Yet it is no more up to you to decide what is visible and what is invisible than it is up to you to decide what reality is. What can be seen is what the HOLY SPIRIT sees. The definition of reality is God's, not yours. HE created it, and HE knows what it is. You who knew have forgotten, and unless He had given you a way to remember you would have condemned yourselves to oblivion.

You see, you thought you were just having a little fun; got together with one of your Brother Christs and you said, "Hey, what d'ya say we call this embodiment of living Love, 'a tree'? And what d'ya say we say that its defenseless relationship with what it's standing on is really a dependent relationship, and that it gets its life not from the Love that it is, but from what we'll call 'soil'? And let's say that in order for the soil to be nurturing, it must be watered. And let's say that in order for there to be water, there must be large bodies of water which will evaporate and float in the air over the land (the soil) and fall. Let's make it fall. Let's call it 'precipitation.' And it will water the soil, which will nurture the tree that is dependent upon what's in the soil. What d'ya say—shall we do that? Shall we create this definition and believe it? To hell with what the Father said. To hell with what it really is. Let's do this thing."

So you did it, and two of you were duped. Two of you joined together in an illusion. And what you didn't realize was that this "playing with Reality" would cause you to become disoriented and separated from your Source, because you separated yourself from the Real Meaning of that which you gave definitions to, and therefore obscured its Source, and you lost God. God disappeared. And the living embodiment of Love that what came to be called “a tree” and “the soil” is, was lost to you. You see?

You—who knew that it was a living, moving, embodiment of Love—have forgotten.

...and unless He had given you a way to remember you would have condemned yourselves to oblivion.

Why? Because the pride of creation is self-righteousness. The pride of personal private creation is self-righteousness. And self-righteousness is mesmerizing. And you become addicted to it. And there would be no way out if God had not given you a way to remember.

But (continuing)...

Because of your Father's Love you can NEVER forget Him, for no-one can forget what God Himself placed in his memory.

Now another way of looking at this—these words “placed in his memory”—is that the Holy Spirit, which is your Right Mind, can't go anywhere. And if you are not paying any attention to it, it is, in effect, held in trust while you dally with your orphanhood. And in that sense, Who You Are is placed in your memory. A better way of putting it is that it's placed in your Being, which can't ever actually change.

You can DENY it, but you cannot LOSE it.

And of course, as long as you're giving preference to the meanings you're giving to everything, you are denying What Everything Is, and you are denying Who You Are, together with your already-present capacity to experience everything As It Truly Is. A capacity you do not have to work hard to gain. A capacity you do not have to refine yourself into having available to you.

Listen.

A Voice will answer every question you ask, and a Vision will correct the perception of everything you see. For what you have made invisible is the ONLY truth, and what you have not heard is the ONLY answer. God would reunite you with yourself, and did not abandon you in your seeming distress. You are waiting only for Him and do not know it. Yet His memory shines in your minds and cannot BE obliterated. It is no more past than future, being forever always.

His memory shines in your minds. And like the sunshine and the beautiful day that you can't appreciate because you're in a blue funk—you, in your prestigious sense of yourself as an independent agent, cannot see His memory that shines in you; the Truth of you that abides in you shining.

You have but to ask for this memory and you WILL remember. Yet the memory of God cannot shine in a mind which has MADE it invisible and wants to KEEP it so.

If you love your depression and you hold on to it, everything is going to look like shit. Everything is going to be colored by your devotion. And yet "Reality perceived Truly" is present to be experienced, just as surely as the beautiful spring day is available to you to be experienced, but which you're not experiencing because, at the moment, you're feeling depressed and totally feeling totally incapable of being generous enough to let yourself have any other experience but the satisfaction of the self-righteousness that says, "I am pissed off because I can't have things the way I want them, and therefore I will give nothing." And with all of the power of the Christ that you Are, your word stands. And yet all that happens is that you continue to not see what's right in front of your face. That's all.

Again.

Yet the memory of God cannot shine in a mind which has MADE it invisible and wants to KEEP it so. For the memory of God can dawn only in a mind that wills to remember, and that has relinquished the insane desire to...

What? (Key words here.)

...control reality. You who cannot even control yourselves should hardly aspire to control the universe. But look upon what you have made of it, and rejoice that it is not so. Son of God,...

I'm talking to you. These words are talking to you right now.

Son of God, be not content with nothing! What is not real cannot BE seen and HAS no value. God could not offer His Son what has no value,...

Why? Because what He gave you was Love, generously extended.

God could not offer His Son what has no value, nor could His Son receive it. You were redeemed the instant you thought you had deserted Him.

You were redeemed the moment you thought you had deserted Him. "Father, I'd rather see it my own way. I want a bill of divorcement—signed, sealed, delivered bill of divorcement. Final. I'm me in my own right." Well, now it's not the same "me" that said, "I want a bill of divorcement." Now it's "an orphan." But only in an insane imagination, and the Christ that you Are has been held intact, untouched, unchanged. It's called the Holy Spirit now, held in trust while you dally with the ego. So you were redeemed the moment you made this insane decision to be on your own.

And again, you do not have to do anything to become worthy of being the Christ that you Are. You do not have to refine your soul. You do not have to go through any process. You simply have to do what? You have to abandon introducing or attempting to introduce something into Creation that the Father never made, which is your own determination to see things in your own way, or your own definitions that you apply to everything. All you have to do is stop doing that.

And how do you stop doing that? By agreeing with God's Plan for salvation. Reaching out to something beyond your best orphan capacities and saying, "Father, help! Father, I'm inviting You in."

How do you do it? You do it the same way you do if you're depressed. You notice that you're depressed, and now you have no excuse for just not naming it and saying, "I'm having a real blue funk of a day. Ho hum. I'll just wait for it to lift. And in the meantime, don't depend upon me for anything 'cause I just can't get the energy behind doing anything. And I don't give a shit whether I do anything or not. That's how bad it is." You won't be able to say those words or feel those words without knowing the Truth that I've shared with you; that this is really a self-righteous and arrogant position to take, that is geared to creating a nearly pure state of orphanhood or isolation, and that it is what is causing your misery.

And it isn't enough to know that. You have to say, "I want out of the funk. And so in spite of the fact that I have no energy for getting out of it, I am going to find ways to be generous. I am going to exert the effort it takes to pay attention to where I am, and to acknowledge who I'm with, and be sensitive to their needs." Does the plant need to be watered? Does the garbage need to be taken out? Pay attention to the need and be willing to supply the need. That is the way you get out of the funk.

And it is that same sort of joining with the Father, because you're putting forth the effort necessary to not be immobilized in your depression or in your orphan state. And make the connection. Invite the connection and let it happen, and acknowledge it and own it and claim it, and be willing to indulge in it more and more frequently.

Being an orphan is basically a lazy activity, because it is so private that it does not require you to relate to anything at all. That's not called being alive, much less being awake.

So, this week when you go to bed at night, contemplate your day and find the places where you were being generous. And if there weren't a lot of times that you were being generous, because it hasn't been your habit to, then just acknowledge that tomorrow you will be a little bit more disciplined and make more occasions for being generous, by paying more attention, with the attitude of care. For what purpose? To meet needs. What a simple and wonderful activity to engage in. I promise you that if you engage in it consciously, your experience of your world will change dramatically before the end of the first day, before your first bedtime where you would ask yourself whether you have been generous. Cultivate being generous.

Yes, it will require you to pay attention. I will tell you that paying attention is Life. And not paying attention is death. Your inevitable path is redemption. There really is no other choice. You can create misery up the kazoo, but you cannot actually accomplish death. Even if you appear to pass on, you will find yourself still being. You cannot accomplish death. So give your attention to accomplishing Life, to letting Life be what it already is, without any of what it is being obscured from you.

So instead of this being your homework, this is your homeplay. Go play this week with "intent to be generous" carried out.

I love you. And I look forward to being with you next week. I look forward to being with "new you's" next week.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES STUDY GROUP WITH RAJ

May 20th 2006

RAJ: Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Interesting. Paul's announcement last week of a need was met with a full spectrum of responses, from outpouring of love and contributions to expressions of appreciation for everything that he does, that we do, to outright expressions of criticism and judgment, meanly expressed.

A month or so ago, when I put an announcement on The Gathering Place, there were likewise similar responses. And one of the individuals who made a gift expressed the concern, or the caring, that she hoped we wouldn't have this problem again—in other words, that we wouldn't persist in having to ask for help, to be in that uncomfortable position.

You know what? None of you likes the word "need." N-E-E-D, need. It's almost worse than the four letter word Paul doesn't like to use. It's easy to let a word like that roll off your lips if you're upset, but to experience need is something all of you avoid like the plague. And to see someone else in need makes you equally uncomfortable.

Many say, "Well, if Raj is really Jesus, he could meet Paul's need. He could just wave his hand and like the loaves and fishes that appeared to feed 5000, all the needs of the foundation could be met, and Paul wouldn't be in this uncomfortable position." [Chuckling] But, what you don't realize is that I am answering, I am addressing the issue, except that you don't like the answer.

What do you think it means to read in the Course about looking into your brother's eyes and remembering God? You know, it has a nice feel to it doesn't it? But it's something far more than just something nice. What that idea is expressing is that without your brother, you would not have the means of remembering God.

Having a brother with eyes to look into, you have the means for remembering God. Why? Because with a brother with eyes to look into, you can have an object of your affection. You have the fundamental necessity to "relationship." Ah-h, relationship. That means not being alone, doesn't it? That means involvement, doesn't it? It means exactly the opposite of being an orphan.

Now, some of you who are troubled by the fact that over the years there have been expressions of need and invitations of support . . .

PAUL: I'm sorry. I, Paul, lost it.

RAJ: One of the reasons that many of you are bothered by the ongoing expressions of need and invitations for support is because you have an expectation, a preconception, that if you're on your spiritual path and you manage to connect with the Holy Spirit, or your guide, or the Father, that you will suddenly be without need. You will be whole and not need anyone!

Ah-h. Reeks of independence again, doesn't it? Ah-h, now, you can sit in your ivory tower of holiness, of holy wholeness, needing no one, needing nothing, and having no reason or obligation to "relationship," and that's the bottom line of the problem. And that is exactly the fundamental cornerstone of everything I'm sharing with all of you, so that you don't even find in holiness a reason for being separate from your brother—an orphan who has arrived but still doesn't need to connect or relate or feel for another.

You know what? This will happen again and again, and again and again, until you get it. And then will "need" go away? No. Need will still be an essential of being, we'll say. But it is something that will be met, because there will be no one else, aside from the one in need, to look with judgment or criticism, but whose heart will be full because he got the point, she got the point.

You need your brother. Your brother needs you. And you love to be the place where the need is met. You love to make the gift that makes another whole, if I may put it that way—that acknowledges wholeness and that values wholeness enough to make it real "in the world."

I'm going to quote two things from Mary Baker Eddy. One is, "Blessed is he who seeth a brother's need and supplieth it." Blessed is he who sees a brother's need and supplieth it. Everyone talks a lot about love, love. You can get very passionate about love, but in another statement by Mrs. Eddy it says, "Divine love always has met and always will meet" . . . what? The "human need." That's what love does! But love doesn't do it without there being someone letting it in, having an object of his or her affection, and extending it; thereby supplying the need with the answer that meets the need.

I have need of you. I have need of every single one of you. And we've talked before about the fact that God needs you. The fact is, you could say, and be absolutely correct, that since you are God's creation, God already has you. So, how could he need you? You see? You get the word "need" confused with the word "lack." God needs you because, being his self-expression, you are essential to his self-expression. You are essential to God. All of creation is essential to God. And you need God. You, the orphan you think you are, needs God, needs to know his source, his father, his mother, so as to be able to know who he really is, and that he's not an orphan.

Now, as I said, the thing that's troubling to those of you who keep hearing an expression of, or a call for help, is that you have this preconception that when you "get it," when you get the point, when you let everything that I've been talking about happen with you, that you suddenly will be, well, the equivalent of independently wealthy, that you will not need anything, and thus you will be able to avoid the humiliation of saying you have a need. Well, surprise! That is never going to happen.

You need absolutely every single one of the members of the brotherhood or sisterhood of God. The wholeness of the expression of God, down to every last detail, infinite detail, is essential to your wholeness. You would be incomplete without every last tiny iota of Creation. It is all essential to you, and you will always need it.

Now, here's the interesting thing: As long as you are distancing yourself from Creation, the fact that all of It is essential to you will be felt as an emptiness, because you can't deny part of your infinitude without experiencing the discomfort, the dissonance, of trying to ignore something that you can't get rid of because it's absolutely essential to you, because you need it.

Well, you know, this is not at all satisfying to the ego because what it says is that you're nothing without everything. You're nothing without every single one of your brothers and sisters. You're nothing without all of Creation. Nothing! There's no way for you to be something all by yourself, and that will not be the end result of your spiritual path. That will not be the prize for waking up.

Thank God that you have someone like Paul, or the person next door, or the fellow sitting on the street with a hat out, saying, "I have a need." Thank God because they are your opportunities to look into your brother's eyes and remember God. They are your opportunity to embody divine love meeting . . . what? Every human need.

Now, this is going to be a great disappointment to those of you who have felt that your self-respect would ultimately come, . . . or shall I say your ultimate self-respect would ultimately come from your not needing to need, and not having to own the need, and not having to feel the need, and not having to be needy. You thought that was going to be the prize.

But I'm going to tell you something: As more and more of you recognize, realize, discover that need is not going to go away, because what it is, is that which identifies what is essential to your being, that makes you whole, . . . until you make that discovery, you will in one way or another be offered the opportunity to recognize the degree to which you, like the Pharisee, want to walk by on the other side of the road. Not seeing, not feeling, not being distracted by someone's need. Not being trapped into being humane—which really means being involved. Involved like the Good Samaritan. Actually touching the person in need who was wounded and dusty and exhausted, and using muscles to carry him to a place where comfort and nurturing and sustenance could be provided.

Involvement.

When you make the discovery that it's your function to recognize need and supply it, and you don't resist it and you don't resent it anymore, and you willingly give it, . . . you know what? There suddenly won't be any more people to pick up on the side of the road. But you'll still need them. And they'll still need you. And you'll know it, and you'll believe it, and you'll let it be true. You will let it to be truth. And you will love you brother, and you will, in the act of loving your brother, remember God.

It is suggested that the fact that there is need, and that Paul has to keep asking for help, is an indication of some flaw in his psyche, some ignorance that clarity needs to come to. Well, I'll tell you the clarity that needs to come to him: It is to stop caring how he looks to others. And how to be true, no matter how it is interpreted by others, no matter what it arouses in them.

You see, generally speaking Paul is not interested in looking good. But there is a hooker present in him, and that is that he doesn't want to look bad. And that's just as significant a hook as wanting to look good. In a way it's even more difficult because those who, such as you, all of you who seem to be in his presence listening to what I'm saying, can easily suggest to him that he's someone special and because you don't want to have to get involved, and because you don't want to feel need, you really need Paul to have no needs.

You need him to be special so that you can look forward to a specialness of your own. You want to use him as a role model to base your confidence in so that you may, with a certain amount of resolve, press forward, so that you might arrive at the point you want him to be, which is to have no needs. If he taught you that lesson, it would be a mis-teaching. If I allowed him to teach that lesson, I would be at fault, because the lesson that needs to be learned is the exact opposite.

You cannot be independently whole, independently "wealthy," independently without need. Independence is itself the problem. It is the foundation of orphanhood. It is the foundation of "the human condition." It is the foundation of suffering. It is the foundation of ignorance of What You Are.

As I said, this isn't very satisfying or pleasing to the ego because your spiritual path, your spiritual quest, if it is followed truly, and if it is the true path, will bring you to the point of the ego's humiliation and your humility, so that you're not only unafraid to need your brothers and sisters, you are also unafraid to recognize their need and supply it. You're not afraid to be the presence of love which, extended, you get to keep, and which, by the extending and keeping, causes you to remember Who You Are, which means: causes you to remember God, because what you are is God's son, God's daughter, God's self-expression.

And that's how you come Home.

So the need that Paul has expressed from time to time, and that I have shared with you from time to time, will not go away. You know what will go away? You're resistance to being the presence of love that meets the need. And in whatever recognition of the truth of this that you have, as a result of exactly what I'm teaching you right now, it will have transfer value, because Paul is not special—no more special than the double-amputee sitting on the sidewalk in front of his cigar box or old hat, begging. And so you will gladly let the value be transferred to anything and everything in your experience, and you will be willing to look in the eyes of that disheveled, apparently not whole, dirty, unshaven sorry example of humanity, and look into his eyes and remember God.

You will be willing to get involved. You will not let your nose come to attention and turn your head and try to ignore the awfulness, "because it doesn't represent the truth. It doesn't represent God," and, of course, "there's a reason he's in that situation, you know. He has some beliefs to work out." And, of course, you're not the one that's going to help him. Oh, no, that would take involvement. That would take time. That would be messy.

You see, we've been talking about this for quite some time. It's what the Course has been teaching, as we've been reading it for quite some time. So when you let your nose come back down a couple of notches and you let go of your self-righteousness and your arrogance and all of the behavioral indicators of your level of spiritual progress, and you let the distance between you and your brother diminish by virtue of letting your attention rest with your brother or sister, and by virtue of letting involvement occur and letting your heart open, humility will have begun to characterize your presence and your mind.

A third statement by Mary Baker Eddy: "Stand porter at the door of thought." In other words, watch, give attention to what's going on in your mind. "Stand porter at the door of thought. Allowing only those thoughts which you would have bodily manifest, you will govern yourself harmoniously." Important. Stand porter at the door of thought. Allowing only those thoughts which you would have manifest . . . and let's drop the word "bodily." We could say, which you would have manifest in your world, which you would have manifest in your life. "Admitting only those thoughts which you would have manifest, . . . you will govern yourselves harmoniously."

Self-righteousness, arrogant meanness, used solely for the purpose of not having to be involved, used solely for the purpose of being able to keep your distance and also keep alive in your mind this insane concept that the ultimate of awakening, that the ultimate of enlightenment, is "not needing"—and therefore that's the example to hold everyone else to, while you're moving toward it—will absolutely keep you bound in your dream. And you will be an ultimate example of the Pharisee who crosses by on the other side of the road, piously pure because he didn't let himself succumb to the recognition of that polluting energy called "need."

And when need is not addressed, fulfillment doesn't come. If fulfillment doesn't come it means love hasn't been present. And if divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need, and divine love is the presence of God moving, then God hasn't been present. What has? Only a pious, arrogant, self-important Pharisee— orphan.

We talked a few weeks ago about the fact that you can be in an elevator or you can be in a crowd of people, alone, because you keep them away from you and you keep yourself private from them. And what I want you to see most clearly is that when you avoid seeing, recognizing and responding to need, you are keeping yourself isolated. And I'm going to ask you something: Who are you saving yourself for? Who is ultimately going to get this need-less being? Are you getting the picture?

I have need of you. All of you. For what? I have need of you to be my brothers and sisters and know that you're my brothers and sisters, and know that we have the same Father, and that therefore we have the same inheritance, so that we may be together equally, fully, wholly, w-h-o-l-l-y. I need you because you're part of my completeness, and you need me because I'm part of your completeness. And we need each other because when we recognize our completeness in each other, we remember God. And then we're all at Home together consciously, and the dream stops. The illusions dissolve.

It is a misperception for any of you to think that you are self-sufficient, or that you could ever become self-sufficient. And yet, in the Western world, you, for the most part, have been taught that a respectable person is one who can take care of himself and is never in need. And his lack of need is always a measure of his respectability, his dignity, his worth. I don't mean financial worth, there. I mean that his presence has meaningful substance to it. You've all been taught this to one degree or another. As a result, you have come to believe that being in need is, . . . what? Shameful.

Fifty years ago, 75 years ago, it was not uncommon to hear a parent say to a child, "Shame on you!" You almost never hear that today because the concept of shame is no longer being used like it used to be to force people through fear, and a feeling of shame, to step up to the mark, get a rod up your backbone and a stiff upper lip, and come hell or high water get yourself into a state of self-sufficiency.

Thank God "shame" is not being used like it used to be because, to tell you the truth, it allows you to hear what I'm saying a little more easily than if I had said this 60 years ago to the mentality of that time.

Where is love needed. Love is needed where the mess is. Love is needed where the hurt is going on. Love is needed where anger is rampant and apparently seemingly justified. Love is needed where there is pain. Love is needed where there seems to be an experience of lack. And, again, I'm making a very clear distinction between the word "lack" and the word "need." The word "need," again, applies to whatever is essential to your being. Lack is a belief that something essential to your being is missing, when that is impossible.

Your world is expressing need all over the place, today. Are you being a Good Samaritan, or are you, like the Pharisee, turning your head and trying to ignore the need so as to keep your sight pure of, and free of, that which is ugly, so that you might more easily keep your mind in your peace, so that you might more easily become elevated into a frame of mind that is so in harmony with God that you experience no need and can thereby fulfill your purpose for being— [chuckling] the ultimate independence.

The Course says that the ego is suspicious at best and vicious at worst. It's true. How many of you, at an entrance to a freeway or on a street corner, see a man or a woman holding a sign: "THREE KIDS. NO JOB," and immediately you say, "Who knows whether that's true or not? Probably there are no children, and probably there isn't a job, and probably any money I give is going to go straight to the liquor store." Suspiciousness turned vicious in the span of time it took to go from the beginning of the thought to the end of the thought. Phew! And self-righteous "you" pulls onto the freeway, or turns the corner in your probably-decent car, untouched by the invitation to look into your brother's eyes and remember God.

Now, we're not going to get into the book tonight. I'm going to say one more thing: Some of you are likely to be tempted by your ego, after listening tonight—if, indeed, you're still listening. You're going to be tempted to say, "Well, Raj can't really be Jesus, and this can't really be the Christ talking because, you know what? What he said made me feel guilty."

That is a real copout. Why am I saying that? Because I'll tell you, if you're going to wake up, one way or another your ignorance must be uncovered so that you can become free of it. And if you are being self-righteous in your days, if you are being arrogant—feeling that you, in your own right, are in some superior position to someone else—then you are wrong. The way you're looking at yourself is wrong. And so, if you are guilty of doing it, you are guilty of doing it! And you need to feel guilty for doing it.

I hear someone saying, "That's the last time I'm going to listen to Raj." No, you'll be back, because the alternative to what I'm saying is more pain. The alternative to it is not waking up. The alternative to it is the dream lasting a little bit longer because you're not willing to allow for the form in which "the means for correction" can register with you. And in order for correction to occur, what it is you're doing that isn't working must become crystal clear to you. And you will have to say, "Yes, I have been doing something that doesn't work, and I thought that it was exactly the thing to be doing in order to eventually meet my Maker face-to-face, Awake. And you were wrong. And you've got to be able to say you were wrong. You've got to be able to recognize that you were doing something that doesn't work.

Why? So that you can feel like you've wasted your life? So that you can become depressed? No. So that you can change your ways. So that you can do something different that does work. If you don't know that what you're doing isn't working, you're lost. If you know that what you're doing doesn't work, now you are grounded enough to be able to change your mind and be in a new way that does work.

If I cannot point out to you what you're doing that keeps you from waking up, that keeps you from remembering Who You Are, I don't have a snowflake's chance in hell in fulfilling my purpose. But you know what? The Father gave me my purpose. The father gave you your purpose. And it can be fulfilled. But you're going to have to fulfill it by employing it. You're going to have to fulfill it by seeing need and supplying it—becoming involved, letting love pour forth, abandoning suspiciousness and viciousness.

So, there's much grist for the mill, isn't there, in you . . . in each of you. Much to abide with and much to let abide with you so that it might trigger in you a desire that's never gone away, even though you ignored it—to be able to look into your brother's eyes without all of these self-righteous defenses and be the presence of love that meets the need, and you remember God. You see? I love you enough to tell you when you're wrong so that you might make a new decision and do what's right, and come Home. That is my job.

[Addressing everyone in the group] I love you. Young Christopher, behind the table, whose eyes I cannot see, but whose eyes I know are there, I love you. And I love you. And I love you — all of you who are watching and all of you who might listen. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I know many of you had a very interesting week following our get-together last week. And what may have escaped people's attention is, that we were talking about Love. We were talking about the fact that it's everyone's function to be the Presence of Love—moving. And, of course, Love moving means involvement, as we talked at some length about last week.

Now, the issue that started the subject was need that had been expressed by Paul the week before. Need for what? Involvement. Need for conscious involvement. Since it revolved around financial support, there was a spontaneous feeling among most everyone: "Well, I hope we can finally get this problem resolved! I hope we can get this taken care of once and for all!" Why? "Well, so that I won't have to be confronted with it again." Not "I Paul," but all of you.

You know, when you have a child, in the beginning you stand a little bit in awe of the experience of the appearing of this child, and then, of finding your capacity to love this child. And as the years go by, the thought sometimes will occur to you: "Boy, I can't wait till they get to be eighteen or twenty and move away from home. And then I will be through raising them and then I can get on to other things!" Like: "Oh, the excruciating task of expressing endless love will be over! Can't wait for the time when everything falls into order, and attention doesn't have to be given to it again!" And finally you're free. What? Free to [small laugh] not have to love is what you're saying. Free not to have to be as attentive. Free to not be as conscious.

You know, it's very easy for you to enjoy the concept of God's Eternal Love. The fact that it's eternal means that you have a guarantee of always being embraced without fluctuation and therefore, if you're willing to reach for It and receive It and accept It, you feel secure.

But, oh dear, the minute I or anyone suggests that because you are God's Self-Expression; thereby embodying everything about God, obviously your function—the Movement of Being—is one of Eternal Love. You see? Oh dear, eternal involvement? And then it doesn't sound so wonderful. And it sounds like work. And the orphan says: "Well okay, I'll tell you what: If we are to attend to our brother's need, let's find a way to organize the attending to our brother's needs. Our city, like other cities, has what's called a tent-city; A city of tents put up by the homeless, wherever they can find enough space. Well, let's form a committee. Let's form a committee to find out what the needs are of these people as well as what the needs are of the city so that we can get rid of this scourge, this ugliness that doesn't reflect well on the city. Let's find out whether we need to raise funds or establish a fund to help these people get their needs met, so that they won't be messing up our city anymore." You see?

Do you see that if you try to organize the expression of Love, Love goes out of the window? To form a committee means that only a small number of people actually have to be involved with "them" who live in this tent city. And everyone else can say: "Well, you know what? We're paying our taxes. And hopefully our taxes will go into a fund that will clean up this problem. And I don't have to be involved at all. I don't have to be conscious enough to look into one of my brother's eyes in tent city and actually care enough to let myself be present enough with him, as well as present with the Father or the Holy Spirit, so that I may be led to know what needs to be done, and what will constitute an extension of Love that will bless my brother and allow me to fulfill my function." You see?

"I hope Paul gets his problem worked out so that I won't have to think about this anymore. Oh, you know what? Why doesn't Paul just start charging for everything? Everyone else does and I wouldn't have any problem with receiving a bill for a copy of a newsletter, or a CD, or to download something from the Internet. I wouldn't mind at all."

These are all means of distancing yourself from Paul or from the need. Sort of take care of the need by remote control. You know, and then "out of sight, out of mind." Well, you know what? The need isn't for money. The need is for Love. And the need isn't for any of you to give money. The need is for you to take to heart what this book teaches, and what I've been teaching and actually begin to shift within yourself, so that you are being in a new way more consciously.

Now, because what I'm talking about is not one of the habits that an orphan engages in, it's going to require effort. It's going to require conscious persistence—conscientiousness. Being in a new way is far different from thinking in a new way, because being means action, and action takes place in your world. And action means involvement: being in a new way in the world.

You get up in the morning, perhaps you and your wife get up in the morning. You both get dressed. You get ready for work. You each take your own car and you go to your job. And you go through your day unconscious of each other. And you come home at the end of the day and you're tired. And so, one of you goes to the computer, the other one goes into the television. And you sit down and have a quiet evening together at home, you say. [chuckling] Together? You're not even conscious of each other.

Now, I've drawn a stark, negative picture there. Many of you are much more involved with each other than that. But, I'm encouraging all of you to become more conscious of each other than that.

Sometimes you run into people whose constant activity is one of caring. They'll give you the shirt off their back. And they'll know when a shirt is needed. And that's the key point: They'll know when a shirt is needed. Why? Because they're paying attention—and they know that they're there to care. This is part of what is natural and normal to each one of you. You each have an Infinite capacity built in. It's your Nature. It's the Essence of your Being. You have an Infinite capacity to Be Love Moving. And if you didn't know that, now you know.

I'm telling you this so that when it looks that I'm suggesting that you begin to engage in something that's going to be work because it doesn't come naturally to you in your role as an orphan, you need to know that I'm not asking you to do something you don't have the capacity to do. The Love in you is Infinite. The Love in you moves from an Eternal Source—Eternal. You have the capacity to be so involved with those in your world and the things in the world that you notice when the plants need to be watered. You notice when your husband or your wife or your partner or your children are needing guidance or direction or a hug. And you notice all of these things simultaneously because you have the capacity to do it.

Don't want for needs to go away. Or I'll put it this way: Don't want calls for love to go away. Don't want for opportunities to be the Presence of Love to go away. Don't want to get to a point where you won't have to do it any more.

Some parents don't wait until their kids are eighteen, they get a nanny when the kids are two weeks old. And the nanny changes the diapers. And the nanny burps them. And the nanny holds them when they're fretful. And the nanny massages them when they've got some gas that isn't coming out easily. The nanny is the Presence of Love extended—extending. And the new proud parents sleep comfortably in their bed, undisturbed by the opportunity to be the Presence of Love moving.

“Well I just don't want to have to keep thinking about this. I'd rather get on to happier things.” Well there you are, the Pharisee. Mmm, “Well I just don't want to think about or be conscious of such things as this guy that's been beaten and mistreated. I'd rather give my thought to more holy, more pleasant things.” You see? In your unwillingness to be the Presence of Love, you secure your orphanhood because, after all, orphanhood is a state of isolation, of aloneness. Isn't it?

If you want to wake up, if you want to come Home into your Right Mind, you have to be willing to abandon the isolation that you treasure so much. And in order to do it, it's going to take effort, because you treasure it so much. It's going to take effort to override the way in which you treasure your isolation. But, remember that you have the Infinite capacity to Be Love moving because you're not an orphan, because you are God Presencing Himself, right there where you are! And it's God's capacity to Be Eternal Love that constitutes your capacity. That's why, when you dare to embrace your capacity to be Eternal Love and you do It and you extend It, you get to keep It. And you remember God. Because what? You've engaged with God, haven't you? You've had to stand in receipt of this flow of Eternal Love that is yours because God is Being It right there where you are, where He Is Being You.

Now you know, the Foundation is a non-profit corporation. Oh, boy, start thinking in those terms and we've got an organization, a wonderful place for committees and a wonderful setup for organizing the inflow of money. Being a non-profit, it can apply for grants—free money, so to speak. And then no one would have to be conscious at all. You see? And yet Love is what waking up is all about—discovering It, letting It flow through you instead of all of the other crap that you willingly let flow through you . . . and letting It transform you and transform others, because all of you do know, at the bottom line, that Love does transform, that Love does heal.

This Work simply cannot be transactional.

“Oh, yeah. There Raj is talking about the Work. Raj is talking about the Foundation. Raj is talking about money. Raj is talking about contributions.” No. I am not talking about any of that. I'm talking about the fact that those things do stand as a trigger for each and every one of you to take a look at the degree to which, as I said last week, you choose consciously to be the Pharisee, and not look at need and not bring into play your capacity to Be Love Eternally. And it serves as a trigger for you to change your mind about just how much Love you're going to give . . . but not quite give . . . hopefully just a little, just enough, because you think you're an orphan. And because you think you don't have much and because you think that it's not in the cards for you to have much unless you become a really good orphan and a really good manipulator, where you can make things happen without employing Love.

How thoughtful are you of your wife? How thoughtful are you of your husband? How thoughtful are you of your lovers? How thoughtful are you of your children? How much of your conscious awareness is allowed to rest upon and be present with not just yourself, but yourself and your family, yourself and your neighbors, yourself and your friends? You have an Infinite capacity to do this. Thoughtfulness—involvement—it's a big word. And I hope that what I've been talking about is making you take a closer look at just how much or how little involvement you are allowing to occur in your daily lives.

Oh! But you have a holy work to do. I'm tattling on Paul a little bit here. "I have a Gathering to master because people are waiting for it. Sue can wait. She's strong. Basic needs are taken care of. She doesn't need my attention. And my not giving her my attention" . . . is not giving her his attention is not because he doesn't love her, but because he has partitioned off this part of his capacity to Love from this capacity to Love and he's saying it's justified not to be thoughtful and sensitive fully in this area, because over in this area a truly holy work is being done. It isn't like he's sitting over there drinking a beer, watching the fights on the TV. You see? And so there's a justification that really, in terms of actual life experience, is no different from the guy drinking the beer, watching the fights, not giving a thought to his wife. The actual experience is one of no involvement.

If what we're reading about, and if what I'm teaching isn't trickling down, let's say, a little bit lower than your mind into your life and your behaviors, it's not worth shit! No matter how spiritually precocious and advanced you might think you are, if you're going to bring the Truth home, it's going to mean something more than having a realization in your mind. It's going to mean a realization in your mind that causes your way of behaving in the world to change.

The last time we were reading from the book, I read this:

Because of your Father's Love you can NEVER forget Him, for no one can forget what God Himself placed in his memory. You can DENY it, but you cannot LOSE it.¹

Well, likewise, God has placed in you an Infinite Eternal capacity to Be Love, moving. And . . .

You can DENY it, but you cannot LOSE it.

Now this is the part I actually want to read:

A Voice will answer every question you ask, and a Vision will correct the perception of everything you see.

That's very important. A simple sentence. You can read it and run right by it, and not realize that there's depth to it. You see, it's not enough to have an answer intellectually. That's not all that was given to you. You weren't just given a Voice, the Voice for Truth that would give you answers. You were also given Vision so that you might perceive differently. Vision means, that which is capable of paying attention.

Vision: When the Truth that the Voice shares with you becomes embodied in the clear perception that Vision gives you, your behavior changes quote, "in the world," unquote. And now Love has moved. The Voice may say something that will cause you to recognize Love, but the Vision is what will translate it into movement, so that miracles happen in the world. And this is really what I've been talking about for the last two weeks—last week and this week. This is really what I'm talking about.

Now the simple fact is, that no-one will implement what I'm talking about until they're ready. And so, I'm not gonna get up on a soapbox and try to force you to do anything, because no matter what I would do, you will still only do it when you decide to do it—when it's important to you. But, I've made it a little more difficult for you now, because now you know the Truth. You're not ignorant of it, even if you opt for not implementing it yet.

It's important for you to know when you're not implementing Reality—when you're not implementing Truth. If you don't know that you're not implementing Truth because you don't know there is a Truth to implement, that's one thing—that's ignorance governing you. When you don't choose to implement the Truth, but you know what the Truth is, you're in a far better place, because now you know you have a choice. And you're just opting for the lazy choice. But you know there's a choice, and you know you're not stuck.

Now I'm going to use a word I used last week that many of you didn't like. You didn't like the way I used it. But if you know what the Truth is and you're opting to not implement it, you are guilty of not implementing Truth. Ohh, I know . . . the Course says that you are the guiltless Son of God. Absolutely you are. But if you are the guiltless Son of God, choosing not to embody the Truth of His Being, you are the guiltless Son of God, being guilty of not fulfilling your Purpose! You are the guiltless Son of God behaving in a manner that doesn't work. You are the guiltless Son of God behaving in a manner that does not embody His Heritage, His Real Nature, His True Character, the very Substance of His Being. Because you're saying: "I'm going to opt for being an orphan a little bit longer. (Thanks for telling me I'm not an orphan.) But I'm going to opt for being an orphan a little longer, and I'm going to opt for believing—continuing to try to believe—I am an orphan even though ya got me. And now I know that I'm not an orphan. But you know what? I'm not going to validate that yet. And as an orphan, I have the right to not validate the Truth!" You see?

And so, you are the Christ, behaving as though you are not the Christ. And trying to believe your behavior. And so you are guilty of denying your Christhood.

What does that mean, when someone is guilty? Are you guilty of denying your Christhood? What does that mean? Are you willing to take responsibility, to own the responsibility for your not behaving as though you're the Christ? Are you willing to own the responsibility? That's all. And if you say: "Yes, I'm willing to own the fact that I'm choosing not to behave as though I'm the Christ," it is the same as saying: "I am guilty of choosing not to behave as though I'm the Christ."

Accepting your guilt can be looked at as shameful. But the fact is that when you truly own your guilt, when you truly say: "I recognize that I'm opting not to behave in harmony with what I truly am," you are expressing an honesty that does not cause those who are Awake to feel that you are behaving shamefully. It causes Us to rejoice, because your willingness to take responsibility for behaving in a dysfunctional way constitutes a far greater degree of honesty and truth in you. And in your doing it, you are laying a foundation—you're providing a foundation—for a different choice to be made. And so you are stronger, you are the stronger for it and this is good.

My task is to simply encourage you not to delay implementing the Truth about you, not delay in discovering your capacity to be the Eternal Presence of Love moving. And it's My task to share with you that in your willingness to do that, sin, sickness and death will begin to disappear. Transformation will begin to appear—occur—in you, in your world.

Now, let's say that you've done this, and all sin, disease and death in the world, and the materiality of the world has faded, and you're left with Reality. Now do you get a rest from consciously being the Presence of Love, the sensitivity, the thoughtfulness, the glad involvement with each and every thing Infinitely? No!

You know what? Love moving is Creation.

Love moving, moves Eternally . . . moves Eternally. Creation is a forever Movement of Love eliciting that which is new. And all that is being brought forth by the Movement of Love infinitely needs you. And you need It because It's part of the infinitude of you. And so, there will forever be that to which you will have the opportunity to be sensitive and embrace and be present with and acknowledge yourself in It and It in you and that together, it's all God. So that every aspect of your Being is actively glorifying God by not denying God anywhere, and finding no desire for a respite from being the Presence of Love that acknowledges God everywhere. It's your Birthright, and it's not work. It's the sustainer of you. It's the nourisher of you. And It is the essence of you moving—moving infinitely.

Now, you look around you at the things that confront you in your day. And you are sure that there are things there which don't deserve your Love. Well you're wrong. And when that thought comes to you, what it very often means is that what you see that doesn't deserve your Love is something that you feel will require more love than you have to give. Using that orphan mentality: Not enough, not enough, not enough! But the fact is, that you have an infinite capacity to love. And you're going to have to start taking hold of It. You're going to have to start embracing It.

It's sort of like a delicious hunk of meat on a turkey leg, you know. You're going to have to sink your teeth into it and pull it away from the bone, you know! It's not like pabulum, where you get it in the spoon and [slurping noise] slurp it into your mouth. No. You're just going to have to take hold of your capacity to be the Presence of Love by wanting nothing else—by not opting for walking by on the other side of the road.

Hey, if I told you that the experience of waking up was like constantly being able to eat filet mignon or the chocolatiest, chocolate ice cream that you could imagine, you might be willing to put forth a little bit of effort to take a bite. What you're having to take a look at . . . what I am illuminating here so that it's easier for you to take a look at is, just how much you make judgments and withhold your Love. And when you withhold your Love, you don't realize that you're short-changing yourself. You don't realize that you are squelching your fundamental capacity. You don't realize that you're squelching the movement of your Being. And so you say: "That's no big deal." But it is! It's the difference between dreaming a dream and being Awake. It's experiencing the human condition or the Kingdom of Heaven. It really does constitute that much of a difference.

Let's go to the book. Referring to you as the orphan, it says . . .

Everything that you made has never been, and is invisible because the Holy Spirit does not see it.

Everything you made up. All the definitions you've given to, you know, the people who live in Tent City and the double-amputee on the sidewalk or the drunk asleep in the gutter who's not even begging for anything. The Holy Spirit does not see that. And what is the Holy Spirit? Not the big eye in the sky. That which is nothing more than your right Mind—your right Mind. Your right Mind does not see it.

Everything . . .

. . . your confused mind has made . . .

. . . has never been, and is invisible because . . .

. . . that which is your right Mind . . .

. . . does not see it.

More than that, you can't imagine yourself as a separate entity and actually succeed at becoming a separate entity that has a power to create anything, or make anything. And so, there is nothing to see, because there is nothing there. And there isn't anything that ever made it. It's a misperception entertained by a mind that is Real, but which is in a state of self-denial.

Yet what He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit—that which is your right Mind . . .

. . . what He DOES see is yours to behold, and through His vision your perception is healed. You have made the invisible the only truth that this world holds.

Another way of saying this is:

You have made the . . .

. . . make-believe

. . . the only truth that this world holds. Valuing nothing, you have sought nothing and FOUND nothing.

Now listen:

By making nothing REAL to you, you have SEEN it.

You have created the delusion of something there.

By making nothing REAL to you, you have SEEN it. BUT IT IS NOT THERE.

In your ignorance of yourself and your brother as the Christ, you look at the Christs that confront you every day and you identify them as something less. And you are committed to the definition you've given them. But they are not there. The ones you see are not there! What is there is an overlay of a definition you have applied to Something that is Real. And all you're allowing yourself to see of that one is the little, awful definition that you have made up!

Again . . .

You have made the invisible . . .

. . . the definition you've applied . . .

. . . the only truth that this world holds. Valuing nothing, . .

. . . valuing nothing itself, . .

. . . you have sought nothing and FOUND nothing. By making nothing REAL to you, you have SEEN it. BUT IT IS NOT THERE.

No matter what you're calling or defining your brother or sister as, what is there, right here, right here, in each of these seats, is the Christ—the full-blown Christ! The Presence of God. That is What is here, right now. And anything less than that that you are seeing is not there. But . . .

By making the nothing REAL to you, you have SEEN it.

You're all seeing something right now, but you're not seeing what's really here. You're seeing what you're sure is here. What is really here is Really here, and what you're seeing is not here. And Christ is invisible to you because of what you have made visible to yourselves!

The Ultimate is the only Thing going on. You are neither behind the Point of Perfection, nor advancing toward It. Each of you is at that Point, and you must understand yourself therefrom, which means you have to abandon your commitment to your best perception at the moment and dare to assume that the full-blown Christ is right there, across from you, and then want to see It more than you want to see what you have been educated to believe is there, and what you have fooled yourself into thinking is there.

And that's the way you free the Christ that is there, up. That's the way you free up the Christ that is there from the bondage of your definitions that you have applied to them, and hold them to. That is the Gift of Love.

And Christ is invisible to you because of what you have made visible to YOURSELVES. Yet it does not matter how much distance you have tried to interpose between your awareness and truth.

That's the wonder of it.

. . . it does not matter how much distance you have tried to interpose between your awareness and truth. God's Son CAN be seen because his vision is shared.

Another very important sentence.

God's Son CAN be seen because his vision is shared.

There are no private thoughts. There are no private minds. Only the orphan doesn't share vision. Only the orphan doesn't share the conscious awareness of Mind being infinite and all-inclusive of all Creation. But the Christs that each of you are, sitting here, sitting in your homes, knows it is not an orphan—it is not an orphan. And therefore, at this moment, while each of you thinks you are separated off from every other thing, you are not. The vision of reality is shared because that's the nature of Being. It's the nature of orphans not to be in a state of sharing. And that's the problem! It is the lot of orphans to be unable to feel their oneness with anything.

Now, because God's Son's vision is shared, and that cannot ever change, then, I'm going to put it this way, the whole Brotherhood eternally knows you. And because that shared knowing cannot be altered even if you're choosing to temporarily ignore It, It still is the dominant and Eternal fact. And that is what predetermines the inevitability of your waking up and not forever being caught in this dream of suffering.

You cannot be forever caught in your current perceptions of reality that are so unsatisfying. The truth about you remains the truth about you in spite of the use you're putting your mind to. Very important. Why is it important? Because it gives you reason for hope! And it is the reason that healing can occur. There is something eternally actual about you, whether you're experiencing It or not. And It constitutes the guarantee of your ability to experience a miracle—a sudden shift of perception—that puts you in a place, in a way of Being that you did not anticipate!

God's Son . . .

. . . you, who each of you truly are . . .

. . . CAN be seen because his . . .

. . . God's Son's

. . . vision is shared.

Hey, if it could be private and not shared, you could take it off. You could take it to some far place, you might think, and cause it to be never, ever found. But because that's impossible, you can't be lost. And you're not lost, right now.

Talking about God's Son . . .

The Holy Spirit looks upon him, and sees nothing else in YOU.
What is invisible to you is perfect in His sight, and encompasses
ALL of it. He has remembered you because He forgot not the Father.

Gotta bring this back home a little bit closer again: The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. So your right Mind . . .

. . . has remembered you . . .

. . . who you truly Are . . .

. . . because He . . .

. . . your Right Mind . . .

. . . forgot not the Father.

You can pretend to be Fatherless, but you can't be Fatherless. And you can't ever really forget that you have a Father even if you torque your perception with all of your might, so that for a time, it seems as though your Father disappeared.

You looked upon the unreal . . .

. . . what you made up . . .

. . . and found despair. Yet, by seeking the unreal, what else COULD you find?

When you're trying to find and then you think you find something that doesn't exist, it has to be a hollow experience—an empty experience. And because this empty experience has to be going right-on, right in the middle of reality of the Kingdom of Heaven, it's what's really going on there where you are with all your might, ignoring what's really going on there. The experience is a strenuous experience and an unpleasant experience because you are going right against the grain of your Self—of your Being.

The unreal world IS a thing of despair, for it can never be.

There can't ever really be an unreal world, even though your great commitment and highly-focused attention has seemed to create a mirage of unreality that seems very evident to you, and very real.

The unreal world IS a thing of despair, for it can never be. And you who share God's Being with Him could never be content without reality. What God did not give you has no power over you, and the attraction of love for love remains irresistible.

Because it remains irresistible, the effort you bring to maintaining your illusion is very strenuous, is very difficult to maintain, because you're having to do it in the face of the irresistible attraction of love.

Are you resisting love? No! You don't think you're resisting love, but just suggest that you have a greater capacity to express love than you're expressing and that every indication of need that you're confronted with is an opportunity for embodying and expressing it. Just see how much you really find love irresistible. Just pay attention to how willing you are to let love flow.

What God did not give you has no power over you, and the attraction of love for love remains irresistible. For it is the function of love to unite all things unto itself, and to hold all things together by extending its wholeness.

The real world was given you by God in loving exchange for the world YOU made . . .

. . . for the world you made up . . .

. . . and which YOU see.

You see, these are words. There's only the Kingdom of Heaven, but the minute you decided to apply different definitions to the Kingdom of Heaven and you lost view of the Kingdom of Heaven, then immediately new words had to be used in order to facilitate your coming back into your right Mind. And the real world and the unreal world are such examples.

The real world was given you by God in loving exchange for the world YOU made and which YOU see.

We have to talk about a real world because Reality is different from what you're seeing. And the best way for you to understand the difference is to identify what you're seeing as an illusion—as an imperfect perception of Reality. And then we can speak of the perfect perception of Reality as the real world. The ego doesn't like the words, "unreal world," and it loves the words, "real world." And so you have a natural attraction to the real world, even though, initially, you don't know what it's referring to.

And so, by using the terms you can be—the orphan can be—enticed or gently nurtured into a willingness to look beyond the definitions that it's currently using, which is the way the isolation is broken and allows you then to begin to have clearer perceptions of Reality that you identify as healing and beneficial transformation, which further spurs you on to make greater investments of love with more consistency and more conscientiousness.

The real world was given you by God in loving exchange for the world YOU made and which YOU see. But take it from the hand of Christ and look upon it.

That's like saying, just . . .

. . . take It from the hand of Christ and look upon it.

That's all you have to do. Let It in. Invite It. Let It be handed to you. Take It. Receive the Gift that's being given to you at every moment. Reality—the Kingdom of Heaven—is presenting Itself to you, right here, right now, every moment. The Gift is being extended and you're not accepting It because you're so sure of your definitions.

But take It from the hand of Christ and look upon it. Its reality will make everything else invisible, . .

Meaning what? Meaning all the things that had been visible to you, which were your own imaginations, made real by you, for you, even though they did not exist.

Its . . .

. . . the real world's . . .

. . . reality will make everything else . . .

. . . everything you made up . . .

. . . invisible, for beholding it . . .

. . . the Real World . . .

. . . is TOTAL perception. And as you look upon it, you will remember that it was always so.

And what you believed was so will never interfere with your vision again.

Nothingness will become invisible, for you will at last have seen truly. Redeemed perception is easily translated into knowledge,

And you know that I prefer the word Knowing. It's a verb, rather than a noun. It's an ongoing Conscious Awareness of Truth.

So . . .

Redeemed perception is easily translated into knowledge, . .

. . . it says here, or Knowing, . .

. . . for ONLY perception is capable of error, and perception has never been.

It's part of what will become invisible.

Being corrected it gives place to knowledge, . .

. . . or the experience of Knowing . . .

. . . which is forever the ONLY reality. The Atonement is but the way back to what was never lost. Your Father could not cease to love His Son.

Now this sentence . . .

The Atonement is but the way back to what was never lost.

. . . is very important in light of what we're going to be reading about for the next few weeks.

The fact that at this present moment, no matter how you are perceiving yourselves or each other, you are the full-blown Christ. If anything is here at this moment, it's the fullness of God as God is manifesting Himself. And anything less than that is just a faulty perception you're having, which you cannot successfully, forever be blinded by.

The Ultimate is the governing and present factor at every moment. And that is your salvation. That is what allows you to experience the miracle of suddenly being lifted out of your misperception and having it replaced by the true perception.

But there are steps that have to occur in order for you to get free of the limitations that you're experiencing, and that you're committed to and that you value so greatly. You cannot say, "I am the full-blown Christ, right now, because all there is here, right now, is God Presencing Himself without limit." That's the Truth. But that's not enough. Because if you, sitting here, are still insensitive to your wife or your husband or your partner, if you still are not letting in love and allowing it to be a movement that causes your behavior to change, you're still the Christ believing you're something else and committing yourself to that belief.

Something has to happen that causes behavior to change, so that behavior embodies the truth of you. And if the behavior doesn't change and you do not begin to embody the truth of you, you can sit there until you're blue in the face, saying the absolute truth: "I am the Christ, because the only thing going on here, right now, is what God is Presencing Himself as without limit." It's a useless acknowledgement if you are still practicing not Being the Christ.

Enough said.

And you're well-prepared for what's to come. And I encourage all of you before next week, to read the next two pages. You don't have to go any further than that because we won't even get that far. But you might even read to the end of the section to get a sense of an overview.

I love you. I love all of you. I love you in spite of what you think about yourself. I love you in spite of what you believe you are. I love you because of what you actually are at this very moment. And I will continue in whatever ways you can hear, to uncover, to illuminate what's really here where each of you are, [chuckling] so that you might dare to change.

And remember, one of the most effective, if not the most effective promoters of change is your engaging in involvement with the intent to extend love. I have to make that proviso, because many of you think involvement is a good fight, or a really great argument. And that is not involvement. That is the means you use to keep yourselves separate, to maintain it with vigor.

So this week, on your little sticky sheet that you put on your refrigerator, put the word "involvement." And I look forward to being with you next week.

(Quiet time)

RAJ: Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, how many of you had an interesting time this week observing your thinking? Let's say, how many of you didn't succeed getting thru the week without noticing how you use your thoughts to one degree or another?

How many of you found out that your thoughts are always from the past? If you, I'm not going to say, "think about it" If you pay attention, you'll realize your thoughts are always a rehearsal of something already known. Not one of you has ever had an original brand new thought. That which is new is described by the word, "insight" or as an "aha" or as "revelation." That's when something new is experienced. And once the something new has happened, you can then think about. That should be a big eye-opener.

Whenever you are thinking, you are rehearsing something from the past.

If you live in your thinking, you're living in the past. You're not even living in the present. You are thinking about whatever is confronting you. You observe it not with your mind, but with your thinking. 'Oh, that's a bald-headed eagle, Oh, that's a swallow, Oh, that's a fir tree . . . Oh, it looks like rain.' You're always looking with your thinking. You're always looking with what you already think you know. Again, that means that your general method of being or of operating is one of living in the past. That in itself should impel you to question the way you be presently because you don't want to be trapped in the past.

You don't want your very existence to be an ever occurring rehearsal of that which is old. I mean after all, when you have family members who are getting into their senior years and all they do is begin to talk about what happened in in 1945 or when they met Joe, and what they did on their first date and every time you get together you hear some tid-bit about the past, you say, ohhhh they're beginning to suffer from senility. And you don't feel good about it.

So why feel good about yourselves, when you, even when you think you are functioning in the present, are simply rehearsing the past?

Now we've talked and talked and talked about looking at everything with fresh eyes. Looking at everything with innocent eyes, meaning, absent the influence of past experience, past concepts, past convictions, and being curious to seeing the More of what God is being Right there than what you're presently seeing. It's wise counsel.

Now, change of subject. Who are rules for? You all know that rules exist. But who are rules for? Rules are for those who have forgotten how to Love. Rules are an artificial means of establishing and maintaining order and harmony when order and harmony do not naturally occur. Why don't they naturally occur? Because you have forgotten how to Love. How did you forget how to Love? By getting a divorce from your Father. By saying, 'I'd rather see it my way. I'd rather do it my way. I want to be the determiner of what everything is. I want to be the determiner of what happens. I want to try my hand at being the authority in my life.' And so in effect you pulled the plug--disconnected yourself from your Source. Forgot who you were, lost the experience of the movement of Love through you that the Father is Being by Presencing Himself right there where you are. And you found yourself without natural harmony.

hand, by your own authority. And the only way you could do it was by establishing a mutual agreement with someone else as to what good behavior was constituted of and that everyone had better abide by this, so that there is a certain degree of peace and security for everyone.

So, structures, ideas were brought together in structures or patterns to be abided by. They were called, "manners" They were called "codes of behavior." They were called, "Protocols by which to live." And to date, a certain amount of harmony has been established. It fluctuates. But a certain amount of harmony has been established. But you know what? It's a harmony that depends entirely upon mutual agreements. And if the mutual agreements are abandoned, harmony ceases. So even when there's a certain modicum of harmony, it's not really Real. It's simply the current evidence of quote, "good behavior." That's not security. That's not stability. And it wouldn't do me a bit of good to point this out to you, because the Truth of what I'm saying is unsettling.

I'm saying it in this context: That there is a natural harmony. There is a natural order. Because there is Love. And there is Love because there is a God. There is a something beyond whatever tiny authority each of you has created out of whole cloth, out of imagination and convinced yourself that you have. And it's your birthright to be experiencing this Love. It is natural to you for this Love to flow through you because you are undefended against it. Because you are willing to be without limits or boundaries. And it's time for you to re-access It. It's time for you to stop suffering in ignorance of what you are and of what your function is.

It's time for you to become free of rules. Oh Boy, the ego can have an hey-day with that. A lot of New Age thinking does revolve around the idea that rules are opinions, rules aren't Real. And that one must learn to let go and move freely and just be whatever you feel like being. But see, that's still doesn't embrace the fact that there is a God. In other words, there is some Universal Absolute. Some Universal consistent Movement of Be-ing that is so pure, that it is without conflict, without opposites, and for this reason, it is Eternal. And for this reason, there is Something going on for you to have a misperception of. And you will forever have Something to have a misperception of because Reality is permanent. Reality is Eternal.

You have to arrive at a point where you stop valuing your perception of Reality; of This that is forever Changeless, but forever New.

Now, when I'm talking to you, I'm not talking to who you think you are. And I'm not talking to the patterns of thoughts that you have adopted in order to define yourself and define your world. I'm talking to the You that you Are. I'm talking to the You that is the Place where the Movement of God is happening. I'm talking to God right there, where each of You Is. You don't think that's what's there. But I persist in talking to the You that is there, and telling You that It Is there, and I will continue to encourage you to stop denying it and to open the door just a crack through the use of curiosity.

Now, what does this mean? This means that I am standing as an Advocate for You and You and You and You and You and You and everyone watching. I am standing as an Advocate for the Real You. I am standing in a Place of confirming and reconfirming to You a Self that you are inclined to deny the existence of. A Self that you don't believe that you can really be. Why? Because you're so damned attached to the definition you've made up about yourself--to your thoughts!

And what am I doing? I'm setting an Example. What I am doing is showing You what You need to be doing. You need to be standing as an Advocate for your Brother and Sister. Being willing to not be deterred by your Brothers or Sisters insistence that they are nothing but their accumulated thoughts and their insistence upon operating on the basis of the past themselves.

How many of you during this past week wanted to not think, but to look into your Brother's eyes, with innocence and listen for, be open to, the Revelation or the experience of the Truth about your Brother and had your Brother, figuratively speaking, spit in your face, or treat you really badly? And how many of you found, that when a Brother or Sister was behaving in a totally gross way, that you immediately reverted to thinking? Immediately reverted to your pre-existing definitions of them? 'Well, of course, what could I have expected?? Of course they're behaving this way-- that is the way they are and they have a history of behaving this way!'

What..what was that? What just happened? You obviously weren't being still were you? There wasn't silence, was there? There wasn't a willingness to stand there in the face of the flack coming toward you. There wasn't in you, in the face of the flack coming toward you, a state of disbelief, a willingness of not validate the flack and not validate it with a history to back it up and convict your Brother or Sister further and solidify the picture.

When a Brother or Sister behaves in a way that seems to threaten your Peace, you will automatically shift into thinking. You will automatically shift into the past and join them. They, in their past, you in your past, thinking that you're present with each other in the Present, instead of totally embroiled in your own private pictures and your own private thoughts and definitions.

What's a definition? It's a thought that's been rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed until it's dug a groove so-to-speak. And then it sits there even if you're not thinking it. You have rules and definitions already in place about everybody and everything. Even things you don't know about. I mean, you wouldn't say that that was possible, but the minute anybody presents something new to you that you haven't heard about before, watch and see what fraction of a second it takes for you to have an opinion about it. Just a fraction of a second. [chuckling]

You know what? If you are sued for one reason or another, and you have to go into Court, you seek an attorney. What does that mean? You seek an advocate to stand with you in order to bring out the truth so that you're not convicted falsely. And that one has to be willing to stand as an advocate for you no matter how much argument regarding your guilt is brought forth. No matter how convincingly it is put. No matter whether the arguments against you are dishonest an evil in intent, or whether they are not really that bad but are demeaning about you. You need someone who is not going to be swayed by false arguments stated beautifully; stated well, stated intelligently, stated logically.

YOU ARE NOT ORPHANS! You are not what you think you are. You are not bodies getting old, deteriorating. . subject to deterioration. You are not something that started with a sperm and an egg. You are not a physical development in process. You are again, Mind. You are the conscious Awareness in which all experience is going on including the experience of body. Now I'm repeating myself, but you need to hear the repetition. Because it's so easy for you to slip back into your thinking.

Now, if thinking is a rehearsal of the past, then it means that thinking is always a form of habit. You're not inclined to change your habits. You're not inclined to abandon your habits. You need help. You need encouragement. That's what I'm here for. And that's what the Holy spirit is here for. That's what, that which is nothing more than your right mind is here for. That which you divinely are is present and active with you right now on behalf of un-rutting you from your thinking.

How many of you during this past week, found your thinking getting you into trouble over and over and over again? Something would happen, and instead of staying in that place where you held your Vision innocently, you slipped into a stream of thoughts, a rehearsal of the past that always put someone else at a disadvantage. And then, remembering what we had talked about last week, you realized, 'Oh boy, I did it again! I abandoned my Peace. I abandoned my valuing the Silence in which Love, the Vision of Christ, the Father's perfect Vision of everything could occur. And so, I've made myself miserable and I'm going to stop now and get back into my peace.'

And you got back into your Peace and perspective returned. The situation that had caused you to lose your mind hasn't changed but you're able to look at it without getting into your knee-jerk habitual responses. And in the process of being willing to stay with the situation from your Peace, something else happened that caused you to feel vulnerable again (finger-snap) and just like that, you're back thinking--you're back being angry--you're back justifying your being angry and convicting the one who caught you off guard, of guilt. How many of you had this happen multiple times--enough times that you're now able to look back without judgment on yourself but with the clarity that allows you to see how it happens--the mechanics of it. So that you can look at it a little bit more objectively and thereby more easily avoid it when the next trigger comes?

For many its been a week of a great deal of growth, strenuous as it might have been. But of course what made it strenuous was, the ease with which you slipped back into the habit of thinking and valuing and validating the thinking.

Now, it should have become obvious to you that in the process of validating your thinking and valuing it, you became an absolute block to healing. You became an absolute block to Redemption. You became that which reinforced the problem. And that's not what this is all about and it isn't what you want. That awareness has value because it helps you see how unproductive your habit of thinking is. Not only did your habit of thinking confirm the problem, it caused you to feel misery. It caused you to feel as though you were in the middle of an absolutely untenable situation which you had no choice about--no authority to do anything about. It caused you to be trapped. It didn't serve you well. And you need to be willing to look at it. You need to be able to see it so that you can say with genuineness, 'I don't want this experience--I don't value this experience! I am not going to do again what I've just done that made me miserable.'

Now the likelihood is that you will do it again. But when the resolve is there from a place of genuineness in you, your next response, your next foray into the habit of thinking won't catch you as significantly and you won't stay in it as long. And you will step out of it and you will begin to establish a new kind of experience where using thinking occurs less and less and each time for a shorter and shorter duration.

You know what? Mind Itself is a Movement. Mind is a very, for lack of better words, fluid thing. It's not made out of matter. It doesn't move in accordance with laws of physics. It moves with utter Grace and fluidity. Uninhibited. And it always moves as the manifestation or visibility of the Movement of God which is ineffably and awesomely beautiful. You are Mind. That's not what you think. But that is what You Are. And there needs to be, as I've said before, a shift from body identification with Mind identification. You need to start identifying with Mind--your Mind.

Now you'll find that your thinking, contrary to what I've just said, defines everything as an object including your Brother and Sister. And so you treat them as though they are not a movement of fluidity. And so, when you take rules--rules of behavior, rules of etiquette, protocols, and you apply them to this object that you have made in your mind of something that is an utterly fluid, uninhibited movement of harmony and order, you're bringing what I'm going to call, two different orders of reality into play that don't blend. Because one of the orders of reality that you're bringing into play, is Reality itself with a capital 'R' and the other order of reality that you're bringing into play, is unreality. . is nothing more than your bad habits. .your ignorance that you are committed to and believe in and maintain with all your heart and with all your might.

And so you bring these two things that don't have any means of interfacing with each other and you try to apply one to the other. And there can't be any resolution that way. The only way there's going to be a resolution is when you stop addressing, when you look into your Brother's eyes, the object you have conceived of him to be. And instead, you insist upon holding yourself to the goal, I'm going to say, the intent to see nothing less than what is Really there. So that you don't bind them or convict them to a point that they couldn't possibly exist at. And then try to enforce it. Because that isn't standing as an Advocate for them. And that will not constitute a connection with What they Really Are that can trigger a sudden shift of perception in which they abandon their commitment to their ignorant thoughts about themselves.

You think that you look out there and the world is full of what? People . . people. . objects. . people. Did you ever think that maybe you're looking out at and seeing, and I don't want you to hold onto these words, but I'm going to put it this way, that you are seeing works in process, works in progress, movements that are truly unfettered by things that don't really exist? If you can't look out at your Brother and Sister and see a Movement in Process and all you see is an object that you have defined in your mind, and then you apply rules of behavior that objects are supposed to operate according to, you will not be a Presence that is an Agent for Change. Because you're caught in the unreality of your own definitions. You're caught in the unreality of your thinking. You're caught in a freeze-dried frame--one frame out of a total movement. A forever unending Movement. And you're saying, 'This is what I'm seeing. This is what is there!' And all the time, the Movement has continued to identify God.

Now, you do this to your brother. Why? Because you're doing it to yourself and you don't want to look at the fact that you're doing it to yourself. You are holding yourselves to your own made-up definitions. You think a certain way about yourself. And I promise you that whether the way you think of yourself is good and positive and full of self-appreciation, or whether you think of yourself in a self-depreciating way, in a constant state of self-attack, either way is not valid because you're thinking about yourself. You're caught in thoughts. Thoughts are pictures. Not the real thing. And the moment you can begin to see this and then remember, 'Wait a minute, I am Mind, not body, not an object--not a thing to think about. I am Mind, that which is in forever constant Movement that is unfettered and always reflecting the forever newness the Movement of God because God is Mind with a capital 'M.'

You've got to be willing to consciously choose for letting go of your thoughts about yourself. How many of you have sat down with a photo album and as you go thru it, you say, "Oh, and there I was when I was sixteen--you're showing your kids--And there I was when I met your Dad-- Oh, and there I am swimming in Lake Tahoe, I'll never forget that summer--wow it was really something!" As though you were that object in that picture in that place when you were the conscious Awareness in which that experience was going off, when the picture was taken. And right now, as you look at the pictures, you are that conscious Awareness which is not caught in any of those freeze-dried frames, still unfettered.

What does it say in the Course? It says, "I am not a body--I am still free to be as God created me." God created me to be, Be-ing Movement, unfettered Movement of Grace and Harmony and awesome beauty and all the Universe, all that is, is embraced in this Movement of Me. You see. You are in a process of freeing yourself from your addiction to freeze-fried frames. You are freeing yourself from the past that you hold in place by means of thoughts that can reflect nothing but the past and you think that those thoughts identify you when that which identifies you is the conscious awareness in which all of this is going on. Right now you are the Ultimate.

'Oh yeah, (looking thru the photo album) . yeah, there I am, you know, waiting for bail to be set...and there I am with my bail-bondsman as we came out of the jailhouse...and Harriet was waiting for me in the car and we had to get back with the other guys because we were trying to divide up the loot before we got caught... and, oh yeah, and there I am after I got out of the penitentiary...'

It doesn't matter whether the pictures are about bad things or swimming in Lake Tahoe--having a good time and a wonderful summer. You're not the picture. You're not any of the pictures. And neither are your Brothers and Sisters. You know what? You gotta throw the photo album away. And you gotta say, 'Hey, look at me--what you see is what you get!' I'm not anything else in another time. And you know what? I know that what you're seeing isn't even what you think it is. I know that this is the visibility and tangibility--it is what identifies a divine Movement. I know that this that I call a body, is nothing but an Idea, I didn't say a thought, it's nothing but an Idea in the Mind of God which is perfectly intangible but experienceable. And it is not bound by laws of physics.' Just as your body is the same, not bound by physics. Not waiting for a disease to advance and take its toll. Not even waiting for healing to occur.

In other words, it isn't a thing waiting for bad things to happen or for good things to happen. It's not any definition that you could apply to it. It is right now, the visibility and tangibility of the moving of intangible Order and Harmony, which although its intangible, is perfectly experienceable. And it is what you're experiencing right now. But you are experiencing it through some definitions. You're experiencing it through some thought patterns that stand in the way of your experiencing What it truly Is.

Now, I am your Advocate telling you how it is. Even though its very different from what you have believed it is. And you need someone to be able to tell you that. Else you don't have a chance of spontaneously getting out of your habit. And, your Brother has need of you to stand as his advocate. Your Sister--everything has need for you to stand as its advocate illuminating what the truth is even if its met with disbelief. Even if its met with argument. Even if its met with unpleasant responses. So all of this is very important.

Now let's go to the book.

I'm backing up a couple of lines (reading): LOVE DOES NOT KILL TO SAVE. If it did, attack would be salvation and this is the ego's interpretation. Not God's. Only the world of guilt could demand this for only the guilty could conceive of it.

The Spirit of the Law saves. The letter of the Law kills. The letter of the Law does not embody Love, compassion. It's hard-nosed, its factual, it says, and its absolute. But without Love to temper the letter of the Law, Law does not fulfill its function.

Well, the argument can be put, if we do not abide by the letter of the Law, we will be lost. And the Law says, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth" So pluck out that eye. That one took a life. Take his. That's the letter of the Law. And because the letter of the Law is abided by because it is believed that that is one's salvation, or society's salvation, it expresses the idea that Salvation expressed as the letter of the Law being carried out, is at the bottom line, really Love. It's Love because it saves society. You see?

(reading): LOVE DOES NOT KILL TO SAVE. If it did, attack WOULD be salvation and this is the ego's interpretation, NOT God's. Only the world of guilt could demand this for only the guilty could CONCEIVE of it. Adam's "sin" could have touched none of you had you not believed that it was the FATHER Who drove him out of paradise.

Ok everybody, let's back up. How many of you believe that? You know about Adam and Eve right? And you think, if you are a believer, that there was a beginning to Creation. And there was Adam and Eve and they were in the Garden of Eden. And certain events occurred and what happened? One of two individuals said, "You know, our Father said not to do this, but you know what? Let's try it our way." You see, that's the beginning of getting a divorce from the Father. 'I'd rather do it my way.' But you know what? It takes two to join together in order to validate it. There has to be one that says, 'I'd rather see it my way--I'd rather do what I think I ought to do.' Well, that's just a spurious thought. That's just a thought that hangs in the ethers. But if there's someone else to entice into joining in that intent, now there are two believers with a single intent, a joined intent and the thought can seem to become valid.

Well, its interesting isn't it, that it was Eve who tempted Adam. I mean, we all know that men tempt women don't we? We all know that men can lead women down the merry path to oblivion. But its interesting that it was a women who was a temptress. Right? Well, when that story got written down, [laughing] who was it written by? It was written by a man, or men, and these men already believed that they were orphans right? So they're going to see their world in terms of conflict and temptation and the need for mutual agreements and so forth. But wait a minute. That there were objects in time . . . somewhere in the distant or the far reaches of the past, that did certain things, is not true. It's a thought. It's a thought that has been fleshed out with details. The fact is, that the Adam and Eve story is like the story I've been sharing with you about orphans. And I've also made it clear that none of you are orphans even though you believe you are.

Well, likewise, there never was a temptress and there never was a tempted. Because no-one, not even Adam and Eve ever stopped being--what God was Be-ing right there even though they believed differently. So, they believed differently about themselves and they said, 'OK, we're going to make a new rule: It's OK to eat the fruit from this tree. And we're going to do it!' And they did it. They unplugged themselves. Right? They said, 'I'd rather do it my way. Father, you're not governing things anymore.' They pulled the plug out. No more juice--no more connection with the Father. And they experienced suddenly, what it meant to be orphans. 'Oh, God kicked me out of the Kingdom of Heaven!' See. Totally irresponsibility there. They didn't say, 'Oh, we pulled the plug . . .and all we need to do is to plug the plug back in.' You see. 'Or, all we have to do is remember that at any time we want we can plug the plug back in.'

But no. They blocked out the fact that they pulled the plug and dissociated themselves from the conscious experience of Reality as it Is. They blocked it out. And then they said, "The Father kicked us out of the Kingdom of Heaven."

Well, that's just an allegorical way of saying what I've been saying allegorically by describing you as, well I'm going to call it, naturalized orphans. You know you have naturalized citizens? Those are citizens who weren't really citizens before. But through certain processes of the law, they can become citizens of a country. And so they're called, naturalized citizens. And you've all become naturalized orphans. You have granted yourself the right to have an experience that is impossible for you to have. And you believe the gift you gave yourself, so completely that you are unwilling to consider any other possibility. Oh, know you say, I'm not totally against it. But when I sit here and say, right here and right now that you are the full blown Christ, you can't believe it!

You say, 'I can't wrap my mind around it!' Whatever. There's an unwillingness--there's a reluctance...you say, 'an inability' --Bullshit! I'm telling you it's Bullshit! You have the capacity because you are the capacity.

So: (reading): Adam's "sin" could have touch none of you had you not believed that it was the FATHER who drove him out of Paradise. For in that belief the knowledge of the Father was lost,...when the plug was pulled out, the knowledge of the Father was lost since only those who do NOT understand Him... the Father... COULD believe it.

So let's be very clear: That there was an Adam and an Eve who had an original idea, "Let's do it our way, let's eat of this tree even though we're told not to." Even though you have that story. and even though it's believed that it's happened over many many thousands of years ago at the beginning when Creation occurred. And centuries and centuries and centuries have passed, and everyone has been wandering in the wilderness having been cast out! Nooooo. . . those are just ideas floating around that you've taken a-hold of and validated and behaved as though they were true when Adam and Eve were then, and are now, the full blown Christ--just as you are, Mind in which the experience of Universe is going on, and in which time is NOT going on.

And so you could say that although the story says they were caught in a thought, and everyone else down through the centuries has remained caught in a thought--and you're caught in a thought, IT'S NOT TRUE! Because they couldn't ever pull the plug. You know why? Because you're hard-wired to God. You are inseparable! And what you think you've done, you haven't accomplished.

But you see how it is? Do you see how it is, that it could be believed that God drove them out of the Garden--just the same way you believe that you are in quote "the human condition" unquote and nothing divine is truly true about you? Even though you wish it could be. The Father has not kicked you out. You have never become disconnected from the Father. You and your Father are still One. And you are not bodies, objects, freeze-dried pictures--material forms. You are still free to be. . Be-ing. . Movement. ineffable, unrestricted unfettered Movement of Love. . . to Be as God created you--as God is Be-ing you right now.

'Well, I don't have the evidence of it. You keep talking about this and I keep not seeing the evidence of it!'

OK. I agree with you. You're still not seeing it. But it's there to be seen. And it's your birthright to be seeing and experiencing it. And you've got to keep inviting it! Because all that you're not seeing it means is, that you're still caught in the thought. You're still caught thinking about the Truth of you. And the Answer is, to take the time frequently to become still so that you might become, what seems to you to be, a giant emptiness. Because I promise you something: Emptiness is an invitation to filling. Emptiness is an invitation. It's an invitation to be filled. It's a request to be filled. And when you are not introducing thinking, or definitions or concepts or protocols or rules, what will fill you is the only thing that's really there to fill you which is, well I'm going to say: The Holy Spirit; that which is nothing more than your Right Mind--and the conscious experience of God.

Some of you, I know, wonder why I spend so much time talking about you. This is supposed to be an ACIM study group. We're supposed to be here learning about, . . . ta-daa. . . a Course in Miracles! Well, friends [chuckling] this book is about you. And if you don't realize it's about you, put it down. . . or realize it. It's not a subject. It's not an object called a subject to learn about. A subject to memorize, a subject to incorporate the knowledge of, within you. Man, this is about your Mind. This is about you shifting from ignorance into the concrete experience of knowing the Truth--experiencing the Truth and becoming free of sin, sickness and death.

And I'll say it again, "Your Brother and Sister are the means of your escape from your bondage!" Not the brother or sister you think your Brother or Sister is, but the Brother and Sister who Are and have never stopped being the Presence of God. And they are being in your life, giving you the opportunity to abandon your definitions and your thoughts and your habitual way . . . of embracing them . . . around the neck [said venomously]. They are your opportunity to learn to let go of them--to let go of them by abandoning the thoughts that you are holding them to in your mind. And the only way that you're going to be able to do that is if you're willing to consider that they are not guilty of being something less than the Son or Daughter of God. And inseparably, that is the truth about you. And you must release yourself from the definitions you are binding yourself with--the thoughts.

I'm not going to give you something new to put on your refrigerator this week. Keep that note up there: THINKING IS NOT THE NORMAL USE OF YOUR MIND. And then, why don't you say. . . like they do in the South, 'What the hey, I'm going to try, not thinking.'

I love you . . . every single one of you. And I look forward this week rejoicing when I see light-bulbs go on in your mind that are the evidence of insight occurring--not thinking. Insight that takes you out of thinking even if its only momentary. Because even if the experience doesn't last, you CANNOT RETURN to the place you were before it happened.

I'm full of it tonight, but I must stop. I want you to know that I'm full of it all week. And I'm full of it standing with you and you can invite me to spill over onto you directly. There's a reason you have an Advocate. And the reason is, that you are the Son of God believing that you're not. And this is a humungous--an universally humungous impossibility. And the impossibility of it provides you with everything you need in order to escape its bondage.

Goodnight.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 10th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, how many of you had an interesting time this week observing your thinking? Let's say, how many of you didn't succeed at getting thru the week without noticing how you use your thoughts to one degree or another?

How many of you found out that your thoughts are always from the past? If you (I'm not going to say, "think about it") if you pay attention, you'll realize your thoughts are always a rehearsal of something already known. Not one of you has ever had an original, brand new thought. That which is new is described by the word, "insight" or as an "ah-ha" or as "revelation." That's when something new is experienced. And once the something new has happened, you can then think about it. That should be a big eye-opener.

Whenever you are thinking, you are rehearsing something from the past.

If you live in your thinking, you're living in the past. You're not even living in the present. You are thinking about whatever is confronting you—you observe it not with your mind, but with your thinking. "Oh, that's a bald-headed eagle. Oh, that's a swallow. Oh, that's a fir tree. Oh, it looks like rain." You're always looking with your thinking. You're always looking with what you already think you know. Again, that means that your general method of being or of operating is one of living in the past. That in itself should impel you to question the way you be presently, because you don't want to be trapped in the past.

You don't want your very existence to be an ever occurring rehearsal of that which is old. I mean, after all, when you have family members who are getting into their senior years and all they do is begin to talk about what happened in 1945 or when they met Joe, and what they did on their first date. And every time you get together you hear some tid-bit about the past, you say, "Oh, they're beginning to suffer from senility." And you don't feel good about it.

So why feel good about yourselves when you, even when you think you are functioning in the present, are simply rehearsing the past?

Now, we've talked and talked and talked about looking at everything with fresh eyes. Looking at everything with innocent eyes, meaning absent the influence of past experience, past concepts, past convictions and being curious to seeing the more of what God is being right there, than what you're presently seeing. It's wise counsel.

Now, change of subject: Who are rules for? You all know that rules exist. But who are rules for? Rules are for those who have forgotten how to Love. Rules are an artificial means of establishing and maintaining order and harmony when order and harmony do not naturally occur. Why don't they naturally occur? Because you have forgotten how to Love. How did you forget how to Love? By getting a divorce from your Father, by saying, "I'd rather see it my way. I'd rather do it my way. I want to be the determiner of what everything is. I want to be the determiner of what happens. I want to try my hand at being the authority in my life." And so, in effect you pulled the plug—disconnected yourself from your Source, forgot who you were, lost the experience of the movement of Love through you that the Father is Being by Presencing Himself right there where you are. And you found yourself without natural harmony.

But you had just had the experience of harmony. So, quickly you decided what you needed to do to reestablish what had disappeared by your own hand, by your own authority. And the only way you could do it was by establishing a mutual agreement with someone else, as to what good behavior was constituted of, and that everyone had better abide by this, so there is a certain degree of peace and security for everyone.

So, ideas were brought together in structures or patterns to be abided by. They were called, "manners." They were called, "codes of behavior." They were called, "protocols by which to live." And to date, a certain amount of harmony has been established—it fluctuates—but a certain amount of harmony has been established. But you know what? It's a harmony that depends entirely upon mutual agreements. And if the mutual agreements are abandoned, harmony ceases. So, even when there's a certain modicum of harmony, it's not really, Real. It's simply the current evidence of "good behavior." That's not security. That's not stability. And it wouldn't do me a bit of good to point this out to you, because the truth of what I'm saying is unsettling.

I'm saying it in this context: That there is a natural harmony, there is a natural order because there is Love. And there is Love because there is a God. There is something beyond whatever tiny authority each of you has created out of whole cloth, out of imagination, and convinced yourself that you have. And it's your Birthright to be experiencing this Love. It is natural to you for this Love to flow through you because you are undefended against it. Because you are willing to be without limits or boundaries. And it's time for you to re-access it. It's time for you to stop suffering in ignorance of what you are and of what your function is.

It's time for you to become free of rules. Oh Boy, the ego can have a hey-day with that.

A lot of New Age thinking does revolve around the idea that rules are opinions, rules aren't real. And that one must learn to let go and move freely and just be whatever you feel like being. But see, that still doesn't embrace the fact that there is a God. In other words, there is some Universal Absolute, some Universal consistent Movement of Being that is so pure, that it is without conflict, without opposites and for this reason it is Eternal, and for this reason there is something going on for you to have a misperception of. And you will forever have something to have a misperception of because Reality is permanent—Reality is Eternal.

You have to arrive at a point where you stop valuing your perception of Reality—of This that is forever changeless, but forever new.

Now, when I'm talking to you, I'm not talking to who you think you are. And I'm not talking to the patterns of thoughts that you have adopted in order to define yourself and define your world. I'm talking to the you that you Are. I'm talking to the you that is the place where the Movement of God is happening. I'm talking to God right there where each of you is. You don't think that's what's there, but I persist in talking to the you that is there and telling you that It is there. And I will continue to encourage you to stop denying It and to open the door just a crack through the use of curiosity.

Now, what does this mean? This means that I am standing as an advocate for you and everyone watching. I am standing as an advocate for the real You. I am standing in a place of confirming and reconfirming to you a Self that you are inclined to deny the existence of—a Self that you don't believe you can really be. Why?

Because you're so damned attached to the definition you've made up about yourself—to your thoughts!

And what am I doing? I'm setting an Example. What I am doing is showing You what You need to be doing. You need to be standing as an Advocate for your Brother and Sister. Being willing to not be deterred by your Brothers or Sisters insistence that they are nothing but their accumulated thoughts and their insistence upon operating on the basis of the past themselves.

How many of you during this past week wanted to “not think” but to look into your brother's eyes with innocence and listen for, be open to, the revelation or the experience of the truth about your brother? And had your brother, figuratively speaking, spit in your face or treat you really badly, and how many of you found that when a brother or sister was behaving in a totally gross way, that you immediately reverted to thinking—immediately reverted to your preexisting definitions of them? “Well, of course! What could I have expected? Of course they're behaving this way. That is the way they are and they have a history of behaving this way!”

What . . . what was that? What just happened? You obviously weren't being still were you? There wasn't silence, was there? There wasn't a willingness to stand there in the face of the flack coming toward you . . . there wasn't in you, in the face of the flack coming toward you, a state of disbelief, a willingness to not validate the flack, and not validate it with a history to back it up and convict your brother or sister further and solidify the picture.

When a brother or sister behaves in a way that seems to threaten your peace, you will automatically shift into thinking. You will automatically shift into the past and join them—they in their past, you in your past, thinking that you're present with each other in the present, instead of totally embroiled in your own private pictures and your own private thoughts and definitions.

What's a definition? It's a thought that's been rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed and rehearsed until its dug a groove so-to-speak. And then it sits there even if you're not thinking it. You have rules and definitions already in place about everybody and everything—even things you don't know about. I mean, you wouldn't say that that was possible, but the minute anybody presents something new to you that you haven't heard about before, watch and see what fraction of a second it takes for you to have an opinion about it—just a fraction of a second. [chuckling]

You know what? If you are sued for one reason or another and you have to go into Court, you seek an attorney. What does that mean? You seek an advocate to stand with you in order to bring out the truth so that you're not convicted falsely. And that one has to be willing to stand as an advocate for you no matter how much argument regarding your guilt is brought forth, no matter how convincingly it is put, no matter whether the arguments against you are dishonest and evil, in intent, or whether they are not really that bad but are demeaning about you. You need someone who is not going to be swayed by false arguments stated beautifully, stated well, stated intelligently, stated logically.

You are not orphans! You are not what you think you are. You are not bodies getting old, subject to deterioration. You are not something that started with a sperm and an egg. You are not a physical development in process. You are again, Mind. You are the conscious awareness in which all experience is going on, including the experience of body.

Now, I'm repeating myself, but you need to hear the repetition, because it's so easy for you to slip back into your thinking.

Now, if thinking is a rehearsal of the past, then it means that thinking is always a form of habit. You're not inclined to change your habits. You're not inclined to abandon your habits. You need help. You need encouragement. And that's what I'm here for. And that's what the Holy spirit is here for. That's what, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, is here for. That which you divinely Are is present and active right now on behalf of un-rutting you from your thinking.

How many of you during this past week, found your thinking getting you into trouble over and over and over and over again? Something would happen, and instead of staying in that place where you held your vision innocently, you slipped into a stream of thoughts, a rehearsal of the past that always put someone else at a disadvantage. And then, remembering what we had talked about last week, you realized, "Oh boy, I did it again! I abandoned my peace. I abandoned my valuing the silence in which Love, the Vision of Christ, the Father's perfect Vision of everything could occur. And so, I've made myself miserable and I'm going to stop now and get back into my peace."

And you got back into your peace, and perspective returned. The situation that had caused you to lose your mind hasn't changed, but you're able to look at it without getting into your knee-jerk habitual responses. And in the process of being willing to stay with the situation from your peace, something else happened that caused you to feel vulnerable again [snaps fingers] and just like that, you're back thinking—you're back being angry, you're back justifying your being angry and convicting the one who caught you off guard of guilt.

How many of you had this happen multiple times--enough times that you're now able to look back without judgment on yourself but with the clarity that allows you to see how it happens--the mechanics of it. So that you can look at it a little bit more objectively and thereby more easily avoid it when the next trigger comes?

For many its been a week of a great deal of growth, strenuous as it might have been. But of course what made it strenuous was, the ease with which you slipped back into the habit of thinking and valuing and validating the thinking.

Now, it should have become obvious to you that in the process of validating your thinking and valuing it, you became an absolute block to healing. You became an absolute block to Redemption. You became that which reinforced the problem. And that's not what this is all about and it isn't what you want. That awareness has value because it helps you see how unproductive your habit of thinking is. Not only did your habit of thinking confirm the problem, it caused you to feel misery. It caused you to feel as though you were in the middle of an absolutely untenable situation which you had no choice about—no authority to do anything about. It caused you to be trapped. It didn't serve you well. And you need to be willing to look at it. You need to be able to see it so that you can say with genuineness, "I don't want this experience! I don't value this experience! I am not going to do again what I've just done that made me miserable!"

Now the likelihood is that you will do it again. But when the resolve is there from a place of genuineness in you, your next response, your next foray into the habit of thinking won't catch you as significantly and you won't stay in it as long. And you will step out of it and you will begin to establish a new kind of experience, where using thinking occurs less and less and each time for a shorter and shorter duration.

You know what? Mind itself is a Movement. Mind is a very, for lack of better words, fluid thing. It's not made out of matter. It doesn't move in accordance with laws of physics. It moves with utter grace and fluidity—uninhibited. And it always moves as the manifestation or visibility of the Movement of God which is ineffably and awesomely beautiful. You are Mind. That's not what you think, but that is what you Are. And there needs to be, as I've said before, a shift from body identification to Mind identification. You need to start identifying with Mind—your Mind.

Now you'll find that your thinking, contrary to what I've just said, defines everything as an object, including your brother and sister. And so, you treat them as though they are not a movement of fluidity. And so, when you take rules—rules of behavior, rules of etiquette, protocols—and you apply them to this object that you have made in your mind of something that is an utterly fluid, uninhibited movement of harmony and order, you're bringing what I'm going to call, two different orders of reality into play that don't blend. Because one of the orders of reality that you're bringing into play, is Reality itself, and the other order of reality that you're bringing into play, is unreality—is nothing more than your bad habits, your ignorance that you are committed to and believe in and maintain with all your heart and all your might.

And so, you bring these two things that don't have any means of interfacing with each other and you try to apply one to the other, and there can't be any resolution that way. The only way there's going to be resolution is when you stop addressing—when you look into your brother's eyes—the object you have conceived of him to be. And instead, you insist upon holding yourself to the goal, I'm going to say, the intent to see nothing less than what is Really there. So that you don't bind them or convict them to a point that they couldn't possibly exist at, and then try to enforce it. Because that isn't standing as an advocate for them. And that will not constitute a connection with what they really Are that can trigger a sudden shift of perception in which they abandon their commitment to their ignorant thoughts about themselves.

You think that you look out there and the world is full of what? People . . . people . . . objects . . . people. Did you ever think that maybe you're looking out at and seeing (and I don't want you to hold onto these words, but I'm going to put it this way) that you are seeing works in process, works in progress, movements that are truly unfettered by things that don't really exist? If you can't look out at your brother and sister and see a Movement in Process and all you see is an object that you have defined in your mind, and then you apply rules of behavior that objects are supposed to operate according to, you will not be a Presence that is an agent for change, because you're caught in the unreality of your own definitions. You're caught in the unreality of your thinking. You're caught in a freeze-dried frame—one frame out of a total Movement, a forever unending Movement. And you're saying, "This is what I seeing. This is what is there!" And all the time, the Movement has continued to identify God.

Now, you do this to your brother. Why? Because you're doing it to yourself and you don't want to look at the fact that you're doing it to yourself. You are holding yourselves to your own made-up definitions. You think a certain way about yourself. And I promise you that whether the way you think of yourself is good and positive and full of self-appreciation, or whether you think of yourself in a self-depreciating way, in a constant state of self-attack, either way is not valid because you're thinking about yourself. You're caught in thoughts. Thoughts are pictures, not the real thing. And the moment you can begin to see this and then remember, "Wait a minute, I am Mind, not body, not an object, not a thing to think about. I am Mind, that which is in forever constant Movement that is unfettered and always reflecting the forever newness of the Movement of God, because God is Mind.

You've got to be willing to consciously choose for letting go of your thoughts about yourself. How many of you have sat down with a photo album and as you go through it, you say, "Oh, and there I was when I was sixteen (you're showing your kids). And there I was when I met your Dad. Oh, and there I am swimming in Lake Tahoe. I'll never forget that summer. Wow, it was really something!"—as though you were that object in that picture in that place when you were the conscious Awareness in which that experience was going off, when the picture was taken. And right now, as you look at the pictures, you are that conscious Awareness which is not caught in any of those freeze-dried frames, still unfettered.

What does it say in the Course? It says, "I am not a body. I am still free to be as God created me." God created me to be Being, Movement unfettered Movement of Grace and Harmony and awesome beauty and all of the Universe, all that is, is embraced in this Movement of me. You see. You are in a process of freeing yourself from your addiction to freeze-dried frames. You are freeing yourself from the past that you hold in place by means of thoughts that can reflect nothing but the past and you think that those thoughts identify you when that which identifies you is the conscious awareness in which all of this is going on. Right now you are the Ultimate.

"Oh yeah (looking through the photo album) yeah, there I am, you know, waiting for bail to be set. And there I am with my bail-bondsman as we came out of the jailhouse. And Harriet was waiting for me in the car and we had to get back with the other guys, because we were trying to divide up the loot before we were caught. And, oh yeah, and there I am after I got out of the penitentiary."

It doesn't matter whether the pictures are about bad things or swimming in Lake Tahoe, having a good time and a wonderful summer. You're not the picture. You're not any of the pictures. And neither are your brothers and sisters. You know what? You gotta throw the photo album away. And you gotta say, "Hey, look at me. What you see is what you get! I'm not anything else in another time." And you know what? I know that what you're seeing isn't even what you think it is. I know that this is the visibility and tangibility, it is what identifies a divine Movement. I know that this that I call a body, is nothing but an idea—I didn't say a thought—it's nothing but an idea in the Mind of God which is perfectly intangible but experienceable. And it is not bound by laws of physics. Just as your body is the same, not bound by physics, not waiting for a disease to advance and take its toll, not even waiting for healing to occur.

In other words, it isn't a thing waiting for bad things to happen or for good things to happen. It's not any definition that you could apply to it. It is right now, the visibility and tangibility of the moving of intangible order and harmony, which although it is intangible, is perfectly experienceable. And it is what you're experiencing right now. But you are experiencing it through some definitions. You're experiencing it through some thought patterns that stand in the way of your experiencing what it truly is.

Now, I am your advocate telling you how it is, even though it's very different from what you have believed it is. And you need someone to be able to tell you that, else you don't have a chance of spontaneously getting out of your habit. And, your brother has need of you to stand as his advocate (your sister). Everything has need for you to stand as its advocate illuminating what the truth is even if it's met with disbelief, even if it's met with argument, even if it's met with unpleasant responses.

So all of this is very important.

Now let's go to the book. I'm backing up a couple of lines.

LOVE DOES NOT KILL TO SAVE. If it did, attack WOULD be salvation, and this is the EGO'S interpretation, NOT God's. Only the world of guilt could demand this, for only the guilty could CONCEIVE of it.¹

The spirit of the law saves. The letter of the law kills. The letter of the law does not embody love, compassion, it's hard-nosed, it's factual it says, and its absolute. But without love to temper the letter of the law, law does not fulfill its function.

Well, the argument can be put, "If we do not abide by the letter of the Law, we will be lost." And the law says, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. So pluck out that eye. That one took a life, take his." That's the letter of the law. And because the letter of the law is abided by because it is believed that that is one's salvation, or society's salvation, it expresses the idea that salvation expressed as the letter of the law being carried out, is at the bottom line, really love. It's love because it saves society. You see?

LOVE DOES NOT KILL TO SAVE. If it did, attack WOULD be salvation, and this is the EGO'S interpretation, NOT God's. Only the world of guilt could demand this, for only the guilty could CONCEIVE of it. Adam's "sin" could have touched none of you had you not believed that it was the FATHER Who drove him out of paradise.

Ok everybody, let's back up. How many of you believe that? You know about Adam and Eve, right? And you think, if you are a believer, that there was a beginning to Creation. And there was Adam and Eve and they were in the Garden of Eden, and certain events occurred. And what happened? One of two individuals said, "You know, our Father said not to do this. But you know what? Let's try it our way." See, that's the beginning of getting a divorce from the Father. "I'd rather do it my way." But you know what? It takes two to join together in order to validate it. There has to be the one that says, "I'd rather see it my way. I'd rather do what I think I ought to do." Well, that's just a spurious thought. That's just a thought that hangs in the ethers. But if there's someone else to entice into joining in that intent, now there are two believers with a single intent, a joined intent, and the thought can seem to become valid.

Well, it's interesting isn't it, that it was Eve who tempted Adam. I mean, we all know that men tempt women, don't we? We all know that men can lead women down the merry path to oblivion. But it's interesting that it was a woman who was a temptress. Right? Well, when that story got written down, [chuckling] who was it written by? It was written by a man, or men. And these men already believed that they were orphans, right? So they're going to see their world in terms of conflict and temptation and the need for mutual agreements and so on. But wait a minute. That there were objects in time somewhere in the distant or the far reaches of the past, that did certain things, is not true. It's a thought. It's a thought that has been fleshed out with details.

