Because that Love allowed in and through [you] is what will illuminate Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven, the Movement of God that is the only thing going on no matter how you're currently perceiving it.

We will close the day on that note. And I will consider answering other questions on this topic tomorrow if any of you have questions.

What I want to leave you with today is what has turned out to be the general theme of today and that is that you must find something in yourselves to value—your integrity. And you must honor your comfort zone. You must dare to be grounded and practical in your spirituality, which means letting yourself be more human, which is where real humaneness can be found, because stripped of all of your roles and concepts that which is essentially real remains. And what is there is Love and the capacity to be in the world without defense. Do you see that I have been saying, instead of trying to grow beyond or above or out of this experience, the necessity is to let yourself be more really in it, with less farce, with less that is false.

Again, the most direct route to your divinity is right through the center of your humanity. And that is what the ego would distract you from, with twelve steps to enlightenment or a knowledge of what is to come or in the suggestion that somehow your salvation lies somewhere outside of you and somewhere else than the universe—another dimension, another this, another that. And I promise you that the more people who believe that and reach for what is beyond them the more hellish life will become, because they're not paying attention where Reality is happening. And in their neglected of it they will stub their toes against the Kingdom of Heaven, they will break their legs against the Kingdom of Heaven because they will constantly be acting at odds with what God is being. That's why waking up is simpler than anything anyone is expecting, because the experience awaits you in the unvarnished, unpretentious presence of you that lies underneath everything that you have covered yourself over with in order to appear to be competent, and reputable and full of integrity.

This is so very important, because once you grasp this the influx of insight and clarity and revelation will occur more rapidly, with more grace. And although in the beginning you may feel that because no one else is doing it you're going to look like the odd ball. The fact is that you will appear to be more congruent to everyone else and you will be more obviously in possession of something that is of great value as far as everyone else will be concerned. And you will be the inspiration to them to dare to do this also. And you will not be met by scorn or ridicule or mistreatment.

I look forward to being with you all tomorrow. Thank you.

ANSWER: Good morning.

ALL: Good morning.

ANSWER: We will not waste any time. Who has a question?

QUESTION: Good morning. Mine is kind of a follow up question to the one we finished with last night. And speaking for myself, but I think also for a lot of people on this planet that feel like square pegs in round holes, and I sometimes feel like the whacky aliens on that sitcom on television "Third Rock from the Sun," kind of as an observer here, wondering what it's all about and not fitting in too well, especially with those closest to me, blood relatives, let's say. Let me look at my notes now, because I worded this last night. If there's anything to predestination, or pre-purpose before we come in here I wonder...

ANSWER: There is only one thing that you are predestined to do.

QUESTION: Um huh, that's what I've gotten from the Course.

ANSWER: And that is to be who and what you are without any covering over it. What you are predestined to do is to wake up to your Birthright. What you are predestined to do is to finally stop experiencing any kind of misperception of Reality. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay. And that's what I'm really working hard for the past few years, especially when I've been studying the Course more deeply...

ANSWER: What I want you and everyone else to understand is that if you are having a dream you are having a dream—for a lack of better words—on a grassy knoll in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. If you understand that you will realize that you're already at your destination and that you never left. Another way of putting it would be that you're sitting on a grassy knoll and were at one point, and all of Reality was your experience. And then you had a thought—thoughts are foreign to the Kingdom of Heaven—and you had a thought and it distracted you, it fascinated you. And it is as though you went into a reverie of thinking and you're having a daydream. This is even better an illustration than a night dream where you associate that with being unconscious, because you wake up from a daydream through a simple shift of attention, a shift of attention from whatever you are thinking about to whatever is really going on in your presence which you hadn't been paying attention to. You see?

The Course is a very big book with a lot of words and a lot of ideas expressed and it could therefore seem to imply that waking up is complicated, when it is really a help, a nudge, a subtle push to distract you from your reverie and cause you to bring your focus of attention back to your surroundings. And so the Kingdom of Heaven isn't a long way off and it isn't somewhere else. You've all seen cartoons where the children are in school and they're looking at the teacher and imagining her with horns... or with nothing on... or whatever. And all the time they are having their fantasy about her, who she really is and what her function really is she is engaged in and being. But that is not what they are experiencing. And if they are particularly fascinated with their daydream about her they may start giggling and laughing out loud, you see, completely absorbed emotionally even in that which they have projected onto who she really is. And their projection is false.

So this is very important. If you think everyone in this room is just a body, having started from a sperm and an egg, and as I said yesterday, who will grow and get older and finally die and perhaps suffer along the way, that is the same thing as projecting horns and tails or no clothes onto the teacher in the room. And we talked about forgiveness yesterday, and forgiveness is really the withdrawal of the caricature that we project on each other. You see?

What I mean to convey very simply is that although you may be working hard at waking up don't imagine you are working hard to complete a very long process or trek. Because at the bottom line, if the Course has any benefit at all it will trigger a shift of perception, a shift of your attention. You see? And that's why it's so very important not to imagine that the Kingdom of Heaven is a far-off, because if you think it is somewhere else there will not be that little bit of curiosity that causes you to pay attention to what's right in your face. You see?

Now I interrupted you again. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, I'll modify my question I guess a little bit. So if this only purpose that we have here... I feel that I'm closer to fulfilling mine and I wondered if there was any input along that line? And what is the purpose of continuing once you've fulfilled that purpose? I guess it goes along with why are we here?

ANSWER: Well, very simply, where is this here that you're talking about? You're here because God is being you as His self-expression. Why the Kingdom of Heaven looks like this to you, rather than the Kingdom of Heaven is because there has been a fascination with the creative ways you could imagine it. So we could say you are here where you perceive yourself to be because you're more enamored with your definitions of everything than the capital "M" Meaning that God is expressing in everything. And although it might be interesting and even an exciting experience it's not real. The reason that you can be here in the middle of what you're perceiving is because the divine one that you are is here in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven being what God is expressing.

Now, you are used to thinking in terms of ego concepts. The ego is a sense of one's self that is separate from the whole, separate from Reality. So it feels very small. And it feels vulnerable. And so it experiences the Kingdom of Heaven and all of the Brothers and Sisters as threats to its safety and then it behaves in a manner to establish and preserve its safety so it can have some level of peace.

Now, this has been called self-preservation, the purpose of the ego as it engaged in this, became obvious and definable as self-preservation. And so everyone has a personal sense of purpose that started out as self-preservation. And as egos, ego's sense of selves, worked together and developed skill at self-preservation in a mutual context of friendliness, let us say, many other sense of purpose were developed. It's my purpose to be a comedian. It is my purpose to be a doctor. It is my purpose to be a helper. It is my purpose in life to be the best darn mother that ever existed. It is my purpose in life to save the whales. It is my purpose in life to, etc., etc., etc.

Now, as one experiences triggers that cause the shift of perception that brings one back to the teacher without the horns, or the Kingdom of Heaven without the conflict, something else accompanies it and that is the disappearance of a sense of purpose—the disappearance of a personal, private sense of purpose. And of course, from the ego's standpoint that is utter failure. And so one resists abandoning or letting go of or having taken away from him a personal sense of purpose.

As the words, "Thy will be done" become your theme you begin to find God's reason for expressing Himself as you beginning to register with you. And if you do not resist it and you let it in further and further so that there is less and less of a you present with a personal, private intent of her own, you begin to feel what the Course calls becoming a co-creator with God, because in not holding yourself apart from God's Movement that constitutes your presence you begin to feel Purpose, with a capital "P". In some ways it feels like a great personal loss, except you'll come to realize that whenever you used the word personal it always had reference to an ignorant you—the ego sense of yourself. And so this is why Awakening doesn't happen in a twinkling of an eye, because one doesn't abandon his ego sense or her ego sense of herself quickly. One sort of tests the water of his or her divinity cautiously. You see?

So what is your purpose for being here? Here is really the Kingdom of Heaven. And as a private, separate entity you have no purpose, because in actuality you do not exist as a private, separate entity. But you do exist as the presence of God Individualized. And the presence of God Individualized that you will forever be has Purpose. And for purposes of illustration I'm going to say, your purpose is borrowed from God.

As you yield to the Father's will it will seem as though you are yielding to something other than yourself, something different from you that you will be letting in. But as you let it in you will begin to remember the experience of your Birthright, the experience of being without any misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven. And you will slowly, shall I say, become fascinated with this experience of your Birthright that feels as though it is borrowed from something other than yourself. And as rapidly as you are able to let it in more and more you will find that the experience will seem less and less borrowed. It will be like, "oh, it's just like me. It's just like me. I'm feeling more like myself than I have ever felt in my life." But it won't be this private, separated sense of self, it will be who you divinely are.

And ultimately, when the last vestige of who you thought you were has disappeared the term co-creator with God will become meaningless, because your very presence, your very being will be the embodiment of the words, "Thy will be done." And there won't be anyone there any longer to say, "Thy will be done." Nothing will be said. But if something were said it will be, "My will be done," you see, except it won't be said it will be what is being.

So you start out in your Awakening process by literally and really saying, "Thy will be done." "I need to go to the store, I think. Thy will be done. Is it appropriate?" As I said yesterday, "is it appropriate to get one pound of ground round, or three pounds of ground round," because your desire is to be in the flow of the moment of God. And you know what? As more and more people do this the more and more the world you are perceiving will begin to be illuminated by the presence of God. In other words, it will be more apparent. And it will make it easier for everyone else to begin to do this radical thing—apparently radical thing.

Do you have a "yes, but"?

QUESTION: No I don't have a "yes, but." I just wanted to say, I don't know if some people come in with more ego than others before they are born here. But I feel in a sense I've been lucky, that I've come in with... I've never felt that I had a purpose, so I don't know that I've had to unravel too much in that regard. And more and more I've been asking for Thy will to be done through me. But I'd like a confirmation or not about that ego thing. Do we come in with...

ANSWER: Well, I'm going to say this, comparisons stink! Not only that, they're meaningless, because you could be ninety-nine and ninety-nine one hundreds percent free of the ego and someone else could be only twenty-five percent free of the ego, and that next one percent for you isn't going to be any easier than the next one percent that the one whose only twenty-five percent free is going to open up to. And so I say this so that you might understand that all of you deserve the same degree of compassion. And those of you who feel that you are further ahead need not to feel too good about it, because the better you feel about where you are the less humility there is and humility is the essential element to your moving to that next one percent you see.

QUESTION: I wasn't expressing pride. I was just expressing almost the opposite, that I felt humbled in a sense that I don't have so much to work on as I think a lot of people are struggling with...

ANSWER: Well again, if everybody is already Home, if everyone is already at their destination, everybody has less to work on than they think they do. My point is that comparisons are irrelevant. No matter what each one's leading edge seems to be it is a call for one thing only, Love.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You see, it's like everyone has already graduated, because everyone is already at their destination. But some people say, "but I'm only in the third grade," and maybe you feel like you're in the twelfth grade, but you're all graduates. And so don't become preoccupied with your level of progress, because it's really humorous to us. Because you're here with us and your dream of progress is funny. It's as though Paul were to stand here and say, "I know someday I'll be able to stand up." You see?

If you can pin-point where you are in your progress, you're lost. And depending upon where you feel you are in your progress you will determine for yourself that you either have a lot of work to do or not a lot of work to do, and yet again, no matter where you are that next step in your Awakening is going to be just as difficult as any other's next step. You see?

So again, don't become too enamored of comparisons, where you are in your progress. You see? I understand that there is someone who uses a figure that looks like a hat, and you can figure out where you are on the hat, the highest point on the hat being totally Awakened state. And I guess some people aren't even on the hat yet. And all of this is completely misleading, because everyone is in the only place available to be and that is the Kingdom of Heaven. And everyone is the only thing they can possibly be and that is the direct expression of God. There is nothing, no other choice available unless you resort to your imagination and have a daydream.

QUESTION: Or a nightmare.

ANSWER: It can be a wild daydream. I really do encourage all of you when you use the term dream to associate it with a daydream, like a student looking out the window thinking about fishing instead of paying attention to the teacher. His attention is distracted but he hasn't gone anywhere. And all that is necessary for him to come back to reality is for him to shift his attention, not to a different place but to the place he's in. You see?

This will help you to remember that waking up is uncomplicated and not difficult and it's why the Course calls it a "journey without distance." If you are wondering where you are in your progress then you are conceiving of yourself on a journey with distance.

Now you might say, "why don't those of us who are Awake, seeing you in your reverie, just grab you by the shoulder and shake you Awake so the whole thing would be over? It's so easy." But the thing is that you have the right to give your attention to whatever you want to give your attention to. And if you have for whatever reason chosen to give your attention someplace else, you are the one who must say, "I want to bring my attention back to what's Real." You must arrive at a point where the truth is what you love more than the illusion that you can imagine. And that is what will bring you back out of your reverie.

And we cannot make you love the truth. I'm not talking about the truths in a book. The truth is what's Real. And so you must love what is Real more than what you are capable of imagining. And of course, the key is the word Love. Well, unfortunately when you are imagining yourself as separate your primary purpose is self-defense or self-preservation, it's not love. And love seems to be the opposite to self-preservation, because you cannot be in a state of self-defense and love.

And so a choice has to be made to abandon self-protection for love, which seems risky from the separated standpoint. But remember that you are having this fantasy of separation right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, and you are the Daughter of God, and therefore the fantasy of separation isn't actual and its abandonment in favor of remembering that you are the presence of Love is not a risk. But you've got to find that place in you where Love becomes more important than self-defense. So if you want to know what your purpose is, that is your purpose. And it won't be a temporary purpose, because once you commit to it you will wake up and you will continue to be the presence of that which has commitment to Love, because that is what God is. And that is what God is being right where you are. Love is the purpose of Being, capital "B", God. It therefore, has to be the purpose of your being.

And so as long as you are feeling separated you have to make a choice for Love rather than self-protection, and make commitment to it so that the apparent, the fantasized need for self-protection can disappear, and you can see that the choice and commitment to Love is your very Function, with a capital "F", as the divine expression of God. And so you come Home that way.

So if you want to look for a purpose, don't look for a purpose in the world. Look for your purpose in the Kingdom of Heaven right here, which will not relate to the world's concepts, the general beliefs about what purposes ought to be, and you will become a light in the world that will seem to transform the world. When the child is snapped out of his reverie of horns and tails on his teacher his teacher is transformed. Suddenly she has no tail and no horns, you see. It isn't that a devilish teacher was changed from a devilish teacher into a normal teacher. You see?

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj and Paul.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. First of all I want to tell you thank you for everything you've done for me in my life. I really appreciate it. And I have a question that's hard for me to...

ANSWER: Thank you for not resisting what is constantly being done for you in your life.

QUESTION: You're right. Thank you. Anyway, I have a question that's...

ANSWER: Do you realize that the gratitude really does go in both directions?

QUESTION: Well, I don't know. I don't think I did.

ANSWER: Indeed, as long as you feel separate and don't experience the presence of the Brotherhood we experience loss. It is like you trying to communicate with someone who is on drugs. You experience a loss of communication. You can't reach them. They seem to respond but they are incoherent, what they are saying isn't relevant to what is happening. And so when you let in Love, it is your defense is less and you are more coherent, if I may put it that way. And it is a gift to us, which we are grateful for, because we are experiencing less loss of your presence. You see?

Every little opening that any of you engage in to let in God or to let in Love is experienced by us as your being more present with us right here. And so you would be amazed at how much gratitude and joy goes on each day, except that so often you don't recognize the gratitude that is extended toward you and you think that it was a fluke of some sort that you experienced a blessing. And so you become fearful again cause you still think you're alone and you become a little more incoherent again and we lose you—we lose the connection, you see.

As I said yesterday at the end of the day, there is no privacy in Reality. We all know each other inside and out you might say, all the time. It is an infinite communion. And so it is utterly unnatural for us to experience some of us as out of communication. You see? And so there is a natural joy that we all universally feel as each one of you lets Love in and allows herself to be transformed. It means you're a little more Awake, a little more present with us. I bring this out because you really do all need to know how much you are embraced by all of the Brotherhood/Sisterhood that is Awake. It's a universal embrace. And such intimacy could only seem to be frightening to someone who feels a need for self-protection and a need for privacy in order to maintain it. Love not only counteracts fear but it dissolves fear. And fear is really the only element of unconsciousness that is keeping any of you from perceiving everything as it truly is, as well as all of us that are inseparable from you. Continue.

QUESTION: Thank you. Okay, my question is hard for me to say so I hope I can say the right words. I grew up in Utah, so I grew up as a Mormon and I embraced the religion most of my life. Sometimes I strayed and searched for other things, but for the most part I think I grew up believing it was true, hoping it was true but deep in my heart I would pray continually and all I wanted to know is the truth. I didn't want to be fooled by anything. And sometimes I felt like I was trying to be fooled. Although there are certain things I do believe about it—and a belief and a knowledge I know what you say is the difference. And I feel like I have a certain knowledge that things are true in it, but there are some really big differences between the Course In Miracles and the Mormon religion. But yet Joseph Smith had a vision...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt you. Let us say we could take that spot where you are sitting and draw a circle around it so that the ground and the floor and the seat where you are sitting would be present and then everything outside of that circle would disappear, so that you were sitting there all alone in the middle of the universe, Would you be helpless in terms of Awakening?

QUESTION: I think so.

ANSWER: No you wouldn't. I didn't say we would wipe out your mind or consciousness, your capacity to be aware. And if your capacity to be aware were present, then your capacity to be aware of the truth would be present.

Now, the fact is that no matter what you read, no matter what anyone says, no matter how many inspired statements you hear truth is always a revelation. It is always revealed by the Father to you in the only place available for you to experience it, which is in your awareness, your mind, your capacity to know.

Now, when you went into this little reverie that we've been talking about today, you didn't go into it alone. You have never been left alone because you can't actually have separated yourself. You can't dissociate yourself, you cannot actually become separate from what you divinely are, you can just ignore it and give preference to flights of imagination. Therefore, even if you are ignoring your divine Self in preference for a body of imaginative thoughts, who you divinely are, which is the presence of God is right there and it has been called the Holy Spirit. At the moment of the fall, in Biblical terms, at the moment of the distraction and the beginning of the reverie where your conscious experience of your divine Self seemed to be lost it became the Holy Spirit.

This is very important to understand. I've said it before, the Holy Spirit is your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. You see? Now, it's not really being held in trust, it doesn't need to be held in trust because nothing can happen to it. But it conveys a meaningful thing to put it that way, to say the Holy Spirit is your divinity held in trust while you dally with flights of imagination. Okay?

Therefore, here you are on this little circular piece of ground, floor, seat on which you're sitting and nothing else exists, nothing else is available to you, you can't be lost. However, if you insist on your imagination that you are a finite separate entity you will feel completely that you are lost, until you arrive at a point where you can't take it anymore. And out of the very depths of your being and in spite of your definite sense of separateness you will do this ridiculous thing and you'll say, "Help." It only seems to be ridiculous because you think there really is nothing outside of you. You see? But somewhere from the depths of the Sanity of your Being you will cry out for help and in effect you will embrace more than just yourself.

And your divinity that has been held in trust will seem to penetrate the tinniness that you had limited yourself to quite imaginatively and truth will be revealed. Your Right Mind will begin to infill you and you will begin to remember the truth. Okay?

Now I took a drastic illustration of getting rid of the rest of the world, but let's bring the rest of the world back now. Waking up will still occur in the way I've described, because you can still feel separate, isolated, lonely and vulnerable with the whole world in your presence. If you have read any book and experienced insight where the truth became clearer, I assure you it didn't come from the book. The book may have helped you arrive at a point of less defensiveness, more trust so that your divinity held in trust could penetrate the seeming boundary of your tinniness that you have been maintaining and reveal truth to you. Truth is always and only a revelation. And the revelation of truth will help you see truth wherever it is written.

A Course In Miracles does not bring truth to you, but in a mirrored of ways addresses all different ego levels and constructs in such a way that certain levels of trust can occur within the reader that allows defenses to lower allowing that one's divinity that's held in trust, called the Holy Spirit, to penetrate and be experienced as revelation. If you know that God is the source of the revelation of truth and that it's always a direct experience within you that has nothing to do with anything other than your awareness, your capacity to be aware of truth, then what any book says will never concern you. And you will be able to read with innocent eyes, meaning without defense. And you will recognize truth. And it might be just a gem here or there, and it might be every word of the book. But it is the truth revealed to you before you set eyes on the book that allows you to see the truth that is in the book.

This is important because it is emancipating to you.

QUESTION: What about the rest of the junk, you know there's a lot of stuff there that makes absolutely no sense. And it's taught, it's believed, it's you know relied upon.

ANSWER: Oh, we're getting very broad now.

QUESTION: I know.

ANSWER: Everyone's being taught, blah, blah, blah. And the Catholic Church is doing a disservice to everybody because they keep God at a distance. And we could say that a lot of Course In Miracles teachers are doing a disservice to the Course students because they insist that everybody accept that the world doesn't exist, that it's all an illusion rather than a misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven.

It doesn't matter what they are doing or what is happening to them, because the revelation of truth is something that happens within you and something that happens within them. And if you will attend to that place in you where the revelation occurs and you invite it and nurture the happening of it, again, you will become a light unto the world, not a teacher, but a presence of nondefensiveness that wordlessly inspires others to dare to be nondefensive themselves.

The moment you begin to think what they are doing to them—you know, like maybe you understand it now but what about all those other poor bastards who are being misled—you are abandoning the attentiveness to that place in you where revelation occurs and you will find that you have moved into a realm of justice. And oh, what a cause justice can be, and how completely it can distract you from giving your attention to where revelation can occur in you that will illuminate the world by removing the mustaches and the horns and the tails, etc. from the Kingdom of Heaven.

You let them take care of themselves. Because their salvation lies in their discovery of that place in them where the revelation can occur. And I will tell you something else: No one forced you to come today. Oh, I know that you had a lot of help. But no one could actually make you be where you didn't want to be. That's my point. And so no one is not waking up because somebody kept them from waking up. They are not waking up because they have a high investment in their beliefs, in their ego structures. So they gather together with those who are of like-mind. And so those who like to teach limitation will find in their presence those who are fascinated and committed to limitation and the students will not be there because the teacher is excellent but because the teacher agrees with what they are committed to. Do you see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yes, I do.

ANSWER: So them who are being limited by those will stop being limited only when they become uncomfortable with the limits they've imposed upon themselves and they say, "help." You see?

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. In Matthew 20 there's a story about labors in the vineyard who come at various times of the day and they're all paid the same at the end. Would you talk about that?

ANSWER: It is one of my favorite stories because at the bottom line it refers to coming Home, it refers to waking up. For purposes of illustration let's say that all of you who are aware of the idea of being on your spiritual path are the labors who come to the vineyard early in the day and you seem to be doing it all alone. You don't have huge groups of people with whom you can identify and get support. You hear nothing of your interests and what you are alive to from the media. And nowadays your media brings to your immediate presence information from around the globe, and so the lack of those of a like-mind seem to be global even, not just local. And it makes you feel fewer and smaller.

To the degree that each of you choose for truth and make commitment to finding that place in you where truth is revealed and then persisting in remaining there so that you might at every moment know what is Real and what identifies fulfillment that the Father is being, as each of you do that the density of the, I'm going to say mass commitment to dreams or illusions lessens, the density of it lessens as there are fewer and fewer dreamers the global organization of dreams becomes smaller. And as a result it makes it more difficult for those insisting on dreaming to continue because now their support group is diminishing.

And the simple fact is that the last of the dreamers are going to start their Awakening process at the end of the day. And because there is so little support for dreaming their process "of Awakening" will seem to be minimal. They'll get it just like that! And those who started in the beginning of the day could say, "this isn't fair." And yet those who started at the beginning of the day have by their commitment to being the presence of Love made it easier for everyone else. So those who might think it isn't fair, tuff luck!

Expressions of love are not quantitative. An expression of love compounds itself like compound interest in the bank—where what you put in increases and you take out more than you put in. All expressions of love are compound by nature and become more than that little expression of energy that was put forth. You just can't escape the fact that the expression of love blesses all.

So there is something that isn't brought out in that parable. And that is that the efforts of the workers in the beginning of the day actually will make the end of the day come sooner. In other words, because of the compound nature of the commitment to the expression of love all of those who are sleeping will wake up sooner in the day. And so you could all end up working only half a day, those of you who started at the beginning. Of course, if you grouched the first half of the day... You get the picture. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Warren Hill, from Wrightwood. I'd first like to express my gratitude for the work that Paul and Susan, Chris and Judy have been willing to do, and some of those others that are involved that I don't know and being available for the work with Raj and the benefit that I've experienced in my life.

I have a question concerning terms, and I'm trying to find clarification concerning the perceptual state of mind that you've spoke of, the Right Mind. As I understand it it's guiltless, there's no experience of guilt in that Mind. And you use the term Christ Consciousness, and without being a nit-picker I'm trying to see if I'm understanding your use of that term. Is that where the state of mind from my point of view is willing to be guiltless, and that is that guilt is no longer a matter, forgiveness is complete. And yet the mind is in a perceptual state. Is that Christ Consciousness? As I understand the Christ is was as you expressed it earlier today where my will is currently understood. I'm fully integrated. There is no such thing as another at that point, there is no question asked, there's no thought. But the Christ Consciousness might be a perceptual state, an awareness of that knowing mind.

ANSWER: When it says in Genesis that "God saw all that He had made and behold it was very good." It means that God saw something. God's self-expression is not unknown to God. God's self expression is God's self in action. For mind not to be conscious of something would be for mind to be unconscious. But the infinite Mind that God is, the infinite Intelligence that God is, is conscious of something. And all there is for it to be conscious of is It's own Movement. And you could say that God's ideas are recognizable to God. If you want to call the recognition of Self that is the Movement of Mind that is God, called Creation, if you wish to call that perception then I will agree with what you are saying as you use the word perception.

The Course uses the word perception to identify the fantasy that everyone is engaged in, their daydream, their imaginative distraction. And I am not absolutely strict with the use of the word perception, because all of you must understand that you are going to be experiencing something as you Awaken. It is just that the misperceptions that have been overlaid upon Reality will have vanished, leaving Reality perfectly clear without any distortion applied to it at all. So, the experience of recognition will be uninterrupted. I use the word in most instances I use the word misperception when speaking of what the Course calls perception. And I use the word perception for the undistorted recognition of the Kingdom of Heaven. Because you will arrive at the point where you will not be blocking the experience of God's recognition of what He is being.

The Christ Consciousness could be called that experience of being aware in which there is no assertion of any private bias or any right to have a private biased perception—which would be a misperception of Reality. Does that clarify it for you?

QUESTION: Yes it does. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. It is very important, if you don't understand that the world is not going to disappear, if you don't realize that you're not going to disappear, if you don't realize that the experience of being conscious isn't going to disappear all of you will find the most ingenious things to do on your path of Awakening so as to delay it as long as possible. Because none of you wants to arrive at the point of oblivion

Through the use, through the rational use of the mind, and even through the use of reason you can arrive at a point where you can explain everything away, even the mind that is explaining it away. If you manage to work yourself into that state you will find nothing to trust. You will find no comfort zone. You will find no place from which you can dare to entrust yourself, yield, succumb to anything outside yourself, because in that state you will mightily practice self-preservation, even though you're in a state of complete turmoil.

This is the way the ego works though. This is the way the limited, vulnerable sense of self operates. It is this mode of operating which has bled into the study of the Course, the study of Christianity, the practice of religion. This is why everyone is trying to overcome the world, rise about the world, rise above sex, rise above anything that means anything. And so there are students of the Course who are insisting that the Course wipes out the world, wipes out the body, wipes out every manifestation, every evidence of anything.

And I will tell you that it takes a great leap of faith to step off the edge into an emptiness that you are assured is there. And that is not what the Course teaches, that is the way it is being interpreted because the vantage point from which the study of the Course has begun was one of defensiveness, was one in which the world has already been conceptually split into material and spiritual, good and bad, etc. And for those to whom the getting rid of the world is important, they will perceive the Course as stating that absolutely. When the fact is that if God is All, if God is infinite then All Is God. If something is being experienced, if something is in your face it must be Reality perceived clearly, or in Biblical terms perceived through a glass darkly. But which ever way it is it is Reality of the Kingdom of Heaven that is being experienced.

Now, this doesn't make it easier, but at least your approach is not a conscious attempt to confirm the nonexistence of everything. The reason I say it isn't easier is because you're still faced with having to give up the misperceptions that you are convinced of. And they are perceptions that you have great commitment to because they are a part of yourself preserving motive as a frightened, limited ego sense of self.

So, it does indeed feel as though you are stepping out of the known into the unknown when you genuinely say, “what does this mean? What is the meaning here in this cup? If my husband isn’t a dirty so-and-so, what is he?” If part of your happiness in life is converting dirty old so-and-so’s, then to lose that perception of him is to lose your purpose for being. You see. All of the ways that you see each other and that you see each thing, you see that way because it serves you, in terms of your safety and your self-preservation. And so in the willingness to look at your brother with innocent eyes you must be willing to abandon the one who has been judging and proclaiming guilty and basing your lives on that judgment. You see. In order to see your brother transformed, the seer of your brother has to let herself or himself be transformed, some other function and self-preservation has to be allowed to happen. I am looking at you but not nailing you.

Is there an additional question regarding this?

QUESTION: I’m Ray from Riverside. Why do you think the 12 step programs are an effective means of therapy in many cases?

I would say first of all because essential to the program is a requirement that one acknowledge that there is a God. Without that acknowledgment there will be no further steps. It is helpful because the very first thing that is required is a willingness to acknowledge that you’re not alone, that there is a God, that there is a resource, if you will, beyond your best or anyone’s best judgment, best thinking, best skills, etc.

The dilemma everyone experiences, the suffering of whatever form that everyone experiences arises out of a basic premise that one is alone and able to independently define everything and be responsible for maintaining the definitions. And what happens is that when you attempt to redefine the Kingdom of Heaven, when you attempt to redefine and maintain the definitions of something that’s infinite it becomes overpowering and overburdening and one is constantly in a state of denial of something that is actually unchangeable. So you could say the basic premise is that I am alone and I am responsible for everything and since you can’t be you are constantly engaged in doing the impossible.

What is Real constantly reasserts itself—Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven, the will of the Father—being what is really there constantly conflicts with what one tiny individual wants to try to turn it all into. That conflict is or has been called “the human condition.” And the way out of it is the abandonment of that initial foundational premise that, “I am alone and I am responsible for everything.” And you do that by acknowledging something greater than you and then increasingly practicing reliance upon it. That is the way the misery of trying to maintain a separate selfhood is undone. And that is the way one comes back into their Right Mind. And that is fundamentally why the 12 step program is so helpful to so many.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Since we are all on our leading edge and are basically where we are supposed to be, will you please tell me...

ANSWER: When you say basically where we are supposed to be...

QUESTION: As we're on our path, other than when our ego interferes with out direction, would you please explain to me the need for prayer, the power for prayer. Scripture tells us pray without ceasing that things can change. I'd like that clarified please. Thank you.

ANSWER: Again, prayer, if it is genuine, is the means of reaching out beyond yourself, abandoning pure self-reliance, inviting in that which is greater than you. It is an act of joining rather than an act of maintaining and being separate. It also expresses the common sense we were talking about yesterday, because no matter how confused any of you might be by your fantasies, you know that it is illegitimate for you to be experiencing pain. You know it's not natural. You don't have to be spiritually educated. You don't have to be advanced. You know that it's not legitimate and that you have a right to be free of it. That's what's so wonderful about humanity, because when it's not overridden it's humane.

So, it also happens that whatever pain any of you are experiencing at anytime it is the dissonance that occurs when you are aggressively trying to do the impossible. When you are trying to redefine the Kingdom of Heaven and usurp the authorship of God, you might say, you are attempting to do the impossible. And it hurts. You're going against the grain. You're a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync. So the moment you're in touch with your humanity enough to recognize that it's illegitimate, it's unreasonable for you to be suffering and you couple that with reaching beyond your own best judgments, your own best concepts, your own skill, you are actively withdrawing commitment to the redefinitions you've been giving to the Kingdom of Heaven.—which is what has caused the pain.

Pray without ceasing. “God, you don't mean... you mean I don't get any relief from praying?” Well, if you stop thinking of prayer as a petition and asking of God for a favor and you see prayer as an act of glorifying God, now why would you want relief from being in an active state of conscious appreciation? Because that's what glorifying God is. When you look at your neighbor or your mate or the flowers in your garden or the sky or the stars and you are filled with awe and gratitude, that's prayer.

And everyone has for the most part forgotten how to do that. You watch the news too much. What I mean is you watch the news and you don't realize the degree to which they are providing you with the definitions of what's going on in your community. You say, “that's pretty bad,” and you forget to look with appreciation. And when appreciation sinks out of sight then you look with fear.

And you don't know if you want to get on the elevator with "them!" And Carl Saggin has told you that the world is indeed, with all of his degrees and intelligence and so on, has told you that the world is just a physical event, a fluke. So what is there to glory in? You see? And so you stop, you forget to glorify God. You forget to engage in active appreciation.

The reason you do is because you have accepted certain definitions. And the one definition that has been totally abandoned is that this is the Kingdom of Heaven and everything that exists is the direct and current expression of a living God that is pure Love, and therefore the nature of all that He is being is utter and pure harmony. Such harmony that you will find when you are Awake you will be able to hear the beauty—you will be able to hear the beauty. And what you hear will be beautiful.

Now, I've said before that Love is the willingness to recognize that which is Real in each and everything. That's prayer. Prayer is the willingness to recognize that which is Real, divinely Real in each and everything. So, praying without ceasing would be to have the experience of seeing that which is Real in each and everything unceasingly. Do you have another preference? I'm not asking you specifically.

It's not only your Birthright not to be experiencing aches and pains or fear or terminal disease, it's your Birthright to be experiencing what is really there where the pain seems to be aggressively present, not only to see what is really there but to hear its beauty.

I want to come back to this idea of the world not being real and the body not being real. If it is all illusion, flat out illusion, and when you Awaken it will not exist then you have no bases for asking for healing of it. Because healing of it would constitute its disappearance. And so when I healed the man with the withered arm, his arm should have disappeared instead of whole like the other. You see? If it's all illusion then there's no need for prayer. And I will tell you that the only alternative you would have left to Awakening would be to be forced in it through excruciating suffering. Doesn't that sound a little bit like the voice of the devil? But it's true. And it's important not to get sidetracked from glorifying God. And you only have one place in which to glorify God and it's right where you are, and it's with your house plants and your windows and the colors and your relationships. You see?

It would be foolish to love an illusion wouldn't it? Metaphysically speaking, you all would say that you could comprehend the concept that cancer was an illusion and you wouldn't want to love it. Well, few of you are so inconsistent in your logic and thinking that you would say, "well, cancer is an illusion and I am not going to love it. And I'm beginning to understand that the world is an illusion and I'm going to love it." No one is going to be that inconsistent, you see. So if you're going to call the world an illusion you're going to have to stop loving it. You're going to have to stop loving yourself, your body.

What is the absence of love? Like what is the absence of light? The absence of light is not another presence, but it's called darkness. The absence of love is not another presence, but it's called hate. So if you're not going to love it, you're going to be denying it—that's hate. And you're going to be indulging in this impossible thing called denying the Presence of God and it's going to hurt.

So let's remain clear, prayer is a valid activity to engage in. And it is the means by which you wash the scales from your eyes that have been blinding you to reality right here. Love is the willingness to recognize what is Real in each and everything. That's prayer! That's your function! That is what will transform the world. And to do it without ceasing is to abandon some so-called right you think you have to have a different point of view about it all.

We will break for lunch.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

ANSWER: Good afternoon. When we raise hands this time I will select the person to whom the microphone will go, but from that point on for the rest of the day whoever has the microphone will pass the microphone to the one whose hand is raised that they choose to hand it to.

QUESTION: Well I had a different question yesterday, Raj, but you've answered most of it. But I had a question about prosperity. It's an ongoing subject. I've been a true student for many years in the Course In Miracles and I still struggle with issues of money. And I'd just like to know how I can get out of my own way cause I know there's no lack in limitation and truth.

ANSWER: There's a very simple principle, if you will. You always have exactly as much as you will allow yourself to have in spite of the fact that it's the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. So the gift of All is being made to you always. So instead of trying to create abundance you need to find a way to let it in. It's there and it's yours already. So let your prayer be, "Father help me to receive all that you are giving me."

Now there is another important thing to understand about abundance and that is that abundance doesn't have to be accumulated—stored up for a rainy day. True abundance is always having what is needed when it is needed. It is not having more than is needed when it is needed. If you understand that being, Being is always the Movement of fulfillment happening, then you will only ever pay attention to the moment you're in and the needs of that moment with an expectation of seeing those needs met simultaneously with their arising in your experience. What you want is not to amass a fortune, but to have the ongoing fluid experience of not having lack. And so if you need a newspaper, your abundance will appear as perhaps a dollar and a quarter. And thirty minutes later it may appear as the exact amount needed for some other item. And tomorrow when your car dies the hundred and fifty or two thousand dollars that is needed to repair it, you see. Abundance is always having what is equal to the identification of fulfillment in the moment you're in.

Abundance then is not the amount of money you have, but the ongoing experience of total freedom to be and do what needs to be done. You see? Let that percolate.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I wanted to ask why there's so much confusion about sex on our planet. Why there's so much shame and just sort of energy wasted censoring it, combating it, whatever.

ANSWER: Blame it all on Queen Victoria. (Much laughter)

QUESTION: I thought so. So better than a very serious bird and bees lecture I guess I'm wondering besides procreation what is the purpose of sex? How can it best be used to serve the purpose of Oneness? That's my question.

ANSWER: Say it... fulfillment.

QUESTION: Fulfillment.

ANSWER: Yes. Would you care to define the word "sex" as you are using it?

QUESTION: Uh oh! Gee, I was hoping you were going to do that. (Laughter) Do I have to? Joining with another in physical... Oh there is help coming from places... (People were making comments) People are prompting me, I'm in real trouble... I can't even say what sex means. So, no I guess it's just joining with other people for the purpose of physical pleasure or to share, exchange—I'm getting in really big trouble here. Thanks a lot.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: Okay, see that's why I asked this question I obviously need help to define this.

ANSWER: Enough!

QUESTION: Okay, thank you.

ANSWER: Where is your common sense? You can come up with all kinds of definitions and explanations of why! But it's the explanations that have created the guilt. How can I put it other than to say that it is a very fundamental way of embodying and expressing love. Unfortunately, because the sexual act is considered to be equal to the "original sin" guilt is inexorably partnered with it. A touch, a caress, a hug, they are always to express caring, love and the worst word of all intimacy. The worst word, because in order to be intimate one really has to become defenseless.

Now, it is an unfortunate thing that spiritual teachers have suggested that sexual energy depletes one's capacity to grow spiritually and that therefore a spiritual seeker must be celibate. Well, if that's true, then it tells you all where you are. And that's enough to make you guilty if you think you ought to be on your spiritual path and doing everything you ought to progress in that direction. But I will tell you something, what will move you forward on your spiritual path more rapidly than anything else is the practice of becoming defenseless and the practice of extending love.

You see, the concept that we are all just physical organisms of the sort that Darwin described, then a sexual relationship is nothing more than an instinct for what? Survival of the species! Oh, this sounds a little bit like the ego and its need to survive. And so if that is the frame work in which everything is going to be interpreted then sex is a very base, physical, animal activity, having nothing to do with intelligence or consciousness or higher consciousness or anything, it is just a reproductive instinct that happens mechanically because survival isn't inevitable—survival existence is not eternal. You see?

The fact is that being Awake is the most intimate experience of all. Because it is the experience of not experiencing any boundaries between yourself and All That Is. And I will tell you that that intimate experience feels like something. It not only sounds like something, as I said earlier, you not only can hear the harmony you can feel, exquisitely feel the meaning of every aspect of every Individuality and everything that the Father is infinitely being. Thank God, when you're Awake there is no such thing as guilt to be felt.

Now, if indeed you are all divine beings, then your function is to embody and express the Love that the Father is being. That means extending it, embracing your brothers and sisters with Love without defense, which means intimately. If this is your function, then it is part of your integrity—the integrity we started speaking yesterday morning about. And so every expression of Love is divine. And if every expression of Love were expressed with love rather than being used as efforts to control or manipulate, the joy in the mutual sharing would naturally be associated with whatever might come of it, let us say if there were a child. And one could truly understand what it means when one says, “this child came out of joy.”

But sex is not, its purpose is not exclusively to generate offspring for the survival of the species. It is the opportunity to be present with another without defenses—like Paul is being with me right now, and like we are being with all of you right now. This is an act of Love that we are all involved in at this very moment. It is not a better act of Love than a hug, or a caress, or a gentle smile, or intercourse. It is just one of them. It really is important for everybody to more easily honor the expression of love sexually.

Now, there is much that is called love that is not love, as I said a moment ago. It is manipulation, attempts to control, the wife having the headache because she's mad at her husband and wants to make him sorry for what he did, and so she withholds intimacy to try to control him, or any of the number of scenarios. What I need to say here is that I am not giving carte blanche to bed-hopping with every Tom, Dick, Harry, Henrietta and Mary, you see, because love is not casual. And so it will always find expression in a way that empowers and substantiates the integrity of all involved. It's never usury, it's never abusive. When sex is seen as impulsive because it is a survival trait, then it can become abusive and it can be justified as a thoughtless random act as with the dogs and the cats. But that isn't what love is and that isn't what sex is, because you are not an animal. You are the Son of God, you see.

I cannot too strongly encourage all of you to let your intimacy increase and to let it be a time in which you are willing to recognize that which is Real in your partner and in yourself. "Well," somebody says, "if I were really going to be Christ-like I wouldn't engage in sex because Jesus didn't." Bullshit!

I will set the record straight. It is so important for you all to understand that holy doesn't mean unlike everything you're familiar with. Holy means whole. Whole means Real. Whole means grounded. Whole means rooted in your humanity. How is it that all of you can manage to recognize real love when you see it? Because of what you are humanly, which is divine. You see?

The ego can use anything to create guilt. What you want to do is to bring love into every aspect of your daily lives, and not reserve it for Heaven. And when you do that. Earth will begin to register with you as Heaven.

Does it matter who or what the object of your love is? How could it? Is not everything deserving of love? Is not everyone deserving of love? This is important also, else you will have certain things with whom or with which it's not appropriate for you to be defenseless and therefore intimate with.

Love is never exclusive. And where the opportunity for it to be expressed presents itself, thank your lucky stars. I am not saying wherever the opportunity for sexual intercourse occurs take advantage of it. I said, wherever the opportunity for love presents itself take advantage of it. And if it's really love it will find expression that will be appropriate under the circumstances, not having anything to do with right or wrong, moral or immoral, etc. But it's like when you go to a restaurant you eat a meal, you don't try to check out a book. You do that at a library, not because checking out a book is right or wrong or even the meal is right or wrong, but under the circumstances you do what is appropriate—what fits. You see?

Oh, you could have asked me what's the purpose of cooking. It's the opportunity to express and embody love. Everything is the opportunity to express and embody love. You could say, "well, something's wrong here because I just enjoy cooking too much. I think about it all the time. When I get up in the morning I'm already thinking about what I'm going to cook for dinner." You see? (Much laughter)

What you don't want to do is hurt people! What you don't want to do is hurt yourself! What you don't want to do is to cause pain or experience pain! What you don't want to do is to misperceive and misjudge! But don't want not to love! And don't justify not loving for any reason! Stop doing the things that hurt! You see? That's where the attention needs to be.

And if you look out at your world and you see love being expressed in a way that you can't conceive yourself expressing it, well at that very moment choose to embody and express love by refraining from judging what you're seeing. Be grateful that you are seeing love being embodied and expressed rather than seeing another knifing or wounding or beating or harsh words or hurtful actions. It will light up your world. That's the end of the answer. Do you have a "yes, but"?

QUESTION: No, no but. No, I mean I have a butt. I mean a yes, butt, but not a "yes, but." (Laughter) No! No!

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I came out the other end of the tunnel.

ANSWER: We had a birth.

QUESTION: We had a birth. But I'm in real new territory.

ANSWER: And so the only thing confronting you is not only the opportunity but the requirement to pay attention with innocence.

QUESTION: That was the next birthing process I thought perhaps I was going to undergo. Having been sort of spit out the other end of the tunnel and finding myself in a new territory, you told me to pay attention when I was in crisis on the production. And I thought you had meant pay attention because the show needed attention more than I did. And you said, "no, that's not what I mean, pay attention to the show." And I was so over wrought at the time I spoke with you that I didn't exactly hear it.

So what I did was, when I felt the fear well up as I sat on the edge of the bed, I sort of nestled into it and I paid attention to the fear and the elements of the fear. And as I did that the healing team you had sent to me, I could feel the presence of the healing team. I got up and I moved around the set and the show and I watched with interest, with lightness, and with a growing joy the whole idea of me being dissolved right before my eyes. And I watched my credibility as a production manager unjustifiably be dissolved. And I laughed.

I didn't always laugh, because there were times at which I went and stated my truth and moved back from the situation and said, "no farther." And this was fine. But what happened through this thing was my joy increased, I danced, I was sung to, I quit the show, I left the show, I came home. And I came home with joy and a whole lot of nothing, a lot of nothing behind me and a lot of nothing ahead of me, very grateful for the freedom.

And yet what I will ask you in the last vision I had in which I was dancing with my arms out stretched to Heaven and it was as though I was looking at this through the glass darkly, what the meaning of A) the new territory is and B) the glass darkly?

ANSWER: No, I won't tell you anything about the new territory.

QUESTION: No? I knew you were going to say that.

ANSWER: It is for you to discover.

QUESTION: Yeah.

ANSWER: You are safe.

QUESTION: Yes, I feel safe and this is too stupid for words. I don't know whether it's trust or stupidity.

ANSWER: You see, trusting is like a canoe letting its shape be what it is. Too deep? Trusting is not doubting that the way things are is perfect for the function of the fulfillment of your being. The canoe doesn't doubt its shape. And its shape allows its function to occur perfectly.

What you want is something that will allow you to feel a certain degree of control. But the shape of a canoe has to yield to the environment that it is in. And its shape allows that to happen perfectly. You see? Its environment is water. It does this without requiring an understanding of it all. This is what can seem to be a little scary about yielding to the will of the Father, because ahead of time you don't know what the will of the Father is and so it takes trust. It takes trust for Paul to come to a gathering and sit down without any agenda. But in doing that and trusting the way things work when he isn't trying to be in charge the Movement of God, the Movement of fulfillment occurs. And there is an experience of blessing for everyone including Paul, including me, including all of us who watch as your light glimmers a little brighter, you see, and you're a little bit more with us even if you aren't seeing it as clearly as we are.

And so you must dare to let yourself be in this new place without being in control. And I will tell you that having a concept of what is going to happen is an element of control. You want an assurance that will allow you to trust. And I'm saying that your curiosity is your best ally at the moment. Just pay attention to watch how everything perfectly works and configures in a way that identifies your fulfillment.

QUESTION: I think you must know that I feel that way, that I am curious about what happens and I'm not afraid.

ANSWER: Yes, I just don't want you to try to get out of this not-knowing place too fast. Ultimately, you must learn how to forever remain in the not-knowing place.

QUESTION: It's curiously free?

ANSWER: It is wonderfully free. And you are not unconscious anymore than Paul is unconscious right now. When you stay in the place where tiny little you doesn't know what is going to happen, what happens the Movement of God will happen and you will be fully conscious of it but you will not be able to take any credit for it and yet you will know that you were inseparable from it. And that will be a taste of what it's like to be Awake. You see?

The problem is that all of you from time to time will dare to trust and there will be a remarkable breakthrough, and you will find yourself knowing new things. And you say, "Ah, this is my new understanding!" And you jump out of the not-knowing place and you grab on to the new understanding and you work it to death, instead of experiencing the knowing, experiencing the capital "H" Happening that happened because you were trusting and continuing to trust and letting what happened be replaced by what is happening, being replaced by what is happening, being replaced by what is happening, being replaced by what is happening. You see?

QUESTION: Can I push it a bit further?

ANSWER: You may.

QUESTION: When I called you and you told me to pay attention, well what did you tell me to pay attention to? Because I don't remember.

ANSWER: I told you to pay attention in so many words to what was in your face—the production.

QUESTION: I got it! Okay, I got that, I saw it. Did I? Did I do right? I mean did I get it?

ANSWER: You did, yes!

QUESTION: Thank you! And was the pattern that I had broken...

ANSWER: Was the what?

QUESTION: Was the pattern that I had emerged through, the threshold that I emerged through...

ANSWER: I'm going to interrupt, because this is an example of what I was speaking about yesterday when I said that if you dare to be present with your job that it wouldn't necessarily mean that you would be stuck there forever because you weren't suffering from it. Okay. Daring to withdraw judgment and be present with what is happening allows the Movement of your fulfillment to occur with grace...

QUESTION: And joy.

ANSWER: ...and joy, and freedom, which will seem insane because you're not in charge. And your great need will be to get charge again, because that's the responsible thing to do, you see. And the lesson is to learn to stay in that place where you're not in charge so the Movement can continue. You see?

QUESTION: The specific recurring threshold through which I passed I sense is the injustice against which I had no defenses—which you spoke to me about in an afternoon gathering and I had forgotten what that was too until I heard it—was that the specific pattern or breakthrough that I made?

Essentially healing?

ANSWER: Yes the question for justice evaporated. Yes.

QUESTION: Great! Thank you. Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. This next answer is not going to be short.

And so we will take a break.

QUESTION: Okay, do we do it when we come back?

ANSWER: You may put the microphone on your seat and when we come back you will hand it to the next person who is going to have a long answer.

ANSWER: It is a(?) thing. Someone mentioned at the break that they didn't want to be the one to get a long answer. Connie is afraid that she will not pass the microphone to the person who is supposed to get a long answer. And Paul is afraid that I am going to give a long answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, I don't know quite how to put this question and I'll give a part B in case the answer's not long enough.

ANSWER: No, it's supposed to be a long answer not a long question.

QUESTION: Oh dear. Okay. I'm dealing with a physical condition and maybe a nervous condition. And I'm working to do my part in healing it and let doctors do the other part. And it's working absolutely miserable, I think. And I keep getting tangled up with which part is mine and which part is theirs. And I know there's a conscious volitional part in it and I know it gets tied up with a self-destruct somehow and some kind of unwillingness. And I really don't know. Um, I'm mixed up. I don't know how to sort out my role in it so that... I love to fix things—I have a feeling this is in here somewhere too. And as you can see I've been working on it now for several years. I think it's getting worse.

ANSWER: Well, very simply your perfection is a gift, a gift inseparable from the Movement of God being Himself/Herself right there where you are. Therefore, it is absolutely essential for you to abandon the idea that you have some part in this other than the willingness to stand in receipt of the gift. As long as you are trying to play a part you are entering into a pseudo role of authorship along with the Father. I say pseudo because you on your own can not have a position of authority.

I've used this example before, but back in the forties and fifties there was a little gadget in the novelty stores. It was a little black box. And on the top of the little black box there was a switch. And when you turned the switch on a little trap door came open and a hand came out and turned the switch off and popped back into the box. The whole purpose of this box was to turn itself off. Now this (he pauses for one person who is laughing) this is a perfect example of the right use of will. The only right use of will is the decision not to employ will. "Thy will, not mine be done."

So all the time that you are attempting to play a positive role in your healing, you are attempting to express some authority on your behalf, instead of saying, “I will not enter into this process from the standpoint of my present frame of reference other than to say, ‘God, Thy will be done.’”

Your body has the intent to identify the presence of your individuality perfectly. And that intent was established by the Father in the Movement of His self-expression that all of us experience as you. And when you withdraw personal intents of your own, the Father’s will, the intent of your body, its reason for being can, I’m going to say, assert itself. And its asserting its function will be identified as healing for all practical purposes because its intent is to identify the presence of your individuality flawlessly, perfectly.

When you are attempting to be causative and God is being causative, it is as though mixed messages are being put into the air. And you experience it as, for lack of better words, a confused nervous system. It’s time to get out of the way. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you very much. I didn’t know if I should ask that question about sexuality or not. You can ask Raj if he wants to answer it.

ANSWER: I am Raj. And I do indeed want you to bring it up.

QUESTION: Okay, great. Because I was raised to believe that very spiritual types like Christ were like completely realized beings and both half’s of their personalities were completely developed—both the male and the female. And that we incarnate alternately as males and females in order to develop one side and the other, but that it’s a split. And a completely evolved person is completely both. And being completely both in all complete, completely like that, there’s no need for sex either to complete themselves nor do they have needs or anything cause they’re all complete. And therefore, Christ didn’t bother with sex he was busy teaching or something. (Laughter) You know, I don’t get the details, but I have noticed that some very evolved, I’d call them people I’ve met, you can’t really tell if you’re talking to a man or a woman, because both there feminine side is very strong in them, and their masculine side, however you see it is very strong in them. And so the way that I would identify a man or a woman don’t show. So go with my question about that.

ANSWER: The realm of the ego is a realm of getting. The realm, we’ll say, as fully realized conscious being is a realm of giving. As we said earlier, prayer is praising God constantly by acknowledging that which is Real in each and everything thing. That is giving. When you look at your world, you do not look at it to see what you can get, you do not look at it to get data for your self-protection, you look at to acknowledge it. You see?

Now, love from the ego’s frame of reference as we talked about is always a means of getting, getting completion, getting control, getting even. One who is Awake, One who is remembering to be the presence of Love is not engaged in getting in any aspect relative to his world or her world, but is involved in acknowledging, giving recognition.

Now why, no matter how Awake I might be would I not bother with the opportunity to acknowledge the significance and the meaningfulness of that which is Real in each and everything I see? You see? But it is not engaged in in order to fulfill myself. And God saw everything that he had made and behold it was verily God. You see? Acknowledgment, recognition, you see, that is the Movement of Being that is embodied or expressed in every individualized aspect of the expression of God, you see. So it is your function to give acknowledgment, to recognize God in each and everything. And in that practice you remember who you Are. And who you Are is the Movement of God, I'm going to say what you Are is the Movement of God in the act of recognizing Himself, not only that it is Himself but that it is Meaningful—in other words, it was very good. You see? There is joy in acknowledging and recognizing what is Real. That is Love. And all forms of expression fulfill purpose.

Now, what happens when you come into the experience of your wholeness, in other words, where the masculine and feminine qualities merge and blend into a wholeness. What happens is that the compulsive behavior associated with the partial experience dissolves. And so one does not express himself/herself compulsively anymore to get, like an addiction being met. It's a gift. It's a gift. The Movement of God is a gift. And God is the recipient you could say. And the recognition, God's recognition of the Movement of God's being is Creation.

Without meaning to be sacrilegious, you could say that Creation is an eternal orgasm. It is an eternal and infinite experience of ultimate and beautiful meaning. Not one aspect of which goes unnoticed by any aspect of the infinity of Creation. All of it because there is nothing to distract one from the recognition of what is Real in all of Creation. So one does not grow beyond, I'm going to say "the need to embody and express love," because one wakes up into the fact that such embodying and expressing is the function of being itself.

The kind of teaching that you had heard and just expressed is exactly what becomes confusing to everyone when it comes to their relationships with each other, and when it comes to experiencing what they call their sexuality, causing grief around it and guilt and self-depreciation. Again, love is what is present when defenses are gone. It is what spontaneously is or happens when defenses, when self-protection are abandoned. It is the joy of being. And there are so many ways to express it.

I'm glad you asked the question.

QUESTION: If I could ask another piece? Does one grow beyond the need for marriage, or the desire for it or something?

ANSWER: Oh yes, yes. Because if you are already absolutely joined in full conscious experience, in the full spectrum of joining with every single member of the Brotherhood of man—let's put it that way, the Son's and Daughter's of God—why would you select one out of the whole? That would constitute a special relationship. When the fact is that you're already in full communion with that one. You see what I mean? When you are Awake there's not one experience that you could have that I would not be aware of, nor is there one experience I am having that you would not be aware of. There would be no need for us to select each other out of all of the Daughter's and Son's of God to relate to each other. In effect, it would have to constitute somehow excluding to some degree everyone else so that we could have a unique experience. You see?

So yes, there will be no giving in marriage that occurs, because unity, union will be the conscious experience of being. It's far more profound than anything you can imagine at this point. It is what all of you are actually afraid of and it is what your acts of self-protection protect you from.

QUESTION: I feel there's no end to this topic, so I think I'd better stop.

ANSWER: We have covered it sufficiently for this time.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you. I seem to have chosen my experience to be one in which I appear to work with feeling in the darkness. In trying to grow I decided to ask to become more consciously aware of my guides. And there upon found myself getting in trouble with my supervisors at work. I don't know what I am or am not doing. I need guidance there.

PAUL: I'm sorry this is Paul, and I did not hear everything that you said. And my confusion about what you said is getting in the way of my hearing his response to you. So could you say it one more time?

QUESTION: Okay. It's been my experience from as long as I can remember, to have always known things I don't know why I know them. To do things which other people call me weird for, and the ego makes me hurt. With a feeling it is love that initiates it and brings around the results. It is a total lack of fear of going into someone else's darkness and fears that I do what I do. I want to grow and in that growing I asked to become more consciously aware of my guides. And then found myself, having surrounded myself with people that are not in agreement with my way of doing things, being told literally not to speak or touch to other people. And I need to find a way of expressing this that does not offend people that are not where I'm at.

ANSWER: I understand. First of all you have been different since you were a child. What has been important to others has not been important to you. What has distracted others has not distracted you. And although you have felt like a fish out of water you have also known that you are right on the beam. You could not explain to anyone else and you could not explain it to yourself. And not having the explanation that you could defend yourself with you have felt uncomfortable.

Well, I'm here to tell you that you don't have to have an explanation, and you don't have to feel bad. And you can—I'm going to put it this way—you can dare to align yourself with and rest with that part of you that knows you're right on the beam.

I will tell you this, although it may feel awkward at times, what might have seemed to be stupid devotion to being on the beam has been right on target. And it is—for lack of better words—maturing you so that the gift that you have to give can blossom fully.

Now, you know what? Love always meets you right where you are. And the love that comes through you always meets others right where they are. And what I encourage you to do is to listen for how this love can be expressed so that it does not raise animosity or misunderstanding. If you know that something that you are guided to do is likely to raise dust, don't just do it. Ask for guidance, object to your guidance that this is likely to create flax, and is this the way it needs to be done.

This is very important when it comes to listening to guidance, because in the process of getting guidance you are not to overthrow your common sense. You are not to violate your comfort zone—the same things we were talking about yesterday. Guidance will always move you beyond your comfort zone because your comfort zone is too limited. But you're not to violate the comfort zone without asking further when what is given is uncomfortable, so that the specific guidance can be given that will reduce the discomfort because there's more clarity until you are finally able to do what the guidance has said because you're no longer uncomfortable and in doing it you will not be violating your current sense or your current integrity.

Paul does not do everything I say. Some things he is just stubborn about. But some things he doesn't do because it's not understandable. It goes too far beyond his comfort zone. And so he expresses what is making him uncomfortable. The best way I can put it is, that I will say something to him that goes beyond his comfort zone and my saying it uncovers specific belief structures that are limiting him that he experiences as specific discomforts and he'll say, "Well, what about this?" And I'll say, "Well, here's what about this." And he may say, "I don't get it. You're going to have to tell me more." And so I tell him more, and he says, "Oh, I get it. But what about this?" And we walk through all the "yes, buts" until they're not there. And there is peace within him because "he understands." What I have said is appropriate to do is not uncovering limiting belief structures that he didn't even know were there. And once he is experiencing his peace about it, then he takes the step that I have indicated is appropriate, and there is no repercussions from it because he wasn't going against his integrity. You see?

So I'm going to say challenge the guidance with the doubts that your guidance brings up in you, or the impracticality that seems obvious to you that is inherent in the guidance. Counter the guidance with that so that that may be dealt with and you come to a place of evenness about it within yourself. Then when you act upon it there will be no repercussions.

It's very important, each of you will walk into the Kingdom of Heaven, so to speak, on your own two feet. You will not ride in on the shoulders of one who is Awake. Okay? And in order for you to walk in on your own two feet you are going to have to address the beliefs that are binding you as they are brought to the surface as a result of your being loved by one who is Awake who is your guide. And your guide is a light who will lead you a step at a time, but it will be a step beyond your comfort zone. And when that happens you work with your guide to become clear about why it's reasonable to do this absurd thing, you see, until what made it absurd to you no longer makes it absurd because you've become clearer and you've grown, and then you take the step.

Blind obedience to guidance will never be allowed. Briefly I will share with you that a number of years ago in one of the gatherings a young priest was sitting about four feet to my left and he asked me some questions. And for Paul it was a very intimate communication that he was privy to. And during the course of the communication there was discussion about my identity as Jesus. And somewhere during the course of that conversation Paul said to himself, "My God, it really is Jesus." And when that happened he slipped into automatic, based upon his earlier preconceptions about me and he became absolutely obedient to me.

Now because this happened I had to set up a circumstance that would uncover to him the impracticality of this because I could not allow it to continue. And so I set up a situation which he obediently followed and the situation with my guidance became more and more impossible for him. And he obediently did what I said. And he got more and more frustrated, because everything I told him in actuality led to a dead-end. And yet I continued to lead him further into this blind alley, so to speak, until finally one day in pure frustration and some anger he said to me, "Will you continue to talk to me if I refuse to have anything to do with this any further?" And I said to him, "Of course, I've been waiting for you to say that."

And then I explained to him what happened in that gathering, because he could see it. And he could also see that his blind obedience to me had constantly overridden his inner feeling of what was right. And yet because of his concept of who Jesus was he had insisted on being obedient even though he was uncomfortable. And he said to me, "why didn't you just tell me I would have stopped." And I said, "yes, most obediently you would have stopped." He had to stop for his reasons, you see, out of whatever his present sense of his integrity was, not because I with all of my integrity had taught him to do it or told him to do it. You see? Your guidance will promote your clarity but will not allow you to sacrifice your integrity. And blind obedience has nothing to do with the experience of and the purpose of guidance. You see?

I'm very glad you asked the question, because you're not the only one who needed to know the answer.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: This is a continuation of the last question, because when you brought up the don't necessarily be obedient to your guidance. What happened to me was what you were saying earlier to God, let Thy will be done. I find there's a part of me that doesn't want to be obedient to that. I just think... I don't know, something about it, even though I know that to Awaken all those wonderful things will happen. I felt good that you said don't be obedient to guidance. But then my mind was going, "but ah ha, they'll get you later on when you're Awakened, cause you're going to have to be obedient to God one hundred percent. And when God says, "everybody has to wear orange," everybody's going to have to wear orange." I don't know. That's the first part of my question. I don't want to have that feeling. But I know that I'm angry, and I don't want to be. And then a part of me goes, "of course I want to be." That's where I am.

ANSWER: I could say don't do what you don't feel like doing. But the truer statement is you won't do what you don't feel like doing. And that's okay. Until you feel like doing it you won't do it. And I will not fault you on that, your guide will not fault you on that, the Father will not fault you on that. But when do feel like it what it's all about will not be foreign to you because we have had an association. So enjoy your daydream until it's no longer enjoyable. It's not wrong to be experiencing a fascination with an illusion. The Father will not punish you for it because the illusion is punishment enough. (Laughter)

To indulge in an illusion is not a disobedience to God. It is something each one of you is quite capable of doing. It's within the realm of, what I'm going to call, acceptable possibilities of a divine being. I'm going to put it this way: Right now you are aware of three-dimensions: Line, plane and space. And you are experiencing everything from the level of the third-dimension. You are, for lack of better words, fourth-dimensional being. And fourth-dimensional beings—which is not a proper word—but fourth-dimensional beings have the capacity to experience reality which is four-dimensional from the level of the third-dimension. You also have the capacity to experience it from the second level or the first level. And each level involves more extreme limit. And the perception of the Kingdom of Heaven that is experienced from each of those levels is increasingly weird. Okay? And learning to grasp it and cope with it as well as who you appear to be to yourself from within each of those frames of reference can be interesting?

Imagine a fourth-dimensional mother whose kids are getting on her nerves, we'll say. And she says, "Oh, kids go out and play in the third-dimension for awhile.

What I'm meaning to convey here is that the experience you are having does not constitute your engaging in anything that you need to feel guilty for. It's just that from within a lesser level of the four-dimensions you experience yourself in a way that guilt is inseparable from—that's all. But the guilt isn't laid upon you from the level of Reality. It's being laid upon you by the limits of the level of perception you're employing.

Now you're welcome to play in the third-dimension for as long as you like. However, that level is not your Home. It is therefore, not normal or natural to you. And so all of the time that you are insisting upon having a limited experience of infinite being you're going to get feedback, your divine Sanity, with a capital "S", is going to constantly convey to you that this is not your abiding place even though you have chosen to abide there for awhile. It is this Sanity that says to you "this is not normal," is felt by you as the simple experience of an absence of normalcy.

Literally this dissonance, this uneasiness that you experience is simply the reminder. It is the experience of the call Home, you see. But if you stay there for an extended period of time, "I'm being an aspect of these three-dimensions"—if you stay there for an extended period of time, what happens is that as you feel isolated and separate, which is an intriguingly new experience, not natural to you in your normal state, you begin to feel vulnerable, the call for self-protection comes into play and the dissonance in the background that's the call Home, the beacon Home becomes the threat, you see. It becomes perceived as a threat rather than the way Home. And it becomes the thing you protect yourself against. And you forget. You forget until this Sanity that you cannot abandon or block out finally registers with you in a way that triggers an unwillingness to no longer suffer the dissonance of this level of perceiving Reality.

So, I am not here to say you have to wake up. I am here and your guide is here to be present when you say in whatever inner way you say it, "I'm not enjoying this as much as I used to." So that at that moment, when like the Prodigal Son, there is an urge within you not to have to exist this way anymore, so that when that urge is present in you and there is an openness to something more we can speak to you and say, "This way, this way, this way." But the motivation, the motive for returning has to occur in you first before you'll even listen, you see.

Now, you're not doing something wrong. But what you're doing is unnatural. Okay? When you're ready to have a new experience we're here.

So, enjoy not being obedient for a little longer. And then when you're ready not to enjoy not being obedient, it will not be a matter of having to become obedient, it will really be a matter of your joy at having a friend who can help you move out of a way of being that's uncomfortable. But that friend will always honor your integrity in a matter that will not allow you to further abandon it by being blindly obedient. I didn't say not be obedient, I said don't be blindly obedient. In the process of your coming Home you must come all the way with an uninterrupted sense of your integrity. And that's what we started out with yesterday morning. You must start where you are, no matter how confused you are or how flawed your perceptions are, you must start with whatever shred of integrity still is present in you and let that be illuminated into its fullness as rapidly as you will allow it to be so that when you come back into your Right Mind you will not say, "I don't deserve to be here," you see, "because I got in on the shoulders of somebody else."

So, you have no justification for kicking yourself around the block or demeaning yourself, because at the moment you're not particularly interested in putting forth whatever amount of energy you think it's going to take to listen to guidance so that you can wake up and have something that you don't know you even want yet. You see? Okay!

Guilt maybe what the ego employs to keep you confused. But guilt is not something that the Father employs or the Holy Spirit employs or anyone who is Awake employs because it is obvious to them that you doing anything wrong. And there is no consequence divinely speaking to what you're engaged in. And we know that the moment you have the slightest interest you will be able to hear what you're willing to hear. You see?

Now I must add that one never moves into the third-dimensional frame of reference, no one ever moves into an imaginative illusory state alone. There have to be two or more who agree to the characteristics of the illusion. And as more and more join it seems to substantiate the actuality of the illusion as well as its reality. And we spoke this morning about the workers in the vineyard who come in the morning and those who come in the afternoon. As more and more opt for abandoning the illusion there are fewer and fewer present reinforcing the illusion. So there is a point, if you were a holdout until the bitter end, there is a point at which it would become exceedingly difficult to maintain the illusion, because there would only be one other supporting it with you. You see?

So in spite of any insistence you have at delaying waking up you're going to find yourself wanting to. And no one will have to force it. No one needs to force it.

QUESTION: Thank you, that's very good. I have one more little thing for you to debunk and then I'll come in the House, I'll come Home. This other thing is, I don't know where I picked this up, I guess the secular world it would be "waiting for the other shoe to drop," from spiritual stuff I've gotten, "God only gives you so much that you can handle now." And it's almost like, okay...

ANSWER: No, you only let in as much as you can dare to handle, which really means you only let in as much as you can dare to let in without losing your sense of identity, your current sense of identity. God is never withholding anything.

QUESTION: I guess I'm interpreting that in the negative way, which is almost like, "okay, I've got a good job, I've got a good relationship, therefore God is going to fling cancer at me so I can deal with that and then I will Awaken." I know that sounds crazy. But it's almost like I leave seminars and then I'm like open, I'm flying and my neighbor will come by and say something and I'll go, "Oh," contract.

ANSWER: The parable of the Prodigal Son is wonderful, because if you remember the Father never left home. The Father let the Son go. He didn't chase after him trying to coerce him into coming back. In effect, the Father engaged in nothing unusual about His own activity until news came that the Son was on his way back, and then the Father went out to meet him.

God is Love. God is not wrathful. God is not jealous. God is conscious of the truth about you—the unchanging truth about you. And if you are having a fanciful, imaginative perception of Reality and the Kingdom of Heaven and the life of the divine one that you Are, okay! It isn't changing in any way Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven or what you Are. So there is no call for anything other than Love, you see, from the Father.

You will never be punished by God. You will seem to experience punishment, or what you could call punishment from believing that the three-dimensional frame of reference is the totality of existence. Because fourth-dimensional Reality will continue to function on a fourth-dimensional basis, which cannot be grasped from within the third-dimensional level, and thus you will constantly find yourself stubbing your toe against what is happening fourth-dimensionally but you were not perceiving the totality of. And this is part of the discomfort that occurs, you see. But it is not dished out by God. It is just behavior on your part that is based upon ignorance of how things work and coming up face to face with the way things work. Sooner or later you will stop resenting the impact—if I may put it that way—and you'll begin to recognize that it's a wake up call, rather than something to defend yourself against. You see?

I've mention this before, I've mentioned it outside: You're familiar with the picture of Jesus standing at the door, it is an illustration of the statement, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Okay? You on the inside, not you, but everyone on the inside experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven that this dwelling is in as just the world, immediately get on the phone and call the police to get rid of the intruder because you perceive threat, you see, in a divine event, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

So when you are stubbing your toe against the world and saying that you are having a problem that you need the help of metaphysics to resolve and get rid of, what you really needing is a willingness to look at this a different way. You might even consider answering the door, or looking through the peep hole, you see. But until you're ready to do that, it's all right. The Presence of Love, the Presence of God, the Movement of Reality will continue in it's loving and divinely perfect action to be what's going on, until it finally occurs to you that you're stubbing your toe against it because you're not in harmony with it is your ally, rather than something to get rid of through the use of more and more powerful spiritual truths.

The God of the Ten Commandments is not God. God is Love. It is the ego that would have you be afraid of God and His wrath. Walking through the fear of God—walking through your fears about God—will be essential to your waking up. And I am here to say that God is Love doing nothing to generate fear of any kind, not misunderstanding or misperceiving you in any way, and therefore not judging you except in the giving of the acknowledgment of what is Real right where you are. “This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.” And this is true of everyone.

This is a wonderful thought for me to leave you with for today. And we will resume tomorrow morning at 9:30. Thank you for your question.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question has evolved over the last couple of days. Many of the questions that have been asked have not really pertained to me, but the answers have. Does that makes sense? I've listened and I've done a lot of writing because often times things don't seem real to me until I see them in black and white. And I've gone over the notes that I've made. I may kind of wander here a little bit. I also tend to be an analyzer from way back and I take situations in my life and I analyze them to pieces. And over the last few months I've analyzed situations, I've found peace of mind and then boom it's gone.

And I had a situation last night where I was with a group of friends that I've had for years, and I looked at them and I thought to myself, “you know, I love you and I bless you, but I don't really like you.” And I'm feeling a lot of sadness. And I realized that I'm at my leading edge in this situation. And I'm ready to move on, but there's still a sadness and there's some pain.

And a lot of things are going really well for me in my life and I tend to feel guilty because it's too easy sometimes. And of course, that was resolved for me because I've had some challenges put into my life by the Universe so that my sense of guilt will go away. (Raj and others chuckled) And I would like to... I guess my question is how can I look at this mishmash of confusion differently, and how can I regain my peace of mind. I've asked several times to see things differently and a lot of answers have come to me, but at this point my confusion is manifesting in a pain in my chest that won't go away. And at one point I analyzed the situation to be, okay I'm willing to let down the walls and be love, but it seems that as soon as I let down the walls my ego throws another one up.

ANSWER: Sound familiar to anyone else? (Much laughter) Indeed, analysis, reason, these things can help bring you to a place where you are experiencing peace. But peace that you have reasoned your way into is not the peace you're looking for. It's the peace wherein you can feel safe enough to dare to yield into the unknown, to yield into something beyond what you can fabricate through the use of your mind. That peace is a place where you can dare to abandon thinking, even if it's only for ten or fifteen or twenty minutes. But in that place, in that silence is where, if you are paying attention, you can begin to feel Love. When I say that I do not mean that you can feel your capacity to feel loving. It is the place where you can discover that you are embraced by Love, which you will recognized to be what has been meant by the words, the "Father's Love." The words aren't as important as the experience.

When you experience that Love and you realize that you are still just this puny, piss-ant mortal that sat down to be still, what it does is it changes the way you think and feel about yourself. Because it becomes obvious to you almost immediately that you didn't have to change in order to be Loved, that you are lovable just the way you are as you sit there. Well, this is peace, this experience of Love that you are embraced by, this is the peace that you have been looking for. And because it's a peace you didn't create, a peace that is obviously a gift, you see, you will find yourself realizing that it must have been present always. And where you had been striving to be worthy, or to become equal to whatever it took to be loved by God...

PAUL: I'm sorry, this is me Paul, I just lost it.

ANSWER: The point is that because this love has always been embracing you and you are not experiencing it because of any striving that you have personally engaged in, it means that you must not be as guilty as you thought for anything that you thought you were guilty of. Because a love as pure as the love you are embraced by demonstrates to you your innocence. The experience of being Loved by God discloses to you that you are worthy of such profound Love. And in the presence of that Love it becomes clear to you that you are innocent, that there is something utterly pure about you. And in that experience a shift of self-perception has occurred, it has been revealed. And it gives you a new basis from which to be in the world. Now it may only last for ten or fifteen minutes and then when you open your eyes up and it's time to cook dinner you will slip back into your old habits of doing it the way you've always done it. But the experience will not disappear from your mind.

There is another thing that happens at the same time that a shift of self-perception occurs and that is that it becomes obvious to you, but it's like another revelation, that this is true of everyone else, that everyone else is innocent and everyone else is embraced in this active presence of Love, which is the Father's Love.

Now, because this is not a common experience for you, what you would call a normal experience for you, it is well to nurture having the experience by taking the time frequently to become still. What's really important to know is that intellectual processes are unnecessary to the arriving at that experience. And so what's called for in order to have the experience is not greater intellectual skill.

Indeed, as growth occurs, as shifts of perception occur, things that before had seemed most meaningful which weren't really meaningful, will become obvious to you as less and less meaningful. And sometimes this does involve associates or activities, and yes, sometimes it feels like a loss. What I encourage you to do is to sort of look up instead of just the immediate circle of friends or the immediate activity or role or job, and sort of take in the horizon so that you will have the opportunity to observe those things or those individuals coming into your experience who are of a similar mind.

This is not a matter of arrogance or being hoity-toity or snobbish, it is a natural gravitation that occurs. It does not mean you're better than the ones you are departing from and they are not worse than you. But so much of what everyone does is based upon what they ought to do or what they should do, instead of the common sense that we've been talking about for the last two days, the recognition of what fits and what doesn't, what works and what doesn't. Taking a snack lunch in a tune box into a library to eat lunch and listen to music doesn't fit. But eating lunch and listening to music is not wrong and reading in the quiet of a library is not wrong—they don't fit. And so there's no judgment involved here. It's just paying attention to what fits, what works.

The sadness is because you see a gradual moving apart occurring and you are still eyes down seeing only the immediate circumstance of your life. And so if you will recognize that change is occurring, shift is occurring and you will look up you will find that not only are you moving out of this arena but you are moving into an arena which is already full of others and other things which stand in support of where you now find yourself. And it is a Movement of Love. It is not a movement of denial of them, and embrace of them, you see.

In spite of the sadness, gently let the shift happen. And try not to evaluate it, just be present with it and pay attention. These kinds of shifts happen infrequently where perhaps groups of friends seem to pass out of your experience, or a change of job occurs, because they represent what you would call thresholds. You don't go over thresholds or change-lines everyday. You move across and you find yourself in a new [way of] being. And there is a time that you will find yourself in that area where you are paying attention and where the shift become consolidated, fully embodied in you. And then you will find yourself at another change-line, and another shift. It's natural. And it can occur gracefully.

However, for those who are at an analytical nature, who want to understand every bit of what is happening, you will find less grace in the shift. The need for analysis and arriving at conclusions about what is happening is an expression of lack of trust. "Well, I'm not sure if this is really meant to be. I'm not sure whether I'm even thinking straight." You see, that is doubt.

I am encouraging you not to practice doubt. Because what is happening to you is unfoldment. It is not the evidence of willfulness. It is not that you because of your analysis have decided these friends are no longer good for you, or you are better than they are and therefore you are going to do this or that or the other thing. You can trust this Movement that you're not responsible for.

Paul used to be analytical. Life is much richer for him, much fuller, much happier and there is much less fear on an ongoing basis since he has stopped trying to understand everything and has listened so that he might know the truth, so that truth known can register [with him in a way that so that] conclusions can come to through clear, correct, logical thinking, you see.

You see there's a sense of loss associated with giving up the skill of analysis, especially if the expert practice of that skill has contributed to your feeling that you are a creditable and a worthwhile human being, because you are having to abandon something that gave you a sense of worth. And so there's a sadness when that is released in favor of what I need to know. up to the right conclusion causes you to be in a place where you are no longer getting reinforcement of your worth. At least that's what you think. That's what anyone thinks who is an analyzer, a heavy-duty, highly addicted thinker, you see.

"Well, who are you, or who is Paul if he isn't thinking anymore and doing it well?" Well, interestingly enough you become the place where God shines through, not where you shine through, not where Paul shines through. That's about the worst thing that can happen to an ego. But it is where peace and joy come forth without the presence of fear goading one into taking things into his or her own hands, you see.

When shift is occurring it always feels confusing. Now that can cause you to do one of two things, either you vigorously attempt to get mental control of the situation or an understanding of the situation, or you become like a brand new baby who with great curiosity and delight pay attention to see what the new is that is not completely consistent with the old. Mind you I said with delight and curiosity. If fear comes into play you will resort to intellectual processes instead of with delight and curiosity, paying attention. In other words, observing with innocent or fresh eyes, not clouded by past memories and definitions.

Everyone at one time or another and especially those who we'll say are consciously on their spiritual path are desiring to wake up, are desiring to have the influx of enlightenment, but when it is realized that it means letting go of old definitions and being in a new way, being with innocence, actually changing... "oh, I didn't bargain for that," you see, "I thought I would still be able to be in control like I used to be, but with more spiritual motives," you see, instead of more trust.

So what I'm telling you is that what's happening is wonderful. And that what's called for is not greater understanding of what's happening but more trust. That what is happening is divinely oriented? An expectation of God knows what. And I mean that in the most positive way, you see. Trust. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I'm so delighted to be here, it's a consistent delight that I've been feeling since you showed up finally for me. And I've got a lot of question and like the lady the other day, I wish I could kidnap you for a day. But I won't make that suggestion. So anyway, what's upper most for me this weekend, I've been giving a lot of thought about the things that you've been saying about thinking. And it's occurred to me before I heard you say this that we're not thinking if we're giving our attention to whatever is in front of us. And awareness seems to expand in the moment. In other words, ideas or insights occur in the moment of what is going on. This is the way I'm experiencing this. And in the moment it's timeless. Here in this moment is no time. If I'm seeing this correctly.

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: Now if that in fact "be here now, this is the Kingdom of God now with my full attention present I am not in time, which is the past or the future, the opportunity to be here now forever as I am in my body is possible as it fulfills purpose." What I'm trying to say is I'm approaching the "golden years" of my life span as we understand it, which means I'm going to be facing the wall of hypnosis of "well, the medical bulletins as we die on the installment plan, as our body begins to deteriorate on the installment plan I guess... I know the relationship between thinking and fear and all that accompanies all that. And what I guess I'm trying to say here or understand with you is I read in one of the "Conversations" that we can be here for a hundred years, two hundred years...

ANSWER: ...a thousand years...

QUESTION: A thousand years...?

ANSWER: Or until you simply wish to be somewhere else.

QUESTION: In other words, by choice, not by sin, suffering, death and all that.

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: So I remember in the scriptures you said, I think that it was recorded that you said, someone asked you something about death and you said, “that there would be those present who would not taste the second death.” I don’t know if this was related to. In other words, I was to understand there were those there present who would still be around until you would come to them again. At that time I understood it was in the cloud and the great Cecil B. DeMille production.

ANSWER: The first death was birth. The first death was your sudden ignorance of what you divinely are, at which point in your limited perception you took yourself to be only what you see and call your body. The second death is when you wake up.

QUESTION: Ohhhhh, I never... That makes sense.

ANSWER: Of course,

QUESTION: Okay, okay, so the second death is a living experience of translation.

ANSWER: The only experience, no matter what you call it, the only experience you ever have available to you is a living experience.

QUESTION: Right, because we’re here consciously...

ANSWER: Even in the belief of death and passing on, as friends have done, as relatives have done, from their standpoint there was never an interruption of living, of being conscious and of being themselves and of being identifiable. In other words, having what you would call a body. So no matter how many times you think you may have been born and died you have never had anything but a living experience—an experience of being. Continue.

QUESTION: So what I want to clarify with you today is I don’t want to walk that road of watching myself deteriorate and go through that process, that illusion called sin, suffering and physical death.

ANSWER: Then you only have one solution or one way in which to do that.

QUESTION: And that’s to be fully here in the present moment.

ANSWER: Doing what?

QUESTION: Not thinking and...

ANSWER: Being willing...

QUESTION: Being willing...

ANSWER: To recognize...

QUESTION: To recognize...

ANSWER: That which is Real in each and everything. (They say this together.) Because that is the act of Love. That is the fulfilling of your function. That is your nature. That is your being. And Love embodied because you are not claiming a right to express anything else is healing. Now healing simply means the uncovering, the bring into view that which has always been present—what has really always been present—right here, right here, right here, you see.

I'm going to address your specific question. The answer is yes. If you learn to be present in the moment with innocence—meaning that you are not applying your own personal definitions to everything and you are willing to recognize what is divinely present in each and everything, you will not have any further experience of death. You will not experience any further disease. And any disease that you might currently be experiencing will disappear in the uncovering to you of what is divinely real right where you are.

QUESTION: Yahoo! Now may I ask...

Now before you continue so that this doesn't sound so wonderful that it's impossible to achieve, or so that you don't all make it highly complex, remember the day dream we were talking about yesterday. Because a daydream is a fantasy.....

.....in his reverie and his distraction behaves in a way that's inconsistent with what's really going on. And what's really going on can at times interfere with his reverie. But in order for him to become free of whatever the details are of his reverie, all he has to do is shift his attention back to the obvious, to what is really going on. And this is not an intellectual feat. It's a matter of what you're valuing. So waking up is a shifting of what you value. It's not about being something better. And so there's no work involved. It's a matter of changing what you value.

And what we've been talking about for the last two days, coming to a point where you are valuing your capacity to Love more than you value the right you think you have to get even, to be angry, to feel jealousy, to hate and the list goes on and on. Every time you think you have a right to engage in these activities you are valuing them and you are in a reverie, a negative reverie. [Love] binds you to Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven, right here, a Son or a Daughter of God that you are right now and most of all God, which is the substance and activity of all of this as well as you.

You know, you can't love in the past and you can't love in the future, can you? The only place that you can feel love is in the instant of conscious awareness you're having. And the only place you can extend it, embody it is in the now, which is timeless. And so if you engage in love you are in perfect alignment with the only moment there is, if I may put it that way, you see. That puts you out of time. And how difficult is it to do that. You don't need a degree. You don't need any mechanical objects. You don't need money. You simply have to say, "I value expressing Love more than anything else." Well, you say, "that's very magnanimous and wonderful but there are so few people who do it it must really be hard or everyone would be doing it. I don't know if I can do it."

So let's make it a little more relevant. You know the question is, "what's in it for me?" This really makes it more relevant, "what's in it for me." Well what's in it for you is that peace is yours, the absence of gut wrenching knots of fear. The uninterrupted experience of joy. I know joy doesn't motivate you as much as not experiencing pain. So we'll talk about that. It will be the absence of pain. It will be the absence of all kinds of hurting. On that basis I think you all could muster up enough energy to dare to at least begin to choose for Love more consistently at every moment.

You had something you wanted to say?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: You were in a reverie.

QUESTION: I know. No I thought you were talking about...

ANSWER: Come back, come back.

QUESTION: I thought you were addressing someone up near the front of the row. Okay, yes this leads me to my next part. Since our last conversation where you helped me look at my weight problem in relationship to my attitude.

ANSWER: Let's just say looking at your current weight.

QUESTION: Looking at my current weight, okay.

ANSWER: It's not a problem.

QUESTION: Right. But I want to tell you what I've experienced since our last... I've experienced a dissolving of a very deep core of insecurity. I can't explain that but I have a feeling that that's related to it. It seems like something's happening...

ANSWER: No, you know that's related to it.

QUESTION: Right.

ANSWER: Be simple, genuine, without unnecessary words like "I think." You see, you know it relates.

QUESTION: Yes, right. I wasn't looking for it to manifest like this, but this is what I have been experiencing.

ANSWER: Indeed.

