

Office of Attorney General Enforces Law Prohibiting Renewal of License for Individual with Child Support Delinquency

For several years Chapter 232 of the Texas Family Code has allowed the Office of Attorney General (OAG) to suspend a license due to failure to pay child support. Board rule 469.12 provides information on this law and how the Board must work with the OAG to implement it.

This Board rule also notes that in compliance with this state law, if the Board is notified of a licensee's failure to pay child support, he or she will be prevented from renewing the license. To date the OAG has not implemented this section of the law. However, that is soon about to change.

The OAG is now working with all state licensing entities to obtain interface with their various database systems. The OAG will alert the licensing entities about any of their licensees who have child support irregularities that prevent them from renewing their license.

The OAG will also notify the licensee that they will not be allowed to renew their license until they have worked out their child support irregularities with the OAG.

Once the licensee has worked out a satisfactory plan with the OAG, the OAG will first notify the licensing entity to remove the restriction on renewal and then notify the licensee that they are eligible to renew.

It is important to note that at TSBEP renewals are staggered by birthday month. Therefore, it is most likely that a licensee will be notified by the OAG of any problems at some time during the renewal year, so that they will have plenty of time to work out a plan with the OAG, thus avoiding any delay in the renewal of their license. However, there is the possibility that the OAG would notify a licensee of a child support irregularity late in the renewal year thereby leaving little time for the licensee to create an acceptable payment of child support plan with OAG and to timely renew their license with the Board.