The fact is, that the Adam and Eve story is like the story I've been sharing with you about orphans. And I've also made it clear that none of you are orphans even though you believe you are.

Well, likewise, there never was a temptress and there never was a tempted. Because no-one, not even Adam and Eve ever stopped being what God was Being right there, even though they believed differently.

So, they believed differently about themselves and they said, "Okay, we're going to make a new rule: It's okay to eat the fruit from this tree. And we're going to do it!" And they did it—they unplugged themselves. Right? They said, "I'd rather do it my way. Father, you're not governing things anymore." They pulled the plug out. No more juice. No more connection with the Father. And they experienced suddenly, what it meant to be orphans. "Oh, God kicked me out of the Kingdom of Heaven!" See, total irresponsibility there. They didn't say, "Oh, we pulled the plug . . . and all we need to do is to plug the plug back in." You see, or, "all we have to do is remember that at any time we want, we can plug the plug back in."

But no, they blocked out the fact that they pulled the plug and disassociated themselves from the conscious experience of Reality as it Is. They blocked it out. And then they said, "The Father kicked us out of the Kingdom of Heaven."

Well, that's just an allegorical way of saying what I've been saying allegorically by describing you as—well, I'm going to call it—naturalized orphans. You know, you have naturalized citizens. Those are citizens who weren't really citizens before, but through certain processes of the law, they can become citizens of a country. And so they're called, naturalized citizens. And you've all become naturalized orphans. You have granted yourself the right to have an experience that is impossible for you to have. And you believe the gift you gave yourself so completely, that you are unwilling to consider any other possibility. "Oh no," you say, "I'm not totally against it." But when I sit here and say that right here and right now, as you sit here, you are the full blown Christ, you can't believe it!

You say, "I can't wrap my mind around it!" Whatever . . . there's an unwillingness, there's a reluctance. You say, "an inability." Bullshit! I'm telling you it's Bullshit! You have the capacity, because you Are the capacity.

So . . .

Adam's "sin" could have touch none of you had you not believed that it was the FATHER Who drove him out of paradise. For in that belief the knowledge of the Father was lost, . .

. . . when the plug was pulled out . . .

. . . the knowledge of the Father was lost, since only those who do NOT understand Him . . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . COULD believe it.

So let's be very clear: That there was an Adam and an Eve who had an original idea, "Let's do it our way. Let's eat of this tree, even though we're told not to." Even though you have that story and even though it's believed that it's happened over many, many thousands of years ago at the beginning, when Creation occurred—and centuries and centuries and centuries have passed, and everybody has been wandering in the wilderness having been cast out! No! Those are just ideas floating around that you've taken hold of and validated and behaved as though they were true, when Adam and Eve were then and are now the full blown Christ just as you are, Mind—in which the experience of Universe is going on, and in which time is not going on.

And so, you could say that although the story says they were caught in a thought, and everyone else down through the centuries has remained caught in a thought, and you're caught in a thought . . . it's not true, because they couldn't ever pull the plug. You know why? Because you're hard-wired to God, you are inseparable! And what you think you've done, you haven't accomplished.

But you see how it is? Do you see how it is that it could be believed that God drove them out of the garden, just the same way you believe that you are in "the human condition," and nothing divine is truly true about you, even though you wish it could be. The Father has not kicked you out. You have never become disconnected from the Father. You and your Father are still One. And you are not bodies, objects, freeze-dried pictures, material forms. You are still free to be, be Being, Movement, ineffable, unrestricted, unfettered Movement of Love, to be as God created you—as God is Being you right now.

"Well, I don't have the evidence of it. You keep talking about this and I keep not seeing the evidence of it!"

Okay, I agree with you, you're still not seeing it. But it's there to be seen. And it's your Birthright to be seeing and experiencing it. And you've got to keep inviting it! Because, all that you're not seeing it means is, that you're still caught in the thought—you're still caught in thinking about the truth of you. And the Answer is, to take the time frequently to become still so that you might become, what seems to you to be a giant emptiness. Because I promise you something: Emptiness is an invitation to filling. Emptiness is an invitation. It's an invitation to be filled. It's a request to be filled. And when you are not introducing thinking or definitions or concepts or protocols or rules, what will fill you is the only thing that's really there to fill you, which is, well I'm going to say, the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind, and the conscious experience of God.

Some of you, I know, wonder why I spend so much time talking about you. This is supposed to be an ACIM study group. We're supposed to be here learning about . . . ta-daa . . . A Course in Miracles! Well, friends [chuckling] this book is about you. And if you don't realize it's about you, put it down . . . or realize it. It's not a subject. It's not an object called a subject to learn about, a subject to memorize, a subject to incorporate the knowledge of, within you. Man, this is about your Mind. This is about you shifting from ignorance into the concrete experience of knowing the truth—experiencing the truth and becoming free of sin, sickness and death.

but the brother and sister who Are and never stopped being the Presence of God. And they're being in your life, giving you the opportunity to abandon your definitions and your thoughts and your habitual way of embracing them—around the neck [said venomously]. They are your opportunity to learn to let go of them—to let go of them by abandoning the thoughts that you are holding them to in your mind. And the only way that you're going to be able to do that is if you're willing to consider that they are not guilty of being something less than the Son or Daughter of God—and inseparably, that is the truth about you. And you must release yourself from the definitions you are binding yourself with—the thoughts.

I'm not going to give you something new to put on your refrigerator this week. Keep that note up there: Thinking is not the normal use of your mind. And then, why don't you say, like they do in the South, "What the hey," I'm going to try, not thinking.

I love you, every single one of you. And I look forward this week rejoicing when I see light-bulbs go on in your mind that are the evidence of insight occurring—not thinking—insight that takes you out of thinking, even if its only momentary. Because even if the experience doesn't last, you cannot return to the place you were before it happened.

I'm full of it tonight. But I must stop. I want you to know that I'm full of it all week. And I'm full of it standing with you, and you can invite me to spill over onto you directly. There's a reason you have an advocate. And the reason is, that you are the Son of God, believing that you're not. And this is a humungous—a universally humungous impossibility. And the impossibility of it provides you with everything you need in order to escape its bondage.

Goodnight.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 18th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening, and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, the Course says, "There is no order of difficulty in miracles." And I'm going to say, there are not orders of reality. And what I mean by that is, that as we meet every week and I'm sharing these ideas with you, I'm aware that it seems to you that my assessment of each of you—my definition, if you will, of each of you—describes someone you don't know.

I tell you that you are the direct expression of God, right now. And, therefore, you are each the Christ. But you don't believe me, you don't think so. At least, for the most part, as you go through your day, you don't behave like the Christ and you find it very difficult to put into practice the things I have suggested that you bring into play. It's just too easy to slip back into your old habits of thinking, and they seem fully justified. But, the one to whom they seem justified, is not the one I have described as you. It's the orphan, it's the one who feels separated from his Father. It's the one who feels isolated and alone.

Well, those words don't describe you, even though you believe they do. And so, it can seem as though I am describing two different orders of reality. There's the Kingdom of Heaven and the Sons and Daughters of God, And I'm talking about you and I'm talking about everything that you experience—Holy ones. Awesome . . . Awesome because the very substance of your Being is divine Love, which has not only the capacity but the intent to bless everything It sees with the Love that It is.

"Well," you say, "that isn't what I find myself engaged in as I go through my day. You're describing some ultimate me, not a here-and-now me. Here's my experience, and I'm very upset about it. And here's why I'm upset about it." And you can spell off all the justifications and you are firmly convinced in the picture you draw. So, you're talking about a different order of reality, and it seems at times to be something you cannot pull together. And yet, you know what? As we continue, I am not going to stop confronting you with the truth about you that stands at odds with the way you perceive yourselves.

Now, part of the problem is that you think that you have to reconcile the way you see everything, and the way you think of yourself, with what I'm talking about. And they can't be reconciled. The two will never meet, because one is Real and one is unreal. One is the direct conscious experience of Reality as it is and the other is a preoccupation with a fantasy about what everything is. The fantasy goes on, so to speak, in your head. To engage in it, you have to withdraw from everything and go inside to formulate and maintain the picture you have drawn.

In this way, you are not really present with everything or anyone. You are staying solidly joined to the picture you are maintaining in your mind. That doesn't constitute a different order of reality. It simply constitutes a misunderstanding which you're trying to abide in with great diligence. Because in some way you feel that by staying with the picture you're maintaining, you are going to manage to survive. And that's why it is of great importance.

The imaginative description of yourself that you have made up will not become, or refine itself into the Christ that you are. What will happen is, that you will finally arrive at a point where you're willing to withdraw your investment in your imagination and abandon it—let it go. And, you want to know something? The reason the Course presents such difficulty to you is because you read it so that you can get a better hold on the world by means of your definitions, and the Course is saying, abandon them.

"Oh, abandon them? That will leave me floating, insecure. That will make me very vulnerable. I cannot afford to lose control, chaos will follow. I am convinced of it. I am convinced that my very definite definitions and opinions and judgments are what are keeping me safe. I live in a hostile world. It's obvious to anyone with half a brain." And that's an argument in favor of not letting go and providing yourself with the opportunity to discover that there is a permanent, eternal, abiding order to the experience of existing that you are not responsible for, and that you can lean into and rely upon totally.

Oh, but if you do that, that will put your ego out of a job. You say, "Well, I won't have anything to do, then." But really, it's saying that your ego will be without a job, and you will have to glean the value of your presence from some other source than the "excellent effort" you bring to getting control of your life and your world, so that you can fulfill dreams that you have made up—the fulfillment of which, if you were to let go, you would find you have already been gifted with and are part of your intrinsic wholeness right now.

So, in some ways what I'm here to share with you is the motivation to let go of control, the motivation to give up trying to improve this puny little self you think you are. Well, you know, I hear this often: "I've been trying. I have been honestly and earnestly doing my best, and nothing has changed." And I said this a couple of weeks ago. And what you're saying is, that you are not finding any real justification for persisting. But, if you go to the doctor tomorrow and he examines you and he says, "You have a terminal disease," now you'll have justification. Now you'll have motivation, even if you're not sure that there really is a God. And even though you're not sure that if you dare to let go of control and yield into the underlying, universal order of Being, that there will be an eradication of the problem that the doctor described—you'll do it anyway.

I'm suggesting that you do this before you have some ultimate reason for doing it, when there isn't fear attending it. One doesn't have to end up being crucified, or "on the way to the cross," before trying something new.

When I describe you as the holy Son or Daughter of God—right now, right as you sit here—and that where you're sitting is the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, I'm not talking about some other order of reality, some other dimension. There is no other dimension. There is no other thing to be experiencing. Don't let fear be what brings you to the resolve to look with fresh eyes. Don't let a dire circumstance drive you to what we might call a "negative inspiration," or a negatively impulsed inspiration to let God in, or let Reality in. Be willing to accept that Reality and the Kingdom of Heaven—the only Kingdom of Heaven there is, and what you have meant whenever you used those words, "the Kingdom of Heaven"—is what you're in the middle of, right this moment. Hold on to that one conscious thought.

Now, don't hold on to that conscious thought as a mental practice that will accomplish something. It's only purpose is to help you become so single-minded that you will dare to let go control, and you will dare to listen, and you will dare to be receptive to the influx of new vision that will radically change your perception of everything, uncovering what is truly present and has always been truly present.

Now, as I'm talking, it must be becoming obvious to you that the circumstance you find yourself in is really only an experience of mental aberration—distorted perception. Another way of saying it is, you must be beginning to realize that you're having an episode of insanity.

Now, wasn't very nice of me to say that, was it? But, you want to know something? Insanity is not terminal. Insanity is correctable. To be able to say—or think, even—that you are not seeing things clearly, and that it is foolish for you to believe what you think you're seeing, is the kind of simple logic that can be all the impetus you need, all the push you need, to become genuinely curious to look at everything you think you're familiar with and see something you haven't seen before.

Again, if you don't know that you are seeing in a distorted fashion, there will never be any reason for looking with new eyes, or with new curiosity, or with a new sense of adventure.

There are not orders of reality. There is only one. You're in It. It constitutes you, and It awaits your conscious experience of It. It desires you to be having the conscious experience of It. And, the function of the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind, is to reveal It to you. Your very own right Mind desires to reveal to you what you, in your right Mind, already know.

You simply must stop distancing yourself from the state of being Awake, the state of being enlightened, by insisting upon reinforcing your unenlightened thinking. And this means stepping out into unknown territory. It means, in a way, from your present point of perception, that you must be willing to think in a “new order of reality,” in a different order of reality, because Reality seems so foreign to you when I talk about It. And so, it will seem to you as though you're having to move into a new order of reality. It will only seem that way. I am putting it that way, so that as long as it seems that way, you will find more reason to pursue It, to lean into It, to abandon what you're sure of in order to make room for the conscious experience of what It—everything—Is.

Now, let's go into the book:

This world IS a picture of the crucifixion of God's Son. ¹

Remember, last week we were talking about pictures and photo albums, and freeze-dried frames of moments, and then treating those freeze-dried frames as though they were, in and of themselves, something actual, you—you at an earlier time, you doing this, etc.—when you are the Mind, the conscious awareness in which the experience of looking at a picture book is going on.

. . . of the crucifixion of God's Son.

H-m-mm. What was the crucifixion? The crucifixion was a penalty, wasn't it? A penalty for being guilty, right? Now, the crucifixion—my crucifixion, if you will—was an example of being found guilty of something that hadn't occurred. I was found guilty for doing or being something I was not, and then penalized for it. Now, when it says that . . .

This world IS a picture of the crucifixion of God's Son.

. . . it's referring to each one of you, and everyone else you know and that you run into in the process of your day. And you each crucify each other, as well as yourself. You crucify yourself, the Son of God that you Are, by defining yourself in less than lovely terms [chuckling], self-critical terms, or even falsely positive terms.

The orphan mentality is a mentality unconscious of its divinity, unconscious of its connection with everything and everyone at, I'm going to say, a level of divinity, absolute divinity. How many times, during your day . . . and I can safely say that none of you goes through one day without at least once falsely judging a brother and being upset with that brother—claiming his guilt, confronting him with his guilt, confirming his guilt, not letting him weasel out of his guilt. But, of course, that's what orphans do. That's not what the Christ does, but that is what orphans do.

This world IS a picture of the crucifixion of God's Son.

If each one of you is God's Son or Daughter, you are at this moment guiltless. You are innocent, pure, right now. You must get this through your head, because I'm speaking to the pure, innocent one that each of you are. That's who I'm speaking to, no matter how you're conceiving of it. And until you let yourself off the hook and dare to believe that that is what you are and therefore you do not need to behave the way you've been behaving, you will not find transformation occurring. You will not find a miracle happening—a sudden shift of perception. You won't find it happening for yourself and you won't find it happening for your brother.

And so, you really have to be willing to take what seems to you to be a radical position that, in spite of everything you know you've done, and in spite of the meanness with which you've done a lot of it, that's not part of your true character. That is not part of your being. And because it isn't, you cannot be forever influenced by it, and you do not have to forever embody it.

Everyone—not everyone, but many—who have heard me say that Hitler is Awake, got very incensed. How could he be Awake? He only did the atrocious things he did 60 years ago. That's not nearly enough time to suffer for what he did. Well, then, by comparison, how long do each of you have to suffer?

Probably you don't even deserve to be here listening to me right now. It's too soon. You haven't paid enough. Some of your indiscretions or sins just occurred the day before yesterday. Well, are you an orphan or not? If you're not an orphan, then the rules governing orphans do not apply to you, and you have the means to step out of that mentality into your right Mind at any moment. The answer to the problem is not paying the penalty, but stepping out of the frame of mind in which the penalty seems to be justified.

Now, does that mean you just say, "Well, yes, I did it, but I'm innocent, I'm innocent, I'm innocent, I'm innocent." No, because if a shift in you hasn't occurred so that that kind of behavior finds no abiding place in you ever again, and you are a new man, we might say, or a new woman . . . unless that has happened, then your perfection is still at a distance from you.

The world IS a picture of the crucifixion of God's Son. And until you realize that God's Son cannot BE crucified, this is the world you will see.

. . . until you realize that you cannot be an orphan and never have been one, until you realize that your very Being is occurring at what seems to you to be another level of reality, you will not be in a position of being able to abandon the perceptions you're currently employing that cover up Reality to you.

. . . until you realize that God's Son cannot BE crucified, this is the world you will see. Yet you will not realize this until you accept the eternal fact . . .

Oh, dear! There we go, stepping into that other order of reality.

. . . until you accept the eternal fact that God's Son is NOT GUILTY.

You cannot be guilty for something you have never been. And you cannot be guilty for something that someone-who-has-never-been apparently acted out.

. . . you will not realize this until you accept the eternal fact that God's Son . . .

. . . you . . .

... is NOT GUILTY.

... that God's Son, your brother, your sister, your employer—whoever the bloke might be—is not guilty. None of you are guilty because none of you are what you are currently defining yourselves as. But as long as you continue to use the same definitions, you will not have the experience of your guiltlessness, of your innocence. And part of the experience of your innocence is the disappearing of a terminal disease, the disappearance of an injury, the disappearance of anything and everything that doesn't express the awesomeness of life, and the beauty and the harmony of being.

Again . . .

... you will not realize this until you accept the eternal fact that God's Son is NOT GUILTY. He DESERVES only love because he has GIVEN only love.

Which means, anything that you've expressed that wasn't loving, you didn't express, and it wasn't expressed. You're like the gentleman in the institution who says, "I am Napoleon, and yesterday I cursed the water cooler, and it is going to forevermore spew forth black coal water." Well, should he be penalized for cursing the water cooler? No, because in the first place he isn't Napoleon to curse the water cooler. He isn't who he thinks he is. And what he thinks he's done, he hasn't done.

Likewise, you just have never managed to stop being the Christ, and any loving thing you have done has been Real and is eternal. And any unloving thing you have done, you haven't done. You see, this is a radical position. It seems radical to you, but it's just the difference between clarity and confusion. That's all it is. It's the difference between clarity and confusion.

He . . .

... the Son of God . . .

... cannot BE condemned because he has never condemned.

"Well," you say, "I sure condemned President Bush yesterday," or whoever it might have been. Well, if you did, know that you didn't, because you're not an orphan, you're not Napoleon. You're not who you think you are.

The Atonement is the final lesson he need learn, for it teaches him that, never having sinned, he has no NEED of salvation.

Now, you've got to be very clear here. As long as you think you are an orphan, there is insanity, there is confusion that must necessarily be replaced by the conscious experience of truth. And until that has occurred, you are in need of salvation. You are in need of release from a false bondage. But the reason you can get the release is because you are not Napoleon. You are not something that doesn't exist, having done something that couldn't have been done by something that doesn't exist, that you must pay the penalty for, because, in the Court of Napoleon the rules are that blah, blah, blah, blah—whatever the rules are—and you did not abide by the rules.

The ignorance, the insanity gets ever more complex and harder to extricate yourself from if you indulge in believing them. You must be willing to take this radical position that I'm telling you is your normality, the truth about you right now, which is that in spite of what you think, you are the presence of God being expressed by God perfectly, and it is your Birthright to be experiencing that. Until you're experiencing that, there is something needed. There is a correction that is called for.

Long ago we said that the Holy Spirit shares the goal of all good teachers, whose ultimate aim is to make themselves unnecessary by teaching their pupils all they know. The Holy Spirit wills ONLY this, for sharing the Father's Love for His Son, He wills to remove ALL guilt from his mind that he may remember his Father in peace. For peace and guilt are antithetical, and the Father can be remembered ONLY in peace.

Well, once again you must remember that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. And certainly your right Mind is intent upon you not overlooking It [chuckling], not missing out on the experience of It. It is Its intent for you not to believe things that are absolutely inconsistent with the truth about you. And It is constantly present, moving you, moving you, moving you to let It in, to let It register with you. And most of you do, to one degree or another. The only thing is that you listen to It as though you're still the orphan, instead of That which is speaking to you. You see? And so you think you're getting tidbits of truth, to better be an orphan with, when the fact is that the tidbits, as you think of them, are realizations that uncover to you the fact that you're not an orphan at all. You see?

You are God presencing Himself right where you are. You are what God is presencing Himself as right there where you are. You can't be anything else. Therefore you can't be guilty of anything else. And therefore no crucifixion can await you. But, in order to avoid the false experience of crucifixion, you're going to have to dare to embrace the truth that's being revealed to you that you're not an orphan. You're going to have to abandon that stance. You're going to have to let yourself be flooded with the conscious experience of being the Christ, willing to be and do what the Christ is and does in the Kingdom of Heaven for his brothers and sisters.

Love and guilt cannot coexist, and to accept one is to DENY the other.

And so, when you do find yourself judging a brother, you've got to realize that that act denies love. It denies love entrance into your awareness of yourself and your capacity to be. And it denies it to all that it would be shared with if you weren't denying it in yourself.

Guilt hides Christ from your sight, for it is the denial of the blamelessness of God's Son.

If you don't want to feel guilty, you've got to stop employing guilt to manipulate your brothers and sisters. Because if you find guilt to be a valuable tool, you will know that there are others who find it a valuable tool as well, who will use it on you. And guilt is very attractive—negatively attractive, but attractive nevertheless. If you let guilt in, it's very difficult to set it down, because you feel so guilty. I mean, you feel it in your stomach, you feel it in your chest, and it's very difficult not to be consumed by it. It's as though you have a natural proclivity toward feeling guilty.

Because it's very difficult to set down, you and your brothers and sisters, you and your fellow man need an advocate who will stand there on behalf of him or her, doing everything possible to demonstrate that the experience of guilt is invalid, and that it must be seen for what it is and set down. And this takes education. This takes a willingness to stand with your brother or sister and present the truth of it. And this is where involvement comes in. And this is where the messiness comes in, that I have spoken of, and that all of you would love to avoid—hm-m-m, like the Pharisee, walking by on the other side of the road: "Oh, poor soul. If you had followed the rules, you wouldn't be having this problem. If you had been a "good orphan" and you had abided by the rules that all of us have set up for the purpose of not having this kind of experience, you wouldn't have had this kind of experience. And I wouldn't have been confronted by an invitation to be involved. So, work it out yourself. I've got to be on my way." You see?

Guilt is mesmerizing, just as self-righteousness is mesmerizing. But guilt couldn't catch you for a second if you knew who you were. People lay guilt trips on other people. Why? To keep them in their place and to get them to behave in a way that makes no significant demands on the person laying the guilt trip on them. Mutual definitions, agreements as to codes of behavior and conduct, are all means of being in control, and being as uninvolved as possible, with the least amount of demands being placed on anybody. And why no demands? Because, "That keeps my independent self undisturbed. That keeps my independent self independent." Involvement spoils independence.

All of you hate being held in a position of guilt, and yet, in one way or another, you all employ guilt against others so as not to have to be outside the box you operate in. Well, your salvation lies in stepping outside the box, outside the state of orphanhood. You've got to step out of the box into the experience of your Christ-hood.

How do you do that? There's only one way to do it, and it isn't thinking about it, and it isn't reasoning about it. The only way is to become still and listen. For what? The Good Humor ice cream truck? No. For the Father's voice, for the Holy Spirit's voice, for That which conveys to you the true perception of everything and of yourself.

Well, again, that's stepping out, isn't it, into the out-of-control place. Anything outside the box that's truly outside the box is, for you, an out-of-control place. But that out-of-control place simply means it's out of the control of an orphan, or it's out of the control of Napoleon. Big loss, huh? That which didn't exist lost control [chuckling].

You've got to be willing to step into, for lack of better words, another order of reality, even though there is no other order of reality, and the movement constitutes letting yourself back into the only Order of Reality there is, and the only true experience of yourself that there is.

If you're a member of a group—it could be a religious group, it could be a political group, it could be a group of mothers whose daughters engage in fashion shows, it could be a chess player who spends his life engaged with other chess players doing the chess tournament rounds. Whatever group you might belong to, there are rules of conduct. There are ways to behave. And if at any point you decide not to behave according to the rules, the keepers of the rules—which are all the other members—will come down on you and lay a guilt trip on you. "Well, if you don't want to abide by the rules of our church, you know, you're likely to end up at an insane asylum along with all the other members of our church who left. Hm-m-m. Well, if you abandon this chess game, right in the middle of the chess game, you will be banned forever from participating in any other chess tournament. We'll see to it that your whole life is taken away from you."

And they make you feel guilty, and pressure you into "proper behavior." And in each case, in each of these groups, the rules that they abide by are treated as though they are The Rules of Life—real, actual rules of life—when the fact is that the majority of the world outside of that group doesn't give a shit whether you left the game in the middle of the game or not, or whether you abided by this particular doctrine of this particular church. And this group is not God Almighty. But, oh, if they can catch you with a little bit of a guilt, they will make you miserable until you realize that the whole guilt trip is set up, established and maintained by only a handful of idiots, and that it's absolutely asinine for you to be feeling bad at all. You see?

But, oh boy, they'll get you one way or another, if they can, with a little bit of a guilt. And then, of course, once you've felt a little bit of guilt, then you feed it the rest. You become mesmerized by it, and caught. And so, what I'm saying is that right now, in one way or another, you're all caught. But you're caught in the grip of a small handful of idiots called orphans, who are really the Christ having forgotten who they are. And so, are you going to avoid being radical because a group of idiots, of which you used to be a member [chuckling], are trying to keep you . . . from what? From making them grow.

You step outside the box. It doesn't leave the status quo like it was. And if you end up having a better time, or a better experience, it's going to be threatening to the cohesiveness of this group. And they do not want to be faced with it.

Well, isn't this the way it is with each of you? Somebody in your experience behaves in a way that causes you to have to operate outside of your code of conduct for yourself. It stretches you, you know? Involvement. Messiness. A willingness to persist with your brother or sister while it's messy, conveying the answer in spite of their resistance, and hanging in there because you love them, and because you know they don't need to be suffering at the hand of a handful of idiots?

"Oh, no. You know, I had my schedule for the day. And, you know what? If I respond to this, it's not just going to be this day. It's going to be tomorrow and the next day. It might even be a few months. I mean, my life will be turned into chaos. My orderly little life that I have scheduled out, you know—it's part of my five year plan." Uh-huh. "I can't afford to have any interruptions during the five-year plan. And, to tell you the truth, before those five years are up, I will already have the next five-year plan in place."

Why? Why do you have a five-year plan? Because you do not want to be faced with the unknown. You don't want to be faced with the unpredictable movement of a wave that your surfboard is on.

The least you could do would be to say, "I don't know why I'm not guilty. I don't know how to see myself as guiltless. But if my guilt is false, I have enough justification to become still and ask, of a source that Knows, what the truth is here. I don't know why my brother isn't guilty, but I know that there's more to him than what I'm seeing. And that is justification enough for me to go into the Silence, right here, right now—not in the privacy of my home when I'm not confronted with my brother, but right here, while I'm in the way with him—to go into the silence within and listen for the words and the meanings that will convey his guiltlessness to him in a way that he might comprehend.”

And remember, just because someone comprehends it, doesn't mean they will immediately appreciate it. And so, you must be willing to be there the next day, and the next day, and the next day, or whenever the occasion arises, to re-present that truth, to re-present whatever, in that moment, is being revealed to you to share.

We've been getting together for what? Over two years. I'm not getting tired of continuing to tell you the truth, because you deserve not to be suffering from your ignorance of the truth.

Again:

. . . until you realize that God's Son cannot BE crucified, this is the world you will see.

. . . the world that's the picture of the crucifixion of God's Son.

Yet you will not realize this until you accept the eternal fact . . .

. . . the eternal fact . . .

. . . that God's Son is NOT GUILTY. He DESERVES only love because he has GIVEN only love.

. . . like the Son of God who thought he was Napoleon and cursed the water cooler, nothing happened. No curse occurred. The water cooler doesn't have to worry, because there was no “Napoleon.” There was only the Son of God. And whatever the Son of God does, does occur.

He . . .

. . . the Son of God . . . you . . .

. . . cannot BE condemned because he . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . has never condemned.

. . . because you can't turn into a figment of your imagination and cause anything to happen that would justify your condemnation.

The Atonement is the final lesson he need learn, for it teaches him that, never having sinned, he has no NEED of salvation.

And down a little further:

Love and guilt cannot coexist.

Therefore, they don't coexist. They are like two different orders of reality, but one isn't real. And what isn't real cannot coexist with what is Real.

Love and guilt cannot coexist, and to accept one is to DENY the other. Guilt hides Christ . . .

. . . your true being . . .

. . . from your sight, for it is the denial of the blamelessness of God's Son.

So, tonight we're simply illuminating the fact that each one of you, at this moment, is blameless, and you do not have to wait until you've paid your appropriate penance before you can have the conscious experience of what you divinely Are. Guilt says, "your freedom cannot be had until a certain point, and that point follows a certain appropriate amount of suffering."

If you're going to have an instantaneous healing, or if you are going to Awaken, you've got to lay down the concept of guilt and your devotion to it, your validation of it, because your validation of it does one thing only: It confirms your orphanhood to you a little longer. And yet, you are not Fatherless. You are not Motherless. You are not absent a Source, and never have been. So, the idea that you're a separated orphan, on your own, all by yourself, is pure imagination. It is pure imagination. Remind yourself of that this week.

Write on your sticky note: "Your orphanhood is pure imagination." Your "Napoleon-hood" is pure imagination. You can see it when I talk about the fellow in the institution who says he's Napoleon. And what you can see about that, you can apply equally to yourself. And that will help to open the door. That will help you to, with a little bit more insistence, invite in greater clarity, greater sanity than you are currently experiencing.

Now, I'm going to finish up with a simple point: What I'm suggesting to you that you do is not something impossible. And it is also something that you do not have to do all by yourself. Why? Because that which is nothing more than your right mind, which is called the Holy Spirit—because you couldn't get away from it—is still present as your divine Sanity, nudging, pressuring, cajoling you into recognizing the truth about you. And your Guide is doing the same thing. And I am doing the same thing. And you could say that the Father, being the nonexistence of this whole fantasy that you're having, is ultimately supporting you in your new realizations.

So, how do you let this in? All this help? You just stop being so damned independent, and stop valuing your independence so greatly.

Want not to be alone, and ask for the Father, or the Holy Spirit or me to be with you. And then, let us be. It's like you're standing outside the door of your Home, and unbeknownst to you, all of your friends are inside waiting for you to open up the door so they can say, "Surprise! We love you and we're having a party for you. We are welcoming you Home."

I love you all, and I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 24th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening, and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to go right into the book. And we'll back up one sentence.

That's the big word here.

Guilt hides Christ from your sight, for it . . .

. . . guilt . . .

. . . is the denial of the blamelessness of God's Son.

Whom you hold guilty, you hold blameworthy, not blameless. Whom you hold guilty, you hold blameworthy, not blameless.

This is a very important point, because I'm going to tell you something: The only place that guilt exists, is in the mind of the observer.

Now, just as when you take any form of matter, any form of substance, and put it under a microscope and increase the magnification of the microscope to the max, you will find nothing there, except energy—a pattern of energy, an energy form, you might say. There's absolutely nothing there that you can put your finger on. There is nothing solid there.

Likewise, no matter who you look at whether it's yourself or any of your brothers and sisters—those whom you would deem guilty—the closer you look, and the closer you look, and the closer you look, until you're looking with ultimate magnification, you will find no one guilty there. Just as matter is a matter of perception, guilt is a matter of perception. In either case there is something there, but it's not matter. It's not something solid. And it's not a guilty one. It's the Christ.

Matter, looked at with ultimate magnification, is pattern of energy. The energy is Love. Love is the Substance of all things. Likewise, no matter how guilty you hold your brother to be, if you will dare to look closer and closer and closer, what you will find there is the Christ, the embodiment and Movement of Love—the same thing you find when you look at what you call "matter."

Now, you're all aware that matter seems quite solid to you, that form seems quite solid to you. And yet the fact is that not only is it mostly empty space, you carry it further and you find that it is not empty space with little, tiny pieces of matter whirling around a nucleus, but pure energy—what you would call "that which is intangible."

Now I'm going to tell you that the moment you allow for the possibility, or, I'm going to say, allow for the fact that matter is not solid, but is pattern of energy, pattern of the energy of Love, patterned by the ideas in God's Mind, you will find yourself able to pass through it—walk right through a wall or lean upon it, if that serves your purpose, if that fulfills purpose.

Now that's the potential. That's what you have to look forward to. You will not have the experience, however, if you hold fast to the idea that substance is matter—solid, capable of decay, and so on. You will not have that experience. And likewise, you will not have the experience of your brother or sister being the Christ—the present, direct expression of God, right here and now—or of yourself if you're going to hold that you are a person, an organism, a body rather than the Mind in which the experience of body is going on.

As Mind, not confused by thinking it's matter, you are the literal presence of God. You are the Christ. And you are That right now. I will keep bringing this up because this shift of attention must take place. And it's not a shift that you are inclined to spontaneously make.

The shift is from body identification to Mind identification, recognizing that you are the conscious awareness, the boundless conscious awareness in which all of God's ideas are being experienced. And that these ideas pattern the energy of Love—the energy of Spirit—in order to be experienced, recognized, felt, walked through or leaned against.

We talk about your being the Christ, and we talk about you being the ultimate right now. You're neither behind the point of perfection—you've heard this over and over—nor advancing toward it. You're at that point, and must understand yourself there-from. Okay! What that means is you're not a body. You're conscious awareness. You're not a body experiencing other bodies. You are consciousness, which you already are. You're already experiencing being conscious or being consciousness. And you must understand yourself there-from.

You must begin to go through your day without losing sight of the fact that it is mind moving through ideas, not a body moving through space—it is mind experiencing the movement of ideas—and that you, identifying yourself as mind, and not any “thing” going on in mind, will be you not adding anything extra to Creation. And in not adding anything extra to Creation, you will find yourself in your right Mind. You will find yourself healed. You will find yourself transformed. You will find yourself guiltless.

Only a body can be guilty. Only a body can be guilty for something that body did. And I will tell you that this body is the “Napoleon” that we talked about last week. It's something that you are not. But if you believe that you are, and there are others that believe that you are, then you're caught in a mental miasma—look it up in the dictionary—a mental miasma, from which it becomes difficult to extricate yourself, because it is confusion itself.

Now, you think your mind is in your head. That is the way most all of you perceive it. So at the least, you can imagine that the orphan, that which thinks it is a body, and the Christ, that which is Mind, both go together through your day. This is helpful. And what you do is, you give preference to and emphasis to the body part.

I'm bringing this out so that you might understand that the ultimate of you that we've been talking about, the Christ that you are that we've been talking about, is something that is present with you, because It's your Mind.

You even speak of mind as a possession: “My mind.” You see? Well who's the “my”? The “my” is the body. The “my” is the orphan. You see?

You don't have a mind. You are mind. And you are, we'll say, using your mind to be the observing self, to be that which is conscious of every experience you're having of world and universe while saying, “That isn't going on in my mind. My body is having the experience of world and universe, and of others, and of matter, and of all form.”

And so you pretend that you're not mind experiencing everything, but that you're a body experiencing whatever is in your immediate presence, through the use of your mind—this possession you have that is supposedly in your cranium.

So, the orphan and the Christ of you walk inseparably at the moment through your every day. The Christ of you is not at a distance. It is not afar off. It's not something to work up to. It's not something to train yourself and refine yourself into being. It's you, moving through your day, every day, not identifying with It, because you're identifying with the definition of you, which is your body.

I am narrowing the gap between you, who you think you are, and you, who you really Are. And I am finding ways to translate spiritual theology and spiritual concepts into practical ones that have relevance to you—every day, here and now! So, to shift into your right Mind is not so much a matter of shifting out of your wrong mind as it is of shifting out of your body identification, into mind identification.

If you're riding in a car or on a train, it's easy for you to sit there and watch the scenery move by, and imagine that you're stationary, and that the universe is moving past you. It's a simple shift of perception that can happen easily when you're sitting still in a moving vehicle. You can shift the perception so as to have the experience of not moving at all, and feeling everything else moving past you.

Now, that is relatively close to the experience of Reality, because you as Mind are immovable . . . because you are, Mind is, universal . . . and there is no place for It to move. It is infinite, and there is no medium through which That which is infinite can move! This immovability of Mind, that is immovable because It is all, is what constitutes your eternal safety, your eternal groundedness, if I may put it that way. And it is in this indivisible, infinite conscious experience of being that everything is going on.

You visualize It as small, encapsulated in your head, and you take It along with your body everywhere you go.

So, as you go through this next week, I want you to practice a new exercise, if you will, that of paying attention to and remembering that you are Mind, moving through Creation. You are Mind, shifting your attention to different parts of Creation. And as that shift of attention happens, legs move, cars move, things are done. But all of those visible, tangible actions are simply, for lack of better words, the manifestation or the experienceability of the movement of Mind that you Are.

This seems a difficult thing to grasp—everything that we’re reading about. And especially what we talked about last week. The single most significant definition that you have made up, you might say—the one log, which if removed, would unloose the logjam—is the definition of yourself as a body. And you define yourself as a body while forgetting that you are the mind which made the definition. And that even though the mind made the definition, the mind never became bound by it. And the mind never became the definition.

The ultimate of you, as ridiculous as it sounds—and it’s because it’s ridiculous that it sounds ridiculous—accompanies you everyday, no matter what you’re doing. And it only seems to accompany you because you’ve resized it, in your mind. In your mind, you have resized your mind and placed it in a physical location—in a specific circumscribed location.

So where did you hide yourself, from yourself? In a definition you made up. And then you have built definitions, upon definitions upon, definitions. But the bottom-line false definition is: That you are a body, you are an organism, you are a material object that lives while that material object is alive, and perhaps doesn’t exist ever again when that material object dies. It just ain’t so.

And the way the cycle of birth and death is going to be broken is as you make the shift from identifying with the body to identifying with and recognizing yourself as pure conscious awareness, Mind—the conscious experience of Being—and begin to observe your world from that standpoint. You’re neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it. You are at that point, and must understand yourself there-from.

You must start being in your life from your Mind instead of from your body. I can’t put it any more clearly than that. And that’s where the delight of life is going to begin to occur for each of you.

Let’s go to the book.

Guilt hides Christ from your sight, for it is the denial of the blamelessness of God’s Son.

In this strange world, which you have made, the Son of God HAS sinned.

Well, what is this strange world that you have made? It’s the world of definitions that you have made up, through the use of imagination. And how is it that “the Son of God HAS sinned?” Because the Son of God has decided to get a divorce from God and look at everything from his own peculiar slant.

He has denied Himself. He has denied the Son of God. And Self-denial is the mistake—the sin, if you will.

How could you SEE him then?

. . . the Son of God.

By making him invisible, the world of retribution rose in the black cloud of guilt which you accepted, and you hold it dear.

Now, you didn't realize that you made the Son of God invisible. But tell me, are you the Daughter of God? Are you the Son of God? You don't think so. At least today you don't have the evidence of it. That's how well you've made the Son of God invisible.

You say, "Well I'm just a cranky overworked, exhausted, impatient, unhappy human being, doing his best, struggling through it all, with great practice of confidence and faith." You see? Does that sound like the Christ speaking? No. When you say that about yourself, you're saying that your Christhood has been made invisible to you.

By making him invisible, the world of retribution rose . . .

Well, what's the world of retribution? It's the world of "getting even." It's the world in which there is right and wrong. And the wrong is ferreted out, and disclosed. And a judgment is made upon it. A judgment is made upon the one who is wrong. And the verdict is, "Guilty!" And the penalty is extracted. Retribution is established.

By making him invisible, the world of retribution rose in the black cloud of guilt which you accepted, and you hold it dear.

"Well," you say, "I would be irresponsible not to feel guilty for what I did. I would be irresponsible for not holding him guilty for what he did. I hold guilt dear, because if guilt isn't found, and correction by penalty is not put into place, total chaos will be the result." And so you hold it dear.

Now, the formal definition of guilt is: Responsibility for a reprehensible act that deserves punishment. If one is responsible for a reprehensible act that deserves punishment, he is guilty.

But you've got to remember what I started out with today . . . that if you go to the guilty one and you look closer and closer and closer, which is another way of saying that you're being more and more present with him, genuinely present with him or her, the closer you get, the more clear it will become that what you saw is not there, because what is there is the Christ.

Taking the time to get closer and closer for a more honest look is called being willing to be present with your brother. And it is an act of love. And so, the answer to guilt is not punishment, but the willingness to be the presence of love that looks beneath the definitions, looks past the definitions, with a desire to see what is Real there, and an insistence that comes from within you, that what is true there is worth finding. It's that simple. The Truth that is there is worth finding.

By making him invisible, . .

. . . the Christ, the Son of God . . .

. . . the world of retribution rose in the black cloud of guilt which you accepted, and you hold it dear. For the blamelessness of Christ is the proof that the ego never was and can never be.

Well, wow! If blamelessness, the blamelessness of Christ . . . of you or your brother . . .

. . . is the proof that the ego never was and can never be.

. . . then that's the Truth about yourself and your brother that it's worth persisting in finding. Because, when you find It, you will find that you are not an ego, along with your brother. That is the way out of the false identification with body. That is the way out of the false identification as an orphan.

So, when you claim that you're not blameless, that you are guilty . . . or when you claim that your brother is not blameless, and is therefore, guilty, you don't move me one bit. What you're saying is utter nonsense. And believing that you're guilty is the only thing that causes you to procrastinate in looking for the truth there. It's the only thing that elicits a reluctance in you. But I'm telling you that if you will dare to adopt the outlandish, unreasonable statement that "You are not guilty," and that "You are the Christ, right now," you will be providing yourself the stepping-stone out of the confusion and the suffering of your definitions. Or I could say, of your mis-identification of yourself, either as a body or as an orphan.

And so it's worth it to engage in this irrational act of claiming your guiltlessness. More than claiming it; abiding with it, with whatever feelings guiltlessness arouses in you.

You must be willing to stop condemning, punishing and killing yourselves. Why? Because, since you are the Christ, no matter how much effort you put into condemning and penalizing yourself and killing yourself, no death will occur. It will just be an ongoing state of tension and suffering. If it isn't going to accomplish anything ultimately, except to prove to you that it's a useless activity to engage in, then why not dare to follow my advice and begin to consider yourself and contemplate yourself as innocent, as guiltless, as the Christ, as the Son or Daughter of God in whom God is well pleased. That's how a shift of perception can occur.

Continuing:

Without guilt the ego HAS no life, and God's Son . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . IS without guilt.

Now, listen to me: This is the truth!

As you look upon yourselves and judge what you do honestly, as you have been asked to do, you may be tempted to wonder how you CAN be guiltless.

Guilt tempts you to feel guilty.

. . . you may be tempted to wonder how you CAN be guiltless. Yet consider this:

You are not guiltless in time, but in ETERNITY. You HAVE "sinned" in the past, but there IS no past. Always has NO direction.

Infinity has no direction. The Mind that you Are has no boundaries. It is infinite, and It has no direction. And therefore, everything that is going on in It, is not going on in time!

Time seems to go in one direction, but when you reach its end it will roll up like a long carpet which has spread along the past behind you and will disappear.

When you reach the end of time, where will the end of time be. . .at the end of this carpet? The end of time will be when you shift from identifying as a form to identifying as Mind. As Mind, you will move from one place to another by a simple shift of attention [snaps finger] instantaneously!

And that means that that which identifies you, which is called your body, and which you currently call yourself, will immediately be wherever your attention has been given. And the Movement will not take time. And space will not be a part of the experience of the movement of the shift of attention. So, what you call "time" will disappear when you get to the end of time. And the end of time is at the border between your identification as body and your identification as Mind. Both of which, at the present time, are constantly with you, and therefore are not something you'll get to have in the future to work with.

And actually, when you make that shift of consciousness and you're identifying as Mind, as Consciousness, body and mind will still inseparably be, because your body is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality. Now, your body will be never sick, never tense, never tired, never in need. And it will identify the movement of your mind spontaneously and instantaneously.

Now, how many of you, just as I've said this, have visualized yourself being in a different place where this kind of thing happens? Sort of like a different dimension. Well I'm going to tell you that what I'm describing will happen right here. And when you shift your attention from Kingston to New York, New York is where you'll be, tonight, a minute from now, tomorrow. The way things work are the way things work. And they always work.

And therefore, the truth that I'm telling you works right now. It's just that you're not availing yourself of it because you have this fixation on identifying yourself as a body, and as an orphan—certainly not as whatever the words, "the Christ" mean.

As long as you believe the Son of God is guilty . . .

. . . which is another way of saying: As long as you believe the Son of God is an orphan and not the Son of God . . .

. . . you will walk along this carpet, believing that it leads to death. And the journey will seem long and cruel and senseless, for so it IS.

Ignorance is never a pleasant experience. But ignorance never exists all by itself. It is always paired with, and inseparable from, that which it is the ignorance of, right? A lie can't stand alone. It's inseparably tied to the truth that it's the lie about, right? So what you're ignorant of is something that you are inseparably linked with, right now, which therefore, is available to you to experience right now.

And the truth is never withheld from you by God as punishment. The truth, if it is withheld at all, is withheld by your insistence upon validating a lie, or your insistence upon validating a definition that is not true. That's all.

The journey which the Son of God has set himself . . .

. . . the Son of God who thinks he's an orphan . . .

. . . is foolish indeed, . . .

. . . and I'm going to interrupt here. It may be foolish, and it may be filled with pain and suffering and death, and sorrow and anxiety and all of the things that all of you thrive on every day. None of it's the truth. All of it's imagination. All of it is the result of your opting for your best definition, rather than what a thing really is.

It's the result of a self-centered exclusive self-appreciation that doesn't allow for anything else to come into the picture.

Oh yes, the orphan has pride. And the orphan's every act is an act aimed at demonstrating self-originated integrity that that orphan can be proud of. And that's part of the shift too. That's part of the confusion. That's part of the nonsense. And because none of it is true, you can't be bound by it, no matter how bound you think you are because you and everyone else has decided that there's no way out but to face the penalty!

The journey which the Son of God has set himself is foolish indeed, . . .

. . . and this is where I interrupted, and I'm going to add: but inconsequential, having no real consequences.

. . . but the journey on which his Father sets him is one of release and joy. The Father is NOT cruel, and His Son CANNOT hurt himself.

That's why this trip into fantasyland is inconsequential.

It is of no consequence to the Son of God, who has gone on this fun-ride through fantasyland, no matter how thrilling and scary it has gotten. Because it is of no consequence to the Son of God, that has taken the ride, there is nothing that the Son of God can be guilty of, that he must pay a penalty for before he can exit the ride.

The Father is NOT cruel, and His Son CANNOT hurt himself. The retaliation he fears and which he SEES will never touch him, for although he believes in it the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than his right Mind . . .

. . . KNOWS it is not true.

Here I am, talking again about this one that you can't believe is you. You Know it isn't true.

You have preoccupied yourself so greatly that you have rendered yourself unconscious of the truth of it, but because you haven't stopped being the Christ, because you haven't stopped being what you Are, you still know it. And that's why you can step off the ride any time you want without any further development or growth or refining of your soul.

Now, listen to this:

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . again, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . stands at the END of time, where YOU must be because He is WITH you.

If the Holy Spirit stands at the end of time and the Holy Spirit is your right Mind, then you stand at the end of time at this moment!

The end of time is not off in the future, and you don't have unlimited time to refine yourselves and grow into something that you aren't, right now. That doesn't mean that you're out of time, and there should be a great sense of urgency. It means that there simply is no time at all to fight against or to overcome, or to be at odds with, or feel governed by.

The Holy Spirit stands at the END of time, where YOU must be, because He is WITH you. He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit. Again, not some wonderful Entity afar off, who loves you greatly, but that which is nothing more, right now, than your right Mind. Your right Mind

. . . has ALWAYS undone everything unworthy of the Son of God, for such was His mission, given Him by God.

That was and is the mission of your right Mind!

Your right Mind's mission is to cause you to come Home into your right Mind. It is to cause you to stop indulging in body identification, form identification, and identity with and as the Mind, in which the experience of All of Creation is going on.

Your right Mind—the Holy Spirit.

He has ALWAYS undone everything unworthy of the Son of God, for such was His mission, given Him by God. And what God gives has ALWAYS been.

Mind you, we're not talking about in the Kingdom of Heaven which someday you'll get to—or another dimension, or a different level of reality. We're talking about you right here, right now, today, in Kingston, Washington, or wherever you might be on the globe. And wherever you might be on the globe, whatever the name of your town, whatever the name of the street you're on, that's the town and the street that you will instantaneously move from and back to with a shift of your attention.

Right here, in your everyday world, because your everyday world is the Kingdom of Heaven, misperceived. Why? Because you've determined that you are not the Son of God, you are not the direct Expression of God. You are a physical organism, the current end result of evolution—physical evolution.

Don't have so much faith in the scientific community of your globe. It tells you one week that coffee is good for you, and the next week, coffee is bad for you. And the next week sugar is bad for you, and the next week, sugar is good for you. And that if you want to lose weight, the use of sugar is a very effective and healthy way to lose weight.

Don't have such respect for the current, best definition of the Kingdom of Heaven, especially when it says that it's a material world and a material universe that goes through a cycle from birth to death.

None of you like to think about that cycle of birth and death because it's too depressing. But ignoring it won't get you out of it. And continuing to work with the current definitions will not get you out of it. But what the Course is teaching and what I'm supporting with you will!

You will see me as you learn the Son of God is guiltless.

"Oh, well, Raj, I believe You're guiltless. Let me see you. Let me see you."

Oh, yes, but what about Henrietta down the street? What about your Father that abused you?

You will see me as you learn the Son of God is guiltless.

What about you—whom you are so hard upon? What about you, who you won't let off the hook, but punish yourself daily, in one way or another? Like doing penance.

You will see me as you learn the Son of God is guiltless.

Take the radical step of considering yourself to be guiltless.

He . . .

. . . the Son of God . . .

. . . has always sought his guiltlessness, . .

Now here's the part you don't want to hear . . .

. . . and he has FOUND it.

Remember, the lie is inseparably tied to the truth that it's the lie about. And the false perception of yourself that you have is inseparably tied to the reality of you.

[whiny voice] And so when you say "I'm a poor little ignorant orphan!" It's a lie, and you've got to stop believing yourself. And you've got to say, "Well, if I'm an ignorant little orphan, a bastard, then I must really have a father and a mother. I have a Source. Something makes me real. And it's not little teeny old me!" And you shift your attention to the truth that is inseparably linked to the misperception—the false perception, the lie you're holding about yourself.

He has always sought his guiltlessness, and he has FOUND it. For everyone is seeking to escape from the prison he has made, and the way to find release is not denied him. Being IN him, he HAS found it.

See, I know it sounds like I'm talking again about another order of reality, but I'm not!

And the more clearly you can get this in your mind, the more you will read this and claim it as being the fact, right here, right now, today—right here in this world you were hoping to escape from. Because that lie, that it's a world you want to escape from because it's full of suffering, is inseparably tied to the truth which is That right now, in spite of what you see, it's the Kingdom of Heaven! It is reality Itself!

In other words, It's not at a great distance from you. It's right here. And that's why it's really valuable to look at everything with innocent eyes. And to look with genuine curiosity.

WHEN he finds it is only a matter of time, . .

WHEN he finds it is only a matter of time, and time is only an illusion.

Now, remember. Let's stay connected here. The end of time is at the edge, the tied-together point of your identifying yourself as body or your identifying yourself as Mind. And don't get metaphysical on me. Don't get into a head trip. All you have to do after tonight, is go through your evening, and your day, tomorrow, and the next day, doing your best to be like the person on the railroad train, who you can grasp has the option to perceive himself moving through stationary space, or that he is stationary, and that the Universe is moving past him.

It's that kind of a shift that occurs in your awareness.

The Course says, "I am not a body. I am still free to be as God created me." God created you like Himself and God is Infinite Mind—the infinite conscious awareness of Being that constitutes existence Itself—ultimate existence. That which constitutes ultimate existence, you are experiencing every day, except as I said, you think it's small, and it's stuck inside your head and your body is carrying it around!

But the reverse is the case. Your Mind is infinite, and It carries around All of Creation in It forever.

WHEN he finds it . . .

For clarity, I'm backing up.

For everyone is seeking to escape from the prison he has made,
..

. . . the prison of his definitions . . .

. . . and the way to find release is not denied him. Being IN him, he HAS found it. WHEN he finds it is only a matter of time, and time is but an illusion. For the Son of God is guiltless NOW, and the brightness of his purity shines untouched forever in God's Mind. God's Son . . .

. . . you, right now . . .

. . . will ALWAYS be as he was created.

As you were created.

Deny YOUR world . . .

. . . the world of definitions that you've made up . . .

. . . and judge him not, . .

Meaning, judge not the Son of God. Shift from your orphanhood to your place in the Sonship. Exchange your identification with body to identification with Mind. These are other ways of saying . . .

Deny YOUR world and judge him . . .

. . . the Son of, God's Son . . .

. . . not, for his eternal guiltlessness is in the Mind of his Father, and protects him forever.

Protects you forever. It protects you forever by allowing for no means to exist for you, as I said last week, to become a figment of your imagination and then act—be that. And so, because you can't become a figment of your imagination and be that, you are still in your Holy Place. No matter how many others egos, other orphans around you try to convince you that the way they and you in the past have seen things is correct and you must, therefore, be held accountable for your indiscretions. And therefore, it's going to take a few more eons of spiritualizing yourself before you can even think about experiencing who you really Are.

I'm sorry. You can get off the ride through fantasyland any time you want.

You can get off the ride of the misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven you're having, right here, any time you want, and experience the Kingdom of Heaven that's right here. Because It is what is here for you to be experiencing. And your imaginations are not.

Am I trying to influence you? You bet I am.

I Love You. And, as always, I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 1st 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening, and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Surprise! God did not give you the capacity to think.

Again, God did not give you the capacity to think. That's enough to keep you busy for the next week.

As consciousness, as conscious awareness, you have the capacity to what? Pay attention. Not think. Thinking is not natural to you. And yet you think that it's not only the most natural thing to you, you think that it is synonymous with being conscious. You think that thinking is your function. "My God, if I weren't to think, what would I do?" Well, I'll tell you something: In the Silence, you would learn a whole lot. Because in the Silence, you would be present with things. You would be present with each other. Not shielded against each other by means of your thoughts or your demeaning definitions, or even your loving thoughts and definitions. This is a key point.

Now. I want to back up so-to-speak to the beginning. In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God.¹ And God being God, infinitely, was called Creation. And God's Self-Expressions, God's Extension of Himself was only like Himself. And you are His Self-Expression. You are what God is expressing Himself as—right there where you are!

God is not expressing you, God is expressing Himself right where you are. God Presencing Himself is what you Are. And in the beginning the Sons and Daughters of God were innocent—guiltless. And guilt was an unknown word. And, not any of the Sons or Daughters of God had had a single thought. They experienced the bliss—the peaceful joyous bliss—of being consciously aware, infinitely speaking, of all of Creation. Because that which was the Mind of God was what was Presencing Itself, as what you might call, their Mind.

And so everything that occupied the Mind of God occupied the minds of the Sons and Daughters of God. And Being was a matter of the conscious reveling in the awesomeness—the infinite awesomeness of Creation. Because all of Creation infinitely speaking, was immediately and simultaneously available to every Son and Daughter of God to feel and experience and to be loved by, because as I've said, Love is the substance of Being.

And so, Love is the substance of Creation. And if all Creation is what constitutes the content of the minds of the Sons and Daughters of God, then the experience is one of being infinitely Loved. And at the same time, being infinitely Loving.

Now, figuratively speaking, we're going to say that a couple of the Sons and Daughters of God decided to play a game called, "Let's Pretend." Let's pretend that we are sea-farers. And let's pretend that as we sail the seven seas, we come across pirates. And we dedicate our lives to eradicating the seven seas of pirates and the dastardly deeds that they do to poor innocent human beings.

And the Father looks at them participating in this game of "Let's Pretend" and thinks nothing of it. And as they play their game, they come across pirates and they fight with them and they run'em thru and they make a little hash mark on the end of their sword for each one—each dastardly pirate that they've killed. And at the end of the day, they get together and they compare hash marks. "I killed eighteen pirates!" "Well, I killed thirty-three. You didn't do quite as good as me. I did the best!"

Of course, all of this is thinking.

Now, here they have gotten really intent upon the game they're playing—really caught up in it. And so the one who only killed thirteen, feels bad. And the one that killed more feels really good. And so they have a way of measuring themselves and each other. How? By means of thinking. And one is not as good and one is very good. Thinking is used for comparisons. Thinking is used for value judgments.

Thinking is used for ascertaining one's value or one's valuelessness. Thinking is used for determining another's value or valuelessness. And what happens? It becomes obvious that in this state of imagination, one has emotions—good proud feelings and sad, self-demeaning feelings. And those engaging in these games realize that these emotions are usable. For what purpose? For the purpose of control. For the purpose of manipulation. Because thinking amounts to judgment—evaluation that is consummated in judgment.

Now, here killing has gone on in the imagination. Assessments of each other have occurred. Valuations and devaluations have occurred. And acts of manipulation have developed between these individuals perceiving themselves to be “sailors of the seven seas”—the vanquishers of pirates, the do-gooders! But even as the do-gooders, they still can do real well, or not so good. And then feel bad or good because of where they stand. And they end up hurting each by means of their judgments.

Now, the Father continues to watch. The Father sees that nothing but imagination is going on. He sees that no-one has been killed. And He sees that the “sailors of the seven seas” who are feeling good or bad depending upon which end of the stick they are looking from, are not guilty of anything either because He knows they’re not “sailors of the seven seas” and He knows that whatever they’re feeling and whatever they think they’re doing isn’t actually happening except within the context of this imaginative scenario that they have built up and played into. And so, there is no judgment from the Father except, “These are my beloved Sons and Daughters in whom I am well pleased, because they haven’t for a moment stopped being Me expressed—Me expressing. I have not been altered by their imagination. And they, the Sons and Daughters—My Sons and Daughters—have not been altered by virtue of their imagination.”

And so, there is still no guilt—no actual guilt. And the Father, at no point, sees His Sons and Daughters as guilty. Oh, but they are denying who they Are. Because they’re claiming to be the “sailors of the seven seas” and they are ignoring who they really Are. And isn’t that a slap in the face of God? Isn’t that a denial of God? Isn’t that an ignoring of their Source? Well, if God were to say something, He would say, “Yes, if they could actually do it.” You see. “But they can’t actually do it. And so it hasn’t been done. And regardless of the way they are choosing to perceive themselves at the moment, they are still My beloved Sons and Daughters in whom I am well pleased.”

And so, here you all are, engaged in thinking as you go through your days and weeks. You use thinking to define yourselves: “I’m a nurse. I’m a doctor. I’m an anesthesiologist. I’m a yoga teacher. I’m a housewife. I’m a mother.” In other words, I am what I think I am. I am the definition I have arrived at by virtue of thinking.

But I want you to understand something. We’re talking here . . . we’re reading about the guiltlessness of the Son of God. And we’re talking about each of you being right now the Christ—the Son or Daughter of God, nothing less. The question is, how do you arrive at the experience of that?

Well, according to thinking: You arrive at that, by perfecting yourself, by becoming a better and better "role." And by overcoming the negative assessments you make of yourselves and the negative assessments that others make of you. And by cleansing yourself and purifying yourself of all of the awful things you've done—all of the shortcomings you have—all of the things that affected others negatively because you were not able to fulfill your role well. That's what you think. That's what you think! Pay attention to the words.

But we talked last week about the fact that the way to become free of guilt is to stop thinking. We said that the way to get free of it—the way to get in touch with your guiltlessness—is to shift from body identification to Mind identification. Simply shifting your focus of attention from one thing you consciously experience today to another thing you consciously experience today. Because each of you does experience Mind and each of you does experience body.

To whatever degree any of you are bound to suffering, sorrow, sickness, sin and death, it can be attributed to one thing only: thinking. Now I don't just mean thinking . . . your thinking. You think very specific things, you think: "I am a body. I am a mortal. I know that in the sweet bye and bye I will experience my immortality, but right now I'm a mortal in a mortal body. I'm subject to sickness and death. I'm subject to injury. I'm subject to distress others have with me. I'm subject to the strongest will around me." Or, alternatively, arrogantly: "I know that I have the capacity to be at least as strong as the strongest will around me, and it's my learning to learn how to stand up to the strongest will around me and be equal to it, so that it's a draw—and there is balance, equality, and therefore, no more war with that one."

But the fact is that you can look back over the centuries and find that this line of thinking has not proven to be true. It hasn't brought peace. It hasn't brought invulnerability to injury, accident, sickness. The culprit is thinking. And that's why the answer lies in what we've referred as the Silence—the Silence within you—which simply means the place where thinking isn't going on, where you're just being present . . . conscious awareness. You call it Meditation—it's a specific practice. It's like a specific use of your mind, a unique and intermittent use of your mind which even used intermittently, can reduce your blood-pressure and benefit you physically. Why does it do that? Because even intermittently, the conscious experience of Silence, the Silence within you, because it embodies the very nature and function of your Being—your divine Being as the Son or Daughter of God that you are—it evidences Itself as changed, what you would call, physical experience, healing in one form or another.

That's how valuable the Silence is. That's how valuable not thinking is.

Now, I wanted to make one point perfectly clear before we go into the book. And that is, that even right now, you have not sinned against God. And in God's Eyes, you are not guilty. And you do not have to overcome His Perception of you as being guilty before you can be let back into His Presence, or back into the Kingdom of Heaven. You do not have to atone to God for something God knows you could never do and therefore have never successfully accomplished.

Because God does not see you guilty, God has no cause for punishing you. The very concept of punishment can't come into existence until guilt is established as a reality. And since guilt is not established in your Father's Mind, there is no penalty due you. And no penalty you have to pay. You see, you're already paying a penalty by thinking. But it's not a penalty laid upon you by anything outside of you. It's just the experience one has when he or she attempts to do something that is impossible to do. When you try to do the impossible, you're constantly faced with the impossibility of it. And the continued attempt to do what you can't do is not comfortable. That's all.

Let's go into the book.

When you have accepted the Atonement for yourselves, . . .²

What would that be? What would be the Atonement that you would accept for yourselves? The Atonement would be the acceptance of the awareness that you're not guilty, together with the abandonment of that which caused you to seem to be guilty which is, thinking, reasoning, coming to conclusions and treating yourself and others on the basis of conclusions arrived at as a result of thinking, which the Father did not give you the capacity to do.

When you have accepted the Atonement for yourselves, you will realize that there IS no guilt in God's Son.

Either you or anyone else.

And ONLY as you look upon him as guiltless can you understand his oneness. For the idea of guilt brings a belief in condemnation of one by another, . . .

You see, it takes two to have a difference of opinion, a different point of view that can amount to condemnation

. . . ONLY as you look upon him. . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . as guiltless can you understand his oneness. For the idea of guilt brings a belief in condemnation of one by another, projecting separation in place of unity.

Or we could say, imagining . . .

. . . separation in place of unity.

Now this next sentence is very important:

You can condemn only YOURSELF, . .

Let's stop right there:

You can condemn only YOURSELF, . .

You [chuckling] you can, with great skill, invite others to condemn themselves, but they have to engage in the condemnation—they have to agree with you. And others can invite you to condemn yourself but only you can condemn yourself!

You can condemn only YOURSELF, and by so doing you cannot know that you ARE God's Son.

How do you condemn yourself? By thinking. In the Silence in you, it is impossible to condemn yourself. In the Silence and the peace of the Silence in you—as full conscious awareness—it is impossible for you to condemn.

Well, you know the phrase, "The devil made me do it!" or, "He made me do it! He's making me feel miserable!" Let's be honest, he may be firmly, enthusiastically and aggressively inviting you to condemn yourself and to believe that you are what he sees you are, but you have to take the bait, and YOU have to agree. And when you agree, you have engaged in condemning yourself.

And you had to arrive at that decision by thinking. And the way out of the whole mess is to stop thinking! When you have stopped thinking and are in your peace, you can hear the invitations of others, no matter how aggressively they're put forth to see yourself as condemnable. But you see it as nonsense and it clearly stands forth to you as a behavior reflecting certain thoughts that that one is engaging in about himself in his world that he is caught by, and that it is illegitimate for him to be caught by.

And so, it does not call forth defense from within you. But calls forth the clarity in you about the truth about your brother so that you might respond to the underlying ignorance that is causing your brother to try to control you so that you will be in a way that doesn't offend his definitions. And you become an agent for change. And the way you are an agent for change is benign, is the embodiment of Love.

You can condemn only YOURSELF, and by so doing you cannot know. . .

. . . you can not know . . .

. . . that you ARE God's Son.

Why? Because in order to condemn yourself you have to be engaged in thinking which means that you are still claiming to be an orphan. You're still identifying yourself as an orphan. And as long as you are claiming that you're an orphan by means of your employing judgment, you are consciously denying what you truly are. And are still experiencing the disconnect from God. And so . . .

. . . you cannot know that you ARE God's Son. You have denied the condition of his Being, . .

. . . which means you have denied the condition of your Being.

What is your condition? Your condition is, that you're nothing more nor less than what God is Presencing Himself as right there where you are. And your function is the function of His Mind that He's embodying right there where you are, which is Love not guilt, which is purity not conflict, which is that which cannot be caught in limitation.

You have denied the condition of his . . .

. . . your . . .

Being, which is his perfect blamelessness.

That's the condition of your Being. That is the condition of your Being.

Out of Love. . .

. . . meaning, what the Father is.

Out of Love he was created, . .

... you were created.

...and in Love he abides.

You abide right now! There is no judgment upon you from the Father. You are not guilty in the Father's eyes.

Out of Love ...

... you were ...

... created, and in Love he ...

... you abide.

Goodness and mercy have always followed him, . .

... always followed you ...

... for he ...

... you ...

... has always extended the Love of his Father.

You see, even though a few of the Sons and the Daughters of God are swashbucklers on the high seas in their imagination, they haven't stopped being the Sons and Daughters of God reflecting God, embodying God. None of you has for a moment ever in the slightest way diminished the fullness of God that God is Being right where you are. So you have always extended the Love of your Father, the Being of your Father.

You see, we're still talking about a shift of perception, a shift from body identification to Mind identification, from orphanhood to the Sonship, from orphanhood to the conscious experience of having a Father, of having a Source that is responsible for every aspect of your Being.

Oh, but as a body it seems obvious to you, as an orphan it seems obvious to you that you're responsible for your well-being, and that's why you have to think. You have to think so you can figure out how to be responsible for yourself, you see.

Thinking is always a process of problem-solving. You think in order to overcome the problem of being. And the problem of being that you're experiencing is this mad idea that you're an orphan, that you're on your own, that you are a body instead of the infinite, boundless, boundaryless Mind in which the experience of body and Universe, and all of Creation is going on.

As you perceive the holy companions who travel with you, . .

Well, what does that mean so far? Who are these holy companions who travel with you? Well, it is true that you are companioned by the Holy Spirit. And you are companioned by those who are Awake. But as you perceive that everyone that's in your experience, all of your brothers and sisters are holy companions. Because in actuality, regardless of how you're seeing them or how they're seeing themselves, they are and must be right now, nothing more nor less than the evidence of God Being right now, in the act of Creation right now, right there where they are and right where you are, . .

. . . you will realize that there IS no journey, . .

Because becoming equal to the Son of God or refining yourself, or spiritualizing yourself until you're worthy of being the Son of God is a bunch of imaginative nonsense. Because all of you on the road thinking you're moving toward your ultimate, Are the ultimate.

So the journey is meaningless. And the only thing called for is for all of you to wake up to the truth right here where you are on the road, which is why I say so many times, bring innocent eyes to your apprehension of everything so that you might see the more of what God is Being right here, today—now. Because right here on the road that you think you're moving forward on to your ultimate goal is, the Ultimate simply waiting for you to see it because you've stopped ignoring it, thinking that it's somewhere down the road at the end of time. And remember last week I pointed out that the end of time is nothing more than the boundary between your identifying yourself as body and your identifying yourself as Mind.

The Son of God, who sleepeth not, has kept faith with his Father
FOR you.

Who is the Son of God who sleepeth not, that has kept faith with his Father for you? The Holy Spirit. What is the Holy Spirit? That which is nothing more than your right Mind.

The Son of God, . . .

. . .the Real You . . .

. . .who sleepeth not, has kept faith with your Father FOR you.

. . . while you pretend to be an orphan. All of what's true about you is true right now, present right now, active right now and available to you the moment you stop thinking—the moment you let yourself experience Silence—the moment you express genuine curiosity. And genuine curiosity is not a matter of saying, "What is that, what is that?" . . . and never shutting up, just being aggressively curious, "What is that? What is that? And what is that, and what is that, and what is that?" That's not Silence.

When you have genuine curiosity, what do you do? You shut up and pay attention!

Ahh . . . that is the function of Mind, isn't it. That is your divine function. And in the absence of all of the jabbering that occurs that you call thinking, in the Silence that ensues, you end up being nothing more or less than that which is paying attention, the condition or state of attentiveness. An attentiveness is an invitation for Something to enter you, you see.

I've said before, that there is a place of excellence in you, divine excellence, ultimate excellence, right here, right now. And we've referred to it as the Altar in the very center of you. And this is the place of Silence, in which, because there is Silence, the Voice for Truth, the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—can begin to register with you and bring you into the Oneness of yourself. Because in the silent attentive invitation to know, you've abandoned orphanhood. You've stepped over the boundary between body identification and Mind identification.

You can be curious about anything and everything that confronts you. It's easy to be curious about a new flower that has just bloomed. It is equally easy to be curious about a neighbor or a friend or anything else that is in front of you during your day. All it means is—and nobody needs to know that you're doing this—all it means is that you're willing to be still and pay attention with a silent invitation to Know and see the More that is there than what your definitions have been allowing you to see.

So you do not need to go into a monastery or a cave to wake-up. You have to be willing to be more present with everything that has been in your daily experience than you've ever been before, minus the definitions you have placed between you and that which you would pay attention to.

There is no road to travel on, and no time to travel through.

You see, but that's the idea, you've got to go on your trek—your spiritual quest. And you're going to go on it moving forward in time. No, that is not going to work because time is a perception. It is a definition that you have a very strong belief in.

The way out of time is to step over the threshold between body identification and Mind identification.

There is no road to travel on, and no time to travel through. For God waits not for His Son in time, being forever unwilling to be without him.

Well, we can put it a little bit more direct than that. God is not forever unwilling to be without you, God forever Wills to be with you. And if that is God's Will, that is what is done. And that is the way it is, no matter what you think.

. . . God waits not for His Son in time, being forever unwilling to be without him. And so it has always been.

Therefore, so it is now. So not only are you not labeled guilty by God, with a guilt that has to be paid for, you aren't separated from Him by time or by anything. And so it has always been.

Let the holiness of God's Son shine away the cloud of guilt that darkens your mind, and by accepting his purity

. . . Whose? The Son of God

. . . by accepting his purity as yours, learn of him that it IS yours.

Now . . .

Let the holiness of God's Son shine away the cloud of guilt that darkens your mind, . .

I want to point something out here. Let's say an injury has occurred, an illness seems to be occurring. Misfortune has taken place and the one to whom its happened is suffering. And that one comes to you wanting healing.

How are you going to heal?

Well, I'm going to tell you first of all, that if you hold that one to be a body, you're not going to heal. If you hold him in your mind to be an organism that is the current end result of evolution, you're not going to have healing. If you see him as an entity who has not followed the rules, and is therefore suffering from having broken the rules, you are not going to see healing. If you see him as a body, whatever he's suffering from has to be legitimate because its part and parcel of being a body—it's part and parcel of being an orphan.

If you're going to see healing there, you are going to have to consider your brother from a different vantage point. You're going to have to be willing in your mind, to step across the threshold of body identification to Mind identification. You're going to have to step across the boundary in your mind of orphanhood to Sonship.

You're going to have to do that yourself because that's the only place where your brother will be guiltless. And as long as he is guilty, he has no right not to be suffering because his suffering is punishment for his guilt—they are inseparable.

And I'm telling you that when you take the time to be present with your brother who is in need, and you are willing to step over that threshold from body identification to Mind identification—from orphanhood to Sonship—you're first of all, not going to be engaging in thinking. And you're going to be quiet, so that you are receptive to the Vision of the truth about your brother and you will hold him to be innocent. You will find yourself holding him in his innocence, in a conscious clear awareness of innocence that is God derived, and that God never withheld or withdrew from him and that which is therefore Absolute right now.

You're going to have to take the radical stand, the radical position, the radical unreasonable position that your brother is guiltless. Why? Because he's not an orphan. Because he isn't what he thinks he is. He isn't even what you thought he was, even with your best thinking. He's more than that. And you've got to be willing to step across that boundary and join with the Father.

And when you do, you will see healing. You call such a step of crossing over the boundary and embracing a completely foreign—these aren't the best words— but a completely foreign mindset, you see that as not natural, as not normal. But until you begin to do it, you will not have the opportunity to find out that you are actually crossing over the boundary into your natural condition, which uncovers the truly natural condition of others to them.

And I will tell you that every spiritual healing that has ever occurred, has been the evidence of someone not agreeing with the evidence, the behavioral evidence, the experiential evidence, or the physical evidence of sickness, illness, injury and even death. Such a stance has to have been taken. And in all cases, in order for that stance to become established in the one being the agent for change, that one has to have had a love of God first. That one, even if only temporarily, has had to own his place in the Sonship and love God so much that he wanted what God is Being to be uninhibitedly manifest, no longer covered up. Because he loved his brother enough to stop thinking about him and stop misidentifying him and stop looking at him from the vantage point of being an orphan himself.

The Agent for change had to abandon his orphanhood and let God into him.

Continuing . . .

You are invulnerable BECAUSE you are guiltless. You can hold on to the past ONLY through guilt. For guilt establishes that you will be. . .

. . .future tense . . .

. . .punished for what you have done, and thus depends on one-dimensional time, proceeding from past to future.

Past to future . . . ah-ha . . . history! You are all victims of your history. And you are only victims of your history. You love your history, you value your history. But history is a two-edged sword we might say. If you have an excellent history, let's say your work history is excellent, and you have worked for excellent companies and each time you move from one company to another it was with a position of advancement and greater responsibility . . . ahhh . . . your history gives you identity. You see. And of course you need a history to give you identity, because as an orphan, you don't have an inheritance from your father or mother, you see. Your history tells you what you are, and it tells you how good you are at what you are.

But you know what? That kind of a history victimizes you, just as much as the history of the three jail terms you had: The long periods of unemployment that you had, and the periods of employment you had that were, humm, not that great—nothing to indicate substance and quality to you. You understand that that kind of history can victimize you. But you don't understand that an excellent history victimizes you as well. In fact, it almost victimizes you more tightly because pride is attached to it.

Remember, no matter what the past says about you, it is reflecting and embodying and seeming to manifest one thing only: The orphan mentality. And it is embodying the results of your very definite thinking processes because you had to think in order to come up with the definitions that say, "A succession of good jobs with increasing responsibility means you are a person of substance, that you are respectable and that you are valuable!" Someone had to think that up. It isn't true. You see. But because it sounds so good and it's so pleasing, you know what? It makes you really reluctant to abandon being an orphan. It makes you really reluctant to step over the threshold into that natural condition of your Being in which your every need is met because it's the nature of Being Itself to identify Itself—to manifest Itself, to experience Itself wholly, fully, with nothing withheld from It.

And so everything is, for lack of better words, provided to you. Those words have meaning for an orphan. But for one who is Awake, everything is you. You are wholeness from which nothing is left out infinitely. You don't have to earn it. You don't have to behave in a certain way in order to experience it. It is your Birthright!

Your history tells you what you are and how good you are at being it. It tells you whether you're a good person or a bad person, a good orphan or a bad orphan. But because its only telling you whether you're a good orphan or a bad orphan, it isn't telling you anything about you. Do you see that? Because you are the Son or Daughter of God, the wholeness of Being embodied by God, not by your actions, right where you are—right where you are . . . Aware.

You can hold on to the past ONLY through guilt. For guilt establishes that you will be punished for what you have done, and thus depends on one-dimensional time, proceeding from past to future. No-one who believes this can understand what ALWAYS means.

When you hear the word, "always" you tend to think of it in terms of time—endless time. The meaning of the word "always" can in a limited way, be understood as synonymous with wholeness—infinite wholeness.

No-one who believes this. .

I'm going to back up . .

You can hold on to the past ONLY through guilt. For guilt establishes that you will be punished for what you have done, and thus depends on one-dimensional time, proceeding from past to future. No-one who believes this can understand what ALWAYS means. And therefore guilt MUST deprive you of the appreciation of eternity. You are immortal BECAUSE you are eternal, and always MUST be now. Guilt, then, is a way of holding past and future in your minds to ensure the ego's continuity. For if what has been WILL be punished, the ego's continuity is guaranteed. Yet. . .

. . .and this is key . .

. . .the guarantee of your continuity is God's, not the ego's. And immortality is the opposite of time, for time passes away, while immortality is constant.

What are you guilty of? Are you guilty of things you did poorly as an orphan? Are you guilty for what you thought you did as a figment of your imagination?

If you're not guilty, why aren't you Awake? Ahh, [chuckling] see, the ego will stick ya somewhere, "If you're not guilty, how come you're not Awake?" Well, you don't have to be guilty in order to not be Awake. You simply have to be engaging in something that doesn't work. You simply have to be attempting to do something that's impossible. But because you can't accomplish it, you can't be guilty for it. If you are not guilty for it, there cannot be a penalty for it that is going to take time for you to fulfill before you will be free.

If you were guilty of anything, we might have to say that you were guilty of thinking. But remember my opening statement? God did not give you the capacity to think! If you thought you had the capacity to think and you could actually accomplish it, then you might be guilty. But to be thinking is as much an illusion as the pretend role of being a swashbuckling sailor on the seven seas. You can seem to engage in it, but nothing is happening. So you're not even guilty of thinking.

Now, let's be grounded here: If you are engaging in thinking, you are engaging in something you can't accomplish. And in engaging in something you can't accomplish, does constitute a distraction from truth.

The answer is to stop engaging in the distraction. That's all!

And so this week, I'm going to invite you to go through your day, doing your best to remember for as long as you can—which you'll find won't be very long, but to try to the best of your ability for as long as you can—to look at a thing and not think about it. To look at a thing, to embrace the view whether it's a wide angle vision or a close-up narrow, focused vision. And just be present with that thing and pay attention.

So you have a chatty neighbor. And she's a little bit crotchety and she's always complaining. And it's not much fun to be around her because everything that comes out of her mouth is some sort of negative and she happens to be right behind you in the line in the grocery store while you're waiting for the person with a humungous order in front of you that's going to take time.

Ordinarily, if you're confronted with this, you place between yourself and this person a barrier of a definition—one that will allow you to discount her or him—one that will allow you to stand there without being touched. You will maintain a picture made up of imaginative thoughts that have, I'm going to say, devolved into a poor definition.

But now, here you are, tomorrow or the next day, after I've said, Be willing to be present without thinking. What are you going to do? Well, a hint: Try listening below the surface. Try being present with her, or him. Listening for what is underneath their behavior—his behavior, her behavior. Listen for their need.

You hear the word, "listen?" That's how you shut-up thinking. You listen. Listen many times during the day. Practice being present with your world without thinking as often as you can. Like I say, it may only be a fraction of a second before [finger snap] your mind is racing with thoughts. But your intent to do this, brought into play repetitively during the day, will bring you to a point where your being present with another, or being present with a thing without thoughts, endures a little bit longer.

There's more there of what God is Being than what you're seeing. Want to experience it enough to be genuinely and honestly curious and be still . . . still the thinking . . . still the awful thinking . . . still the malicious thinking . . . still the judgmental thinking! And still the false, syrupy love that you would embrace them in.

Be still . . . knowing that in the Silence where you are crossing over the threshold between body and Mind identification, you are being the conscious invitation for the experience of God's Perspective, which is your true perspective.

That's your practice for this week. Now when we get together next week, I'm not going to ask you how well you did, or how many notches you have on your sword. It's not a test. It's a practice at coming back into your right Mind by letting your right Mind back in by abandoning the orphan mentality.

Guilt is a tool used in the realm of orphanhood only. And the penalties that it has been decided must be extracted as a result of guilt, only seems valid in the realm of orphanhood. Step over the threshold, and the fantasy is gone.

And you become an agent for change—a beneficent, benign presence inspiring those still bound by their sense of orphanhood to let go of it as well.

You're here to be an inspiration. The Real You, the Christ that you are, is here to be the inspiration that breaks the illusion—that ends the dream—not by doing anything to it, but by not being in it and knowing that you're not in it. So that you know that your brother isn't in it either and can show him the way out.

I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, and I love you . . . and I love all of you.

Join me all of you, please, join me in the silence of honest curiosity and attentiveness so that we might all Be the mouthpiece for God—be the mouthpiece for Good, be the mouthpiece—the Place where that which inspires healing comes forth and heals.

I look forward to being with you next week.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening, and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we're coming to the end of another Chapter. We are moving through the book. It might be well or helpful to remember what the Chapter is called. It's called: God's Plan for Salvation.

[Note: this is the Chapter name for the Sparkly Book and JCIM editions.]

Sometimes when we get into the thick of the human condition and we're discussing it, it's hard to remember that it's been done in the context of God's plan for Salvation. And so it seemed perhaps to be laborious, hard work to implement the things that we've been discussing, when you would think that God's plan for Salvation would be buoyant and uplifting. And indeed, it is. But your habit is to be serious—the human condition.

That's what you're being saved from—the human condition.

You have all thought that the human condition was the way things are. And that you must cope with it the best you can. And indeed, in the process, develop better coping skills.

But we've made it clear that the human condition is nothing more than the experience of the state of orphanhood. And we've discussed that in light of the fact that you aren't orphans! Therefore the state of orphanhood and the experience of the human condition is not, "the way things are." There's an alternative. You're not stuck in it unless you believe that it's, "the way things are," and that's it.

So, you have been provided with a way out of the human condition. That's what all of this that we've been discussing is about: The way out of the human condition.

Now if the human condition is the definition of the state of orphanhood, and if you aren't really orphans, you have just been convinced that you are, then the way out of the human condition is the way out of orphanhood. The solution has nothing to do with improving the human condition. It has to do with moving out of a mindset into the truth about you.

The last time we met, we discussed the fact that the way out of orphanhood is to cancel your divorce from your Father—from your Source. And we talked about the fact that that is the equivalent of shifting from body-identification to Mind-identification—where you are not seeing yourself as a small figure/object moving through space. But rather as the Mind which is boundaryless, in which all of these experiences are going on.

We also talked about the fact that to step out of time into eternity is something that happens at the boundary between body-identification and Mind-identification.

At the bottom line, God's Plan for Salvation is for you to come back into your right Mind, to come back into that place of excellence that I have described as being in you. Ultimately, the place of excellence is not in you, it Is you. The place of excellence is the Mind that you Are—that which you really Are.

Now, if you have been attempting to implement the directions I have given, especially in terms of abandoning thinking, you have become clearly aware of how addicted you are to your thinking. Not that you love it, not that you go looking for it, but that you employ it spontaneously—like a reflex action that you're not responsible for. It just happens! And there you are thinking . . . and there you are justifying yourself . . . and there you are evaluating another . . . and there you are weighing all the factors so as to ensure your safety.

If you have been anywhere diligent in trying not to think, you have been confronted with how difficult it is not to think.

Now, for many of you, you've had the chance to observe someone else in your experience who's having a problem. And you've been able to look at them and clearly see that they're being caught in the problem is a result of their thinking and the fact that they will not abandon their thoughts. You would say, they're unwilling to abandon what they believe, even though it's clear to you that what they're believing isn't true.

The simple fact is, that the only thing you can believe are the thoughts you employ. So, when you look at these friends or relatives who are literally caught, and you see how easy it could be for them to be released from what they're caught in, it's obvious to you that all they have to do to get out of it is to change their mind.

Now, you can see this with others. And then you look at yourself, especially if you're not in the middle of a crises, and you say, "Well, my thinking is benign. My thinking . . . I'm not trapped, I'm not feeling trapped, I'm not feeling as though I'm in the middle of a crises, therefore there's no call for me to change my mind."

But if you're thinking, you are still identifying yourself as an orphan. You're still not Awake! You're still not in that place of excellence in you where you are automatically joined with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

If you're thinking, you're not in the Silence that is essential for you to have enlightenment—for you to have a sudden shift of perception. Even if you are thinking benign thoughts, you are still in the middle of an addiction. And you are still sound asleep, which is not your goal.

You must arrive at a point where you don't value your thinking no matter how benign or good it is. As long as you are thinking, you're not listening. As long as you are thinking, you are projecting your will and you are not receptive.

You cannot stand in receipt of anything when you are thinking. And that's the way you keep yourself bound in orphanhood. And that's also the way in which you block the experience of God's Plan for Salvation—your salvation.

Now, there's another thing to be aware of when it comes to the truth about thinking. And that is, that at the bottom line, the reason you engage in thinking is to establish your righteousness. I'm not talking about any ultimate divine form of righteousness. I am talking about self-righteousness!

Thinking is always used for the purpose of arriving at a clarity of your rightness. In other words, that you are not wrong. But you are right over and against what is wrong. You think to prove that you're right. And if you're attempting to prove that you're right, you are in an antagonistic stance. You are in an argumentative stance. You are trying to prove it to someone.

Only an orphan feels a need to prove righteousness. And the orphan feels a need to prove his righteousness because he feels unrighteous. And the reason he feels unrighteous—at a disadvantage—is because the very concept of orphanhood is an illusion. It's not Real. It is not your Birthright and it is not what you Are. And you feel that, you Know that.

But the solution does not lie in being an orphan who succeeds in proving that he's righteous. The solution lies in abandoning the state of orphanhood itself. It lies in your abandoning your divorce from the Father—your declaration of independence. This is not a hard thing to do. It's just that you have such a strong commitment to trying to prove that you can be something on your own.

You can stop it at any time. And you can stop it at any time by taking a deep breath, turning your attention toward God and saying, "Father." Just that word alone said genuinely, breaks the isolation—breaks the orphanhood. "Father, show me the truth about me. Reveal to me the truth about me. Fill me with the awareness that it's my birthright to be experiencing. Help me be in my right Mind." And then be quiet.

You must invite the experience of your right Mind in. Instead of automatically going into high gear asserting your righteousness—defending yourself against all that is apparently attempting to get you down.

Now, I realize I'm repeating myself—things I've said in the recent past and the distant past. But, as I've said before, I will keep doing this until it registers with you. You know that you're not an orphan. You know it. But you have been claiming to be an orphan and trying to be the best damn orphan you can possibly be. Because the suggestion that the state of orphanhood makes, or the suggestion that the ego gives is, that you actually do have a capacity to be something significant in your own right, and in fact God gave it to you. And it is therefore your duty to exercise your free will to be what God ordained for you to be on your own.

But you know this isn't true. And the ego can't afford for you to be consciously aware—fully, consciously, aware—of your divinity. And so, it distracts you from your awareness that you're not an orphan. It distracts you from the truth that as an orphan, you're nothing. And it says that all of the problems you're experiencing are not because you're misidentifying yourself, but because the world is conflicted—the world really is polarized. And it is untrustworthy and this is the fertile field that the Father has given you in which to develop your capacity to practice self-will successfully.

And so, the flaw in the whole thinking process, which is that you're misidentifying yourself. And what you're misidentifying yourself is not the truth about yourself, gets covered up by projecting the flaw "out there." "They are flawed. The world is flawed. The world is polarized and I must address this flawed world in order to make myself safe."

And that's how you get caught up in becoming a better and better ego, a better and better orphan. But that isn't God's plan for Salvation.

You will find that when you abandon this orphan-mentality in favor of joining with the Father and inviting your right Mind in, letting that place of excellence in you blossom, if I may put it that way, come into full expression, that you will never have occasion to defend yourself. You will never have occasion to assert your righteousness or prove your righteousness. And the unexpected freebee, if I may put it that way, that you will get is, the discovery that your world isn't polarized and that it isn't hostile—that it is indeed, Reality or the Kingdom of Heaven.

As you go through this coming week, I want you to be alert and watch how many times you speak—you open your mouth and you express your thoughts. And they are for the sole purpose of demonstrating or expressing your righteousness. In other words, it is a defense. A defense is a shield. It is that which confirms separation and disallows for the unity to occur that is what's really going on, and is what it is your Birthright to be experiencing without process. I mean by that, it's your Birthright to experience it without your having to go through some mental gymnastics or righteous thinking, or correct thinking.

Your experience can change 180 degrees in a[snaps fingers] split second. If you will catch yourself the moment you become defensive, the moment you use your mind to think reasonably, to reason through the situation and come to justified conclusions, you're going through reasonable thinking processes means you are going through the past. You are going through that which is already known, which is exactly what your friends or family members who are caught in a situation are doing, and you can see so clearly that they are doing, and that they are binding themselves by their commitment to their thoughts, no matter how invalid they are.

You have got to come to a point where you find thinking to be so valueless that you prefer to move into the Silence, even if you don't have an enlightening answer [snaps fingers] instantaneously. Because if you move into the Silence with genuine curiosity and an invitation to the Holy Spirit or the Father to reveal the truth to you, the healing or transforming truth will unfold, allowing you to behave in the circumstance you're in without once resorting to thinking—without once resorting to your habitual thought-forms or thought-structures that you had used to make yourself right and thereby keep yourself safe.

You all think that being right is what makes you safe. No. Being the Son of God or the Daughter of God which you already Are, is what makes you safe.

The section we're finishing up is entitled, Guiltlessness and Invulnerability. You want to be invulnerable. And you're conditioned to believe that the way to be invulnerable is to be right! And if you're wrong, heaven help you because you will be at the mercy of circumstances and mean-spirited individuals and life itself, which isn't fair.

God's plan for Salvation is called, Atonement. Not atonement in the sense of atoning for your sins, that's an ego concept. But Atonement in the sense of coming back into your right Mind claiming no other right use or right to use your mind for a purpose it wasn't designed. Atonement is shifting from orphanhood to Sonship—orphandood to Brotherhood.

Let's go into the Book.

Accepting the Atonement teaches you what immortality IS, . . . 1

See, atoning for your sins will not teach you what immortality is. It will just keep you busy longer in the state of orphanhood trying to improve yourself but still being sound asleep.

Accepting the Atonement . . .

. . . shifting from orphanhood to Brotherhood . . .

. . . teaches you what immortality IS, for by accepting your guiltlessness you learn that the past has never been, and so the future is needless.

Can you wrap your mind around that? No. Because you're not used to thinking in these terms. But it isn't really complicated.

Accepting the Atonement . . .

. . . shifting to Brotherhood, shifting to the awareness that you have a Father . . .

. . . teaches you what immortality IS, for by accepting your guiltlessness you learn that the past has never been, and so the future is needless.

Now, we've already talked about the fact last week—the last time we were together—that when you think about what has been, when you think and use old information, which is the only thing you can use to think with, you are confirming your orphanhood, which is something that can't possibly actually be. And so you're making a mistake. And committing yourself to a mistake.

And you experience discomfort from it. And therefore, you're obviously guilty of something. And guilt calls for time to undo it.

And so, it means there must be a future. The past imagined calls the future into play. If you let go of the past, if you were to let go of the past completely, you would have no conception of a future because there would be no need of a future. No need of a future to undo the past.

This is literal. This is not symbolic. If you stopped thinking, you would stop bringing all there is to the past into play. And you would be in the Now of conscious awareness. In other words, of being Mind. You would have shifted from body-identification to Mind-identification. And Mind-identification is always a conscious experience of Now, which, when you, for lack of better words, access it, you find to be Infinite, all Present—all Present with nowhere to get to that isn't present yet. This is literal.

Now, this next sentence is very important.

The future, in time, is always associated with expiation, . .

And I know everyone of you knows exactly what that means, don't you? Expiation is a word you should understand. Expiation is the setting right of that which you did that was wrong. Expiation is, for lack of better words, a cleansing of your sins—a clearing out.

The future, in time, is always associated with expiation, . .

Now that doesn't mean that you've always associated it with expiation. But it is the fact.

The future, in time, is . . .

. . . inseparable from, I'm going to put it that way instead of

. . . is always associated with . . .

. . . is inseparable from expiation. Because you need time to undo the awful things that you did.

. . . and ONLY guilt could induce a sense of NEED for expiation.

Now, expiation can be accomplished in two ways, by definition: One is through acts of devotion and the other is through acts of penance. Does this sound very Catholic to you? That's because it is very Catholic—literally, very Catholic. Either you can undo the wrongs through acts of devotion, meaning devotion to God expressed in acts of one sort or another, or through penance.

Penance . . . penance is a penalty you apply to yourself. It's an act of going through suffering that you place upon yourself as a means of purifying yourself. But what you need to see is, that whether you're engaged in acts of devotion or acts of penance, it's still being engaged in by an orphan. And therefore, they will never succeed at their imagined intended purpose.

You see, none of this could have any meaning for you if you didn't have this fundamental concept of yourself, that you are a sinner, that you are flawed. And that it's a given. It's something that you can't escape. If you didn't have that fundamental definition of yourself, you could never be fooled into thinking that you had to do penance or engage in acts of devotion in order to arrive at your guiltlessness. Very important.

Now . . .

Accepting the guiltlessness of the Son of God as YOURS is therefore God's way of reminding you of His Son, . .

. . . you, of His Daughter, you . . .

. . . and what he . . .

. . . you. . .

. . . is in truth.

See, you must be willing to take this radical position of accepting your guiltlessness in spite of what the state of orphanhood has convinced you is the opposite.

Accepting the guiltlessness . . .

See, incredible idea of your guiltlessness, . .

. . . the guiltlessness of the Son of God . . .

. . . that you are . . .

. . . as YOURS is therefore God's way of reminding you of His Son, . .

. . . that you are His offspring . . .

... and what he ...

... His Son ...

... is in truth. For God has never condemned His Son, and being guiltless he IS eternal.

Well, let's just look at that for a second. Can you see that it truly could only be if God condemned you . . . if God condemned you, that you could actually be guilty. I mean, if one of your crazy brothers condemned you and says you are guilty, are you going to take his word over the Source of your Being? Over your Creator? And you're going to join with him in his fantasy? And all of a sudden become a full-fledged orphan and endure all that comes along with it?