QUESTION: There is a deep core. It seems to be... it's lightening up, not seems, it is. And my question...

ANSWER: You see, the reason I mentioned it is in everyone's hesitancy to be too direct or be adamant everybody couches what they're saying in some...

QUESTION: I don't want to say the wrong thing to you, Raj.

ANSWER: ...in nebulous terms and as a result you confuse yourselves.

QUESTION: This is ironic because with everyone else I don't have a problem, but talking to you I blow it the most. Which is silliness because I'm talking to you all the time.

ANSWER: Go ahead and blow it.

QUESTION: Okay, It's silliness because I'm talking to you all the time anyway you know what I'm saying. So that part of my being which I felt was feeling very insecure all these years is dissolving. And I'm feeling more confidence about everything, and less fear about everything. And I want people to really hear that your presence with us now is a healing experience for all of us. It's like psychic surgery is going on. You're doing something to all of us.

ANSWER: I'm just loving you.

QUESTION: I know, but I just want to say one quick thing before you say that. Two thousand years ago you said that no one comes to you unless the Father draws them. In other words, you're the Shepherd, we're the flock. Buddha has his flock and so forth. But we're drawn to you because the Father drew us to you. And I want to know if this is currently happening now in this time, that you are here audibly speaking to us, where we can hear you in our dream state?

ANSWER: The reason you're hearing me is because you're already at Home. And you are not as insistent upon your The only way you could be called to come to hear me, or called to hear me is because hearing the Father's voice is your function. And so you are bound by the very nature of your being to come back into your Right Mind. You now want to know what it was that was great that happening two thousand years ago, it wasn't that I came it was that there were those who were stirring in their dreams and were open to the experience of the revelation of truth. You see everybody leaves themselves out of it.

And that's what has made the [account] of Jesus down through the years become something extraordinarily special. And so it has come to be believed that Jesus is the only begotten Son of the Father. You poor souls. But the meaning really is that Jesus was begotten only of the Father and not of the ego or anything else, just as you are begotten only of the Father and not anything else. We're all in the same boat, that's why we're brothers and sisters, if you will.

So it wasn't that I came, that isn't what was great, that isn't what was miraculous. It was that there were those in their dream that were stirring—their sleep was restless, if you will. You think I'm holding a gathering, we are being together, we have gathered together. And we are being, if I may put it this way, as much of what the Father is as we can allow to happen at this moment. We're all being the divine ones that we are together, you see.

QUESTION: In our present state with you, with our full attention, hearing the Father speak to us through you is where we will see the Kingdom of Heaven unfold, moment by moment in this present moment. And as we do this then we will see the fourth-dimension start to appear.

ANSWER: You will see all of what the Kingdom of Heaven is become visible to you. That is a better way of putting it, because you think of the dimensions as levels with boundaries and again you can conceive of it as something, the boundaries as something hard to move over. But if you begin to embrace the idea that all of what the Kingdom of Heaven is present and functioning fully right here, right now, your resistance to it will diminish. And when I say your resistance to it will diminish I mean that the definitions that you have given to everything—and those definitions are very different from what the Kingdom of Heaven is—will get less of your attention. You will stop reinforcing them. And in that way the veil will lift.

If there were a curtain hanging around us, around this church, and we could only see the boundaries of the property of the church, the veil lifting would be like the curtain lifting and you could see the whole view, because it was present the whole time. So instead of thinking of moving into the fourth-dimension I would encourage you to think in terms of having all of what the Kingdom of Heaven is become visible to you right here, which will include everything you are seeing plus much more. And again, the key to having that experience lies in the practice of Love, the being of Love, the valuing of that more than self-defense in all of its forms.

QUESTION: And not taking thought of about anything we see.

ANSWER: As long as you are taking thought you can't be listening. You create static or interference as it were in your mind that absolutely distracts you. That is the reverie is, is all the thinking and the uses you put thinking to in order to protect yourself ultimately. It's in the silence that the fullness can register with you.

QUESTION: So then its trusting God to take us on a marvelous, never ending adventure that we know...

ANSWER: Yes. Oh yes. Oh yes, that is what the Movement of Creation is.

QUESTION: So it's like falling back into His arms and trust.

ANSWER: But I want to add this little slant to it. It's not just trusting God to take you on a divine adventure, it's trusting the essential nature of everything that already exists. I say that because your sense of what God is still at a distance from you. So you think God will take us like a tour guide to Israel to some marvelous adventure. If you will begin to trust the essential nature of everything that already in you, through you, around you, in and through everything around you. You see, that will bring God in a more omnipresent way into your awareness. And so where is the divine adventure going to lead you? For right now the divine adventure is going to lead you to an enhanced experience of everything you're already experiencing.

QUESTION: Like everything becomes like a warm fuzzy, kind of?

ANSWER: You could say that yes, plus much more. That's why it's so important to take the time to be curious to wonder what is really here in the pedal of the rose, willing to see what is Real in each and everything because it's each and everything that's going to be transformed as a result of the veil lifting or the scales falling from your eyes, with innocence. You see what I'm saying? Without preconceptions and without using memory of things that have happened in the past, to provide you with some sense of security so that you have the nerve to stand at the edge and jump.

QUESTION: Yes, I have the nerve to ask you this. I'm willing.

ANSWER: I am saying do it without role model. Do it without any personal necessity to do it well. Do you see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yes, because of the love of what I'm feeling about it to do it with.

ANSWER: Do it because Love is your function and joy is your experience. And do it because you don't want to hurt anymore.

We will take a break.

QUESTION: Since I've been spiritually stirring, I have difficulty praying because I don't know how to pray anymore. I get confused with, you know in the Garden of Gethsemane when Jesus said, "not my will, but Your will be done." So sometimes when I'm staying in the present but at the same time of activities of living you sometimes have to make plans or have directions, so since I'm not necessarily at a spiritual level yet where I'm fully aware of the mind of God I feel funny asking God to help me towards a certain goal because I don't know if it's the will of God, or if it's my will. And I don't know if it makes any difference if I ask God to bless somebody...

ANSWER: Oh, I'm going to interrupt you right there. You're still going to have to ask the rest of the question. Does it make a difference whether you ask God to bless someone? It does! Never doubt it for a moment. For you to ask God to bless someone your expression of love. And when you are expressing love you are aligning yourself with the Father's Will. And at the risk of there being misunderstanding, there is power in that. At the risk of there being misunderstanding I will say there is power in that. But the power is the Father's power. When you express love by caring enough to ask the Father to bless someone you are bringing yourself into alignment with the will of God.

You know, people have referred to my presence two thousand years ago as "God with us," meaning, God with mankind, present with mankind. And every time you express Love to your brother it is "God with us," with mankind. It let's God in. That's why it is powerful. It isn't the power that you can exercise. But you see, the ego will never ask for your brother to be blessed. And so when you say, "Father will you bless so-and-so," you may know that it is that part of you that is divine that is uttering that prayer. So yes, indeed it makes a difference. Continue.

QUESTION: Well, so for instance if we don't know the will of God or the Mind of God and I practice love to my spiritual consciousness as much as possible, at the same time in planning different activities, necessary kind of practical activities in my life I wonder how important it is that the activity be the will of God or that I just practice the will of God in the activity? Do you understand that?

ANSWER: Yes. It's always important for it to be the will of God because that's where the harmony of the activity and the fulfillment of the activity will unfold most gracefully. So be real practical and say, "Father we need to arrange for a function that's going to be held on the 17th, will you help me to know how to arrange for it appropriately. And if it's not appropriate will you find a way to let me know," you see. And if you don't get a totally clear answer, where you are completely at rest, then periodically ask again.

Now, it's very important not to abandon your common sense as, I'm going to say as you progress on your spiritual path. And so you start with where you are. You start with whatever your current common sense is. You know you're going to have to fly somewhere, your common sense says make the reservation where you can get the best price, don't wait till the last minute. So until you get guidance to the contrary use your common sense. Because your common sense has helped you to get to where you are.

QUESTION: And so for instance if there's a goal I thought might be good for me and my situation, so what I thought was well I would start going through the motions of meeting this goal or being ready for it to happen if it does. And then just allow to happen whatever is going to happen. Now is that sensible?

ANSWER: No, it is sensible to start going through the motions that express the greatest common sense. What you need to do is to add to that this extra dimension of inquiring of the Father, "is there a better way to do it? Is there a different way I should be doing it? Should I be doing it at all?" But start going through the motions, be grounded and be practical. But let there be an open inquiry, you might say, an ongoing inquiry for any modifications that might be appropriate. You see? As you do that and you begin to feel the nudges, the insights, the clarities that present themselves to you, you will begin to find them to be dependable and valuable.

And so the two things you're doing, going through the motions based on common sense plus listening for what is truly appropriate there will be a shift of emphasis and you will begin to value the listening and the inquiry more than the common sense, you see, because through experience you will have found it to be a better resource than your common sense. Pretty soon your common sense will be recognizable as not using your best judgment any more but always inquiring, you see.

And so there will be a shift that will eventually occur where literally you don't do anything without wanting more than any thing else to know how your actions fit in with the Father's will. And the reason you want to know that is because first of all it's your function and your nature not to be out of alignment with His will. And secondly, but more importantly, being in alignment with His will blesses everyone involved in whatever the activity is, you see.

So you don't say, "okay, I'm going to abandon my common sense and I'm going to go a hundred percent for guidance." You see? You don't do that until you've had enough experience with guidance that you are trusting and it doesn't evoke a great deal of fear. You see? Your common sense is a combination of inherent natural divine intelligence and fear occasioned by misunderstanding who you are and what everything is. Okay? So you don't invalidate the whole thing, because part of it is your innate intelligence. What you want to do is to take steps that help you let go of the fear and the confusion and the ignorance of who you really are so that the intelligence that was present becomes aligned not with the confusion but with the clarity of knowing the Father's will. You see?

QUESTION: Yes I do.

ANSWER: In this way, people will not look at you and say, "oh, she's another one of those spiritual kooks, look at she's an idiot," you see. And that's not what waking up is about. Waking up is, and true spirituality is the most grounded thing there is. In fact, it is the belief that spirituality is an effervescent disembodied state of nebulosity that what it really is isn't being brought into play and transforming the world right here. You see?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm hoping that you can answer this more coherently than I can ask it, but in the things that you've said in the gatherings and in the Course it seems to me that you're urging us to look for the Movement of God in all things. And to appreciate that what happens is God's will. It seems to me there are also a lot of spiritually oriented people...

ANSWER: May I interrupt just a moment, so that there isn't a misunderstanding. I do not encourage you to see everything as God's will. Because sin, sickness and death, suffering is not God's will, and although many times the Holy Spirit will turn your infirmity to your advantage it doesn't mean that the infirmity was a legitimate item provided by God for your growth. Thank your luck stars that the Holy Spirit turned it to your advantage, but don't value it as though it was part of the divine order of things.

QUESTION: Okay, you may just have answered my question.

ANSWER: I have.

QUESTION: I'll have to think about that. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: If you have a "yes, but" after thinking about it, please express it.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: The question I wanted to ask is kind of a two part, and it kind of had to do with what Trish was talking about. I kind of started this stuff a long time ago, the spiritual path a long time ago, and I've gotten to a point... I feel like I've been able to exercise unconditional love occasionally, you know when people have appeared to hurt me, and I feel hurt or offended by them sometimes I can look past it, often I've been able to look past it and love the part of them that didn't hurt me. If I'm explaining right. And when I do that I get this big sound from my ego that says, "you know, you really aren't very loving. Most of the time you are a witch with a "b". So why do you pretend to be so loving now?" So then on the times when I'm really not so loving and I am angry and I don't see the part of them that is lovable then my ego says, "I thought you were kind, I thought you could forgive these people. Why can't you do this?" And I constantly have a battle.

And so now I've reached a point and I don't know if this is related or not, where I sit back and I wonder about these things and I think you're right so really deep down inside I really have no goodness because it's serving some other purpose that my ego says it's serving, that I don't understand. And now after spending years in this state and after listening to some of the things you have been telling us throughout your gatherings, I am now at a point where I feel like I have no personality. I see these people and I'm feeling more love from people than I've ever really felt and acceptance. And I don't look at them and think they're judging me or hating me or I can feel like I can get in a little better now with the spirit, I can touch it, I can feel it, they can feel me. But yet I'm not excited to do anything anymore. If people don't get it I don't care. And I just feel blah, and energyless. I don't really have any energy. Like, when we go on breaks I don't even want to get off this bench. And that's how I feel. And I wonder what that's all about?

ANSWER: First of all it's part of what is called peace. It's the absence of the thrill of the ego, because from the ego vantage point life is usually considered to be a vital and exciting thing to be involved in, with positive connotations as well as negative connotations, one naturally has the expectation that to be Awake is going to be even more exciting, more meaningful in an exciting way than what you have already been experiencing. Because of the amount of time Paul spends with me—and there was one occasion when he was in Kauai where he spent twenty-four hours a day for three weeks with me—he has come to have the same sort of experience you are describing because being Awake is not compelling. He has found that to be joined with me doesn't give him a fix or a high, but rather an experience of utter evenness. That's peace. As a result, when he disengages from our union and chooses to function “on his own” he doesn’t find—upon looking back at the experience of being joined with me—he doesn’t find anything compelling about doing it again. It was an interesting phenomena. The reason is, that it is the ego that looks for something compelling.

Now, ultimately what it means it that Paul and everyone else will have to arrive at a point where the choice is made for being joined and experiencing the peace, the love and the uncompelling, unexciting joy of being, just because, if I may put it that way. Not because it’s fulfilling. Not because it’s exciting. Not because it’s meaningful. And yet it is meaningful. But the elements of meaningfulness are different from what the ego called the elements of meaningfulness. And I a way it is as though “nothing that I see means anything.” Nothing about what is seen is in itself compelling. You see? There’s nothing out there to get something from. And that’s because the function of love is to be given. Everything is out there to be acknowledged for what it Really is, not to get something from. And so instead of getting a fix from your world you finally have to come to a point where you value the gentleness of pure Being. That’s the best way I can put it into words.

In the process of shifting from the old ego orientation and its compelling, compulsive, vitality of life, so to speak, through the even balanced peace of being and the joy of love that arises out of that it will seem as though you must be making a mistake because you’re moving into something apparently less meaningful. But what that means is that you’re moving into a place where there’s less of an edge of fear and anxiety, which is popularly called the excitement of life. You see, this is why you never hear me give rousing talks, because it’s the ego that gets roused, gets excited and motivated. And that’s not where it’s at. That’s not the direction of Awakening.

And so you hear me speaking gently. You hear me speaking softly, not rousingly—maybe movingly—but not whipping up a storm of enthusiasm. Because ultimately the choice has to be made within yourself for something that ultimately you have to make the choice for an experience which is not in itself attractive. I didn’t say it was unattractive, but it does not have within itself elements that draw you in. The Kingdom of Heaven does not have elements that draw you into it. You cannot be compelled to come Home. What I must do is share with you whatever will help to trigger your capacity, you inherent divine capacity to recognize Home and to value it, so that you without any coercion having been applied to you make for your own reasons the choice because you can feel that as crazy as it seems this is the choice you need to make. That as surprising as it is to you, you don’t feel any longer compelled to change everyone else’s mind.

Your world is not any longer providing you with the motivation for living and at the same time it isn’t undermining your capacity to feel joy. That even though this surprising turn of events begins to register with you and your life has begun to change and the excitement isn't there anymore, that this is what you choose for because you can feel within yourself that these experiences are identifying the [integrity of your] capital "B" Being, divine life. You see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: I think. What I want to know is how long do you stay in this state of not caring? From what you say, I think probably forever.

ANSWER: Well, no, yes that's correct, you will stay in it forever. Right now Paul doesn't care what you think. Paul doesn't care what anybody else thinks. Paul doesn't care what he looks like, although as I talk about him more he's beginning to feel self-conscious. But when Paul doesn't care, then his presence is utterly caring. You see?

QUESTION: Does Paul have any energy physically? I mean, other than the energy just to move himself about where he needs to go.

ANSWER: He doesn't experience this. I mean, although I am speaking of him, he is the one moving his mouth—I am not moving my mouth—and does not feel absent in any way. The experience is a very full experience. The movement, he feels the movement, but it's also obvious to him he is having the experience of not sitting separate from you. He is having to some degree a conscious experience, everything that is happening is a unified event that all of us are engaged in. So he's not absent and he's not void of an experience of meaning. What is absent is that he's not feeling or being responsible for anything that's happening. So therefore, it is impossible for him to feel at this moment potentially guilty for not having done well enough, so he's experiencing a great freedom from self-consciousness. You see?

QUESTION: Okay, so I know when he does the gatherings that's how he feels when he's on assignment or on call from you, he does have the energy to do what he needs to do, and he probably feels great doing it and everything. But it's kind of like a puppet in a suitcase. When the guy gets out the puppet and starts to talk then the puppets... But then he lays back in the suitcase.

ANSWER: Yes, but what you must realize is you are always going to be a puppet of something. You're either going to be the puppet of God or the puppet of the ego. You don't have the choice to exist with no strings. So your task is to decide who your puppet master is going to be.

QUESTION: Okay, that helps. Thank you.

ANSWER: You see, it's only when what the Bible has called the fall occurred, the separation from God occurred that you can even conceive of yourself as something separate that would or wouldn't have strings. That's part of the illusion.

Part of the great value of the Course is that it brings out clearly that the potential isn't there to be without strings, that indeed you're the puppet of one of two masters. Existence isn't about being without strings. And if that registers with you so that you really feel it then you can with commitment abandon trying to be a good puppet without strings, and clearly attend to making the choice as to which of the two puppet masters you choose to be yours.

Now as you choose for God to be your puppet master, which is what the words "Thy will be done" mean, then the distance between the puppet masters hand and the puppet diminishes until finally there is no separation. Because you're not claiming a right to express your self. And when that happens then we can't talk about puppets and puppet masters anymore, because you're letting the Mind of God, which is your Mind be all there is to you without interference. You see?

The trickery of the ego is that although when you are listening to it is you puppet master, it is telling you, "you don't have any strings on you at all. Have a ball. Do anything you want, anyway you want." And then it sits there and pulls the strings and makes you dance the jig, always implying that you are authoring it. And all the time this is happening you are unconscious of the fact that none of it is happening, that this whole little jig that the ego is doing with you is this reverie, this flight of fantasy that is occurring as a daydream in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, in the mind of the Son or Daughter of God who has no capacity really to have a mind separate from God.

So let's be real clear again. You cannot be a puppet. You cannot be Pinocchio without strings. You see? You are the puppet of either of one of two puppet masters. Let that sink in. You aren't free. Now if you like we can go to lunch today and when we come back Paul can do the first session of the afternoon, on his own. (Laughter and a "no" response). Not that means that the ego will run the show, because Paul can't do it on his own. He either be's divinely natural as is happening right now to the best that he's able to do it, the only thing lacking now, which I'm encouraging him to do is to make commitment to being in his Right Mind forever. The little bit of difference between the almost complete allowing of this joining to occur, the only little bit left that goes beyond this is what to his ego seems like is the biggest step of all, you see, because he needs to do it forever, not test it out for a couple of days.

Paul is now self-conscious. And so we will just begin gently.

What is needed is not a temporary test, a day or two, a month, but a complete commitment forever. As I said this can't be forced. So the means by which I move Paul, you might say, to a point where making that commitment seems utterly reasonable is to provide the occasion for him to be joined with me in gatherings. Because he's willing to do this for you, whereas when he is at home and it's just him and me he doesn't necessarily find it worth doing, you see. But by providing the opportunity for him to have the experience of this divine state of peace he can begin to remember how to be Awake and can begin to feel the naturalness of being in this place. And by virtue of increasing familiarity with it he will arrive at a point where without fanfare, even probably in an almost off-handed way he'll just say, "okay," and the forever commitment will have happened.

Now what I want all of you to understand is that what is happening with Paul is not special, my speaking through him is not because of some special gift he has, and that he has some role "in the world" to help fulfill scripture or anything else. It just happens that Paul arrived at a point in his life where he needed help and he asked for it and he got it and he didn't give up and stop asking for it. And so all that is happening is part of his waking up. He's no different from any of you. And he is simply doing what everyone has the opportunity to do and what everyone will end up doing, in terms of asking for help, letting it in and letting your lives be transformed.

This doesn't mean that you're going to end up traveling the world channeling Jesus. You will end up doing and being what uniquely and specifically contributes to your graceful arrival at that point where you will make commitment to something that's totally unattractive to the ego—your Sanity and your Birthright. In the process you will all find yourself engaged with your fellow man in ways that are meaningful and transformational because the function of love is the function of your being. And it is that willingness to embody and express it in the world that does the trick. And so everyone is going to have to arrive at a point where it seems more reasonable to do that all the time than again, to claim the right to be angry and jealous and vicious and rude, etc., because it's so satisfying.

I'm very glad that you asked the question, and before we go to lunch I want to reiterate this point: It is your nature. It is your function to be the presence of God expressing Himself/Herself because that is what you are. There is no other choice. And it feels so good when you're in your Right Mind, fulfilling your function. And because it is your Birthright and your function to be the presence of Love expressing, all of you will end up doing it, just like Paul is doing it. And if he doesn't hurry up someone might do it a little more gracefully and a little more quickly and do it before him. Don't be fooled into thinking he's further along than you are. You may not be nearly as stubborn as he is.

Let's eat.

ANSWER: You have a question about strings? Will you please give a brief synopsis of your question.

QUESTION: Are you asking me to give a brief synopsis or are you asking me to be brief?

ANSWER: (Chuckling)

QUESTION: Yes? Okay, I'll make it short. Since the night before the gathering I've been possessed by a song. And the song is from Mary Poppins and it's "Let's Go Fly A Kite." When we began the gathering I went into meditation with everyone and the song came up and I broke down and had to leave the gathering. I figured out the kite part but the part I'm not figuring out is the theater, the string. And I need to know what the string means, that is to me.

ANSWER: Well, in the beginning when I first started speaking with Paul I told him to keep his feet on the ground and his head not too far away. Now, it simply means for you that no matter how high you sail do not become ungrounded. If you let go of the string a kite is on the kite will not continue to fly. It will do cartwheels and twists and eventually hit the ground. And so, for lack of better words, in order for your spirituality, or in order for your fulfillment to fly, as it were, you must keep your feet on the ground.

So as you now move with apparently more freedom, less theaters so to speak, don't abandon common sense, don't abandon that which identifies integrity for you.

QUESTION: Is that relative to the political situation that's brewing around me? Was that a warning?

ANSWER: Are you in the midst of a political situation?

QUESTION: Yeah, I am.

ANSWER: No, I mean, that there is a freedom of movement available to you relative to what is on your threshold. As you allow for it, stay grounded. That's all.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: First of all, welcome beloved brothers. And thank you brothers and sisters who are here physically and spiritual.

The other day Karen had asked a question and it blew me away for some reason, I lost all centering and everything. And partly when I got to thinking about it Wednesday when I went home was that I had listened to all your tapes Rajpur, but one on Bear Mountain was about brain dead, and then one in Orlando was right to die. And what freshened it up into my mind was when I grew up in Christian Science my mother and my grandmother had always taught me that there's a period when we leave our physical body, the 72 hours and then at the time the person passed over you know you kind of commune with them within that 72 hours.

Well, what if that was true, because now I have some lack of understanding that I had for so many years, what happens when a person, number one, is laying in a hospital bed and then they do tests and find the person's brain dead. And then they decide two or three days later to pull the plug. What I'm trying to ascertain and understand whichever way I should say it is when is the person actually physically out of their body and where there supposed to be, because I remember what my mother always said, "the dead know not."

And then when you were answering Karen's question then that even threw me a little more of a kilter, of course, I knew it was me, probably my ego getting in the way or I was just plain ignorant. And then just recently after they had the memorial for this dear brother of ours Kirborkian got again quitted for helping someone to die and that was considered a suicide helped. And yet in one of your tapes I remember you said that we all commit suicide in one way or another. So, where are the one's who supposedly "actually do a suicide" or the one who is brain dead and they pull the plug on him? Is there any difference in between there? And where are they at then? Are they in the fourth-dimension? And I have had too many experiences since I've been a child that I truly believe that they come when they are needed here to talk to us or whatever, commune, so they're not dead. And they're there. And sometimes I see them as their physical body or I just sense them in their spiritual body. And so now I'm getting really confused and I'm saying, "SOS."

ANSWER: The manner of death is irrelevant, whether it is suicide, whether it is brain death, whether it is an automobile accident or a heart attack, a disease, the manner of death means nothing. And just to elaborate slightly, every death is a cop out. It's a point at which an individual gives up. It is not the giving up that constitutes the yielding to the Father's will. It's a giving up of the attempt to control one's life, still believing that having control is the primal need. And literally one arrives at a point where they can't maintain the control any longer, but they don't yield the control up to the Father. And so there apparently is a death. It is a death that they bring on themselves. It is a decision, believe it or not.

Now, everyone who passes on goes to the same place, as it were. It is a receiving place. And they are met with love. In fact, the movement to that receiving place is as it has often been described, one in which the experience is one of great love. And they are met with love and they are for lack of better words, ministered unto, made comfortable. You could say that questions are answered. Those who have passed on prior to the individual who has passed on do gather to welcome. But the individual who has passed on is not required to meet with them, they can remain for awhile in the receiving place if they so wish. And they do not move on until there's a motivation within themselves to do so.

No, indeed, they have not moved into the fourth-dimension. Because the so called event of death was not a part of a process of Awakening. It was an ongoing dynamic of the assertion of the need to be in control of their lives, which they hadn't yet relinquished. And until they relinquish that the process of Awakening cannot occur. And so they find themselves exactly as they were before, except that whatever they thought it was that killed them they know didn't kill them. And so, if I may put it this way, if they had been suffering from cancer they realize that it did nothing to them, and they are no longer subject to that belief or disease, you see. So there is healing in that respect.

There is one other aspect. And that is that if during their life they have lost a limb or an organ or whatever, they find themselves physically whole. They still believe they have to eat. Believe it or not those who were addicted to alcohol may find themselves still addicted to alcohol. And even while they are in the receiving place they are not prohibited from indulging in their alcoholism.

You must begin to understand that no one else can force you no matter how Awake they are, no one else can force you to be well, because to not be well is your decision based upon beliefs that seem rational and reasonable to you that tell you that whatever your problem is is essential to your self-protection. And if one feels they need to be dulled by alcohol in order not to be overcome by the “realities of life,” you can see that it is a decision they have made to maintain their sanity from their standpoint even though it can’t accomplish that. But each one’s suffering is decided for by them because they have arrived at a point in their reasoning where they believe that what they are doing is protecting them from something.

Indeed, when physicians arrive at the determination that brain death has occurred, the individuality that you have known has moved on. The body you see is the after image left in your eyes. That which identifies them to themselves is still with them. And you will never be without that which identifies you, without that which renders you visible and tangible as a conscious experience for everyone.

What you also have to understand is that when I speak of something that is tangible and visible I don’t mean something that is material. And what you all further need to understand is that your scientist are clearer about the fact that there is nothing material about your body right now “physically speaking,” because when they examine it with an electron microscope, they find out that there are not billiard balls of matter but just energy pattern, nothing substantial there at all. And the pattern—it will ultimately be found out—is you might say, the pattern of the idea in God’s Mind that constitutes God’s self-expression.

So right now you don’t have a material body. And as this fact begins to register, as this news filters down in practical terms from the scientists to the general public, people will begin to think of their body in a new way that will allow for healing to occur, that will allow for perfection to occur spontaneously, instantaneously because there is no requirement, no “physical,” I mean by that material requirement for processes of matter to occur because there ain’t no such thing there. It’s energy patter than can shift because it has no density to inhibit the shift. You see?

Now you didn’t ask about this, but I’m going to continue. As one identifies himself or herself with this body and experiences not the fact that all that is being experienced is the infinity of conscious individuality—that it’s all me, it’s all you because it's all God—as this all inclusive awareness of self was lost with a preoccupation with identifying just this body as self. Then in that separate sense, as I said, there was a sense of tinniness and vulnerability and a call for defense. And so life itself has been one of self-preservation.

Now fear is what promotes acts of self-preservation. And so, in the attempt to make one's tiny definition of himself or herself more substantial and therefore having greater defense or invulnerability there has been a contraction that has occurred and pattern that is what is really here has become, you might say, packed and relatively immobilized. And so your experience of what is really flexible and fluid energy is not being experienced by you as what it really is and it seems to be subject to injury.

But nevertheless, even though you hold your body in this tight grasp for the sake of self-protection it hasn't become matter. It is still nothing but energy pattern. The pattern of which was and is held in its original divine intent by the Father, because the Father is from moment to moment establishing the pattern as that which identifies His intent in being You. Therefore, that which identifies you specifically, will forever be that which will identify you specifically.

In waking up, in remembering all that's here instead of just what you have chosen to see, you are going to discover that you are always at one and the same time specific and universal just as the Father is. But you will less and less identify with the specific and more and more embrace and embody consciously the infiniteness of you, the universality of you. The specific, meaning what you call the body, will not disappear but it will not fascinate you anymore. You will not choose to view anything from its standpoint anymore. And it will be your body but so will the pedal of the rose, and so will the wall, and so will the tree and so will much more of the Kingdom of Heaven that isn't registering with you right now be recognized by you as part of your infinite being.

So, I want to make this clear for those who are students of the Course. The Course talks about the “happy dream” and the “real world,” which is perfectly harmonious. And then it says that, “then even the real world will disappear.” That is what it says. What it means is that it's like finding and having the experience of your body as the presence of energy pattern that isn't matter but is itself the idea God is expressing that identifies Himself/You. You will find it not manifesting the evidence or evidences of self-protection, not manifesting the density and therefore not manifesting or showing forth illness, capacity to die, deformity, but utter beautiful perfection.

Mind you, as I said, as this happens you will also be becoming aware of the infiniteness of you and your attention, as I said, will shift from body identification, from identifying with the specificness of you and embracing the universality of you. When this shift occurs into the universality of you being the vantage point from which you experience All That Is, as I said, the body won't disappear but it won't be important to you anymore. It's in that sense that you could say your body will disappear because it will no longer be present in the function that you had been using as you are in this moment today. You see?

The real world will disappear only in the sense that it will not be getting your attention as an object of your attention, but will be experienced simply as an aspect of the infinitude of you as consciousness or the Mind of God that is having the idea that is the pattern that can be recognized as Creation. The use to which you had put the world will disappear because you won't be using it to define yourself or to gather data for your self-protection and you, I'm going to say, will sail merrily on your way enjoying it all from the infinite view. And that is what the Course means about even the real world disappearing.

I've said this before, it's as though you get up in the morning and you're ready to get dressed and you go to your bureau drawer with all your pretty panties there, and you pick out one, a pair, and if you're a certain kind of individual you'll be sure to pick out a pair that you won't be embarrassed being found wearing if you are in an accident. (Laughter) I use that example because people can be concerned about what underwear they're going to put on in the same way that people are concerned with their body. Nevertheless you go through the process and you put them on, you finish getting ready for the day and you don't give a second thought to your underwear. You don't even know you have them on. They disappeared, you see, but they're there. They are just not a concern. You see?

Oh, no, they are of value or you wouldn't be wearing them. But they're simply not a focus of your attention. And so the world will not be a focus of your attention, being the state of mind which is able to observe and consciously embrace Creation with the intent of acknowledging what is real in it all, which is God not the form, so that you may glorify God always, which is the function of being, which is love, the form becomes secondary to the function. You see?

Now you said where are they—those who have passed on? Well, they're in the same place you are still. I mean by that that they are still in a state of ignorance of who they Are. It doesn't have a location in the universe. But where you are doesn't have location in the universe either. And I'm not going to try to explain that. Except I will say, that you're not in anything, everything is in you. All of these conscious experiences of all different sorts are occurring within consciousness, and that is dimensionless and infinite.

How much of what God is being as consciousness? How much of what God is being as divine consciousness? All that God is being as divine consciousness isn't registering with you at the moment. But that's what this shift of attention out of one's reverie, out of one's preoccupation with her underwear, that's all that's needed is that shift of attention that will begin to allow you to see the more that is right here to see. And I will keep saying this over and over, all there is to see of Reality is here for you to see. And if you don't go home from this gathering remembering anything else, please remember that there is so much more of God's Reality to see right here than you can imagine, you will not be able to help but to find a little bit of curiosity surfacing from time to time. And I'll tell you something else, curiosity is what creates an opening in your current, firmly held definitions of everything and allows something new to register with you. That's all the more work there is to wake up is daring to be a little bit curious right here.

Now, I've gone on and on. Did I answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, you did, and I'm eternally grateful and blessings to you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm wondering about spirit guides. All my life I've sensed the presence that was with me, sometimes more than others, but the last few years since I've been in the Course I feel like they're more with me now. And I'm just wondering who they are?

ANSWER: I'm glad you asked that question. I cannot tell you. (Laughter) I can tell you more than that, but I cannot tell you because it is your guides prerogative to be the one to tell you his or her name. And I bring this out because very often in New Age circles you will find somebody who is psychic or intuitive saying, "Oh, I can tell you your guides name." No, they can't.

Your relationship with your guide is a very intimate relationship. It is disclosed to you, its existence is disclosed to you as an experience by your guide in a response to your desire, in response to your having arrived at a point where you have a conscious desire to be in touch. And no guide will tell another person their guides name.

A very close friend of Paul and Susan's had talked with me for a number of years, and finally arrived at a point of wanting to get in touch with his guide. And when the connection occurred this fellow asked his guide what is your name. His guide said, "LeRoy." Well, this friend was very unhappy, because he had hoped to have an important guide, you see. Well, he accepted LeRoy and was disgruntled about it and for perhaps a week worked through this realizing that there had been some ego interest in having an important guide. And when he finally was at peace about it and was grateful that his guide was LeRoy, on an occasion when they were speaking LeRoy said, "okay, now try LeRoi," which is French for the King.

Now it didn't mean that he had an important guide, but the shift in pronunciation and the shift in meaning conveyed that he had a guide of quality, if you will. The reason I'm bringing this up is because even the providing of a name at the very inception of the establishing of communication can become part of the teaching/learning process, you see. And one guide never interferes with the teaching/learning process between another and his or her guide, you see.

Do you have an additional...

QUESTION: So we can have several?

ANSWER: You will always have one specific guide who is assigned to you. You all have additional—and I do not like this word—but I’m going to say, additional entities or individualities who are Awake who work on behalf in conjunction with your guide. And sometimes they will speak to you and sometimes you will never hear from them. So on occasions you will find yourself hearing from more than one. And although there is not a pecking order, as it were, a hierarchy, those working with your guide are always in harmony with the primary relationship between you and your guide.

Now, there is such love in the way things work. And because you aren’t Awake, because ego dynamics are present and operating in each of you, you will always find that the Christ Consciousness embodied as your guide will present itself to you in a manner that is perfect for you. Your guide maybe wonderfully silly. And yet through the silliness points will be brought home to you in a way that will move you and feel good to you. So do not expect your guide to sound like me. Or if your guide is particularly funny don’t say, “oh, well, this must be the ego because Raj is the example of how a guide speaks.” You see? Each of you are approached in a manner that is perfect for you. And so some of you might find that your guide is named Red Feather or Hawk Feather or Isis, whatever it is do not jump to conclusions as though having heard Raj speak you now know all about guides and what they ought to be like.

When I first spoke to Paul he didn’t know what to expect. And so he had to abide with what was happening in the communion between us. And you need to approach your communion with your guide without expectations or preconceptions. It’s going to be new for you. You don’t want to say, “well, you aren’t what I expected you to be.” You can, it won’t be offensive. But don’t even waste your time with that. Let there be open curiosity. The point is not whether your guide is who you expected them to be, but nurturing the line of communication so that it might become stronger. So that, let us say, in Paul’s case, so that if he was sitting in the front of a large group of people he wouldn’t be distracted from the line of communication. Or in other cases, so that an emergency in your life will not succeed in distracting you from the connection. Be innocent. Be as innocent as you can in your opening communion with your guidance. And don’t jump to the conclusion that something must be wrong because your guide doesn’t sound like me.

No matter what style of presentation your guide gives you will find the same lessons being provided that I would provide. And you can also count on one other thing, your guide will be Totally Awake. And therefore, although your guide’s name might not be Jesus, your guide will be a fully realized Son or Daughter of God, the Christ.

So you say, “hum, if this one is fully Awake how could it really be a him or a her?” It will be whatever you need it to be in order for you to feel the least need for defense. Your guide will present himself/herself in whatever way nourishes and nurtures trust. And if you remember, as I said yesterday, that you never have to abandon your common sense, and it's never appropriate for you to override your integrity, whatever integrity you find that you have at the moment, then you will realize that you never have to give up control. Now I'm saying that very carefully, because all we've been talking about this weekend is giving up control.

You must know because of the prevailing fear of evil spirits that in this process of listening for guidance you are always the one in charge, and that therefore you can stop the communication any time you want. I can tell you as I did today, that no matter how enlightened or Totally Awake one is they cannot make you do anything. But you tend to be afraid of Spirits controlling you and usurping you of your authority and presence. And so I am making clear to you that first of all that is a misunderstanding of how things work. There are no such thing as evil Spirits that can overwhelm and overtake you. Secondly though, as long as there is a fear that such Spirits exist, you need to know that your guide will not take control away from you. I'll be very frank with you there have been times when Paul has cut me off. And each one of you can do that, because we can't, shall I say, inflict your good upon you, or anything else for that matter.

So I want you to know that listening for guidance is not going to put you in a position of potential vulnerability from Spirits that you would be afraid you might not be able to stand up to. You understand? And if you stay in touch with whatever degree of integrity you are feeling, and if you insist upon not stepping outside of your comfort zone until you have enlarged your comfort zone, so that you have stepped out of what it was before, then you will stay grounded in the process and you will never feel vulnerable. And this is very important to know. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj, and thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: At the present time I'm experiencing some very troubled times in my family life. My husband is becoming very agitated and aggravated when I show signs of spiritual growth, my ego not getting involved. And I think it's quite threatening to him. And at times my ego truly does get involved and I fight back, which causes it even more havoc. It's effecting my children and I'm just wondering if I might end up on the other side sooner than I want to. I just feel like... he's made threats in that direction. And I just wanted to find out if it's true, if it's serious?

ANSWER: All of this just because of your spiritual growth?

QUESTION: Possibly not. He's been this way throughout quite a bit, and I haven't really been that spiritual throughout our relationship. But he's had a volatile temper for quite awhile.

ANSWER: How does he respond to love?

Very threatened by it. It's like I turn and I respond to him in a loving way and his attitude is very hostile and angry and hateful. It's like there's no response as far as love goes that I can see. It just makes him even more defensive.

ANSWER: He resists hugs?

QUESTION: Very much.

ANSWER: The answer to your question is the same as the answer to the first question on the first day. You must see to it that you honor your integrity and that you do not violate it by being where you are not comfortable, by continuing to be where you dishonor yourself. And it is necessary for you to have the courage to act consistent with yourself as a woman of integrity, rather than a helpless second class citizen who must take whatever she can get. And who will therefore tolerate what is unprincipled, unloving and unreasonable because she thinks she has no other right or choice.

There is a need here for you to pay attention to and use grounded common sense. And trust that in so doing everyone will be blessed, even if your husband might not be happy about it. I am not going to say anymore than that in answer to your question so that the real factors don't become confused by a lot of words.

QUESTION: Thank you. I had one more question if that's okay? My daughter wants to get out of the situation. And she's had a real difficult time with schooling and not going to school. And we were thinking about... she wanted to join the job corps and I'm wondering if... that with just a yes or no would be great, if that's a good direction for her?

ANSWER: No that is not the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: I will say that the two of you need each other and have more to give each other. It's too soon for the two of you to be apart.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Before the break we were talking about guidance. And one of the things that I was wondering about, was when I go into meditation and ask for guidance I get one phrase and it's, "do nothing." And I haven't figured out what that means yet.

ANSWER: Now you know what to ask the next time you meditate and ask for guidance, you say, "what do you mean by 'do nothing'"? In other words, participate, keep the dialog going. You see? Sometimes one overlooks the obvious. This is a circumstance where it is not appropriate for me to share with you what it means or elaborate on it because the next step is for you to get that from your guide.

One thing I will say and that is, that since the guidance was “do nothing,” you have nothing to feel guilty for not doing. Inquire further. Express ongoing inquisitiveness.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You’re welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. I seem to have an amazing capacity to feel guilty. And to feel guilty about feeling guilty. And I’ve been wanting to ask you some advice about this, and so just in wanting to I’ve been listening to my own inside and one thing that I got is to love myself, just to laugh about it and be humorous about it. And what this last gentleman just asked and you advised him to be inquiring, I’m wondering if it’s something that I could inquire or have a dialog with with my guide.

ANSWER: About?

QUESTION: About guilt or feeling guilty or learning how to let go of it?

ANSWER: Of course! Of course! But I want to address this from a slightly different angle. What you need to understand, what all of you need to understand is that the ego is not able to do anything. It can threaten, but it can’t follow through. The ego is like a hypnotist, all it ever can do is make a suggestion. It can suggest that there is justification for you to feel guilty. It can suggest to you that there is justification for you to be miserable or jealous or whatever. But it cannot make you feel that way. You have to then take the ball yourself and energize it and flush it out with emotion. If you understand that when the suggestion that guilt is justified is whispered in your ear as though you were the one thinking it, that it is an invitation to become mesmerized, you would more quickly recognize it for what it was and say, “no I will not allow myself to be hypnotized.”

It’s very important to realize that the ego functions through the means of suggestions. And then it is important to understand that it’s goal is for you to become mesmerized, which is another way of saying to get you to go into a reverie or a fantasy. None of you is really interested or really willing to be subject to mind control. There’s perhaps a better phrase there, and I’ll save Paul from having to use the word but it’s called mind efting (sp ?). None of you is really willing to be involved or be subjected to that. But the ego is sly and makes its suggestion always in a way that seem to be to your advantage, or seem to be reasonable. And so you say, “yes.” And the minute you start saying “yes” you provide the energy that flushes out the suggestion and creates the illusion as though it were a fact. But when the ego says there is justification for feeling guilty it is no different from a hypnotist saying, “you have an apple stuck to your nose.”

Always the ego suggests with a whisper in your ear, so to speak, that there's justification for you to abandon your peace. And no matter what the details of the suggestion are, it is lying. Because there is no justification for losing your peace because without your peace you're not going to have the clarity to see what is really going on and to know what is really appropriate. And in the realm of reality and what is really going on, knowing what is appropriate that demonstrates that there is no problem is available to you. Knowing what is going on, experiencing what is going on and what actions are appropriate, those things are available to you in your peace. And your experience will reflect harmony and fulfillment, let us say, and not what the ego had whispered in your ear was the likely scenario that you would need to react to with guilt.

The primary thing that I want you to remember in my response to your question is that guilt is something you experience as a result of a suggestion having been whispered in your ear that there is justification for it. And it has only been a suggestion to entice you into a state of fear and it's called mind-efing, something which you have no interest in being subject to. So that when it happens you can say, "no, I'm not available, get another subject."

QUESTION: It looks to me like that would take courage sometimes. Sometimes the way that guilt seems to occur for me is it's associated with something that looks like I did wrong or some mistake. So it seems to be this evidence there...

ANSWER: What is the answer to a mistake? A correction. Two plus two equals five, mistake. Correction, two plus two equals four. The ego says, "two plus two equals five, you stupid jackass, you're never going to amount to anything. You don't have what it takes to understand simple mathematics, simple addition. Don't even try to get into division or multiplication. Don't even think about becoming an accountant." What does a mistake call for? Correction! No emotions to it. No moral judgments to it. No reflection on your character. A mistake calls for correction: Two plus two equals five. No, two plus two equals four.

QUESTION: So it doesn't really take courage. It just takes recognizing that there is an apparent need for correction?

ANSWER: Yes, there is a need for the real answer, which means you listen again, you add it up again. You do it again, paying more attention. Guilt calls your integrity into question and that is not essential to correcting a mistake.

QUESTION: Right.

ANSWER: But?

QUESTION: No, I don't have a "but." Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. The tendency is to think that because a problem is complex or a ploy of the ego that you have succumb to is so complex that it is going to take something equally complex to extricate yourself from the problem. If you are guilty, if you are somehow unworthy, therefore, you must do something to regain your worth. Well, that's not true. If there has been a mistake there needs to be a correction, a reevaluation of the factors without emotion. And you do not have to do something to become worthwhile again or to reestablish your integrity, because the mistake didn't call your integrity into question. The suggestion of the ego called your integrity into question.

QUESTION: So it's just a suggestion that I don't need?

ANSWER: It's a suggestion that is untrue, that you would be foolish to embrace. It also, is a suggestion which if you embrace means that you have turned authority for your experience over to a mesmerizer. The next time you feel guilty ask yourself, "did God suggest this to me?"

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: The answer will always be, "no." And if God didn't suggest it to you, nothing happened, nothing of substance happened. A lie arising out of ignorance was presented invitingly to you for you to take on and energize and embody. And if you accept it and embody it in your life it will seem to be real to you. And you will seem to suffer from it until the correction is made. The correction being coming back to that point at which the suggestion was made and refusing to accept the suggestion as something you wish to embody.

QUESTION: Amazing. It's very simple.

ANSWER: I said at one point that the devil is a liar and the father of it, meaning the father of the lie. The devil is the father of the whole mess you might say. And yet the mess is a lie and therefore not true, and therefore has no governing capacity. It's always just a suggestion, "throw yourself off this cliff and prove that you are the Son of God." It's just a suggestion, because the ego has no substance with which to push you. You have to say, "Okay," and jump and then say, "the ego made me do it." All it did was suggest it. "Wouldn't it be interesting to find out what kind of invulnerability you actually have as the Son of God by jumping. Wouldn't it be fascinating to you to experience your invulnerability," you see? It always is enticing. It always makes it reasonable in some way, but still it's just a suggestion, "Wouldn't it be interesting. Why don't you do this, you know, considering such and such and such and such maybe you don't have as much reason as you thought you had to feel good about your life." It's just a suggestion. You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Just like a hypnotist. And then the only thing that has presence—which is the Son of God to whom the suggestion was whispered—then the only thing which is present which is the Son of God to whom the suggestion was whispered, must take his actual presence and energy and embody enact so called substance of the suggestion, you see.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: But the ego, the devil, whatever, has no presence with which to force you to do anything, because it has no actual presence, because it's not real.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Simply put, feeling guilty is a total waste of time.

QUESTION: I like that.

ANSWER: It has never accomplished anything. You will not find in any schools or any teaching of any sort that guilt is a valuable asset which will help you to be more productive, to be more successful. Because the fact is that guilt undermines any capacity you actually have, if it's embraced, it undermines any capacity you actually have to be successful, by undermining your direct experience of your integrity. And you become sidetracked by an apple stuck to your nose that isn't there. And then you spend days trying to pull it off and not clocking in at work and doing your job that you enjoy.

The world will not collapse and everything around you will not go into ruin if you neglect to indulge in guilt. You can simply procrastinate indulging in energizing guilt and there will never be a disastrous effect or any negative effect to it.

I want to come back to this one point, because it's the one point that you can feel some motivation around.. You're not about to let someone else mentally control you.

QUESTION: Right.

ANSWER: And so if you'll remember that the ego's role is to engage in mesmerizing you, then when suggestions of guilt or whatever are presented to you, you can recognize that an attempt at mesmerism or hypnotism is being applied to you and you won't tolerate that.

QUESTION: That's right I won't.

ANSWER: It will say you a lot of grief. No, it will leave your time free to have a great deal of joy.

QUESTION: That's wonderful.

ANSWER: You have two advisors and only two: The Voice for Truth and the voice for fear—the voice for the ego. The voice for the ego is nothing more than the suggestion of the presence of a mesmerizer making suggestions. It isn't really there doing anything. That's why making the choice for the Voice for Truth is so transformational, because not only does it seem to eradicate the effects of mesmerism it also demonstrates the fact that there isn't a mesmerizer actually present to be a voice for anything. And that's why there is real emancipation—emancipation from suffering.

So from now on if you're going to talk about the ego, “oh the ego this, and the ego that, and the ego the other thing,” you can afford not to be so light hearted about it. It's the ego whose intent is to mesmerize. It's not your friend, so don't speak too lightly about it. You can say, “there goes my ego again,” in order to acknowledge that something is going on that you don't want to become subject to. But don't be too casual about it, "there goes the ego again trying to be the presence of that which has my misery as its goal." It's not an enemy. I do not mean to be giving it power, or to make it sound too threatening. What I do want you to understand is that its goal is to distract you from the joy of being and to distract you from experiencing your function as the presence of Love. And the only means it has with which to do that are suggestions, which can have absolutely no power over you at all.

So it is as though I am saying there is a threat to your existence that has no substance to it, no capacity to carry out any threats to your existence and therefore you can gain freedom from any potential susceptibility to it by understanding what I've just said about it. You will not become free of the guilt by proving your innocence. You will become free of the guilt by neglecting to listen to the suggestion that screws up your perception. You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: What I have said is not confusing, even though you may have to listen to the tape a number of times. But it's the answer. It's everyone's answer.

Another thing I hope all of you go home from this gathering remembering or having a sense of is that what it takes to wake up is any of a number of really simple things. And that it doesn't take a tremendous amount of effort and skill and persistence and the acquiring of some sort of spiritual power to overcome the devil. If this begins to register with you, you will begin to become curious about what are the simple things. "Wow, let me have God, one of these simple experiences." You see?

I also want to tell you that although I have used a lot of words, the real meaning of what I have been expressing has been reaching you through channels other than my words—through Love. So you don't even have to worry about whether you can remember everything that was said. That doesn't mean that I have been whispering suggestions into your subconscious and taking away your authority and integrity. It means that I've been talking to you as my brothers and sisters, my equals. And I've been talking to you as my equals and not as piss-ant mortals who need to grow up and improve in order to become equal to me. And the experience of sitting with a brother whose treating you like a brother and a sister has more impact and more meaning in terms of undoing a mired of false concepts than any words that I might use.

I've told Paul that if he's afraid of what I might be going to say to him, then I will just sit here and say, "blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah." Because it's not about the words. It's about the communion. It's about the Brotherhood. It's about the undeniable and unchangeable unity that it is our Birthright to be experiencing and which is a fact that is available to be experienced at every moment.

So who has a question?

QUESTION: Thank you for seeing my waving arm. My question is short and the answer should be just “yes” or “no.” I mean it doesn’t take a lot of explanation. You were talking about the spirit guides contacting us before. My question is and before I ask it, well I’ll ask it first.

ANSWER: I thought it was a short question?

QUESTION: I haven’t got to it yet! Does our loved one’s that have passed on before us can they or do they contact us? And the reason I’m asking is a few months ago I had a voice on my answering machine that I swear was my husband. And I want to know if it is possible or am I dreaming. That’s all I want to know, “yes” or “no.”

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: “Yes” I was dreaming or “yes” it’s possible?

ANSWER: Neither one. Yes it was your husband. Wipe that silly grin off your face.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Could you say something about the difference between co-dependence and being the Presence of Love?

ANSWER: Are you implying that there is in any way a similarity?

QUESTION: There’s ultimate confusion in my mind.

ANSWER: When love is something that one uses to get, what follows is co-dependency. When love is given, it is love. It’s as simple as that.

QUESTION: I’ll try to remember that. Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Thank you very much for being here. My question is one that has to do with experience of profound illumination. There were three or four of us talking about the subject yesterday and comparing notes. It seems that some of us, particularly myself, I had a profound illumination. And it happened at a time when I didn’t think I had an active spiritual bone in my body.

ANSWER: Isn’t that wonderful.

QUESTION: But it happened...

ANSWER: Excuse me...

QUESTION: Sure.

ANSWER: This is not an uncommon experience. And what makes it wonderful is because it demonstrates that so many people have that they have to become spiritually prepared for enlightenment, or they have to study for it in order to bring it about are off the track. Illumination will occur in moments of utter defenselessness. And it has nothing to do with education or skill or knowledge or anything else. A baby can have it. An idiot can have it. A highly educated person can have it. That's why all of you can be hopeful.

QUESTION: That kind of leads to the rest of my question and that is that the experience is so profound and it was such a massive inflow of love and peace that it totally transformed my life. It flip-flopped it. I had a profound physical as well as spiritual heeding. Since then I've had occasion to work with a lot of people on a basis of friendship as well as those that have been ill, and I've tried to explain to them, even though I guess it's not my part to try to do so, what I have been through in hopes that they could experience something similar. Because I believe that, Raj, if everybody in this room could experience what I experienced and what probably perhaps some of the other people's experience, the process of all of us coming to a collective consciousness that is One with God would be so much more faster and so much more, I don't want to say the word easier, but for lack of another word. Because I don't see how anybody could resist wanting to become closer to God once they have an experience like this. But it doesn't seem to happen that easily. I'm talking about people that are deathly sick and they seem to really put out a conscious effort, if you will, to make this communion. But it doesn't happen.

My question is, I guess, why doesn't it happen more often? And is there anything that we can do other than to impart love to help another one along the way when we feel that there may be a need and are guided to do so?

ANSWER: What more than the totality of what love is is there for you to share with your brother? Please don't refrain from sharing your experience with others. Just don't become a Zealot. You know when you have shared it there is a humility in the sharing, because you are less conscious of yourself sharing it than you are of remembering the experience. And in remembering the experience the wholeness or holiness of it ends up being communicated. And whether the person hearing it can believe it or not something in them is touched about you—something in them is touched about you. And that about you which has touched them makes them want to have an experience that allows them to feel like they see and hear you are feeling as you share your experience. It is called witnessing. But witnessing can become a career for some people. And that's not what it's about. But that doesn't mean that witnessing is a poor activity to engage in.

This is the kind of news that everyone needs to hear more of. Many people have the experience thinking no one else has had the experience and so they keep their mouth shut. When other's share it they feel relief, not only because they don't feel like odd-balls, but because they can begin to see that there is a Movement afoot in the world because people are beginning to have these experiences. And more and more they'll speak up.

Now, as you have found out, although you've had the experience you can't make it happen again.

QUESTION: That's right.

ANSWER: But I will tell you that because you've had the experience and you know it is there to be had, you are more open to it and it will happen again. That's the simplest way I can put it. And in your sharing with other's that it has happened and because of the connection that occurs between you and the person you share it with, although it might seem unbelievable to that person, it is not an idea that is foreign to them and it makes it easier for it to happen to them. But it always happens in a moment of defenselessness. And unfortunately few of you feel defenseless unless you are in a very dire circumstance in which you feel totally hopeless. And in that moment you can't muster up any feeling of self-confidence to even defend.

And so it has been said that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," or, "it's always darkest before the dawn." Why? Because in that moment of crisis, as I mentioned day before yesterday, in that moment of crisis is where you feel powerless, lacking the energy to put up a front any longer, a falsity, a farce about yourself. All of those things constitute your defenses. So in this place of utter exhaustion that feels like the end of the world, you arrive at a state that you could call normalcy, divine normalcy. You arrive at the point where you know you're a puppet on a string, and you can't try to manage to prove to the world that you have no strings. And in that moment where you are innocent of trying to do the impossible, revelation occurs. And as I said, once it has occurred, even if you don't stay with it and the experience seems to pass, you're forever changed. Never again can you be in as much of the dark as you were before. And so you are less dense mentally and because you know the experience is true you are open to another experience of truth and hopefully your next point of defenselessness won't be in a crisis, but will happen in a more comfortable circumstance. But it will come.

How many people in this room have had one or more experiences of what they would call illumination? I want you all to look around at each other. I want you all to see how many there are. It's happening. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Sure does. Thank you.

ANSWER: Is there anyone here who has a burning question, which if they didn't ask it they would feel severely disappointed?

QUESTION: Okay, my question is about pain. How do we go about releasing long-lasting pain? X-rays have proved the reason but can't seem to find the answer. After innumerable doctors, innumerable medication and exercise the pain effects the everyday activities, but can't seem to find release.

ANSWER: Very literally I want you to write on your refrigerator, "it is the intent of my body to identify the presence of my Individuality perfectly."

Now, something new for you to write down, a separate statement: "I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning, and I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary." I will say it over again, "I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning, and I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary." And then I want you to remember what I said about your body or form being nothing more than energy pattern that is perfectly fluid, so that you might understand that there is no matter that has to physically adjust in order for the pattern to reconfigure. You understand what I mean? So there need be no delay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Anyone else who doesn't want to go home without... Let me tell you what I have afoot. As soon as we are through with questions, we will take the remaining amount of time until six o'clock for a healing session—a quiet time in which, what has been referred to as the healing team will work with each one of you as you sit there quietly. Knowing that, who still has a question. I am not dissuading you from having a question.

QUESTION: My question is somebody else's question, but it is truly a "yes" or "no" answer. Have you ever at any time either before or after the crucifixion physically been in North America.

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: When I say that I have been physically here, I mean that I have been here in form.

QUESTION: You can answer this "yes" or "no" too. In the twelve step programs they have a tool they use called "acting as if," and I was wondering if "acting as if" will help progress us on our spiritual path like they say in the "Journey Without Words," do this and you'll save yourself a thousand years?

ANSWER: Certainly acting as if you are Love will be beneficial.

QUESTION: This could be short too I'm sure. In the workbook lessons you talk about the great rays and God and all His Thoughts. And I think it may...

ANSWER: You're right. It is going to be a short answer because it is not yet time for me to address that.

QUESTION: Okay, thank you. I thought it might tie in with the healing though, so that's why I asked it.

ANSWER: I understand.

QUESTION: I just want to say so many questions are being answered I think of them and I'm getting the answer. It's really neat. But is it any of my business if my father is reincarnated?

ANSWER: No, he is not. And he is not likely to do it again.

QUESTION: I didn't think so. Oh, thank you.

QUESTION: Hello, this is quick. The gentleman who raise the question...

ANSWER: I do not want to rush you.

QUESTION: Okay. The gentleman who raised the question about guilt and then your extensive answer seemed like it really settled in for me. So my question is could most of what you answered to us on that question be applied to worry?

ANSWER: It can apply equally to any of the suggestions that the ego makes to distract you from your peace. Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I just had a quick question. I have a niece who has Down Syndrome. And I had a question on children that have down syndrome. It seems like she sees something other than we do. And I had a question: Is that true?

ANSWER: Very often that is true, yes.

QUESTION: Thank you, very short. Is twin reincarnated now and is there anything I need to know about it?

ANSWER: No and no.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, again. In one of the tapes that I borrowed from Helen—I don't remember if it was Australia or not—but there was a comment from you sir, that there would not be anymore reincarnations. Did I misunderstand that particular tape, like anyone passing over from that time, whatever '89, '80 whatever, to the present time, up to 2012 there will be no more reincarnations from anyone passing over as we know it?

ANSWER: What I indicated was that the time is coming shortly when no one will be returning. There obviously are those still returning because you have births everyday. But there is a point at which it will stop.

QUESTION: And does that also entail like those like Elijah who just went zip up or whatever? Or is it Elijah, maybe I'm getting my scriptures wrong? Where there's people that don't know what we call our dimensional death? Did I say it right, or is it confusing? In other words, there will be no death?

ANSWER: Oh, you'd better believe that there are many here who will not go through a death process, yes.

QUESTION: Great! Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I asked a question a few years ago about if I should try to locate my brother. And at that time the answer was “no.” And I don’t know if he’s still alive now. And sometimes I do feel guilty, like maybe that was just for then and maybe I should try to locate him. Is there anything you could say about that, if I should try to locate him?

ANSWER: It is still not appropriate.

So it’s okay that I didn’t until now?

ANSWER: That is correct.

QUESTION: All right, thank you.

QUESTION: I’m feeling a little ridiculous about this, but it’s so obvious to me: The gold birds that are behind you, all six of them are looking like they’re suspended in space, they’re not glued to the wall like I’ve always seen them. And what is happening? What is this about?

ANSWER: It is for you an experience of illumination. You are experiencing the idea that was given expression in the form. You are not being preoccupied with the form, but what you could call the artists intent, the idea, which with love was expressed in this form. You see? I’m very glad you are having this experience.

QUESTION: I keep looking at them and they’re still suspended, they haven’t gone back to the wall or the podium. And it’s making a sense of awe, a-w-e, and a oneness. Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: This may be another short one you could probably tell me you can’t answer it. But thank you for letting me ask it. I’ve heard about groups who may incarnate together and all that sort of thing. And to increase their learning and expressions and all that. And if so...

ANSWER: Ahhhh, my, my, my, my. I don’t want to hear the rest of the question. I only mean this, you don’t incarnate in groups. You don’t wake up in groups. Experience is always individual. It’s that simple.

QUESTION: Thank you, that is all. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: I was not impatient with you. It is some of the ideas that...

QUESTION: No I’m just impatient, cause I know what is coming...

ANSWER: It is some of the ideas that get expressed are so ridiculous.

QUESTION: But that’s thrown around so much that I thought I wanted to talk to you.

ANSWER: Yes, I understand. You hear of group souls and group entities and so on. Groupness is still separateness. And so it’s still an ego concept and not representation of an experience of enlightenment.

It has been my blessing and my pleasure to be able to be with all of you during this gathering. And I thank you all for being you. And I look forward to the opportunity to do this again here.

Thank you, again.

Gathering In Kingston, WA – June 9th, 1996

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Good afternoon. Paul neglected to say for the benefit for those who are new the format is a simple format of dialog, conversation, question and answers. And so if anyone would like to start a dialog, please raise your hands.

QUESTION: I have a curiosity about my feet. I go through periods of my toes being so hot I stick them in a bucket of cold water, and at the same time my heels ache terrible. And then just about as fast as it comes it goes away. And on one of the tapes you mentioned something about energy coming out the bottom of your feet. So now I'm curious about what this says about this says about my feet.

RAJ: Indeed, when this happens I would encourage you to not react, but to allow whatever is happening to happen. There is indeed energy at these points at these moments streaming off the ends of your toes, and actually off the back edge of your heel as well as what you might call the palm of your foot. In reacting to it you tend to block the flow, which creates the aching or the discomfort. But if you will allow this flow of energy to occur without reacting in any way to it, you will find complete comfort. You will also find that you are able to feel more than just warmth. But I'm not going to tell you ahead of time what it is. Because I want you not only to be allowing of the experience but to be curious.

It is not just a release of tension, of physical tension. The radiating energy is Love. Okay? If there was someone around with an ache or a pain I would suggest to you that you put your foot on the part of them that is uncomfortable. But I am not suggesting that you go out and become a healer by the laying on of feet. I say this so that you might understand that it is something to be appreciated and allowed and valued. And if you will do this and pay attention, just quietly pay attention to the experience, more of what it means will begin to register with you at your point of your conscious awareness of it.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I've been sitting her trying to figure out which question to ask. And I guess part of there's a certain fear about asking the right question. And I guess what that means is this feeling like I should be thinking of a question that is, what might be called a generic question or a common question versus a personal question—and the appropriateness of that.

RAJ: I will tell you that personal questions tend to be more valuable to everyone than generic questions, simply because as I have said many times, the ego is never original. And no matter how unique you think your personal questions are to you they are relevant for most everyone, which means the answer will be of value for everyone. So...

QUESTION: Okay, a lot of that comes from knowing that the answers are already there. I just guess I would like to get a kind of a report as to how well I am doing, as they say, in my Awakening process. I've been going through what I would call a kind of an easy time of things on the surface, or I have allowed myself to concentrate on my spiritual path. And I'm kind of wondering what's next, or what I should be doing or not doing.

RAJ: You are in the enviable position of experiencing enough smoothness in your life to feel the courage and the safety to explore on more radical terms what is before you in terms of your Awakening and spiritual growth. And so rather than waiting until you are forced over a threshold, I encourage you to invite radical new awareness'. When you do this do not provide an agenda. Do not say, "I want a radical new awareness about this or that or the other thing, or so-and-so."

Now if you are going to invite radical new awareness then you're going to have to take time to pay attention. In other words, to be attentive to or to listen for new awareness', new awareness' that will come minus the stress of a crisis. And so I would encourage you to take perhaps a half an hour a day to be still and express the desire for radical new awareness to come and then listen for the next 28 minutes, just being quiet, feeling open and welcoming of whatever will unfold itself to you. I promise you that your guide is ready and looking for the opportunity to open up new vistas to you. I say that, I specifically point that out so as to remind you that in the listening don't try to figure out yourself some new radical way of looking at everything. You see?

Now, at the same time that you are engaging in a new regimen, as it were, of daily or nightly desiring radical new awareness in listening, at the same time that you add this do not neglect to value and pay attention to the smoothness that is going on in your life. Because whatever radical new awareness will come it will not wipe all of this out. It will embellish. It will enlarge and it will even transform the way you are seeing everything you are already seeing.

So the reason for desiring radical new awareness is not because you are dissatisfied with the way everything is, nor is it because the way everything is something you need to get beyond. The reason for being curious to have radical new awareness is because it's your Birthright not to be enclosed within the limitations you're currently experiencing. Your Birthright involves so much more—all of you—than all of the good you are already experiencing.

QUESTION: How about tips on getting still?

RAJ: Tips on getting still?

QUESTION: I do, not every day, meditation. Well, I don't do it everyday because I kind of do other things. I try to do conscious meditation. But I do find that when I do sit to be still I get lots of thoughts and I'm not too sure if I'm doing it right kind of a thing.

RAJ: One of the simplest and most effective methods of becoming still is to breath through your nose, and pay attention to the sensation of the air as it passes through the bridge of your nose or just in back of your nose, wherever you can feel the sensation. Simply let your attention rest there. And when you begin to think or a thought starts moving through your mind and you realize that you're not paying attention to the sensation just bring your attention back to the sensation. Figure that you can think about that thought later and bring your attention back to the sensation.

Guided types of meditation, meditations where you are meditating on the word Love or whatever tend to illicit ideas. And what you are interested in is becoming still. And so this method of paying attention to the sensation it is a nonthinking focus of attention that's easy to bring your attention back to.

Now since you are wanting to become still, be careful that you don't block the influx of the radical new awareness. So often people do not allow any disturbance to the silence, the stillness and without allowing it to be disturbed nothing new can register in your awareness. Basically what you're wanting is not to create yourself what the awareness' that come to you by thinking, you want to let the influx of radical new awareness' to come from one who stands with you, who is Awake and who knows exactly what will trigger and promote your "Ah ha's." Because they will be the things you can embrace without great resistance. And what you can embrace without great resistance is something that you can easily embody, make a part of yourself.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. You asked how you were doing. I will simply say you are not backsliding.

QUESTION: I don't feel like I am.

RAJ: You would notice if you were because things would become uncomfortable, it's like trying to get back into a pair of shoes that you have outgrown. And when you try to do that it doesn't fit and it's uncomfortable.

QUESTION: Good afternoon.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: In the past few weeks my guide has spoken to me about some major changes that are soon to occur.

RAJ: To us or to you?

QUESTION: Well, to me. And at one point I asked to speak to you and you had said, “yes those changes were correct,” but if I needed further confirmation to speak of this at the gathering in Kingston. So I’m speaking of this at the gathering in Kingston and want to know if what I am hearing is actually my guide and it is truth for me?

RAJ: It is completely accurate listening that you have been engaging in and you have been hearing correctly. Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

Someone said: “Can I go home with you?” (laughter)

RAJ: Hearing accurately always enlarges your borders, and transformation of your awareness always forces change. And change isn’t always what you thought you were asking for when you asked for guidance. And so it doesn’t always necessarily feel like the most desirable place to be in alliance with one’s guide. And so you might not want to go home with him. (Much laughter)

QUESTION: I just meant he was doing it so well.

QUESTION: Well it sounds like it, but there’s a little bit—I don’t want to say distrust—but there’s a little bit of hedging the bets here, like what am I hearing is really correct.

RAJ: Protecting your ass, hummm!

QUESTION: Right!

RAJ: Always remember that you can keep asking for more clarification on whatever it is that has been given to you. And the more clarification you get the less self-protection you will feel inclined to try to employ, unless you’re really having to let go of something that you love very much or that you have a great investment in.

You are safest when you are in the flow of the movement of your fulfillment, even though at times you feel safest when you’re out of it. I just want to remind you of that.

QUESTION: I’m here for clarification and guidance. I’m in a very familiar pattern of confusion and decision about which direction to go, feeling some limitation of physical energy and time so that I really don’t want to invest a lot in a wrong direction. Since moving to Washington I’m feeling very blessed and rich in soul mates who are there to help me, just friends, my surroundings, I’m just in awe and frequently come to tears over the magnificence of this place that I’ve been allowed to come to. These new friends that are helping me are helping me in my so called poverty. I need friends to help me with my abundance. There seems to be...

RAJ: But your abundance starts with the experience of being loved, no it starts with your letting in the experience of being loved. And if your friends are loving you, in helping you, even though you can define it as being helped in your poverty, and you are letting it in and it is moving you to tears then they are helping you in your abundance.

So I want you to understand that you are right in the middle of the emergence of the very thing you want. You are lovable. You are lovable without money. You are lovable without apparent resources. And I want you to let that register with you. Because your worth is something you take with you wherever you go. It isn't something that's in your checkbook or in your bank account. When someone loves you, especially when you feel down and out or empty you're truly having an experience of the fact that you are loved for an essential worth that you have. And you are letting this in. You are! What I want you to understand is how essential and how important this aspect is, so that you don't sort of skip over it like a grace note to get on to the good stuff. Do you see what I am saying?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: The good stuff is happening. As you let that in that which identifies abundance will begin to manifest in your experience. And if you will remember what I've said today you will not then abandon or make light of the love that is being extended to you when you don't have abundance, thinking that now you've gotten to the real meat of your abundance, which is a comfortable bank account, an ability to be self-sufficient, not lean on others, etc. Your abundance, you visible or manifest abundance always accompanies your experience of your loveableness and your willingness to let it in whether you are in a mode of having or not having. Am I making sense?

QUESTION: Yes, it has.

RAJ: Then when you have you won't become confused into thinking that is what makes you lovable, respectable, worthy. You see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: I interrupted you and I would like you to continue with what you were asking.

QUESTION: Thank you. I seem to have some ancient block here about being in a financial flow. As I say, all the rest of my life is just glorious and I do feel the love that is coming from these new friends as old friends. I feel I'm with my soul group, and I feel very much that this is where I belong and everything is glorious about it. But there's still something, and I have many interests and apparently have several talents that could provide some financial stability for me. And I'm just about exhausted trying to keep all these balls in the air until I see which one of them connects. And I guess I'm feeling that I would like some little clue as to which one of these I'm to pursue to allow that to happen, to provide an avenue for the financial prosperity.

RAJ: There is something that needs to be done before that. And that is to let go of the fear. Conditioned thinking says, “well, when I have financial security I won’t be afraid.” Now that which initiates the manifestation of abundance is the extension of love. But the extension of love can’t occur when you are indulging in fear, because fear causes constriction, tightening up, defensiveness, the exact opposite of extension or gifting.

Now there seems to be many justifications for fear. Instead of finding ways to knock down those justifications I’m going to suggest that you have a different goal than energizing the justifications. And the goal needs to be being the Presence of Love. Where are the places, where are the opportunities for you to express love, caring, help, thoughtfulness? And I’m not talking about giving your soul away. But I’m talking about consciously engaging throughout your day in extending those qualities, which really are the qualities that are needed to transform the whole world.

If you will prefer to engage in activities of extending love, the suggestions that you have justification for fear will not hook you. You will be preoccupied with gifting rather than protecting. And the fact is that you are not faced with threat everyday, except the threats of the thoughts that you think that are based on fear. And those aren’t real. What I mean is they are not threats that will affect your existence between morning and night. You see? If there were a tree falling toward you, you would need to move. But the thoughts that get you tied up in knots are not a thing that can harm you.

So don’t try to cope with the fear. Let the fear be. Let it be there. And you choose to give your attention to every opportunity you have to extend love. Now I will tell you that to the degree that you are letting yourself be loved, to the degree that you’re letting love in, you are choosing to be loving. Because you are allowing someone else to fulfill their purpose for being, which is to extend love. You see? I simply want you to expand on that already existing extension of love that you’re doing by taking every opportunity during the day to extend it more, instead of taking every opportunity through the day to worry and be afraid.

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: The more you love the less you have a shield up around you. And the less you have a shield up around you the more the Father’s Love can reach you, which will always be identified as fulfillment in practical terms in your life.

So the answer to your problem is not in establishing financial security by choosing a talent that you have and using it, it is at this point to abandon fear. And you do that not by getting rid of it, but by choosing to give the majority of your attention to extending love. That’s the next step.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: Then the Father can come and knock on your door, or on the door of a particular talent you have and say, “share this with Me in the world.” Again the key at this point is not finding out what you are going to do, but letting go of the inclination to energize fear and extend love. And you have ample opportunity to do it, even though your conditioned thinking says, “that is an assigned thing to do because I have things to worry about that are really important.” You see?

QUESTION: Uh, huh!

RAJ: Okay.

QUESTION: Wonderful! Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome. We will take a break.

RAJ: Okay, Nicholas.

QUESTION: Well, being the only kid here it’s going to be kind of hard to explain. But I’ve been through some pretty serious things in the past couple of weeks, having sometimes having to do with the law and stuff like that...

RAJ: Having to do with a bomb did you say?

QUESTION: With the law. Wanta guess mom told you about the bomb, right?

SOMEONE: Now we all know.

RAJ: Continue.

QUESTION: Well besides that it kind of has to do with school and the way things have been going there. You know, people not accepting me for who I am and you know stuff like that. And there have been also some other times when I’ve gotten busted with stuff that has to do with fire and everything. And I think the reason for that would be—I’ll admit I do have a vast curiosity about fire. And I’ve been frequently been getting busted for it and you know things have been happening at school. And I guess my question is why is all of this happening to me?

RAJ: Well, I will tell you something, and I will tell you that adults have the same problem. Whenever anyone is interested in something, fascinating in wanting to explore something that frightens other people or something that makes other people have to think about things they would rather not think about, then that person usually ends up feeling misunderstood and not accepted. Because people don’t like to have to change—a lot of adults. Individuals your age love to change, love to explore, love to learn new things, love to learn to be in new ways. And very often as people grow up, as people your age get older everyone else sort of sits on them harder and harder and says, “don’t do things that make me have to think about things that I don’t want to think about.”

And so slowly everyone literally stops exploring, they stop wanting to be in a new way and to be a new you, so to speak, and finding new ways to be because their parents or their wives or their husbands and even their children want them to be very stable, very dependable. You see what I mean? And so slowly everyone gets forced into being with other people in a way that doesn't create surprises. And I know from your standpoint that's very dull. And I'll tell you something, for adults it is very dull too. But they learn to stuff their curiosity. They learn to sit on it. And then they learn to tell themselves that there must be a way for them to feel good when they're not being able to explore or to do things in a new way, or to try out things in a new way.

And then you would be surprised at how many adults there are who say, "nobody accepts me the way I am." Well what's the answer, cause the answer has to be the same for an adult who has those feelings as it does for an individual like yourself? The answer is that you can't afford to stop being curious, and you can't afford to stop exploring. And you can't afford to stop finding new ways to be. But knowing how strongly everyone around you insists that you don't do anything that creates great surprises for them, you have to find a way, you have to be sensitive to what's comfortable for them and find a way to do your exploring that doesn't shock them.

Now, your mother like other adults doesn't like to be shocked. And she is probably not too happy with everything I've said so far, and she may not be happy with the rest of what I'm going to say to you, because she like so many other people want to always feel safe. And the only way they can feel safe is to have no surprises.

What you have to do is to find a way to explore that is safe. If you understand what I mean? Your fascination with fire is amazing. Most people are afraid of fire and they feel that it is very dangerous, and indeed, you can see on TV about this home or that home that's burned down or a forest that has burned. And so nevertheless there are people who do explore fire. There are people just like you who explore and design incredible fireworks, which is another use of fire. And they have found a way to do it that is safe. And so unfortunately no one gives classes in fire and related fire subjects, but I encourage you if you want to explore and experiment with fire that you try and find somebody to explore it with, an adult who understands the potential threat. And because he understands it can help you to explore it and remain safe, so that you're not injured and no one else is injured.

It is also like bombs, you know, somebody had to explore and experiment to create an atomic bomb and not kill themselves or anybody else in the process of exploring it, even though they've used it to kill people. My point is that there is a way to explore. And you don't have to feel as though you have to stop being curious. I do not want you to stop being curious. And I don't want you to stop exploring. But I do want you to find a way to do it that is safe.

Now you know that if nobody had explored about atomic bombs that we wouldn't have atomic power plants. Because an atomic power plant is nothing but a bomb, an atomic bomb that is exploding so slowly that it's not creating an explosion and the energy can be channeled to give us electricity. And we would not have electricity generated by atomic power plants if nobody had had the guts to explore and experiment with atomic bombs. You see?

So when you are interested in and fascinated by something that is potentially very destructive you must find a way to do it so that it brings no harm as you learn more and more about it. You see?

I understand that it is very frustrating not to have people understand you. But I want you to know that that isn't something that where you're the only one who's experiencing that. And you're not picked on. Almost everyone in this room lives with or knows people who don't understand them. And most everyone here has tried to find a way to squelch who they are, to sit on who they are and not express it so as to make everyone else happy. And one of the reasons everyone's here, just like you, is to find out how to be who they are and do it in a way that doesn't upset everyone else even if everyone else isn't totally happy about it.

And I'll tell you something else. One reason that people, especially grown ups, don't want other people to do things that are too modern or too radical is because they're jealous, they would love to be able to do it themselves. They would like to be free to do what they feel from deep inside themselves. And when somebody else comes along and does it, they're jealous. And they do everything they can to make that person stop being his original self—his self with original ideas, you see. Because they say, "well, I can't do that so why should you be able to do it. Cut it out!" And that's the way everybody shuts everybody up. And then everybody ends up coming here on Sunday afternoon to find out how they can get over the misery of not being and thinking in original ways. What was the first thing we talked about today was desiring to have radical new—and radical means really far out—new ways of experiencing things. See?

So you don't want to frighten everybody else to death. But you also can't afford to stop being curious about the things you're really curious about. You just need to find a way to do it that doesn't upset everyone else too much! But I want you to understand that any time you're going to be original you're going to upset somebody a little bit.

But you know something else, the more people who dare to be original and radical and explore things that everybody else says not to, you're going to inspire all of these people who are so closed off to those things that are interesting. You're going to inspire them to dare to explore too. But it's a little bit of a dance you have to do with everyone so that you don't scare them too much while you're inspiring them. You see? Do you understand what I mean?

QUESTION: Yep!

QUESTION: Does that include Dennis Rodman too?

RAJ: Who is Dennis Rodman?

QUESTION: He's a player on the Sonics (?) Colts (?)

RAJ: Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yep!

RAJ: Okay! Questions? Mom has a question.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. As Nick's mom how do I preserve his special qualities while I'm engaging him in a path of self-discipline so that I can depend upon him, trust him to be home alone for a period of time so that I know that the house isn't going to be burned down when I get home. Or that I don't find another Molotov cocktail in the middle of the road and that sort of thing. He's at an age where I really feel he needs to engage in helping me, especially with all of these changes that we're going through. And he is my housemate and he does have responsibilities. And we talk about this, but part of engaging him in the process has been very difficult, because he has a mind of his own, he's very independent and he likes to go off on his own merry way. And I don't want to bring the hammer down on him, but and I do want to support him in being as wonderful as he is, but I also what him to be engaged in the idea of partnership in life so that we can get through this as friends as well as parent and child. So any advice you might have...

RAJ: Indeed! That the two of you need to sit down and make some agreements with each other and give a little and take a little. Do some things that you don't want to do—both of you—as well as doing things you do want to do. And what I would encourage you to do is to see if you can find someone who also is interested in fire and Molotov cocktails and the various things that are fascinating Nicholas, who also knows how to deal with them and also knows what ideas need to be expressed and brought into play so that Nicholas can begin to understand how this relates to that and what precautions need to be taken and what circumstances... you see there are only certain circumstances where it's reasonable or allowable to explode a bomb, but there are circumstances where it is allowable. And so you need to go where it's allowable and where no one will be injured and can learn what you wanted to learn from it so that you could explore what you wanted to explore. I would suggest that you check with one of the Universities and see if you can find a unique individual who would love to explore with Nicholas in this regard. Nick, I beg your pardon—explore with Nick on this.

If you aren't afraid then he won't feel misunderstood, because he's not afraid. And if he doesn't feel misunderstood and there's opportunity for exploring then he won't be afraid that you're going to deprive him of something meaningful. And you won't be afraid that he's going to deprive you of something that is meaningful. What I'm saying is that there's nothing wrong with what he's interested in. But there is a way to be interested in it and explore it that is safe. And that's what's necessary.

Also what's necessary is for both of you to feel understood. Your mom needs to feel understood by you just as you need to feel understood by her. And that will make a significant difference.

I will tell you that his curiosity is very healthy. And just as parents see to it that their children have afternoon activities to broaden their experience, you have the opportunity to find a way for there to be an activity that broadens his experience, not in the area you think he ought to have experience in but the one that he's fascinated by. You see?

QUESTION: I agree with you. I'm a little concerned about the police agreeing with that line because he actually, from what I understand, he has a case number, because he was given a warning because of the Molotov cocktail being a felony. And first thing that the police officer asked him was where he got that information. And Nick said the movies. Well two 11 year olds in Windville recently cooked up mapalm (sp?) on the stove of one of the kids kitchens and they were caught. And now here's this thing about the Internet dispersing information about inappropriate things that are out there, so you know now they're gathering information. And he told Nick that if he was even so much as caught with a match in his hand between now and the time that he became a legal adult, it would be considered a felony. So there's this, let's get him with fear.

RAJ: Yes. But you see Nicholas the—Nick—the thing is that it needs to be explored with intelligence. And if you are exploring it with intelligence you won't run into the law wanting to control you with fear. And so what I have said is, this curiosity and fascination and strong interest you have is fine, it's excellent. Keep it, but explore it with intelligence.

And do it in a way that doesn't shock everyone. Because you can count on it if you do, they are going to try to stop you with fear. So don't spoil your opportunity. Approach it with intelligence. And let there be mutual agreements between you and your mother since you are house-mates, as it were. You see? That's one of the ways in which you deal with things intelligently—is having good communication and having mutual agreements—so that there can be trust.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have several questions. One is I question at this time where I am. I seems like about 10 or 12 years ago I had a lot of experiences that felt peaceful and warm and good, and like I was on my right path. And it appears that or 10 or 12 years they've gotten, or where I experience them almost never, and it just makes me wonder if I'm headed in the wrong direction or why the long...

PAUL: This is me Paul, I got to thinking... And so I didn't hear what you said got you to wondering whether you were going in the right direction.

QUESTION: Well, it seems like back 10 or 12 years ago there were times I felt so good I thought I would never have another problem in my life, which it was great and it was a pretty nice time for me in a lot of way, at least at times. And at this point in my life it seems like my life doesn't seem near as smooth, where it seems to me that it ought have been better or I ought to be further along my path than I was then. And I wonder what's going on with that part of my life.

RAJ: Well let me tell you something, Paul has had the very same thought within the last month. Here I have been in his experience for 14 years, seems to him that his life ought to be much different in that amount of time, that he ought to have made more progress. And if there isn't more radical change what's the use of his talking with me, or letting me guide and so on. Progress, real progress on your spiritual path doesn't have to do with how many new radical ways of being in the world you have managed to come up with. I will tell you that it really has to do with how much of your time you are using as the opportunity to be the Presence of Love.

To make life in the world miraculously easier by virtue of radical new techniques of living, which one assumes would come from, as a result of more spiritual insight, is not what the progress is really about that relates to spiritual growth. Spiritual growth really means having come to a point where there are fewer and fewer reasons being embodied for withholding love. In other words, the further along your path of Awakening you are the less you will be indulging in judgment and the more you will be the Presence of Love.

And so if you're looking and saying, "well there haven't been any radical changes in my life," you're looking in the wrong place. Let's look again. Have there been increased opportunities that you have taken advantage of for coming from your heart, for coming from a place of nonjudgment or less judgment? Because if there's anything that's going to uncover the Kingdom of Heaven or Reality, ultimate Reality, right where you are, it's not going to be the stimulating and radical ideas, spiritual ideas you can come up with. It's going to be you finding fewer and fewer reasons for withholding love. And because you are finding fewer and fewer reasons for withholding love, extending it. That is what is going to promote and trigger revelation of the Kingdom of Heaven right here.

Paul would like something a little more stimulating than that. But that's not what it's about. So, you see it's always so much simpler than everyone thinks. In fact, it seems so simple that it must be ridiculous and not true. But I am telling you, that the more consistently you are willing to take the opportunity to be the Presence of Love the closer to Awakening everyone will be and the more transformed your world will appear to be. Because the conflict reflected back from your world will be reduced. But it won't because of technology. And it won't be because of more highly evolved spiritual concepts and ideas being held about the world, it will be the result of individuals being more simple minded. When I say that I mean who are finding less and less justification for withholding the Love that it is the function of their being to express. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. I had one more question about my job. I quit my job about three months ago, well about six months ago and went another place for three months and then came back and there's just times I question if I did the right thing. At this point I seem to...

RAJ: Well if you did the wrong thing, so what? The reason I say that is that unless you judge yourself, that you did a wrong thing and therefore you goofed and therefore there must be a penalty, if you do that you will bring into your present moment that mindset and it will color your experience of this moment. But the fact is, that no matter what you did yesterday or six months ago, at this moment God is expressing Himself and it looks like you—in this moment, fresh.

And so, take hold of the originality of the expression of God called you in this moment, remembering that it's the Father's good pleasure to give you not a chintzy little bit, but the Kingdom. And stand ready to receive the experience of fullness.

It doesn't matter whether you did the right thing or the wrong thing six months ago. What matters is being in this moment with innocent eyes, meaning looking at it without judgment being brought to it based upon the past so that you can stand in receipt of the fullness now.

Don't waste another moment wondering about the past. Like they say, "seize the moment you're in." It may seem to be a continuation of yesterday, but God's being it brand new this instant. Life is not a perpetual motion machine set in motion eon's ago. Creation is always the current expression of God.

And with that we will take a brief break.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. My father died when I was four years old and I have an image of kind of a wall coming up at that time in just the sheer enormity of having to cope with that and not knowing what to do as a four year old. I'm thirty-seven years old, twelve days short of my thirty-eighth birthday, and that's precisely the day, the age of my father when he died. Today is that day. And I cry in my dreams, but I'm really not in touch with the grieving or the loss, basically the loss in my waking hours very much.

And I feel like there's a lot that is held in as a result. And maybe that's theoretical, I just don't know because I can't turn on a light switch and feel it, touch it.

RAJ: Indeed, I can assure you that it is a grief that you are assuming must be there. And it isn't! There literally is nothing embedded deep within you that needs to be resolved. It is like watching an old movie on a home projector, and when the end of the film goes by the lens everything goes white as the film flaps around until you turn the projector off, except that in this case everything went black because there was no more input relative to your father for you. That was interpreted by the four year old you as a wall coming down. It was like a door closing. But you did not stuff anything. And you adjusted very, I'm going to say, intelligently and very completely.

So, I will tell you two things. One is that there are not unresolved issues that you will sooner or later have to dredge up and work through. And the second thing is that yes, you will be equal to and more than your father in the sense that you will get past your thirty-eighth birthday. Enjoy the rest of your life.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I was divorced in 1981 and I was sure that all those issues were totally taken care of. But recently I've been doing some writing, and it's been writing from guidance. And I'm curious as to what the purpose of this writing is? And is this for me or is it for others? And will there be more writing, because I'm getting that there will be? And I also want to thank you so much for your involvement with me.

RAJ: You are welcome.

It won't be worth a damn to anyone else if it isn't for you first. So it is for you. And it doesn't matter whether there will be more. Because what will be is irrelevant to what is and to where you are now, and the living of it fully where you are now. It is really inappropriate for me to express any fuller meaning of what is happening to you, because you really need to find out what it's meaning is by living through this process.

If I ever told Paul we were going to do something for someone else, and if in the beginning I had told him what he would be doing, he never would have done it. Because he couldn't have imagined himself doing it and it would have seemed arrogant and overwhelming and presumptuous and a whole long list of why he couldn't possibly participate.

So willingly be present with what is happening in terms of guidance and in terms of writing. And to the best of your ability don't engage in any presumptions about what all of this is leading to, or even what if anything of the past is being uncovered in order to be dealt with. You said you thought you had dealt with everything. Well, you are likely to jump to the conclusion that anything remaining to be dealt with maybe really heavy. And if you buy into that presumption you will begin to resist listening and delay this humongous work, that you imagine might be coming.

That is all I'm going to say.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: Keep up the good work though.

QUESTION: First of all I'd like to thank you for the advice that you gave me the other day. I do feel stronger. I'm questioning why I seem to be experiencing a health crisis at this time? Why I'm doing that? And what I need to do about it?

RAJ: I have used before or expressed the idea before that when the phone rings you don't have to answer it. And I mention it because so many people don't realize that they don't have to answer the phone just because it's ringing. Everyone is so conditioned, not only to answer it but to answer it by a certain number of rings. And I'm going to put it very simply, you've been answering too many phones in the last six weeks. I do not mean the phone on your wall, but the phone that rings in your ear that says, "here's something else for you to be responsible for. Here's something else for you to be responsible for. Jump, and ask how high on the way up. Here's another thing to be responsible for."

And being responsible means, the suggestion is that being responsible means carrying an emotional charge, having feelings about each of the phone ringings. And you've forgotten that you don't have to answer the phone. And you've forgotten that you don't have to have an emotional charge about each of them. You've forgotten that before you can have the presence of mind to deal with any of them well you must have your peace. And so, your peace has gotten short shrift, it's been neglected. "Ah, I don't have to get excited about that. Oh, I don't have to respond to that. Ah, I don't need to do that. Oh, I don't need to do it that way." And you see, you've taken the phone off the hook, but you haven't let yourself off the hook. Do you see what I mean?

You need to let out a big sigh. And let go of all the stuff that you've taken on as you sigh. Because the simple fact is you're not responsible. You're responsible for securing and embodying your peace. And everyone else is responsible for securing and embodying theirs.

In other words, you need to start saying "no" when the call comes, unless you really feel like answering the call. Take a breath.

It happens that this is a time for you to be enjoying. That's it in a nut shell.

QUESTION: Is there anything to promote my healing other than just not answering the phone?

RAJ: No, I'm not going to give you one damn more thing to be responsible for! (Laughter) Good you let go!

QUESTION: Oye! This is probably going to be as surprising to me as it is to you, I'm not sure what question I want to ask, I have so many. I've stepped out into a whole lot of nothingness, as several of us have here. And I sort of saw us all skydiving and free-falling. My main question is, I'm out there and I'm not afraid but also at the same time I don't trust myself. So whereas I used to use my feelings as my guidance I'm not able to do that any more because I don't trust what I'm feeling, which leaves me in a very interesting predicament. Can you tell me what that is? And I don't want to be standing on the platform having gotten off one train and looking to the West when the next train is coming from the East.

RAJ: Instead of this image of free-fall, I would prefer for you to use the image of floating on your back in a river—not with rapids, but a gently moving river—floating on your back in the sense that you are exerting no energy whatsoever to accomplish anything. Even with your eyes closed so that you can't look around to see if you have preferences. You really need to surrender to the river. You've trusted your feelings so that you know what you ought to do. But the lesson here in yielding to the Father's Will is to allow what He knows you're supposed to be doing, to happen at his direction. So it is simply calling for continued trust. You see, you don't stop doing the crawl and turn over on your back to get a rest from the work of swimming, so that you can then once again after reconnoitered turn back over and take things into your own hands again. What you're learning how to do is to constantly be directed and moved by the Father's Will. And never ever again turning over and providing the energy as well as the goal that that energy is going to be used to arrive at. You see what I mean?

QUESTION: I do, but how do I recognize then, do I just discover myself in the middle of doing...

RAJ: You do indeed, by simply paying attention.

QUESTION: I don't trust paying attention any more either, because I've been so involved in my own feelings and letting that motivate me that I don't know what to trust any more. I mean where does it come from? I have no fear, but I don't know how to trust. (Raj, you interrupted the last sentence here so I may not have heard the words correctly. <ggg>)

RAJ: You see, she has forgotten how to be original and how to explore and how to trust that exploring won't hurt her. This is what happens to adults. The delight of allowing yourself to discover what's next is what you are having the opportunity to rediscover here.

QUESTION: No frames of reference any more?

RAJ: Not unless you want to stay within your comfortable ticky-tacky box. You see? Because the structure is going to be governed by the structure you provide. And the structure you provide is going to have to come out of what you've already done. And that's not the way you have radical new perceptions and experiences of life.

When you go home this weekend take Nick on your shoulder—a little image of Nick.

QUESTION: His mom wants me to really take him home. (Laughter) I understand what you're saying. I understand it's play time.

RAJ: It's time for you to have delightful curiosity.

QUESTION: Can I ask one other question?

RAJ: Yes.

QUESTION: What's the difference between guides and angels?

RAJ: Absolutely none!

QUESTION: Is the name I got for the angel that I think is working with me, is it correct?

RAJ: That's two questions.

QUESTION: I know, (much laughter) there's a two for one sale today.

RAJ: The answer is yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thanks, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: The last time that I was here I was struggling in birthing a project that you, I guess I'll say gave me some nice but kicking advice. The project that I called the Listening project was finally born a couple months ago, spending about a hundred or more hours in front of my computer it just came spewing out. And it's really birthed now out in the world. And it's very big. And sometimes it feels too big, like I'm going to lose it, like I can't... I don't know how to keep a hold of it.

RAJ: God help it if you can.

QUESTION: And I have a bunch of questions about it, but I just want to ask one: Which is, how's it going with it?

RAJ: Very well. And I just encourage you to trust the process. That's all I need to say. But don't try to be the process yourself for it.

QUESTION: Well you just answered one of my biggest questions, so I have to follow up with that, which is: I'm struggling a lot right now with, do I go outside and build more of an advisory board and bring more people in? Because I find myself running to try to do that with individuals and then I convince myself it has to go this way. Then I talk to somebody else and I talk myself into it has to go that way. And I don't know whether I need to go in here or out there.

RAJ: In here first!

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: And don't lose the simplicity of the idea.

QUESTION: Thanks.

RAJ: You're welcome.

QUESTION: I have two questions for Raj. One question is regarding another person's healing. What best can we do through prayer or through vision to know and to help?

RAJ: In terms of healing?

QUESTION: Exactly.

RAJ: So often regarding others and regarding yourselves you begin to think that you are the offspring of circumstances, or the result of circumstances, situations—life gets tough, you become ill. What you are experiencing is a result of circumstances.

There's a wonderful hymn or poem, which ever, that says, "what is Thy birthright man, child of the perfect one? What is Thy Father's plan for his beloved Son or Daughter, offspring?" Each one of you and this friend of yours are the offspring of the Father, the expression of God. Not one of you originated yourselves. Not any of your parents originated you, even if they may have been the doorway you came through. Therefore, your Birthright always and at this moment is direct from your Father.

Now if there's anything you can do that would be helpful for your friend who is ill, it would be first to remind yourself that you are your Father's Daughter. And that your Birthright is at any moment from your Father and not from any circumstances. "What is Thy Father's plan for His beloved child?" All that the Father is is His plan for you. Because it is all that the Father is that is embodied in His self-expression called you. If this is the case, you can see that illness is, for lack of better words, an illegitimate imposition upon a Daughter or Son of God. It's illegitimate, therefore, it has nothing to stand upon of any substance, no substance to support it. And if that's the truth about you, that's the truth about your friend. And so that is the context in which I would suggest you hold your friend.

You see, you could just hold him in that context, but what I am wanting you to do is to hold yourself and him in that context. Now there is a joining occurring, there's a brotherhood occurring in this acknowledgment. And that's love. That's what I would have you do.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: The other question relates to my meditation and my listening. I have been meditating for a great number of years. And sometimes, particularly in the past more so than currently, I really, really, really had very satisfying times of listening, however—or silence I should say—because I have had great difficulty in hearing. I use a breathing technique and also a mantra when thoughts occur. But that still small voice is too small. It doesn't come through.

RAJ: There is still some fear around it actually happening. You want it, but you are afraid that it's going to mean more than it's going to mean—and can you take it.

QUESTION: You mean I don't want to hear what God has to say, or the Holy Spirit?

RAJ: No, it's more like if it actually occurred it would shake you to your boots. “My god, all of this is true.” You see? “And if it's true I might really have to think about everything in a brand new way. I would really have to do that.”

Now, I want you to know that you don't need to be afraid. I'm going to ask you when you meditate and are listening for your guide, I'm going to ask you to ask your guide to speak to you very softly, gently and reassuringly. Okay? It's a fair thing to ask. So that rather than it being an earth shaking, life changing event, it's a quiet experience of a new friend. I want you to know that your guide is a friend like no friend you've ever had. And it is your guides desire for you to know him or her as this friend, that it is a relationship of love. Let's leave it at that for right now. Approach it this way between now and the next time you manage to come, and we can discuss it further.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj. Why did Jason die so young? And what is he doing now?

RAJ: At the risk of sounding mellow dramatic, Jason was on assignment here. And before he even had an opportunity to fulfill his assignment here there was a more urgent need for him elsewhere. Which is where he still is fulfilling his task beautifully. Most everyone who incarnates is engaging in their own fulfillment. There are those however, who incarnate in order to specifically facilitate certain things which help promote the work that each of you are individually doing. And this was the case with Jason. He was not here working on his own issues, if I may put it that way. That is the simplest way I can put it. His particular—and these are poor words, but expertise or skill—his particular capacity to be the presence of Love was more greatly needed somewhere else.

And so, for lack of better words, he was called there.

QUESTION: Is he more, I guess the way to put it, he always fussed and fumed about death, and claimed that when you're dead that's it—it's over. Has he been delightfully surprised?

RAJ: Not really, because at the point that he was called back, so to speak, his full understanding became available to him. If there was any surprise it was that he was indulging in such a limited idea while he was here. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: I do have more if I could, if not I could pass the microphone on?

RAJ: Let us make sure no one else is missing the opportunity to ask a question. Does anyone else have a question?

QUESTION: In the middle of this family upheaval I find myself with those I am with, in the middle of what could be called a storm of all kinds of things, but primarily a storm of thought and emotion and indecision. And I would like you to comment on this and maybe help us, help me with some suggestions.

RAJ: You are speaking of confusion amongst those around you as opposed to yourself?

QUESTION: I really don't want to speak for those around me. I'll speak for myself. Yes, it's my confusion and it's not...

RAJ: No it is not your confusion. You are buying into the suggestion that you ought to be confused because everyone else is. But in the quiet of your own mind you are not confused. And you are embarrassed to share it, because you would be the odd-ball. And so, let me put it this way, if you are going to keep it secret from everyone else, fine, but don't keep it a secret from yourself. Because you are really quite clear about it. There's really quite an equilibrium within you. It's just that in the context of those other's who are involved you feel obligated to appear as though you don't have it all together. You understand?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: You feel obligated to appear to be as confused as everyone else. You would appear to be insensitive, not fully aware of the facts, if indeed you had your peace and peace of mind.

QUESTION: I have got to do some things that I don't know what they are. I'm not terribly confused about not knowing, but I am going to have to know.

RAJ: And when it's time you will.

QUESTION: I am motivated in other words?

RAJ: Without a doubt. And that's something else you know also. Just don't hide yourself from yourself, even if you have to avoid making waves for others. QUESTION: There is no way I'm going to be able to understand this intellectually is there?

RAJ: Let me put it this way, you already understand it and you don't understand it intellectually.

QUESTION: I get the point.

RAJ: The fact that you don't understand it intellectually, and the fact that you can't explain it intellectually does not mean that you're confused.

QUESTION: You have been most helpful.

RAJ: I know. I am delighted you came today.

QUESTION: Thank you, I'm delighted I came.

RAJ: I am delighted that everyone is here today. And we will break for this Sunday. You have all brought a great deal of love with you. Let me put it this way, you have all come without substantial shields up, which means that the love that you are is broadcast so much more fully. And it feels good.

Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –June 23, 1996

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ OPENING COMMENT: Good afternoon. I am happy to welcome you here and I am pleased to be welcomed here. Who has a question?

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Last time I was here...

RAJ: Before you continue, Paul is assuming that since in many ways the two of you are learning the same things he is going to be on the hot seat with you. Continue.

QUESTION: Last time I was here I asked you the question about the vision quest. And I had difficulty hearing your answer. I just wanted to tell you on further review it turned out to be excellent. So thank you.

In the past we have talked about failure, the substance abuse issues, entering the void...

RAJ: Failure as an integral part of success?

QUESTION: Correct.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: And you've instructed me about entering into the void and I've been having difficulty with that. And in the past you gave me an answer and in it you said to me, you said, "you are walking a very particular walk. I'm not talking about a path Home. I don't want to sanctify that much, but you are in a very particular path of undoing, which is of coming back into your Right Mind. There is an objective here that you haven't created and you're very close to the objective being fulfilled." Can you expand upon that for me?

Can I add one more thing before you answer?

RAJ: Of course.

QUESTION: I feel stuck, not badly stuck, but in the place between knowing that I don't want to be an authorizer, yet not hearing my guidance on a real consistent level. So it's difficult. People say, "What do you want to do? What do you want to be?" And I don't want to authorize that. I don't want to try and come up with some great idea. So I just wanted to add that.

RAJ: I understand. And so your simple answer to that, since there's no obligation for you to have an answer for someone when they ask that question, is to say, "I don't know but my curiosity is up. And the moment I know I will inform you. I am engaging in the adventure of discovering what I'm all about." And the more you can conceive of it as an adventure, rather than a hurdle to get over the more easily the delight of it will begin to register with you.

Your conditioning says you need always to be competent. And yet if you are open to being in a new way, you are open to being in a way that you have no competence for yet. And so you ride this fence of uncomfortableness where you must allow for flux to happen, for reconfiguration to occur, an experience in which you cannot feel personally competent, and yet not constantly harass yourself for being incompetent. You see what I mean?

You see, when you walk you lose your balance and regain it, and lose it and regain it, and that is how you move from one foot to the other. And if you say, "what's wrong with me, I keep losing my balance every time I try to be open to walking," you see, as though it were something wrong with you. And the fact is, you are losing your balance because that's the first part of taking the first step.

You're on a particular path, as I said of undoing, which really means a particular path coming back into your balance, coming back into your Right Mind, coming back into your sovereignty. And the particularities, or I'm going to say the essential particularity of your particular path of undoing involves your, I'm going to say your having to make a more conscious choice than some people have for your Sanity—than some people are faced with. Because with the substance abuse you have an ally, a most "wonderful" ally to help you avoid the undoing, to help you avoid coming back into your Right Mind. Because it provides you with a relief from what I'm going to call the discomfort which is essential to your abandoning that which is keeping you unclear—meaning not in your Right Mind.

Some people just have an uncomfortable situation and no release from it that serves to motivate them, even if what is causing the discomfort is itself something dear to them, like a lover or a husband or a wife who is intolerable but there is a love for them and they do not want to let that one go. And so it is difficult for them to let go of that which for whatever reason is not contributive to their Sanity.

The universe—infinite divine intelligence—is conspiring on behalf of your awakening and your reluctance to let go of this ally is creating dynamics that are more and more uncomfortable, you're getting less and less release. That which seems to solve the problem for you by delaying coming back into your Right Mind is now becoming part of the problem. Thank God! I mean, thank God or the Universe that is conspiring in this way. Because you very literally are on the threshold of emerging from the other side of the tight space, the uncomfortably tight space that you are in.

For you that which is triggering your return of Sanity is singularly particular. It is not complex. It doesn't have a lot of complicated factors to it.

Now I don't care if you aren't being able to hear guidance clearly, if you are not able to hear the wisdom that is inherent in your essential Being. It doesn't matter. What matters is that you persist in reaching for it, that you persist in inviting it in.

The powers that be, the Universe, whatever you want to call it, is conspiring with you in the sense of helping to push your experience of your Sanity, of your Wholeness, of your peace of mind and your clarity into your conscious awareness of every-day-life. That's why you must persist in inviting this connection with guidance, inviting this conscious union with your essential Sanity. Because if you are reaching for and inviting in what is being pushed from the other side of your illegitimate prison wall, then you reaching for that which is being pushed toward you constitutes a joining at least at the level of intent. And as long as you are engaged in that invitation you are neglecting to reinforce the prison wall.

So the key is persistence in inviting your inheritance, your Birthright in. You see everybody's on their path. It's like if everyone gets sick everyone is bound to get well, because that's the only alternative there is to illness, ultimately speaking. And so everyone who is experiencing ignorance of their Birthright and ignorance of the Kingdom of Heaven or Reality right here is bound to come back into the experience of it. So everyone is on their path as it were. It's when everyone expresses a desire to move forward or have that toward which they are being moved brought into their experience then Awakening will happen more rapidly and with more grace.

It's simply is a waste of time to grouse about the effort it takes.

QUESTION: Thank you, that was very clear. Can you tell me a slight segued here: my left knee injury arthroscopic surgery yes or no?

RAJ: No.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Raj, I'm feeling a strong calling to respond to the possibility of a venture which has is grounded in spiritual activity. And it requires a financial backing that I don't appear to have at the moment, or seem to get access to. And in my quest in pursuing avenues I have been surprised at the inability to have other people join me in the dream that this seems to involve.

RAJ: You mean by that the vision?

QUESTION: The vision, yes, the vision. Now I understand that I have a lot of learning in this process, but I would appreciate you addressing if you would something about my becoming the source, my ability to attract the financial means which seem to be necessary to move forward at this point.

RAJ: Hmmmm. You must approach this without attachment to outcomes. You will not become the source of anything, but you can yield to the capital “S” Source. And in yielding to it you will know when to pick it up and when to set it down. You will know when to act and when to be still. What you want to do is to be on target each step of the way without having determined where the steps must end up.

You may speak to those who seem unable to catch the vision. Do not assume that catching the vision is what they were supposed to do. It may be that having vision verbalized and expressed in their presence was part of their trigger, in areas of their life that have nothing to do with this venture that you are speaking of. What you want is to be on the beam at each moment where utter perfection has been expressed in that moment, not utter perfection relative to a future moment. You see?

You must begin right now to let the possibility exist that you will not be associated with this potential venture in the final outcome. If you are preoccupied with the final outcome you will not be fully present in the wonder of each moment. And the wonder of your being utterly appropriate in that moment where regardless of the future you can feel that everything you were involved in fit perfectly with everything else, even though you seemed to be accomplishing nothing relative to the future.

Bliss is not the result of something that will happen, which always puts bliss off in the future. Bliss is the experience of having been utterly appropriate in each given moment so that you are not experiencing separation from the Movement of fulfillment that God is being and which is looking like you doing or not doing certain things, saying or not saying certain things, accomplishing or not accomplishing certain things. What I am trying to gently bring your attention to is being on the wave, in the flow, in the moment, whether it's going to be a long ride or a short ride. You see. Then you will feel the success of being, not the success of doing or accomplishing. And if you are experiencing the success of being then you will not become compulsively attracted to accomplishments in order to gain the peace and joy of being, or your bliss. And when you're not distracted by a compulsive need to accomplish something for your good, you'll find your good accompanying you in every act, in every little detail of your day. And that is Heaven.

Fundamentally you are on the beam. But to the degree that you are beginning to evaluate what is happening relative to a future outcome, you are moving further and further away from your ongoing present bliss. And that's the real call.

So remember what I first said. You must approach this without attachment to outcomes.

QUESTION: Thank you for the reminder.

RAJ: And have fun. You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you, I seem to be asking the same questions that everyone else is, but I want to hear more answer. I do publish a publication that I feel I've been lead to as many, many people that I'm surrounded by in what I consider the call of service. And what I'm seeing is people struggling, really struggling financially, and yet they're determined to stay with that inner knowledge that this is what they're supposed to be doing, and I along with them feel the same way. I'm doing that. And I have moments of great surety that this is what I'm doing, and then when the bills come in—and I know Paul is going through this same sort of situation—when the bills come and there's not enough money to pay it you're wondering if you're supposed to continue the service. I know in side I'm supposed to, but the material on the outside it's like a bottle. So my question is maybe I could just get a little bit more clarity on what that's about and why we are doing this. And also kind of an aside question with my publication, is there anything that I can be doing to elicit more financial support?

RAJ: Early on I told Paul, “your income comes from being centered.” This is about as simple as it gets. He thought his income came from his doing, from actions he took in the world, actions even that were spiritually based and for spiritual reasons. But the real key lies in choosing to be in that space within yourself where your peace is unobstructedly available to you as in meditation, and then not abandoning that peace as you begin to act in the world. When the fear of failure, or the fear of collapse, or the fear of disaster of any kind gets less of your attention then your peace does—which is available to you no matter how disastrous things appear to you to be—then you find the apparent disasters and distressing factors fading. It's a simple fact.

You're not required to overcome the failure of support from your world out there, or to overcome the potential failures or disasters that you can conceive probably will happen. You don't need to overcome them or do anything to them, you simply need to make the choice for your peace. And if this means that you must meditate three times a day for twenty minutes—not go into a cave for months unendingly meditating—then do meditate three or four times a day so that the experience of peace remains in your memory, to some degree, at least until the next time you meditate and have the refreshing experience of it.

You know what you're supposed to be doing and you're doing it, but your rational mind judging events out there create worry, fear, doubt and undermine your sense of your own integrity and the integrity of what you're committed to. And yet as you know, you wonder if you're not perhaps a little insane because in spite of this you're not willing to abandon the commitment because it feels so right on.

Again, your income comes from being centered. That's another way of saying that fulfillment manifests when you have abandoned the attempts to create fulfillment for your self and have chose instead for your peace. You've got to let yourself say, "I maybe crazy, but I'm staying in that place in me where I feel I'm on the beam. I'm going to hold on to this feeling of being on the beam as though I am holding on to what little bit of real sanity lies in me. And I'm not going to abandon it out of fear, or out of my best human judgment," you see. And then choose for your peace as well.

Because in the peace that you achieve within yourself you find what I'm going to call the mental environment or just the environment of yourself, you find that environment, which is an environment of peace to also be an environment that is obviously safe because you feel no threat. And that environment, that experience is very similar, if not identical to the feeling you have regarding your purpose at this time and your willingness to be committed to it no matter what. And what happens is that you could say the activity of being on the beam, which is the work you're engaged in, becomes recognizably the same or of the same character as the peace of your being, and they cease to be two different things and come together. And in that place everything that identifies fulfillment of this work, or this path you're on, will spontaneously begin to manifest—people will call you up.

Ways to continue the work will unfold. But the key lies not in finding more effective ways to be in the world to generate income, it lies in a radical and to the ego an insane commitment to an experience in which you are not distracted from peace and you are not distracted from your work. It's when you become fragmented mentally by distractions that the cohesiveness of the fulfillment of your purpose for being seems to disappear. But it's when you come into the simplicity of the peace of your being that you find that which you are committed to in terms of the work, becoming nurtured and supported and strengthened by the simplicity of the oneness of the peace of your being and your being on purpose or on the beam, you see.

I will tell you that Paul thought that was the most impractical thing I could have told him. But I will tell you it's the most practical thing, the most fundamentally practical thing I could tell you. And Paul has had now fourteen years of experiencing having his needs met without his doing a single thing from the level of his reasoning and thinking to generate it. And he ain't special, Paul isn't! And so no one else has to be special in order to have the same experience.

You know what commitment really means? It means not indulging in any distractions to a single purpose. It's about the easiest thing one can do. And everyone can do it. And everyone is going to learn how to do it, because it's the way you come back into your Sanity and the direct daily experience of Reality that isn't filled with conflict or threat or that which undermines and ruins your experience of your integrity.

That in you which tells you that you are on the right track and that you are on purpose is not leading you astray. It is the wisdom of your being. And I encourage you to honor it. What I encourage you to dishonor is the suggestion that you have justification for abandoning your peace about it. Because it's only in staying with your peace that you can find that your inherent peace is the nurturer or your fulfillment of purpose, and you can't have one without the other. What this means is that the experience of fulfillment of purpose will always be the result of the expenditure of no personal effort.

You have the feel of what I am saying. You will have to ultimately give yourself permission to stand in the world on such a radical basis and let the chips fall where they may as far as what everyone else thinks. If more people don't do this everyone else will not have the opportunity to see that there's a different way to live in the world than the way they're living. They won't have the inspiration to live a different way and they will compulsively continue to reach for and create their good.

There is a courage in you and sometimes "they" and "them" and what "they" and "them" believe undermines or tends to disqualify the courage that you feel without being overcome by doubt within yourself. And I'm encouraging you to trust this part of you that knows it's on the beam and isn't afraid on her own to follow through with it. Just remember to bring to that a commitment to your peace, your centeredness. Mind you in all that I've said I have not talked about lofty spiritual principles or the application of complex spiritual ideas. It's utterly simple and can be found in the simple practice of meditation, two, three, four times a day, even if it's for ten minutes at a time, but long enough to remind you of the experience of peace that isn't circumstantial.

I'm going to just let you abide with that.

You are welcome. We'll take a break.

RAJ: Before we continue with another question, I would just like to add to the last answer. To be engaged in a "good work," to be engaged in a spiritual work will never be sufficient to carry you through any more than good looks will be sufficient to carry a marriage through. The only thing that will carry you through is when whatever you're doing, whether it's a spiritual work or whether it is being an accountant, the only thing that will carry you through with an experience of your fulfillment is if you are unwilling to abandon your peace, because when you're in your peace you're able to tell when you're on the beam and those two things together are what are sufficient to carry you through.

Because that's where the commitment comes from that allows for the follow through.

Some people say, "well, I was engaged in an obviously good work, why didn't it work out?" The focus was in the wrong place. That's why what I said to you is so key to your experience of fulfillment in what you're doing. And it's something that is important for everyone to understand. High motives will never be enough, because somewhere along the line those motives can be successfully challenged. But the one thing that can't be challenged successfully is when you are feeling the stability and the security and the groundedness of being connected with your being, because your being isn't a private possession of yours but is the very presence of God undistorted by any concepts you have about being a human being with all the frailties and limitations that everyone says or you have been educated to believe are inherent in being a human being.

So, that is the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I'm trying to sell our house and find that with so many different opinions from so many people I'm struggling to stay in my peace. So I'd like you to tell me how much I should ask for the house, when will it sell and will I then move to Woodbe (sp?) Island to sell my mom's house?

Not that what you've told anybody else here has escaped me, but...

RAJ: I was going to say that it doesn't matter what anyone else says, because you're not in charge and they're not in charge. The house will sell. And I will say that the asking price is appropriate. And where you will go after it sells will be a delightful surprise for you because I'm not going to tell you where you are going. The key however is to realize that you don't have to accommodate anything outside of what you find yourself knowing when you're in your peace.

Now remember that you don't get in your peace so that you can become clear about how to be in the world better or more effectively. Which is another way of saying, you don't get into your peace so that you can learn how to be more effective when you're out of your peace. Do you see what I mean?

So, you value your peace enough to choose for it and then pay attention to life from within it. And be in the world from there. In other words, to the best of your ability at in the world, not on the basis of your conditioned thinking or anyone else's, but on the basis of what you find yourself knowing when you're in your peace. And if you begin to lose that groundedness, that knowing, don't become more compulsive trying to get things to work better in your world, sit down or stand at the sink and stop what you're doing and take a few deep breaths and at least be willing to connect with your peace right then and there, even if you can't sit down and meditate for a full meditation period, you see.

The real point is to remember not to succumb to the suggestion that you can figure it out for yourself. “Gee, it would be swell if it worked out this way. Wouldn’t it be wonderful if it worked out that way. It would fit into my plans so beautifully. And it wouldn’t hurt anybody if it happened this way. I’m going to visualize it happening that way. It’s obvious that everyone including me would benefit,” except you don’t say, including me, you say, “it’s obvious everyone would benefit. It would be a blessing for everyone,” and unsaid, “if I got it my way, because I’m such a magnanimous person.” This is the way the ego works. I’m not saying this is the way you work.

What is Thy Birthright man, Child of the Perfect One. What is Thy Father’s plan for His beloved Son,” words of a hymn or daughter. That’s the question when you stand at the kitchen sink, or talk to the realtor, or consider talking with your partner or your expartner to be. It’s not, “what would work out best for me? What would work for me that could bless him so that at least I could look like I’m thoughtful, a considerate person.” “What is my Birthright? What is my Father’s plan for me, His beloved Daughter?” When you ask that it turns your attention into a new direction, because afterall His movement as fulfillment that’s identified as you and everyone else may well be different from your most wonderful or most manipulative concept, you see. If you would just remember to ask that, “What is Your plan for me, because I know it must be one of perfect fulfillment.” And then listen.

And remember that whenever you are thinking you are never in your peace. Thinking is what you all engage in in order not to have to experience the void. You think to fill the gap of nothingness. And yet the nothingness, the void, if you will, is the womb of creation, which means that it’s the womb of your fulfillment. But you all think to avoid the silence. And you all think as a defense against a good that you didn’t have a chance to pick, you see. “I’m a little afraid of what God might have in store for me,” you see. “It might be more good than I can take. It might come faster than I can take it.”

So sometimes thinking is a defense against the influx of good that might cause you to lose control. And sometimes thinking is a means of maintaining active independence from God so that you can have the trill of authorizing something and being creator yourself. But at all times when you’re thinking you cannot experience your peace, you cannot BE experiencing your peace. And if you’re not experiencing your peace you’ve lost the beam, you’re off the track. The essence of the nature of you is unavailable to you. That which constitutes your groundedness and invulnerability seems unavailable to you, which makes it even more imperative to think, you see. You think and lose your groundedness which makes you more vulnerable, which makes it more imperative that you think better and better and better.

Your selling of your house, whatever you do with your mother’s house, it all sits there in front of you as a delightful opportunity to experience the perfection of the way everything fits together because it all identifies fulfillment of purpose set into motion by God, and which is therefore flawless but as beautiful in grace as the most exquisitely performed ballet. Because the Movement of Creation is art. It's not just creation!

That's your answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very, very much.

RAJ: You're welcome. You're welcome.

And there's a young man with an army hat on that has a question. And I remember his name is Nick, not Nicholas.

QUESTION: Very good! All right. To tell you the truth this is kind of actually a double question here.

RAJ: Most people don't ask just one question, a couple are slipped in with it. So you fit right in.

QUESTION: Okay! From the last time I was here the question I asked was about my encounters with getting frequently busted with my, how should I say, obsession with fire and stuff. And don't get me wrong you did a very good answer, but that still didn't answer why everything like that was happening to me.

RAJ: It is not happening to you because you need to stop doing what you're doing. It is happening to you because along with learning, shall I say, along with breaking boundaries, you must also become mature enough to break the boundaries in a way that doesn't alarm or harm anyone else. And so, what it is is, it is really a call for you because you are engaging in activities of a more adult nature than your years, it is the obligation for you to think in a broader perspective that is also more grown up than your years.

It's happening because it's important for you to be safe. And so the universe says, "Ah, here is a young man who is fearless, and who is embracing more than is usual for one of his years. We cannot let him do this and end up being hurt in the process. And so we're going to provide the firm guidance," if you will, "the obvious need for him to purposely be curious about and fascinated with how to be radical with intelligence." The universe is on your side in other words. The powers that make things work are standing in support in your bravery, your courage, and saying to you, "along with the bravery and courage is a capacity in you that you need to also awaken, bring into the foreground of the intelligence and the thoughtfulness that allows you to do it without alarming everyone so much that they force you to stop." It's like the universe loves you enough to say, "we honor your interest and we want you to survive it." You see?

QUESTION: Thanks. And the second question was...

RAJ: I need to just add one little thing because it is part of the whole thing.

Your friends, let me put it this way, in some respects because you are the explorer you are the ring-leader, you're the one stepping out, not the others, they're not stepping out first, you're stepping out and they are inspired we'll say, but because they're not initiating it the motivation for it isn't starting with them. The universe is not saying, "we need to watch them to see that they survive their curiosity," because it's your curiosity first, not theirs first. And so, what I want to point out is that you are going to have to be more mature relative to fire and the exploration of it. You are going to have to be more mature regarding fire for them. Do you see what I mean? They're not going to want to do it themselves. But you're the one whose finding circumstances confronting you that say, "you must approach this maturely."

So you cannot afford to listen to their boundless enthusiasm for radical things. You've got to be connected to the mature part in you that says, "no" to you because it's important for you to survive your curiosity, and also say "no" for them. You see?

Okay, now you can ask your second question.

QUESTION: Okay, the second question was, how do I put this, my mom has a quote "boyfriend" unquote, named Neal he was in the army for several years, that's where I got the hat and several other things. And I can't say that man hasn't got along ever so perfectly, I mean from my views the man's all metaphors, or... And him and me just... All right, say you have two test tubes, right? Here's an example: Okay, two test tubes, one is filled with me and the other is filled with Neal, mix them together and you get a nuclear explosion. So I guess my question is how do I get along better, or if he ever decides to move out how do I adapt?

RAJ: If he decides to move out or move in? Are you not very adaptable?

QUESTION: Let me just say that in the period of things that are happening right now I pretty much have zero tolerance for this guy.

RAJ: If he moves in I'll answer your question. In other words, don't cross that bridge until you get to it. And don't fill today with reactions to what you imagine it will be like if it happens. Because then today gets clouded by reactions to something that hasn't happened and may not happen. And let me put it this way, if it happens then there will be an answer and I will be glad to answer it then.

QUESTION: Okay, thanks.

RAJ: You're welcome.

QUESTION: Well, I'm feeling fairly fractured, and I've been listening to your answers all day, and it feels like everything is up in the air right now. I'm not feeling much guidance one way or the other. My father's quite ill, he's hearing voices that he thinks are the devil. He's not responding to medication. I'm considering a move out of State which seems to have thrown everything up in the air in my life. I'm not clear about the purpose of relationships that have come into my life right now. My career feels up in the air. And this feels like sort of a familiar state to be in this sort of fractured, uncertain place which seems very hard to resolve.

RAJ: This contemplated move is based upon a clear sense of direction relative to your fulfillment?

QUESTION: No, if it was clear I wouldn't have felt so up in the air about it.

RAJ: What I'm really focusing on here is are you doing it for someone else, or are you doing it because it is clearly relevant to you and your next steps of fulfillment?

QUESTION: I think partly it's up in the air because I'm not sure, and trying to be clear if it's for me and not for someone else. In the past when this has come up it has felt like it would be for someone else and not for me so I've not contemplated it. Now in looking at it, it feels like it could be for me, more for my purpose to take this move.

RAJ: Nothing I say should ever be used as a means of overriding any clear knowing you have within yourself. And so what I am going to say I want you to take within yourself and abide with it, measuring it against your clearest knowing when you're in your peace so that you may see whether or not in fact it is relevant to your fulfillment. What I am going to tell you is that it is essential for you to value where you are and what you have relative to your career at this moment, relative to where you are living. And to upset it, to let it go, to let go of what order is here and go and abandon it in favor of this new change is not consistent with your integrity or your fulfillment of purpose. I mean the fulfillment of purpose that the Father has in mind for you, which will be your fulfillment.

Contemplating moving is not fragmenting you. The experience of being fragmented because you're out of touch with yourself is what is making it seem reasonable to make a major change. If you were a ship I would say don't weigh anchor! Leave it on the bottom and stay in the port until you're feeling your peace.

The elements of your life at this moment are essential elements. They're not extraneous, or superfluous or irrelevant. And because you need to hear this right now, I am going to say, your first priority is to honor yourself. I mean you've got to put yourself first. And we're not going to get hung up on whether we're talking about your Higher Self or your lower self or whatever. We're talking about you as you're experiencing yourself at this moment. You must start with yourself and not others and value what is happening right now that you already have enough to abandon the willingness to leave it all and be wonderfully open to something new. And then in that decision to hold off on making life changing decisions take time whether you hear guidance clearly or not to get into your peace, to meditate not out of panic, but because there really is nothing else that you need to do that's more important. And the value of experiencing your peace through meditation is so great, because in the experience of your peace you find that you aren't a leaf in the wind.

So, there is inherent in you a perfect stability from which decisions can be made, and on the basis of which decisions can be made. And the decisions made from that experience of stability will never disrupt your fulfillment. It's when you're not feeling the stability that the compulsive reaching for attaining something comes into play. And the reaching happens without a rudder present.

I will tell you that if you trusted what I said—blindly trusted what I have just said—you would not jeopardize yourself. Because in effect what I have said is, there is no action you need to take at the moment, no action you need to contemplate at the moment. The only thing that needs to occupy your attention at the moment is your peace. And as long as we're talking about blind trust in what I'm saying, the possibility that the elements in your life are all essential, valid and valuable for you, and the reason for accepting this blindly is because you can set down the things that are uprooting things for you at the moment. You can say, "Raj, says if I don't attend to these my whole world will not collapse around me. And therefore, I can set them down for awhile and take a deep breath and choose for my peace, not so that I can hurry up and have a decision, but because it's the nature of my being to be experiencing my peace. And these circumstances are not life threatening and therefore do not call for me to respond thoughtlessly to them.

I'm telling you this so that it will be easier for you to give yourself permission to stop dead in your tracks and let go of a feeling of responsibility for coming up with a conclusion and have a chance to take a deep breath and connect within to your peace.

Again, why? Because in your peace you can feel the security of your being that isn't circumstantial. And when you feel that, everything else that follows in terms of knowing, whether it comes in words from your guide or just in awareness' of truth, it will come in a way that will reveal the steps that need to be taken, but from a place of stability, from a place where your rudder is present. And you deserve that. Not one of you is ever faced with the requirement to act in the world from any other basis than what I've just described to you. The world says, "jump" and you're supposed to ask "how high" on the way up, you see. But it's like answering the phone, you don't have to answer the phone. The world says "jump," your ego says, "jump." You can procrastinate. You can just say, "no, I'm going to pay attention in my peace before I do anything. And if from my peace I know that I need to jump four feet I'll jump four feet.

It is not appropriate for you to sacrifice or abandon what you have, the elements of your life that are present. There are more elements, which it is your Birthright to be experiencing, but the fundamental elements at this present time are essential elements.

And I promise you that if you were to abandon the whole structure of your life, if that was appropriate, I would tell you abandon it and then we could discuss why you have to abandon this and that and the other thing that you thought was valuable. I'm just saying that it's not difficult for me to tell you a hard thing for you to hear. If it was appropriate for you to abandon everything and step out on the water, so to speak, with no security whatsoever because fulfillment of purpose lay in that direction I would tell you to do it. And if it needed to be done in five days I would tell you that you can't afford to sit around and think about it because you must move within five days—"you must do this."

You will not lose by taking my advice here. But I did say take it within, into the quietness and measure it against what you find yourself knowing there. I'm going to put it another way, your life is unfolding in fertile soil. When you have fertile soil don't abandon it carelessly.

QUESTION: I know that the response... one... there's an ego response, that I at one leave really hear you and at other times I think... well what I get into is that waiting is sort of my mode. And that not taking action is very familiar...

RAJ: Mind you I didn't say ignore the whole shooting match. I said refrain from taking action and get into your peace and listen, so that your acts are not the results of an ungrounded frame of reference. I have also implied that there is something substantial and valid about the elements of your life at the present time. I've done that specifically so that you when you get into your peace will be listening specifically for whether or not that is true, rather than listening and having the background of your having come to the point of listening be an overriding feeling that it's time for a big change—a major shift in your life.

Sometimes one gets used to the essentials of a stable life and begins to overlook them, they don't register in their essential character—they're just the usual, and so lets try something new, and it feels very easy in some respects to abandon the old for the new. And I'm saying you cannot afford to look at your current situation and overlook how much of your essential fulfillment is already in place in support of more.

Now we can't arrive at a conclusion around this by communication. But you can arrive at clarity about it by refraining from acting and getting into your peace without a sense of urgency or fear, but because you have the right and you have the time to let out a deep breath and just be in the un compelling place where you can become clear and where you are bound to become clear, because clarity is a natural outcome of peace simply because your ability to pay attention is not being successfully distracted by distractions.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I have a very hard time meditating. I think I've been asking you about this for ten years. I don't experience it at a peacefully, I experience it as a distraction, with many distractions of my mind that I have had great difficulty shutting off. So I guess I need more help in meditating and being able to silence this internal chatter that seems incessant or not listening to it.

RAJ: To begin with I don't want you to meditate to listen for guidance. I want you to meditate to arrive in the void, in the silence, in your peace.

Now, what you must do is either use a mantra or pay attention to the sensation of the air somewhere around the bridge of your nose on the inside. And we're going to say that your ability to engage in this meditation doesn't lie in the absence of thoughts, but lies in your ability once you have noticed the thoughts to bring your attention back to the sensation of the air or your mantra. It is a natural and inevitable phenomenon that when you engage in this you will come to a place of peace within yourself, in spite of what you think and in spite of your experience. Persist, and persist regularly. And I encourage you, if you do it twice a day to do it in the same chair or in the same place each time you do it in the beginning for the next three months, let us say.

The other thing is if you can find a group of meditators, because meditation in a group always is more (and I do not like these words) more powerfully supportive of the individual coming to the place of peace with greater ease.

The simple fact is that you're a hard core thinker, and the answer is persistence. I want to also suggest to you that when you sit down to meditate before you begin say to your healing team, "I'm asking for your full support of my having an experience of peace. And I'm willing to accept your help, and I'm willing to have the experience." And just let that be said and let it express a willingness that is an inherent part of your doing a meditation on an ongoing basis. You're not going to do it so that at the end of the meditation you can say, "lot of help the healing team was. It didn't work again," you see. The point is persistence and willingness. And when you ask for help you're saying, "I'm not going to try to do this all by myself." You are embracing, you are inviting a joining.

Just do it!

QUESTION: Can you comment on what my father's going through with this whole illness?

RAJ: I will tell you that it is appropriate for us to discuss that at a different time.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. We will take a break.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I have a mysterious and somewhat bizarre relationship with my parents.

RAJ: Why?

QUESTION: That's what I want to ask you. And I would like to know if I have been appropriate with them and if the relationship as it stands is how it is going to continue, or is there anything else that I should be doing or saying?

RAJ: Let everything stand as it is now. And I congratulate you on your courage. It is not likely to change, the relationship. I will put it this way, as much balance has brought into play as can be brought into play with them in this lifetime. Don't mess with the balance now. And don't let your ego mess with your mind and cause you to abandon the balance you have arrived at. You understand?

As with Diane you have some essential pieces of fulfillment established. Don't sacrifice them. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Why did I come today?

RAJ: So that I could be pleased.

QUESTION: Did it work?

RAJ: Indeed. I am most appreciative of your company. We've come a long way. Thank you.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm so happy to be here. I have actually a question that I brought with me from Mary Ross, who just I think had her 91st birthday. And it's two parts, it's a little bit lengthy, I think I can summarize it.

RAJ: I will answer your question, not her's at this time.

QUESTION: Okay, my question is about clarification, I think about the Movement of God that I experience as desire in my heart versus the demands of the ego and preferences—how to distinguish more clearly the difference. When I'm feeling inspired...

RAJ: Are you speaking of the differences between desires and preferences?

QUESTION: Right. When I feel that I'm on the beam, on center and I'm being inspired, which is the Movement of God it's like music... It's like

I'm in rhythm, it's like a rhythm actually. And the energy and the joy accompanies that. But it's my understanding when that... plus the idea that...

RAJ: I'm going to interrupt you for a moment. Desires are always experienced as a motivation to give. And preferences are always a motivation to get. Desires do not arise out of thinking, wants and preferences do. And they are based upon a sense of inadequacy and a means of accommodating the inadequacies. When in the silence of your being you feel the Movement of God, which is the Movement of fulfillment, it always comes as an inspiration to engage in an act of giving—to do something that blesses all, whether you think of it as blessing everyone or not it is a desire to engage in giving. It is a desire to give way to fulfillment.

It has been said that desire is prayer. What that means is that in the silence of each one of you, you feel the Movement of God and it's always the Movement, we're going to say, towards fulfillment. Desire is the leading edge of fulfillment, instigated by the coming forward of fulfillment because that's the Movement of God. One feels what is coming. One feels the good that is coming and feels drawn toward it. And when one yields to it, one gives willingness for it and lets it in. And one lets oneself be the vehicle or means by which it comes into fulfillment. You see?

Desire never originates with some puny piss-ant little mortal, some little finite limited mind. Desire is, I'm going to say, impelled by the Movement of the infinite Mind that is God. And its motive is Love in expressing himself/herself. So that impulse is felt as desire when one is not inserting his or her wants or preferences in favor of, in place of being quiet enough to feel the impulse of the Movement of God. :You see?

QUESTION: Yes, and what I also want to clarify when this Movement is consuming me, that our part is to ask what, where, how... I mean, we get the feeling and that's our trigger to ask what, where, when...

RAJ: You get the feeling and you can't help but be curious.

QUESTION: Exactly! I guess I'm not stating this very clearly. It's like a two part... His part is the motivation, and our part is the asking... We're on the way together... It's the curiosity, right. Whereas I'm beginning to discover that the ego is coming from a fear based... It's like, okay. My career has been the most wonderful blessing for me to experience learning trust. And what I've discovered... I always tell people if you want to get in touch with God get in commission sales only and have a high overhead. You really learn about the ebb and the flow. My business ebbs and flows. But if I look back I see the consistency. The temptation is when it ebbs, because my ego goes to work, "well, nothing's happening. You'd better go out and get a job. You know, this is not daa dot, daa dot, daa dot...” So the minute... if I listen to that and I get out of my peace what happens is the flow stops.

RAJ: Exactly, as we were speaking earlier.

QUESTION: Exactly. So I’m learning to recognize that and go with guidance, “tonight is not the night to do anything, or call this person or not that person.” And what I’m discovering is what you said earlier today really works. My abundance is wonderful. And my career is... it’s like all my customers are extended family and it just goes from one joy to another. And this is all possible. So I just wanted to be sure about this desire and still asking guidance about what, when and where, versus preferences coming would be in a fear state of lack... a misperceived lack. Am I saying that correctly?from my ego, which RAJ: Of course, lack is a misperception, yes.

QUESTION: Yes, right, misperceived lack. But that doesn’t mean I’m not on my purpose. It means I’m taking thought about my purpose.

RAJ: When you are wanting, when you are having a preference you are not out of the way as an ego. When you are allowing the experience of the impulse of the Movement of God that you call desire you are not claiming a presence capable of enacting fulfillment in your life. Are you following what I’m saying?

QUESTION: I’m not claiming a presence?

RAJ: You’re not claiming the presence of a self who can enact a fulfillment into your experience.

QUESTION: Oh absolutely. If I’m learning nothing else, I’m learning that. It’s very humbling.

RAJ: So, fulfillment is always the result of desire. And it’s never a matter of getting what you want. It is always a matter of getting what you desire, because what you find yourself desiring is the result of listening to the impulse of God that is setting into Motion the wholeness of His/Her expression of Himself/Herself right where you are.

So, you only ever implement the manifestation of fulfillment by letting God bring it forth and riding the wave of the Movement because in the silence of your being you could feel the impulse of the Movement of God and abide with it as it fulfilled itself and ultimately identifies the joy of being for you, because you don’t ever really have a will separate from the Father’s—a want separate from the Father’s.

QUESTION: I’m finding the less I do the more He does.

RAJ: No, the less you do the more He has always been doing registers with you.

QUESTION: Exactly! And it’s like He opens doors, I don’t have to make an effort for anything. It’s just... I don’t want to use the word magical, but it is... until...

RAJ: It's only magical in that everything happens without your having to author it. And that seems like magic.

QUESTION: Well, to end my comments with you, I feel this is what's happening with me. Can you verify that? In other words, is this how you see it?

RAJ: More and more and more, yes.

QUESTION: And more, yes. Okay, I wanted confirmation on how I'm approaching my business and my life at this time.

RAJ: Yes, and the confirmation should inspire you to do less and less and less personally. It should inspire the courage to have greater trust.

QUESTION: It is, because I've also noticed that the water can be shut off in the twinkling of an eye to bring this to my attention.

RAJ: You can shut off your receipt of it in the twinkling of an eye, yes. You're saying that you notice that it's shut off more quickly.

QUESTION: Exactly, yes. So I wanted to give everyone encouragement.

RAJ: And so then that makes you feel as though the more awake you become the less slack you have and your ego says, "it's not fair. You've been doing so well that you ought to have more slack than anybody else."

QUESTION: I don't care to listen to that, thank you. I do want to give everyone...

RAJ: The fact that there is less slack can be interpreted by the ego as the suggestion that you're doing something wrong. And this isn't true. And you need to be able to know within yourself that the less slack you have the better off you are, because the less slack you have the less you can become submerged in the dream, or ignorance.

QUESTION: Well, we're together.

RAJ: Indeed.

QUESTION: Thank you so much for all your help to me over the years.

RAJ: You are welcome.

The flip side of that illustration of having less slack is something I shared in Yucaipa. And that is that all of you, everyone is a puppet. No one exists without strings. Either you are the puppet or expression of God, or you're the puppet of the ego. But you are never a puppet with no strings. You're never just whoever you think you are as a human being. You're never just expressing Steve, or Mary, or Trish, or Nick. You're always being the mouth-piece for something—God or the ego.

Now the reason it's valuable to understand this is that you won't think that your spiritual path involves sovereign independence. It really involves yielding to something other than yourself—the self you think you are, the self you have imagined yourself to be, the self your parents or your teachers or your husbands have convinced you that you are—you are never that. In understanding that, you are always the puppet for something you then have the clarity necessary to choose your puppet master.

And what I brought out in Yucaipa was that when you choose God as your puppet master, and you understand that your only choice in existing is to yield to the Will of God, it is as though the strings—the slack, if you will—it is as though the strings between you the puppet and the hands of the puppet master get shorter and shorter until finally there is no difference, no separation between the puppet master and you, and the Mind of God has been yielded into so completely that you realize that you're Home, that the intelligence of God, the Creativeness of God is what had always constituted the presence of your mind and you're no longer fighting against it by trying to be either a puppet that's nonresponsive to the puppet maker, or a puppet that has managed to cut the strings. You see?

So as you increase in your capacity to trust, as you have the courage not to be the authorizer of your success or the good in your life you find that you have ceased trying to be an independent puppet, and independent entity and you have begun to yield to the Father, whose pulling the strings artfully, wonderfully, perfectly, and you get less and less slack. The less slack you have the more attempts to be independent are uncomfortable experiences. If the strings are ten feet long and you express a little independence there's a certain grace to the strings, but when they're a half an inch long the same amount of swing jerks you around unmercifully. So you may know that if you have less slack and more immediate feedback when you are being willful, you may know that that is a sign of how little distance there is between you claiming independence and you in your Right Mind where the puppet master is allowed to be the whole of you that He has always been except in your imagination that you were something separate having the right to express independence.

Coming back into your Right Mind does not constitute losing your identity. And getting swallowed up in God, it constitutes coming back into a conscious experience of your inviolable integrity, back into an experience of your spontaneous and unaffected joy. And perhaps more than anything it brings you back into the full meaning of Brotherhood, where your Brothers and Sisters have no walls of separation between them and you, where all of the most beautiful aspects of the sentimental reunion of families at Christmas time is magnified beyond anything you could imagine. Because not being estranged from your family is the joy of being.

So let yourself be a puppet. And let yourself decide who your puppet master will be. Because you are a puppet whether you like it or not. And choose your puppet master and yield to your puppet master so the strings can shorten, and you can return to the fullness and the joy of being that it's your Birthright to be experiencing.

I thank you all for being here.

We thank you for being here.

You are welcome. We will call it a day.

ANSWER: Good morning. Who has a question?

QUESTION: Good morning.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: On the basis that I don't know what's best for anybody, including me, I've mostly stopped telling my sons what to do. They're 18 and 20 now. Mostly this has had wonderful results, but they continue to smoke Cannabis and this does bother me. For a long time I've practiced overlooking their faults and seeing only the good in them. But am I being irresponsible in allowing the smoking of Cannabis at home? Could you say something about drugs and a parent's responsibility please? Thank you.

ANSWER: To say that you don't know what is best for anybody else does not mean you're a fool. It doesn't mean that you will have nothing to say. What it means is that you will not say something based upon your best judgments or your conditioned thinking or what you were taught was right and wrong. You see, if you just say, "I don't know what is best for anyone," or, "nothing that I see means anything," that's just half of the equation. Because in the recognition that you don't know from a tiny personal standpoint what is appropriate, doesn't mean that knowing what is appropriate is unavailable to you, it doesn't mean that what does have meaning is unavailable to you. It just means that based on your education you don't know what's best, because you don't have all the factors, I mean infinitely speaking or divinely speaking. So you say, "I don't know what's best for my sons, so I am going to be still and listen for what is appropriate for me to say or what is not appropriate for me to say," you see.

Now doing this involves a certain risk, because if you base your actions on your training and your conditioned thinking there's a certain confidence you have in saying to somebody else, "this is wrong, stop it." But if you choose to humbly acknowledge that you don't have all the factors to know what is truly appropriate and then you listen to know whether to say something or not, and you find yourself impelled to say something and you say it, you can't say it with the same confidence because it hasn't come out of your upbringing, it hasn't come from that acquired place of assurance that your training has supplied you with. What that really means is that you're not able to bring any degree of willfulness to what you're saying, because what you're saying didn't originate from your best judgments, you see.

Now, it is your home is it not? They are living in your home, you're not living in their home? You have to be able to live in your home within your comfort zone. And whether your comfort zone is constituted of your great enlightenment or your current ignorance it is still your home, the rules of which must be honored. Why? So that you aren't constantly living on the edge of your comfort zone, feeling uncomfortable. This is the first point. So you may have to say "no" to the use of drugs in your own home even though you are not telling them that they must stop, period, in their life. You must honor your integrity no matter how advanced or how ignorant it might be at the moment. You understand?

When you realize you have the right to operate within your comfort zone in your home it will be much easier to love them. When you think you have to cater to them for fear of upsetting them, for fear of stepping on the toes of their freedom and you cannot be at peace in your own home, it becomes hard to love them because you're sacrificing yourself for them and abandoning whatever degree of integrity you have come to embrace and embody for yourself in your life.

It's very hard to love another. And when you are not able to love them it's very hard to speak to them in a way that they would recognize as love being expressed or wisdom being expressed.

So you're not here to control them, but you're also not here to be controlled by them. So the real question is: "Am I willing to sacrifice my comfort for them, or am I insistent upon functioning within my comfort zone, my greatest sense of integrity at the moment, and in so doing setting a good example—teaching that—while leaving them free to decide what they want about their use of drugs elsewhere. That's the real question. And if you will answer that question with self-respect then when you do speak and say, "thus far and no farther in my home," it is not likely to be heard as a put-down or a challenge or a degrading of them, but rather as a clear expression of you. And because there is no animosity or antagonism in it, it invites them to respect you, you see.

That is all I am going to say at this moment, although your question embraced more. We will be covering the rest of it during the course of this weekend. You're welcome.

I must share that one of the participants in this gathering has been listening to audio tapes of our gatherings. And at the end of an answer I will always say, "hands," and in listening to the tapes he thought I was calling for my assistant hands to do something. (Laughter) Hands.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have a question about genetics. We have a daughter, which is adopted, among other children, from Vietnam. And when she grew up one could see that she's different. She's different and at the same time she of course acquired also concepts we gave her, so there was a mixture between genetics and acquired knowledge. And I think probably neither of them is her real self.

I wanted to ask you whether genetics play any role in a human being when it's going towards enlightenment, when it's becoming its Self? Or personally speaking for you, did your lineage, your descendency from the House of David have any influence of you, or your being the son of Mary, did that have any influence of you or is that totally a world of illusions?

ANSWER: Well, I was no more free of the influence of lineage and family and nationality than anyone else is. But genetics and lineage, concepts that are taught are all not representative of what the real individual is, although they are not exclusive of what the individual is. What happens in the process of waking up is realizing that genetics and conditionings, habitual behaviors, mutual agreements that cause cultures to come into play and so on, all of these things are not what give identity to individuality and are not the source of one's being or identity.

As one Awakens one shifts from the ego identifications which are all based upon body and behavior and concepts. So that one arrives at a point where he doesn't know who he is—just as you arrive at a point where you know that you don't know what is appropriate for your sons or for someone else—you arrive at this not-knowing place. You realize that there is a different source of your existing than your body and your genes and your family and your nationality and so on. When you arrive at this point of inner discovery it doesn't feel so much like a discovery, it feels like a loss because all of a sudden the things you relied upon to give yourself definition you realize are not what give you definition. That is a point of enlightenment, but you haven't yet discovered what is the source of your existing, of your presence.

This vestibule or this not-knowing place is the most valuable place any of you have available to you right now. Because in the absence of thinking you know what everything is, something new can register with you. It's an uncomfortable place because you've been raised to feel that you must be in charge, and in order to be in charge you must know certain things, and therefore if you are abandoning those things you thought you knew then you're no longer in charge and that's very scary.

Don't shy away from this essential step just because your ego is uncomfortable. You need to take the second step, which is to inquire as to what is Real, to inquire, "Who am I? What is my Source?" You see. And I'll give you all a clue: The question isn't "who am I?" The question is: "What am I?" And as long as you try to answer the question "who am I," you're always going to come up with an answer different from the Real one, which is you are the presence of God expressed, or the presence of God expressing Himself. You are a function, not a thing. You are a Movement, not an object. You are, you could say, the place where God shines through, you see. That's a what, not a who.

The fall was the result of the attempt to answer “who am I,” you see. Everyone was experiencing being what they were. But the minute the question, “well, who is this that I am,” the moment that that question occurred one had to go into his or her imagination and fabricate an idea different from what they were, you see, to come up with a definition. And the process of Awakening is the process of relinquishing these definitions that have been acquired and built and held together quite firmly by great feats of unnatural self-control.

So genetics is not a governing factor in any eternal sense. Conditionings are not governing factors in Reality, even though you choose to govern yourselves according to them by choice. It’s not God’s Law that they are governing. It’s your choice to act or to behave as though they govern.

At the same time God is infinite and infinitely expresses Himself in infinite variety you might say, but the variety is not genetic in origin. Okay? So there will still be the infinite diversification of the expression of Love that is what God is being right here, right now and looking like all of this.

You see, what’s happened is that those who have said “who am I” and have come up with a definition that they’re satisfied with immediately found themselves on the outside of the experience of what they were—it seemed to be unavailable to them. And then they looked at the infinite manifestation of God and tried to understand it in a disconnected way too. And so the infinite diversity and infinite variety of the expression of Love has been defined in terms of physics and genetics and so on. But you can’t start with the manifestation of God having left God out of the picture and arrive at any clear experience of what its True Meaning is. You see.

So as one begins to Awaken one begins to stop valuing the genetic concepts, the scientific concepts, the cultural concepts, the social concepts, the personal concepts and says, “Maybe there’s a different way to look at all of this. Maybe I don’t know what it all really is. And so I’m going to become curious. I’m going to allow myself to be in a neutral inner place where the Real Meaning of everything can present itself to me, instead of my trying to figure it out.” And that’s the way one becomes free of an obsessive preoccupation with the manifestation and all the definitions given to it and can—I’m going to say—shift into being what he is, rather than who he thinks he is and how everything appears from that standpoint of who he thinks he is. Then the presence of God that is everywhere can begin to register as what the presence of God is. And coming back into your Right Mind begins. Enlightenment occurs. And confusion and insanity fade.

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Good morning. I'm really pleased to be in your presence this morning.

ANSWER: Well, I am pleased to be in your presence.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: It's the same presence, you know.

QUESTION: Thank you.

My question or statement is a desire to find out what's going on. It goes back a long, long time. And my wife... I have a very, very difficult relationship with my wife. And I seem to have periods where we seem to be together in a loving space and then it wanes and I have a desire to leave the relationship, you know, this relationship isn't working, this isn't God's Will for us. And I have actually left the relationship four times over the last twenty years. And we keep coming back together again. And we just seem to go through the same process. And I don't know whether it is the Will for us to be together or how I see my wife is it my own projections? And that's one part of the difficulty in my life.

ANSWER: Let me ask a question. Does it appear to you that being with her requires you to function outside of your integrity?

QUESTION: Sometimes, yes, sometimes.

ANSWER: Why do you do it? Why do you sacrifice your integrity in those instances?

QUESTION: Basically I'm coming from a point of fear. If the relationship ends everything else will have to end—family, house, business. And it almost came to an end already and I literally collapsed with a breakdown.

ANSWER: My point is this: What would happen if you remained there and did not sacrifice your integrity? I'm not talking about attacking her or requiring anything of her, but of your, right on the spot when the call for sacrificing your integrity comes, refusing to sacrifice it? You see, when you actually say, "no, I'm not going to operate outside of my integrity," there's a great relief that occurs in one who takes that stand. Because when you sacrifice your integrity for another you suffer because of what you did to yourself, but you say they are responsible, "you made me do it," "the devil made me do it," you see.

But what I encourage you to dare to do is to first of all be in touch with your own integrity well enough so that you know when you are being pushed over the edge, or invited, or seduced to abandon your integrity, you see. Nothing's seduced by your wife. Your ego is the only thing that seduces you to sacrifice your integrity, whether you behave as though it's someone else doing it to you, you see. When you dare on the spot to refuse to sacrifice your integrity and you refuse to operate without your integrity, as I said, there's a great relief that occurs in you. And in that place of stability, of balance that you feel your whole way of relating to your wife will be different. The problem is that the way it's being played-out causes you to overlook the step within yourself where you are allowing yourself to abandon your integrity and then blaming her for the uncomfortableness that you experience.

Now the other thing is you don't have very much comprehension of the power of your integrity acknowledged and embraced and committed to by you. When you value your integrity more than whether someone else is upset, or more than someone else's expectation, or more than someone else's distress, when you value it and abide with it you feel your invulnerability. Not that you are strong enough to withstand attack, but that you're unavailable—you just don't exist in a way that can be thrown a curve by any event that happened. This is your Birthright to be experiencing your invulnerability and therefore your integrity and your peace and the fact that no defense is called for.

Now, as I said, when you experience that, the way you relate will change. To be in touch with it, with commitment, has the effect of uncovering greater order in your life. You could say it generates healing, it blesses everyone. Because when you're coming from that place you're not engaging in attack yourself. In defenselessness your safety lies. And in defenselessness everyone else's safety lies. And when you make commitment to that, it changes the way everyone else feels, who is around you.

Now I'm not sitting here saying, "Yeah, it never was your wife's fault, it's all yours." I'm not talking about fault at all. It has nothing to do with fault and who did something wrong. But I'm pointing out what will make a healing difference because it will involved greater conscious sanity on your part, within yourself. And I'm encouraging you to risk making commitment to it by sharing with you that the result will be whollizing for you and everyone else.

Now this will not be a means of being able to control your wife into being a more pleasant person. It does not mean that it will be a way to save the marriage. This has nothing to do with taking this action in order to generate a result of any kind. I'm talking about taking an action within yourself whereby you're honoring your integrity and feeling the relief of knowing that you're not going to violate it, feeling the substance of that experience. That's feeling your invulnerability and therefore that there is no call for defense or attack of any kind. And then being from that place with every event whether it's in your relationship with your wife, driving to work, being with your children, whatever. If you make this choice for your own integrity and the marriage breaks up, let us say the two of you go your separate ways, it will still happen in a whollizing manner that leaves each of you with your integrity in tact, which leaves everyone, all of the family with their integrity in tact, you see.

When someone else is upset with you their behavior suggests that you ought to have a reaction to that, correct? It's a seduction. And everyone does it all the time, one way or another whether it's offensive or delicate, you see. But when you are daring to be honest enough to be connected with your integrity that's what you will be, I'm going to say, responding to. You're going to be responding to being on the beam, being in balance. And you will not be responding to invitations out there. You see? And in your balance and your being from that balance it tends to be contagious. And other people in your presence are able to feel more balance, you see.

Now what I have talked about in my answer to you has had nothing to do with studying any books or learning any teachings or being able to express by virtue of some certain teachings messages to your wife that will enlighten her or change her. Because it's never in the words, it's never in the teaching. It's in the result of the teaching within you, because I am giving a teaching at the moment. But it has to do with being attentive to the integrity of you that's in you, you see, and then you become a teacher of peace and balance and integrity without ever talking about it.

When you're coming from that place of balance in you, and it's a place that exists in every single one of you, when you come from that place invariably the one's you are with feel loved. You could get on a bus and everyone would feel loved, and they may not know exactly what its source was, but they would feel loved. And yet you haven't said, "I'm going to teach love," you see?

So you don't need a language of harmony or a language of love or a language of truth with which to bring about a change in your relationship. I'm going to let you think about that for a bit and we will take a break.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello. I am having some difficulty between the term Raj and God.

ANSWER: What is the difficulty you're having?

QUESTION: The name Raj. God to me is the infinite Being. And when you said Raj spoke to you, or at least that's what I understood you to say that He spoke to you as Raj, why didn't He call Himself God and have been more specific?

ANSWER: I will put it this way: historically speaking I am the one who was known as Jesus. When Paul first opened up and asked for help, if I had said to him, "my name is Jesus and I have been awaiting the right time to speak to you," he would have known he had gone crazy. And because he was already engaging in something questionable in his own mind by asking for help and thinking there might be an answer, it would have meant that we would not have talked any more. It would have been too much for him to take. And so I give him the name Rajpur, which happens to mean "place of the Prince," "place of the Son of the King," in other words, which conveyed unbeknownst to him nevertheless that it was the Son of God speaking. It wasn't until almost a year later that I shared with him that I was the one known as Jesus, in other words, the Christ.

Now I am present with and available to every single one of you, everyone at every moment. And so it is my intent in being with groups of people like this to make this fact known and by Paul's presence and demeanor also convey the fact that my being available doesn't require of anyone any special talent, because Paul is about as regular as anyone else on this planet and has no "special" talent in order to hear me. Does that clarify that for you?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

I would like to share for a moment that many of you—and this is not confined to this group, it is a global dilemma—many of you are too intelligent for your own good. You have developed ways of interpreting the world that are highly complex. And so in order to address you—either in this manner or directly—I am called upon to help you get past your education back to the simplicity of being, which is that God is Love, which is that you are literally the presence of God. I am not saying that you are God. I'm saying that God is All There Is of You, all there is to you and therefore when you arrive at a place where you're willing to relinquish all of your highfalutin understanding and manage to be quiet within in an attentive listening mode then what God is being right where you are as Himself but it looks like you can have a chance to register with you so that you can begin to feel what you are, which is the presence of Love. And in feeling that begin to be the embodiment of love with each other and with everything, you see.

The idea that Love will change the world is as old as time because it's the answer to time. I mean by that that is what will undo time and uncover eternity now, here, as everyone's conscious experience. But when everyone is so sure about how everything works and all of its complexities and the genetics of things, and the cultural things and so on and that is the context in which one's search for truth occurs then that is where I respond and slowly and gently encourage each of you to have a different vantage point, one which is free of your definitions, one which is free of your confidences.

As much as you value your confidences they constitute a defense against enlightenment, they constitute a defense against learning of any kind, of revelation of any kind. "I am quite sure that this is a glass, and that it has water in it, and that water is made up of H₂O, hydrogen and oxygen, blah, blah, blah." Well that's an interesting description but what is its meaning? I'm not going to answer the question. But be curious about the things that you're so sure you know what they are. Wonder what, what is... is there a divine meaning here? And don't be so quick to say, "well, it's an illusion and therefore it has no meaning," anymore than you would say that this flower is an illusion and has no meaning. I will tell you it does not have the meaning that you are so sure it has. If there's anything there at all it's the presence of Love, and that means that you're being loved by it because love radiates and embraces and it includes.

And so it has meaning not just as something to observe and discern a beauty in it that it may be inspiring to you, it also means in a far more intimate way that at times when you feel unloved because of certain situations even the flowers are being Love that embraces you and you are able to feel it. And in moments of illumination many of you have felt that the substance of everything around you was Living Love that was loving you and you felt it, and you felt the Oneness without division, even though there was variety of shape and color and design and so on.

There is so much more here than anyone is experiencing, just in terms of what I'm going to call your world. There's also so much more just in terms of each other. And there was a point at which I said to my disciples, "If you have seen me you have seen the Father." Well if that doesn't imply that there's a lot more to each of us than you think there is, I don't know what can convey that to you. If you have seen me you have seen the Father. If you have seen each other you have seen the Father. But we're so sure that so-and-so is a hateful bitch, or so-and-so is a hard-nosed business man who will walk over anybody, and we have these definitions that we hold our fellow man to. But if you have seen them you have seen the Father.

That's why it's so valuable to not be so sure about everything. That's why it's valuable to have the shock of the realization that nothing you see means anything. Because in the willingness to see it as meaningless you're not so sure, you're not so confident, your concepts are not held too tightly and the opportunity to see more of the Father that is there in your brother and your sister and your mother and your daughter and your brother and so on, the more chance there is for the Father to be seen in them—the more chance there is to see the Father that is there where they are.

And as each one begins to stop defending himself or herself against seeing the Father there, by maintaining this strong opinion about who they are, the more rapidly the world is going to change—I'm going to put it this way, cause the world isn't going to change—the more rapidly you will begin to see the world clearly as it Is, which is the infinite variety of form of substance that is Love expressed in infinite variety loving you, including you in the potential of an experience of Oneness that will cause you to no longer fear conflict and feel a need to defend yourself against potential conflict.

I said that I am available to everyone. And my relationship with everyone is a simple relationship because the truth that wakes everyone up is a simple truth that God is Love, and therefore Love is what you Are, and therefore Love is what your fellow man is. And therefore, there is ample justification in just knowing that, for being curious to see more of the Father that is there, than who you were so sure your fellow man was. You see?

So although we can speak in complex terms don't misunderstand the elements of coming back into your divine Sanity is fundamentally simple. A child can understand it. And to tell you the truth those who are less highly educated have less junk standing between themselves and their clarity.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I feel as if I'm in a place of congestion.

ANSWER: Congestion?

QUESTION: Congestion. I feel congestion in my body, in my emotions and in my mind. I walk a path of doubt and skepticism. I can feel some skepticism sitting, listening to you here today.

ANSWER: Skepticism is all right as long as you don't get hung up on it.

QUESTION: Yeah, and that's how I experience it at times as well. I feel it's aided my survival process to this point in time. I feel as if I'm on the edge, there's a lot of inward screaming and outward screaming.

ANSWER: Let me say this: if skepticism leads you to the point of asking a question that you can get an answer to then skepticism has served its purpose. But if you do not move from skepticism to the asking of a question that the skepticism elicits then you are stuck in frustration. I want you to continue or finish your question.

QUESTION: I feel that point of stuckness. I feel as if I need help to move from the turmoil of the inner wars, and the doubting, to a place of acceptance.

ANSWER: There are really only two things you can do. You can either voluntarily abide with the stuckness until you are sick and tired of it, until you are exhausted by it, and by virtue of the exhaustion you give up, which is another way of saying opening up and then receive the clarity that constitutes moving beyond the stuckness. Or, you can, before it gets exhausting, move on to the question that the stuckness is eliciting or the skepticism is eliciting. Do you see what I mean?

Either you will end up moving forward as a result of simply becoming sick and tired with the stuckness or you can engage in the question sooner when there's less frustration. Am I making sense?

Either way you'll get beyond it. Either way you will become clear about whatever it is you're skeptical about. One way will be harder work. And the other way will be perhaps a lot more graceful. The point is that either way you will have arrived at a point where you moved off of the stuck place. All I can do is to encourage you not to value the stuck place, or not to value the skepticism in and of itself too much. But it's all right for you to be there. It's just that it's not a lot of fun. But sometimes it seems justifiable. Some people use skepticism as a means of avoiding growing, or avoiding change, or of avoiding a realization that will upset the apple-cart with a very orderly life that they've established for themselves. But I can tell you one thing, I know better than to try to get you to change your mind. And I also know it's okay if you don't, because sooner or later you'll change your mind.

Sometimes being stuck is wisdom. Sometimes it's a matter of saying, "I must stay in my comfort zone a little bit longer so that my comfort zone can establish for me enough of a sense of safety and security that I have the nerve to move forward. You see?"

So what I'm telling you is that there's no real problem here to be solved. All I'm saying is be aware of what the elements are, of where you are at the moment. And if you have a "yes, but," go ahead and express it.

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Partly, which I guess is the "yes, but." And I'd like to just be with that for some time and maybe come back to it later in the weekend, if that's all right.

ANSWER: Certainly, of course.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: Hell, Raj. Thank you for being here with us, with me. My question is part of... I've been practicing regression therapy for about 17 years and sort of getting myself into a train of being very open towards other's needs and blocks and fears and tensions. And well, we're in this center in France and trying to develop that. And then I have to deal with people who refuse to transform. And I can't get away from my tensions because I still sense all these things going on. And then there are feelings of love and there are feelings of acceptance and still... well, I'm thinking of a person I worked over for a year. And he really refused anything of change, and then I don't know what to do.

ANSWER: But he keeps coming back.

QUESTION: Well, he left the place now after a year. But the issue is coming back that I'm afraid of criticism and protections. If I want to do something to help a change and they don't want it, then I am stuck.

ANSWER: What better thing do you have to do than the ever presence of Love expressing? But I must also ask, do you have any business loving for a purpose, in order to achieve something, like changing your fellow man even for the better? Being the presence of Love simply provides an environment where another can feel enough peace and therefore enough safety to dare to let something new in. But whether he lets it in or not has nothing to do with your fulfilling your function of being the presence of Love, you see. The minute you turn love into a tool to transform someone you've lost what love is, you're not being love. Now you're being a mechanic, manipulating, you see.

The only reason you are where you are in your process of Awakening is because you, for your own reasons, have taken each step. And you haven't taken one step at any point because someone else made you do it. And no matter how much help you got from everyone else you didn't take the step until you took the step for your reasons.

Pay attention to simple common sense things like that because then you won't be frustrated if someone else is slow in taking their next step. And their not taking their next step will then have no bearing whatsoever upon your willingness to fulfill your function, which is to be the presence of Love. You see.

Do you do what you do for recognition? Sometimes! Everyone gets caught up in it sometimes. And some people do things so as not for the purpose of getting recognition, but for the purpose of not getting bad reviews. Either way, the moment you start dancing the dance that other's dictate to you by their approval or disapproval, you have become disconnected within yourself from being able to be the presence of Love.

So you have no business being frustrated whatsoever by the speed with which this fellow is willing to let the borders of his tent be enlarged and embrace a little bit more of his good.

You don't have a responsibility to him to be the presence of Love, but you have a responsibility to yourself to be in integrity with what you Are. And that's where your obligation should be, or that's where your willingness for commitment needs to be, because that's what brings forth the experience of the cohesiveness and integrity of you as your real experience. And everyone is always blessed as each one of you do that, you see.

You could say that you do have an obligation to your brother to be the Christ that you Are, but you don't have an obligation to your brother to see to it that he be's the Christ he is.

Even so, as I said earlier, you won't even be the Christ that you Are, that blesses your brother for him, you will always do it for your own reasons that have to do with the degree to which you are willing to embrace what you Really Are and embody It. Shakespeare said it, "To Thine own self be true. And it must follow as the night the day thou can'ts not then be false to any man." You get your act together and it helps everyone else get their act together. Try to help everyone else get their act together and you and they will fall in the ditch. Okay, you are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm a student of "A Course In Miracles," which also comes from Jesus. And I just like to read a couple of lines from the Workbook, the comment here... Jesus says there that “the world was made as an attack on God. It symbolizes fear and what is fear but loves absence. Thus the world is meant to be a place where God could enter not and where His Son could be apart from him.” Now as I listen to you and I value a lot of the words you’ve said, I also hear as you speak and as I read your newsletters that God actually did create this world, this physical universe. And earlier you talked about the world as an expression of love. Therefore, I’m in the quandary that we seem to have two Jesus’ contradicting each other here. And I’d like you if you would comment on this for me.

ANSWER: I would be more than happy to. There’s really only one thing that God has created by virtue of being God and that is His infinite self-expression, if I can put it that way, called the Kingdom of Heaven. The world that man made or that the ego made was an interpretation of the Kingdom of Heaven, a definition or a meaning applied to it that is not what the Father has Created.

I’ve said before, that there is only one thing that can be confronting you because there’s only one thing going on and that is the Kingdom of Heaven, which must either be being seen clearly or through a glass darkly. If it is being seen through a glass darkly and the dark image is being believed rather than the reality of it, and that image is being used as a means for maintaining a separate identity from the Father, then that image is as the Course says, an attack on God. It is a denial of the Kingdom of Heaven. But there is never a separate reality or a separate unreality that has ever been created called the world. There is the Kingdom of Heaven being misinterpreted and called the world. Because there’s nothing else to interpret, there is no other existent than God and what God is, which is called the Kingdom of Heaven. You see what I mean?

QUESTION: It’s not quite clear. The Course refers to this world as a dream, as an illusion, a place that’s created in time and space so we could sort of play out the perverse game of separation, that God is not even aware of it. And yet from your own words I feel that you’re saying that this world is Real and that God did create it.

ANSWER: I am saying look for the Kingdom of Heaven in the middle of the only experience you’re having. Just as you are to look into the eye’s of your fellow man and remember God. It doesn’t say to look to God to remember God. I am saying look at the only thing you are experiencing, look there with curiosity to see the presence of God or to see the presence of the Kingdom of Heaven. If there is illusion here, which of course sin, sickness and death are, those are going to disappear. But what is Real here—and for sake of argument I will say, if indeed there is anything Real—what is Real here will, shall I say, come forth and what isn’t will disappear. But the point is you have to start with the only experience you’re having, whether it’s a distorted ego experience or not, with the curiosity to see the presence of an omnipresent God right there, because that is the only thing that can be going on. That's the practicality of it.

To deny the world outright is foolish and I'm going to say unhealthy. To deny that the body exists is foolish and unhealthy because in that attitude simple common sense and love will not be expressed. And the regeneration that it's each one's birthright to be experiencing will not occur because the very denial of the world and the body is an attack on it.

The way through whatever illusion there is is to look for the presence of God right there. To be curious beyond whatever the current definitions are that cause the Kingdom of Heaven to be defined as "the world." You see, I am not saying God created the world as you are perceiving it. I'm saying that God being All constitutes the Kingdom of Heaven, which is the only event there is, the only thing there is to be experienced. And if you're not experiencing it when you're right in the middle of it, and if you aren't experiencing your Christhood right in the middle of your being the Christ, then you must look right where Reality must be going on with the curiosity to see It in order for what is illusion to fade, to dissolve and for the perceiver of it to yield or give way to the Christ that each one actually is.

QUESTION: Can I reply to that?

ANSWER: Of Course.

QUESTION: I'd agree with you that one shouldn't use the metaphysical principles of the Course as the part to practice. And Jesus actually comments that denial of the body is a particularly unworthy form of denial. Perhaps to get clarity, would you say that when everyone at last has seen the Kingdom of Heaven in everyone else that the physical universe, the planets and suns will no longer be apparent, just the unity of God and Christ?

ANSWER: Well, what does that mean to you?

QUESTION: If I study the Course it means when the last person wakes up...

ANSWER: No, no, no, no! I asked what that means to you, not what does the Course say about it. What does that mean in your heart? What does that mean that is attractive to you? Do you understand what I mean?

QUESTION: Um hum. It means that I will experience a complete oneness, not with objects or things in time and space but a complete love for the God's Creation, which is formless. And at that point there could not be time and space and planets.

ANSWER: I would encourage you to engage curiosity coupled with enough humility to say, "I know what I've read in the Course, but I don't know what unity would really mean. And in the place of not-knowing what this would really mean I pray for or desire to have it revealed to me." Right up to the last, shall I say the last vestige of ego distortion that will disappear there must be the willingness to say, "nothing that I see, or nothing that I think I understand means anything."

When you say nothing that I understand means anything, you're talking about your mind. But to say that nothing that you understand means anything doesn't get rid of your mind and it is in your mind that ultimate clarity is going to dawn. And so just as you would not abandon your mind, I am saying do not abandon your fellow man, do not abandon these flowers, do not abandon your world, but constantly look at it with the desire to see what is Real there, and I will say for sake of argument, if indeed there is anything Real there.

Why do you want the world to disappear, ultimately?

QUESTION: It's at this very moment... it's the last thing I want to happen. I'm very attached to this body. While I'm doing this for the Course in Miracles, the first step is to intellectually understand these principles. And my questions to you are only at that level. I obviously see a discrepancy between the statements. So I'm not wanting the world to disappear as what the Course says will eventually happen, in a long period down into the future. My daily task is to undo denial, and forgiveness, that's my part.

ANSWER: I have shared before that the only way the world will disappear is the way your underpants disappear after you have gotten dressed and gone to work. They're still there, but you're not conscious of them anymore. What I mean by this is that at the moment when the manifestation of God gets more of your attention than God does it's like being preoccupied with your underwear when it should be out of sight and out of mind. There will be a shift of where the attention, where the obsession you might say is given, where the commitment is given.

The infinite manifestation of God is not going to disappear, but no one is going to be identifying with the manifestation, you see. In affect, it will be there but it will not hold the importance that is being given to it right now. All I can tell you in practical terms is: Continue to look at everything you see and say, "nothing that I see means anything." In affect, this helps move you to an awareness that nothing that you see means what you think it does. If nothing that you see means anything then what does mean something? It moves you to a curiosity that goes beyond what definitions you've given to everything. It opens you up to revelation. And let that curiosity be practiced with the only materials you have available to you to practice it on.

In the end you and I will stand together and look at what is Real and not see what wasn't real but was thought to be real. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I really need to ask a question regarding the Course. Helen Schucman has been chosen or was chosen as the scribe for the Course In Miracles. And Jesus claims to be the author. The main collaborator with Helen was Dr. Kenneth Wapnick, and he does seem to be teaching a fundamental difference between different interpretations of the Course, which says the whole phenomenal universe was made as an attack on God. That's a very clear teaching. And we have two messages here. We've got a message where Wapnick is saying very clearly that the metaphysics of the Course is essential to understand and that the world was actually made as an attack on God. And we've got other teachings that seem to be implying something different.

For the sake of clarity, and if you are the author of the Course we really need that clarity. And it seems you are the only person that can answer that question.

Are they mistaken in their interpretation? Was that interpretation given because Helen Schucman was a psychologist and was given in a psychological framework, or does it actually mean that the whole phenomenal universe was made as an attack on God? In no circumstance have I heard Ken say we should deny the body or deny the world...

ANSWER: I'm sorry could you back up just a little bit and speak just a little bit slower.

QUESTION: I thought maybe you, as you are Jesus, would really understand the question. Anyway, the point I'm trying to make, when I was in India with Si Baba it seems as though he understands everybody's thoughts and everything that's going to be said before it's said. He's also an avatar and he seems to be teaching something different from the interpretation that Ken's actually govern. And I think it would be very helpful as Ken is certainly a chosen teacher of the Course he's teaching a clear contradiction from what's being said here.

And for the sake of clarity and so many people who are studying the Course—and after all it's a huge book—and to try and understand the metaphysics of any course I really would like to understand this. And I'm still not getting the clarity on this question. Was the phenomenal world made as an attack on God or not? And it seems to be a fundamental question within the people who follow the Kenneth Wapnick approach, and it seems to be definite for the people who follow your approach. And I'm really only asking for that clarity, if you can help there.

ANSWER: Well, I'm going to answer it this way: The Course does not speak of teachers of the Course, the Course speaks of teachers of God. The only teacher of the Course there is is the Holy Spirit, and that teaching of the Course goes on in the intimacy of your mind and the communication of the Holy Spirit.

Now, who is your teacher going to be? I did not come here to be your teacher of A Course In Miracles. The Holy Spirit will not only reveal to you the truth, but will also embrace you in a love of communion and unity that provides you with an experience of unity that whisks away the clouds, I will put it that way.