Now that is what you've been doing. But when I put it that way, you can see how senseless it is.

... God has never condemned his Son, . .

... and therefore, . .

... being guiltless he ...

... God's Son ...

... IS eternal.

Now listen to this:

You cannot dispel guilt by making it real and THEN atoning for it.
This is the ego's plan, which it offers INSTEAD of . . .

... what?

... dispelling it.

See, the Father, the Holy Spirit, I engage in dispelling your guilt. Helping you dispel your belief of guilt. We encourage you to shift from body-identification to Mind-identification. We encourage you to abandon the belief of being an isolated, separated orphan, by what? Remembering your Father. Remembering that you have a Father and encouraging you to, what? Reach out to your Father. Re-embrace your Father.

The answer to guilt is not to correct it, not to do penance for it, not to engage in acts of devotion to overcome it, but to dispel it by moving out of the orphan mentality, by moving out of the sinner-mentality. Stop accepting this outrageous idea that you were a sinner and that you were born in sin, that you are flawed, after all, you're just human, you say. When something goes wrong you say, "Well, what can you expect? I'm only human." You see, you justify rather than dispel the suggestion.

You cannot dispel guilt by making it real and THEN atoning for it.

And you know what? Your brothers and sisters that you're involved with cannot dispel guilt by making it real or by your helping them make it real, and then atoning for it . . . and then telling them what they have to do to get into your good graces again, or what they have to do before you will be willing to love them unconditionally again. You can't dispel guilt by making it real in your brother and then atoning for it—having him atone for it—any more than you can dispel guilt in yourself by making it real. "Yes, I am a sinner. Yes, I am a sinner. Yes, I am guilty. Yes, I am a orphan."

No, you are not an orphan! And you must stop thinking like one and you must stop acting like one. And you must claim the truth for yourself. How? By declaring it, declaring the thought? No. By turning your attention toward God and saying, "Father," in other words, "Source of my Being, reason for my existing, help me! I reach out to you. I join with you. I am engaging in an act of union—conscious union. I desire not to play into this idiotic idea that I'm alone and that it's a good thing that I'm alone and that You gave me the right to be alone, so that I might learn to manifest all of the qualities You have instilled in me so that I might become an excellent example of what You created me to be: An isolated self-sufficient excellent example of existence. You see?

You cannot dispel guilt by making it real and THEN atoning for it.

And I'm adding the word, "However," . . .

This is the ego's plan, which it offers INSTEAD of dispelling it.
The ego believes in atonement through ATTACK, . .

. . . attack on you! Acknowledge you are a sinner. And the voice for the ego comes through the churches with all sanctity, "My brother, accept it, you are a sinner. You were born in sin. But there is a way out of it. And the way out of it is through certain obediences and through certain penances."

The ego believes in atonement through ATTACK, being fully committed to the insane notion that attack IS salvation.

How many of you when you were youngsters, were sent out by your "friends" on a snipe hunt. A snipe, being a bird that only comes out at night, in fields.

And if you take a flashlight and a gunnysack with you, and you shine the light in the snipe's—it's a bird—in the snipe's face, it will immobilize it and you can put it into the bag. Well, there are no such things as snipes and of course if you shown the light in their face, they would fly off. But all the time you are out there, engaged with your flashlight, your friends are on the edge of the field, snickering and watching. And having fun at your expense.

Well, the ego is like that. It's sending you out on a snipe-hunt. It's sending you out on a wild goose-chase. It says, "You are a sinner." You see. "But there are ways for you to overcome it." And then you, in your ignorance, get out there and begin to do your penances or your obediences. And the ego sits there and sniggers at you because it knows it has you by the . . . You know what I mean.

The ego believes in atonement through ATTACK, being fully committed to the insane notion that attack IS salvation. And you who cherish guilt must ALSO believe it, for how else but by identifying WITH the ego could you hold dear what you do not want?

Well, you see, you hold it dear because you didn't think you had any other choice. But what are you learning here? Even if its only intellectually at the moment. You're learning that your not an ego. Your learning that you're not an orphan—and that your practice of orphanhood, your practice of all the thought structures around being an orphan, are what keep you bound in insanity.

Now, you know that a lie has been told. And that you've been believing a lie and that you have an alternative.

The ego teaches you to attack yourself BECAUSE you are guilty, .

The ego says, "You must do penances. You must engage in acts of self-punishment in order to atone for your sins." That's attack. That's attack upon one who is nothing more, nothing less than a Son of God.

The ego teaches you to attack yourself BECAUSE you are guilty, and this must INCREASE the guilt, for guilt is the RESULT of attack. In the ego's teaching, . .

And this is what must become clear . . .

In the ego's teaching, then, . .

. . . or in the orphan mindset, . .

. . . there IS no escape from guilt.

And that's pretty much where all of you are. You're guilty and there's nothing you can do about it and all you can do is make the best of it. And hopefully, you will be able to atone just right. And receive the grace of the Father and be released. B-u-u-u-t, who knows for sure? So you make the best of it. You try to be chipper and happy. But if you don't abandon the concept of being an orphan, you will not escape from that, because its part and parcel of the illusion that you can be something that you cannot possibly be.

In the ego's teaching, then, there IS no escape from guilt. For attack makes guilt real, and if it is real there IS no way to overcome it.

And like I said, the only way that you could ever Really, Really be guilty, is if the Father pronounced you guilty. Which can't happen! Because you can't stop being or alter in any way what God is Being, right there where you Are.

Again . . .

In the ego's teaching, then, there IS no escape from guilt. For attack makes guilt real, and if it is real there IS no way to overcome it.

Now, on the other hand . . .

The Holy Spirit dispels it simply through the calm recognition that it has never been.

Again, it's a very radical concept, or so it seems. But its simply and fundamentally true. It's simply and fundamentally true. Before you had a single thought about it. It's simply and fundamentally true. The Holy Spirit does the only thing that can be done with guilt:

. . . dispels it simply through the calm recognition that it has never been.

The Holy Spirit dispels the belief in orphanhood simply through the calm recognition that orphanhood never occurred.

Your right Mind dispels illusion by simply showing that it never occurred.

As He, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, your right Mind . . .

... looks upon

... you ...

... the guiltless Son of God, He KNOWS this is true. And being true for YOU you CANNOT attack yourself, for without guilt attack is impossible. You, then, ARE saved because God's Son is guiltless. And being wholly pure, you ARE invulnerable.

What good news. Difficult to wrap your mind around? Maybe. But now you have something to try to wrap your mind around, right? Now you have something hopeful to engage your attention about. Bring your attentiveness to the truth of this statement. When you say, "Father, give me the experience of the truth of this statement," you are turning your attention to the truth. You are bringing your attention to something that is completely and consistent with the whole way you've been thinking of yourself and your world, and the whole way you've been experiencing yourself and your world.

If your family or loved ones or friends, who are tightly caught in a state of crises because they won't let their attention outside of the thought structures that they are convinced of ...

Paul: I'm sorry I lost it ...

Raj: No, ... would dare to give their attention outside of those structures, they would get their release and you know it! You can see it as plain as day.

The same thing applies to you relative to the prison you're in as a result of your benign thoughts. Your benign thoughts still keep you asleep—still keep you imprisoned. And you want release. You want the experience of the promise of God's plan for salvation.

So there are two things this week. The first one is, pay attention to the thinking that goes on in your mind and notice that in one way or another, your thoughts are self-justifying. They are an act of self-defense that makes you right, opposed to something wrong.

Self-righteousness is so opaque, so dense, that you cannot see the truth through it. If you can't see the truth through inner acts, through your inner acts of self-righteousness, then your acts of self-righteousness are your enemy not your ally. And you need to stop employing self-righteousness just because. Just because, it keeps you absolutely blinded to your Birthright—to the truth about you, to your guiltlessness.

Remember, your guiltlessness is your release from time, the past that calls for a future in which expiation can take place . . . you lucky dogs!

And the second thing for this week is, to remember numerous times during the day, to say to God, literally say it to God, "Father, I know that if I exist at all, I must be absolutely guiltless. Please, help me have the experience of what those words mean."

Express that desire to the Father, not to the powers that be, not to the Universe, but to your Father, the very Source of your being, That which is Being Itself/Himself right where you are. It could be sort of depressing to notice many times during the week, how self-righteous you are and how spontaneously you employ it.

So, lets balance out the discouragement that might come from that, by doing something encouraging. And balance it by saying, "Father, I know that if I exist at all, I must be utterly guiltless. Please help me have the experience of what that means."

It portends for a wonderful week that you won't arrive at the end of, feeling that it has been nothing but labor. It is not your Birthright for this to be experienced as laborious.

I love you all you Sons and Daughters of God, and I look forward to being with you next week. You know the saying, "Expect a Miracle! Expect sudden shifts of perception and know that many sudden shifts of perception are lined up waiting for you the moment you're willing to question the validity of your being a sinner who must, through the practice of expiation—you won't forget that word for a long time—through the practice of expiation, purify yourselves and someday become worthwhile.

Enough said.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 30th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the internet.

As we go into this new chapter, The Problem of Guilt, it will be easier to understand what the Course is saying if you remember that references to the ego are references to what we have been referring to as the orphan mentality—the orphan mindset.

The orphan mindset has a basic premise. And that is: that it—the orphan—is alone, separate, at a disadvantage, sourceless, but given a capacity to become something. This capacity has been given to him, the orphan says, "by God." Not God the Father, not God the orphan's Father, but God, an everywhere present Presence with divine authority that created all these independent entities and gave these independent entities the capacity to become outrageously successful in every independent endeavor that that entity seeks to fulfill.

The only thing is, that because there really isn't any such thing as an orphan—a separate, independent entity—and because every orphan who thinks and believes he is an orphan really is the ever-present ongoing offspring, you might say, of God, he's living his life in constant denial of the truth about himself. And therefore, he's in a constant state of self-denial. And that is uncomfortable.

Now, because the prime motivator for the orphan is to become successful on his own, or on her own, it takes this discomfort—and as you'll read—projects it out there. It says: "I am not conflicted, but my world and everything in it is polarized. It is in a constant state of conflict and I am therefore required to be in constant defense against it.”

And as this defense is carried out, the orphan mentality, the ego, takes on the responsibility of trying to apply order to chaos—order to the chaos it sees, order to the chaos it has projected on everything—in order not to have to take a look at the fact that the premise of its thought system is, that the thinker of the thought system is independent, and that independence is an illusion.

That’s what the ego is. It makes a little bit more sense when you understand that it’s a mindset you are employing, not a fact, not an actuality, but a creative, imaginative mindset that you are employing to the exclusion of your conscious awareness of who and what you divinely Are.

This discomfort is called guilt. This dissonance is called guilt. And as we talked about the last time we met, guilt is not to be overcome or ignored. It is to be dispelled.

This guilt, whether you attribute it to yourself or to others, does not have to be atoned for. In fact, you had better not engage in atoning for it because the more you do, the less you correct it, cause the correction of guilt comes in the dispelling of it, not the atoning for it. And you dispel guilt by a simple act, which we also talked about last time, the simple act of turning your attention from overcoming conflict, becoming a more and more successful orphan, to a simple act of extension of your attention outside your mindset.

The extension of your attention that occurs when you pray, when you say: “Father. . .” followed by whatever words constitute your prayer.

But, again, just the first word of the prayer is what breaks the illusion, because when you say “Father. . .” and you reach beyond your current mindset, you break the isolation. You break the isolation. And when you allow yourself to feel the influx of the Father’s response, guilt is nowhere to be found, either in you or in those you had projected guilt upon or the orphan mentality had projected guilt upon.

Keep in mind the word “dispel” because it is the only word relevant to the word “guilt.”

Now, let’s go into the Book, Chapter:

Twelve¹

The Problem of Guilt.

The ultimate purpose of projection as the ego uses it . . .

Now, what does it say?

. . . as the ego uses it . . .

It says that because projection is the Movement of Being, God, in the act of Being Mind, fully conscious of all that He is, is engaged in projection—and it is called Creation. So projection is Real. But projection, as the ego uses it, is a distortion of Real projection.

So, the ultimate purpose of projection as the ego uses it, is always to get rid of guilt. “Get it away from me! I’m not guilty! I’m not guilty!” You see? “I’m not responsible for this discomfort I’m feeling! I’ll pin the tail on the donkey out there—the brother, or the sister, or the boss, or the circumstance, or the weather. Get it away from me and leave me free!” And mind you, this should sound totally egotistical: “And leave me free to bring the gifts that God has given me in His creation of me as a separate individuality, to express intelligence and reason and a focused expression of will in a way that coerces the chaos that is going on, into order.”

Wow, what a thing if it could be done. What a success, if through the use of independent will, this ego—this orphan—could actually coerce everything that is of the nature of chaos, into order.

But of course, such a humongous task successfully completed, would have to be the sort of proof needed to demonstrate what the orphan has determined God created him for. God wouldn’t create him for a piss-ant, little, inconsequential accomplishment. Why? Well, that wouldn’t be very ego-satisfying, would it? No.

The ultimate purpose of projection as the ego uses it . . .

. . . as the orphan mentality uses it . . .

. . . is ALWAYS to get rid of guilt. Yet, characteristically, the ego .

..

. . . the orphan mentality . . .

. . . attempts to get rid of guilt from ITS viewpoint only, . .

In other words, to serve its purpose only.

. . . for much as the ego wants to retain guilt, YOU . . .

. . . not you the orphan, but YOU the divine one that you Are, that you can't stop being . . .

. . . find it intolerable, since guilt stands in the way of your remembering God, . .

Mind you, remembering God means remembering your Father, which means remembering that you are the Son of God, the Daughter of God. You are that which gets its identity from its Father.

So, in remembering God, it isn't exactly selfless like you might think. You could say it's ultimately, self-full. Because in remembering God, you rediscover who you Are and have never stopped being. Remembering God puts you back in your experience of your Real identity and being.

It's not [said in a tiny voice] this little orphan down on its knees, getting about as small as it can get, taking up as little space as it can take up, reaching up to this beneficent other, called God, so that a gift of healing, or a gift of success, or a gift of wealth, or a gift of peace of mind might be received and still leave you as a little orphan, a little inconsequential orphan taking up as little space as possible. You see?

No. Remembering God means, remembering that which brings you back into your full stature as the Son or Daughter of God—the Christ. That's what it means.

Again. . .

The ultimate purpose of projection as the ego uses it is ALWAYS to get rid of guilt. Yet, characteristically, the ego attempts to get rid of guilt from ITS viewpoint only, for much as the ego wants to retain guilt, YOU find it intolerable, since guilt stands in the way of your remembering God, Whose pull is so strong that you CANNOT resist it.

Wow, if it is so strong that you cannot resist it, and you are managing to be unconscious of it, you must be putting forth a great deal of effort whether you're aware of it or not.

On this issue, then, the deepest split of all occurs, for if you are to retain guilt, as the ego insists, YOU CANNOT BE YOU.

You cannot recognize, feel or embody the Christ that you Are.

Only by persuading you that IT . . .

... the ego ...

... is you ...

Only persuading you that you are an orphan . .

... could the ego possibly induce you to project guilt, . .

... instead of dispelling it ...

... and thereby KEEP it in your mind.

You see. If you project it and you believe your projection, you feel clean. And yet, all the projection has done is fooled you into believing that it isn't there, when it's still there, because you still think you're an orphan and as long as you insist that you are an orphan, you cannot be comfortable because you are engaged in denying your Self! Something which cannot be successfully accomplished.

Yet consider how strange a solution the ego's arrangement is. You project guilt to get rid of it, but you are actually merely concealing it. You DO experience guilt feelings, but you have no idea why.

[Chuckling] The reason you have no idea why you're experiencing them is because you have distracted yourself with the task that the orphan mentality has set before you to overcome the conflict that it has projected "out there" as guilty brothers and sisters. Guilty of what? Guilty of making the orphan miserable. You see.

On the contrary, you associate them with a weird . . .

... good word ...

... with a weird assortment of ego ideals, which the ego claims you have failed.

Well, what kind of weird assortment of ideals could you engage in? Well, you could engage in an attempt to succeed in the world of orphans without ever cooperating with them—even through mutual agreements. You could engage in the idea, the metaphysical idea, that everyone makes up their own reality and you're going to make up yours. And your reality is, that everybody—all the other orphans—will treat you well and lovingly, no matter how you treat them.

Or, you could have the weird idea, that if you do indeed abide by all of the mutual agreements that the orphans have come to as to how things work on how to have them be smooth and pleasant, that, after abiding by those rules, you will have no problems.

That's a weird idea. You know why? Well, there is a saying: "Rules are to be broken." Why is there a saying like that? Because [chuckling] rules that are built out of the imagination, which at the bottom line are always self-serving, will change as needed. There's no Principle there. There's no underlying stable intelligence there in the rules that have been made up.

You've heard of people working their whole life for a company, and at sixty-years old they retire and there's going to be a dinner party and always, there's been a big cash bonus and an automobile given, etc. And you arrive at your retirement party and they say, "We're really sorry Jim, but our funds have run out, but we have this beautiful gold watch for you."

What happened? Rules that have been made up by that which is a figment of the imagination—by many figments of the imagination—have no underlying Principle behind them. And so, the rules will change. The rules can be no more stable than the figment of the imagination that made them up. So it's a weird idea to think that if you abide by the general consensus of orphans, that you will inevitably end up having success, because of course, that's the reason the rules were set up.

Well, that's the reason the rules were set up when they were set up, but what are the circumstances today? Depending upon what the circumstances are today and what the vulnerabilities are that the orphans are experiencing, the rules will change.

You DO experience guilt feelings, but you have no idea why.

And the reason why is because you've misidentified yourself.

On the contrary, you associate them with a weird assortment of ego ideals, which the ego claims you have failed.

"Well sir, you would have gotten something more than a gold watch, if we had not discovered that back in 1945, you violated one of our basic laws and had an affair with one of the secretaries, and that disqualified you. We didn't think it necessary to tell you this because other than that, you were a very contributive member of our company and we valued that. But nevertheless, you're out of luck."

Someone else has a weird ego ideal that says—even using Course principles—“It’s your divine Function to express unconditional love and therefore, even though I have abused you, you have no right to be distressed with me. It’s your Function to continue to love me and feel no hurt and feel no distress in spite of the way I insist on behaving.” You see.

Another weird ego ideal, except that the actuality of it is, that even as orphans, very few will agree with such a weird ideal. And so, the word will come back to that one, “You have failed. You have failed at keeping me secure. You have failed at making me comfortable. You cannot have my continued attentive, unquestioning, foolish attention that never says stop.” You see. And so that one says, “Well, you’re being unfair. You’re breaking the rules!”

There are all kinds of weird ego ideals with which the ego can claim you have failed at.

Yet . . .

. . . now here we’re going to talk about the truth . . .

. . . you have no idea that you are failing the Son of God by seeing him as guilty.

Whether that Son of God that you’re seeing as guilty is yourself, or another. And how are you failing the Son of God? The most important Son of God, you? You’re failing the most important Son of God—you—by neglecting to say, “Father. . .” you see, and restore yourself to your Birthright in which no guilt exists, in which no orphans exists, in which no mutual agreements between orphans exists, because there never was an orphan, because you always were the Son or Daughter of God—the Christ.

Believing you are no longer you, . .

In other words, believing You, the Christ, are no longer the Christ, but a bonified, genuine orphan, . .

. . . you do not realize that you are failing YOURSELF.

Sounds dark and serious and depressing. But only if you’re still insisting on thinking of yourself as an orphan who’s doing all these bad things and therefore, deserves to feel guilty. But remember the important word relative to guilt, “dispel”? The answer is simple. All you have to do is dispel the guilt. Not cope with it, not react to it, not overcome it, not get better at being an orphan so you won’t feel guilty. But by remembering who you Are by remembering your Father and inviting your Father back into, for lack of better words, the equation.

CRUCIFIXION BY GUILT

Is the next Sub-Heading.

The darkest of your hidden cornerstones holds your belief in guilt from your awareness. For in that dark and secret place is the realization that you have betrayed God's Son by condemning him to death.

Strong words again. But as I said before, if as you sit here, or if as you listen, you do not identify yourself right now as the Son or Daughter of God—the innocent Christ, the full blown expression of all that God is Being right there where you are—then you have hidden the Christ that you Are, from yourself. And the ultimate effect of such denial is the snuffing out of any possibility of a remembrance that you are the Christ.

It is for the orphan to become so inflated that it totally obscures the truth about you and does away with it once and for all.

Now, I've put that into words figuratively speaking, except that the simple fact is, that you experience, even though they are illusory experiences, you experience this effort to do away with the Christ, as your own physical and mental illnesses. And physically, you walk one foot in front of the other into your grave and although you don't like the idea, you don't object to it. You don't object to it by doing what will effect your release!

Oh yes, research is done for better and better drugs and your doctors develop more and more skills to try to overcome death manually, can I put it that way, but its all done without ever challenging the idea that the doctors and the patients are all orphans. Its done without ever dispelling the need for those things to be done by doing the one thing that will undo your orphanhood, which is prayer: "Father. . . blah, blah, blah."

So, figuratively speaking, the orphan mentality has as its desire, to become so inflated that it absolutely totally and completely obscures what you really are and annihilates it by being such an inflated presence that there is not room for any vestige of the truth about you to remain to be rediscovered.

That's the figurative. The literal is what you watch every day: Sin, disease, death.

It's time to challenge that. It's time to challenge it by doing the one and only thing that will work: Let God back in! Acknowledge that you have a Source that you are inseparable from and from which you get your existence. You are utterly dependent upon That which is being you, right now. And you have no capacity to be in any way, shape or form, truly, all by yourself.

. . . in that dark and secret place is the realization that you have betrayed God's Son by condemning him to death.

That dark and secret place is a hidden cornerstone. You know, out of sight out of mind . . . ha-ha-ha.

You do not even suspect this murderous but insane idea lies hidden there, for the ego's destructive urge . . .

. . . the orphan's destructive urge . . .

. . . is so intense that nothing short of the crucifixion of God's Son can ultimately satisfy it.

In other words, nothing can satisfy this poor little waif—this poor little orphan's need to prove itself and to become so big and so strong and so absolute in its power, that anything else claiming responsibility for that one's existence, can possibly exist.

Every single ego, every single orphan-mentality has this goal. And as each of you go through your day from the orphan's mindset, you are engaged in overcoming the odds, in overcoming the obstacles. Why? So that you can better and better arrive at a place of invulnerability and be God-like.

It . . .

. . . the ego . . .

. . . does not know who the Son of God is, because it is blind.

Oh-oh yes, and boy does it work to keep its blinders on. It refuses to see the truth, because it's so busy and so intent upon accomplishing its single-minded purpose: Power. Power equal to every need. Power equal to oppose every negative circumstance—every threatening circumstance.

Every single one of you wants to arrive at a point where you can wake up in the morning happy and go through your day without that happiness being challenged in any way, where there's not even a suggestion of infringement upon that happiness. That's what you want. And so, you use every means you have available to you as an orphan to achieve that goal. And it's not working.

And one of the more recent sayings is that: "Stupidity is the continued attempt to do what doesn't work." So . . .

It does not know who the Son of God is, because it is blind. Yet let it perceive guiltlessness anywhere, and it will try to destroy it, because it is afraid.

Here's the explanation:

Much of the ego's strange behavior . . .

. . . much of the orphan mindset's enactment of being . . .

. . . is directly attributable to its definition of guilt. To the ego, THE GUILTLESS ARE GUILTY. Those who do not attack . . .

. . . in other words, those who are benign . . .

Those who do not attack are its "enemies," because, by not valuing its . . .

. . . the ego's . . .

. . . interpretation of salvation, they . . .

. . . those who do not attack . . .

. . . are in an excellent position TO LET IT GO.

To let the ego go. To let the orphan mindset go. To recognize clearly that the ego mindset is a fabrication and not actual. And therefore, not worthy of validation.

Listen again:

Much of the ego's strange behavior is directly attributable to its definition of guilt. To the ego, THE GUILTLESS ARE GUILTY. Those who do not attack are its "enemies," because, by not valuing . . .

. . . the ego's . . .

. . . interpretation of salvation, they . . .

. . . those who do not attack . . .

. . . are in an excellent position . . .

. . . to disregard the orphan mentality, or disregard the ego . . .

. . . they are in an excellent position to LET IT GO. They have approached the darkest and deepest cornerstone in the ego's foundation, and while the ego can withstand your raising all else to question, it guards this one secret with its life, for its existence DOES depend on keeping this secret.

What secret? That there is no orphan. That there is no ego. And that the dispelling of any representation the ego puts forth by virtue of not identifying with it any longer because you have said, "Father . . ." and remembered God and yourself. Whatever threatens the ego's supposed existence, the ego sees as enemy. And those who are on the verge of discovering their guiltlessness, constitute the one and only threat the ego can be bothered by.

Why? Because when you remember your Father and therefore, yourself, you will disregard the ego. And as I've said, over and over again, the only thing the ego cannot protect itself against—cannot defend itself against—is disregard.

I'll tell you something: Orphans need an audience. Orphans can't exist, can't seem to exist without somebody to play to and convince by virtue of their acting, that they're real. In effect, when you turn to the Father, you cease engaging in giving attention to the orphan mind-set and the sense of self you had gathered from it before you turned your attention to the Father and leaned into Him and became dependent upon Him, reestablishing consciously a forever-partnership.

So, it is this secret that we must look upon calmly, for the ego cannot protect you against truth, and in ITS presence the ego is dispelled.

You see, none of what we're talking about is a contest, none of what we're talking about is a matter of overcoming anything. It's a matter of abandoning the conscious practice of exercising will to accomplish something in order to become more than you presently are. It's the abandoning of that and all of the ethic involved in it and yielding back into—relaxing back into—the already established way things work, the already established Omnipotence and Omnipresence of God. That will be your experience when you stop fighting against it by trying to accomplish a preference you have different from the movement of Creation itself.

In the calm light of truth, let us recognize that you believe you HAVE crucified God's Son. You have not admitted to this "terrible" secret because you STILL wish to crucify him if you could FIND him.

You see, but the only thing is, that the stronger you apply effort to, and the fuller your intent to become a better and better ego, the more you obscure the Christ that you Are. And so you could say, that the closer you become in your belief to having what it takes to kill the Christ, the more you have obscured the Christ from yourself so that you can't find it. Because your very assertion of being a successful ego is exactly what obscures what you would try to find and kill if you could.

You have not admitted to this “terrible” secret because you STILL wish to crucify him if you could FIND him. Yet the wish has hidden him from you because it is very fearful, and you are AFRAID to find him.

You, the orphan, are afraid to find him. Why? Because if you find the Christ, you know that it will be the end of your orphanhood. It will be the end of your incompetence that God has given you the right and the skill to overcome and therefore to prove your worth.

You have handled this wish to kill YOURSELF by NOT KNOWING who you are, and identifying with something ELSE.

And the something else being the orphan mindset, the collection of beliefs and structures that seem to give you identity that makes sense to you, but understand, that the only reason it makes sense to you is because it is what energizes, motivates you to try harder to become more than you are in order to prove your worth, a worth that you as you as an orphan cannot have because orphans are a figment of the imagination and don't even exist.

Now, let's stand back for a moment. Because when we read this, it's a very awful description, or it can be interpreted to be a very awful description of you—a description that could cause you to throw the book thru a plate-glass window because it's so intolerable. And that's why I said at the beginning, it's well to remember that another way of expressing the word, “ego” is to express it as an “orphan-mindset.” It's very obvious to you that a mindset doesn't encompass all of you. You can actually have two or three mindsets.

A mindset is a collection of ideas, a collection of thoughts, a collection of logical lines of reasoning which seem substantial to you and worthy of your commitment. But you can have many collections of ideas and thoughts and commitments.

When you see that the ego, which has as its intent, the crucifixion of the Christ—of God's Son—when you see that that is just a mindset and not the totality of what you are, you can see that it's something you can abandon.

Now, it isn't that you have awful, destructive, malicious thoughts and motives that it would be hard for you not to feel guilty for, and that it would be hard for you not to feel that you must pay a penalty for, you can see that all of it is part of the structure of a mindset that isn't the totality of you which you can discard. And we've discussed the fact that the discarding of it is simply the way you dispel guilt.

You're not required to do penance for being something you could not be, really. You cannot be required to suffer for believing that you are something that it's impossible for you to be.

The answer is to abandon the belief. The answer is to abandon the belief—not feel bad about the internal structures of that mindset. It isn't that you thought, "I want to kill the Christ of me." It's that you became very careless and disregarded what you were and gave preference to this—Paul's squirming because of the word—because of this mind-fuck you have engaged in. The answer is simply to abandon it. You have fooled yourself into a frame of mind in which everything is so distorted that you're caught by it, you're attracted by it and you're compelled to attempt to cope with it and in coping with it, prove that you are worthwhile.

When the whole thing is pure fantasy—isn't going on, never happened, and it's nothing you can do anything about.

But as long as you are attracted to it, as long as you are addicted to doing something about it, even if it's doing penance so that you might get beyond it, you are doing nothing but continue to mind-fuck yourself. And I'm using the word because "fucking" hurts, and mind-fucking hurts you—it is uncomfortable, it is an unkind act. And to be caught in the belief that you must hang in that mindset and suffer or do penance before you can leave it, is unconscionable. It's untrue.

So as we read about this, recognize that as long as you are finding it difficult to identify yourself as the Christ—the pure innocent direct expression of God at this very moment—you are engaging in covering up the truth about yourself, and the covering up the truth about yourself is going to be uncomfortable because you are being unkind to yourself. But also understand that you are free to abandon it at any moment.

You are free to dispel the illusion and its apparent effects instantaneously by doing one simple thing:

"Father, show me what's true here. Father, be my Father. Father, I'm willing to accept that I am your Son. I'm willing to accept that I am your Daughter, and nothing else. I am willing to be your Son without adding my own embellishments of meaning to what the Real Meaning of my being your Son or Daughter is. I am willing to abandon the willfulness it takes to try to stand at odds with the fullness of your expression of Yourself as me by wanting to add a little bit more, or torque it a little bit, so that it has a bias to the experience."

Father, Father, Father is the biggest word in your vocabulary right now in terms of your release from the awfulness that we've been reading about which isn't even real but will seem absolutely real to you and which you will seem to suffer from, through sickness and death and injury and harm until you abandon it. Understand, that indeed, that you will and you are creating unpleasant experiences for yourself. But they aren't any more real than their author. They aren't any more real than the orphan that you believe you are.

To become free of orphanhood, say, "Father. . ." And let your attention and your intention reach out beyond the mindset you've been employing, as an invitation and a declaration, that you choose not to suffer the illusion of being alone anymore by claiming independence.

You and you and you and you and everyone of you watching . . . and you and you and you and you and you and you are, right now, nothing more and nothing less than God appearing—God being All there Is. And God is not being Himself, tiny, like you seem to be experiencing yourself at the moment. God is being Himself in His Wholeness and that Wholeness is your Birthright to be experiencing right now.

I'm going to put it this way: The experience is occurring right now. It's not waiting for you after you have refined yourself into it. It is occurring right now. But as I said, you've got your blinders on and you're working very hard not to see it all. And yet it's all there, your Whole Mind is all there. And all of Creation is experienceable in it right now!

Just say, "Father, thy Will, not mine be done. I don't want to have anything more to do with my will because my will is covering You up from me and covering up what my brothers and sisters really are from me, and its covering who I am from me and it's costing me too much!" Start there and persist.

We don't have to get thru this whole book in order for you to wake up. And you know what? As you can see, the answer is simple. It lies in breaking the independence. And all you have to do to break the independence is to say and mean, "Father. . ."

I love you all. And I don't care how stubborn you are. I remain with you. And I will remind you that even your stubbornness is part of the orphan mentality that is purely imaginary and therefore, does not absolutely govern you or your experience.

I look forward to being with you next week. Clarification: I look forward to being with you next week in this fashion, but I am very actively with you constantly. And I invite you to say, "Jesus . . . or Raj . . ." Just as I invite you to say, "Father . . ." either way, it breaks the isolation.

I am immeasurably actively present with you as are each of your guides who are fully Awake. The energetic presence of us with you would amaze you. It is so great. Invite us in.

And when you find you've started to think and excluded us, don't kick yourself in the ass, just say again, "Father . . . Raj . . ." Do it over and over. That's what will begin to undo the habit—the addiction to thinking. Thinking causes you not to experience the Presence of Mind. You've heard the phrase in a trying circumstance, "Well, he had the presence of mind to take hold of the situation and handle it well."

Don't miss the Presence of Mind that is yours.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 5th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Let's go into the Book . . . and I'm going to back up momentarily to the previous paragraph.

Much of the ego's strange behavior . . . ¹

. . . or much of the orphan's . . .

. . . strange behavior is directly attributable to its definition of guilt. To the ego, THE GUILTLESS ARE GUILTY.

We discussed this at some length last week and so I will not discuss it at this point. The explanation of this definition is that . . .

Those who do not attack are its "enemies", because, by not valuing its interpretation of salvation, they are in an excellent position TO LET IT GO.

To let what go? The ego. To let go of the state of orphanhood—the mindset of orphanhood. And I did talk about the fact that the one thing the ego cannot defend itself against is disregard.

So, those who disregard the ego are those who aren't hooked by the orphan mindset. Which means they've arrived at a point of not playing into guilt. That's real danger from the ego's standpoint. And so the guiltless are guilty from the ego's standpoint.

They . . .

. . . those who do not attack . . .

. . . have approached the darkest and deepest cornerstone in the ego's foundation, and while the ego can withstand your raising all else to question, it guards this one secret with its life, for its existence DOES depend on keeping this secret. So it is this secret that we must look upon calmly, for the ego cannot protect you against truth, and in ITS presence . . .

. . . the presence of truth . . .

. . . the ego is dispelled.

In the calm light of truth, let us recognize that you believe you HAVE crucified God's Son.

Again, you don't believe that you're the Christ right now. Oh, figuratively speaking, you can speak of yourselves as the Sons and Daughters of God, but you can't own it right now. And you won't own it right now. It's like admitting your gay or something—coming out of the closet! Horror of horrors!

. . . you believe you HAVE crucified God's Son. You have not admitted to this "terrible" secret because you STILL wish to crucify him if you could FIND him. Yet the wish has hidden him from you because it is very fearful, and you are AFRAID to find him. You have handled this wish to kill YOURSELF by NOT KNOWING who you are, . .

Now, that doesn't mean that you just decided to do something else. It's a conscious practice of not knowing. You very specifically do not know who you are, on purpose. And so, not knowing is something you're practicing.

You have handled this wish to kill YOURSELF by NOT KNOWING who you are, . .

. . . who you truly Are. And that's the way you hide what you truly Are from yourself so that you, whose almighty goal is to be the ultimate presence of power, cannot find who you really Are and kill it.

You have handled this wish . . .

. . . the orphan's wish to be totally something all by itself, which is the . . .

... wish to kill ...

... what you truly Are ...

... by NOT KNOWING who you are, and identifying with something ELSE.

... identifying with and as this definition you've made up of yourself as an independent autonomous entity—an orphan.

You have projected guilt blindly and indiscriminately, but you have NOT uncovered its source. For the ego DOES want to kill you, and if you identify WITH it you must believe ITS goal is YOURS.

If you are insisting, proudly insisting, upon being an orphan who is becoming better and better at being an orphan, you are identifying with that which is a denial of what you truly Are. And you are doing it with gusto. You are doing it with great conscious intent.

Now ...

We once said that the crucifixion is the symbol of the ego. When it was confronted with the REAL guiltlessness of God's Son it DID attempt to kill him, and the reason it gave was that guiltlessness is blasphemous to God.

Hm-m ... the authorities in Rome thought I was claiming to be a greater power than him. Those in the church accused me of being equal to God when I engaged in healing and forgave someone his sins. To be guiltless was blasphemous.

To the ego THE EGO is god, and guiltlessness MUST be interpreted as the final guilt which fully justifies murder.

Do you see that indulging in the idea of being an orphan is utterly destructive, and therefore, should be recognized by all of you to be useless, non-productive, and something to abandon? It isn't just that it's destructive—sort of like an ongoing nuisance that undermines peace and order—it has an ultimate intent. General dissent, or general dissention, general upheaval becomes tolerable to you, and you don't realize that in accepting that, and letting that become tolerable, you are actually accepting the whole ball of wax. And you become subject to the ultimate of that—the exaggerated form of it.

You practice the ultimate form in slow motion, day-by-day ... what? You get a day older. Day-by-day, you get one day closer to what? Your grave. Day-by-day, this mindset that isn't challenged, kills you slowly. And you accept it slowly. You don't like it, but as I said last week, you don't object to it by doing the one thing that would undo it.

You do not yet understand that all your fear of this course stems ultimately from this interpretation, . . .

. . . that guiltlessness is blasphemous to God . . .

. . . but if you will consider your reactions to it, . . .

. . . to the Course . . .

. . . you will become increasingly convinced that this is so.

This course has explicitly stated that its goal for you is happiness and peace. Yet you are AFRAID of it.

You're afraid of this Course. You're afraid of what it means. And one of the ways you defend yourself against what it means is to become very intellectual about it. Indeed, the Course refers to itself as a thought system and you use it as a thought system—a way to think . . . a way to think, when ultimately the Course is leading you away from thinking at all.

You have been told again and again that it . . .

. . . the Course . . .

. . . will make you free, yet you react as if it is trying to imprison you.

"Well gee, if I not only do what the Course says, but if I do what you, Raj, are actually saying, it means I'm gonna lose the thing that is most important to me: power, authority, strength. I'm going to lose my capacity to be in charge. You, Raj, tell me that I'm not a puppet without strings. You tell me that I am a puppet, either of one voice or the other—the Voice for truth, or the voice for fear.

"This Raj, is not good news. I don't like being told that I'm nothing but a puppet! Yes, I can tolerate the words, 'You and your Father are One.' I can tolerate them in theory. It sounds nice, it sounds desirable. But when you tell me that in order to experience my oneness with the Father, I have to abandon all false sense of independence, now you're talking hard stuff.

"You're saying that this means I have to change. That I have to change the whole way I've been being!"

Yes I am. Would you like not to die? Would you like to experience perfection? Would you like to experience invulnerability? Then you're going to have to change the way you're being. You're going to have to decide not to continue to play the role of orphan and the game of orphanhood.

"Well Raj, if I do that, how am I going to function in the world?"

I've said it before, you think that you're going to become an odd-ball, an outcast, and everyone will reject you.

These are the arguments you have against what the Course is teaching, against what the truth about you is moving you toward. And it is the way you kill the Christ. It is the way you keep what you divinely Are hidden from you. And it is the way you inexorably walk down the path to the hole in the ground that they will cover over once you're in it.

Is that not justification for changing the way you're being? Do you really want that?

"Oh-h-h, I can deal with it. It's easier to deal with that because everybody else is doing it. It's easier to do that. And besides, I have no proof that what you're saying is true, so nobody is going to think me a fool for not believing you—for not believing what the Course is saying. And I'd rather die, and in the meantime have everyone's acceptance of me."

Whew! [chuckling]

You have been told again and again that it . . .

. . . the Course . . .

. . . will make you free, yet you react as if it is trying to imprison you. Most of the time you dismiss it, but you do NOT dismiss the EGO'S thought system.

Oh-h-h, no.

You have SEEN its results . . .

. . . the results of what the Course is teaching . . .

. . . and you STILL lack faith in it.

"Oh, I had the most wonderful experience of illumination, in which the things the Course is teaching became utterly clear to me and for a week or so after that, it was like I was on Cloud Nine, and I moved through the world in a whole new way. Ah-h, it was such a wonderful experience.

“But today I have reality to deal with—a crabby neighbor, a difficult employer, challenges that I’ve got to defend myself against. But I’m sure glad I had that moment of illumination. It was a high-point in my life.”

Continuing . . .

You MUST, then, believe that by NOT learning the course you are PROTECTING yourself. And you do not realize that it is only your guiltlessness which CAN protect you.

The Atonement has always been interpreted as the release from guilt, and this is correct if it is understood. Yet even when I have interpreted it FOR you you have rejected it and have NOT accepted it for yourself. You have recognized the futility of the ego and its offerings, but though you do not want the ego you do not look upon the alternative with gladness.

You do not look upon the alternative with gladness. Why? Because of your lust for power. Because of your addiction to the false idea that you can achieve power and that that is your God-given reason for being, and if you abandon that, you will become nothing. And you don’t look upon becoming nothing with gladness.

But you see, there’s a secret that’s being covered up in this whole dastardly process. And the secret is, that as an orphan, as what you think you are at the moment, you are nothing. You are nothing, and you can become nothing, and you never will be anything, because you’re not an orphan!

[Addressing each one in the group] You’re not an orphan! You’re not an orphan! You, with your eyes closed on the end of the couch, are not an orphan! You are not an orphan! You are not an orphan! You are not an orphan. You, I’m not so sure about [group laughter]. You are not an orphan and you are not an orphan.

Right now, you are not orphans, but you are experiencing a delusion of being orphans—being orphans who can become legitimate presences. That’s the false promise. That’s the carrot that you’re going after, but you’ll never get! And when you get it, you will have proven that your presence is valid . . . but you will never get it.

You have recognized the futility of the ego and its offerings, but though you do not want the ego you do not look upon the alternative with gladness.

Until you're able to look at your fascination with being an ego or an orphan, calmly, in the light of truth, you will not be able to see that all of the promises of egohood or orphanhood are hollow—are empty. There is no fulfillment awaiting you there. And until you're willing to accept that, you will avoid the alternative. You will avoid embracing the alternative with gladness, because you will think there is still hope for you to be what you thought you were going to be able to become.

You are AFRAID of redemption, and you believe it will kill you.

That's because you're looking at it from the orphan's point of view. The minute you discover that you have a Father, and that you are not an orphan, the concept of being an orphan will suddenly become invalid—meaningless. And the orphan, along with all of its concepts and theories, will disappear. The orphan will become the nothing that it is at this very instant. Why? Because you will have regained the direct experience of what you Are.

And so you will not die. You will move from insanity to Sanity, you see, with absolute continuity—without interruption of the experience of conscious Being.

Make no mistake about the depth of your fear. For you believe that, in the presence of truth, you will turn on yourself and destroy yourself.

Why? Again, because from the orphan's mindset, the guiltless must be killed. The guiltless must be annihilated. And so it is inconceivable to you at the moment, to grasp that the revelation of your guiltlessness to you will not cause you to be that which must inevitably be annihilated.

But you see the safety factor here is, that for you to have that experience, that revelation, that shift of perception, the orphan mentality which thinks that the guiltless must be killed, will have vanished, and all that will be left is unalterable eternal life.

Little children, this is not so.

. . . that you will turn on yourself and destroy yourself . . .

Your "guilty secret" is nothing . . .

It's pure imagination, which you make credible simply by believing it and being convinced in your belief. But it still doesn't make it true.

Your “guilty secret” is nothing, and if you will but bring it to the light the Light will dispel it.

There’s that word again. Dispel. It’s like the word, “disillusioned.” “Oh, I became disillusioned.” And you use the word to describe an experience you’re not too happy about. “I thought he was a wonderful guy and I found out different. I became disillusioned.”

Disillusionment is seen as a negative experience, when it means to no longer suffer from delusion. Dispel, likewise, means that the spell that you were under has vanished because you withdrew your belief in it. You dispel guilt. You don’t “deal” with it. You come out from under the spell of the orphan mentality that determines guilt to be your natural state and that guiltlessness is not. You come out from under that spell.

How many of you like yourselves? Oh, you know, year in and out, month in and month out. I’m not talking about at this moment. You might say, “Oh, I like myself pretty well,” but month in and month out do you like yourself very well? Well, let me ask you this: If you like yourself, why do you keep thinking that you’ve got to do better and better?

Isn’t that a wonderful slogan? Why? Why be the best that you can be? So that you won’t be the worst [group laughter], or less than what you’re capable of being. Why? Because those who are less than what they can be, are not respectable, are not honored. There’s no payoff in being less than the best.

But I’ll tell you something: Trying to be the best that you can be is going for the carrot, because it is a statement of constant self-dissatisfaction. You practice constant self-dissatisfaction, and trying to be the best that you can be is like trying to deal with guilt by doing penances or devotions. “Oh, I’m going to be the best that I can be by doing the best damn devotions with great piety and religious fervor and sincere desire!”

So you’re gonna end up being one of the best damned orphans there ever was, when the only answer to the whole mess is to discover that you never were an orphan in the first place. And that to try to become better and better keeps you firmly entrenched in the belief that you are, when the abandonment of the belief that you are an orphan leaves your mind clear for the influx of the experience of the Christ that you are that is already ultimate because God is what constitutes that Presence, called you.

Now, again, you rely on not being the best that you can be. It keeps you safe, because [chuckling] who can expect much from someone who is less than the best that they can be? It's not reasonable is it, to expect a lot from one who's less than he can be? And so, you're safe. You're safe from what? You're safe from having to be clear. You're safe from being dependably on the mark—meaning one who others can depend upon. After all, if you can be dependably right . . . what if you're wrong? Everybody will know it, because they're all depending on you to be right. You see. And so you're confused. And you fight both sides of the war . . . against yourself.

You are afraid of redemption. To be redeemed is to come back into your right Mind. To be redeemed is to have the perspective of God because you're claiming no right to any other perspective. And you think that that brings with it responsibility, obligation, when being clear is something there's simply no alternative to. To always know the truth is something that there's simply no alternative to.

And so you avoid redemption so that you can avoid responsibility for being utterly right all the time, utterly clear all the time, knowing the truth all the time.

Again . . .

Little children, . .

. . . that you will turn on yourself and destroy yourself . . .

. . . is not so. Your "guilty secret" is nothing, and if you will but bring it to the light the Light will dispel it. And then no dark cloud will remain between you and the remembrance of your Father, for you will remember His guiltless Son, . .

. . . and here it's referring to me . . .

. . . who did not die because he is immortal. And you will see that you were redeemed WITH him, and have never been separated FROM him.

In other words, when the truth about me became clear, the truth about you became clear. It wasn't that I, by being redeemed, redeemed you poor souls and some transmogrification occurred, in which you became something more than you had ever been before. Bullshit! When the truth about one is demonstrated, the truth about all is demonstrated. And the only thing that happened was, that ignorance was left behind.

The truth was revealed about all of us.

. . . you will see that you were redeemed WITH him, . .

... with me ...

... and have never been separated FROM him.

... from me. Meaning, even before this redemption occurred. You were never separate from me before, and you haven't been separate from me, after, because it's always been what God is Being.

In this understanding lies your remembering, for it is the recognition of love WITHOUT fear.

Why would it say that? It would say that because right now you don't experience the recognition of love without fear. Always, love is experienced with fear. Why? Because you think love makes you weak. You know the saying, "Nobody likes a good guy." Nobody likes someone who's the essence of love either.

Those who are the presence of love are not really very intelligent because they do not know how to cope with the vicissitudes of life. They don't have what it takes. They don't have the power and the authority it takes to stand up against the awfulness of things. They're sweet, mealy-mouthed creatures. No guts, no substance to them because they don't know how to cope. You can't cope with love.

In one way or another, all of you say this in your actions. "You've gotta take hold of the situation! You can't namby-pamby around with love. You've gotta speak up for yourself. And if you have to, you gotta be down and dirty about it."

So, the thought of being imbued with what love really is, is always accompanied with fear because you think that it is going to mean powerlessness—referring to power of the sort that is important to the orphan. Personal power. Authoritative presence. Force. The ability to exert force.

Not to have that is fearful. But again, whatever reinforces the value of orphanhood keeps you unconscious of what you Are—keeps you going for a carrot you will never achieve. And you know what? You're in hell now or you're in limbo now, where there's never any forward movement. You're stuck in a repetitive experience of ignorance. And it's not your Birthright! And all you have to do to get out of it, is to break the isolation.

"Oh, I know. But if . . ."—the big word we talked about last week, Father. "Do I really want to say, 'Father'? Who knows what's going to come if I genuinely say, 'Father'?" See? Fear of redemption.

I have told you that what will come when you say, "Father. . ." with a recognition that you are speaking to your Father, will remind you that you are someone's Son or Daughter from Whom you get your identity.

When you give your allegiance to a concept of orphanhood, you lose the experience of your identity. And the ongoing mediocrity of your lives, whether you're wealthy or not, is all the evidence you really need to prove to yourself that you're not going anywhere. And this is not a successful avenue to traverse. And that it might be a really tremendous relief for you to say and mean, "Father, I want you back in my life, together with my awareness that I am Your Son—that I am not an orphan—and that because I am your Son, I must be something far more wonderful than I thought I could ever be as an orphan. I must be the Christ, and I'm willing to risk whatever might happen, because I'll tell you, in my no-risk life of mediocrity, I am not happy, and I'm willing to opt for a change."

There will be great joy in Heaven on your homecoming, and the joy will be YOURS. For the redeemed son of man . . .

. . . the orphan . . .

. . . IS the guiltless Son of God, and to recognize him IS your redemption.

Now, you may have heard what I've said, or you may go back and read this "in a more grounded way," you would say, a more sober way, and you might hear it saying awful things about you, and you might have felt that I have been saying awful things about you—that you want to kill the Son of God, that the way you're using your mind is stupid.

Well, watch out. Because, the tendency tonight may have been, and the tendency this coming week, if you read this over, may be for you to throw out your chest and stand tall, and bring all the vigor of your orphanhood into play and defend yourself. Even if you're saying, "God, what chance did I have to do anything else than what I've been doing? I was given this information from the beginning, so don't stand there and tell me that I'm full of shit!"

Oh, there's the proud orphan, reaffirming orphanhood, standing up for itself, saying, "Don't look so poorly on me. If I could've done better, I would've done better. So don't put me down. Give me enough respect to think that if I could've done better, I would've, because I want to. You think I like this experience I'm in?"

[Big laugh] Oh-h, yes, you have liked it. And the very fact that what we've talked about tonight might bring this reaction up is evidence that you like it, and you feel at home with it, and comfortable with it. And you feel that it is of value because you will be doing this instead of saying, "Ah-h, what a relief this news is. Thank you. Thank you for telling me I don't have to continue on in this awful mediocrity, stuck, never moving forward, even though I continuously try.

"I am grateful to know there is a way out. I am willing to go against my inclination to forever defend myself and reassert myself from my present sense of what I am. And I am willing to allow myself into this place that feels like I will be totally powerless. And I'm willing to change and to be in a new way."

You see? This book . . . it's not about a concept called an ego. It isn't about ideas of truth and ideas of error. It isn't full of wonderful intellectual things to contemplate. This book's about You! You with a capital "Y." The You that You divinely are. The You that it's your Birthright to be experiencing.

You know what? I asked if you liked yourself. You constantly put yourselves down, as I said. One example is, that you're constantly hoping to be better, constantly trying to become better. You're putting yourself down. And you engage during the day in constantly putting each other down. And that's the way you keep yourself locked into the valuable, meaningful experience of guilt. And it's the way you avoid the experience of guiltlessness.

Stop it!

Be willing to be in your world in a new way. Not so that you can impress anybody. And do it regardless of how others might react. Do it because you no longer want to suffer from the ignorance that is inseparable from this ridiculous idea that you are an orphan, that you are an ego. Do it because you want to be Sane.

And if you are in an insane asylum, your becoming sane shouldn't have anything to do with whether or not the other inmates are happy about it, when their bound not to be happy about it—when, while they are insane, they can't possibly grasp what it means.

There will be great joy in heaven on your homecoming, and the joy . . .

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 12th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, it's another good news/bad news night. And before we get into the book, there's something I want to address. During this past week someone made a comment to the effect that, "I cannot dare to entertain any negative thoughts." And the gist of the conversation was that it was only valuable to say the truth—"You're a child of God. You're the Daughter of God. You're the Son of God."

Well, if that's the case, then last week was my last ACIM Study Group, because we cannot go any further if I can only say wonderful sweet platitudes about the truth about you.

To engage in only positive thoughts is one of the most wonderful devices the ego could have come up with to keep you from waking up, because I'm going to ask you, "Who is it, or what is it, that would be making a point of only expressing positive thoughts and never expressing negative thoughts?"

Well, someone who's in charge of himself. Someone who can decide what's appropriate and what isn't, and what will get him into the Kingdom of Heaven or what won't. And obviously, that's not someone who's listening within. It's the ego. It's the orphan being the best damned orphan he can be—thinking only positive thoughts, never entertaining a negative thought, and certainly never expressing a negative thought.

But how do you uncover and correct errors that are being practiced if you don't call them for what they are? I mean, what would you think of someone who's house you had come over to, and you were visiting, and an hour before you got there it was a mess, and all of the dirt and dust was swept under the carpet and the mess was taken and thrown in a back room where you would never go, and in wonderful, peaceful equanimity, they invited you in and you spent the time with them and had this impression that they were very orderly and that they were clean, and that they lived in a wonderful environment. If you knew that there was dirt there that was hidden out of sight, but still there, your reaction would be that they were not a very honest person. All they were doing was providing an impression of cleanliness and order and a valuing of beauty in their environment.

It's very easy to cover up dishonesty. It's very easy to cover up error by never expressing a negative thought. It's dangerous to your awakening because it will block it.

Now, if you're being dishonest, it needs to be stated. It needs to be said. It needs to be told. Sometimes you are consciously dishonest. But most of the time you are unconsciously dishonest. And in a way, it's the unconscious dishonesty which is your worst enemy, because if you're unconscious of it, you're not going to look for it, you're not going to know that you need to dig for it, you're not going to know that effort is going to have to be brought to bear in order to uncover it, see it for what it is, and release it because, having seen it for what it is, you recognize its valuelessness, and you automatically abandon whatever is not of value to you. It's a spontaneous thing.

So, I will proceed to say things tonight, as I have on other evenings, that could well be interpreted to be negative, because if you're doing things that don't work, I need to say, "You're doing things that don't work and here's what they are, and stop it if you want to wake up. It's getting in your way." Well, that's not going to be very pleasing to your ego, but I don't give a shit!

There's another aspect here that is extremely important. And that is, that if you think that thinking only positive thoughts and never entertaining a negative thought is a valid principle, then, when you go within to listen to the Holy Spirit, or when you turn to your Guide, you are going to provide this bias to your listening. And so when it's time for your Guide to say, "you're being dishonest," or "you're doing what doesn't work," or "to value your ignorance is stupidity, stop it!" you're not going to let it in. You are going to block the very guidance you need in order to wake up because of this preexisting mindset that you are practicing. Don't do it. It's not called unconditional listening. It's not called genuine listening.

Now, we're going to talk a little bit about ways in which you're dishonest. You go through your day, and as an orphan, you impersonate the Christ. You do impressions all day long. You do impressions of yourself. And the fact that you're doing impressions rather than being yourself truly, is dishonest. It's something that you need to see as dishonest so that you can catch yourself when you're doing it and stop it.

You have many different impressions of yourself that you do, like an impersonator. When you're at work, the impression you give, the "you" that you impersonate, is the employee—the good employee or the bad employee who's trying better and better—who's constantly making sure that he or she gives the messages that will set well with his or her employer and make . . . what? The best impression.

And then, on break, when you go to the coffee room and you sit down with your fellow employees, boy, you bitch and moan about the boss, and now . . . what? You're doing a different impression of you.

Then, you come home at the end of the day, and when you're with your husband or wife, you perhaps do the impression of overworked, overtired husband or wife that needs help, that needs attention, that needs support. And that's the impression of you that you do.

Now here's the clincher [chuckling]. The phone rings while you're doing this impression, and the phone's in the other room. And you go and you answer the phone, and it's your best girlfriend or it's your best male friend, and all of a sudden, the poor overworked tired person disappears. "Hey, how are ya? How are things goin? ya know "How was your day? Are we still getting together next week? And your voice has a lilt to it. It's like . . . now where did this other person go to?

And then, the next day on your lunch break, you get together with one of your high school girlfriends or buddies, who you grew up with, who you know really well, and who you can really be yourself with, where you can share your darkest secrets, your most serious thoughts, your concerns or your irrelevant giddy nonsensical feelings and thoughts and ideas, and now you're doing a different impression of yourself . . . even when you think that you're with somebody you can be utterly real with. I mean, really utterly real with.

My point is, that you're doing impersonations of a different "you" all day long—multiple characters because that's what serves the purpose. Always the orphan, the ego, is doing what serves its best interests.

Now, I want you think of something else [chuckling]: You've been doing this impersonation of a downtrodden, dedicated worker, we'll say, who's really trying hard. But the odds are against you. Everything is going wrong. And you're impersonating this particular "you." And you're at work and you need to go upstairs to get something from that floor and you leave and go into the stairwell, and all the way up, [said laboriously] you're taking one step after another. You are still doing the impersonation. You're still believing the impersonation. You walk as though you have no energy because everything is going wrong. And there's no-one to see you.

But I'll tell you something. You do the act—whether you know it or not, you do—you participate in the impersonation because if someone comes around the corner, or comes down from the upstairs unexpectedly, you're in character. Now, you may think that I'm putting you on. But if you really pay attention to yourself, you'll see that's exactly what you're doing.

Now, this gets by you without you're recognizing it because you believe, as the orphan you think you are, that this is the way you cope with life. You don't know that there is a You who is the Christ, who is the direct expression of God, who is what God is Being right there where you are, which is utterly and absolutely stable, in whom there is an absolute evenness of temperament and honesty, one who doesn't have to utilize different impressions for different occasions, one who, because there is this permanent evenness to, is always at peace and who never feels an experience of vulnerability against which he or she must defend himself or herself by means of impressions.

If you don't know that, then it is understandable that you would unconsciously employ techniques of dishonesty because, under the circumstances, this is the best way to cope with life.

Now, if you are never able to express or think a negative thought, you will not be able to look at what I just said, because the fact is that if you look at what I've just said, and if you accept it as the truth, then you are going to have to acknowledge that you're being dishonest, even though you don't want to be, and that you have valued it. And you have always employed it. And because you have yet to make the persistent consistent effort to connect with the Holy Spirit or with your Guide, everything you're doing is being done in the context of dishonesty, and therefore very little of what you have been being, is real. Here's the bad news: That is the good news!

The bad news that is the good news is, that you can't count on anything you have ever believed. You cannot count on or value the techniques you have learned in order to cope with life. There is very little of value that you can draw upon meaningfully. That's bad news. But it's good news if you will believe it, because if you will believe it, you will be willing to try something else. And the willingness to try something else is where you break loose of the control ignorance has had over you—the control that your dream has had over you.

The good news is that the death of your concept of yourself is the birth of what you really are in your mind. And so you must be willing to look at so-called negative thoughts. You must be willing to look at hard facts and not cringe in the face of them. Stand there and acknowledge them and accept them, because the moment you stop justifying yourself, and justifying all of the impersonations or impressions you have engaged in, and the moment you stop justifying the reason why you've had to do that, because none of it is valuable, at that moment you will have come to a place of honesty within yourself.

And at that point you will be very clear that you must reach outside of your best concepts and your best reasonings and your best theories, and the best damn mutual agreements that all of your orphans have pulled together and created for yourself as a menu for successful life.

The bad news is that you have been behaving as though you're out of your mind—your right Mind. You have been behaving as though you are insane. Is that a negative thought? It all depends on whether or not that threatens your security or your sense of well-being.

It doesn't have to threaten you at all if you truly believe that there is a God and if you're willing to believe what the Course says, and what I've been saying. That in spite of the concept, the image you have made of yourself, you are something entirely different. You are right now, what God is Presenting Himself as, right there where you are.

Now, I want to cover a point that there was some unclarity about from last week. It's two paragraphs above where we're beginning tonight. The last three sentences:

You are AFRAID of redemption, and you believe it will kill you. Make no mistake about the depth of your fear. For you believe that, in the presence of truth, you will turn on yourself and destroy yourself.¹

I pointed out that there's a built-in safeguard as you wake up, as you have a shift of perception. And the best way I can express it is, that it's like the example of a werewolf. One who is a werewolf is normally an everyday human being like all of you, but when the full moon comes out, an episode begins, and that normal one turns into a wolf-like hairy creature who spends the night as a predator, killing.

Now, the werewolf is like the orphan. And the orphan believes that in the presence of truth, he will turn on himself and destroy himself . . . and I'm going to add, if he could find himself. But the normal human being that he is, at times other than the full moon, is nowhere to be found. He can't find the real "him" to kill. But if he could find him, he would. But at the end of the night when the moon sets, and he gets closer and closer to being the real him again, the werewolf is disappearing, so that at the point that the real one that he is, is fully present, there is nothing left of the werewolf that would attack him.

It's that simple. You are afraid that the closer you get to the truth of you, the closer you get, through transformation of your mind, to the experience of the Christ that you are, that you will turn on It and rend It, except that as that happens, the orphan who values not knowing who his Father is, and not knowing Who he really Is, is disappearing. So that at the point that the Christ of you stands forth, perfectly clear, there is no orphan any more present to accomplish anything or do anything.

I hope that clarifies it for you.

Let's go into the Book.

THE FEAR OF REDEMPTION

You may wonder why it is so crucial that you look upon your hatred and realize its full extent.

Now, you couldn't possibly do this if you can't dare to think a single negative thought.

You may wonder why it is so crucial that you look upon your hatred and realize its full extent. You may also think that it would be easy enough for the Holy Spirit to show it to you and dispel it WITHOUT the need for you to raise it to awareness yourself.

Believe me, if you haven't already asked the Holy Spirit to take it away from you without your having to be aware of it, you will arrive at a point where you ask that. But it can't be done.

You may also think that it would be easy enough for the Holy Spirit to show it to you and dispel it . . .

. . . there's that word again, "dispel" . . .

. . . dispel it WITHOUT the need for you to raise it to awareness yourself.

You gotta go back and lift the carpet up and get your broom and get that dirt out yourself. The dirt you put there, you gotta take out.

Yet there is one more complication which you have interposed between yourself and the Atonement which you do not yet realize.

And you will never realize it if you're not willing to look at, or consider negative thoughts.

We have said that no-one will countenance fear if he RECOGNIZES it. Yet in your disordered state, you are NOT afraid of fear. You do not like it, but it is not your desire to attack which REALLY frightens you. You are not seriously disturbed by your hostility. You keep it hidden because you are MORE afraid of what it covers.

But before we go onto the more that it covers, let's go back here:

You are not seriously disturbed by your hostility.

Man, you've got to be willing to take a look at the degree to which you do express hostility in one form or another every day. And get satisfaction from it!

I don't care how nice a person you think you are. And I don't care how much you hold that in the forefront of your awareness. The fact is, that the hand behind your back that's out of sight, engages in unkindness multiple times during the day. And the saintly one you think you are, doesn't even notice. Dishonesty again.

And you must begin to be honest with yourself. You are all very ready to be hostile—even through jokes, through humor. That's a really good way to disguise hostility . . . is to make people laugh. Hm-m, but it happens every day. I won't say especially on the "Tonight Show." [chuckle] But, it happens there every night.

You are very ready to be irritated by this, that or the other thing. You have a pre disposition to be irritated, ever-present. You may not let it out very often, but it's there. Why is it there? Because you don't believe you are the Christ. You do not believe that you are the very Presence of God, Himself. You think you are an orphan coping, who must use every means at its disposal to defend itself against the polarities of life that are constantly eating away at you.

And you think that your expression of hostility is an expression of strength. And that's why you value it. And that's why you don't think too badly of it.

You do not like it, . .

. . . fear . . .

. . . but it is not your desire to attack . . .

. . . or to be hostile . . .

. . . which REALLY frightens you. You are not seriously disturbed by your hostility. You keep it hidden because you are MORE afraid of what it covers.

You could look even upon the ego's darkest cornerstone without fear if you did not believe that, WITHOUT the ego, you would find within yourself something you fear even more.

See, you would be willing to look at the ego and find out that it doesn't exist, that it isn't real, that it's a fabrication of the imagination. You would be willing even to look at that, if you didn't know that in doing that . . .

. . . you would find within yourself something you fear even more.

You are NOT afraid of crucifixion.

Which is what we were talking about last week.

Your real terror is of REDEMPTION.

Sounds crazy doesn't it.

Under the ego's dark foundation . . .

. . . in other words, behind the ego, what's being covered up . . .

Under the ego's dark foundation is the memory of God, and it is of THIS that you are really afraid. For this memory would INSTANTLY restore you to your proper place, . .

You would instantly remember that you are your Father's Son or Daughter the moment you acknowledge the existence of a Father. The moment you acknowledge the existence of a Source, that means you are not the source of yourself. It brings you back into the clarity of a relationship with your Source that makes you something far different from the orphan you have believed you are.

. . . this memory would INSTANTLY restore you to your proper place, . . .

. . . your right Mind, your clarity . . .

. . . and it is this place you have sought to LEAVE.

How? By saying, "Father, I'd rather see it my way. Father, I'd rather do it myself. Father, I would rather give the definitions to everything myself. I'm going to do that for awhile. See you later, Father."

Your fear of attack . . .

. . . and I want you not to read this as though something else is attacking you. Your fear of engaging in attack is what I want you to consider . . .

Your fear of attack is nothing compared to your fear of love.

Your fear of engaging in attack is nothing compared to your fear of engaging with love.

You would be willing to look even upon your savage wish to kill God's Son . . .

. . . meaning, keeping your true status out of sight . . .

. . . if you did not believe that it SAVES you from love. For this wish CAUSED the separation. You have protected it because you do not WANT the separation healed, and you realize that, by REMOVING the dark cloud that obscures it, your love for your Father would impel you to answer his call and leap into Heaven.

You would catapult yourself back into your right Mind if you would let the memory register with you.

Now I'm going to back up because here's one of the negative thoughts:

. . . you do not WANT the separation healed, . . .

"What do you mean I don't want the separation healed? I'm studying the Course because I want to wake up. I've been a student of truth for 20 years because I want to wake up. What do you mean . . . ?"

. . . You do not want the separation to be healed, . . .

What I mean is, that you don't want to lose the right to be the determiner of your life, because you think that's your purpose. You think that's your reason for being. And if you're going to lose that, you don't want the separation to be healed. It's that simple, and it's that black and white. It's that stark. Because it's that stark, it's that simple—nothing complicated or complex about it at all.

Continuing . . .

You believe that attack is salvation to prevent you from THIS.

Attack is an exercise of power, isn't it? It's you standing up for your rights over and against somebody who's imposing theirs upon you. It's your salvation. It's your power. It's your opportunity to exercise authority.

You believe that attack is salvation to prevent you from THIS.

. . . [laughing] from being suddenly catapulted into Heaven.

For still deeper than the ego's foundation, and much stronger than it will ever be, is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . your intense and burning love of God, and His for you. This is what you REALLY want to hide.

And you know what? This intense and burning love of God and His for you, is the evenness of your being, the invulnerability of your being, that I spoke of earlier, that you may not have been aware was there. And your ignorance of it was what allowed you to believe that the using of multiple impressions and being dishonest in various forms throughout your day was justified because that's what it took to cope with life as you've defined it, or as other orphans have defined it for you. You see?

That evenness in you is your intense and burning love of God and His for you, that is there in you right now. And this is what you really want to hide.

This is the bad news that is the good news. You're wanting to hide your salvation. Oh dear, fifty lashes for you. You want to hide your salvation. That means that your salvation is at hand. That means that your salvation is presently the truth about you—actively the truth about you. And the experience of it is available to you the moment you stop denying it, the moment you stop objecting to the realization of it because you want to hold onto to your authority and don't want to break the separation.

In . . .

... and here's the word, "honesty" ...

In honesty, is it not harder for you to say "I love" than "I hate"?
You associate love with weakness . . .

... as we discussed last week ...

You associate love with weakness and hatred with strength, and your own REAL power . . .

... love ...

. . . seems to you as your real WEAKNESS.

Remember I said nobody likes a good guy? And loving people are wimps who do not have what it takes to stand up to the harshness of life and take command in the face of threat and harm?

You associate love with weakness and hatred with strength, and your own REAL power seems to you as your real WEAKNESS.
For you could not control your joyous response to the call of love
. . .

... this sudden catapulting of you back into your right Mind, for you could not control the happening of it—

. . . your joyous response to the call of love if you heard it, and the whole world you think you control WOULD vanish.

Would vanish. It's not at all desirable or delectable to the orphan to have to abandon control over its world. Because whatever degree of success it has had, is what has given it apparent valid identity. And it doesn't want to lose the identity it has worked so hard to establish.

The Holy spirit, then, . .

... that which is nothing more than your Right Mind ...

. . . seems to be attacking your fortress, for you would shut out
God, and He does not will to BE excluded.

So, have fun trying to exclude Him. If He doesn't will to be excluded, you're pissing in the wind.

You have built your whole insane belief system because you think you would be helpless in God's Presence, and you would SAVE yourself from His Love because you think It would crush you into nothingness.

Well, if you don't believe me, believe Paul. When it comes to the point where you're asked to let the Holy Spirit respond to everything, or to let me respond to everything, or to let your Guide, who is fully Christed, respond to everything, the question will arise in your mind, "Well, what about me? I mean, you're just gonna flush me down the toilet??"

And you're not going to be happy at the prospect of not being able to introduce any of your uniqueness into the mix. And you will think that if you do, it will crush you into nothingness.

When I say to Paul, "Let me respond to everything." The picture that comes to his mind is a poster he once saw of a tail of a whale above the water as the whale dove, an exquisite picture. And underneath the picture, the caption was: "Extinction is Forever." Paul feels as though, if he lets me respond to everything, he will become extinct.

You, when you arrive at a point of willingness to let your Guide respond some of the time, like he [Paul] let's me respond some of the time . . . when you arrive at that point, your Guide is going to push for less and less of you, the orphan.

You're not going to like it. And you're going to feel as though it will cause the you that you think you are, the only "you" you've ever known, to become extinct. It's that black and white. Paul ignores the fact that even right now, when I'm speaking, and he's letting me respond, he is fully present. He hasn't gone anywhere. But his reason for being is not to make an impression. He's not impersonating anything. He's not expressing a right to be a little bit of himself . . . at least the self he thought he was.

His experience of being, right now, is very different from his experience of being when he's on his own—able to be his cute little self, an occasional smart-ass (with good connotations), a pleasant fellow to be around, and one with good morals, and so on. This is one of the impressions he does.

But right now he's not doing an impression at all. And so he doesn't recognize himself in it--none of the triggers that say, "Yeah man, you're doin' it, you're doin' it, you're doin' it! None of the triggers are happening and yet he's being it. And the reason for yielding to the Holy Spirit, the reason for yielding to the Christ, is so that you have the opportunity to experience what it feels like to be yourself, truly. And initially, it doesn't feel familiar. You see?

So, that's what it means.

You have built your whole insane belief system because you think you would be helpless in God's Presence, and you would SAVE yourself from His Love because you think It would crush you into nothingness. You are afraid It would sweep you away from yourself, and make you little.

And Paul—the orphan Paul—is convinced that it would not only make him little, it would make him extinct forever. I mean, if the extinction was only going to be temporary, that would be tolerable. Okay, maybe he'd be willing to try it. But if the extinction is forever—meaning that never again would he be inclined to employ the orphan mindset, never ever again—now that is like, permanent. [laughter] Unalterable. Permanent change.

That threshold, and the willingness it takes to move over that threshold is something each one of you has standing, or waiting for you, right in front of you. So you see, why waste another moment doing impressions of you [laughter] tonight or tomorrow, or the next day?

You are afraid It . . .

. . . His Love . . .

. . . would sweep you away from yourself, and make you little. For you believe that magnitude lies in defiance, and that attack is grandeur.

Now wait . . . I want you not to think of this in grandiose terms. Just listen to the news every night, and you'll see that the popular belief is that magnitude lies in defiance and that attack is grandeur.

The orphan is a war monger. Piece of bad news: You, if you are choosing not to be joined, are war mongers. In one way or another, you delight in conflict and it gives you a feeling of invigoration. At the least it doesn't bother you enough to stop.

You think you have made a world . . .

. . . "made up" by means of your definitions and mutual agreements with other orphans' definitions.

You think you have made a world which God would destroy; and by loving Him, which you DO, you would throw this world away, which you WOULD.

It isn't so much that God would take it away from you, [laughing] but if you let yourself be moved by the intense and burning Love of God that's in you, you would throw this world that you've made up away.

Therefore, you have used the world to COVER your love, and the deeper you go into the blackness of the ego's foundation, the closer you come to the Love that is hidden there. AND IT IS THIS THAT FRIGHTENS YOU.

How much more negative a thought could be expressed?

. . . the deeper you go into the blackness of the ego's foundation, the closer you come to the Love that is hidden there. AND IT IS THIS THAT FRIGHTENS YOU.

Again, you must not be afraid to look at negative thoughts.

. . . the deeper you go into the blackness . . .

. . . the closer you come to the Love that is hidden there.

Don't avoid the dirt under the carpet.

You can accept insanity because you made it, but you cannot accept love because you did NOT.

Pretty black and white.

You would rather be slaves of the crucifixion than Sons of God in redemption. For your INDIVIDUAL death . . .

. . . your INDIVIDUAL death is more valued than your living oneness, and what is GIVEN you is not so dear as what YOU made.

Not a nice thought, but one you must look at.

You are more afraid of God than of the ego, and love cannot enter where it is not welcome. But hatred can, for it enters of ITS will and cares not for yours.

Now . . .

The reason you must look upon your delusions and not keep them hidden is that they do NOT rest on their own foundation. In concealment . . .

. . . you know, in the hazy, misty darkness, . . .

. . . they appear to do so, and thus, they seem to be self-sustained. This is the fundamental illusion on which they rest. For BENEATH them, and concealed as long as THEY are hidden, is the loving mind that THOUGHT it made them in anger.

Listen again . . .

For BENEATH them, and concealed as long as THEY are hidden, is . . .

. . . the Christ that you Are, that you never stopped being. . .

. . . is the loving mind that THOUGHT . . .

. . . imagined . . .

. . . it made them in anger. And the pain in this mind is so apparent, when it is uncovered, that its need of healing cannot BE denied.

Here's another not-so-nice thought:

Not all the tricks and games you offer it . . .

. . . [said facetiously] You slippery dishonest ones that you are . . .

Not all the tricks and games you offer it can heal it, for here is the REAL crucifixion of God's Son.

And yet he is NOT crucified. Here is both his pain AND his healing, . .

Here is the bad news that is the good news.

Here is both his pain AND his healing, for the Holy Spirit's vision is merciful and His remedy is quick. Do not HIDE suffering from His sight, but bring it gladly to Him.

Well, what kind of suffering? Well, let's just say for starters, the suffering you might find yourself feeling when you're willing to consider honestly that you are always being dishonest, and that you don't know what anything really means. And that you really don't have a sound basis for doing anything constructive toward your awakening all by yourself.

Do not HIDE suffering from His site, but bring it gladly to Him.
Lay before His eternal sanity . . .

And mind you, we're talking about the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your Right Mind. So when you are bringing these things to the Holy Spirit, you are bringing the attention of your distorted sense of self to that which is nothing more than your Right Mind, where adjustment can occur, where redemption can occur.

Do not HIDE suffering from His sight, but bring it gladly to Him.
Lay before His eternal sanity . . .

. . . which is your eternal sanity . . .

. . . ALL your hurt, and LET Him heal you.

Invite it in. Don't stand there arrogantly complaining about the injustice of what's happening.

Do not leave any spot of pain hidden from His light, and search your minds carefully for any . . .

. . . what?

. . . thoughts . . .

Negative thoughts. You see? If you don't dare to think a single negative thought, you will not be able to do this. And you will remain in a comfortable dream state of holiness and impractical meaningless cloud-nine religiosity.

Do not leave any spot of pain hidden from His light, and search your minds carefully for any thoughts which you may fear to uncover. For He will heal every little thought which you have kept to hurt you, and cleanse it of its littleness, restoring it to the magnitude of God.

This is the good news.

Beneath all your grandiosity, which you hold so dear, is your real call for help. For you call for love to your Father as your Father calls you to Himself. In that place which you have hidden . . .

. . . in the orphanage . . .

. . . you will only to unite with the Father, in loving remembrance of Him.

See? As long as being an orphan is so god-damned important to you, you are not going to acknowledge there is a God that is your Father. There will be no remembrance of Him and His Meaning to you as long as you are valuing the orphanage experience.

In that place which you have hidden you will only to unite with the Father, in loving remembrance of Him. You will find this place of truth as you see it in your brothers, for though they may deceive themselves, like you they long for the grandeur that is in them. And perceiving it you will welcome it, and it will be YOURS. For grandeur is the RIGHT of God's Son, and NO illusions can satisfy him or save him from what he IS. Only his love is real, . .

. . . that's "his" with a small "h" meaning yours.

Only his love is real, and he will be content ONLY with his reality.

Save him from his illusions that you may accept the magnitude of your Father in peace and joy.

Now, obviously this is good news. But its talking about actually doing it. And that's the bad news.

Save him from his illusions that you may accept the magnitude of your Father in peace and joy. But exempt no-one from your love, . .

See? Don't save a little bit of right to be hateful just here or there.

. . . exempt no-one from your love, or you will be hiding a dark place in your mind where the Holy Spirit is not welcome.

Meaning, where your right Mind is not welcome. And if it's not welcome, you cannot experience your Sanity—your whole mindedness.

And you will exempt YOURSELF from His healing power, for by not offering total love you will not be healed completely. Healing must be as complete as fear, for love cannot enter where there is one spot of fear to mar its welcome.

What's the good news? The good news is that you aren't what you thought you were. The good news is that you aren't what you think you are. And separate and apart from whatever you think you are, you exist in an eternally stable, even environment or state of being, and it's your Birthright to be experiencing everything from there. And it is present right now, in you, As you.

Stop wanting to be small. Stop wanting to be small-minded—picky, irritable, ready to jump at a moment's notice to disqualify another, or stand arrogantly above another and minimize his value—because you're being as bad as him, because you're being as much of an orphan as him, and you're believing your perception of yourself as much as he is. And that won't get you out of it and it won't get him out of it.

And someone has to change. And you know what? It's you. [addressing everyone] psssst . . . and you . . . and every single one of you . . . and Paul.

I'm going to say this for Paul and everyone: Try extinction!

That's the good news.

I love you and I don't want any of you to suffer a moment longer, ignorant of the experience of what you truly Are, an experience that is available to you at this moment. And there's nothing you can do to prepare for it.

Let go of the preparation. Let go of the use of impressions. Let love in. Remember your Father.

I look forward to being with you all next week. And I look forward to your all having an interesting week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 20th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the internet.

Well, did you have an interesting week? I'm going to give you a little practice for this coming week just to extend the learning.

As you go through this week, whenever it occurs to you as you go through your day, ask yourself the question, "Which me am I doing an impression of now? And be really honest with yourselves in answering that question.

I am going to tell you, that unless you're joined with your guide or the Holy Spirit at that moment, you are doing an impression. And the whole point of this practice is to help you realize that fact. Not so you can see how poorly you're doing or how much you're failing at the only thing that counts, but so that you can begin to have an inner experience of the ease with which you're able to be dishonest.

Now, some hard things have been said last week and already this week. To realize that you're being dishonest is not the goal. If it were the goal, you would just have to sit with it and suffer with it. The point is, that I am explaining to you that you all have an alternative to it—one which you haven't been accessing and employing.

If you can dare to honestly look at yourself many times during the day, and identify the impression that you're employing at that moment, you're bringing something into play. You're bringing in something in addition to the self that you're doing the impression of. You're bringing in an observer—you. And if you can look at yourself and see the impression that you're engaging in, it will become obvious to you, experientially, that you are something different from the impression you're giving.

It means that the impression that you're giving is not you, but a ploy you are using to accomplish something. The moment you can see that there is a difference between the you who is observing you doing an impression, you have a different place to be from. You can choose to continue to be from the place of the observer. And this little practice helps break the bondage you have to constantly employing impressions, impersonations and even believing them yourself.

The whole point of this is, to give you a means to escape from, to set aside a practice you have been engaged in and you didn't even know it was something you were practicing. You didn't know it was something you were practicing because you didn't know you had an alternative. Awakening to your Christhood is a matter of becoming free from the bondage of ignorance that you have been under. It's a matter of actually changing, actually discovering yourself as something beyond your concept of yourself.

The Course is not here, truth is not here to help make the human condition more comfortable. "Oh, you wouldn't believe it, when I got hold of the Course, it was incredible! And it has transformed my life. Everything is going smoothly now." I'm not being facetious here, there are people who have this experience. "My life turned around and I owe it all to the Course. I owe it all to what I found in the Course."

But you know what? What they're saying is, that life between birth and death has become more enjoyable—less stress, more peace. In effect, it's like saying, "I am being able to enjoy this ride which ultimately will end in my death. I fully expect to be healthy right up until the moment I kick the bucket. If everything continues as it is right now, I anticipate being free of illness and suffering. And when the time comes, I'll go."

What's wrong with this picture? And what's happened to you?

You've begun to do an impression of a student of the Course who's life is wonderful without having been lifted out of the realm of birth and death—of real transformation, of getting off the wheel of history, the cycles of birth and death, and birth and death, and on and on. I've mentioned before that there's a saying that "Life is a terminal illness."

You know what? This Course and the truth is not here to make your terminal illness comfortable—tolerable. It's here for healing! It's here to actually lift you out of, or remove you from all evidences of birth and death, to bring you into the evidences of Eternal Life. To bring you into the evidence of the Kingdom of Heaven, here and now where you are. It's not to make you happy, contented orphans still ignorant that you have a Father from Whom you have an inheritance. Because your Father is what gives you Identity.

Now, we need to talk a little bit more about impersonations and impressions to further trigger clarifications. You don't realize just how impactful and meaningful impressions are to you. They fill your everyday, not just the impressions you're engaged in performing but, we'll say, if you're in a gathering of people—you've been invited to a party and you and a friend go together. And at the party there are people that neither of you have ever met before and some of them are interesting and some of them aren't and so on.

Afterwards you leave and you start talking about things that happened at the party and one of you says, "Well, you know that Mary Jo, I can't think of her last name, but . . ." "Oh Yeah, I know who you're talking about." "What'd ya think about her?" "Well, she reminds me a lot of John's cousin."

Hm-m, "She reminds me a lot of John's cousin." You see, the response isn't about her. It's about the impression you got from her. And the impression you got from her, which was your impression, caused you to recognize a similarity between her and someone else. And you don't even stop for a moment to realize that the someone else that you saw a comparison between, was not someone else you actually saw and actually connected with. But you're talking about your impression of the other lady.

"The impression I got from her was that she was like the impression I got from someone else." And right there you're saying, "You know what, I never really connected with either one of them."

Now, you rely on this. Why do you think you engage in doing impressions? Because you know everybody is only looking at impressions and no-one's really seeing you. Just like you're not really seeing anyone else.

I talked last week about the employee—the burdened employee, where things aren't going well, and so on, and he's doing an impression of someone downtrodden. And he goes into the stairwell and starts up the stairs and he plods up the stairs because he's so downtrodden. He continues the impression whether anyone is there to watch him or not.

Now, you might've listened to that and thought, "That really is a little bit far-out." But let's bring it into practicality here—everyday practicality. All of you have heard of body language haven't you. All of you use body language all day long. And you watch and pay attention to the body language of other people. Even if they're not talking, you observe to get a feeling for where they're coming from—what's going on with them. Are they happy today or are they not happy today? Are they angry? Are they uptight? Whatever. You rely on body language for a major part of your communication with each other. Body language is the means of conveying an impression, an impersonation.

You've all heard the example of there being an accident and a number of bystanders. And the police arrive and they talk to all the different bystanders and each one gives a little bit different story. Why? Because they're giving their best impression of what happened. Why? Why all of this impressionism being practiced? Because none of you are taking the time to be present enough with someone else or events that are happening, to actually let the actuality of it register with you. You rely upon never really knowing the facts. You rely on, it's not the anonymity, but the cushioning effect—the protective effect of never really knowing the truth, because if you never really know the truth itself, you can't be held accountable for anything. No-one will ever rely on you a hundred percent for anything. It keeps a distance. It keeps things fuzzy when all you're doing is living your life based on impressions. Impressions you're giving. Impressions you're getting.

There is a different experience awaiting you. It's the experience of Real connection, direct connection, where, when you look at someone, you don't have to assume anything, you don't have to rely upon an impression you're getting based upon the impressions they are practicing. They may appear to be angry. But you have the capacity to have a direct connection, I'm going to say, Mind to Mind—because there are no private thoughts and we've discussed this before. But the fact that there are no private thoughts means that you have direct access to actuality where impressions become meaningless.

And part of waking up means that you're going to abandon impressions, the ones you give and the ones you rely upon from others.

In a way, all of you are giving each other a snow job all day long by means of constantly communicating only by means of impressions. And everyone else is satisfied with that because they're not called upon to correct anything. They're not called upon to notice: This is out of line, this is out of order, this is a situation where correction is called for, this is a situation where some negative thought needs to be expressed like, "Stop what you're doing, it isn't working for you." Or, "Stop what you're doing because it's hurting. Stop what you're doing because you're not being nice."

"Well, you know, I saw her and I had the impression that she wasn't somebody I wanted to be around and so I left." So, no connection, no opportunity for correction, no opportunity for healing, no opportunity for sharing clarity of vision that would lift you and the other one out of the realm of impressionism. You see?

Healing can't occur as long as everyone is functioning in this nebulousness of impressionism. The Course, the function of the truth that you will find in there, if you'll dare to look at the not-so-nice things it says, is to unrut you, to shake you out of habits that you didn't know were habits because you thought that was just the way life was.

So, something else you can do during this coming week, beside asking yourself a number of times a day, "Who is the me I'm doing an impression of now?" is, when you are confronted by another, to not just off the top of your head make an assessment of them, but take a moment—you don't have to do a profound study—but take a moment to have the intent to connect with them at a level behind whatever impression they're giving at that moment. Like, "What's really going on with them? Well, he's acting like a real bastard, he's, ya know, just suddenly gone off the deep end." That's the impression.

But a moment of quietness in you and the willingness to see beyond that impression, might uncover to you that that one is feeling obligated to be more than he's being. In other words, he's not doing well enough, or she's not doing well enough, or he or she is not doing enough, period. And the behavior is reflecting a feeling of impotence. But the impotence is a result of the mutually agreed upon definitions of all the orphans that say, "If you're going to be something, you've got to do something. You've got to be doing something important and well. You've got to be doing something outstanding because that's the way you prove your competence."

And if that one is feeling no way to actually accomplish that, it is very frustrating. The behavior that's coming out is not what needs to be addressed. And the clarity that you experience by being willing to stop a moment and abandon your snap judgments and to listen, what that will uncover, will be the fact that what needs to be addressed is, the feeling of incompetence and the belief that competence comes from doing—instead of competence and wholeness being inseparable from Being, where nothing more needs to be done because Being itself is Whole.

The mutual agreements of orphans would say, "He is incompetent and we can help him become competent. And we'll tell him all the right things to do and we'll tell him how to do them."

But you know what? The Christ, or the Holy Spirit comes and says, "Stop everything you're doing and take a deep breath. Because all of your Meaning, all of the fullness of the gift of you that you're here to be the expression of, is already with you. And you don't have to try harder. All you need to do, is to relax so that it can come through, because you're not distracted by all of the plans, all of the theories, all of the protocols that you can abide by that will get you ultimately where you want to go off in the future.

You also have the capacity to be with events, even if it's a robin that lands in your yard and spends a little while, while you're watching, doing what it does. You have the capacity to be present with these things. Not so that you can gather from the impression you get that's caused by its behavior, something true about it. You have a means to ask, "What is God being here? What is really going on here aside from the impressions that its behavior provides me with?"

You have a means for direct connection. If you will dare to look at what I've said and look at yourselves and see the degree to which you operate on the basis of impressions and if you will realize from that experience that in all of it you're never really connecting with the one you're having impressions about, it will be easier for you to say, "I want to have a more meaningful experience. I want to have an experience of actual connection. To hell with basing everything on impressions anymore. For I'm never seeing who they really are, and the ones I'm inclined to compare them with, I never saw either. And we've just been like little balls rolling around in a humongous pinball machine that has felt pads around each of the boingers—you know the things that go boing . . . boing . . . boing . . . as the ball gets bounced around."

And you all bounce off of impressions which are softnesses, indefiniteness's. You see what I mean? And you live this life of softly bouncing off of nothing in particular, nothing specific, you see. Because you never connect with specifically what's there and specifically who's there. And so you've been missing out on something. But since everyone has always been doing it, it hasn't occurred to you that there might be a different way to do things.

That's the way you have been bound by ignorance. And that's one of the ways in which you have been unconsciously dishonest. And it is something for you to become free of.

When someone is in front of you, you are provided with an opportunity to have a Real experience. Remember that. Every encounter is a potential threshold of Awakening. It truly is. Don't value impressions. It's like a soft gauze between you and everything. It assures isolation. It assures loneliness. It assures lack of connection. Pretty sad. And it's not your Birthright!

Let's go into the Book.

You who prefer specialness to sanity could not obtain it in your right minds.

That's interesting: The use of the word, "specialness" with reference to sanity, because specialness is an excellent definition of insanity. "I'm special. I'm an orphan. And I love it . . . I love it . . . I love it . . . I love it! I get to decide what everything is and even though life is scary as hell, I even get to figure out how to cope with it successfully. I mean, infinity is the possibility for me. You see.

If it could say this, it would say, "Those who are not orphans don't have this freedom, they are not free to be whatever they want to be and do whatever they want to do. And so, I'm very happy in my isolation because, wow, the potentials for success are just unlimited."

You who prefer specialness to sanity could not obtain it in your right minds. You were at peace until you asked for special favor.

"Father, I'd rather see it my way. Please?"

And God did not give it, for the request was alien to Him, and you could not ask this of a Father Who truly loved His Son. Therefore you made of Him an unloving father, demanding of Him what only such a father could give.

Demanding what only an unloving father could give.

And the peace of God's Son was shattered, . .

You got your divorce and lost your peace. You didn't know that was going to happen. But it happened. You lost your peace and in its place came conflict. And then came the grand idea, "I can overcome this conflict and this is my purpose and I am going to accomplish it."

And the peace of God's Son was shattered, for he no longer understood his Father. He feared what he had made, but still more did he fear his REAL father, having attacked his own glorious equality with Him.

Like I said before, when you said, "Father, I'd rather do it my way," and you got a divorce from your Father, you found that you were fatherless. And that the experience of being fatherless was the experience of being an orphan, something you had not anticipated. You thought that you would still be as infinitely aware and truly aware and sanely aware as you had been before you got the divorce, except that now you would simply have the option to do things exactly the way you wanted to do them. Not so.

In peace he . . .

. . . the one who asked for specialness . . .

In peace he needed nothing and asked for nothing. In war he DEMANDED everything and FOUND nothing. For how could the gentleness of love respond to his demands EXCEPT by departing in peace and returning to the Father? If the Son did not wish to remain in peace, he could not remain at all.

He could not remain in the conscious awareness of his Sonship. He was faced with the black and white stark experience of being an orphan.

If the Son did not wish to remain in peace, he could not remain at all. For a darkened mind cannot live in the light, and it must seek a place of darkness where it can believe it is where it is not.

Where? In the orphanage. Now . . .

God did not allow this to happen. Yet you DEMANDED that it happen, and therefore believed that it was so.

In other words, it did not happen, but you believe that it did.

To “single out” . . .

. . . in other words, to make special . . .

. . . is to “make alone,” and thus MAKE LONELY.

And do you see, that through the use of impressions, you create this soft, vague, non-descriptiveness? You place this between you and everything so that you never really connect with it, but just with the impression you get from bouncing against a soft surface? And it keeps you alone. And through the practice of impressions, you make yourself constantly lonely.

Of course, the orphan just simply takes that on too and says, “Well, I’m going to find myself a way to be happy in spite of all of this. And I’m going to think just happy thoughts.” You see? Happy, happy, happy thoughts. “I’m going to think nothing but happy thoughts. How can I not be happy then? If nothing else enters my consciousness but happy thoughts, how can I not be happy in spite of the fact that I’m alone and lonely. Something I can’t seem to do anything about. But I can manage to find a way for them not to bother me!” You see. [chuckles] Oh-h . . .

To “single out” is to “make alone,” and thus MAKE LONELY. God did not do this to you. Could He set you apart, KNOWING that your peace lies in His oneness?

Even more, that your Being lies in His oneness.

He denied you only your request for pain, for suffering is not of His creation. Having GIVEN you creation, He could not take it FROM you.

That's not the nature of gift is it. Something that's given is given forever.

He could but answer your insane request with a sane answer which would abide with you in your insanity.

Listen to that again:

He could but answer your insane request with a sane answer which would abide with you in your insanity.

I am going to ask, if anyone who wants to raise their hand to answer, I would like to hear what the answer is: "What was the sane answer that God gave?" Yes? (audience response unintelligible) Anyone else have a different answer?

The answer was the Holy Spirit. Yes, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. The moment you got your divorce from the Father, that of you which was utterly divine became to you something different from you, but because it was you, it remained with you while you dallied with the ego—the orphan mentality.

What you divinely Are cannot be separated from you even if you are indulging in a mad idea that you are an orphan, that you're flesh and blood and bones, that you came from a sperm and an egg, that you're part of a process of physical evolution and on and on and on. While you constantly confirm to yourself this self-perspective, the Christ that you Are, the divine one that you Are, remains the divine one that you Are right at this moment. I could say, hidden from you, but more correctly, which you are hiding from yourself by virtue of an intense insistence upon giving preference to all of the thoughts and theories that constitute the orphan mind-set.

He could but answer your insane request with a sane answer which would abide with you in your insanity. For His answer is the reference point BEYOND illusions, from which you can look back on them . . .

. . . the illusions . . .

. . . and SEE them as insane. But seek THIS place and you WILL find it, for love is in you and will lead you there.

It is not valuable to rely upon and value impressions. Impressions aren't the real thing. If impressions are your stock in trade, if impressions are your constant companions, if impressions are the way you communicate with others, you're missing it. You're missing reality. You're missing each other.