The issue of teachers and what they're teaching is a straw dog, it can become a mighty distraction from your getting into that place within yourself, the secret place of the most high, the closet that you go into in the silence, where you abandon yourself to the Holy Spirit, “Thy will not mine be done,” and desire to know and listen for that teacher to reveal it to you.

I will simply say without commenting on any other teachers or speakers validity or not, that there’s only one thing confronting you, as I said earlier, because there’s only one thing going on, it’s the omnipresence of God. The omnipresence of God can be called the Kingdom of Heaven. That is what you are experiencing because it’s the only thing available to experience. If you are by virtue of unclear thinking defining what you are experiencing as “the world” then you are practicing ignorance. And if you make commitment to your ignorance then your definition of everything does constitute an attack on what it Really is because you are denying what it is in favor of what you are choosing for it to be.

QUESTION: I don’t actually deny the world. I’m really interested in the metaphysics behind the Course. I think the message of the love in the Course is the most important aspect of the teaching. But you still have a very clear division and it makes no sense to me that if Helen was chosen as a scribe and Kenneth Wapnick was the main teacher that there’s such fundamental difference between what Ken is teaching and what we have here. Now again for me, it really doesn’t make any difference. The message is important and how we deal with day-to-day living. But for people that are teaching The Course In Miracles there does seem to be a fundamental difference here. And we’re having other problems over coffee right now in what’s going on. And it still would be helpful if we had some clarity around that area. And I don’t see that forthcoming.

ANSWER: I have spoken very clearly today. If there is wheat and if there is chaff in the wheat let them grow side-by-side. What is chaff and what is wheat will become obvious. But I am not going to engage in trying to separate it while it’s growing. And I encourage everyone not to get caught up in trying to make that kind of separation, but rather go within to the only teacher of the Course that there is. And then trust. Because it’s in trusting beyond your current sense of yourself that breaks the boundary of separation that makes everyone feel so limited and alone. And it is the key step that is essential in the process of actually Awakening regardless of what different teachers are teaching, regardless of what is growing in the wheat field.

QUESTION: Obviously, I mean I agree with that statement. But the final question and maybe it’s slightly out of context, when I was at the Findhorn Foundation I had quite a profound metaphysical or mystical experience, I would call it. If you are the Christ can you say something about that experience and why it took place?

ANSWER: I will refrain from doing that.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You’re welcome.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My gratitude for being here today. My question is about responsibility. I'd like you to, if you would, speak to being responsible and taking responsibility.

ANSWER: I will ask you to bring it home, instead of leaving it in generalities. Why are you curious?

QUESTION: Because after listening to you on several tapes, I've heard you talk about being responsible, in a negative way, that's not wholesome. It implies guilt, false guilt, that we take responsibility in situations that we really aren't responsible for. And then there are those situations that we're supposed to be taking responsibility for. And I'd just like you to, if you would, speak to that, make it a little more clear.

ANSWER: Generally speaking, the concept of responsibility is loveless. And literally what replaces responsibility is love. It boils down to the motive. Responsibility is generally a burden one takes on, yes a burden one takes on relative to someone or something else. You could say that responsibility is what comes into play when love goes out of the picture. Love is an extension, it is a gift. And when one is making the gift of love, fulfillment is the result. But when one loses connection with the love that is the substance of him or her then one begins to be responsive not to the impulse of love that is felt from within but to the perceived demands coming from his world, whether it is responsibility for watering the plants or they'll die, or feeding your children or they won't be healthy, or conversely yielding to the demands of other's who are coming from a loveless place.

I said earlier that you have a responsibility to your fellow man to be the Christ that you are. And the only way to be the Christ that you are is to abandon your inclination toward being responsive to everything else, so that in the absence of that, in the quietness that is left, you can feel the impulse of love that comes from within. Then someone observing you, observing your actions, will say, "he or she handles himself or herself in a very responsible way." And yet if they said that to you, you'd say, "What? This has nothing to do with responsibility or being responsible. There is just nothing else to be doing than to stay with this impulse of love." You see?

Responsibility is always a responsiveness to something out there. And as long as you continue to try to be more and more responsible, and to be responsible in a more effective way, you remain distracted from the inner connection where your ability to be appropriate as the expression of love emerges from. And again, love is the answer.

You were going to say?

QUESTION: I was going to say I have a friend, a dear friend that I work with, who we were discussing coming to the gathering that we have planned at the end of the year at Asilomar. And he really wants to come, but he feels guilty if he leaves his responsibilities at work, that he's in charge of a lot of things. And we were discussing this and I was trying to sort it out with him where his integrity, and doing what he wants to do for himself, must prevail. And that if he's coming from guidance to come, that somehow it will all work out at work. In other words, none of us are indispensable in that context. He's feeling responsible for holding the whole company up type of thing. I mean his intentions are sincere, as far as that goes, but it gets into these fine lines of guilt and responsibility to . . .

ANSWER: There is another aspect to it also. If one is committed to going within and feeling for the impulse of love to use as the basis for one's actions, one feels one's integrity, one feels whole. But when one abandons that, then he also loses that experience of wholeness and then responsibility and the exercise of responsibility becomes the means by which one establishes worth, you see, in order to overcome the lack of integrity that one is feeling because one is disconnected from his essential being, which is his love, the impulse of love. You see? So there is this element in this particular case also that you were speaking of.

QUESTION: Which would be the lack of trust for the Holy Spirit to work everything out to make it possible for him to follow . . .

ANSWER: No, which would be that if he abandons being responsible in favor of doing what he feels inside, in favor of paying attention to the impulse of love from within that says, "attend the gathering," that he will also be abandoning that which gives him worthiness.

QUESTION: Oh, validates his worth.

ANSWER: And to whom? In the eyes of everyone else, and himself too.

QUESTION: So what you're saying then is that if he follows that then he must risk whatever the consequences or the benefits? In other words, he doesn't know...

ANSWER: He will have to risk the chance that there is a God.

QUESTION: That will... ah yeah... Right! I see, thank you very much.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

[New questioner]

QUESTION: Following on from that point, I'm very interested to know what your view of business altogether is. And whether the whole concept of running a business, managing a business, working, is just so much unnecessary activity from Heaven's point of view? And whether really all of those are a distraction from what we're really here to do?

ANSWER: Well, true business will always be that which makes another whole, that which confirms another's wholeness to him. That is what the manufacture and supply of goods is. It extends wholeness to the receiver. But if that is forgotten in favor of it being a way to save your ass by generating income for you so that you don't go under, then business has become harsh, cruel, manipulative, and has nothing to do with making another whole. When making another whole, or confirming wholeness to another, and the gifting of that, is the foundation of business then you find that in the process you are not only confirming wholeness to the receiver of the goods but you are confirming wholeness to those who are assembling the goods, and everyone is blessed, and, shall I say, selfishness, and the underhanded techniques that are used in the expression of selfishness, will be gone. Good business is that which does not forget that its function is to share, to share good in all of the various forms that good can appear.

So it is not business that is bad. It's bad business that's bad. And there tends to be bad business because everyone has forgotten that extension and sharing and embrace is its purpose, and thus they have forgotten and lost the experience of the blessing that comes from extending, and that is why everyone thinks they have to scramble to make a dime to survive.

QUESTION: Right, I grasp that. I understand that and try to practice it. But in the running of a business one is called upon to manage other people and one's self.

ANSWER: That's just a concept!

QUESTION: That's my question.

ANSWER: It is a concept that is being replaced by a newer idea in which the employees become the management. It's just a concept and one that needs to be left behind. The more the employees are empowered with participation in their business, the more productive and the more fulfilled the process becomes.

Of course, then you don't get to have the brass label on your office! But it's also a lonely place to be . . . in that office.

QUESTION: I accept that too, and I've given up my office. When one is working with others and trying to empower them all, or doing one's best to empower, I'm still conscious that there's still a lot of doing. And my question really, at its root, is about responsibility. Is it responsible, in my understanding of that word, to just hand it over and let it happen? Because I get caught up in doubt both ways on that one.

ANSWER: Well, if you think anything of value is happening here today, it is only because Paul has given it over and is allowing the Gathering to happen. And he is not in charge of it. And he has no agenda. And I am not in charge of it. And I have no agenda. But we do! We [including everyone in the room] are being this Gathering. And so something beautiful emerges.

QUESTION: Thank you, that answers the question.

ANSWER: This does not mean that engaging in life in this way is not scary as one shifts from the old habits. But it is what each one must dare to explore, at least, so that one might have a moment of fulfillment, and then maybe another moment of fulfillment, and then another and another and another, so that one's trust is increased by his experience until finally one says, "Hm-m-m. I think I could dare to do this all the time." You see?

Everyone seems to be emerging from a state of isolation and separation, feeling separate from each other, from his world. How many of you have felt that you were really not of this Earth and that you didn't really belong here, or any of a number of other kinds of sensations like that? And yet there's no place else to be than the Kingdom of Heaven that is the only thing going on here at this moment or anywhere. And so you are in your right place.

Because you are emerging from a sense of separateness and loneliness, and the fear that comes from feeling tiny, to abandon whatever management system you've engaged in or whatever controls you've been using feels risky, scary, irresponsible, yes! But you must dare to explore the experience, as I said, so that you might find that the universe and the world and your life doesn't collapse in chaos—at least not permanently. It may feel like that's what's happening at moments, but as long as you persist, you find balance reemerging, and the scariness of it is replaced with a new confidence. But it's a confidence in the way things work as opposed to a confidence in your abilities to make things work.

The means of moving out of an isolated, separated, tiny, lonely, fearful experience of life always involves letting something else into that little tiny territory of your life. And the only thing that you can let in that is of transformational value is a brother or a sister who is Awake, or the Holy Spirit, or God. Many of you don't arrive at that point until you are in a state of utter desperation. We are all happy when you arrive at that point where, out of desperation, you say, "help." We're all happy when you say "help" before you get to that point and you really mean it.

What I'm driving at is that you have to let something else in that is more illuminated than you are at the moment, so that in the presence of that illumination you have the opportunity to have a new experience of being, in which the illumination of your being, which you haven't been experiencing, can begin to register with you.

In other words, in Paul's communion with me, he has an experience of my way of experiencing. It still isn't his, but it gives him a foundation upon which he can feel more secure while being less personally responsible for what happens. In that experience of my presence on an ongoing basis, he has the opportunity to remember that this is the way it was for him, and then it will click into place and he won't need to borrow from my light to have his light illuminated any longer. You see?

The difficult part for Paul, and what will tend to be difficult for most everyone, is that he and the rest of you have been used to striving harder and harder to be successful independent managers of life . . . alone. In fact, that's the challenge, is to be successful on your own. Isn't it? In fact, that's what you were raised to do--learn what you needed to learn so you could go out in the world and be successful on your own and not depend upon your parents or your family or anyone else. This is how you became respectable.

Well, being Awake is not something you can do alone. Being in your Right Mind is not something you can do alone. It's a "community project," if you wish, constituted of the community of the Brotherhood of Man or the Brotherhood of Mankind.

And so, Paul, at times, would like for me to illuminate how he can be a better independent manager of his life. And the idea that he's not going to have that as an opportunity, but rather that he's going to have to yield permanently into being joined in communion . . . well, there goes all of his opportunity to be respectable as a result of being an expert at being responsible. You see? It feels to him, when I say, "stay with me all the time," as though I'm asking him to give up his identity, because he thinks his identity is constituted of whatever he's able to successfully do on his own. You see? And he's not the only one in this room that's like that.

It's like you're all at a party, and the party is being held in the Kingdom of Heaven, and all of the Brotherhood is there. And there are some, like you, who have blindfolds on. And you think you're there all alone. And you think that you've developed some skill at being able to be there alone. And there's a certain amount of pride in it. You see? But because you have the blindfolds on, you don't realize that there's an infinity of Brothers and Sisters with whom it's your Birthright to be experiencing constant communion. As long as you insist on keeping the blindfolds on, you will maintain this experience of separateness. And as long as being successful at having a blindfold on means something to you, taking it off is going to seem to be an irresponsible and detrimental thing to do when it comes to your integrity. It feels like you're going to lose your integrity.

You are all constantly supported in taking your blindfolds off. And I want you to realize that the only difference between your experience of being alone and your experience of being infinitely united is the thickness of the piece of cloth. And it has nothing to do with refining your soul, or learning more to deserve to wake up. It really amounts to a simple thing of taking off the blindfolds, which is another way of saying it's just a simple thing of letting someone else in.

If you were to go to your mother or father and say, "I've given up on being responsible. I'm not going to be a responsible person any more," you probably would run into some flack. But if you gave up being responsible, and told no one, and your life was transformed, your parents will come to you and say, “What did you do?” And then if you say, “Well, I gave up being personally responsible,” they probably would say, “Well, tell me more about it.” Which is another way of leading into the idea that “talking the truth” is not very valuable. Being it is what’s valuable. And being it is something that’s absolutely private. It’s between you and the Holy Spirit. It’s between you and God. It’s between you and me. You see? And it really has nothing to do with words, even though I’m using words, and even though I use words with Paul, or I would use words with you in the quiet of your mind.

More than anything what I am conveying is love, that allows you to relax. And at least for the time that we are in communion with each other, to feel your peace and therefore no need to defend yourself. You see? And it’s in that experience of freedom from needing to defend yourselves that you can discover that while you’re being truly irresponsible, harmony in your life has increased, and that what you thought would happen is not what happens.

As long as each of you says, “I’m doing fairly well on my own. I’m doing fairly well managing my business. I’m doing fairly well running my business with pretty good business practices, but not really what Raj was talking about” . . . as long as you are to some degree self-satisfied, there will be little motivation to engage in this inner connection. But I’m here to encourage you to try it without waiting until crisis has occurred, when you find you have no choice. And I encourage you to try it for no good reason at all. As I’ve said before, dare to be a little bit of an explorer, just to see what might happen. You see?

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Paul, Raj. I have a question of fear, and it happens to me rather often in the morning, very early, laying in the bed sleeping and half awake, I’m not aware that there’s already talking in my head. And before I’m really, let’s say awake as lucid (word?), I feel the fear of failure—not enough money, although I have enough money, but the idea I have not enough money—not knowing my work in the right way, people think that I would do things better than I do it, I have forgotten things. All this kind of thing. And it change when I go out and take a walk. And then sometimes a lot I’m lazy so I stay in the bed. And also because there is this thought, “well you have to sleep,” so I don’t sleep. Well, that’s my question how to respond or how to make it work for me?

ANSWER: Well, I’m going to suggest to you that perhaps these aren’t your thoughts. That perhaps you are hearing the thoughts of others as they get up and proceed into their day with fear. What if you were hearing someone else saying, “maybe I will not do good enough,”—the very things that you said—you would if you were alert contradict that in your mind and say, “that’s not true about you, that’s not your Birthright, I encourage you not to accept that and dwell on it.” But the minute you think they’re your thoughts then you’re hooked, “what is there in you that is... that would undermine your peace with such...” you see, and then you’re guilty of something and therefore you have a problem, an issue that you need to deal with.

When you wake up in the morning and that thought occurs, hear it as though it is someone else’s thought whose entering their day with fear, and love them by in your mind reassuring them that this isn’t the truth. And then you pray for them, that they will feel that it isn’t the truth and be relieved of it. You can be a healer, if you will, by using your mind in a more constructive way. You do not have to jump to the conclusion that these thoughts are originating in your mind.

Now, as it happens this is the case with you. You are hearing other people’s thoughts. Sometimes though in other instances what you’re hearing is your ego speaking to you, except your ego doesn’t say, “you are not going to do well.” It says, “I am afraid I’m not going to do well,” except that the ego stays out of sight and you say, “Oh, that must be me saying, ‘I don’t know if I’m going to do well.’”

What I want you to understand is that at the bottom line the thought never can be yours. It’s either someone else’s thought or it’s the egos, which isn’t yours. And so as the old saying goes, “if the shoe doesn’t fit don’t wear it.” If it’s not your thought don’t own it. And when I say you’re picking up on someone else’s thought it isn’t their thought either, it’s their ego undermining their experience of their integrity and distracting them into a state of fear, you see.

Your ego doesn’t speak to you that often in these terms. So when you go to bed at night look forward to having the time in the morning when you can be in communion with others and be a source of encouragement and perhaps inspiration for them, because you know this isn’t true about them. Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: Hello.

QUESTION: .My problem at the moment, I’ve been in a bit of a mess really. I seem to be overwhelmed by my poverty, my husband’s illness, and now I have a stumbling block, I’m trying to study and I’ve just come onto a block. And it’s just like I can’t even pick it up anymore. Everything is on top of me and I need to be able to get past all of this somehow and progress with my life. It’s like everything’s being thrown at me and I don’t seem to be able to make headway. Have you some advice for me?

ANSWER: I’m going to use these words very cautiously: you’re at this wonderful place where it’s time for you to give up.

Now, many times when I say things like this, giving up is just the first step of a two step process. As long as you feel that there is something further that you can do or that you ought to be able to do and as long as you keep trying to do it, and even if you say “I give up” while still continuing to think that there ought to have been a way for you to do it, you will not have truly given up. When you say in all genuineness, “I can’t cope with all of this, I just can’t do it,” and then you go on to the second part of the process and you say, “Help, I will listen for what to do, I will be open to and attentive to things happening in my life that reverse the picture here, I will be receptive to things turning around and becoming more wholesome in all respects,” and then you abide in an attentiveness to the influx of resolution that you yourself are not having to generate, then you’re going to find things beginning to change.

It isn’t that any of the things that you’re trying to do don’t need to be done. It is that it’s time for you to stop trying to be personally responsible for getting them done as though it all depended on you. I really mean let something else in, Something with a capital “S”, help. Let your divine Birthright break through your strong endeavor to accomplish everything all by yourself. Make an opening.

QUESTION: Wow.

ANSWER: When you say, “I can’t do it,”—in fact this is true of most of you—whenever you say, “I can’t do it,” you think that’s a statement of the problem, you state it as a problem. “This has got to be done, but I can’t do it.” But it’s really the answer, “I can’t do it.” If you realized that that was the truth that you personally, on your own can’t do it you would stop trying to do it. You would relax without guilt. And in the fresh air of that realization that it’s absolutely asinine for you to try to do something that’s impossible for you to do, and that therefore you can’t truly be responsible for doing it, in the fresh air of that realization things begin to change.

Shortly after Paul and I began communicating he went through bankruptcy. And in the process of arriving there he was getting phone calls from bill collectors. And he kept saying, “I’ll try to get something to you, but if things are really tuff... I’ll try to get something to you.” And they kept calling because he didn’t have it. And there was a point at which he said, “I Can’t do it.” He brought it to me, and that’s when I said to him, “of course, you can’t do it.” And that’s the answer, because I told him, “stop trying to do the impossible. You can’t get blood out of a turnip,” you know. And when he realized that, then when the next bill collector called he said, “you know, there’s just no way I can make a payment.” And because there was no guilt associated with it, and it was said with such, shall I say clarity, even though you would interpret that statement “I can’t do it” as a negative idea that perhaps ought to be overcome, the bill collector on the other end of the phone, instead of being nasty as was usual said, “well you know what, if I don’t have some activity on this account my supervisor is going to jump on me. So if you would just send in $1 so that something goes down with this date on it at least there will be activity on the account and it will give you more time in which perhaps you will be able to do something about it.”

From then on in the presence of that clear realization that you can't do what you can't do, everyone he dealt with, their attitude changed, you see, and things began to reverse. Indeed in this case there was a bankruptcy, but his whole life was transformed as a result of his giving up personal responsibility but continuing to inquire to what was appropriate. You see, saying, “I can't do it. Help!” taking the second step.

Now it's important for all of you to know that if you lean into guidance and you get guidance, you will not end up necessarily traipsing around the world giving gatherings. Each of you has your own unique means of making the gift of the love that you are. And the world will be enriched by it. But take the first step here that you are confronted with.

It is as though you are backed into a corner and you... or you have painted yourself into a corner and you can't get out. Well it happens that in the very apex of the corner there is a hole that you need to slip through, you need to fall through by means of giving up. By means of giving up trying to figure out how to get out of the corner, you see, by somehow getting back into the room.

The powers that be, the divinity of you, has you backed into a place where you're primed for a breakthrough and a new way of dealing with things. And so you will end up doing something, but it will be because you've let help in.

QUESTION: How do you suggest I go about actually doing this without...

ANSWER: Well I would suggest something utterly simple like, when you go to bed at night, perhaps before you lay down, that you sit on the edge of the bed and take about 10 slow deep breaths just for the purpose of letting tension out of your body and becoming relatively quiet in your mind, and just say, “help!” Or you can say, “please, help!” That act is an invitation not to be alone any longer. That's literally how simple it is. That's the key. That's what starts the ball rolling, or starts the domino's falling is saying “help.” Because when you say “help” there's no way for you to say it and experience being alone.

As you go through the problem it's very easy to feel that you're all alone and everything is against you. But the minute you say “help” you have abandoned the totality of the feeling of aloneness. And then expect help to show up, whether it's an idea that seems to just pop into your mind, whether it's a line in a song that's playing on the radio, a series of words that click with you that sets your mind in a new direction. Whatever it is, expect help to come without stating how it has to come. And expect it to be absolutely relevant to your needs.

Now this doesn't mean go home, sit down in a chair with a beer and the TV on and say “help” and let the help come to you, because you're not going to lift a finger until the help comes. Continue to use your common sense and take care of the things that need to be taken care of—the simple common sense things. But abandon the feeling that you are personally and totally responsible for the resolution of all of these problems. And let the help in resolving them come to you because you are inquisitive, curious and paying attention for this help to come.

You're not alone and you never have been alone. And none of you have been alone. And none of you have ever been put into a divinely established position of having to be sovereign in your own independent right. And so I'm just illuminating the fact that you were never made to be the sole and sovereign proprietor of your life, so that you might with some real curiosity and maybe even a little bit of conviction dare to ask for help and expect it, and then actually let it in when it comes. And remember any time you are painted into a corner there's an exit behind you that you haven't been looking at, because you've been looking at the room that's painted in.

And there was an image that I used with Paul, because he felt as though when he meditated it was like, if you would imagine a cone, that a bee-bee has been propelled around the rim of. And as the speed of the bee-bee slows the bee-bee gets down closer and closer to the bottom until it ends up right at the point of the cone—the apex of the cone. But meditation is a means by which there is a spontaneous and irrevocable movement directly towards one's centeredness. Okay? You understand?

In a way, that place seems limited, that in the process your world sort of seems to disappear out of sight and your mind seems to be highly focused. I changed that image for Paul so that it became a funnel instead of a cone with an apex. And as the bee-bees swirls around inside the funnel and gets lower and lower it seems to have a more constrictive experience. But when it gets to the apex it falls through into the Universe, into infinity.

What I'm trying to point out here is that when any of you are painted into a corner there's an exit point that exits into an absence of limitation. You want to be able to get back into the room with all of its current limits, you see. Be glad you're in the corner and instead of trying to get back into the room turn around and find the exit hole, you see. And thank your lucky stars that the Universe or the powers that be or God or your divinity has brought you to this point where breakthrough into a more infinite experience can occur. And when I say a more infinite experience I don't mean a nebulous sort of infinite experience. I mean an experience here in the world where limitation seems to be bearing down on you less, where freedom to be healthy, to be able to complete schooling, to be able to take care of a family, etc., the freedom to do that can be experienced without stress, where harmony and peace and joy can become normal rather than brief glimpses of good that come in the middle of great amounts of stress. Okay?

QUESTION: I'm an academic and I teach marketing. And I have this experience with students and managers. They're acting in their integrity, being managers, giving goods to people the way you described business. But the whole system seems to be causing something wrong. Let me give you an example. Managers in the food industry in this country honestly, with integrity, offer people what they want to buy. But the diet in this country is the major source of illness and death. Managers who are selling cigarettes do this with great integrity, giving people what they want, and yet it can cause injury.

The doctors and the health workers in this country act with integrity, but drugs have side effects, and they know that they have side effects sometimes, and they cause things that they don't want to happen. It seems to me that although they work with their integrity and stay within it—some don't but a lot do—the system seems to be directing their integrity in a way that's producing injury. I don't know how to help them through this.

ANSWER: Well, you see, they cannot express an integrity that they're not yet feeling. As more and more individuals gain a clearer sense that they are divine beings, or even more accurately, divine being, they will begin themselves to recognize new criteria of integrity within themselves, and their comfort zones will shift. And as a result they will not find it within their comfort zone to market cigarettes or items that are not conducive to another's wholeness, you see. This will not constitute judgment on those who would like those products. But it will constitute individual embodiments or actions in the world that will be different from what they were before. Thus the producers of cigarettes will find fewer people to distribute them.

I know that you will say, "Well, someone else will just come along and replace them." But those who are acting with greater integrity as a result of a shift within themselves, will really be the elements in the arena of life that will be transformational, because of the fact that they are expressing integrity that stems from their greater clarity about the divine nature of being. Those who would come to replace them will not be expressing this integrity, and thus what they're doing will not be transformational, but it will also not constitute a force in the world that will continue to give support for business practices that are not whole-ising.

So the key isn't that there will be those who will continue the bad practices, the key is that those who have discontinued the bad practices, because they have connected with a greater sense of their divinity, and therefore the divinity of everyone they would serve, they will constitute the presence of transformational energy that will serve to leaven the whole lump.

There's much to be corrected. But where the correction takes place is with individuals. And you know what? There is a movement afoot. There is a movement of Awakening that is occurring. And it's not happening because I am speaking. It's not happening because A Course In Miracles exist. It is happening because there are more Awake than there are those who are asleep. The scales are weighted more greatly, we will say, on the right side. As a result, there are fewer asleep who lend strength to the state of dreaming. And so dreaming is going to dwindle. The weight of the pendulum, so to speak, is... or the pendulum has swung to the side of Awakening. And as a result, whether anyone picks up a holy book or a spiritual teaching that is truly helpful, they're going to find their perceptions changing without any coercion whatsoever, simply because, I'm going to say, at an unconscious level the support for false perceptions is dwindling.

All you can do in your capacity as a teacher is to help instill integrity in each of your students, no matter what walk of life they end up being in, by reminding them that they have integrity, and that it's an important thing for them to pay attention to it, and value it, and nurture an awareness of it, because it will infuse whatever they are doing and will—you do not need to say, will bless the world—but will contribute to a greater and more cohesive experience of all that is important to human life. You could put it in those terms because they would understand. But the point is for them to value their integrity. They ought to be getting this in philosophy. They ought to be getting it in all of their classes, but you can provide it in your class. And it may be the one thing that sticks with them and really makes profound changes in the years to come.

Do you have a further question?

QUESTION: No!

ANSWER: Okay.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: This is very difficult for me really, but I'll try my best. I have at home two mentally ill people, my son and my sister which is a very difficult situation. They are the constant butt of ridicule which bothers one of them but doesn't bother the other one so much. My question to you is, I find this very hurtful and the hurt that I'm feeling because of it is destroying me, because of my reaction to it It makes me very angry. It makes me bitter. It makes me hostile. And I have said "help" but I'm afraid it hasn't come. So what I would like to ask you is what do I do about those feelings... I feel their hurt sometimes more than they feel it themselves.

ANSWER: Well, one thing, you must stop hurting for them. But most importantly you need a vacation. And if they're going to be in your home on an ongoing basis you need to see to it that you have time off on a regular basis. And so when you ask for help, I am suggesting that you be specific. That you want help in facilitating your ability to have two weeks off every three months where you can be completely away and yet they are taken care of.

Caretakers under these circumstances need breaks because it's wearing, just as... well I will not give an example... you need breaks. And you need to feel a right to those breaks. You'll come back refreshed and able to be for them that which is nurturing without feeling so much resentment and without feeling the great deal of frustration that you have felt. But one thing you are doing that is a total waste of your energy is feeling bad for them. Because all it does is undermine your peace and your stability. It does absolutely nothing for them. It's like parents who suffer for their children as they're reaching their upper teens and early twenties and are struggling with the adjustment with life, you see.

The parents have already done their own struggling and worrying about growing up. They've already done it. Now it's time for the teenagers to grapple themselves and come to terms with things and it's not the parent's part to suffer for them through this, if indeed they're suffering. You see what I'm saying?

So, I encourage you to be alert, mentally alert to your own habit so that when you begin to hurt for them you can say, "oops! No, I'm not going down that road. I'm not going to engage my mind this way because it does them no good, it doesn't relieve them of anything, but it wears me out and makes me less available to them with perspective and love." You see? So you're going to have to use a little, I'm going to say, mental discipline. And then see to it that you get breaks. You haven't given yourself permission to do that. I'm giving you permission to give yourself permission. I'm telling you to do it. I'm more than giving you permission. You need it and they need you to have it.

I will tell you something else: The love and compassion that you give is honorable. And we joy in it. But you know early on I told Paul, "you may be here to serve, but you're not supposed to be the main dish." And I want you to remember that. It's not an insurmountable problem. You will find balance returning if indeed you will see to it that you get breaks. And don't say, "I have no way to do it! I can't do it!"

QUESTION: I was going to say that. I was thinking that!

ANSWER: You don't want to argue against your good. You don't want to argue against what is principled. You don't want to argue against what is going to save you so that you can be available. What good are you if you're in the funny farm because you didn't take care of yourself? What good will you be to them? You've got to see that it's very practical. And if you need to get some sort of aid to do it, look into that and be open to that. Maybe you can't see how to do it, but the minute you accept the fact that it's essential then you will begin to find doors opening. You are worth it! And you're worth it to them to maintain your sanity. And you don't have to bear it all by yourself on your two puny little shoulders.

It's time for you to sort of stand up on your haunches and say, "this is the way it has to be." And then let the means to do it unfold because you have with commitment aligned yourself with what is intelligent, sane, practical and loving for all concerned.

This is not something to be wimpy about and then think, “well some day in the by-and-by I’ll get my wings for all the sacrifice I did.” You will not get wings for being stupid! No matter how much you tell yourself that what you’re doing is really loving. So you will find that when you approach this with common sense and intelligence—and what I’ve been telling you is absolutely practical—when you approach it with practicality and without apology and without argument against it things will begin to change so as to allow it to happen.

You have support for this because it’s in alignment with intelligence (what I’m telling you). And when you’re in alignment with intelligence the universe conforms in support of it. And I’m telling you to have the courage to watch the universe conform to it by not talking it away.

Do you have a “yes, but”? We might as well get them all out!

QUESTION: It seems very difficult to do.

ANSWER: Well that’s just a concept. That’s just a thought. You could just as easily say, “That might really turn out to be easy. I don’t know how, but that might just turn out to be easy.” You see? That’s another thought. But that thought lifts and opens you up to possibility. But when you say, “that sounds really difficult,” all that is is a thought that you have expressed. But what does it do? It’s confining. It’s limiting. Don’t put that word in the air. Put another word in the air. You can say, “I don’t know how it’s possible, but that just might be possible.” It’s another idea, but it’s an idea that opens you up to change from what you’ve been experiencing. The other thought will keep you bound.

And you will get support. I tell you that you will get support that you will be able to feel from now on. You might even feel prodded in your mind or in your being to take hold of what I’ve said even though it’s too hard to believe that it’s true. And I encourage you to pay attention to the prods because they’re coming from your Brothers and Sisters who have a clearer perspective than you and are pushing for your relief, so that you might with less confused love be able to be present for these two who need your care. Okay?

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: I wanted to give you a hug. (applauds, while they meet for a hug)

ANSWER: You know guidance isn’t always fun. Sometimes guidance pushes you into freedom you don’t feel you deserve. Sometimes guidance calls for you to be in a way that seems too aggressive, or to express a confidence that you’ve never felt before because it’s your Birthright not to be as confined as you’ve experienced yourself to be. And so I just want you to know that when you ask for help, sometimes the help promotes change that you don’t think you’re ready for. And yet the guidance and the help that’s given always presents what you are ready for with great sensitivity to your current capacity or your current level of fear so you aren't thrown into panic as you violate these limits of fear that have been governing you.

So because the love of the Father coming to you as guidance, promotes healing, it's going to promote you into greater experiences of freedom than you were able beforehand to conceive you could embody and express.

Sometimes people ask Paul, "how can I get in touch with my guide." And part of Paul is happy to tell them, and the other part of Paul says, "you don't know what you're asking for."

But in one way or another all of you get caught in habits of limitation and you become comfortable with them, used to them, and they make no demands on you and yet you're living life at half-mast, or half power. Transformation and healing means having more health and more fullness of experience become more available to you and so you're going to have to actually experience change—being in a new way. And sometimes it's a little bit scary to venture out. But like I pointed out to Paul at another time, I don't stand behind him and guidance doesn't stand behind you and push you forward where it looks like there's no place for you to step, but just emptiness. Guidance stands in front of you and invites you forward. And by standing in front of you demonstrates that there is a place to stand, and then lets you move forward millimeter by millimeter if that's all you can dare to do it.

But I would be doing you an unkindness to say anything less than I've said to you today. And to say, "well put a rod up your backbone and get a stiff upper lip and make the best of it, you'll be able to do it," that's not freedom, that's not the answer. That's not your Birthright.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I've got like multiple allergies and sensitivities. And I'm on a very meager diet, and I'm losing a lot of weight. And I feel as if I'm just wasting away like on the physical [plane]. Is there anything that I can do like to help myself? I have taken alternative medicines and treatments, unorthodox, but nothing seems to help. And it has been about six years now.

ANSWER: Two things: Not only does each one of you have a guide, one who is totally Awake, standing at your service, you also have me standing with you at your service. And then in addition to your guide there are those Awakened Individualities who work in conjunction with your guide on your behalf—I'm going to say—relative to your physical well-being. They do not manipulate the body, but they stand helping to uncover whatever beliefs are blocking the normal function of your body and facilitating their release. And so what I encourage you to do every night when you go to bed is to just say, "will my healing team please address this digestive problem. I would like a healing session. And I would like it to be maximal.” Not that the support that is given is less than maximal, but by saying “and let it be maximal” it is a matter of your giving permission consciously for the healing to be maximal.

Now in addition to this when you eat, and before you put a bite of anything into your mouth I want you to bless it. I want you to thank God for this bite to eat. I want you to thank it for whatever its Real Meaning is. And I want you to remember that I am telling you that because God is indivisible God cannot be conflicted. And therefore, the Kingdom of Heaven which is the only thing you are experiencing at this moment, even if you believe otherwise, because this is the Kingdom of Heaven there is nothing in it that can have a conflicted effect. And therefore, this food that you are going to be putting in your mouth and swallowing has not the capacity, truly, divinely to conflict in any way with your body.

So I want you to express gratitude for the bite of food that’s on the fork. I want you to thank God for it. And I want you to remember consciously that it has not the capacity to act at odds with you in any way. Because if it exists at all and if your body exists at all it exists as the unconflicted presence or manifestation of an undivided God.

Psychologically you could say that this will reduce fear, which will make it more easily digestible. But this is not psychology that I’m talking about. The more you can dare to look at your world—even as specifically as the bite of food on your fork—with the curiosity to experience what of God is expressed here, that is the way you can get past medical definitions of it, scientific definitions of it and false beliefs that you have acquired about what it must be. And in that way begin to experience the harmony that all of this is expressing. You see?

Now I don’t care how many years this has been going on. As I’ve used the example before: If you have a bomb shelter that had a light bulb in it, but it had been closed up for 20 years, and you finally went down for some reason and opened the door and turn on the light, it would take but a fraction of a second for the darkness to disappear. Twenty years of darkness has not built up a strength of presence that would hold back the light when the light went on. And six years of the presence of some condition does not acquire substance and therefore some permanence of presence that will be difficult to dissolve in the presence of clarity of mind and conscious expressions of appreciation which are forms of love.

So it doesn’t have to take a year to get over this. It doesn’t have to take three weeks. What I am saying is: do not say, “well, this has been going on for so long that it really is going to take awhile to go away.” When the light of truth goes on, that which had no substance—true substance—must end up not being anywhere to be found, you see.

Your body is your friend. Your body has a function. And that is to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. And your Individuality is the presence of God. So at the bottom line, the function of your body is to identify the presence and movement and meaning that God is, right there perfectly.

So don't hate your body, and don't try to rise above it and don't try to get beyond it, you see. It must be brought right into the middle of the presence of God. It must be equated with God, not left on the outside. And then the same thing with anything you put in your mouth. And I do mean anything, including poison. That is an extreme, but I do not suggest that you try, because the clarity needed for that because of the beliefs about it is great. But my point is that there is no substance that you can find anywhere that can act in conflict with your body, because either it's all God perceived clearly or through a glass darkly or it's God seen clearly or seen through a glass darkly. There is no other choice, you see!

You see your body has no capacity to act independently because its whole function is to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. It's incapable of doing anything else. But all of you can by means of fear and worry, I'm going to say you can seem to bias the function. You can't truly, totally override it, but you can bias your experience of it so that you experience distress. And what we're talking about is getting rid of this tendency to bias, so that the divine intent can reemerge because you're not interfering with it anymore. So it's important for you to understand that your body is your ally because it has only one purpose—to identify you perfectly.

If you will get out of the way and let it do that, you will find it returning to its normal function. In other cases you will find healing occurring—shortened limbs becoming extended, blemishes disappearing, enlarged breast for small busted women... (someone giggles) Did I get you? So that symmetry and balance and the beauty that's inherent in the Movement of Love that God Is, is embodied.

So there's great benefit in having a new sense of what the body is and what its function is and who this you is that it is identifying perfectly. Because it's not just a puny little human being that it's identifying perfectly, it's the presence of what God is being right there that it is identifying perfectly.

So you are embracing a new concept of body and a clearer idea of what you Are. And when your thought is in alignment with truth with what is Really going on, as I said before, it will seem to you that the Universe conspires to conform to that evidence, or that manifestation. It isn't that you have exercised power, but by getting your beliefs out of the way there is nothing distorting your experience of what's Really going on. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I wanted to talk about the subject of special relationship as the Course actually talked about this. A couple of years ago I had an encounter with somebody which was a major change in my life, because it was...

ANSWER: What do you think the special relationship is as defined by the Course?

QUESTION: Well, it would seem it would be a relationship where you delude yourself into thinking you love somebody for the purpose of control.

ANSWER: Exactly!

QUESTION: Hmmm! Okay! Well, I had an encounter which had a major effect on me. In fact, it led to me being here because I started listening after I met a person who had quite an effect because of an experience of Oneness. And I held on to this extraordinary feeling of love, which I felt was really good because it seemed to be for everybody I met for a long time afterwards. But I eventually killed it, I think, by sort of being bitter and things like this.

ANSWER: That will do it!

QUESTION: It did! And it was amazing because I didn't think it would really happen, that it would die, but it did. And I've thought a lot about the person concerned since that and wondered if I should make contact. And I ask about it and I do get wonderful guidance, but I simply won't listen when I ask about this issue. And I felt I couldn't avoid listening if I ask you.

ANSWER: It's very simple. Do not touch this relationship with a ten foot pole. Do not make contact. Be grateful for the blessing that has come as a result of the Holy Spirit being able to turn the problem to your advantage. But don't give the Holy Spirit another problem to turn to your advantage by going back.

When you feel tempted, refuse the temptation and then do not dwell on it. Shift your attention to something else. Give your attention to something else. Engage in an activity that will occupy your mind. Let it go.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Now that wasn't so hard was it?

QUESTION: No. (giggles)

ANSWER: You do understand that Paul often neglects to ask me questions because he's afraid of what the answer will be. Forgetting always that the answer does not put him at risk or in jeopardy and will always be congruent with his integrity and his peace and his experience of well-being. The same is true with you.

Something I tell him is, go ahead and ask the question, let the ego object later. And of course, if he does that the clarity is so great that the ego has no chance of successfully objecting, and the objection doesn't come up. You can always disagree. When you ask for guidance and get it you can always disagree, except that when you get it you will find yourself most usually happy with guidance. And when you are not there will be something about it which will be congruent and then you will simply ask your "yes, but's" about the things that seem incongruent until those have been made clear.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you Rajpur.

ANSWER: It looks like you are reading your question from your checkbook.

QUESTION: I wish! No, I love so much sometime ago when you said, "Love will undo time and uncover eternity." And I would like you to please expand on that a little, as I have a real wish to explore the absence of limitation and understand more of cosmic time.

ANSWER: Let me put it this way, the undoing of time and the uncovering of eternity are nothing but side effects, not goals. It's the love that is the issue. It isn't time that you suffer from, it's the absence of being the fulfillment of your function, which is to be the presence of Love. It is a common flaw to seek spiritual advancement so as to have the experience of timelessness or eternity or as was brought out earlier formlessness and unity. But as long as the attention is there one isn't present with the meat of the situation, which is always in the here and the now, which is being the presence of Love. Because once you let your function come forth fully, the fact that time disappeared and eternity is uncovered will be of no significance to you because of the fact that your capital "P" Purpose is uninhibitedly fulfilling itself. This is a poor way of saying it, but when your capital "P" Purpose is fulfilling itself you will be so full of your Self, with a capital "S", that whether time has disappeared and eternity has come will be of no consequence.

So stick with what matters, which amounts to, in whatever way unfolds to you, connecting with the impulse of love that is always occurring within you so that you may know from its presence how to be with the grocer or the department store clerk or the spouse or the lover, you see. The rest will take care of itself. And I truly encourage you not to get sidetracked by things that seem as though they would be profoundly meaningful when they will simply be whatever they are—no more time, the presence of eternity—but no big deal! Because what is a big deal your being the presence of what you are without hindering it in anyway is of consequence.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: My mother's just been spending a week with me and from time to time I found myself almost overwhelmed with my reactions against how she is and how I perceive her. And it seems as though there's even a hatred coming up in me for her neediness, for her questions, for her way of wanting communication. And yet I also know that these are my characteristics too. And that distresses me. And I've prayed a lot for that yet and asked for help and yet somehow I think I'm still a little stuck in the stress of...

ANSWER: There's a little bit of a justice issue here, "If I can't get it why should I give it to her?" "Why should I satisfy her neediness when my neediness isn't getting equally satisfied?"

Now, the solution is the same for both of you. Give what you are needing. It isn't that not getting what you need is the problem, the problem is that you're not giving what it is your function to give. What better thing do you have to do than be present with and for another with love?

The only alternative you have is to withdraw, not engage in being the presence of love and then attempt to manipulate other's into being the presence of love for you. And yet the frustration that would cause you to compulsively manipulate another to provide you with love is not caused by the absence of another one giving you love. It's caused by the fact that you are withholding your function.

Now you really have nothing better to do, as I said, than to be willing to be present for and with your mother with love. However, at the same time you have to see to it that if her demands require you to override your integrity, as we were saying earlier, you have to say "no," you have to be unwilling to do that. And what you have to come to understand is that your refusal to abandon your integrity is an act of love—that abandoning it and pleasing another ego is not love.

But your abandoning your integrity in your relationship with your mother is not really the problem, it is really the justice issue.

QUESTION: Right, I've actually had enough experience of miracles for myself to know the value when I can shift my perception, you know, to know how much better I feel. And what distresses me is that I can't do it with her, it seems so much bigger.

ANSWER: Won't... don't say can't—won't. That's why I brought up the justice issue, you see. If you will drop the justice issue you will find that you can. (There is laughter here because Raj was using their accent on the word "can't" and "can".)

If you know where the issue is you can deal with it. If you don't know what the issue is you can fish around trying to find the issue and do this and it doesn't work, and do that and it doesn't work. The issue is justice.

And I'll let that percolate and I'll encourage you to let it percolate. There is no serious reason for the two of you having this conflict, except getting even. "I can't have it, you can't have it."

QUESTION: Na, na, na, na, na!

ANSWER: You see? So don't think about it too long. Let it be present almost like a grace-note and then get past the grace-note and enjoy the rest of the visit.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you. Would you explain to us the difference, if there is one, between disease, which I think I understand about, and mental illness, where that seems to take a loved one out of the reach of being helped.

ANSWER: I must be sensitive to Paul here, and he is still adjusting to the change in the time zone and I can say is running out of steam. I want to address this question. And so we are going to break 15 minutes early tonight. But we will begin tomorrow morning with this question.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I have enjoyed being with you all today.

PAUL: And this is me Paul, I have too. And I'm surprised that he's cut it short, but I'm(?) I think he may be right. So we will start tomorrow morning at 10. And I'll look forward to seeing you all then.

ANSWER: When we first began holding gatherings, the groups were in size from 20 to 35 people and we could all sit in a circle. And as the groups have gotten larger that becomes unworkable. But I would invite you to feel as though we are all in a circle, all being equal members of this gathering, because in fact, that's the way it is, even though it seems as though I am speaking to you and even though at times one could consider it a potential for adversarial dialog and that is not the meaning here.

We ended the day with a question that didn't get answered. Do you still feel like asking the question?

QUESTION: My question is whilst believing I understand the relevance of illness as dis-ease, would you say something about the purpose of mental illness when it appears to take loved one's beyond the help of those around them who would want to care for them.

ANSWER: Well, first of all, let's be very clear that illness whether mental or physical does not have a purpose. In terms of A Course In Miracles, a problem—whether it's illness or whatever kind of problem—is an illegitimate imposition upon a Son or Daughter of God. And the fact is that the Holy Spirit can turn that problem to your advantage. But that is not because the problem was there for your benefit. And I say this because it's important not to value problems, even though as a result of the Holy Spirit turning it to your advantage you might have learned something and benefited from it. At the bottom line, when a problem is experienced it should be lightly but firmly dismissed as an illegitimate imposition upon you, in which you are not going to participate. This is very important. It's very important.

Now, in order to approach the answer to your question I must back off to a larger framework. The first thing that you must all dare to consider as a possibility is that no matter how you perceive yourselves at this moment, no matter what you perceive yourselves to be, you are the direct and perfect expression of God. Your perfection does not await you in the future. It is present because it is inseparable from you right now. It awaits a shift of perception and that's all. It does not await growth. It does not await the refining of your Soul. It does not await anything other than a willingness to perceive it, a willingness to experience it, a willingness to, perhaps it would seem to be foolhardy, irresponsible, as we were talking about yesterday and daring to accept another possibility than whatever circumstances and definitions you have locked yourself into at the moment.

This means that right now, as all of you sit in this room, you are experiencible as exactly what you divinely are. As I—and this does not apply to Paul because at the moment even though his eyes are open, he is not seeing it—the fact is that I can see here what I can only call bodies of light, not only bodies of light, but what you would call clothing is illuminated. Because the substance of your bodies and the substance of every object that you see is Living Love.

Now this is the fact at this instant. The problem is that you have forgotten this. Now the question is how did this lapse in memory occur. It's helpful to understand. It occurred we will say, when one of the Sons or Daughters of God had what the Course calls a mad idea. It really amounts to an attempt at individual originality. “Well, suppose I were to look at everything this way, instead of the natural way? Suppose I were to look at everything from this standpoint?” And then that one played with this imagination, this fantasy that was concocted and found it fascinating and said to another of the Sons or Daughters of God, “Hey, there's quite an experience available to us here if we just use our imagination a little bit. Come on along and try it with me.”

And so the two tried it and created their own definitions of everything, and mutually agreed that they would find it valuable to join together in this new perception of things and have this wild experience, much like people who take LSD or other drugs and find that they have this incredible experience, even though with drugs it isn't a mutual or shared experience.

And so in that moment they join together in a mutually agreed upon definition of everything that was different from the meaning the Father was expressing by the creation of that thing. Then although they were having a fascinating experience (and I use the word fascinating on purpose because when one becomes fascinated by something their attention becomes closed down, they begin to compulsively give their attention to that which fascinates them) and so as they joined in the experience of this fascinating perception, something happened. Because they were choosing to see things with a little different bias than God was giving it, they found that they lost the experience of their wholeness, they were denying the infinite view, you might say, in favor of a narrower biased view of the only thing there was to experience, which was still the Kingdom of Heaven in God's Creation. And in the absence of the experience of being infinite they had a new fascinating experience. And that new fascinating experience was an experience of fear, because now they felt tiny, inconsequential in the midst of all the other definitions that they had given everything.

Now, with this experience of fear they felt a need for self-protection and so they began to tighten up. And their bodies of light began to—to their perception—become denser and denser and denser. And the experience of the illumination of themselves and everything else became endarkened and solid. The reason being that in indulging in the fascinating experience of redefining everything else they found that they were obligated to have a new definition of themselves as authorizers of the meaning of everything. And that stance of individual, independent authorizer constituted a denial of who they really are. They had to ignore their divine being and their infinite view, which was the Father's point of view about everything.

Now defense is the means by which one protects one's self against, what? The experience of Sanity, the experience of God's point of view, the experience of what everything really is. You see? In a state of self-denial one can never be comfortable. Because no matter how insane one's perceptions become none of you ever stopped being the Son or Daughter of God that God is expressing at every single moment perfectly.

So your Sanity forever remains, because although you can bias your perception of it by indulging in imagination you can't stop being the same one that God created you to be, because you don't actually have the authority to author a new creation. You see? So your Sanity being ever present causes your fascination with insanity to be an uncomfortable experience because it's unnatural. The more uncomfortable you become the more you engage in self-protection as long as you insist upon commitment to your fantasy that you have created about everything that's real.

So do you see that at the bottom line the defense against Reality that your commitment to your biased perception brings into play is inseparable from self-denial. If you are engaged in self-denial your ever present Sanity is always going to be equal to the intensity that you bring to your commitment to your fantasy, your imagination, your dream that you have created. And the more dense you make your body the more uncomfortable it becomes and you ultimately find yourself experiencing dis-ease.

Now at the bottom line, whether we're talking about mental disease like Alzheimer's or physical disease which seems to be independent of the mind, it's all mental. And it's all the result of the constant act of self-denial that you're engaged in when you live your life with commitment to your beliefs about who you are, and when you are not engaging any curiosity whatsoever as to what the truth about you is, about what the truth about these flowers is, about the truth about every garment you're wearing, etc.

At the bottom line, disease whether it's mental or physical is an aberrated manifestation of self-denial. And the only correction there is to it is self-love. Now even if you approach an illness, a physical illness, from a purely psychological standpoint without considering in any way that you are a divine presence, but that you are just a human being who came from a sperm and an egg who has the potential to be healthy, if you become ill what happens? There is a point at which all of the other things that you think are important have to be abandoned so you can take care of yourself, even if it means going to bed and getting rest and seeing to it that you are getting good nourishment, your attention has to be brought back from all of the other more important things—that you thought were more important—and you're left with what? Having to pay attention to your own needs and taking care of them. And that is even humanly speaking an act of self-love.

Now if you still believe that all there is to you is human beingness, of mortal humanhood, you can only really have the hope that the self-love that you're giving yourself, in caring for your physical problem, you can only have the hope that that can restore your health. Because you really have no proof that total healing is your Birthright, you see, that's not part of your biased perception of who and what you are. But if you will begin to consider the possibility of what I am saying is true, that you never did come from a sperm and an egg, that your Source has always been the authority of God, that God expresses in being what God is, then you have a whole new paradigm, a whole new arena in which to consider yourselves and in which to consider what the possibilities are. If you have never for an instant been less than what God created you to be, and if you have never for an instant been different from what God created you as then the potential for return to the unobstructed conscious experience of what you divinely are becomes your Birthright and not a fantasy.

The interesting thing is as one shifted commitment from God's point of view to his or her fantasy about everything God had made, the fantasy became what was real and God's truth about you became fantasy. That's the way the perceptual shift happened.

So I have to say to you, I want you to consider something quite fantastic. And that is that you are at this very instant exactly as God created you to be in all of your perfection. And the experience of that is available to you at this instant. And all it takes is a shift of perception. And that right now this room is illuminated by the light of your bodies as well as the light of the substance of everything that you are seeing. And it's not just that it's light, it's that the light is Love—Living Love.

And so everything that you are seeing right now including even the empty space is to one degree or another illuminated. It is love. It is loving. And it is an experience that is exquisite. It is an experience that is bliss. It is an experience that is going on fully at this moment. But in your commitment to your limited sense of yourselves it is escaping your attention.

The simple fact is that whether you call a disease a mental disease or a physical disease, what it is is the evidence of active self-denial engaged in with commitment.

You talk about loved ones being removed from your experience by virtue of mental illness. You might look at it from our standpoint: All of you who are committed to your biased perceptions are mentally ill and are unavailable to us. Because although we're here and although we tap you on the shoulder, you say, "I'm too busy! This is a really good part of my dream! I must dream this to the end." And you are unavailable to us. You are unavailable to your Brothers and Sisters, who are not off in a spiritual realm someplace that you will someday attain, but are right here in the Kingdom of Heaven just as you are right here in the Kingdom of Heaven having your daydream, so to speak, your distraction from us and what is Really going on.

So if the answer to illness is self-love—and I'll take it a step further by saying—if the answer to illness is capital "S" Self-love, the Self that you divinely are, then even though you all think you're quite well I encourage you to consider the possibility that you might not be, which really means that there is more of Reality available to you to experience than you are experiencing. And so to say you're not well is not a put-down. It simply means that at the moment your perception of All That Is is very limited. And you are being invited to consciously engage in a curiosity to experience more of All That Is, divinely speaking, than you have been. It is in this way that you begin to wake up.

Now as surprising as it might seem your problem is one of feeling separate. What creates the difficulty is that you have become addicted to your separateness. And the potential to become a really super creator of better and better illusions, with more and more excellent independence. And so since you have an addiction to the potential pride that awaits you at having become a perfect creator, waking up seems to constitute a sacrifice of all that is really important to you.

Now you can get by this dilemma by not engaging and by not attacking your potential for being a better creator. Let your desire to be a better creator of order and the meaning of the Universe, let that be. But in addition to that begin to just be curious. You have the capacity to be fascinated with things. I now encourage you to indulge in fascination with, "Oh, what might this table really mean? Oh, what might the real meaning of this leaf be, divinely speaking? What might the Father be expressing of the fullness of His Love in this particular form?" You see?

When you look at your brother or your sister, look at them with curiosity to see, “what of God is here—in spite of what I’m sure is there—what of God might be here that I’m missing?” And this will not arouse the defense of this part of you that wants to be a perfect creator. And I will tell you that by virtue of practicing this curiosity and being open to surprises daily, the occurrence of those surprises will begin to feel more desirable than the fascination you have had with becoming a better and better independent authorizer of the meaning of life. You see? And you’ll find a natural tendency to shift towards your Sanity, you see, than to continue in your old patterns.

If you go away from this weekend without remembering anything other than this it will have been valuable. Everything is as God made it. You are as God made you. You are the presence of the purpose that God has expressed right now in your fullness without flaw. Therefore it’s not something you can grow into, because you’re already there. All that has to happen is a willingness to abandon your confidence that you know what everything is. You see?

You could say that instead of having more to learn you have to take all of your learning and be willing to let it go. Because your learning about what everything is is what is standing in the way of your experiencing what everything is.

Now there may be those of you in the room who are saying, “I have no physical problems, I’m very healthy,” etc., but are you beautiful? Is your body the expression of symmetry and loveliness of form? Or are some of you short-waisted, flat-busted (Paul snapped his fingers—this is me Paul going like this. I’ll go ahead and say what he is saying) small dicked? Then there is room for a greater experience of perfection in every way. And so you can look forward to what I will call healing, even though what will be healed isn’t something that you had thought of as being wrong. Everyone of you is utterly beautiful to behold. And if that beauty isn’t apparent to all of you then that is one of the aspects that awaits you, that is one of the experiences that awaits you. But again, what I want you to understand is that right there I see the beauty of symmetry and you (talking directly to someone—maybe questioner) are a little taller than you are, among other things. (giggles)

So the reality of you isn’t something off in the future to be gained, it is right there. And if everyone else in the room were clearer they would see it even if you still saw what you see there. You see? So the thing is though if everyone else was seeing it you would not have much support in this group for your biased perception of how you appear and there would tend to be a spontaneous shift of perception for you. So this is where the part is that each of you plays in everyone else’s Awakening. Because as each of you becomes clearer minus the misperceptions of everything, it lessens the density of everyone else’s fascination with their biased perception.

All of you have heard of instantaneous healings, some of you have experienced instantaneous healings, and whenever an instantaneous healing occurs it's a proof to you that there isn't a dense physical body here that must be changed into a better dense physical body. It's a demonstration of the fact that it never was a dense physical body and that that person allowed a shift of perception—stopped arguing against the experience of his or her physical perfection—and the bias was released because it's that bias, it's the same bias that a drug provides. The wall is no more fascinating when the drug user looks at it through the eyes of the drug than it was when he was undrugged. You see, it was still exactly what it was. So what's right there, what's right there, what's right (probably pointing to people and/or things) there is exactly what God is being. It isn't changed whatsoever by the bias, the twist, the shift that has been applied to it through the use of imagination. And so the minute the little bit of the imagination is abandoned the misperception disappears and the person is “made whole.”

Now, that means that a body was never manipulated from disease into health. It means that that mental quirk that caused a distorted perception of the body was released, no longer valued.

So, Self-love with a capital “S” is what is essential to the apparent correction of deformity, lack of proportion, disease, the effects of disease and so on.

PAUL: I'm sorry, this is me. I lost it. We will back up.

ANSWER: It is obvious that a sick physical body has not been manipulated into a healthy physical body. The shift has occurred as a result of a quirk of perception having been released. The reason I am bringing this up is because so often metaphysics suggests a mental way of manipulating matter into better matter. And thus healing of the physical body through metaphysical means has become the focus, when it has nothing to do with manipulating the body at all. It has to do with addressing the quirk that has caused one's perception of himself or herself to be seen in a distorted way.

At the bottom line, what you call disease is nothing more than the distorted perception caused by a mental disease, if I may put it this way. And so what needs to be addressed is the quirk in the mentality that has locked everyone into a sense of limitation, which never has actually been occurring. And to bring the point home again, the answer is capital “S” Self-love—an awareness existent in you that no matter how you perceive yourself or others you are at this instant the ultimate that God is expressing at every instant and is appearing as you. And the second part of it is, to then engage in curiosity to see it, to see it as though it's available at this instant to see. And not to get hung up on why you're not seeing it.

The moment you get hung up on why you are not seeing it, you are distracted from being curious. And it's like looking for a skeleton in the closet—you will find an endless string of skeletons. Because in order to find out why you're not seeing it you're going to have to use your imagination and your imagination will bring up more and more and deeper and deeper skeletons—so it says. When all you have to do is persist in curiosity when you look at the person next to you, when you look at yourself in the mirror, when you look at the flowers, when you look at the rock in the garden that needs to be moved. “Ah, what is this thing, this rock? I think it’s a piece of granite that came from the evolution of the Earth and so on and so forth. But if all I can be seeing is some part of the Kingdom of Heaven, then what is its capital “M” Meaning?”

You know something? Every single thing you see has Meaning, with a capital “M”. And it is as alive as you are even if you call it an inanimate object, because the intelligence of the intent that set that into motion in that shape is God, and is embodied there you might say, and has the means of communicating to you its Meaning. Because although you have excluded it and said, “this is different from me,” it hasn’t excluded you and continues to be the presence of love, loving you, that everything is. And when you say, “I wonder what the Real Meaning is,” and you say it with some genuineness and fascination with the possibility, but you neglect to use your imagination to come up with the answer, that rock will express its Meaning to you. And it’s a marvelous experience. Because little things like a rock in your garden can be the places where the unity of All That Is can register with you, you see.

Don’t look for the Kingdom of Heaven in a holy book. Look for it in a rock. Look for it in a slug. Look for it in a rusty nail. Look for it in whatever your eyes fall upon, including a holy book. But don’t think that the holy book is a more holy place than a slug or a rock to have the meaning of the presence of God and the meaning of what you are be illuminated. The ultimate is right now. It’s going on uninterruptedly. And like those with Alzheimer's disease, many of you just aren’t noticing it because you’ve forgotten to be curious. You’ve forgotten that there’s something like this to be curious about, so why would you?

So I’m handing you a sort of double-edged message here, because it is as though I am saying you’re sick and you’re perfect. But if you didn’t know that there’s a perfection beyond whatever your concept of perfection is at the moment there will be no curiosity to see it.

And before we take a break, I’ll say this also: The Kingdom of Heaven can’t force itself on you. Those of us who are Awake cannot force Sanity on you. We cannot force you to listen. We cannot force you to hear. We do not have the prerogative to interrupt whatever you choose to give your attention to. More than that, because over what you would call your experience of time, we have tried and you don’t listen anyway because of your commitment to your bias, whatever the current bias is that you are experiencing.

You moved away from the clear perception of Reality by choice. And you’re still the Sons and Daughters of God. And in your perfection you are creating a fascinating dream, which hasn’t altered the perfection of what you divinely are. And because you weren't kicked out of the Kingdom of Heaven you don't have to be invited back in. And the only way you'll come back in is because something in you has begun to remember that there's more to experience than you are experiencing. And your commitment has begun to shift from your daydream, or your fascination with your definitions of everything, to having a clearer experience of who you really are, that place in which you can experience the wholeness of your Sanity. And that is the only thing that will bring you back Home—your decision.

You are hearing me today because you are curious. You had a curiosity before you came. And as soon as there is enough curiosity for a connection to occur then you will find yourself being reminded, being encouraged, being invited, but not being pushed.

Who has the microphone. Would you pass it to the fellow behind you.

QUESTION: I would like to ask a simple question from the... is it quite possible to become a way out of all this, while still functioning adequately and improving your functioning within the context of the world that's dreamed...

ANSWER: Absolutely! Absolutely!

QUESTION: That's all.

ANSWER: Yes! Yes you will find that you will not become dysfunctional in terms of everyone else's awareness of you. They may think you're a little unusual. There are those who could look at Paul and say that the way he is living his life is unusual, but it is not interfering in any way and his presence is benign and for the most part constructive. Many would say it is transformational for others, for them. No, you know why? Because the presence of God is fundamentally intelligent and fundamentally harmonious. And so intelligence and harmony is what one finds himself or herself more clearly expressing in the world. And intelligence is recognizable to everyone. Harmony is recognizable as harmony to everyone.

So, you may hear of individuals on their spiritual path who become so odd that they feel threatening to others, or they fit in so poorly that they stand out as oddballs, let's put it that way.

These individuals are one's who have taken their desire for spiritual growth and used it to make their dream better, rather than letting the experience cause the release of their dream so that all of the things they had already been dealing with in experiencing in their world they were more in harmony with, and functioned better with because they were in better alignment. You see. I understand that the fear is that if one becomes a true spiritual seeker that he will fit in less and less and less. But exactly the opposite is the case—right here.

So, thank you for your question. And this is why we didn't handle it last night.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Raj, for the last year and a half I have been following what I call my sensing into what is right for me to do. And I tend to trust that, rather than any guidance, because I'm never sure whether it's coming from me saying what I want it to say or I tend to trust the sensing more. And it's led me into a way of being rather than doing. I was a frantic doer. And it's wonderful. I'm having a wonderful time. But there's always a voice in the back of my head somewhere that says, "you're opting out. You're being irresponsible. You're not serving. When are you going to do something useful." And that makes me feel uncomfortable. And I suppose my question is, am I on the right track in following just this sensing, or... I mean if I'm on the right track it's fine, and I'm willing to follow whatever the guidance is. But I don't want to be going further and further on this track if I'm following the wrong guidance.

ANSWER: You are not on the right track. And I encourage you to continue to feel into this sensing as you put it. Guidance is not always in words. And you are allowing guidance to occur by paying attention to this sensing of what is appropriate. This is wonderful. I encourage you though in addition to this to be interested in having insight, so that there might be, what I'm going to call processes of clarification that occurs in your mind where specific, I'm going to say specific understanding transpires that originates outside of your best reasoning. So that rather than replacing in anyway, the sensing that you have been paying attention to your experience of guidance is embellished or increased, you see. But don't stop what you're doing. It is on the beam.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you.

QUESTION: Good morning, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: For the past fifteen years I've worked in the field of pediatric terminal care work. And I'm at a point where I feel I'm being asked to make a decision whether to remain there or to move into other fields of work. Could you speak to me on this please.

ANSWER: You are not finished here yet. Your gift is not complete yet in this area. And the best is yet to come. I am glad that you are not locked in, that you are not compulsively moving on this path. And that you are opened to recognize when the time to stop or to shift has come. But it has not come yet. And this is a blessing for you, but even more it is a blessing for those you will be working with.

The flower has not opened fully yet to its full bloom. And I want you to be there when it does, not having left beforehand. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I've got a vision of what I would like to do for the world. But I'm scared in case it's just my ego that's been taking over and saying, "yes, this will make you feel good. This will make you feel better." And I'd like to know that what I thought is true or not.

ANSWER: It is. You are right on target. You're right where the movement of fulfillment would have you be. You may dare to trust the feeling.

Now there have been two or three questions here where I have told everyone that they are on the track. I promise you if you weren't I would say you're not. I'm not just buttering you all up by giving you good report cards. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I would like to know whether I'm on the right track too.
(laughter)

ANSWER: In what respect?

QUESTION: I would like you to perhaps explain to me the nature of dreams. And I feel that I am very much in touch with Jesus. And I wonder if that is true?

ANSWER: Indeed. And I will confirm it to you at another time directly. Yes, yes, yes! That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I wonder if you could tell me the next step from my getting here, because I seem to be sort of in between at the moment.

ANSWER: I'm sorry, could you say it one more time?

QUESTION: Could you tell me the next step that I should take for my two year(?) I'm in between at the moment.

ANSWER: You're not actually at the turning point yet. That is about two months away. I encourage you to not try to create the next step. It is going to unfold quite naturally and come to your attention. It will be one of those experiences that you will stand in wonder at afterwards, primarily because you will have allowed it to happen rather than make it happen. And in the wake of having allowed it to happen and having found how fulfilling it is it will confirm to you that you can dare not to be in charge all the time. Don't let impatience come into play here. There is a statement in "A Course In Miracles" which says, "infinite patience brings immediate results." And infinite patience sometimes can seem to be a thing that you must practice that is difficult, but what it really means is neglecting to be impatient.

QUESTION: I'll have to work on that one.

ANSWER: Yes, well don't work too hard at it, it's supposed to be effortless.

QUESTION: Thanks.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello. Raj, could you tell me why you use the Father when you speak of God?

ANSWER: I do not always speak of God as Father, I often speak of God as Father/Mother, He/She and so on. It has no particular special significance that that is the word that is used, as opposed to Mother or He and She.

QUESTION: Or even neither, as it were.

ANSWER: Yes, or even Goddess.

QUESTION: Cheers. I'm involved with the distribution of development and a community of(?) I'd like to know.

ANSWER: I'm sorry. This is me Paul. It's being difficult for me to understand what you're saying. And so if you'll start over again.

QUESTION: Cheers. Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon, morning.

QUESTION: I'm involved in the distribution or use of grant aid for urban development in a community of around here it's(?) At present it appears to be a group that can come together to say no to something. Who can create movement from there, or is there anything that I can do to create movement from there to position where people are coming together to work by creating answers appropriate to the needs of the area? Is the question especially clear?

ANSWER: Yes. What is going to be called for is persistence, persistence without reaction. When objection is stated by anyone it is often heard by the listener as a challenge as an argumentative stance, as a call for reaction. And your best response is to more actively persist in expressing what you recognize to be the simple truth, or shall I say the simple intelligence of the situation.

Sometimes those who are objecting simply need to hear the new viewpoint expressed multiple times without an emotional charge being associated with it. In the States the major advertisers for television are aware that a new advertisement has to be heard or seen six times before it registers with the viewer. And so you must be willing to persist in representing just the simple facts intelligently in a repetitive manner, and not assume that the fact that it hasn't been heard means there's something wrong with your communication, or that you are not with hardheaded, obstinate people.

And then secondly, or actually this would be the primary thing, let your motive be love. That's the reason you would express what you recognize to be truly helpful, fulfilling, bringing a better sense of order to things and so on. And let that expression of love keep its character, rather than letting frustration transform it into anger. You see. Because as I said yesterday, you really have nothing better to do than express love. Because that's what's transformational.

That is what is meaningful. Anger is nothing but a block to transformation of any kind.

So the key here is patience and the willingness to care enough about everyone else to persist more actively in expressing the clarity you have to bring. Recognizing that it sometimes takes time for clarity to register as clarity. And caring enough to say it as many times as is necessary.

Early on in my conversations with Paul there was a point at which he realized he kept asking the same question over and over and over in a thousand different ways. And that in continuing to ask it meant he obviously was resisting the answer. And he was worried that I might be offended at being asked the same question. And I told him with utter sincerity that if I had to say it 10,000 times before it registered with him I would be more than happy to do so. And that is the attitude I want you to dare to embody here. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: Good morning. Well my question probably has something, which has to do with our being in France—we bought a farm, my husband and I. And I'm dealing with a great deal I think feelings of anger towards the attitude of France towards nature and towards communication with others. And from four different sides I got the book from Joan of Arc, and somehow it feels like there is a message there and I don't grasp it. I'm dealing with that anger. And could you maybe a little give my clarity about what she symbolizes or what do I have to see in that? Is there something to see in it?

ANSWER: Well, I'm not particularly going to address the meaning of Joan of Arc in your life. But I am going to address a certain arrogance and snootiness in you. You must think pretty well of yourself to be able to justify being angry with anyone, much less the French—not to say they don't invite it. And that's not a judgment. It's not a judgment of you and it's not a judgment of the French.

How can you be an agent for change? Well, if you want to be an agent for change you have to be like a spring, whose function is to simply be the place where nourishment comes forth and has no say so whatsoever as to where that nourishment will go and what it will nourish, but just let's the nourishment flow. Just let the love flow. That's your function. It's not your function to say it should go to this valley or that valley, or to this particular grove of trees, or to the French grove of trees. But it is to be that place in which the gift is made. And just let it flow and flow and flow and flow. You see your success has nothing to do with whether or not the value of what you are doing is recognized. It also has nothing to do with whether anything grows as a result. It's inevitable that there will be growth. But your success has nothing to do with whether it happens.

Your fulfillment—the fullness, the wholeness of you—will be experienced when you are no longer enamoured with results. And if you are not enamoured with results then you will not have the occasion to be angry when there aren't results or when the results are slow.

You really must come to the point where the making of the gift is itself the fulfillment. And you will find that a great load of responsibility will slip off your shoulders, that has caused you to be tense carrying it around. That's not where it's at.

And everybody is French. (giggles) And everybody's English. Everybody is everybody. No one country has a greater claim to the ego. So everyone is equally loveable.

Self-righteous indignation feels so good but it's not your function, and it's not love, and it isn't really fulfilling. It's a temporary hit. It gives you a temporary high that has to be replaced like a drug over and over again. Don't waste your time with it.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Heaven help us if the sun thought that the only worthwhile reason for shinning is if people, all people were actually enjoying it.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I have a lovely two and a half-year-old son. And I really love him. I do delight in him and yet if I have to spend a certain amount of time with him I really despair. And I wonder where that comes from, because I feel I'm missing out on a lot of his well being, special being, growing up. And that makes me really sad.

ANSWER: Your despair is around?

QUESTION: It's difficult to say. I think it is around spending a longer time with him. Maybe I'm not able to play.

ANSWER: You despair when you have to spend more time with him?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Yes. What you are coming up against is realism rather than dreams, rather than idealism. You have had a concept of what a good mother is. And the reality of things doesn't match your concept of what a good mother is. You are not incapacitated in your capacity to be a mother. The fact is that you are more than just a mother. You're also an individual in your own right. And there are times when it's not appropriate for you to be one hundred percent available to him, and you are not neglecting him. And your feeling of uncomfortableness is actually wisdom.

Thank God you can't live up to your expectation of yourself as a mother. Because if you were able to do that you would probably raise a wimp.

Your relationship with him is quite healthy, and truly normal. It's like "wake up to life," this is the way it really is and the concept is an unfair concept to you. You're quite all right. You're quite well balanced in this respect. It's just that it's not jiving with, its not matching the concept that you had.

Do you have a "yes, but"?

QUESTION: Not really. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

It's always a wonderful thing to be able to tell someone they're just fine when they thought they weren't.

Now if you insist on continuing kicking yourself around the block because you're not living up to your expectation, then you might need to ask yourself what you're getting out of it—in other words, if you continue to criticize yourself—what the payoff is. Because that has nothing to do with how well you're taking care of your son or your child. Maybe getting your stripes, you know if you whip yourself a little bit, punish yourself for not living up to what you ought to be exalts you, don't play into that kind of thought either.

For you to be doing anything other than enjoying your relationship with him as it actually works out to be, is to be distracted by irrelevancies. And if you're suffering from those irrelevancies that is just nonsensical. So stop it! That's all! It's really easy.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I'm quite frightened to ask you this but I don't really know if I'm going to put it well, but over this last year there's been quite a lot of quite magical things happened. Not nice things. Unexpected! And I talk to you a lot about these things and the troubles that I have handed over to you. And then I agree to take them back and I reason that I could fiddle with them. And then I hand them back again.

And recently a relationship that I have invested in...

ANSWER: You just think that you take them back and fiddle with them. You aren't able to get hold of what God is doing really.

QUESTION: That's a huge relief. I've had to let go, but the relationship has changed a lot about eight weeks ago. And I have a lot of pain around that. And I keep trying to hand that over to you. And sometimes I don't. And I want to get rid of this pain. I want to move on. And I miss this person terribly.

ANSWER: This person is not yours to possess, and never was. You are going to have to just let go. And when you are sad go ahead and feel sad. The more quickly you allow the sadness to come the more quickly it would go.

Don't try to do this perfectly. I mean don't try to deal with this spiritually and flawlessly if doing it that way doesn't allow for you to feel sad.

You know when you dare to be real, when you dare to let bubble up whatever will bubble up, instead of saying, "Well, I thought I was more spiritually advanced than to have to cope with that." When you don't stuff things by trying to be spiritually correct you'll find that the aspects of your humanity are very life affirming for you. And so if you don't stuff what you call sadness, and you let it come up, it literally constitutes a release. If it's not resisted the release gushes out and it's over. And what was released never has to be released again, even if there is a little more a little later to come out. And when you allow that to happen naturally you remove more gracefully through this period of adjustment.

If you want to move through this more quickly and more gracefully then don't resist what naturally emerges. Embrace it, allow it and you will do just fine. Don't say, "well, I shouldn't be feeling that." You are feeling it. And if you don't block it then its purpose or its function will be served. And its function will serve you in terms of reestablishing your experience of your wholeness.

QUESTION: Can I do it, it's not a "yes, but" but a "yes, and?"

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Which is because I'm finding this very painful. And I know this is a very human thing to ask you, but could you give me some idea of the time scale? Because it seems to be going on... You know, I feel like I'm being crucified. And I know I'm doing that. But I'd like to move through it.

ANSWER: No, I won't. One of the reasons is that if I give you a time frame part of you will feel relief and the other part of you will say, "oh, I should be doing better than this if it's going to end by this time." And it will create a state of tension.

What I want you to do is to dare to trust the nature of your humanity and let—be allowing. The pain comes from resisting it, not from the fact that it's happening. And that's the key.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: My question is about: I run a coach house and next to the coach house is the settings (not sure about that last word) that to me is asking to be redeveloped along side the coach house. What I'm seeking clarity for is, is this an ego trip of mine or can it be used in service. What I don't want to do is to take more energy away from what I'm already doing—from ego rather than from service.

ANSWER: I'm going to put it this way, it is a wonderful concept of an extension of love, but the idea isn't coming from knowing what is appropriate. It is an imagination of something that is at its source loving, but it is not what is in the process of unfolding and being manifested. It is appropriate for you to stay with the coach house as it is. Expansion is not territorial, and expansion of grounds is not what is unfolding. That is not part of the fulfillment at this time. And the key words are “at this time.” That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good morning.

QUESTION: I first want to thank you for your(?) yesterday. And I’d like to share that I had a good night, and in the morning I was waking up early and the(?) but it was not fearful. And thank you very much for that(?).

ANSWER: You are most welcome.

QUESTION: And today I have a question what (someone’s name) and (someone’s name) were sharing about sexuality and love. I remember when I was about seven years old and I was in a Catholic Church and I had a feeling of Jesus coming inside me. And it really was a feeling of “Oh, I know what love is about,” unconditional and so on. And I think later, growing up and being confronted with sexuality, and seeing what people say to me about what is love in this world, it was very confusing as well as difficult I think. Well at the moment I’m rather quiet with it. But I feel that the body is asking for that expression by sexuality, maybe that’s special for me, I just don’t know. But it’s like coming up as an energy. But it’s not always managed exactly for instance in my relationship. It has something to do with(?) from my feeling and especially for what is really love expression, in that respect. I would ask you for a comment please.

ANSWER: Intimacy, undefendedness is communicated in a variety of ways—through a look, through a touch. Love finds expression through looks and touches, actions. Love needs to be the context of intimacy, sexual intimacy. Sexual intimacy is just one avenue of expression of love. A smile is also. And wouldn’t it be sad if people said, “well, I’m trying to rise above the expression of intimacy through smiles.”

Whatever inhibits the breakdown of separation—the breakdown of the walls of separation—whatever inhibits the breakdown of the walls a separation is not to be valued. And so it is inappropriate to say, “sexuality is evil. Sexuality is animalistic. Sexuality is unholy, and therefore because I care to pursue a holy path I must abstain from sex. And if I find myself experiencing sexual feelings, this must mean that there is something wrong with me.” Heavens aren’t you sometimes spontaneously moved to smile? And yet if that were the expression of intimacy that had been deemed unholy, well you see, the spontaneous inclination to smile is no different from the spontaneous inclination to be sexually close. It's the judgment against smiling or against sexuality that is what is wrong.

Your motto could be for the time being, "let there be sex in your life," when you feel inclined to be intimate and to be expressing your love, just as much as with your smile or your touch or any other expression of affectionate caring, which can even involve the sending of a birthday card. Just let love imbue this opportunity to be together. And let there not be some area of your life where you are saying, "I disallow myself from expressing love in this area. Don't inhibit your function, which is to be the expression of love."

QUESTION: Well, I'm in a relationship that has so much to do with communication, I mean togetherness, and I feel that sometimes I want to express my love but I feel that when I focus then maybe that's inappropriate to do that at that moment.

ANSWER: Well, what is your reason for communicating? Are you communicating to get or to give. Are you being close to get or to give? Are you being intimate to get or to give? If you're being intimate to get, then you're really the only important one in the picture and therefore there can be no communion, there can be no love. So when you find yourself feeling the impulse, let us say, to be sexually involved, remember then at that point that this is an impulse for you to give, to be present with your partner for her, or for whoever the partner might be.

You will find that if your motive is to be present with and for your partner there will be very little communication problem, and an awful lot of love. The ego says, "well, what about me?" Fortunately you are not your ego. Fortunately you are that presence of God which is itself the Movement of the expression of Love. You cannot escape the fact that when you are truly being loving, when you are truly giving, others can't help but respond with joy to the experience of being with you. And that will be felt by you as love.

So both of you have the opportunity to learn how to be the spring.

QUESTION: I have a question regarding discipline in meditation. I like to meditate. I enjoy it. I feel at home, but more often than not I don't do it, because in the morning suddenly I want to work in the garden before and then it's too late. And in the evening I suddenly feel tired and I go to bed. Or even during the day when I want to meditate I decide to clean up the room first, maybe do the kitchen and then the impulse is gone. So this is not the problem when I have my good days, because then I'm almost constantly connected with each flower I see or bird I can see or good food I eat. But when the ego dynamics take over and the vision gets narrow then maybe I think sometimes it would have been good if I had a certain discipline in meditating. So could you advise me on that, Raj?

ANSWER: Well, of course, if we talk about discipline it's going to scare almost anyone off, isn't it? So let's not approach it from the standpoint of discipline, let's approach it from the standpoint of common sense. To wait until the end of the day to meditate is like tuning your violin or cello after the concert is over. You see?

So if you want your day to be a symphony that is exquisitely beautiful you will tune your violin in the morning. That is not to say that you cannot let the activity of gardening or the activity of housecleaning be in itself a meditation. But if you're just straightening up that's an entirely different matter. If you can allow every movement you engage in as you clean up to be a conscious act of love arising out of peace, an awareness that you are not just making things physically attractive or organized, but that you are allowing into expression divine harmony, being aware of where each thing fits and putting it where it fits because that expresses love, then the activity can become the meditation. But even if you engage in what I would call a moving meditation I would still encourage you to take time for a meditation when you are being still.

Why wait to be clear until every reason you have for being clear is already attended to? Literally this is the way you bring love into your day. And so see it as an expression of love rather than a discipline and see it as tuning your violin before the concert. And this will make quite a bit of difference whether you engage in a moving meditation or a sitting meditation, you will be meditating a lot more without the sense of holding yourself to some kind of standard.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I asked a question yesterday and said that I would like to maybe come back to it at some later period. And this feels to me the right period. And I feel quite nervous about it. In my earlier question I talked about congestion at various levels, doubts and skepticism. And I was reflecting on that during the evening after meeting. And what I saw was that I really struggled to be able to determine the difference between my guidance and my ego. And because I struggle, that drops me into fear. Because I drop into fear I get stuck. Because I get stuck I feel parts of myself dying on various levels. So I suppose my question becomes how do I distinguish between my guidance and my ego.

ANSWER: It's really simple. Truly I'm not just saying that. It's just a matter of practice, practice, practice. In other words, doing it and doing it and doing it. Literally for Paul in the very beginning he had no assurance that what he heard me saying wasn't coming from some very creative part of himself. But as he persisted daily, and very often two or three times a day because of the severity of the problems he was going through, he found after approximately three months that he could begin to tell the difference between what originated with him and what originated with me.

He found the best way to describe the difference to others was that it was like sitting in a classroom—a University classroom—where the seats are on a slope, and where on the podium there was a blackboard going across the full width of the room where equations or information could be written with chalk. He found that when he was thinking, when what was occurring in his mind originated with him, it was like writing on the blackboard. But that when I was speaking the chalk marks were about three inches in front of the blackboard. This was not a significant difference when sitting in the auditorium itself, it is something that could only really be noticed if one were to move back and forth so that the distance of the chalk marks from the blackboard could be easily seen.

Now, at first the difference will be subtle and it could take you some time, as it took Paul three months, before the subtle differences become noticeable. But as you persist further and further the whole feel of the communion will become quite apparently different from when you are thinking. There is another helpful factor and that is when you are thinking there will always be a certain unsettledness in the pit of your stomach, actually in that area where as a child you had a sensation when you were going down in an elevator. And when you are hearing from your guidance there will always be absolute sensationless peace you might say, in the area of your solar plexus.

Now the interesting thing is that in spite of the fact that the guidance—if you look at it truly—in spite of the fact that the guidance is obviously not something you would have come up with yourself you will still find a way to argue that it probably is your ego. Understand that that's just the way it works, until you have persisted long enough for the difference to become subtly notice and then increasingly clear. It just takes persistence. And as I have said before, you must persist on the chance that maybe it's not you making it up. That's the way it will seem, as though it's just a chance that it's not you making it up.

Now interestingly enough, this doubt persisted with Paul, not so much when he was speaking with me privately let us say, but when it came to the time when we began to do gatherings which was a full two years after his first conversation with me. He would sit down just as he did after lunch and privately he would say, “well, is this the time we find this whole thing is a farce.” And he also even was “intelligent enough” to consider that the fact that everyone else seemed very delighted with what happened in the gatherings simply meant that they were as deluded as he was. And that it was just a mutual admiration society that was out of it—not well grounded.

Somewhere between the end of the second year mind you of our having numerous continuous conversations he arrived at a point where he decided that if this was him it didn't matter, because it was so valuable. And at that point his skepticism was released. It's very clear to him that it isn't him. But it's also very clear to him that he's not uninvolved in the process. And I have explained to him that the more consistently he remains with me the clearer his chances become to remember that what he is experiencing with me is his Birthright to be experiencing "on his own." In other words, without leaning on me. And at that point he will simply be in his Right Mind on an ongoing basis, no longer leaning on me, but also not disengaged from me, because unity is the eternal fact. And we will always be together. But at this point by his staying with me and learning to get the feel for being in balance, much like learning to ride a bicycle, by staying with me and learning to get the feel for being in balance he will remember how to be it without my help.

So persist on the chance that it isn't you making it up. And as you persist, the difference will become more apparent to you. This I can assure you of. But also understand that there really is no way for you to suddenly abandon your skepticism. Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: There's a "yes, but."

ANSWER: Fine.

QUESTION: Which is just skepticism again. And I'd like to sit with it some more. Thank you.

ANSWER: You what?

QUESTION: I'd like to just sit with it some more.

ANSWER: Oh, and later on perhaps come back with a "yes, but." This is fine, you are welcome to do that.

QUESTION: Hello, I have been diagnosed as having cancer. And I would like to know what I can do to get rid of it.

ANSWER: Well I would consider getting a second opinion, but not from a doctor. I would encourage you to get a second opinion from the Voice for Truth within yourself. And I would encourage you not to assume that the diagnosis given is based upon anything other than a limited perception, and therefore cannot be considered totally authoritative.

Do you have a pencil and paper? Would you get it out, and anyone else who would care to write down what I am going to say is invited to get a pencil and paper out. "I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning, and I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary." And now I'll restate it so you can see whether you got it all right. "I authorize my body to release whatever is not necessary to its perfect functioning, and I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary."

Now, in light of what I said earlier about no one really being able to be an authority, I want to clarify that this statement here is not for the purpose of putting you in a position of power. It is rather a matter of bringing your thinking into alignment with what's already established as the function of your body. It is the purpose of your body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. That is its function. And so when you authorize it to release whatever isn't necessary to its perfect functioning, you are giving permission for it to do what it is already its function to do. What you're doing is saying, "I'm willing to bring my thinking into alignment with the way things already Really work. And then when you say, "I withdraw any prior conscious or unconscious authorization to the contrary" you are once again releasing any residual fears or hates of your body, anything that would tend to get in the way of you experiencing your body perfectly.

Now, I encourage you to make the authorization daily, or nightly if you will, with the understanding that your body can't help but appear to improve because you are not insisting on energizing fears and doubts engendered either by your educated sense of what cancer is or fears engendered by the authoritativeness with which the doctor pronounced your condition.

If your doctor was more enlightened he would be saying something like I have said which would elicit an entirely different response from you and allow for an entirely different result from your body, you see.

Your body hasn't forgotten how to be what it was formed to be. And its form was established by God.

You see, if God cannot exist without being identified as what we call Creation, then your Individuality cannot exist without that which identifies it. Therefore, it is an eternal fact that you will always have that which will specifically identify your Individuality.

So, if that is the case, then your body is your ally because it's inseparable from you. And its function is to identify you flawlessly, meaning literally—that if ex-rays were taken they would show no disease there. This isn't any mumbo-jumbo system where somehow you can feel good while you're sick, somehow not suffer from your infirmity, you see.

Individuals like Deepak Chopra and others fully recognize that the body functions always in a life-affirming mode. So when something seems to get out of balance it is natural and inevitable that the body will reconfigure, you might say identifying that which is life-affirming, which means normalcy. So do not become afraid of your body as though it separate from you can do something against you else that fear of your body will become justification for being upset with it and denying it, when what needs to be done is for it to be embraced—embraced in the context of what is Really True about it—which is that its function is to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly.

Now, let us say for some reason you did not manage to embrace this idea and you passed on, I will tell you that the first thing you will notice is, voila, you're still there. And I will tell you that the one physical disease that you will never be subject to again will be cancer, because you will see that it didn't get rid of you. You will never be afraid of it again, and therefore there will be no occasion for an experience of it ever again. You will be healed of the belief that such a thing could actually kill you or change you in any way.

Now if you're going to recognize that (I do not mean this literally) but if you are bound to recognize that if you have passed on then why not get about the business of recognizing it now? Do you see what I'm saying? And it is the same with any other disease. It's the same with any other deformity. Paul has had his appendix removed, but if he passes on he'll find that it's there again. Now why not have the realization of that now and once again have his kidney now—not his kidney, his appendix. (laughter)

If you're going to learn something later on, why not learn it now? And when I say learn it, I mean why not provide the environment within yourself for the shift of consciousness to occur that's called for in order to experience the correction of anything that seems to manifest which is inconsistent with your Birthright.

Now all of you have guides. You have never been unaccompanied since you decided to have or employ a biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven. One of your companions is the Holy Spirit. And the Holy Spirit is simply your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego. You can't get rid of your divinity. So if you choose to put a boundary around your awareness and say "this is me and none of the rest of me is me," all of the rest of you remains and is called the Holy Spirit. This Sanity of yours is constantly working to undermine or disintegrate the fence you have built between your present sense of yourself and It, the rest of yourSelf.

So, if you realize that you are never unaccompanied by that which is utterly divine and which has the intent to reconnect you with what you wholly Are, then you can ask for help and know that the help will be there and will be experienced if you even skeptically will allow for the possibility that the help will come.

Now you also have what we've referred to as guides, an Individuality who is entirely Awake, who has been assigned to you at the moment of conception in what you would call this lifetime, standing there with you ready to respond the moment you desire to reach out for help. And in addition to this Individuality, there are other Awakened Individualities who stand with your guide, in cooperation with your guide, on your behalf relative to the clearing of your sense of body, which would be called healing. And for lack of better words Paul has come to call them the "healing team."

Now when you retire at night you can ask your guide—you don't even have to have established an experienced two-way communication with your guide, anything you address to your guide your guide will hear—you can ask your guide to have your healing team address this issue while you are asleep. And although they cannot override your free will, I would encourage you to authorize them to address this problem with maximal healing power. It's not that they would ever withhold and not provide maximum regenerative health, but by authorizing it, by saying “I request it,” it reduces the degree of resistance that you might otherwise have in play. You understand what I mean?

You are all companioned with by mighty companions. And it’s true! And all it takes is a little willingness to let them help. And so I encourage you when you go to bed to state the authorization that you wrote down and ask your guide to have your healing team address this health issue. That’s what I would suggest.

And then if you want from time to time—as I said that I suggest you get a second opinion—I would suggest that from time to time maybe you sit down and take some time to become relatively quiet in your mind, meditate, even if it’s not a formal meditation, and then ask, “is this diagnosis from Dr. So-and-so true? Should I believe this?” But ask the question and listen for the answer so that you have an experience of Something with a capital “S” being with you in this. You see. Don’t just rely upon your inner assurance from within yourself that this can’t be true, because then although it’s true what you are believing, in other words your conviction that this can’t be true doesn’t allow you to have the opportunity to experience that you’re not alone in this. Do you see what I’m saying?

Truly, every step of Awakening that you engage in will involve an increasing awareness that you are not alone. And so waking up always involves the discovery that you’re with others. It is a progressively less private experience. And as I said earlier, it’s only in this very isolated separated sense of yourself that fear seems to come into the picture as a real element of life. And so as you give yourself more and more opportunities to be responded to by asking for help and getting it, by asking within for an enlightened answer from an enlightened One and you get the answer and get the confirmation of not being alone, it will reduce the general level of fear, what has tended to govern your physical experience and everyone’s because you thought you were alone. You see?

That’s the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Good evening, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I would like to know if you could give us a few words about the life of Jesus from the age of 12 say to 30, about which the Bible was profoundly reluctant to throw any light on? And secondly, after the resurrection did he travel to India and did he die there at the age of over 80 as some researchers have written about?

ANSWER: First of all after the resurrection I did not appear any longer on the face of the globe. My travels to India occurred during my 12th year on. I am not incline to elaborate now because you have me here now, at least in this manner today. But you also, all of you, have me available now as a direct inner experience. And I would appreciate your being interested in a present time real communion than about historical aspects. Because the issue now is the same as it was then: Waking up out of a biased perception of reality that causes you to suffer from the ignorance of what Reality is. And even when I address you from within I will in most instances decline to speak of my life as Jesus unless speaking of it specifically relates as a trigger to your insight and understanding now.

Before my very first conversation with Paul I presented myself at Susan's, his wife's, bedside, which scared her to death. Subsequently once I started talking with Paul he in his time of skepticism asked me to appear to him so that he might know that he wasn't going crazy and as some kind of objective proof that it wasn't just his imagination, or that I would make his pack of cigarettes disappear since they weren't good for him anyway—and just anything. And I neglected to do that, which he felt was unfair, because if I had appeared to Susan why not appear to him.

I explained to him that I would not appear to him until my appearance would not make any difference to him. Because in the first place I'm not the form that he would see, even though the form is that which identifies me just as I have said that your body identifies your Individuality perfectly. But if he saw a form he would in his mind from that point on, because that's where he is now, relate to me as a figure when I'm intelligence which is unconfined. You see? And until he has this experience clearly so that the form would not distract him and cause him to look in the narrow way that he looks at all bodies, I cannot do it. You see, the Christ always appears to each of you in the manner that effects "your transformation, your Awakening."

There are times I have spoken to Paul about my mother, Mary—just briefly—I have shared it with other's too, specifically she was just like any other Jewish mother, difficult to live with. And especially difficult because she never let me forget my divinity. And I brought it up before because when people have asked about parenting I have pointed out to them that the best thing they can do as a parent is to constantly remind their children that they are divine—constantly reflect back to them that they are more than just the human being that they are learning about in school., etc. Anyway, that is why I don't get into discussions about what happened between my 12th year and my 30th year—it's not relevant now.

All of you have concepts of me based upon the past, based upon historical writings. And I understand that you're about the gaps in the historical writings so that you might have a truer historical sense of me. But just as I have said that God is a Living God, being the Movement of Creation now, that God did not create the universe 4 million years ago like some perpetual motion machine and now it's just functioning the way He impulsed it back then. The impulse of Creation is always now and the Kingdom of Heaven is always brand new. Just as that is the case, the Christ is always now and will relate to you in the now wherever you are in your growth, wherever you are in your willingness to let in more of Reality with one function, and that is to invite you to let even more in, even more rapidly than you might spontaneously do it.

So I'm not avoiding answering your question. I could, but it doesn't fulfill the purpose of my function now, which has to do with addressing each one of you today with whatever your current mindsets are and inspiring you to let go of your commitment to those concepts so that the truer concept might register with you. You see? Do you have another question that I might answer for you.

QUESTION: I had an idea that I would, so maybe your question for me is correct. What I'm looking for is the warm breath of truth to blow away some of the destined cloudiness of orthodoxy which has been hampering our development. That's in my opinion.

ANSWER: Well, have you felt the breeze? You know, orthodoxy is a head trip. Orthodoxy is nothing more than sets of ideas held together by concepts and commitments. The only breath of fresh air you'll ever get is what will come from your heart. The heart is simple, but you have to feel for it instead of think for it. And in order to feel for it you have to stop thinking so much. You have to value having an experience rather than a clear idea. And the best way to do that is to practice thinking less. And in its place having a curiosity, as I've said before today, to have an experience. Do you see?

I've told Paul and I've told others before, you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven, you will feel your way into it. And so with all my talking it isn't really the words and it isn't really the ideas for you to go home and mull over and work over and organize and classify and understand. More than anything, if there is Movement as a result of our communion it will be because of the unuttered love that has been expressed, you see. And which has been being expressed while the words have been spoken. Because I'm communicating on more than the head level whether you realize it or not.

So if you want a breath of fresh air, don't look to theology, don't look to doctrines, look to that vulnerable, undefended place in you that is scary because you're not in control when you're in touch with it, and gingerly let yourself into it—feel into it. As I said, the Holy Spirit, which is that of you which you have disregarded in favor of your tinny sense of yourself, it is always looking for a weakness in the wall of your ego defenses. And so when you dare to be in a place where you're not well defended by your ideas, that provides the weak spot where the rest of you can penetrate.

Everyone would feel very secure if they could logically think their way into the Kingdom of Heaven. The reason it would be easy would be because you don't have to become undefended to do it. You don't have to become vulnerable. And yet that's what the heart is. It is vulnerable in that it isn't defended. But because it isn't defended it's the place where love can infill you and remind you that that is your nature. And then you become a transformational presence, not by design, not by anything you do, but because you are being in the world in a new way—fearlessly, you see.

When you allow yourself in that horrible place of nondefendedness, where you are utterly vulnerable and you experience the influx of love you have a spontaneous revelation. And my telling you this does not constitute the revelation because it doesn't constitute the experience. The revelation is that you are innocent because the love with which you are loved could only be extended to one who was innocent. Now what did you have to do to experience this revelation? All you had to do was fail as a good ego. All you had to do was let down your defenses and get into that awful experience of vulnerability.

Now the vicissitudes of life often push you into that place where it gets so hard that you give up. To you it feels like you finally arrive at a place where you say, "to hell with it," and it feels like the end. But in that place where you have not the energy to maintain the defenses any longer you have weaknesses in your ego boundaries that can be penetrated by what? The wholeness of you, which is the presence of God.

Now you can't go to school and be educated into having this experience. It has nothing to do with ideas, theologies, theories. It has to do with, well, becoming more human. Gastly thought! Especially for those who have been on their spiritual path. The more real and genuine you become as a human being the more humanity or humaneness there is in your experience and in the way you treat yourself and the way you treat others.

And the only way enough humility comes into play to allow humaneness to be important is when you dare to love for no good reason at all. And this has nothing to do with theories, again, ideologies, concepts. It's just being willing to abandon all the fronts, all the masks, all the roles, and letting them fall away. Again, horror of horrors, because you thought they were what gave you dignity and if they are gone and you stand there in the all-together of what you Really are, the fear is that you will obviously be worthless, ugly, not worthy of appreciation, that you will stand convicted of all you thought was wrong with you because it will be obvious. But when you become too tired to hold up the masks any longer, and you really let them drop that's when this influx of love occurs and you find yourself exonerated of all that you thought you were guilty of, not really exonerated but it becomes obvious that there was nothing ever really there for you to become exonerated from.

And then because it's so clear to you that you're just a human being like everyone else, and there really cannot be anything special about that which stands there in his or her all-together, it becomes obvious to you that this innocent one that you are, that you are so clearly aware of now and that is so loved, is just like the person next door. The next door person is no different from this innocent, utterly loved one that you are. And that's when you can begin to look with new eyes, not because you're going to do it on purpose, but because it's so obvious to you what the truth is that there's no other way to look at your neighbor, you see. And that starts the ripple, if you will.

Now the ripples already been started. None of you are going to be the initiators of the ripple, but you will be the extenders of the ripple. And each one of you who wakes up, whether it's slow or more speedy, lessens the density of the dream—we'll put it that way—and makes it more difficult for those who are still insisting on dreaming to succeed in dreaming. It's like the sun coming up, and no matter how much you would like to sleep it becomes more difficult.

So the breath of fresh air comes not from anything you might study, but from either voluntarily abandoning the ego or through crisis failing as an ego. And all you have to bring to the process is what the Course calls a little willingness. You don't have to know how to make it work. You don't have to make it work. It's like a dam, if you lower the gate you don't have to do anything to force the water to flow over. It's spontaneous, it's inevitable and there's no work involved. The key word is “let, let, let, Thy Will not mine be done.”

And so the breeze continues to blow through the room. The breath of fresh air. The warmth of love and the inspiration to dare to explore the possibilities of the Kingdom of Heaven right here and right now. And this is a perfect time for a break.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj, for a beautiful answer.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

ANSWER: I'm going to tell you a story, an illustration of Guidance and a proper attitude towards Guidance—a true story, not a parable. As I said yesterday, when Paul and I had our first conversation, I told him my name was Rajpur. Approximately nine months later somebody brought him a copy of the Text of “A Course In Miracles,” having become aware that Paul was speaking with me and that many of the ideas that Paul had shared about our conversations seemed relevant to the Course.

And Paul spent the next couple of days perusing the book and finding places where it said in the first person that, “I told my disciples” or references that made it obvious that Jesus was obviously the speaker. And Paul asked me “Who wrote this book?” His question meant, “Should I believe that the Course was actually dictated by Jesus.” And my response to him was, “I did.” That didn't mean that Raj had written the Course, it meant that Jesus had written the Course and I was Jesus. And Paul understood that, from those two words—“I did.”

Because we had been intimately involved for nine months prior to that, Paul was not particularly impressed with the fact that he was talking to Jesus, because he had come to know me without having any conceptions associated with who I was. And so, we proceeded on for the next two or three years, and because he was not in awe of me, he was very real with me, and everything was fine. In other words, we were able to communicate without my having to cut through false responses, and so on.

And then we did a gathering in Virginia Beach, Virginia, and sitting about six feet over was a young priest in seminary, and he asked me a question. And what followed was what felt to Paul like a very intimate conversation—more intimate than most of the exchanges that had taken place. And in the course of this conversation something happened in Paul, and he said to himself, “My God this really is Jesus.” And he shifted, not knowing it. And from that moment on, he became obedient to me. That was not a response to me but a response to his conditionings about who Jesus is—his training and so on.

As a result, unbeknownst to him, he stopped being real and honest with me. He had reverence and took whatever I said as gospel, if you will. And so I said to him, “We’re going to form a nonprofit corporation,” which he did, with my guidance, very obediently. And as the next year passed I kept giving him further directions as to the operation of the Foundation that were increasingly impossible to accomplish. But he, because it was coming from me, obediently did what I said. For him life began to be really tough, because he wasn’t paying attention to himself, he wasn’t paying attention to his feelings. He was just being obedient to me.

And after approximately a year passed, in utter frustration he sat down and said to me, “If I refuse to having anything further to do with this Foundation, this nonprofit corporation, will you still talk with me?” And he was not testing me. He was, in so many words, saying that he really did refuse. And I said, “Of course I will still talk with you.” And he said, “Good, because I’m through with it.” And I told him, “Thank God,” that I had been waiting for him to arrive at this point. And he said, “What do you mean?” And I explained to him that this shift had occurred in this gathering in Virginia Beach. And he said, “Why didn’t you tell me? I would have stopped.” And I said, “Because you would have stopped obediently, not because you felt it.”

He had to arrive at a point where his integrity became more important than being obedient. Because when he was in his integrity, even if it was constituted of some ego concepts, he was honest with me. And because of the honesty of our relationship transformation could occur. But when he was just being obedient, there was no real communication. You see? I explained to him that he had to arrive at the point of saying “No” for his reasons, not for mine. And it was a great turning point for him because I had also conveyed by the whole experience that in the process of listening to guidance it was imperative that he never abandon whatever degree of integrity he felt about himself.

There are many times he has been pissed off with me because I pushed for things that he felt unready for. But he was very polite during this period of obedience. And because he wasn't bringing himself, as he currently experienced himself to be, into our communion, we could not communicate. You see?

So, my point is that as I said earlier, each one of you as you sit here is the total ultimate of what you Are. You haven't lost one iota of what God is expressing as Himself right there where each one of you is. And so, it's like your sanity that you can't abandon, you can just ignore, your integrity can be abandoned, but it can't be gotten rid of. And so no matter how caught up in a dream or a biased perception of the Kingdom of Heaven, or of yourself you are indulging in, there is always present right where you are the integrity of God. And so in giving up the ego, in abandoning the ego, you will not be abandoning that of your integrity which has always been present right where you are. You will not find that you will suddenly be transformed into someone else—a spiritual being. There will always be what I'm going to call either a gradual transition or a graceful transition in which whatever integrity was consciously being experienced grows in your awareness. And where your awareness of yourself grows rather than disappearing.

What is Real about you will increase in your conscious awareness of yourself. So you are at every moment of your “insanity” worthy of self-respect. And you practice self-respect by not overriding whatever integrity you're experiencing at the moment because your integrity is always Real with a capital “R”, no matter how colored it might be by false perceptions of it. Do you understand what I am saying?

So in the process of listening to guidance, which at some point it will become obvious to you that the guidance is coming from one who is divine—as Christed as I am—it does not mean that you are to abandon self-respect in order to give respect to this one who is divine and Awake and conscious of it. This is very important. You can do it. As I explained, Paul did it, but I found a way. I put the screws to him so that he arrived at a point where he could no longer override his integrity. You see? I pushed him to the point of having to act consistently with the integrity that he has even in the middle of his dreaming.

So you can stand in awe of guidance and you can defer to guidance, but guidance won't let you successfully abandon the integrity of yourself. So I am telling you this so that you might know ahead of time in listening for guidance that it is not a process of demeaning or diminishing you. You're already suffering from being diminished. You see?

So when you experience guidance, be real. If you don't understand something, ask for clarification. If you can't agree with something, disagree. If you get angry with something, express the anger. There have been times when Paul said, “Don't call me, I'll call you,” and didn't talk to me for three or four days. He was through! And then he came back, “Are you there?” And he felt me smile. And I said, “Yes.” And we went on from there.

In honoring yourself by being real, no matter who you think you are, no matter what you think is real, being yourself is essential to a successful communion and process of Awakening, if I can put it that way. Don't, . . . don't stand in awe of me. Don't stand in awe of any divine guidance that you get or the source of that guidance.

I have heard it said that the English like to put people up on pedestals and then knock them off. Well, don't do that with me. And don't do that with your guides. Don't elevate us. I told someone one time who had a bust of me on her credenza, "If you do not see yourself in me, you have not seen me." And this is very important. And it was important for me to share this with all of you today.

You have integrity, even in the middle of your insanity. And you start where you are so that whatever integrity you are allowing yourself to feel may be enlarged so that there is no discontinuity of the experience of identity between this point and your being totally Awakened. And that is also why I have said start with everything where you are and be curious to see the Kingdom of Heaven in it. Because it's everything that you are experiencing, no matter how covered over it is with misperceptions and false beliefs, that you will become enlightened about. You see? It's not somewhere else—the Kingdom of Heaven, Reality. It's not someplace else. And the divine one you are is not some place else. It's sitting right in those chairs. And the integrity that each one of you feels is the divine integrity, no matter how minimally you might be experiencing it in its reality. You see?

So, guidance will never allow you, any more than I allowed Paul, to further abandon the conscious experience of your integrity. So don't be willing to do it from the outset just because you find you're talking to me, or to anyone who is, for lack of better words, fully Christed.

It was a period of time for Paul that having guidance wasn't much fun and life wasn't much fun as long as he insisted on being obedient. If you defer to anyone else you will not be comfortable. But if you are deferring out of obedience because of a concept you have you also can't be told to stop, because you will pretend to stop obediently. And the only way Paul could stop was by connecting once again with the genuineness of himself. You're the point! Each one of you is the focus of our attention. We're not the focus for your attention!

So, who has a question?

QUESTION: Raj, Hi. A personal as well as particular and universal question on (?) Some years ago after a lot of trying I joined the fastest growing form of family on the planet, and that is single motherhood. I bring up my two children on my own. And what I would like to know is what that means, the discrepancies between males and females on the planet? My question has changed when I listened to you over the last two hours, and I thought well my personal time is between twelve o'clock at night and two or three in the morning, and I get out of bed each night and I read or I cry or I write poetry until I'm completely washed out. And it is obviously then that my masks are down, when no one is actually looking at me other than the cats.

We compliment women who raise families, and as I said it's the fastest form of family on the planet. Do we need to get completely worn down to the bone day after day so that at night time we can get up and let our mask down? Or what does that mean for our dear brother's who are not able or capable to be the father's to the family, or the providers, or the partners or the mates?

ANSWER: Let's answer the first part of the question first.

QUESTION: Right! The big question!

ANSWER: What you have to stop doing is letting the masks down at midnight. You have to leave the mask down. Not wearing the masks does not mean you will be dysfunctional. And the greatest lesson that you can teach your children, not by words but by deeds, is to be unmasked and functional and truly relevantly meaningful, so that they realize that they don't have to ever put on masks. And if you take the masks off and don't put them back on, everything that you engage in during your daytime hours before midnight will not exhaust you and will not deplete you, and also will not play into any sense of pride as being a capable woman, you see.

Paul is wearing no masks at the moment. Is he dysfunctional? Is he weird? If he wore no mask when he went into a grocery store we would not talk about the Kingdom of Heaven, we would be utterly appropriate in the transaction at the check out stand and we would talk about how much to pay and paying it and perhaps being friendly and giving a cheery good-bye. And that would be divinely expressive of the Kingdom of Heaven. You see?

When your mask is down and you are not trying to meet a concept of motherhood—hello...a concept of motherhood then—you're really able to be present with the circumstance and those around you so that you can recognize what's really needed even if what is really needed is something that hadn't fit your concept. But because you are not tied up in maintaining the masks you are able to respond appropriately with less expenditure of energy.

Masks are defenses. Masks are the fences that one holds between one's self and life. Other people feel the fact that a fence is between you and them. They might not be able to say that they're feeling it. But I promise you that when the masks are off they will recognize that something is different when they're with you than there are when they're with other people.

Now, there might be a more productive way for you to identify yourself than as a single parent. And that is that you are one of the growing number of those who are desiring and allowing the dropping of their masks so that they are able to be more real and more present and more constructively responsive to what's happening in their life and those with them. And that won't estrange you from them. And it won't estrange you from married couples with children. It won't estrange you in anyway. Whereas the concept "single parent" does—it clearly distinguishes you from, you see.

Now, women indeed are having to come out from under the classification of second class citizens. But for them to think that they are going to become equal with men is an unproductive and false assumption. What you need as a woman is to come into a clear sense of your wholeness and your integrity, as we've just been talking, so that you're not overriding it and you're not afraid to express when you are confronted with a demand to abandon your integrity in favor of someone else's idea of how you ought to be.

Men likewise, are having the increasing demand to become whole themselves, which means that they are having to learn how to feel something which women never lost the capacity to do. In feeling, a man has to abandon the valuing of his intellect and who and what he thinks he is relative to women. Men have to learn how to recognize that they have feelings. And theoretically one could say they have the demand facing them to become equal to women. And yet that's not what it's about. It's about men and women becoming whole so that what they're sharing with each other is their wholeness, not their halfness—needing the other half to compliment and complete them. This is Sanity.

If any woman insists on "women's rights" and becoming equal with men they will have to abandon the best in them, because men have abandoned the best in them. And if you're going to become equal to them, you're going to have to become like them. And it is going to be very wearing. Because the process of abandoning your capacity to feel in favor of the hard, cold, mechanical nature of thinking and intellectualizing and reasoning your way through everything is against your nature—it was against men's nature too as they abandoned it. And it was hard. And that isn't what the call is for. The call is for women to become reassociated with their integrity, which is their strength, and for men to become reacquainted with their feelings. Because until they can feel they can't let themselves into that vulnerable place we were talking about earlier, where they can be infilled with love.

Women tend to wake up first.

The second part of your question...

QUESTION: It changed already. I have a son and a daughter as you may have gathered from the way I asked before. And some years back I was quite happy to eliminate any male on the planet ever existed. But having a son myself, I like to have a way forward to help him and his sister to become whole more quickly than probably I can.

ANSWER: The only way you can do that is by not playing into their insistence upon your confirming to them their need for halfness. You've heard the saying, "You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink"? As their parent you were never given the kind of authority over them that would make them drink when they are not ready. So that's not your charge. It's not your task. It's not your responsibility. The only thing that you can do is to be in your own integrity without masks to the best of your own ability, and then not support them as they experiment with the experience of halfness.

I'll tell you something else, and I told it to Paul a long time ago: Very often the fastest way to find out that you don't want something is to be allowed to have it. So when you try to protect your children from having experiences sometimes you lengthen the distance between the start of their journey and their realization that they don't want what they thought they wanted. Because they will engage in a struggle with you instead of getting on with having what they thought that they wanted and then discovering that it wasn't what they thought it was. You see?

So be careful not to protect them out of the very experience that would promote their quality more quickly. It's not your task to see to it that they don't try on the masks of halfness. But it is your responsibility not to confirm to them that that's a good idea. You see? That's also going to mean a lot less work for you. It's very hard to get a bull's mouth into the water trough, or a heifer.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Sometimes things are much simpler than you imagine. And you will save a lot of energy if in dealing with your kids you give them limits that are based upon the limits of your comfort zone, "I can't deal with this, and so you will have to wait until you have left home to explore it." If you say, "don't do this because it is wrong," they will say, "well, that's just your opinion." But if you say, "this activity, or this attitude doesn't work for me. And because this is my home which I have made for myself and you, you cannot engage in this activity or this attitude while you're living in my home. But once you're on your own you're free to explore this activity or that attitude to your hearts content." They cannot say, "that's your opinion," they can't argue against it and won't be inclined to because you have expressed yourself. You have said, "this doesn't work for me. This is not within the scope of what I choose to tolerate." There is less they can challenge about that. And because you are not judging them in the process, and because judgment doesn't add a tinge to your statement to them they're more likely to honor you, and there will be less argument. And you will find that you have the ability to be quite firm without using force—the force of ideas, the force of guilt, the force of shame, you see.

That's just good common sense. Something we tend to forget about in this day of modern ideas and modern psychology, which for the most part tend to cause everyone to abandon their simple common sense, their groundedness, because, "well you have to grow, it's modern times. You've got to be willing to do things in a new way." Well it will never be reasonable to abandon common sense.

It will never be reasonable to abandon your humanity and your ability to be humane in the name of progress.

QUESTION: When you came 2000 years ago as Jesus and left, the people with your message had considerable debate and even fights about what you did or did not say, from which developed Christian dogma and the churches and all the history. Yesterday here we had what seemed to me to be a dogmatic debate about what you did or did not say in The Course In Miracles. How this time do you think you can avoid those humans getting into dogmatic debates about what you're saying?

ANSWER: I am not going to avoid it and it is going to happen. But it's only going to happen for those to whom the intellect is more important than the experience of love. And even if I appeared in bodily form and told them the fact, told them the truth, they still would argue the point because that's their process of finding out that what they think they want isn't what they want. And I will not stop them from making their discovery since they are committed to that particular path of discovery.

There's no judgment called for. And it will work for them like it worked for Paul. His spontaneous inclination to be obedient brought him to the point of realization and it was okay. It was not wrong, it was just strenuous for him. And I didn't quibble with him about it. And I'm not going to quibble with those who want to quibble. You see?

QUESTION: Can I have a "yes, but"?

ANSWER: Of course.

QUESTION: Yes, but in the Christian history there's been persecution, there's been violence, there's been war. And the people that weren't intellectual got caught up in it...

ANSWER: Well, this is true of other religions as well.

QUESTION: Yes, I know more about it. And people who didn't engage in this intellectual debate got caught up in this, and hurt in this. Are we going to avoid that happening yet again?

ANSWER: Yes, we're not going to have religious wars. And there are more scribes. You know, I said to Paul early on, the message will get through like the early pony express in America. And it's going to come through in many different forms of expression because let us say the message for the Australian Aborigines will necessarily have to be different from the language of expression for a Western World Scientist.

Where everyone is at, the message will be there in language that they can understand, or which at least the potential for understanding is greatest. So there may be factions here and there who will quibble the metaphysics. But in this day and age there are too many of you who's hearts are hurting—I'm going to put it that way—which means there are too many of you who have a heart connection even if there is resistance there. There are more people who are hungry for the experience of what Love truly is than there are those who will insist upon working everything out metaphysically or intellectually.

And so, those who insist on operating with commitment only to the intellect will find their numbers dwindling. And not only will there be fewer and fewer of them to fight with each other, they will also find their intent to quibble losing impetus, because it is going to go out of fashion. That's the simplest way I can put it. There literally are not enough years of dreaming left for organized religious wars to occur. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: (It was very hard to understand the words with this ladies accent) I've been listening to what you said here today. And I've been rather stuck in my head for some time now and to be honest with myself and genuinely find out a passing life of love (?). I think I've always worn some sort of mask over my emotions and feelings and consequently have this familiar apple between my ego and divine guidance. About a year ago now I moved to(?) and one might call it an impulse or whim. And having said that at the time it's only brief as a(?) and I went home down to the fence (?) and decided that I was going to buy a house up here that I'd seen just briefly as a result of looking at(?) Anyway as a result of this I was fairly sure it was guidance from God that was sending me there, for what reason I have no idea.

Since then with this battle within myself and trying to get on some sort of path I feel comfortable with God and with myself, I'm beginning to wonder now if in fact I run away.

ANSWER: Yes and no. Yes you did run away. But you weren't given total freedom to run away to just anywhere. You were funneled into a perfect place for rediscovery to occur. And you actually have run away to a place that is not a temporary stay. In other words, you run away right into your fulfillment.

Now the fulfillment of it may not be registering with you fully yet, but by virtue of my sharing this with you, you have permission to stop fussing about whether you ran away or did the right thing or not, and you can begin to allow yourself to be present where you are with a curiosity to see the fulfillment that you were kindly assured into in the midst of your flight.

I am smiling because it is going to be a delightful thing for you to discover—the reason that you're here I mean. So when you stand on the ground here in Scotland, when you sit in a chair in the house here in Scotland, let your full weight rest here instead of dancing on the tips of your toes wondering whether to go somewhere else or whether you really should be here. Stand with your weight fully placed where your feet are, or where your derriere is. And in being present in that manner you will begin to discover why you're here. Welcome to Scotland.

QUESTION: Well, I did get a rainbow when I crossed the border. I must admit that.

ANSWER: And there is one on your face at the moment... through the window... truly.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. And having said that—the welcome—I would like to say that since I’ve been here amidst this terrible turmoil that I’ve dreaded, I’ve had lot of love and support from the people here. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: The work that I’m doing at present will possibly be scheduled to finish fairly soon. I work with handicapped people. So I have two questions. I’m a bit confused...

ANSWER: Have you run out of handicapped people to work with?

QUESTION: No, but they’re cutting down the number of tutors that they use in services for financial reasons. So it’s quite possible that I will get cut down and I’m confused about that. And both for the remainder of my time I’d like to know if there is more I could do to serve the people I work with?

ANSWER: No. You truly do work with them coming out of the fullness of you. And what I encourage you to do is to be at peace with just exactly the way you are being with them. Because in being at peace about it rather than thinking maybe there is more you could be doing the gift that you give will be fully given.

It is not an arrogant thing to be at peace about what you’re doing, to be pleased with what you are doing. But if there was something you could give a little more, it would be that every time you look in their eyes or every time you connect with them you be willing to recognize the Christ in them and the Father in them. But I will tell you that the love that you extend and the way you work with them inspires the Christ in them to come forth. And that’s what I want you to know so that you don’t in any way undermine yourself by feeling that you’re not doing enough. You see?

QUESTION: Am I going to be stopping doing it though?

ANSWER: At this point that is not the likelihood.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

Because not all of you are Scottish, I cannot say your Scottish welcome has been wonderful. Your multinational welcome has been deeply felt and I have enjoyed being with all of you these past two days. I have felt embraced. And whatever fear or awe any of you might have been feeling in anticipation of this weekend has disappeared. And I am grateful for that. Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –02/23/1997

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ: Good afternoon.

ALL: Good afternoon.

RAJ OPENING COMMENTS: Before we begin with questions and answers, there is a key point that I need to share with you. It is not a key point because I say it is a key point—I say it is a key point because in one way or another it addresses something each of you has brought with you today.

On a couple of previous occasions in other Gatherings, I have directed everyone's attention to the windows of the room in which the Gathering was being held. And I have pointed out that the glass in the window, even though you think of it as something made from silicon and of it being material, is nothing more than a force field, in exactly the same sense that science fiction stories speak of generating a force field. It is an absolutely clear presence of a pattern of energy that has enough cohesiveness to it that it holds its shape and, if you lean upon it when it is thick enough, you will not break it.

If you employ your imagination a little bit, it is relatively easy for you to abandon the idea that the glass is matter, and consider the idea that indeed, it is a force field—a pattern of energy with sufficient cohesiveness for it to have a discernable, substantial presence.

For those of you who are sitting at the table over there, which has a glass top, and whose elbows or hands are on it, I want you to pay attention to your contact with it as though it were an energy field rather than a presence of matter. And the rest of you, I want you to imagine that you are touching a piece of glass. The reason for this exercise is to give you the opportunity to grasp, at least conceptually, that you can have a brand new experience of something with which you are completely familiar. You can touch the glass as though it has no physical substance to it whatsoever, and that it is pure energy. There is nothing material about it.

You could imagine a science fiction story that takes place in the future, where someone could mentally take an area in front of them and through the use of their thought, create a force field much like glass, that would be completely solid, completely clear and would support that one's weight if one were to stand or sit on it. It is possible for you to conceive of that force field as pure energy. Now again, what I want you to realize is that the glass in the windows and the glass in the table is exactly that.

Why am I saying this? I am saying this so that you might realize that your very definite concepts of what everything is are not true—are not absolute. And glass, as an energy field is a very simple way that all of you have to play with . . . not the idea, but the fact that what you think everything is isn't what it is and that there is a radically different way to experience it.

Now, I have a point I'm leading up to. You touch the piece of glass and it's easy for you to pay attention to it as though maybe it isn't glass, but that it's just energy in a recognizable, discernable pattern. What I want you to do now is to question what it is that's touching the glass. Is it matter? Or, is your hand or your elbow or your body also energy pattern which has enough stability and cohesiveness to be recognizable, discernable and tangible, but which doesn't have a speck of matter to it?

I am sharing this with you in this way so that you might have a means of easily considering that your bodies are not organic, are not material, but, being pure energy, are expressions of something equally nonmaterial—which is the Mind of God, the Prime Mover, the Creator. And the reason it remains in an identifiable pattern is because of the integrity of the Idea which it expresses—and the Idea has integrity because God is “thinking” It, you might say.

This is so important because, if your body isn't matter, is insubstantial in the sense that it's pure energy, and the only substance it seems to have is because there is a cohesiveness of the Idea as it is held in the Mind of God, then it is obvious that if there is distortion of your body—if there is disease, if there is the evidence of accident, if there is evidence of anything less than exquisite beauty expressed by every portion of your body—you are not stuck with it! The reason you are not stuck with it is because laws of matter are not what are holding it together, but the integrity behind the Idea that God has in Mind that looks like each of you and looks like that which identifies you, called your body.

If there is nothing material about your body, you don't have to wait for matter to change according to the laws of physics, which will take time. Even things that everyone believes are impossible—if there is a shortened or amputated limb, a damaged eye with scar tissue that means that there will never be able to be sight there—are not impossible. Why? Because the eye, the limb, whatever part of the body, is still held in the Mind of God as God's Idea. It still has the integrity of the expression of God, and any lesser manifestation of the Presence of God than what I just described has not the means of maintaining its distorted appearance.

Healing can occur instantaneously because it doesn't take time for a pattern of energy to reconfigure. You see? It doesn't have to wait for atoms and matter to abide by regenerative processes of matter to arrive at a form of perfection and harmony that expresses what is really the truth about you. Again: The reason it doesn't have to take time is because none of it is matter, and it takes no force to shift patterns of energy.

Now, this might make it sound as though you could go to a catalog of body parts—I think you call them fashion magazines—and pick out the design you would like best for you, and change your mind about your body and have it look like that.

What you need to understand is that any deformity you are experiencing is a result of exactly that process. Any dissonance, any disease, any distress that you are experiencing is being experienced because you have chosen a belief, an attitude, a concept about your body that's inconsistent with the Idea that God has had, and is having at this moment, that causes you to Be!

So healing is not a result of your being able to have a creative idea about how you would like to look. It is, instead, abandoning ideas of how you would like to look, how you think you have to look, what you believe circumstances have forced you to look like. It is to abandon those, and say, "I would like to be experiencing the Idea that God has in Mind which is the reason I exist in the first place. I would like to experience God's Idea which is my presence. I would like to experience it the way God is intending it at this moment and at every moment. I yield up all of my conscious justifications for not looking utterly beautiful, for not having the manifestation of perfect health and perfect symmetry and perfect harmony. I yield them up and yield instead to God's original, current Idea which is the Spirit that patterns the energy that makes me experienceable."

You've heard about glorifying God, and you might think that's what you do when you sing praises. But you know what? When you're willing to have a different attitude about your body of the sort that I've just described, when you are willing to look at it and say, "I'm willing to yield up my justifications for it being the way I experience it at this moment, and I desire to experience God's intent right here where my body is," you are opening the door for God to illuminate His Presence, because you're no longer interfering with It. And by letting His Presence manifest Itself, you are praising God, you are glorifying God. You see?

Here's a wonderful thing that all of you can go home with. You have a way to go home and glorify God without becoming overly religious and spiritual. You can glorify God by saying, "I would like to experience what God is intending by the Idea He is having that constitutes my presence. And I know that the experience of the perfection of His Idea doesn't have to take time to manifest because there isn't any matter here that has to adjust according to laws of physics. There is only energy—subtle, intangible energy—which can shift without force and without time.”

Now, you may do this, and by the time you go to bed tonight you might say, “Big deal. Not much happened.” Well, let me tell you, that doesn't mean that you're stuck with “matter adjusting according to laws of physics.” It simply means that you are still, to some degree, energizing the justifications you have for why it can't happen faster. That's okay. Just understand that that's why, and then you won't become discouraged by thinking that it really is matter which is resistant to change because of this thing called inertia, which is a physical “fact”—and persist.

“Well, this deformity, this problem, has been here since I was a child.” “All my reactivity to my environment came with me when I was born.” “It's so definite, it's so actual, that it's going to be hard to see a change.” You see how you're writing the script with your very words? It isn't because you've experienced it for thirty or forty or fifty years. It's because in the moment you're in, you are giving a definition, you are giving a word, and that is the way you are denying yourself the opportunity of experiencing a shift of experience of the patterns of energy that you call your body.

I will tell you that when you meditate, whenever you “participate” in any activity which brings you to a place of peace where you're not thinking, your body begins immediately to reflect better harmony, better order, better cohesiveness, simply because at that time you are not consciously exercising your justifications for it being less cohesive, less orderly, more aggravated, and so on.

So, the glass you touch and what you're touching it with is energy—patterns of energy. And the patterns are established and maintained by the Mind that gave rise to them. And the Mind that gave rise to them was God. And therefore, the patterns must be as indivisible and undivided as That which formed them. And if they are undivided, they are incapable of expressing conflict, inharmony, impurity.

I tell you that if we adjourned at this moment having discussed only this one point, the nonmateriality of matter, and you went home and played with that idea and considered that it might actually be true, it would begin a process of transformation for every single one of you.

Actually, the fact is that even if you go home and ignore what I've talked about, it's still going to percolate. But it needed to be put into words so that you could hear it, and be reminded of it, because it's an illegitimate imposition upon a Son or Daughter of God to be experiencing imperfection or inharmony of any sort at any time. It is especially unjust because there is no law and there is no matter, there is no substance that can actually resist the presence of the Ideas of God, and the rendering visible of those Ideas. And so there is no reason for any deformity or disease of any kind to last more than one millisecond longer.

Whether you're willing to let in something else is another matter, but I want you to know that there is nothing, outside of your unwillingness to experience more, that is inhibiting or can inhibit the instantaneous manifestation of perfection at any moment that you are willing to let it be for you.

Now the ego is a bastard. It is always unkind. I did not really use the word "bastard" in a derogatory way. It has no father, it has no mother, it has no source. But the ego will say to you, "Ah, you mean all of this shit is my fault?" "You mean I've created this for myself?" "You mean all along it's been me?" And it would distract you into a guilt trip—a guilt trip that would inhibit you from engaging your capacity to have curiosity to say, "I would like to have the experience of what God intended by His Idea that looks like my toe, or my ankle, or my knee or my leg, or me."

Even if you avoid feeling guilty for having created all of this for yourself in the past, and you approach this present moment with a genuine curiosity, if your abandonment or relinquishment of your mindsets and your confidences doesn't happen to be rapid, it can begin to say, "Well, maybe it works for Raj, but it doesn't work for me." And it can sidetrack you again from the simple expression of curiosity with a willingness to say, "Maybe nothing that I see means what I think it means, and I'm curious to experience what it Means."

"Well, I don't know anybody who's ever done that successfully. Oh, I've heard of a few instantaneous healings here and there, but this is not reasonable for me." You're going to have to abandon history. You're going to have to abandon your past experience. How else are you going to wake up if you don't abandon the experience that hasn't included being Awake? If you've never had the experience of being Awake, then you had better abandon your past experience as the measuring stick of your future! You see? So what if nobody ascended in the last 2,000 years? So what if no one else has Awakened in the last 2,000 years on this planet?

"I would like to have the experience of the Meaning God intended and intends in His Idea that I am the presence of, and the Ideas that my body is the presence of." That's your prayer. That's the way you open the door to glorify God. And when you constantly remind yourself that there is nothing existing that has the capacity to block what God is being, because there isn't any matter, you will be able to minimize the justifications you have as to why instantaneous healing can't happen. And you will begin to glorify God in your very presence without saying a single spiritual word.

We will take a break.

Okay. Who has a question?

QUESTION: First I want to extend my love and my great appreciation for your presence in my life, Raj.

RAJ: It is wonderful that you are letting me in, I will tell you.

QUESTION: Thank you. Related to your opening remarks, I have, for the last twenty years, experienced my body in terms of waves of energy particles, motions. And they feel like energy fields that press upon my body, and it distracts me from my peace. And I wanted to know if what I am perceiving, where I am, is related to what you were speaking of earlier.

RAJ: Well, what you are referring to is the sensation of what I'm going to call "the impact of energy" which one feels when one is using one's body as a defense.

You all exist in a sea of energy, if you will, which is in constant motion. When one uses one's body as a defense, it tends to cause it to be experienced as though it's dense, and then the sea of energy and the movement of energy that one exists in, instead of being able to flow freely through, meets the resistance of the self-protection that you are bringing into play, and you feel it. You feel it not with the joy and peace that you would be feeling if you were undefended, but rather with a sensation of, for lack of better words, "impact."

You see, it is not that you are being confronted by negative energy. It is not that you are in an environment of negative energy which these sensations are evidence of. You are in the infinite presence of the only energy there is, which is the energy of Spirit, which is the Movement of God, and It's not polarized. But when any of you use your body as a defense, as a place of self-protection, and you create a resistance, a density, then the movement of Spirit, the energy of Spirit, is experienced as though there is polarity—good energy/bad energy. And, of course, that seems to justify being even more defended, which will increase the experience of polarity or impact when what is called for is the willingness to let down, to relax, in effect to open the slats on the louvers on the blinds so that the air can move through without jangling the blinds. You see? Does that illuminate it for you?

QUESTION: Thank you, yes it does.

RAJ: You are welcome. I just want to share that all of you have the most powerful presence, the most significant presence, the most substantial presence, when you aren't trying to be a presence.

There is a saying: "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." When your sense of yourself becomes minimal, your Self becomes maximal. And your Self is not "a" self you're responsible for. It's the presence of God, which God is responsible for. And so, it's when you as an ego or you as a self-made presence are the least expressed that the presence of God, Which is What is where you are, shows forth. It is when you are, like I've said before, a failure as an ego that the Christ that you Are is automatically what is present. When you're putting forth the least effort to be something in the world, you become something significant in the world. It's that simple.

When we were in England I used the illustration of a square sheet of vinyl that was put in a wooden frame. You can take your fist and push it into the sheet of vinyl, and the vinyl will change shape to conform to the amount of pressure you are applying, and you can see the fingers and the knuckles through the vinyl. I explained that healing is like your removing your hand from the piece of vinyl. The piece of vinyl moves back into its original flat state—not because you healed it from its contorted shape, but because you neglected to any longer distort it, yourself. You see?

When you are trying to be someone, you are being the fist forcing its way through "the energy field"—like the piece of glass—causing it to have a shape that it is not its nature to be in. And when you let go of attempting to be someone, you stop distorting the energy field, and you say, "Oh, I'm having a healing. Now what did I do to make that happen?" Well, what you did was less than you had been doing before. You see? What you did was that you stopped doing what distorted your experience of the presence of God, Which is what constitutes your presence.

It's important to know that just as the sheet of latex has the intent to be flat and absent of tension, your body has the intent to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. And so, when you stop using your body as a defense, or as a shield to protect yourself, or as a shape having enough weight to it to be a formidable presence in the world to help provide you with safety—when you stop using the body in these ways, it is like removing your fist from the latex, and you find your body beginning to perform its function perfectly, which is to identify you perfectly, which means to express nothing other than the Idea in the Mind of God that constitutes you.

When you have been taught that control is the almighty important thing in life, this idea that I am expressing seems totally insane. You have been taught that without the exercise of control, chaos will be the result. I am telling you that chaos is the result of being in control, and letting go of control will allow the fundamental nature of God to once again appear in the world. It's not risky, because just as the latex is intent upon being flat—[being perfectly what it is]—if no power is being exerted over it, so does your body and so does your world!

Hands?

QUESTION: I am so happy to be here, I can't —

RAJ: I can feel it.

QUESTION: Yes. In the past I would have said, "Oh, yes, yes, yes. What else can I do?" Now I can say, "Yes, yes, yes. What else can I not do?" I heard you say that my function is to extend love. And you showed me how to practice that, how to act it out. And I love it. And it's easy, and . . .

RAJ: Would you share with everyone else what I told you?

QUESTION: It's really easy. He told me—actually he told me 2½ years ago but I just got it—to find an object of my affection. And I did try to do that for 2½ years with my mind. And that was the best I could do, was to use my mind to find an object and somehow have the love that I was feeling come out to the object. But what I got in the last little while is to actually find an object and clean it, or polish it. And I have been doing that. I went to my stove, and little lacquer box. I can't tell you what joy it is for someone who's been as intellectual as I am to know that I'm fulfilling my function by shining my stove, doing it with love, and seeing the stove reflect to me that it's been loved.

RAJ: It says, "Do unto others," doesn't it?

QUESTION: Yeah! And then I have found, by doing this with objects, the insight and the motivation to be this way with people, which is really very moving.

RAJ: For them as well.

QUESTION: Oh, good. I thought so. So this morning, I was having a migraine, and I went and extended love to this lacquer box and while I was cleaning it and it looked beautiful beyond anything I imagined, I didn't have a headache. But when I stopped, I did. And I took medication. So what is it that I can either not do or not recognize or not conceptualize to experience the actual perfection that I know I am?

RAJ: Well, it's sort of obvious, isn't it? Don't stop when the lacquer box is clean. Don't let there be a break. "Now I've loved something. Now I'll have a little time where I don't have an object of my affection." You see? If you had done the lacquer box and been attentive for something else, so that the expression of affection continued, you would not have had the migraine. You see?

I know I bring this up quite often—not with you, but many of you have heard me say it before—that the Sunday Gathering comes and Paul sits down and lets me respond to everything. And when it's over, "time's up!" Now he can respond to everything. And he doesn't have the unpleasant experience of a migraine, but what he doesn't realize is that he has an unpleasant experience. He has an experience in which there is no experience of being meaningful. He does not have the experience of Peace.

He gets to enjoy a little anxiety over how on earth he can carry out what I have told him to do. I do not mean that he wants to carry out my instruction to let me respond to everything. I mean that he picks something else—"that the work is to be done with no charge." And so then he tries to figure out how he can do it successfully without charging anything. You see? And he enjoys the little bit of anxiety because it's a challenge. If he can figure out how to do it, he'll be able to take credit for it, and he thinks that then the anxiety will disappear. But there will be another anxiety, because he stopped being the presence of Love and shifted into a place of being a tiny, personal authorizer of good, according to his best concept of what good is, or what he thinks my best concept of good is. You see?

God is the presence of the infinite Gift of conscious Being. So that must be what you are, and that must be what Paul is. That doesn't mean that you and Paul, somehow independent of God, will be miniature reflections of that Gifting. It means that all of you are, yourselves, the presence of God in the act of making that Gift. That is what your Being is. And you never will become little independent copies of God, being just like God.

So, if God is the Gift of conscious Being, and the fundamental nature of that Gift is Love—which is another way of saying that God is Mind, and the fundamental nature of Mind is Love—then that is your Function. And, of course there will be an object of your affection! You will not be able to help loving everything! And so it will be ceaseless loving, ceaseless expression of affection—expression, not idea, as you have grasped—the extension and connection of the expression of Love, the conscious experience of Love that isn't experienced only by you, but by the lacquer box or the stove or the friend or the enemy. You see?

So, don't take breaks.

QUESTION: I have a question about the nature of being Awake, and the nature of human, emotional experience—tragedies, the dark and the light experiences that we have that kind of swing us like a bell. One moment we're in tragedy, and the next moment or the next week or the next year we're . . .

RAJ: You want to know something that is helpful? There's a part of the bell that isn't moving—the very top. The movement is minuscule, and it's far away from the clanger.

There is a “point-of-stillness” in all movement, as contradictory as that sounds. And the point is to find that point-of-stillness and be in the midst of life from there. In that point-of-stillness is where you are one with everything universally. Actually. But when any of you abandon that infinite vantage point and view it from a body stance, from an identification with body, then you will feel vulnerable, you will become defensive.

As I said, the movement of the energy of Spirit will seem to be something “impacting” you—harshness, stillness, harshness, stillness—when the fact is that if you learn to abide at the still-point, the movement will never be experienced impactfully, but always as the experience of the movement of grace. There will be no way to conceptualize the movement as polarized, so tragedy and comedy will not be your experience. You see?

When you separate yourself from the experience of your Christhood and conceive of yourself as a mortal—a human being, a body with a brain that has synapses that cause you to have an experience of consciousness, but it's all physical—and the Christ of you comes and knocks on your door, you see the Christ as an intruder. You see the Christ as a threat.

All there is is the Movement of God, being seen clearly or being seen “through a glass darkly.” And if it's “through a glass darkly,” it's going to seem to be polarized when it's absolutely undivided and indivisible, when it isn't at all what you're calling it. So the key is to find that still-point.

QUESTION: Could you describe, then, from your experience on earth . . . it's my understanding from the Bible that there were times when you, as Jesus, felt emotion—"Jesus wept." I'm curious about the experience of being Awake and yet being in the human emotional experience. What's that like?

RAJ: Well, I want you to understand that compassion is not an emotion. And the capacity to comprehend dilemmas involves a Soul experience of infinite caring. But this does not constitute an emotion. An emotion is a reaction, and reactions arise out of incomplete data. Compassion and the expression of Soul arise out of complete data, out of Knowing everything.

It does not make me sad to see all of you suffering from nothing. But when you are, your capacity to be present with us, to be present with me, is limited. And so you could say, I miss and I look forward to being able to be with all of you without the interference of a sense of suffering that isn't really going on. You see? One could say, perhaps, that that is an emotion, but you know what? To recognize something exquisitely beautiful is a recognition of Truth, and it feels good, but it's not an emotional response. What it is is an unobstructed experience of the presence of God right there, by God Himself. It's me claiming no private point of view of my own, and therefore allowing God's point of view to be my point of view as God sees and recognizes the utter exquisiteness of what He is in what He is seeing. And there is, because it is such a natural experience, a desire, you might say, to experience only That.

For the most part, that is all I experience. That is all that any of us who are Awake experience. Except there's this little band of us, this little group of us suffering from nothing, preoccupied with nothing. And so we look forward to, we desire to have, the full experience of your presence and your conscious experience of being present with us, without the obstruction of this silly distraction.

The weeping, as it were, was an expression of compassion, but it was far from an expression of helplessness. We care, and that's not an emotion. We love, because we are Love. We embrace because that's the nature of Love. And if our embrace isn't noticed, this Vision, this Knowing of the fullness of the potential in our relationship remains paramount. And so, whether you feel the embrace or not, whether you are too busy to notice it because you just forgot to love, it doesn't minimize our intent, our inclination to do what I told you to do at the beginning of this afternoon. Even if ignorance of our presence has been going on for 2,000 years or longer by many of you, it doesn't mean that a moment isn't all it takes for a change to occur. And so we do not become hopeless. We persist.

I suppose one could say that our unalterable desire could be called a yearning to be with you all, with your knowing that you're with us! You see? But yearning is an emotion. Nevertheless, we care and persist in our desire to have this glorious experience which it is our Birthright—yours and mine and the rest of the Brotherhood—to be experiencing with each other.

We feel our caring, we feel our Love—and we embrace you in It. We know that at the very moment when you're all preoccupied with your . . . well, distracted with nothing . . . that your capacity to experience us purely and with your full Birthright is right there! Your capacity is ever present. And we want . . . we want to experience the unity, the connection with you. But it's not an emotion.

Don't you find that often the purest feeling of love is accompanied with tears? It has nothing to do with sadness.

QUESTION: No, it is not a reaction.

RAJ: That is correct.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. I would like to add a little something to what I've been saying. The window is a force field, I said. A pattern of energy. Well, that could sound very scientific, very mechanical. Bzzzzzt—force field!

What is the energy of Spirit? The energy of Spirit is Love. And so, I have just shared, in a way, our Love for you—the Love of those who are Awake, for you who are Awake but don't believe it. You are embraced by It, and I will tell you that It is healing. What I want you to understand is that the energy of the glass, the energy of your body, is the energy of Spirit which is Love, and so you are being constantly loved by absolutely everything.

"Well, it's just a light switch!" [gesturing toward the wall] "This isn't even real wood!" [pointing to a bookcase]

If it exists, it's Love embodied—Love that is actively loving. So it isn't that you just have a body that has an intent to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly, and isn't that nice of it? Why does it have an intent to identify you perfectly? Because it's Love! And it embodies the Father's Intent because That's the only thing there is to be embodied.

So, you know what? What you call every aspect of every energy pattern that you identify and call your body, desires—just like we do—for you to recognize its Love that embraces you, so that you might experience conscious communion of Love with it. Do you see?

“Television is an invention of man” [touching the television].

Well, I don’t care what you call it! There is form. And the only thing that form can be made out of is energy. And the only energy available to make form out of is Love—the energy of Spirit. And so, as long as It’s there in that form, It desires of you that you recognize the Love with which It’s loving you, so that you might be able to look at it and say, “It’s just like me! It isn’t a foreign object, created by human beings, and probably for wrong reasons.” It doesn’t matter.

And so you might say that everything that you see and think is so different from you, yearns for you to recognize yourself—the essence of what you really are—in it. We talked about having an object of your affection. I want you all to realize that you’re the object of affection of a universe. It’s a wholeness.

So, as I said: Love—you gotta let It out and you gotta let It in.

We will take another break—shorter this time.

RAJ: At the table in the green top, yes.

I will just mention, since you were the one who was sitting with her hand on the glass-topped table, if the glass is a field of energy, and if your arm or hand is a field of energy, then they can pass through each other. So you might have fun with that, too. That is how you walk through walls. Go ahead.

QUESTION: I’m doing my best at trying to live an undefended life. And yet, as you were speaking, you were talking about a person’s body size as being a defense against the world, and so, I hadn’t realized that. But since the whole issue of my weight is my worst failure . . .

RAJ: Hmmmmmm.

QUESTION: . . . how is it . . .

RAJ: Oh-h-h. Well, there is an example of suffering from nothing—nothing except a few words you put together in a self-incriminating way. It isn’t your failure or your success—your body size.

QUESTION: But you said it was . . .

RAJ: What I said was that there are individuals who use their body as a presence in order to be formidable in their world. But banty roosters do that, and they're little. And dachshunds do it, and they're little. I wasn't referring to body size, but the way in which a body is handled to imply "presence." Many of you who are not physically large "densify" your body. You try to feel as though your body is a presence of some significance, and you use your body in this way to give yourselves courage to act forcefully in a way that will intimidate others. It has nothing to do with size.

Now, I just want to point out that this concept that you expressed, of your body size being your greatest failure . . . that is a string of words which express nothing. They express nonsense. It isn't your biggest failure or your greatest success. But, the idea that you expressed is one that you have believed for quite a while. What I want to point out is, that in embracing that idea, it caused you not to clearly hear what I was saying, because I wasn't speaking of body size at all. There are little people with "big presences," you might say.

Now, do you know what I care about more than your size . . . about you?

QUESTION: No.

RAJ: The beautiful presence of Love that you are—your nature. Not your mental habits, but just you. I don't care how big or little you are. And when your bigness or littleness matters less to you, and this exquisite presence that You really are is valued more, you will find a balance beginning to occur, where there is what you would call more lovely symmetry.

It is like what Paul is doing this afternoon. He's not being a "presence" at all. You see? When his ego sense of self steps aside and he's being nothing from an ego standpoint, the Somethingness of Being happens. If he were willing to stay with me all the time—if he were willing to abandon his right to view things from the ego standpoint—he not only would experience the wholeness he's experiencing right now all the time, but he would find that his physique would begin to change, and there would be greater and greater symmetry to it. Although he's not displeased with the way he looks, he would be more pleased with the way he looks.

The beauty and the symmetry of you or Paul or anyone else will come naturally and spontaneously and effortlessly when he and you have yourselves less on your mind as a failure or a success in this area or that area, and you value letting the essential presence of You be what's important, and share it. And that's what I love about you, is your essential presence.

So, I give you permission to not beat yourself up any more on this issue of size.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: It's a total waste of time, it accomplishes nothing—except that it does keep you distracted from being the presence of joy and love that everyone else wants to experience from you. It's just another example of suffering from nothing.

I know, your ego says, "This is far from nothing! This is a lot!" Well, your size isn't you, small or big, beautiful or homely. Love is you. Your nature is you. And there isn't much that covers that up except when you're distracted by things like your size.

I want you to be willing to make the gift of You that has nothing to do with your size. And I want you to love that in You which is able to love everyone else. And when you are willing to let that find expression in your thoughts and words and deeds, more than giving expression to this "failure" that you say you are and all that failing means, you will have your attention placed right.

You will have your attention at that still-point I was mentioning earlier, and balance will begin to manifest. Not because it's important—not because it will say something good about you—but just because that's the way God made you. Perfect, beautiful in form, outline, color, as well as your nature. Your body is intent upon identifying the presence of your Individuality perfectly, and perfectly means lovely. There is no such thing as a perfect wart. The perfection of God is always expressed in loveliness of every kind.

The less Paul has himself on his mind and how well he's doing, the more meaningful his presence is. It's the same for you. And how well you're doing at looking like a Daughter of God is one of those things that you need to let go of, so that "how you're doing" and "who you are" is less on your mind than letting love come through you, big or small.

If I'm loving you, you can love yourself. If God is loving you—which He is—then for you to do anything less is a waste of time.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

Hands? Right here.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: Well, this is back to Paul's favorite question. But I'd like you to direct it to me. And that is, I'm letting my Guide respond to everything. See, at this point, attempting to authorize is no longer fun for me. I still do it, of course, because I'm not listening to guidance full time. But I do listen to guidance sometimes. I feel caught in this place between knowing that authorizing no longer works for me but still resisting Listening full time. It's hard to experience motivation and purpose in this space. How can I more fully move into Listening to my Guide and letting him respond full time?

RAJ: The only answer I can give you is in three words: Just do it. You won't do it until you do it, and no one can talk you into it. To be very frank with you, you will be in this space until you're not in this space. You will not do it until you do it.

So, that means that there's no excuse for not doing it, like, "Well, there's more for me to understand," or, "there's something I haven't quite gotten yet and I know I need to get that." These are excuses. There aren't any more excuses. So to put it very simply: You will be in this limbo until you're not in it.

The clarity of that answer is exactly what you need to hear.

QUESTION: Hello, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: About a month ago my 18-year old nephew committed suicide, the day after his 18th birthday. He succeeded in killing himself after two previous attempts had failed within a short time . . . as much as we were able to piece it together.

He was very, very loved and we are at a loss to why he did this. Thousands of people came to his wake—he was very, very loved. And we don't know why he didn't know he was loved, why he did it, what his thinking was that morning or afterwards. We need help in how to make sense out of this.

His parents devoted their lives to him, to their two sons, and they were a happy family. His brother is two years younger. He is so angry. And the parents are devastated.

We knew there was a love triangle between him and his best friend and a girl. We don't know if that's the reason he did it. He had been depressed, we think, about that. He was extremely brilliant and talented and loving. He had no defenses, he was just a beautiful soul.

We're just trying to make sense out of it, and want to know how we can all recover from this. How do his brother and his parents go on from here? We just need help understanding this. They ask questions like, "Well, where is he now?" And how can they contact him, or . . . we just want, I guess, God's view of this.

RAJ: Just a moment.

[Rather long pause.]

PAUL: Raj is not answering this in words. It's more like in pictures and meanings. The picture he's giving is that . . . what was his name?

QUESTION: Zachary.

PAUL: The picture he's giving is that Zachary never at any point had a great commitment to being in this lifetime, to being here. He didn't dislike being here, but—I can't think of the word. Just a moment. He didn't have a passion for being here. Literally, the picture is that there wasn't any big emotional reason for committing suicide. There's no sense of anything having built up. It was as though he arrived at a point where circumstances were what they were, and he had any of a number of things he could do to respond. And he just picked that one.

It was like a totally uncharged act. Like someone, if they found a spider in the house, might get it on a napkin and take it outside. Somebody else would just step on it, and the act of "stepping on it" would simply have no meaning other than, you know, "cleaning up." You know what I mean?

For the person who carries it out on a napkin or in a glass and releases it outside, the act of stepping on it is like . . . "How could that be uncharged? The person would have to be a killer!" You know what I mean? It would have to be an aggressive act. But for many people stepping on an ant or a spider is not aggressive at all. It's just useful and practical. You see what I'm saying?

And so what he did didn't have any accompanying significance to it. He wasn't getting even. He wasn't trying to escape a circumstance. He wasn't trying to get out of suffering.

The reason I took so long to start sharing the images was because I'm like the person who takes the spider outside. And so it was hard to grasp that this could be done in such a "light hearted" way, without any sense of consequences or without any emotional charge to it. He just did "this" instead of "that."

This is Raj.

RAJ: What everyone in his family needs to know is that they are not responsible. He knew he was loved. He received their love. He was embraced in it and was blessed by it. You could say that his act was an act of total irresponsibility. In other words, it was not an act in which he felt responsible to anyone else, and it was also an act in which he held no one else responsible. It was a thoughtless act—something he engaged in, you might say, before thinking.

At this moment, he is surprised at where he finds himself, simply because there was no forethought and no anticipation of where this act would get him to. He is wonderfully cared for, but not fully receptive to where he finds himself. He finds himself totally comfortable, nurtured, and well. And he is being allowed the time and the space to, you might say, catch up with where he finds himself.

Everyone who passes on is always met, is always received caringly and nurturingly, while they make "adjustments," you might say. Some make the adjustment more gracefully, and others take longer. He is not being ungraceful, but he is really having to pay attention. He's really having to let himself be present there, and to let it in. And he knows that he is not under any pressure to let it in by a certain time.

I guess the simplest way I could put it is that he is at a point where in order for him to move forward, he is going to have to bring a certain degree of commitment to being where he is. And so this is his learning at this point. It is a step of maturation, of maturing, of growing up for him. Not because he's eighteen, but in terms of his coming into the fuller experience of himself as divine.

Everyone is innocent. And everyone in the family left behind must be willing to understand that love is not a means of controlling someone else, and one gives it as a gift, without strings. The fact that he recognized the love that was given but did not use it as justification for behaving in a way that didn't distress those who gave it to him reflects a point in the growth of his own character rather than reflecting something about those who were around him. And it's very important for everyone to understand that.

Now, I indicated that he is being loved. If you are able to share what I am saying in any way with them, they need to know that they are also being nurtured and loved and supported, so that they may not get stuck in their grief, and so that they might be able to easily let go of any sense that they were at fault.

QUESTION: We'd like to know why he was so determined to leave. You said that he did it kind of in . . . it sounds like a detached fashion. But most of us, I think, if we were trying to commit suicide . . . if the car stalled or a strap broke, we might think that angels or someone was trying to tell us to not do this. Most people don't persist. We don't understand why was he so persistent about leaving?

PAUL: Just a moment. The words that Raj said were, "Because there was no reason not to." Just a moment.

This is me, Paul. Again, he wasn't weighing factors. It wasn't the result of reasoning or of any thought processes—weighing the pro's and con's, or anything else. And so because there were no factors to consider, there was no reason not to follow through. Just a moment.

Raj says:

RAJ: That is the simplest way it can be put. There were no preferences one way or the other. And so there were no reasons present for not acting it out to its logical conclusion. I understand that that is difficult to understand, but there simply was no practice of logic involved in this suicide.

QUESTION: We also wonder, he had a severe bicycle accident when he was 14, and we wondered—it was really a close call—did that have anything to do with his changing—he seemed to be different person before and after—that had nothing to do with it?

RAJ: Absolutely not.

QUESTION: Had he —

RAJ: You see the problem is that you are trying to make something reasonable out of it. And that [reason] is what is completely missing from this event.

QUESTION: It wasn't because he was depressed. He just wanted to leave. Just check out.

RAJ: That is correct.

QUESTION: Does this have something to do that he always was detached about everything—he never cared about anything except his guitar—he didn't care about —

RAJ: It has to do with the fact that he never made commitment to being here.

QUESTION: And so the best way for the family to recover is to just accept this?

RAJ: That is quite correct.

QUESTION: This is hard for them.

RAJ: It will be harder if they manage somehow to claim some guilt for it. It will be harder if they think that somehow they ought to have been able to do something to change his mind, or to have made life feel so worthwhile to live here that he would have decided to stay here. The simple truth is relieving.

QUESTION: Is there any way that his mother or parents can be in touch with him? Or is that something that's not acceptable?

RAJ: At the present time, it is not possible because his real work now has to do with his making commitment to being where he is before there can even seem to be a sense of forward movement.

QUESTION: Is it likely that he will return to the physical? Or is he done here?

RAJ: It is highly unlikely.

QUESTION: So he basically had accomplished whatever he set out to accomplish in his short life? Or is that even a relevant question?

RAJ: It is not really relevant.

QUESTION: Okay. Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome. If one takes the subject matter of this last question and the events that prompted the question, it could seem like perhaps a heavy and sad note to end on today. But if you will give your attention to the answer that I gave, it will illuminate many things for many of you that you're not even thinking of at the moment, which will be relieving. I knew what the question would be before she asked, and it was appropriate for it to be dealt with to everyone's benefit, rather than my speaking with her privately.

We have covered a lot today. It has been good to be back with you again after such a long time. I want you to remember that I love you, the window loves you, the not-wooden bookcase loves you. And none of it is matter. Everything we have discussed today is in itself enough to wake you up. However, I will look forward to seeing all of you at our next Gathering, Awake or not. I have enjoyed being with you.

ALL: We love you, too. Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: (All) Good afternoon.

RAJ: Welcome. Who has a question or a comment?

QUESTION: I would like you to talk to me about aging. Because I have the fact that there are a lot of things about aging that are assumed as illnesses, and that possibly just really are illegitimate too. I don't know if I'm making any sense. I just would like to know what to expect and what I should and how I should think about it.

RAJ: Well, first of all it's helpful to understand what the source of the concept of aging is. The source of the idea of aging is the idea that you were born, that you had a beginning a certain number of years ago in what you call this life experience. Growing, coming to full potential, reaching a peak and then beginning to age are all the result of the idea that you began at birth or at conception. That your existence is a manifestation of a physical event called birth and a physical body—that is, your identity, you see.

To overcome aging, or to become free of the so-called effects of aging—which ultimately means to become free of death—is to become free of the belief in birth, the belief that you had a beginning, and the belief that your body had a beginning apart from the reality of God's Creation in this thing that is called a physical Universe, you see, as though your body is temporary for your enjoyment and suffering in this lifetime on this Earth.

Now I've talked at some length about all of these things before, but it's absolutely essential for you to understand—all of you—that the idea of birth is a false interpretation of what I will call a point in your eternal existing. You were fully identified—meaning having that which identified you, a body—before you were born. From the moment God conceived of you, you have always had that which identifies you, which you call a body. Which means you have always been identified and you have always existed. And there is no alternative to that for you, for any of you.

You and that which identifies you are really one, they're really inseparable. You and that which identifies you are therefore at this instant eternal, whether you see it—yourself and your body—as growing, aging, potentially dying.

Again, it must be very clear and you must dare to let it be very clear in your mind that the ultimate of the reality of you is going on at this moment relative to you as you currently perceive yourself. It is not something to be achieved in the future. It's something to be allowed into your conscious awareness now, or at any moment that you decide to let it in. The ultimate of God is what is sitting right there.

Why do you see the effects of age? First of all because you think there was a beginning. And in the frame of reference you are in, which is a frame of reference of opposites, beginning means ending. They seem to be inseparable like heads and tails, top and bottom. It isn't true. It isn't what God is being right there, right now.

Now, you get a lot of feedback from your world—friends, parents—who seem to be inevitably going through an aging process, which really means a process of deterioration. You watch the commercials on the TV. And you watch the programs where your physicians are doing the best they can to explain this process of deterioration and try to ameliorate it through manipulation of one sort or another. And so you become further convinced that the most you can expect is to grow old gracefully—die gracefully. But die you must, because everyone has, except one or two or three or four. And of course, rather than that being the rule you think that's the exception and it doesn't apply to you.

Why do you think I share with you the things I share with you—all of you? So that you might be inspired out of these mindsets that you treat as though they are facts, as though they are absolutes. To inspire you to look in the mirror and not wonder “what can I expect as I age,” but rather, “what more of the presence of what God is being right now, right here is available to me to see? What more of the presence of God can I see in the reflection in the mirror? What more of the undeniable perfection of my being is available for me to experience?” You see?

Tell me, how many of you do look in the mirror to see if there's a new gray hair, or a new fine line? And how many of you wish for a few fine lines or more so that you might get a little respect?

If I told you what to expect in terms of aging, then you would be wise to get up and leave and never come back to hear another word I would have to say.

When you look in the mirror, instead of being curious about how much older you're getting, I encourage you to say: “I forgive myself for not seeing the ultimate of what God is being right here in what is reflected in the mirror. And because it is my Birthright to be experiencing it, I desire to experience it. And I ask for help in seeing what is really here.” And then just as when you are listening for guidance and you express a desire, then shut up and watch. Be attentive for the inspiration that will change your perception. When your perception changes because you've let yourself be infilled with the truer perception of what you are, everyone else will see your truer perception as well.

Is it reasonable to expect wrinkles to go away? Is it reasonable to expect sagging muscles to stop sagging? Is it reasonable to expect what you would call regeneration? ABSOLUTELY IT IS! And anything less means that you have simply succumbed to your beliefs about aging and the worlds beliefs about aging.

Slowly but surely everyone kills themselves. Everyone slowly commits suicide by withdrawing their interest in life, by squelching new ideas, by squelching—although I don't like this word, we're going to use it—by squelching new goals, because you say, "I don't really have enough time to achieve those goals," and so you begin backing out of being alive. That means you begin to go against the grain—the very essence of your being—because you are resisting being. And when you resist and create a block to the flow of the energy of life that is the substance of your being, you begin to see the effects of it.

When you attempt to squelch the power of the presence of God in you by saying, "I can't do that, maybe if I were younger I would attempt it, but I'm not young and I can't do it," when you attempt to sit on the power of the presence of God you're in a state of self-denial, you're in a state of lack of self-appreciation. And you know what you do? You use your body to defend yourself against the power of the presence of God that is what you are the presence of—and you hurt, here or there, or here, or in your joints, or somewhere else because you resist with your body. You resist everything with your body. It's the only thing you think you have that has enough presence to be a defense against whatever you feel a need to be defended against.

So you really need to become conscientious about this. You need to become conscientious about being open to the influx of the inspiration that regenerates, and let it in. You need to use the mute button on your TV. And you need to become devoted to the goal, the intent to see the presence of God in all of His/Her glory right there where you are more and more fully each day. And if you don't see it more and more fully each day you persist so that you remain in alignment with God's will. God did not set up Life as a process of life and death, life and death, life and death. But each one of you can squelch and commit suicide only to discover that you're not dead, and then again, squelch and suicide only to find out that you're not dead until it becomes really clear to you that doing anything other than making commitment to Life and not squelching at all is your function..

Now, when you finish your shower and you see the hair in the drain, don't say, "Ohhhhh, another hair gone." At least say, "Ah, room for another hair to grow," or "here's an opportunity I have to see the glory of God manifested right here where I am, and that would be such a wonderful thing. That would truly be such a wonderful thing, that I am going to unswervingly give my attention to that." It's got to become extremely clear to everyone that each one of you is aging yourself, each one of you is or will be incline to slowly put the breaks on. And it's the breaks you are putting on that are causing what you call aging.

If you listen to Deepak Chopra and others who are experiencing more clarity you will hear that your body is quite capable of regenerating itself indefinitely. Of course, then you will occasionally say that there is a built in mechanism that causes it to begin to deteriorate. But you know what? Either God is All or God isn't All. Either Life is the absolute, or it is not.

Now I have said that it is the intent of your body to identify the presence of your Individuality perfectly. That is its God given reason for existing. And your Individuality is the presence of God. So your body's intent to identify you perfectly is your body's intent to identify the presence of God perfectly. THIS IS SUPPOSED TO BE GLORIFYING GOD, not just a temporary package that your Soul is inhabiting for a short time.

By my saying this, I'm trying to inspire all of you to be curious in a fearless way about experiencing the truth about your body and the truth about you. You're worth the attention that it will take, the devotion that it will take. And you will have help from those of us who are Awake, who stand ready to support you in your greater embrace of the truth about you and the truth about that which identifies you.

And so when you let the inspiration in, because you're not blocking it with saying "no" to Life, and you're not blocking it because you're curious to see how much more of death has entered your experience, you will find that inspiration being magnified by those who stand ready to support your clearer experience of your physical perfection, of the perfection of that which identifies you.

Now I haven't spoken inspirationally just now. I've been speaking firmly so as to jolt you a little bit out of your fascination with the process of aging. As the saying goes, "what you appreciate, appreciates." That means that what you value grows. And you can always find out what you value by paying attention to what you're giving your attention to.

Do you have a "yes, but"?

QUESTION: No, I think this is wonderful. And it's very exciting. Thank you so much.

RAJ: You are welcome. Take advantage of mirrors.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: Every time you look in a mirror let it be a reminder that what you're looking in the mirror to see is the glory of God. I really mean it! And then I invite all of you to do this for your brothers and sisters as well. When you look at them, don't say, "Oh well, she really doesn't look good today. She really ought to be home in bed. Oh boy, something must have happened at home last night, look at the way she's acting today (or he's acting)." You see? Care enough about those in your experience not to jump to limited conclusions about them, but rather to say, "wait a minute, what's sitting right there, that one driving the car next to me on the Freeway, that body is the glory of God." Let every encounter with your brother and sister be a reminder that it's your function to be seeing the glory of God there. And if you're not, it's not because they're not presenting it, but because you're not choosing to see it. You would rather have your opinion and your definition. And you're the one who suffers, because your definition keeps you from remembering to see God there.

Yes, it's going to keep you busy.

QUESTION: Yes, I think so. Thank you.

RAJ: But you know what? You were already busy repeating and repeating and repeating other habits of attitude. What if... ah ha... what if you can't experience love until you extend it to your brother? What if you can't experience the divine reality of yourself until you're willing to extend the acknowledgment of the divine reality of someone else? What if you can't really feel the love of God until you are willing to love the old so-and-so who just cut you off, or love your fellow worker who claims to be ill, who sees herself or himself as ill and puts that in the air, who has forgotten to be curious about the glory of God right where they are that is beyond their current perception of what's right there? What if your feeling well can't be wholly available to you until you are willing to desire for your brother and sister that they feel wholly well because you know that is their Birthright?

There's not really any "what if" about it. It's why the Course refers to your brother as your savory. Your brother or sister is your savory, why? Because your brother and sister keep you from being able to believe that you can be successfully who and what you are by yourself.

All of the illusory sense of existence arises out of a fundamental premise that all of you have adopted, which is that you are separate from everything else, fundamentally separate from God, being a little god yourselves, being able to be authorities on your own. Well, the only way to get out of the mesmeric frame of mind that involves your seeing yourself as alone is to have a brother or a sister who gives you the opportunity to be love. I've said it before, you can't love by yourself. You have to have an object of your affection. Without an object of your love there can't be a thing called love.

And so your brother and your sister are your means of coming out from under the results of the mad idea that you exist independently from everything, including God. Your means of coming back into your Sanity is your brother or sister who provides you with the opportunity to be the presence of love. And by being the presence of love, fulfilling your purpose for being, because that's what God established in you and as a result of fulfilling your purpose for being, something happens to you—you wake up. You are inspired with God's love. Because in order to love someone else and extend it you have to stand in receipt of it. And the receipt of it is a receipt from the Father. Do you see what I'm saying?

Do you understand what the statement in the Course means that says, “to have give all to all”?

QUESTION: I think so.

RAJ: God is the Movement of Being, the conscious Movement of Being. And the Movement of Being is extension—a gift! Fulfillment therefore, the experience of fulfillment of Being for every single one of you involves making the gift of love. You cannot be the source of love. So how can you give the gift of love? Well, you might say it’s magic, because when you begin to care, when you really become less closed off—all of you—and you really begin to care for another, you make a gift. And when you make that gift you become infilled with the Love it takes to give.

I’ve used the illustration before of a garden hose with a sprayer nozzle on it. When you have an object of your affection it is like pulling the trigger on the nozzle. When you have an object of your affection there is some place for the stream of water to go. And you pull the trigger and what happens? The nozzle gets filled up with the water and the water gets extended. When you care about someone it’s like pulling the trigger and the Love that God is moves through you. What happens then? Well, your brother is blessed. But something else has happened. The thing that’s happened is that you have had the inspiring, uplifting transformational and regenerative experience of being the place where the presence of God is Moving into expression.

I will put it another way. When you dare to love your fellow man the only thing you can love your fellow man with is God’s Love. And in your caring you open the door for God’s Love and not only does your brother get loved, you do too. That’s why your brother is your salvation.

So that’s why I said, when you look at a co-worker or someone at the grocery store and you say, “god I haven’t seen them for awhile, they’re really beginning to look old.” Well, is that the gift you want to make? Is that what you want to extend? Where’d you get that hose from? “Gee, she should take better care of herself.” Judgment! You could say, “wow, that isn’t the truth about her. Wow, the truth about her is that she is the direct expression of God. The truth is that her body is the glory of God. And I’m going to let my responses, my reactions arise out of that awareness of what the truth of her is rather than how she looks at the moment.”

So what’s happened? Your apparently aging associate has given you the opportunity to choose for the truth in your awareness, and in choosing that you prime yourself, like pulling the trigger for the further influx of the Father’s point of view, which constitutes the love that heals not only your sister or your brother but you. You see.

Now I’ve gone on at some length. But I hope it’s becoming clear to you that the way to over come age, the way to deal with age is to take every opportunity you have to look in the mirror and do something different from what you have been doing by acknowledging the truth about yourself, being curious about the truth about yourself, being curious about God's truth about you. As well as doing the same thing with your brothers and sisters—your fellow man. Because I'll tell ya, you can't just look in the mirror and become absolutely clear about yourself and still go around saying, "god, she looks awful doesn't she? I'm so glad I don't have to look that way anymore." You've got to bring your brother and sister along with you. This is an important point.

And you have something to contemplate now.

QUESTION: I certainly do. Thank you so much.

RAJ: You are welcome. We will take a break.

RAJ: I understand you had some reservations about asking the question you asked.

QUESTION: I don't know I just... I guess I always want to appear like I already know things and the truth is I don't. And I need help understanding. And I knew you could help me have a better way of looking at it.

RAJ: So you had a need and you didn't want to look needy?

QUESTION: Right!

RAJ: Yes. Oh self-sufficiency... And of course, that's right at the top of the list of what you get when you start moving along your spiritual path, of course. And so if you have a need don't let anyone know that you're way back there on the path.

QUESTION: That's right.

RAJ: But if you don't express your need how can you give someone else the opportunity to love you? Now, I'm not talking about manufacturing needs to get attention, I'm talking about a real need, let's say an absence of an answer you want. That's a need. Of course, that means you've got to dare to be real and honest, honest in the sense of not expressing manufactured needs as a means of manipulating others. You understand?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: And I'm not suggesting that you do manufacture needs.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: What I do want to convey to everyone is that there is great value in genuinely expressing real needs that you have. You know what the first thing that happens is when you do that? It makes it easier for other people to be genuine and honest about their needs too. It allows other people to dare to be open because you're not going to uncover how far back they are, you see.

There were times when Paul decided to only talk to me when he didn't have problems, so as not to impose upon me. Not much growth or learning happened during those periods when he decided only to talk to me when he didn't have a problem, because when he didn't have a problem he didn't talk to me.

Now there's something else I want to share. When the fall or the separation from God occurred or seemed to occur and each one practiced a false sense of authority, of an ability to author things, it seemed as though each one who did it was able to see himself or herself as self-contained, self-complete, even though it was a miserable experience. And as each one became accustomed to that experience he or she lost the experience of his or her universality and indeed a sense of self associated with the body and only with the body became that one's identity. And that one could say, "I can think for myself. I can decide what this means. I am a decider. I am a giver of definitions. I am this, I am that, I am the other thing." And the experience felt as though all of these conscious experiences were originating from the one identified now as this body and this mind that wasn't universal.

But I pointed out to all of you—and most all of you over the last two years—that no one ever succeeded in becoming autonomous, independent. And that what has happened is that one is channeling you might say, one is giving voice to, giving expression to one of two voices. And that voice is never the identity that you see yourself as separate, or that Paul sees himself as a separated individuality, one never loses his divine presence. And so each one is the Christ, each one, in spite of how you see yourselves still is the Son or Daughter of God, still is the Christ. And this divine one that you are is either giving expression to the voice for Truth, which is the Father's voice, or the voice for fear, which I have referred to as the ego, which is just a rehashing of all of the old tapes, all of the mindsets of this sense of identity that each one has created and acquired and built.

So no one has succeeded in standing in a place where he or she is only expressing himself or herself. You as a separated, aging lady do not have the capacity to originate anything, to be the source of a single thought, or a single act. You are either clearly giving expression to the Christ that you are or you are clearly giving expression to confused expressions. Do you see what I am saying?

Now, I said that the need was to love your fellow man because loving your fellow man is what will save you. And your fellow man being the object of your affection will be your savior. So who's going to love this fellow man? The aging lady sitting there? There ain't no such critter as an aging lady sitting there. There's only the Christ being clear or being confused—let's put it that way. So what's happening when you dare to care about your fellow man?

Well, if you as a separated entity have no capacity to love because this separated entity doesn't exist except in an imaginary way, then if love is going to occur how is it going to occur? Well, it's simple. Because there's only one thing sitting there—with a quizzical look on her face—and that is the presence of God, the Christ. In your sense of being a human who was born and who is a physical body that's going through processes in spite of that... no when you as a human find yourself caring it's not because you as a separated human entity have a capacity to care, but because the Christ that you are is emerging. Because the Christ that you are is the only thing that has the capacity to care.

But does the Christ that you are have a separate place from which to express love, or is the Christ that you are the unobstructed presence of God Himself/Herself? You see what I want to point out here is, which is the cap on this whole answer, is that when you in your sense of being a separated human physical organism that is born, grows, ages and dies experiences caring it's really the Christ of you remembering her function to a limited degree.

Now because you as a separated entity have no capacity to love, if love occurs it occurs because caring has come into play, and the caring is a prayer. If you don't have a personal capacity to love then if love is going to appear where you are it is because you have begun to care, which has been a prayer to God, which God answers. And it comes through you.

And you must have a brother, a sister, an object of your affection in order to call into play the Christ of you. And that's why your brother and your sister is your savior. But remember that the capacity to love isn't something that originates with the separated human entity that you think you are. And that's why when caring finally becomes an active part of your experience of being, even in your separated sense of yourself, that is why it constitutes a prayer and not a personal gift of your own that allows God to answer and fills you up with the experience of the fulfillment of your purpose for being while blessing the one you dared to care about.

Can all of you see that the privacy you seek is the way you deny your brother of the blessing of your prayer? "Well, I can't get involved with everyone!" Well, then keep on dying! Stay separate, you see, stay private, don't care because that is involvement. Keep blocking your function and keep dying. You see what I am saying?

But that's not my point. My point is for you to realize what's happening when you care, what's happening when you love is that prayer isn't just a string of words that you say. Prayer is caring. Caring is prayer. It's involving, it involves you in your heart you might say. You become involved. And when you become involved because you really care a blessing occurs—the prayer is answered and you are the answer. And when you're the answer and you experience the involving aspect of that as well, you won't ask "do I have to do this with everyone." And you won't think that it's too much to do it with everyone, the joy of it will be so significant that you will wonder what you were thinking of when you had justification for withholding it.