Be willing to look at this. I don't mean be willing to look at it intellectually and surmise about it and think about it. I mean, from time to time during the day each day, ask yourself, "Which me am I doing an impression of now?" And then spell it out. "Oh, I'm doing the 'poor me' impression, the 'poor-put-upon me' impression where no-one cares. And boy, do I know how to do that one good." Or, "I'm doing the 'superiority' impression. I'm doing this impression because I get to play at expressing authority and push people around and sound strong. And I don't do this one as good as I do the 'poor me' but I'm getting better at this impression. I'm working on this impression." You see. Be honest with yourselves.

And then remember, that the one who's observing the impressions is not the one claiming to be what the impression states. It is an impartial observer—and it's you. You are not your impressions. Even though you not only fool other people with them, you fool yourselves with them. You believe yourself. You're very gullible! Oops, a not so nice thought.

You know, last week when I brought up the idea that not expressing negative thoughts was dangerous, I wasn't saying "Hey everyone, go out and think mean thoughts—go out and think thoughts that aren't nice." I wasn't giving carte blanche to thinking negative thoughts.

What I meant was, notice when you are thinking negative thoughts. Because you do. You think sarcastic thoughts. Somebody will say, "I never can find the bread-knife." And immediately you think, "Well of course not, you don't have enough sense to put it in the same place every time." Even though generally speaking, you never say those kinds of things. And you're pleasant with everyone, even the one who said he couldn't find the bread-knife.

You think negative thoughts but you ignore them. Because you're busy maintaining this impression of being a "nice guy" or being a "spiritual seeker of truth." It is important, it is essential not to overlook the negative thoughts that you do employ. And it's also essential for you to be able to look at the straight truth. As I've said over and over, you've got to be able to look at the fact that if you're doing something that doesn't work, you're doing something that doesn't work. Stop it! You're not Miss Perfect, or Mr. Perfect.

Acknowledge that you're not doing something well. Acknowledge that you're doing something . . . oh dear, terrible word, "wrong" . . . not so that you can be punished for it, but so that you can see that you really don't want to continue doing something that isn't valuable—so that you can stop.

Now let's come back.

Having GIVEN you creation, He, . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . could not take it FROM you. He could but answer your insane request with a sane answer which would abide with you in your insanity.

Not so nice words. If you are conscious but your conscious awareness of things is distorted and you don't know it and nobody will tell you, and nobody will show you an alternative, then you are stuck. And the description of that stuckness is insanity.

Now, you have been stuck. And someone needs to be able to say to you, "You are stuck." But you know what? You're stuck in something that has no real capacity to hold you. Freedom is available to you and here's the way to gain your freedom from being stuck. You're gonna have to think of yourself in a different way. And part of your stuckness was, that you were thinking of yourself in an unclear way. But if you will begin to consider the possibility, that right now, you're the ultimate, right now you are the Christ because right now, God is Being all there is to you right where you are, you will be able to begin to abandon your faith in your current distorted thinking processes.

So somebody has to be able to say, "You're stuck and you don't need to be." And you need to be able to hear that you're stuck without feeling guilty for it and without feeling bad about it. Because you need to get on to the next part of the sentence . . ."and you don't need to be." "You're stuck and you don't need to be." And you don't need to be because the sane one that you are, is the one that you are right now as you see yourself in a limited way.

You see yourself in a limited way, but the self you're seeing is whole and is divine. And if you will reach for it, instead of believing your thinking only, and what everyone else has taught you with all of the other orphans have agreed to, you will find transformation beginning to occur and you will come out of the distortions that you're experiencing in your awareness.

He could but answer your insane request with a sane answer which would abide with you in your insanity. For His answer is the reference point BEYOND illusions, . .

... but in you, that is you . . .

... from which . . .

... if you access it, . . .

... you can look back on them . . .

... the illusions . . .

... and SEE them as insane.

And seeing them as insane, from I'm going to say, a newfound sanity, you will release them like so much nonsense, without fretting over them or fussing about, "How could I ever have been so ignorant. I was such an asshole!"

You won't even get caught up in that because it will be so nonsensical—so untrue—that it doesn't warrant a single thought about it.

But seek THIS place . . .

... meaning, all you have to do is to seek this place, just seek this place . . .

... and you WILL find it, for love is in you and will lead you there.

The next section is entitled:

HEALING AND TIME

And now the reason why you are afraid of this course should be apparent. For this is a course on love because it is about you.

Five key words: Because it is about you. This Course is about you. It's not about miracles. It's not about truth. It's not about a new form of Christianity. It's not about a new form of religion. It's about you. It's about everything about you, [chuckles] from your orphan beliefs to what you divinely Are.

If it can't address you while you think you're an orphan and while you're convinced about your orphanhood, if it can't address you there, then it's not complete. And it can't move you beyond it. And so it has to talk about things that aren't very nice. It has to talk about negative ideas.

The Course talks about correction. Correction of what? Negative things. What wholesome and holy and wonderful things require correction?

The thing is, this Course is about you, illuminating everything to you about you, so you can see what is meaningful and what is not and have the experience of the spontaneous release of what isn't of value. Because when you see what isn't of value, you don't hold on to it any longer—it drops away from you. So . . .

And now the reason why you are afraid of this course should be apparent. For this is a course on love because it is about you. You have been told that your function in this world is healing, and your function in Heaven is creating.

What does that mean? It means that as you're leaving the orphanage, you will be engaged in healing. Healing of yourself and healing for the other orphans. What does healing mean? It means correction—the undoing of the orphan mindsets that have caused the bondage to ignorance.

And so, it means uncovering the things that don't work—uncovering the negative things. Uncovering the negative things and illuminating their nonsensical nature.

The ego teaches that your function on earth is destruction, and that you have no function at all in Heaven.

Well, the ego teaches that your function on earth is destruction. Well, at the least it teaches you that your function on earth is to be destroyed isn't it? You know, one day leads to another leads to another leads to another leads to a hole in the ground with you in it. Life is a terminal illness. That's what the ego teaches.

The ego teaches that your function on earth is destruction, and that you have no function at all in Heaven. It would thus destroy you here and bury you here, leaving you no inheritance except the dust out of which it thinks you were made.

You see, this is what is to be undone. And truth is not here to make that awful journey more comfortable.

As long as it . . .

. . . the ego—the orphan mentality . . .

As long as it is reasonably satisfied with you, as its reasoning goes, it offers you oblivion. When it becomes overtly savage, it offers you hell.

It doesn't promise anything particularly pleasant does it?

Yet neither oblivion nor hell is as unacceptable to you as Heaven. For your definition of Heaven IS hell and oblivion, and the real Heaven is the greatest threat you think you could experience.

Again, how could that be? Because it's the greatest threat to your being able to prove all by yourself that you are a valid entity. Not only that, it deprives you of the ethic that the orphan mentality created—the idea that God gave you the right to do that, that God set that purpose in your heart and soul and being. You don't want to be just some dumb puppet on the end of the strings held by something other than you, even if the one holding the strings is the Father. And the strings are the conduit of His creative Love that fills you with all that He is, together with His infinite perspective, so that your Birthright becomes the ever-present conscious experience of universal creation.

Yet neither oblivion nor hell . . .

. . . which is what the ego offers you . . .

. . . is as unacceptable to you as Heaven.

Because of course, oblivion and hell that the ego gives you, still gives you the option to succeed and to overcome and conquer your unworthiness and prove that you are valid individuality on your own. See, it doesn't challenge that, it lets you have your sweet desire.

Yet neither oblivion nor hell is as unacceptable to you as Heaven. For your definition of Heaven IS hell and oblivion, and the real Heaven is the greatest threat you think you could experience. For hell and oblivion are ideas which YOU made up, and you are bent on demonstrating their reality . . .

. . . why? . . .

. . . to establish YOURS. If THEIR reality is questioned, you believe that YOURS is. For you believe that ATTACK is your reality, and that your destruction

Listen to this:

. . . is the final proof that you were right.

It's like saying, you made up the belief that being is a journey from birth to death and you made this up as part of your own personal, private act of creation—the accomplishment of which will demonstrate your actual creative ability. And so, inevitably your death will prove that you accomplished it. Do you see the insanity of it? You have to die to prove you're real, or were real. [chuckles]

Under the circumstances, would it not be more DESIRABLE to have been wrong, . .

Even apart from the fact that you were wrong . . . you see.

I want you to imagine a huge orphanage. In fact I want you to imagine a planet full of huge orphanages around the globe . . . beautiful—a lot of them, large, full of creature comforts. Many years ago one of the American presidents had fire-side chats over the radio with the citizens of the United States. And I want you to imagine that on this planet—this globe full of orphanages—every Saturday and occasionally Sunday nights, there are fire-side chats with Jesus, fire-side chats with me. And all the orphans gather to listen so that they might be inspired to be happier with themselves.

We're having one of these fire-side chats right now. And the orphans say, "But Raj, don't challenge my being in an orphanage. Don't challenge my being an orphan. Don't say mean things to me like I'm deluded to think that this orphanage that I'm in is really part of the Kingdom of Heaven. I know it isn't because all of us orphans built it according to our plans. We figured out what we wanted. We know it doesn't have anything to do with the Kingdom of Heaven. Don't be mean to us and say that we're deluded when we think that we could've raised our little finger much less built these orphanages without God. Don't insult us like that. Don't say those kinds of things to us.

"But I will listen to the nice things you have to say. I will listen to the inspiring things that you have to say."

Under the circumstances, would it not be more DESIRABLE . . .

. . . I'm saying to all of you, . .

to have been wrong, . .

"Oh no, don't say that to me. That's mean. That's unkind. That's a negative thought. I didn't tune in to this fireside chat to hear that."

Nevertheless I must say . . .

Under the circumstances, would it not be more DESIRABLE to have been wrong, even apart from the fact that you WERE wrong? While it could perhaps be argued that death suggests there WAS life, no-one would claim that it proves that there IS life.

You see, the reasoning is faulty. You are living out a goal that is accomplished by your non-existence. You are trying to prove your valid existence by it coming to an end.

Even the past life, which death might indicate could only have been futile if it must come to this, and NEEDS this to prove that it was. You question Heaven, . .

"Gosh, I do. This building I live in, this orphanage cannot be part of the Kingdom of Heaven. We built it. We designed it. Every part of it expresses our private but mutual intent. We are responsible for it. And its on this globe which is a result of a big bang, not God.

You question Heaven, but you do not question THIS. You could heal and be healed if you DID question it. And even though you know not Heaven, might it not be more desirable than death?

So what am I doing? I'm inviting the orphans to come out of the orphanage. I'm inviting the orphans to come out of the mindset that keeps them from seeing what they really are. I am inviting you out of the mindset that keeps you actively engaged in impressionism. I'm asking you to come out of the mindset that requires that you not look at the negative things you are practicing.

You have been as selective in your questioning as in your perception. An open mind is more honest than this.

If you try to use what I'm sharing with you to confirm a state of ignorance that you're experiencing, I will not let you succeed at it. I am not here to make you more comfortable in your illusion. I'm not here to let you continue being dishonest with yourselves while you are saying that you are something that you're not. And that where you are is not the Kingdom of Heaven. And that there is not another way to look at it, that its' your Birthright to be looking at it through.

And it will behoove you all to be more willing than you have been to look for the direct experience of your Brother and Sister and the events in your daily lives, so that you're not just living on impressions. So that you might have direct experience, which is what you're supposed to be having. And so that you might see what is Really there, because you have let the Father reveal it to you.

There's the rub. And there's the wonderful answer: Because you have let the Father reveal it to you—because, let's bring it home even more, not because you have let "The Father" reveal it to you, but because you have let "your Father" reveal it to you. Stop thinking of and talking about God as "The Father." Start putting the word, "my" in front of Father all the time. There's a radical difference between talking about "the Father" and "my Father" meaning, God—a radical difference. When you say, "my Father" and you're talking about God, it makes a radical difference because it's a statement about you as well. A very important and essential statement about you. And because you're using the word, "my Father" you cannot escape the chemicalization and transformation that the use of those words cause in you.

So, be with this during this coming week. Be with the awareness that you are used to functioning in the context of impressions, which means no direct connection whatsoever with anything. Be aware that that constitutes an empty and lonely experience that it's not your Birthright to be experiencing.

Dare to be conscious of that unpleasant and negative thought, because you won't hold on to something of that sort once you finally accept it as the truth and you will reach for something else. And you will dare to be present with whatever's going on in your day without employing an off-the-cuff, knee jerk response, assessment, impression. And then hesitate long enough to be with the situation or the one you're with, with the desire to see behind the impression they're engaged in presenting. And ask to see what the Father would show you to see. So that you might say exactly what triggers healing. This is the good news. This is the good news: The Gospel.

Be careful, because the voice, not the Voice for Truth, but the voice for fear, is liable to say, "Well this doesn't serve me very well." Always the orphan mentality, the ego, behaves, thinks and acts in self-serving ways.

Hearing what I've had to say tonight and last week, might very well cause you to have sad feelings or depressed feelings. And have no idea why you're feeling that way. But its because the orphan mentality is saying, "This doesn't serve me well at all. This doesn't serve me well at all. I don't want to have anything to do with what doesn't serve me well."

But there's another part of you that does recognize the truth of what I'm saying. And so you are persisting, hanging in with it. And you have this conflict—this tension between that in you which is recognizing things it hasn't seen before that are clarifying and are uplifting. And at the same time, what you have called your normal mentality, is saying, "This does not serve me well at all."

The orphan mentality is not going to find what I'm saying useful or happifying. The habit that you're engaged in, is not going to dissolve without a struggle, I'll say. It is going to object. But then you must remember that it doesn't serve you well to believe that you're an orphan when you're not an orphan. In fact, it causes you completely unnecessary pain, sorrow, suffering—unnecessary.

I look forward to being with you next week. I am aware that ego-structures are collapsing. I am aware that you are hearing what I am meaning and it's important for you to know that although these collapses may cause certain stresses to be felt, they are indicators of healing. If the ego is complaining, something wonderful is happening.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 2nd 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

PAUL: This is me, Paul. The idea has been expressed on line that there are those who feel sorry for me when Raj uses me as an example and feels that it's not really in good taste for Raj to do that. I want to let you know especially tonight when I know I'm going to be the example, [chuckle] that I'm very happy. It doesn't bother me a bit.

Everything that Raj is teaching and everything we're reading about in the Course, can very easily be left in lofty terms that aren't totally relevant. And in every case when he uses me as an example, [chuckle] he's making it relevant. And if that makes it easier for someone else to relate to it, I am more than happy for him to do it. It has never bothered me. So, I just needed to make that clear.

RAJ: Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I am indeed going to start with a story that began some time ago when Paul, for righteous reasons—very good wholesome righteous reasons—committed himself to being involved in this work that we're doing together. He feels that it's very important to him. He also feels that it's just simply important and its worth sharing. And so he has devoted himself to it.

But as time has gone by, his devotion to it has caused him to restrict his attention so it has become smaller and smaller. And in many ways he has become like a hermit, or like someone in a monastery, apart from everything, staying in that place where his mind is undisturbed, and he can attend to me—attend to whatever he and I are to do together.

Because of this, it has become more and more difficult for him to actually get anything done, which has frustrated him even further. It has seemed that life itself has been very demanding—you know, irrelevant things like paying bills, and doing the bookkeeping and things that have nothing to do with enlightenment, nothing to do with transformation of the mind . . . how about just going to the post office, and going grocery shopping, you know . . . family involvements. He had begun to feel as though no one respected what he was doing as much as it needed to be respected.

And yet, he did not grasp that he was binding himself unnecessarily. And when he would come to me and, how shall I put it, in spite of the fact that he was angry at the situation, he would, in a friendly fashion, enquire of me how the situation could be changed so that he could accomplish the things that needed to be accomplished. Meaning, the things he had decided needed to be accomplished, like proofing the transcripts so that people could have them and enjoy them. And there was demand for them.

In his mind he had become very complex and very tight and very frustrated and very angry. So, last Friday morning, the day before last week's Gathering, while Susan was taking her shower, I talked with her. And I told her that it was not only important, it was necessary for she and Paul to leave and go to Disneyland.

Now Paul has Goosebumps. He is having a personal reaction because now everybody knows that last Saturday there was no Gathering because he was playing. He was not attending to business.

And so when she got out of the shower, she said, and she was being gentle [chuckle] with him, she said, "I really don't know what to make of this. Raj has just told me that we are to leave immediately, like that day, for Disneyland and not come back until the following Tuesday." Not just over the weekend, but three days.

Well, Paul had his immediate opinions about it which he didn't voice. But he knew now that nobody even in his own household really understood the importance of the work that he is involved in and that doing something frivolous at the last moment before a meeting, was more important. And this fueled his already existing frustration. After all, at this point, there are three transcripts not available on the website which he was intent upon getting done because it was a right thing to do—an important right thing to do.

And of course, the last few meetings that we've had, have dealt with the orphan mentality and the fact that the way you get your meaning is by doing things well--doing important things well. You see. You think I'm just talking to you, but I'm talking to Paul too.

Now, Paul found a place in himself that recognized—kind Paul—that Sue was tired and she really did need a break. And that was the only way he, himself, could justify this. She says, "Ask Raj yourself and let's find out whether I was hearing correctly or not."

Well, of course, that's a really loaded question for Paul. If the answer is "no," then he's saying she heard incorrectly. If the answer was "yes" it meant that I didn't value what he valued, which was to be dutifully there for the meeting Saturday night, and that Friday and Friday night to get those transcripts finished and uploaded onto the website. And to be able to be accountable with good favor.

Well, I told him that she heard me correctly. You see, [chuckling] he was not happy with that answer. But, as a pretty talented orphan, he decided to be as flexible as he could be, and to do his best to feign willingness, even with a certain lilt to his step. Okay? But as the day went by, tickets were purchased and packing began, he noticed a discomfort in his hip. Felt sort of like a pinched nerve or something. It went from his hip-bone around into the groin. But it wasn't disabling, it was just bothersome. He figured out for himself, that it must've been from something he had lifted in the process of packing. No big deal.

And so, he let everyone know there would be no Gathering and proceeded to get everything ready to go, along with Sue. And Saturday morning very early at 4 o'clock they left to catch the plane.

Now, I'm not going to go into every detail of the trip. But the point was that he went with a grudge which he hid. And he tried to make the best of a situation that did not fit with his sense of what was meaningful and important. He knew he, in terms of being a responsible orphan, was already behind in things that appropriately needed to be done. And to take this time out, oh, and by the time it finished, it turned out to be five days gone. Five days of what he interpreted to be, irrelevant, meaningless activity. He felt disrespected, dishonored and misunderstood.

Now, I will tie this in with what we're going to be reading tonight. We were talking last week about, and the week before, about how the ego uses time. How the orphan mindset uses time. That it uses the past, which is flawed, to justify a future in which, remember that word? "expiation" can occur—the atoning for one's mistakes, the doing of penances or holy activities to offset.

Well, Paul saw that his past, and what he perceived to be his willingness to disrespect what he should be respecting, because everybody else was disrespecting it, and they had needs too, that he would then have a future in which to pay for it.

As the days went by, the discomfort in his hip became more severe. And he was able to cover it up very well until the fourth day. And on the fourth day when he had to have help to put on his socks and his pants, and it was obvious [chuckling] that there was a need, and he got to the park and had to rent a cart to ride in because it was too uncomfortable to walk, he still didn't make any connection between the grudge he was carrying, his conviction in the rightness of his perspective, he didn't see the connection between that and the physical problem that he was having.

Now, all of you do this in one way or another. You have your pet project or you have your life work. Or you have something relative to your job that you must do well on because it is going to be the turning point for the rest of your career. And so, the rest of your career depends upon what you're going to do at this immediate point. And you become fixated on it and anything that doesn't have anything to do with that is irrelevant and is an intrusion and is an expression of lack of respect for what you know you have to do. Even though the intrusions that are coming in are saying, "Sweetheart, you're neglecting the family—hey, you can't do it this way because everyone around you is suffering. You're short-tempered. You are curt and you are actually unkind and you cannot do this. You must find a way to be able to express love."

And you say, "Everybody is simply going to have to understand what I'm going through and let me get past this point and then I'll be able to be relaxed again."

You see. You all do this. You all get your mind set. You get your mind set on something and everything else must take second position. Now, with this in mind, let's go into the Book.

We ended up last week—last meeting—illustrating the fact, that as an orphan, as one who is self-originated, self-created, your one purpose is to prove your validity. You see, those who are orphans have fathers and mothers who give them validity. Those who are not orphans have mothers and fathers who give them validity.

But orphans have no connection to anything, and so they cannot gather the validity of their existence from anything, and so they must create it out of whole cloth. And because they are trying to successfully be something they cannot be—none of you can successfully be an independent orphan—everything you do is bound to fail. And so life is a struggle. And as we've talked about, you've taken on the challenge of that struggle. But at some point the truth will out—the truth will become clear that you cannot be an orphan, that you cannot be what you're trying to be.

And so, what does the orphan mindset do? What does the ego do? It says, "Okay, if I am bound to fail ultimately, I am going to interpret that ending on my terms." That ending being the death of the ego. That event of death is going to be used as the proof that what happened before it was life—was real.

And so, although death isn't looked forward to, and no-one is significantly challenging it in the way that will demonstrate its nothingness, it is accepted. And so part of the ethic of the ego's infrastructure, is to embrace death as an ultimate proof that life had been successfully established and lived.

Now, we read last time . . .

Even the past life which death might indicate could only have been futile if it must come to this, . . .¹

I mean, what's the point of living a life that must end in death in order for its actuality to be validated? . . .

Even the past life which death might indicate could only have been futile if it must come to this, and NEEDS this to prove that it was. You question Heaven, but you do not question THIS.

You don't. You know the saying, "Only two things are for sure: death and taxes." No-one actually stands up and says, "I don't intend to die, because I am beginning to understand that death is an illusory experience that we put ourselves through, that we don't have to put ourselves through, and I'm getting off the wheel of history. This life I am living now, is the life when I'm going to get off the wheel of history."

You could heal and be healed if you DID question it. And even though you know not Heaven, might it not be more desirable than death? You have been as selective in your questioning as in your perception.

You see. And I want to tie this in with Paul. He has been as selective in his questioning as in his perception. Because he wants me, when he comes and enquires of me, he enquires in the context of my changing the circumstances so that he can do something he feels righteously that he should be doing. When that isn't what he should be doing, and the way he's feeling obligated to it, is not the way he should be feeling.

The next sentence says . . .

An open mind is more honest than this.

When you go to your Guide or you go to the Holy Spirit, and you ask a question, and you ask the question in a way that requires the answer to fit your pre-existing values, you're not going to hear an answer because your mind isn't open.

And Paul couldn't hear the answers. And while he was on the trip, he would go out on the balcony every morning when he got up. And he would implore me to explain to him how all of this nonsense, all of this stimulation that he found everyone else basking in. And of course he had very negative opinions about it, I mean it was almost as though they were unable to exist without this artificial stimulation of new experiences and new things to see and bright colors and things that had nothing to do with teleportation, had nothing to do with physical healing as his hip [chuckle] gets more and more uncomfortable.

See, he didn't realize that what he was choosing to do was disabling him in his denial of what confronted him because it didn't fit his current value system.

An open mind is more honest than this.

Now . . .

The ego . . .

. . . the orphan mentality . . .

. . . has a very strange notion of time, and it is with this notion that your questioning might well begin. The ego invests heavily in the past, and in the end believes that the past is the ONLY aspect of time that is meaningful.

All of Paul's thoughts were out of the past—commitments he had made long ago, circumstances that made it impossible for him to fulfill those commitments, the fact that things that should have been done weren't done and were still waiting for him to do while he did irrelevant things. All of these past memories, issues and experiences were what he was valuing. It was impossible for him to be present in the moment at Disneyland.

The ego invests heavily in the past, and in the end believes that the past is the ONLY aspect of time that is meaningful. You will remember that we said its emphasis on guilt enables it to ensure its continuity by making the future LIKE the past, and . . .

... what? . . .

... thus avoiding the present.

If you want to imagine time correctly, it is a line that comes from the ancient past up to the present moment, and you see that present moment as a transition point in the line to what will come, the future. But the fact is, what the ego sees as a transition point, is a gap in the line. The past is memory and the future is imagination. And there's a gap between the two. They are not connected. And that gap, if that's where you will bring your attention, is where your escape from time can occur.

You will remember that we said its emphasis on guilt . . .

... the ego's . . .

... enables it to ensure its continuity by making the future LIKE the past and thus avoiding the present. By the notion of PAYING for the past in the future the past becomes the DETERMINER of the future, making them continuous WITHOUT an intervening present.

You see, [chuckling] five days, Paul was never in California. [laughing] He was in the past forecasting the future, and letting the past color the present. So that everyone around him who was tickled to death and happy and laughing and enjoying themselves, were all insane. Misunderstanding what was meaningful and distracting themselves from what was meaningful by silly stimulation.

He saw himself. He saw his mind-set. And, all the time he was being there having to observe these people being insane, he was feeling the weight of the future beating him down, putting him further behind, putting him at further disadvantage and ultimately, demonstrating to him his powerlessness. It was very insulting.

By the notion of PAYING for the past in the future the past becomes the DETERMINER of the future, making them continuous WITHOUT an intervening present. For the ego uses the present ONLY as a brief transition to the future, in which it brings the past TO the future by interpreting the present in PAST terms.

NOW has no meaning to the ego. The present merely reminds it of past hurts, . .

“Yeah, can’t you so-and-so’s see that what you’re having so much fun at and what you insisted on dragging me along with you to experience is like rubbing salt in the wound—just making the problem worse? Don’t you understand me at all? Don’t you understand what this work is that Raj and I are doing?”

That’s what the ego says.

The present merely reminds it of past hurts, and it reacts to the present as if it WERE the past. The ego cannot tolerate RELEASE from the past, . .

. . . why not? Because it must have the past in order to secure a future for itself in which you can pay for what you’ve done wrong and improve yourself, refine your soul, bring yourself closer to God. Which really means, be an orphan who manages, let’s say, to get up to the top floor of the orphanage with the best view. [sigh]

The ego cannot tolerate RELEASE from the past, and although the past is no more, the ego tries to preserve its image by responding AS IF it were present. Thus it dictates reactions to those you meet now from a PAST reference point, obscuring their present reality.

You remember last time we were talking about someone going to a party and meeting somebody and the upshot of it was, that that person reminded them of another person they knew. In other words, the impression they got from this person was like the impression they got from another person. The impression was something they got and had nothing to do with either of these individuals. And so connection never occurred.

. . . it dictates reactions to those you meet now from a PAST reference point, obscuring their present reality.

Paul’s mindset dictated his reactions to those around him—the stupid ones who ought to know what’s important but obviously didn’t, and that included his wife, Susan. And that’s exactly how malicious the ego can be when its will is violated, because Paul, in his right Mind, knows that Susan is his partner. She is part of the team that he and she constitute. And he knows that her entire motivation is one that is in support of this work and of his relationship with me and [chuckle] most of all, she looks forward to his experiencing the real benefit of our collaboration . . . which can be better stated, our friendship.

In effect, if you follow the ego’s dictates, you will react to your brothers as though they were someone ELSE, and this will surely prevent you from perceiving them as they ARE.

Paul goes to Disneyland every day and not only having negative thoughts about those close to him, but noticing how people tend to be led around by very subtle controls. Noticing how well designed [chuckling]—you can hear how silly this is—noticing how well designed and laid out the park is so that people can be moved with the greatest ease. See. So that people can be moved with the greatest ease. Rather than so that people can move where they wish to go with the greatest of ease. It is designed so that people can most easily do what they feel invited to do by the circumstances and their desires.

But Paul interpreted it as control, and that these people were all like sheep being herded from one land to another.

The orphan mindset is delusional. And that's what it's important to understand. And it is also mesmeric. It is like getting caught in an eddy in a stream or a river. Like a leaf getting caught in an eddy off to the side where the current flows in a circular motion and the leaf is trapped there away from the movement of the stream.

The mindsets you employ and the values you employ can become mesmeric. Another word you might find more palatable is, obsessive. And the answer isn't for the details of the obsession to be altered, but for the inclination to be obsessive, to be abandoned. And Paul was caught in an eddy. He was mesmerized. So that he saw everything in very stark and negative terms. Because why? Because his important and valuable work was being honored less than the wild stimulation provided by Disneyland.

Now, you all can laugh, but your own obsessions are just as silly.

Let's continue . . .

In effect, if you follow the ego's dictates, you will react to your brothers as though they were someone ELSE, . .

. . . [chuckling] the jerks you think they are . . .

. . . and this will surely prevent you from perceiving them as they ARE. And you will receive messages from them out of your OWN past because, by making it real in the present, you are forbidding yourself to LET IT GO.

Oh boy, Paul held on to it and held on to it, tighter and tighter, until his leg wouldn't move and he had to ride in an elderly person's cart.

You thus deny yourself the message of release that every brother offers you NOW.

Meaning, in the gap between the past and the present, the past and the future. Yes, there was wonderful stimulation constantly provided at Disneyland. That, if allowed to register, would have served to let Paul slip off the line of time and become unbound to what he had become fixated on. Which was the whole reason I insisted that they go.

The shadowy figures from the past . . .

. . . these are memories, these are impressions that you're giving preference to rather than the experience of actual contact with a Brother.

The shadowy figures from the past are precisely what you must ESCAPE.

In other words, it isn't the reconfiguration of the shadowy figures from the past that needs to occur, it is escape from them that must occur.

For they are not real, and have no hold over you unless you bring them WITH you.

And can you see what Paul took with him to Disneyland? He took the past. He took a whole way of thinking and he took it with him into an environment that tried to suck his attention away from his obsession. And he held onto it for righteous reasons.

He cannot use my presence or his willingness to be connected with me. And no-one else can either. And he also cannot hold his connection with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than his right Mind—as a proof of his value, of his meaningfulness, or of his excellent position as a spiritualizing orphan, an image. It isn't something to capitalize on because that's just an impression as well.

The shadowy figures from the past are precisely what you must ESCAPE.

You know, the impression about so-and-so that is like the impression you got from her tonight. That's a shadowy figure from the past that colors your experience in the present and completely cuts you off from what's really happening tonight.

The shadowy figures from the past . . .

. . . and I'm reading this over and over because it's a significant sentence.

The shadowy figures from the past are precisely what you must ESCAPE. For they are not real, and have no hold over you unless you bring them WITH you. They carry the spots of pain in your minds, directing you to attack in the present in retaliation for a past that is no more.

And talk about attack. Paul was smooth at it and not too cutting, but in all righteousness, he let it be known that what everyone was engaged in, wasn't in his opinion, really valuable and therefore he couldn't let himself fully embrace it. And the words that came out of his mouth were not nice.

They carry the spots of pain in your minds, directing you to attack in the present in retaliation for a past that is no more. And this decision is one of FUTURE pain.

This decision sets into motion the continuation of the past. It is therefore a decision of future pain.

Unless you learn that past pain is delusional, you are choosing a future of illusions and losing the endless opportunities . . .

. . . that Disneyland provides which you could find for release in the present.

It actually says . . .

Unless you learn that past pain is delusional, you are choosing a future of illusions and losing the endless opportunities which you could find for release in the present.

Doesn't have to be Disneyland. You can be caught up in a sense of loss or of failed purpose, and go out and work in your garden and find in the garden, endless opportunities for release in the present. Everything is stimulating if you don't mind your uptight red-ass attitude being unsettled, unrutted, kicked out!

You are confronted at every moment, whether it's Disneyland or whether it's your garden, by the Kingdom of Heaven. If you don't think that reality is stimulating, then you have some wonderful discoveries to make.

Being Awake does not mean experiencing a mind so full of peace, [whispering] that there's no movement—that nothing happens that might distract you from the quiet. Doesn't that sort of sound like the experience you'll have in that box six feet under?

That's not life. That's not Reality and that's not the nature or the experience of a holy Mind—a whole Mind.

The ego would PRESERVE your nightmares, . .

You see, it's so easy to say, "Well what in the hell is an ego anyway? The Course talks about the ego . . . the ego . . . the ego . . . the ego." The ego's nothing more than your bad habits that you employ and won't let go of. Just like Paul was. And it would preserve your nightmares, reestablish daily, momentarily, everything that happens.

All of the intricate creativity and artwork of all the rides and grounds at Disneyland, are just tantalizing tidbits of nonsense that, like the fire draws the moth into the flame, draw you into your forgetfulness of what's important. Paul defined what was important to him as a holy work. Others might define it as a turning point in their career. Others might define it as obtaining emancipation as a woman.

The ego would PRESERVE your nightmares, and PREVENT you from awakening and understanding that they ARE past.

Every morning Paul could have gone out on that balcony and looked around and let the present jar him out of the mesmerizing eddy of his thoughts that he was caught by. You see, it isn't the circumstances with the transcripts or the demands of daily life that needs to be gotten away from, it's this insane use of the mind by becoming preoccupied and fixated and obsessed upon a way of looking at things that doesn't represent the facts, but which are so compellingly obvious to you in your distorted frame of reference, that you believe it.

Now . . .

Would you RECOGNIZE a holy encounter if you are merely perceiving it as a meeting with your own past?

See, that doesn't mean that you would perceive it, you'd say, "Oh, this is a meeting from my past." That isn't what it means. If you are merely perceiving something going on in the present, from a prior reference point, if you meet a new person who reminds you of a person you used to know, you're meeting with your own past, not with the individual in front of you.

So . . .

Would you RECOGNIZE a holy encounter if you are merely perceiving it as a meeting with your own past? For you are meeting no-one, and the SHARING of salvation, which MAKES the encounter holy, is excluded from your sight.

The last thing Paul wanted to do during those five days was share Salvation. [laughter] He wanted to nurse his wounds and let everybody know how insensitive they were.

The Holy Spirit teaches that you always meet YOURSELF, and the encounter is holy because YOU are. The ego teaches that you always encounter your past, and because your dreams WERE not holy . . .

. . . were, past tense . . .

. . . not holy the future CANNOT be, and the present is without meaning. It is evident that the Holy Spirit's perception of time is the exact opposite of the ego's.

Oh, yeah, The Holy Spirit, yeah—that which is nothing but your right Mind.

I want to introduce something here. The Course talks about the Voice for Truth and the voice for fear. Right?

Well, I'm going to tell you something. The Voice for Truth is the Holy Spirit, right?—nothing more than you're right Mind. Well, the Voice for Truth and the voice for fear are both your voice, you know, speaking out of both sides of your mouth. You give voice to one teacher or the other. Without you to give voice to it, neither teacher would be manifest.

When you give voice, as Paul did for those five days, to the voice for fear, you are speaking from a state of inner delusion. You are speaking from a mind-set that cannot get out of itself and insists upon magnifying itself. It is a form of insanity. It is an experience of mesmerism—of being mesmerized.

But when you make a point of becoming still and listening for the Holy Spirit, or me, or your Guide, and you hear and you give voice to that, you are giving voice to that which is nothing more is your right Mind. And that which you truly Are blossoms, blooms, begins to come forth and fill you with a new experience of yourself which, if it is entertained, if it is allowed to remain, will slowly and even rapidly, cause your frame of mind, your perspective to shift so that to entertain the voice for fear and give it voice will become less and less attractive to you.

And that's the way you step off the wheel of history. That's the way you slip through the little gap between the past and the future.

It is evident that the Holy Spirit's perception of time is the exact opposite of the ego's. The reason is equally clear, for they perceive the goal of time as diametrically opposed.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . your right Mind . . .

. . . interprets time's purpose as rendering the need for it unnecessary.

Paul could not have been miserable if he did not value time. Because the past had put him in a bad position that would cause his future to be more and more problematic. And that was his justification for not being present in the now, no matter what the stimulation was in the now.

The stimulation could have been when he was standing out on the balcony—a bird dropping falling and hitting the ground from a bird up in the pine tree—that could've been the point of stimulation that brought his attention into the Now and cleared his head. Because it wasn't the subject matter of his attention. It was, I'm going to say it this way, the timeliness of his perception. Was his perception really in the Now, uncolored by the past and uncolored by his projections of the future? You see? It doesn't matter what the subject matter is.

The Holy Spirit interprets time's purpose as rendering the need for it unnecessary. Thus does He regard the function of time as temporary, serving only his teaching function, which is temporary by definition.

The teaching function of your right Mind, is to bring you back into your right Mind. Well, that isn't going to take eternity. It isn't going to take forever. It is going to happen. And so, the time it takes means that the function is a temporary function. And when you finally yield into the moment, into the Now, and let your attention be there without the coloration of your memory or your anticipative imagination, you will wake up.

HIS emphasis . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . is therefore . . .

. . . listen to this . . .

. . . on the only aspect of time which CAN extend to the infinite, for NOW is the closest approximation of eternity which this world offers.

Why? Because it is as though the little gap between the line of the past and the line of the future, the little gap is sitting in the middle of eternity. It is happening now. It's the only thing that's present. And if the line that constitutes the past, and the line that constitutes the future were snuffed out, what would happen to the little gap? Well, the little gap only appeared to have size because of how close the line of the past and the line of the future were together. You drop them out and now that little space can't be identified between endlessness—eternity.

So . . .

HIS emphasis is therefore on the only aspect of time which CAN extend to the infinite, for NOW is the closest approximation of eternity which this world offers. It is in the REALITY of now, without past OR future, that the beginning of the appreciation of eternity lies. For only now is HERE, and IT presents the opportunities . . .

. . . Oh, dear, that awful thing called stimulation . . .

. . . IT presents the opportunities for the holy encounters in which salvation can be found.

You see, you take your weekends like Paul took his vacation. You take it with a grievance. You know, your life at work is stressful. But you get two days off. And you get a little relief where you can do a few things you would like to do. But the next week is gonna come and it's going to be like last week.

And you don't realize that last week was nothing more than a week of impressions you had about last week, and thoughts you had about those impressions. And what you're anticipating for next week, is built upon the impressions, not the actual experience with reality, but the impressions of reality which you took in the week before that you expect to happen. And so you set the stage. And you value this. You think you have to do it.

And like Paul discovered after the fact, he didn't have to do it and you don't have to do it. You don't have to get caught in an obsessive pattern of insane thinking. And thinking isn't even really a good word for what's happening. An obsessive, unintelligent discordant movement of disconnected, unreasonable thoughts which you think are totally reasonable. And because you believe them, when they are all impressions, and not an experience of reality at all, you need a means of escape. From what? Not the job, but from the fact that you are operating on the basis of impressions that you gather for whatever righteous reasons you've come up with, and which you use to refuse to experience the moment you're in—the Real moment. That is what you need freedom from. And that's where healing occurs.

The ego, on the other hand, regards the function of time as one of extending itself IN PLACE of eternity, for, like the Holy Spirit, the ego interprets the goal of time as its own. The continuity of past and future, under ITS direction, . .

. . . sound like control to you?

The continuity of past and future, under ITS direction, . .

. . . and doesn't it sound like Paul was trying to be in control the whole time everyone else was letting themselves be stimulated out of their gourd with good stuff that was irrelevant.

The continuity of past and future, under ITS direction, . .

. . . the ego's direction . . .

. . . is the only purpose the ego perceives in time, and it closes over the present so that no . . .

. . . what?

. . . gap in its OWN continuity can occur. ITS continuity, then, . .

. . . the continuity of insane thinking, insane preoccupation with that which distracts you from reality . . .

. . . would KEEP you in time, . .

. . . so that someday you do ride around in an old people's cart!

ITS continuity . . .

. . . which you maintain, there's no ego apart from you inflicting itself on you, you're maintaining it. It's a habit, it's the orphan mentality.

ITS continuity, then, . .

. . . if you reinforce it . . .

. . . would KEEP you in time, while the Holy Spirit would release you FROM it. It is HIS interpretation . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . of the means of salvation which you must learn to accept, if you would share His goal of salvation for you.

You, too, will interpret the function of time as you interpret yours.

As you interpret your function.

Well, hopefully Paul won't get caught up again in the righteous function of relaying the truth to the world that he and I together are sharing. He will be active in that function, but not as a righteous function, not as something that he must do in a way that impresses everyone else so that they will honor the truth that's being shared. I mean, to not be . . . or to cancel a meeting twenty-four hours before it happens for no good reason at all, except to jump on a plane and go to Disneyland, is not something that deserves much respect, is it?

And of course, he's not really interested in making a good impression. And he really isn't. But you know what? The ego gets in the other way around as I've mentioned before. He doesn't want to make a bad impression. And it's the same hook either way. Someone who's caught up in making a good impression is caught in the eddy just as much as the person who doesn't want to make a bad impression.

When being the Christ, giving voice to the Voice for Truth, isn't about looking good or looking bad, it's just about being in the now. It's about being in the gap. And while any of you are being in the gap, you help to pull others into it and make it easier for them to find it. And to value it more than what their history is telling them they are bound to experience in the future in which they must either defend themselves against, or use to undo the faults that they've engaged in, in the past.

If you accept your function in the world of time as healing, you will emphasize ONLY the aspect of time in which healing can occur.

Well, you think Paul was interested in healing [chuckling] anybody? No, they were all inflicting the irrelevant upon him. He wanted to protect himself. Do something to make his future not as bad as it was going to be if he continued to let himself be in this place—this activity that had no Meaning to it at all.

If you accept your function in the world of time as healing, you will emphasize ONLY the aspect of time in which healing can occur. For healing CANNOT be accomplished in the past, and MUST be accomplished in the present to release the FUTURE. This interpretation ties the future to the PRESENT, . .

. . . and I'm adding, instead of the past . . .

. . . and extends the present rather than the past. But if you interpret your function as destruction, you will lose sight of the present and hold on to the past to ENSURE a destructive future. And time WILL be as you interpret it, for of itself it is NOTHING.

When you find yourself beginning to feel incensed at others' lack of appreciation for what you value, and when you begin to see yourself as put upon by people or by circumstances, where what you value is constantly foiled, you may know that you have gotten caught in an eddy of, well, I'm going to call them, morbid thoughts swirling around a central point of attention that you are bringing to it and which you insist upon magnifying, which will ensure that you will be even more obsessively committed to it and it's the whole miasma of confusion that feels like intelligence that isn't real and that you don't have to honor and that you can escape by watching a bird-dropping fall, or watering a plant, or noticing a bloom, or daring to genuinely feel happy when everything from your memory says, "you have no choice but to be miserable. You have no reasonable choice but to feel miserable."

It's a lie. It's a mesmeric lie. It's a self-perpetuating confusion that will exist only as long as you give your attention to it and will vanish the moment you bring your attention into the little gap between memory and imagination—the past and the future.

[Addresses audience] I love you. I love you and I love everyone watching. This is not an advertisement: Get into the gap!

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 9th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Welcome to another Saturday night fireside chat in orphanland. And, as usual, I'm going to say things that will not make you comfortable, that will dispel mindsets, concepts that are bondages to you when you are in an absolute state of freedom.

You are not who you think you are. None of you are who you think you are.

Now, there's some unfinished business from last week. All of you were able to grasp the meaning of the Text because you had such a wonderful visual aid in Paul. All of you were able to see that at various times you've done the same thing. You have established a goal, you have become committed to it, you have focused your attention down upon it, and you have become obsessed with it to the exclusion of your capacity to see anything around you clearly.

As I said, you could all see that from time to time you do this. But there is a larger lesson here, a larger learning. And to simply spit it out succinctly, you all—every single one of you, and there are no exceptions, even if, on your spiritual path you have moments of insight—you are, all of you, in an obsessive state twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, fifty-two weeks a year ad infinitum.

It isn't just, from time to time, you have become obsessed and tiny. The very fact that you think you're listening to me from an orphanage, [chuckling] from an orphan mindset or as a physical human being who's learning more about what he truly is, you are doing exactly what Paul did while he was at Disneyland.

Now, the fact that it was Disneyland, helped the illustration be obvious to you. Because you know that what goes on in Disneyland, the Magic Kingdom, is very different from what you're confronted by every day of your life. It is a place of joy, it is a place of creativity, it is a place of, well I will say, mind-bending originality. And the bottom line purpose of it is pleasure. You can't say that about your workplace. You can't say that about your home. But you can say it about Disneyland.

Paul went to this place, carried with him his miserable mindset, took it with him everywhere he went and lived in his own little world which was not where he was . . . was not Disneyland. Oh, like all of you, he had his moments of, you might say, enlightenment. He had his moments of release from his mindset when something he was experiencing caught him off-guard and a little bit of awe and joy spontaneously emerged and he was caught in the now. But after that moment was over, he quickly reinstated his mindset.

You all, like Paul in Disneyland, are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven right now. Now, did Disneyland have to change? Would Disneyland have to change from what it is in order for Paul to be able to enjoy it? No. Paul would have had to change, and I say would have had to, because throughout the entire trip he didn't change. But Paul would have to change in order to experience it for what it was.

And likewise, does anything you're experiencing right now: homes, apartments, buildings, traffic, trees, sky, stars, planets, does any of that have to change in order for you to be able to see it as the Kingdom of Heaven? No. You have to change. And when you change, you will see homes, apartments, traffic, trees, sky, stars, planets with entirely, for lack of better words, new eyes. The fact is you will experience them all with Vision.

Your eyes will still see basically what you're seeing. But that is not going to be the source of your experience. Your Vision—how can I put it?—Vision is a Mind innocent of preconceptions . . . Vision is Mind innocent of agendas of its own . . . Vision is pure Mind which is what each of you Are, right now. And everything that you say you're experiencing out there is an experience going on in this Mind. And every object you see, every thing you see is an idea without material accompaniments. I mean by that, the drag of gravity—the tendency to experience inertia—that keeps you from shifting directions, being flexible, spontaneous. It is without the tendency to run down, deteriorate, and finally die. That's what ideas are minus the material accompaniments. That's what walls are, that's what fingernails are, that's what skin is, that's what flowers are.

So please understand, that to become enlightened, to Wake up, to come back into your right Mind is not going to constitute a loss of everything you're experiencing. It is going to constitute a loss of a veil of misperceptions and tiny small mindedness and judgment and commitment to ideas that aren't true, and commitment to [chuckle] your impressions of each other instead of your direct experience of each other. In other words, an absence of your commitment to the impression you have of another. So that you might not have this veil between you and your Brother, and can experience him as he is.

Disneyland did not have to change the layout of the paths that people walked on in order for Paul to become free of the idea that these paths were there for the purpose of making people move where it was desired to have them be as though they were just sheep being led, manipulated, and in the process, Disneyland is making a great deal of money from these followers—these sheep that could be led.

Mind you, that isn't what's going on at Disneyland, but that is the mean-spirited perception that Paul or his orphan mindset created and held between what it really was, what Disneyland really was, and what Paul was experiencing.

You know what? Everyone that comes into your day, everyone you encounter, as well as every thing, comes into your experience or is in your experience for one purpose: to have its divinity recognized. Mind you, their behavior might not seem divine. And the things that you see may seem to be dying, a favorite rose-bush, or a treasured tree in your yard might appear to be dying. It doesn't mean that the way you are seeing things from your current limited perspective are asking to have their divinity recognized. It means that in spite of the way you're seeing them, they are already divine and the call is for you to be willing to abandon what you are convinced about or convinced of about those things.

Ultimate reality is facing you at this moment. Everything is a constant opportunity to be willing to see more than what you're convinced is there. More than what you are convinced is there. Why? Because what is there is Real, is God Presencing Himself right there and the opportunity is stimulating.

If there's one thing I mean to convey to you last week and this week, it is that Reality is not something you will experience in a doldrum of peace, a state of even inactivity. Reality is awesome! What you are in the middle of is awesome, whether it's walls you think are static and not alive, or whether it's an orchid that you think is alive. The substance of both is Love, living Love—loving. And in its act of loving, is conveying all that it is, divinely, for you to experience.

But no, you're so damn sure it's just plaster and nails or a living organism, that you don't let go, you don't let yourself stand ready to experience what you're not expecting, because you are so sure of what's there. And your assurance of what everything is, is what constitutes your being in a constant state of denial of Reality. Not because you want to be denying it, but because you don't know and you haven't thought that there was an alternative.

You think you've always been an orphan and that life is a state of living in an orphanage where you have all of these mutual agreements with each other: you know, the dangerous ones that all of them are, because they're not any more dependable than you are, and you'd better protect yourself and you'd better negotiate with them carefully so as to ensure the greatest amount of peace. You see. None of this is going on. But twenty-four/seven, this is the way you are living.

Now, some of you orphans may have already trudged off back to your room because what I'm saying is so depressing—twenty-four/seven uninterruptedly? "I'm not doing well? There's something more I could be doing? I can't take this." Well, that's the impression of being an orphan. That's doing the impression [lowered sympathetic voice] of a poor mistreated, misunderstood orphan . . . poor thing . . . bye-bye . . . when you feel like coming out of your room, I'll still be here loving you, [resumes normal voice] and pointing out to you that you are not who you think you are and you are not what you think you are and the orphanage you are in is not an orphanage and those who occupy it are not orphans because it's all the Kingdom of Heaven, just as Disneyland was always Disneyland, even though for five days Paul [resumes sympathetic voice] went off to his room and hung out in the past, in his head and forecast a miserable future in his head and occupied himself with the tension and misery of such a mindset.

But you see, you have what it takes to grasp that Paul was out of his mind. That what Paul was experiencing wasn't valid. It was temporary insanity, we'll say. Likewise, it is very valuable for you, if you are not experiencing in your day that which is awesome, to assume that you might likewise, be experiencing a form of insanity, which you are preoccupied with and committed to because it's hard to believe that there's really anything else—really any other way of seeing and experiencing everything.

Now, you could toy with the idea of exercising a little bit of positive thinking even though I have pooh-pooed the power of positive thinking. You could dare to say, "Wow, if there really is so much more for me to be experiencing, I'm going to become a little bit conscientious about getting into that little gap between the past and the future—between memory and imagination.” You see, it’s easy for you to see that imagination is not memory, and memory is not imagination and so that they never could possibly connect.

Now, if everything and everyone in your experience every day is there for the purpose of having its divinity recognized, then you could reasonably say that you’re here to be a healer. You are here to engage in the healing of whatever is imperfect. Now, to ego orphans, that sounds great. “Oh, put up my shingle, I’m a healer, ‘Hey fellow orphans, hey fellow orphans, I am dedicated to healing you.’” No, remember Disneyland doesn’t have to change in order for Paul to experience it as it truly is and the Christ’s that are your Brothers, and the Kingdom of Heaven that you are actually in, do not and does not have to change in order for you to experience it without flawed perception.

So where does the change lie? It has to lie in your willingness to abandon the way you’re using the mind. And without getting terribly psychologically complicated, the one thing, the one basic thing that you’re doing that constitutes a wrong use of your mind is that you think you know what everything is.

Now, if that is false, that you do not know what everything really is, then all you have to do is to bring one thing into practice: Curiosity, a simple solution. But curiosity about what? To get the goods on your Brother, to know the truth about what’s really going on in his mind or her mind, what they’re really up to, like a psychic, so that you understand the motivations that are causing him to behave so poorly, or to engage in activities that are illegal so that you can be one jump ahead and get ‘em into prison because you’ve been able to psyche them out? No.

Remember, every one and every thing that comes into your experience, comes in to your experience for the purpose of having its divinity recognized. Why? Because all that is actually coming into your experience is the Real Disneyland or is the Christ that your Brother is, is the Kingdom of Heaven that is what really is. It invites you to see it for what it is. And in your willingness to see it for what it is, you dispel by your will to see the truth, your willingness to see beyond your present sense of sight and leave your insanity behind.

But you’ve got to remember, not only that you’re here to recognize the divinity of everything, but to actually engage in attentiveness. Instead of getting back in your mind where you’re rehearsing all of the known facts about so and so or about such and such. Known facts are memory. They are not facts. Facts are always experienced from the little gap between the past and the future in the now.

[addressing an audience member] So, you're leaving shortly to visit an aging step-mother, are you? And are you going to see her in "an old-folks home" with plaster wall boards and paint, dead inanimate matter put together in an attractive way? Or are you going to move through the Kingdom of Heaven to see someone who is the perfect expression of God, with an insistence not to be sidetracked by your memory or even hearsay about the current situation from other orphans who also do not know to look for the purpose to recognize the divinity of a thing? Your trip can be transformational for you and inspiring for you and likewise for her, if you will be willing to let something more in than what you're confident about already, and what the past has proven to you.

Each of you, if you're going to work, or to the grocery store or into the kitchen to cook, can ask yourself if all of the feelings and ideas you had associated with that activity is what's really going on, or is there something awesomely more significant there. You're going to, in effect, have to express some intent to Wake up. It's so very easy to just continue down the road that memory has laid before you, predicted for you, because that's what everyone does and you don't really know of many people who are doing it differently and most of all, it's your habit. And even more than that, you think that it's more than a habit, you think that it simply is life. And it's not! It's not! It's just a mindset—a frame of reference like a pair of glasses, colored glasses that lets you see only one color—even though the full spectrum is out in front of you to be experienced.

So remember, you could identify with what Paul went through, because from time to time, you have become that focused as an orphan, I'll say. And then from time to time, you've been more flexible and more open. But what I want you to understand is, that whether you're sleeping at night or awake in the daytime, you are in a mindset, you are in an eddy at the edge of the river, circling around constantly rehearsing what has been before, where you have been before.

I want to point out something though, this movement in a circular motion in the eddy, you aren't even responsible for. Whatever motion there is, is the effect of the river. And so you, even when you're in the eddy, are not free of or independent of or separated from the movement of Being—Reality.

Please, let there be growing dissatisfaction with repetition. Let there be growing dissatisfaction with the awful perceptions you're having about your life and your world. I know, I said that when you look out at the Kingdom of Heaven, it doesn't seem to report back to you that it's the Kingdom of Heaven. And you turn on the news and it's obvious to you it's not the Kingdom of Heaven and the news is distressing. Well, what do you expect? It's news about orphans, put on by orphans who lack the Vision necessary—the Vision that I was talking about that has answers. And for you to listen to what's coming over the media, the news media, and believe it and get upset or depressed because of it, is not the gift built into you that you have to give.

Don't get upset or depressed about it. As I've said before, put a thing across the top of your TV that says, "Today's best perception of Reality," so that you're reminded this isn't Reality, it's just a perception. Just like Paul's perception that he kept in place between him and the experience of Disneyland.

Whatever is coming across that tube or that radio or that newspaper or that magazine, is an invitation for Vision, which it is your function to be providing because of who you really Are. But you're going to have to start acting like what you're really are and stop behaving and doing the impression of an orphan.

Great statesmen throughout history have changed the course of history it appears, because they didn't accept the status quo and they didn't believe the stories that those in power and distress were telling—the sob story, the sad story about the injustice between this country and that country and their behavior and their ideologies and on and on and on. They had a Vision. And because they were diplomats, they found a way to express the Vision in which those who were in distress could see a new way.

What's needed today is Vision—inspired perspective that blesses everyone. Well, how can inspired perspective bless everyone if that perspective doesn't arise out of one—meaning any and all of you—who dared to step off the wheel of history, abandon the past and the future and be present in the "now" with the desire to recognize the divinity, the Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven that is actually going on.

"Well, the world is going to hell in a handbasket. And what can I do? I can't do anything." Poor little orphan, tch, tch, tch, no power to do anything. I guess you're just gonna have to be sad in your orphanage, miserable and die out your days until the bitter end so that by dying you can prove that you actually lived. It is insane, isn't it? Yes, just as Paul was the only one who could do anything to change his experience at Disneyland, each one of you is the only one who can do anything to change your experience of the world. And you have the capacity built in. It's already established as your function. But as I've said, it's going to mean that you're going to have to use a little bit of self-discipline and not just willy-nilly, follow like sheep along with that which all of the other orphans are putting forth, and which they don't have the capacity to see beyond.

Everything we're talking about is full of promise, not false promises, but real promise. Because everything is uncovering to you capacities, they're not even latent capacities, they're full blown capacities which at the moment you're consciously and conscientiously choosing not to employ. Why? Because you are consciously and conscientiously employing the orphan mindset. Because at the bottom line, in one way or another, you really do think that you came from, let us say, a physical explosion marking the beginning of physical development: when a sperm entered an egg and conception occurred. A physical thing occurred. And therefore, you can't possibly have any other source and therefore, you must of necessity be a lonely isolated physical entity sprung up in a physical world that has nothing to do with you and which you must cope with.

That's the story. That's the myth. That is the myth. Reality and the Kingdom of Heaven, which everyone thinks is a wonderful and potentially real myth that will be fully realized after you die, that's where the flaw is. That's where everything's a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync. And that is where what is not true is taken as truth. And that is where insanity sets in. And you don't need to be committed to insanity. You don't have to be. No-one is holding you to it.

I've said so many times: Be willing to look at everything with innocent eyes. Well, [chuckle] don't just be willing to do it. Do it! Because you deserve not to be suffering from ignorance.

Let's go into the Book. The new section is entitled:

THE TWO EMOTIONS¹

We have said that you have but two emotions, love and fear.

Love is what spontaneously flows from you when you're in the gap. When you're in time, fear is what you experience and what you broadcast, what flows from you. Paul's miserable experience was a result of fear and fear was secondary to his commitment to his own definitions of how things work and what is important and what isn't important. And the minute he or any of you gets caught in that mental trap, fear emerges and it governs behavior.

We have said that you have but two emotions, love and fear.
One is changeless but continually exchanged, being offered BY the eternal TO the eternal.

If everyone and everything comes into your experience for the purpose of having its divinity recognized, then your function is to recognize it. And so you extend that recognition. And the extension of that recognition is the act of Love. The Love is changeless but it gets exchanged between that which is eternal and that which is eternal.

In this exchange it is extended, for it INCREASES as it is given.

In exactly the same way, that in a large crowd, each member of which has a candle, if one person lights his candle with it, he can light the candle of the person next to him without his candle going out. It's the same light. It's the same energy. And by exchange, it is extended and increased.

So when you hear that everything about God is unchanging, and therefore, any kind of change that you're experiencing must be an illusion, recognize the falsity of that thought. Because through the exchange of that which is changeless, it is extended and it increases. And the increase can best be described by the word, Movement.

. . . it INCREASES as it is given.

Now that's the description of one of the two emotions.

The other has many forms, . .

And you'll recognize this as you remember Paul's experience.

The other has many forms, for the content of individual illusions differs greatly. Yet they have one thing in common; they are all insane.

You see. Paul can be obsessed with things associated with his work. You can be obsessed with entirely different things. But . . .

. . . they have one thing in common; they are all insane. They are made of sights which are NOT seen and sounds which are NOT heard.

Do you think while Paul was at Disneyland, the sites that he saw were the actual events, or his biased perception of them? Or the sounds that he heard, were the sounds really happening? He even got to the point when there were live bands playing for the enjoyment of everyone, to have judgments about the kind of music that was being allowed in Disneyland. It was not enjoyable to him. He was not hearing the sounds that were being made.

They are made of sites which are NOT seen and sounds which are NOT heard. They make up a private world which CANNOT be shared. For they are meaningful ONLY to their maker, and so they have no meaning at all.

You see, in order for something to have meaning, it has to be something that not only can be shared, but is shared. Can't share if you're insistent upon being absolutely private—solitary, separate, different.

In this world their maker moves alone, . .

[chuckling] And believe it or not, Paul was surrounded by thousands of people for four days, not to mention his wife and family. And yet he wasn't with them. And he was alone. Literally, the experience was a lonely experience.

In this world . . .

The one we make up—you make up . . .

. . . their maker moves alone, . .

Why?

. . . for only he perceives them.

Each one peoples his world with figures from his individual past, . .

. . . in other words, memory . . .

. . . and it is because of this that private worlds DO differ.

Each of your memories, even of the same events, are different. Why? Because you depend upon not the experience of the event, but an impression you got from the event. [whew!]

Yet the figures that he sees were NEVER real, for they are made up only of HIS reactions to his brothers, and do not include their reactions to HIM. Therefore he does not SEE that he made them, and that they are not whole.

What makes them not whole? The fact that there's not any connection between the one perceiving them and the one perceived. That's why its not whole. There isn't wholeness without connection. And there cannot be connection between orphans because orphans are holding themselves as uniquely alone and it is absolutely necessary for their aloneness to be unaltered else every effort they make, or every effort he makes to prove his existence will not be pure and therefore will not be absolutely valid.

If any part of one's worth is gathered from some other source, then his worth is not pure and he cannot have succeeded in demonstrating that by his own effort that he could create himself and prove his existence.

Therefore he does not SEE that he made them, and that they are not whole. For these figures have no witnesses, being perceived in one separate mind only.

It is THROUGH these strange and shadowy figures that the insane relate to their insane world. For they see ONLY those who remind them of these images, and it is to THEM . . .

. . . the images . . .

. . . that they relate. Thus do they communicate . . .

. . . ha-ha . . .

. . . with those who are not there, and it is THEY who answer them.

You perceive someone . . . Paul perceived members of his family at Disneyland as those who ought to be able to communicate with him on the level and in the nature of his distorted mindset because it seems so obviously reasonable to him. And so, when he talked to them about the meaninglessness of being where they were, and they couldn't agree, and even extended Vision of what was really present to be experienced, he did not hear that. He heard himself speaking back saying, "You are misunderstood Paul, you are not appreciated Paul. They do not understand the gravity of the disobedience you're engaging in by not honoring the work that you're doing." And following along with them because they were tired and needed a break. You see. So no matter what was said, he heard what he wanted to hear.

Thus do they communicate with those who are not there, and it is THEY who answer them. And no-one hears their answer save him who called upon them, and he alone believes they answered him. Projection makes perception and you CANNOT see beyond it.

As long as you're operating on the basis of your definitions of everything—your best definitions of everything, and you are not allowing for there to be more, and you're not curious for there to be a larger picture to experience and to be open to it—you will see what you're projecting and you will not be able to see beyond it. You simply won't.

Again and again have men attacked each other because they saw in them a shadow figure in their OWN private world. And thus it is that you MUST attack yourself first, for what you attack is NOT in others.

Paul's apparent judgment upon Disneyland itself, and all of the beauty there and all of the creativity there and upon those who were with him, were really an attack on his undeviating choice as to how to see them, how he chose to see them. And so he was attacking himself, not them. He wasn't even in touch with them. He had no capacity in his moment of insanity to even be able to appreciate the joy that they were experiencing and the sense of family and brotherhood and togetherness that they were experiencing. He wasn't in their world at all. And his insistence upon sticking to his guns and judging them, constituted a judgment upon himself which is what made his misery. It is what makes your misery.

And thus it is that you MUST attack yourself first, for what you attack is NOT in others. Its only reality is in your OWN mind, and by attacking others you are literally attacking what is NOT THERE.

Now what this world needs now is you willing to have and desiring to have Vision, which can be experienced only in the now, in the gap between past, memory (and of course its your memory) and future, imagination (and of course is your imagination). So its entirely a head trip, its entirely private and its entirely yours. And you've got to break the isolation in order to become free of your insanity, in order to become free of your miserable and demoralizing imaginations.

I'm sorry orphans, but I must say this.

The delusional can be very destructive, for they do not recognize that they have condemned THEMSELVES.

You hold yourselves in a miserable state. A state of birth, growth, aging, death, struggle, and on and on. You hold yourself in that apparent process because you are not willing to get into the gap and dare to look with innocence. In other words, without preconceptions—without the past and without an anticipation of the future. A capacity each of you, perfectly, already has.

The delusional can be very destructive, . .

. . . and indeed Paul's behavior was not pleasant for those around him . . .

. . . for they do not recognize that they have condemned THEMSELVES. They do not wish to die, yet they will not let condemnation GO. And so they separate into their private worlds, where everything is disordered, and where what is within appears to be without. Yet what IS within they do not see, . .

. . . in other words what's really within . . .

. . . they do not see, for the REALITY of their brothers they CANNOT see.

And why can they cannot see the reality of their brothers? Because they've not known or have forgotten that it's their function to recognize the divinity of everything that comes into their experience. And so rather than engaging in acknowledging—recognizing a Brother's divinity, they are engaging in condemnation of them. Why? Because they remind them of something from their past that they're stuck on. And so they respond from their memory, totally avoiding the opportunity for connection in the now.

You have but two emotions, yet in your private world you react to each of them as though it were the OTHER. For love cannot abide in a world apart, where when it comes it is not recognized. If you see your own hatred . . .

. . . if you see your own hatred, if you see your own distress, if you see your own bitterness . . .

. . . AS your brother, . .

. . . or as your world . . .

. . . you are not seeing HIM. Everyone draws nigh unto what he loves, and recoils from what he fears. And you react with fear to love, and draw away from it.

Yeah, Paul sure did. Susan was very loving, firm at times, objecting to his behavior, but nevertheless, truly loving. His daughter and his grandson of course, were constantly being present in a loving fashion and inviting participation in the fun. And yet he reacted with fear to it. Which means that he reacted to it based upon the fear he was embodying because he was choosing not to be present, and to rehearse and stick with the dilemma that his past that was presenting, of his falling short of everything that he needed to be doing. And couple that with the fact that his absence from attending to that was going to cause for him a more horrible future, he responded to the love with fear.

And you react with fear to love, and draw away from it.

Oh yes, and you don't know how many times he went out on that balcony and withdrew from the group to have his private time of misery in which he did approach me, he did approach me, but he wanted to know how to correct the problem of his having to be somewhere that didn't fit his preconception of what was principled, orderly, productive and truly Meaningful.

Yet fear ATTRACTS you, and believing it IS love, you call it to yourself.

Not really so hard to understand. Paul embodied it perfectly. Paul felt, with all righteousness, that his not attending to the important aspects of the work he was doing with me, which was causing him to be fearful, was an act of love because he was giving honor to that which no-one else was. You see? So he saw that his dilemma was a result of real love that he was intent upon expressing, wanting to express, wanting to share. That's how it can happen.

Yet fear ATTRACTS you, and believing it IS love, you call it to yourself. Your private world is filled with the figures of fear you have invited into it, and all the love your brothers offer you YOU DO NOT SEE. As you look with open eyes upon your world, it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.

Now there really is no good place to interrupt this, and so we will interrupt it now and continue next week.

As you look with open eyes upon your world, it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.

Now, such words again cannot appropriately be used to judge yourself, condemn yourself, or depress yourself. You haven't known you were doing it. And you haven't known that there truly is an alternative. And even though we've been talking for many, many months about alternatives, it isn't until now that it could be brought into clearer focus for you so that you could see just exactly how you do it. But once you know that there is an alternative, and once you could see that hey, yes, you really do do this, until that happens, you're not in a position to change your mind.

And so this information is here to confront you with the fact that you can change your mind and have a new experience. Not because your mind is powerful enough to make new experiences for you, but because your mind, not used incorrectly, is a mind that's in the gap. And the gap is part of infinity, is part of eternity—the wholeness of you. And so you have a point of escape. It's wonderful. It's simple. There is a point of escape from dreams, from illusions, and it's in the now. And the act that you are called upon in order to make the escape in the now, is to remember that everyone and every thing comes into your experience for the purpose of what? Your making a gift. Ah-h breaking the isolation. Making the gift of acknowledging the divinity of that thing. You do everything else. You always have been doing everything else instead of that. Because the simplicity of it hasn't been made apparent to you.

So, I'm not saying to everybody: "The orphanage you're in is an evil place and you orphans are evil things." What I'm saying is, that the building you are calling an orphanage, and the individuals you are that you are calling orphans, are Christs and the Kingdom of Heaven—part of the Kingdom of Heaven. It's all the Glory of God—the awesomeness of Creation that you've missing the experience of because you've been so sure of what everything is.

Now, your assurance is being weakened. And as it is weakened, light-bulbs are going to start going on. Insights are going to start occurring. And instead of attempting to change Disneyland, instead of trying to change everything you're experiencing—the Kingdom of Heaven in other words—you will catch the mental habit of insanity and let it be dispelled by bringing your attention into the now with the conscious desire to recognize the divinity of each and every thing. Make the gift of the willingness to join in acknowledgement of what is true, for your brother and for every thing in your world.

[addressing an audience member] You have a really wonderful trip, one that you weren't anticipating going on. And all of you have a truly wonderful week by letting something more than what you've been anticipating in.

And I look forward to being with you all next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 23rd 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to go right into the Book tonight. And I'm going to back up one sentence.

As you look with open eyes upon your world, it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.¹

Now, we've talked at length for the last couple of weeks using Paul as the object lesson so that you might grasp what this sentence means.

As you look with open eyes upon your world, it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.

There are those who are listening every Saturday night who do not like to hear this, or question my using the word, "orphan" as something that applies to each one of you. After all, if you are the Christ as I've also said all along, then everything about you must be alright. If you are the offspring of God, then right now, everything must be alright. It must be, you must be, the way God planned for you to be. After all, He gave you free will. If He gave you free will, He gave it to you to exercise. Therefore, everything you're doing currently, and everything that your fellow man is doing currently, is a reflection of the Will of God. Because He gave you free will. Everything that you're doing, whether anyone likes what you're doing or not, must be in divine order.

This is very dangerous thinking. And it is thinking.

You are all experiencing "the human condition." Every single one of you knows that if you could choose, you wouldn't choose for the human condition—suffering, sickness, death, anguish, grief, abuse. And if, perchance, you happen to have an experience that is relatively smooth and pleasant, you cannot for a moment totally relax and have confidence in its continuity. This is the human condition. If you are experiencing what I have described to any degree, you are asleep. You are, in other words, not Awake, not consciously experiencing Reality—the Reality of you as the Christ, the Reality of you as God is Being you, right now. And because you are not experiencing it, you are having, for lack of any better words, an experience of being alone, isolated, vulnerable, without a source. In other words, without a source that is even, that is unvariable, that is characterized by joy and peace and invulnerability.

You are experiencing being an orphan. An orphan is not what you are, but you are not going to Wake up until you call your current experience into question. If you don't call your current experience into question, you will imagine a God who has set things up so that your current condition, situation, is on purpose and therefore must be fulfilling purpose, and therefore, you will accept everything that is going on, endure it, and struggle mightily to change it into a better experience.

Last week I shared with you that you are experiencing ignorance, that you are experiencing being isolated from your Source—being sourceless, an orphan—that you are pre-occupied with what you believe everything is, which you have come to say you know everything is, as though what you know is a fact, and that you are coping with life on the basis of memory and imagination. Memory of the past, imagination of the future, which pulled together cause you to behave in ways in the present that have nothing to do with the present—nothing to do with the “now.”

That is insanity. And if it is not said clearly and succinctly, as it says right here:

As you look with open eyes upon your world, . .

. . . in other words, with insight, . .

. . . it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.

You must look at that squarely, else you will not genuinely and with commitment look for an alternative—be open to an alternative. And you will stay stuck in the eddy you're in, circling around repetitiously and never getting back into the main stream.

As you look with open eyes upon your world, it MUST occur to you that you have withdrawn into insanity.

You see what is not there, and you hear what is soundless.

Now much of this is a repetition—a summation of what we've been reading for the last couple of weeks—and so I'm not going to elaborate on each thing because I've already gone into them in great detail.

You see what is not there, and you hear what is soundless. Your behavioral manifestations of emotions are the OPPOSITE of what the emotions are. You communicate with no-one, and you are as isolated from reality as if you were alone in all the universe. In your madness you overlook reality COMPLETELY, . .

As I said, Paul spent five days at Disneyland and overlooked it completely. That doesn't mean that he was preoccupied with the things that he ought to be back at home doing. It means that as he was at Disneyland, he was interpreting everything that was going on there in a mean-spirited way. He was giving definitions to everything he saw, different from what was happening. He seemed to be present with it, but he torqued his perception and did it most unkindly, most judgmentally, most arrogantly. And I said, he was surrounded by thousands of people and he was alone.

In your madness . . .

. . . in his madness . . .

. . . you overlook reality COMPLETELY, . .

. . . he overlooked Disneyland completely—the meaning of it, the experience of it, what was really going on . . .

. . . and you see . . .

. . . he saw . . .

. . . only your OWN split mind everywhere you look.

Now, as I also clarified last week, this describes every single one of you now—twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, fifty-two weeks a year—because you are experiencing “the human condition.” You're not free of it yet. And so you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven not seeing It. Right now you are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, you are in the middle of Reality, and you are not seeing it.

Now, when the ego tries to split hairs and say, “Okay, I'm in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven right now and there are accidents occurring, people are running into telephone poles knocking out the electricity. And the people that live in their homes without electricity are going to lose the food in their freezers and they're going to have to change their schedules so that the kids can have something to eat and life is generally difficult." That's just one tiny example. And this is life everyday in one form or another. You are not Awake.

In your madness you overlook reality COMPLETELY, and you see only your OWN split mind everywhere you look.

That's life for every single one of you, even though you have your moments, your high spots, your breakthroughs, your illuminations, and healings here and there. But remember, that I said early on, that healing is coming to the place where you are free of the liability to be ill. Not just that if you get ill you can have a healing, but to arrive at a point where you are free of the liability to be ill.

Now. . .

God calls you and you do not hear, for you are preoccupied with your own voice.

Disneyland called to Paul but he did not hear because he was preoccupied with his own voice. But now in a larger sense that applies to everyone whether you're going to Disneyland or not, or whether you're at Disneyland or not, everything in your experience is the visibility and tangibility of God. And It calls for you to recognize It. It calls for you to hear It. Why? So that in hearing It and recognizing It, you experience God. You are able to glorify God because of your recognition of God in every little thing—every little thing that's already in your world. And to glorify God is your function. To glorify God is to recognize and stand in awe of, to feel the awesomeness of, to feel the wonder of, and to feel that the underlying nature and substance of what you're experiencing is a Love beyond anything you have experienced yet—stable . . . even . . . full . . . and extending.

God calls you . . .

. . . out of everything you see . . .

. . . and you do not hear, for you are preoccupied with your own voice.

And this really means the voice in your head that declares that the past is valuable and dependable. And the voice in your head that says it can use imagination to predict the future and thereby based upon the past, control it better for a better experience.

And the vision of Christ is not in your sight, for you look upon yourself ALONE.

The idea is suggested that the truth is utterly simple. And that the simplicity of it is that you must learn to look at your life—the human condition—and accept it for what it is. Accept it as God functioning and being in ways that contribute to your growth, that cause you to develop and become more, and be a greater fulfillment of yourself.

You see, it is as though the suggestion is, that the simplicity is in accepting everything as it is currently being experienced. This is very satisfying to the ego because it doesn't challenge its fundamental premise which is, that it is alone, that it is isolated and that it, by its own efforts and its own developed skills, can ultimately prove that it really exists and that it, in its isolated state, is absolutely real.

But the simplicity of all of this is, that you have a means of stilling this inner voice that proudly holds up memory—the past—and says, "I am the sum total of all of my experiences." You've all heard that phrase. "Well, he's the sum total of his experiences and if you look at the experiences he was confronted with, it's obvious why he thinks or she thinks and behaves the way he or she does—She or he is the sum total of his past experiences." You See the ego holds up and values the past as though it is what is making it actual.

The simplicity of Waking up lies in stilling that voice—becoming still, becoming quiet and doing . . . what? . . . saying, "Help!" Reaching out beyond memory, reaching out beyond everything swirling around in your mind and joining with something beyond you. That is the simplicity of it and the ego doesn't like that because in joining, it's autonomy is lost.

. . . the vision of Christ is not in your sight, for you look upon yourself ALONE.

. . . unjoined, unconscious of anything to join with and heavily guarded against any subtle invitation to abandon your autonomy and join. And so, you secure yourself in the eddy—the wheel of history.

Little children, would you offer THIS to your Father?

Everything in your experience calls to you to see God in it. You say, "I see what I see in it. I see what I have determined everything is and no, I do not see God in it." So the call to recognize God has come and that is what you have given back—a denial, an unwillingness to see.

Little children, would you offer THIS to your Father? For if you offer it to yourself you ARE offering it to Him. And He will NOT return it, for it is unworthy of you because it is unworthy of Him.

What's the connection there? "Well, it's unworthy of you because it's unworthy of Me!" God says. No, it's not that kind of separated, authoritative stance. When you have forgotten who you are, that who you are is determined by that which is Sourcing you. You have gotten the divorce from your Father that we talked about at great length and yet you don't cease being the direct expression of God.

When you say, "I came from a sperm and an egg, I'm a physical organism, a part of evolution and either there is no God or God set this all in motion way, way back and now we're free and bound to fend for ourselves," you are thinking in a manner that is unworthy of your Real divine stature.

You are offering something to yourself that you are unworthy of. And in offering to yourself what you are unworthy of, you are offering it to the Father because the Father is what gives you your existence. The Movement of God is what constitutes your being. And so, when you offer this to yourself, you are offering it to the Father and the Father will not return it. He will not acknowledge what you are giving because it's unworthy of Him and it's unworthy of you because it is a lie. It is an illusion. It is an imagination.

Now, I mentioned a little bit ago, for the most part, most of you believe that God gave you free will. And I'm going to agree with that. He did give you free will. But He didn't give you free will to do the impossible. And to try to be and to pretend to be an orphan, is to try to be something you cannot be. And so, you will get no confirmation from the Father. And not being able to be or do something impossible is not a violation of your free will. Is that clear? [addressing someone in the audience] I'm not looking at you specifically.

The fact that you cannot do the impossible is not a violation of a capacity God gave to you, which was to exercise free will. Just let that sink in for a moment.

When you try to do the impossible, you are confronted with the impossibility of it. That confrontation is uncomfortable. There is no peace to it. It is an experience of disturbance. Not because God has looked down and said, "You are being disobedient and I am going to punish you," but because, when you try to do what you cannot possibly do, it's like pressing your fist into the Rock of Gibraltar with all of your might. It isn't going to be comfortable. It will be full of stress and strain and pain that will always be equal to the amount of force you are bringing to bear against that which will not move.

And the solution, therefore, is always to stop trying to do the impossible.

Little children, would you offer THIS to your Father? For if you offer it to yourself you ARE offering it to Him. And He will NOT return it, for it is unworthy of you because it is unworthy of Him. Yet He WOULD release you from it and set you free.

He would.

His sane answer tells you that what you have offered yourself is not true, but HIS offering to you has never changed. You who know not what you do CAN learn what insanity is, . .

. . . and if what I've been sharing with you, is registering with you, you are learning what insanity is. You don't want to learn what it is, but you are learning what it is. And hopefully, you are not going to continue to try to push it out of your mind.

Here's the key . . .

You who know not what you do CAN learn what insanity is, and look beyond it.

And that's the point. To just look at what insanity is and how you're practicing it, would be depressing if you stopped there. If you see that you have yourself boxed in or locked into an eddy, you must reach outside of the box—look beyond it. You must invite something else in. Invite something else into the privacy that you value so greatly and the autonomy that is essential to your worth.

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, . .

. . . and let me say again, if you are unwilling to acknowledge that insanity is occurring, you will not be able to arrive at a point where you deny it, which is an absolutely essential step in order to get beyond it.

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, and . . .

. . . and what? . .

. . . come forth from your private world in peace.

And I want the last two words to register with you: in peace.

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, and come forth from your private world in peace.

. . . with Grace, [said with great emphasis] not struggle, not strain, not you lifting yourself up by your bootstraps.

You will see all that you have denied in your brothers BECAUSE you denied it in yourself.

[repeats] You will see all that you [have] denied in your brothers BECAUSE you denied it in yourself.

Everything that you denied in yourself right now, you disallow for seeing in your brothers. It is impossible for you to conceive that they might actually be further ahead of you, or in advance of you, or superior to you in any significant meaningful way. If you are untrustworthy, if you lie, if you are deceitful, you will see whoever seems to be in advance of you or more successful than you, as having achieved what they've achieved through the same sort of deceit and dishonesty that you employ.

You will not be able to see that perhaps their fulfillment is because they have left the orphanage—they have abandoned isolation, they have found the place of excellence within them and have yielded into it, they have reached outside of their box. You will not be able to see that because the measuring stick you use for yourself is always applied to one degree or another to everyone you see and everything you see.

You will see all that you denied in your brothers BECAUSE you denied it in yourself. For you will love them, . . .

. . . really love them because you've abandoned the orphan mentality . . .

. . . and by drawing nigh unto them you will draw them to yourself, perceiving them as witnesses to your reality which you share with God.

But you will not have that experience of your reality which you share with God until you invite God in—until you abandon your arrogant independence . . . until you abandon your belief in the absolute necessity of your autonomy.

I am with THEM as I am with YOU, . . .

[repeats] I am with THEM as I am with YOU, . . .

. . . and as I am with Paul . . .

. . . and we will . . .

. . . you and I will . . .

... draw them from their private worlds, for as we are united ...

Oh, not separated, not independent ...

... for as we are united so would we unite with them.

So would we unite with them.

The Father welcomes all of us in gladness, and gladness is what WE should offer HIM. For every Son of God is given you to whom God gave HIMSELF.

God gave Himself to you by Being all there is of you. And every Son of God is given to you just as every other thing infinitely speaking in all of Creation is given to you to recognize God in, and to experience the perfection of, the invariable perfection of.

For every Son of God is given you to whom God gave HIMSELF. And it is God whom you must offer them, . .

... how do you offer them God? Well, when you're willing to be in the gap between memory and imagination ... when you're willing to be in the gap, Vision becomes yours and your capacity to recognize and acknowledge what's really happening—the Presence of God in each and everything—constitutes your gift of recognition of God and that's the only thing you have to share. And I will tell you something: when you have this experience and you share it, it is joy shared and it is very attractive.

And it is God whom you must offer them, . .

... again, when you've moved into the little gap and you are recognizing God, all you have present in your mind to share or extend is that experience of God.

And it is God whom you must offer them, to recognize His gift to YOU.

You will never get a private realization of the Godness of you. The realization of God is one that brings with it an indisputable awareness that God is in everything. And so that is what you extend. That is what your action embodies.

And we spoke last week about what Vision is. And so I'm not going to repeat myself.

Vision depends on light, . .

... another word for light is illumination, that which makes things clear.

Vision depends on light, and you cannot see in darkness. Yet in the darkness, in the private world of sleep, . .

... meaning at night . . .

. . . you SEE in dreams although your eyes are closed. And it is here that what you see you MADE. But let the darkness go and all you made you will no longer see, . .

In other words when you allow your eyes to flutter open in the morning, everything you were seeing will not be there.

But let the darkness go and all you made you will no longer see, for sight of it depends upon DENYING vision.

Remember, last week I mentioned that as Vision dawns upon your sight, everything you currently see with your eyes will still look generally the same, but your eyes will not be the source of what you're seeing. You will not be depending upon your eyes to see it. The reference point for what you're seeing will be Vision—Mind undistorted in any way by any preoccupation with memory or imagination.

. . . let the darkness go and all you made you will no longer see, for sight of it depends upon DENYING vision. Yet from denying vision it does not follow that you CANNOT see.

That's important. To not heavily weight—w-e-i-g-h-t—to heavily weight the importance of what your eyeballs see, what the retina registers and transmits to a brain, is to distract yourself from the fact that what you're looking with is your mind and that you are seeing what is in mind because consciousness is where everything is going on.

Yet from denying vision it does not follow that you CANNOT see. But this is what denial DOES, for by it you ACCEPT insanity, believing you can make a private world and rule your OWN perceptions.

And that's what Paul did for five days. He made his own private world and ruled his own perceptions. And although there was something Real there for him to see, he did not see it.

Yet for this light . . .

... insight, illumination ...

... MUST be excluded.

When you're preoccupied with your own thoughts, you are not letting any other source of illumination of anything to exist for you except your memory and your imagination. It's absolutely private and has nothing to do with your eyes at all.

Dreams disappear when light has come and you can SEE.

Do not seek vision through YOUR eyes, for you MADE your way of seeing ...

... Paul made his way of seeing ...

... that you might see in darkness, and in this you are deceived.

That's why I say, whenever you look at anything be willing to look at it with innocent eyes minus preconceptions, and with a desire to see the more that is there than what you're currently seeing.

BEYOND this darkness, ..

... beyond your incapacity to see what's really there ...

BEYOND this darkness, and yet still WITHIN you, is the vision of Christ, ..

"But Father, I'd rather do it my way. I'd rather see it my way. I'd rather see it alone." But—and here we come back to the simplicity of things—if you will abandon your autonomy and your extreme valuing of it and you will join with Something Else, meaning the Christ, His Vision will be shared with you, which will be an uncovering of your real Vision. But that will not happen as long as you find a way to justify being isolated and independent from God.

Do not seek vision through YOUR eyes, for you MADE your way of seeing that you might see in darkness, ..

... that you might experience things truly in the midst of ignorance ...

... and in this you are deceived. BEYOND this darkness, and yet still WITHIN you, is the vision of Christ, Who looks on all in light. Your vision ...

... as an orphan ...

... comes from fear, as His ...

... the Christ's ...

... from love.

And here's what cannot happen as long as you are maintaining independence:

And He ...

... the Christ, Me ...

... sees FOR you as your witness to the real world.

It is so simple. It is so utterly simple, the Answer. I am here, as I am with right now in this fashion, and I am here with each of you individually as I am with Paul, individually. For what purpose? To share my Vision. I will cautiously say, to share my perspective.

To say it in a way that can't be misconstrued, I am here to share how Creation looks to that which is forming it: God. I am not here to share my personal perspective, but the Truth, as God is Being it, and Being Conscious of it, being Mindful of it.

He ...

... Me, the Christ ...

... is the Holy Spirit's manifestation, looking always on the real world, and calling forth its witnesses and drawing them unto YOU. For He loves what He sees within you, and He would EXTEND it.

But to extend it means involvement—an absence of privacy, an absence of independence—which means you're going to have to abandon the great valuing and commitment you bring to being an orphan.

*For He loves what He sees within you, and He would EXTEND it.
And He will not return unto the Father ...*

... I will not return unto the Father ...

... until He ...

... I ...

... has extended your perception even unto Him.

... the Father.

And there perception is no more, for He has returned you to the Father with Him.

I have returned you to the Father with Me. “No man cometh unto the Father but by Me.” ²

No man cometh unto the Father but by One who is Awake, One who is fully aware of what he divinely is. One who is not in any fashion denying his Christhood, One who is not in any way denying that he has a Father from Whom all that has Meaning, and indeed His very existence comes from.

One you, the orphan, made—one that you, the neat little one all by himself, doing his best and getting better at it, one was made by that, created by that, by your own hard effort and you sure as hell can take credit for it.

But the other was given to you—a gift. Well, a gift has to come from someone else. That a gift is proffered and received, means that a shift in the receiver's mind has to occur that's willing to embrace that there is something else that can actually extend something that none of the other orphans can extend, something that comes from a place beyond memory and imagination.

You have but two emotions, and one you made . . .

... one you made up . . .

... and one was given you. Each is a WAY OF SEEING, . .

... Oh boy, you gotta be careful of this one . . .

Each is a WAY OF SEEING, . .

The orphan can say, “Wow, you mean all I have to do is adopt a different way of seeing. Okay, I'll make up a different way of seeing. I'll make up a different way of seeing. I'll make up away of seeing that allows me to look at everything in its awfulness and describe it in fairer terms. And I'll find a way of looking at it and construe it so that I can present a façade of evenness and happiness. I'll just find another way of seeing—I'll make up another way of seeing.”

No. That's no shift at all. Because no movement out of privacy has occurred. No joining has occurred, which is the essential element.

Each is a WAY OF SEEING, and different worlds arise from their different visions.

Now indeed, you can change your attitude and you can change your way of seeing and indeed, the world you see will be different for you. I assure you that if I told Paul to go to Disneyland this next weekend, he would have a heck of a lot better time this time than he did last time. Why? Because he's going to look at it differently. But, is he going to look at it with me?

. . . different worlds arise from their different visions.

The world that arises from the vision you made up is imaginary. The world that arises from love is the real world seen for what it is, because you're no longer introducing any bias into it.

See through the vision that is given you, . .

. . . accept the gift. Let it undo your sense of isolation. Let it undo your right to prove your almighty confident self.

See through the vision that is given you, for through Christ's vision He beholds Himself.

Through your divine vision, you will see the Christ that you Are.

And seeing what He is, . .

. . . what? . .

. . . He knows his Father.

When you see who you Are, you know that you are nothing all by yourself. You will know that you have no existence all by yourself. When you see yourself as you Are, you will see yourself as that which God is Presencing of Himself infinitely right there where you are. You will know who you Are because you will know What is Sourcing you.

And it will not be an intellectual realization, it will be experiential.

Beyond your darkest dreams He . . .

. . . the Christ . . .

... sees God's guiltless Son within you, . .

He, the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . sees God's guiltless Son within you, shining in perfect radiance which is undimmed by your dreams.

Undimmed by your preoccupation with orphanhood and rallying the orphans around you in the orphanage to help get you the things you think you want, and to negotiate with them and barter with them and kiss-ass with them so that they think you're giving them something they want so that you ultimately can get what you want and so on.

Beyond your darkest dreams He sees God's guiltless Son within you, shining in perfect radiance which is undimmed . . .

. . . by all of that bullshit . . .

. . . undimmed by your dreams. And this YOU will see as you look with Him, for His vision is His gift of love to you, given Him of the Father FOR you.

I am here for one purpose: To help you fulfill your purpose. And for you to no longer be distracted by purposes you have imagined for yourself and set yourself the task of accomplishing.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right mind . . .

. . . is the light in which Christ stands revealed. And all who would behold Him can see Him, for they have ASKED for light.

What does that mean, "asking for light?"

When you're fed up finally, with suffering, when you're fed up with the struggle, and you're ready to give up, you will say, "Help!" But you don't have to wait until the dire end of your capacity to persist. You can say "help" at any time. It just needs to be genuine.

And all who would behold Him can see Him, for they have ASKED for light. Nor will they see Him ALONE, for He is no more alone than they are.

Meaning, all who would behold Him.

Because they saw the son they have risen in Him . . .

. . . either the Christ or the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . to the Father.

You come home. You come home, not to glory in the sky, but you come home to your right Mind, where your mind is not being used for purposes it can't accomplish.

And all this will they understand . . .

. . . all this will you understand . . .

. . . because they looked within and saw beyond the darkness the Christ in them, . .

I will repeat myself incessantly on this point so that you cannot easily ignore it or deny that you know it.

. . . all this will they understand because they looked within and saw beyond the darkness . . .

How can you see beyond the darkness? Not by saying, "The darkness was created by God and it must have a divine purpose and I must just accept it as it is and find the perfection in the chaos, find perfection in the suffering. You see?"

You will not see beyond the darkness until you break the element that is itself the darkness. And the element that is itself the darkness is, independence, is autonomy, is self-existence. And when you abandon that and find yourself in the little gap of "now" that is itself part of eternity—reality—the experience of the Christ, of Me, of the Christhood of your fellow man, of your Christhood, will emerge and grow in your awareness. And you will say, [said with conviction] "I know. I understand. It's utterly clear to me. It's infinitely, utterly clear to me. And I'm able to embrace this infinite clarity and not feel overwhelmed by it even though the experience of infinity is something I didn't know I could bear."

The Holy Spirit is the light in which Christ stands revealed.

In which you stand revealed.

And all who would behold Him can see Him, for they have ASKED for light. Nor will they see Him ALONE, for He is no more alone than they are. Because they saw the son they have risen in Him to the Father. And all this will they understand because they looked within and saw beyond the darkness . . .

. . . but still within, I'm adding that . . .

. . . the Christ in them, and RECOGNIZED Him.

See, no longer saying, "No, I don't see the Christ there. I see what I believe it is and what I say it is, is what it is, until I say it's something else. And then it will be that until I say it is something else. But it isn't what it Really is."

And all this will . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . understand because . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . looked within and saw beyond the darkness the Christ in them, and RECOGNIZED Him. In the sanity of His vision they looked upon themselves with love, seeing themselves as the Holy Spirit sees them.

Seeing yourselves and everything as that which is nothing more than your right mind sees them.

And WITH this vision of the truth in them . . .

. . . in you . . .

. . . came . . .

. . . or comes . . .

. . . all the beauty of the world to shine upon them.

To shine upon you.

You would understand if I said to Paul, "Don't ever go to Disneyland again and miss it." And I'm saying, "Don't spend another day in the Kingdom of Heaven and miss it!"

Be willing to use your mind for something other than employing memory or imagination.

Paul feels my meaning in these words, "I really love you tonight." But it isn't that I love you more tonight than any other night, and it isn't that you deserve it more than any other night. Those are the words that come because of the sighs—the energy of the love Paul feels coming from me to all of you.

I look forward to being with you all next week.

I want you to remember it is given you to learn how to deny insanity and come forth from your private world in peace . . . with Grace.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 7th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

And welcome to another Saturday night chat in orphanland—Saturday night fireside chat. Or, welcome to another Saturday night where there are no orphans and all who are gathered and all who are listening are Christs. And there are no orphanages, there are just structures of love that are exquisite manifestations of Creation—this moment's creation. And instead of orphanland, it's the Kingdom of Heaven. Two different ways of describing one event.

And you must remember, that although I've been talking at some length about being orphans, it has always been linked with the mind—an orphan mindset, a mental bias applied to the mind. So that you experience being conscious differently than you would find yourself experiencing everything if you were identifying yourself right at this moment as the Presence of God—God manifesting Himself right now, right where you are. And that literally, the only correct definition of you each is the Christ—the full blown, fully manifested Christ at this moment.

Now that's the truth about you. It's because you don't believe it's the truth about you, that when I describe the nature of the beliefs that are to the contrary, that I must give them a practical description. And I do that by describing an orphan. It's just a behavior pattern—physical behavior pattern and mental pattern. It is a pattern applied to something that is patternless.

Mind isn't patterned. It isn't something to be compartmentalized and categorized and filed in this order and that order and another order so as to present some structure, some characteristics.

But you know what? As long as you think your mind is for thinking, that is what you will do. Because you will have thoughts, you will analyze the thoughts, you will validate the thoughts, you will evaluate the thoughts, you will categorize them and file them accordingly.

All of this is an artificial overlay on what your mind is. Because your mind is, literally, the light that illuminates all that Is and is thereby, the conscious awareness of all that Is. The function of your mind is to be aware and not do anything with the awareness—to be aware in full embrace of what's being experienced.

If you're on a trip and you come around the bend in the road to a site that is unexpected and awesome, all you can do is gasp . . . just ah-h-h. You don't know what to think. And you're not required to think anything. The point is to be fully present with what's being experienced as you are when you're surprised beyond thinking.

Now, we read last week . . .

You who know not what you do CAN learn what insanity is, and look beyond it.¹

Does anybody know what that means?

You who know not what you do CAN learn what insanity is, and look beyond it.