"Gee, I thought Jesus was my savior! I thought the Christ was my savior, and the slob over there doesn't look like the Christ to me, doesn't act like the Christ.” And what does that mean? What that means is the Christ in you isn’t alive at the moment registering in your awareness because caring hasn’t occurred yet. That’s what it means! And yet that one is the Christ, suffering from his ignorance of his Christhood. And because the suffering is illegitimate for him he invites by his misery, by his unwithheld expression of his need, your compassion. You see, it invites the response of caring rather than judgment. And so this miserable one is your salvation because it’s an opportunity for you to care, to feel love, compassion, caring for him. And in your caring you come back into your function, your fulfillment of purpose for being. And that constitutes prayer, which God answers and you feel as it’s extended.

I’ve said before that all of the Awakened Brotherhood experience a lack, because while all of you are enjoying the game of independence, the fantasy of independence, you’re not available to us. And we’re not available to you. And so the Brotherhood doesn’t as a whole experience its wholeness consciously. Is the answer as far as we’re concerned to sit around and grouse about all of you, how inconsiderate you are? No, it’s opportunity for us to love, it’s an opportunity for us to care. And it feels good, because we’re on the beam. I don’t mean give us a gold star because we’re on the beam.

When you’re on the beam you feel good. When you’re on the beam you’re experiencing harmony. When you’re on the beam there’s never an interruption of the flow of the Father’s love, because you’re not taking your finger off the trigger on the nozzle on the hose. And so the flow is never intermittent, it’s never interrupted. But it’s sort of like domino’s. I love you. I love you all. I love everyone. But it’s not enough for me to love you, you’ve got to pass it on. Because until you are loving your brother you won’t wake up. You won’t come into the fullness of the experience of what you divinely are.

This all ties together, because if you want to see your body visibly identifying the glory of God rather than age, then love your brother. Because that constitutes a joining, a union which undoes the effects of being separate, independent, autonomous, which is what aging and death is the result of, as well as birth. The way you get out of that cycle is by fulfilling your function, which is to be the place where love flows into expression, because that’s what God is.

There’s a lot of... well, mirrors are used a lot in New Age thinking. And so you go to work and someone is grumpy and you say, “Oh, they must be mirroring back me, to me. I didn’t think I was grumpy, but I must be somewhere in me, I must be grumpy.” Well, you want to know what? The one who’s being grumpy and is not covering up his need is being the Christ to the best of his ability, which is giving you the opportunity to be the Christ to the best of your ability.

And so what is it that is being reflected back to you? The Christ. You see, if you’re going to be confused in your metaphysical or New Age thinking you will take yourself as the human entity that you think you are and you will take the human entity that you think everyone else is and this is what will be mirrored back and forth. And you start and end with the same ignorance you began with. But your brother there who's suffering or your sister who's suffering is the Christ reflecting back to you your Christhood. It's a call for love. And the Love can only come from the Christ that you are. And so the Christ that you are has to be let out of the box—it's time to come out of the closet—and let yourself feel the love, feel the caring, feel the compassion, not for the poor human entity but for the Christ who has the right to experience his divinity. And then without thinking that you're being the source of the love recognize that the caring, the love that you're feeling is a prayer. And let God answer it in an involving way in your heart. Let it flow. And then you will begin to undo birth, growth, aging and death. It's high time to be through with it!

What if you can't pray for yourself? You just thought you asked a simple question today. What if you cannot be the authorizer, the author of a prayer for yourself—for yourself? What if the only one who can "author" a prayer for you is your brother? You can't be your own savior. You see?

Do you see how much you need each other? If you cannot succeed at being an independent entity then it means that your involvement with the whole Brotherhood, with every aspect of the infinite expression of God is the only choice for an experience of being that you have available to you. And that therefore privacy is nonsense. And that the answer to the problem of existence lies in the withdrawal of defenses and the employment of love so that the unity of the infinite expression of God can be experienced in its exquisite harmony. It's called Heaven.

But as I've said before, it's got to start here. It's got to start with the apparently separated human entity that you think you are, actually being the place where the experience of caring is felt. And it's got to be with each other. YOU HAVE NOTHING BETTER TO DO A-L-L D-A-Y L-O-N-G!

Do you see that what I'm saying doesn't mean that you personally have to have or come up with the answer for your brother's need. What you have to do is care enough to let the love flow. The Father will answer the prayer.

Just watch the lines disappear.

Susan says that whenever there is a gathering and Paul is not claiming a separate mind of his own, that the lines leave his face. And then afterwards he turns back into a pumpkin. I will tell you the consistent experience of joy that comes from constant prayer, which is what Paul is engaged in this afternoon, the experience of it is peace and joy that is fulfillment itself. And the ongoing experience of this if Paul indeed would aqueous to my suggestion that he do this constantly would result in the lines disappearing and staying gone, and for color to come back to his hair, and hair to come back to his head and a flat stomach, which he would dearly love. But he still enjoys a little time to think for himself.

QUESTION: Me too.

RAJ: But now you and he are not confused about what the answer is. And all of you are a little younger than when you arrived this afternoon, because the truth of what I've said and the love with which I've said it has touched the Christ in you. And it's a little more conscious. But tomorrow or on the way home in your car when you look in the rearview mirror begin to use a little self-discipline. And when you see your fellow man remember that here is your opportunity to stop getting older as well as waking up.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: Thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you. Just in sitting here I've had many of my questions, that I walked in the door with, answered. And so it kind of evolves as the day goes on. But I'll tell you what I was feeling. When I came here I was feeling very lost, very confused and I thought that I was at the lowest point in my life. And you mentioned that Paul was brought to his knees, I at least feel that I'm bent over and in a very extreme low back pain. And as a result of all this confusion I've lost all my confidence to move on. And I don't know that my lack of success in my business venture...

RAJ: I'm just going to briefly say: Let us say, lack of confidence to go on by yourself.

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: Continue.

QUESTION: I didn't know if this was all a result of my previous unwillingness to connect with God, or if I was really moving in the wrong direction. I've been meditating, hoping to get some guidance. And I just wasn't. And I don't know that it was that I just wasn't hearing what I needed to hear, or what. And all of this lack of success in doing what I thought I was good at, what I know I'm good at, was lending toward a lot of troubles with Maran and I. But I guess what I just need to know is am I on the right track, doing what I was doing and is it appropriate for me to continue on the way I am with Maran or does that....

RAJ: Yes, yes, yes, yes!

QUESTION: I don't know if I should share with you, just as we were sitting here I told Maran what I had created for myself in my yoga studio was an ability for me to pass out that love in that confined area.

RAJ: Just remember who it is that's standing in front of you. It doesn't have anything to do with being a yoga teacher, a successful one or an unsuccessful one. It doesn't have anything to do with people, you know independent, separated entities who could benefit from yoga. You doing what you're doing and them doing what they're doing, all of you doing it together is simply the opportunity to glorify God, not glorify a teacher, and not help to glorify students. It's all about caring. It's not about becoming something. It really is about caring. It really is about making the gift. Paul makes the gift but his hands are empty. And he's never going to become good at having something in his hands to give. Do you see what I mean? It's never going to get to the point where he will have learned how to be the presence of God by himself so he can do it without me. He'll never become self-sufficient. He, as a separated entity will never become successful. All he can gift anyone with is what he is gifted with. And the only way he can be the recipient of a gift that he can extend is if he dares to care.

Again, you're always making a gift that never originates with you. And so it's up to you to make a choice for which resource of gift you want to use, your ego or the Father, the Voice for Truth, the Voice for Love.

So remember who you're sitting next to. Remember who it is you're coming home to. Remember who it is that you think, or appear to be teaching. It's always your opportunity. You are confronted with your opportunity to care and to make the gift, which is really a prayer that God will answer for both of you, for all of you. Forget about being successful. Forget about what success is supposed to look like. Because if that's what you are preoccupied with you will manipulate forms to try to get the right look.

Paul could say with the "cash flow" at the moment that being the presence of love doesn't work. But he's not about to stop, regardless of how it looks. And the look will change.

You have implied that by the time you got the microphone you were less confused than when you entered. Would you like to comment on that?

QUESTION: No, just that I was sharing with Maron., what I thought that I had done is created an environment for myself in my yoga studio that I was able to get the love out. But outside of that and if anybody didn't come to it then they didn't get it, because it was outside of my comfort zone to give it outside of that room, because they weren't coming to me. So that was...

RAJ: You could say, "I've come a long way to be with you."

QUESTION: Right.

RAJ: And yet the fact is you are here with me and there is no distance. But what are the limits of caring? What are the structures of caring? What are the appropriatenesses of caring? They're as infinite as God. Caring can't be done on your terms. That's not caring, is it?

The opportunity to love should be welcomed wherever it presents itself, and when you are not trying to keep a safe comfort zone. But caring endures. I guarantee you that where you're able to feel comfortable will increase. And the experience will be a freedom that you're not being able to experience when you set the structure or limits.

QUESTION: So I guess that just leaves me with one other question. I guess I have to... if it has to be an avocation rather than a vocation then I guess anything would suffice in the meantime so far as how to make ends meet, rather than trying to make my avocation a vocation.

RAJ: You can use this for a motto: Love is whatever works! So the answer to your question is, Yes! But which is your vocation and which is your avocation doesn't have to be as well defined and specific as you're wanting to conceive of them. In being open to what works, to what meets the need, the percentage that between the two can shift easily. If you say, "well, I'm going to make that my avocation," well, you've got it pretty well pegged. And you'll keep it in that definition. Will you just say, "Father, Thy will be done. Whatever works. And I will not try to guide my fulfillment into a pattern of my own creating." That's a means of joining and abandoning the position of author of things in your life. That is a means of breaking down this tiny separate sense of identity.

Without your definitions getting in the way, God has a free hand. Your good can approach you without having to cope with the definitions you've put in the way.

Heck if you're already bent over, go ahead and fall to your knees.

QUESTION: Well, that's my intention.

RAJ: Okay.

QUESTION: What's getting in the way of my having a relationship?

RAJ: It is who is on first and what is getting in the way of your relationship!
(laughter)

Well, I'm going to ask of everyone here who is willing to ask for Diane to have a meaningful relationship come to view in her life. Let us do what I was talking about earlier. Let us care enough to wish fulfillment for her. As I said, what if you can't ask your own prayer? So we will ask it for you. And let us all do it right now, anyone who cares.

Okay.

So if it happened this way it really would be a miracle.

QUESTION: (A man from the audience) Here I am Diane. (much laughter)

RAJ: Maybe it just might be this simple. Thank you for expressing your need. And what I want everyone to be aware of, it's important to be aware of, is that wanting a good man in your life, or wanting a good woman, wanting a meaningful relationship is not an intellectual need, it's not an intellectual want. Like I said earlier, do you see how much you all need each other?

So, experience the fact that you need this and don't apologize for it to yourself or anyone else. Don't feel guilty for feeling needy. Just abide with it.

Now everyone else has asked for you. I am going to ask you to ask something for someone else at least once a day. This is not a test. And it is not a matter of your doing well enough to deserve to get what everyone else has asked for you. It is a matter of extending the gift because that's what undoes the isolation, whether it's isolation from someone to be a partner with, or isolation from God, or isolation from friends and so on.

Thank you for your question. Thank you for expressing a need.

QUESTION: Is there a relationship in front of me that I should be looking at differently?

RAJ: Is there?

QUESTION: Well, I'm not sure.

RAJ: All I'm going to say is, be willing to look at it differently. As I've said before you can't steer a car that's parked at the curb. The willingness to look at it differently will allow it to become clear what it can become.

QUESTION: Thank you. And I'm willing for a miracle.

RAJ: Good.

QUESTION: Well, speaking of needs, I have one quick need and then I have a question. The quick need for my comfort is will my daughter pass her State Board Exams? That's question one.

RAJ: Your relief will come in asking for her to pass it with ease. Your peace will come in extending to her your caring, not concern. It is concern that is distressing to you. But in caring enough to ask that nothing successfully distract her from accomplishing this task well. That will bring you your peace. I'm not going to answer the question more specifically than that.

QUESTION: I'm happy with that. I'm trying to identify my need here. Recently I've been going through this kind of nebulous state of being. I was out of sync but I couldn't pin-point it. And now it seems as though it's becoming clearer to me and easier to deal with because it's being externalized rather than internalized. And what I'm dealing with I believe has to do with my own self-reguard, my own dignity, my own comfort. And it's not that perhaps I'm very graceful at this. I told my mother-in-law whom I've known since I'm 15 and I'm 55, how I felt about the way she was treating my family and me. And I told her how she appeared to me and what I would like to see.

Now this is all well and good and I'm okay with that. And I also did something that I'm not accustomed to doing which was to just completely share myself with some of my co-workers. And you know many years ago I considered myself to be one of the biggest secrets there was. And so it's like I've got—I prefer to call it a jelly-jar because it's smaller to me and the insides are sweet. But I think my discomfort has been in holding the lid on the jelly-jar. And now the jam is boiling, steam is escaping and so it's coming out. And I can see how this might... it's rather exciting, because I can see how it can greatly help me, because I've been a cluster, migraine headache sufferer ever since I can remember.

And so now I'm getting kind of excited about this. Now the thing is these things are new for me and it's kind of like, "Oh my God, I can't believe I'm doing this." And I guess what I hope and try to have enough faith in is that where all this is going will be good for me, and that whatever I do I'll still respect myself in the morning.

So I guess I would like to hear something about it being okay to take care of your needs. And that where I'm going will of course be fruitful and wonderful and it's okay not to do it perfectly. And maybe to... I don't know, raise a few eyebrows and that sort of thing. I guess I'm afraid of what some people might think of me, not all, I don't care my comforts to important to me now to waste too much time with that. But that comes up. You know, my ego starts just screaming at me. So sometimes that gets me a little nervous. But I'm kind of just tired of it. I just kind of "Oh, I don't care what you think." But I'd love to have your comments. Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: Well, first of all it's important for you to understand that the sweetness of the jelly is not of your own creating. And indeed, it's sharing is long overdue. Now some people have jars of shit, which it wouldn't be wise for them to share. This sort of carefree abandon that you are allowing because the jelly is sweet is not a dangerous thing for you to be doing. Because you also need to express thoughtfulness and genuine kindness. And so your carefree abandon is being done in that kind of context, which makes it safe even if the unexpectedness of it causes other people some distress, or wears their muscles out from raising their eyebrows.

You're not as confused as you think. But you're going to need to persist so that you can find this genuineness of you and its expression to be more comfortable and more natural. You're on the beam.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: During those times when guidance seems specially hard to come by, is it appropriate to use some sort of dowsing technique like pendulums or rods to approximate guidance in that instance?

RAJ: Oh, absolutely! I was wondering at your use of the word to "approximate" guidance. Pendulums and dowsing rods are excellent ways to access your Knowing, with a capital "K", because there's no way for the conscious mind to interfere. Yes, you can make the rods parallel and you can make that pendulum go in any direction you want. But, your intent is to get beyond your ego. Your intent is to know the truth. So by all means use whatever means you have available to you.

I would encourage you to dedicate the use of the pendulum to only that, which doesn't reflect your ego. Not to protect yourself but so as to be clearly focused in what its use is for. You can as easily decide to tune into the radio to see if there's a message in a song. Don't worry the Holy Spirit has infinite means of connecting with you and it makes it much easier if you're not saying, "I will only listen to guidance that comes to me exactly as it comes to Paul Tuttle, or only in this particular avenue.”

What’s getting in the way is too much structure in your mind. And so rather than tell you how to by-pass or deal with these structures I’m encouraging you to use other unstructured means, and to do it with some carefree abandon, with a little bit of trust that God knows how to reach you. That’s the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I have been scattering my energies, so for quite a few number of years in terms of work...

RAJ: Who told you?

QUESTION: It’s my feeling that ever since I was a child people are saying, “what are you going to be when you grow up?” “I don’t know.” And I’ve been kind of living in a(?) like Peter Pan or something...

RAJ: Well, tell me when you finally grow up.

QUESTION: Yeah, well that’s what I keep waiting for.

RAJ: No wondering you don’t know what you’re going to be then.

QUESTION: Right. So up until now I’ve been pretty content to just kind of go with the flow.

RAJ: Excuse me, Do you see that what I’m driving at is that what you’re going to be as well as the idea of finally growing up is all irrelevant crap that should not be concerning you. And as I said—I don’t really want you to answer this question—but who told you that you’ve been engaged in irrelevant activities? How do you know that each thing you’ve engaged in is not going to end up being specifically useful in some task that unfolds? Why are you evaluating your life? Why is there not an assumption that maybe everything has been perfect, it’s just that at the moment you don’t see how it all fits together? And then I’ll further ask you, can you see that if you had that attitude, that perspective, that you would be able to honor yourself more in the moment you’re in and be able to give yourself more easily to whatever is at hand to do?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: That would be an experience of integrity, of more wholeness than your concept has been allowing you to experience.

QUESTION: That is what I’ve been... the path that I’ve been following is trying to be responsible, or responding to the needs of the moment throughout my life. And doing what needed to be done at a particular time given the circumstances that I was presented with. But lately I’ve got about four businesses going and more property than I know how to manage.

RAJ: Poor (?)(?)

QUESTION: I know I'm complaining, but it's gotten to be so complex to manage everything I wish I could just focus my attention on one really valuable endeavor for the good of myself and everyone else. And I don't know if there's one thing that I'm here to do or if I'm supposed to be one of these people who just goes from one thing to the next?

RAJ: It's very simple. Take care of what you've been given to take care of well. Stop wanting what hasn't been given to you. And if what has been given to you is going to stand in the way of what will be given to you it will in an orderly fashion be removed from your experience, because God's in charge, not you. And what doesn't fit in the identification of His fulfillment of purpose, which at the bottom line is yours, then it will intelligently and in an orderly manner move out of your experience to make way for what's going to come in.

So again, take care of what you have been given to take care of well, without grumbling about it.

QUESTION: Thank you, I'll try.

RAJ: There's joy to be found in it. There's joy to be found in it.

QUESTION: It's a lot more fun to buy a piece of property than it is to take care of it well. You know, the joy is in the purchase not in maintaining it and taking care of responsibilities and being organized. And so I feel like that's part of my life lesson to...

RAJ: One could say that about a spouse.

QUESTION: Hmm, yeah, like falling in love is easy but staying in love takes some effort.

RAJ: Some commitment. Don't be so eager to go out and find something else to love. Use the opportunities that are right in front of you. Bring that willingness to honor what's there for you to bless with your caring. You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: At least the property can't argue with you.

QUESTION: No, I love the things that I have. It's just that there's only one of me to go around and my energies have become so scattered that I'm not maintaining anything really well.

RAJ: Let that become your purpose to take care of it well. If you will do that instead of trying to find something else to deal with, what doesn't work about what you presently have will become obvious, you see.

Fulfillment isn't somewhere else. The Kingdom of Heaven isn't somewhere else. Start where you are. And start with the materials at hand. It's just good common sense. But it happens that what is just good common sense has an utterly divine and profound significance. And if everyone would begin to value their simple common sense instead of getting up into highfalutin metaphysical principles and ideas and wild imaginings everyone would experience the benefit sooner and the whole world would wake up faster.

QUESTION: Can you share a little bit about the difference between following what you call common sense and following your heart or the impulse to...

RAJ: You will always find that real common sense is in utter harmony with your heart.

Now I'm not talking about folklore common sense—"a stitch in time saves nine, a penny saved is a penny earned"—I'm not talking about societal common sense. I'm talking about common sense which amounts to an honest, genuine, real assessment of what you can do and what you can't do, of what really means something to you instead of what ought to mean something to you. Common sense is what's left—already there in you—when you've given up all the oughts and all the shoulds and all the wants. In the absence of those you find yourself knowing what you feel. And what you feel is utterly intelligent when it's not distorted with insanity, you see.

QUESTION: Yes, I understand—going back to your peace that you keep referring to. Is that what you mean by that?

RAJ: Indeed. Your peace and then what's obvious to you from within your peace. Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

That is Paul shaking his head.

This morning it happens that Paul did ask—and he did not know what I was going to be talking about today—Paul did ask, he experienced a desire that something meaningful happen today, that he desired for everyone who came to have a maximal, beneficial experience, I'll put it that way. How wonderful that he did, that is why he was shaking his head, because he got blessed by it too. And he was shaking his head in amazement.

It is time to close for today. Being together always feels good to me. It doesn't always feel as good to Paul as it has felt today, which gives him encouragement to dare to stay with me more consistently even though it's not likely to be quite enough. And for that I am grateful.

I love you all.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –06/29/1997

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: Raj, the last couple of months have been really difficult for me at times. There's a feeling of frustration, of complete failure. I can't handle that any more. I know it's all about "falling apart," and I think I'm trying to keep myself up with spiritual teachings. But when I do that, then it all manifests in my body as insomnia, headaches, et cetera. Nothing is really fun.

The second part that I'm really frustrated with, is Guidance. I've been listening and asking questions for quite a few years. I have never heard much more than a yes or no, and a short explanation. And I'm at a point where I almost don't want to ask any more, because it's such a struggle to hear. So, I need help.

RAJ: Transformation is very often like what you are describing. The old is less and less meaningful. But you know what? When you haven't been in the habit of embracing what is new, that can seem more distressing than the "old" getting old. "Why can't it be like it's been?" is the inner plea.

Now, this transformation, this "graduation" from the old to the new, requires something from you. It requires that you not resist it—that is, if you want to experience it with grace. It means that, indeed, you must dare to let go into the "not knowing," let go into the emptiness, let go into the Void, as I've said many times.

You're really at the point of putting into practice all of the ideas that you have heard me express, because, you know, listening to Guidance, as you're doing right now, isn't really a matter of getting information. It's really a matter of helping you move to a point where you will willingly let go into the Void so that you might have the experience of the influx of enlightenment. It may well be inner guidance. It may well be realization. It may well be the experience of you becoming fuller of who You are and finding that who you are has new definition. But, you will never be responsible for creating the new you.

You will not get to choose who you are going to be. You will not be able to choose who it is you are becoming. You know why? Because who You are was eternally set in place by God. So, the only thing that can be happening here is that you are having the opportunity to experience a clearer perception of who You have always been. It is going to seem new to you because you've had a dedication to who you thought you were for all these years—mother, this, that, the other thing. But who are you when you aren't "mother"? Who are you!

So, let the Void be. Let it be, and abide with it. And stop fighting against it. Stop saying, "I shouldn't have to endure this," because the Void is the threshold of what is new. Why? Because it's empty of your old definitions of yourself. You see? It's because it's empty of who you were so sure you thought you were that who You really are can infill that emptiness, that empty space.

The first time you're really faced with this, it seems scary—therefore difficult. And therefore it seems reasonable to define it as something "going wrong." But, I am encouraging you to let yourself be fully in this emptiness with willingness, not resistance, because when the inspiration fills it, you will have confirmation of the truth of what I'm saying.

The next time it happens, it won't be as scary. You'll say, "Oh, I recognize this. This is my friend"—this experience, this Void. And with less resistance, you will move through it more quickly. But the first time, all of you would rather avoid it. Even those of you who have felt that you were "explorers" will avoid it, because in the past you've always explored with intent and purpose. You picked what you were going to explore. You were in charge of the exploration process.

This is very different, because you're not in charge. And you can't make the Phoenix rise out of the ashes. In effect, you have to let the fire burn. Which means that literally you have to let the light of Love permeate you, which It can only do when you are not in a willful state of mind. And as the light of Love fills you—the Father's Love fills you—who You are becomes more clearly illuminated. It will seem to you that you've made a progressive step, and you will be glad. But you've got to not fight the fact that you're at a threshold which you weren't responsible for arriving at, and say "uncle"!

Say, "Okay, God. I'm going to dare to be irresponsible and not be in charge of my forward movement. I'm going to dare to allow myself to abide in the Void, in the emptiness, the not knowing who I am, what I should be doing, what my purpose is, and I am going to let you fill this Void in your own sweet time." And that last part is the key thing, because if that part is hard for you to say, it tells you to what degree you still want to be in charge.

God's time is now! And when you say, "in your own sweet time, I am willing to let it come forth"—meaning even if it took a thousand years—that is when your permission becomes absolute, without willfulness present.

It's the assertion of authority that has always kept all of you blocked from what the Father's Will for you is, and therefore your experience of who You are as a divinely awakened being—as the Christ.

So, here you are, at a place where the only thing you can really do that will mean anything is to say, "uncle." What is that willingness to say "uncle"? It is the willingness to make commitment to that which you haven't created. You could say that it's the willingness to make commitment to your spiritual path. Except, it's a path you can't know about ahead of time.

So many people say, "I'm on my spiritual path, and I've made commitment to it. I've made commitment to A Course in Miracles. I've made commitment to this particular truth. I've made commitment to this particular philosophy, and I practice it with devotion. But your spiritual path is the way you get back Home, the way you become sane again. So, when you say, "thy will be done," which is another way of saying, "uncle"—a little more palatable way . . . so you'd better say, "uncle" instead of "thy will be done" because it puts the emphasis where it needs to be, which is on your not being in charge at all—you will find the infilling occurring. And the more you practice making that commitment on an ongoing basis, the more you will find the infilling occurring constantly.

What do you think Paul is doing at this very instant? When he sat down, he said to himself, "Thy will, not mine be done." You see? "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being—the Father's Will." You see? And so, the infilling occurs. The infilling is spontaneous. But everyone needs to take that step, instead of letting Paul do it for you, so that you are doing it and Paul is doing it.

There is that investment of commitment to being in the not-knowing place, so that the more of Reality that exists, and the more of your divinity that exists, can infill you, register with you, and redefine you to yourself. But you have to be willing to be in that scary place called the Void, where you don't know any more." That's what's bugging you. You're in this place where you don't know any more, and it feels like hell—only because you don't know what Heaven feels like!

What I mean is, that knowing who you are is hell. Having concepts about who you are and trying to live up to them is hell. Not knowing who you are, being in the Void, as Paul is doing right now, is not hell. It is Heaven . . . once you have allowed yourself to be there and experience the infilling of the Father's Will that occurs—and the peace, the absolute absence of fear, and the clarity and the inspiration that literally constitutes your conscious awareness of things. And then you find out that being in the not-knowing place is Heaven, the very thing that at the moment feels like hell to you.

I'm saying, don't try to get out of it. Let yourself be in it, because it's the one place where the clearer experience of Reality can register with you. So, stop fighting it.

You know, I've also likened the not-knowing place to a vestibule, or an in-between place—like in between two train cars, where you're not in one or the other. Or a turntable in old train yards, where the engine would come up onto the turntable and stop, and then the turntable would turn, align itself with a new track, and the engine would take off. But while the turntable was turning, the engine was directionless, was incapable of movement with any direction. You see?

Value this in-between place. This in-between place really is what the Course refers to as “the little gap” that you slip through. But you won’t slip through it if you keep dancing around it and doing your damndest not to slip into it. You see? So, I’m telling you, this is not a place or an experience to avoid. It’s one to value. It is one that you have been conditioned to steer clear of, and so you have to overrule or override that conditioning. And, it’s worth it!

I promise you that five years from now, you will tell me that this wasn’t half as bad as you expected it to be, and it didn’t last nearly as long as you thought it would, and it wasn’t such a big deal after all. And it certainly wasn’t the end. So, I cannot relieve you of this experience you’re having. And I would be doing you no favor to try to help you avoid it. Just . . . say . . . “uncle”!

Put it on your refrigerator: “Just say ‘uncle’!” Give up! Give up trying to know who you are, where you’re going, what your function is, and be still and let the silence be filled.

If you have a short glass, and you have a stack of twelve or thirteen silver dollars in it, and you set it into your kitchen sink and fill the sink up with water above the level of the glass, the whole interior of the glass is not filled with water, because some of the space is filled by the silver dollars.

Well, let us say that the silver dollars are like your definitions of yourself—all of your confidences about who you are and how to behave and what’s right and what’s wrong, and so on and so forth. Let’s say that the water is the presence of God. It is It’s function to fill the glass, and It’s willing to do it, but It can’t force the silver dollars out, because you have the right to fill it with silver dollars if you want. And then you arrive at a point where suddenly silver dollars are not very meaningful to you, and so you stop valuing them, even though it begins to make you feel empty. This is like beginning to reach into the water and take the silver dollars out.

Now, water always seeks its own level. The water will fill in the space as you take the silver dollars out. So, what I’m trying to point out is that as the things that have been meaningful to you have less value for you, and you can’t hold onto them, and they seem to disintegrate, know that there is an inevitable replacement of the space they took up! By what? By What is really meant to be filling that space, Which is the presence of God in you.

So, you used to be worth twelve silver dollars, and now you’re beginning to feel like you’re worth less and less and less. And, unbeknownst to you, as you accept that, and there are fewer and fewer silver dollars, there’s more and more of the presence of God, Which you will sooner or later become aware of, and feel a new sense of Purpose, . . . but not one that you chose. So, why not say, “Oh, I see what’s happening here. I’m going to stop fighting it, and I’m going to let it happen.” And instead of compulsively paying attention to how much less and less and less good you feel, how much less and less and less sure of yourself you feel, let there be some curiosity to experience What's replacing them as they disappear, because That is inevitably and unalterably going to replace them.

It may not be fun, but it's only from the standpoint of your conditioned thinking that it isn't enjoyable. Like the Prodigal Son, the moment he turned his head toward home, his father came out . . . ran out to meet him. The water began to replace the silver dollars. The Prodigal Son says, "This is so humiliating, to have to come back home under these circumstances. This is not a very pleasant experience." You see? No one likes to do it! But the fact is that the lifestyle, the concepts, the behaviors, the attitudes that were being indulged in, weren't derived from your Source—from God—and they weren't really yours. And it was your birthright to be at Home. And so, no matter how it seems to feel to you on the way Home, don't give up the commitment to getting Home, because the moment there's a shred of commitment, a shred of interest, a shred of intent, the Father comes out to meet you—the new infills you. But you've got to let the process happen!

I'll tell you something else: What happens will not be as important as what you learn about "yielding to the process." Because what you learn about yielding into the not-knowing place is something that will stay with you for eternity. And to whatever degree you embrace it now and learn from it, I'm going to say, "it will color the rest of your experience." But it will color it with Love, and it will color it with Life, and it will color it with Meaning. It will color it beautifully. It will color it ultimately with pure Sanity!

Now, what I've said will be on a tape. And you will be able to listen to it over and over and over again. And every time you listen to it, at the bottom line all it will say is: Say "uncle." Say "uncle"!

Somewhere between now and your being totally Awake, the word "uncle" will change to "Father" . . . but let it be "uncle" right now.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: First of all, I'd like to thank you, Paul, for being who you are. You came into my life about November, and I've been listening to the tapes ever since. And thank you for being Raj. It was so easy to relate to Raj, rather than Jesus at that point.

RAJ: It is still easier for Paul to relate to Raj than Jesus. And really, isn't the Christ the "presence of Mind"—the presence of God—because no other sense of self or "mind" is being introduced? You are familiar with the phrase, "presence of mind"—like having the presence of mind to deal with a situation appropriately. That's really what God is.

That's really what the Christ is. That's really what You are. And whether it's given the name "Jesus" or "Paul" or "Mary," or whoever, is not the relevant point.

So, I am glad you're not having trouble with the name, "Raj."

QUESTION: My question is emotional. My husband had a stroke about a year ago, and I'm finding it very difficult living with him. In November when I heard your tape. It changed everything around, and I had this whole new way to be with him. And it felt wonderful, that that's where I was supposed to be. And everything was okay. But now I'm at the feeling of sacrifice. Nothing's in our marriage together . . .

RAJ: I want you to not fail to leave today without taking one of those sets of tapes from the June 1st Gathering. Continue.

QUESTION: So, I'm at a place of confusion. I've put it out to him, and I feel really guilty about it . . .

RAJ: Put it out to whom?

QUESTION: To my husband. We have a really open relationship, and we share our feelings or our emotions . . .

RAJ: What is the most difficult aspect?

QUESTION: When I come home from work, there's no joy. There's no sharing. There's no giving coming from him—like I'm his caretaker. And we don't have a companionship or a relationship, outside of me providing food, home, shelter and support. He's very uncommunicative . . .

RAJ: By choice?

QUESTION: Yes, by choice. He was never a very talkative person to begin with. But since his stroke, he's less so. And so I'm really confused, because I feel like part of me is selling out, instead of asking . . . well, I have! I've asked him to leave. I'd help him find a place to live, other than in our home, but I'm confused about that. I feel guilty. It doesn't feel like me, because that's not the type of person I am. I'm a total caregiver. I work with special need kids. I've been care-giving all my life. But this is sort of like, "God, in my house, too?" "In my home, too?"

RAJ: The thing is that when you are caretaking for these other individuals, you're never really called upon to sacrifice your integrity. But you are being called upon to sacrifice your integrity, here. And that's why you're getting up on your hind legs, so to speak, and behaving in a way that's not characteristic of you. But it is characteristic of you! It's just that it has never been called into play before.

QUESTION: What does that mean?

RAJ: That means that no one has ever tried to take your self-respect away, and so you've never had to stand up for it. Now, someone is behaving in a way that requires you to have to sacrifice your self-respect, and you're unwilling to do it. But, because you've not had much practice at saying, "no," in this regard, it feels like a different "you" standing up. It feels uncharacteristic of you, and your ego is being able to take this situation and say, "You know, you don't really know whether this is one of those times that it's important to let go of your self-respect," or that "it's a situation which, if you go ahead and yield into it, you won't really be sacrificing your self-respect." You don't know for sure, so you don't have the clarity needed to stand firm. "You might be making a mistake if you refuse to sacrifice your self-respect. This might be one of those so-called instances where you really are meant to give and give, and not get." Do you see what I'm saying? So, that leaves you in a state of doubt.

What I'm telling you is, that your fundamental response which says, "This is not workable, it's inappropriate" is your self-respect emerging. It is your integrity being given voice. And this is not a situation where you are to cow-tow to and respect someone else more than yourself!

Now, I really mean what I'm saying. I really mean it for you, because you need to feel the fact that it's absolutely inappropriate for you to override your integrity, here. Love isn't a matter of being a doormat.

You're being called upon here to be the love that says, "No, I won't participate with you in a mutual behavior that requires either one of us to sacrifice our dignity and integrity." That's love! And then you have to let the chips fall where they may. If that means that he decides he has to leave, and that you are unreasonable, that's what it means. It doesn't mean you are unreasonable. It means that that's the conclusion he has come to, right or wrong. But don't you back down and say, "Okay. This one time, I'll sell my soul. I will stop being the clear presence of intelligence, and I'll suck up to you. I'll devote myself to you, in spite of what I know is right for me." You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

RAJ: Good. That is love, even though sweetly sucking up to him might feel much more loving. And I'm choosing my words on purpose.

Now, I'm not judging him. And I'm not saying he's bad. But, you know what? He needs an intelligent partner who has integrity. And I'm saying, "Be that partner." And if he doesn't like it, he can leave. You see?

QUESTION: Yes, I see. How do I get him to leave?

RAJ: Don't worry about that yet. Just go home unconfused today, and be there unconfused!

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. I want to thank you for opening your house to us, and I'm pleased to meet you and Paul for the first time in person. I have a specific reason for coming today, and that is with regard to my health. I would like to get some advice from you.

I suffered burn-out, I suppose, about three years ago, and I've been experiencing a great amount of fatigue. And it seems to be localized in my heart chakra. That's where I feel a lot of pressure and fatigue, and I get heart palpitations. And I know that there's some mental blocks happening, which I would like some advice on. I've been listening to your tapes for about a year. Prior to burn-out, I took a course for about a year-and-a-half in hypnotherapy. So, I learned meditation and things like that.

I just wanted some guidance, because I feel that I still can't seem to get my stamina up. I've lost my vitality. And I'm wondering also about alternate forms of healing like homeopathy and acupuncture, and if any of those types of healing methods could aid me in getting my strength back.

RAJ: There is only one prescription that will resolve this problem, and that is love. If there is a "block" in the heart chakra, as you put it, it is because you are finding justifications for not loving. If you want to feel vitality, you are going to have to let vitality in. And I will tell you something—something I shared at the last Gathering—and that is that the way to let love in, is to have an object of your affection, to have something to which you are willing to extend love.

It doesn't matter whether it's a friend—a human being, let us say—or a piece of furniture, or a tree, or a leaf, or an insect. But you've got to find something that you are willing to be involved with feelingly. If you've cleaned up the kitchen and it sparkles, appreciate it. Stop a moment to enjoy how beautiful it looks. You see? So, it is not a complicated thing to have an object of your affection, to have something toward which you are able to feel warmly, lovingly, et cetera. And so, the way you deal with the blocks to love is not to get rid of them, but to, instead, actually find the opportunities that exist to actually extend love, to actually care in a way that you can feel.

A chakra doesn't actually have any moving parts that can become frozen and blocked. So, you don't have a blocked chakra—a damaged or malfunctioning chakra. But you have, let us say, an energy point which you are not inviting energy through. And so, the answer is to make the invitation. And you make the invitation by having some place for the love that is going to come through, to go to. You see?

Now, what you're going to find is that physically speaking in that area of your body, you're going to find things feeling regenerated. You are going to feel vital. Not weak or incapacitated. I know that it can sound trite to say the answer is love. But it's the truth. More than that the answer is love, it is important to know how to love. And you love by having an object of your affection—something toward which you can extend appreciation, caring. You see? This is the answer. Don't make it any more complicated than that.

Do you have a “yes, but . . .”?

QUESTION: Well, I still feel frustrated from what you're saying, because I do feel like I love a lot of things. So, I just find it frustrating. I know that I think I have fears that probably block this flowing of love. So, I suppose I should focus less on the fears and more on the love.

RAJ: Yes . . . and being frustrated takes time. It takes up your time. And whatever time you are giving to feeling frustrated is time that you are not engaged in being the presence of Love, which is your Function.

What I'm trying to say is that being frustrated is unproductive, and you can just stop doing it! Most people don't realize they can just stop engaging their mind in that way. And the best way to stop is to do something else! And the something else to do is find something to appreciate.

“Well, I appreciate a lot of things,” you said. Well, it isn't a contest, where when you love a certain number of things, you'll get your healing, or there will be a benefit. Because loving, because “having an object of your affection” is “productive,” and engaging in frustration is unproductive, then why not do what is productive, what has meaning? You see?

So, maybe you are loving a lot of things. Well, then I encourage you to embrace even more things, because it is a pleasure to be engaged in appreciation. It feels good to be engaged in appreciation. Frustration begets more frustration, because it's not an extension. It's a closing down that feels bad and causes further closing down, which feels worse, which causes . . . and on and on and on.

Your chakras and your body are ready to serve you in terms of your best interests. You do not have to overcome some destructive tendency of your chakras or your body. So this is not a battle. It's a matter of making a choice between two different ways of using your mind! You see? One of the ways will open you up to experiencing your body as healthier, and one will contribute to its feeling worse and worse and worse. I do not encourage you to get caught up in remedies, because the problem isn't in your body and it's not in your chakra.

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: And then I want you to watch. There's a certain amount of satisfaction the ego gets out of being frustrated. There's a little self-righteousness in frustration. And so, there may be times when you will say, "Oh, I really don't want to let go of being frustrated at the moment. It feels good to be pissed off!" You see?

QUESTION: Uh-huh.

RAJ: You still can make another choice. You don't have to be committed to that. So, just remember, engaging or indulging in frustration is unproductive. It never has accomplished a thing.

That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I want to thank you, too. I gave up being a grandmother. It feels real good.

RAJ: You look terrific.

QUESTION: I had a two-part question, but the first one has been pretty well taken care of today. However, this one is kind of bothering me a little. My young brother has been diagnosed with lung cancer, and it was just a couple of months ago. However, he has decided that he's going to die. And knowing what I know has been very difficult, because he doesn't want to hear anything from anybody because he has made a definite decision regarding this.

I guess I want to know if it's appropriate for me to . . .

RAJ: You want to know if there is any way you can inflict your good on him!

QUESTION: Yes. That came to the surface also.

RAJ: No, there isn't.

QUESTION: There isn't. Okay. Just let him go.

RAJ: When did you ever have hold of him?

QUESTION: (Laughing) Okay. I got it.

RAJ: Does that mean you can't love him? Does that mean that you, within yourself, can't be consciously aware of the truth about him, and that he is suffering from a misperception or misunderstanding, and that's all? No, it doesn't mean that you can't do that. But, be sure that you don't sit there being aware of what is true about him as a means of mentally coercing his mind into a realization of it!

I know the total divine truth, the total infinite divine Reality of You. But I can't make you embrace It. It is not my task to make you embrace It. And likewise it's not your task to make anyone else embrace whatever wonderful clarity you are experiencing. And so, if you neglect to attempt to change their mind, there is no cause for guilt, because you're actually being intelligent not to try to do something you can't do. You see?

QUESTION: Yes. That's exactly what I was looking for. Thank you.

RAJ: Does anyone else have difficulty with what I've just said, or have a question around that issue?

QUESTION: Well, I think it's sort of around this issue. I just found out that a young friend of ours is using heroin. And my first inclination is to go and speak with him about it, having had a brother who, for six years, was a heroin addict. And I just wonder if you feel that that's an appropriate thing for me to do.

RAJ: It is appropriate for you to open your mouth and extend your love actively in a verbal way until he indicates that he doesn't want to hear any more of it, which is the case here [with the last questioner].

QUESTION: Okay.

RAJ: Many of you might say, "Well, maybe if I really did speak up, things would change." Well, things won't change as a result of your speaking up, unless your "speaking up" has been impelled by the Father.

If you're speaking up because in your spiritual background or metaphysical training, you have learned and now believe that your personally knowing the truth can make you free, or make someone else free, then you would be inclined to speak up on the basis of a metaphysical principle. You see? Which has nothing to do with Knowing, at the deepest part of your being, what is utterly appropriate in that moment—when what's appropriate in that moment might be absolute silence!

I do not speak to Paul unless Paul speaks to me. Do you know what one of the wonderful benefits of that is? It is that Paul knows that if he wants to come Home, he has to take the steps. And do you know what's wonderful for me, is that since he doesn't think I can do it for him, he doesn't lay the responsibility on me. Therefore, our relationship is very clear, and he is not disempowered, and I am not given adoration because of what he thinks I can do for him. And so there's a very real, grounded love in this relationship that he and I have. That's what you want with these people. That's what you want with anyone in your lives who you wish you could do something for.

If you want to do something for them, listen for what is appropriate. And then do what you have deeply felt is appropriate. Even if it's saying nothing. You see? Anything else confuses the issue, and everything gets muddled in projected responsibilities on everything else "out-there," and no vital, real connection occurs, because everyone's playing into expectations.

Gurus play into the expectations of their students. And then students respond to the expectations of their gurus. And they all end up serving concepts and not Truth—and a loss of individual integrity.

The Prodigal Son did not start for home until he got sick and tired of the pig slop! And the father did not go out after him while he was in the pig slop to try to change his mind. That's love. It keeps things clear.

When Paul gets Home, he will not be able to blame anyone else for his being someplace he's not sure he wants to be.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj. I have a follow-up question, and that is that as one lets the water in and replaces the silver dollars—that example that you were using—well, what happens sometimes is that I feel invisible. I mean, where other people expect to see silver dollars, there's the absence of that. And so, I'm suffering with feeling unrecognized sometimes. And what I trust will come is that the infilling will just have me recognize them, and it won't be an issue for me. But in the interim, some of my suffering has been that I just feel like people don't see me. So, I just wanted to ask about that.

RAJ: This is a “suffer it to be so now.” This is something you will have to put up with.

When you are looking through a set of perceptions, you are looking through a sieve, and Reality can only get to you through the design of that sieve. And, as a result, there is much of Reality that could say, “My god, I feel invisible because she doesn't recognize me.” All It can do, though, is continue to gloriously be what It is until you let a new pattern emerge, or let less pattern interfere. And that's all you can do.

Now, that can make you feel friendless. But, you know what? Although it might seem that there are not a whole lot of awakened, enlightened beings on this planet, you will really never be able to get to a point where you are invisible to everyone. And as you grow, and seem to grow beyond the patterns of the sieves that others are using, you will always find that there is somebody there ahead of you, who will recognize you, and with whom you can enjoy camaraderie, until the others arrive at their point of transformation. You see?

So, instead of looking at what you're losing, be curious for what seems to be in this Void that you are not yet recognizing. For Paul, his whole world, you might say, in terms of what was important to him, was the Christian Science Church, and all of its structure, all of its functions, and so on. The second big thing for him was his job. This was just prior to my coming along.

Well, he lost his job, and by virtue of my coming along, he became invisible to Christian Scientists. In other words, he became invisible to those he felt his validation would come from. His scope of vision had not taken in much more than that and, as he came to realize, there were more people in the world who didn't care whether he fit into the Christian Science Church than there were in the Christian Science Church who did care. You see?

More than that, there were people who were interested in the Truth, whether it came through a certain sieve called the teachings of Christian Science or not. And so, where it seemed to him as though his life had suddenly become literally empty, he became acquainted with so much more of the world than he had been embracing before, and what you might call a “job” that he would never have conceived of, and a way of being alive—of participating or engaging in life—that was far different.

Now, you can see that [about him]. I can see that about you. So, don't worry about who you're invisible to. Be curious about those to whom, I guarantee you, you are visible.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome. Just because friends are friends doesn't mean you have the right to force them to keep up with you, or to see things the way you do. If they're really friends, let them have whatever distance they feel they need, and you will meet again.

QUESTION: Thank you.

RAJ: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hi, Raj.

RAJ: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I was listening to the last question, and it really struck me on a personal level, because before I sold my house, I had lived there for about nine years and I developed relationships with people who I thought were my friends. But, as the time drew nearer to leave that area, I experienced a very odd sensation of not having any friends. The people who I thought I could count on were absent from my life. And whether this actually happened or not, I found that no matter where I turned, it felt very much like people were turning away. It felt very lonely.

For some strange reason, I felt compelled to think that I had to stay in that area. And so, when I moved, it was kicking and screaming, reluctantly going into this new territory.

Now I experience an inability to plan. I'm not a planner any more. I find that things are just falling into place. And the people who are coming into my life are there willingly. So, when she was talking about her experience with feeling that kind of rejection, on whatever level, when it's time for us to turn in a new direction, is that one of God's ways of providing us with that new focus? Are we being drawn away from what we've outgrown, and moved toward what we're supposed to be facing?

RAJ: Sometimes you get that kind of help, yes. But that was not the case here. You simply "evolved" into a new pattern—a less patterned pattern—which caused you not to fit in the places where you had fit before. And others could not find the connection with you. Finding no connection, they felt no impulse to connect. It is that simple.

One might say, “Well, if that’s what’s going to happen if I allow transformation to occur . . . if I’m going to lose friends . . . then I don’t want transformation,” or, “I don’t want it yet.” Unfortunately, you’re never in charge of your transformation . . . or fortunately.

I’ll tell you something. When transformation occurs, you always become a little bit more real. You always become a little more grounded. And if your relationships have been based on unreality and ungroundedness, you’re not going to find those relationships functioning. It’s that simple.

Now, you could afford to be upset, you could justify being upset, if you were in charge of your transformation . . . although that doesn’t make sense. However, because the movement of your essential Being is what is responsible—the presence of God in you is responsible for your transformation—then to be upset with it is useless! To be frustrated by it is useless! And the only workable conclusion you can come to is to say, “uncle.” I can’t put it any other way.

In your more grounded state of being more real, more genuine, you will have the capacity to continue to relate to others. You will find yourself desiring to. But the others will not feel comfortable with someone who is more real, because your presence will uncover stuff that they don’t want to have uncovered. And so, yes, in a sense they will withdraw. They, as I said, will not feel the impulse to connect with you yet.

The time will come when they will. It might be a long time. But, you know what? The scales change. They rebalance as each one makes commitment to his or her own transformation and becomes more grounded. The result is that it becomes increasingly difficult for those who want to be ungrounded to remain ungrounded. And they find themselves at this place where what meant something, or had value to them, is no longer having value—the first stage of the experience of transformation where nothing seems to mean anything, which will propel them into the Void as well.

So, it is a favor that everyone does, when they choose for yielding to their own transformation. And if doing that means a temporary disconnection with those who had been friends, let it be that way. You know you haven’t rejected them. You know that wasn’t your intent. But the simple fact that you don’t really have a choice about going along with your transformation means that that better be your focus of attention, rather than what’s happened to everyone else.

Paul has friends all over the world. What I mean to say is that yielding into the Void and letting the infilling occur, opens you up to so much more of life than you were embracing before—in a more meaningful way, and with less fear—that if you look back, as Paul can, and think of those “friends” whom he still has no communication with, the loss of those friends is miniscule, is not as meaningful as the way he’s experiencing life now and those with whom he can communicate. You see? Because there's been such expansion.

You gotta say "uncle," and go with it!

The way Existence—and "existence" can only really have a capital "E"—works, the way Being works, is beneficent. And so, you can dare to yield your control over to It. Allow loss of friends. Allow whatever happens in the process. Don't quibble if you don't have a sense of peace because things seem to be topsy-turvy. Because what's happening is—and I'm talking about when real transformation is occurring. I'm not talking about when someone's throwing a temper tantrum or acting spoiled, but when real transformation is occurring . . .

[At this point, the flow of words was lost and approximately ten minutes passed in silence while Paul struggled to recapture the continuity.]

RAJ: Paul lost the thought, the flow. And although I am not requiring that what I was saying continue, Paul has been, during the last ten minutes or so, having the conscious intent for the idea to be completed. He is experiencing a need to appear to be somewhat competent, but there ain't no such fella.

Now . . .

[More silence]

Paul is experiencing some self-consciousness. And yet, he's not committed to it. But he wishes that he were invisible.

In order for him to hear me at all at this point, considering the ego dynamics he has been going through, he has had to desire to be more in touch with his peace than to be in touch with saving face—to be in touch with me rather than in touch with his self-consciousness. Part of him still wants me to make him look good. And yet, what he is having to do is to value the Void more—that place where he, personally, egotistically, is totally incompetent—and to be incompetent without self-consciousness, to be incompetent without apology. That's called "being more real"—the kind of reality that others can't find a way to fit in with.

It is being a little bit difficult for Paul to let in what I'm saying, because what has happened here in the last ten minutes or so is illustrating what I was about to say [before he lost the flow], and he is being the illustration. And he is not sure, without knowing what it is that is being illustrated, whether he wants to be the illustration. Yet intelligence is being expressed. You are all understanding what is happening. Even a little humor has been expressed. And although some of you have felt uncomfortable for him, his letting himself into acknowledgment of his incompetence without apology has not made you uncomfortable, and that's an important point.

As one becomes more real, as one allows himself or herself to be genuinely present without a front, which will, indeed, always feel as though it's a state of incompetence as far as the ego is concerned, it never makes anyone feel uncomfortable. It may make some not know how to fit in with you, and as a result you may feel like you have become invisible, but that is not a factor that should be getting your attention.

I'll tell you something: As Paul has sat here, intent upon getting beyond self-consciousness, his peace has returned almost completely. His feeling of stability that he has been enjoying all this afternoon is returning. And the interruption of the flow of love has come to an end, even though it may be coming out haltingly. But this is okay. He knows I was just about to say something, which he blocked when he lost the flow.

Genuineness and realness, which can emerge into one's awareness when he allows himself to be in the Void, constitutes humility. And humility and innocence are inseparable. This is important. Humility and innocence are inseparable.

The reason you must allow the apparent frustrations, the apparent loss of friends or associates, temporarily, as you yield to transformation is because in yielding to it, humility replaces arrogance that had once been there. Innocence becomes illuminated where you are, and that is, for lack of better words, "cleansing."

Everyone is blessed. But most of all, you come into the conscious experience of utter safety and invulnerability. As the Prodigal comes home through "the wasteland of the Void," not giving reverence to guilt and humiliation, the Father comes forth, the infilling begins to occur. And part of the infilling is the experiential assurance which you receive of your utter innocence.

So, don't quibble about the apparent dynamics that attend your yielding to your transformations that might seem like losses. If you seem to be invisible, let it be that way.

I will tell you something: As you yield to the transformation that is occurring, rather than resisting it, you will find that you are being led by something. If transformation is happening, there is an intelligent "end" toward which the transformation is moving. And instead of looking at what you seem to be losing, if you will pay attention for That which is leading the transformation forward, you will feel loved. You will feel comfort. And you will find yourself able to look at the things which your ego had called distressing with compassion and without judgment.

Does that answer your question?

QUESTION: Yes, it does. Thank you very much.

RAJ: You are welcome.

Paul, during the last fifteen minutes or so, has been the literal expression of what I have shared, and does not at the moment grasp the meaning of what I said. He will have the delightful opportunity, upon listening to it later, of seeing that more happened than he bargained for, and that a learning has occurred for everyone that could not have been better promoted than by Paul's being exactly what he was able to be.

I am making him a little bit uncomfortable. And to him it seems as though I am speaking nonsense at the moment. That is okay, and he is willing to let it be okay, even though the longer I speak, the more he feels as though I am making a fool out of him, since "nothing meaningful is happening at the moment." You see?

Now, what he doesn't realize is that the transformation is going on for him, and he is daring to stay with his eyes focused on Home from the not-knowing place. At the moment he is not comfortable. I mean by that that he is not at ease, even though it might appear and sound by the tone of his voice that he is as much at ease now as he was earlier in the afternoon.

What I'm pointing out is that letting yourself be in the Void, where there is no feeling of competence, whatsoever, and not resisting being there, allows infilling of love and clarity that you, yourself, will not be responsible for, and yet which you cannot be separate from. And whether you are feeling uncomfortable about it, like Paul has, or whether you are feeling uncomfortable about side-effects—loss of friends, this, that, and the other thing—you, if you will dare to stay there, will find the fullness of the transformation registering with you. And this is where Paul is at right now.

I will not prolong this for him. It has come time to end for the afternoon.

I love you all. And—Paul thinks my next words are nonsense again—if you have learned something in the last twenty minutes, I invite you to share what it was with Paul after we have finished. What seems nonsensical is that he cannot conceive that you have learned anything from the nonsense that has occurred. You see?

So, we will call it a day. I have enjoyed being with you all.

AN EASTER DIALOGUE

Kingston, Washington
April 12, 1998

B- 10

RAJ: For how many of you is today a special day because it's Easter?

[Many hands are raised.]

I want to share a poem that epitomizes the meaning of Easter:

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall.
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the king's horses and all the king's men
Couldn't put Humpty together again.

Surprised you! Now, here's another phrase that epitomizes the meaning of Easter:

"If this cup can pass from me, let it. But, nevertheless, thy will, not mine, be done."

It's Humpty Dumpty that says, "Let this cup pass from me." It's the built-up sense of self, the ego sense of self which has lifted itself up into an arrogant self-satisfied position, that says, "Don't let me fall." And yet, until it falls and can't be put back together again--which is the meaning of crucifixion--resurrection can't occur. Everyone is grateful for the meaning of resurrection, but you cannot forget that it's the flip side of crucifixion.

I'm so glad there is a nursery rhyme like Humpty Dumpty to convey the meaning of crucifixion, because it's funny. It's not serious. Crucifixion really means that experience which one has when (s)he has arrived at a point where

(s)he values her opinions less, her best judgments less, her sense of her goodness less than what the Father's Will for her is. Crucifixion is simply arriving at a point where you're able and willing to rely upon a source other than your own best thinking.

"Oh, well, there are lots of things I can do, but when I do come to something that I know I can't do, I'll listen for Guidance."

Well, Humpty's still up there!

Crucifixion doesn't mean being killed. The meaning of crucifixion is not heavy, dark, sorrowful, grievous. It lies in the phrase, "Nevertheless, thy will, not mine, be done." Do you see what I'm saying? The crucifixion happened in the garden, not on the cross!

I will be perfectly frank with you: I said those words for the benefit of you. I said those words for the benefit of my disciples. I had no doubt, because that is not the point at which I Awakened. Full Awakening occurred when John baptized me. But, there was a purpose to be fulfilled in what you have come to call the Passion of Christ. And the purpose was illumination. Illumination (the light dawning in the world) of not only the eternality of Life, but of the nature of every individual human consciousness that each of you calls your "self"--the path Home, if you will.

It starts with each of you arriving at a point where you are not so self-satisfied with how you are able to cope with life, and you choose to embellish your ability to live well by taking on a partner in "the business of life," the Father--letting the Father back in, and asking for His guidance, for His wisdom, instead of relying entirely upon your own.

Now, many of you pray, and many of you understand that prayer means listening, not petitioning. Prayer means being still and listening for an answer. And this is the beginning of crucifixion/resurrection. What's happening when you do that? You're beginning to glorify God in the world, because you are letting God in and letting what you learn find expression in your daily activities. When you listen for the Truth, you are listening for "the Father's Will," and when you hear, and live according to what you hear, the Father's Will is expressed on earth "as it is in Heaven," and the Father is glorified. Not just you.

Humpty Dumpty glorifies only himself. That's why his wall is so high.

Glorifying God isn't singing praises. It's being the place where the meaning of God's Will finds expression in you.

I said many of you are beginning to do this from time to time, and that's the beginning of crucifixion. The end of crucifixion comes when you are willing not to hold out even a minute in your day to do what you want to do. When you sacrifice the last second out of every twenty-four hour period that you want to take to do what you want to do--to be Humpty Dumpty--then the capacity of Humpty Dumpty to be put together again is forever lost, and resurrection is your experience.

How many of you watched the movie, Air Force One? Paul watched it last night and, as it turned out, it would not have been a movie he would have normally picked for the evening before a Gathering because there is not a lot of peace in it. It is a story about the President's plane. The President and his wife and daughter are on the plane, and it is hijacked.

For Paul, there was a key line in the movie, and it's one that helps in understanding the meaning of Easter for each and every one of you. The President was held hostage, not just by virtue of the fact that he was not free to act on his own, but he was also held hostage by threats to his wife and his daughter. The vice-president and part of the White House staff had to decide whether or not the President was in a position where he was able to act as President, fulfill his function as President, which really has a global frame of reference to it. And it was suggested that he was acting as "husband" and "father" because of the threat, and as a result "was not able to act in the capacity of President." An interesting thought!

As an ego, each of you is a mother or a daughter, or a father or a son, or a brother or a sister. This is Humpty Dumpty, because you are the Christ not conscious of your capacity to act as the Christ in the context of Heaven right here. And as long as you identify yourself as father, mother, daughter, son, brother, sister, with allegiances to your family at this level, you are incapable of acting relative to the Brotherhood--the Sons and Daughters of God--in the context of God being All. You are not able to act as the Christ. You are not able to feel yourself in your Christ-hood. This is very important.

As part of the "Passion Play," if you will, Mary was present, and I was asked, "What about your mother?" And I said--[you see how this fits in?]"Who is my mother, and who is my father," because I wasn't there as "son." I was there as the Christ. I promise you, if I had been there as a "son," causing grief to my mother, there would never have been a resurrection. You see? Like the thief, like Humpty Dumpty, I would have simply died like everyone else.

Who is my mother? Who is my brother? My mother is my brother. And my sister is my brother. The Brotherhood of Man, all of the Sons and Daughters of God are my equal. And my relationship to them is in a universal sense. But the point of it is that so is yours! The experience of your relationship with everyone else on this planet, awaits you in its Reality as a universal experience in the context of the Allness of God, and not in the context of well-decorated Easter Humpty Dumpties.

When the President can function as President, rather than as father or husband or a relative of someone that there's a personal attachment with--which can be used as a means of threat and control--then, if he is a good President, the whole world is blessed, because that's the context of his function. And it's the context of your Function!

This is good news. Smile! It is a happy thing! Don't ever again let the topic of crucifixion be an agonizing thing for you to think about. All it is, is you, arriving at a point where you're willing to say, "Beyond what I already know, I have some curiosity. I want to know more than I already know." The minute you become curious, you become, you might say, a pregnant question mark. And if you stay silently in that state, you will find yourself filled with the Truth. You will find revelation occurring.

Now, is it going to be revelation about the unknown? Yes. But it's also going to be revelation about how to be the Christ--about how to be the President. It's about being able to be appropriate in the moment you're in with your brothers and sisters in a way that is transforming for them. It is the President, being able to perform his function, and it blessing everyone. It is you being able to be the Christ fulfilling your real Function, and blessing everyone in the most practical of terms right here.

I want you to think about it for a moment.

When I was on the cross, I was taunted: "Look at him! He says he's the Son of God. How ridiculous! The Son of God on a cross with nails in his hands." They taunted me. But who did they taunt? The taunted Humpty Dumpty! They taunted the ego they thought was there. You see?

The quickest way to get any of you to abandon your clear connectedness with your Knowing, where you are experiencing how to be the presence of Love and extend It, is for somebody to attack you personally! "You idiot! Who do you think you are?" "Don't try to tell me what to do. I challenge you!" And if you're not securely grounded in your connection to the experience of how to be the presence of Love, you will kick into old habits of reaction as Humpty Dumpty. And you will feel, if nothing else, offended. "How could you do this to me when I've been doing such a good thing?"

Paul has said many times, "I don't expect people to respect me, but I do not expect to be put down. I do not expect to be spoken ill of." Well, Paul has to learn, as you have to learn, that you have to let go of both sides--let go of having people respect you, but also let go of it mattering whether people disrespect you, because either of those two will effectively hook you into your habit patterns of reaction.

The minute you become a little bit indignant, or have a little bit of hurt feelings, you've lost your connection with the experience of how to be the presence of Love. You become the "father" or the "husband" who can no longer fulfill the function of President, or the mistreated human being who can no longer function as the Christ, which would bless everyone and secure you in the true experience of Who You Are so that you can get closer to the point where you're willing to abandon the last millisecond of having the right to do what you want, thus making full commitment to the experience of God's perspective and Who You Are. You see?

The "Passion," as it has been called, illustrates all the elements of waking up. It certainly does it in stark terms that did register with everyone, and registered significantly enough to stay alive down through the centuries. But the Love that I expressed in uncovering to everyone who would come to hear the story, held the promise, you might say, of everyone's Awakening if they heard the real meaning.

There could not have been a resurrection without a crucifixion. And there won't be a resurrection of any one of you without a crucifixion. Thank God there are both sides of the coin! Thank God there was a crucifixion and a resurrection!

No one needs to feel guilty that there was a crucifixion, because it was essential. It still is essential with each one of you, as an element of coming back into your right Mind, regaining your Sanity. And there's nothing horrible about it at all, except that we did it in a way that got your attention, and kept your attention where the elements of Awakening could be seen.

There is one other point, and it has to do with listening for Guidance. And I want to make something really clear today: Paul is not channeling me. And when you are listening to the Voice for Truth, and you are hearing It, you are not channeling the Voice for Truth. You're doing something fundamentally Sane, because you are letting something else into your very private and apparently sovereign sense of who you are, and you are breaking the separation. You're letting God in! You're not channeling God. You're becoming Sane again, because your mind is not compartmentalized to the point where there's only one compartment you're aware of, and you call it you, and there's nothing else but you that's important!

Now, why am I saying that Paul isn't channeling me? I'm saying it because as long as you think that Paul is channeling me, you are able to think that there's something special about Paul. "Well, he knows how to channel! What hope is there for me? I don't know how to channel." "If I want to hear Raj, I've got to go where Paul is. If I want to ask Raj a question, I've got to go where Paul is."

No. You have to arrive at the point where you have a need to know something. You call this being at the end of your rope. You call this a crisis, because if it was something you knew how to handle, it would have been handled and you wouldn't call it a crisis. What you call a crisis is a place you have arrived at where you don't have the answer, and you are sure you can't possibly have the answer.

The thought of this scares Paul shitless--that someone will think, "Here I am in the middle of a crisis. I'm at the end of my rope. I do not know what to do. I've got to do something, and therefore, I've got to get Paul, because he talks with Jesus, and Jesus is my answer." You see?

No. Paul is not channeling me.

Paul has said, "I don't care to have anything to do with my best judgments. I don't care to have anything to do with my strongest beliefs. I don't want to have anything to do with my highest sense of what's right, because in the middle of not knowing how to resolve a problem, all of these things have not transformed the problem." And then, because he didn't know anyone he could run to, he said, "Help!" In the absence of being Humpty Dumpty, in the emptiness, in the void that he was experiencing, he said, "Help," and then he listened.

Now, the thing is, he listened with commitment! Because he didn't want anything to do with his own best judgment and best thoughts, he was willing to abandon any capacity he ever thought he had. Do you know what that means, when you actually get to that place and do it? You're laying your life on the line! It's real basic! And that's another part of the lesson of the crucifixion and resurrection--"Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." You could say I put my life on the line. I made total commitment to "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

When you arrive at the end of your rope and you give up, and you say, "Help!" and you have in your mind no other resource you can go to--no psychic, no channel, no priest, no counselor, whom you could blame if, after taking their advice, things didn't work out well--you lay your life on the line. You take responsibility for the step you're taking. You see?

Do you see that when you take responsibility for giving up totally and listening, without having any alternative or backup plan in mind, in effect you're saying, "This is worth it to me, no matter what happens, no matter what anyone thinks! I'm willing to take responsibility for this very radical step." You see? You're laying your life on the line, and you are validating it with your complete willingness.

This is all very important.

You will miss out on so much. Yes! You can come here on Sunday afternoons when we have a Gathering, and whenever we do it I will talk with you. We will be together actively. But what a shame if, in between, you're saying, "I can't wait for the next Gathering when I will be able to get a little insight," when--if, at that very moment, you were willing to sit down and ask, and listen about something that you were experiencing a real need for, and put your life on the line--you could have it any moment, every moment, all day long, every day.

So stop thinking about Paul channeling Raj, or the Christ, or Jesus, and stop thinking about you channeling Raj, or the Christ, or the Holy Spirit. It's not channeling at all! What it is, is Humpty Dumpty falling, breaking apart, and not trying to reassemble itself, but saying, "Help" beyond itself! You see? And remember, this is the meaning of crucifixion. It's the shell of who you think you are, and who you have built yourself to be in your own mind--and who maybe a number of other people have helped reinforce--it is that getting cracks in it! Little pin-peck holes where something beyond it can penetrate. And then it's you making commitment to Who You Are beyond that shell.

When you begin to do that, when you will make commitment to hear the Father's Will, and to let It find expression through you because you have listened and heard It, and you are willing to be from the clarity that has unfolded to you, then you begin to function as the Christ, just as the President who can manage to dissociate himself from a personal sense of responsibility to "daughter" and "wife," so that he can move into his capacity to act as President, in which not only those two people are embraced, but the whole world.

Then you become a transformational presence in the world. But more than that, you experience what it means to be the Christ. And you know what it means? It doesn't mean that wherever you move, bugles blow to announce you. It doesn't mean awe and respect and honor. You know what it means? It means, first of all, being in perfect peace, where even the concept of fear is meaningless.

Have you ever looked at or heard a word over and over until the sound is just a sound, and it doesn't mean anything? That's what I mean. Fear becomes meaningless. The word has no associations with it. And all that's available to you is peace. Perfect relaxation, where when you breathe out, you let all of the air out, and you are in bliss.

What does it mean to be the Christ? It means--these are poor words--it means that you can look at any situation and immediately grasp it in its entirety, so that you are able to be perfectly appropriate. It means that there is utter orderliness to everything you are experiencing.

It means that even though everything you are experiencing is the manifestation of Creation, and is therefore continually unfolding anew--even though everything you are experiencing from moment to moment is something you've never experienced before--you immediately grasp it in its entirety and are able to be utterly appropriate relative to it. Why, confidence isn't even needed! Inner strength and fortitude aren't needed. To experience everything with freshness and vitality does not enervate you, because you don't have to react to it. You're able to be with it fully.

I could go on, but this is Easter and three days ago was "Bad" Friday, and these three days embody all of the wonderful elements relative to Awakening! I trust that I have conveyed it in a way that takes the heaviness away from it, but doesn't take away its Meaning. It's time for all of you to be able to act in your capacity as the Christ.

Paul wants to put a sign across the top of the TV that says, "TODAY'S BEST PERCEPTION OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN." And today's best perception of the Kingdom of Heaven is pretty lousy. But if you remembered, every time you looked at your TV set, that you were looking at someone's best perception of the only thing there is available to have an experience of, which is the Kingdom of Heaven, you wouldn't believe what you see on the screen. You would recognize that all it was was someone's best perception.

It's your birthright for you to act in your capacity as the Christ and see the Kingdom of Heaven--not a "best perception"--and by virtue of your capacity to do that, and your remembering that that's your Function when you see the images on the TV, you will bring healing to everything you see, rather than turning on the TV to see "what's going on in the world."

It doesn't tell you what's going on in the world! It tells you someone's best perception of what's going on in the Kingdom of Heaven! And if all you're seeing [there] is a momentary best perception, then you'll be more willing to bless the perception with your willingness to see more clearly than the best perception that's coming across the tube. You'll act in your capacity as the Christ.

So: "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." It requires listening deeply, without having backup plans or alternate sources to go to if what is revealed to you is not to your liking, where you lay your life on the line and are willing to stand with whatever happens. When you do that, whatever happens will be glorious, but you will not be able to find it out until you're willing to lay your life on the line.

You know what? This is why I suggest that you try this on things that don't matter, so that you aren't called upon to discover your capacity to function as what You truly Are in the middle of a horrendous crisis. You can do it in the middle of a horrendous crisis, but it's not necessary to wait until then to have a little curiosity that causes you to invite something else in, break the separation, experience a joining, experience the influx of wisdom, enlightenment, and the experience of Truth, and then live It, whether anyone else agrees with you or not. You see?

It's all nitty-gritty stuff, but it isn't truly heavy, heavy, heavy, . . . grievous. You see?

If Paul were to disappear today, many people would probably feel at a great loss. And the only reason they would feel at a great loss would be because they hadn't heard what I had been saying, and they hadn't been paying attention to what Paul's life meant, because Paul has been doing what I have been expressing--except that he's still holding out for a millisecond each day to do what he wants. Nevertheless, it's inappropriate for anybody to ever feel at a loss if suddenly Paul disconnected his phone, moved, and didn't tell anybody where he moved to. You see?

I'm pushing today! I'm pushing for all of you to stop putzing around, and playing with "spiritual" things, and dare to make commitment to your Awakening--not by buying all the books you can get about it, but by going into that place where you feel a need and you don't have the answer, and saying, "I am going to seek no further than this emptiness in me. I'm going to look nowhere else but in this void in me, where there seems to be no answer and just a problem. I'm going to ask for clarity to be given, and I am going to listen, and I am not going to act until I've heard."

*And be sure you're being honest when you say these wonderful things that I've just said to say, because if you're just giving them lip service, you're not putting your life on the line! You've got to put your life on the line if you want to see it transformed back into what you have always divinely been. The crucifixion part of it must occur! And it won't occur if you're not putting your life on the line, if you're not standing there with your decision, rather than wanting to go to someone like Paul because he has done it, or he does it--at least when you are there--and something meaningful occurs.*

Hell! Come on Sundays, where we can talk this way. And on all of the other days, do it in the withinness of yourself, so we can be together every other day. But understand what it takes. It doesn't take being nailed up on a cross, but it does take stepping into the unknown, stepping into the void, abandoning all backup plans, and trusting into God, because that's the only way you'll find there really is a God as an experience! And the experience of the Fact that there is a God constitutes an experience of Who You Are--the Christ. This is your Birthright! This is what it's about! So, Happy Easter!

All it is, is the means by which you come back into your right Mind. It's just the means by which you wake up to the fullness of You, the fullness of Being, . .

. . . where you never again feel like a father, husband, son or a daughter, trapped by obligations to the roles that have been assigned to you in your best concepts of who you are when you've forgotten that you are the Christ . . .

. . . and that you have no "special" relationships with "special" people, but you have the fullest of all relationships with everyone, including the ones you would have called mother and daughter and wife, and so on.

[Break taken.]

RAJ: Who has a question?

QUESTION: Thank you, Paul. Thank you, Raj. Could you explain a little bit about those beings that are with us on the other side of life--I've heard of a term, "Consortium"--how we can learn from them?

ANSWER: First of all, I want to make it very clear that "on the other side of life," as you termed it, there are no organizations. Eggs--eggo's, or ego's--have cartons, in which they feel organized, but Reality is not compartmentalized.

I have just spent perhaps an hour telling you how to avail yourself of Truth. It is well for you not to conceptualize the source of Truth.

When Paul sits down--and I've said this before--he says, "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the Purpose of Being." And the word, "Being," as he is using it, is a verb, rather than a noun. That's about as nonconceptual as you can get, and still provide some sort of definition.

Do you want to amend or change your question in any way? Because, regardless of the context in which you expressed it, you had a question. You experienced a desire to know something.

QUESTION: Well, I guess I'm tied up in my intellect right now, and all I can think of is, I've heard . . .

ANSWER: Well, come back when you're Awake! [Said facetiously.]

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Do you see what I'm saying? I'm saying, "Who cares if you're tied up in your head? Go for it! Come from wherever you're coming from at the moment. And don't analyze and evaluate where you're coming from. How do you know where you're coming from?

You do know, regardless of how it's managing to be formulated in order to be expressed, that there is a movement of curiosity. Let it come out however it will come out. And don't any of you wait to talk with your Guidance until you're not coming from your intellect. You'll be stuck in your egg cartons forever!

I'm loving you. So, wherever you think the question is coming from, it's coming from a movement. It's coming from something emergent in you. Let it find expression. I won't have any problem understanding you.

QUESTION: I guess my question would be, "When will I hear? When will I listen?" I ask for help constantly, and I wait at least a millisecond before going on. And I've heard that a lot of this would be coming in as a feeling, and I can't attach anything to that. I have to hear. I have to be able to verbalize, at least at this moment in time.

ANSWER: I want you to loosen up about the whole process of listening. It is true that it is distinctly helpful to learn how to meditate, and to meditate regularly, so as to have the recurring experience of quiet in your mind, and peace in what you call your body. But, the shell of self-definitions which each of you have built around yourself, thinking that that was your task in this life, is permeable. What is on the inside of the shell is the real You, and what is on the outside of the shell is all the rest of the real You.

You--the real You--because you are Integrity, Itself, insists on being Whole, not compartmentalized. And as a result, that of You which is divine, inside the shell, and that of You which is divine, outside of the shell, because of Its unseparated Integrity, you could say, is constantly insinuating Itself against the permeable shell. It's inevitable that connection will occur, and what you would call inspiration, insight, revelation. It's inevitable.

Learning how to be still makes it easier, in the beginning, to have the penetrations register with you. But you must also understand that your divinity, which is inside as well as outside of the shell, is able to take and make use of every opportunity of connecting with you consciously. So, let us say that for a millisecond you do listen . . . seriously. Okay. Then, for the next twenty-four hours, listen un-seriously. Your enlightenment might come from a very dynamic movie. It might be in the words of a song on the radio. It might be in the smile of somebody that you look at, who smiles at you.

Loosen up, because your divinity has the means of registering what you need to know with you in uniquely creative ways. So, lighten up.

QUESTION: I've been listening to your tapes, and I've written down a number of questions.

ANSWER: Pick one.

QUESTION: One is the meaning of a saying that was given to me many years ago, and I don't know the meaning of it, but I keep repeating it because it was given to me during meditation. [Verbalizes the saying.] Does that have any meaning?

ANSWER: Pick another question. [Group laughter]

QUESTION: When we pray . . .

ANSWER: No, no, no. I was joking. It does not have a translatable meaning. It has a function. I'll put it that way. When you say it, it almost immediately moves you to a different space--a different inner place. And that is its purpose. It triggers a spontaneous movement into a place of greater peace and receptivity. Now you can share the second question you began to ask.

QUESTION: Thank you. When we pray to God/Goddess, are we praying to the spirit within us?

ANSWER: I hope not--only because when you say "within you," it is impossible at this point for you to comprehend that the within-ness of you is without limit. And so, you will conceptualize the God or Goddess within you as being less than infinite, and perhaps partaking of certain of your own limited characteristics, although it would be greater than you.

As I said earlier, prayer is listening to God. And as I said a moment ago, it is important not to conceptualize the source of the answer, because when you don't conceptualize it, it allows it to be maximally infinite.

When you are praying to God, when you are listening for God's voice, you are listening for Love's voice--the voice of divine Love--which you cannot imagine, but which you can feel as a result of listening for It. It will infill you. I would encourage you to substitute the word "Love" for God or Goddess, and don't say that It's "in" someplace or "outside" of someplace. It is omnipresent, which is a difficult thing to conceptualize--and it's a good thing that it's difficult to conceptualize it.

God is Love. Love that loves you. Love that has you as the object of Its affection. Love as that which consciously cares about you. Love that is ultimate Love. Love that nothing more perfect than exists. Because you are the object of Its affection, It draws you toward the experience of Itself. And as you allow yourself to be drawn toward It by listening for It, you find ultimately that Its reason for drawing you toward It is to dissolve all sense of limitation that you might be experiencing which is blinding you to the Christ that you really Are--to Who You Are in your total Sanity. It's drawing you to wake up. It's drawing you to let yourself be so filled with It that you cannot imagine or describe "two" of you any longer.

QUESTION: Good afternoon, Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'd like to ask about integrity. I think actually what I want to ask is, what is it, because I have an idea about what it is, or I have been brought up with an idea about what it is. And in your last newsletter and in many of the tapes that I've listened to, you talk about my own personal integrity as a being. And I feel that I don't know actually what that is, and I'd like you to speak to that.

ANSWER: Integrity is what you will be when there is no inclination on your part to be something in particular for someone else. Integrity, as an experience, is you being perfectly honest.

Now, if you're upset, you are not in a place where you can be perfectly honest. So, honesty will never be a matter of saying, "You dirty so-and-so, you're out of my life forever!" even though that might seem to honestly express what you're feeling.

Honesty is something you are able to express when you are in your peace. And if you're in your peace and someone attacks you to one degree or another, you will not move into a state of self defense. You will not become defensive. And, like someone said the other day, you will say to that one, "You are going to have to find someone else to be unreasonable with." It is a statement that makes no judgment. It is a statement that simply expresses your peace and the helpful truth that's needed, together with your unwillingness to join in confirming the state of mind that the attacker is coming from. You see?

So, everyone tries to live up to someone's expectations. You try to live up to parents' expectations, you try to live up to your boss' expectations, you try to live up to the creed in your religion, you try to live up to the position you hold. You try to live up to other people's expectations of whoever you have said you are. And there's very little honesty, because there's very little connectedness with your peace. Everyone walks around in a state of "holding your breath," in a state of tension, trying to keep straight what all the different ways are that you are supposed to be in order to live up to all the different pictures everyone has of you. You see? There's very little honesty, and very little bliss.

Integrity? Integrity is what is underneath all of your busy attempts to live up to other people's expectations. Now, what that really means is that you are trying to live up to the standard you have set for yourself in responding to and living up to everyone else's expectation. And you've got to let yourself off the hook. You've got to dare to find that when you aren't being competent in holding the image together, that what will be there in the peace of you that you're experiencing, will always be "equal" to every situation. But it will be equal to it in a context that is harmonious and harmonizing, so that what you say in response to what is happening will be benign but illuminating without your having to try to be an illuminating presence.

Paul, right now, as Paul, is being totally incompetent. He's not trying to be anything. And that's why I can talk about him and he's not becoming self conscious. How he appears to everyone else is meaningless. You see? And as a result, in the peace, Integrity can find expression that specifically answers your question in a way that has meaning for you.

So, you won't become meaningless, but the meaningfulness will arise out of the Integrity that you're not responsible for, an Integrity that you haven't nurtured or created or developed or finessed into a certain means to control your world. You see? And so you will be in a way that is harmonious and harmonizing. It's what's there when you let who you think you are be totally incompetent, and you don't try to engage it.

If you want to know what it is, you're going to have to do what I just said, so that the experience of your Integrity can register with you. It can't be explained to you. But It's there in Its fullness in the middle of you, being the real Presence of You, in spite of the fact that you and everyone else spend so much time developing and nurturing a capacity to fulfill other people's expectations, or not violate them, not upset them, not make waves. You see?

To borrow a phrase from Maharishi: When you do less, you accomplish more. When the competent you--Humpty Dumpty--falls, and you don't try to put it back together again, what has happened? If you would imagine that the egg is an egg shell, without a yolk, there is a volume of air inside the shell, and a volume of air outside the shell. When the shell--and the particular identity of the oval shape, and the marvelous packaging that Nature has evolved, which are all the ways you can think about an eggshell--cracks and comes apart, you seem to lose the identity that the shell gave you. But You--the volume of what is Real inside the egg--is now joined with the volume of what is Real about You that was outside. You are being on a new basis, and you can feel the undividedness of You in your entirety.

As I said earlier, it is an experience of Peace. It's an experience in which fear is absent. And in the absence of fear, your Integrity is obvious to you--not as an explanation, but as a way of being with everything in which there is no defense, no manipulation, no game-playing. You see? And so, you become benign but transformational, because you are acting in harmony with the divine Purpose that God has given everything--the Wholeness of You. You see?

For a nation of "do-ers," what I'm saying is a hard thing, because you want something you can take hold of that will help you "do" things better. Be willing to conceive that the ultimate answer really doesn't lie in that direction--of being able to take the Truth, and get a handle on It, so that you can make a better life for yourself. If you allow the Truth to register with you, and you abide with It, It will reveal the Life God is being right where you are, in all of Its "pre-existing" Integrity--an Integrity you will never have to be responsible for, an Integrity you never have had to be responsible for. But It's an Integrity that has remained hidden from you because you thought you had to create your integrity--schooling, certain grades, certain educational institutions, some giving you a better identity than others, and so on.

QUESTION: Absolutely.

[Break taken.]

RAJ: I just want to say to the last questioner: You wanted a definition of Integrity so that you could act like you had it. [Group laughter]

QUESTION: You're right.

ANSWER: And the fact is that you reek of It. All of you do. And you'll begin to really feel It when you really begin not to give a damn what anyone else thinks about you.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: That will not give you the freedom to act without It, but that is it in a nutshell.

QUESTION: It's good to be with you again. Along the same line, for the past six months . . .

ANSWER: I want you to be with me at least once between now and the next get-together.

QUESTION: Yes. Thank you.

ANSWER: . . . at home. Just you and me. At least once.

QUESTION: Okay. I will welcome that.

ANSWER: But you will need to welcome me in order to welcome the experience. I am saying, "Let me in, on purpose. Welcome me. Invite me."

QUESTION: I am feeling as though I've been doing that in my morning studies. Have you not heard me? [Group laughter] I don't mean that facetiously or disrespectfully. [More laughter]

ANSWER: I want to have a conversation with you.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: I don't want you to just have the pleasant experience of feeling my presence. I want more.

QUESTION: So do I.

ANSWER: Good. Continue.

QUESTION: For the past six months or so, I have had specific guidance that it was time for me to dissociate from things of "specialness," things that created the image of specialness about myself to myself and others. As part of that process, I have been in a fervent activity of review and release.

ANSWER: That ought to keep you in the picture for a little longer.

QUESTION: And I'm aware that that activity has been "outer." I guess I'm wondering if I need a correction in my path in this process right now to get at a deeper level of this. It's feeling very good, what I'm doing. And I'm doing it with . . .

ANSWER: It is sort of like a coffee purge, isn't it?

QUESTION: It's quite wonderful, really. And I'm feeling a lot of release. And, of course, the temptation, then, is to feel special about how well I've done this.

BNSWER: Indeed!

QUESTION: So, I think if you could talk some about specialness, and . .

ANSWER: Well, let me put it this way . . . I've said it before: The one thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard. So, I encourage you to give yourself a little less attention. But how do you do that? It's easy. You ask for someone else's point of view. You ask the Father. You ask me. You ask your Guide.

The best way to purge you of you, the specialness of you, is to have something to do other than give it your attention. Neglect it . . . because, I promise you, the ego has, like the cleaning establishment that has all of the blouses on the conveyor belt, an endless string of skeletons that it will bring forth and say, "Here's the next one in your closet to clean out." But it's got an infinitely endless chain of skeletons. You will get to purge yourself forever, until you finally realize that you've been hornswoggled into a "spiritually progressive" process that is nonsense.

Now, that's the simple wonderful answer. Don't go through your day without reminding yourself that you're not alone by inviting a response from the Father or from your Guidance. It's when you're all alone that you are especially special, you see, because you are distinct from everything else. So, even if you do nothing more than say "hello" to your Guidance once every fifteen minutes, stop long enough to hear your Guidance greet you back, and then go on about your business, that will purge you more of your self than any of the practices you have been doing. Because at least once every fifteen minutes you will not be claiming distinctness from everything else. You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: So, it's not hard work . . . which is why most people don't take this route, because, "No hard work, no specialness," nothing to be proud of.

You know, there's no way for Paul to be proud of what's happening right now, because he knows he's not responsible for it. He knows he's not responsible for it! He's not different from it, or separate from it. He's obviously fully involved. But he's not responsible for it. You see?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Incompetency is bliss. Personal incompetency is bliss, but it doesn't make anyone meaningless. It's just that the meaningfulness can't be taken credit for from a private separate standpoint.

I said to one of my disciples, "Why callest thou me good?" I knew I wasn't responsible for the goodness that he saw. And I was trying to point out to him that he had his attention in the wrong place to call me "good." But, at the same time, I am Good embodied, because I am not maintaining a distinct place in the allness of God. You see? I'm not holding myself separate in any way.

You glorify God by letting God be all there is there, right where you are. That amounts to neglecting the ego. And that's the one thing the ego cannot defend itself against. And when it cannot defend itself against it, it dissolves. It disappears. You come back into your Sanity. You rediscover the Christ that you are. So . . .

There used to be an old radio soap opera called, "Just Plain Bill." You, Awake, are "Just Plain You." Nothing special. Except "Just Plain You" is the Christ . . . and that ain't special! It ain't special, but it is utterly Meaningful. Its Meaningfulness consumes everything! And yet it isn't special.

Your process of purging is your ego's best way to keep itself alive--everybody's.

QUESTION: Thank you very much. May I have . . . I just have a short specific related to this, and that is: Was my loss of the photo album in any way connected with this specialness idea?

ANSWER: Yes, it was. And when that form of specialness is meaningless to you, you will rediscover the album.