If I were to ask you to answer me right now, what is insanity? Do you have the answer on the tip of your tongue? It is a simple answer. Insanity is whenever your mind is engaged in an activity all by itself.

Let me ask you something: If you're married or in a partnership of any sort, but I'm speaking more specifically about marriage where there is a vow of commitment that is supposed to come from the heart which, we'll say, isn't always the case in a business relationship. If you are in a relationship, in a marriage, and one of the partners in the marriage is constantly engaging in activities without clueing his partner in about it—doing things without consulting or discussing what he is going to do, if he is acting quite independently without giving thought to or about his partner or what effects his actions will have—how would you describe that relationship? You would have to describe it as no relationship.

Now, whether you have known it or not, whether you have been taught it or not, whether you have believed it or not, you are and always have been part of a partnership. You have had no capacity to exist, act, or do anything all by yourself. But like a partner in a marriage who does not take into consideration the other partner, you can forget that not only is there something called for that's missing from the relationship for the other partner, there's also something called for that has its effect upon you, or the absence of it has its effect on you. What's missing is the joining.

Now, all that we've been talking about, basically, is the call to break the isolation. Over and over and over in many, many, many ways, this need has been described. And the antics you go through to act independently and to justify the independence, have been uncovered and shown for what they are, as that which keeps you from experiencing a wholeness—a union that already exists and which defines you.

Again, insanity is when your mind is engaged in any activity all by itself with not no thought for, care for, or awareness of another—another whom you have an obligation to be relating to. Now whether you want to call it God or the Holy Spirit, the fact is, that the Answer to the human condition, the Answer to every single problem you're having, lies in breaking this isolation and reuniting, re-embracing with that which constitutes the Source, the energy, the vitality, the very movement of you, of your existence, of your being, without which you could not exist at all.

You who know not what you do CAN learn what insanity is, and look beyond it.

Well, if you didn't know before, you now know what insanity is. And so now, you can look beyond it. And you're not confused and you're not inclined, or you will not be inclined to think it that it's a process, a complicated process, a complicated intellectual process that you, through the skillful use of your mind, can succeed at bringing to its ultimate conclusion.

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, . .

Now last week when we read this, you could have said, "Hm-m . . . 'It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, . . .' Oh, it is? Uh, well I wonder when that happens? Uh . . . 'It is given you,' . . . Okay, well that must mean I don't have to figure it out. Maybe then it comes from God. So I wonder when God will give it?" Well, . . .

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, . .

The way to deny insanity is to stop attempting to do anything independently. Nothing to wait for. Don't have to wait for the waters to move so that you can step into it and be healed. No need to wait for the beneficent Hand of God to come down and touch you and be ready for it.

It is given you to learn how to DENY insanity, . .

Again, which is, to abandon attempting to do anything all by yourself. And what? And come forth from your private world. In other words, abandon the state of independence, which is the meaning of insanity. And come forth from your private world. How? In peace. And as I said, with Grace.

Please, these words are more than intellectual tidbits stimulating little pieces of truth that make light bulbs go on in your mind and give you a momentary high. These words here, are the basis for each one of you to pay attention to how you're using your mind every single day in a way you've never done before. And when you hear these things, you need to ask, "Well, if it's given me to learn how to deny insanity, when is that going to happen?" . . . if you're not already aware. And then listen. And if you say, "Well, I haven't gotten in touch with my Guide yet, but oh boy, all of this information is just marvelous! Just marvelous! It's making a terrific difference in my life."

If you're not in touch with your Guide yet, keep asking the question. Why? Because, the fact is, that you are the Christ right now in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, dreaming, believing, insanely calculating a story of not being in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and not being the Christ.

We're talking about you waking up. Now mind you, not you waking up out of the world and flashing out, we're talking about you, here, waking up, having a sudden shift of perception—a new way of seeing.

Do you want to wake up or not? How much longer do you want to, you know, suffer your way through? Why do it if you have an alternative? Why suffer through it if you have an alternative? And if the alternative is your Birthright and represents you in your true Mind and you in your true stature, then that's all the justification you need for going ahead and being more diligent each day, each moment to remember, "I don't want to look at this by myself!"

The Christ, . . . we read last week . . .

. . . sees God's guiltless Son within you, shining in perfect radiance which is undimmed by your dreams.

. . . insanities . . .

And this YOU will see as you look with Him, . .

. . . for what? . .

. . . for His vision is His gift of love to you, given Him of the Father
FOR you.

Right now the Christ in you is the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. And its whole function is to reveal to you and remind you of what you really Are. And every Son of God who is Awake, has that very same function relative to each and every one of you.

Ask: "I wish to look through your Vision. I wish to see everything through your Vision."

Well, what does that mean? It means you have to defer to Someone else's point of view. Someone else's perspective. A perspective other than the one you have been doggedly employing for eons. That's all. But you have to persist. Because as you persist in a goal, the goal becomes more unified. Do it just because. Just because it's worth it to find out if there really is a different way to see everything. Because the way you're seeing it at the moment, even though it is semi-tolerable, is not a heck of a lot of fun.

This book goes back and forth between describing the insanity and describing the Answer. And in that sense, once you begin to see that, the book almost becomes monotonous, almost predictable. But each time it does it, it does it from a little bit different vantage point, and so there's a little bit of further intellectual clarification. And it's like, "Oh boy, it's gonna be interesting to see what comes on the next page, you know, on the next page and in the next Chapter . . ." And nobody stops and says, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision. I wish to defer all of my perceptions to Your Vision." And then stay with that intent as persistently as you can, whether you see immediate transformation or not. Because remember, that the persistence in a goal unifies the goal—unifies the intent. I don't like this word, but I will say, "solidifies" the intent, strengthens the intent, establishes it as having staying power—not wobbly, not weak, not easily affected by circumstances.

As long as you enjoy further intellectual stimulation in having insanity disclosed a little bit more clearly from a different angle, there's a lot more for us to go through and have that satisfied. But please don't think that's the goal. It is not necessary to understand anything in order to Wake up, except that you have apparently two choices: the choice to think you're an orphan, or the choice to abandon orphanhood and join, not only with your Maker, but with your Brothers and Sisters and all Creation. And you can do that without reading another page in this book. No, this is not our last ACIM Study Group.

Let's go into the book.

FINDING THE PRESENT

To perceive truly is to be aware of ALL reality through the awareness of your own.

Well, that's nice . . . hm-m . . .

To perceive truly is to be aware of ALL reality through the awareness of your own.

Simple statement, but one that in order to be experienced, you will find is an all consuming activity. How do you have the awareness of your own reality? Yeah, monotonous—by abandoning your orphanhood, by consciously joining with the Holy Spirit. By consciously joining with One who is Awake—your Guide. You must go to that Place, that Source, you must be serious enough about abandoning all of your thinking and all of your preconceptions long enough to hear a different Point of View. And let that different Point of View in. Because until you let that different Point of View in, there is no opportunity for learning. Nothing can change if there's nothing present that can alter the status quo.

To perceive truly is to be aware of ALL reality through the awareness of your own. But for this NO illusions can rise to meet your sight, for ALL reality leaves no room for ANY error. This means that you perceive a brother only as you see him NOW.

Mind you, this does not mean that the way you're seeing your Brother now, is a true experience of him. You will perceive your Brother correctly—truly—only as you see him, and I'm going to add the words, in the now, in the present, in the gap between memory and imagination.

His past has NO reality in the present, and you CANNOT see it. YOUR past reactions to him are ALSO not there, . .

. . . in the present . . .

. . . and if it is to them that you react NOW, you see but an image of him which you made and cherish INSTEAD of him.

Now, it is very difficult for you to see your Brother or anything, with innocent eyes. In other words, free of the past and free of your imagination. That's why you must ask for help:

“Help me see my Brother through Your Vision, which is Your Gift to me.”

And persist in this. Do it over and over. Because you want to become free of any bullshit baggage that you’re carrying along with you that’s standing in the way of your being able to be present—conscious in the now. And you want to be free of what it’s not your Birthright to be carrying around and to be foiled by in your divine purpose.

In your questioning of illusions, ask yourself if it is REALLY sane to perceive what WAS NOW.

Now most of you cannot really agree with that statement. Even though intellectually you can say, “Well, yeah . . . I guess I ought to ask.” You believe that it really is sane to perceive what was, now. Else you’re going to be taken for the same ride that you were taken for before. And you will end up being abused, just as you were before, because if you are present in the now with that person without bringing memory forward, you will not know that you had better be defended.

Or, if you had a bad financial dealing and it’s necessary to have a new one, you feel that it is absolutely essential for you to go into the new dealing with all that you learned from the last one. And fortunately, you made a list of all the things you should’ve done that you didn’t do so you can be sure you do them this time. And yet this time, you may not be dealing with anyone unscrupulous at all, and all of this practice of preparedness out of the past will not only have been useless, but it will likely create in the mind of the person you are working with, who this time is benign, of being off-putting, of being unfriendly and causing that one to wonder just how trust-worthy you are and bring elements into what would have been a perfect negotiation that didn’t need to be there.

In your questioning of illusions, ask yourself if it is REALLY sane to perceive what WAS NOW. If you remember the past as you look upon your brother, you will be unable to perceive the reality that is NOW.

You see, when you’re in this whole mind-set, you could be with a real sharpster, engaging in this negotiation, who is able to recognize your feeling of vulnerability, and while you are scrambling to secure that vulnerability, he is able to pull off another aspect of the negotiation—pull the wool right over your eyes because you’re not conscious enough to know it, because you’re so preoccupied with putting into play what you learned before.

But, if you're present in the now, what does that mean? Being present in the now. There's only one way to be present in the now, and that's to be joined. If you are not joined with the Father, or the Holy Spirit, or your Guide, you're not in the now, because you're not joined. Isolation is the absence and the apparent incapacity to be present in the now.

If you are in the now, you will be joined. If you are joined, and you have said, by virtue of wanting to be being joined, "I wish to see through Your Vision, which is your gift to me," you will be absolutely pertinent in every aspect of the negotiation whether you have any understanding at all of all of the potential pitfalls. And you will not find yourself in the position of having been abused and you will not have behaved in a way that confirms the other one to be the abuser that he so smartly thought he wanted to be. A win-win solution. In other words, a unified solution. A unified event.

You consider it "natural" to use your past experience as the reference point from which to JUDGE the present.

I would say, you consider it utterly natural to use the past as the reference point from which to judge the present.

Yet this is UNNATURAL because it is delusional.

At this moment, does that make any sense . . . I hope? It makes no sense to engage in any activity at any moment without being conscious in that moment. Doesn't that make sense? If you're not being conscious in that moment, then you are being from an unconscious state that's filled with nothing but memory as well as imagination. It's disconnected. It's not connected.

Bringing the past forward by means of memory is not the only solution to your problems. The only solution to your problems is learning to be conscious of the now, in the now. The solution is consciousness. Not a rehash of old tapes. Get it? It's so simple. Intelligence is utterly clear in the awareness that, to be nothing other than conscious in the now, is the only way to be. It is the way you were created to be. It's the way things really work.

Continuing . . .

When you have learned to look upon everyone with NO REFERENCE AT ALL to the past, either his or yours as you perceived it, you will be able . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . to learn . . .

... have a new experience ...

... you will be able to learn from what you see NOW.

Illuminated by what you see now. Because you will see God in what you're viewing. You will see order in what you're looking at. You will know how to be appropriately, relative to what is evolving even if those you're dealing with are still insisting on being orphans. It doesn't matter what they're insisting on being. It matters whether you are choosing to be conscious or unconscious. Unconscious like them. Unfortunately you're more experienced at being unconscious like them, and you already have your rules established at how to make the best of a situation where everyone is stumbling around in the dark with no real sense of what's really going on.

When you have learned to look upon everyone with NO REFERENCE AT ALL to the past, either his or yours as you perceived it, you will be able to learn from what you see NOW. For the past can cast no shadow to darken the present UNLESS YOU ARE AFRAID OF LIGHT.

We have read earlier that your minds are lit by God, and that your Mind is Light, as I shared at the beginning of the evening here.

And only if you are ...

... afraid of light ...

... would you choose to bring this darkness WITH you, and by holding it in your minds, see it as a dark cloud that shrouds your brothers and conceals their reality from your sight.

The only reason you insist on holding your brother or sister to your past perception of them, or their past behavior, is because you don't want to have to be conscious yourself. Because you have the way out of the problem. You have the way out of the human condition. And that is to be conscious fully in the now. If you're choosing not to do that and giving preference to coping with your orphan brother as an orphan yourself, then there is a pay-off for you.

Well, okay. Do it. You can't change Reality. Doing it will not kill you. It'll just be the human condition on and on and on. So I can't scold you for it. But if you're not having a good time, I'm here to show you the way out. And I'm here to show you that the way out is not as complicated as the orphan mentality would project that it ought to be.

... only if you are ...

... afraid of light ...

... would you choose to bring this darkness WITH you, and by holding it in your minds, see it ...

... where? Not in your minds, but ...

... as a dark cloud that shrouds your brothers and conceals their reality from your sight.

Now ...

... THIS DARKNESS IS IN YOU.

You're bringing it. You're spreading it around. You're laying it over everything so that it alters your perception of everything.

The Christ revealed to you NOW has no past for He is changeless, and in HIS changelessness lies YOUR release.

Now there's two ways you can read this correctly. The Christ, meaning the Holy Spirit—that is nothing more than your right mind, the divinity of you held in trust while you dally with the ego—has no past for it is changeless, and in its changelessness lies your release. The changelessness of your Christhood is that in which lies your release, right there in the middle of you.

For if He is as He was created, there is no guilt in Him.

Which means there is no guilt in you.

No cloud of guilt has risen to obscure Him, and He stands revealed in everyone you meet because you see Him through HIMSELF.

"Holy Spirit, help me look at my brothers through your Vision, which is really my Vision. So that in my seeing Him through your Vision and my extending it to Him, I can have the moment of A-ha, when I realize that this isn't your Vision, Holy Spirit, but is mine, the Christ that I am."

To be born again is to LET THE PAST GO and look without condemnation upon the present. For the cloud which obscures God's Son to you IS the past, and if you would have it past AND GONE, you must not see it NOW.

And the only way not to see it now, is not to bring it into the now through the use of your commitment to your memory.

If you see it now in your delusions it has NOT gone from you, although it is not there.

It is not there because it is simply an evidence of insanity. And what is insanity again? The mind engaged in an activity all by itself.

Now, you are all very well conditioned to accomplish things. You go to school to learn how to accomplish various kinds of things and the techniques for accomplishing the various things. You are conditioned to accomplish things and arrive at a point of feeling some authority over your world. Therefore, the greatest likelihood is, that when you say, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision because it is Your gift to me, because it is Your function to extend that to me, even though I don't know how the event will be experienced, I'm pretty sure that it will come as more tidbits of information, really practical information, information that is, let's say, earthmoving, information that has power, so that the dilemma I'm experiencing which is causing me to say, 'I wish to see everything through your Vision' can be dealt with."

And I will tell you right now, that's a mistake. Don't think you are asking for information. "I wish to experience everything through your Vision, which is Your gift to me." Don't try to fantasize what the experience will be like. Be simple minded. Be unified, not fragmented and complex. Because I will tell you something: My Vision will be extended, whether fast or gradual, and you will find yourselves seeing differently. And you will find yourselves not interpreting what you're seeing the way you had been seeing it before. And you will find that what you wanted to become free of has gone.

Oh dear, but not much help to you, because you don't know how you did it. So now you can't repeat it in the future, you see. You didn't get any little addendum to the manual—the instruction manual. And yet, in order to have the experience in the future, it requires not a remembrance of how the present happened, it has entirely to do with being in that same place. "I wish to see everything . . . I wish to experience everything through Your Vision."

You're all trying to make things perfect. When you really allow yourself to see through My Vision, you will find that it is already perfect, requiring you to do nothing to make it so. And you're going to find that your reason for being is something entirely and wonderfully different from what you have thought it was.

Good question for all of you: Are you willing to have a teacher? Not someone who's full of facts and data and who has a great personality and a great rapport with students and being around him is a joy and in the process you have so much more data to consider that makes things work more easily? No. I'm talking about a teacher who you become reliant upon, a teacher in whom you are willing to give trust and faith. Now we're talking in a different order of things aren't we.

Are you willing to let the Holy Spirit in you be your Teacher—That which you are willing to, as fearlessly as possible, lean into and depend upon and defer to? Well, that's quite a bit of involvement isn't it? Sure glad you didn't have to do that with every teacher and when you were going through graduate school. Right? Whew!

A teacher isn't disposable—not a valuable teacher. It isn't someone to listen to when you feel like it, and not listen to when you don't feel like it. If that's the case, that one is not a teacher to you in your mind, and your approach to that teacher is not sincere, genuine, or committed. Well, when we're talking about serious, genuine and committed, we're talking about really being involved, aren't we.

Well, I'll tell you something: All of you are willing to get committed when you're brought down to the wire. When you're on your death's bed, or you've just gotten notice of a terminal illness, or your partner has walked out on you totally unexpectedly, or when, for whatever reason, your self-esteem has been knocked out from under you, now for a little while, you will be willing to be genuine and committed to a Teacher and lean into that One.

Now what makes all of this somewhat amusing in a sick sort of way, is that this Teacher that we're talking about—that I am talking about you're making this commitment to, and giving this allegiance to, is that which is nothing more than your very own right Mind, the place of excellence in you that is already immovably there and never went anywhere. So there is no risk of any kind involved.

I encourage you this week to make more commitment to your sanity than you ever have before. "Oh my God, how do I do that? Oh my sanity, where's my sanity?" Well, where's your insanity? Your insanity is in the use you put your mind to in which the activity occurs independently.

Sanity, therefore, that you make commitment to is your decision to do nothing alone. In other words, to do everything joined whether you're able to maintain it consistently or not to begin with, and to persist in it. Remembering, that this is not so you will gain information with which to get a better hold on your problematic life. But so that you can break free of unconsciousness into a fully conscious experience of the moment you're in. Which is in the little gap between the past, between memory and the future imagination in which all of Creation stands unaffected by as it always has been, unaffected by whatever was going on in memory and whatever has been going on in imagination.

Have a good week. And I look forward to being with all of you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 14th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Before we begin, I would like to acknowledge the efforts and the expertise that Paul's son Chris brings to every single one of these Gatherings so that it's available to be heard live on the Internet and seen as well, and for the capabilities of being able to make the audio available twenty-four hours a day, thank you Chris.

We're in a section entitled, FINDING THE PRESENT. Now, this is not like an Easter-egg hunt or a treasure hunt where I'm going to send all of you out to find the present, it is perhaps, one of the most significant portions of the Course. Because the present is the crux of awakening. It's also the simplicity of the awakening process.

Now, many of you, during the past week or two, may have spent some time during your day trying to be present with the now, using your eyes and your ears to let everything around you, all of your sensory experience register with you. As though, perhaps, the now is to be found in the things—the experiences of the things.

But where is the now? Well, the now is in the gap between the past--memory, and the future—imagination. Since the past isn't present to be experienced, and the future isn't present to be experienced, how do you come about eliciting what you call the experience of memory and the experience of imagination? Through a use of your mind. And the use of your mind is thinking. You must think the past. You must think about events in the past. You must think about potentials of the future.

So, where is the now? It's in the little gap between thinking and thinking.

Gets simpler and simpler doesn't it. And what's in the little gap? The absence of thinking—the silence. That's where the now, that's where the present is to be found. Where is it? Somewhere in the infinite Mind of God still thinking spatially infinitely outward—the infinite Mind of God as something that extends infinitely beyond your awareness?

No. You have to be careful, because all of your thinking is done in terms of space-time coordinates. And so you're going to be tempted out of habit, to imagine that getting into the silence and experiencing the now, in which all of Creation becomes available to you as an undistorted conscious experience, is still going to have space-time coordinates attached to it. And this isn't true. And I'm telling this so that when you are choosing to become still, you will not be attentive in a fashion that you're familiar with. Don't try to bring forward with you the memory of space and time to apply to, what will be, an infinite and indivisible experience.

This means that you must dare [sighs deeply] to let go completely. To really dare to be silent. To really dare to let the peace of Being register with you because you're not filling it with any jabbering. So you say, "How in the world can I do that in the middle of the grocery store or in the middle of the work-place?"

Well, you can. If it's not easy, then I once again suggest to all of you that you begin to take time at least twice a day for twenty minutes, to meditate. And if you have time to do it three times a day, do it three times a day so that you can become familiar with the experience of silence.

When the experience of silence is still fresh in your mind because you experienced it four hours ago, then if you are in the work place or the market, or dealing with the school or with your children, the memory, and here I would suggest to you that you value the memory—the experience of peace and of the silence that you experienced four hours ago, will be available to you to overlay, if I may put it this way, on the moment you're in. And in the moment of overlay and the valuing of the peace that you want to overlay the moment with, you will find it much easier to slip back into the actual experience of centered peace from which you can dare to look at the experience of the moment with fresh eyes.

This is one way you bring devotion to glorifying God into your moment by moment experiences in your day and begin to make a shift from just rolling willy-nilly off the top of your head with random thinking into a state of peaceful order through which it's your desire to look at what's going on, so that you might be able to recognize the order that is pertinent to the moment and illuminate it and improve the moment.

It's very simple. If you're going to wake up, you're going to stop acting like orphans. And you're going to stop reaping the benefits of orphanhood, like fear and frustration, and worry and tension, and sickness and disease and death. I know . . . you're so much more familiar with that than you are with peace and harmony, and wholeness and joy, on an ongoing and all-consuming basis during your day. And I know you are afraid that you will not know how to be in this new way. But why opt for suffering just because you don't know what the experience of harmony is going to look like, feel like, and what you will behave like? What is the great value of suffering?

Well, one of the great values of suffering is that it doesn't require you to change. It doesn't require you to grow, it doesn't require you to let yourself be made new and have to cope with unexpected. Well, if there are a million ways to experience joy, and if there a million ways to express joy, and if there are ten millions of ways to experience and express harmony, how great is that? How hard would that be to take?

You see, you don't want to be like sheep just trudging along in the tracks that your ancestors set out before you. What if the new territory isn't full of brambles and pitfalls? What if it's full of beauty and ease and abundance and wholeness? Isn't it funny that I have to encourage you to try and do something different.

Oh yes, uh-huh. You're familiar with the phrase, "There is another way to look at this." Oh, you'll let that run off your lips, "There is another way to look at this." But what you don't say is, "But I don't want to look at it yet because I don't want to have to change! I don't want to have to put myself in the vulnerable position of becoming . . . I don't know what?"

Well that's called being dead already. It's just a silly habit. It's a silly habit but it's a devastating habit. Devastating, because by virtue of your word and your commitment, you stay locked into suffering. And part of the orphan mindset is that suffering always gets worse. "It'll get worse before it gets better." And sometimes it won't get better. It gets worse [snaps fingers] and you're gone. Or it gets worse [snaps fingers] and you're locked into it. You go past a point of no return. Too much damage done. No way for it to be reversible.

See, but hey, this is more about thinking isn't it. These are just ideas. They are just ideas. They're not facts. But if you take that idea and you make commitment to it, and you put the full force of your being behind it, nothing will change. And indeed, things will seem to be irreversible.

You have all kinds of little rules that you made up as you grew up. Some of the rules were provided to you by parents, teachers and society. And some of the rules, you just made up out of whole cloth. You just made up out of pure imagination.

Paul discovered this week that he had a log in his log-jam. And it was just an idea, just a phrase, "Your word is your bond and your bond is your trust." Mighty, weighty words. All of which have to do, for him, with his self-worth. If his word isn't his bond, then he is not trustworthy. And you know what? He discovered that the word he had given he didn't even broadcast to anyone. No one else knew that he'd given the word, even though to him, the word was given on their behalf. He didn't even have others' expectations of him to support that idea, or a need for him to remain committed to it. It was his own little private head-trip. And because he hasn't been able to keep the word he gave, he has held himself in a state of internal misery. Constant on-going frustration at being invalid and worthless because he wasn't keeping his word. And then he stuffed it and didn't deal with it. He just endured it.

Now, the word that he gave was a word made as an orphan. It doesn't matter how lofty the idea is, if an orphan is making that his word, there is nothing lofty about it, it's pure imagination. And if that imagination is adopted and maintained, it becomes memory. It becomes a foundational aspect from the past.

All of you have these nasty little rules that you don't even remember bringing into play and you're not aware of how completely they govern the way you perceive anything and everything that comes into your experience. And you know what? As long as you search for them from orphanland, you will not find them because you lack the perspective to recognize what is false. This is one of the reasons that it is so very important and imperative for you to, as this section heading says, find the present. Bring yourself into the little gap of silence, absent thinking called the past, and absent thinking called the future.

The silence is always ever-present in you and available to you if you will do one thing: For twenty minutes a day, take the time to stop thinking. And you will find it is there no matter how loudly your world seems to be clamoring for your frightened attention. No matter how dire the circumstances are, your peace is present and available to you. It's present and available to you because it's the one and only thing that is real. The past isn't present and isn't real, and the future isn't present, and it isn't real. And no matter how much force of intellect and no matter how much force of personal will you attempt to bring into your mind to create images and sensations that seem to be real, it's all fantasy. It's all flimsy nebulous fantasy. It's all nothing.

Let's go into the book.

Time can release as well as imprison,¹ . .

Again . . .

Time can release as well as imprison, depending on whose interpretation of it you use.

Now we're not talking here about Joe's interpretation, or Henrietta's interpretation, or your Mother's interpretation, or your third cousin's interpretation, or your Boss's interpretation. There are only two interpretations: One is the Holy Spirit's and one is the ego's.

Time can release as well as imprison, depending on whose interpretation of it you use. Past, present and future are not continuous unless you FORCE continuity on them.

And again, the only way you can force continuity on them is by imagining a continuity is not there and then fleshing it out with reasonings, and logic and ideas that you've made up through the process of thinking.

You can PERCEIVE them as continuous, and make them so for YOU. But do not be deceived and then believe that this is how it IS, for to believe that reality is what you would HAVE it be according to your use for it IS delusional.

Insane. Because it's insane, there is no real reason to it. There is no logic to it. There is nothing holding it together. It is fabulous, fabricated, flimsy, lacking integrity . . . smoke and mirrors. That's what I mean by fabulous—of the nature of fable, and nothing else.

You would destroy time's continuity by breaking it into past, present and future FOR YOUR OWN PURPOSES. You would anticipate the future on the basis of your past experience and plan for it accordingly.

And we talked at some length about that last week. It is your normal, natural and ingrained habit. You would not be foolish enough to enter into any endeavor without bringing your memory along with you relative to all similar sorts of endeavors and encounters so that you can be sure you will be able to avoid the pitfalls. No-one, as you would say, would go into a new venture blindly. And so what do you do? You bring memory into play, which means you go into a state of unconsciousness of being in the now.

Now, is that not going into something blindly? You're not even paying attention. You're not present enough in the present to respond to what's really going on. You have given up consciousness of the present by giving preference to memories; a replay of old tapes back somewhere out of the present in the dark recesses of your mind where it's easy to see flimsy images that have very little illumination to them. See? And all the time you are looking there, you are being unconscious in the now, able to bring no wisdom, intelligence, or Knowing of truth into the situation. Bringing no light, the light that your mind is lit with by God to illuminate what's really going on. That's going into something blindly.

Again . . .

You would anticipate the future . . .

. . . and I'm going to say, you would unavoidably, and for sure . . .

. . . anticipate the future on the basis of your past experience and plan for it accordingly. Yet by doing so you are ALIGNING past and future, and not allowing the miracle, which could intervene BETWEEN them.

Between them. Oh yes, in the little gap between memory and imagination. The little gap of silence. The little gap of presence of Mind.

Yet by doing so you are ALIGNING past and future and not allowing the miracle, which could intervene BETWEEN them to free you . . .

. . . what? To have this scary experience . . .

. . . to be born again.

To see everything with new eyes. To see everything as it is minus the overlay of your memory and your imagination in which the nature and character of all that is, is fully visible to you and awesome because it's nature and character is the Movement of God; Creation in its full glory itself.

Am I just using flowery words here because they're spiritual? No. It's important for you to be expecting something other than just a glossed over current human experience. Because the experience of Reality is far greater than the dusty, tarnished images of reality that you see through your memory and the cobwebs of your rules that you govern yourself by.

The miracle . . .

. . . a sudden shift of perception . . .

. . . enables you to see your brother WITHOUT his past, and so perceive HIM as born again.

Why? Because you had a revelatory experience that changed him? No. Because you let the scales fall from your eyes. You let memory fall from your focus of attention. You let imagination dissolve in favor of the silence; in favor the direct experience of Reality. And as a result, you see him as he really is, your Brother.

His errors ARE all past, and by perceiving him without them you are RELEASING him.

All of you are utterly unaware of the part you play in holding your Brother to points outgrown by him, by refusing to see him as he is becoming, as I may put it that way. And so when your Brother begins to behave in a new way, and I'm going to say specifically exhibits enough self-respect not to let you or anyone else abuse him or misuse him mistreat him, you, by virtue of his growing beyond where he was before, are called upon to change yourself and stop attempting to abuse or misuse or mistreat him or her.

Hey, if you're not willing to change just because it might mean that you're going to experience wholeness and health and joy, what in the hell makes anyone think you're going to change when your Brother says, "Hey, I respect myself enough to say stop mistreating me!" Why would you change for that? Oh no, you're going to bring up your memory and all the little rules that help to set in place his being dominated by you and you're going to not release him.

Now, I've described something extreme here. But this sort of thing goes on all day long every day with your friends if they begin to behave in a way that stretches you, in one way or another. You may kindly and politely say, " You know, I've gotta to get going—lots of things to do" and withdraw without providing confirmation or interest; withdraw without shining light on what's being shared. So you may not have been downright mean, you've been politely terse and have conveyed that you're not interested. And although you've said, "I've got a lot of things to do," the other knows its bullshit. And the moment of communion and connection that could have occurred hasn't occurred and in a way, that one is still alone. And that may be all it takes to get that one to shut down.

You could say, "Well, that's his responsibility he doesn't have to do that just because I'm acting like an asshole." No, he doesn't. But you also don't have to act like an asshole. So take care of your part of it.

The miracle enables you to see your brother WITHOUT his past, and so perceive HIM as born again. His errors ARE all past, and by perceiving him without them you are RELEASING him. And since his past is YOURS, you SHARE in this release.

His past is a mutually shared memory so-to-speak. He remembers it from his point of view, and you remember it from your point of view, but together you can share enough corresponding elements that make it seem as though you are sharing something actual. So his past is yours. You know what? If someone new walked into this room at this moment or the very room you are sitting in as you are listening, someone you had never met before, you couldn't release him from his past because you don't know what his past is.

So whatever past you can release someone else from, is the past you have accumulated in terms of memories. That's why it says . . .

And since his past is YOURS, you SHARE in this release. Let no dark cloud out of YOUR past obscure him from you, for truth lies ONLY in the present, and you will find it if you seek it there.

You see, the orphan mentality—the ego frame of reference has everything backwards. There are those whom you would look at and consider releasing him or her from his or her past. But you say, "He or she is not worthy of my being that good to him or her," or thinking that well of him or her.

What makes you think any of this has anything to do with him or her? Your problems stem from the use you are putting your mind to. And the use you are putting your mind to either keeps you in memory or in imagination; whichever it is, it keeps you out of the gap. It keeps you out of your release from thinking. It keeps you out of your release from sin, sickness, and death. It keeps you out from, out of, your peace which it is your ever-present birthright to be experiencing. It keeps you unconscious.

The only arena, if you will, that you have available to you for the experience of being conscious, is in the silence, in the little gap. And if you are not in the little gap, you are experiencing insanity. You must learn to see this clearly so that you may be perfectly honest and not blame the other fellow for your unwillingness to release them from their past.

Why? Because they deserve it? They deserve to be released from it? No. Because you deserve not to be delusional. You deserve not to be insane. You deserve not to be unconscious.

Let no dark cloud out of YOUR past obscure him from you, for truth lies ONLY in the present, . .

. . . in the gap, in the silence, in the presence of Mind that constitutes your being when you're sane. Meaning, not thinking.

You have looked for it where it is NOT, and therefore have not found it.

What? What have you looked for? The present.

Learn then to seek it where it IS, . .

. . . and where it is, is not difficult to get to. And there's no complicated process to it. [chuckles] It's the most uncomplicated thing you can imagine. Shut up. Be still.

Paul—Raj did not read “. . . and it will dawn on eyes that see.”

Your past was made in anger, . .

“My past was made in anger? Gee, all I was doing was growing up. I wasn't making my experience out of anger.” Well, your experiences weren't the past. Your experiences were always the present. Your experiences were always the Movement of God Moving as you, whether you were conscious of it or not, whether you were in the gap or not.

So, your past was made in anger. See, your life experience isn't your past. Ah-h, the pictures, the snapshots you took; the ideas that crystallized in the moment that you made up and cherished; Ah-h-h . . . those memories were made in anger.

Always they were made, whether you like to look at it or not, always they were made as further and further means of securing control over your environment and your experience and your life so that you could become personally successful—dominant, whether for good reasons or bad reasons. That's not love.

Your past was made in anger, and if you use it to attack the present you will not SEE the freedom that the present holds.

You will not see the freedom the gap holds; the silence holds, the presence of Mind holds in the absence of thinking; the miracle.

Judgment and condemnation are BEHIND you, . .

... in the past ...

... and unless you bring them WITH you, will see that you ARE free of them.

That's why you need to give up the idea that the reason for going into the silence or that the reason for going into the gap, or the reason for connecting with your Guide, or the Holy Spirit, is so that you will have divine aid, and divine reasoning and spiritual truth to use to clean up things in the orphanage, or straighten out things in orphanland. Because when you get into the gap, when you go into the silence and with innocence, listen—invite in the conscious awareness of truth that its your birthright to be experiencing, your perspective is going to change and you will see that there isn't any orphanage. And that orphanland was imaginary and the things that needed to be straightened out there were part of the delusion.

To get divine help in straightening out a situation in the orphanage is not called a sudden shift of perception, it's called staying right in the same perception with some new sparkly tools that put you at an advantage over the other orphans who don't have those new tools yet.

Look lovingly ...

Look lovingly upon the present, . .

... it's so hard to do because the present is made up of the past you think.

Look lovingly upon the present ...

... anyway, I'm adding ...

... for it holds the ONLY things that are forever true. All healing lies within it because ITS continuity is real.

Continuity ... continuity in the presence has nothing to do with space and time. Continuity means, I'm going to say for lack of better words, that the fabric of infinity and eternity is unbroken—has no boundaries over-laid upon it. You and your Brother have no boundaries between you. All of Creation is continuous, meaning forever One, meaning forever indivisible and therefore forever undivided. And so you cannot be divided from your Brother or Sister. You cannot be divided from God. You cannot be divided and different from all of Creation infinitely speaking, even though Creation is infinite.

The fact is, that at this moment you cannot show me the boundary of your mind. And therefore, you cannot demonstrate to me that within the boundarylessness of your mind is the boundarylessness of your neighbor's mind, or the person sitting next to you, or your mate. It's continuous, it's unified. But the unification does not reduce all of Creation into an amorphous indistinguishable nothingness. All of the infinite characteristics of Creation are still there, but the characteristics are not boundaries. If you take an ingot of gold, it has properties; it has color, it has specific density, it has specific weight, it has specific softness. Well is the softness different from the weight? Is the weight different from the density?

No, there's no way to look at it and say, "Here's the density, here's the weight and over here on this side is the color." You might have different words that you use regarding different properties, but it's one unified thing. It is one pure element. All of Creation is one and pure with infinite characteristics, if I may put it that way, that make Creation awesome.

So, you must stop thinking in space time terms.

Look lovingly upon the present, for it holds the ONLY things that are forever true. All healing lies within it because ITS continuity is real. It extends to all aspects of consciousness AT THE SAME TIME, . .

. . . the color of gold extends to all parts of the ingot at the same time that its specific density which will never change, extends throughout all parts of the ingot at the same time . . .

. . . it extends to all aspects of consciousness AT THE SAME TIME, and thus enables them to reach EACH OTHER.

But not through space, not you over here to me. It's in the gap. It's in the silence. It's in the presence of Mind that the Oneness of all things becomes available to you as your conscious experience and it will have no connotations, and it will have none of the limitations of the concepts of space and time.

That should peak someone's curiosity. What an interesting experience to have waiting for you.

The present is before time was, and will be when time is no more.

The gap is before memory and imagination were. And the gap will be when imagination and memory are no more.

In it . . .

. . . the gap, the present . . .

... is everything that is eternal, ...

... is everything, plural, that is eternal ...

... and they are one.

Just like all of the characteristics of an ingot of gold.

Their continuity ...

... their connectedness; their union, their unity, ...

... is timeless ...

... has nothing to do with time and never did ...

... and their communication is unbroken, for they are not separated by the past. Only the past CAN separate, and IT is nowhere.

It's not occupying eternity or infinity. It's a delusion—an imagination, a fantasy. It isn't anywhere because it isn't actual. Now this is the truth. This is the truth like, two plus two is four; a fundamental building block of mathematics.

The present ...

... this wonderful little jewel that's constantly in the center of your Vision because its in the center of your being, called the present—the gap ...

... offers you your brothers in the light that would unite you with them and free you FROM the past. Would you, then, hold the past AGAINST them? For if you do, you are choosing to remain in the darkness that is not there, and refusing to accept the light that is offered you.

Now mind you, maybe harsh words they sound like, but what's the solution? The solution is to simply bring into play, curiosity—benign curiosity. Interest. Interest in something different from this monotonous rehearsal of suffering to one degree or another that you're experiencing.

For the light of perfect vision is freely given as it is freely received, and can be accepted only WITHOUT LIMIT.

You see, the orphan says, "Um-m, Okay. . . , I'm gonna tune in this Saturday night and I'm gonna see if I can get a little bit of the truth here that I can use to my advantage. I'm not going to accept everything that said without limit, because that's very likely to lift me out of the orphanage. And then I wouldn't be able to use this power to my advantage. So, I'm not going to accept it without limit."

Are you an orphan or are you the Christ? Stand up and be counted. Not by each other, but stand up and count yourself as one or the other and be honest. The minute you're honest and you stand up and count yourself, you'll know whether you want to change or not. But in the haziness of orphanland and orphanages, and all of the mutually agreed upon definitions that you live by, its easy to remain a little bit vague and not really count yourself, not really stand up and declare yourself.

The light of perfect vision is freely given as it is freely received, and can be accepted only WITHOUT LIMIT. In this one, still dimension of time, . .

. . . the present . . .

. . . which does not change and where there is no sight of what you were, you look at Christ . . .

. . . your Brother, yourSelf, Me . . .

. . . and call His witnesses to shine on you BECAUSE YOU CALLED THEM FORTH.

You stopped calling forth your orphanhood and you stopped calling forth the orphanhood of your Brothers and Sisters.

In this one, still dimension of time, which does not change and where there is no sight of what you were, you look at Christ and call His witnesses to shine on you BECAUSE YOU CALLED THEM FORTH. And THEY will not deny the truth in you because you looked for it in them and FOUND it there.

Now is the time of salvation, for now is the RELEASE from time.

The cap is the release from time. The silence, when you choose for it, is the release from time. It is the release from illusion. Time and thinking are inseparable. Time and thinking are synonymous. Thinking and being unconscious are being synonymous. Silence and consciousness are synonymous.

I love you all. The simpler the truth becomes, the more irresistible it is.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 21st 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

How many of you are mean-timers? Do you know what a mean-timer is? A mean-timer is someone who says, "I know that the second coming is imminent, but in the meantime, I'm going to blah, blah, blah . . . I'm going to be the best spiritual person, or the best spiritual student I can be, or in the meantime I'm going to have the rowdiest, the most lascivious, the most physically satisfying experiences I can come up with because it's going to be my last chance."

Mean-timers are those who listen to what I'm saying and hear me say that the way out of illusion—the way out of the dream, the way out of time, is to be found in the space, in the gap between thinking, meaning memory, and thinking, meaning imagination—past and future. And they hear me say . . . you hear me say, that help is available to you and you can't do it all alone because after all, the dream you've been in has been a dream of being alone and insisting on doing everything alone.

And so you say, "Wow, I know Paul is in touch with his Guide. And I know a few other people who are in touch with their Guide. And every once in awhile, I think I hear my Guide . . . but not yet. And I'm going to keep trying. But in the meantime until that happens, blah, blah, blah, blah. Oh, I'm going to Google the internet and find out if any other teachers are saying what Raj is saying." Or, "I'm going to Google the scientific community to see whether anyone in the field of science is beginning to confirm what Raj is saying," You see? [chuckle] Or, "I'm going to go to the library to check out the latest spiritual growth books and see what further support I can get for feeling confident that I'm not lost. I'll do this in the meantime until . . ." Until what? "Until I take my intent to be conscious, until I take my intent to not be distracted by the past thinking and the future thinking, and make commitment to the now, make commitment to the moment between the past and the future, which is silence."

All of you mean-timers are trying to make the best of the period of time you're choosing to take until you decide to get serious and actually do it.

Mean-timers are dawdlers . . . sorta standing there, moving . . . um-m . . . your toes through the sand and inching forward and . . . um-m noticing a sea-shell over there . . . You know it's time to go! [said emphatically] But you don't want to go yet. So you just sorta dawdle.

You waste your opportunities to be conscious. Why? "Well, it takes too much of my attention. It's too hard. I'm not used to being intelligent. [chuckle] I'm used to just letting my thoughts flow and experience what I'm feeling and pay attention to my feelings and magnify them and imagine what they mean, and just be crazy, disorganized, confused. I'm used to that."

How many of you listen to what I'm saying on Saturday nights and while you're listening, you feel the meaning of what I'm saying and you are inspired and after we're through, you are in a different place than you were when you came in, or started listening? And then you go home and for the intervening week, your life is so different from what we've talked about that you actually really get frustrated, because it seems as though what I'm talking about bears so little relationship to what you are experiencing.

Well, I'm very glad if you're getting frustrated about it. Because if you're getting frustrated about it, it means that you're actually feeling the difference between the mental state in which all you're doing is thinking and the mental state in which thinking isn't going along, isn't going on, and in that silence and in the attentiveness that is there, you are learning something that's very different from what you have believed.

If you stop and think about what we've talked about for the last few years, you will realize that we've said that your experience of your world and your experience of your body, is that it reflects the messengers you are sending out. It reflects back to you the use to which you are putting your mind.

It isn't that there really are objects like a body and a flower and a tree—physical objects sitting separate from each other in particular places in space and time. You see, that's the way it seems to you when you're thinking because you always think with in terms of space-time coordinates.

No. There is Creation: Trees, flowers, legs, arms, torso, head, glasses, water. There is infinite conscious experience of the ideas in the Mind of God that constitute the Movement of Creation and they are not separate from each other and they are not hard physical objects in space. They are, as I've said before, pure Spirit. And they really manifest and reflect their Source, which is God.

If you've gotten a divorce from the Father, God, then you're going to look at them with quite your own personal bias, with the definitions you've given to it and you will have lost the experience of what they truly are. You have lost the experience of what they truly are. And they reflect back to you exactly the definitions you are sending out to them.

In this day and age, it's easy for you to, or it's relatively easy for you to recognize that the health, or lack of health of your body pretty well is coordinate with the use you're putting your mind to. If you're angry and miserable and you keep yourself in a constant state of tension by means of your thought processes and your reasonings and your logic, no matter how imperfect it might be, you know, you're likely to have high blood-pressure, you're likely to have ulcers, you're likely to have any number of physical experiences you call them, of dissonance. And anyone who dares to take enough time to notice, will recognize that this is a fact. Your body reflects back to you the messages, the messengers you are sending forth to it.

Now, you notice this because you say, "This is my body. This particular set of arms, and this particular set of legs and this particular head is my body." And so, if it's not comfortable, you pay attention and you doctor it without solving the problem or you recognize the use to which you're putting your mind and you correct that use and have healing.

Now what you don't recognize is, that the glass and the water and the table and the chairs and the trees and the flowers, because of the continuity on the uninterrupted connectedness of everything, is also, for lack of better words, your body. But since you don't claim it as yours, then when this world that you are saying is out there separate from you, reflects back to you the messages you're sending out, and you hear of war, and you hear of riots and you hear of murders and you hear of kidnappings and so-in-so who died, you say, "Well, that's the world—that's life!" And you don't realize that the messages you send out by virtue of thinking, get applied to absolutely everything equally. The reason being, the continuity of All That Is.

Oh, somebody says, "Wha-a? You mean I'm responsible for the war in Iraq?" Guilt, blame, which will necessarily lead to judgment and punishment, that's the orphan mindset's frame of mind. But we don't have to go there.

Yes, the messengers you send out will come back confirming their purpose. But, the real question is: Are you willing to look at what's happening and recognize that it's all reflecting back to you the use to which you are putting your mind? Not so that you can take blame or responsibility, but so that you can change your mind and use it a different way—not just any old different way.

You are all familiar with the statement: "There is another way to look at this." Whatever it might be, there is another way to look at this. Here's the simplicity again. There aren't thousands of different ways to look at everything. There are only two. One is, all by yourself. And the other is, joined. If you're looking at everything all by yourself through the orphan mentality, then because that mentality is itself based on a false premise, everything that follows will not exhibit truth. It's just that simple.

So, if there's a different way to look at things, when you look at your world and say, "Hm-m, if the world is reflecting back to me the use to which I'm putting my mind, if my body is reflecting back to me the use to which I'm putting my mind, then because it's obviously not harmonious, not pleasant, apparently destructive, undesirable—far from heaven—then I better take advantage of the other way to look at this. And the other way to look at this is joined.

What does that mean? It means not spending another moment looking at it all by yourself. It means inviting the Holy Spirit or Me or the Father back in. And ultimately it's your Father that you need to invite back in. Because it's your Father, Who, by virtue of being your Father, gives you your identity—tells you who you Are, tells you what your Birthright is. Um-m, better than telling you what you're Birthright is, imbues you with the experience of what your Birthright is so that you no longer even entertain the fantastic idea that you're an orphan.

Mean-timers are caught in eddies alongside the edge of the river, not in the flow, not inseparable from the movement and power and the purpose. If you're not in touch with your Guide yet, or if you're only occasionally in touch with your Guide, then gather some more resolve than you've been bringing into play so that you stop being the mean-timer who finds interesting things to do until Jesus comes again. Because the only thing you're doing in the meantime until something, is until you stop being a mean-timer until you actually take the plunge with resolve and with commitment. Why? Because you don't want to be unconscious of the moment you're in. You do not want to miss what's going on in the moment you're in. You don't want to miss it because you're distracted with the past and the future and all the thinking you can do about it.

What a silly engagement of your mind. And all it takes is decision. “Well, ya know, I hear what you’re saying and I like what you’re saying, but I just can’t get any willingness behind doing it. And I can’t figure out why.”

I’ll tell you something: Don’t waste your time trying to figure out why you’re not willing. Just do it! That’s what mean-timers do, they try to figure out why things aren’t going right. They try to figure out what it is they’re doing wrong, what deep-seated psychological block there is. And as a result, they busy themselves without ever going into the gap—without ever going into the silence. And being in the place where you don’t know and letting it be absolutely perfect that you, as an orphan mentality, don’t know.

Let’s go into the book. We ended up last time with the sentence:

Now is the time of salvation, . . .¹

. . . Now, the little gap, the silence, the presence of Mind . . .

. . . is the time of salvation, for now is the RELEASE from time.

Literally. In the release from time, healing doesn’t need to take time. Healing can be instantaneous. In the absence of time, you can be here and then there instantaneously. Here and there will still be present to be experienced. You just won’t have to traverse the distance between this space and that space, which according to the laws of physics, show that it will take certain amount of time to get from one place to the other and that’s your limitation, just accept it. Ultimately you can’t go faster than the speed of light, it’s said. And that’s a limitation if you have huge distances to go. There is no such limitation. But if you believe it, that’s the messenger you will send out and you will get confirmation back confirming it—proving it. Doesn’t make it true. Because there is release from time.

Again, time and thinking are synonymous, whether its thinking, called the past, or it’s thinking, called the future. Time is not your natural habitat. The gap is your natural habitat in which the inseparable continuity of all of Creation is everywhere present—I can’t put it any differently than that—and is available to you with a shift of attention to experience directly, whether its twenty thousand par secs² away, or five feet away.

Now is the time of salvation, for now is the. . .

. . . actual . . .

. . . RELEASE from time. Reach out to all your brothers, and touch them with the touch of Christ.

Reach out to your brothers from the gap. Pay attention to your brothers from the silence. Pay attention to your brothers from the absence of thinking. When you are thinking, you are like one big mouth. And when you are in the gap, you are like one big ear. It is a state of attention without expectations, without preconceptions, it is what I have referred to as looking at everything with innocent eyes, an innocent mind, a silent mind.

Reach out to all your brothers, and touch them with the touch of Christ.

That is what you cannot help doing when you choose to look out at your brother from the silence. You reach out with the only thing that is there, which is the Christ of you, and you touch your brother and because, from that place, there is perfect continuity—you touch the Christ in him and he recognizes it and illuminates the Christ in you by expressing his joy at the communion.

In timeless union with them is YOUR continuity, . .

In timeless union with them . . .

. . . your brothers . . .

Is YOUR continuity, . .

As long as you are looking at anything from the orphan mentality, it is impossible to experience your continuity—you're inseparable, indivisible unalterable oneness with all of Creation. Because the very premise of the orphan mindset is that you are alone and that you are alone by choice so that you might exercise your personal private will for the purpose of establishing yourself in your own right and ultimately proving that you, on your own, are a success. Simple black and white. But . . .

In timeless union with them. . .

. . . your brothers . . .

. . . is YOUR continuity, unbroken.

Why?

. . . because it is wholly shared. God's guiltless Son is ONLY light.

Isn't that something. Your mind, your attention is an illuminator. Your attention illuminates what it is given to.

God's guiltless Son is ONLY light. There is no darkness in him anywhere, for he is whole. Call all your brothers to witness to his wholeness, as I am calling you to join with me.

There's your task—there's your purpose. It's not a selfish purpose. It's not proving that you, in your own right, are actual and successful.

Call all your brothers to witness to his wholeness, . .

. . . your brother's wholeness. You're there to send out messengers of the reality of your brothers. And you're to invite your brothers to acknowledge the same thing in the brother that you're acknowledging.

. . . as I am calling you to join with me.

You see.

Every voice has a part in the song of redemption, the hymn of gladness and thanksgiving for the light to the Creator of light.

You see, you invite the Father in. You let the Father in. You acknowledge the Father. And in the acknowledgement, you can't help but be overflowing with what you're experiencing and the overflow extends to your brother spontaneously and embraces and illumines him. And by virtue of your giving it and his receiving it, it is confirmed that it is yours. Because you have one purpose only and that is to confirm Reality, to confirm truth, to confirm the Father in everything your attention falls upon, instead of what you engage in every single day—which is a far cry from that.

Again, it takes some discipline. Not a discipline of your thoughts, [chuckle] but a discipline of your mind where you vacate the arena of thinking itself. So that you do become a big ear, a big eye, in the gap whose function is to pay attention and recognize and see. You see. And when you let that be your function, which of course, takes you out of the driver's seat, because you can't decide what to hear or what you want to see. You're there to hear and see whatever is there to see. And what is there to see is Creation, undistorted.

It constitutes a different way of being, right where you have been being all along. It is different. And you've got to be willing to let it be different. And you've got to stop trying to make it interface with the orphanage, or orphanland. Because the orphanage and orphanland, as I've said over and over, is nothing but a misperception of what is really there.

The holy light that shines forth from God's Son . . .

. . . you . . .

... is the witness that his light is of ...

... what? ...

... his Father.

Remember, I said awhile back that it's a good idea to stop talking about "the Father" and start saying, "my Father?"

The holy light that shines forth from God's Son is the witness that his light is of his Father.

Your light is of your Father. You are whole by virtue of being inseparable from God and incapable of even approximating separation of any sort no matter how creatively you have imagined it to be an absolute separation.

Shine on your brothers in remembrance of your Creator, . .

"Oh yeah, shine on my brothers—shine on my brothers, poor bastards! Shine on my brothers. It's so very hard for me to feel like shining on my brothers. They're not . . . they're not . . . they're just too difficult to be with, they're too difficult to cope with . . . shine on my brothers . . ."

Well, what you're saying is, "It's more important for me not to be in my right Mind, than it is for me to be in my right Mind. It's more important for me not to perform my function—my divine function—than it is to perform my divine function. It is more important for me to be conflicted than it is for me to be at peace."

Hell, forget about having pity on your brother and have pity on yourself. Because until you care enough about yourself to invite the Father in, or to get into the little gap and willingly stay there and avoid thinking, you will not get out of your misery, you will not get out of your confusion and you will not have any light to shine on your brothers.

It doesn't matter whether your brother deserves you shining on him, it matters whether you want to be crazy or not, whether you enjoy being insane, or whether you would like to experience what your natural irrevocable sanity is.

So, . . .

Shine on your brothers . . .

... what? . . .

... in remembrance of your Creator, . .

. . . you see, until you have said, "Father, help!" Until you've said, "Holy Spirit, help!" Until you've said "Jesus, help!" and you've meant it, there won't be any influx of conscious experience of your Father and therefore, your identity, and therefore, an overflowing influx of awareness of truth that you can shine on your brother, and thus own because you've performed your function.

Shine on your brothers in remembrance of your Creator, . .

. . . and therefore your remembrance of yourself, and therefore your remembrance of your brother—who you are, who he is—so that you're not fooled by his orphan behavior or your memories of and pictures of him as an orphan that you have cultivated and held.

Shine on your brothers in remembrance of your Creator, for you will remember Him . . .

. . . your Creator . . .

... as you call forth the witnesses to His . . .

. . . your Creator's . . .

... creation.

See, there's where the unity is brought into focus. There's where the continuity is undisturbed, because you're not engaged in dismembering the unity of Creation by virtue of insane thinking.

Those whom you heal bear witness to YOUR healing, . .

When you see the truth, not just an idea, but when you feel and know the truth that God is all there is to what you or a thing [is], you can share it in a way that others will hear. And when they hear it, because it's not intellect, and it's not thinking, and it's not an orphan ploy of manipulation to get the best of a situation, your brother is healed and his healing gives proof of your healing. His clarity gives proof of your clarity.

Those whom you heal bear witness to YOUR healing, for in their wholeness you will see your own.

You see, you will feel the continuity, you will experience the inseparability. You will know that oneness is the fact of the two of you as one without the two of you melting into each other and losing all identity whatsoever.

And as your hymns of praise and gladness . . .

. . . yours and your brother's . . .

. . . rise to your Creator, He . . .

. . . your Creator . . .

. . . will return your thanks in His clear answer to your call. For it can never be that His Son called upon Him and remained unanswered.

The continuity has always been there. The oneness has always been there. The Christ that you are, is the only thing that has ever been there, and the Christ that you are is the Son of God which constitutes and gives you your identity, and it's always been there. The truth has always been there. Every request you have made has always been answered. But you don't hear the answer because you're so sure of the context in which the answer must come and it must come in the context of orphanland and orphanages, and the miserable way in which orphans do their best to deal with each other, to their own advantage without in the process, killing each other off.

His call to you is but your call to Him.

It's one thing.

And IN Him . . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . you are answered by His peace.

You know what? You say, "It's too hard for me to find time to get into my peace because everything is so unsettled and demanding, that it must be taken care of or everything . . . everything will be destroyed, everything will collapse, everything will fall to peaces."

Well, people, think a little . . . uh-h-h—no. . . pay attention! For centuries you've been thinking and for centuries things have been chaotic but existence hasn't been wiped out. Destruction has not occurred. If you decide not to cater to the suggestion that you had better take care of the problem before you get into your peace because if you don't the results will be disastrous, if you don't play into that ploy and you do choose for your peace instead, with disregard for the invitation to be in conflict, everything will not collapse. And if you move into your peace, your perspective will shift. Your perceptions will shift. And without your exercising any power whatsoever, your world will begin to reflect back to you the new messengers you are sending out—the messengers of peace. And it will not require time for peaceful adjustment to occur.

This is very important. It's very important because it's so fundamental.

Children of Light, you know not that the light is in you. Yet you will find it through its witnesses, for having GIVEN light to them they will RETURN it.

That is, if you've given light to them. If you've decided not to let your mind run off half cocked insanely, but choose the messengers you would send out.

Everyone you see in light brings YOUR light closer to your OWN awareness.

It's inevitable. It's a law. But if you don't bother to see in light, then there will be nothing to bring your light closer to your own awareness. It's just that simple.

Love always leads to love. The sick, who ask for love, are grateful for it, and in their joy they shine with holy thanks. And this they offer you who GAVE them joy.

"Oh, yeah, that's my brother I'm supposed to shine on." Yeah, well if you do shine on your brother, that's what will happen.

The sick, who ask for love, . .

. . . the ones who don't deserve it, the ones that's so hard for you to get along with, when looking at them through the orphan mentality, . .

. . . are grateful for it, . .

. . . the love they've asked for when they receive it . . .

. . . and in their joy they shine with holy thanks. And this they offer you who GAVE them joy.

Well, if that's going to be the result, then what value is there in saying, "Oh yeah, I gotta shine on my brother?" What value is there in it? None.

They . . .

. . . the sick, who ask for love . . .

. . . are your guides to joy, for having received it of you they would keep it. You have established them as guides to peace, for you have made it manifest in them. And seeing it, its beauty calls YOU home.

Everything you do as an orphan—everything you do as an independent agent—will establish independence and the awfulness of it more and more definitely, more and more uncomfortably. But everything you do as a gift, a willing extension of an excellent use of your mind, will reflect back to you increased unity, increased experience of continuity, and the joy that comes from the actual experience of not being alone.

There is a light which this world . . .

. . . that you have made up, I'm adding that . . .

There is a light which this world . . .

. . . which you thought up—which you gave definitions to . . .

. . . cannot give. Yet YOU can give it, as it was given you.

Or we could say,

Yet YOU can give it, as it . . .

. . . is . . .

. . . given [to] you.

But of course, you won't receive it even though its given. You won't receive it, if you're maintaining a staunch independent stance. "I don't need anything. I have everything I need. God gave me free will. God gave me intelligence. God gave me a mind to use. And He gave it to me to use well. And so I have the capability of using it well. I don't need anything more. I don't need a gift. I don't need any light."

There is a light which this world cannot give. Yet YOU can give it, as it was given you. And as you give it, it shines forth to call you from the world and follow it.

Right out of the orphanage. Right out of the orphan mind-set. Right out of suffering. Right out of conflict.

For this light will attract you as nothing in this world can do. And you will lay aside the world and find another.

You see, there is a different way to look at this. You don't have to look at it all by yourself. You can look at it joined and you will see another world. You will see the same world with such beautiful clarity that it doesn't look like what you thought it was, and you are no longer confused into believing that the world and universe is polarized and subject to decay. And that birth always means death.

And you will lay aside . . .

. . . orphan-land . . .

. . . you will lay aside the world and find another.

Reality.

This other world is bright with love which . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . YOU have given it.

Why? Because you've shown on your brothers. You've shown on your brothers because you'd rather be in your right Mind. You've shown on your brothers because you didn't want to be conflicted anymore. You've shown on your brothers because you wanted to be conscious rather than unconscious right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

This other world is bright with love which YOU have given it. And here will everything remind you of your Father . . .

You see, you won't be estranged from Him anymore and it will be Okay with you for everything to remind you of your Father. Because anything that reminds you of your Father reminds you of You, Who you really Are. And Who it has been your Birthright to be conscious of all along. Even when you were having so much god damned fun being miserable, thinking for yourself.

And here will everything remind you of your Father and his Holy Son. Light is unlimited, and spreads across this world in quiet joy.

Literally, the movement of the experience of joy—not the idea of joy—the experience of joy quietly moves across your world because joy is not exciting. Joy is full of peace. It's full of peace because there is no conflict in it. As a result, there is no edge to it, no excitement to it, no fear to it. It's full blown joy like a blanket rolling across the world, not an object but an energy you, might say, that everything and everyone—you, the trees, the squirrels, the ants—feel and are not unconscious of.

Light is unlimited, and spreads across this world in quiet joy. All those you brought with you will shine on you, and you will shine on them in gratitude because they brought you here.

You see, you did it together. It was an act and a conscious experience of unity—of continuity.

Your light will join with theirs in power so compelling that it will draw the others out of darkness as you look on them.

Mind you, we're discussing this in the context of finding the Present. You might say, "Well, what will it be like if I do it?" Well, there it is spelled out for you. But don't do it for the goodies. That's not the point. Do it because you don't want to be insane one more moment. Do it because you don't want to be unconscious of what's really going on one more moment. You don't want to dawdle one moment longer.

The rest will come because the rest is a gift. It's a gift that was given since the beginning, if I may put it that way. It is a gift that is given new each moment. It's the Movement of Creation. It's the Movement of God. And it's your function not to miss it! It's your function not to miss it. It's not your function to get satisfaction out of cursing the President or cursing the politicians or running down the school-board, or any of the righteous activities you engage in mentally.

I am telling you, and we've been reading, that the release from the past and the future occurs by what? Not dealing with the past and not dealing with the future but by abandoning them in favor of the little gap of silence in the middle of the two. And becoming one big ear and one big eye.

You know that if you are physically not well, and you change your attitude—you watch what the use that you're putting your mind to and what messengers you're sending out and you change the messengers you're sending out—you have experienced healing, whether it was instantaneous or whether it was gradual. Most of you have had this experience. That's all the proof you need to grasp the value of paying close enough attention to your mind, to bring your attention out of the realm of thinking into the silence of the moment and listen so that new messages received from that place of excellence in you, the divine one that you Are or so that clarity coming from your Guide, or revelation coming from the Father, can fill you up with new messengers to send out because it will make a difference. It's a law.

See? I said the book's predictable. It talks about the things that you're practicing that aren't working for you so that you might look at them squarely, so that you might look at the illusion or the beliefs squarely, so that you can specifically release them, and it talks about the truth and illumines the truth. And it goes back and forth.

Now I may have been speaking enthusiastically tonight but everything that we have read about tonight, you could say, is the good news. We weren't having to take a look at the insanity and talk about the insanity. We've talked about how things work—how Creation works—and your inseparable part in it, and your inseparability from it, and your absolute incapacity to engage in any activity alone. And this is good news.

I love you all. And you know what? You love you all too. Really. And if you find during the coming week that it's difficult to be willing to love yourself, or its difficult to be willing to love another, don't try to find out why you're unwilling. Oh, the orphan mentality will give you a whole sting of reasons that have nothing to do with anything but they'll keep you occupied in the meantime, until you just do it!

Okay. Have a wonderful week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 28th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to go directly into the book tonight.

Awakening unto Christ is following the laws of love of your free will, and out of quiet recognition of the truth in them. ¹

Key words . . .

. . . quiet recognition of the truth in them.

There's nothing quiet about your thinking and there's nothing quiet about your expression of your thoughts.

You speak to be heard. You speak always, for a purpose. You speak to make an impression. Sometimes it's a bad impression, "Poor me." It's an impression of somebody helpless in need of help. And yet, there's nothing namby-pamby about the delivery of the poor soul impersonation. Sometimes it is for self-protection, sometimes it is for control, but always it is a very definite assertion of you calculated to make an impression—calculated to accomplish things. And there's nothing quiet about you or about the act of the delivery of your thoughts. There's no peace in it . . . there's no peace in it.

It's also never an expression of love or the embodiment of an understanding of what love is because always, as the orphan, everything you do is for manipulative purposes.

Inclusion, embrace, doesn't allow for manipulation. Embrace comes from an absolutely opposite place—the willingness to extend. The willingness to give, if it is genuine, cannot be manipulative. It's always benign.

Awakening unto Christ . . .

. . . um-m, that's the thing that happens in the gap. That's the thing that happens in the silence. Because in the silence you are infilled with the awareness of truth. It's unavoidable. It's spontaneous.

Awakening unto Christ . . .

. . . coming from the gap, coming from the silence in which the awareness of love can fill you up . . .

. . . is following the laws of love of your free will, . .

. . . not of your willfulness . . .

. . . and out of quiet recognition of the truth in them. The attraction of light must draw you willingly, and willingness is signified by . . .

. . . big word . . .

. . . GIVING.

The opposite of getting. Orphans are incapable of giving. It's against their religion. It's against their bottom-line rules for being. Because giving means involvement, giving means embrace. And I promise you that manipulation is not involvement . . . it's attack. And a fight is not involvement because communion cannot occur in the midst of conflict, especially purposeful conflict.

Those who accept love of you become your willing witnesses to the love you gave them, and it is THEY who hold it out to YOU.

Their receipt of it is acknowledgment of it in you. And so they send out a messenger to you confirming the truth about you and the gift you have given, because you have received it in the silence—in the gap—becomes truly yours. And, as the saying goes, "What you give, you get to keep."

In sleep you are alone, and your awareness is narrowed to yourself. And that is why the nightmares come. You dream of isolation BECAUSE your eyes are closed. You do not SEE your brothers, and in the darkness you cannot look upon the light you gave to them.

You are the light and your very being is constantly extending light to everything. But when you are preoccupied with your thoughts and your definitions and your rules and your great attempt to become something Real on your own, in your own right, absolutely blinds you to the light you are extending by simply being. And so you do not see it. And because you are not consciously extending it, the messengers are not recognized by you that return in confirmation of the light you have sent. And even if others do recognize the light in you and they feed back to you the good they see in you—the light they see in you—you will be suspicious, you will be untrusting. You will wonder what kind of underhanded ploy they are engaging in by feigning friendliness.

Those will be the messengers you will be consciously sending out. And when they return with confirmation of their purpose for being sent out, you will hear them.

You dream of isolation BECAUSE your eyes are closed. You do not SEE your brothers, and in the darkness you cannot look upon the light you gave to them.

And yet the laws of love are not suspended because you sleep.

Likewise, you do not stop being the Christ just because you're insisting on believing you're an orphan and basing your actions on that false premise. And this is important to understand because you are not a poor orphan somehow working his or her way back to a divine status. It is present right now. It's your environment right now.

Although you may be caught in an eddy at the edge of a river, the water in the eddy is the water in the river. And whatever circular motion is occurring in the eddy is being caused by the energy of the movement of the river. And so, no matter how stuck you think you can get yourself, you never escape the fundamental environment and state of Being, that of your Christhood.

And so it says . . .

And yet the laws of love are not suspended because you sleep. And you have followed them through all your nightmares, and have been faithful in your giving, for you were NOT alone. Even in sleep has Christ protected you, ensuring the real world for you when you wake.

I've said many times, the Holy Spirit is your divinity held in trust while you dally with the ego.

Even in sleep has Christ protected you, ensuring the real world for you when you wake. In YOUR name He has given FOR you, and given YOU the gifts He gave.

What gifts? The gifts of acknowledging God right where you are. The gifts of recognizing that all there is to you is what God is Being right there. The gift of glorifying God right there where you are in spite of what you're believing and dreaming and compelled to imprison yourself with.

What gift? The gift of His Vision, which it is your Birthright to see and experience everything through, because it is truly your real capacity to see and grasp the meaning of everything as it truly is. That gift, the Christ in every single brother who is Awake, extends to you. And it is the gift that the Christ of you, called the Holy Spirit, extends to you. And it is a gift you will receive when you abandon your addiction to trying to become something or someone in your own right by pulling yourself up by your own bootstraps—something you believe you have to do because you believe you are alone, an orphan, having no Source.

God's Son . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . is still as loving as his Father.

God's Son is still as everything as his Father—loving, creative, embracing, extending, uninhibitively Being Present with every aspect of your conscious experience, even that which seems to be beyond your conscious experience at the moment.

Continuous . . .

. . . there's that word again . . .

Continuous WITH his Father, he has no past apart from Him. So he has never ceased to be his Father's witness AND HIS OWN. Although he slept, Christ's vision did not leave him.

Although you are sleeping, Christ's Vision has not left you.

And so it is that he can call unto himself the witnesses that teach him that he never slept.

Oh dear, there we go . . .

. . . call unto himself the witnesses . . .

"I don't need any witnesses. God gave me the capacity to think and reason and be intelligent and I'm supposed to do that . . . blah . . . blah . . . blah . . . I can handle it myself. I'm supposed to handle it by myself!"

But no . . .

And so it is that he can call unto himself the witnesses that teach him that he never slept.

Oh, gotta invite something else in, gotta abandon the isolation, gotta abandon the pride found in self-sufficiency and invite something else in—an actual relationship, an actual involvement, an actual dynamic in which you could say there's a mutual yielding like a dance, a give and a take, a movement together that is full of meaning, because the movement arises out of the rhythm of the movement of Creation itself, the Movement of God.

And so it is that he . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . can call unto himself the witnesses that teach him that he never slept.

An interesting new section . . .

ATTAINMENT OF THE REAL WORLD

Could be a little misleading—appeals to the ego.

ATTAINMENT OF THE REAL WORLD

Oh-h, an accomplishment. But no. Attainment of the real world is accomplished by abandoning acts of getting, by abandoning acts of accomplishing, by abandoning clear thinking—manipulative clear thinking—clear thinking that goes directly from A to B to C to D to E, the final destination that was planned for when Step A first occurred.

No. Attainment of the Real world is something that happens in the silence. It is something that happens in the absence of thinking. It is something that happens in the middle of peace which you have desired to experience and have taken steps to get into through meditation, for example.

Attainment of the Real world occurs in the little gap where you have dared to say, "I yield, I yield." Attainment of the Real world is what's left when you abandon all attempts at willfulness, at accomplishment, at power and control. It's what is present in the peace of your Being.

Continuing . . .

Sit quietly and look upon the world you see, and tell yourself,

“The real world is not like this. It has no buildings, and there are no streets where people walk alone and separate. There are no stores where people buy an endless list of things they do not need. It is not lit with artificial light, and night comes not upon it. There is no day that brightens and grows dim. There is no loss. Nothing is there but shines, and shines forever.”

Now . . .

“It has no buildings, and there are no streets . . .”

It's easy to take that part of the sentence and home in on it: “Oh, right, so all the buildings, all streets, all structures, all form is illusion.” No. Creation is Creation.

. . .and here's the key part . . .

. . .” where people walk alone and separate.”

You use Creation. You use the ideas of Mind that are experienced as form for ulterior and negative reasons. You believe that because you are alone, you are vulnerable. And so, even a tree becomes a place to hide from threat, rather than an idea, the beauty of which it's your privilege to enjoy and feel and see the Presence of God in.

You know it says . . . you've heard the saying that, “The time will come when the lion and lamb will lie down together?” Well, it doesn't say the time will come when the lion and lamb will disappear because they're illusions. The time will come when the lion and the lamb will lie down together because neither you nor they will be governed by a fundamental misperception that survival is fundamental to being, but it is not natural to being. You get it?

If survival was not a factor, the need to survive was not a factor, because survival was a given, an eternal unalterable given, the lion and the lamb would behave entirely differently and you would behave with each other on an entirely different basis.

“There are no stores where people buy an endless list of things they do not need.”

True. Trying to fill up an emptiness that isn't even real. You know what? It takes a whole universe to hold all of your infinite wealth—to hold all of Creation that you have participated with the Father in Being, in bringing forth. Structure is not going to disappear. Creation is identified by outline, form and color, by apparent structure, by characteristics that are recognizable. And when you Wake up, characteristics will not fade, Creation will not become unrecognizable because there's nothing distinguishable about it.

If I asked you to take ten minutes to think of the ten most beautiful things that you have ever experienced—the ten most beautiful things you've experienced—you could do it. Well, are those things taking up space somewhere? Can your mind get too full of the experiences of beautiful things? No. Ideas don't take up space. They don't occupy space. But they are recognizable in outline, form, color and detail. And what you call a physical, material world out here, is not a physical material world. It is all ideas held in the continuity of conscious experience—of Mind. It's all Mind.

And so, when you are Awake, you will not use “structures” for the self-protective, sometimes mercenary and always fearful meanings that you employ them for. To have a building, to have a structure in which you enjoy being, does not require you to use it for self-protection, either as a fortress against others, or a shelter against the elements.

To find that you exist in a benign world—an infinitely benign universe—will not mean that you will not have structures, recognizable, identifiable conscious experiences. But imagine, (only for a moment, please) imagine what it would be like and what it would do and how you would create a structure that was in no way a form of defense, and one that did not keep you safe because you're invulnerable. Well, for one thing, you would probably give your attention to the, for lack of better words, the organizing of structures of incredible beauty, just because it's a gloriously wonderful thing to experience love in the form of beauty.

I've said before, that everything you see and can touch, is not matter, it is Spirit. And the substance of Spirit is Love. And so, whether it looks like a rock, whether it looks like a piece of tar-paper, whether it looks like a beautiful Japanese vase, it isn't the name you give to it, it's the Substance of it which, when you're Awake, you experience without reservation, you experience fully. And you find that even what seems to be inanimate, is truly living, moving Love—the presence of the Father. And it is loving being the form or structure that it appears to be and it is loving extending the love that it is to you. And it causes you to respond with that kind of love as well. And many of you have had experiences of illumination just like that. You have had glimpses of the way things truly are.

So as you read this, understand that it is not making reference so much to form and structure, as it is to the use you are putting it to and the foundational premises that cause you to approach them and see them the way you are seeing them.

Now, it is true . . .

“It is not lit with artificial light, and night comes not upon it.”

As you become less and less defended against joining, and more and more insistent upon looking at everything through Christ’s Vision—which is His gift to you—all of this living substance called Love that appears as all the various structures that you’re experiencing, will also be recognizable as Light. Light illuminating everything so that there is no place of darkness—never a place of darkness. And the Light that lights it all is a palpable Love.

There is so much awaiting you. And that’s why I encourage all of you not to quibble over, “Is this real, is that not real? Will this be here after the shift? Is it all illusion?”

Don’t waste your time doing the mental gymnastics of thinking in order to come to a conclusion that you have no experience to base it upon. And get to the point of doing that which will bring you the experience, which is, daring to get into the little gap, daring to be present in the world, daring to be present in a relationship minus your spontaneous habit of trying to think it through and deal with it on the basis of your thinking, so that you might be present in that moment innocently, silently, empty so to speak. So that you might experience Reality as it is, that has always been present in that silent place for you to experience.

The world YOU see must be DENIED, for sight of it is costing you a different kind of vision.

Everything that you have determined the meaning of is blinding you to the experience of what it really is. And so you must devalue the definitions you’ve given it.

The world YOU see must be DENIED, . .

. . . invalidated. Why? Because in the presence of [chuckling] the nothingness that will be there when you’ve invalidated it, you will be standing clear of all distraction from seeing it as it truly is. Don’t deny the trees, don’t deny the bunnies, don't deny the yellow jackets, don't deny the birds, don't deny your body.

Choose to get out of that environment—that mental environment—and go into the silence so that you might begin to look at everything from there with the desire to see and experience everything through Christ's Vision, which is His gift to you from the Father.

The world YOU see must be DENIED, for sight of it is costing you a different kind of vision.

Christ's Vision—your Sane recognition of everything.

YOU CANNOT SEE BOTH WORLDS, for each of them involves a different kind of seeing and depends on what you cherish.

Yes, one of them involves seeing alone, and the other involves seeing joined.

Each one of you is going to have to get passed the fearsome point of being willing to yield to and be involved with something other than yourself. The orphan mentality says, "Anything else other than myself is dangerous. Anything else other than myself is as unscrupulous as me. But of course, I'm learning to use my unscrupulousness to my best advantage. And sometimes even to the advantage of my brother because it helps me get what I want and makes my brother happy too." But you see, it's still manipulation. It's still private.

You have to get past this fear of letting something else, let's say, be equal to you and honor equally as yourself. "You don't want to do that. It's too dangerous," your ego says. What? More dangerous than the life you're already living?

The sight of one . . .

. . . world . . .

. . . is possible BECAUSE you have denied the other.

"Father, I'd rather see it my way." So you deny the Father's point of view. You deny the perspective that it's your Birthright to experience.

The site of one is possible BECAUSE you have denied the other. Both are not true, yet either one will seem as real to you as the amount to which you hold it dear.

Just how much do you hold your own private perspective dear? And how much do you assume it's going to cost you to abandon it? Oh I know, it will cost you dearly.

What you value, you will have. And I continually say: Risk the chance that something incredibly healing and something incredibly transformational will happen if you stop holding your right—your so-called imaginary right—to have your own thoughts and create your own reality. Risk the chance.

Both are not true, yet either one will seem as real to you as the amount to which you hold it dear. And yet their power is NOT the same because their real attraction to you is unequal.

The attraction of Reality is Real, because it has the presence of God behind it, it has the presence of God in it, and most accurately, it is the presence of God. The other world is purely imaginary, imagined by a so-called entity that doesn't even exist. The entity itself is imaginary—the orphan. It has no substance to it, no presence to it and therefore can have no attraction whatsoever. A misperception of a tree cannot attract you. But what a tree divinely is can attract you because its substance is Living Love that is loving you.

If you are feeling lonely at any time, I want you to remember that you are not alone because every tree, every flower, every chair, every lampshade, every houseplant, every carrot in the refrigerator, is Living Love, recognizable in that form and is loving you with a love that goes through your very Being and inspires you, and you are being loved at every moment by everything because it's not matter and it's not the result of a big bang, and it's not an illusion.

And as long as you hold to definitions that say it is the result of a big bang and it is matter, you will deny yourself the possibility of experiencing it for what it is and you will feel lonely. The loneliness will not be real, but you will feel it nevertheless, because your mindset—the use to which you're putting your mind itself—constitutes a denial of your capacity to experience everything for what it is.

You must dare to go through every day with what might seem to you to be a fantastic and unreasonable desire, to see the more of God in everything than what you're currently seeing, so that you don't use all of Creation for purposes for which it wasn't intended.

You do not really want the world you see, for it has disappointed you since time began.

You should write that down on a piece of paper and put it on your refrigerator to remind yourself that you don't want to be addicted to something that has never worked. You don't want to be addicted to something that has never satisfied. You don't want to be addicted to a way of being that is insane, that brings no fruits, that brings no transformation, that constitutes an eternal eddy.

Remember, the eddy is always at the edge of a river. It's always at the edge of a moving body of water. It's at the edge of the Movement of Creation, not separate from it but temporarily isolated from it. And it's not your Birthright to be in that eddy forever and ever and ever. But you've got to stop accepting it. You've got to stop saying, "This is life." How many lifetimes are you going to say, "This is life . . . this is life . . . this is life . . . it's not much, but this is life . . . yeah, I recognize this . . . yeah, not much fun . . . but this is life."

Bullshit! It's time to get up on your haunches and try using your mind in a different way for a different purpose. Instead of using it to confirm aloneness, use it to invite and establish joining, involvement, letting someone and something else be equally of value as you—that you are required to honor rather than ignore or disdain or stand superior to.

The homes you built have never sheltered you. The roads you made have led you nowhere, and no city that you built has withstood the crumbing assault of time.

Is that because they were all material? No. It's because in your mindset you are confident that life is conflicted—that life is polarized. You're all so convinced that time is actual, and yet last week we talked about the fact that you can become free of time. You can become free of the destructibility, the decadence, or the capacity to decay of all form including your body. And you can see things as they really are, eternal . . . you can. You can become free of the conviction you carry with you that what I've just said isn't so.

Nothing you made but has the mark of death upon it. Hold it not dear, for it is old and tired, and ready to return to dust even as you made it.

What did you make? A distorted perception of it. A false interpretation of it that served your ego and your sense of what gives you power. What did you make? You made a fundamental decision to adopt a fundamental belief, not a fact, a fundamental belief that you exist on your own and you can make something out of yourself. And that that is your purpose for being. That's what you made.

Hold it not dear, for it is old and tired, and ready to return to dust. . .

This aching world has not the power to touch the living world at all.

This aching world that you've made up.

This aching world has not the power to touch the living world at all. You could not give it that, . .

. . . you simply can't make what isn't real actual. You could not give it that.

. . . and so although you turn in sadness from it, you cannot find in IT the road that leads away from it into another world.

And yes, you will turn in sadness from it. You've held it dear. You've thought it kept you alive. You thought it gave meaning to your existence and it hasn't. Nothing you can attempt to do to give your existence meaning can give it Meaning. Because before you had the most insignificant thought about somehow personally giving your life meaning, your life was and still is God Moving, Meaning, unthrottled Being, uninhibited Creation.

Don't let these words just drip over your mind and run off like water in a shower, down the drain. These words are truth. And they are shared for the purpose of moving you to the point of taking hold of the use to which you are putting your mind, so that you will put it to a different use.

And again, there are only two uses: One is to use your mind as though it's isolated, solitary, independent. And the other is to use it for the purpose of joining: Joining with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—joining with the Christ, joining with Me or joining with the Father. And as I said last week, ultimately, whether you're joining with the Holy Spirit or joining with Me, you are ultimately joining with the Father. Because in the joining, in the letting down and the letting in, that which the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—will remind you of and disclose to you, is your Sonship, your Daughtership. It will reveal to you your Source and return to you the full conscious experience of your identity.

This aching world has not the power to touch the living world at all. You could not give it that, and so although you turn in sadness from it, you cannot find in IT the road that leads away from it into another world.

Yet the real world has the power to touch you . . .

. . . why? Because its Substance and Meaning is Love that embraces you and imbues you with all that it is. And illuminates in you the truth about you that brings you back into your right Mind so that you feel whole and invulnerable.

. . . the real world has the power to touch you even here BECAUSE YOU LOVE IT. And what you call with love WILL come to you.

It's just that you have to call for something different from what you have been calling for. "Oh, but if I do that, then I've got to give up my will. I've got to give up my willfulness. I've got to give up my whole life ethic to try to become something since I'm nothing!" Yeah, it does. No need for you to try to duplicate what God has already accomplished.

Love always answers, being unable to deny a call for help, or not to hear the cries of pain that rise to it from every part of this strange world you made but do not want.

Well, you could say that's stretching a point but it's not . . .

. . . this strange world you made but do not want.

This strange world you made you do want and you find out exactly just how much you do want it when you are reluctant to open up to the world that you didn't make.

"I'd rather stick with what I'm familiar with. I'll go around this eddy a few more thousand times . . . yeah, whew! No telling what I'll find out in the main current." No.

The only effort you need make to give this world away in glad exchange for what you did not make is willingness to learn THE ONE YOU MADE IS FALSE.

Oh-h . . . bad news for the ego. But hey, there is no ego. So you don't have to feel bad if the one you made is false. All you have to recognize is, "Oh yeah, I'm doing something that doesn't work. I'm going to do something that does work. I thought it was working but I see now that lifetime after lifetime after lifetime, or even this one long lifetime I've been living, nothing's changed. I'm still stuck. I'm still going through the same historical processes that my parents and my grandparents and . . . everybody has babies and the babies grow up, and when they grow up they have babies . . . and the babies grow up, and when the babies grow up, they have babies."

A little monotonous don't you think? Transformational? No. Stuck in an eddy is what it is. You don't want to perpetuate that. It's not your Birthright.

You HAVE been wrong about the world because you have misjudged YOURSELF.

"But Father, I'd rather see it my way . . . I want a divorce!"

And so you imagined you got a divorce and you created a sense of yourself as an orphan. And that constituted a misjudgment of yourself—a false perception of yourself—and you're stuck in it at the moment and you don't need to be. And I won't let you be without constantly reminding you that you don't need to be, so that you'll get enough gumption to do something new.

You HAVE been wrong about the world because you have misjudged YOURSELF. From such a twisted reference point what COULD you see? All vision starts WITH THE PERCEIVER, who judges what is true and what is false. And what he judges false HE DOES NOT SEE. You who would judge reality CANNOT see it, for whenever judgment enters reality has slipped away.

"Father, I'd rather name these things—I'd rather define what they are . . . Oh, gee whiz, where did everything go?" [soft chuckle]

The out of mind is out of sight because what is denied is there, but is not RECOGNIZED. Christ is still there, . .

. . . who you really Are . . .

. . . is still there, although you know Him not.

But here's something wonderful:

His Being does not depend upon your recognition.

Your Christhood does not depend upon your recognition.

He lives within you in . . .

. . . Oh, what? . .

. . . the quiet present, . .

. . . the little gap, the silence.

He lives within you in the quiet present, and waits for you to leave the past behind and enter into the world He holds out to you in love.

You know what? There really isn't a problem to solve. There isn't anything to work out, even though as we go through the book it seems to give you lots of little details and things maybe to work out. There's nothing to work out. There's just a call for a simple willingness to see things differently, a call for a simple willingness to abandon your commitment to your very definite mindset, a willingness to abandon that you aren't here to do everything on your own and a willingness to reach out to the Father—to your Father, to the Holy Spirit, or to the Christ—and invite them in and really mean it! It's like a single person arriving at the point where he says, or she says, "I don't want to be alone anymore. I want to get married. I want to live in relationship to someone else twenty four hours a day, seven days a week, fifty two weeks a year."

Much to contemplate. Much to be with. But notice I did not say, much to think about. Learn to be present with things without thinking.

[New paragraph]

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 11th 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Your days are full of stimulation, and the stimuli usually elicit conditioned responses. In other words, habitual responses, whether it's a habitual thought, whether it's a habitual boilerplate statement, it's always something that comes from your memory. It is always a past behavior that spontaneously comes into play actually without your even thinking.

Now, everything we are uncovering here has as its point—it's purpose—to move you off of your ingrained tendency to respond out of habit. Because when you're responding out of habit, you are not responding to the actual moment you are in and the actual dynamics of it. And so, your response can't ever really be in touch with what the stimuli are calling for.

The fact is, that the underlying ground belief or habitual response or style of habitual response is, that no matter what the stimuli has been, it's up to you to know what to do. It's up to you to have the answer. It's up to you to find out how to cope with whatever the stimulus is. It's all me . . . me . . . me. It's all orphan . . . orphan . . . orphan.

What we are in the midst of promoting transformation about, is that you remember that it's not all up to you. In other words, that there is a God.

I don't care how spiritual you are or how spiritual you think you are or how well developed you think you've become—spiritually speaking—you very seldom consistently respond to the events in your day from a conscious awareness of your partnership with God. You forget there's a God. And you forget what the portent is of what God is relative to you. And so you lose, or perhaps, have never experienced the inspiration, the uplift, the inspiriting of Revelation and spontaneous clarity and the ever-present support there is for you to have an experience very different from the hum-drum, repetitive scenarios that unfold in your day, where: Something happens, you respond on your own . . . something happens, you respond on your own . . . somebody reacts to your response and you react to their response . . . you react to their reaction. And there you are in the eddy that we've been talking about, caught in just a mental habit of being unconscious.

The whole point is to remember that there is a God and to remember that God is your Father. It's not that there is a God that created the Universe, and you are enjoying the effect of His Creation. It's not that there is a God Who somehow maintains an underlying order to things so that no matter how bad they get Creation doesn't collapse, but you're just left to cope. It's that God is infinite intelligence and you, for lack of better words, are the reflection of that infinite intelligence.

This intelligence that God is, is your intelligence. It's His gift to you by virtue of creating you in His image and likeness as His Offspring. It's your Birthright to be experiencing the inspiration and inspiriting of this conscious experience of intelligence that goes far beyond your being able to sort and gather data from your memory banks to pull together to respond to life because it all depends on you, and how good a brain you have and how effective your synapses are, and so on and so forth . . . you unfortunate "hunk of meat."

You forget that there is a God. And so you don't reach out. And if you do reach out, it's generally a reaching out to a sort of blind God that may or may not see you, may or may not hear your plea because He's very different from you. You are just His manifestation. You are just His effect, an effect of a Movement of Creation far in the past. And so, in your mind, it's a hit or miss process—this reaching out to God, that's called prayer.

Now, before we go into the continuation of what we were reading last week, I am going to read Lesson 130 in the Workbook without comment.

The subject is:

"It is impossible to see two worlds." 1

Perception is consistent. What you see reflects your thinking. And your thinking but reflects your choice of what you want to see. Your values are determiners of this, for what you value you must want to see, believing what you see is really there. No-one can see a world his mind has not accorded value. And no-one can fail to look upon what he believes he wants.

Yet who can really hate and love at once? Who can desire what he does not want to have reality? And who can choose to see a world of which he is afraid? Fear must make blind, for this its weapon is; that which you fear to see you cannot see. Love and perception thus go hand in hand, but fear obscures in darkness what is there.

What, then, can fear project upon the world? What can be seen in darkness that is real? Truth is eclipsed by fear, and what remains is but imagined. Yet what can be real in blind imaginings of panic borne? What would you want that this is shown to you? What would you wish to keep in such a dream?

Fear has made everything you think you see. All separation, all distinctions, and the multitude of differences you believe make up the world. They are not there. Love's enemy has made them up. Yet love can have no enemy, and so they have no cause, no being and no consequence. They can be valued, but remain unreal. They can be sought, but they can not be found.

Today we will not seek for them, nor waste this day in seeking not what can be found. It is impossible to see two worlds which have no overlap of any kind. Seek for the one; the other disappears. But one remains. They are the range of choice beyond which your decision cannot go. The real and the unreal are all there is to choose between, and nothing more than these.

Today we will attempt no compromise where none is possible. The world you see is proof you have already made a choice as all-embracing as its opposite. What we would learn today is more than just the lesson that you cannot see two worlds. It also teaches that the one you see is quite consistent from the point of view from which you see it. It is all a piece because it stems from one emotion, and reflects its source in everything you see.

Six times today, in thanks and gratitude, . . .

. . . in thanks and gratitude . . .

. . . we gladly give five minutes to the thought which ends all compromise and doubt, and go beyond them all as one. We will not make a thousand meaningless distinctions, nor attempt to bring with us a little part of unreality as we devote our minds to finding only what is real.

Begin your searching for the other world by asking for a strength beyond your own, and recognize what it is you seek. You do not want illusions. And you come to these five minutes emptying your hands of all the petty treasures of this world. You wait for God to help you, as you say:

Let me accept the strength God offers me
And see no value in this world, that I
May find my freedom and deliverance.”*

God will be there. For you have called upon the great unfailing Power Who will take this giant step with you in gratitude. Nor will you fail to see His thanks expressed in tangible perception and in truth. You will not doubt what you will look upon. For though it is perception, it is not the kind of seeing that your eyes alone have ever seen before. And you will know God’s strength upheld as you made this choice.

Dismiss temptation easily today whenever it arises, merely by remembering the limits on your choice. The unreal or the real, the false or true is what you see, and only what you see. Perception is consistent with your choice, and hell or Heaven come to you as one.

As one or the other.

Accept a little part of hell as real, and you have damned your eyes and cursed your sight, and what you will behold is hell indeed. Yet the release of Heaven still remains within your range of choice, to take the place of everything that hell would show to you. All you need say to any part of hell, whatever form it takes, is simply this:

I seek my freedom and deliverance,
And this is not a part of what I want.”*

As you go through your day are you doing it in a lazy sloppy way? Things happen that you don't like and you say, "Well that's life," and you do your best to cope with it. Or, are you alert enough and unconfused enough in your own mind that you are willing to look at it and say, "This is not a part of what I want!" Taking a stand, as it were, taking a position on your behalf. "This is not a part of what I want. I want freedom and deliverance. This is unacceptable.”

You will have the experience that you stand on the side of. You will have the experience that will reflect the belief that you stand on the side of. And so it calls for some self-discipline. Your experience will be as fuzzy or as clear as what you insist upon having for your experience.

Now, let's go into the book. And I'm going to back up a couple of sentences.

The out of mind is out of sight because what is denied is there, but is not RECOGNIZED. Christ is still there, although you know Him not. ²

And we could say God is still there, although you know Him not. Because it didn't occur to you to let Him in, it didn't occur to you to include Him, because you're so damned busy taking care of all the stimulating events that are going on in your life which you think call for your habitual responses.

Christ is still there, although you know Him not. His Being . . .

. . . and God's Being . . .

. . . does not depend upon your recognition. He lives within you in the quiet present, and waits for you to leave the past behind and enter into the world He holds out to you in love.

No-one in this distracted world but has seen some glimpses of the other world about him.

You've all had moments of inspiration. You've all had moments of insight. You've all had moments of clarity that let you know that there literally is another way to look at this—another way to be with everything.

No-one in this distracted world but has seen some glimpses of the other world about him. Yet while he still lays value on his own, he will DENY the vision of the other world, maintaining that he loves what he loves not, and following not the road that love points out.

Um-m . . .

. . . maintaining that he loves what he loves not.

Well, you don't love doing what doesn't work. And yet you insist on doing what does not work. And to make it even more practical, you insist on doing things by yourself, which has never ultimately worked. You insist on doing things without including anything outside your puny little memory banks and the habitual ways of processing the data that's there.

Listen to this:

Love leads so gladly!

Now, when you're caught up in looking at everything through your particular biases and your particular interpretations that you're so absolutely sure of and you are unwilling to gather data from anywhere outside of your memory banks, existence is a struggle. There's no joy to it, because in one way or another, it's a constant unfoldment of failure.

And you know that wears you down. You really do know that it wears you down and discourages you—depresses you. But you say, "What can I do?" [slight chuckle] You can remember that there is a God. You can remember that there is a Source that is a Resource that goes far beyond whatever you have stored in your memory banks.

Love leads so gladly!

You, each and every one of you, are constantly surrounded by, imbued by, and supported by a love that extends itself to you gladly. And inescapably conveys the gladness to you that causes you to feel inspired. Inspiration is available to you even in your darkest moments, even in your lousiest attitude that you seem not to be able to shake yourself free from.

Love leads so gladly! And as you follow Him, . .

. . . the Christ that's still there, although you know I'm not, . .

. . . And as you follow Him, you will rejoice . . .

. . . ah-h . . the joy will come through . . .

. . . you will rejoice that you have found His company, and learned of Him the joyful journey home.

Specifically tonight, we're homing in on the need for you to realize that when you feel absolutely stuck in a frame of mind or a mental attitude of negativity that seems absolutely justifiable to you, and which, because it seems totally justifiable to you, there can be no escape from . . . there is escape.

There is escape.

And as you follow Him, you will rejoice that you have found His company, and learned of Him the joyful journey home. You wait but for YOURSELF.

. . . not Him. And you don't wait for God, although you say your prayers to God, and then you wait in hopes that He will answer you, as though He might not.

You wait but for YOURSELF.

. . . you wait but for yourself to shift your focus of attention from the past to the now, from memory to the little gap—the place of silence in you—where you are not confirming and reconfirming old bad habits and old thinking processes that accomplish nothing and keep you in a repetitive state of failure.

To give this sad world . . .

. . . your depression, your consternation. Ah-h, your hopelessness.

To give this sad world over and exchange your errors for the peace of God is but YOUR will.

. . . or to hold on to this sad world and mull it over and sit on the pity-potty is but your will. But it isn't the will that's established in your Being. It's a will that's established in sloppy, bad, mental habits.

To give this sad world over and exchange your errors for the peace of God is but YOUR will.

That is your true will. Because of what you truly Are. It's not the will of the orphan, but it's the will of the divine Being that you Are that is being obscured by your preoccupation with negativity.

And Christ will ALWAYS offer you the Will of God, in recognition that you share it with Him.

You share the Will of God with God because all there is to you is God Being all there is to you. But you've got to remember this right in the middle of your stimulating day, and your habit of responding out of habit, out of the past, out of your memory, out of what you are so independently confident about without ever asking for a second opinion and turning to God or the Holy Spirit or your Guide or Me, and saying, "How else could I be seeing this? I need a second perspective. And I want a perspective that reflects the truth, not beliefs." And say your prayer, "I wish to see and experience everything through your Vision, which is your gift to me from God."

Ask Me to share My Vision with you because that is what I'm here for, not just on Saturday nights, but every moment of your day. Start engaging with Me more consistently. Start asking for Me to share My Vision, so that you might look at everything through It. Why? Because it's your Birthright to be seeing everything that way, and not to be confused, and not to be depressed and not to be caught in a repetitive eddy.

Clarity of Vision . . . the Father's Perspective . . . the capacity to look at everything from your innate divine sanity is a promise held out to you as long as you're denying its existence. It is an unfailing promise that stands there to be implemented, or activated by your conscious choice to access it in favor of, or in place of your stupid intent to value whatever your current way of seeing things is.

Now, it certainly is my hope, that you don't just tune in on Saturday nights and listen for a little bit of inspiring stimulation and then, perhaps, draw from it occasionally. It's my hope that when you become discouraged for whatever reason, you'll pick up this book and read what we've been talking about. You need the support when your strong habits are in full force. You need to be able to sit down and read something like this:

It is God's Will that nothing touch His Son except Himself, and nothing else comes nigh unto him.

Now you're likely to read that and say, "Well that sure as hell isn't my experience!" But the fact is that you've read it. And there's something that you now are aware of that contradicts what you are so sure of. And you need that reminder to be present at the same time that you are, out of habit, reinforcing your negative frame of mind or your independent stance that necessarily means that your experience cannot be the fullness of fulfillment.

It is God's Will that nothing touch His Son except Himself, and nothing else comes nigh unto him. He is as safe from pain as God Himself, . .

. . . why? What ultimately could cause you to be as safe from pain as God Himself? Well, the very simple fact that all there is to you is what God is Being of Himself right there where you are. And you were never created and allowed to become a separate independent entity by God. You are always the current inspired presence of the Mind of God—of the Being of God. And that is why:

He is as safe from pain as God Himself, Who watches over him in everything.

You need the reminder that you are not alone. Because your suffering is caused only and entirely by the belief that you are alone, independent, separate, an orphan, a living being set into motion and left to fend for itself all by itself.

The world about him . . .

. . . the world about you . . .

. . . shines with love because God placed him in Himself where pain is not, and love surrounds him without end or flaw.

We're talking about Reality here, the other world, so to speak—one of the two choices that you seem to have available to you. When you seem to be confronted with the other world of pain and sorrow, you can do what you've always done and suffer through it, or you can say, "Wait a minute! I have a choice. Not a lot of choices. I only have two choices: I can choose for what I'm experiencing, which is not Real and is a suffering experience, or I can opt for the other choice for that which is Real in which no suffering is going on, no misperception of Reality is going on that seems to hurt."

Disturbance of his peace . . .

. . . God's Son . . .

. . . can never be. In perfect sanity he looks on love, for it is all about him . . .

. . . all about him, everywhere . . .

. . . and within him. He . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . MUST deny the world of pain the instant he perceives the arms of love around him.

The moment you let them in—the arms of love—and experience them, you will without thought, immediately let go of the world of pain that you were experiencing because you will have experienced the other option . . . the other choice. And you cannot see two worlds at the same time. It's black or white.

That's how simple it is. And that's how Absolute it is. But it boils down to your making a choice.

He MUST deny the world of pain the instant he perceives the arms of love around him. And from this point of safety he . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . looks quietly about him, and recognizes that the world is one with him.

. . . continuous, not segregated, not separated into this, that and the other thing that are different from you. This world that you've been educated to think came from a big bang and it's just a matter of physical processes going on, is the Kingdom of Heaven misperceived as that. And so . . .

. . . from this point of safety he looks quietly about him, and recognizes that he world is one with him.

That the world is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now, this book uncovers error for what it is and it illuminates the truth. In the process of uncovering error, it can begin to look as though you and your thinking are responsible for all of your bad fortune, your suffering, your illness, your distress, and so on. And it can seem to call for you to get a better hold on your mind. In other words, a call for the orphan to become more efficient in the proper use of his mind, or her mind. And this can create a tremendous burden. And you say, "Oh-h, well, it's in the Course and so this burden must be appropriate and I must endure it!" And all the time that you're going down this fantasy lane, you're forgetting one thing: There is a God.

You see, the orphan has been so used to solving its own problems, and it has been taught that it's up to him or her to do all the problem solving and to find ways to do it better and better, which has never solved the dilemma of being an orphan.

And so I want to remind you, that although it can become very easy to use what we've been reading and everything that's in the rest of the book to burden yourself with a false responsibility to do things better all by yourself, you must not succumb to it.

You must not forget, that the whole point is to cause a realization in you that there are two vantage points—only two—and you can choose for one or the other, meaning, you can stop choosing for the one that doesn't work. And you can start choosing for the one that heals, and regenerates, and transforms your perspective, your mind, so that you do come back into your sanity. And then, recognizing that you have a choice, make the choice and be diligent about it. And especially, be diligent about it when you are caught in an eddy, when you are depressed, when you are discouraged. That's when it's needed most. And that's when you feel least like doing it.

Love leads so gladly!

When you make the choice for what's Real—for Reality, for something beyond your memory banks—what responds is love that leads gladly, and as I said, embraces you and imbues you with the experience of that gladness, causing you to be inspired in spite of the awfulness of your perspective that you seem to be caught in irrevocably.

When you are caught in the so-called awfulness of the human condition, get this book out and read. So that even though it seems to you in your current mental frame of mind, that what you're reading is the furthest thing from the truth—because you know what the truth is and it's the awfulness of the human condition—you are confronted with an intelligently expressed alternative point of view that makes it easier for you not to believe that your current point of view is the only point of view and absolutely valid. Because that's the way you undo the commitment that you're bringing to your loving, to hold to and affirm and reconfirm your awful negative frame of mind.

The peace of God passeth your understanding ONLY in the past.

Well, it has in the past, because you're not Awake.

Yet here it IS, and you can understand it NOW. God loves His Son forever, and His Son RETURNS his Father's Love forever.

But his Son does not return His Father's Love until he let's his Father in, until he lets the awareness that he has a Father be present in his mind. If he doesn't do that, he's all caught up in self-preservation, his tiny little self having to solve every problem against the greatest of odds and a world and universe that are conflicted and tends to cause suffering and ultimately, death.

The real world is the way that leads you to remembrance of this one thing that is wholly true and wholly YOURS. For all else you have lent yourself in time, and it will fade. But this one thing is ALWAYS yours, being the gift of God unto His Son. Your ONE reality was given you, . .

. . . and I would say, is given you . . .

. . . and by it God created you . . .

... what? . . .

... as one with Him.

All there is to you is what God is Being of Himself, right there where you are.

You will first dream of peace, and then awaken to it.

You know what? When you are as caught up in the fullness of your problems and the arrogance you have to think that it's up to you to solve it, and that God gave you the capacity to solve it without consulting God, all by yourself, you don't dream of peace. You're fulfilling a purpose which is to your credit to fulfill or will be supposedly. And you don't dream of peace. You dream of conflict and surmounting it. You're on a crusade and you're loving it because you know right will win out.

You will first dream of peace, and then awaken to it. Your first exchange of what you made for what you want is the exchange of nightmares for the happy dreams of love. In these lie your true perceptions, for the Holy Spirit . . .

... that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . . .

. . . corrects the world of dreams where ALL perception is. Knowledge needs no correction. Yet the dreams of love lead UNTO knowledge. In them you see nothing fearful, and because of this they are the welcome that you OFFER knowledge.

When something is not fearful, you spontaneously embrace it, you spontaneously welcome it.

Love waits on welcome, NOT on time, and the real world is but your welcome of what always was. Therefore the call of joy is in it, and your glad response is your awakening to what you have not lost. Praise, then, the Father for the perfect sanity of His most holy Son.

... meaning yours.

Put a marker on this page so that you can come back to it because you need the reminders that are here. And come and read it when you least feel like it, when there seems to be no point, when you're sure it won't do any good. You might say, level out the playing field by providing another perspective than the one you're engaged in that is causing your suffering.

Your Father knoweth that you have need of nothing.

It's the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. And that's what God, Being Himself right where you are, as what appears to be you, Is. It's you having the Kingdom.

Your Father knoweth that you have need of nothing. In Heaven this is so, for what could you need in eternity? In YOUR world . . .

. . . the one you made up . . .

. . . you DO need things because it is a world of scarcity in which you find yourself BECAUSE you are lacking. Yet CAN you find yourself in such a world?

. . . the world in which you need nothing?

Without the Holy Spirit the answer would be no. Yet because of Him the answer is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . a joyous YES!

Not just a matter of fact, so-be-it sort of thing. It's a . . .

. . . joyous YES! As Mediator between the two worlds, He knows what you have need of and what will not hurt you.

And again, you've got to remember that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. And so we're talking about, in the process of waking up, you're not being the beneficiary of some "out there benefactor," not an orphan being given the equivalent of an inheritance, you are . . . it is you coming back into your right Mind where wholeness and integrity and cohesiveness and continuity—unbroken continuity—is your experience.

Now, there are many of you who have, during the last few weeks, been caught in an eddy of negativity—in a circular thought pattern—in which you have been incapable of experiencing insight or revelation or the infilling of the Spirit where it has seemed to be impossible to have any lift, any reason to experience the slightest bit of joy or even let's just say, pleasantness.

And some of you have said, "Well, after what we've been learning in the Course, my orphanhood must be in full blossom, and what can I expect? And there is so much about my thinking that is wrong—that I don't even know of—that it's going to be impossible for me to get out of this eddy." And you use what we've been reading to justify staying stuck.

That happens because it coincides with your lifelong habit that you've been raised to believe: That everything is up to you and that you are independent and that you do have intelligence of your own and you do have capacities that it's up to you to exercise. And not only that, if you have to lean on someone else, that is insulting! If you have to be in relationship with someone else or something else, and let's say, let there be shared responsibility for getting out of the problem, it undermines and disqualifies any hope you thought you had to fulfill your purpose—your so-called purpose to become a successful entity on your own—a false purpose that has been dangling in front of you like a carrot in front of a horse that you have been trying to get, and which you will never be able to get because it's part of the setup that you never get it. Why? Because if the horse got it, the horse would stop moving forward. And so the paraphernalia is set up so that the horse can't get it, but it will be just out of range so that it feels like it's worth trying for.

Please, remember that you have two choices, not just the one you're caught in and suffering from. And then, do whatever you have to do to make the other choice, even if it means picking up this book and going to his marked page or any other place where you can read about the truth about you, so that you have a "second opinion" side by side with the first. In the presence of the second opinion that is different, the first opinion cannot appear to set there as an absolute fact, and you cannot be duped as easily.

Okay. Have a rousing good time this week challenging your habitual thinking, not by doing anything to it, but by opting for giving your attention to and letting in a second opinion—the other point of view—in whatever way works.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

WITH RAJ

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I know all of you are completely familiar with the idea that you come into this world with nothing and you take nothing with you when you leave. You come into the world with nothing, you leave with nothing. It's like from dust to dust, from nothing to nothing. But glory of glories, you have this opportunity you believe in the interim, to gather things—possessions—to get and to have. Not only that, but to get and to have that which is mutually agreed upon as having value so that your accumulation constitutes your wealth or what you imagine to be wealth. And how much you accumulate and how much you have when you leave and take nothing with you, is a mark of your success—your worth, literally.

This is such a strong belief that you believe, that what you possess is your only worth and is the only proof of your worth. It is a miserable idea, but it is one that is deeply engrained and not easy to abandon.

Now we've been talking about the two worlds, and the fact you cannot see two worlds at the same time. One precludes the possibility of seeing the other. And the other precludes the possibility of seeing the former.

What I just described about entering the world with nothing and leaving it with nothing is the description of orphanhood. This is the one you need to abandon because it completely blocks from your view, the Real world, the truth about you that it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom, that the Father has withheld nothing of what He is from you—a state of being in which there is no lack of any sort.

Now, it's an interesting thing: In orphanland—the other world—it is a state of mind of scarcity, which means that there isn't enough for everyone. And that's the reason for the struggle to possess so that you can secure for yourself something that is meaningful and of value to you that there isn't enough for everyone to have.

And the means by which you secure a possession is through the idea or concept of ownership. The very word, "ownership" truly is meaningless and needs to be seen as meaningless, and needs to be invalidated. Because you know what? You can't take that with you into the conscious experience of the other world or of Reality. And this is a tough nut to crack.

How would you behave . . . and I want you to think about this from time to time this week: How would you behave if you didn't own anything and you didn't need to own anything? How would you behave if everything you needed was yours? And then, I want you to contemplate how you could transfer that experience—that way of being—into your daily lives here in what you think is orphanland.

Now you may think this is going to take a tremendous stretch of your mind, one that will be impossible. But it's not. And I am pointing you in a direction without giving you an explanation of what you will experience, because you have to feel for it yourself and you have to begin to look at yourself and everything in your day—as you go through your day—with a willingness to see it in a different way. And you need to ask me or the Holy Spirit or the Father, to help give you the new perspective—the fresh perspective. And don't be afraid of what you will find.

You see, you're all afraid of loss. Loss of what? Loss of possessions. Even your good you think of as a possession. You are afraid of loss because your fundamental mind-set says nothing is truly yours to begin with and none of it will be truly yours to end with, therefore, you must do something unnatural, at odds with this state of nothingness, so as to have substance yourself, wealth, respect that comes from it and so on.

Now, are you the Christ. Now, are you each the direct expression of God—the current direct expression of God—in Whom all that God is, is Being embodied currently.

As I've said many times, you are neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom. And that's what we're talking about.

“Well, you’re speaking in rather general vague terms. Can’t you be a little more specific?” No. Because you have to want the new experience. And you have to want it enough to opt for it—to give your attention to the experience of it—and by doing that actually within yourself, setting aside the devotion and the commitment you have to your old mind-set.

I could tell you things, yes . . . I could tell you things, yes . . . but then you would think about what I told you. And I don’t want you to think. I want you to let yourself into the void of not-knowing and pay attention—listen innocently—meaning, without preconceptions or expectations.

At the beginning of the paragraph that we are going to start reading in, it says,

Your Father knoweth that you have need of nothing. ¹

“Oh yeah, in the sweet bye and bye, that will be the truth. When I’m Awake, that will be the truth.” Well, Wake up! Wake up here . . . now . . . today . . . tonight . . . this moment! It’s the truth now! Don’t distance yourself from it by saying, “Yeah, yeah, in the sweet bye and bye . . .” after you die or when you’re further down your spiritual path.

You have to dare to start behaving and being conscious as though you truly are not behind the point of perfection, that you’re at the point of perfection, and that you are capable of comprehending or understanding yourself from that point right here, right now. Where? In orphanland? No. In the Kingdom of Heaven that you’re currently calling orphanland. And all I’m saying is, here is a way to stop reinforcing that where you are is orphanland.

Pay attention this week to how much you value your possessions—how devoted you are to them and how owned you are by them. You see, ownership—the things you own—end up owning you, because as you serve them, because they are serving you by giving you validation and respectability, you lose sight of your capacity to love. It becomes more important to you to protect your possessions than it does to care about your brother or to do the inner work necessary to cut through the definitions you have about your brother, so that you might connect with what your brother truly is, right there in front of you in spite of your definitions.

“Oh,” you say (I’m changing the subject slightly) “I have a body. This is my body. I have blue eyes—good looking blue eyes. I am this or that. I have a pleasant smile. And my body is nobody else’s body. It’s mine.” Well, isn’t that as silly as an ingot of gold saying, “Ah-h, this gold color is mine,” as though it’s a possession rather than an inherent quality that could never be absent for a moment without gold—the ingot of gold, ceasing to be gold.

You don't have a body. That which you are—consciousness, Mind—always has present that which identifies it. There's no choice. You can't possess what you are. You can't possess what is you. But since you think your body is your possession, you take great care to protect it as though you could lose it. And I promise you, that the moment anyone passes on they find that they haven't lost their body. [slight chuckle] How can the visibility and tangibility of you be lost or possessed or in need of protection—only if it isn't truly yours, but you must make it yours—pure orphan mentality.

Now, let's continue in the book.

Ownership is a dangerous concept . . .

. . . and notice it uses the word, concept. It didn't say, a dangerous thing, as though it were something actual.

Ownership is a dangerous concept if it is left to you. The ego wants to HAVE things for salvation, for possession is its law.

Why is possession its law? Because without possession, it's nothing. From dust to dust. Possession proves that it is something according to its idiotic mindset.

The ego wants to HAVE things for salvation, for possession is its law. Possession for its OWN sake is the ego's fundamental creed, . .

. . . possession just for the sake of possession . . .

. . . is the ego's fundamental creed, a basic cornerstone in the churches that it builds unto itself.

Don't mistake and think it's talking about churches in the world. The ego turns the body into a temple of its own . . . you know, it sees it as a possession and it claims it.

And at ITS altar . . .

. . . somewhere right in the center of what you call you . . .

. . . it demands you lay ALL of the things it bids you get, leaving you no joy in them.

How does it do this, or how does this translate in the human experience? It translates this way: You gain something, you gain possession of it—you get it. And then you establish ownership of it. And forever more, you must protect yourself against its loss. And that's what insurance companies thrive on. And the fact that you believe that it still truly is not yours, is what causes you to be sucked into buying insurance.

And so, daily, as you gain possession of something, you also gain the inevitability of its loss or the extreme likelihood of its loss, and you must do something to secure it further. The ego says, "You will be happy with this." And you get it. And it says, "Lay it on the altar, it's not really yours. You can't really have it. You've got to protect it, and in protecting it, constantly remind yourself that you don't really have it!" And so the joy of having it is never truly experienced. That's what that means.

. . . at ITS altar, it demands you lay ALL of the things it bids you get, leaving you no joy in them.

So, you compensate and you accumulate things—things of value, and hopefully things of great value. And then, knowing that you will not be able to forever hold on to it, what do you do? You turn it into—in your mind—a (isn't this is a great word) into a legacy, which you can hand down to your offspring. Not just something that allows them, who were born with nothing and will die with nothing, a leg up, but also as a monument to the power that these accumulations give whoever owns them, to do good in the world, you see.

So built right into the fact that you can't really own anything forever, the miserable mindset is given a little bit of awesomeness by being provided with a larger purpose. And so the offspring, not only seem to get a leg up in terms of possessions, they also find handed to them an obligation to do good in the world because they have the means to do it, whether they wanted it or not, which many of them experience as burden.

And so, the sense of accumulated wealth and of a legacy being handed on continues to be a miserable mindset. And I'm spelling it out clearly here for you, so that you might more easily say, "Wow . . . yes, how come I didn't see that? Wow . . . how come I'm making myself so miserable because I think I don't have a portfolio or I don't have accumulated wealth?" This misery is as invalid as the misery that accompanies apparently having wealth that you don't really have.

I'm spelling it out so that you might say inside you that you have justification for exploring the other world, for abandoning orphanland, for abandoning isolation, self-sufficient independence and join with your Father and with the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind—so that you might begin to relate to your brother, not as fellow orphans but as fellow Christs who have not an inheritance passed down out of the past but a Birthright that is a result of a current Movement of God right where you are, in which all that God is, is being embodied for you to be consciously aware of right here in what appears to be just the world, and which I keep reminding you is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Everything that the ego tells you that you need will hurt you.

Every carrot that the ego has you chase after will hurt you because one way or another, you will never really be able to get it. Even if you managed to get it for a moment, the ego would demand it from you and let you know that it is not yours, really.

Everything that the ego tells you that you need will hurt you. For although the ego urges you again and again to GET, it leaves you nothing, for what you get it will DEMAND of you.

Well, what happens? Most of you say, "Well Okay, I accept the fact that I can't take it with me. And I accept the fact that even if I get it, I might lose it before I arrive at a point of dying, where I can't take it with me. But, I will narrow down my attention and I will enjoy whatever brief span of time I have in possession of this. And I will simply hope that I have brief ownership of many things so that while I give my specific attention to the having of them, I can feel good about it and hopefully there will be enough short-lived happiness that I know isn't true happiness, so that I can manage to tolerate the time I have until I die and can't take anything with me."

Not a happy thing to contemplate that I'm talking about. But I want you to see . . . I want you to see that you are managing to gloss over misery. And you don't need to gloss over misery because there is another way to look at this. There is another world . . . right here. There is another way to see and be right here . . . right now without dying.

Again:

Everything that the ego tells you that you need will hurt you. For although the ego urges you again and again to GET, it leaves you nothing, for what you get it will DEMAND of you. And even from the very hands that grasped it, . .

. . . meaning yours . . .

. . . it will be wrenched and hurled into the dust.

Nobody likes to think about it. But there are people who accumulate things their whole life—treasures—maybe not to exhibit great wealth, but to have in their possession things that they love. And one night their houses catches fire [snaps fingers] and it's gone. Where's the permanence? Did you have to die to not be able to take something with you into the next day? No. I'm saying be willing to take a realistic look: The orphan's world is a miserable world today, and it's not your Birthright to be experiencing everything that accompanies its perspective.

If you will stop glossing over the miserable life and acknowledge it as it is, it will be so much easier for you to say to me—to the Christ—"I wish to see and experience everything through your Vision, which is your gift to me from the Father."

In honest sincerity of being willing to look squarely at misery and call it misery and not bother to gloss it over, you will find that the energy and the motivation and the ability to commit is there when you say, "I want to see the Real World, and what I'm experiencing now is not what I want to see!"

For although the ego urges you again and again to GET, it leaves you nothing, for what you get it will DEMAND of you. And even from the very hands that grasped it, it will be wrenched and hurled into the dust. For where the ego sees salvation it sees SEPARATION, and so you lose whatever you have gotten in its name.

That's just the way it works in orphanland, in the illusion.

Therefore ask not of yourselves what you need, . .

. . . meaning, you as the orphan you think you are, you as the isolated, separated, independent, autonomous entity that you think you are . . .

. . . ask not of yourselves what you need, for YOU DO NOT KNOW, and your advice unto yourself WILL hurt you. For what you think you need will merely serve to tighten up your world AGAINST the light, and render you unwilling to question the value that this world can really hold for you.

And that's exactly what I'm intending and attempting to do tonight, is to cause you to be willing to question the value that this world—orphaneland, separation—can really hold for you. If you're satisfied with it, there won't be any motivation, nothing in you, no desire to experience a sudden shift of perception. And that desire in you needs to be nurtured and nourished and illuminated and enlarged.

Only the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . again, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Only the Holy Spirit KNOWS what you need. For He will give you all things that do not block the way to light. And what else COULD you need?

What else could you need besides an unblocked way to the light, to awakening, to revelation, to realization, to coming back into your right Mind?

. . . what else COULD you need? In time, He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . gives you all the things that you need have, . .

. . . in other words, while you're still not totally Awake and clear.

In time, He gives you all the things that you need have, and will renew them as long as you have need of them. He will take nothing from you as long as you have ANY need of it. And yet He knows that everything you need is temporary, and will but last until you step aside from ALL your needs, and learn that all of them HAVE BEEN fulfilled.

In other words, they never were needs. You will arrive at a point where you will discover that what you thought you needed has always been permanently, eternally yours—inseparable from you. And all that kept you from experiencing it was that you thought you didn't have it. You thought it wasn't yours, because you thought you were an orphan. You thought you had no connection to the eternal and the infinite. You thought you were just a puny piss-ant little mortal and you believed what you thought.

Therefore He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . has no investment in the things that He supplies except to make certain that you will not use them on behalf of lingering in time. He knows that you are not at home there, and He wills no delay to wait upon your joyous home-coming.

So even if you misinterpret what the Holy Spirit reveals to you and you use it for delay, the Holy Spirit will not allow it.

Leave, then, your needs to Him.

If you have a need within yourself say, “Holy Spirit, it’s going to be really interesting to see how you unfold this . . . the fulfillment of this need as my experience. And it’s going to be even more interesting to find the fulfillment of needs that I didn’t imagine that I had.” Needs like, peace of mind that doesn’t hinge on events or circumstances or the behaviors of other people. The need to be able to abide unswervingly in an experience of true love—a real love that isn’t dependent upon circumstances or whether people have earned it, a love that is there imbuing everything you look at with what it is, in which you never feel vulnerable, threatened.

It will really be interesting to experience the fulfillment of needs you didn’t know you had. How about the need to simply never be in fear? You probably wouldn’t think to ask for that because you’ve learned to cope pretty damn well with life. But you have a need to never experience fear, because it is foreign to what you divinely and truly Are. And therefore, it has never abided in you. It has never really found a foothold in you. And you, right here in this lifetime, can live year after year without once experiencing fear.

What comes to you of Him comes safely, for He will ensure it never can become a dark spot, hidden in your mind, and kept to hurt you. Under His guidance you will travel light and journey lightly, for His sight is ever on the journey’s end, which is His goal.

Now let’s not get confused here. The Holy Spirit doesn’t see the journey’s end as somewhere down in the future. He sees the journey’s end as the point of perfection that you’re already at—the actuality of which it’s His goal to uncover to you. So the journey’s end is to see yourself as you already Are—divinely. And that which is nothing more than your right Mind is never confused about this, which is why you can dare to lean into It and give permission for It to guide you, and yield to It a hundred percent.

God’s son is not a traveler through OUTER worlds. However holy his perception may become, no world outside himself holds his inheritance. Within himself he HAS no needs, . .

When you stop using your mind to partition conscious experience off into separate areas, giving those areas definitions for your own ignorant purposes, you will find that your Mind is infinite—I mean, all inclusive—that your Mind is that, in which all of Creation is present to be experienced. You are whole within yourself in that sense.

Within himself . . .

. . . he HAS no needs, for light needs nothing but to shine in peace, and from itself to let the rays extend in quiet to infinity.

Illuminating infinity as indivisible and inseparable from you and therefore the whole of you—the Kingdom, that it's the Father's pleasure to give you all of.

Now that's a very broad grand idea. Something that there's no way to imagine embracing instantaneously. But you know what? You can turn your mind around, so to speak, by taking any object, as I've said before, anything that confronts you in your experience and saying, "I would like to see the more of what God is Being right here than I'm seeing right now." And you can be looking squarely at a dandelion or a hummingbird or a fingernail—anything.

You have to be willing to bring your attention to something other than the world you've been committed to—the mindset you've been committed to, the orphanland and the orphanage and the sense of being an orphan yourself. You've got to bring your attention to something beyond that, else there will not be a sudden shift of perception. There will not be the miracle.

Whenever you are tempted to undertake a foolish journey that would lead AWAY from light, remember what you really want, and say,

"The Holy Spirit leads me unto Christ, and where else would I go?"

"Oh yeah, right. I gotta go down to fourth street and beat up Joe who insulted my mother last night. Gotta put him in his place, he'll never learn otherwise."

"The Holy Spirit leads me unto Christ, and where else would I go?"

"Oh, I gotta go down and close this deal today—it's going to add millions to my portfolio and it's going to allow me to set up a program for my children and their children that will be the envy of all the wealthiest men in the world."

"The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

" . . . leads . . .

... you ...

“... unto Christ, and where else would ...

... you ...

“go?”

What it actually says is:

“The Holy Spirit leads me unto Christ, and where else would I go?
What need have I but to awake in Him?”

What need do any of you really have except to Wake up out of the dream, out of the orphanage, out of orphanland, out of a material world into the sane conscious experience of Reality that is what you are misperceiving and calling the orphanage and orphans and orphanland and a material world.

It's a matter of getting your priorities straight. Because once your priorities are straight, the energy in you will move toward that which has the highest priority effortlessly. You won't have to argue on behalf of moving in that direction. You always move in the direction of that which has value for you, that which has meaning for you. It's natural—it's inevitable.

Then follow Him in joy, with faith that He will lead you safely through all dangers to your peace of mind that this world sets before you.

That the orphan mindset sets before you.

Kneel not before the altars to sacrifice, and seek not what you will surely lose. Content yourselves with what you will as surely KEEP, and be not restless, for you undertake a quiet journey to the peace of God, where He would have you be in quietness.

And I'm going to add the word, "alive."

... where He would have you be ...

... alive ...

... in quietness.

Fully conscious in quietness, in peace, in the absence of fear and anxiety and even excitement. But not in the absence of awe.

You could read this:

Content yourselves with what you will as surely KEEP, and be not restless, for you undertake a quiet journey to the peace of God, where He would have you be in quietness.

You could very well read that to mean: There you are on a slab of marble . . . peaceful, quiet, and I'm going to say, "dead," or . . . peaceful, quiet, in a state of eternal bliss in which there is no distinction of anything—where it's one infinite amorphous blob of light. But that's not Creation and that's not being alive to Creation. So I do not want you to misconstrue what's being said here.

We're talking about arriving at an experience of being alive in quietness in peace, standing in awe of the Movement—the current Movement of Creation—in which everything is made new without apprehension, without reluctance, without reservation, without being on-guard. To be present there in quietness means to be present there in full open consciousness, truly alive.

In me you have already overcome EVERY temptation that would hold you back.

If I have done it, I have done it for you. If I have done it, it has been done for you. When I did it, the illusion collapsed even though you're holding on to it. You don't have to do it from scratch. You don't have to do it over again. All you have to do is to be willing to acknowledge the possibility that it's already done and therefore you are not bound like you think you are, and that the bondage can be abandoned [snaps fingers] now, at any point that you're willing to abandon it.

We walk together on the way to quietness that is the gift of God.

Remember that the quietness means such peace that your mind is full open, embracing infinity without reluctance. The quietness here refers to an integrity of consciousness or Mind that constitutes invulnerability—the absence of anything that could pose or even suggest the existence of threat.

Hold me dear, for what except your brothers CAN you need? We will restore to you the peace of mind that we must find TOGETHER. The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . your right Mind . . .

... will teach you to awaken unto us and to yourself. This is the only REAL need to be fulfilled in time. Salvation FROM the world lies only here.

Salvation from the world you made up in the privacy of your solitary isolated mind. Salvation from that lies only in the joining and letting someone else into your space.

My peace I GIVE you. TAKE it of me in glad exchange for all the world has offered but to take away.

I have a gift for you: My Vision which God has given me to give to you. That is my purpose. Ask for my Vision of me. Invite It.

TAKE it of me . . .

... my peace . . .

... in glad exchange for all the world has offered but to take away. And we will spread it like a veil of light across the world's sad face, . .

... orphanland . . .

... in which we hide our brothers FROM the world, and it from them.

See: The two worlds—one of isolation, one of union.

We cannot sing redemption's hymn alone.

Therefore, redemption will never be the result of a song you sing in the orphanage or from the highest mountain peak in orphanland all by yourself. You've tried it. You're trying it. It's not working. Try something new.

We cannot sing redemption's hymn alone. My task is not completed until I have lifted every voice with mine. And yet it is NOT mine, for as it is my gift to you, so was it the Father's gift to me, given me through His Spirit. The sound of it will banish sorrow from the mind of God's most holy Son, where it cannot abide. Healing in time IS needed, for joy cannot establish its eternal reign where sorrow dwells. You dwell not here, but in eternity. You travel but in dreams while safe at home.

You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, you are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom.

You travel but in dreams while safe at home. Give thanks to every part of you that you have taught how to REMEMBER you. Thus does the Son of God give thanks unto his Father for his purity.

Now there's something that has been shared about the experience of the state of being when you're not in orphanland, and there's not a lot you can do with it, is there? Sounds nice, but what in the heck does it mean? So you see, in a way, it doesn't really do any good to express a vision of being Awake before you've gone into the place within yourself where there is a willingness to turn your attention away from your current mental habits of isolation and miserable poverty (even if you're wealthy) to an act of joining—an act of invitation to the Christ or God or the Holy Spirit, and lean into that and be willing to yield into that . . . yield into it like falling into a net. Yield means abandoning self-directed, autonomous, authoritative thoughts or actions.

Waking up is about reestablishing relationship where autonomy and independence had held reign before. This is very important. And although it is very important, it is at the same time very simple.

So this week, I encourage every one of you, as frequently as you can remember to do it, to say this prayer:

"I wish to see and experience everything through your Vision, which is your gift to me from God."

That prayer is a unifying prayer . . . a joining and unifying prayer. And let that be more important than beating up Joe because he insulted your mother, or any of the other important things you think you have to do. Whatever you have to do, do it in the context of wanting to see and experience it through my Vision which is my gift to you from God. Then you will bring whatever that event is into the unity and the relationship which undoes all of the elements of orphanhood and all of the accompanying illusions.

I do not mean to sound serious, but I am telling you the truth in a matter of fact way, grounded in my experience of the truth of it that comes from letting the Father in and yielding to Him.

And lastly, doing this will not lift you into some otherworldly experience. It will lift you into a transformed experience of everything you're already familiar with. You will have new eyes and new ears. And this is a promise.

I look forward to being with you next week, and I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 2nd 2006

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We've been covering some extremely fundamental important points in this last chapter and even though we're moving on, I encourage all of you to bookmark this chapter—the one we've just completed—and refer to it often. Might I say, study it, refresh yourself, because as you may well have noticed, it takes everything we've been discussing up to this point and translates it into behavior—not just a head trip, not just thoughts, not just a thought system, not wonderful ideas to mull over, but to embody.

If the truth that you are learning about doesn't become embodied here, now, today, in your life, then you're missing the point. And I'm not going to let you miss the point. Either truth means something practical, tangible, relevant to your life now, or it is useless—it is meaningless. And if you are not insisting in one way or another upon bringing it into your daily experience so that your experience is transformed, then what are you doing? What's it all about?

“Oh, I study the Course. Oh, I've read the Course three times and it says this and it says that and it says the other thing.” And many of you can talk the Course at length. But you know what? Until somebody starts talking about the inner shifting that has occurred, until transformation that has been experienced begins finding voice rather than just a rehearsal of ideas and quotes, the function and purpose of the Course is lost—isn't tapped.

Now, there was a significant statement in what was read last week:

Your Father knoweth that you have need of nothing. ¹

It is very important for this statement not to be misused.

I want all of you to be willing to consider the degree to which you have adopted an attitude of lack with a wonderful positive sense: "I'm not a millionaire. I don't earn a lot of money. I struggle . . . but you know what? I'm happy. I have found a way to be content without having everything. I can be comfortable in a relative state of lack. Why gripe about it? It's the way it is. I know others really go out there and strive to get . . . get . . . get . . . and acquire wealth and acquire substance and acquire respect as a result of it! But I'm not fooled. I know that's not where it's at. I know that where it's at is learning how to be at peace with whatever life gives me, with whatever God decides I ought to have or not have."

Then there are others who adopt the life of an aesthetic and consciously renounce—get this—renounce the things of the world. It's a religious act. Lack has become "holified," justified, and "not having" becomes the possession that gives the aesthetic worth, because he is doing something worthwhile. You see how crazy it is?

There are others who live their life on the basis that less is more. Minimalism would describe that frame of mind. So that you only have around you essential things, so that you get down to "essence." And essence does not include clutter.

Do you see that to one degree or another, all of you have a basic mindset in which unlimited abundance holds no promise for you. And not having unlimited abundance doesn't bother you either.

Your Father Knoweth that you have need of nothing.

"Oh, I don't need those trees. I don't need to have a lawn in my yard. I don't need the stars. I don't need a beautiful view out my window." You see, it's a process of denial of everything. "I don't need this. I don't need that." It even gets to the point of saying, "It's all illusion anyway." It's a process of discounting everything and somehow finding peace and satisfaction in the emptiness—except that it's not called emptiness, it's just called bare essentials.

It's the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.² Nothing of what the Father is has He withheld from His self-expression—meaning you and all of Creation. Abundance, wholeness, the absence of lack is characteristic of Creation, it's characteristic of Being, it's characteristic of existing.

So, let's not honor lack and let's not tolerate lack.

Well, this sort of brings me to the second point I need to bring up. And that is: What do you do when a problem confronts you? What do you do when an illness presents itself? Do you just say, "Well, I'm going to turn this over to the Holy Spirit . . . well, I'm going to turn this over to the Holy Spirit . . . tch, tch, Oh, I'm going to turn this over to the Holy Spirit." Do you think you have no part to play? Even more important, do you think you had no part to play in the situation you find yourself in, that's called illness or abuse or depression?

If you find yourself experiencing a pain in your side, does your mind immediately go to work at the level of thinking and imagine what it might be or what caused it? Do you behave as though you're an orphan—just a hunk of flesh, a body having no source but evolution and a sperm and an egg? And then do you doctor it, medicate it, treat it through diet—in other words, manipulate matter with matter?

After all that we've been learning, it should be becoming clear that you have something to do, and it has nothing to do with your imagination or your thinking. It has to do with your taking steps to abandon the orphan mentality—the frame of mind that makes up things and then believes what it has made up and then binds itself to whatever the rules are that became involved in the making up of the situation.

Now, we've been reading that there are two worlds and one excludes the other. Well, if the world you're operating in is orphanland, and you're going around in orphanland, and every Saturday night you tune into the fireside chat here, and after it's over you go back to orphanland and bring with you a little bit of inspiration that makes you feel good but hasn't caused you to abandon the mindset, then why did you tune in? . . . why did you come . . . why did you listen in the first place? "Oh, well, if I do something, that's going to be an assertion of my will. We can't have that, because that just reinforces the ego—the orphan mindset." And so, you sit there immobilized—stuck.

When you find yourself immobilized through fear or depression or abuse or an event that has shocked you and insulted you, then you may know that there is a call for you to get your ass in gear. It is a call to do something. Just as a nightmare is a call for you to rouse yourself up out of the dream, and wake up in your bed so that you're free of the nightmare. Your immobility is the same call for you to bring, I'm going to say this very carefully: The force of will into play on behalf of the truth about you.

Just because willfulness is a characteristic of the orphan mentality and it is not an act to engage in if you want to wake up, the will that is in you that was placed there by the Father—that will being His Will, forever His Will, not one that becomes your private possession to deal with as you choose—that Will is there for you to act out from, so that when you are depressed you have the capacity and the willingness to put forth the effort that it takes to what? Change the situation? No. To abandon the orphan mentality.

And how do you abandon the orphan mentality? Simple. By choosing for your peace.

Now, if you find yourself ill, so ill that you can't engage in any activities, what do you do? Well, even though it's inconvenient and it affects your job and it affects your family, you go to bed don't you—and you rest and you nurture and care for yourself kindly in that way. Well, likewise, when you are confronted with something that is immobilizing you, you must stop your other activities and sit down and choose for your peace. You must sit down and actively meditate. You must sit down and do whatever works for you to get you into the Silence.

Whether there is a throbbing pain in your tooth and jaw, or whether you're overcome with grief because someone has abandoned you, whatever it might be, the call is for you to shift and abandon the orphan mindset—abandon the isolation, the privateness and the great personal authority that you've thought you had . . . and what? Reach out! "Oh-h, well, it doesn't do any good" Well? "Oh-h, I've been in bed for five days and I'm not getting any better." See, the argument doesn't stand up either way. Do it like an orphan does and go to bed, and maybe it doesn't change right away, but as an orphan, you'll persist.

Well, as a divine Being, you need to persist in choosing for your peace. Because until you get into your peace, you know what's absent? The one thing that's causing the problem: Love.

When you're in pain, when you're in grief, when you're in shock, when you're in depression, always the same element is there: You don't feel loved. Love is absent from your experience. Your attention is drawn down to the one focus of whatever the problem is, and in spite of that fact, if you stop and think about it, you have had broader experiences in which you know Love has been present and you know you have expressed Love. Wow, at this moment Love is nowhere around . . . Love is nowhere around for you to receive and certainly you don't feel like being the presence of Love. And that's the problem. That is what is causing the hurt.

Now, I haven't said this before, but orphanland is a loveless land. Privacy, autonomy, is the antithesis of love. Love cannot exist in that environment. Love doesn't exist in that environment.

Well, don't you suppose that if you are bothered by whatever the circumstance is, to the point of being immobilized, willing to take no action and even justifying taking no action because obviously it will be an exertion of will, don't you think this is exactly the time in which you need to light a fire under you on purpose, and begin to rouse yourself to a different point of view—starting with peace and it's Silence?

Of course, in order to do that you have to abandon your knee-jerk response of self-protection. But again, self-protection is an isolated shielded circumstance in which love can't be given and love can't be received.

Now, the reason for becoming clear about the miserableness of the orphan mindset is so that you will have the justification to get a fire under your ass and do something about it! Again, not in the manipulative way that orphans do, but in the simple step of abandoning the isolation by choosing for your peace first. And then reaching out. Because until you reach out genuinely, you will not experience the influx of Love that flows to you and through you and beyond, forever, uninterruptedly. And until you feel that influx, you will not be able to extend It. And that's the threshold that has to be crossed. And that is, for lack of better words, the one right use of will that exists.

What? To choose for your peace and reach out and ask for help:

"I wish to see and experience everything through your Vision, Jesus, which is your gift to me from God. I want to abandon the narrow, tiny, selfish orphan mindset that blinds me completely to the real world, which is going on right where something else seems to be going on according to me."

And then you persist.

The immobilization is nothing more than a mesmeric state of mind—an obsession with being stuck. And when you're in it, pay attention. All that goes on in your mind is a rehearsal . . . a rehearsal . . . a rehearsal of how bad things are. It almost becomes automatic, so that even if you give your attention to something else, the words continue on in your mind in spite of the fact you're trying to think about something else.

You're not going to break an obsession with immobility by not doing anything about it. "Oh, well, gee, the Course doesn't say anything about making things happen?" Really? What did I say? Listen. Go into the silence. Reach out beyond your tinyness—your tiny frame of mind—and listen. Listen, learn and do. I promise you, that not anyone who is Awake, not even God, is going to step in and change your mind for you. And you are having exactly what you're choosing to have.

Doesn't the Course constantly talk about "The call for correction?" Oh, oh dear, that means something's gotta happen: Correction. Something is going to happen, something is going to change. But I promise you, it's not going to change if you don't make a choice for it.

And what engine or source of energy or power do you have for making a choice? The power placed in you by God, by virtue of His Being all there is of you. And when, even though you think you're still a private orphan, you set your mind to a commitment to joining with the Holy Spirit or with me, or with the Father, you're making a choice and it's an act that is perfectly consonant with the will of your Being that God has placed in you by virtue of His Being all there is right where you are.

And so you had better bring it into play. Again, not to change the world, not to change the pain in the side, not to change the abuse, not to change the depression, but to change the way you're looking at things—to change the point of view. And if you don't do that, you will be caught in an eddy, and you will stay there . . . and stay there . . . and stay there . . . until finally you do do something that wrenches you free. So don't waste time.

I'll tell you something: Whether it's a feeling that comes over you, or a negative attitude that just seems to pop in, or a pain in your side, whatever it is—listen to this—whatever . . . however it presents itself, it's an invitation, not a declaration. A pain in the side is not a declaration of a fact that you're ill. It's an invitation to believe that you're ill or that there is an actual physical problem in a physical body that orphans have because they're just mortals. And you've got to challenge that when it happens and decline the invitation.

First of all, be willing to acknowledge that it is not a declaration of a fact. It's an invitation to believe something. And then, decline the invitation. And then, immediately find ways and means to get into your peace. And once in the quietness of your peace, ask for help—not plea—but simply let the need be known.

Say, "I need help!" And then expect the resolution to present itself. And then be willing to act on the basis of the resolution that has happened, instead of saying, "Wow, that was wonderful but it was a fluke, cause I'm still a mortal and I still have a physical body and some other physical declaration, which is really only an invitation, can present itself." You see.

And so you have to be careful. You've got to let everything that we're talking about budge you off—move you off your confidence that you're an orphan, that you're just a human being, that you're just a body, that you're just an organism—so that that is no longer the bottom line basis for all of your reasoning and thinking and the way you behave, and the way you respond.

Now this is very important. Because you know, I see very little movement—I am not addressing specifically, those of you here or those of you listening—but generally speaking, I see very little actual movement occurring as a result of the study of the Course. Very little inner transformation. Why? Because no choice is being made for inner participation in and willingness to acquiesce to the correction that will follow a genuine request for help.

“Oh, well I didn’t know that that was what I supposed to be doing . . . Oh, I didn’t know that that was the way it worked. I thought if I sort of submerged myself in the sentences that I was reading and the truth and bathed in it, that that would do it. You know, and I could walk through the orphanage at peace experiencing my divinity.”

I’m sorry, you can’t walk through an orphanage experiencing your inseparable oneness with the Brotherhood and with the Father and with the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind. It’s all about leaving the orphanage. It’s all about abandoning the definition—orphan. It’s all about abandoning the mindset and all of the mutually agreed-upon definitions that have been established and which you keep in place. You keep them in place by doing nothing to contradict them at an inner level within you, not intellectually but, for lack of better words, in your heart, in your Being.

And so how does this apply to lack, and how does this apply to, you know, not needing your world? And how does this apply to asceticism, and how does this apply to satisfaction with “little?”

Well, any experience of lack is not evidence of the Father’s Will. Therefore, it is not evidence of your Birthright. And you should not be happy with it, and you should not assume that there is no other choice. And you must begin to see it as a call for correction. And then, instead of justifying lack, instead of rehearsing in your mind all of the reasons for lack, even the lofty reason that God knows what you have need of and you don’t have need for the things you think you do, all these things are a call for correction. Which means getting up on your haunches, disagreeing with the presentation, the invitation that you spontaneously take as a declaration of fact, and then reach beyond it.

Waking up, coming back into your right Mind, is a call for a change in your mind. Not you changing your mind according to already existing criteria, but you willing to be mindful in a new way—a non-isolated way. No matter how extreme the justifications seem to be for maintaining that isolation, the fact is, that the more extreme the inclination to be isolated, the more will it take, the more conscious intent it takes on your part to wrench yourself free from it by reaching beyond it—by choosing for something that seems totally unreasonable in the midst of what seems to be happening. That one first thing being, choosing . . . choosing . . . choice . . . choice for your peace, letting your peace be more important than the pain or the hurt or [said in strained voice] the lack of energy to do anything at all.

You have to participate in changing your mind by abandoning the use you have been putting your mind to in favor of putting it in the place of joining from your peace. "Oh, it doesn't work. I'll just go to the doctor and they'll take out whatever it is and I'll be done with it!" Well, that's a really insane statement isn't it. I mean, after all, does everybody go into the hospital and come out on their feet . . . alive? "Oh, well, no . . . no . . . no . . . but . . ." You've got all kinds of silly justifications. But it's what everybody does. It fits into the mutually agreed upon definitions of how to cope with being a physical body.

Again, there is another way to look at this. There's another way to respond. There's another basis upon which to act. But until you adopt that other basis upon which to act, and then act, I promise you nothing will change.

And when you do, everything will change—correction will be embodied. Or, correction will be revealed where the false picturing you were practicing had seemed to be overlaid upon the visibility and tangibility of your individuality, which is called your body, and renders visible and tangible the Movement of God because it is not material, it is all divine.

How much lack are you going to continue to tolerate without doing anything? Meaning, without taking steps to abandon the very thing that is causing your misperception of your body and the Kingdom of Heaven, which is that you think you are an orphan. You think you are a human being and that a human being is very different from a divine being, like angels and ark-angels and Sons of God.

There's always one element present in all problems and that is, immobilization. You don't feel like challenging it, you don't feel like having a different point of view than the distressed one you're having. You don't want to stop thinking about how awful it is, and how poorly treated you were and how thoughtless everyone is and then, like I said, the underlying single element: The absence of love.

You know what? It's a lot more work to try to be an orphan, than it is to be Who and what you really Are. "Oh, I don't know about that. It's real easy being an orphan. I've got it under my belt. But oh, being in my peace no matter what's happening, now that is not normal—that is not natural . . . at least not to me."

Well, you just made your choice didn't you? Make a different choice . . . make a different choice. Until you make a different choice, correction cannot occur. And, nowhere in the Course can you find a place where it says that correction is not necessary in order to become free of the dream. What does that mean? It means that correction is a promise sitting in front of you if you choose to do what opens the doors to your receiving a new way of seeing things—a sudden shift of perception, a M-i-r-a-c-l-e. It's a promise. It's the way it works. When you're in your right Mind, everything looks good because it is. When you're not in your right Mind, everything looks bad even though it hasn't changed from being what it divinely is: Good.

Now, tonight I certainly haven't said, "Get off your ass and whoop the world." No. I'm saying, get a fire under your ass in your motivation and willingness to make commitment to doing what? The only thing you have available to you to do and that is change from the orphan mentality of isolation and autonomy to that of joining—letting yourself feel your need for the trees and the stars and every good thing without limit. And most of all, your brothers and sisters—each other.

And in order to let that need be fulfilled, you must ask for help from the Father or the Holy Spirit to wash the scales from your eyes, the cobwebs from your mind so that you may clearly see what you have been unclearly seeing, and experience correction. Wake-up, in other words.

Now, there are those of you who may say, "Well, Raj isn't saying what the Course says, therefore, I'm not going to pay any attention to what he's saying." Fine. Your choice. Is it the only choice you have available to you? Nevertheless, you will do what you choose. What I'm trying to make clear to you tonight is, that you are suffering from your choices. And you can be relieved from your suffering by making new choices or a new choice, that of abandoning your isolation, your autonomy, the power you have imagined you have gotten and created for yourself, and let yourself blend in with your brothers and sisters, the trees, the world, the Universe, so that there aren't sharp distinctions between you and everything else—not only where you feel blended, but where you can also feel that every little thing is essential to your wholeness and you need it and you shouldn't be justifying doing without it.

Minimalism is a form of having only that which is essential, which means having very little and that which clearly expresses perhaps even beauty, but not beauty that includes much of anything. I'm talking about absolutely everything that exists being essential, essential to your wholeness, essential to your being, and more correctly put, essential to Being—existing.

The Father Knoweth that you have need of nothing.

Creation, infinity, eternity is essential to Being—existing. It is inseparable from you. It is identical with you. And you are identical with it. Let this fact sink in. And then, watch the use to which you put your mind, or we could say, watch the use which your . . . you might put it this way . . . which your mind falls into through lack of attention on your part. And suddenly . . . oh, you don't know what happened but you're depressed. You don't know what happened but you're pissed off. Nothing looks good. You don't know what happened but suddenly you feel unloved, and there's no reason for you to love anything.

That's a result of a careless use of your mind, a practice of inattentiveness and a forgetfulness of the fact that there's a word that you can't afford to forget. And that word is: Choice. And making a choice is an act of will. And the words I've just said only have real meaning when it comes down to your making the choice between two things alone: The Voice for truth, or the voice for fear—the orphan mindset, or the joined, embracing awareness that is consciously being nurtured and practiced on purpose.

Making the choice for orphanhood is not an act of will, but making a choice for Waking up is. And that act of will is in perfect consonance with the Father's Will which He has placed in you. And it's the only act of will that will correct everything.

Don't ever be a passive student of spirituality. Choosing for peace without correction, or not choosing for peace because what's the point? Whew! Choice . . . an act of will on your behalf to get you out of the eddy, to get you out of the mesmerism, to get you out of the obsession with a stupid use of your mind.

In the morning, as a child, your mom or your dad came in and said, "Wake up! Wake up!" Don't talk about waking up anymore. Wake up! It's a choice, it's an act and it takes a commitment on your part. Make the commitment, act, and your day will open up to you. Your good will open up to you. It is a promise already set in place—an irrevocable promise. A promise that is an act of love that surpasses anything you can imagine.

[Addresses the audience] You are loved . . . you are loved, too . . . you are loved. And everyone watching or listening, you are loved. The promise is already in place for you and has been sitting there, pregnant, we'll say, with your release ever since you decided to pretend that you could look at things your way and have things your way.

So, let this love in. Oh yeah, now I don't mean, "Ah-h," sort of bask back in a chase lounge [sighing] and let the love in. Bullshit. It's not gonna come in until you make the choice to let it in, until you make the choice to want it, until you make the choice to let correction happen within you so that you are a new man and a new woman by comparison with the miserable orphan you thought you were.

So, enough said. I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

AUGUST 18TH 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Welcome back. This is me Paul. I don't think we're going to be getting into the book tonight, but He could surprise me.

I just want to say before we begin, to everybody here and those listening on the internet, that I am well. I've actually been well, let's say, recuperated from the surgery since, let's say, March. But I've had an interesting experience which I'm not going to go into at any length right now. I've had an interesting experience of coming out of it, with a new sense of myself—that I can't yet explain. Um... things that were important to me, are not important to me. Things that weren't so important to me are important to me now.

So as to be a little bit helpful, I'll explain by saying that for one thing, I've found myself not really charmed by or interested in wonderful social chit-chat. My habit in the past has been to be a socially-friendly person. And I can see now that I've had styles of behavior when I'm socializing which now, is very clear to me were false. They were there to make an impression. They didn't express me genuinely. I have been since December, rather private. One of the reasons being that, if I were to get involved with people I would end up saying what I really felt and my Guidance hasn't said that doing that was appropriate yet. And I believe that its because I would be doing it from a place of emotion rather than from a place of quiet peaceful, grounded perspective.

It's a strange experience to find yourself being differently. And it's made me think a lot about what Raj has been saying, especially from July on to December of last year when he spent a lot of time talking about me. Because the topic was healing--a great deal of it was about healing and that healing is another word for correction, which the course speaks a lot about. Correction, meaning actually being involved in being changed. And somehow, through the time that I was in the hospital, change occurred and I have experienced myself as I said briefly, in new ways.

It's not uncomfortable--I do not find it uncomfortable, but I don't know how to play my old games well from this new experience of who I am. And so I found myself at a loss, feeling incompetent. I can't get control of the situation quickly because, because the me that I am now, doesn't want the kind of control I used to want. And I only know how to get the control I used to want. And so, situations require me to draw from some new sources. No, it causes me to draw from a Source I've been familiar with which haven't been my old resources. And that's the key.

I, in the way I find myself experiencing being now, really have to ask Raj, what is appropriate? What does this mean? How do I respond?

In a way, the Paul that Raj was describing that went to Disneyland, disappeared. And I guess what I'm learning is, that just as when we start a Gathering, I say: I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness, and I allow only for that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being, meaning God, and I continue . . . in other words, Thy Will, not mine be done. Let the reign of divine truth, life and love, be established in me and rule out of me all self-will.

Those are strong words—sort of like the word "extinction" is a strong word. ...and rule out of me all self-will. Wow, Nevertheless, at the beginning of each Gathering, I always said that. And then finished, ...and may thy word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them.

See, I've invited His word to enrich my affections and govern me, and it ends by wishing the same thing for everyone else.

Now, I've done that at the beginning of each Gathering. Since December, it's like I'm being required to start every day with that whether anybody's around to hear me talk or not. It's like that's the requirement. It isn't what I feel inclined to spontaneously do. And I suppose I'm sharing this because I know that what I'm going through is part of correction occurring. And is part of healing occurring. Not healing of what I went into the hospital for—but healing of the use of my mind—healing of the use I'm putting my mind to. So that my mind is changed. And as a result of that, my experience of everything is changed. Why is my experience of everything changed? Because I can't respond to it out of my old habits. So I have to be present without any confidence as to what is appropriate. I have to be present in the experience with an enquiring mind that says, "What is appropriate now?" I have to stand there letting divine truth, life and love be established in me and rule out of me all of my old inclinations to take hold with all of my old habits of being sociable and presentable and respectable, and never offending anyone.

So, it's one thing, once a week or at Gatherings to sit down and make commitment to "Thy Will, not mine be done." It's another thing to engage in that every day. As many of you know, Raj has been saying for along time to me, "Let Me respond to everything." In other words, I am to turn to Him and let Him respond to the Gas Station attendant, or the grocery clerk, or the friends, or the ones who want to be sociable and meaningless and silly, and so on and so forth.

And you know what? My conclusion here may be false, but it's my sense that there aren't thousands of people clamoring to listen to Raj because Raj doesn't please everyone's egos. Raj puts everyone else as well as me, right on the threshold of being willing to acknowledge that we don't know what anything means--that we don't know what anything is really for. And, that as long as we're trying to behave on the basis of developed habits of socializing, we will not allow for what we genuinely are to come forth. And we will not be out from the Place of Excellence in us that is utterly original, never repetitive.

And so, if one is going to listen to what Raj is saying and implement it, it is going to mean that we're all going to have to stand in any moment in our day, whether we judge things to be going well or not, and reach for Knowing that goes beyond our best judgments and our best thinking habits. And stand in that vulnerable place where the miracle can occur. What's the miracle? A sudden shift of perception. A change in our mind. A change in the way we are looking. A change in the way we're willing to perceive. A being made new.

So, again, since last December, although I've had wonderful physical healing, I have had a not-so-fun time of adjusting to not being in charge from my head and of having to dare to step out into the unknown many times during the day, rather than once a week when Raj is going to talk. So it hasn't been the most fun, but I'll tell you something: I feel like progress is occurring. I feel change occurring—not self-directed change but change that is coercing me in my intention to live out old habits—to abandon them and not operate on the basis of the comfort that they have always provided me.

And so for whatever its worth, I can today, which I couldn't do last November, look at any one of you and say, let it be rough if its rough, the only thing that makes it rough is the reluctance you bring into play—the resistance you present to being changed. It's worth it. And just because its rough doesn't mean you're doing something wrong. It means something truly right is happening and your ego doesn't like it at all! And that's all it means.

So, I've missed these get-togethers and I'm really glad to be together with everyone again. So, let's take a few moments to be quiet and find out what Raj has to say.

(quiet time)

RAJ: GOOD EVENING. AND WELCOME TO EVERYONE WHO'S JOINING US ON THE INTERNET.

WELL, WHAT A WONDERFUL BUNCH OF BULLSHIT PAUL JUST DELIVERED TO YOU. I SAY THAT BECAUSE WHO ON EARTH WAS HE SPEAKING TO?

HE WAS SPEAKING TO ALL YOU ORPHANS OUT THERE GIVING YOU ENCOURAGEMENT AS TO WHAT YOU MIGHT EXPERIENCE IN THE LAST STAGES OF YOUR ORPHANHOOD; AND PERHAPS TO INSPIRE YOU TO LISTEN TO GUIDANCE A LITTLE BIT MORE THAN YOU'VE BEEN INCLINED TO, WHICH ISN'T A BAD POINT.

But he demonstrated what all of you easily get caught in. You get caught in a sense of self that is progressing—getting better and better. And you poor ones who are getting better and better just got a wonderful pep talk apparently from someone who's getting better and better. Right?

And, as long as you don't catch that when it happens, you're stuck in the state of being an orphan. There's no way for there to be progress. Paul slipped right back into his old sociable habit of being friendly and being nice and saying intelligent things that were couched in language that was, we'll say, inspiring.

But he was not in a position to look at what he was saying and describe it as bullshit, which I did in my first sentence. The one who gave the opening remarks is the one that's getting left behind; the sense of self that this one has identified as Paul, in the past.

And who you presently think what you are is what you're going to leave behind as you abandon your apparent capacity to speak intelligently and oh..., insightfully and encouragingly and inspiringly.

You see, Waking up is a matter of abandoning that sense of self—that improving sense of self—the one who's refined his soul through centuries and lifetimes. You aren't that. And you haven't been that. And you can't get out of being that, because you never have been that.

And so you literally, and Paul was right about this, you literally have to be willing to abandon that at the beginning of your day and as many times during the day as you realize that you have slipped back. But again, this won't be because the poor little orphan that you are is becoming better and better.

When you go to a zoo it says: “Please don’t feed the animals.” And you need to have a sign on your refrigerator door or on the dashboard of your car that says: “Please don’t feed the orphans—don’t nurture the orphans” just to remind you that you’re not there to spontaneously be out from your best thinking, your best habits, your best presentations.

You’re there to treat each moment as though it is far more than anything you are imagining. You’re to treat every moment as though it is Divine–Sourced from God–fully in that moment, and therefore, a Divinely awesome event which it is your Birthright to be experiencing awesomely.

The reason for having this outlook is so that you will constantly look beyond your best current judgments and interpretations of everything; because if you’re not willing to look beyond—if you’re not willing to be incompetent to understand what’s happening in Its Fullness, you will not be open to the fuller experience of what is going on.

NOW, WE ARE GOING TO RESUME READING THE COURSE, BUT I’M GOING TO ASK SOMETHING. I’M GOING TO ASK ALL OF YOU WHO ARE WILLING—FROM THIS NIGHT ON—TO NO LONGER THINK OF YOURSELVES AS STUDENTS OF A COURSE IN MIRACLES.

As long as you define yourself as a student of A Course In Miracles, or a student of this, or a student of that, you withdraw yourself from your relationships with your fellowman into a very narrow interpretation of everything. It is as though you provide a sieve that will only let things fall through that are of a certain size, and the rest can’t go through.

“Oh, I’m a student of A Course In Miracles. That means I am not a student of biology. I am a student of this; it means I’m not a student of that.

A Course In Miracles better be, for lack of better words, an adjunct to your being, and please don’t misunderstand me, a human being. I mean by that, an unpretentious, not special presence who experiences certain needs, who knows what fulfillment is, and who exists in relation to other human beings, who also are un-special.

In the lack of specialness, you can relate to each other without falsehood, without pretense, because you haven’t forgotten Who You Are. The minute you say: “Oh, I’m a student of A Course In Miracles,” you’ve forgotten Who You Are and you’re not wholly available to your brothers and sisters.

Now, in the simplicity of Being, you, right now, want to know what truth is. You desire to know what truth is whether it’s called A Course In Miracles, or whether it’s called The Bible or whether it’s a cartoon strip. You want to know the truth, because you care about what’s important. You care about what is of value.

Why do you read whatever you read? So that you might learn how to more effectively be a brother to a brother; a brother to a sister; a sister to a sister, and a sister to a brother.

I will probably offend someone with this statement, but I indeed find many, if not a majority, of students of A Course In Miracles to be consistently unkind to their fellow students of A Course In Miracles, and to everyone, but especially to other students of the Course.

THIS CAN BE EQUALLY SAID ABOUT CHESS CLUBS, MEMBERS OF CHESS CLUBS; ANY GROUP THAT MIGHT BE FORMED.

Here's a question for you: Can you become still within yourself and hear the Holy Spirit speak to you? Can you become still and hear your Guide speak with you? Some of you can. Most of you can't. And you know what? Those of you who can't have no grounds for being arrogant with your fellow students of the Course, or with anyone, because you're not doing so hot.

What it means is, that, we'll say, arguing with your fellow students about a point of Truth is more important to you than connecting with that Place of Excellence within yourself—the Altar within you, where your connection with the Holy Spirit is forever functioning, and where your connection with your Guide is always open.

If you're going to be happy, I want you to be happy for the right reasons, not for reasons that are bullshit--meaningless.

Now, many of you, for the last eight months, have waited for this night. You have waited for Me to return. You've waited for Paul to be able to let Me speak. And many of you, when you found that we were going to get together this evening, were overjoyed. Well, you know what? I want you to be overjoyed when you've heard Me within yourself.

I'm not demeaning your recognition of the value of what transpires in these circumstances, but don't be happy for the wrong reasons.

Be happy that I am here, tonight, expressing these ideas that put you in the position of having to go within to this so-called Altar that you may never have experienced before. Somebody just told you there was an Altar in the center of your being, placed there by God. Well, isn't that wonderful! That could be bullshit too, and you'll never know until you go within with commitment, and with resolve, and with a genuine spirit because you really need to know the truth about something, and you don't know it on your own.

It's in that place of vulnerability and incapacity that your desire becomes full enough to get a response, if I may put it that way, because you're not messing around. You're not bullshittin' God. You're being real within yourself.

When Paul sat down tonight, after eight months of not sitting down on any night, he was nervous. But he had to put himself in that position as he does every time he let's Me speak, of not knowing, of being incompetent.

He even approached this evening with the attitude, "Well, I'm not going to set a fantastic goal for myself." This was what he said. And he was encouraged to do this by his son, Christopher. "I'm going to do the best I can. And then I can't fail, even if Raj never talks, and even if everything that happens is a total flub."

Let's get this straight. The orphan will not be able to confidently sit down and connect with his Guide. The orphan will always have doubts. The orphan will be uneasy. In fact, it will never be the orphan that sits down to listen to his Guide. But the orphan will be there as the Real One that each One of you is, sits down to talk to his Guide. And that orphan will kibbitz you and say: "Probably isn't going to work. Aw, c'mon, you know there really aren't such things as Guides. You know these people are all fooling themselves, who are in touch with their Guides. Oh they're just really just fanatics who say they're overcome by the Holy Spirit."

The orphan joins you as you sit down to listen. Because the only one who will sit down, to actually listen, to learn, to connect with the experience of Truth, is the Divine One that You Are, Who is registering in your mind enough to cause you to abandon the instructions that your ego is giving you—to abandon the habits that the orphan, that you had thought you were has been bringing into play, over and over again, that keeps you from waking up.

Now, when you sit down and desire to know the truth, when you sit down and are willing to abandon your best judgments and your social habits of behavior and the costume you have been wearing, and you are present in whatever circumstance is going on, without preconceptions, with a true desire to know how to be appropriate—how to be utterly appropriate and to identify fulfillment in that moment, you will be infilled if you genuinely desire to know. If you are more intent on Knowing than being influenced by the orphan sense of self that you have thought you were, which is kibbitzing you and discouraging you.

What you bring yourself fully to will open up to you fully. What you bring yourself to in part, in a carefree abandon, in a silly irrelevance, you will get nothing from. Nothing will open up to you.

Usually, that which causes you to desire to know something unequivocally, is an experience of need that has overwhelmed your arrogance; that in you which thinks it can handle anything. Need, that causes you to experience need, rather than triggering confidence that you have, causes you to be Real—causes you to be genuinely honest within yourself.

Unfortunately, need is one of the few things that will cause you to arrive at that kind of inner commitment and genuine honesty. And it's a shame, but it's better than nothing bringing you to it. So be grateful when the time comes. Be grateful when you really are forced to lean into and rely upon Something other than your best goddamn sense of who you are in this world and who you have turned yourself into and made yourself to be.

“Well, so you want me to give up everything meaningful? Um... can You make it any more palatable than that, please?” No. You can make it easier for yourself by daring to risk the chance that there's a God without having to get at the end of your rope, and without feeling need so greatly that you have to abandon any capacity you thought you had to cope with it, and ask for help, while you still think you do have the capacity to cope with it.

You can make it easier for yourself by abandoning the capacity to cope that you think you have, and asking for help—asking for a miracle. Asking for the Holy Spirit or your Guide, or Me, or the Father, to bring about a sudden shift of perception—a changed mind; not at your hand, but at the Hand of the Father. At the Hand of One who Knows who you really Are, and will help change your mind, bringing it into alignment with the truth about you, so that you are strengthened by your own clearer experience of the Real You, and what makes it real and what makes it of value.

You know what? The Course In Miracles is not so great. What's in it can promote stuff in you that's great. It can promote in you a capacity to be willing to be with your brother or sister, without arrogance, coming from a simple genuineness of Love within you, that allows you to feel the need your brother has and not discount it. And to want to know what would meet the need, not so that you can escape anything, but so that you can be present, as need is transformed into correction—need is transformed into healing.

Why? Not because you have magic words of truth or well-developed spiritual power, but because you found it more valuable than anything else, to be willing to be present in the presence of the experience of need, and not try to escape it, and wish to know the Truth. Not the Course in Miracles truth, not the Catholic truth, not the Christian Science truth. Truth Itself. Truth. Truth is what God Is Be-ing at any given moment, in any given spot. You want to know the truth. You see, truth isn't an intellectual string of words. Truth is the experience of what's Real. Truth is the Experience of What God Is Be-ing. Truth is the experience of what Good is Be-ing right here...right here...right there.

Your brother's need isn't going to be met by a string of words, but by an Experience of what is true, an experience of what God Is Be-ing right there in their experience.

And you can have no idea on your own what will cause that miracle to occur—that sudden shift of perception. But you can be the Presence of Love that cares enough to not hold your dear book learning up in your brother’s face to heal him with, but to value what you read there enough to be present with your brother Be-ing the Presence of Love; Be-ing the Presence of the desire to Know the truth that will constitute the correction by being willing to be a brother or a sister in all the fullness of the Meaning of those words.

The Presence of Living Love that it is your function to be, is very different from being the presence of the capacity to spout words of truth which are only spouted because it’s saving you from having to get into that simple place of genuine genuineness, where you genuinely feel need in the absence of personal capacity to meet the need and reach out for help, because you care either enough about yourself, or enough about your brother or sister to want to Know what will cause change to occur; transformational healing, beneficial, truly beneficial healing, and relief and release.

If you’re spending more time reading a book than you are relating to your brothers and sisters one on one, in a real and genuine way, don’t call yourself a student of Mine, because that’s not what I Teach, and that’s what I’m not here to encourage you to do. I am here to encourage you to do that which heals.

Every single one of you who’s hearing My Voice actually knows enough— actually knows all you need to know in order to justify not getting hung up on words and daring to turn to your brother and sister with care, and with Love—those brothers and sisters who come into your experience, who you find that you’re faced with and have to deal with, in finding them to be all the justification you need for saying: “Father, what do I need to know here?”

You’ll only be faced with a messy situation until you stop thinking that you ought to be able to be somewhere else, doing something else not faced with this, not being called upon to get into that situation where you don’t know what to do, and where you have to acknowledge that you don’t know what to do. And then, you have to say: “I ask that Place of Excellence in me—that Excellence of my Be-ing, to reveal to me what will meet the need here.” And stick with it, genuinely, and I’m going to ask you to look up the word “importunately:” I-m-p-o-r-t-u-n-a-t-e-l-y. Importunately, with resolve, and steadfastness, until you get the answer because once the commitment and the genuineness is there and you really mean your desire, as I said, everything becomes present that is necessary for the situation to bring forth and reveal to you the wholeness that is the answer to the need.

You watch Paul do this every time we get together. I wish I had a bell to ring; a bell that would say to you: “It’s a wake-up call here.”

You need to do this. You need to do what Paul is doing. You need to put yourself in that Void—in that place of not-knowing, and reach into It with commitment and resolve, so that your hand is filled; so that your being is filled with miracles—with sudden shifts of perception, which will inevitably and unavoidably become manifest as things to do in your experience, or steps to take, or places to be at a certain time, in order for wonderful and unexpected things to occur that, I’m going to say, physically identify fulfillment beyond your imagination. So that you can walk through your day and see what you’ve always been seeing, but suddenly you can see God in it. And you can see that everything that you’ve been confronted with has been significant. And it’s been escaping your notice.

So, I’m just encouraging all of you to come down off your pedestals and be real with each other and with yourselves, and do this awful thing—of asking for Help, of asking for clarity, even though you feel perfectly competent to cope with it all yourself.

It’s this self-reliance—this isolated, private self-reliance that effectively blinds you to Reality. And I can’t put it any more simply than that.

Now, I will be back. And I will tell you this again and again, and again and again. Not to improve you, but I will say, to wear down your resistance. To let that which seems foreign become less foreign because it’s more familiar, intellectually.

It’s all right for you to be clearer and clearer intellectually when the clarity is in closer alignment with Truth. Because when you are moving into closer alignment with Truth, you are not moving into closer alignment with your orphanhood and the developing of skill, at remaining asleep a little longer.

So, I love you all and I look forward to being with you next week. And I hope your week has a little rigor to it, rigor that you’ve brought, a strength that you’ve brought in terms of determination; determination to Know the Truth so that you can simply Be the Presence of Love with your brother and your sister without any particular set of words, without a teaching.

How many of you have had a hug from someone who really knows how to give a hug? You didn’t need a teaching to feel it. Concepts weren’t employed. I’m talking about that kind of connection.

And I’ll tell you, steer clear of a hug from a student of A Course In Miracles and steer clear of a hug from a Catholic and steer clear of a hug from an astrophysicist; from somebody who thinks they’re somebody. You see what I mean?

If an astrophysicist, or a student of the Course, or any of these try to give you a hug, don't avoid them. Just give them a hug. You don't have to take their structured hug. You can be the one, maybe the first one who hugs them wonderfully and suddenly they feel what a hug from a nobody feels like—a hug from somebody who's not a Somebody feels like. And they're touched, and it makes them look at their life a little differently.

Okay. You have the picture. Good night.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 25th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

There is a lesson in the Course that says, *Above all else, I want to see.*¹

At the bottom line, this is the impulse everyone feels every moment of existence. Existing, for lack of better words, at this point, is an embodiment of the desire to see. Another way of putting it is, a desire to understand—a desire to comprehend. Above all else I want to see.

The next Lesson adds a little bit of the punch to it: *Above all else I want to see differently.*²

You could say, that as babies and as toddlers and children, you all wanted to see and everything was a different seeing. Differentness was constantly your experience and you were fresh to embrace what was different. And you did not try to get everything to fit into the perspective you had the day before. That came as you got older.

Above all else I want to see. And above all else. . . , now that you're grown up, you have to add, "I want to see differently. I want to see minus my conditioned responses to what I see. I want to see beyond my best judgments about everything."

And then we have the prayer, words of Mine which Paul turned into a prayer that was discussed at the last Gathering in December. I want to see everything through your Vision. This is a prayer to Me. "I wish to see—I want to see everything through your Vision, and I'm adding the word, Jesus, which is your Gift to me from God."

Now this is a little bit more intimate and personal expression of what you find in the Book of John in the Bible that says, *Let that Mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.*³ It's more intimate and personal because you're saying to me, "I want to see everything through your Vision which is your gift to me from God." My Gift to you from God.

What you need to become free of are the definitions you each have put into place, either all by your original little self or along with the help of others—teachers—parents, who taught you definitions which you accepted, and once they were in place, caused you to stop looking with innocent eyes—caused you to stop looking with curiosity to wonder if there's more here in this glass of water (holds up glass of water) than what you're used to seeing; two different forms of matter. But wait a minute, but maybe... maybe... it's two different experiences of the energy of Spirit—the Presence of God. A holy encounter with That which is divine. Ah... now you have reason to be curious.

And I am asking you, I am encouraging you, I am inviting you to go through your day every day with this attitude: "Above all else I want to see the more... above all else—above all else that I'm engaged in at the moment in my daily life, I want to see differently—I want to see the more that is there." And ultimately, the element that is essential that gets you out of your private arrogant independent sense of self—that's quite capable of doing everything quite well without any help. And that is, "...above all else, I want to see everything through your Vision" Ah...abandoning isolation. Joining, cooperating with an acknowledgement of: "...which is your Gift to me."

"Um...something I didn't originate. It's Your gift to me. Insulting as it is, You're asking me to let something in that I didn't originate and I can't take credit for. And you're telling me that this might be life-changing, that this might be transformational. I'm not sure I want transformation that doesn't occur at my hand—thank you very much, even if you are Jesus. If you were really Jesus you would show me how to do this by myself."

You wouldn't ask Me to do something that is insulting to Me. You wouldn't ask Me to do something that is demeaning to Me. You wouldn't ask me to do something that would put Me in second place subservient to something else.

But, this Gift to you is a Gift given to Me by God to give to you.

"Well, that's a very heavy duty convincing argument, Jesus. When you put it that way, it makes it hard for me to discount it offhandedly. But I'm going to. I'm going to put it off until I feel more like doing this thing."

Now last week, I suggested that all of you stop thinking of yourselves as students of A Course In Miracles—students of the words in a book. But you know what? I do want you to take the ideas and be willing to act upon them. I do want you to take the ideas that we're talking about right now and act upon them by being willing, in spite of your reluctance—in spite of your desire to continue a little longer with your independence, to risk the chance that wanting to see through—like through a pair of binoculars—through My Vision; to risk the chance that looking at everything through My Vision, which is My Gift to you from God, will annihilate sin, disease and death; which will annihilate vulnerability; which will uncover to you your incapacity to be hurt—harmed—damaged. To risk the chance that if you actually were willing to join with me and see through My Vision and abandon your autonomy, that war will end—that all kinds of in-harmony will end. And, that whether it's this piece of paper, or this glass, or that sound, it's a divine event embodying the fullness of the perfection of the Love that God is Be-ing. That it is an awesome event that will be far from dull—that will be more satisfying than the word “satisfaction” has ever meant to you before.

Would you like to levitate, would you like to fly, would you like to be able to move from one place to another instantly? And I don't just mean from one place on your planet to another but from one place in the infinitude of Being to another. Are any of those things worth abandoning your autonomy for? You think autonomy is synonymous with individuality. Individual individuality, you think has a boundary or it wouldn't be individuality. But I want you to think of it this way—here is a way you might be able to conceive of it:

If you were standing where Paul is, or if you were sitting where Paul is, and you had a view of the entire universe from this position in the universe, that could be called an experience of individuality. If you were to be sitting where Michael is sitting about five feet away from Paul, observing the whole universe, that would be like individuality. And yet, all that would constitute the difference would be, for lack of better words, the perspective—the vantage point.

Individuality is not a private thing. (repeats) Individuality is not a private thing. It has nothing to do with autonomy. You will not lose individuality by abandoning the idea, that you, like Paul sitting in the chair, are in the middle of a whole universe, but not the whole universe yourself.

My point is this: When you abandon autonomy, your individuality can become an all-inclusive universal experience. That's not loss, that's gain.

Now, this chapter is called . . .

From Perception to Knowledge⁴

Perception is constituted of the definitions you all have made up about everything. Perception is what you have determined this glass is. But what this glass is can be known, not just perceived as this definition or that definition. “Oh well, it's a pretty glass, it's actually, more properly defined, it's a glass mug—it's an attractive mug but not nearly as attractive as some I've seen."

You have definitions, perspectives, perceptions that have nothing to do with the fact that this exists. And I'll tell you something: Seen truly, it is as awesome as the glass that you would call an ugly glass. Awesome, because its substance is Living Love. It is alive. It is God expressing Himself there.

So how do you move from a perception of a glass to the experience of Knowing the glass? That's what this chapter is about. So let's begin.

All therapy . . .

Oh dear, doesn't sound like much fun does it?

All therapy is release from the past.

All therapy is release from the past. Well, that's not quite so bad is it? (chuckling) Because one can release the past by means of a simple choice. If making the choice requires encouragement, then it could be called therapy. But . . .

All therapy is release from the past. That is why the Holy Spirit is the only therapist. He teaches that the past does not exist. A fact which belongs to the sphere of knowledge . . .

. . . not perception.

A fact which belongs to the sphere of knowledge, and which therefore no-one in the world knows.

(whispering) no-one in the world knows. Makes it sound like that faulty thing I wrote—that's a world that doesn't exist? And you know that the past does not exist is fact which belongs to the sphere of knowledge and which therefore no-one in the world knows.

Well, it all depends on where you're looking at the world from as to whether you are in it or not. If you're in the world, you're in the definitions you've made up about the world:

"Oh, this is a rough part of town". . . "Oh, this is a great part of town". . . "The people here you don't have to worry about". . . "The people here you really have to be careful about!"

But someone who isn't in their definitions might be standing in both places in his or her peace looking through My Vision—not looking as a tiny body with little eyes through which it looks at “the big world out there,” but as the conscious experience of Being, you might say the Mind in which all of this is being experienced this part of town, or that part of town, or the people here, or the people there.

But the thing is, that when one is not identifying himself as a body, and looking at definitions that have been created and embraced and trusted, that one does not experience himself as being tiny.

Many of you have had experiences—momentary experiences of suddenly feeling huge. Not physically huge, but all embracingly huge. And in that experience, everything is part of you. And everything is at peace—non threatening to you or to parts of itself. You feel it’s perfection. And you’re not in the world because you’re not in the definitions you’ve created about it.

Now, how do you get out of the definitions you’ve created about everything?

You get out of the definitions you’ve created about everything by inquiring of Someone who knows better than you: By asking the Holy Spirit. By asking Me. By reaching out to the Father and asking for their Vision. You have to relinquish the trust and faith you have been placing in your own best thinking—in your own best definitions, so that you might be able to get beyond them.

So, the Holy Spirit teaches that the past does not exist. A fact which belongs to the sphere of knowledge, of Knowing, and which therefore no-one in the world knows; no-one caught in their definitions still knows. It would be indeed impossible to be in the world with this knowledge. As I’ve said, when you have abandoned the perceptions that you have developed for the experience of knowledge, then you don’t find yourself in the world. You don’t find yourself in the local where you’ve suddenly had this experience of being huge and where everything is part of you. And where the word, “place” means nothing—and actually the word, “size” means nothing. And you’re not in something or out of something. And you’re not “here” or “there.” But all of creation still exists and is still available to you which you will still experience but not as though you’re in it.

It would indeed be impossible to BE in the world . . .

. . . it would be impossible to be in your perceptions with this knowledge. Because with that knowledge you would have abandoned your perceptions. That’s why it would be impossible to be in that world—created or colored by your perceptions.

[Raj did not finish prior sentence]

For the mind that knows this unequivocally knows also that it dwells in eternity, and utilizes no perception at all.

. . . utilizes no definitions at all; utilizes no personal, private function of the mind of reasoning and coming to conclusions and then placing faith in conclusions and coming to a place of feeling credible and worthy and worthwhile as an independent individuality.

It therefore does not consider where it is, because the concept “where” does not mean anything to it. It knows that it is EVERYWHERE, . .

. . . and we could say that it knows that it is THE everywhere.

. . . just as it HAS EVERYTHING, and FOREVER.

Now, you can see that what I’m talking about and what is being described here is a movement into an experience—not an intellectual grasping of an idea—not a development of the better perception. But a new experience of everything that you’ve already been experiencing.

We’re talking about making a shift. What—a shift in the way you sit? A shift in the way you stand? A shift in the way you hold yourself as you walk?

No. A shift in the manner in which you’re choosing to look at everything. A shift away from your own private observation—evaluation—and conclusions, into an active curiosity. As I’ve said before, to see the more of what is here than what you’re seeing.

You see, that’s why you have to say, “Above all else I wish to see” and “Above all else I wish to see differently! And I want to do it the only way that is available to do it and that is, by asking Jesus—by asking the Christ to share with me His Vision. Because that Vision was given to Him for me by God.”

Why? Why was it given to Him for me by God? Well, very simply, because it’s not your birthright to suffer. It’s not your birthright to not know who you Are. It’s not your birthright not to have available to you the incredible ultimate of what you’re capable of—not what you’re capable of as an incredible private human being, but what you’re capable of because what you Are. What you Are, not what you were raised to think you are.

The very real difference between perception and knowledge . . .

. . . and you know that I tend to use the word Knowing more than the word knowledge, but . . .

. . . the very real difference between perception and Knowledge . . .

. . . or Knowing . . .

. . . becomes quite apparent if you consider this: There is nothing partial about knowledge.

There is nothing partial about the experience of Knowing. It is an infinite experience. It's an all-inclusive experience.

In Australia, in the one of the Gatherings that we did there, we were in a large room and the ceiling was not flat. It stepped up in graduation—from a low outer edge of the ceiling to a higher inner portion of the ceiling. And as Paul was sitting there and I was speaking, Paul had the experience of the wholeness of the room and the integrity or integratedness of the room. And what this meant was, that where he could see the steps moving up toward the raised center portion of the ceiling, where those steps of plaster and material were, there was also open space below it that allowed you to see the shape and he experienced the fact that that emptiness was full; was an integral part of his experiencing the solid stepped up shape of the ceiling. And that the two—the emptiness and the form, complemented each other perfectly and were absolutely essential to each other. They constituted a living partnership.

A living partnership. It wasn't just an arrangement of space and solids. The two, for lack of better words, cooperated with each other. And this was true of the exterior part of the building and the space that went on out to the stars as it met the shape of the roof and the sides of the building and formed a partnership if you will. Everything was exquisitely engaged in a cooperative and conscious act—infinite act of relationship. And it was holy.

It was a fleeting experience for Paul but it has remained indelible in his mind. And it expresses what we're talking about here when it comes to a shift of experience. Paul had seen buildings as long as he could remember. So the building wasn't something new and the space wasn't something new. But all of a sudden, it was unlike anything he had experienced before. Because it wasn't inanimate matter and empty space having a certain relationship because somebody decided to knock together some pieces of wood and lathe and plaster, etc. No. It was an experience of the Presence of God Being all there is right there and everywhere. An experience that is available to him all the time even though he does not yet experience it. And It's an experience that is available to you all the time even though you don't choose to experience it. You don't choose to experience it because most of you haven't been told often enough that there's more to experience.

But, if this chapter in this book is to mean anything to you that's valuable, you must come to understand that this is what the words, "from perception to knowledge" mean. Not from perception—mental definitions, to knowledge—a mental experience of permanent eternal facts; No. A movement from perception--definitions of everything, to an innocent and fresh ongoing willingness to look at everything without preconceptions. So that you might see the freshness of the Movement of God in every moment in everything.

But again, here's the hooker: You can't move from perception to knowledge all by yourself. Perception is an alone-isolated on-purpose act of independence. Knowledge, or the experience of Knowing, only occurs in a joined state.

"Above all else I want . . . above all else I want to experience; to see everything through your Vision, which is your Gift to me from God."

Again . . .

The very real difference between perception and knowledge becomes quite apparent if you consider this: There is nothing partial about knowledge.

That's what Paul learned in Australia in that Gathering.

Every aspect is whole, and therefore no aspect is separate.

There's not separate space and separate form.

Every aspect is whole, and therefore no aspect is separate. YOU are an aspect of knowledge, being in the Mind of God. Who KNOWS you.

Now, because that's true and I'm continuing . . .

All knowledge must be yours, . . .

. . . in other words, Knowing must be the natural state and function and action of your Being.

All knowledge must be yours, for in you IS all knowledge.

Why is all knowledge in you? Because you are the state of Knowing. There can't be anything else in Knowing except what is Known.

Now . . .

Perception at its loftiest, is never complete. Even the perception of the Holy Spirit, as perfect as perception can be, . .

. . . in other words, the perception of the Holy Spirit is as perfect as perception can be
...

Even the perception of the Holy Spirit, as perfect as perception can be is without meaning in Heaven. Perception can reach everywhere under His guidance, for the vision of Christ beholds everything in light. Yet no perception, however holy, will last forever.

Now this is very important: (Raj did not read title: THE ROLE OF HEALING)

Perfect perception then, has many elements in common with knowledge, . .

. . . in other words, perfect perception can involve the awareness of that which can be known . . .

. . . making transfer to it possible. Yet the last step must be taken by God, because the last step in your redemption, which seems to be in the future, was accomplished by God in your creation.

Now, did that sound complicated? Let me read it again:

Perfect perception then, has many elements in common with knowledge, making transfer to it possible. Yet the last step must be taken by God, because the last step in your redemption, which seems to be in the future . . .

. . . afterall, you're workin' toward it aren't ya? . . .

. . . which seems to be in the future, was accomplished by God in your creation . . .

. . . way back when...in the Beginning.

Now this really isn't that complicated. We're talking about shifting from perception to knowledge. Perception is what you engage in when you think that you're a private autonomous little piss-ant human being born of a sperm and a egg—part of the process of evolution on planet Earth, etc., etc., etc., you know, perceptions—definitions, right? Perception is what you experience when you insist upon acting private, claiming privacy. You can have nothing else available to you except the experience of perception. Perception therefore, is not something that can ever become totally perfected. Because perception is held by something that doesn't exist in actuality—a sense of yourself, a concept of yourself; a definition of yourself that you've made up and superimposed upon what you already divinely Are. You've found in reading the Course many places where it says in so many words, that God must take the last step.

Well, let's put it this way: When you got a divorce from God and said, "Father I'd rather see it my way—I'd rather do it my way—Sayonara," you claimed an independence that you couldn't really ever have and you behaved as though the independence was actual. And you stepped away from God. You stepped away from that which was your very Source. You stepped away from that which was Be-ing you and continued to be you—Source you, even while you were insisting on believing that you were quite independent and on your own and doing quite well at it and feeling really good with yourself about it.

The reason that the Course says that the Father must take the last step, or that the Father will take the last step, is that at the end of the undoing of your dream, at the end of the undoing of your attempt to be something that you can't be, you yield your so-called right to be an independent autonomous thinker—you yield that up to God. You yield back to God. You yield back to That which has been all there is to you since the Beginning. That's what it means.

. . . the last step must be taken by God, . .

It might seem that it's the last step is being taken by God, because when you arrive at the point where you take your last independent step and you abandon taking steps forever, That which has been Be-ing you forever, suddenly infills you. You are reminded by the Presence of God of what you Are and you come back into your sanity. And so in that sense, God takes the last step, because you've stop taking steps on your own. And in the absence of your private self-assertion, God being all there is of you, is able to become your experience once again. And you rediscover the meaning of the word, "sanity."

Yet the last step must be taken by God, because the last step in your redemption, which seems to be in the future, was accomplished by God in your creation.

What was accomplished? God Be-ing you was what constituted your existence. That was what was accomplished by God in your creation. And that was what was never altered. And that is what will fill you up—bless you, you might say, when you abandon taking private steps yourself ever again.

The separation has not interrupted it.

Your fantasy never caused reality to be interrupted or altered.

Creation cannot BE interrupted. The separation is merely a faulty formulation of reality, . .

. . . an imagination!

And oh, you're all so good at imagining. It doesn't take much of an event in your day to cause you to run off with wild imaginings about "what she really meant or what she was REALLY trying to say" in spite of what the words were that came out of her mouth, and on and on.

The separation is . . .

. . . or was . . .

. . . merely a faulty formulation of reality, with no effect at all.

But you want to know something? In spite of the fact that it had no real effect at all, you are suffering from the effects of it. If you are experiencing suffering in any form, you are suffering from the effects of it.

Now, we need to take a moment to remember the great importance of the word, "need." Needs are like a fulcrum—they are a pivot point—they are a place in which sudden shifts of perception can occur. Or they are places where you can even, through using the words of this book, turn yourself into a cold hard-hearted bastard or bitch who self-righteously stands over and against his or her brother or sister letting them know, "Well, you created your problems—you're not an innocent victim. What do you expect when you do this and this and this? I can show in the Course here—I'll be glad to show you in the Course here where it tells you exactly what you've been doing wrong and that you can't really expect to have any different experience. Yes, it's very clear-cut black and white. Uh-hm... So don't complain to me. Get hold of your life and hey, you know, give me a call when you're feeling better."

That's not a response to need. That's a way to avoid being involved in the blessing that need holds out. You know, spiritual teachings and especially the Course, are not here to help you not be bothered by suffering.

How can I put it? You are here to alleviate suffering. You are here to do something about suffering. You are here to be the agent for change which brings about correction to suffering. You're here to get your hands dirty! And become involved by what? Shifting from perception to knowledge. By being willing to look into your brother's eyes who is suffering, and not spew forth some crap—spiritual crap—metaphysical crap! Course in Miracles hate!

"Well, you're creating this for yourself! Well you know, you don't even exist!"

These are not healing answers—these are not corrective answers, these don't indicate that an event has occurred, a shift from perception to knowledge. They don't indicate that you've stood there and done what Paul and Susan are calling, "the two-step" where something happens and the first step is that you step back before you respond, and the second step is to ask God what needs to be known here, or to ask your Guide, or the Holy Spirit.

You need to learn to do the two-step. All the time. Because, that's what you are here for. You're here to come from knowledge. You're here to come from the experience of Knowing because that's your function. You're not here to breed more and more perception. You're not here to father more and more perception. You're not here to let your imagination go wild and tell somebody exactly why they're suffering and that it's their fault and then tell them to do something about it and walk off. No. You must do the two-step.

Let me ask you all something: If you go where no correction is called for, and you go there all day every day, at the end of the day what can you say that you've contributed? And what of your purpose for being can you say that you have performed or expressed? Can you go to bed at night and say, "Well, today I got up and I looked for places where need was occurring. I looked for places where suffering was occurring so that I might do the two-step and bring to that situation what would end the suffering. And did I hang in there with my brother because he was worth my spending the time to do the two-step?"

If you're brother is down in the pit, you have to go down into the pit with your brother and walk him back out. And you may indeed go down into the pit and say, "I see exactly how you got yourself here and because I see exactly how you got yourself here, I can show you the way out. It's as simple as the way you got in."

That's evidence of shifting from perception to knowledge. "Above all else I wish to see. Above all else I wish to see differently. Above all else I wish to see everything through your Eyes, Holy Spirit, or your Eyes, Jesus. I wish to look through your Vision, which is your Gift to me and you're giving it to me as you perform in your function, which is your Gift to me from God. And you know what? I ask for it, so that I might give it to my brother."

Wow, no isolation there, is there? "I wish to see everything through your Vision, Jesus, so that I might give it to my brother." That's the Answer. The whole answer is embodied in what we've said tonight in what little we've read in this chapter tonight.

So, again I'm encouraging all of you to get off your duffs and to abandon intellectual metaphysical or spiritual pursuits and translate all of this that we've been reading and that you've been studying for years, into a new way of being that involves the practice of the "two-step." It really involves the practice of everything that's in this book.

Oh, many years ago, there was a catchy little phrase that made it's rounds... "Engage in random acts of kindness." It was a neat little thought-catchy so it would stay in your mind and remind you that you could do spontaneous little things—random acts of kindness. Not well-planned out kind acts, but a little nod of the head, or a smile at somebody or opening the door for somebody or what ever might occur, but for it to be a random thing.