QUESTION: Hallelujah! Thank you.

PAUL: You don't have your hand up, but he's picking on you.

QUESTION: Me?

PAUL: Uh-huh. I don't know why.

QUESTION: . . .

PAUL: He says he doesn't want you to make up a question. He wants you to ask the question you have.

QUESTION: It seems all my questions have been answered. I guess not.

RAJ: Like someone said the other day, "If you knew what the question was, what would it be?"

QUESTION: My question is about resurrection. My question is about what was happening this morning when I was listening to a tape, and this cry, this moan, this cry that comes when this point is reached about a part of me that needs to die. And it's a part that I'm resisting because I know in this cry that this is ongoing. It keeps coming to this point, and then there's this cry, and then I retreat. And it's a place where there are no words, there is only feeling. And I would like to know, how can part of me die?

ANSWER: You are--and everyone else is, too--almost totally unaware of the capacity to feel that you have. This moan is you, coming in touch with the depth of your capacity to feel. It presents itself as though it's grief. But it's your capacity to love, beginning to touch the surface of your awareness so that it registers with you. Neither you nor anyone else wants to feel grief, and so you stuff it. You run away from the feeling. You are afraid you will be consumed by it. You are afraid you will be governed by it. And you are also afraid that there is so much grief that you will never get beyond feeling it. When you run away from it, you stuff your capacity to feel.

The word "Soul" is often confused with the meaning of the word "Spirit." Soul is your capacity to feel Truth. Soul is your capacity to feel Love. Soul is your capacity to feel Life, to feel It. Soul is like a sensing organ, if I may put it that way, as opposed to your Individuality. Okay? Your conditioned thinking, the ego frame of reference, would have you keep your Soul buried out of sight. That is why the intellect is so highly prized by the ego.

The only thing that can die about you is that which never was you, but which you believed was you. This moan is the aliveness of You. It is your Soul. It is your capacity to feel the meaning of Life emerging into your awareness. I will be even more precise: It is the experience of you regaining your Soul, if I may put it that way. Because of that, I encourage you to endure the moan as long as you can.

I say "endure" because that's what it feels like it calls for--enduring something you would rather avoid. Abide with it. Let it come forward a little more each time. It will not forever feel like grief if you let it come forth, even though it feels like it will take a century to feel the depth of the grief, the fullness of the meaning of the moan. It will only last five or ten minutes, and you will find it changing into the experience of Love that it really was all along. And you will come alive to yourself more fully. You see?

As I said, Paul still opts for a few milliseconds . . . actually more than a few milliseconds . . . of his day to do what he wants, because it gives him a sense of personal identity to do some things "on his own." You see? But when he does that, he runs away from the fullness of Who he is, which he will come into the direct conscious experience of when he lets go of the option to run away from the experience.

It seems to him that he might as well say good-bye to Susan, and good-bye to everyone else, because who Paul thinks Paul is will be gone, and everyone's just going to be left with Raj. And he hopes they're happy! (Said sarcastically.)

It feels as though letting go of the last little bit of the "right" to do something on his own constitutes Paul dying, in exactly the same way that you experience this question about a part of you dying--which this moan seems to create a fuller experience of for you. But if Paul will abandon himself to an uninterrupted experience of being unself-conscious, free of fear, and every good thing, he will find that he hasn't disappeared, that everyone will still have him, but who he is and what he is will have been fully illuminated by virtue of his being willing to abandon himself to "the end of existence." His capacity to function as the Christ will become fully realized.

It's the same with you. The language of the process is different, but the process is the same. Embrace the moan. Don't run away from it until you absolutely have to. Each time, hang in with it a little bit longer.

Crucifixion feels like a loss. But it's the loss of that which blocks you from experiencing your Soul. That's the best way it can be said for everyone. It's the loss of that which blocks you from the experience of your Soul--your capacity to feel the Truth about everything! You see?

Here, in very practical terms, you find yourself at the point of putting your life on the line. It's a point of becoming serious about this, and not having the option of running away. Paul is listening to me say this, and he is relating it to himself, and he is realizing, by virtue of being present with me, how easy it is to do what I'm saying, because he's looking at it with me. He's not so sure how easy it is [from his own "private" standpoint], even though it's obvious to him at the moment that it is easy. But he's not going to do it yet.

I share that with you so that you might understand that yielding to it without reservation, and not having the option of running away from it, really isn't difficult. Be too lazy to run away. That's how easy it is. But the main thing you need to know is that the moan is really your divine capacity to feel Truth. Don't be afraid of it.

Don't anyone be afraid of whatever the equivalent of "the moan" is in your experience, because it's where you stand at the threshold of putting your life on the line. And until you put it completely on the line, it's not available to be completely transformed! Do you get it?

You see, it's wonderful! Smile! [Group chuckles.] Lighten up! This is not a heavy subject!

"Humpty Dumpty . . ." Let's say it together:

[Everyone]

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall.
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the king's horses and all the king's men,
Couldn't put Humpty together again.
Hurray!

Easter Story! [Group laughter.]
I love you all. Get the point!

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

QUESTION: Hi. How are you today?

ANSWER: Excellent.

QUESTION: Good. I made the decision that either I wanted to be well or dead. Is that a legitimate wish?

ANSWER: It all depends on which of the choices you are favoring.

QUESTION: I don't care. Just don't want to stay in this position. I'd rather be better, for sure. But not stuck. Stuck in one position.

ANSWER: I understand. Choosing for Life, choosing for healing is what will allow for healing. Choosing for death will not actually kill you although you might succeed in appearing to die as far as everyone here is concerned. But making that choice will not automatically heal you. And whatever you need to learn here to experience healing, you will need to learn there. So, the choice for death will not give you a leg up.

It is good to have your dander up, and with your dander up, choose for life, and choose for healing. And I'm telling you that it's not an unreasonable thing to expect. I don't care who says otherwise. At the bottom line, you're the one who is going to say the word. You're going to check with the doctors, or with your friends or ... or even your enemies. And you're going to listen to what they say, and then you're going to make a decision. None of them are going to make the decision for you.

Your decision will absolutely govern what they think won't mean a tinker's dam. The validity or the weight you give to what they say is the weight you give to it. And your choice will govern.

”Well, how do I know? They've got more experience. Hell some of them don't even want me around anyway. I'm nothin' but a pain in the ass to everyone.”

You're saying that! Not them. They can say it, but it will have no effect whatsoever on you. What you say, will, does, and is having its effect at this very moment. And that's the only thing that's having any effect.

Now, the key here is that when you with your dander up, choose for Life and healing, the healing is not going to be up to you. You are not going to have to make the healing happen by your choice and by the strength of your choice and by the force of having your dander up.

This may not sound reasonable to you but ... and this is important for everyone because it's the underlying fact of every moment of your life. It's the underlying healing transformational fact underlying your lives. You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself there-from. In other words, your starting and ending point is that you are at this very moment exactly what God expressed of Himself that looks like you. I'm not talking about the way you appear to be. I'm talking about the divine One that you are; and God did not create you with any imperfections.

Any imperfections, any dramas or traumas that you are experiencing in your lives are a result of having forgotten that you are and never can stop being exactly what God expressed Himself as that's called you ...which was flawlessly perfect. You forget that, and in having forgotten it, you believe your ignorance, and you argue against your experience of healing whether it's of a physical condition , whether it's a mental condition, whether it's a relationship, whatever. So because you can't stop being or alter in any way what God has expressed Himself as, then at this very moment you are not advancing towards perfection. You're not behind it. You're at that point, and you must understand or conceive of yourself in that way. You see what I'm saying?

You must say, “In spite of what's going on, in spite of my immobility, in spite of all of this, this cannot be what God created. Therefore, at this very moment, this is not what God is creating, and so, I am going to stop using my physicians' opinions, my own opinions, I'm not going to validate what my eyes say. I'm going to start in my mind with this clear point. I—at this very moment—am exactly what God is perfectly expressing of Himself.”

”Whatever I thought the future ultimate of me was is the fact right now, because there's nothing that can alter what God is being,” right there where you are, right here here where I am. Now whether your rational mind thinks that's reasonable or not is absolutely irrelevant because your rational mind is not what is in charge.

If you will acknowledge this about yourself: that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. But you're there. While you're considering that, you will not be arguing against it by saying, "The doctors say this, I see this, I see what this condition is causing in other peoples' lives." And on and on. And what can happen?

In the absence of your arguing against your healing by confirming that you have an irrevocable problem, God has a chance to illuminate His perfection right where you are. In the absence of your commitment to your problem, because you're acknowledging something beyond it—you're acknowledging your God-derived presence - there's no longer present anything to distort, in your awareness, your apprehension of what God is being right there. And God can reveal Himself because you're not in the way, arguing against what He's being by claiming that something else is true ... and that you're stuck with it.

Perhaps that no-one else has ever recovered from it. Well they're waiting. Those who haven't recovered are waiting for you so that they can say, "Well, he recovered from it. So can I." And they stop arguing against their commitment to their entrapment. You see?

So, I dare you to be unreasonable in the sense that you make a claim about yourself that isn't based upon physical facts and physical interpretations of everyone who's ignorant of the divine one that you are . You need more of Me around you, confirming to you a different point of view. And everyone else needs more than Me, they need You. And everyone needs all of you experiencing healing because you stop arguing in favor of your problems. And in the absence of arguing in favor of the way things are, in the silence of your own voice claiming your imprisonment, there's space for God to illuminate your health, your healed relationship, your ... sprained ankle your ... whatever it might be.

You can - with your dander up—make commitment to Life and to the prospect we'll say of healing, but that doesn't mean that you will then become personally responsible for healing yourself so that its all up to you with your ... the power of your mind. Make that commitment.

And then you know what? And I've said this before: You know what true prayer is? It isn't asking for something. It's saying "Yes!" to God.

Thy will be done. That's prayer. Yes, yes, I am willing. I am willing to experience myself the way You are seeing me and being me. You see? Make the commitment to Life, and then say "Yes." to God — and do it and do it and do it and do it. Because the only thing that has created your problems is that, for one ignorant reason or another, you've said 'no' to God.

You may not have realized it, but one of the ways all of you say no to God is—you say: "I'm just a human being, I came from a sperm and an egg. I'm a physical entity. I'm made of stuff that can be injured. And if it's injured seriously enough, I can die because I'm just a physical being and the physical part of me has nothing to do with God." You can conceive that your soul may be divine. But when you say: "All I am is a body, And all I can expect is an increase of vigor and vitality and life that reaches a peak and then begins to fade."

When you say this, whether you're on the upside of the hill or the downside of the hill, you're denying God. You're not saying yes to God because you're eternal. You're not going to be eternal. If you're ever going to be eternal, you're eternal at this moment. You're at the point of perfection, not advancing towards it But you've got to embrace yourself in that context in your mind.

And you've got to stop making excuses for the hip that doesn't work as good as it did or the joints that just aren't what they used to be. Or the stamina that the kids have but, you know, that's beyond you now. These are all the ways you say no. And you say no and argue yourself right into the very thing that you're claiming that is the truth about you as a body, you know—that you will hit a peak and you decline and what can you do? - but thank God your soul lives on.

I'm here to tell you and I've been saying it, and I'll continue to say it because you need to hear it. The infinite manifestation of God is not nebulous and intangible and non-experienceable. The infinite manifestation of God is not some etheric, boundaryless, undefinable Presence of Love—like ... endless pink fog, The infinite manifestation of God is very specific and very experienceable and it's all of this— water, paper, cloth, skin;

What I'm really saying is that what you experience as paper and cloth and skin is energy—and it's the energy of Spirit, and God is Spirit — right now!

And if you could see you as i can see you, you are all ageless. You might call it, if you want to judge by appearances, you might say that you are at the height of. I'm going to say, physical perfection, and beautiful, absolutely beautiful, in countenance as well as in the substance of your countenance. I'm telling you that although you can look at each other and Paul is looking at you with me now, but seeing through his eyes and you all appear to be different, short, tall, skinny, fat—happy with your looks, unhappy with your looks.

There is an evenness of appearance. Everyone of you,—absolutely individualized—but beautiful—right here in this room—and I'm talking about you, too.

The question is: How do you let in? How do you let in the experience of something that is happening right now because you're not behind the point of perfection or advancing toward it, You're at that point. How do you let that in? Two things: you stop arguing in opposition to it, with all your judgments and reasons; and you stop believing them—all of your reasons and judgments; and the other thing is—you say "Yes." to God.

You can't let in a new experience if you're not saying yes. So why will you experience healing? Why will any of you experience unending improvement well say, until it's a constant experience of bliss. Why? because that's actually what's going on every moment.

You're not struggling up toward and gaining something that isn't yours. You're letting in something that has been from the beginning and was never altered.

Now you may argue with me, but you're much better today than a year ago when I saw you.

QUESTION: You're right,

ANSWER: And you're still kicking against the pricks.

QUESTION: And I've got a lot more to go yet.

ANSWER: Well ...

QUESTION: I want to be up walking.

ANSWER: You have your nose pointed in the right direction. And what I encourage you to do is that at the same time that you recognize there's more improvement needed, that you acknowledge that the improvement that's needed is available to you.

QUESTION: It is.

ANSWER: It is. It's available to you because it's sitting there fully capable of standing up and walking at this very moment, because I can see it. If I wasn't so damn scared, I probably could stand. And stay up.

ANSWER: Yes. All of you say, "I don't want to have my problems." but all of you who are still experiencing the problems are scared to death to be without them. Why? because you're going to have to change; You're going to have to be, without the problem. And your problems are habits and you know how to be with your habits. You don't know how to be free -because your habits give you a sense of security.

You say I don't want to be with my mate, with my mate being withdrawn and incommunicative. [sic?] I don't want to have an empty relationship. I didn't ask for this. But, if you want something else, you're going to have to be with that person in a new way. You might actually get dragged out of your comfortable habits of propriety and reserve. You might have to kick up your heels and make a fool of yourself, having fun.

The freedom of the fullness of a relationship, the freedom of the fullness of being able to move and do whatever you want—climb a mountain, chin yourself 56 times. The freedom to do that will mean ... you know what it'll mean? A hell of a lot more responsibility than you have to bear right now.

Oh, but I ... I want to be responsible. Yes and no. And you know what I mean.

You're neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, and you must conceive of yourself in that context. Every single one of you. Even the ones of you who think you're just fine.

You can look at him, or at someone you know who has a problem and say, "Yes, I see that. Plain as the nose on my face. Yes, but, uh, gee whiz, my life's going pretty well. I'm not caught in any habits. I'm not trapped."

Well I'm here to tell you that there's a freedom available to you that you haven't begun to tap into. So don't be so sure of yourself that the opportunity doesn't stare you in the face, for bliss, for happiness, for joy, that you don't have to account for.

for freedom that you don't have to be able to claim responsibility for because it's your birthright. For health, joy, happiness, freedom, that's yours. I'm going to say, just because.

How can it be yours 'just because'? Because God is Love, and in His expression of Himself/Herself, He/She has withheld nothing of what He is, from what He's expressing. And so, just because—just because God is Love—you at this very moment, each one of you, are the absolutely perfect, flawless expression of God. And the only thing standing between you and your experience of that is the word you're giving. the decision you're making. And you only have two choices. This is all ultimately simple. The two choices are to say "yes" to God or to say 'no' to God.

Now when you say 'no' to God, it does absolutely nothing to Who you really are, or God. But it creates a hell of an experience for you. And then you wrap this hell of an experience around you, and you use it as a means of getting a means of self worth.

'I ... Damn it! I'm going to overcome this. I am going ... this thing is not going to get me down!' What thing? The fact that you said 'no' to God?

'No! That's not what I'm talking about. I'm talking about this thing, you know, the Problem: my quiet husband, my talkity-talkity wife, my body, my boss, my dog.'

No, that's not the problem. The problem is that you've said 'no!'

You see? And you've used the result of the 'no', which is tension, distress, and you've said, "Wow! I've got something to rise above and when I do it, wow! you know, I will have said to the devil.'no'. No! Cause there ain't no devil. There's just you saying "Yes" or 'no'.

Saying "Yes." is not assertive is it? It is not an expression of personal power because you're saying "Yes." to something else. Saying "yes" is yielding to something else. 'No!' is what is an assertive self statement of power and supposed force. You see? Resistance is what the ego does. Yielding to and saying "Yes." is what you in your divine right do. It's the nature of being.

The true nature of being is one of constantly yielding to what God is Being, forever new. You see you want things to change, but you're afraid to change yourself.

Because God is Love, whatever degree to which you say "Yes.", you will be met with agreement. You will be met with acknowledgment. You will not be met with a judgment that says, "You've got to say 'yes' better." You see?

So you don't have to scare yourself with the prospect of change. You can say "yes" and let change in slowly. But please understand that more is available to you and no-one is withholding it from you, just because you're chicken. And don't want too much of your good, too fast.

What I've shared with you is not too simple. The ultimate answers are always utterly simple. And even though your thinking mind says, 'there's got to be more to it than that!' there's nothing more to it than that.

It is good to see you. It is good to see you with you having said "yes" more than the last time I saw you.

And it is good to see you in the absolute perfection of your being that I can see you in. And it's not my sight that makes you look better than you are.. It's the fact that I'm saying Yes to God that allows me to see what God is being, right there, right now in its utter perfection, cause It's there right now.

And you might be inclined to say after the next two or three weeks, Well, I've done what He said, I've done what I said. I've said yes, yes, yes, yes, yes God, yes God, yes God .and, uh, there's been a little improvement but not as much as all the yesses I've said should've brought!" [laughter] Habits die hard. Habits never have you, but you hold on to habits, all of you hold on to your habits. And so, if there isn't more progress, it's because you're holding on more than you need to, so you persist, not because God is answering you slow, but because letting go of an old habit and being in a new way is something you will do, something you will give permission for on your own terms, and in your own time. And if you're doing it slowly, persist anyway. But be aware that it's not because your healing is being withheld from you, but because this is as fast as you can go in the face of your fear of what your good is going to require of you. And then, knowing that, you will know why it's worth it to persist. You won't be deluded.

You'll say, "I know God isn't withholding it. I know I'm embracing [sounds like I missed something here?] more any faster than I'm embracing it, but because I'm the one withholding it from myself, I'm also the one who can keep his dander up enough to persist in letting go of a little bit more of my habit."

QUESTION: Can it be that I got the problem because I needed to learn something new and better and I wouldn't get it any other way?

ANSWER: We need to be very careful about this. It is never a matter of God or the divine wisdom setting out a path for you, for your own good, to help you learn what you need to learn. Rather, it is that you might say as you began to say no to God and you began to go down an independent path based upon things you chose to believe, that you created a path, as it were, and when the time comes that something in you decides to return home, you can't come home on someone else's path. You have to come home on the path you left your perfection from.

And so each step back home uncovers and nullifies by proving its nothingness, whatever the beliefs were that you took hold of on the way away from home. And so [it?] gets undone, and so it's always specific to you because it's specifically undoing a mistake that you did on the way out. Do you see what I'm saying? So this is perfect for you because it will uncover to you the misinterpretation or the misunderstanding that you embodied on the way out.

And so you will be able to say "Yes, this had great value for me. If I had been sick like Aunt Clara with whatever she had, it wouldn't have done it for me. Heck, I could've handled that, because that's not one of the misunderstandings you embraced and embodied on the way out. You see? And so it will always be perfect, and everything you're met with will be right on the nose for you because it's your mistake that's being undone and released as you come home. You see? So it will be perfect for you. But not because God set up the situation for you because He knew this would help you best even though it hurts. You see?"

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I'm always so happy to see you here

QUESTION: I sometimes am and sometimes not. But I am really good right now. I think it's wonderful.

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: I hope you stay here. [Paul, on the cd it sounds like he is saying "I hope you stay here on earth." That wasn't clear on the tape. Is it correct?] That's all I wanted to say. Thank you again for much for what you said. Wonderful people here and you gave me too much time, but that's all right with me.

ANSWER: [Laughter] You are welcome. I do want to add to what I was saying to you - that although I said that habits don't die easily, that doesn't mean that should not always include the possibility of instantaneous healing.

QUESTION: I want that!

ANSWER: Then you must allow for it. You must let it happen. You cannot demand that it happens. You cannot, so to speak, put in your orders to God. Quick healing please! Because you're the one letting it in. You know what? You all think that your mind sets are real solid. You all think that what you believe is real firm, but it isn't true. And that's why an instantaneous healing can occur.

The only reason you ever seem to be stuck in a situation is because you can't justify not being in it. That's very important. The only reason you ever feel stuck in a position is because you can't justify not being in it. And the moment you can justify it, you'll let go of the reasons for holding on to it. Your beliefs are fabulous. And what I mean by that is that they don't have much substance. Fabulous and fable go together. Fabulous means 'of an illusory nature'.

All of your beliefs are fabulous. They don't have the substance that you think they do. And the only thing that seems to give them substance is the force you bring to holding on to them, and the moment that you can justify not holding on to them, at that moment, they'll be gone and you will have instantaneous healing or instantaneous resolution of whatever was going on. You started out by saying, "I either want to be healed or I want to be dead." Well I didn't believe you for a minute.

You will find, all of you, if you will pay attention to yourselves and others, that when a person make a declaration that seems to be negative, they are really saying, "Give me a reason not to believe this way."

What happens though, is that when you hear somebody come on to you in a very declarative way and a very negative way, you feel a need for self-protection and defence. You feel challenged because they seem to be saying, "This is the way it is, and this is the way you've got to see it too. But the fact is that whenever any of you come out with declarative statements like that, you're really hoping that the person you're saying it too, will be able, in a few words, to declare that the way you're seeing it isn't valid, and that there's another way to see it. But if you become defensive, you've missed the point and the opportunity.

A Course in Miracles says that everything is either a call for Love or Love. Love is obvious to everyone. A call for Love looks like hate. It looks like negativity. It looks like jealousy. It doesn't look like love. And so when you're confronted with somebody who's in a state, and they're aggressively negative or they're aggressively declaring something that you wouldn't want to believe, and it looks like hate — either mild hate or severe hate being expressed - if you're not careful, you'll miss that instead of it being an attack for you to cope with, it's a call for Love. Which means a call for a perspective that could release them from whatever they are so boldly declaring. You see?

The Christ of You, if you're willing to be in touch with it, is able to respond to the behavior as a call for Love, and respond with Love that proves that whatever was said doesn't have to be committed to any further by that individual, whether that individual recognizes it at that moment or not, the Christ of You can respond with clarity and Love that heals. You see?

I am not suggesting that you are obnoxious here, but obnoxious people are people asking for release. They're asking for somebody not to react to their obnoxiousness, but to be the Presence of Love that releases them from the discomfort of their state of being that they're currently experiencing.

And you know, sometimes its as simple as Paul's relationship with his son. There was a point at which when his son was being obnoxious, that Paul realized that what was needed was a hug. It was like, "Oh, you need a hug." And he gave him a hug and that was the end of it. Whereas before that Paul was trying to be appropriate —fatherly appropriateness you know. And all that was needed was a hug. Sometimes it's that simple. That's a simple expression of the meaning behind the expression, "Looking in your brother's eyes and remembering God. You see? Okay.

There seems to be a small gap here? When I get the tapes, I'll fill it in. the beginning of the piñata lady from Port Townsend.

EXTRA LINES REMOVED FROM HERE TO THE END

You know, there are only two voices you can hear: the Voice for Truth and the voice for illusion, the voice for the ego. Is the Voice for Truth, is the Holy Spirit going to whisper in your ear things that cause self-doubt and suggest to you that you should withhold your gift?

Well, then, don't, under any circumstances, validate the whispers in your mental ear that undermine your ability to appreciate yourself; because, you know what, and I don't mean this - I mean this in the most practical sense, not in an absolute sense. You know what, no matter how clear you are, there's always someone who's going to be less clear than you, who can appreciate and benefit by whatever degree of clarity you have to share that's greater than theirs.

What I'm trying to say, rather than setting up an hierarchy of superior and inferior, is the fact that there's no point in any of your lives where you're not valuable to someone..

And you may have people around you, or an ego of your own, that want to say 'You're not good enough. You're not good enough to open up your mouth and say anything meaningful to anybody.' That's a lie. There's someone who may only be a foot behind you, but they don't see how to traverse that foot, and you do. And your ability to share with them how to traverse that foot makes all the difference in their life.

Every single one of you at every single moment is in a position that is meaningful and helpful to someone else. Find that someone else and make the gift.

Now Paul's voice has been sweet and gentle, but I am really meaning to be very firm with you on this point. Find someone else and make the gift. And pay attention to which voice you're inviting into your mind.

ANSWER: There's a little bit of manipulation and control there. For righteous reasons. Well, there's no love in righteousness. There's no love in right-eous-ness. So I hope to hear you say that you are really enjoying Port Townsend.

QUESTION: There are aspects of it that I do enjoy -

ANSWER: But I said really enjoying! You know, what you appreciate, appreciates, like money in a savings account appreciates. What you appreciate grows. When you're engaged in appreciation and gratitude, the things to be appreciative and grateful for increase. And many times the increase does include the things you didn't find yourself able to be grateful for and called a problem in the beginning.

Go on a diet of gratitude, and cut out the constipating practice of stifling yourself and withholding the gift because ... dot, dot, dot. Okay.

A lot more fun is right there all around you. You just gotta stop lookin' at the hole and start looking at the doughnut. Okay.

QUESTION: Raj. About 8 years ago I talked with you and I'd asked you why I was here at this time, and in this body, and in this situation and you told me that a great deal of preparation and thought had gone into this incarnation and that the purpose is yet to be unfolded and at that time it was not appropriate because I would become so focused on ta-da I'm going to be doing such and such and unfocused on what I needed to be studying that it would be a while before it would be revealed to me. Well eight years is kind of a while. I'd like to check in again.

ANSWER: I still cannot share with you the purpose itself, but what I can share with you is that by your very being, which you are being, without thought. In other words, you are just being it, without having reasoned out why you're being it. You are, for lack of better words, holding a tone. The name Christopher means 'Christ-bearer'. Well, that is sort of the meaning of holding the tone. You are, your very presence is holding a tone that stands in support of awakening, and is having a stabilizing effect which is allowing the energy of awakening to increase without being upsetting in the world. You are not the only one. But it's important for you to know that you're not doing nothing until you find out what your purpose is. Okay. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Is there anything I can do to expedite it?

ANSWER: No, and that's why it's not something you are consciously aware of, so that you will not try to expedite it. Evenness is the nature of Being. There is in you a commitment to that. You are not inclined to be uneven, - I will put it that way - so you become a natural supporter of the evenness, and therefore, a carrier of the tone, you might say.

You don't want to mess with it. You don't want to crank the volume up. Just say o.k. to things as they are. There is much appreciation for what you are doing, but not doing on purpose, willfully. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Hello. My question is, I went to Peru to study a very powerful healing system. And at that time, I made a commitment and dedicated myself to that to come to fruition in the States in helping people. And I found a vision - I never really knew you could be so dedicated to something and feel so wonderful about it. But in the interim, professional and personal things became chaotic around it and I feel as though I've lost that. And I'm even wondering how I should ... should I pursue this?

ANSWER: You should pursue it, but not with a vengeance.

QUESTION: To exclude everything else. Is that what you mean?

ANSWER: That is exactly what I mean. And to pursue it not with the force of will, but the energy of allowing. After all, at the bottom line, it's an expression of Love. And there's just no way to force Love on anyone, and there's no way to force Love to do Its work.

You must become the handmaiden of Love. Isn't that what saying Yes to God means? It's saying, Thy will be done. If you will just allow Love, the Love that you have to share to find Its way to those who are able to stand in receipt of it, rather than trying to get it to those who might be ready to stand in receipt of it, you will find the turmoil leveling out. It's that simple.

EXTENDING LOVE VS. SELF DOUBT

QUESTION: What about this self-doubt that has come to bite me on my 'piñata'?

ANSWER: [Laughter] Self-doubt. What that really means is the suggestion that you need to stuff your love. Right? Self-doubt says, 'maybe I shouldn't be doing what I was willing to make commitment to. Maybe my motives were wrong.' Self-doubt always causes you to withdraw your gift. Well, if Paul wishes to feel the Love of God, he has to let the Love of God be extended to someone else, and in the process he gets it. So, you must let the love that you have to give, that you feel there, you must extend it if you are to be blessed by it, as well as another.

QUESTION: And the self-doubt I'm referring to is my own critical self saying, You're not good enough. You know, you forgot to do this part of it. You forgot to ...' You know. That's what I mean ANSWER: Yes. Self-doubt always causes you to arrive at a conclusion that you're not equal to something. And if you're not equal to something, then you'd better not - you'd better not step out and extend. You see?

It says to you, you must stuff it But what that means to you is that you block yourself from experiencing God's love because you have decided not to extend it to another and thereby stand in receipt of it yourself.

You want to know something everybody. You can't really feel God's love until you're willing to pass it on. And the willingness to pass it on has to come first before you're willing to feel it yourself.

God's love is always embracing you. It's the very substance of you, of your being. But when you don't extend it, you're stifling it in you. And you won't feel it. And if you're having a down day, if you are miserable with yourself, find someone to love. "I don't feel like loving any one. I'm miserable! There's no love in me. Well you're right. Find someone to love and make the gift and find that it's in you. You can't have a private relationship with God. You can not have a private relationship with God where you pal around with Him and get all the goodies and your poor sister-in-law, or your bastard husband are losing out - miserable souls that they are. No, you can't have a private relationship to God. If you want to feel His love, you've got to be loving. You've got to extend it. There has to be a willingness to give. And although you can play it safe and find lovable things to love, the greatest gift you can give yourself is to love the unlovable. To find a way to love the unlovable. But either way, you're not going to feel well. You're going to be miserable as long as you don't make the gift.

And as long as you don't make the gift and you have turned into a piñata, then you can count on it that your door will be knocked on and knocked on and huffed and puffed until it blows down. And your gift is made in spite of you. But that's the hard way. And there's no requirement, especially since you know the answer now.

 You know, there are only two voices you can hear: the Voice for Truth and the voice for illusion, the voice for the ego. Is the Voice for Truth, is the Holy Spirit going to whisper in your ear things that cause self-doubt and suggest to you that you should withhold your gift?

Well, then, don't, under any circumstances, validate the whispers in your mental ear that undermine your ability to appreciate yourself; because, you know what, and I don't mean this ... I mean this in the most practical sense, not in an absolute sense. You know what, no matter how clear you are, there's always someone who's going to be less clear than you, who can appreciate and benefit by whatever degree of clarity you have to share that's greater than theirs.

What I'm trying to say, rather than setting up an hierarchy of superior and inferior, is the fact that there's no point in any of your lives where you're not valuable to someone..

And you may have people around you, or an ego of your own, that want to say 'You're not good enough. You're not good enough to open up your mouth and say anything meaningful to anybody.' That's a lie. There's someone who may only be a foot behind you, but they don't see how to traverse that foot, and you do. And your ability to share with them how to traverse that foot makes all the difference in their life.

Every single one of you at every single moment is in a position that is meaningful and helpful to someone else. Find that someone else and make the gift.

Now Paul's voice has been sweet and gentle, but I am really meaning to be very firm with you on this point. Find someone else and make the gift.

And pay attention to which voice you're inviting into your mind. And keep out the rif raf because you're always going to have to clean up after it. Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

GOD'S DEFINITION OF YOU

QUESTION: Okay. Let's see if i can do this without my throat chakra closing. Like the gentleman to my right, I kind of want to update. At one point you told me that it wasn't a vocation or a location i was looking for in my life, but it was the purpose of fulfillment. That purpose of fulfillment appears to me to be staying in touch with Guidance, with clarity and my peace, because I want. Now situations have unfolded in my life where it's obvious to me that i can't choose from my ego point of view because they're too much from that point of view. I become too overwhelmed. And when I reside in my peace, I feel that these situations in my life are - how should I say it - available to me. An understanding. A choice. So I would like guidance. I'd like to understand more clarity. I don't know if you need specifics

ANSWER: But you're being very clear right now.

QUESTION: Yeah. (laughing)

ANSWER: You've pegged it for what it is. You recognize what works and what doesn't work. You're clear. So what is the problem?

QUESTION: One thing is that I compare myself desiring to have some sort of physical purpose or focus ANSWER: I'm sorry. Did you say your Guidance told you to do that?

QUESTION: No, no.

ANSWER: I didn't think so.

QUESTION: No.

ANSWER: I'm just reminding you that your question indicates that you've abandoned what you value so highly in order to have the problem to ask a question about. laughter.

QUESTION: Yeah, that's why i was so nervous about asking a question.

ANSWER: Would you like to go back and dilly-dally with the ego for a while?

QUESTION: No.

ANSWER: Then don't. How many times do you have to get burned before you say no!. I'm not going to do that again. You're going to choose whatever you choose, no matter what I say. But I encourage you to choose to continue to listen for guidance. And if your Guidance doesn't say to compare yourself with anything else, don't do it. And if other people say to you, or compare you to someone else, don't take the bait. Unless you want to lose your clarity and burn yourself again and realize "Oh! I did it again. And I didn't want to do it. Peace always has a partner. And the partner's harmony. What do you want? Harmony or agony? Harmony or distress?

QUESTION: My ego's very upset about there not being some sort of defining Principle and, as I feel consciousness expand, and as I open up to more of myself, I feel ...

ANSWER: I'm going to be very blunt with you. If you find out what your spiritual purpose is, and you declare it, you will have a world who will hold you to it. That says, you're responsible to us to live your purpose.

The minute you can define it, you will succumb to every means of control that everyone else can bring to bear to get you to fulfill it, because they don't want to have to fulfill it for themselves.

It having been such a long time since a Gathering - thirteen months since the last Sunday Gathering - Paul went through, during this past week, some self-doubt and uncertainty. He wondered, 'why does he do this? Why does he work with me? Why do we have Gatherings?' He can't see in everyone who comes to the Gatherings., any well defined benefit. You see what I'm saying? He says to himself, 'I've been listening to you, Raj, for 18 years, and so what.?' What has it gotten him. He doesn't know what the reason is for getting together in a clearly defined intelligent form. You see? However, he is aware that as the years have gone by, and people have begun to have a concept of Who I am, many have begun to feel that Paul is obligated to let Who they think I am fulfill the purpose they think I have for them, and they have become somewhat demanding. To fulfill this concept they have.

Do you see what I'm saying? Definitions will get you into trouble. Paul still does not have a definition. Paul does not know what's going on here today. Paul's fully conscious of what's going on, but he doesn't know what's really going on. But healing's going on. The leaven that leavens the whole lump is leavening the whole lump. But he has no evidence of this. Heaven help him if he ends up being as certain about what he's doing as others are about what they think he's doing and what he ought to be doing, because then he'll become entrapped and will not stay in the fluid Movement of the Father's Love that transforms. Don't you do it either. Don't let a definition come in.

You see, Paul knows that many people who listen to me are students of the Course, but he's also intimately aware of the fact that Course students, Christians, Jews, atheists, Buddhists, are nothing other than my Brothers and I make no distinction whatsoever. And I speak to all and for all. Not on the basis of the definition they define themselves with. Not to promote Buddhism or A Course in Miracles, but because I'm just the Presence of Love. And I'm awake. And I know Who You are. And I need You to know Who You are so that We may be Brothers consciously. Peers, equals. With none of you feeling unequal. You see?

The only way this can happen is as the expression of Love, allowed to move into expression, which is what Paul is doing right now, even if he can't define it. He is doing it. You all are participating. Don't let the need for definition trap you.

QUESTION: Okay. Just one point of clarification. In my thinking which I think is happening/[happened] here, is in all the possible scenarios, the little dramas in my life that are presently occurring, am I to understand that what you're saying applies to those? The situation in Taos, the situation in Portland? The situation with my need to understand career vocation, location, all these things. Are all those grouped in the answer that you've given me?

ANSWER: Absolutely.

QUESTION: Okay. Gotcha.

ANSWER: See. Pay attention to the obvious. Paul cannot tell you what it is we're doing. There isn't any neat little definition that can be applied to it. But what he's doing is being recorded on a video camera and on audio tapes. There's definition, isn't there? There is something happening. He hasn't become a blob that just sits in the middle of his living room floor, and that's all there is to his life. There will be definition to your life. But you don't have to be able to explain to someone else, or to yourself, what it is you're doing. You see, it isn't what Paul is doing that is meaningful to him. It's what he's being. Your answer will come in what you are being, not in what you are doing. And you will take what you are being into everything you are doing, but the doing won't be the point.

If you get sucked into thinking that your doing is the point, and the definition of the doing is meaningful, you will stop being. And when you stop being, your life will lose definition unless you, through your own will, manage to keep a definition alive. And then you're going to end up fulfilling a role that you have in your mind that has nothing to do with who you are and what you are. And that's when you're trapped, and that's when the world will set your schedule and set your responsibilities, And it's a downhill road from there, because, again, what you're doing is stuffing yourself. And you're not making the gift because you're out of touch with your being.

Your life will have definition. It will be describable, but let others do the describing and then don't get caught up in their description.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Paul surfs the web and runs across people who call themselves teachers of God and teachers of A Course in Miracles, and he wonders where he fits in. He doesn't fit into definitions. When you're be-ing from the impulse of God in you, you won't fulfill definitions, but you will be a fulfilling presence. And what you do will tend to be fluid and change, because what fulfills God's purpose always accommodates the need. And someone watching you will say, 'Oh, he wears many different hats.' And you'll say, 'Hat's.' And it won't make sense to you, but it'll make perfect sense to the person who's living still in the realm of definitions. You see? If you're looking for a definition of you, it means you also naturally look for definitions in others. And if you look for a definition, a concept in them, you'll miss the Christ that they are.

Oh let me get out your business.... what's your definition? Here's my definition. You can trade cards. Isn't that funny. [laughter] and you go on your way to trade cards with someone else. And the two of you don't have the slightest idea who the other encountered. What a waste. Because what was really there was the opportunity to look into each other's eyes and remember God and wake up, instead of playing definition games. You see? Oh, well, I'm a student of the Course, or, I'm a devout Catholic. Do you realize that if you give that definition, well, a student of the Course, if he's going to listen for the Voice of God is going to expect to hear the Course.. Well maybe that day God is responding to that individual right where that individual needs to feel love, and says "You know. You need a good cry." 'Where's it say that in the Course? You can't be God! You're telling me to feel emotion?' "You need a good cry. You need to do that which gets you out of your head and into your heart. Go ahead and cry. I'll be with you." 'Well you can't be God because you know nothing about the human condition because of Your Nature. Therefore, you can't be God, you see!'

So the minute you give yourself a definition of any kind, what you've done, what you've done is that you've defined that you are this and you are not that. And it's a trap. I don't mean that it ensnares you. It's just that it's a dead end road that doesn't allow—it doesn't allow for insight or revelation unless it comes in a specific language you're willing to listen in. It also means that you can't enjoy the brotherhood of man unless mankind approaches you in the language of your willingness to listen. You see? Everybody's got to get past this.

This is the part of the freedom. This is the part of the change that comes when there's a willingness to say Yes to God. Territories, boundaries, false definitions that simply serve as a mask to the Christ that you are. These all need to be abandoned.

'Well I can tell who you are by the mask you wear.' No. No-one can tell anything about you on any basis other than their willingness to look at you and be willing to see beyond whatever their current mindsets are, beyond whatever their biases are, whatever their preferences are. Because until their presence is clear of their definitions, there's no room for something new to register with them when they look at you.

Your quest for a definition is one that will never lead you anywhere practical or fulfilling, even though everyone around you can show you their definitions, which they call their credentials and claim that you're nothing because you don't have a definition, or it's not a good enough one.

You're understanding what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Thank you. ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: For years I've been without definition. Lately, I've been giving definition about myself even when I'm not asked by people to do so on the assumption that it's coming from a purpose that I have allowed to arise from within me, but I'd welcome any comments regarding a trap I'm falling into in this regard.

ANSWER: It is temporarily serving a purpose, but you can't afford to take it seriously. And the fact is that you are not. You're having fun with it. I don't mean you're being misleading, but it's more honest not to give a definition. That's the end of the answer. If you want to pursue it further, you're welcome to. that's me , Paul, talking.

QUESTION: No I think that's ... what I hear is that I'm to take it lightly but that, however, does not mean that I cannot speak about what I'm doing in concise ways. to have fun with it.

ANSWER: Paul is perfectly able to describe what happens. He is perfectly able to say that he holds Gatherings in which he sits down and becomes clear, still, in his mind and listens and hears a voice, which he shares. So he can describe what happens, but he can't say that he's a teacher of A Course in Miracles or that he's a teacher of God because he has no concept of what those words would mean. He cannot say how it fits into an overall scheme of things. He can say that he knows that when he does what he does, it's blissful. There's an experience of fearlessness, an experience of groundedness. In other words, there is no experience of vulnerability and that when he just allows what happens to happen that his world reflects back to him that it was meaningful for them, so he can talk about what happens. You see what I'm saying. But he cannot give a definition to it. He can say, "Here is what I am being when this is happening, but I can't tell you what I'm doing in the sense that doing leads from point A to point B to point C to a conclusion that is describable.

He can say that he experiences being on the beam, being on purpose, but he cannot tell you what the purpose is.

QUESTION: I need to be a little more specific, I think. When I talk about my purpose, I talk about political restructuring in the country and I have an idea about how that should occur. And I claim, when I'm speaking about this that we need new models for governing agencies.

ANSWER: But there you are describing what you're doing, but I haven't heard you describe who you are in those words. That's not a definition of you.

QUESTION: On occasion, lightheartedly, I say I'm a revolutionary, but a . . .

ANSWER: And Paul says on occasion when there's not time to go into any detail, that he channels Jesus. Or he channels someone who's totally awake. And yet that's not really the appropriate words to use; those are not really the appropriate words to use.

As I said, don't take it too seriously. And, as I also said, you don't take it too seriously. You You are more than what you're doing. You are not caught in a very limited definition that will determine your success or failure as a being. You are not caught in a trap and this is not what the first question was really aimed at. My answer to him was an answer to a different question where he was looking for a definition that would allow him to feel at peace about himself in the world because he could in so many words, provide credentials. And that's not the reason to be at peace with himself.

And what you're talking about has nothing to do with providing a definition so that you can feel at peace with yourself in the world.

QUESTION: Thank you. I understand now.

ANSWER: Okay.

SEEING THE FACE OF GOD

QUESTION: I'm not sure it's appropriate to ask about somebody else, but I have a brother, and I've been working with him. And I heard about what you said about justices and injustices, And I'm wondering if you see him out of the institute?

ANSWER: There is a lot of stubbornness there that will delay his coming out. But don't you give up on him for a moment. Don't you believe his presentation of himself. But also pay attention to yourself to your limits, so that you don't exhaust yourself in the process of hanging in there with him. He needs someone who doesn't believe what he believes about himself. But you are not to sacrifice yourself in any way in the process of being there for him in that way. Do you understand?

QUESTION: Yes..

ANSWER: It's not up to you. It's up to him He's got his hand on the switch where he says "Yes, I'm going to be stubborn." or "No, I'm going to abandon being stubborn." He's got his hand on the switch. So never think it's up to you. Use your common sense. Honor yourself, and don't override your integrity for him. I'll say this to everyone, "Don't any of you override your integrity for someone else That is not Love.

You will be able to be there for him much longer than if you sacrificed your integrity and tried to be more for him than you have energy for. Or if you try to be more for him than you can be because your hand isn't on that switch. It will be a while before he's out as things stand now.

But, you never know when the clarity and Love that you share with him will be what it takes for him to justify looking at it a different way and releasing his willfulness, his resistance. You see? It's tricky.

At the same time that you know another doesn't have to be caught for a moment longer, because what's binding him is fabulous in the sense that I used that word earlier. At the same time that you know that, you can't afford to want him to see it. Knowing that it's possible for him to have instantaneously healing that would promote his release, doesn't involve willfulness in any way. It doesn't involve assertion in any way. It's like knowing the Truth. You just know that it's true. It's a knowing that abides in you and doesn't require any action to make it true. And the knowing that it's true, and you carrying that knowing with you in your involvement with him, is a non-coercive environment that you bring with you that doesn't cause resistance because there's no coercion on your part. And it makes healing more possible. But the minute that you want him to see it, you've shifted into a willful, assertive, coercive frame of mind. And you will defeat yourself. Because not even you will change for someone else. You understand?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: It's an important thing. Don't want something for somebody else because then you will involuntarily slip into the role of teacher, which really means coercer. I'm telling you that so you don't get caught in it and deplete your energy.

As I said earlier, no matter where you are on your path or in your growth, no matter where you are in your return to home, to being fully enlightened, there's always somebody for whom you can be a meaningful presence. Put that way, you are exposed in a positive light. Now I will reverse it and I don't mean negative, but just 180 degrees. No matter how deeply you're caught in ego dynamics, no matter how badly you're hurting, you and everyone else are always standing at their leading edge. They're standing as far forward in their clarity as they can bring themselves to be at the moment.

So even though your brother may be in circumstances brought on by ignorance of his divinity, he is standing as far forward as he can stand, and therefore, is standing on the threshold of enlightenment, and therefore, you can honor him for where he is even if you cannot honor what he's believing at the moment. And if you honor him for standing as far forward as he is able to stand, he will feel that acknowledgment of his integrity even if relatively speaking, it seems that he's illustrating very little integrity. Do you see what I'm saying.

So there's no need to judge him for being in an ignorant place. Every single one of you are standing in some level of ignorance at the moment, because you're not totally awake. That is not a judgment. I recognize that, and I respond to each of you at your threshold of discovery, and I invite you to come a little bit more forward.

I honor you where you are, and I invite you to come a little bit forward of that point. Not enough to overwhelm you. I inspire you to feel like you can dare to move forward a little. And because you experience no judgment from me, you feel no need to project yourself against my wanting you to be something you can't be yet. Even though I've told you from the outset to~day that you're neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, but you're already there. Do you see what I'm saying.

When someone feels that you recognize their integrity, even though, relatively speaking, by some measuring sticks, they seem to have very little, they feel loved. And when someone feels loved, it's easier for them to feel safe. And when they feel safe, and when they feel safe, there's more courage to step forward a little bit. You see?

It's almost time to end. And I want to say something that embellishes on what we've been talking about, but especially for everyone. There are those who call themselves teachers, spiritual teachers. And some of them speak of highly complex processes of awakening, and complex rituals or behaviors that must be practiced obediently. And others who say that awakening comes through a greater intellectual understanding of Truth. And other who manage to talk a sort of spiritual double-talk that causes you to feel that something has been said, that you almost understand, but not quite, and so you feel thrilled by the supposed disclosure of something just beyond your grasp. And there are others who say you must turn your back on the world, it's all an illusion. It has nothing to do with God.

And what I want to say most clearly is that the only teacher you need is right in the middle of You. And it's not you, it's God. Because God is all there is of you; and God's Presence is your constituting Presence. And ... the way Home, the path, if you will, is not through the intellect; it's not through understanding. It's not through practices or rituals. It lies only in, as I've said to Paul, keeping your feet on the ground and your head not too far away.

And how is it embodied, or how can it be described? It can be described in moments of caring for whoever it is that's next to you, no matter what his leading edge is. Whether it seems to be one of profound ignorance or great enlightenment.

Recognizing that one's essential value because you know that he's neither behind the point of perfection, nor moving towards it, but is at that point. And therefore, not wanting anything for him that would cause you to try to coerce him into being better and abiding with that one, in that moment, with appreciation, rather than judgment or criticism or anything else.

How does divine Love register in the world? By the meeting of the human need. Not by rising above the human need. Not by calling the human need an illusion. Not by saying offhandedly, "Well, it isn't true." As I said, in the Presence of Love, another feels no need for defense, feels safe. And in that safe environment is able, for his own reasons, to step a little bit forward, further past his threshold, current threshold of his awakening.

Any time, any place, where you can bring Love into the picture, you are engaging in the essence of that which will promote awakening. And in effect, this is all we've talked about today. But remember, no matter what anyone says, your awakening is going to be experienced as human needs met. Not human needs discounted nor talked away, but human needs met.

Standing up without a wheelchair; climbing a mountain; being the helper instead of the helpee. Being the husband or the wife or the partner whose presence illuminates and makes bright everything that happens in the relationship. Human needs met. Which means you've got to be willing to look into your brother's eyes instead of into a far off into God know what. You see? Keep your feet on the ground, and your attention not too far away. And your attention will be where God is appearing and can be recognized. I love you all.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –08/08/1999

By: Raj Christ Jesus

QUESTION: Hi. How are you today?

ANSWER: Excellent.

QUESTION: Good. I made the decision that either I wanted to be well or dead. Is that a legitimate wish?

ANSWER: It all depends on which of the choices you are favoring.

QUESTION: I don't care. Just don't want to stay in this position. I'd rather be better, for sure. But not stuck. Stuck in one position.

ANSWER: I understand. Choosing for Life, choosing for healing is what will allow for healing. Choosing for death will not actually kill you although you might succeed in appearing to die as far as everyone here is concerned. But making that choice will not automatically heal you and whatever you need to learn here to experience healing, you will need to learn there. So, the choice for death will not give you a leg up.

It is good to have your dander up, and with your dander up, choose for life, & choose for healing. And I'm telling you that it's not an unreasonable thing to expect. I don't care who says otherwise. At the bottom line, you're the one who is going to say the word. You're going to check with the doctors, or with your friends or ... or even your enemies. And you're going to listen to what they say, and then you're going to make a decision. None of them are going to make the decision for you.

Your decision will absolutely govern. What they think won't mean a tinker's dam. The validity or the weight you give to what they say is the weight you give to it. And your choice will govern.

Well, how do I know? They've got more experience. Hell some of them don't even want me around anyway. I'm nothin' but a pain in the ass to everyone. You're saying saying that! not them. They can say it, but it will have no effect whatsoever on you. What you say, will, does, and is having its effect at this very moment. And that's the only thing that's having any effect.

Now, the key here is that when you with your dander up, choose for Life and healing, the healing is not going to be up to you. You are not going to have to make the healing happen by your choice and by the strength of your choice and by the force of having your dander up.

This may not sound reasonable to you but ... and this is important .for everyone because it's the underlying fact of every moment of your life. It's the underlying healing transformational fact underlying your lives. You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom. In other words, your starting and ending point is that you are at this very moment exactly what God expressed of Himself that looks like you. I'm not talking about the way you appear to be. I'm talking about the divine One that you are; and God did not create you with any imperfections.

Any imperfections, any dramas or traumas that you are experiencing in your lives are a result of having forgotten that you are and never can stop being exactly what God expressed Himself as that's called you ...which was flawlessly perfect. You forget that, and in having forgotten it, you believe your ignorance, and you argue against your experience of healing whether it's of a physical condition , whether it's a mental condition, whether it's a relationship, whatever. So because you can't stop being or alter in any way what God has expressed Himself as, then at this very moment you are not advancing towards perfection. You're not behind it. You're at that point, and you must understand or conceive of yourself in that way. You see what I'm saying?

You must say in spite of what's going on, in spite of my immobility, in spite of all of this, this cannot be what God created. Therefore, at this very moment, this is not what God is creating.& so, i am going to stop using my physicians' opinions, my own opinions, I'm not going to validate what my eyes say. I'm going to start in my mind with this clear point. I – at this very moment -- am exactly what God is perfectly expressing of Himself.

Whatever I thought the future ultimate of me was is the fact right now, because there's nothing that can alter what God is being, right there where you are, right here, here where I am. Now whether your rational mind thinks that's reasonable or not is absolutely irrelevant because your rational mind is not what is in charge.

If you will acknowledge this about yourself: that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. But you're there. While you're considering that, you will not be arguing against it by saying the doctors say this, I see this, I see what this condition is causing in other peoples' lives. And on and on. And what can happen?

In the absence of your arguing against your healing by confirming that you have an irrevocable problem, God has a chance to illuminate His perfection right where you are. In the absence of your commitment to your problem, because you're acknowledging Something beyond it – you're acknowledging your God-derived presence – there's no longer present anything to distort, in your awareness, your apprehension of what God is being right there. And God can reveal Himself because you're not in the way, arguing against what He's being by claiming that something else is true ... and that you're stuck with it.

Perhaps that no-one else has ever recovered from it. Well they're waiting. Those who haven't recovered are waiting for you so that they can say, "Well, he recovered from it. So can I." And they stop arguing against their commitment to their entrapment. You see?

So, I dare you to be unreasonable in the sense that you make a claim about yourself that isn't based upon physical facts and physical interpretations of everyone who's ignorant of the divine one that you are. You need more of Me around you, confirming to you a different point of view. And everyone else needs more than Me, they need You. And everyone needs all of you experiencing healing because you stop arguing in favor of your problems. And in the absence of arguing in favor of the way things are, in the silence of your own voice claiming your imprisonment, there's space for God to illuminate your health, your healed relationship, your ... sprained ankle your ... whatever it might be.

You can – with your dander up -- make commitment to Life and to the prospect we'll say of healing, but that doesn't mean that you will then become personally responsible for healing yourself so that its all up to you with your ... the power of your mind. Make that commitment. And then you know what? And I've said this before: You know what true prayer is? It isn't asking for something. It's saying "Yes!" to God.

Thy will be done. That's prayer. Yes, yes, I am willing. I am willing to experience myself the way You are seeing me and being me. You see? Make the commitment to Life, and then say "Yes." to God -- and do it and do it and do it and do it. Because the only thing that has created your problems is that, for one ignorant reason or another, you've said 'no' to God.

You may not have realized it, but one of the ways all of you say no to God is -- you say: "I'm just a human being, I came from a sperm and an egg. I'm a physical entity. I'm made of stuff that can be injured. And if it's injured seriously enough, I can die because I'm just a physical being and the physical part of me has nothing to do with God." You can conceive that your soul may be divine. But when you say: "All I am is a body, And all I can expect is an increase of vigor and vitality and life that reaches a peak and then begins to fade. "

When you say this, whether you're on the upside of the hill or the downside of the hill, you're denying God. You're not saying yes to God because you're eternal. You're not going to be eternal. If you're ever going to be eternal, you're eternal at this moment. You're at the point of perfection, not advancing towards it But you've got to embrace yourself in that context in your mind

And you've got to stop making excuses for the hip that doesn't work as good as it did or the joints that just aren't what they used to be. or the stamina that the kids have but, you know, that's beyond you now. These are all the ways you say no. And you say no and argue yourself right into the very thing that you're claiming that is the truth about you as a body, you know -- that you will hit a peak and you decline and what can you do? – but thank God your soul lives on.]

I'm here to tell you and I've been saying it, and I'll continue to say it because you need to hear it. The infinite manifestation of God is not nebulous and intangible and non-experienceable. The infinite manifestation of God is not some etheric, boundaryless, undefinable Presence of Love --like endless pink fog, The infinite manifestation of God is very specific and very experienceable and it's all of this. --water, paper, cloth, skin;

What I'm really saying is that what you experience as paper and cloth and skin is energy -- and it's the energy of Spirit, and God is Spirit -- right now!

And if you could see you as I can see you, you are all ageless. You might call it, if you want to judge by appearances, you might say that you are at the height of. I'm going to say, physical perfection, and beautiful, absolutely beautiful, in countenance as well as in the substance of your countenance. I'm telling you that although you can look at each other and Paul is looking at you with me now, but seeing through his eyes and you all appear to be different, short, tall, skinny, fat -- happy with your looks, unhappy with your looks.

There is an evenness of appearance. Everyone of you, -- absolutely individualized -- but beautiful -- right here in this room -- and I'm talking about you, too.

The question is: how do you let in? How do you let in the experience of something that is happening right now because you're not behind the point of perfection or advancing toward it, You're at that point. How do you let that in? Two things: you stop arguing in opposition to it, with all your judgments and reasons; and you stop believing them -- all of your reasons and judgments; and the other thing is -- you say "Yes." to God.

You can't let in a new experience if you're not saying yes. So why will you experience healing? Why will any of you experience unending improvement well say, until it's a constant experience of bliss. Why? because that's actually what's going on every moment.

You're not struggling up toward and gaining something that isn't yours. You're letting in something that has been from the beginning and was never altered. Now you may argue with me, but you're much better today than a year ago when I saw you.

QUESTION: You're right,

ANSWER: And you're still kicking against the pricks.

QUESTION: And I've got a lot more to go yet.

ANSWER: Well ...

QUESTION: I want to be up walking.

ANSWER: You have your nose pointed in the right direction. And what I encourage you to do is that at the same time that you recognize there's more improvement needed, that you acknowledge that the improvement that's needed is available to you.

QUESTION: It is.

ANSWER: It is. It's available to you because it's sitting there fully capable of standing up and walking at this very moment, because I can see it.

QUESTION: If I wasn't so damn scared, I probably could stand. And stay up.

ANSWER: Yes. All of you say, "I don't want to have my problems." but all of you who are still experiencing the problems are scared to death to be without them. Why? because you're going to have to change; You're going to have to be, without the problem. And your problems are habits and you know how to be with your habits. You don't know how to be free – because your habits give you a sense of security.

You say I don't want to be with my mate, with my mate being withdrawn and incommunicative. [sick] I don't want to have an empty relationship. I didn't ask for this. But, if you want something else, you're going to have to be with that person in a new way. You might actually get dragged out of your comfortable habits of propriety and reserve. You might have to kick up your heels and make a fool of yourself, having fun.

The freedom of the fullness of a relationship, the freedom of the fullness of being able to move and do whatever you want – climb a mountain, chin yourself 56 times. The freedom to do that will mean... you know what it'll mean? A hell of a lot more responsibility than you have to bear right now.

Oh, but I, I want to be responsible. Yes and no. And you know what I mean.

You're neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it, .and you must conceive of yourself in that context. Every single one of you. Even the ones of you who think you're just fine.

You can look at him, or at someone you know who has a problem and say, "Yes, I see that. Plain as the nose on my face. Yes, but, uh, gee whiz, my life's going pretty well. I'm not caught in any habits. I'm not trapped."

Well I'm here to tell you that there's a freedom available to you that you haven't begun to tap into. So don't be so sure of yourself that the opportunity doesn't stare you in the face, for bliss, for happiness, for joy, that you don't have to account for.

for freedom that you don't have to be able to claim responsibility for because it's your birthright. For health, joy, happiness, freedom, that's yours. I'm going to say, just because.

How can it be yours 'just because'? Because God is Love, and in His expression of Himself/Herself, He/She has withheld nothing of what He is, from what He's expressing. And so, just because, just because God is Love, you at this very moment, each one of you, are the absolutely perfect, flawless expression of God. And the only thing standing between you and your experience of that is the word you're giving. the decision you're making. And you only have two choices. This is all ultimately simple. The two choices are to say "yes" to God or to say 'no' to God.

Now when you say 'no' to God, it does absolutely nothing to Who you really are, or God. But it creates a hell of an experience for you. And then you wrap this hell of an experience around you, and you use it as a means of getting a means of self worth.

'I ... Damnit. I'm going to overcome this. I am going ... this thing is not going to get me down!" What thing? The fact that you said 'no' to God?

'No! That's not what I'm talking about. I'm talking about this thing, you know, the Problem: my quiet husband, my talkity-talkity wife, my body, my boss, my dog."

No, that's not the problem. The problem is that you've said 'no!'

You see? And you've used the result of the 'no', which is tension, distress, and you've said, "Wow! I've got something to rise above and when I do it, wow! you know, I will have said to the devil.'no'. No cause there ain't no devil. There's just you saying "Yes" or 'no'.

Saying "yes" is not assertive is it? It is not an expression of personal power because you're saying "yes" to something else. Saying "yes" is yielding to something else. 'No!' is what is an assertive self statement of power and supposed force. You see? Resistance is what the ego does. Yielding to and saying "Yes" is what you in your divine right do. It's the nature of being.

The true nature of being is one of constantly yielding to what God is Be-ing forever new. You see you want things to change, but you're afraid to change yourself.

Because God is Love, whatever degree to which you say "yes", you will be met with agreement. You will be met with acknowledgment. You will not be met with a judgment that says, "you've got to say 'yes' better." You see?

So you don't have to scare yourself with the prospect of change. You can say "yes" and let change in slowly. But please understand that more is available to you and no- one is withholding it from you, just because you're chicken. And don't want too much of your good, too fast.

What I've shared with you is not too simple. The ultimate answers are always utterly simple. And even though your thinking mind says, 'there's got to be more to it than that!' there's nothing more to it than that.

It is good to see you. It is good to see you with you having said "yes" more than the last time I saw you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –09/12/1999

By: Raj Christ Jesus

PAUL/RAJ. Good afternoon. Well. Who has a question?

ANGER IN YOUR FACE? EXPRESSING LOVE'S GRACE

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I listen to tapes, Gatherings quite a bit, and they are mostly very helpful in reminding me where I want to be and what I want to see in the people around me. However, I'm have some difficulty in staying with that in that face of some of these people who are really insistent and in your face about their negativity, their anger, their 'oh, woe is me'.

I have a couple of people in my life like this. One is my brother who I don't see very often so it's not a large problem. But I have a woman that I see, oh, three times a week for a few hours, who is quote unquote mentally ill. And I know it's not ANSWER: Like you, but more severely.

QUESTION: Oh, yes! Yes!! [laughter] I do understand that it's not up to me to heal her, to make her life better for her. And I also think I know that she's doing the best that she knows how. But it just gets so incessant. You know, her, her ... "My life is terrible, nobody likes me. What am I going to do?" And of course my impatience flares and that doesn't feel any good. I don't want to be doing that. So can you talk a little bit about how to be with somebody like that and even the appropriateness of loving and caring about somebody like that from a distance? Rather than being there to feel like I'm being hit over the head with her club of confusion, as it were? Thank you.

ANSWER: I agree that some people make it very difficult for you to look into their eyes and remember God. I'm going to encourage you to shift your attention from her to you. She may be making it difficult for you to look in her eyes and remember God. But, if you will remember that your function is to do just that, no matter how she's behaving. And that doing it will be your salvation -- whether it's hers or not, you will be able to find the energy and the impulse to hang in there with her. It's not about her and putting up with her. It's about you learning how to stay on the beam, no matter what is going on.

'Well, she's not worth the effort.' But are you worth the effort? Is your learning that there truly is no legitimate distraction from your attentiveness to remembering God in your face. You are worth it. And where you might not do it for her, you will do it for yourself. And if you do it for yourself, you will have done it for her.

You've got to have a reason for doing it. One could say, 'Well that isn't very loving. That sounds very selfish.' I'm doing it for me.' Well let's put it this way. You're doing it for you, for her. Do you enjoy being miserable? Would you like to discover that you don't have to feel miserable when you're with her and when she's complaining? Would you like to discover that there are some places in your world that you don't have to avoid?

The key is don't allow yourself to be drawn into a contest with her. A contest called 'top this!' 'My life is rotten.' 'Oh well, my life's really pretty good at the moment.' 'You have no idea how rotten my life is. No-one loves me.' 'Well I love you. Don't you come and see you often?' 'Yeah, but that doesn't count! So and so and so and so. 'And my money situation.' All my money....' And the ball is in your court to top that.

At the bottom line, what she's complaining about is not any of the things, any of the people, the money, any of the things. It is that she doesn't feel loved, and safe. And she isn't going to feel loved and safe until she is willing to let love in. But if you will remember to stay on the beam, you will be being the Presence of Love, and you won't do anything that will reinforce her conviction that she's unloved. And at this point, that's the only thing that you can do is not reinforce her conviction, even though you can't force her to become unconvicted by her determined belief.

You've got to remember that you're worth it and she's worth it.

'But it's so difficult!' If it's on your plate, you're ready to deal with it. You're ready to become free of feeling that the situation is difficult for you.

You don't wear much makeup. But what little you wear, when you put it on in the morning, everyone else is blessed by it, whether you think about it again or not. And the attitude you bring with you into a relationship blesses everyone throughout your day as you meet one and another individual. You say, 'This morning I don't feel like putting on any makeup. Too difficult. It's not worth it. The world's not worth it. I can get along without it.' Well, it's not really that difficult. And once you've done it, it's done for everybody. It's not really difficult to be with someone who's unpleasant and not be upset. It really isn't difficult.

It's just that you have a little self-righteous devil sitting on your shoulder, and it says, "You don't deserve this! You don't have to take that!" And of course, the attention is on her, the difficult woman...

>From your other shoulder come the divine words. "This isn't bothersome at all. There's nothing for you to do except just be. There's nothing for you to do except to recognize she's in a shitty frame of mind. Poor dear. I wish she wasn't. And I know she doesn't have to be. Nevertheless she deserves my company; she deserves my help, and I'm going to give my company, and I'm going to give my help. You see?

It's rather like having a snake. If you have a friend who has a snake, being with your friend and her snake might be difficult. But for somebody else who loves snakes, it's not difficult at all. You see? I'm trying to convey to you that what this little voice says here – the voice of self-righteous indignation - what it says is telling you a lie. 'I don't have to take this.' Well nothing's really being dished out to you that requires a reaction. There's an unhappy lady who needs company and help. A miserable old lady who needs company and help. A lady who doesn't have to be miserable. Someone for you to have compassion on.

Whether you like or dislike snakes is a choice. And it's just as easy to be free of the fear of snakes, as it is to choose to be afraid of them. And I'm trying to point this out so that you can see that the flip flop from being distressed to not being distressed is not hard.

And if you will bring the attention back to yourself and your task, of being willing to look into the mad lady's eyes and remember God. If you will remember that's your task and that's your salvation, then you'll say 'okay' to this opportunity, even though this little voice here says, 'You deserve better opportunities. This is an awful opportunity, Get out of here and go find a pleasant opportunity. Okay?'

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Everybody has to stop finding justifications for not hanging in there with a brother or a sister. So persist. Now I know someone is going to say - and it actually was part of your question - 'Well what do you do when that person is abusing you, actually abusing you?' Well when that person is actually abusing you, you say "Stop."

You know the old saying, "Sticks and stones can break my bones, but words can never hurt me." Well kids have got it, and you grow up and you then say, "Sticks and stones can break my bones, and by dammit, words can hurt me too.." And you lost it.

When that person is actually abusing you, you say stop. If something's being done that can break your bones, say, "Stop." and leave. But words - I'm not going to say 'Grow up' but "Grow young!" And remember that words can't hurt you. And be the Love.

The more people you leave on the outside as people you can't love, the more people are going to feel left out. And then they will begin to band together and form a new militia group to change the system. Because the system of exclusion is shitty. Same with kids in school. They're left out because they seem to be slower than another child or this statistical group. They begin to feel left out. Come on people. Start being inclusive. Your brother's worth it. But more than that, your decision to stay on the beam and be willing to see in your brother's eyes the Face of God is your salvation. It's the way you wake up.

The way you went to sleep was: there's a single mad idea that says, "You look like Groucho Marx, not you. And you know what? I'm going to have fun thinking of you as Groucho Marx. I'm going to have fun thinking of you as what my imagination wants to see, rather than what God is being there.

And you separated yourself out and you separated that one out from the conscious experience and fulfillment of Reality.

What's happening here is that there is an increasing demand for more brotherly love, for more genuine caring. I want all of you to think about this. I want you to think about or contemplate how seldom you even look into another person's eyes for more than a fraction of a second, much less look in them long enough to be able to remember God. It's the way you maintain privacy. One of the things that Paul notices when I'm talking is that I look for long periods of time right into your eyes. And he's aware - although he's improving on this - one of the things he was aware of how much he never did look in people's eyes for any length of time. So.....

So just even looking in someone's eyes for ten seconds whether you're trying to remember God or not, will be a very powerful way in connecting more with each other. And to that degree, the ones with whom you're connecting will feel more included, more involved. It feels good to be acknowledged by having someone look at you. Not your boobs, not your toes, not your fingernails, but in your eyes. I'm glad you asked the question. Thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. It's a pleasure to be with you again. I have been having an ongoing conversation with my guide, and I have usually come to you for a kind of 'cover your ass' kind of question, but I'm in a ANSWER: What covers your ass is you putting your ass on the line.

QUESTION: It's sitting there right now. [laughter] but I have been asked to by my guide, that there is some writing that needs to be done, through me. Now I have been resisting this for a number of years, and I asked you one time, and what your comment was "Listen a little deeper." Well I have been listening and it has become more and more difficult to believe that this is still not my active imagination.

So the question being is: Is the writing I'm being asked to do viable? Or is it just something I'm making up?

ANSWER: If you had been making it up, the impulse to do it would have left a long time ago. Now your motto needs to be, just do it. To hell with whether you're resistant. To hell with how you feel about it. Risk the chance and just sit down and begin.

That's what putting your ass on the line means. It's risking the chance that it's not you. It's risking the chance that there's a God. You can be stubborn as long as you want, but you're missing out on some meaningful, enjoyable hours of communion and expression. Go ahead.

QUESTION: Is it my guide?

ANSWER: It's not you.

QUESTION: That's what I wanted to hear. Thank you.

ANSWER: And the only one who can speak to you is one who is Awake. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: I certainly do thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands.

QUESTION: Two and a half years ago I talked to you Raj ... I talked to you about my husband who has had a stroke and his non-appreciation of being with me, his not showing any gratitude. And, after listening to your tapes, I'm not sure I'm even really clear on what you said. But what I feel at this point is that I've come to the place where it isn't the highest thought for either one of us to be living together any more, and I've asked to have him placed in a home. And I would like to ask what your take is on that.

ANSWER: It's right on the beam. It is exactly the step that needs to be taken. It identifies fulfillment for you, and it identifies fulfillment for him.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

VOICE from the audience. What is it that you're talking about?

ANSWER: Could you repeat your question? Just a moment. I'll give you some time to be still. Just a moment. I want to say something further to you. It doesn't matter what other people's opinions are. If they differ with the decision you have come to which is from a very deep, attentive place, which is where you've come to the decision from.

QUESTION: My husband had a stroke 2 ½ years ago.

ANSWER: Can you hear her all right?

QUESTION: And he's able to talk and walk. He's unable at this time to be in gratitude of any kind, although I know that it's there. He never says thank you or please, not even the basics of any gratitude is there. And that's basically the bottom line for me.

ANSWER: Would you explain to him what steps you've decided to take? He missed that.

QUESTION: I've asked to have him put in a home.

VOICE from the audience. I hope that never happens to me.

ANSWER: The statement was made, "I hope that never happens to me." That is not going to happen to you. And if your wife asked me the same question as she asked, I would not tell her the same answer. This is specifically appropriate for her husband.

VOICE, same one. Sorry[unintelligible] very important
.....[more unintelligible]

ANSWER: I understand. [to QUESTION:] Did you have anything further?

QUESTION: That's it. Thank you.

ANSWER: Okay. Hands.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. In the last few years I've been basically ...

ANSWER: Excuse me. Just a moment. I want to address a point here. Her husband is actually capable of expressing gratitude. He is actually able to be kind in thought and actions, but is using his infirmity as an excuse for behaving badly. And in effect, for his sake and for her sake, she has to say no. And she has said no verbally, but he does not choose to honor it when he has the capacity to honor it.

VOICE. [unintelligible ...]

ANSWER: Okay.

VOICE. Thank you.

You are welcome.

THROWING THE OARS OVERBOARD

QUESTION: Thank you. The last three years, Raj, I've been consciously Downsizing my life. I've sold my house. I've been practicing getting out of my own way ...

ANSWER: It sounds to me like you're downsizing the distractions to your life

QUESTION: Fair enough. And I have been working at allowing "Thy will to be done." And I was wondering if you had any observations, comments, cautions for me at this point, and could see, perhaps, areas that I need to be focusing on in this process, for lack of a better word.

ANSWER: No. Just pay attention to what's in your face. The things that are in your face that you didn't manipulate in your face. The things that are in your face that life is presenting. Because I'll tell you something. What life presents you are the easiest opportunities to remember God with.

The things everyone manipulates into their lives are the things that make it most difficult to remember God. You are like a person in a boat, on a river, a rowboat. And you've been throwing overboard things that you accumulated in your boat. Things that made it heavier, less flexible, less movable. And you've been throwing them out. And you're getting close to the point that what's left to throw out are the oars.

I'm just going to clue you into the fact that when you throw the oars overboard, you have nothing left to do but pay attention to the scenery, which is a wonderful way to remember God, and it's the easiest thing to remember God when you finally don't have any capacity to control things yourself, any longer. I'm just going to say, "Keep up the good work."

Fulfillment is the nature of Being when you aren't attempting to be in charge. It's God's gift to you. God never said you have to go out and earn your fulfillment by the sweat of your brow and your ability to think. Keep up the good work. Hands.

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

Paul, I don't know which Q this Q & A belongs to?

ANSWER: You are welcome.

GIVING PERMISSION FOR YOUR GOOD

QUESTION: First I would like to take this chance to express my deepest gratitude for divine guidance all through my lifetime. As I reflect back, even to childhood, there were those moments when I was aware that there was something other helping me, directing me.

About two years ago I recognized, however, a pattern in my life that I would now like to change. And it is indeed getting lesser and easier. But, the pattern is that when it was time for change, I seem to have to have the situation get so horrible before I have permission to leave it.

ANSWER: Before you give yourself permission.

QUESTION: Yes. Yes. Yes. And there was that...I don't know. I don't know what the cause of that is within me. As I say, those periods are getting shorter now, but I just have experienced, I'm in the process now of making a move in where I live. And I see how... all the benefits that are going to be there, but it took, it took another explosion to blast me loose to where I could see that, where I could understand. I was prepared to stay and suffer through in my small little apartment and now I'm getting a larger one for less money.

Why? What can I do to recognize that and honor myself enough to make those changes before it all has to be so awful?

ANSWER: I want you to write this phrase down on a piece of paper and put it on your refrigerator. "I deserve fulfillment for no good reason." You simply do, deserve it. It's your birthright. You don't have to earn it by suffering first.

Good has a bad rap, you know.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: They say if it tastes good, or if it's good it must be illegal, immoral, or fattening.

QUESTION: Exactly. Yes.

ANSWER: Good has a bad rap. Take it to you. Say okay rather than waiting till it's so miserable that you say you don't have any choice.

What makes you think when fulfillment, or your good, presents itself to you in the beginning, what makes you think you really have a choice there? You say by your actions that when your good is presented to you, when the opportunity for it is presented to you and you've done nothing to earn it, that you must go through a process to become worthy of it. Who gave you that choice?

QUESTION: Me.

ANSWER: It really is much easier to be happy all the time. It really is much easier to be happy all the time. And all of you would be happier more of the time if you would say yes to the Good that presents itself to you, instead of saying, "Oh, I'm too old to change and let it in." Or "I've got important problems that I've got to get taken care of, and then I'll let It in. These other things are more important." Mmm hmmm. At this moment, every one of you is right smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. Nowhere else.

The fullness of the Kingdom of Heaven is the gift that is given to you. It's your birthright, and you're all saying, "Well, I haven't earned my way in yet. My soul has a little more growing to do, a little more refining. My psychic told me so." [laughter] "My mother made it very clear when I was a little girl that it was so." And so you let it in slow. But the gift is freely made, and it's sitting in front of you every moment to simply say 'Yes.' to.

"Well you know, I gotta work on this problem of why I'm so slow in saying 'Yes. Then I'll say 'Yes'. I know it has some deep psychological root, and if i don't get that dug out, then if I say 'Yes.', I'll probably lose it because I gotta get this worked out first, you see."

It's asinine. It's a ridiculous distraction from waking up. So don't ask me why you take so long to say yes. Just say yes. Just begin to say yes. Risk that chance that you won't be struck down by God by saying yes. And the angels will sing in joy with you.

QUESTION: She finally got it. [laughing] Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: May I add on a question that may be answered quickly. Since beginning the study of the Course, I have very much recognized the idea that life is simply remembering, if I've gotten this correctly?

ANSWER: If you have forgotten, life is a matter of remembering. Once you've remembered, then life is a matter of paying attention. Just paying attention to reality, to creation.

QUESTION: Okay. Well this seems as though my life is a matter of review. And for the last few years, consciously review and release.

ANSWER: Just don't get in the habit of reviewing.

QUESTION: Well ...

ANSWER: I'm just saying you may have noticed that this is what it has been, but be flexible enough to let it be over when it's over.

QUESTION: Yes. Well there seem to have been these chapters that I have been...captured all of my interest and energy. And I've focused on that, and okay, that's going to be my life. That's what my life is going to be about. And then suddenly, there's not painfully, but just, it's over. I've closed that page in the book, and now it's on to another area of interest, and everything goes into that, and there's not a sense ...

ANSWER: I'm going to put it this way. I'd rather not have you think in terms of chapters and books as though it is set out in that format. As each of you left home, your process of forgetting Reality involved the adoption of this belief and that belief, and this conclusion, and that assumption, followed by figuring out that ended up with another decision. And as you've gotten further away from home, all of these misapprehensions and poor decisions have accumulated into a denseness of mind that causes you not to be able to see reality for what it is, right here where you are.

As I mentioned the last time we were together, waking up is retracing your steps, because at each place where you made a poor decision, or a false assumption that you became convinced of, you buried the truth relative to that assumption, right there on your path. So you must come home on the same path, and on the way, you have to uncover the truth that you buried there so that you can feel it and experience it as your nature again.

So, indeed, it would feel as though there's some order to it. But the reason I'm saying not to use chapter and verse and book is because you usually think somebody else wrote the book. You're simply coming to those places where you buried a little bit of truth out of sight, and therefore, out of mind, so that it may be rediscovered and experienced once again as your nature.

QUESTION: Okay. That's really what I was wondering. It's as if I were revisiting a time of life, a form of expression that perhaps for some reason - from another life if you will - that I'm revisiting in order to perhaps make correction or to further learn the lesson ...

ANSWER: To reincorporate an ignorance that you had embodied. Something you had chosen to become ignorant of. Uncovering it so that you're no longer ignorant of it, and experiencing it yourself more fully. Yes.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Now I just don't want you to get hung up in a process and try to hold on to a process of review. Whatever you are thinking of when you use that word 'review'.

QUESTION: Well, I'm definitely ready to give up that process. It's getting very old.

ANSWER: You will not be, you will not avoid uncovering further and further jewels of truth that were part of yourself that you hid. You're on the way home. So keep saying 'Yes' to the forward movement, the retracing of the steps. Okay.

QUESTION: Great. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. We will take a break. Okay. Hands.

QUESTION: Raj, I'm aware of a pattern that I'm seeing myself alternately running and thinking I've broken. It has to do with the fact that I spent a good portion of my children's life as a single parent, taking on the responsibility of mom and dad. They're all adult children now, adults - my youngest just turned 37 - with children. So I have about ten grandchildren. And what I'm noticing is that I keep falling back into this sense of having to be involved in their lives and in a sense, still playing out the father role. Parenting. And I see a lot of it inappropriate. In some senses, it's, you know I feel like it's - at one level I'm justifying it in being caring and compassionate which a lot of times it seems like that's what I'm doing. At other times I'm just seeing that the futility in my thinking that I know what's best. I mean part of me knows that I don't, and many times I don't know what's best for me, let alone them. And, but I seem to use this pattern as a barrier to me, in a sense seeing myself getting on with my life, independent from what's going on in their life.

ANSWER: Independent. Independent from the role you have conceived actually created for yourself.

QUESTION: Exactly.

ANSWER: You are experiencing what I will call the 'mother half' of parenting where being mother is what gives one's definition to one's life. And then, when the kids grow up and leave, she wonders, "well who am I now?" It's a wonderful place to be although most women who experience it don't see it that way. It's wonderful because it's the opportunity for them to become free of a role which they have given themselves so they might discover who they are ... who they are.

I would wager to say that when you do this over-extended parenting, it isn't always well received.

QUESTION: No. I don't think that ever happens. [laughter]

ANSWER: Get a life, Dad. [laughter]

QUESTION: Wow! Thanks! I was just waiting for permission.

ANSWER: That is my profound answer to you. Who are you? I'm not going to answer the question. That's in you for you to discover. But I give you permission to go ahead and explore. And your children do too.

"Oh, but that's a little bit more of my good than I'm willing to accept right now. I have a few things to work on first." No you don't. You don't have a big problem, and you don't need a deep answer. You just need a real practical one. You write a note and put it on your refrigerator: "Get a life, Dad." Just to remind yourself that it's your right to be engaged in exploring the possibilities of that which is meaningful to you. Not so that you can be a better dad!...but so that you can have a more enjoyable experience of being yourself.

It's time to nurture yourself. Real simple.

QUESTION: Thanks. Thanks for reminding me.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands.

I'm just going to mention that many people who listen to the tapes, and one in particular, have never understood what I was saying when I said Hands. And they thought I was saying a person's name, Hans for Hands. And they always wondered, "Who's Hans?"

QUESTION: I've been experiencing a lot of peace recently. And I'm more and more clear that what happens it not up to me. But I have two questions.

One is that although I experience this peace, I am aware that my life is less and less peopled. And so I wonder if I'm listening, and what I'm missing.

ANSWER: You're not missing anything except the irrelevant. The irrelevant. In other words, irrelevant people are not in your life. You are not becoming like an ostrich with your head in the sand. You are not withdrawing. It is just that only those things which are particularly meaningful or fulfill purpose are knocking at your door, so to speak.

QUESTION: I won't 'yes, but' you, but I'll listen to that. My second question is somewhat more specific and in the two things that have been going on in my head lately have been "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." And trust. And I ...I'm in the middle of selling my home and I have some fears around that and am trying to stay at peace and remember those things and also I'm aware of these fears going round and round.. So I wonder if you could give me ... I think I want reassurance.

ANSWER: Fear is never useful. Fear is never productive. So when you find yourself experiencing it, catch yourself because you would really rather be engaged in that which is productive and meaningful. Fear doesn't help you be more efficient. You lose efficiency. Fear doesn't make you become sharper. It dulls your capacity to respond appropriately. So when you recognize fear presenting itself to you, tell it to shut up! If you have to, say out loud, "Shut up!" The ego is whispering enticements in your ear to lose your peace. To lose your capacity to be simply clear. Refuse its invitation. Tell it to shut up, and then immediately give your attention elsewhere.

I will tell you that the selling of your house embodies no legitimate reason for fear whatever. Therefore, any fear you're feeling is illegitimate. Don't legitimize it by giving it your attention, by entertaining it. Fear always comes as a niggling at first. It sort of knocks softly at your door. Refuse it entrance. It's simple. Once you invite it in and it's messed up your environment, it's much more difficult to kick it out.

If it's useless, you have no need for it. In fact, you have a need for it not to be a part of your experience.

QUESTION: I think i needed to hear that it... there was not validity for the fear.

ANSWER: There isn't. There is not even a need for you to be alert for something that might be lying in wait. But what I want you to understand is that whatever might transpire in the selling of the house, or any other venture you might be engaged in, it's your peace of mind that will allow you to deal with it very practically and not the presence of fear. You see? It's simple.

QUESTION: I have no trouble intellectually believing your words, and I feel like I've been in a process of saying those words over and over to try to stay centered. The difficulty comes when the experience enters in that ... the fear ... that interrupts the experience of those words [unintelligible]

ANSWER: Your experience is, however, that fear disrupts your ability to think clearly. That's not words. That is your experience. So you have an experience upon which to base a decision to not engage fear consciously.

You might find yourself unconsciously engaging it, but you have a basis for changing your mind about it when you realize that you are indulging in fear. And you have a choice. It's useless, don't do it. If in the presence of your peace, you have an ongoing capacity and natural alertness to be able to cope with whatever happens, then why do you need to employ fear? You need to write on your refrigerator, "If it's useless, don't employ it." Fear is not an instinct; it's a choice. Be a little more discriminating about whom you or what you invite into your mind. What you allow in to your mind.

QUESTION: Is there anything I should be doing differently around this concretely than what I am doing now?

ANSWER: Only what I've just said. Be alert, and when you recognize that fear has taken hold, change your mind. If it's useless, don't use it. Don't employ it. If you have to, take five minutes to breathe deeply and meditate, with the purpose of feeling your peace. Just catch it and stop it when fear has presented itself, and you're beginning to be caught. And if you're in the thick of it, do a twenty-minute meditation.

You'll find you can become quite good at recognizing the first niggling presence. You say, "Oop! Not going down that road!" Peace or fear, the choice is yours. One feels good and one doesn't. One nurtures your ability to be appropriate, and the other destroys it. It's very black and white, and you need to become very black and white about it.

Nothing mystical or spiritual. It's just the use you put your mind to. Don't do what doesn't feel good. Stop doing what doesn't feel good.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. I meant that. Stop doing what doesn't feel good. You asked if there's something practical you can do? That's it. Okay. It is crazy isn't it. The indulgence in fear is used by most people as a means of feeling that they're being responsible, as though being in your peace was being irresponsible. As though being where you can be clear is irresponsible.

"I've worried a lot about that. I've worried a lot about that." "Oh, well, you're a very responsible person. I give you credit. You're the kind of person I'd like to have in my ballpark, on my side. Because I know you would never willy-nilly accept your good, and therefore you would keep me in check as well."

There's a gentleman here in the third row. Yes"

QUESTION: Hi Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I'm presenting myself much as a player would to his coach, or a car to an automobile shop.

ANSWER: I'm sorry. Do you want to start over?

QUESTION: I'm presenting myself as player would to his coach, or taking a car for a check-over, tune-up, overhaul. [unintelligible] In my life I feel that I have many wonderful abilities I'm thankful for, and many wonderful dreams. And I seem to have got mired down in the muck, and amazingly peaceful.

ANSWER: You sound pretty good to me

QUESTION: [laughter] Well, I'm amazingly peaceful in what I've created for myself. I think some people would slit their throats if they were in it Themselves, but I'm pretty okay with the way everything's going. And I'm sort of like going, "Father, is there something more I could be doing here other than playing in the sandbox on this planet?" And also to make it a little more ...

ANSWER: I tell you what: you get together with her and you can do her worrying for her. That'll give you a little definition. And of course it will make you appear to be more responsible. [laughter] Why, is it just a little too easy for you?

QUESTION: Here, now, or my life.

ANSWER: Your life.