Well, let the two-step be a similar thing to remind you during the day. To remind you to find and see where need is occurring so that you might be able to do the two-step and bring into play that which corrects the need; resolves the need.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you, not next Saturday but the following Saturday.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

SEPTEMBER 9TH 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We will not have a quiet time tonight, so, we'll get on the right page and continue right on. If you are in the Sparkly Book, it's page 303, line 7, beginning, "The miracle, without a function..." If you're in the Second Edition, it's page 258, paragraph 3, sentence 6. And, if you're in the First Edition, it's page 241, the first full paragraph, sentence 6.

You know, when everything gets resolved down into a single simple point, it puts everyone in the difficult position of having to shit or get off the pot. When everything is brought down to one simple point, there can't be any further wondering about what might be true, contemplating what the answer might be, attempting to analyze everything to come up with a plan to get to the ultimate point.

And you know what? We've arrived at that place where it's simple. We called it last week, "the two-step." But even earlier than last week, it was said, "I of myself can do nothing."¹ And, "If you have seen Me, you have seen the Father."² And, "It is not I that doeth the works, but the Father in Me."³

All this book is doing is bringing you to the simple point of realization that you of yourself can do nothing; therefore never have done anything; that you therefore are not a personal accomplisher; that you're not an independent entity capable of authorizing life or life situations, that in other words, there is no you there with power of any independent sort. And that this doesn't render you meaningless. It renders you meaningful on new terms. The new terms being the original terms—the terms of Creation itself. Which is, that God Moved and the Movement was Creation. And

God saw everything that He had made and behold, it was Himself, it was verily God—it was very good.

And what was Creation? Creation was the movement and the evidence of the movement of the experience of being conscious! That is Life. Mind being conscious is Life. And it is the meaning of Life for absolutely every aspect of Creation. Every aspect of Creation. Not any aspect of Creation is too miniscule to not embody the whole of what God is Being; to not embody the wholeness of Mind. Mind that is not divided into tiny parts, but Mind, the conscious experience of Being. That is what constitutes the presence of even the most miniscule part of Creation.

And so, the miniscule part of Creation embodies the whole of Creation. It embraces the whole of Creation—all of Creation is present there consciously. And this applies to you too.

Do you want the drama and the mystery of life to be over? So that you're not hanging out in the not-knowing place where suspicion can arise and doubt can occur and jealousy can blossom and hate can find expression because of the insecurity of it all?

“Oh, but you know what? I'm a member of this group—and we're studying the Course and we're only half way through the book.” Or, “You know, I'm a member of an esoteric group and we have been learning these specific conscious steps to practice in order to arrive at a place where we can be joined and become effective agents for change and we're only a quarter of the way through that. Well what will I do if I don't have any reason to go to meetings? What will I do if there's nothing to learn? How on earth could existence be vital and interesting without mystery?”

And really, at the bottom line, what you're all saying is, “How could existence be meaningful if there aren't any situations or circumstances that I can take hold of and improve or help or bring about constructive changes that will prove that I'm a valid and valuable and a meaningful presence. How will I be able to prove anything at all about me if there's nothing to be done except to be still and listen for the impulse of the Father's Will in me which I'm told is really my will, but I don't believe it. How could my will be a will that doesn't start with my initiating a movement of some sort and effecting change of some sort—or creating something that never existed before by myself through the use of my capacity to originate ideas?”

So you know what? We're at a point here where like I said, you either have to shit or get off the pot. Either take on the task without grousing about it, or doing the two-step whether you think you have the capacity or not, whether you really want to or not, and do the one essential thing. Because anything else you do that you think is accomplishing something, is a farce. And you are believing a farce. You are indulging in a belief, not a fact—not truth. And your involvement with that process is absolutely blocking your capacity to cut through beliefs and arrive at the experience of knowing, or knowledge, as we spoke of last week in this chapter which is called, From Perception to Knowledge.

Now, I'm going to bring up this unpleasant subject that we were talking about last week and that is the importance of need.

Many of you think that you are successful, whether you're a metaphysician, or whether you're a student of religion, or an agnostic or an atheist. You think that success is arriving at a place where you are insulated from need, or I'm going to say, insulated against need. You're successful if you're able to pay your bills every month without difficulty and you're able to engage in your activities without distractions of an unpleasant nature.

You may arrive—you may struggle to attain that insulation, and you might arrive at your senior years, if we can put it that way, and everything is the way you would want it. You can meet all of your needs—you're even healthy. But a family member begins to have a problem—a need. And you are there observing it and you're even called upon or invited to participate in the correction of the need and because of the circumstances it's difficult to ignore the need. "My God what happened to my plans? I had arrived at a point where I was insulated against need and need crept in and is disturbing my senior years. This is not fair. It's not fair for someone else to be in my experience in a way that I can't ignore when I had arranged not to be able to be in this kind of a dynamic."

Well, that's how you find out that you had a plan and you had a definition of success and that the definition of success was not to be confronted with need but always wonderful fulfillment. Well, what did fulfillment mean? It meant that you had blinders on, it meant that you succeeded in getting a wall built around you thick enough and tall enough to block out needs—to block out your awareness of needs.

Is that success, is that fulfillment? No. That's you becoming more and more unconscious. That's you crawling into a smaller and smaller hole separated from life. That's not success and that is not fulfillment no matter how pleasant you managed to make your hole, and ultimately, no matter how lovely the coffin is.

"Oh,..." and Paul has this feeling sometimes, "I have something important to do—I have a wonderful work to do. I don't have time for these distractions. I don't have time for this because it keeps me from doing my good work." Another way to insulate against being attentive to needs. Why? So that you can do the two-step. So that you can step back from your own self-confidence about how you thought everything was to be and you say, "Father, what is the truth here?" Not what is the truth about the lie—not what is the truth about the problem. What is the truth that is the answer to the problem—what is the truth that is the correction to the problem? Not the correction to the person, not the punishment to the person for the stupid things he did or she did.

But what is the answer that resolves the problem and, as it necessarily must be, uncovers the dignity and the integrity of the individual who's having the problem so that the correction is experienced as Love moving in their lives that unmistakably blesses them and unmistakably identifies that there is a God and that God is not far off from them but is at One with them and Loves them.

Now, it says here in the book . . .

The miracle, . . .⁴

. . . meaning the sudden shift of perception . . .

The miracle, without a function in Heaven, . .

. . . meaning which has no function in Heaven . . .

The miracle, without a function in Heaven, IS needful here.

Suffering and need is the evidence of misperception or as it's put in the Course, perception itself. Perception as opposed to knowledge.

The miracle, without a function in Heaven, IS needful here.

Without it, how could you possibly discover that you are now and always have been, smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and missing it completely?

Aspects of reality can still be seen, . .

. . . in other words, right here where you are . . .

. . . and they will replace aspects of UNreality.

What is unreality? It's perception. What is unreality? The definitions you have made up about everything which you are applying to everything. Like pinning the tail on the donkey, you pin your definition on something Real and you call it a new name.

Again . . .

Aspects of reality can still be seen, and they will replace aspects of Unreality.

They can still be seen because no matter how encrusted everything has become by the definitions you have applied to them, it hasn't changed what they are. Therefore, . .

Aspects of reality can. . .

. . . still . . .

. . . be seen . . .

. . . and, as you are willing to do the two-step, they will replace aspects of unreality—they will replace the definitions.

Aspects of reality can be seen . . .

. . . where? . .

. . . in everything . . .

. . . in this world that you call a “material world,” in this world that some of you call, “an illusion.”

Aspects of reality . . .

. . . or I’m going to say, “the Kingdom of Heaven, . . .”

. . . can be seen in everything and everywhere.

Why? Because it is all the Kingdom of Heaven and never stopped being it. It has been present—it has been ever-present, available to see, for what it is.

Again, . .

Aspects of reality can be seen in everything and everywhere. Yet only God can gather them together by crowning them as one with the final gift of eternity.

Now we talked about that last week in different words when we spoke about the fact that God will take the last step.

You could say, when you pull off the last tail on the donkey, and now the donkey can be seen for the donkey it is, or reality can be seen for what it is, suddenly God is in your face and you can recognize God.

You thought you could make an ass of God by pinning a tail on Him. And, in that act, usurp His position by becoming the creator of the definitions of reality that you wanted to believe. And when you undo that last tail—when you remove that last tail and the last vestiges of a definition that you have applied to God, applied to reality that made it look different—when that is gone, suddenly what it is will hit you.

Because you will have abandoned an intent and a desire to alter reality by virtue by some unique capacity you think you have or thought you had to be creative on your own.

As I've said before, all you could succeed at doing was torquing your perception—or torquing your knowledge and creating a perception which was always a misperception. And misperceptions never changed God or the Kingdom of Heaven, or you.

Now . . .

Apart from the Father and the Son, the Holy Spirit has no function.

Well, let's stop there for a moment. Almost all of you are familiar with the words, "The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; or the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit." And for the most part, that's been interpreted to mean, the Father—God, the Son: His only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost—the Holy Spirit. Three; a trinity. It is called the Trinity. There's the Trinity, and then there's you in your orphanages sitting there doing everything you can to make something of yourself.

Well, part of shitting or getting off the pot involves taking this Trinity and neglecting to project it out there somewhere away from you. Now that we've been doing since we started reading this Book. The Father, God, the Mind that moves and experiences its Movement as the conscious experience of Being in His Movement causes what could be called, Creation. It causes something to be experienced. And it's called Creation and you are that Creation. And every ant is that Creation and every butterfly and every leaf and every tree-trunk is that Creation and each is totally conscious as I was describing earlier. Each, no matter what size it visually appears to be, embraces the whole of Creation as a conscious experience of Being.

So, the evidence of God is the Son of God—you and everything. So now, God and you are inseparable. The Father and the Son are no longer being projected out there as part of the Trinity different from you. And Jesus Christ, the one you had been told was the only begotten Son and therefore was the Son referred to in the Trinity, Jesus Christ says to you, "You are my brothers—you are my brothers and sisters, we are family. We are all Sons and Daughters—offspring of God equal in meaning and function and source and fulfillment." And the Holy Spirit, as we unmistakably read, is nothing more than your right mind held in trust while you dally with the ego—while you play around at being an independent private authorizer, creator in your own right, separate and apart from God.

Now, part of shitting or getting off the pot involves, specifically, getting the Holy Spirit off of the pedestal of the Trinity together with the Father and the Son. But specifically, it's getting the Holy Spirit off of that pedestal as separate and apart from you and daring to re-own it—to reclaim it as your right mind which you have not been accessing because you have been insisting upon doing something it is impossible for you to do: to be the creator instead of God and to deny any indelible or unchangeable bond with the Father.

You must dare to let that Mind be in you which was also in Me—which is also in Me. And that Mind which is also in Me that is in you, that you must let be in you, is the Holy Spirit—your right Mind; that Mind which Knows what God Knows. That Mind that doesn't need to constantly go to groups and constantly engage in courses of study that will bring you closer and closer to something that it's not normal for you to have, but which you can attain.

It's time for you to stand in the face of need—not insulate yourself against it, not turn your back to it, but face the experience of need and do the two-step; enquire of your right Mind. Enquire of that Place of Excellence in you that we've talked about. It is useless to sit and think the wonderful thought—that there is a Place of Excellence in me—a Place of Excellence in me. [chuckles] If you don't know where it is, what difference does it make whether it's there or not? If you don't look for it, how are you going to find it?

If you don't persist in looking for it because you've been told that it is there and it's worth finding out whether that's a lie or not, you will remain stuck. And you might have to read the Course three or four more times. Or you might have to take the Course over again. You might just miss the point a little bit longer. It's uncomfortable. Sort of like learning how to swim and having your class at 8 o'clock in the morning when the water's cold and it seems so unfair to be forced to do something you just know you can't possibly do anyway and especially to have to do it when it's so damned cold. And so you argue against letting go and learning how to swim. Discovering your capacity to swim.

You're being told that it's time for you to pay attention to needs and to look at them squarely and instead of thinking what you would automatically think about the needs, to step back, to shut your mouth, to stop your mind from thinking and say, "Father—Holy Spirit, what is the truth here that will be the resolution of the need and the reestablishment of that individual who is having the need; the reestablishment of his integrity or her integrity in his or her mind. What will constitute healing?"

Well immediately your ego will jump in and say, "You don't know and there's no way for you to know. This is an unfair demand on you!" Well, it would be an unfair demand on you if you didn't have the capacity to do it. You don't think you have the capacity and at the bottom line you're strongly conditioned not to want to think you have that capacity because it means you'll have to abandon your well-fought for independence—your capacity to make choices and makes things happen all by yourself. And you don't really want to abandon that capacity or invalidate it by engaging in something that will be called “a miracle—a healing!” which you can’t take personal credit for.

You don’t want that, or you’re strongly inhibited in that direction by your conditioning. And so, like the child who doesn’t want to stick his foot into the cold swimming pool to learn how to do something he doesn’t think he can do, you are going to have to let yourself be in the position of looking squarely at need with the desire not to go through all the thoughts you would have about that and decide to hang in here until the resolving answer is revealed to you.

That’s where we are. That’s where we are in the book. That’s where we are in the learning. You know, how long did you think you could go along just learning interesting metaphysical intellectual points? It’s time now to translate those into transformation in your life. And it means, as I’ve been saying, daring to confront need rather than running away from it so that you might find the blessing in it. The blessing in it lies in the fact that it moves you, if its understood correctly—the need, it moves you to a place of abandoning your habitual response, which is to come to conclusions all by yourself on your own. And instead, do something entirely different: Abandon the isolation by joining with That which Knows—That which doesn’t perceive: God, or the Holy Spirit, or your Guide.

But I want to emphasize tonight, the Holy Spirit. Because no longer can you hear the words, “Holy Spirit” and assign It a definition of something outside of you. The Holy Spirit is clearly “nothing more than your right Mind.” It’s the real You. And you must be willing to turn to the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, and hang out in what for you, would be called, “the not knowing place.” The not knowing all by yourself on your own, and abiding with the frustration, the frustration of not-knowing, as quickly as you think you would know, if you could depend on your own best thinking.

Oh, you could have the answer right away and you could resolve the situation whether it corrected or not, and be on your way, and be out of the vicinity where need could confront you.

Be ready to be frustrated. That’s like the child must be willing to endure the cold water. The cold water isn’t going to kill him. It’s not that cold. It’s not a mountain stream, it’s just a swimming pool that isn’t heated. And the frustration you will experience won’t kill you either. It’s no reason not to persist in the one thing that will reconnect you with your right Mind. And in that reconnection, allow for a sudden shift of perception where the resolution of the problem or the need can come forth.

And you know what? The resolution of the need will always come forth as that which shows that the need never was really real but only seemed to exist because of some simple ignorance that you were suffering from. That’s important. You’re never overcoming real needs. You’re always replacing an ignorance of truth with truth.

Now, continuing . . .

Apart from the Father and the Son, the Holy Spirit has no function.

And I'm going to add, that apart from the Father and the Son who has gotten a divorce from his Father, the Holy Spirit has no function. The Holy Spirit only came into play when one said, "Father, I'd rather see it my way, Father, I'd rather do it my way." And disengaged or imagined that he or she disengaged and separated himself or herself from the Father to begin to act autonomously. At that point, as I've said before, the conscious experience of what that individual really was, fell to the back burner and what took its place in the foreground, was the sense of self—this imagined sense of self that was the determiner of things now.

When you come Home—when you wake up—there will not be a Trinity, there will be a singularity; the Father Being the Son and the Son not objecting. So that all that the Father is, all that the word, God, truly means as an experience, becomes your experience, and the ant's experience, and the tree-trunk's experience and the caterpillar's experience, and so on.

Apart from the Father and the Son, the Holy Spirit has no function.
He is not separate from either, being in the mind of both and knowing that Mind is one. He is a Thought of God, and God has given Him to you because He has no Thoughts He does not share.

In other words, what God was Being as you in the Movement of Creation, He never took back. Even when you insisted on being imaginatively independent. And when you re-embrace your Self, what He shared of Himself as you in the Beginning, is what you will once again find being shared with you now.

The Holy Spirit . . . [Raj didn't read "He"]

. . . is a Thought of God, and God has given Him to you because He

. . . God . . .

. . . has no Thoughts He does not share. His message . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's message—the message of that which is nothing more than your right mind, . . .

. . . speaks of timelessness in time, . . .

Why? Because right now you insist that you exist in time and in space and you're moving forward inexorably in time and, oh boy, what a definition you've applied to that—that means, you're getting older—and that means that you're going to sooner or later deteriorate and fall ill and die.

Now, that's awful! That's insidious! That's cruel. And you are all suffering from it and you know what that circumstance is called that I've just described? It's called, "a need." Well, does the Holy Spirit run off and insulate Itself against need? No. It speaks of timelessness in time. It addresses the need by disclosing the Answer that resolves the need by showing that the concept of time and all of the beliefs associated with it are currently held ignorance in the mind of a Son or Daughter of God, that that Daughter or Son of God can abandon. But that Daughter or Son of God will not abandon it if the Holy Spirit does not speak of timelessness in this place you all think you are.

In the same way, you do the two-step relative to others who are in need, so that you can speak of that which uncovers the fantastic nature of the need that they're experiencing. And when I say fantastic, I'm meaning it in the sense of fantasy, that it's not actual, it's not real, it cannot actually bind that one.

His . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . message speaks of timelessness in time, . .

It addresses the need with that which dissolves the need. And I'm going to say again, in a way that the one holding and practicing the ignorance can let go of it without any experience of condemnation or criticism, where no call for guilt remains after the correction has occurred—after the healing has occurred. In other words, where the integrity of the individual is uncovered right along with, let us say, the timelessness of eternity that was being experienced as the bondage of time.

His . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . message speaks of timelessness in time, and that is why Christ's vision looks on everything with love. Yet . . .

. . . and let's be clear on this now . . .

. . . even Christ's vision is not His reality.

. . . is not the Holy Spirit's reality. The Holy Spirit is an accommodation to your choice to imagine that you can be an orphan. The Christ is not an accommodation and is eternal, just as you are.

The golden aspects of reality which spring to light under His . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . loving gaze are partial glimpses of the Heaven that lies BEYOND them.

The Holy Spirit is your right mind. When you finally yield to the Holy Spirit, when you finally yield to the Place of Excellence in you, it is not the Holy Spirit that will become your mind, it is God that will become your mind.

When you said, "Father, I'd rather do it my way—Father, I would rather define things," and you seemed to create a distance between the two of you, there came into play between the two of you, the safety deposit box in which the true knowledge of yourself as God Being All, could be held. It constitutes a bridge—the Holy Spirit constitutes a bridge between you and your conscious experience of unity with God. And when you let in the Holy Spirit fully, it will not now be God and you and the Holy Spirit, or you as the Holy Spirit, or the Holy Spirit as you.

When you make that final yield to the Holy Spirit, this thing that came into existence between you and God, your experience of Oneness with God, will disappear. That's where it will seem that God takes the last step. And the experience of Oneness will fill you.

That Mind which was in Christ Jesus, which you are invited to let be in you, was not the Holy Spirit. The Mind that is in Christ Jesus, that is to be in you, is the only Mind there is, it's God.

Now, if you want to think about it, you have plenty of grist for the mill.

If you want to do the two-step, you have an infinite void in front of you to be willing to hang out in, to be present in and let consume you. Which you must allow yourself to be in with curiosity...interest. And if you do that, that's the two-step.

If you do that, and you do not have immediate answers to needs that are confronting you, don't, like the child who needs to get into the cold pool, complain and fret and fuss and say, "This isn't fair!" or, "If this were truly the way, it would be harmonious and easy and I would be naturally drawn toward it."

You won't be naturally drawn toward it because you are convinced that it's part of the integrity of you to do things independently and find solutions yourself so that you can get credit for it and maybe, even be an “Albert Schweitzer,” or an “Einstein,” or someone who through exceptionally clear thinking, sets mankind ahead in a quantum leap, thus proving that man as a species, truly is superior to the other animals in the animal kingdom. Because you have demonstrated a capacity to be more than the animal kingdom is capable of being.

Bullshit! None of this is about proving your integrity. None of this is about making you important.

All of it is about waking up so that the idea that you’re some piss-ant mortal, some little inconsequential nerd that must make something of itself and can make something of itself, so that that can be abandoned, so that that can be found to be false, so that that can be found to be a temporary ignorance to be replaced, not by a better perception, but by knowledge—by the experience of Knowing the truth revealed by God.

Again, above all else, want to see everything through My Vision, which is My Gift to you from God. That’s the two-step. That’s the motto on the inside of the shit-house door. Get off the pot. Shit or get off the pot.

Now, how many of you are thinking right now, “Gawd, does he have to use such course language?” (chuckling)

Here’s another sign that could be on the inside of the shit-house door: “Let’s do it!” Oh, that pleases you. Well, it pleases you for the wrong reasons. It doesn’t offend your sensibilities—you delicate sweet little metaphysicians you, and you, you know, proper students of the Course in Miracles, or whatever it is you’re studying.

You know, let’s do what works: SHIT OR GET OFF THE POT! And you know what? YOU CAN DO IT! It’s a capacity all of you have and I hope this coming week is full of miracles for you. And if it isn’t, I hope it’s full of the miracle of your neglecting to be frustrated and getting upset about it! And expressing your frustration because all the time you’re doing that what is it? It’s all you expressing yourself and there’s no two-step to it.

Aren’t you glad I’m not couching this teaching in mysterious language? I couldn’t be any more utterly clear than I’m being. And it makes it simpler for you. And with that, I will say Good Night.

And I Love you—Love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 16th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

So, we're getting down to simplicity as we talked about last week—the simplicity of the two-step. In other words, when response is called for, when life unfolds and interaction is appropriate, instead of jumping to the conclusion that you know exactly how to respond with your experience with this individual, or your life experience, or your education, you know exactly what is called for.

The two-step is: The first step of the two-step, is to step back and ask God, "What's appropriate here, what is called for here? What is going to uncover the maximal good available from this situation, circumstance or dynamic?" And then listen before you respond.

Well, so much for all your education. So much for all of your study.

The two-step requires you to "wing-it." The two-step requires, life requires you to be willing to stand at the edge of the unknown without any assumptions that you know all that you need to know and an invitation in the form of inquiry to know more than you presently know.

Now, there was a point at which there were Ten Commandments that were given. Moses listened and heard and shared—he did the two-step. And he came back down off the mountain and everyone was off the beam. He had been gone for awhile and they had forgotten their purpose. And what happened? The situation called for something and this time he didn't do the two-step. He got angry. And he threw down the tablets and they broke. And the upshot of it was, that he had to say, "Okay God, I'm going to do the two-step again." And he went back up the mountain and listened.

Now, at that time what was needed was a shift of consciousness in which the Singularity of God—the Oneness of God needed to register in human awareness; in human consciousness. Because at that point, there were many gods. That's why the First Commandment is, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me."¹ Thou shalt not bow down to golden calves or whatever gods you might make up. There is one God.

And the commandments that were given were rules for behavior for those who had forgotten how to love. For those who had forgotten that love was their function. For those who had forgotten that love for their neighbor was their function.

The Ten Commandments were not and are not sufficient to cause anyone to wake up. But they are sufficient to bring one into a degree of alignment in their consciousness where their attention isn't divided. It prepared everyone for My Presence in which I gave two commandments and these two commandments were another form of the two-step we've been talking about.

The First Commandment in so many words was, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and soul and mind." In other words, let this one God which you're no longer having difficulty approaching without the distraction of many other gods. In the present day, that's not a mindset that most anyone is having to deal with.

So, to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul and mind—with your whole being, that's like doing the first step of the two-step: "Father, what do I need to know here? It's more important to me to take this opportunity to listen for the truth that will heal and transform and bless everyone in this moment, than it is to rely upon my expensive education and all of the hours of work I went to get excellent grades so that I might gain great respect in my field. It's more important to me to listen to You than it is to lean upon any of these other distractions. What do I need to know to bless my brother—to bless this situation and so on?"

The second commandment I gave you was to love your Brother as yourself. Why only two commandments? Because this is all it takes to wake up. This is all it takes to get back into your right Mind—to get back into the conscious experience of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're in the middle of but not recognizing because you're so much more enamored of who you think you are and the skills you think you have, and the reasoning capacity you've have honed and developed to a fine point so that you can be an effective presence in the world.

In other words, the Ten Commandments brought human awareness to the point of acknowledging that there's only one God and that man must obey the laws of this one God.

The two commandments that I gave say this One God is All there Is. And there is no independent you to be obedient to God because you, in your right Mind, are the Movement of God expressing Himself. And the way for you to wake up into your conscious awareness of That—your conscious experience of It, which is the definition of Heaven—the meaning of Heaven, is to abandon the belief that you have, that you're an independent entity set into place by God but given total freedom to have your own will and function entirely independent of God and ultimately make your Dad proud of you by your independent accomplishments. That's the mindset that is being undone today.

Multiple gods is not the mindset being undone now but it was when Moses gave the Ten Commandments.

Now, let's go into the book.

This is the miracle of creation; THAT IT IS ONE FOREVER.²

It's oneness cannot be altered. Your belief that you have altered it, or that it has been altered is not true and never was. In other words, the miracle of Creation is, that it has never become what it is not. It is what it is. It is One forever.

Every miracle you offer to the Son of God is but the true perception of one aspect of the whole.

What is a miracle? A sudden shift of perception. A sudden shift of perception that constitutes an ah-ha . . . a surprise . . . an awareness of truth, not just a different point of view. An awareness of truth in which God is more clearly recognized where you hadn't seen God before in your brother; in some aspect of your life. And . . .

Every miracle you offer to the Son of God is but the true perception of one aspect of the whole.

When you take the time to step back and ask God what needs to be known here relative to something going on with you and your Brother, you are expressing a willingness and a desire to see more there where your Brother is than your educated thinking sees, more than your experience—your past experience with him convinces you is there. You're asking to experience more than any of your past experience can disclose to you. And when that is disclosed to you and transformation occurs, you have seen something about that Brother that is awesome and transforms you and transforms him.

But you haven't yet seen it about your cousin or your other sister, or Joe down the street, or your President or your Governor. But you have seen it for one aspect of the whole, and that is valuable. That is not insignificant. That transformation in you and your Brother does indeed bless everyone even if you have yet to see that the ah-ha you've had about this Brother is as impactful and real and true about everyone else you know and everyone you don't yet know.

Though every aspect . . .

. . . every aspect [gestures] here, there...there...every aspect . . .

Though every aspect IS . . .

. . . not just whole, but . . .

. . . the whole, you cannot know this until you see that every aspect is the SAME, perceived in the SAME LIGHT and THEREFORE one.

Well, if it is all these things, everything is simple—uncomplicated. But for some of you it's very important for things to be complicated because your job is to make the complicated uncomplicated. You get your kicks, you get your high, you get your praise, you get your self-recognition from rendering the complicated simple. To uncover the simplicity of being that exists without your making the complicated simple, leaves you out of the loop of ego satisfaction and self pride. And although it will bless you and it will bless everyone else, you are reluctant to do things you won't get credit for.

Now,

Everyone . . .

. . . your brothers, your sisters, your parents, your children, your neighbor, your acquaintances . . .

Everyone seen WITHOUT the past . . .

. . . without the past—without the past that you bring into play from your mind, . . .

Everyone seen WITHOUT the past thus brings you nearer to the end of time by bringing healed and healing sight into the darkness, and enabling the world to see.

Now, we've talked for the last couple of weeks about getting your hands dirty, not staying uninvolved, not determining that success means never to be confronted by need.

The Holy Spirit corrects your belief and your confidence in time by coming to you where you think you are in time and speaks to you of what? Not how idiotic you are, not how immature and ignorant you are, but talks to you about timelessness; talks about that which specifically corrects what you're suffering from. In so many words, the Holy Spirit gets His hands dirty; gets involved with you in the correction of ignorance by bringing about a sudden shift of perception caused by illuminating truth or reality that you had been misperceiving as you were looking at it.

Everyone seen WITHOUT the past thus brings you nearer to the end of time . . .

. . . everyone you see without bringing the past into play, brings you nearer to the end of time . . .

. . . by bringing . . .

What? Sudden shift of perceptions into play in your involvement . . .

. . . by bringing healed and healing sight into the darkness, . .

. . . as the Holy Spirit does, bringing timelessness into your belief in time and waking you up in your ignorance about what? Timelessness.

Everyone seen WITHOUT the past thus brings you nearer to the end of time by bringing healed and healing sight into the darkness, and enabling the world to see. For light must come into the darkened world . . .

. . . you aren't going to flash out of the darkened world, you're not going to rise above the darkened world and leave all the darkness down there untouched and unforgiven, unhealed.

. . . light must come into the darkened world to make Christ's Vision possible even here.

In the dark. In what's being experienced as dark.

Help Him . . .

. . . Me, the Christ . . .

. . . to give His gift of light to all who think they wander in the darkness, and let Him . . .

. . . Me . . .

. . . gather them into His quiet sight that makes them one.

How do you do that? By doing the two-step. You help Me give My gift of light to all who think they wander in the darkness by stopping your automatic responses and devaluing them enough to say, entirely apart from, entirely separate and apart from my best judgments, and my best experience and my education, "What do I need to know here? What is the truth that will illuminate the fact that the ignorance is ignorant and meaningless and therefore, it can be let go of without guilt and a sudden shift of perception can be had by all." That's how.

Help Me [substitutes Me for His] to give My gift of light to all who think they wander. . .

. . . think they wander . . .

. . . in the darkness, and let Me gather them into My quiet sight that makes them one.

Now, it's very important for you to understand that when you are doing this for your Brother, you are including yourself in My embrace. The sudden shift of perception that reveals your function as Love, and illuminates your divine presence to you, blesses you.

It sounds great to hear that you should love your Father with all of your heart, and soul and mind. What makes it great is that you can do that in the privacy of your home. You can do it when you're alone in the car. You can even do it in a middle of a crowd of people without anybody knowing it. But that in itself won't cause you to awaken. Because you can't go unto the Father without bringing your fellowman with you.

Why? Because even if you love the Lord your God with all your soul and mind, if you're not able to see God in your Brother, you haven't seen God yet.

This is the simplicity of it. It's so simple that most of you think it's hard, because you have to give up everything that has meant something to you, for so little.

They . . .

. . . all your Brothers and Sisters, everyone . . .

They are all the same; . .

. . . no matter how much they piss you off, no matter how well you think you know them, no matter how justified you believe you are in withholding your trust and your love from them, no matter how reasonable it is to you not to take time on behalf of your Brother with your Brother . . .

They are all the same; all beautiful and equal in their holiness.
And He . . .

. . . I, when you bring them to me . . .

. . . will offer them unto . . .

. . . My Father, it says here . . .

. . . and He will offer them unto His Father as they were offered unto Him.

In other words, as you have offered them unto Me, I will offer them unto the Father.

You need to all pay attention to the severity with which you judge your Brothers and Sisters and the determination you bring into play to withhold your love from them, and you must be willing to shift your attention from what it is about them that justifies your withholding your love from them to taking a look at yourself to find out why you're justifying using your mind in a way that is destructive to your capacity to be the healing Presence of Love.

It is so important to so many of you to be able to express your honesty and vent your anger and get it expressed fully so that you may let it go, so that you might experience a catharsis. Well, all of you have held grudges for long periods of time so that you know that having the right to express yourself and your feelings truly, doesn't mean instantaneous release and the capacity to move forward with love.

You need to be willing to look at how many times during the day you actually avoid being involved with others for whatever justifications exist in your mind. It seems so reasonable to you, but all the time your attention is out there on “them” you are ignoring the use to which you’re putting your mind that constitutes your being ill—that constitutes your being not in your right Mind. And as a result, not in a position to do the two-step. It puts you in the position of needing to be governed by the Ten Commandments instead of being released by the Two.

There is ONE miracle, as there is ONE reality. And every miracle you do contains them all, as every aspect of reality you see blends quietly into the One Reality of God.

Now, there is a way you do have of comprehending at an experiential level what this means. And that is, that if you have had an occasion to see a hologram—a piece of film—where you can see a holographic image when it is held in particular laser light, you can see a 3-D image. If you cut a little tiny corner, or any little tiny square out of the whole piece of film and look at that in the same laser light, you will find that every aspect of the large picture is still present in the small picture. You don’t just have a corner of what was in the big picture, you have the whole picture in that little tiny piece.

And every miracle you do, . .

. . . every sudden shift of perception that you allow yourself to have that transforms you and your Brother, . . .

. . . contains them all, . .

. . . contains the meaning of all miracles . . .

. . . as every aspect of reality you see blends quietly into the One Reality of God. The only miracle that ever was is God’s most holy Son . . .

. . . you and your Brothers and Sisters . . .

. . . created in the One Reality that is His Father.

The Source of you is your Father. God Being All, is God Being All there is of you. God is not being you as something separate. God Being Himself is what is Present where you are. And what that means will become available to you as a conscious experience when you’re willing to abandon the belief you have that you are separate, solitary, isolated and different from every other aspect of Creation as well as God. And that’s the purpose of this two-step that we’re talking about is to come back in to this conscious experience of what you really Are and what Reality is.

And where's it going to happen? It's going to happen in the dark. Where's it going to happen? It's going to happen in space and time. Because in space and time you're going to learn of timelessness and indivisibility and light.

Christ's vision . . .

You remember, My Vision—the Vision that is My gift to you from God . . .

Christ's vision . . .

. . . My Vision . . .

. . . is His gift to you.

. . . is My gift to you. My Being, I'll read it as it says it here . . .

Christ's vision is His gift to you. His Being is His Father's gift to Him.

In other words, My Vision is My gift to you. My Being is My Father's gift to Me.

Now, what could My Vision possibly be that I would give to you except that your being is your Father's gift to you just as it is with Me.

You want to know what that means. You want to experience what that means. And that's what this two-step is for. And because it's a two-step, it's a simplicity. But what makes it hard is the dedication you bring to your judgments about each other and your unwillingness to abandon your judgments about your brother so that you might actually open up the door of willingness to say, "Father what's the more of what You're Being right here where I see this one that it is so hard for me to be willing to think well of?"

Depending about how stubbornly you are holding on to your definitions and your beliefs of everything, will be the strenuousness that you encounter in having to release them. If you are strongly determined, then you will have to bring much energy and attention to how you're using your mind so that you can determine within you that you're going to stop employing your mind in that way. And you will find that you will have to come to this determination while you are feeling all of the justification that you have always felt about why it's unreasonable to love this Brother or this Sister or to extend yourself any further than you already have.

Be you content with healing, . .

What is healing? It's what happens when a sudden shift of perception occurs. And a sudden shift of perception always occurs when you've been willing to let go of control and you haven't been defended against spontaneous realization. So, healing is something that happens because you got out of the way, not because you did something with great skill.

Be you content with that. Be content with so little.

Be you content with healing, for Christ's gift you CAN bestow, and your Father's gift you CANNOT lose.

See, here we are, the two-step—the Two Commandments: "Love the Lord your God with your whole being and your Brother as yourself."

Be you content with healing, for Christ's gift . . .

. . . which is the one of extending willingness relative to your Brother to experience a sudden shift of perception. That you can do. And your Father's gift of His Being you, of your deriving your being from Him, you can't lose that. And that's part of the gift that becomes uncovered for your Brother as well. So be satisfied . . .

Be you content . . .

. . . with so little . . .

. . . with healing, for Christ's gift you CAN bestow, and your Father's gift, you CANNOT lose. Offer Christ's gift to everyone and everywhere, for miracles, offered the Son of God through the Holy Spirit, . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . attune you to reality.

Bring you into harmony with it. Why? Because you're not so damned adamant that you're going to do everything your way and that you're going to say to your Father, "But Father I'd rather give the meanings—I'd rather give the definitions—I'd rather be the determiner. And that's what I'm going to be, period."

Offer Christ's gift to everyone and everywhere, . . .

What is Christ's gift? What is My Gift? It's My Vision. Wish to see everything through My Vision, which is My gift to you from God.

Be you content with healing, for Christ's gift . . .

. . . My gift . . .

. . . you CAN bestow, and your Father's gift you CANNOT lose.
Offer [My] Christ's gift to everyone and everywhere, . . .

Be willing to see God in everyone and everything.

. . . for miracles, offered the Son of God through the Holy Spirit
attune you to reality.

Miracles, offered the Son of God by engaging in the two-step, attunes you to reality.

The Holy Spirit knows your part in the redemption, and who are seeking you and where to find them.

The Holy Spirit knows this. There's always divine order to everything. And the minute you choose to let your function be to extend My gift, you will begin to find those who are seeking you showing up. And you will know where to find them. You will be there. Not through skill. Not through expertise. Not through anything you can give yourself credit for. But it will happen. And you will say, "Wow, I never could have planned that in a million years. This is awesome!"

Now listen to this:

The Holy Spirit knows your part in the redemption, and who are seeking you and where to find them.

Listen to this:

Knowledge is far beyond your individual concern.

What's the name of this chapter? From Perception to Knowledge. Oh, but . . .

Knowledge is far beyond your individual concern.

Don't concern yourself with knowledge. It's what you will find yourself experiencing when you let go of control and when you do the two-step. You will find yourself Knowing what God would have you know. And what God would have you Know is the truth that releases you and your Brother from ignorances about time and space; about sin, sickness and death.

Knowledge is far beyond your individual concern.

So knowledge and the gaining of it, is not what this is about.

You who are part of it . . .

. . . knowledge . . .

. . . and all of it . . .

[repeats] You who are part of it and all of it need only realize that it is of the Father, NOT of you.

Whew! "Wow" you say, [chuckles] "You mean, that we've been reading all of this knowledge, all of this complicated truth for how many years have we been reading, just to get to Page 304, and knowledge is far beyond my individual concern? What in the hell has this all been about if it wasn't about knowledge?"

You just don't know how to be grateful do you. Everything has been simplified for you here. Let out a sigh of relief. Everything we have read has led to the point where this could be understood tonight. Or so that you could be understood when you arrived at this part of the book.

Knowledge is far beyond your individual concern. You who are part of it and all of it need only realize that it is of the Father, NOT of you.

Thank God for the two-step, eh? Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul and mind.

Well, if knowledge is of the Father, not of you, as an independent entity, then how important God is to you and how appropriate it is for you to love Him with all of your being. And to find that to be of extreme ultimate value, as you walk in the dark through your day thinking you're in time, when the Holy Spirit would speak to you of timelessness, where the Kingdom of Heaven is un-illuminated to you, but awaits its illumination so that you might be free of your ignorance.

You who are part of it and all of it need only realize that it is of the Father, NOT of you.

It's of the Father and therefore all about you, but you're not the authorizer or the originator or the enactor of it.

Your role...

. . . listen to this:

Your role in the redemption leads you to it by re-establishing its oneness in your minds.

It doesn't say your role in the redemption leads you to great works. It doesn't say that it leads you to high positions where you might sit at the right hand of God while other brothers don't, or while others don't for awhile because they haven't quite gotten it yet, and so you can enjoy the satisfaction of having "gotten there early." [chuckles]

Your role in the redemption leads you to it . . .

. . . knowledge . . .

. . . by re-establishing its oneness in your minds.

How does knowledge get re-established in your mind?

By your doing the two-step, by your saying, "Father what do I need to know here? Father, what is the truth here, no matter what I thought of my Brother, he's worth my taking the time"—what, to help him? No—"He's worth my taking the time to check in with you Father, so that I might be filled with the conscious experience of truth that's so glorious that I can't help but share it with my Brother and the joy of it bless him as I let it bless me by letting it through."

Knowledge gets re-established in you when you abandon self-will, and let yourself be in the peace that lies underneath all of the busyness of self-will.

Your Brother is your savior. Because the only way you're going to experience God directly, is when your Brother is worth enough to you for you to approach God and let God in and through. Thus, Love the Lord thy God with all of your being and your Brother as your self.

Now, tonight I'm not going to even go into loving yourself. I will simply say, that when you're willing to notice the use to which you're putting your mind, and you're willing to call a stop to misuse that you're putting your mind to, even though it gives you great satisfaction to indulge in it because you've got to express yourself honestly. The simple point is, that your Brother must be the reason you turn to God to let God in. Not so that you can be relieved of the distress your Brother is creating for you—not for your benefit, but turning to the Father for your Brother's benefit because you refuse any longer to misuse your mind by insisting upon indulging in judgment and hate.

I'm going to tell you something: Every time you look at a Brother, no matter what you think about him, you are bringing that to Me. When you bring the truth about your Brother to Me, I can pass it on to My Father and everyone is blessed.

But when you bring the untruth to Me, there is nothing I can do. There is nothing for Me to do. I cannot pass that on to the Father as though it were true of your Brother, because I can't pass it on to our Father because it would misrepresent you as well.

"Oh, look at Joe . . . he's really confused today, isn't he Father?"

I cannot join you in the misuse that you are putting your mind to. So remember, no matter what you're thinking about your Brother, you're lifting that up to me to pass on to the Father. And if it is a poor use of your mind, you are presenting for us--Myself and the Father, a misperception of your Brother as well as a characterization of yourself that doesn't represent you truly.

So, as I've said before, you're always going to be thinking something about everyone. You're never in neutral. So remember the two-step.

Before you lift anything up to Me, step back and ask, "What is the truth here, that I might lift up to You, that You may lift on to the Father?"

It's simple. But is it going to be worth actually doing it . . . this evening. . . tomorrow . . . the next day? It's the key.

Just remember, that no matter how justified you feel in not extending love, but rather grouching about and being frustrated by and angry about your Brother, you need to notice the use you're putting your mind to and you need to put a stop to it and that may take some effort.

You may have to take a half-hour, forty-five minutes, an hour before you can get yourself out of it and be released from it.

Decide for yourself whether you're going to be sick or not. Whether you're going to be out of your right Mind and justifying it, or not. And then decide not to. And do it by means of the two-step.

I'm getting repetitious. It's a simple point that seems hard to get. Find a way to appreciate and enjoy and bask in the simplicity here. There is no need to spend several thousand more years in the realm of the Ten Commandments.

I look forward to being with you next week. I love to watch you as sudden shifts of perception occur no matter how tiny they are.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 22nd 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, have we opened a can of worms with the simple two-step?

During this past week have you had the opportunity to hesitate before blurting out your best judgments or what your vast experience has taught you that would undoubtedly be of value to the one you're confronted with.

And if you have managed to hesitate, and ask what needs to be known here, and if you actually have heard what needs to be known and you've shared it, have you had the experience of it not being well received?

And like Moses, did you get mad and throw down the tablets and forget about listening and forget about doing the two-step and forget about caring about your Brother enough to want to know that the resolving answer would be here? And unlike Moses, did you perhaps not go back up on the mountain and do the two-step again because your Brother wasn't worth it?

If so, you have been confronted with the incredible importance of the two-step and you have had a glimpse of what kind of commitment or persistence may need to be brought into play.

Truth, reality, Meaning, have nothing to do with sweet, flowery, spiritual platitudes that you sort of caress your mind with or caress your fellowman with to make yourself feel good when things are still bad. And I cannot support your reading this Course and not getting your hands dirty. I can't support your finding wonderful things to think about while you abandon your Brother because he's been obtuse and it has offended you.

In Boot-Camp, one of the practices to help teamwork develop, is to take a very long telephone pole and twenty or twenty-five men and they lift it up on their shoulders and they have to learn to jog while carrying it. If someone is out of step, he is going up when the telephone pole is coming down on his shoulder. And it is very uncomfortable. And his absence from the teamwork that's needed to have all twenty-five men running smoothly with coordination, is lost.

Now you say, "Okay, I understand that. But you know what? We're not all carrying a telephone pole together. I don't have a telephone pole. Michael doesn't have a telephone pole that he and I are carrying. So, if I don't feel like coordinating with others, if I don't feel like cooperating, if I don't feel like being involved, big deal!"

But here's the good news that you don't want to hear: You're all in this together. And you all need each other so that you might have objects of affection to give your attention to. Because until you have an object of your affection and you persistently express that affection—that intent to be involved, until that dynamic exists, is brought into play—that which is essential to your waking up is absent from your experience.

Earlier this evening, someone here in the group expressed a quotation that goes, "A mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still."

Now, this person wasn't suggesting that that's a reason to stop being affectionate, it's not a reason for throwing down the tablets and storming off and abandoning the two-step. But it suggests a dilemma. "A mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still." It's like, dead-end—dead end! No use in doing the two-step.

But wait a minute. Are you doing the two-step to change someone's mind? No. What you are doing the two-step for is so that you might be undefended enough in your own mind that you're able to be completely relaxed with poise. So that you're able to be with grace and spontaneous balanced responses, and listen for the place where the willingness is in your Brother.

If you say, "He's not willing and he's a very willful person, I am faced with a real challenge here and it's going to be hard work!" You're going to approach your Brother as though he's unyielding, un-yieldable, un-malleable, un-changeable, and your behavior will be a form of rough attack. That won't get you anywhere.

But, you want his mind to change in accordance with his will. So you need to find out where his willingness lies. You need to be willing to stand with your Brother with interest. Not fake interest, not manipulative interest, but real interest. Because until you're willing to stand there with your Brother in an un-defended manner, in other words, with love, you're not going to be able to recognize where his willingness lies. He doesn't know where it is at the moment himself or he would have changed his mind and it wouldn't have been against his will.

Now we could say that you all could be at odds with each other for another millennium. And we could say, "Well we don't have a whole millennium left in which to do this," and sort of pressure you into it by scaring you with a time limit. Well, neither one of those options is valid. But the simple fact is, that this is what you're all faced with. You're all faced with the need to bring yourself within yourself, to a point of caring enough about your Brother that you will take the time it takes to find your Brother's willingness to see the truth, or to see the answer that will resolve his dilemma.

It's going to take conscious, conscientious persistence. Your willingness to be the Presence of Love is going to take conscious, conscientious persistence. And you're going to have to be willing to abandon your willingness to abandon your Brother. You're going to have to abandon your willingness to self-righteously judge your Brother and say he's not worth the time and the effort.

"He's not worth my using my mind well."

Even though you're using your mind poorly, it's going to cost you your peace and your opportunity to wake up.

Your Brother, you will have to remember, is worth every bit of conscious effort you bring into play on his behalf, or on your Sister's behalf. Each one of you is worth every bit of effort I bring to helping you arrive at the point of discovering your willingness to embrace the truth about yourselves and abandon what's causing you pain.

And every single one of you knows that you balk, and you argue, and you withdraw, and you get angry when the help is offered, ..delay...delay...delay. "The suffering isn't so bad, I can put up with it a little bit longer. Don't push me Jesus!"

Well, I can't push you. I cannot change your mind. But, you are worth My persisting in expressing love and sharing the ideas that help you uncover deep within you your willingness, a built-in already existing willingness, to consciously embrace the truth about yourselves and abandon the illusions about yourselves which you have been suffering from.

Again, as you go through this coming week and you're confronted by anyone in any situation, I want you to remind yourself: "This one, this individual is worth my best thoughts. This individual is worth my taking the time to remember, even if it's only intellectually, that they like me, are the Christ—the Son or Daughter of God—the direct Expression of God embodying all that is true about God and is therefore worthy of my utter respect. And so, I'm willing in this moment not to discount them because of how they look or how they're behaving."

Remember, I said last week, that you're never in neutral. You always have some sort of assessment or evaluation or thought or concept about anyone you confront or run into. And whatever that is, you're lifting up to Me to pass on to the Father.

I'm stressing this because as many of you found out during this past week, it can easily and quickly feel as though it's not worth it to do the two-step. And the wish, and even perhaps the willingness to abandon it, has presented itself. And I need to remind you and confirm to you that this is exactly the time not to withdraw.

And like Moses, go back up to the mountain and desire to know of the Father, "What needs to be known here. How can I use my mind in the presence of this one in a manner that will contribute to our mutual benefit; our mutual sudden shift of perception about ourselves even if we're strangers?"

Let's go to the book.

When you have seen your brothers as yourself you will be RELEASED to knowledge, . . .¹

You will be free. You will be in a state of freedom to let knowledge in; to let your intent to be the authorizer, the interpreter, the determiner, to let that be replaced by the infilling of the Holy Spirit—the infilling of your right Mind—the infilling of the Father's Perspective.

When you have seen your brothers as yourself . . .

What does that mean . . . seen your brothers as yourself?

Well, let's get back to basics here. You don't see your Brother as yourself because you think you're an independent entity, born of a sperm and an egg, having grown up in an environment and that all of this is part of an evolutionary process that may or may not have anything to do with God. It certainly isn't divine. It certainly is physical. And then if you are a physical entity in a process of evolution who has had a "God experience," you may think that you are an expression of God that has been created and set on its own—given tools and faculties by this God to apply to life and make something of yourselves as an independent entity—what we've spoken of as the orphan mentality.

Fundamental to this orphan mentality is the premise that you are unique—that you are unlike anything and everything else. You even have finger-prints that no-one else has. That's how unique you are. That's how different you are from your Brother.

Your very mindset says that it is impossible to see your Brothers as yourself because you're not alike. And if you were to see your Brothers as yourself, you would lose your individuality—that you would cease to be different. That that which can think well of itself and convince others to think well of it and become something important—that whole regime of arrogance and egotism, all of that must be abandoned in order to see your Brothers as yourself.

But, by its nature and character, it disallows for that. And so it takes someone like Me to say to you over and over and over again: 'You're not an orphan. And you are not unique and different from each other by virtue of separation. You are all the Presence of Love embodied. Embodied by a First Cause which is Itself, Love. And the Movement of Love that embodies Itself is Creation. And the Movement of Love that you are when you allow It to move, constitutes part of Creation. And so you and your Father are One. And you and your Brother are One. And you are all individuals. But differentness is not the bottom line—is not the determiner of your individuality.'

God infinitely expresses Himself. Love infinitely finds expression. And every expression is Love itself expressed. It's all One. It is all One. But how it can all be One without the infinitude of Creation being lost, is something that you will not have the experience of until you're willing to abandon the orphanage, until you're willing to abandon orphanhood and the pride you get from being an orphan and making a success out of yourself.

So, . . .

when you have seen your brothers as yourself . . .

. . . when you allow that to happen, "No, can't go any further than that" . . .

When you have seen your brothers as yourself . . .

. . . when you have allowed that to happen, what have you done? You've done the only thing that will allow you to have that experience—you've done the two-step. You have backed off from your habitual responses, your educated responses, your mutually agreed upon responses to a situation or an individual, and you have said, "Father what do I need to know here? What is the truth here?" And then you have been silent and you have been an inviting emptiness, if I may put it that way. You've been the presence of curiosity which is an inviting emptiness isn't it. You've desired to be filled with knowledge, with knowing, with the Father's Perspective.

And when that happens, you have an experience of awareness that embraces your Brother in a way that reveals to you his utter divinity and his deserving of your respect. In other words, what is respectable about him is clearly available to you whereas a moment before, he didn't deserve your respect. And what causes your respect to be due to him is something incredibly wonderful. It's that the Source of him is God, just as the Source of you is God and you're having this joint realization in that moment in which he's no better than you or worse than you, and you're no better or worse than him. But you are equal in the Oneness of your nature and what your nature is derived from.

And when that kind of experience happens, both of you feel it and healing occurs—correction of whatever was disturbing transpires.

Now this is what you should be experiencing all the time. This is what you should be experiencing multiple times during the week.

Now you can let your ego take charge here and say, "Well, then you must be doing something wrong. What is there in you that doesn't allow this to happen?" It puts you on the defensive and creates a sense of guilt in you just because you happened to hear some really good news. The good news was, you should be having these experiences multiple times every week.

I'm telling you that you should be having them so that you will begin to have an expectation of them happening because that's what opens the door.

If you don't think it can happen, then it won't happen. Because your definiteness constitutes a willfulness that fits the quotation: "A mind that's changed against its will is of the same opinion still." So if you're so sure it will not happen, your mind will not be changed and you will not see it happen, even though it's sitting there waiting to happen for you.

And so I say, it should be happening multiple times every week. It should not be an uncommon occurrence for you. And I say it to peak your curiosity because you have the capacity to hear what I'm saying and actually let it in and actually have the experience this coming week. And if you don't, you still have the capacity. And I will be happy to tell you again and again and again without impatience, because there simply is no justification for you to continue not to experience it. And because there is no justification for you not to experience it, there's no reason for Me not to continue to share the truth with you—to share a Perspective that's different from the mindset you're currently employing that keeps you from seeing it happening.

There are people who say: "Oh, well, the Course isn't really about miracles, like walking on water! You, know, a miracle is a sudden shift of perception. So, you know, if there's not healing, don't worry about it. If you're having these wonderful shifts of perception and they are giving you a great lift and a high, that's what it's about." No it's not.

A sudden shift of perception is one in which—one that is a miracle—is one in which the Presence of God registers with you surprisingly when you weren't expecting it, or when you weren't trying to make it happen but you were willing to let go of control enough to let something you weren't in charge of, in.

When you have seen your brothers as yourself . . .

. . . from doing the two-step . . .

. . . you will be RELEASED to knowledge.

What that means is you will be released from the bondage you were suffering from as a result of your own self-created definitions about how everything worked. And when you abandon your mindset, and you employ curiosity to know more than you presently know, you're suddenly released from the bondage of your thought-structures and the recognition of truth can infill you as I've just described. Knowing the truth will suddenly be your illumined experience. So . . .

When you have seen your brothers as yourself you will be RELEASED to knowledge, . .

. . . the experience of Knowing . . .

. . . having learned to free yourself of Him Who knows of freedom.

Who is Him Who knows of freedom that you have learned from? God.

You can ask the Holy Spirit to illumine your mind with the truth, but what the Holy Spirit will do in response to that, is reveal to you the Father's Perspective. And in the end you will have learned of the Father.

When you have seen your brothers as yourself you will be RELEASED to knowledge, having learned to free yourself of Him Who knows of freedom. Unite with me under the holy banner of His teaching, . .

. . . the Father's teaching . . .

. . . and as we grow in strength the power of God's Son will move in us, . .

Why will the power of God's Son move in us? Because we won't be denying Who we Are. You and I will not be denying Who we Are. We will be acknowledging that we are not the source of our existence, that we are the effect or offspring of Something Else—that we have a Father. And the moment you abandon the orphan viewpoint, the fact that you are the Son or Daughter of God—that you are the offspring of a Source other than yourself—your Sonship and God's Fatherhood become real to you.

Unite with me . . .

. . . which is what you're doing when you say, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision, which is Your gift to me from God."

Unite with me . . .

. . . in that way . .

. . . under the holy banner of His teaching, . .

. . . which means under the holy banner of how things really work.

. . . under the holy banner of His teaching, and as we grow in strength . . .

. . . or unity, conscious joining, . .

. . . the power of God's son will move in us, and we will . . .

. . . what? . .

. . . leave no-one untouched . . .

. . . so, when you do the two-step and you get a real raunchy response, you won't run away. You will persist and . . .

. . . the power of God's Son will move in us, and we will leave no-one untouched and no-one left alone.

This is very important. No one will be left alone. It cannot be part of your mindset that as you do the two-step, you might end up leaving a few people alone because you will do the two-step with the easy people. And somebody else will catch the ones you miss? No. Your wholeness will not be experienced by you until not one Brother is left outside of it.

Now, don't take what I'm saying to mean that immediately you're to go out and somehow consciously embrace everyone—every Brother, every Sister. That will be the end result. That will be the finale, if you will. But, you be willing to do this with the people in your experience.

The people in your experience are the ones the Holy Spirit has brought to you. But understand that you're not going to slip by on the fast-track and just do this with the essential people. Be willing from the start here, to not let anyone slip out of your site without your Blessing. Don't let anyone slip by you without your Blessing.

Unite with me . . .

. . . break your isolation . . .

. . . under the holy banner of His teaching, and as we grow in strength, . .

. . . conscious unity . . .

. . . the power of God's Son will move in us, and we will leave no-one untouched and no-one left alone.

And that means that you will have dared to take the time to find the place in each one of them where the willingness to see the truth existed—and helped uncover it—so that they could gladly embrace it and easily embrace it. Because where their willingness is, for embracing it, is where it's easy to embrace it.

And suddenly time will be over, and we will all unite in the eternity of God the Father. The holy light you saw outside yourself, in every miracle you offered to your brothers, will be RETURNED to you.

Now, when you do this two-step, when you take the time with your Brother to look beyond your spontaneous judgments and opinions, to see what God is Being there, and you have this illumination that embraces you and your Brother and healing occurs, it's still as though a miracle happened with your Brother. It's still as though something happened "out there" and the total unity of it will not always be felt. And . . .

. . . the holy light you saw outside yourself, in every miracle you offered to your brothers, will . . .

. . . in the end . . .

. . . be RETURNED to you. And KNOWING that the light is IN you, your creations will be there with you, as you are in your Father.

I'm going to say it this way: Every healing that you're a participant in, every healing of a Brother or a father or a daughter or a spouse, is an event that fits under the heading of Creation. Every expression of Love that is embodied, manifest, consciously experienced, is eternal and is present for all to experience forever. It becomes your expression of Love embodied as part of Creation forever. This is important.

So the willingness to persist on behalf of your Brother is important. Because, for lack of better words, the successful embodiment of Love that arose out of your willingness to persist, becomes an aspect of Creation Itself.

The grocery store clerk who's blessed by you, becomes together with you, a movement of love that will forever be experienceable, because it was part of the Movement of Creation. There is no place you can be or no experience you can have in your day that is mundane or inconsequential, or not worth embracing with your maximal curiosity to see God.

As miracles in this world join you to your brothers, so do your creations establish your fatherhood in Heaven.

No. Fatherhood here does not have a capital 'F'. The Movement of Creation, called God Be-ing, is embodied in every single one of you. And your every expression of love embodied, demonstrates your fatherhood—your place you might say, in the Movement of Creation.

You are not a piss-ant mortal, a nothing—an imagination that pops up and then disappears. You are the Sons and Daughters of God and what God is, is embodied in you. You are not God. But God is all there is to you.

YOU are the witnesses to the Fatherhood of God, . .

. . . and that has a capital 'F' . What does that mean?

YOU are the witnesses to the Fatherhood of God, . .

Well, all children are witnesses to the fatherhood of their father and mother. You are the witnesses to that which has Sourced you—That which is Be-ing you.

YOU are the witnesses to the Fatherhood of God, and He has given you the power to create the witnesses to your fatherhood in Heaven.

What are the witnesses to your fatherhood? They are the uncovering of God—the illuminating of the Presence of God—where it seems to be covered up as a result of your being willing to do the two-step and even go back up on the mountain two or three, or twenty or forty or a thousand times if necessary, because of persistence of your love and your insistence that your Brother is worth your using your mind well.

The miracle which God created is perfect, . .

[addresses each one in the room] You are the miracle of God...And your father is the miracle of God...And you are the miracle of God...you...And you, Christopher, are the miracle of God.

The wonder, the maximal wonder of what God is, that is what you are even though you are not consciously embracing it yet.

The miracle which God created is perfect, . .

You all are perfect!

. . . as are the miracles which YOU created in His Name.

The embodiments of love which you have facilitated.

They need no healing nor do you when you know THEM.

Yet, in this world your perfection is unwitnessed.

You generally don't witness it for yourself and you, for certain, do not witness for your Brothers. Not as a general rule. Very few in your experience can be assigned those qualities.

Yet, in this world your perfection is unwitnessed. God knows it . .

. . . God witnesses to it and you are the witnesses . . .

God knows it but YOU do not, and so you do not share His witness to it.

See, there's no camaraderie, there's no joining with God since you said, "But Father, I'd rather do it myself," and you got a divorce from your Father. You do not employ an "us" mentality. Like Father like Son. I am my Father's Son, I am my Father's Daughter. I did not create myself. I exist because Something has created me and I acknowledge that I am created.

I bear witness to My father by claiming to be His Son, instead of claiming to be an orphan who's having a helluva good time overcoming the odds and winning over the negativities that are part and parcel of existence.

Again . . .

God knows it . . .

. . . your perfection . . .

. . . but YOU do not, and so you do not share His witness to it. Nor do you witness unto Him, . .

. . . you don't claim Him to be your Father. You don't claim to be nothing without Him. You don't claim and say, "If you have seen me, you have seen the Father." No. You don't say that.

[Raj did not read... "for reality is witnessed to as one"]

God waits your witness to His Son and to Himself.

God waits your witness to your Sonship and His Fatherhood.

The miracles you do on earth are lifted up to Heaven and to Him. They witness to what you do not know, and as they reach the gates of Heaven God will open them. For never would He leave His own beloved Son outside them and beyond Himself.

Pretty grand words. But the simplicity of it is, that you exist and you did not create yourselves and you have a capacity to use your mind well, or to use your mind poorly.

Right now you're all caught in an eddy of the poor use of the mind. But it's not your birthright to be caught there or to be experiencing that.

And there is a way for you to get out of that. There is a way for you to use your mind well. And the way, as we've been reading, to use your mind well, is to be willing to do the two-step. To stop before your knee-jerk responses and say, "Entirely separate and apart from my conditioned responses, what is the truth here Father?" Use that word, "Father." Because when you do that you're acknowledging your Sonship and you're acknowledging a joining.

"What is the truth here Father? Because I care enough about my fellowman to relieve him of his suffering and even if he is holding on to it mightily and does not want to hear how he can be relieved of it, help me find the willingness in him. Help me address him in a way that touches the willingness so that he can abandon the self-imposed incarceration that he is binding himself with unnecessarily."

And as you do that, the dominoes will begin to fall. You will begin to see healings during the week. You will be able to talk to each other about it, but you won't be able to say how you did it. You will just be able to share how amazing it was. And you will begin to be willing to allow things to happen in your experience that you know you've participated in but which you were not the author of. And that will be part of the shift of perception that is called, waking up.

Now this week, I do not want you to read ahead to the next section. I want you to re-read what we've been reading for the last couple of weeks. And I want you to abide with what I've been saying. And as difficult as it might be for you to persist in doing the two-step, when you are met with an obtuse response, please understand that that is exactly when the two-step must be employed again.

Moses went back up on the mountain and listened again and shared and released a people from bondage. It was world-changing. It's no small thing for each of you to listen, to do this two-step: and to do it a second, a third, and a fourth time if necessary.

I love you very much—all of you. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 6th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

This is a significantly important chapter that we're reading right now. Well, let's put it this way, this chapter is dealing with a significantly important point relative to Awakening—relative to the experience of Salvation. It is disclosing, for lack of better words, the mechanism of Awakening—taking it out of the realm of theory that so many would love to keep it in.

The mechanism of Awakening is to care enough about your Brother, and I mean by that, actual involvement. Not just association, like being with your Brother in a theatre, but actual involvement. Actual involvement, where by means of the involvement, growth occurs, change occurs, blessing occurs.

The mechanism could be described as: Looking into your Brother's eyes or Sister's eyes, and remembering God. The two-step that we've been talking about has been a matter of stopping yourself before you blurt out your best judgments and stepping back and inquiring of God, "What is the truth here? What do I need to know that will address whatever the problem is, in a resolving way, not in an aggravating way so that my Brother is blessed?"

For all of the thousands of words that are in this book, it all boils down to one thing. One thing: Your Brother is your salvation.

So if you want to say you're a student of the Course, or if you want to say that you are in the process of Awakening, that you are, let us say, applying yourselves in the direction of Awakening, you must mean that you have arrived at a point where your Brother becomes your main—not concern—but point of interest—focus of attention: Object of your affection, not just intellectual interest, but affection—Love.

It means that no matter how obtuse or difficult or unpleasant a Brother is being, you have arrived at a point where you are refusing to react to the behavior. And you are insisting upon homing in on what has to be the truth about your Brother in order for there to be anything there to behave badly or well. Something real has to be there to behave poorly or well. And the something that is real, that is there, is the Presence of God Be-ing your Brother.

This is the nitty gritty. This is the meat and potatoes of it all.

And if you intelligently stop to think about it, you'll realize that the only way things are going to change on your planet, is going to come from an expression of love and involvement with your Brothers globally that honors those Brothers and Sisters; even honoring them beyond their present awareness or concept of themselves, so that through involvement with them, change can occur. Why? Not because of a show of force, not because of a stronger will, but because someone—many—everyone has decided to care enough about your Brothers to find out what means something to them. To find out where their willingness to embrace the reasonable is. To find out where in them their willingness to express love rather than defense lies, so that you can join them there.

But this requires involvement. Involvement of a new kind. Involvement that has as its intent and goal, peace. And you must dare, everyone must dare to persist on behalf of peace right in the face of fear; fear that is telling your global neighbors to be afraid of you, or to be afraid of each other, and to stay in a high state of defense.

Now, you all know that big things come often from small beginnings. And so, what we're talking about, that you can see the truth of, globally, is something that can be initiated right in your day—right with the people you are dealing with—right with the people you can't get away from, whether they're the people who you would choose to be your savior or not.

Now, obviously, if what I have described is the proper use of relationships, the proper purpose for relationships, and if indeed peace, world peace, Awakening, healing, is the inevitable result of that, then you are using relationships for another purpose at the moment.

And some of you in the last two weeks have become more familiar with what you use relationships for, as you have tried to practice the two-step. And as you have remembered, occasionally, that to find the place in you that can love your Brother in spite of his behavior, is not always something easy to do, and it also isn't always something you want to do. And if you don't want to do it, then you are consciously using your relationships for a purpose other than Awakening. And the only other purpose or result that can be had, is to be locked into orphanhood; to be locked into strife, sin, sickness, death, war, hate, jealousy.

Now, the difference between reality and unreality is only that, whether you call it reality or you call unreality, it is Reality itself experienced 180 degrees out of sync. It's either Reality used properly, or it's reality used improperly. It's either Reality known for what it truly is, or perceived to be what it isn't.

But remember, it's always Reality that you're dealing with—that you're confronted with. It's always the Kingdom of Heaven that is present being misinterpreted, misunderstood, or perceived and Known truly.

Now, to use a relationship appropriately in order to Wake up, you find the place in you that can care about your Brother and extend to him the Father's Perspective that you have desired to know before you open your mouth—before you engage.

And so, it is a matter of making a Gift. It's a matter of extending Something to your Brothers, or Sisters, your fellowman.

But, when a relationship is used improperly from an orphan standpoint, it's always to get something. And at the bottom line, it is to get safety. It is to get security. Because being an orphan, is itself a state of insecurity. It's a state of having no birthright. It's a state of lack.

Now, what is it you want to get from your Brothers and Sisters as an orphan? You want obedience. You want cooperation. You want them not to behave in a way that is threatening to you.

And, let me ask you this: What is the mechanism by which you accomplish that kind of control? It's guilt. Think about it. When you are confronted by somebody who is making you upset, it's because in one way or another, they first of all, have suggested by their behavior that you can't be in control of the situation. You are out of control and you can't get control because you don't really have that kind of power. And that makes you feel at a loss. And it's unfair that that one has put you at a loss. So that all you can do is feel angry and self-righteous.

They are guilty of mistreating you. And so you retaliate. You don't do the two-step. And you project out onto them by your words, the things that make them guilty. So that you might convince them that they are so guilty that they must therefore, stop their behavior that's making you feel bad and guilty. Guilty for not being able to handle the situation.

And you together, do a dance of guilt of laying guilt trips on each other. Why? So that you can arrive at a point where you think you can relax and not feel frightened. Not feel potentially at a real loss because of their behavior. And that's war. But it's also the bottom line fundamental dynamic of the human condition—the state of orphanhood.

You see, when you're in your Right Mind, when you do the two-step and step back and inquire what truly needs to be known here that will bless, you are making your Brother your savior one-hundred eighty degrees out of sync. When your Brother is threatening you and making you feel vulnerable, you do the same thing. You turn your Brother into your savior. You say, "You are responsible for my being well. You are responsible for seeing to it that I'm not uncomfortable. Else, [chuckles] you'll be the death of me yet!"

See. There's the dig. There's the guilt trip. But it is an expression of power that lacks intelligence. It is an attempt to leverage your Brother's behavior into behavior that will secure your peace of mind. The only thing is, that you can't get peace of mind from a fundamental premise that you are an orphan. And so it will never work.

So let me put it this way, we're not talking about learning anything new. You already have turned your Brother into your savior. You have said, "If you will behave in this way and this way and this way, I will be able to be happy."

Your Brother and his or her behavior is your salvation.

The lot of the orphan is a life of constant coercion. Coercion that you are bringing into play against others, and that others are bringing into play against you.

But what we're talking about in terms of moving from perception to knowledge, is an extension of love to your Brother because you care enough to want to know what the truth is about your Brother even if he may not be aware of it at the moment and is suffering from his ignorance. And you want to extend it to him so that he might be relieved by the truth. And what makes it your salvation to love him that much, is that what you extend to him you get to keep.

And all there is in it is love. No fear. All there is, is the acknowledgement of already existing perfection, not coercion to bring about a concept of order that isn't really freedom.

So what we're talking about here and uncovering, is again, the simplicity of the Course and the simplicity of Awakening.

You're all involved with each other already. You're just involved with each other in ways that reek havoc. And what we're doing is learning how to relate to each other in ways that bring peace.

Now let's go into the book.

THE SHADOW OF GUILT¹

Guilt remains the only thing that hides the Father, for guilt is the attack upon His Son.

Guilt remains the only thing that hides the Father. Well you say, "I don't really go through my day feeling guilty." Some of you do go through your day feeling guilty and you say it's for no good reason and you wish to be relieved of this constant feeling of guilt. But for the most part, most of you say, "I don't feel guilty."

But the fact is, that as long as you employ guilt in your relationships with each other in order to effect changes, you value guilt and it remains the only thing that hides the Father from you.

. . . for guilt is the attack upon His Son.

What does an attack cause? It causes defense. One who is attacked recoils, regroupes, and comes back with a strong defense. And if that defense isn't a two-step, which most of you aren't going to encounter when you're the attacker, then all you are doing is confirming your misperception of reality and you are locking yourself into it.

The guilty ALWAYS condemn, . .

. . . hm-m...well, they do. Because whatever measuring sticks you use for yourself in your life and your behavior, you do apply to others. And if you are dishonest, you do expect others to be and you guard yourself against it. And if you consider yourself to be honest and upstanding, you generally expect that to be what will confront you in your fellow man.

So, those who value guilt will always utilize it. That's what that means:

The guilty ALWAYS condemn, and having done so they WILL condemn, linking the future to the past . . .

. . . having done so in the past, they will in the future, condemn.

. . . linking the future to the past as is the ego's law. Fidelity unto this law lets no light in, for it DEMANDS fidelity to darkness and FORBIDS awakening.

Not really as ultimate and bad as it sounds. It's really very simple. If you choose to practice and employ guilt, you will by virtue of not using your Brother as your salvation—as an object of your affection, you will deny yourself the experience of recognizing God there, remembering God there when you look into his eyes.

So . . .

Fidelity unto this law . . .

. . . the practice of guilt . . .

. . . lets no light in, for it DEMANDS fidelity to darkness and FORBIDS awakening. The ego's laws are strict, and breaches are severely punished. Therefore give no obedience to its laws, for they are laws of punishment.

That sort of sounds impossible:

The ego's laws are strict, and breaches are severely punished. Therefore . . .

. . . [chuckles] it sounds like it's saying: "Therefore, be stupid and give no obedience to its laws even though its breaches will be severely punished for they are laws of punishment.

Here's where it takes courage and strength. Because the ego's laws are so much tinkling brass—bullshit—so much meaningless folderol! And so therefore, when you dare to give no obedience to its laws, for they are laws of punishment and are not consistent with what you value, the punishment will not be forthcoming. But you have to dare to have the strength to violate the insinuation that the ego puts forth that you will indeed suffer if you breach its laws.

Therefore give no obedience to its laws, for they are laws of punishment. And those who follow them believe that they are guilty and so they MUST condemn.

Now listen:

Between the future and the past the laws of God must intervene, if you would free yourselves.

This is key:

Between the future and the past the laws of God must intervene, . .

Remember, what you think of as a timeline—an unbroken timeline—from the past to the future, is not an unbroken line. Where the present is, there is a gap: It is what we have referred to as “The little gap.” But it is the place where the past never bridges into the future. And it is in that gap, which is the place of silence within you, it is the place you go to when you do the two-step and say, “Father what needs to be known here?” It’s the place of the Altar within you—the holiness of you—that plays no part in memory or in imagination; memory being the past, imagination being the future. It is that which exists in reality actually.

Between the future and the past the laws of God must intervene, if you would free yourselves.

So, that could have been sort of mysterious and esoteric:

Between the future and the past . . .

. . . hm-m...but it’s simpler than that, it’s between memory and imagination; that in the silence and the peace of your being, where you go when you meditate, or where you go when you ask truly of the Holy Spirit or the Father, “What is the truth here?” and you stay in the silence and listen, ready to be infilled with the experience of Knowing—of knowledge.

Atonement stands between them, . .

. . . the future and the past . . .

. . . like a lamp that shines so brightly that the chain of darkness in which you bound yourselves will disappear.

The experience of insanity, the experience of misunderstanding, the experience of misperceiving reality, is something going on in you. And so it is there in you where the misperception is covering up the conscious experience of reality, that correction will occur.

But the interesting thing about it is, that for correction to occur, you must engage in one thing only: You must dare to become involved with each other for purposes of healing. Not because your Brother is in such great need of healing, but because your Brother really isn't an orphan and neither are you. And neither one of you should be experiencing the effects of having no source when it's impossible for you to exist without a Source and therefore you aren't existing without a Source. And therefore, at this moment, you are exactly what God is Be-ing right there where you are, nothing more and nothing less.

And therefore, in spite of the way you behave when you're confused and in spite of the way your Brother behaves when he is confused or afraid, he deserves your persisting in wanting to see the truth there. In wanting to remember and see God there.

Now, many of you in the last two weeks may have said, "Well, I did...I did reach out, I listened, I did the two-step, I extended the truth that clearly would have been relieving. And it was not received. It really pissed everyone off!"

Now, as I said last week, that is no reason for, like Moses, throwing down the tablets and unlike Moses, walking off and abandoning your Brother. You know, when you're learning how to ride a bicycle, how many times do you fall down? And how many times do you pick the bike up and climb back on and you persist?

But hey, you say, "Well, Raj said do the two-step with my Brother and persist with him. And I've done it...and I've done it...and I've done it over the last two weeks, and I've gotten nowhere—I must be doing something wrong."

Ah-h...do you hear that? What is that G-U-I-L-T, guilt? "I must be doing something wrong! It's my fault. I am flawed, I am faulty. I must pay for it by experiencing no correction in my world, by not having played a constructive part in correction and healing here. I [chuckles] don't know how to do it so I'm not going back up that mountain again to listen again!"

And that's exactly when you have to go back up. Just like that's exactly when you have to get back on the bicycle. Why? Why do you get back on the bicycle? Because, that being on the bicycle is where the opportunity to get the feel for riding the bicycle can occur. Because that's where the learning can happen. And suddenly, you don't fall down again. You got it! You know. You know how to do it.

It's at those moments when you feel like throwing the tablets down. It's at those moments when you feel like giving up because your world is telling you that it's no use, it's no use at all, it's at that moment that you need to acknowledge who is going to be the determiner here. Is the determiner going to be your world? Is the determiner going to be a material body that isn't healing? Is the determiner going to be anything "out there?" No. Because nothing "out there" has ever been determining anything. Always, you in your mind, have been determining everything.

Moses came down from the mountain. He surveyed the partying and the drinking and the worshipping of golden calves and he determined within himself that this was intolerable—unacceptable—and that their behavior was unworthy of the divine event that he had been participating in on their behalf.

Is that what was happening? Or is that just what he determined was happening which offended his sensibilities and made him angry. God, it made a fool out of him didn't it? I mean, here he was, and you can picture Charlton Heston if you want, coming down with those tablets in his arms in grand robes having performed a holy function and look, what a lack of respect, what little faith. "Don't they know me? Don't they know what I'm really about?"

He was rendered powerless from his mental attitude and stance. He was rendered ineffective—meaningless, when he knew, [chuckling] he knew beyond a doubt that something with Meaning was occurring in the delivery of these Commandments and his participation in it.

And so he determined that their behavior proved that he was flawed. And that obviously, he was failing. Whew!

Now he could have, as I did at the Crucifixion, said, Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.² That could have been his determination just as easily as the negative one he defined and acted upon and believed. He could have said, Father, forgiven them for they know not what they do. And he could have begun speaking to them, sharing the truth, finding the place of willingness in them which was there because it took that kind of willingness to leave Egypt as a people. And it took that kind of faith to cross the water on dry land.

The willingness was there but they had lost sight of it. He could have stayed there and talked. And talked in a way that found the willingness and reestablished it in their awareness so that they said, "Yes...yes! Wow, I really got off the beam there but it doesn't make any difference because the truth is true. And what you're saying, I know is relevant to my safety and wellbeing and proves the integrity of my being because I have a Father, God, and I wish to be his Son and follow His directions."

So, you must be alert. Because you are the determiner in all cases. You either determine for what is true or you determine for what is false. And that's why you must remember to do the two-step so that you might be reminded of what is true when your habit of thinking causes you to spontaneously move down unconstructive paths. And, you can't find a more worthy object of your affection for doing this than your Brother.

And this is what it's about. This is the simplicity of it. And again, the thing that causes you not to wake up and blocks you from waking up, is the value you place on guilt. Guilt that you use to manipulate and control your Brothers and Sisters and guilt that you lay on yourself for no intelligent reason whatsoever.

Continuing . . .

Release from guilt is the ego's whole undoing.

Here's a motto for you:

MAKE NO-ONE FEARFUL . . .

Let that be your motto for this coming week: MAKE NO-ONE FEARFUL.

That means that when you are inclined to curse somebody out, when you're inclined to yell at them, and call their very existence into question, don't do it! Make no-one fearful. Do not do anything that will cause another to be afraid.

. . . for his guilt is yours, and by obeying the ego's harsh commandments you bring its condemnation of yourself, and you will not escape the punishment it offers those who obey it. The ego rewards fidelity to it with pain, for faith in it IS pain.

You see, faith in the ego is or constitutes the experience of pain. But you don't recognize that the pain you're experiencing is because of the determination you are engaging in. You think that it is something "out there" separate and apart from you.

Moses experienced pain—great pain. Remember, he had come down off of the mountain after having a "God" experience. And then he was confronted with the faithless that the contrast hurt. But is it because someone holy came down the mountain and was confronted by faithless followers? Or did Moses come down the mountain and create a definition of what he saw and then suffered from the definition he made that he chose to believe?

This is important. Because you're suffering from determinations that you have made in your mind. And because you are suffering from a determination you have made in your mind, you can end the pain and suffering by doing something different in your mind.

The ego rewards fidelity to it with pain, for faith in it IS pain. And faith can be rewarded only in terms of the belief in which the faith was placed. Faith MAKES the power of belief, and where it is invested determines its reward.

So, if you invest faith in guilt, both for yourself and for others, that's where you've invested it. And your investment will determine its reward. Simple. Mechanical. There's no evil force involved. There's no evil intelligence affecting you. You're just simply doing something stupid and experiencing the stupidity of it. And you can do something intelligent and experience the intelligence of it. That's all.

For faith is ALWAYS given what is treasured, and what is treasured IS returned to you.

If what was treasured was, Father, forgive them for they know not what they do and then love proceeded to be extended, and the illumination of the God experience that he had was shared with those who were really hungry for it, which was what was causing them to, in their panic, reach for a golden calf and alcohol and other things. They were ripe. And if he had made that determination, [chuckles] he would not have had to make a second trip. And those whom he was leading would not have had to wait as long for their relief.

The world can give you only what you gave it, for being nothing but your own projection, it HAS no meaning apart from what you found in it and placed your faith in.

Now, we could be as easily speaking about your Brother. Your Brother can give you only what you give him. For being nothing but your own projection, he has no meaning apart from what you found in him and placed your faith in.

Be faithful unto darkness . . .

. . . be faithful unto his orphanhood . . .

. . . and you will NOT see, because your faith will be rewarded as you GAVE it. You will accept your treasure, and if you place your faith in the past the future WILL be like it. Whatever you hold as dear you think is YOURS.

You know what? You're all here to be something far more than orphans. And you're all here to be experiencing each other as what you Are. Not as, shall I say, second class citizens that orphans are.

Whatever you hold as dear you think is YOURS. The power of your VALUING will make it so.

That's why you do the two-step, so that you have a moment to allow a re-evaluation to occur in the gap between memory and imagination in you.

Atonement . . .

. . . Waking up . . .

. . . brings a re-evaluation of everything you cherish, for it is the means by which the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your Right Mind . . .

. . . can separate the false and the true, which you have accepted into your minds WITHOUT DISTINCTION.

As an orphan you are governed by habit. And you can determine things correctly and you can determine things incorrectly. And you can do them one after the other or sometimes simultaneously. And you can behave as though you are divided against yourself; split and confused, if you want. And you can have the results of that.

But, if you do make distinctions and if you do determine things correctly by not coming from knee-jerk reactions, but instead you do the two-step, your life will be transformed and so will your Brother's. And so will the world's.

Atonement brings a re-evaluation of everything you cherish, . .

. . . everything! You will be faced with the opportunity to see everything new. Not slimed over and caked under definitions that you have applied and reapplied and applied and reapplied over the last thirty years out of habit.

Atonement brings a re-evaluation of everything you cherish, for it is the means by which the Holy Spirit can separate the false and the true, which you have accepted into your minds WITHOUT DISTINCTION. Therefore, YOU cannot value one without the other, and guilt has become as true FOR YOU as innocence.

Isn't it wonderful? That's exactly one of the things that you will find Atonement brings a re-evaluation of, so that you will find that guilt and innocence cannot both be true about you: only innocence.

You do not believe the Son of God . . .

... whether it's you or your Brother.

You do not believe the Son of God is guiltless because you see the past and see HIM not.

What is the past? The past is memory. It's not a physical thing. The past is memory.

You do not believe the Son of God is guiltless because you see the past . . .

... you see your memory of him . . .

. . . and see HIM not. When you condemn a brother, you are saying, "I who was guilty choose to REMAIN so."

Because what you give, you get to keep. And if you love guilt and employ it, that is what will be your experience for yourself.

You have . . .

... in so doing . . .

. . . denied HIS freedom, and by so doing you have denied the witness unto YOURS. You . . .

... as Moses . . .

. . . could as easily have FREED him from the past, and lifted from his mind the cloud of guilt that binds him to it.

You could as easily have done that:

Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.

"Father, forgive him for he knows not what he does. Father, forgive her for she knows not what she does. Father, help me to see what is true about her that makes it impossible for her to be what she thinks she is and impossible for me to see her otherwise than as she truly is so that I may be able to be with her in a way that finds the place of willingness in her that will be able to acknowledge the truth about her and we might join together in the acknowledgement and appreciation of what is true about her and about me."

Well, a lot of words. It could be. We could determine it to be a lot of words, or, it's a Movement of uncovering—a Movement of Revelation occurring in everyone who's listening. And that is what it is. And in the uncovering, it's clearer to you all that you're something more than an orphan. And that your function is to engage in something more or different from guilt, self-applied or applied to others. And that in fact, the something else that's there for you to do, than to employ guilt, is something that will actually, for lack of better words, lift a people out of bondage. Lift mankind who's dreaming dreams out of his dreams.

It could've been said, Moses was just a shepherd. And you're just an accountant, or you're just a gardener, or you're just a senior citizen.

No. You're more than that. And you're engaging in what we're talking about contributes to the lifting of a people out of bondage; out of war; out of defense; out of lack; out of sin, sickness and death.

But if there's anything that should be clear to you now, it is that clear, correct thinking isn't going to do it. Clear, correct thinking in the privacy of your mind in your living room or on a mountain top, is not going to do anything. Involvement with your Brothers is.

Involvement with your Brothers, with the intent to find the place of willingness within them to see the truth that they can gladly lay hold of. That is what it's about. And you make that Gift to them by indulging in the two-step and in making that Gift to them, you receive it too. But not until then.

And if you say, "Well I've tried and I've tried and I've tried and it hasn't worked . ." Hey, get on the bicycle again. It doesn't matter that it hasn't worked. Nothing out there is making it not work. But you can say, "Oh boy, I'm not going to try again because I'm flawed, or I'm not going to try again because it's really not worth learning how to ride a bike, or I'm not going to do it again because so-in-so is such a bastard and he'll never change!"

Hey, you can say any of those things if you want. But remember, it isn't what you're saying that's true. Hell yes, it's worth learning to ride a bike and Hell yes, it's worth persisting with your Brother. So, get on the bike again. Do the two-step again. Nothing else will introduce the Atonement into your experience.

God has not given you something impossible to do and therefore, the experience of the Atonement is something available to you. God did not mean for it to be or make it difficult to accomplish. Therefore you can experience it without struggle. So be careful what you determine things to be. Be careful that you don't determine for yourself that it's going to be hard. If God didn't set it up that way, it can never become true.

I love you. And I look forward to being with you all next week.

You are all mightily support in your experience of the Atonement. Don't go through this week feeling that you're doing it all by yourself. Let the experience of being actively loved in. Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 14th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

There's a story, whether it's true or not, the meaning is valuable. It's a story about a woman who worked on an Indian Reservation and had worked there for a number of years—working with the women of the Reservation. And the time came that it was time for her to leave and go elsewhere. And on the day of her last visit, one of the Indian women came up to her, looked her squarely in the face, her eyes filled up with tears, and she said to the woman who was leaving, "I want to thank you so much."

And the woman who was leaving, in thinking back over the time she had been there, realized that she really had never interacted very much with this woman except in the most casual of ways. And she leaned over and said, "What for?" And the Indian woman said, "Because whenever I'm with you, it's easy to like myself."

You know what the purpose of the two-step is? To get you into the place where those who are with you easily find it possible for them to like themselves.

I'm backing up a sentence or two from where we're starting tonight:

¹When you condemn a brother, you are saying, "I who was guilty choose to REMAIN so."

And remember, that I brought out that you may not feel guilty, but if you are willing to employ guilt in your relationship with others, you are valuing guilt.

And to whatever degree you employ guilt over and against others, you employ it over and against yourself. There's no choice to it. You are not able to be so split that you can think well of yourself and think poorly of your Brothers. And you will hold your Brothers and Sisters to the same standards you hold yourself.

So . . .

When you condemn a brother, you are saying, "I who was guilty, . .

I, who value guilt in any way, . .

. . . choose to REMAIN . . .

. . . that way . . .

. . . choose to REMAIN so." You have denied HIS freedom, and by so doing you have denied the witness unto YOURS.

. . . The witness unto yours. The witness unto yours would be the Brother that you didn't make guilty, the Brother who found it possible to like himself better and more easily when he was simply around you.

You could as easily have FREED him from the past, and lifted from his mind the cloud of guilt that binds him to it. And in HIS freedom would have been your OWN.

Now this is a very simple principle. What you give you get to keep. And it's a law. It's always operating. If you give little, you get to keep little. If you give alot, you get to keep alot. If you give an acknowledgement of innocence, you get to keep an awareness of your own that you will find yourself infilled with as a result of extending it to your Brother.

You get to keep exactly what you give. No more, no less. Always. If you give hate, you will get to keep hate. If you give jealousy, you get to keep jealousy. If you give love, you will get to keep love. It's operating twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. There's no moment in which that is not operating absolutely.

What is confusing to everyone is, which came first, the chicken or the egg? Which came first, my thought or the other person's behavior, or the other person's belief? What is it that triggered the event?

Well, [chuckles] you are your own best examples of how this works. You know, without a doubt, that no-one can change your mind against your will. Whatever you set your mind to is the way it is for you. And anyone can talk until they're blue in the face without affecting your stance or position in any way.

So you are the one who is the initiator or, as we said last week, the determiner; the one determining how things are going to be.

Now, your Brother or your Sister may be ignorant of his or her Birthright and may be acting out on the basis of a very poor image of himself or herself. But, how that affects you is entirely up to you and how you are determining their behavior is going to affect you.

Now that's the selfish way to look at it. How their behavior is going to affect you. It is determined by you, but you notice that you are conceptualizing it as starting "out there" with your Brother or your Sister. That is confusion.

If you will remember, that you are the one making the initial determination, as to what the meaning of the event that you experience "out there" has, then you will realize that you are in charge and you have the capacity to heal or cause greater confusion.

You can contribute to the problem, or you can be the Presence of That which heals.

These are, as I said last week, very important things we're talking about at this point. Remember, we've just read, "When you condemn a brother, you are saying, blah...blah...blah."

Continuing . . .

Lay not his guilt upon him, . . .

. . . meaning, by condemning him.

Lay not his guilt upon him, for his guilt lies in his secret that he thinks that he has done this unto YOU.

If you condemn him and he feels guilty, he believes that he has caused you your grief—that he is guilty for the grief you are experiencing. But, as I've just pointed out, that can't possibly be true. He cannot be guilty for anything you are experiencing.

So . . .

Lay not his guilt upon him, for his guilt lies in his secret . . .

. . . his ignorance . . .

. . . that he thinks that he has done this unto YOU. Would you, then, teach him that he is RIGHT in his delusion? The idea that the guiltless Son of God can attack himself and MAKE himself guilty is insane. In ANY form, in ANYONE, BELIEVE THIS NOT.

Strong statement.

In ANY form, in ANYONE, BELIEVE THIS NOT.

Your function, really, is to look into your Brother's eyes and remember God.

Now, [chuckles] that doesn't mean look into this crazy bastard's eyes that's across from you and see how horrible it is, and then remove yourself from it and go unto God. You don't remember God as a means of escape from this horrible visage called your Brother.

The point is, to look at your Brother and not believe what you're seeing; not verify what his behavior or his condition seems to be presenting. You're here to remember that no matter what your Brother believes, and no matter what you have believed about him in the past, if there's anything there at all where your Brother is, it has to be God presenting Himself right there.

Now that's not what his behavior may be saying, that's not what his physical condition may be demonstrating. But if you don't want to be stuck with the presentation, if you want to get past it, you're going to have to disregard it and go to a different vantage point.

It's a radical stand that you have to take relative to your Brother. If you will take the radical stand, you will find healing occurring. And in the healing of your Brother will be the healing of yourself—the revealing of the fact of what is true about your Brother is true about you because what you give, you get to keep.

Again, it is a law functioning, operating twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week period.

So the question is, "How are you going to use your mind?" How are you going to use your mind?

Now why, out of all the possible things you could engage in, why would it be your Function, with a capital "F," your Function to look at your fellowman and remember God?

Because, that's how you get out of your dream; that's how you get out of your misinterpretations, misunderstandings, confusions, and all of the spontaneous reactions that come from them. That's how you Wake up. Because at the bottom line, the only thing—the only thing—that is keeping you from experiencing yourself as you truly Are, is the fact that you have determined, because you thought there would be value in it for you, that you are separate and alone; that you are either self-created, or part of an evolutionary process of a material universe.

All of that is an idea. Those things are just ideas. You have been taught them. You believe them. And somebody had them originally as an imaginative idea. But it's not the truth. But that idea has, and does keep you, has kept you, and keeps you bound in ignorance and incapable of experiencing your Birthright.

So, the reason it is your function to look at your Brother and see him from a radical standpoint, is that that is the way you break the fundamental ignorance—the fundamental misunderstanding—the fundamental flaw in your perception that keeps you from seeing truth. It breaks your isolation.

It may be relatively easy for you to imagine or believe that you are not separate from God, that God does love you, and that you are loved by this love always. And it is possible for you to believe that this love stands in constant support of you and that He holds you in an innocent state in His Mind. And from time to time, you may have had experiences of illumination where you truly felt it.

But I'm telling you, that in order for you to experience this always, it's going to take more than a link or a joining between you and God. It's going to have to come in the link or the joining between you and your Brothers and Sisters.

Now, I've suggested this before and I'm going to suggest it again because it's a very powerful and practical practice: As you go through your day during this coming week, it doesn't matter who you see; on the street; in a store; in another car; just look at them and in your mind say, "Bless you."

You're going to have some response; you're going to think something; you're going to have some sort of perception. It might as well be one that's positive. It might as well be one that is embracing and one, which, if they could hear it, would make it easier for them to like themselves more easily. It will also be a wonderful practice for you because it will remind you that you can do something other than what you usually do as you encounter your fellowman during the day. And you will notice that it will arouse a feeling within you about yourself that feels good...and should.

Again . . .

The idea that the guiltless Son of God can attack himself and MAKE himself guilty is insane. In ANY form, in ANYONE, BELIEVE THIS NOT. For sin and condemnation are the same, and the belief in one is faith in the other, calling for punishment INSTEAD of love.

All of this is pure insanity. Why? Because you aren't the orphans you think you are. You're the direct expression of God right now at every moment in every instant. You're nothing more nor less than God Presencing Himself right there where you are.

To think otherwise is delusional, or insane.

NOTHING can justify insanity, . .

Why? Because it's impossible for there to be anyone to be insane.

Gee, sounds rather radical, eh? Well, what's your alternative? Your alternative is, that there are people who are insane and maybe, if you're a broadminded person, you might even say, "I might even be insane a little bit."

But if you do that, you're stuck. If you do that, you're accepting something that is not true. And it's based upon a fundamental ignorance of what you are. An ignorance that you're the Son or Daughter of God; God expressed, right there, where you are.

Nothing . . .

NOTHING can justify insanity and to call for punishment upon yourself MUST be insane.

Oh, you say, "But I don't call for punishment on myself?" But you do every time you call for punishment on your Brothers and Sisters, because what you claim for them must be what you claim for yourself.

"Well of course, she's guilty! Look, she's having this physical problem because of her attitude and her behavior and the way she doesn't take care of herself. What can she expect?" Well you know what? If you say that about her, you say that about yourself. Sure you do. I know you're sitting there, "No, I don't say that about myself!" But you do.

Let's reverse it. Here's the same person who hasn't been taking care of herself; who has a lousy attitude and who has physical symptoms and circumstances that reflect the lousy attitude. And then one day, for no apparent reason whatsoever, she's healed. I mean every single trace of the physical problem is gone and suddenly, she's a very pleasant individual to be around. And when you ask her about it she says, "Man, I don't know. All I know is that one day I was sick and had a lousy attitude, and the next day I was well and I had a wonderful attitude. Everything looked wonderful, and I felt good about myself."