QUESTION: No. It's quite difficult actually. I'm looking for words. Not quite messed up, but quite....I've over-created a lot of stuff to handle, I think. And that's ... I'm fine. I keep feeling that there's a lot more for me too. That I'm way off track. So I'm just looking for someone who's a little more awake than me, who can see if I'm off track, and what I could do, or not do to...

ANSWER: Well, you see, I don't have a measuring stick and therefore, I find you quite acceptable; quite wonderful. You need to talk to the gentleman in the row ahead of you, in the blue top there, because he was discussing the same sort of questions at the last meeting.

Neither one of you are particularly in control of your lives. Therefore, you happen to have in your lives the things that are the easiest for you to deal with, the ones that are most appropriate for you to deal with; and that will help uncover the clarity you have buried on your way away from home. The problem is using a measuring stick. "There's more I could be doing. There are more important things I could be doing." You know, you spend what could be called quality time with those you are with. You make yourself available, you allow yourself to be present with them. I will tell you something There's not anything more important in this world than that, for them or for you.

 complete 1st half

"They don't give me any credentials for them. And certainly there must be something more important, more complicated, more complex". Well, where're you going to get the measuring stick from that'll tell you what's more important?

You know, you're free, and you don't even know it. And you're in the best - I'm going to say - the best frame of mind to live your freedom. But somebody from your past, in your memory, is dangling bait, and that bait is like a cloth ruler like seamstresses use. It's a measuring stick. "How are you measuring up?" I'm saying you haven't been taking the bait. Don't take it now. And let your life be utterly original. And stop fussing about it. Does the lady next to you understand what I'm saying?

QUESTION: I think she hears it, but I think she disagrees with it. Do you?

WIFE of QUESTION: I think he's stuck.

QUESTION: She has a very pretty measuring tape.

ANSWER: [laughter] Well I don't care if it's her measuring tape or your measuring tape. The gift you have to bring isn't going to measure up. And the gift she has to bring, and the gift any of you have to bring...if you're letting it come without putting it through a process of gaining control, will bless everyone, but it won't equal anyone else's definition of what success is.

Do you feel stuck?

QUESTION: I can't say that I do, and I can't say that I don't. I don't know enough to know what stuck is.

ANSWER: If you can't say if you do and you can't say that you don't, you're not feeling stuck.

QUESTION: That's why I'm asking my mentor 'Am I stuck?'. That's why I'm asking am I missing something? I mean I could basically ask 'Am I doing wonderfully or am I doing crappy? I don't know.

ANSWER: You're doing very well, thank you.

QUESTION: Thank you. By earth definitions - the measuring tape you mentioned - sometimes I could look there and suggest to myself that perhaps I'm not doing so well because look at all this mess and poverty, and complications I've created. And yet I know inside myself that that's not the purpose of Life. There's something else going on here, and maybe on that definition I'm doing fine. So I'm basically trying to clear up my own lack of knowing how I'm doing.

ANSWER: I'm going to ask you this. Are you messing up someone else's life? Anyone else's life?

QUESTION: They're not happy ... my spouse, beside me. She's not happy with what I've brought - some of the things that I've brought into her life.

ANSWER: I will tell you - his spouse - that you would not be able to tolerate him if he was actually better in control of his life. So be careful what you ask for. I can't put it any straighter than that. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you. May I ask one thing on her behalf..

ANSWER: No.

QUESTION: May she ask it?

ANSWER: If she has a question, she needs to raise her hand.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands?

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'm dealing with a loneliness in my life that I've never dealt with before, and I need some guidance.

ANSWER: A loneliness in your life that you've never dealt with before? Go on.

QUESTION: And I need some guidance on how to deal with it.

ANSWER: I'm going to ask you to point it real close and say it one more time.

HEALING LONELINESS [WITH LOVE]

QUESTION: I'm dealing with a loneliness inside that I've never dealt with before, and I need some guidance in how to deal with it. I can't seem to find it. I can't seem to heal.

ANSWER: There is only one way to heal loneliness, and that is to give Love. You've got to find someone to give to.

QUESTION: I'm surrounded by love.

ANSWER: I'm talking about you giving love to someone else. I'm glad, and I'm sure that those who are loving you are not feeling lonely.

QUESTION: True.

ANSWER: Now I'm not going to encourage you to try and find out why you're isolating yourself. Why you aren't finding ways to extend love. I don't want you to try to find out why. I want you just to find ways to extend love, to express care, caring, thoughtfulness. Find someone. Find many 'someones' that you can be thoughtful about. Find a way to be of service.

Find a way to give something of yourself.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: That's really the answer. Do you know that you don't have love to give? What I'm saying that you - all in your puny little selfhood - do not have an ounce of love that you can give to anyone. Not anyone here has love that originates in them. But when your or anyone else finds an object of your affection, where you desire to care, you know what happens? The Source of Love, the Father, extends the love. Or let us say the Love that He is always extending finds an avenue through you out to the object of your affection. The love that you have to give is derived from the Father. You see?

When you let the Father's Love move through you because you have chosen and object of your affection to shower love upon, or caring, you stand in receipt of God's Love, and you are blessed. And you will not feel alone. You might say because the big connection has been made - you and the Father.

You've gotten plugged in. But the only way you can get plugged in to the Source of Love is by having an object of your affection – finding someone for whom you can do something. The one you do it for isn't the one who's going to make you feel not alone anymore. It's the connection with the Father that's going to make you feel not alone anymore. But you can't have that connection until there is a desire to share something meaningful with someone else here. You see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yes. Are you saying I'm disconnected?

ANSWER: I'm saying that you're ignoring the connection and that's why you're feeling lonely.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. That's not a serious problem.

QUESTION: It feels like it is.

ANSWER: I understand. But the reconnection isn't difficult. And that's why it's not a serious problem. Okay. Hands?

QUESTION: I've received guidance that I need to disengage myself from a life-long business. And I feel like I've given myself permission to do this. I've done this, butsomething in the process is just taking interminably long, it seems to me, if this is to be so. And I'm wondering if there's something I'm hanging on to that doesn't let it happen. If I need a refrigerator or something like that. [laughter]

ANSWER: No, you just need to yield to the timing of the movement. No there's nothing wrong with you.

QUESTION: [laughter] Okay.

ANSWER: You're not bollixing it up. Just don't become impatient.

QUESTION: Okay. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands?

QUESTION: I lost my husband [unintelligible] two months ago after a very long, serious illness. And I'm tied up with many emotions which come and go. Some days I'm fine. Other days, the least little thing turns me on. Since I came in here today, I've been turned on, most of the time, with tears which are a mixture of relief, love that he's not suffering any more, hurt that I'm alone and anger that he didn't take better care of himself. And I don't know where to go from this point on.

ANSWER: Mmmmm.

QUESTION: I should sell my home and get something else smaller and easier to take care of.

ANSWER: Pardon?

QUESTION: I should sell our home and get something easier to take care of, and get out more socially. I've [?] in for years...

ANSWER: I want you to dare to trust the way you work. I want you to dare to trust that there's something utterly beautiful about the way your being moves you kindly and thoughtfully through a trying time. I want you to dare to trust the tears when they come. They are cleansing. I want you to dare to trust the angry feelings. I want you to dare to trust all of it. Because you know what? You're going to survive this.

QUESTION: I know that.

ANSWER: But you're going to survive it because there's something utterly wonderful about how your being works., including the tears, including all of it.

You're not stuck. You're not stuck in a process. But you're not going to be able to give orders to the process and say, 'Well I ought to be through this sooner' or 'If I were a responsible person, or if I were as spiritually advanced as I thought I was, I'd be moving through this much more gracefully.' Bull shit.

QUESTION: Amen. [laughter]

ANSWER: Dare to trust your very being. And don't you let some external measuring stick tell you where you ought to be in the process. When you get through this, all that will be left is the Love, and you will find yourself free, and able to embrace life with freshness, newness. But don't try to be where you're not yet.

I'll tell you something else. I'll tell all of you a little secret. When you let yourself succumb to just being however shitty you might feel, if you will give yourself permission to feel it, you'll get through it much faster, because your being is so dependably kind and loving. And the way it works brings forth your experience of joy and fulfillment. Measuring sticks are always unkind like the marks on the -- by the door jamb. Billy is 5 years, Billy 7, years, and Henry comes along, and he's only 2 years, and the other marks indicate he hasn't arrived somewhere yet. He's not equal to something yet. If the marks weren't there, both of the children would be utterly happy, having fun, being kids.

You need to allow yourself to be at peace with where you are, with whatever your feelings are today, tomorrow, and the next day. And the more you honor yourself, the more you'll be able to feel your dignity in your inconsistency from day to day. And the more you feel your dignity, the more consistent day to day will become. But you've got to honor yourself first.

There's something utterly divine about your simple humanity.

QUESTION: Second part of my question.

ANSWER: I'm sorry, speak up louder.

QUESTION: Second part of my question. Is my husband all right?

ANSWER: Utterly. Are you all right?

QUESTION: Utterly.

ANSWER: Yes!

QUESTION: Utterly.

ANSWER: Yes. Okay. You are welcome.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. I want to give you a hug because I appreciate the fact that you haven't tried to be something you aren't here today. You let it all hang out.

Okay. Hands?

The gentleman in the back with his hand up just a little bit. mmm hmmm.

AUDIENCE VOICE. Which hand?

QUESTION: Thank you. Could use some suggestions on finding a good school for my son.

ANSWER: You want a name of a university?

QUESTION: Well he's not quite that old yet, but ... just the situation.

ANSWER: What are the choices that face you? What are the options that you are aware of?

QUESTION: To search for the school.

ANSWER: Let me put it this way: What is the dilemma?

QUESTION: It doesn't, does not seem appropriate for him to stay in public school. He needs a place where he can get good guidance - a place for him to heal.

ANSWER: Just a moment.

PAUL. This is me, Paul. He says this is not your real question.

QUESTION: Okay. I have another one. The first question that was asked today. You said some people ... you described a situation where a person might have a snake. What if they have a rattlesnake? What if they are aggressively hostile?

ANSWER: The snake or the individual?

QUESTION: Both of them.

ANSWER: Well you don't abandon your common sense in the name of spirituality. If they're hostile, and there is threat - as I said, 'sticks and stones', then you say "Stop," or you leave if they will not stop. Continue.

QUESTION: I'm ready to leave. I'd like to bring this to an end for this lifetime.

ANSWER: Then you must bring something new to it. You must be willing to make a gift instead of just receiving. To end it, to end it is never really done so as to embrace something new. To end it is always done as an act of denial of what you have, in the hope of something new. Uh uh. I can only be very simple with you here. As I've said before – whether you agree with me or not -- all of you, right now, are sitting smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinted up saying, "I cannot see the perfection." There's only one available experience for you. And it's the Kingdom of Heaven. If you're denying it here, you're going to deny it there. Because dying isn't suddenly going to change all of the little decisions that led up to the point where you were saying, "I can't see the Kingdom of Heaven, and I want to go somewhere else."

You're—you are going to have to bring something new to life to see more of what it really is, here or hereafter. And what you're going to have to give to life is the idea, a thought, "Maybe, there's something more than I'm seeing here." I'll tell you, there is more than you're seeing here. And all I am ever doing is, in one way or another, attempting to inspire you - and each one of you - to become a little curious about the more of reality that is staring you in the face right here today on planet earth.

You know, it's like the old-fashioned records that had track1, track2. You know you can flip from track to track, to track, but you're still on the same record. You gotta put a new record on the record player. Not just jump from track to track. You see? And again, the way you get unstuck is by finding some way to give. Even if it's simple curiosity to see more than you're seeing. Not more difficulties, not more hell, but more of the fundamentally intelligent stuff that has to be here in order for there to seem to be unintelligent stuff to look at. Something real has to be happening in order for you to exist to see something unreal.

So you've got to give something new.

QUESTION: Okay, I understand. Thank you.

ANSWER: You do?

QUESTION: I think so. Thank you.

ANSWER: And what hasn't sunk in will over the next day. I'm not saying it won't continue, but the fullness of it you can expect to continue to unfold to you as you go through this day and this evening.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You just thought you could get away with [laughter] raising your hand.

We will take a break.

Hands?

TRUSTING YOUR SELF

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: First I have just a short small question. I'm wondering if it was you or somebody else who first gave me that message that they would always be with me when I was younger.

ANSWER: Who me? [laughter] Yes, it was me.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'd like to say that I'm having a really good time waking up and I'm grateful for how easy it is. I'm just ... I'm having a blast. Its ...

ANSWER: I think I see daggers [laughter] coming at you from all directions.

QUESTION: There's one area in my life that I'm confused about, and that's my marriage. And I recently moved to a new city, and ... 2,600 miles away from my husband, and took a new job. And I'm so happy with where I am right now. And it was really easy for me to leave him there - he's still there - and to come up here because I felt it was right for me. And I'm - I find it often is easy for me to leave something in order to do something that feels better, and I don't know - sometimes it concerns me that I don't feel concerned when I do that.

ANSWER: This is the lady's problem over here who has to wait until things get really bad before she can justify happily accepting what feels good.

I understand what you're saying, but you know, you're very much in touch with yourself. And what you've done has been honest, rather than dishonest. You have been true - not to any measuring stick - but to yourself, and the move has not been a means of escaping something that you should be paying attention to. It's that simple.

QUESTION: Can you tell me if - will we end up back together? Do I even need to think about that?

ANSWER: Are you inclined to think about that?

QUESTION: Sometimes, and sometimes I'm not. I don't know. I don't think that I trust myself enough. I don't want to be over-confident and say that I really understand what's going on with that. I feel like it's really different than anything that I've done before. It feels like it should be more of a commitment, and I'm concerned that it would be too easy for me to say I don't want to be irresponsible, and when you say that we don't – I think you've said that we don't have to feel responsible? But I don't want to misunderstand that.

ANSWER: Your simple need is to keep the lines of communication open with him. You do not need to try to make anything happen. But with the lines of communication open, what needs to happen, what is appropriate will become obvious. And you will find yourself as freely embracing the obvious steps as you have been able to take the steps you've taken so far. You're not a thoughtless person. You're not an inconsiderate person. It's not your nature. It's not the way you behave. You just know yourself real well, and you're honest. Some people go through great processes in order to express themselves honestly, even though they knew in the beginning what was honest.

As I've said, keep the lines of communication open, and what you need to do will become obvious. What the two of you need to do will become obvious. Trust yourself. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. Yes, go ahead.

QUESTION: I think I'm slightly confused between two questions. I think what I want to ask is: can I trust in an upcoming time in my life, that things around school and my [unintelligible] will unfold. Can I relax and let it come? Or do I need to be - that's not my question. Can I trust that things will move and are happening, and that my choices in the last year within my relationships ... am I within God's will or am I in my ego? ... Am I ... How much of this decision I've made with Kintry is fear-based and how much is...

ANSWER: You can dare to trust. Yes, yes, yes. And the decision was not made with trust, so re-look at that. You know trust is so elementary -- such an elementary -- elemental part of waking up because all of you have been taught to rely on yourself - self-reliance. Self-reliance practiced means no one needs to practice trust. The practice of self-reliance is what has separated you from God. And it's responsible for quote "the dream". It's responsible for your ignorance of Truth.

Paul walks into this room, gets up into the chair, and abandons himself to trust. Trust into God knows what. If you're not trusting into God knows what, you're trusting into things you're already confident about, and that's not trust. It's confidence. If you want to wake up, if you want to experience transformation, if you want to find life becoming something you don't want to get out of, you have to dare to trust into God knows what. But when you really do that - when you put your ass on the line - that's what that means - trust. And the other side of the line is God knows what.

When you do that, you experience exactly what Paul experiences, an influx of the awareness of Truth.

it is always relevant to where you are and in language that you can understand. And if you don't practice trust, you won't become better and better at it.

QUESTION: So does that mean I have to let go of every idea that I have about...

ANSWER: Not until it's replaced by what you find yourself knowing as a result of trusting. Never just blindly abandon anything. Don't abandon anything until it's been replaced by something better. Don't replace any already existing ideas, or thoughts, or concepts that you have. Don't just throw them out. Don't abandon them until something better has replaced them.

QUESTION: Can you apply that to this idea that I feel like I've created about being alone? Is that just silly? Is it just bullshit?

ANSWER: Is it? I'm going to say something that someone else said: "If you knew the answer, what would it be?" [laughter] Is it bullshit?

QUESTION: I guess I feel like saying yes.

ANSWER: You're thinking too much.

QUESTION: Oh, always! It's bullshit, but I don't know where else to go[crying]

ANSWER: Okay! Now we're being real. Yes, it's bullshit! And you don't know where else to go? How wonderful. Your ass is on the line. You're at the edge of God knows what. Now instead of tensing up and becoming self-protective because you're on the edge of God knows what, be curious. Be willing to listen for what the 'what' is of the God knows what. You see? This is where the wonderful part happens, and you find you're not alone, because you get an answer. It's called the pregnant void. It's full. It's full. It seems empty. I don't know! I don't know! My problem is I don't know!

The answer is that you don't know. Not the problem. The answer is "I don't know". And so, because you don't know, you can stop trying to know. You can stop trying to know something you don't know. You can be quiet, and you can say, "God, will you show me?"

You see what I'm saying? You cry because ... because you've got this problem that you don't know what the answer is. And all of you would benefit greatly by being willing to recognize the truth of the statement. I don't know. That's a truth, a positive truth. Not a problem. It's not a negative. You know the saying, you can't get blood from a turnip, or rather, from a stone. Right? Well if you don't know, you can't get an answer from the place that doesn't know. Can you?

So, you can give up thinking you ought to know. You can give up trying to know. You can give up acting like you do know so that nobody else will know that you don't know. And there is a freedom in being able to say to somebody, "You know. I don't know." Just like Paul told someone earlier; he doesn't know when the problem on the website will be solved. He could feel guilty for not knowing. And he could think he ought to be able to get it taken care of quickly, but the fact is, he can't, and he doesn't know.

There's great freedom from guilt, freedom from stress, in recognizing that the relieving answer is, you don't know. Because now you can stop trying to know, and you can dare to ask, and listen for the answer, which will be provided to you because the space isn't filled up with you trying to be something you aren't. You see that?]

When the you that is trying to be something it isn't stops trying to be it, there's a void in you, an openness in you that God can fill. And that's where the wonder of it happens. And that's the whole point of my talking with any of you through the years is to get you to value that place in you where you don't know. And instead of feeling like a failure at not knowing, embrace that emptiness, without guilt, and say the only prayer that is worth saying, "Fill me today with all Thou art, God. Fill me with what You know. Fill me with what I need to know." And then listen, because in that empty space, it's easy for the answer to rush in. You see? But that takes trust.

I'm trying to explain to you why trust is a valid thing to employ. So again, don't throw anything out the window until it's been replaced by something better. Don't throw common sense out the window in the name of spiritual growth and do wild, exotic, metaphysical things. Don't throw anything out until it's been replaced by something better.

QUESTION: Does 'I don't know.' qualify in every regard for something better?

ANSWER: Absolutely. Always work, always work with what you're familiar with and with the rules as you know them. But always let there be a part of you that wants to know beyond the rules, beyond the present way of seeing things, so that you leave space for insight to occur. So that you then may use that insight as your new common sense.

Ultimately, ultimately why would you want to rely on anything other than pure - the pure infilling of God's point of view, in you, on an ongoing basis.

But until that's happening all the time, stick with your common sense. Just don't become trapped in it.

Paul listens or inquires of me frequently, but not all the time, and I am encouraging him to do it all the time. I have spoken about this before. He is unwilling to do it all the time yet. It feels frightening to him. It feels like he will lose his identity. Even though the fact that he is in communion with me at this moment, and stays in communion with me [Jesus] for 45 minutes to an hour at a time, and [gap in tape, probably 'doesn't lose'] his identity, that still doesn't convince him to let go and be with me all the time. So when he's not listening to me, he uses his best common sense. When he's with me, we flow in the movement of creativity, and he finds himself always appropriate, and always meaningful, whether he's being with me in a group setting or whether he's being with me driving a car. He finds that if he's being with me while he drives the car, he's always going the speed limit, without ever thinking about the speed limit. And he's always able to respond to whatever is happening in the traffic smoothly, easily, flexibly. But most of all, he's not where great flexibility is ever needed, because he's in the flow of fulfillment for everyone on the freeway in his [?]

So, you see, use your common sense until it's replaced with something better. And let there be an ongoing curiosity to know the something better, the something more, so that you make room for influx of inspiration to occur. You see?

QUESTION: Should I specifically -- I'm a little thrown by what you said regarding my relationship with Kintry, and ...

ANSWER: I said that your decision arose out of fear.

QUESTION: Right. Now ...

ANSWER: I am saying now re-look at it without fear. It doesn't mean the answer will be different. You just need to be sure you're looking at it, but not through the lens of fear. And I'm going to let you just abide with that, and I want you to let inspiration occur. And I want you to leave a space in you for it to occur by recognizing that the solution to your problem of not knowing is that you don't know. Because now that you know you don't know, you can ask, and be open for an answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: I will tell you something. Getting the answer is an experience of bliss. Not earthshaking. Not with choirs of angels singing, but with quiet, peaceful bliss. So you have something to look forward to. Okay.

Hands?

QUESTION: Thanks Raj. Every time I come here, I have a question, and then I was talking to somebody earlier ... it changes and evolves every time I listen to somebody's question and answer. So I want to thank everybody for answering a lot of my questions as we go through the day. What I'd like to know is: I've been having some events happen to me of recent, and I'm feeling okay with it. I just don't want my ego to get in the way. I'm having certain doors shut, as I make a decision to what I think ... make my worth known, and as my worth is, as I project what I think I'm worth out there, the door shuts. So then, hey, I'm not supposed to be there. And I'm wondering, is that my ego? Or am I being driven to a particular place outside of my particular direction?

ANSWER: You are simply being provided with the opportunity to prove whether you mean it or not.

QUESTION: Whether I mean what I think I'm worth?

ANSWER: Exactly.

QUESTION: Ohh. Okay. So ...

ANSWER: Will you back down?

QUESTION: Will I back down? from what I'm worth?

ANSWER: Will you say you're worth less just so you can get approval?

QUESTION: I have in the past. And I think I'm getting to the point where I'm finally, hopefully starting to trust that if I do put it out there, that I'm either going to be given an opportunity to have what I think I'm worth, or have something new.

ANSWER: Exactly.

QUESTION: And I guess what I don't want to - where I don't want to make the mistake in this is my ... is making a decision that 'Gee, I'm going to be driven -- like for instance --back to the Island. And I don't want to be inappropriate in rushing that process, for ... specifically between Nick and myself. And ...because I don't think he's ready for that. He's finally starting to get to the point where he's comfortable, and I don't want to make a decision that cuts me loose from everything in town here that then would make me possibly want to go back to the Island, and then intrude on him. Yet I do feel that there's things out there that need to be cultivated. I just don't want to rush it.

ANSWER: That's why you're thinking too much, also.

QUESTION: Okay

ANSWER: You literally have no problem to discuss.

QUESTION: I guess it's not a problem, no. I just ... I guess when it boils down to it, I'm really quite open to do what's happening, because I'm finally starting to get a little more relaxed in the idea

ANSWER: I will tell you something. You're actually beginning to become a little humble, even though a statement of your worth seems to be the antithesis of humility. To know that you are valuable is an awareness that can only come in the presence of humility. A lot of arrogance has slipped from your shoulders, and you're benefitting from the loss of weight. Be patient as it transforms your world, because you're giving something new to the world.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. Hands?

LOVING OUR WORLD

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. I want to thank everybody too, I have totally changed by question from the beginning. [laughter]

ANSWER: [laughter]

QUESTION: Could you please explain to me Raj - my greatest passion is this planet.

ANSWER: Is what?

QUESTION: This planet. I totally adore this planet, the forests, the oceans, and everything. Could you explain to me how it works. The spirit ... are there really fairies and [laughter] and elves? And I would love to talk to - not 'to' - I don't talk 'to' trees and animals, but how do I talk with them? Thank you.

ANSWER: Invite it. Be open to it, just like you would be open to listening to your guide. Yes, there are elementals. Yes there are those who are awake, whose attention, whose attention, whose care is connected to everything on this planet, just like your guide is with you. The elementals can speak to you, but also, so can the plants themselves, the leaves themselves, the bugs themselves. Every single thing, even the artificial leaf on this tree has the means of conveying to you its meaning - its divine meaning, if you will open up to it. The Spirit of God is consciously connected with absolutely everything, even atomically and what you would call sub-atomically. And the connection of Spirit is always a Presence of Intelligence, which is capable of sharing the intelligence that it is. Are elementals ultimately real? Well, let me ask you this: Are you, as homo sapiens, ultimately real? No, because you don't exist as homo sapiens, an animal on this planet. You exist as the Presence of God, of Mind, in which the Presence of all things is embraced as a conscious idea, and to whom ideas are perfectly substantial because they are ideas in Mind.

Are guides real? No, because guides and guidance are a concept that makes sense to you, that bridges the gap between your current ignorance and your actual ability to be truly aware, without ignorance of any kind.**

Those who act as guides are actually full-fledged brothers, equals. You might say brothers and sisters, whose existence in God's sight is not that of being a guide. And so the elementals in God's sight are not taking care of part of the material world, or parts of the material world. They are, in God's sight, and in actuality, inseparable from, and they know they are inseparable from every single object that you see in your world. But until everyone is awake, you will see the divine relationship between the Source and the manifestation of the Source, we will say, God and his infinite manifestation. You will see that relationship, which only seems to be separated into two because of your current ignorance; you will see that relationship as the presence of guides or elementals. Or the Presence of Spirit, which is Intelligence that is able to express and illuminate its intelligence in a manner that helps to bring the distance between the Source and the manifestation of the Source back together. Do you see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Sort of.

ANSWER: God is infinite Mind, and God's infinite Mind, in order to function, must be aware of something. Being all there is, all there is for it to be aware of is Itself, infinitely. And so creation is Mind experiencing Itself infinitely—forever, you might say.

At the end of the first chapter of Genesis it says, "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good. What that really means is that God beheld everything that he had made, and "Behold, it was verily Himself, God." That recognition - that self recognition - is what constitutes the conscious experience of being. And that conscious connection is a connection of Love, Self-appreciation you might say. Therefore, there is this constant interchange of Love between Mind and that of which Mind is aware, which is Itself, infinitely speaking.

Now, when you seem to have lost the infinite view, and you have misperceptions of Reality, it seems that things are divided up into 'me', and 'not me', this and that, distinct and separate from each other.

Well, what happens when that occurs is that this intercommunion of Love in the singleness of the Unity of God is seen as love from one thing to another, or from God to each thing, or as elementals to particular plants, and so on. The infinite caring and appreciation that is really Self recognition with a capital S is seen infinitely as fairies and the various elementals and so on.

So, I want you to know that you can - whether it's an animate or an inanimate object - you can listen for whatever it is to convey the meaning of its existence to you. You can listen for and hear the elementals just as you can listen for and hear your guide.

Now all of the experiences that you can have are valuable; but the most valuable is to hear your guide. Because it's not the purpose of the elementals to help you wake up, and it is your guides purpose to help you wake up. Yes?

QUESTION: I didn't mean that. Where I was aiming was that - am I with my love for the planet, am I helping?

ANSWER: Absolutely. Appreciation is so essential with everything. Earlier, a question was asked about feeling loneliness. One of the gifts you have to share is gratitude. Find something to be grateful for. That's a gift. That's an extension. The minute you actually feel some gratitude, it isn't because you have gratitude that starts somewhere in you. It's because if you're feeling gratitude, it's because you cared enough to let the influx of the Father's Love through you. So, I wanted to point that out.

Gratitude, appreciation, love for something, reverence for something, all of these things validate the worth of what is being appreciated. And everything thrives.

QUESTION: So am I helping deforestation by going and praying to the trees and loving them?

ANSWER: Every single thing you do that is an active gesture of love and appreciation and honoring helps immeasurably.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: What I want is for everyone to dare to have a passion to do the same thing for the person sitting next to you. I'm not undermining or discounting what you're saying.

There is a lot of talk - a lot of willingness to scare yourselves to death around the Y2K issue. That shouldn't scare you nearly as much as loving your brother. And rather than there being increasing opportunities for economic collapse on your planet, you are going to have increasing opportunity to justify loving each other.

And what that means is that in some ways you will find more unpleasant people to deal with. And what that means is that there will be more unhappy people less hidden away, and you will be more conscious of them. And what you need to understand is that it's a call for Love and not a call for defense.

It's a call for you to be what you've already been wanting to be or you wouldn't be here this afternoon. So don't look at it as though the world's going to hell in a hand-basket.

Actually the world is coming up to the surface to be loved and healed. Because a call for Love isn't frightening any of you.

It's wonderful to be with you. And I look forward to the next time.

QUESTION: Thank you.

Gathering In Kingston, WA –10/10/1999

By: Raj Christ Jesus -

RAJ [A.] Good afternoon. It is good to see all of you here today. Who would like to start?

ANSWER: You are particularly radiant today.

QUESTION: Thank you. Thank you Raj, for your everlastingness, and for your guidance....

ANSWER: It is just as everlasting as your everlastingness.

QUESTION: But I didn't get that before [joyous laughter]. And for your guidance to Paul too.... for these three Sundays. For me, it's been really big breakthrough of - the three Sundays - and kind of a – you said to someone else last time to put a sign on your mirror to receive your good. And we did - it wasn't for us but - it was for us so we did, and it's just like ... I ...like falling off that wall, like Humpty Dumpty, you know? And ... and letting your good in, and being so good at seeing denial in other people, and when my own just ... [whoosh noise], you know. So I just thank you for that.

And part of the good - the question - is about just - part of the good is just like ... ah ... part of it's in my very foundation, and part of it is in ah ... possibilities for being able to live a different way through possible either expansion or sale of our business, which is just like a mind-blowing kind of thing, and [whoosh] is there anything?

ANSWER: Good. Good is always mind-blowing if it's really good.

QUESTION: Yes! Yes!

ANSWER: Because in order to let it in, you have to let go of what's in your mind.

QUESTION: Ah yes!

ANSWER: You have to be willing to let something new take the place of what you have filled your mind with.

QUESTION: Yeah [whispered].

ANSWER: Continue.

QUESTION: Yes! That's it and ... okay, so asking for advice in - thank you for saying that part about the everlastingness that goes both ways, but - just whatever advice you could give to us during this time.

I called my sister-in-law after this operation, and - because I know she's going to say to me "Just don't get cocky." when I feel so great, you know, and I feel like I could just take off. And ... ah ... I kind of feel like maybe you have some words on that for us all ...

ANSWER: Well first of all, you say "some words of advice during this time"

QUESTION: [Laughing] Forever!

ANSWER: You see, when you say "this time" you are identifying a fixed amount of time in which - actually, you're asking for advice as to how to gracefully embrace your good during this time. And I want you to let it be timeless. If you let it be timeless, then it can't be special.

QUESTION: Ah.

ANSWER: If it's timeless, if you will allow, if you will not specialize it, then it will be natural forever. If it is not special, you will not get cocky. Who gets cocky over something that is utterly normal.

QUESTION: Yeah.

ANSWER: You get cocky over specialness - either your own or the time, and there's always a flip side to specialness. There's always a flip side to that which you can get revved about. And that is often called disaster, suffering, it's the flip side of joy. One of the characteristics of the Kingdom of Heaven is that it's so damn natural.

And you know - I talk about this quite frequently - when you get to the bottom of the barrel, and you give up, that's where you get your first taste - I'm talking about genuinely giving up, abandoning all, all reserved feelings of a capacity you have to succeed at whatever needs to be dealt with.

When you totally give up, that's when you get your first taste of Heaven. And you get it in this way. You end up having an experience that's utterly genuine. When you give up, you end up being very straight. You don't mince words. Usually, it's because you're too exhausted to put on a nice front. But in the relief of having given up, you don't bring into play any grievance. You just say, "Here I am, take me, or leave me."

That's called groundedness. That's called sanity. You don't feel special. You don't care to feel special. You don't care whether anyone else thinks you're special. You just say, "[click, sigh] Here I am. I have no energy to be anything else."

Because this usually happens after you have sunk to the bottom of the barrel, which has been an unpleasant experience, your willingness to be genuine isn't always filled with joy. But the relief of no longer trying to be what you're not feels very good. That's your first taste of being real yourself.

There's nothing special about it, but there is an experience of the value, and, I'm going to say capital M in Meaningfulness of being able to be really you. And if you don't try to get out of that place. If you don't say, "Okay, for a day or so I'm going to be in this place, but as I get my energy back, I'm going to try to climb to the top of the barrel again."

If you will let yourself stay there, you will find your life being transformed. You will find things happening that you're not responsible for that are far more fulfilling than things you might have taken responsibility for. You will find things working well. You will find things unexpected - but fulfilling - coming into your life. And if you haven't left that place, it will all feel utterly normal.

This is what it is all about. This is why I am with you, is to help you daily, gently insist upon letting go of your capacity to authorize your good into your experience, and to say, "I give up, God. What is Your Will." You see?

QUESTION: Yes. Thank you.

ANSWER: You see, the barrel is full of your own garbage.

QUESTION: [Laughter]

ANSWER: And your own garbage pushes you to the bottom. It's not the world out there that does it. Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands?

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj, for being here today, and giving me the opportunity to speak. I give particular thanks for what you probably just described, but I'm going to ask for further clarity.

Anne was admitted to the 'hutch' this week.

ANSWER: Pardon?

QUESTION: Anne, my wife, was admitted to the 'hutch' this week for ... with platelets of 1000...

ANSWER: I'm sorry?

QUESTION: Anne, my wife, was admitted to the 'hutch' this week with platelets of 1000. It can't be any lower.

PAUL. I'm sorry. This is me, Paul. She was admitted to the 'hutch'?

QUESTION: Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center..

PAUL. Oh, okay

QUESTION: I beg your pardon. It's a medical term. Today she woke up with platelets of 70,000 which is more than a half of average. I asked her before I came what question she would ask of you. She asked, what is it that she should, or could, be remembering at this time? As it would seem from the outside, she's looking outside, but obviously, she's searching inside. Then I would ask also of myself ...

ANSWER: Well, I'll let you ask for yourself in a moment. Who told her that she's looking for something 'outside'? Who told her there was an 'outside'. I'm not asking you to respond here. God is All. There is no outside to God. If she's in the 'hutch', she's in the middle of God. God is what is going on there. If she thinks she's in a body, she's in the middle of God because God is there. The care that is afforded her, the attendance that is given to her, is all God. Or, she can give it some other definition if she wishes, but her definition will be part of the garbage that will push her to the bottom, you see? That's ... that is the garbage that all of you bury yourselves in – are definitions you give to God that say it's something other than God.

I encourage her to honor everything around by acknowledging that if there's anything there at all, it must be the Presence of God, and not what she has been told it is, and not what she has imagined it is. I've said before that Love is the willingness to recognize that which is real in each and every - what? THING. [tapping on something] Not each and every idea, you see?

Bring God right down to earth, if you will. Love is the willingness to recognize God in each and every thing. If she does that, then there won't be any place for anything apparently unreal to reside. If it's all God, then obviously, the realization of the Allness of God in everything around her, the realization of it will appear to be everything configuring to identify the perfection of her being, and everything in her experience. And so it might appear that those attending to her do something utterly right. You see? Or she might do something utterly right. To think that there's an inside and an outside is the same as thinking that there's Spirit and matter.

A moment ago I said, "Love is the willingness to recognize that which is real in each and every thing. Not an idea, but a thing. I meant that in the sense of bringing your embrace of God down to earth, as I said. But the simple fact is that everything that you see is an idea.

It is Spirit. The substance of it is Spirit. If there appears to be anything going on here at all that you call form, it has to be God, and if it's God, it has to be Mind experiencing Itself. And what Mind experiences are ideas. Every single one of you are an idea of God that embodies all that God is. So an idea of God is never a part of God, it's all of God.

So there's no hospital that is a material building with individuals who are practicing material processes. Certainly you can conceive that that's what it is, but if there's anything there at all, it has to be God. And if she will begin to define every single thing there as God appearing, no matter what ... If she says, "No matter what I think this is, it must be God appearing." Then she's going to begin to find everything beginning to identify Love in her experience. And Love heals.

I can't get any more practical than this, on a daily basis, relating to each other, there has to begin to be an increasing willingness to look at your neighbour, or your partner, or your boss, or your cat or dog, or the car. And say, "In spite of my experience of these people, these places, these things, and what I am sure they are, God is what is appearing here. God is what is being here. And I want to know what God is being. Not what I think is being there." That's what heals your vision and lets in more of Reality in your daily life. You're healed, and the one you have been willing to see God in is healed. You could call it a practice, but it's just really paying attention to Reality, with a capital R.

You've got to start doing this. You've got to start being this attitude, on a daily basis with each other. It's what's going to transform the world. It's what's going to heal your friend. You see? You had a second part to your question?

QUESTION: Yes. I wanted to first clear ... I thought the Course said illness was evidence of seeking outwardly rather than being at ease within, searching in? And that's what the confusion. I'm not sure I understand what the Course meant and what ... but I understood what you meant, and so that - we'll leave it at that.

ANSWER: No, let's not leave it at that.

QUESTION: If I quoted the Course right ... I don't know, but that's what my understanding ...

ANSWER: You are correct. Yes, you are correct. There is a difference between looking at your world and saying, "I want to see God there." - there's a difference between being willing to see God in each and every thing, and going out to each and every thing to find out from it how you are.

In other words, someone gets up in the morning. He's married. And he waits for the first utterance from his wife to find out what her attitude is today, so he can know how to be. You see? That's looking out there—to learn about yourself, to learn about how you should be, to learn about how you ought to behave to save your ass, you see?

QUESTION: Oh, yes.

ANSWER: That's ... that's looking out there. But if you wake up in the morning, and you roll over in bed, and you look at your wife before and regardless of anything she says, and you are willing to gently and lovingly say, "If there's anything happening there at all, it must be the Presence of God being what God is. And I want to know what that is."

That's an entirely different thing. The tendency can be - if you're saying there's no world out there - you know, don't look out there, to discount everything instead of embracing it in a curiosity to see God there. And that's a very important difference. Okay.

QUESTION: That's very helpful. My question is: there's a strange peace within me that did not panic, and does not seem to panic when the doctor says, "Call your children. She's so close, it could go either way." My sense was, 'what does that mean?' I didn't panic. But my other voice, whatever, said, why aren't you panicked? What is it about you that ... are you so numb that you're not ... you know I'm ... you know ... I'm playing the game. So my sense ... my question is, is my sense of peace in this particular case and particularly with our relationship, quote unquote. Am I sensing it truly? Or am I numb and need to wake up or something ... I'll leave it at that.

ANSWER: I'm going to tell you something. If you were suddenly full of panic, I would suggest that you get a shot to relax you, because whether the relaxation is real or not, in that degree of peace you can access your real peace. If you're experiencing any kind of peace, it's extremely valuable. You're getting help with your peace. Peace is being given to you so that you might be able to feel Love more fully, which is what heals. You see?

It's only strange to feel peace in what - in the past - you would have called tense circumstances because that hasn't become normal to you yet. But it's utterly normal to feel peace at all times, no matter what is happening.

In fact, it's essential to feel it, no matter what's happening because that's what allows you to have the capacity to recognize what is truly needed. That's what allows you to have the capacity to be the place where intelligence comes forth, which would have been blocked by panic. You see? Or worry. Or fear. Say thank you God that you are experiencing this strange peace.

QUESTION: Thank you God. Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands? The lady without her hand up in the purple top. Yes?

QUESTION: How did you know? [laughing]

ANSWER: What did you say?

QUESTION: I said, "How did you know?"

ANSWER: [laughter] If you'll hold the mike up ...

QUESTION: Yeah. Sorry. My daughter Judy and I are knowing there's another step we must take together. We now have a center for A Course in Miracles We do not know what is next. You said it had to be something new and something different. I was wondering if we could get any kind of a clue from you.

ANSWER: Why do you say you must do something new and different?

QUESTION: Well, you just said it this ... in the last ... in the other question. You said when you get to the bottom, it's gotta be something different.

ANSWER: Ah. But the something different is what's left for you to do when you don't have any energy to do anything artificial.

QUESTION: Oh.

ANSWER: It's ... the thing to do is to be the genuine one that you find you are when you're all through with being something you aren't. It's you being the Presence of Love in whatever form, in any given moment, that it might take. Go on.

QUESTION: [laughing a little] I was waiting for you. I just wanted ... you been telling ... you've been telling me that we have to be patient; it's right around the corner, any time now. We have been patient for a long time. I just thought you might have some news for us.

ANSWER: Well, I'm going to be very frank with you. It's time for you to take off the shirt that says "A Course in Miracles".

QUESTION: That's what I thought you'd say.

ANSWER: You know what? If you do that, it doesn't mean that your presence won't express the meaning of the Course, but it will be ... it will come from the Love that is in you because God is in you, and not something that is in you because you got it out of a book.

ANSWER: Course in Miracles is not about A Course in Miracles. A Course in Miracles is about learning how to let love in by recognizing what the blocks to love are. You've got the Love. Let what you are being come from that which you are. And take off the identifiers. ACIM sweatshirt, the format as it were. Do you see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yeah, I do.

ANSWER: What the world needs is not A Course in Miracles. What the world needs is the Love that A Course in Miracles promotes the discovery of within each of you. You see? I know you know that.

QUESTION: Yeah.

ANSWER: But you need a little push to let go of the crutch - the sweatshirt that lets everyone know who you are. Well that's not who you are. Who you are is the nice lady underneath the sweatshirt. The idea of God that's underneath - the Presence of God that is the Source and impulse of Love Itself. And then, when you're coming from that Love, use the Course too, but don't let it be what defines or gives identity to you.

It's who you divinely are. It's who you really are that needs to be let out.
Not a system of thought. The Course, if the Course works, causes you to defend your own definitions of everything so much that the garbage gets heavier and heavier on you till you get pushed to the bottom and say "Uncle." Or say "God." [Softly] "Thy will be done." And then [sigh] in the you that's underneath the sweatshirt you find your capacity to be the Presence of Love that couldn't be taught to you, because it already was your Self.

QUESTION: Thank you. I guess I already knew that.

ANSWER: You did, but as I said you needed a little ...

QUESTION: I needed a push.

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Thank you. [laughing]

ANSWER: You are welcome. It's appropriate for you to be feeling joy and freedom in what you do. And there's really nothing stopping you from being that and feeling that. I'm very glad you're here today.

QUESTION: Thank you. I'm glad too.

QUESTION: Hello Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: What I want to ask today ... the lady I had here with me last time, she's an angel, but we enjoy each other very much when we're together, but something always comes up when we have an arrangement to meet. Like today. Her family came from Florida.

ANSWER: [laugh] and she couldn't come to the Gathering. She is no stranger to me, even though I just met her couple months ago. I don't feel she's a stranger at all, and I just ... what is going on here. Why can't I get together with her?

ANSWER: This is just something about her that you're going to have to live with.

QUESTION: I kinda figured that. [audience laughter]

ANSWER: She doesn't like being pinned down.

QUESTION: I know that. [laugh] And that's all it is, hey?

ANSWER: That's it exactly.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: [Laugh] Okay.

ANSWER: Don't even think about trying to change her.

QUESTION: Well I haven't been, believe me.

ANSWER: [Laugh]. Good.

PEACE OR REACTION?

QUESTION: Hi.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I am deeply appreciative for more and more moments in my life when I feel like I'm in my peace - very much so. So much of that comes from hearing you and perhaps having your presence in my life. But I continue to be disturbed by those times when this emotional stuff, this reactivity, this anger or ...

ANSWER: Spontaneous responsiveness!

QUESTION: Yeah. Just blahhh! And then there's ... I'm not in my peace any more. I am perhaps watching it but it feels like I lost it. And I'm asking for some help when those moments come - for how I can deal with that.

ANSWER: Well, I will tell you that your guide is always present with you, and others are present with you in conjunction with your guide. And I want you to daily ask, when you get up in the morning, of your guide, and those working with your guide, to help you recognize when you are engaging or about to engage responsiveness, so that they might help you spontaneously in the moment make another choice. The simple fact is that you won't stop being reactive until something else is more important to you than being reactive.

I know you feel a lot of satisfaction. You get a 'hit' from it.

QUESTION: Well, that's the way I've coped and survived in the past.

ANSWER: Yes what it's like is having alcohol. When you have alcohol, it disallows you from hearing guidance. It disallows you from experiencing your peace and your clarity. If you want clarity and if you want your guidance available to you, it will be no problem for you not to have a drink. If having your clarity and peace of mind available to you is more important, then you won't employ reaction.

You think reaction is something that happens to you, but it's something you employ - every single one of you. You employ it. And you won't stop until you stop.

Now, you can get help; as I said, you can ask for help, and the help will be given, but it won't be done for you. Nothing will happen until it's more important for you to have your peace and clarity. Until that's more important than the satisfaction you get from reacting. Sooner or later, you're going to discover that reaction is a waste of time and energy. I'm sorry, there is no profound metaphysical or spiritual answer to this. It really, for all of you, is a behavioural thing, and it's based on what kind of a desire you have. Do you desire to be the Presence of Love? Do you desire to be clear? Do you realize the value of peace? Peace is the threshold of enlightenment. Peace is the threshold of fulfilment. Peace is the threshold of joy. Peace is the threshold of waking up.

I'm being real straight with you. You'll muck around in reaction as long as you want to, and when you don't want to, you won't do it anymore, and it won't take effort. That's it.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Help stands available to you constantly. It just can't do what you must do for you. Hands?

QUESTION: Thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

THE RESTS BETWEEN THE MUSIC OF LIFE

QUESTION: I wanted to say how much I'm enjoying being here today, and the last session when I came. I'm really enjoying your humor. And I have one question, and it concerns my wife and I ANSWER: You didn't enjoy my straight talk?

QUESTION: [Laugh] I thought it was all funny. [Laughter] Okay. My wife and I have just started to -- what we thought we were being directed to do - to do some teaching. Started off marvellously, so we thought, but then it stopped. And my mind wants to get in there and try and figure out what happened and what should happen, and why and grrrrgrrrrgrrrr and I'm wondering if you have any words about that?

ANSWER: I would suggest that you don't take the bait. It's like the violas in the orchestra, and they play a long phrase measures, and then 32 bars of rest. Well, how come we can't play now? Did we do something wrong? We're being punished? No. It just isn't the time for that tonal quality to be present in the full orchestra, you see? In the tapestry of the music, ask: What am I to be doing now? What's the Father's will in this moment? What identities fulfilment now? And don't try to hold it to the pattern that occurred before the 32 measures of rest, you see?

Gee. Are they paying me to sit here and do nothing? Yes, they are! You're here to ... to be what the Father wills you to be when the Father wills you to be doing - being it. And then you are there to be what the Father is willing you to be for 32 measures of silence. You see? Of course your ego says, "When this happens to other teachers, they do such and such and such and such, you know? They get in touch with their mailing list. They make some personal phone calls. They ... you see what I'm saying? And it says, "Get in there, and do something."

Well, if that's not what's written into this measure, and what's there is a full rest, if you don't want to mess up the symphony, you'd better shut up. You'd better sit there and rest, you see? This is important because it's uncovering to you the degree to which you're conditioned to be authoritative in your life - to be in charge. Don't do anything till the Father says, "Do it." And if the Father says, "Sit still. Shut up." Say "Okay." Until He says, "Stand up. Open your mouth," or whatever.

It's important to get the feel of being in the flow of the Movement of God. It's important to get the feel for being in the movement of your capital B, Being. So this is very helpful. Everything is perfect.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome. See, teachers know when to speak, and teachers know when to shut up. And it takes a combination of both to be a good teacher. So maybe you're learning about how to be a teacher, not an authority. Okay. Hands?

BE CURIOUS TO SEE WHAT GOD IS REALLY DOING

Or

CURIOSITY

QUESTION: Good afternoon Raj.

ANSWER: Good afternoon.

QUESTION: I've been sitting on my questions, as you probably well know. I have the most burning ANSWER: I hope it didn't hurt.

QUESTION: [laugh] The most burning problem that I have is a friend that owes me a lot of money and he's had all kinds of personal problems, ongoingly, stories. And I don't know whether ... I've been advised to turn this whole matter over to an attorney, and then I've flip-flopped the other way and think that, you, know, just leave it up to God. And I keep flip-flopping back and forth. And I really ...

ANSWER: Which of the flips or flops is more peaceful?

QUESTION: That changes too. [laughing] Sometimes I feel at peace with just letting it be, and know that he'll come through when he can. And other times I have actually felt at peace when I thought that I should call an attorney. So one time when I was advised to do that, I felt, "Okay." and then, when I was on my way home, it was like I hear this voice saying, "Crucify him, crucify him." I don't want to do that, you know. So I really can't seem to ...

ANSWER: Who? Who holds your welfare in His hands?

QUESTION: Who ...

ANSWER: Who holds your welfare in His hands?

QUESTION: Well, God holds my abundance in His hands.

ANSWER: Yes. So this gentleman, this person, is not withholding your welfare from you. And only if you felt he possessed your welfare would you need to take legal steps. You see?

QUESTION: I see. I think it's this feeling that comes over me, a feeling of being conned, and then I ... the ego ... [laughing]. When my ego starts talking to me, then I feel like I should do that. I'll trust God in the matter then, which is really what I want to do anyway.

ANSWER: That's the way miracles happen. And lawsuits are not.

QUESTION: Yes! I believe that. The other burning question that I have is, a year or so ago, I felt very - it was very urgent for me to sell my house and move. And now it doesn't feel very urgent. I'm wondering if I should sell and ... like where should I go? Should I? When? Where?

ANSWER: Wait for the movement. The movement isn't there now.

QUESTION: It isn't there now. Okay. Good.

ANSWER: When the movement begins, you'll be able to see the direction in which the movement is moving. And you won't have to ask, "Well, where?"

QUESTION: I see. Okay the other thing I have is with physical ...

ANSWER: What I want you to notice is that the answer to both of your questions so far involve trust in the way things work - the way things work in Reality.

QUESTION: In the real Reality. Yes.

ANSWER: Yes. And of course, we're talking today about bringing Reality down to earth. The willingness to recognize your good in each and every thing, instead of pie in the sky after you die.

QUESTION: Right. Right.

ANSWER: Okay. Continue.

QUESTION: Okay. The other problem I have is with a lot of stuff I have going on with my body... And I told Frances Reiter [??] I was looking at it, and thinking, well what is it? You know, like my eyes – macular degeneration, hearing loss, allergies, sore throat, cough. And I thought, "Oh, well most of it's in my head." And I had to laugh because that has such a double meaning But also with my right [laughter] - also with my right foot, with my big toe and my arch. So I kind of wondered if you have any advice for me?

ANSWER: Yes. As I said earlier today, look at and contemplate each part of your body, and employ the curiosity to experience the Presence of God there.

QUESTION: Okay.

ANSWER: Because if there's anything going on there called eardrum, or eyeballs, or big toes, or arches - whatever. If anything's going on there, it has to be God.

QUESTION: To recognize all that as God.

ANSWER: And God is the spontaneous expression of perfection - flawless. So what you want is the experience of the flawlessness of the Presence of God, right there where you are. What you're interested in is your body identifying the Presence of God - and therefore, you - perfectly. Right?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Yes. So, have a curiosity to experience more and more and more of that, rather than occupying your mind with fretting about this and that and the other thing that's deteriorating, and wondering, "Is it going to get worse? Is it going to stabilize? Well, I hope that at least it will hold off a little while." And so on. All the thoughts that occur. That's not a good use of your mind, and won't lead to the clearer experience of your physical perfect.

Of course, you can expect 'physical perfection' quote, at your age, and longer. It's as much your birthright as it was when you were seven. And regeneration is as natural to you now as when you were seven, scratched yourself, and two days later there was nothing there to see.

QUESTION: Yeah.

ANSWER: You see?

QUESTION: Yeah. So just look at each thing that's going on, and experience it as the movement of God.

ANSWER: And be curious as you would as a flower is opening that you haven't seen before. And you pay attention because you don't want to miss a thing.

You don't want to miss a single part of its blossoming. Pay - you pay attention with interest.

QUESTION: Okay. I think I got that.

ANSWER: So you pay attention to your body with interest to see it fulfill its function, which is to identify you perfectly. And that will mean healing. That's what you will be interested in observing.

QUESTION: Yes. Okay. Well thank you Raj.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands.

QUESTION: Thank you, Raj. It's a joy to be here today, as usual. My wife and I have a business. A company we think has offered, or will offer to license the products. And, I guess I've probably gotten some answers today on this whole thing, but I wonder if you might ... if you have some thoughts on it, I would sure appreciate it. Whether we should – if the company is for real - you know that sort of thing.

ANSWER: Yes, it is for real, and it is worth giving your attention to.

QUESTION: Thank you very much.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands?

GROWING PAINS

QUESTION: Raj, I wonder if you could give me some insight as to what's going on with my grandson - why he's having the behavioural problems that he's having and what we can do to help?

ANSWER: What you can do to help is to provide on-going support, ongoing expressed appreciation for him, for who he is. He is feeling uncomfortable in his skin, so to speak. Changes are occurring and he's not feeling immediate confidence in himself. Transformation, you might say, is occurring. And he's not experiencing it gracefully. He's experiencing it with trepidation. He needs to have communicated to him a lot of love and a lot of support for who he finds himself to be at that - at whatever moment another is giving him support, because, under the circumstances, he doesn't feel himself as being lovable, and so he's not sure of himself.

PAUL. Just a moment. This is me, Paul. The picture Raj is giving is that it's sort of like a - it's sort of like a caterpillar who's made a chrysalis, and now it's time to emerge from the cocoon, or the chrysalis, and it's -- you know, it's like cramped quarters and ... and uncomfortableness with that, an effort, and so on, to emerge. And actually, it's like - it's part of a birth process, and he just needs to know he's in a safe environment while he does this, and that people aren't doubting him in the way he's doubting himself. He's - this is still me, Paul - he's emerging - he's in a process of emerging into a clearer sense of himself, and now Raj is picking up.

ANSWER: Which means that he is not going to gather his sense of himself from those around him. And to those around him, it might appear that he's becoming more independent, and so trust will be needed on the part of those around him. What everyone needs to know is that this is a natural, normal process that does not call for concern. That's the end of the answer.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: I'd also like to ask: As a teenager, I felt a hand on my shoulder, and I've never forgotten that. It was wonderful. And I - could I ask who that was?

ANSWER: That was your guide.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Who still has his hand on your shoulder often. Okay. Hands?

JUST DON'T SAY 'NO' TO GOD ~~SEQUEL TO YES TO GOD

QUESTION: Hi. How are you? [this sounds like the same wonderful gentleman from Yes to God. Transcriber's note]

ANSWER: Well, thank you.

QUESTION: Good. I listen to you, and you say wonderful things. but then it's gone. And I have to do it again and again. Is it all right to – I can't keep - I can't keep all the things that you say inside without working awful hard.

ANSWER: Then I'll give you a simple direction, a simple task. Instead of practicing faithfulness to a lot of things, I want you to not practice faithlessness.

QUESTION: What?

ANSWER: Faithlessness. In other words, if you can't keep everything that I have said clear in your mind all the time, at least, in the absence of keeping them all clear in your mind, at least don't engage your mind in doubt, and fear, and frustration, and all of the things that undermine your healing. It's not truly up to you, with your mind, to create your healing. It's the Father's will for you to be experiencing absolute physical perfection.

The healing will be done for you because it's your birthright, if you neglect to practice faithlessness. I see a frown.

QUESTION: What was that last thing you just said?

ANSWER: Faithlessness. The absence - practicing the absence of faith. Faithlessness.

QUESTION: I couldn't do that. Right?

ANSWER: That's correct. I'm saying, don't do that. If you can't practice faithfulness, at least don't practice faithlessness.

QUESTION: Oh. Okay.

ANSWER: In the absence of doubt and fear and worry and negative - casting a negative shadow in front of yourself - instead of doing that, if you'll just be silent, and in your peace, God's will can enter. And you will experience healing.

QUESTION: How?

ANSWER: It's a miracle! How? Because of what God is, because of the nature of being. Even if you don't seem to see it around you all the time, the nature of being is Life-affirming, which doesn't mean lying in a coma on a hospital bed for years and years and years because of life-support systems. It means waking up from the coma.

It means healing. Life affirming means the coming to the full expression of perfection - like the opening of a flower to its fullness. It's your birthright. Each time I talk to you, I set your eyes in the direction of the way things really work. So that you can let go of all the arguments to the contrary. Practicing arguments to the contrary is practicing faithlessness.

That's what practicing faithlessness means. In the absence of that, in the silence of your being, God can enter. It's like once you sink to the bottom of the garbage can, pressed down by all of your definitions of how everything works, and you give up, what do you give up? You give up practicing the definitions, and all of a sudden, the garbage can is empty of garbage, and God can come in, and touch you right there in the bottom, and heal you forever of your need to create definitions that press you down and press you down, until you finally say "Uncle."

This is true for everyone. Do you know what practicing faithlessness is? It's saying no to God, instead of saying Yes! to God.

QUESTION: I don't have to remember everything?

ANSWER: No you don't. There's only one thing that I've ever been saying to any of you: Stop thinking. Start listening. Be still, so that God can come in to you.

The only thing that keeps God out is the chatter of your mind, your thinking, your confidence that you think you know how everything works. Curiosity can only occur in an empty place that isn't full of other things occupying your mind. You know. If you're watching a baseball game on the TV and it's coming up to the ninth inning, and it's neck and neck, boy you don't have any trouble being curious and paying attention. And if somebody comes in and says something, you say "Shh. Shh. Just a minute."

You have no trouble - you have no trouble keeping your mind clear of distractions to the thing you want to give your attention to. Right? So no, it's not up to you. The only thing you need to do is - the only thing you need to do is to become humble enough to say, "Help." Yes. Saying "Help." is like saying "Shush." to all the distractions, and giving your attention to the Source of help. And not - not giving your attention anywhere else until the last play is made, and the game is won, and you know how it came out. Which is another way of saying, until God answers, and you have your healing.

But the healing comes because God comes in. Not because you did it. The healing comes because what you did was nothing. You said, "Thy will be done. Not mine. Help, God." [end 2dside, tape 1]

And I keep saying that the healing is inevitable. Why would I say that, besides the fact that it's true? Because, when I say it, and you hear it, you have an end of the game to give your attention to, to watch for. Don't you? Instead of what the doctors say. And you know .. your friends say, or your little old ego says. You see? Any healing you ever get is always a miracle.

Waking up is a miracle! And what makes it a miracle is because it's ... because it is the ultimate thing happening that you weren't responsible for. Anything you're responsible for is never a miracle, even though it might be spectacular, it will never be a miracle, because you had your finger in the pie.

God's gift of Himself, as the centre and circumference of you, His beloved expression, is a gift that is made to you because there is no other way for God's Love to be expressed. And so your experience of that will always be an experience of grace, not something you earn, by the grace of God. But the grace of God is part of every single one of you. If you're conscious at this moment, it's by the grace of God. It's because God is the only Mind there is, and is the only Presence there is right where you are right now.

And you know what, again, it's utterly natural and not special. You really have no other choice than to be the way God is being You. And as long as you try to be the way God isn't being you, you are creating more garbage that's pressing down on you, until you finally hit the bottom and say "Uncle", which means you say "Help!"

QUESTION: Uncle! [Audience laughter]

ANSWER: And what if you had to say "Uncle." seventy times seven?

QUESTION: Uncle. Uncle. Uncle. Uncle. Uncle. Uncle.

ANSWER: Yes. Cause you can't leverage God. You can't leverage your healing and say, "One way or another I've got to have the healing after seventy times three, instead of seventy times seven." There has to be a willingness to embrace your healing, your experience of wholeness. There's got to be a way for you to do it that involves abandoning the ability to leverage the healing completely.

You've got to abandon any ... you've got to abandon any level of control that you might normally bring to bear in a transaction. And you've got to say, "If I have to say Uncle for eternity, I will say Uncle because I know that saying Uncle and yielding to the Father's will is the only way for me to get out of this illusion of partial perfection. I'm willing to glorify God eternally, no matter what."

QUESTION: Uncle.

ANSWER: And the way you can do that is by simply neglecting to practice faithlessness. Okay. We will take a break. *****

Okay. Hands.

YIELDING TO THE MOVEMENT THROUGH ART

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. I'm asking about doing art, but I also think it's about being real, more than doing anything.

ANSWER: That is what art - doing art - is.

QUESTION: Okay. I'm asking you if you could speak about the process and the product of that process. What's left. I don't know how to feel about it.

ANSWER: Art is very much like what Paul is doing today. You must abandon yourself to the movement of God. But you do it with artistic materials. You can worry about the product. Paul can't worry about what kind of an audio tape we will end up with at the end of a Gathering, or what it ought to say, you see.

He can have no agenda at the beginning of a Gathering, or at the beginning of any conversation with me. You must yield to the movement. You must sit down with your materials and let it happen.

The key does lie in the words you used, "being real". And being real is what is left when you have abandoned being a concept, fulfilling a role. You can't conceive of yourself as being an artist and actually end up with artwork.

QUESTION: Is it ever appropriate to want to show your work, exhibit you work, or in my case, is that going to be a working against my own real ...

ANSWER: Well let's put it this way. You will find yourself led to show the work that you are positive isn't yours. Do you get my point?

QUESTION: Can you ... would you like to elaborate a little more?

ANSWER: When you yield to the movement you will end up ... you will end up with a piece of art, and you will stand there like everyone else, and say "Wow." Not "Wow, I did good!" but "Wow! Where did that come from?"

You will not be able to say, "That's my creation."

QUESTION: What do I need to get to that place from where I am?

ANSWER: Abandoning yourself. Yielding to the movement and just letting it flow. Letting it come. Art is not about control. Art is not about plan. Art isn't about preconceptions. Real art is a happening, completely out of your control. Even if the finished product is full of minute detail.

I am encouraging you to dare to have the enjoyment of riding the crest of a wave, where you're always finding the point of balance in the movement, and not so concerned about where you're going because then you will end up with balance and symmetry that you could never have planned, but it's perfect. And if you had been able to plan it, you would never have done it that way. You see?

Art is the expression of Love. It is the movement of Spirit. It is a gift and a gift cannot be private. An ungiven gift is not a gift. So it will be shared, just as Paul is sharing today. And yet he goes home and listens to the tapes and gets as much out of them as you do. Because he didn't originate them. He didn't work out, work it all out ahead of time, and he has no idea until he listens to the whole Gathering whether any of it hangs together or not, or whether it is a number of discrete little instances that in and of themselves he recognizes are wonderful, you see?

And it won't be until you finish the piece of art that you will be able to stand back and say, "Wow. I didn't even realize how this part and this part correlate, and how there are complementary colors in just this balance. That's incredible." You will stand in wonder at what has happened. That's art. But as ... like Paul, you have to learn to abandon yourself to God knows what. [faint audience laughter]

I mean, Paul can have the microphone, and the flowers, and the equipment, and the room, and the chair, just like you can have the equipment you use. But you can't sit down, any more than he can, and know ahead of time what you're going to do, else it will be your creation, and it won't be art, no matter how good it looks.

QUESTION: Would you say being real is more important than producing, creating a painting?

ANSWER: Well, the result of being real will be art. Paintings are not necessarily art. Now if you want to be an illustrator, a craftsman, go ahead but that's not what we're talking about. You've got it. I mean ... I do not mean you've got the point of what I'm saying. I'm saying you've got the spirit, you've got the ability. Now abandon yourself to it, and do it.

QUESTION: I will.

ANSWER: Anything you plan and execute on canvas, or whatever the medium, will never leave you in wonder, or awe, or inspiration, afterwards; only what comes from being real, which you cannot be responsible for. Let me put it this way: would you come to the next Gathering here if you were going to hear a presentation by Paul of wonderful, spiritual truths that he has gleaned from the past? Put together and executed in an absolutely exquisite way? Or would you rather have the opportunity to talk with me, if you had the choice?

QUESTION: You.

ANSWER: Smart girl. [Laughter, laughing] You get the point. Okay.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Hands?

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. My question is regarding my relationship with my mother. Growing up, she and my brother and I - because my father was in the war when we were very young - were very close, and that remained all throughout my childhood. And as I became an adult - I think it's reasonable to say that she refused to give up on us kids as being her kids. And to this day, at my age, she still considers me her kid, and demands - or tries to demand to know what I'm doing at every moment. And last year, just before Christmas, my father died, and if it was bad before then, [laughing] it's really intensified now. And I'd like some clarification, I guess, on the appropriate way for me to be with her, rather than ...

ANSWER: I will tell you something that will perhaps reach her. The next time she does this, call her by her first name and say "Stop this." Talk to her as an adult, and tell her she must stop.

QUESTION: Do my brother and I have any responsibility - I mean, here she is, living in a house by herself at the age of 84. Do we have any responsibility to her to ... ? I mean, we're glad to help her if she wishes to make a decision, but she seems frozen in non-decision. "Well I can't do this until I do that. And I can't do that till I do this." And yet, this house thing is becoming insane ... well it will become - I mean she can't clean gutters. She's got to have everything done. Do we have a responsibility to that?

ANSWER: Not yet. You tell her that we she knows what needs to be done, to let you know. And then, you may just hire someone to do it, because you're not her handyman, her handy sons. Or you may do it - but not out of obligation.

It takes two to tango, so you make sure you're not doing your part of the dance.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: Oh, what about dutiful daughters? You might say thank you too because what I said is the truth about you as well.

VOICE from the audience.

ANSWER: Are you speaking of yourself? The question was asked, "What about meddling mothers?" God bless them. And to the meddling mother in you, I say "Stop meddling."

QUESTION: My question is "Am I meddling?"

ANSWER: You know damn well you are. [Audience laughter]

QUESTION: I knew you were going to spot kick! But you know, he's ... it's been so hard ...

ANSWER: The only thing you have a right to do is to see that your integrity is not imposed on and that you are not walked on and abused. Beyond that, nothing is any of your business. You stand in your integrity and you draw the line where abuse occurs.

QUESTION: I'm learning that.

ANSWER: Slowly.

QUESTION: Yep.

ANSWER: Reluctantly, and uncomfortably.

QUESTION: Yep.

ANSWER: And as I said earlier, you will do it as long as you do it, until you choose otherwise, so don't complain to me.

QUESTION: I'm not complaining.

ANSWER: I know, but there is a part of you that's hoping I would miss that and give you a little sympathy.

QUESTION: [laughing] I understand.

ANSWER: You do indeed.

QUESTION: But was I wrong, over this last year, to put into place a system where he could be supported financially without the drain on us?

ANSWER: Absolutely.

QUESTION: I was wrong doing that?

ANSWER: No, you were not.

QUESTION: Oh, thank you. That's what I've been real scared ... that those moves that I've been making ... and I can see him balancing, and I see light, and I also am very aware of when I'm manipulated. And thank you.

ANSWER: You're also aware when you manipulate, and so you have the tools necessary to become free of what makes you miserable. You're at least not unconscious.

QUESTION: I was.

ANSWER: But you're not ...

QUESTION: Not now.

ANSWER: ...Now. Correct.

QUESTION: And the healing that I experienced yesterday and today, is that because I'm letting go of that, that particular hook?

ANSWER: Yes.

QUESTION: Truly? Of that particular hook? It's hard for me to believe that I will ever be able to let go of that hook.

ANSWER: Well, now you're practicing faithlessness.

QUESTION: Well, you see, there are so many other hooks there that I'm not sure what the healing was. It was a definite healing.

ANSWER: But you know what? You can become disinterested in fishing. What I mean is, a fisherman can have a tackle box full of hooks collecting dust because he's busy doing other things, and has no time to give attention to the dangling bait, so to speak. Who cares how many other hooks there are.

Stop fishing. Stop being a sportswoman. You see what I'm saying.

QUESTION: I understand.

ANSWER: Instead of lopping off this branch or that branch or whatever, cut down the tree. And give your attention to what is fulfilling. Not satisfying, fulfilling.

QUESTION: Well the question that I came with was about being lost in this insane place, then the healing that happened, and the healing revolved around the work. I had decided that I was just going to get myself a little really simple low-paying job, and just, you know, grind it out. And at 3:30 on the afternoon on Friday, I'm driving to the grocery store, and something left me. And I realized that, no, I do really want to buy the camera and I do really want to do the things that give me joy, and it was like a marvellous healing that started then and continued on the way here. So I don't know whether it was the Jason thing or whether it was me taking back my integrity and saying "no" ...

ANSWER: The latter.

QUESTION: I need to ANSWER: The latter. The latter. Continue to look forward ...

QUESTION: It was awful being without my integrity. It was awful being insane.

ANSWER: Thank God.

QUESTION: I don't ever want to go there again.

ANSWER: Don't then. But stay conscious.

QUESTION: I really thank you.

ANSWER: You're welcome.

QUESTION: You're a hard man! [Audience laughter]

VOICE from the audience. Thank God.

ANSWER: That is correct. [More audience laughter] I won't pussyfoot around with you, and because of that, you won't waste time. And none of your guides will pussyfoot around with you, because there's no need for time to be wasted. And yet, your guides will not pressure you to change or to move faster. You have to move because you want to move. And so we will talk and talk and talk until you are inspired to make new choices. Guides are not meddlesome.

QUESTION: But mothers are.

ANSWER: Mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, children.

QUESTION: [Softly] Yeah.

ANSWER: The ego is meddlesome, yes. Okay. Hands?

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. My question has ... in the same direction that I started with last time. You talked to me about defining my worth, and so as I've been going on in the last month, I've been defining it, and again the doors are starting to close again. And I don't feel bad about it, but I'm ... I guess my question is: Are these allowing me to go in a different direction, or do I need to have some sort of compromise.

Because, for instance, a few weeks ago, I had a woman, one of my clients, tell me, "Now if you ever leave these people," that I contract for, "we want you. We don't want somebody else from their company to come in." And that's a conflict of interest for me, and that's what I told her. And, yet, rather than work for 50%, you know, I would just as soon have it all.

But that particular case scenario doesn't seem like it would work out. And so when I've talked to the owners about the idea of purchasing it from them, or leasing it from them, they say "No! Unequivocally no! You know. We're not going to do that." And so, I take that as though, well that door is closing because I'm no longer willing to work for 50%, and they understand that, and I'm just curious to, you know, where is this taking me?

ANSWER: It is taking you in the direction of the manifestation of your integrity. But you must stand with your integrity until you get to the destination.

QUESTION: Well, I guess that's what I'm curious, you know, only I can know where that destination is but ANSWER: Only you? You? You have no idea ...

QUESTION: Well. Excuse me

ANSWER: ... what the destination

QUESTION: Okay. Excuse me. It's for me to recognize and I guess that's where I'm having a little trouble recognizing ... You know, if there's three avenues to go down, and

ANSWER: The destination is not what you're called upon to recognize right now. What you're called upon to recognize right now is the demand to stand in your integrity as each instance comes up, and not... shrink from it, and not yield to the demand to - let us say, work for less.

QUESTION: Okay. So I've done that in another instance too. And, same thing .And.... ..

ANSWER: Yes, but you are looking at results instead of the experience in the moment where you are being true to yourself.

QUESTION: I feel that, you know, cause it's a big challenge to me to ask and say, "This is what I feel I'm worth, and if you're not willing to, you know, compromise with me, or meet me at least even half way, then I have to look for something else."

ANSWER: I know that's hard for you, but it's wonderful practice at standing in your integrity.

QUESTION: I guess I'm being impatient as I always am, but I guess this is ...

ANSWER: You've got your QUESTION: ... these decisions aren't leading ...

ANSWER: You've got your attention in place. You can only be impatient for an end result. When you're baking a cake, and it comes time to beat the eggs, you've got to be with the beating of the eggs. And you can't then mix everything together fast because you want to get the cake out of the oven as soon as possible, especially if it were a chiffon cake, because you will ruin it by rushing. So give your attention to the step you're on.

QUESTION: So okay, if I've defined what I think I'm worth, and they've said no, is it appropriate for me to discontinue - in this case this particular account, and cause there, there I'm torn, not so much I have such a great attachment - it's like I feel that I have something that they enjoy and want. And if I leave, then, I lose it, and then they lose it, and then also the other people lose it. So three people are losing out just because I make a decision to say I don't want to be there any more for this amount of money.

ANSWER: I will give two illustrations here. There are situations where you have obedient people who take directions, like obedient sons. And the mother or whoever it is says, "Jump." And they jump, and on the way up, they say "How high?" Well you're saying "How low shall I jump?" You see?

The other part of this illustration is that many years ago, there was a need for Paul and Susan to get a new car. I won't go into the story, but they ended up with a very nice, brand-new car, where they had been driving used cars prior to that. And the way it came into their experience was miraculous. And within a week or so after enjoying seeing it in their driveway, Sue asked, "Why this car? I mean, why such a nice car?" And I said to her "What level of poverty would you rather have established? [Audience laughter] end 1st side, tape 2, begin 2d side

ANSWER: You know, you're going to have to put your foot down, and stand with your full weight there. And let the chips fall where they may.

Instead of surmising that the result will be everyone losing. I don't know why you're not surmising that everyone will gain?

And there isn't a good reason. So how much longer are you going to sacrifice your integrity and lose out on the discovery that expressing your integrity blesses everyone?

QUESTION: Could I ask, is that some sort of compromise that is more appropriate in this situation or is it like you said, just to put my foot down and say, This is it, and thank you." And move to the next one.

ANSWER: There is no compromise that will reflect your integrity or that will reflect the truth of you.

QUESTION: That makes me nervous.

ANSWER: I understand, but I can't relieve you of it. You ... you were nervous the first time you tried to ride a bicycle.

QUESTION: Oh yeah, I remember that.

ANSWER: It wasn't a reason not to ride it.

QUESTION: No.

ANSWER: A father might say to you, "It's time to grow up and become a man. Now, I'm not saying that as a father, but someone needs to make it clear to you that everyone loses when you sacrifice your integrity. And everyone gains when you take hold of your integrity and express it, whether it makes you nervous or not. And today I want to leave you with that point, so that it doesn't become obscured by whatever else you would like to discuss.

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome. Hands.

WATERING YOUR WORLD

QUESTION: Thank you Raj. In order to formulate my question, I think it has to do with - there's only the one question that I hear all of us asking and I hear you answering over and over. And I guess I need specific clarity for me.

Once having had that sense of listening and hearing Guidance and fulfilling what feels like a function to myself, by following my Guidance, and using the Course in Miracles to teach myself through my brother, with my brother, I have a sense of loss when I chose to not go down that path any longer a few as of a few years ago. And, it's a sense of a malaise ... or a discontent, and an awareness that no thing in this world can really satisfy me, yet not being able to be in touch with what I was once in touch with, whatever that was. My Guidance, or a sense of getting out of the way that you've spoken of, and letting it just flow.

So I guess all that comes down to what barrier ... is there ... I guess every thought I have about how to do this. I've tried to let go of, and not look at how it should look, how anything should look, or what I should do next. But ... I seem to have used the Course to beat myself up with, and I've lost the sense of joy and curiosity that you talk about. Because I have had a recognition many, many times of how unreal this place is. And I guess ...

ANSWER: Have you had no experiences where the Presence of God is so obvious to you, right here?

QUESTION: Of course I have. Yes, I have. I have had that. And I guess I'm grieving the loss of that. I'm grieving the sense that I have had that and I don't experience it, or walk it, or feel it, or teach it, or be that, like I feel like I could or should or want to.

ANSWER: But what keeps you from making the gift of wanting ... wanting to see the face of God in your brother's eyes, or the Presence of God in your world?

QUESTION: I guess ... I guess I feel like I have failed even when I have done that. I have felt that, and I have felt that experience of that. I guess I don't know what my question - ... how to answer that. I don't know what is stopping me. That's I guess what I'm asking for is ... is there something that ... is there something that is there that I'm not seeing that I can step through.

ANSWER: The simplest way I can put it is is that just as a flower grows when you water it, the world becomes illuminated when you love it. And when you don't water it, it dries up.

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: And you say, "Well, I have a I have evidence that none of this means anything, that all of this is an illusion. Look at this. And yet, in its dried out barrenness, it's perfectly capable of responding to the watering can and greening up. Because the world with reflect back to you what you're giving to it, or what you're withholding from it.

Now why not try loving your world for something other than an ultimate reason? Why not just love your world because - as with your garden - it's prettier when it's been watered, and everything turns green and begins to blossom?

Do you see what I'm saying? Everyone relishes - not everyone – but most of you relish having complicated processes to waking up.

But there are such simple ways to wake up. Like just caring about your world enough to water it a little bit, without having a profound reason for doing it, other than, you know, it looks pretty to you that way.

And so if you water your relationships, and you water your associations, and you sit down with your paintbrushes, or the materials you use to do art work, as someone was asking earlier, for no other reason than it makes you feel good to do that. This will start you in the right direction without a heavy sense of obligation associated with it.

It's the beginning of an ultimate journey, and if you'll stay simple all the way, it won't get, it won't be exhausting.

Oh, I don't know how many husbands and wives are struggling with their attempt to have a holy relationship instead of a special relationship, when something as simple as a caress or a hand on the shoulder or a squeeze, or a smile, will provide the energetic environment in which a holy relationship occurs, because there is no manipulation going on.

It's just nice. It's nice not to be alone. It's nice to have someone to give attention to. Simple things. These are all ... these are all essentials of awakening. But everybody's up in their head; "Now what's the definition of a special relationship? I'm sure ... I'm sure I read somewhere that we're not approaching each other the right way. And ... no. Stop, stop, stop. Don't say anything yet!" [Audience laughter] and all the time, they could've been giving each other a hug, and letting go of the uneasiness of whether they're doing it the right way or not.

You see what I'm saying?

QUESTION: Yes.

ANSWER: Lighten up. Ease up. Be willing to be simpler. If you forget to water your world because it's not real, it'll dry up and you won't be happy. But it won't become ruined. The world will not become ruined by virtue of your neglect. It will simply wait for you to do something new, with Love. And then you'll begin to see its loveliness uncovered.

Love. Love. Love. That's all I'm every talking about, isn't it? 1001 ways to love yourself into the Kingdom of Heaven.

You know what? You ignore what Love means to you. To one degree or another, you all ignore what Love means to you. So not only do you not touch someone's shoulder, or look them directly in the eye and be totally present with them, while you're looking them in the eye. And a host of other simple things that connect you with each other, and feel like love. You tell yourself that you're really not bothered by not being touched by others ethers either. "I don't need that. I'm just fine without experiencing affection. I know he loves me. I know she loves me. I do real well without hugs". Except that if you were really to start saying out loud, "I really do quite well without receiving hugs, you would find yourself starting to cry, because you don't do well without them.

You don't do well without affection, and neither does anyone else. But if you say, "I do well without affection," then you always project yourself out on others and you say, "Well he really does well without affection too." And everyone ignores what at the bottom line they know, down inside.

You know, I just ... I can't put it strongly enough, that the second coming, or the 'end of time' or the millennium, or whatever you want to call a major shift in the conscious experience of being, that everyone - in one way or another - is looking forward to ... I can't put strongly enough that that shift is not going to be with blazing colors of light and clouds and hosts of heaven coming down in the sky in a spectacular display.

It comes when you're at the bottom of the barrel, and you decide to be real. It comes when you say, "You know, I don't ... I don't do well without affection. I need someone. And this is so clear to me that I need someone that I now know something about everyone else. They need someone too." And you reach out. And you just ... I sound like the Christian Broadcasting Company ... [audience laughter] System [more laughter]

VOICE from the audience. Amen!

ANSWER: You reach out and touch someone. See, that's being real. And when you're real, and you know you need someone and that everyone else needs someone, and you don't try to be autonomous and independent, un-needy, something miraculous happens. That's the beginning. That's the happy beginning of Armageddon. But I'm not talking about destruction of anything other than what's -- all the garbage that's been pushing you to the bottom. That's the destruction you should welcome. Are you beginning to feel the fact that what's needed is utterly simple and something that abides in each one of you as a capacity to express right now. And there isn't anything in you that has to be improved before you can let yourself feel need and know that your brother needs too. "Oh well, I'm ... I'm a divine idea of God, complete in every respect." You know that God isn't complete without every single one of his ideas. God isn't complete without every single thing that is embraced in the infinite mind that God is.

God needs, but God isn't saying 'no' to God, and so God has. If everyone would come down off their high horse and all the bullshit and folderol and pay attention ... you know, you hear about what's written in your heart. What's written in your heart is ... is really, really, common sense. "I'm not happy alone. I need people. I need love." And as I've said before in the last couple of Gatherings, the way to get love is to give love.

Well, if you're really in touch with your need, then you're really in touch with others' needs, and the fact that they have them, and when you realize that they have needs, it's really easy to care and to give. And beginning to do that constitutes the beginning of waking up. You're welcome. Hands? [whispered]

QUESTION: Thank you so much for allowing me to ask a question.

ANSWER: You are welcome

QUESTION: First I want to say thank you for my wonderful gift of sending me my new mate. I'm so happy. Thank you very much.

ANSWER: It takes two to tango you know, so thank you for being willing to receive, because you haven't always.

QUESTION: This is true. Thank you.

ANSWER: You are welcome.

QUESTION: Well this weekend has been unbelievable. I can't believe I'm even here. [Laughing]

ANSWER: Practicing faithlessness, huh?

QUESTION: [Laughing] So it's

ANSWER: Believe it.

QUESTION: ... Wonderful, and I'm ... I have a desire to open up a spiritual center on Kauai, and I would like to know if I'm the right path in asking that question, and should I make a move back there some point in the near future?

ANSWER: This idea is in seed form, we will say, at the moment. And it needs to be planted and nurtured. It is not anywhere near the point of manifestation, where it would show above the surface. And so just nurture it within yourself and abide with it. Water it. You will begin to feel the impulse of its movement, when it begins to move, and then it will become time to listen for what steps to take.

QUESTION: Perfect.

ANSWER: Don't act prematurely.

QUESTION: Yeah. Yeah, I feel that too. That's ...that's perfect. Is there anything else I should be doing to prepare for that, at this time?

ANSWER: Just practice listening. Persist

QUESTION: Thank you.

A..... ever more consistently.

QUESTION: Thank you. Actually I just wanted to hear my voice over the microphone. [Audience laughter] My life has changed completely in the last two years - 100%. And yet there is nothing on the outside that has changed other than a few more friends.

Recently ... well not recently, I've just come into the place where wherever my face is turned, that's where my nose is pointed. So I'm just wondering if there's anywhere I should turn my nose?

ANSWER: Your attention is right where it needs to be.

AWAKENING TO LOVE

QUESTION: There's been so much today about being real, that I hope this question isn't going to seem too lofty, but I'm sure that you asked me to ask this question this morning. And that is: is the awakening that you talk about the final act that brings us into the realization of conscious oneness with the Father. Or is it just - well, I don't mean just - the dissolving of the three-dimensional, material sense of Reality as the next necessary step to that realization?

ANSWER: It is actually both, simultaneously. I'm going to put it this way. The final act, as you put it, the experience of awakening, will seem to take time only because you can't absorb it all at once. The willingness to be open to it will be something you will ... will bring about the experience, but the experience is one that you will want to savour, thinking from past experience that perhaps it won't happen again, or the newness of it will fade, and so you want to get everything out of it.

The fact is though, that the experience won't ever be lost or forgotten. The other reason it will seem to take time is because your experience of who you are will ... will be transformed. And if it is transformed too quickly, there will seem to be a discontinuity between who you were - whom you believed you were and experienced yourself as - and Who you really are. And there must be an unbroken conscious experience of identity all the way through the transformation.

Your capacity to love will always seem to start with one individual, or one thing that you've been willing to give your attention to undefendedly. To suddenly, consciously, experience that feeling of love with all of the brotherhood would seem very overwhelming. It would feel like too much love for you to endure because you are still letting go of a tiny sense of yourself.

And so the transformation will seem to take time. It will seem to be ... it will seem to have a duration to it. I do not mean it will take a long time, but just that it won't be instantaneous.

So, never undervalue the wonder of the experience of Love with one other person because that's what helps you feel secure enough to be even more defenceless, less self-protective, and therefore able to experience being the Presence that fulfils all experience of need in others.

Here's a way you might understand it. Some of you might have had the experience. You know how to swim and you enjoy swimming in your swimming pool, whether you're in the four-foot end or the eight-foot end. You just really love to swim and you feel great.

But then one day, you go out with a friend in a fishing boat, and you go out beyond the point where you can see land. And as far as you can see is water, and you decide you want to go swim. And so you step off the ledge on the boat and start swimming, and the minute you hit the water, you realize that although the principles of swimming are the same here as they were here in your pool, now the bottom is 2000 feet below you, and it becomes an overwhelmingly fearful experience - one that you don't feel confident in, even though your ability to stay on the surface of the water is equal to ... there, is equal to what it was in an eight-foot swimming pool.

And that you can turn over on your back and float and float and float. You're perfectly safe, you see. Swimming in a humungous amount of water doesn't have the same feeling it does in a small quantity of water.

Loving - experiencing consciously and loving and being in love with and being loved by absolutely every aspect of creation, although it's basically the same experience, is a far cry from loving and being loved by and experiencing love with one other.

So, that's why there will be ... there will be a period of releasing of defences and increasing of your embrace of the Allness of the Kingdom of Heaven. So at one and the same time, the process is one of awakening, and it's also a process of releasing and abandoning the sense of everything being a material world and universe. You see?

Now, it's a wonderful experience. It's one that I'm ... I've been encouraging all of you to dare to let go into. And I ... I will end by saying that you will be amazed at how many there are of old [?] eternal friends who are awake who will be welcoming you as you do this radical irresponsible thing called letting go of control and yielding into the Father's will, which is - at the bottom line - the law of your being that's written in your very own heart, and therefore is yours. So ...

QUESTION: Thank you.

ANSWER: [Almost whispering] There's been much, much love in this room today. You are all quite radiant. And I always enjoy being with you, but you know what? You're enjoying being with me in a different way today than you have before. And I must share with you that it feels good to me.

I love you all. [Laughing gently] [The beaming love in the voice is so apparent on the tape]