Oh, just let that happen. Just let that happen and what? You're gonna look at your aches and pains. And you're gonna look at the problems you're having and you're gonna say, "This is not fair!" You see. You do hold yourself to it.

"It's not reasonable for her to experience transformation and healing for no good reason, when I'm going to have to demonstrate excellent reasons for healing to occur. I'm going to have to get my thoughts straightened out. I'm going to have to find where the flaw is in me that's generating these physical symptoms. She's getting off scot-free. She's not having to do any of the work!"

So now, you, who doesn't apply those rules to himself, that he applied to her when she was having a problem. Well now you see that you do. You're saying, "The conditions I'm experiencing because I'm guilty of something, and I have to go through a process of ferreting out what it is I'm guilty about so that I can release it."

So you do lay guilt trips on yourself. In fact, you claim guilt for whatever physical circumstances that are not the best that you might be experiencing.

So let's be real people, you do it.

The idea that the guiltless Son of God . . .

. . . uh-huh, there it is. Well, you know that's not you, right? But it is you.

The idea that the guiltless Son of God can attack himself and MAKE himself guilty is insane.

But I've just shown you that you do that. Now, I want you to accept that it is insane. And it is insane because it is the valuing of a belief that is constituted of nonsense. It is the valuing of a belief that is meaningless. And you are binding yourself to something that you can't really be bound to.

In ANY form, in ANYONE, BELIEVE THIS NOT.

Not for yourself, not for your Brother. As radical as it may sound, as unreasonable as it may sound, adopt this attitude.

In ANY form, in ANYONE, BELIEVE THIS NOT. For sin and condemnation are the same, and the belief in one is faith in the other, calling for punishment INSTEAD of love. NOTHING can justify insanity, and to call for punishment upon yourself MUST be insane.

Now, think about it: You do look at others. And perhaps you do it more since you've become a student of this wonderful Course. You have developed the habit of looking at yourself or others and passing judgment on them and saying, "You have created the problem for yourself." As though that is the enlightening answer. When all it does is place guilt and confirm it, and leaves them there.

"You created it. You are going to have to uncreate it."

Now, Joe Bloe is driving down the freeway. The tire comes unbolted from his car and his car careens against the divider and into other traffic and he is severely injured, taken to the hospital with quite a bit of physical damage.

Now, what would you say about the physician who would look at him on the gurney, unconscious, and then look at the rest of his staff and say, "Well, this fellow hasn't been taking care of his car and he knew that he needed to have that tire checked and therefore, it should be no surprise to him that he's in this condition. I'm certainly not surprised about it and he deserves it. And if I do something to alleviate him of the condition he finds himself in, he's not going to learn what he needs to learn!"

Now, maybe somebody listening to what I'm saying might say, "Yeah...yeah, I never realized that, that's exactly what the physician ought to do. That would be an enlightened physician."

But, for the majority of you with intelligence and common sense, and compassion and love, you would recognize that this physician should be removed from the emergency room and someone else replace him; someone else who will come in and look at this fellow and say, "No matter what has happened up to this moment, there are conditions here that are not representative of health and well-being, and I must address those and bring him into a state of physical balance and function."

And he will bring everything to bear upon the situation that he can and call in other experts—surgeons—whatever might be necessary to help reestablish balance and life there. Now the point is, that he will utilize all of the energy and strength of mind and intelligence; he will bring it all to bear on the situation no matter what has happened up to that point. No question will come up as to whether the person deserves to be brought into a state of balanced life.

Now, forget about that you're a student of the Course; or you're a student of truth, or you're a metaphysician. Forget about that. Remember, that you're a Brother or Sister, that you are part of a family of Man. And that your function in your relationships to each other are there for bringing all of the intelligence you have and every capacity you have upon the relationship to extend all the energy you have to bringing out the greatest balance; the greatest equilibrium; the smoothest functioning that is possible for you and your Brother.

You're here to be healers, for lack of better words. And so that I don't play into your egos, "Oh, I get to be a healer. I've always wanted to be a healer."

Your function is to be lovers. Ones who love each other. Ones who love each other enough to bring your energy to the relationship so as to facilitate correction of ignorance and loss and suffering. That's your function. And in a way, it's as easy as what I've described; if you will go sit down in a mall or a grocery store and just look at everybody who comes by you and say, "Bless you...bless you...bless you."

You're perfectly capable of having a kind thought. It doesn't have to be a huge religious experience. Just sit there and have a simple thought of kindness that you are specifically taking time to apply to or address your fellowman with.

It's that kind of attitude in which judgment isn't brought into play. But an awareness of innocence is brought into play that others find themselves able to like themselves more easily.

And it's really all that the two-step is about.

See no-one, then, as guilty, and you will affirm the truth of guiltlessness unto YOURSELF.

[chuckles] If you actually succeed, even wordlessly, in helping another to more easily like himself or herself, you will find that you have made it easier for you to like yourself. And it will happen without your having ferreted out your flaws and corrected them. It will happen because you've employed your mind in an act of love that you can't help but be embraced by in the process—and feel.

Like I said, it's a law twenty-four/seven. What you give, you get to keep. It happens whether you went on an internal witch hunt or not. If you give something valuable, you will find yourself having it. And it won't be a reward because you were so good, it'll be a simple expression of the Law of Being: What you give, you get to keep.

In every condemnation that you offer the Son of God lies the conviction of your OWN guilt.

. . . Lies your conviction that there is value in guilt and employing it, which automatically means there is value for it to be employed on you as well.

If you would have the Holy Spirit make you free of it, accept His offer of Atonement for . . .

. . . who? for yourself? That would make it easy, wouldn't it? No.

. . . accept His offer of Atonement for all your brothers.

What you give, you'll get to keep. What you don't give, you won't have.

And I promise you, that as long as you look at your Brother, and judge your Brother, and render him guilty, you won't have innocence yourself. And there won't be transformation. And there won't be healing. And there won't be anything you'll like. And it won't be your Brother's fault.

Again . . .

If you would have the Holy Spirit make you free of it, accept His offer of Atonement for all your brothers. For so you learn that it is true for YOU.

That's just the way it works. And you don't have to be really good at it. It's not a skill that you can increase. It's a simple act that you can either employ or not employ. If you employ it, you get to keep what you've employed. If you don't employ it, you get to keep the emptiness that you didn't give.

Simple. Not a prize. Purely mechanical, if I may put it that way, because it is; it's that easy for you to demonstrate it in your daily life.

Well, does that mean then that you should go out and find the biggest bastard in your experience and work on him? No. Keep it simple. Just go to the grocery store or stand in front of the post office for ten minutes and watch everyone who goes in and comes out and say, "Bless you. I may not see it, but I know that right where you are, God has to be Being all there is of you. Bless you. I can bless you for what I believe may well be there. I can do that. Bless you. Bless you for What is really Moving in and out here at this post office." You can do that.

Remember always that it is impossible to condemn the Son of God IN PART.

[chuckles] You can't single anyone out and condemn him but leave everyone else, including yourself, scot-free. No.

Those whom you see as guilty become the witnesses to guilt in YOU, and you will SEE it there, for it IS there until it is undone.

It's there until you no longer value employing it against others.

Guilt is ALWAYS in your own mind, which has condemned ITSELF. Project it not, for while you do it cannot BE undone.

The undoing of it lies in the absence of your employing it. If you don't throw mud balls, you won't have mud on your hands. Simple. If you do throw mud balls, you'll have mud on your hands. If you love to employ guilt, you'll have guilt on your hands. And the only way for that effect to be undone, is to stop throwing mud balls.

See, these are not deep metaphysical principles. They're very simple. They're very simple explanations of what an act of love is; what simple acts of love are; and what the result of them will be. And what a simple act of hate seems to do and what it will be for you. And the solution is the making of a simple different choice.

With everyone whom you release from guilt . . .

. . . with everyone whom you choose no longer to employ guilt upon . . .

. . . great is the joy in Heaven, where the witnesses to your fatherhood rejoice.

The witnesses to every act of love that you engage in constitute a great sound of joy in Heaven—in reality—in actuality.

Guilt . . .

. . . just for a little further understanding . . .

Guilt makes you blind, for while you see one spot of guilt within you, you will NOT see the light.

Or, for awhile, you see one spot of the valuing . . .

. . . of guilt within you, you will NOT see the light. And by projecting it the WORLD seems dark, and shrouded . . .

. . . in what? . . .

. . . in your guilt . . .

. . . that you're projecting; in your valuing of guilt; that you project on your world to get your world to behave the way you need it to behave; so you can feel comfortable while you're still claiming to be an independent orphan; separate from your Creator.

You throw a dark veil over it, . .

. . . the world . . .

. . . and cannot see it BECAUSE YOU CANNOT LOOK WITHIN. You are afraid of what you would see there, but . . .

. . . here's the radical truth . . .

. . . but it is NOT there.

The guilt you would apply to yourself and the 'you' that would employ guilt doesn't exist. So if you really look within yourself, you're not going to find the darkness there.

THE THING YOU FEAR IS GONE.

Because guilt was never valid, and it was never useful. It could only have been useful against other orphans. And so, what happens is, that orphans take advantage of each other and seem to be able to accomplish taking advantage of each other, because they capitalize upon the fact that they're all ignorant of their Source. And therefore, they can be fooled. But even though they can be fooled, it doesn't change the fact of what they really Are—not orphans. And so the guilt that they feel isn't real because that which is feeling it, is just an imagined sense of self; a costume, a mask that they're employing.

You're afraid to look within . . .

You are afraid of what you would see there, but it is NOT there. THE THING YOU FEAR IS GONE. If you would look within you would see only the Atonement, shining in quiet and in peace upon the altar to your Father.

Where is this Altar? Some say, it's near the heart physically. Some say it's at the heart chakra. There are places that seem to be physically identified as the altar.

But I will tell you, the altar is located in the little gap between memory and imagination—the past and the future. The Altar is in the silence where thinking is not going on—calculating and imagining, and defining. But rather, listening.

The Place of Excellence in you is in that gap between memory and imagination. That's where the Altar is.

If you would look within you would see only the Atonement, shining in quiet and in peace upon the altar to your Father.

Do not be afraid to look within.

Don't be afraid to be radical. Don't be afraid no matter what your Brother seems to be saying: "I'm dying!...I'm dying! I have this disease, or I have that disease, I'm dying...I know it! The doctors have proven it. They have shown me on the X-rays. I am dying they say. It is terminal they say."

Really? Are you going to believe that? Are you going to just say, "Wow, this is really hard to take! I love you so much that I can't stand the thought of your not being here. This is really devastating to me!"

Can there be healing there? Is that your function? Is that looking at your Brother and remembering God? No. But your function is to do that. And if your function is to do that, it means that the capacity to do it is present with you. You just simply have to employ it. Instead of saying, "I don't know if I can take this bad news. God, this is awful. I will do everything I can to make your last days as comfortable as possible."

This is not healing. This is not your function. This is not remembering God.

Well, you say, "All of this that you're telling me is quite radical. I don't know what to do instead of commiserating."

Exactly. You don't know. And that's why you're so lucky to have this little gap between memory and imagination: The Silence in you—the Place of Excellence in you—the Altar, where, if you will step back for a moment—the first part of the two-step, and go there instead of immediately running to all of your past memory and tapes and ideas and experiences.

“Now let’s see, Have I ever known anybody that’s been healed of this? No, I haven’t. Well, um, but there’s always a chance, so maybe I’ll try and . . .”

Think...think...think...think...think, or going into imagination as possible outcomes. No. You have this wonderful thing called, silence, in the little gap between past thinking and imaginative thinking into which you can step and in the silence, listen. Because you know what? There is in your Brother, a place where he can find himself willing to see a different outcome from what the doctor said; and to see a different outcome from what his own experiences and beliefs are telling him.

There is a capacity within him to see his healing occur instead of arguing vehemently against it. And you know what? Just as the physician who would bring all of the resources to bear upon the situation that he’s working with, you can dare to go into the silence and reach out to all of the resources that your Right Mind can make available to you, as your conscious experience of what truth really is. So that you can open up your mouth and say the things that will help your Brother gently move to that point of the willingness within him to see a different outcome that’s totally 180-degrees out of sync with what he’s been so confident about since the doctor’s confidence laid the facts out to him as devastating as they were.

That’s your job. That’s your opportunity. And that’s the way you get to keep the wonder that you give.

Again . . .

Do not be afraid to look within. The ego tells you all is black with guilt within you, and bids you NOT to look. Instead, it bids you look upon your brothers AND SEE THE GUILT IN THEM.

You see, that’s the way you break it—by not doing that!

Yet this you cannot do without remaining blind.

Ignorant of the truth that you would find yourself knowing if you would dare to do the two-step: The truth that you would find revealed to you; truth that you didn’t have to think about and figure out and come up with.

. . . it bids you look upon your brothers AND SEE THE GUILT IN THEM. Yet this you cannot do without remaining blind. For those who see their brothers in the dark, and guilty in the dark in which they shroud them, are too afraid to look upon . . .

. . . what? . . .

... the light within. Within you is not what YOU believe is there, .

... darkness, and all the proofs of your own guilt.

Within you is not what YOU believe is there, and what you put your faith in.

Here's the truth:

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.

And when you're willing not to be an orphan any longer, when you're willing to annul the divorce that you got from your Father, and feel your Sonship or your Daughtership and His Fatherhood, you will experience the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.

He does not value you as you do..

... in your ignorance, I'm adding.

He knows Himself and knows the truth in YOU.

Why? (I'm adding this) Because they're One.

He knows THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE, for He knows not of differences.

Now is this a clue or what? When you see your fellowman, this might be the thing for you to do. Within your Brother, is the holy sign of perfect faith you have in him. You do not value him as he values himself. You know yourself as you truly are and know the truth in him. You know there is no difference, for you know not of differences. No, you're both the same. And you're both the Christ. You're both the Sons and Daughters of God and you are not guilty.

Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence?

Well, the answer is, No. But you can imagine that you're able to see guilt where God knows there is perfect innocence. Not only can you imagine it, you do imagine it. There are so many people that you will not give the time of day to because they don't deserve it. They are guilty of something you have determined them to be guilty. You have judged them. You have condemned them.

And so, you do seem. You believe that you can see guilt where God knows there is perfect innocence. And as long as you're doing that, you're not performing your function of looking at them and remembering God. You're not looking at them and extending to them what God is extending to you.

Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence? You can DENY His knowledge, but you cannot CHANGE it. Look, then, upon the light He placed within you, and learn that what you feared was there HAS BEEN replaced with love.

It actually was replaced with love before you decided to cover it over with an imagination of your own. Once having replaced it with an imagination of your own, it didn't undo the love and the innocence that really is the only thing that could be there.

And so, the experience you so greatly desire of your innocence and of being held in perfect love awaits you presently, and waits for you to abandon practicing an imaginative overlay upon it and believing your imagination.

And how do you do that? By doing it for your Brother. And then you get to keep what you have given. And you and your Brother are blessed.

As we have moved through the Course, there have been periods where you have felt like I have become monotonous because I don't let go of something and I keep bringing it up. And I'm going to keep bringing up the two-step here and the simplicity of it.

Because you know what? There's no need to suffer through the amount of time it would take for us to finish this book. I don't mean suffer through the finishing of it, but until you are Awake, you are suffering from guilt. And you are causing your Brother or contributing to your Brother's inclination to feel guilty for no good reason. And there's no reason for that to be extended any longer.

Remember this: Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you. Your Father has perfect faith in you.

As confused as you seem to be, as messed up as you seem to be, or as messed up and confused as you think you are, and have judged yourself to be, your Father has a perfect faith in you. Just like the physician has a perfect faith that in spite of what has gone on, life can be established and brought into balance and harmony and function, and brings all of the reserves he has to bear upon the situation to illuminate that.

And each one of you has that capacity and that function to perform on each other's behalf.

I look forward to being with you next week. And please, remember, as often as you can, to abandon whatever use you're inclined to put your mind to and consciously bless your Brothers and Sisters as they move past you. It will bless you. Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 27th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I want to back up to the previous paragraph to set the tone for tonight. Because in talking about guilt and everything that we have been talking about, it can become easy to have a negative sense about oneself. Because of course, that's what the ego would have you engage in.

Now . . .

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you. He does not value you as you do. He knows Himself, and knows the truth in YOU.¹

He is the Source of you. He, by the Movement of What He Is, is the Presence of each one of you and every aspect of Creation. And because He knows Himself, He knows you because He is all there is of you.

He knows THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE, for He knows not of differences. Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence? You can DENY His knowledge, but you cannot CHANGE it.

Which means, you can deny the truth about you, but you cannot change the truth about you.

Look, then, upon the light He placed within you, and learn that what you feared was there HAS BEEN replaced with love.

Now, one of the things that causes great confusion is the fact that you have all begun to associate guilt and innocence with right and wrong. If you are guilty, you are wrong. If you are innocent, you are right. If you are guilty, you don't deserve respect. If you are innocent, you deserve respect. And it's not true.

It's not true because innocence has nothing to do with right or wrong. And right and wrong have everything to do with righteousness—self-righteousness. Right and wrong have everything to do with the means you use to control each other and to control your life and to control your circumstances.

If you're wrong, you don't have the position from which to exercise authority and make things happen. If you're wrong, you create disease for yourself, you say, now that you can think metaphysically about right and wrong; guilt and innocence. And if you think correctly, you can experience healing.

Now, I'm going to tell you flat out right now, that thinking right and thinking wrong has nothing to do with your perfection. Thinking right isn't what heals you. Thinking wrong is not what causes you to be ill.

You are healed by Grace. You are healed by the Grace of God. You are healed by virtue of the fact, that since God is all there is to you, there is no place for anything unlike God. And that is why there can be an instantaneous healing of someone who hasn't ferreted out every flaw within her or within himself, and corrected every single flaw and begun to think correctly and therefore, deserve healing.

Now, we talked last week about the fact that in the little gap between the past, (meaning memory) and the future (meaning imagination) is the Altar that is in the middle of you. It is in the "Now," in that space which has no relationship to the past or the future; in that place where the silence is; where the pregnant fullness of your Being awaits your experience, is your innocence.

Innocence can best be described as that which has within itself nothing unlike itself. There, right and wrong do not exist. There, your healing does. There, your wholeness does. There, your Atonement is present for you to experience fully.

When you move into the past, meaning memory, you must think. When you move into the future through imagination, you must think. In either case, you are engaging in a capacity that I told you before, God did not give you. God did not give you the capacity to think.

In the little gap between memory and imagination; in the silence there, you have been provided with the capacity to Know. In that Place, you are as omniscient as God. Because nothing unlike what you Are, which is the Presence of God Being All, there is no thinking either in the past or in the future. There is nothing unlike the Now. And there's no right or wrong.

Now it's important to understand what I'm saying, because you think that you are guilty of doing wrong things and you think you must be punished for the wrong things you have done. It is as though guilt is a result of behavior. And this is where you all get hooked and find it difficult to justify releasing yourself from the guilt and its effects that you lay upon yourselves.

I have explained before that the moment you said, "Father, I would rather see it my way; Father, I would rather do it my way" and you proceeded to act in an independent way, independent from your Oneness with God, you created, for lack of better words, a circumstance that doesn't represent the truth about you.

And so, because of the sanity of your Being; there's a tone; an energy, if you will, that you can feel that reports back to you that you have stepped outside of the bounds of Reality, so to speak. It's a dissonance, like the bell that rings when the garbage truck backs up or a large vehicle backs up, that says there is an unsafe condition prevailing at the moment.

That dissonance is felt as discomfort; and that is guilt. It is not inherent in acts you engage in, it's inherent in the state of thinking. It's inherent in engaging in an unnatural activity that is different from and separate from the silence in the middle of you, where you are omniscient without thinking a thought; where you Know everything without thinking a thought.

And likewise, if you want to engage in future thinking in imagination, you will find the same dissonance there. Why? Because your attention isn't where things are happening. You're attention is not where Reality is unfolding. You have moved into a space where you are being the determiner of conclusions and assessments and evaluations and explanations that have nothing to do with what you would find yourself omnisciently Knowing if you stayed in the little gap in the center of you, in the silence, where you're not introducing anything unlike you.

So, if you're experiencing guilt, it's not because of any wrong act that you've done that can be corrected by engaging in a correct act. You will find that if you will disengage from thinking entirely, and meditate—sit down and allow yourself to consciously and purposely become still within yourself—the dissonance will vanish. Peace will reveal itself; Real Peace. Not a mental narcotic that makes you feel peace when you shouldn't be feeling peace, but the peace that's inherent in your behaving sanely; by being attentive Now, fully present Now.

Now, you all work each other over constantly with the concept of right and wrong. "If you don't do it right, you're gonna be sorry. If you don't do it this way, you're not going to have my respect. If you want respect in the world, you're going to act intelligently based upon the world's definitions of intelligence. And if you don't, don't expect any prizes."

Control; manipulation; all for the sake of righteousness and all occurring because of what? Because, when you have left the Now—when you have left the gap between the past and the future; memory and imagination—the point is that if you want to escape from guilt, you will not try to change into a good person expressing right ideas, loving thoughts based upon your memory of what constitutes good behavior and what you've been taught in the past constitutes good behavior because you can't become innocent by being right.

Now, this is not inviting or pleasing to the ego because the ego needs to be right in order to have power. But I'm telling you, that because your innocence has nothing to do with right or wrong, but has everything to do with your Being, your escape, as it were, into the freedom of your Being will come as an awareness of your complete powerlessness as a tiny private force for good.

And in the absence of any attempt to exert power as a tiny private independent force for good, you will find yourself experiencing not only the Knowing that reveals the truth to you that is omniscient, you will find yourself fully empowered in the sense of being omnipotent.

Now listen to me carefully: Omniscience: All-Knowing. Omnipotence: All Powerful.

But you know what? When you're in the little gap and you're not mentally dismembered; fragmented, and there is a Wholeness that is uninterrupted because there is nothing unlike itself in it, then you along with all of your Brothers and Sisters joining, or being joined with the Father, act, and Creation occurs. The action is not an act over or against anything. It is the Movement of Love. It is an emerging movement of ultimate creativity: perfection, beauty, harmony. And there isn't any sense of private, tiny, personal power.

You see, it will have nothing to do with being right or being wrong. Healing or correction that the Course talks about, in which you are encouraged to participate in on behalf of your Brother, is not a matter of your learning how to be right and thereby having power that can heal your Brother or change him from being wrong into one who is being right, because, as we said here:

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you. He does not value you as you do.

Well, when you're in that place—in the little gap—you do not value what your Brother may be valuing because you recognize and feel the truth. And you know, you know that that truth is absolute and unchangeable. And it's as clear as a bell to you that this is the truth about your Brother. And that's the way you be with your Brother. And that's what helps to open up the door, to make it, as I said last time, easier for your Brother to like himself and to abandon his inclination to blame himself and claim guilt for himself.

So both of you are lifted out of the realm of right or wrong, and of good behavior and bad behavior as "mattering."

It isn't what you do right or wrong within the realm of thinking that matters. It's what you find yourself being when you take the time to become still—to go into the silence in the little gap—that Place of Excellence in you where the Altar is, and God reveals Himself to you as You. That's where it's at.

Many of you say, "I don't have time to become still." And what that means is, that you have too much thinking to do. You have too much worrying. Well worrying is mulling over the past; mulling over all of the ideas that stand as arguments against your peace. "I've got to think—I have too much thinking to do." Or, "I know that tomorrow this situation is going to occur and I know that it's going to be this or that or the other thing." And so you worry about the future. Thinking...thinking...thinking...which is an activity that is so much static covering up your omniscience—your capacity to Know; your God-given capacity to Know.

Now, let's go into the book.

RELEASE AND RESTORATION

You are accustomed to the notion that the mind can see the source of pain where it is not.

That's not really complicated. You think that you can see your Brother or his actions as the source of your pain. You think that your kidney can be the source of your pain or the muscles in your shoulder can be the source of your pain.

You are accustomed to the notion that the mind can see the source of pain where it is not.

Well, you also think that you can see the source of pain in you. You have determined that you are making your life miserable because there's something really wrong with you and you don't quite know what it is. But you're constantly “f_ _ _ ing” up your life day after day and you seem not to be able to do anything to correct it.

So, you think you can see the source of your pain in you.

“Oh, if I could just get my head on straight. If I could just straighten out my thinking, I would be able to have better control. I just can’t organize my thoughts!” And the result is chaos. “Oh, I just can’t organize my office and so I can’t find anything and it’s chaos.”

Or, you know someone who’s very good at compartmentalizing his thinking. And as a result, even though he’s in the middle of chaos, he can keep a clear sense of order and handle himself in a controlled way that manifests “intelligence.”

You constantly convince yourselves and each other every day that your thinking is solely responsible for your being well or not; of your being at peace or in chaos; of being clear or confused.

And I’m telling you that as long as you are engaging in thinking at all, you are in a level of mind which automatically has dissonance present that is telling you that you are off the beam; that says, “Come back on the beam, this is not natural to you. Do what is natural to you.” Which doesn’t mean change the way you’re thinking. It means come back to center out of thinking. Come back out of your fearful imaginations of the future into the moment—into the Now--where that dissonance is not present, and where your omniscience is.

Again,

You are accustomed to the notion that the mind can see the source of pain where it is not. The doubtful service . . .

. . . the questionable service . . .

. . . of displacement is to hide the REAL source of your guilt, and KEEP from your awareness the full perception THAT IT IS INSANE.

You see, by saying, “So-and-so out there is creating my problem, or my body is creating my problem, or my bad thinking is creating my problem,” that’s the way you distract yourself from seeing what it is that would bring about correction. It isn’t anything out there. It isn’t your good thoughts or bad thoughts. It is that, you are at the moment looking at everything through the lens of thinking—through the overlay of determinations and conclusions you are coming to about everything without having been silent enough and attentive enough to let every single thing reveal to you what It divinely is; something which you can only experience if you are listening; if you are quiet!

When you're providing the definitions, what you are defining can't reach you because you're making too much noise.

The doubtful service of displacement is to hide the REAL source of your guilt, and KEEP from your awareness the full perception THAT IT IS INSANE. Displacement always is maintained by the illusion that the source, from which attention is diverted, must be TRUE, AND MUST BE FEARFUL, or you would not have displaced the guilt onto what you believed to be LESS fearful.

Now, you feel guilty because you have left your peace. You have left your Center. You have indulged in thinking. You interpret it to be an experience of your guilt and you have determined that what you must be guilty of is real, making you vulnerable to whatever the penalty is for that guilt.

And that sends you on a wild goose chase if you're going to try to track it down. It sends you on a wild goose chase because it isn't something that you're doing; it isn't an act you've engaged in; it isn't a particular thought that you had that is creating the dissonance; it's that you're thinking, period. And you need to get back to Center. You need to value your peace enough to access it first before you act; before you respond to life.

You are therefore willing, with little opposition, . .

. . . from within you . . .

. . . to look upon all sorts of "sources" underneath awareness, . .

. . . "um-m... I must have a very subtle thought of negativity here that I haven't been willing to look at, but it must be operating somewhere in me."

You hear the vagueness? "Boy, it's there. Something is there. There's a source that's not quite explainable. It's gonna to be difficult to find, but by dammit I'm going to find it and I'm going to chuck it out. And then I'll be free. I'll have my peace." No.

Sit down and meditate. Sit down and meditate for twenty minutes. You'll have your peace and it will be the Real Peace of your Being. And you won't have ferreted out any faulty thinking to deserve to have the Peace.

You are therefore willing, with little opposition, to look upon all sorts of "sources" underneath awareness, provided that they are not the deeper source to which they bear no real relationship at all.

All the little thoughts, all the little subtle faults that you would find yourselves looking for, will never have anything to do with the fact that the dissonance you're feeling; the guilt you're experiencing, is not from anything you are doing, but is from engaging in an activity of mind that you can't successfully engage in because you—the divine one that you are—cannot become insane.

Insane ideas HAVE no real relationships, for that is WHY they are insane. No real relationship can rest on guilt, or even hold one spot of it to mar its purity.

Who you are and who your Brother is, divinely, cannot be changed. And your real relationships with each other cannot be altered even though both of you may indulge in fantasy—in imagination. And by virtue of indulging in imagination, creating for yourselves that experience of an undercurrent; a dissonance that simply is your sanity saying, "Come back, you are attempting to do something you cannot really do. Don't bother doing it; don't bother continuing to do it."

No real relationship can rest on guilt, or even hold one spot of it to mar its purity. For all relationships which guilt has touched are used but to avoid the person AND the guilt.

When you judge your Brother to be guilty, even if you're saying that you're doing it to help him correct his problem, what you're engaged in is avoiding being connected with your Brother because you're looking at a definition you've made up about him, instead of him. You have moved into fantasy. You've moved into the realm of thinking. And when you do that, you cannot be present with who and what your Brother really is or who and what your world really is.

Now, what this means is, that if you want to become free of guilt, you are going to have to move to where guilt doesn't exist. You will not be able to stay within the realm of thinking and judging and manipulate thoughts and imagined circumstances so as to demonstrate and prove the guiltlessness of you or anyone else who is still engaged in thinking.

You will have to come to a point of saying, "You know what? I do have time. I do have time to go into the silence. I do have time to become centered. In fact, I'm obligated to become centered no matter what is going on if indeed, I want to be—I'm going to say—an effective Presence; a Presence that uncovers perfection; a Presence that uncovers wholeness; a Presence that illuminates harmony; a Presence with Whom it is easier for my Brother or Sister to recognize the truth about himself or herself and like himself or herself more easily.

. . . all relationships which guilt has touched are used but to avoid the person AND the guilt. What strange relationships you have made for this strange purpose!

The strange relationships you have made are the relationships of orphans. You all think that you are orphans—independent—and you have figured out a way to relate to each other and you use your relationships for control.

You don't use your relationships as the opportunity to silently be present with the one you're in relationship with, so that in the absence of your own imaginations and determinations and analyses, you can recognize your Brother because you're not introducing anything strange into the mix. And your Brother can feel your Presence with him and be pleased; be filled with joy that blesses you as well.

What strange relationships you have made for this strange purpose! And you forgot that real relationships are holy, and cannot be used by YOU at all. They are used only by the Holy Spirit, . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your Right Mind . . .

They are used only by the Holy Spirit and it is that which MAKES them pure.

Pure. That's a good word for that which contains within itself nothing unlike itself. Right? Pure: The meaning of innocence.

You see, if you have right and wrong going on and warring with each other; and right triumphs over wrong, you still got right and wrong except that now right is dominating. There's still no purity; there's that present with rightness that is unlike it. And as long as you insist upon functioning within the realm of thinking—either the rehearsal of the past, memory, or the practice of imagination regarding the future—you will not be able to free yourself.

The answer to guilt is, the realization that you are innocent. You are right now the direct expression of God. You are not an orphan. If you think you are, and if you think you can operate independently on your own, it doesn't make it true. But the way out of it is, to realize that you must move into, for lack of better words, the realm of innocence.

The purity of you that is constituted of the Movement of God being all there is to you, being all there is to your mind, which having no activities unlike its nature and character is free of conflict; is free of the dissonance interpreted as guilt that causes you to think you must do something to prove your righteousness and use your Brothers as the scapegoats for your attempts.

I'm going to back up to a paragraph from last time.

Guilt . . .

. . . if you're engaging in it, if you're engaging in feeling guilty or if you are engaging in using guilt for purposes of control . . .

Guilt makes you blind, for while you see one spot of guilt within you, you will NOT see the light. And by projecting it . . .

. . . out there to your body; your neighbor; circumstances, whatever, . . .

. . . the WORLD seems dark, and shrouded in your guilt. You throw a dark veil over it, and cannot see it BECAUSE YOU CANNOT LOOK WITHIN. You are afraid of what you would see there, but it is NOT there.

You see, and if you go looking for it and you are afraid of it, you will not find that it's not there because you're going to stay in the realm of thinking; in the realm of attempting to be in control. You're not going to let yourself into the Now. You're not going to let yourself into that Place of innocence. You're not going to let yourself into that place where you say, "I know that I of myself can do nothing, because I, all by myself, do not exist."

"The "I" that thinks it's all by itself is a figment of, ah-h... imagination. And so I'm willing to be in the place where I am nothing all by myself. I will abandon being the orphan that is nothing. And I invite my Father back into the picture. Father, help me, Father, reveal to me the Knowing..." or as it uses the word in the Course, "the knowledge that reveals truth and perfection and reality to me.

"Fill me today with all thou art. I'm willing to take my place as your Son. I'm willing to take my place as your offspring reflecting You. And I will stop using relationships for purposes of control, which is not what they were for. And I will care enough about my brother that I will hold him guiltless, because I'm willing to acknowledge that right where he is, You, Father, must be. If You weren't there, there couldn't seem to be anything there at all. And so I'm willing to bless him rather than curse him with my judgment and projecting guilt on him.

"I'm through feeling the dissonance of my daring to think. I withdraw my willingness to project my discomfort, caused by my thinking, upon my Brother and making him guilty for it and trying to prove it to him so that I can make him change his behavior so that I can feel better.

"I am going to choose to abandon the thinking which is the culprit. And go into that Place of silence within me, to the Altar, in the little gap between memory and imagination."

As I said last week, this does not have to take a long time. You can just stop outside the Post Office and bless those who walk past you.

Now it's very important: As long as you're using relationships for what they are not meant, you foul up the way you experience things.

. . . you forgot that real relationships are holy and cannot be used by YOU at all. They are used only by the Holy Spirit, and it is that which MAKES them pure. For by pre-empting for your OWN ends what you should have given to HIM, . .

. . . remember the two-step? You step back, "Father, what does this mean? Holy Spirit, what does this mean?"

For by pre-empting for your OWN ends what you should have given to Him, he cannot use them unto YOUR release. No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it in that strange relationship.

No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it in that strange relationship. You use a relationship for a purpose it was not intended and the purpose it was intended for will escape you completely.

It is not shared, and so it is not real.

As long as you're so sure that you know who your Brother and Sister really is, the bastard or bitch that they are, or the ignorant one, or BLACK one, or the one who isn't so intelligent, or the cranky one; when you approach your Brother with that mindset, you're not approaching your Brother at all. You're approaching the picture you have in your mind of them and you're avoiding actual experience with them. And so the function for which a relationship exists will escape you entirely because you're blocking the relationship from registering with you.

Now, I want to come back to this point: The reason you approach each other in this fashion is because you want to be right. And you want to be right because you want to have authority and power. And you think you can't have that if you're not in charge and if you don't get agreement with your Brother or Sister by means of control.

And so, you never become defenseless with your Brother or Sister. Defenseless with your Brother or Sister means being willing to be unguardedly present with them so that connection can occur and the blessing of what a real relationship is for, can be your experience.

Guilt will disappear and its effects will disappear when you are willing to be defenselessly present with your Brother or Sister. But you won't be able to be defenselessly present with your Brother or Sister until you've cared enough about your Brother or Sister to abandon your preconceptions about him or her, and your Brother's and Sister's conceptions about himself or herself. And you're willing to step back a moment and say, "What is the truth here Father? Reveal to me—reveal Yourself to me in them. Help me to see You in them, so that I might look at them and remember You, which is my function."

And as I said last time, the reason out of all the possible things that you could do; the reason this one thing is your function, is because it's the way you come back Home. It's the way you slip into the little Gap. And I'll tell you, that as long as you're dreaming, everything that confronts you is geared toward your waking up. Everything is the opportunity for you to do the two-step.

You are your Brother's salvation and your Brother is your salvation.

Now, it's time to lay guilt aside.

I know, many of you like the place in the Course where it says that a time will come when you will lay your body aside. The visibility and tangibility of God; the visibility and tangibility of Creation will never be laid aside. What will be laid aside is the intent that each of you thinks you have to carry out; to have false definitions about all of Creation and you will lay those aside.

Now, I am saying, have a great reverence for the idea of laying guilt aside. Let it die. Let it go. You can do it today. How? Not by doing anything to it. And not by trying to improve your thinking. But by abandoning thinking itself and going into the silence and listening.

And one of the best ways to silence judgment is by engaging in the practice of blessing your Brothers and Sisters. Do it. All week long, do it, do it, do it, do it! It will transform you. Why? Because you're thinking something right? No. Because you're abandoning judgment; because you're silencing a fraudulent mindset; and because you want to come Home.

I look forward to being with you next week. I thank you for your attention and I ask you to bring your attention all week long into the little gap, no matter what you're doing. Bless the dishes you're washing. Bless the opportunity to be cleaning something. Bless your Brothers and Sisters.

And, Bless yourselves. The movement of Love is the Movement of Creation. Engage in It rather than the practice guilt.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 3rd 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're reading and have been reading from this book, A Course In Miracles for quite a while. There's a lot to read. There's a lot to understand.

In many cases, students of the Course do not embody the fact that the Course is ecumenical by nature. Its function is ecumenical. It's not divisive. It doesn't set one over another or one group over another group or one race over another race.

You know what? Truth is non-denominational. What we're reading about isn't true for the good guys and a problem for the bad guys. Answers are Answers. Solutions are solutions. That which corrects, corrects in all cases. Two times two is four is the correction for two times two is five. No matter where you go in Creation, the correction to two times two is five will be two times two is four. No matter what species you might run into throughout the galaxies, this truth; two times two is four, will always be the correction to two times two is five.

Real correction brings everyone together. Is what you're learning as you study the Course bringing you into closer and better proximity with those you meet? Or, do you say, "Um...you know, I really can't talk about the things I'm learning in the Course with so-and-so. It's too far out, she wouldn't agree."

Well, if you were to tell so-in-so that two times two is four, would they understand? If you're going to say something to someone else that they're not understanding, it's going to be because you're saying it in a non-understandable way.

Why would you do that? You would do it because in your reading of the Course, in your reading of the truth, you have couched it in language that has meaning for you and you alone. Oh-h, which makes it very special and which makes you very special and makes it impossible for you to be able to do the two-step with your neighbor.

That's not ecumenical is it? It's divisive. And it is in absolute opposition to what the truth is that the Course is helping to uncover in you.

If you can't share what you're learning in the Course with so-and-so, it's only because you have said, "Well, I don't have the time to be present with this one long enough to glean from this one what words would identify the meaning I've learned from the Course, so that they would understand that meaning and so that we could experience connection—communion—communication."

If the Course isn't bringing about connection, it isn't having its ecumenical benefit. It isn't fulfilling its ecumenical purpose. And you're missing the point. And you're delaying your very own progress.

Please, don't ever say again, "So-and-so wouldn't understand the Course if I tried to explain it to them," as though the fault lay with so-and-so that you were going to explain it to. Or as though the fault lay in the Course because it was so complex that it's not understandable.

Dare to do the two-step. Dare to step back and ask, "What is it that I need to know in order to be able to share this truth in a way that it will be understood?"

Now, this brings us to another point which many of you are misunderstanding. When I say do the two-step, step back and ask, "What is the truth here?" In other words, if you are confronted by someone who is in a state of fear; of state of ego-reaction, who is, let us say, practicing laying guilt trips on others; on themselves; and on you, and you say, "What is the truth here?" This does not mean that you are asking to find out what the specifics are of the abnormal, internal, psychological processes that are occurring. In other words, when you're asking to know what the truth is, you're not looking for or being attentive for a specific explanation of the problem.

If you're experiencing an abdominal pain or a pain in the neck, and you do the two-step—you step back and you say, "Father, or Holy Spirit, or my Guide, what is the truth here?" You're not asking for a lesson in physiology. What you're asking for is the truth about neck, abdomen, or whatever.

For example: The structural aspects of what you call your body are not constituted of matter. They are constituted of Spirit. Spirit is a synonym for God. The substance of your body is not matter. It is Spirit. This is the beginning of understanding what the truth is there in your neck or in your abdomen.

It's an understanding of what the truth is that allows you to relax and let go of your fear and be in-filled with the truth, I'm going to say, the dynamic meaning of the truth; that all there is to the substance of your body is Spirit. In other words, an in-filling of the joyous, full experience of its perfection—the perfection that is inseparable from That which is Sourcing it; in other words, God, where you are feeling God there; not as a physical sensation but as a Soul experience.

This awaits you. But I promise you that if, when you say, "What is the truth here?," you're expecting an explanation of the physiology of the problem, you will not experience the in-filling of the meaning of the Godness of that which the question is being asked about. And you will stay at the level of the problem, caught in thinking.

This is very important and I'm going to say it again: When you're asking, "What is the truth here?" you are asking to know what the divine truth is here in your neck; in your abdomen; in your toe; in you. Anything less will not be illuminating, enlightening, or healing—in other words, transformational. And what you want is transformation.

Now, we spoke last time about learning to be quiet and be present with anything in order to let that thing disclose to you what it is. And when it's your Brother or your Sister that you're willing to be present with, so that the truth might be; and what they are might be revealed to you by them, understand that you are listening for that which comes forth from that which is Real in them. Not the psychological mess that they seem to currently be.

You see, this is important. When you want to know the truth—when you want to know the Meaning of someone or something—be listening for, be attentive to that which comes from and reveals the divine nature of that one or that thing. Because it is what is divinely true about your Brother or about a thing, that transforms your awareness of them; illuminating it and imbuing it with the nature of Love; divine Love, the Father's Love that allows you to see the Father in that one or in that thing. And in seeing the Father there, laying the groundwork for transformation for that one; you make the gift and both of you are blessed.

No-one is who they think they are. And no-one is who you think they are. Whatever you are thinking, is a block that you place between yourself and them making it impossible for you to be directly connected with them where communication can occur; contact can occur; connection can occur. Which is the whole ecumenical purpose of the Course.

If any of you are reading the Course for the purpose of becoming superior to everyone else or for the purpose of becoming special at the expense of the value—the inherent value of everyone else, then you will never glean from the Course what it holds for you. Never, until you decide to use it for a different reason.

So, I guess the message so far this evening is, whatever you do, whether it's relative to the Course or just relative to living your life, let it be for ecumenical reasons. Let it be with ecumenical intent and embrace. And find the way to express the truth that your Brother can hear.

I'm going to tell you this: If you can't say it in a way that your Brother can hear, you don't understand it yourself. The moment you understand it, it will be easy and joyful to share it in whatever way comes forth.

Okay. Let's go into the book. And I'm going to back up one sentence:

No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it in that strange relationship.¹

Now what does it mean; no-one who would unite in ANY way for his own salvation?

Well, a lot of people have fun going to bazaars and markets where you can barter so that your interaction with your Brother is a negotiation to leave you in a better spot, period. In other words, you love it because you, in that environment, can get perhaps a better deal than someone else can depending upon your skill at bartering. And so, you unite with the seller for your own salvation—for your own benefit. Or, you will go somewhere where you can get what you want, the cheapest. And you deal with that person for your own benefit—for your own salvation.

No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it . . .

. . . no-one will find his salvation . . .

. . . in that strange relationship.

Why?

It is not shared, and so it is not real.

There's no relationship going on at all. It's two of you acting out a role and never once connecting with each other; never once connecting with the simple humanity of both of you. Never having the opportunity to experience a way of relating to each other in which love prevails and gentleness and kindness and caring, that causes the "transaction" to leave both of you feeling joy and peace and fulfillment regardless of what the price ended up being.

Now, if any of you are paying any attention at all to your relationships with each other during the past two weeks when we've been discussing this, it must be becoming obvious to you that you resort often to the use of guilt for the purpose of manipulation.

First of all, you employ manipulation; manipulation that is fashioned so as to benefit you. And if the manipulation doesn't work, if there is resistance, slowly but surely the employment of guilt comes into play if you have a great investment in ending up with your goal regardless of what it costs the other—the other one involved.

You have found that it's difficult to put down—to lay down—to set aside—to lay aside the practice of guilt. Oh, you want to lay aside your feelings of guilt and if you're feeling them, you'll even meditate. But when it comes to dealing with others, you are not willing to simply lay aside the use of guilt in your relationship. And the reason is, because you lack the experience of being present with your Brother in an undefended way because it takes time and it does take caring. And that's not a part of your normal day.

You must be efficient and you must deal with each other efficiently. And you must learn to express yourselves succinctly so that in the least amount of time, the maximum communication can occur. And you can get onto the next thing that needs to be dealt with without your ever having been humanely present with a being of simple value and worth; whose presence, because of what he or she divinely is, holds out for you an experience of fulfillment that can be found nowhere else, but which all of you tend to miss throughout your day. And you all go home at the end of the day, lonely. Not fulfilled with joy.

And so it's very important what we're reading about. This issue of guilt is very important to understand so that you may find it valuable to simply lay it aside and not process it anymore and not figure it out anymore. Lay it down.

Continuing . . .

In any union with a brother in which you seek to lay your guilt upon him, or share it with him, or perceive his own, you WILL feel guilty.

Why? Because you haven't done the one essential thing to abandon your guilt. And we'll come back to that.

Nor will you find satisfaction and peace with him because your union with him is NOT real.

Now, let's look at what seems to be in the second place; first place is that your union with him is not real. Secondary to that is this part that says . . .

Nor will you find satisfaction and peace with him . . .

. . . that's a big clue. That's really more important than the focus . . .

. . . satisfaction and peace . . .

. . . are supposed to be characteristic of relationships. When you're with each other, satisfaction and peace are supposed to be inseparable. And I'm going to say, untarnished by anything unlike it.

Nor will you find satisfaction and peace with him . . .

The purpose of relationship will have escaped you because your union with him is not real. Why is it not real? It's not real because you're in your thinking. And you're treating him as an object—a snapshot, if you will—a definition. And who he is according to you, you will manipulate according to the rules that work for that kind of individual or that psychological makeup.

The you that is doing this evaluation and manipulation is not you. Not the divine one that you are; not that of you which is capable of feeling love for your brother because you're too busy with your mechanical processes of manipulation trying to get this manipulable one to change to fit your needs; to be your salvation; to benefit you.

You're dealing with the picture you have of him or her, and not him or her. And therefore, the union is not real. Or you could say it's not actual. It's simply not actual.

You will see guilt in that relationship because you PUT it there.

How did you put it there? I know this is repetitious, but the mistake you make in perception is so second nature to you, that it slips by without your even noticing it; and lo and behold, you're employing it again.

You will see guilt in that relationship because you PUT it there.

How did you put it there? You put it there by thinking. You put it there by abiding in an imagined environment of thoughts strung together by logic and intellect, so as to present an orderly picture representing order but which can't possibly be reflecting order because in its fabrication, you were never connected with Source. You were never grounded in the essence of your Being. It was all a head trip.

Again, let's go through the steps:

God, being all, is God being all there is of you. There is literally nothing else present where any of you are, than God. When, however, you imagined that you could have a thought of your own, and stringed together a series of thoughts that could have effect, and you said, "Father . . ." as though you could actually stand separate from Him and speak to Him, "Father, I'd rather see it my way, I'm going to think my way through things now on, thank you. I'm going to abandon the experience of Knowing, which is omniscient."

And so, in that so-called act of independence, in which you pretended to become independent, you began to be a little bit insane—out of your right mind. And because you can't do that because God is all there is to you, you experienced a dissonance—a very unnatural feeling—an uncomfortable feeling. Why uncomfortable? Because sanity can't present you with anything less than that which is obviously incompatible with you because of what you divinely are.

The dissonance is saying, "Come back Home. You're trying to do something that won't work, that's all. Stop trying to do it."

But this little independent entity, trying to stand there in his own right, says, "Oh, you're trying to tell me I'm doing something wrong? You're trying to tell me I'm guilty of something? Are you trying to tell me that this feeling is guilt? Well, I'm going to overcome this!"

Something in you knew that it wasn't natural so you used that knowledge to say, "This isn't natural to me in this independent state, therefore, I'm going to learn how to overcome it."

Now, as I brought out in the last couple of sessions, it isn't what you're thinking that is the problem, it's that you are abiding in an arena of thought processes which you cannot attempt to be in without having this dissonant experience which has come to be called, "guilt;" something which seems to call for penalty and therefore, is a fearful thing to you. When, as I brought out, the dissonance is not calling for penalty; it is not stating guilt, it is your sanity saying, "Stop trying to do something that won't work. You can't do anything really that won't work, therefore, there can be no penalty for it; therefore, abandon the project if you will, abandon your goal and come back Home into your right mind, that's all."

Now, if you were to do the two-step, truly asking, "What's the truth here in my Brother? What does my Brother need to know?" And what your Brother needs to know is the truth about him—the divine truth—the real truth about the divine one he is. When you ask that, you're abandoning your isolated position; you're abandoning your arrogance; you're abandoning your insistence upon being separate and special. And when you do that, you open the door for connection to occur; for a real relationship to happen. And you will find satisfaction and peace with him because your union with him will be real.

Again, and you need to write this down and put it somewhere where you can read it frequently:

Guilt doesn't come from your thoughts. Guilt is not the result of wrong thoughts. And innocence is not the result of right thoughts. The dissonance you are feeling that you call guilt, is simply an indicator that you are indulging in thinking, period. And you are not in the silence—in the Now—at the Altar in you, where the Presence of God Be-ing you can register with you; infill you, and reveal to you what is true about your Brother and thereby yourself.

Continuing . . .

It is inevitable that those who suffer guilt WILL attempt to displace it because they DO believe in it. Yet, though they suffer, they will not look within and let it GO.

See, they've displaced it: "You will be the death of me yet! You inconsiderate so-and-so! You are so thoughtless that you make me miserable!"

Now, you know what? The one being spoken to may be being miserable; may be being irritable, irritating and thoughtless; may be behaving poorly, but that can't be the death of you.

The only thing that can make that the death of you is the thoughts you're choosing to think. And the fact that you're unwilling to step back to find out what's causing the distress you're having that you're blaming on so-and-so, who will be "the death of you yet!"

You haven't stepped back and engaged in the correction that will dissolve the dissonance. And the correction, again, will not be having a better thought about your Brother. The correction will come from abandoning thinking, period, about your Brother and inviting the infilling of clarity—of clarification of truth to you.

Your Brother's point of view may still need correction even though you are not engaging in reaction. You're seeing things from the environment of thought processes; thinking, in other words, does not cause your Brother to behave poorly. His own confusion causes him to behave poorly. It's that simple.

So you, by virtue of thinking poorly about your Brother, does not cause your Brother to behave poorly, nor does it cause you to see bad behavior that isn't occurring. In other words, you cannot cause your Brother to become something he is not by virtue of your thoughts.

I must squelch this idea that what you see that is untrue about your brother is purely a figment of your imagination. He may well be behaving poorly.

The key here though, is that if you don't do the two-step, if you don't insist on abandoning your thought processes, you will not be able to step out of the dissonance that is inherent in your attempt to be independent from your Father. And that dissonance will color everything you see and everything you do. And what you will do is to project that guilt onto your Brother; laying it on top of his own poor behavior that he needs to correct by experiencing an influx of clarity himself.

And so you cannot solve the problem that way. And if you say, "The bad that I'm seeing my Brother do is all in my own mind," that leaves you and your Brother in a position where correction and healing cannot occur.

Why? Because that statement was a thought—"The bad I'm seeing my Brother do is entirely in my mind,"—that is a thought; a thought that did not arise out of your doing the two-step.

If you go within and you ask of the Father, "What is the truth here, what needs to be known?" You will not be told that the bad behavior you're seeing is a result of your misperception and that your Brother is perfect with no correction called for.

No. If your Brother is ignorant, if he is still imagining that he's gotten a divorce from his Father, and if he's not drawing upon His Father's Mind asking It to infill him so that he might discover that it is his Mind; if he doesn't realize that, he's lost.

If he can't do the two-step, you must. Because he deserves to have somebody do it, just as you deserve to have Me do it with you.

Again . . .

It is inevitable that those who suffer guilt WILL attempt to displace it . . .

In other words, those who suffer guilt are the ones who are claiming to be independent and experiencing this dissonance. And if you're not awake, that description fits you.

It is inevitable that those who suffer guilt . . .

. . . which means every single one of you to one way or another . . .

It is inevitable that those who suffer guilt WILL attempt to displace it because they DO believe in it.

You DO believe in it.

Yet, though they suffer, . .

. . . though you suffer, . .

. . . they will not look within and let it GO.

You will not look within and let it GO. Let it go how? By abandoning thinking and getting into the moment. And as I've said now for the third week, a really simple way to let it go is, to just stand still for a moment outside the post office or wherever you might be, and bless the people who go by you. Bless them by acknowledging that even if you can't see it, you believe or know—you can be daring enough to say that you know—that if there's anything there where that Brother is, it has to be God or there couldn't seem to be anything less.

Stand there and bless them by acknowledging that you know that in order for there to appear to be just a human being—a body of matter, God must be there Be-ing what's really there in spite of what you're seeing. And you acknowledge God in them. You bless the divinity that has to be there.

That's how you break it. You break it by joining with a Brother with an acknowledgement of the truth about them even if the truth you're experiencing is intellectual for the moment. What you're doing is bringing your mind into alignment with reality. And that interrupts your independence—your separate specialness, and lets love through that blesses them and will bless you by changing your mind.

You must look within and let it go by doing the two-step.

Again . . .

It is inevitable that those who suffer guilt WILL attempt to displace it because they DO believe in it. Yet, though they suffer, they will not look within and let it GO. They cannot know they love, and cannot understand what loving IS. Their main concern is to perceive the source of guilt outside themselves, BEYOND their own control.

And the minute you can convince yourself that it's beyond your control, you are lost souls; doomed to hellfire and brimstone of the mind; until finally, you say somewhere down through eternity, "I've had enough of this!" And something in you rises up and says, "I'm going to do something different than think the way I've been thinking. I'm going to abandon thinking. I'm going to go into the silence and I'm going to..." What? "...I'm going to, in the silence, feel into my Brother by undefendedly being present with my Brother. So that in my openness, Who and What my Brother really Is can reveal itself to me because that is It's inclination. That is Its function."

All of Creation, as I've said before, has one intent: To communicate what it is to all of the rest of Creation. What your Brother divinely is, separate and aside from whatever he thinks he is, and whatever he thinks he has to do, sits there untarnished untouched by whatever he thinks, intent upon communicating what the Father is Be-ing right there as that one, to you and to everyone.

The experience of what your Brother is will not be a string of thoughts or a definition. It will be a Knowing; a complete fullness of infinite meaning with nothing of what that one is divinely left out; none of it waiting until you're finished experiencing this part and absorbed it completely and now you're ready for the rest of it; but all of it, all at once, in complete unity.

You know what? If you have experienced lifetimes of being confused without relief, and as a result of being confused, you have behaved poorly and you have apparently caused difficulty for many, and if during those lifetimes you have had to live with others who have lived lifetimes of behaving poorly because they're confused, and they have distressed you, and if you have behaved poorly for eons, it doesn't mean a thing.

In other words, it isn't as though eons of being confused have, like water dripping upon a rock, created a rock in an ugly shape that defines you so solidly that you can't possibly become free from the configuration that has resulted.

Now, that may sound a little nebulous and perhaps vague. So let's say the same thing a different way because you can always tell the truth in many different ways.

Let's say that in this lifetime—this lifetime only, you have been confused and you have behaved poorly, and you have created distress for many on an ongoing basis and you have apparently created enemies. And your behavior has been so poor that you have been incarcerated—placed in prison. And look forward to a lifetime of imprisonment, or a good part of your lifetime imprisoned as though your behavior has set the configuration of your life into stone.

Do you deserve to be lifted out of it? Do you deserve to be lifted out of eons of lifetimes of confusion and do you especially deserve to be freed from it if all that has bound you are simple ignorance's not actualities of any sort?

Of course you deserve it. Your Brothers deserve it. Everyone you run into during the day deserves better than what they're currently experiencing. Because if they are not awake, they are experiencing the dissonance that accompanies thinking that feels like guilt and seems to constantly call for penalty as though the ax is hanging over your head, constantly.

Every single one of you are experiencing this and everyone of you deserve to be free of it. How far do you go for your Brother? If you do this two-step and your Brother is still acting like an obnoxious ass, do you persist? Yes, you do!

How do you persist? By looking at that Brother and blessing him; which means saying, "In spite of what you're presenting to me and in spite of what my conditioned thinking is interpreting that I'm seeing, I know that in order for anything to be there at all, God must be there Be-ing all there is of you. And I want to see that. I want to have that Presence of God in you, as you, revealed to me. And so I'm going to, on the basis of that statement, shut up—zip my lip—and listen for God to reveal Himself in you to me because you're worth it!"

And although this might seem or sound selfish, you can finish the sentence by saying, "And I know that what I give, I get to have."

Now you could say that we're violating the statement here that says,

No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it in that strange relationship.

[Chuckles] If you're joining with your Brother for a real salvation, you will get it. The kind of salvation that was being talked about that said,

No-one who would unite in ANY way with ANYONE for his OWN salvation will find it in that strange relationship.

. . . is referring to getting something from your Brother at his expense but to your benefit. No, that's the misuse of a relationship.

The proper use of a relationship is to love your Brother enough to give the acknowledgment of the truth about him. Because in the act of abandoning your isolation and independence, and in your act of caring for your Brother and extending to him—giving to him—the acknowledgement of the truth about him, you do benefit.

Your function is to look into your Brother's eyes and remember God. Right?

Hey, [chuckles] remembering God is a profound experience. That is a benefit. But you see the difference? You benefit from extending a benefit. Your Brother is your salvation. It says throughout the Course: Your Brother is your salvation. So you can expect to experience salvation from your Brother when you give your love to him. Because you're breaking the isolation. You're annulling the divorce from your Father and you're choosing to come back into your right Mind and your true function.

Now, if you go through this next week and you still find yourself not being able to hold onto this, don't worry, we're gonna talk about it again next week because it's important and it's wonderful. It's the truth. It is ecumenical. It sets you on the right path. And it's a path that changes the world.

Understanding guilt, [slight chuckle] is not really a matter of understanding the awfulness of it. Understanding guilt is to understand how vacuous it is; how flimsy it is; how non-existent it is. And this is good to see. And you can be happy about understanding what guilt is more clearly than you ever have before. Because it will constitute your, what? Restoration.

In the Sparkly Book, the Section we're reading is called, "RELEASE AND RESTORATION." In the other two editions, it's called, "RELEASE FROM GUILT." (repeats) Release from guilt—how flat could you get? Release from guilt. Wow, that really turns you on, right? Release from guilt. It's like...and so then what? All we're going to talk about is release from guilt and let it go?

No, it's release and...it's like release from guilt and it's consequent or its consequence: Restoration. Release and restoration. You, coming back into your right Mind. You, rediscovering that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. And that it never was appropriate for you to be tinier than infinite; experiencing a tiny little private mind of your own constituted of thinking; the presence of which suggests a thinker; a thinker that can never be more than an orphan—an orphan that can't possibly exist because nothing is fatherless.

So, be happy to be becoming clear about the nature of guilt because the release of it will constitute your restoration to your right Mind. And by God, let's trust that the restoration to your right Mind will occur before we get to the end of this book, because you deserve to be experiencing it now. And there is nothing but confusion keeping you from experiencing it now. And confusion is not a presence, it's not an actuality. It's a discombobulation. And discombobulations have not the capacity to endure.

And so, on that happy note, I will say good-evening. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 10th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We've been talking about guilt. We haven't been talking about [gestures to the audience] you, or any of you as being guilty, we've been talking about guilt. And we've been talking about the fact and presenting it as a fact, that guilt is just an idea which you employ or which you don't employ.

It's a mean-spirited thought that you employ or don't employ. You apply it like pinning a tail on a donkey. You apply it to your friends and your enemies. And you apply it to yourself.

And then you act as though what you've applied to yourself is real and valuable and valid. And when you do that, you immediately set up for yourself an expectation of a penalty being extracted from you. And you fear the penalty. And you keep yourself, [chuckles] yes, you keep yourself in an unforgiving state—an unforgiving ongoing state of misery.

Once you begin to see that guilt is a thought or an idea which you are employing and not an actual thing, it will become clear to you that it isn't anything you can actually suffer from and it isn't anything that you need to take seriously. That in fact, it's something you can simply set aside. It is something that you no longer have to practice on yourself and it's something that you no longer have to practice on anyone else.

The only thing is, there's a little bit of a hooker. And that is, that in order for you to set it aside, you have to abandon the thing that has created the inner experience of discomfort that you are identifying as guilt. And that something that you have to abandon, is a strong commitment that you have that you are self-created; that you've just been born of a sperm and an egg and that you're a physical embodiment of an organism of life, and that you're on your own—you're all by yourself; that you make up the rules; that you make your life what you want to make it and it's all up to you.

This attitude overlooks something. And that is, that, that which creates something knows how that something came to be. And you don't have the foggiest notion of how you came to be. Here you are! You can't explain it. I mean, you really can't explain how it is that a microscopic sperm and a microscopic egg joining together could make this incredible being that you are; with a capacity to think, with a capacity to be conscious, let's put it that way, and experience infinity. No one can account for the being that each one of you is, by virtue of the penetration of an egg by a sperm and conceptualization happening.

So obviously, if you're going to be honest about it, you didn't create yourself. And it's not all up to you. And there is something else that is responsible for your existing.

The reason you feel uncomfortable and you call the discomfort guilt, you also call it fear, is because you are assuming a responsibility for your existence that cannot rest on your own shoulders. And when you try to take that on your own shoulders, you feel the fact that something is wrong here. You can feel the fact that what you are trying to do isn't natural.

But the thing is, that this little independent mind that you think you are, sees that and takes it on as a challenge and says, "I can overcome this! And I am going to overcome it, come hell or high water!" And sheer willfulness and determination comes into play, is brought into play by each one of you in an attempt to overcome this uncomfortable undercurrent of energy that you call either fear or guilt.

Now, as we've been discussing for a number of weeks now, the only way to dissolve and get rid of that undercurrent is not by thinking better; is not by being better, but rather by abandoning the attempt to be something all by yourself, on your own, independent from everything else and saying, "If I didn't create myself but I'm here, something must be responsible for my being here. If that's the case, that means that right now and forever, I have been in a relationship of some sort with That which is being me, since I am not being myself."

This Something that you're in partnership with or that you are inseparable from, has been called many things but the one that all of you are familiar with is the word, God.

Now, if you want to get out of the arena or the level of experience in which guilt is felt and fear is felt, you simply have to abandon the idea or thought that you and you alone are responsible for your well-being and what your life will be, and for your very existence. And abandon the responsibility that comes along with that thought. And say to whatever this Something is that you are in partnership with, "I yield to You, I yield to being in a partnership. I abandon my insistence upon autonomous independence and autonomous or independent capacity to be creative all by myself.

The moment that you, in effect say, "Father," or "God," or "That which Is and always has been All There Is," the moment you say words like that, you're abandoning your independence—you are letting in Something else. And when that invitation to active or conscious partnership instead of unconscious partnership; that invitation to conscious partnership moves you out of the arena in which fear and guilt can be felt, whether what you were feeling guilty about has changed or not, whether you have started thinking better thoughts or not, the simple fact is, that you have all thought and reasoned poorly because you thought that the discomfort or dissonance that you were experiencing was real and was a statement of guilt that was truly yours, that called down upon you necessarily, punishment of some sort that was really going to hurt. And was going to hurt so much that you were willing to bring all of your energy to bear upon the situation to avoid it without doing the one essential thing, which was or which is abandoning the attitude of independence and consciously embracing this partnership which has eternally been the fact about you.

Now you all know or most of you know that if you meditate, it doesn't matter what state of mind you've been in before you sat down to meditate. If you were in a state of fear; if you were in a state of anger; if you were in a fit of jealousy—all of which were fully justifiable to you—if you sit down and meditate all of them will vanish, for all of their justifiability they are gone and you are experiencing peace. And you have the interesting experience of discovering, and you don't know how it is you know it, but you discover and know that this peace you are experiencing is real; is something more actual about your being than the fear and the jealousy and the anger that you were experiencing before you sat down and meditated. You know that you have moved into, for lack of better words, a different space in which fear and anger and jealousy and on and on and on, are absent.

What seems to escape your attention is, that if you were to stay in that space and return to your activities—whatever they might be—whether it's going to school or going to a job or cleaning a house and being a housewife and a mother or whatever, if you were to stay in that space of peace, you would be able to be fully functional without ever experiencing fear or jealousy or anger or guilt.

And in the absence of all of those negatives, you would find yourself fully able to be responsive in the most incredible and apparently creative ways relative to the housework or the schoolwork or the parenting or whatever.

It's not your Birthright to be experiencing existence that is constantly colored by fear, guilt, anxiety, jealousy, anger and so on.

Now, we're spending quite a bit of time on this subject because guilt is the one subject that you use excessively on yourself and others; and others use on you and themselves. And it's so much of a habit that you don't even realize when you slip into employing it or when you slip into justifying beating yourself up, because you think you're guilty of something you should have done better.

And yet, the simple answer to the problem of being—what you might call the problem of being—lies in the one single act of abandoning the practice of guilt.

If you're not valuing guilt and therefore are not employing it on yourself or on others, what could be said about you? What could describe your state of existence? Well, the simple one word: forgiveness. If you're not employing guilt, you're being the state of forgiveness. In other words, you're being the absence of the employment of guilt—the exercise of guilt, the attack of guilt.

And by comparison with when you were employing those things, you will appear to have changed and to have become a very forgiving person.

But, let's understand something: The tendency is to believe that forgiveness is something you offer to somebody who really has been guilty; and you absolve them of their very real guilt by your great and grand generosity in your extension of forgiveness to them. And that is—pardon me—bullshit! Crap! It is stupidity!

Forgiveness is really a word describing you being in a state of mind where the practice of guilt is absent. That's all. And you extend to your brother your willingness to see him as guiltless.

You see, if you can meditate and go into the Silence within and find the experience of guilt to be gone and the fear associated with it, or you can find anxiety absent, and your blood pressure going down; and if you can find jealousy absent, and you have the experience of the Peace of Your Being that you know is actual and that the fear, anxiety, jealousy, guilt and so on was an invalid or unreal distorted mental experience, then you will be able to look at your brother and know that if he's experiencing any of those things or if she is experiencing any of those things, they are an invalid experience for them as well. And they need to be free of it. And they can be free of it by being or becoming willing to abandon all attempts to be a really excellent autonomous actor; creator of his experience at the expense of his awareness of his Creator; at the expense of his awareness of his Oneness with his fellow man.

Your brother doesn't deserve to be deluded any more than you have deserved to be deluded. And so, you can't sit there and forgive him for something you can now see he never did. He just got confused and thought he was on his own and was overwhelmed with the responsibility of being on his own well enough so that everybody would respect him. He got overwhelmed by it. And in the state of overwhelm, he reacted. And his reactions didn't match the reality of what he really is, or of what his fellow man really is.

And so, he and his fellowman—you and your fellowman—have bounced off of each other's ideas of righteousness and thoughts of whether or not you're worth it or they're worth it; and confidences that you're not worth it but you've got to try; and that they're not worth it—and [chuckle] they're so not worth it—that you're not willing to try to have a better sense of them than you currently have.

And so, you bounce off of each other negatively and it's your misperception bouncing off of their misperception. And none of it will happen; none of it would happen if you hadn't adopted this idea that you and you alone, all by yourself, are the sole cause and creator of whatever your life becomes. It's that simple.

So, when the Course teaches forgiveness, it does not mean that you're forgiving your brother for a very real guilt that he is subject to. You are rather, standing without judgment—choosing to see your brother with the help of God's Perspective, which is indelibly built into you—and simply neglecting to inflict guilt upon him or upon her.

And, if they still behave as though they are guilty, because they're so convinced that they are on their own and totally responsible for themselves; and it's too overwhelming a job for them, you can confidently and competently and lovingly stand with them and, for lack of better words, educate them out of it—help them come out of their confusion—because you can see they don't deserve to be suffering. They may need to change; but they can and because they can, they don't need to be suffering forever. And they deserve your time and attention.

As I said last week, the nature and function of the Course is ecumenical, it's inclusive, it's embracing, it's loving. And if your life isn't reflecting more and more of your willingness to embrace, if it isn't easier and easier for people to be around you and if it isn't easier and easier for you to be around people, it's because you've missed the point. The point is Brotherhood, and the point is friendship; the point is communication and communion; the point is togetherness; the point is being without dissonance, without stress, without jealousy, without fear, without guilt, so that the experience of a relationship is at once peaceful and fulfilling.

Now, those are two key words. Peaceful could make it sound as though the nature of the relationship might become boring. But fulfilling expresses exactly the opposite because fulfillment is far from boring. It's invigorating. It's satisfying. It's, for lack of better words, enlarging. It makes you feel bigger, fuller, more all inclusive than before. And this is the nature of relationships when guilt ceases to be employed.

I'm going to come back as I did last week, to this paragraph because it's so important to remember it, since the subject of guilt always implies condemnation upon you for some legitimate reason; a condemnation that you seem not to be able to get out from under, which is why it calls for such strenuous effort on your part to overcome this injustice, you see.

And as I've just explained that isn't what guilt is and that isn't the response that is called for. Now . . .

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.¹

What's the holy sign that's in you? It's called the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit was placed in you by God.

It . . .

. . . is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.

And you could say, in spite of how you have come to think about yourselves; it doesn't matter what you've come to believe about yourself, what you have believed cannot change what you were created to be. You don't think that you could decide to become a dog or a cat and succeed at it.

Now, you might try crawling around on all fours and barking or meowing and rubbing up against the furniture and peeing on the floor and do all the things that puppies and kitties do. But you would still be a human being behaving [chuckle] idiotically, wouldn't you? [Laughing] Because you can't change what you are by imagining that you're something else and even behaving as though you are something else.

So . . .

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.

Now, again the Holy Spirit is another word for; are other words for; that which is nothing more than your right Mind. And mind you, your right Mind isn't an esoteric or a metaphysical concept. When you meditate and you come to that place of peace within yourself, where there is perfect quiet, you're experiencing your right Mind; which is why the fear and the anxiety and the guilt and the jealousy and so on are absent.

The place of quiet is right in the middle of you; right in the center of you where the Altar of God is. As the Course puts it, where the Presence of God being truly you is, which is your right Mind. It's right there in the middle of you.

He does not value you as you do.

. . . God doesn't. That means he doesn't devalue you as you devalue yourself. At the moment you don't value yourself highly. You value yourself lowly. And then you spend your lives struggling to get higher. When all the time that you have adopted this tiny stance and self-concept, you cannot accomplish that any more than you can accomplish becoming a dog. And so, you're practicing being something that you can't be, but it doesn't change what you are.

Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence?

. . . meaning in you?

Well you sure think you can. And you sure think other people can see it in you. And you sure can become upset about what you think they might do, because they know you're guilty.

But the fact is, that the only reason they can see guilt in you is because they think guilt is a violable, meaningful thing to be employed—something that is real. And they don't yet see, as you don't yet see, that it's a discomfort that everyone naturally feels when they try to do something they can't do, or when they try to be something they cannot be. And their innate sanity tells them, "You cannot do this. You're trying to do the impossible." And it has a sensation that gets your attention. It's your sanity saying, "Stop trying to do this! You can't succeed! Give it up! Come back into your right Mind."

So . . .

Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence?

Well, yeah, you can.

You can DENY his knowledge, but you cannot CHANGE it.

You can believe and claim that you're guilty, but you cannot change the fact that you aren't.

Look, then, . . .

. . . what?

. . . upon the light He placed within you, and learn that what you feared was there HAS BEEN replaced with love.

You're all afraid that if you look within you will find confirmation of your guilt and it will condemn you to a state of existence that you will never be able to get out of. And so, of course, you don't want to look within. It's sort of like saying, you don't want to meditate, because that's what looking within is—meditating. And if you have meditated, you found that when you've gone within you haven't found confirmation of your guilt. You've been removed from the arena in which that seems to be going on. And what you need to do is to hold on to that state of peace and insist upon going through your day being out from that place.

And how do you do that? You say, "Father, God,"—whatever word you want to use—you say, "Father, stay with me, and help me be in this place. Help me not suddenly slip and abandon You. Let me not forget about being joined, so that when apparent challenges come my way, I will stay with You and look at it from this peace which is inseparable from our joining. So that I might live through what comes up in ways that identify peace and fulfillment and nothing else. Because I really want to exist differently than the way I have been existing."

Now, let's continue from where we left off last week.

When you maintain that you are guilty but the source lies in the PAST, you are NOT looking inward.

Remember, past isn't really an existential part of time, just as the future is not. The past is memory and the future is imagination. The only thing that you have as a conscious experience ever, is the moment you are in—now. In the now you may draw upon memory to remember the past and to remember the injustices and the hurts; and to remember the mistakes you made and perhaps how they hurt other people; and how, therefore, you are guilty. And you use the past as justification for penalizing yourself and causing yourself to be miserable now, when the past isn't going on and where the call for penalty, for guilt, is non-existent.

So . . .

When you maintain that you are guilty but the source lies in the PAST, you are NOT looking inward.

If you were looking inward, you would be moving into the quiet place in you, your center, you would be meditating. And there you cannot find the past. All you can find there is an incredibly heightened experience of now. Not so bad to have that kind of an experience available to you so easily.

The past is not IN you. Your weird associations . . .

. . . mental associations—your connecting together of ideas and memories to create a picture that justifies your being mad at yourself or justifies your being mad at somebody else. These . . .

Your weird associations to it have no meaning in the present. Yet you let them stand between you and your brothers, with whom you find no REAL relationships at all.

"Well, you know, look at you. You know, the way you're behaving today is the way you behaved a year ago; and a year before that, and ten years before that. You know, look at you; your history convicts you—now. And I'm going to hold you to whatever it is you're doing right now. I'm going to hold you to it with criticism because not only is it a stupid thing to be doing now, it is a demonstration of the fact that you haven't learned anything for ten years. You're just where you were ten years ago. And you know what? I don't know, I don't know if I want to continue having patience with you, when you're obviously unwilling to learn."

You let them, your weird associations regarding the past, stand between you and your brothers, with whom you have no real relationships at all. Why? Why no real relationship? Because in the moment you're in that's when the only real thing is happening. That's when you are present with your brother or your sister; or your wife; or your daughter; or your son; or your father; or your mother. In the moment you're in is where connection can occur.

You cannot connect with them five minutes ago. You cannot connect with them a year ago. But if you are looking at them through your memory of all of their past behavior that shows to you that they're unwilling to grow, you're not connecting with them at all. You're connecting with your picture of them; your assessment of them, and the judgments that you have applied to them because of the awful assessments you've been making about them. And so no real connection is occurring now. No real relationship.

You let the past—your memory—stand between you and your brothers, with whom you find no real relationships at all because you're not present with them in the moment where something really is happening.

Can you expect to use your brothers as a means to “solve” the past, and still to see them as they really are?

[Chuckle] Can you reasonably expect to look at them through the lens of the past and at the same time connect with them now? That is an irrational thought. No, you cannot.

Salvation is not found by those who use their brothers to resolve problems which are not there.

Are not where? Are not here, in the moment in which connection can occur. Further, if in the moment where connection can occur, each of you is taking the time to become centered; to become still and not employ memory or imagination, you will find yourself in your peace where judgment is absent; where the capacity to judge is absent, but where the capacity to love is fully present. Where the capacity to be connected in peace and fulfillment exists as an actuality.

So . . .

Salvation . . .

. . . what's salvation? The experience of peace and fulfillment; the experience of joy, of the experience of being conscious without conflict. There you go.

Salvation is not found by those who use their brothers to resolve problems which are not there.

Where? Here, in the now.

You wanted not salvation in the past.

I would say that you always had wanted salvation, but to whatever degree you valued employing guilt and laying guilt trips on others and extracting penalties from them so you could get them to behave in a way that didn't upset your plans, you didn't want salvation. You wanted justice according to your terms of what justice meant. And you were willing to use guilt to accomplish it. You were willing to use guilt as the leverage, the force, to get someone to do what you wanted them to do, whether it was good or not.

So you didn't want salvation in the past, because you preferred to employ something else. That's all there is to it.

Would you impose your idle wishes . . .

In other words, the wishes you were utilizing in the past.

Would you impose your idle wishes on the present . . .

. . . in the now, where connection and communication can really occur?

Would you impose your idle wishes on the present, and hope to find salvation NOW?

Well, I'm going to tell you that you all do. Today, you all have done it in one way or another whether you wanted to or not, whether that was ultimately what you wanted, it's second nature to you at the moment.

And that's why we're spending so much time on this subject. Because you deserve to be free of the habit. You deserve to be free of unconsciously slipping into a way of behaving that is absolutely destructive to the connection in the moment where there's really something happening, where there's really someone present. I'm going to say, where there's really two someone's present to connect with and to experience the bond; to experience the sense of family; whether it's real family or whether it's the grocery store clerk that you're talking to at the moment that is part of the family of man, we'll say.

So why are we talking about it? Were talking about this to motivate you to change; to motivate you to try something else, instead of what hasn't worked forever.

Determine, then, . . .

Become determined and become decisive.

Determine, then, to be not as you were.

Determine to try something new, because there's a new result to a new attitude, always. If there's nothing new, there's been no change of attitude. If there's nothing new, you have not let in any other way of experiencing things than the past ways that you are diligently holding onto for dear life. And which, you are holding onto for dear life because you are afraid of the penalty that is going to come down on you; because you are guilty for something and you don't know what it is. It just hangs there, over you, and threatens you with penalty that you will be very sorry for.

But you know what? It never reveals to you what you are guilty of—never! And you can go looking for it and spend lifetimes trying to find out what it is you are guilty of, and you will never find it. Because you're not guilty of any actions, of any act, of any determination that you were able to carry out in opposition to what reality will allow.

And so you've never accomplished anything that you could actually be penalized for, but you have accomplished something: You've accomplished a frame of mind that is very confused and thinks that things are true that are not true.

But you know what? As the saying goes regarding women, you can always change your mind—even if you're a man. And where women are willing to change their mind—much to the exasperation of men—men can be willing to change their mind too and discover the freedom from bondage to their mindsets that can come from it. Because if you can change your mind, you can decide to stop doing what doesn't work and start doing something that does work even though what does work would never have occurred to you to be a worthy goal before. You see.

You have been taught... taught... taught... taught to use your mind well; to think well, to learn how to be reasonable, to use logic well, to express yourself concisely, to use as few words as possible and have maximum communication. All of these things you've been taught are worthy of your energy and attention. They constitute goals that are significantly meaningful to you.

But you know what? The moment you have a slight glimpse that maybe you're not an autonomous entity and maybe you never were supposed to carry the whole burden of the creation of your life and the success of your life on your shoulders privately; the moment that begins to dawn on you, it becomes easy for you to change your mind and experiment.

Hey, experiment. Try something new. See if it works. And try, not thinking better, not thinking more efficiently, but not thinking at all. Now there's a goal that never would have occurred to you to be a worthy goal. And yet, when you meditate, you move into a place where you're fully, totally conscious but you're not having a single thought. And in the absence of the noise of a thought, this silence is experienced as being infinite—huge, embracing everything. And you can't find words to share that experience with others after you've stopped meditating.

You have a whole new experience of what it means to exist awaiting you when you dare to abandon the valuing and the employing of guilt on yourself or on your brothers and sisters.

Remembering the hooker, as it were, that in order not to experience guilt and employ it on your brothers and sisters you have to abandon your lonely, suffering isolation and you have to acknowledge this something that you have to be in partnership with if, indeed, you did not create yourself.

So, if you simply face the facts that you don't know how you created yourself and therefore you can't possibly have created yourself; and you just acknowledged that there must be something in addition to you responsible for you—responsible for your existence—that moves you out of your isolation, that is the equivalent of meditating.

And in that union—that partnering, let's say—with your Creator, you open up to yourself the means of being guiltless and of recognizing, realizing that your brother and sister and everyone and everything is guiltless. And you're able to have compassion upon your brothers and sisters who are still feeling guilty, because it's clear to you that they don't need to be. And in the absence of your judgment on their insensitive and crazy behavior—because they are confused—in the absence of that judgment on your part, you find them worth giving your energy and attention to in helping them abandon their ignorance.

Determine, then, to be not as you were.

. . . in the past. And I would add, determine then, to not try to be what you want to be in the future. Abandon both ends of the spectrum, so that you can be present in the moment where things are really happening and things are really available to experience.

Use no relationship to hold you to the past, . . .

. . . and I would add, use no relationship to hold anyone else to the past.

. . . but with each one . . .

. . . each relationship . . .

. . . each day be born again.

What does that mean? Oh-h-h, you're gonna roll around on the floor and talk in tongues and, you know, be born again. No. In each moment, be in the moment where connection can occur, because there's really something present to connect—or there are two something's present to really connect. And in being willing to be in that moment you are born again, you are able to experience Be-ing without it being colored by the past. And in that sense it's new, and you're born again.

So . . .

Use no relationship to hold you to the past, . . .

You know it's what you all do. But it isn't getting you anything helpful. So, you know, there's no judgment here, it's not: "Use no relationship to hold you to the past, you idiot!" No, don't do anything silly or ridiculous. You don't have to use relationships to hold you to the past.

. . . but with each one each day be born again.

You can do that instead. You know, it's a simple penalty-less choice you have. It's Grace.

A minute, even less, will be enough to free you from the past, . . .

When it says even less than a minute, it can just be the moment. Your willingness to just be innocently present in the moment, bringing nothing ugly into it; being innocently aware in the moment—in just a moment—that's all it takes to free yourself from the past and the future.

A minute, even less, will be enough to free you from the past, and give your mind in peace over to the Atonement.

The Atonement: the transition or the transformation within you in which you stop trying to be what you aren't and let yourself be what you Are. When you stop trying to be independent and let yourself be joined in a Partnership that is an unalterable and essential part of existing for you.

When everyone is welcome to you as you would have yourself be welcome to your Father, you will see no guilt in you.

Now, you might have thought that, that sentence should say:

When everyone is welcome to you as you would have yourself be welcome to your Father, you will see no guilt in . . .

. . . them. [Chuckle] You see. But no, you will see no guilt in you. When you are willing to be present with your brother and give to him the awareness of his guiltlessness you get to keep what you've given.

. . . and you will see no guilt in you.

That's just the simplicity of the way things work.

But you know what? Most of you have great faith in the complicated. And because it's complicated it must be really valuable. And it must really be worth the energy it takes to get the complicated thing under your belt so that you can utilize it well. It's all in simplicity.

Again . . .

When everyone is welcome to you as you would have yourself be welcome to your Father, you will see no guilt in you. For you will have accepted the Atonement, . . .

. . . the transformation and presence of peace and fulfillment in you.

. . . you will have accepted the Atonement, which shone within you all the while you dreamed of guilt, and would not look within and see it.

Again, you . . .

. . . would not look within and see it.

. . . because from your guilt ridden perspective, the flat-out assumption was made, that when you looked within you would find absolute confirmation of your guilt that you would never in all of eternity be able to escape from. And the fact is, that such confirmation is not there.

The truth about guilt is the most wonderful truth you can learn and embrace. It is what will finally transform the world.

I could ask: Are you willing to be agents for change of that sort? Well, let me ask this: Is it worth it not to be an agent for change of that sort, if not being an agent for change of that sort means that you will never experience your guiltlessness? Is anything worth that? Especially now that you know that there's a way to escape an illegitimate imposition of guilt upon you that has kept you struggling without resolve forever and ever, as long as you've employed it.

So, this coming week holds a great deal for all of you; the transformation of the world that you'll get to keep.

I'm so happy for you. I want you to be happy for yourselves, because you deserve what the subject of this section is called, "Release and Restoration."

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 18th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we're going to jump right in . . .

Guilt is an act of insanity that all of you engage in because you have forgotten who you Are.

That means that guilt is an illusion. Guilt is an imagination. Guilt is a figment of the imagination. And yet, you all employ it as though it's an actuality. And you bring it into play with vigor against yourself and against each other. And you think that its excellent employment is what will give you credibility and respectability.

But of course, the key is, that this self that is going to get respectability is an orphan—something else imagined; something else, not actual.

And to get free of the insanity of the practice of guilt, one has to finally become willing to abandon the stance of orphan. And of course, in order to do that, one has to not only, let's say, remember who you Are, you have to accept who you Are—the offspring or expression of Something else not yourself; God.

And then you have to be willing as we said last week, to go into partnership [chuckles] or to re-assume a partnership that was never absolved or never dissolved except in the imagination.

Now, before we continue on, there is an aspect of guilt that really needs to be not only understood, but felt by each of you. You think guilt is actual and so you employ it. So far so good, unless you're employing it against yourself. If you're employing it against your Brother, so far so good, you think, because you're not called upon to feel guilty when you're calling upon your Brother to feel guilty. But just wait until your Brother does the same thing to you and calls upon you to feel guilty. Um-m...now you're getting into hot water. And you, if you pay attention to the experience of guilt, find that it is always accompanied by fear. Always. And the thing you don't realize is, that fear is always accompanied by guilt.

You might think, "Oh, well, I'm afraid if I see a truck bearing down on me or I'm afraid if I see somebody about to attack me and that has nothing to do with guilt."

Oh, it does...it does. Because you cannot avoid feeling guilty for what you're incompetent to respond to.

If you're incompetent to deal with a diesel truck bearing down on you that you can't get out of the way of, or if you feel incompetent to deal with a bully; you're five-foot-two and this six-foot tall macho guy is bearing down on you with no respect for your puny self, you feel fear, you say. But no, you feel incompetent to cope with the situation. And that always introduces guilt.

Guilt is the experience of dissonance that you have when you think that you are an orphan; when you think, first of all, that you are a definition you've given yourself that is not the truth about you.

To be an orphan is to feel incompetent. It's a fearful experience. And because it involves, at the bottom line, a denial of your heritage; a denial of your Birthright because it's a denial of your having a Source other than yourself, or processes of evolution, the experience of guilt and fear always accompany each other. And it's not your Birthright to be experiencing them.

Now, here's what happens. Here's the actuality of the experience—the apparent experience of guilt and fear: Guilt or fear presents itself, always with its partner, no matter which one seems to present itself first. And then, fear and guilt create a continuous loop—a continuous loop that responds to itself over and over and over and over and feeds on itself and seems to become greater and greater and more fascinating and more fascinating and more compelling.

It actually becomes mesmeric; hypnotic. And you lose your capacity to be in balance. You lose your capacity to experience with perspective. And ultimately, you will exert guilt upon your Brother in whatever ultimate form you can come up with. And of course, you lay the dirtiest of the dirt about your Brother on him last—you save the best for last; the thing that will make him buckle and fall to his knees, you know. "If you don't yield to me, I'm going to tell your wife that you had an affair with Pricilla. I'll make it very public. I'll ruin your marriage, I'll ruin your life, I'll foul things up for you at your job." You see? Oh boy, more guilt, more fear.

And why do you do this? Because you have become mesmerized. You have been caught in this loop. When you get caught in the loop, you're always rehearsing the same information over and over and over again; the same distorted insane information over and over again with more and more gusto, more and more commitment. And it seems to become impossible for you to even want to know the truth.

You're not the least bit interested in knowing whatever it is that might allow you to calm down and not feel this way anymore. Why? Because you want justice!

For you to have been put in a position where you're having to acknowledge your incompetence, you want justice because that was so unkind—so not nice.

Competence cannot be gained by the skillful employment of guilt and fear.

Now, don't be so spiritual that you're not willing to look at your behavior and examine it honestly within yourself because you all know when you've gotten angry and angrier and angrier and you've finally flown off the handle at the expense of your Brother or your Sister and you just couldn't help yourself.

Now, you can fool yourself by saying that this response is a survival response; that, in terms of survival, you have two choices: Fight or flight. And of course, if you're not going to be a wimp, you're not going to use flight as the option, you're going to fight. You're going to stand and aggressively protect yourself. Get your credibility back. Get it established in the mind of your enemy—your opponent; the one you're attempting to make feel guilty enough to back down.

What you haven't known is, that this insistence that you feel, upon following through with all of your might to inflict guilt so as to bring about "a good result" is a result of mesmerism; is an example of your behavior not being controlled by your innate intelligence, but rather from you're getting caught in a continuous loop that feeds on itself and literally embodies no intelligence at all. And literally, therefore, cannot lead you to a solution of the problem that started it.

Now, I've brought this up before, because you all talk about wanting to wake up—you're all reading the Course because you want to wake up—or you want to experience enlightenment and something in you knows that there is really such a thing as enlightenment. And you know what? In order for you to experience this, you're going to need to experience healing. And you're going to need for your Brothers and Sisters to experience healing. And you're going to need to contribute to the experience of healing. And if what one needs to be healed from can be justified as real, and the result of that one's failure in some area of his life to deal with himself or his experience intelligently, then that justification simply negates completely the opportunity for healing to be experienced.

Whatever standards of reasoning are being used to justify a problem, exist in the different realm, I'm going to say, than the realm of reality where that thing that needs correction doesn't exist. Because, for lack of better words, God didn't create it. God did not create you to suffer. God didn't create your Brother to suffer. God didn't create you to have diseases. God didn't create your Brother to have diseases. God didn't create you or your Brother to have a capacity to mistreat yourself and thereby actually cause justifiable damage or disease that you must therefore suffer through, because you must pay for your flaws and your failure.

God didn't do it. Therefore, whether it's cancer or whether it's a sudden injury from accident, you are not bound. You are not bound to suffer from it for more than an instant. If God didn't set it into motion, it hasn't been set into motion and the experience you're having is not going on in your right Mind.

Because there is another arena, we will say, in which reality is going on and is governed by God, there is awaiting you, escape from whatever mindset you have bound yourself to or whatever false interpretations you have placed upon all of Creation, so that you are misunderstanding it and misbehaving with it in a way that's causing you discomfort.

You all deserve to be healed. You hear that? You all deserve to be healed. There is nothing that exists that can justify your suffering, no matter what. And if you want to experience waking up, if you want to experience enlightenment, you're going to have to stop employing what keeps you from experiencing it.

Now, in metaphysical lingo, let's say, over the last hundred and fifty years, a phrase has come into play and it's not a very kind phrase. But it's one that gets used over and over: "There's a reason for everything." Now, when this is used, metaphysically speaking, it can be used in the most nebulous of ways to imply that if you're having this problem or that problem, well there's a reason for it: "Maybe it's Karma. Maybe it's something that's fouled up in your mind. But there's a reason for everything." Not true.

Let's go into the Book.

As long as you believe that guilt is justified in ANY way, in ANYONE, WHATEVER he may do, you will not look within, where you would ALWAYS find Atonement.¹

Remember, we talked about the fact that when you look within, where you think you are going to find absolute evidence of your guilt, when you actually look within, you will not find it there. You will find love there; the love that is your Be-ing because it is the Presence of God in you. And it is there to be extended to everything you are aware of. And it is natural for it to be extended to everything you are aware of. If you will look within, you will ALWAYS find Atonement.

The end of guilt will never come as long as you believe there is a REASON for it.

Oh-h...well, the orphan says, [chuckles] "That is insane! How can there be no reason for guilt? To believe that is insane." But remember, guilt is an act of insanity employed by one who doesn't remember who he is. Guilt is the active insanity because there is no reason for it.

What would constitute a reason for guilt? The only thing that would constitute a reason for guilt would be God saying, "You are guilty!" Then guilt would be eternally real and actual. But God has yet to have said that. And therefore, guilt has not been set into place as a part of Creation. It doesn't exist as an actuality, only as an insane practice in your minds which means it's just a thought—a thought which you don't have to employ.

And it's this simple clarity that you can embrace and remind yourself of every time you feel inclined to get upset and to employ guilt.

Now, you understand that the employment of guilt is not an act of reason. The employment of guilt is not an act of reason. Not only that, it sets into place this continuous loop that you become subject to because you feed it with your attention and your emotion.

And you become blinder and blinder and blinder to any capacity you have to employ perspective—broad perspective that goes beyond the details of your justifications for guilt; that goes beyond your inclination to harangue your Brother or your Sister and insist upon their being miserable because they're guilty.

Again, as long as you do this, you stay in that continuous loop blind to the broader perspective that shows you the insanity of that continuous loop and the fact that it is not a valid basis for any conclusions to be arrived at from.

You don't want to engage in an insane act that causes you to appear to be insane and causes you to experience yourself as being insane. Why? Because you deserve peace. You deserve the clarity of a balanced perspective and the peace of mind that comes from Knowing who you Are. And that comes from Knowing who your Brother is because you know who you Are.

The end of guilt will never come as long as you believe there is a REASON for it.

And likewise, the end of disease and injury will never come as long as you believe there is a REASON for it.

"What do you mean? I just saw that bus hit that fellow and severed his arm. What do you mean his arm wasn't severed? What do you mean there wasn't any reason for it?"

What I mean is, that if God did not enact that drama, it hasn't happened. And in the realization that it hasn't happened, instantaneous healing can occur. (repeats) Instantaneous healing can occur. Would you not like to be an agent for change for that kind of experience? You can be. But you have to be willing to look at things and not take them the way you have determined them to be by the definitions you have been employing.

A Course In Miracles came into existence, we'll say, because someone said, "There must be a different way to look at this." And there is. But as long as you continue to look the old way and hold onto it with all vigor, you will not see the different way; you will not see the healing; you will not see the transformation and you will not see release and restoration, the subject of this section that we're reading.

Dare to be radical here. But realize that if you're going to be radical and experience transformation, you're going to have to stop doing the thing that keeps you from experiencing the transformation. And the one thing that is going to make that difference is your neglecting to practice guilt; your neglecting to employ guilt and your neglecting to justify yourself or your brother or sister as deserving of the experience of guilt and the penalty that necessarily accompanies it. That choice is yours every moment. You're not bound to suffer, you're not bound to employ guilt, you're not bound to continue to do what doesn't work and what doesn't serve you.

Again . . .

The end of guilt will never come as long as you believe there is a REASON for it. For you must learn that guilt is ALWAYS . . .

... what? . . .

... totally ...

... not just a little bit, but . . .

... totally insane, and HAS no reason. The Holy Spirit seeks not to dispel reality. If GUILT were real ATONEMENT would not be. The purpose of Atonement is to dispel illusions, not to establish them as real and THEN forgive them.

How do you dispel illusions when you think illusions are actualities? How do you dispel your justifications for employing guilt when you think that it's part of the survival mechanism of your being—something as inseparable from you as your existence? How do you dispel that? Well, you don't until someone comes along and says, "Hey, this is not something inseparable from your existence. This is a behavior that you have acquired through ignorance. And you can abandon it."

It's like you've grown up. And every moment of your life, except when you're asleep, is one of constant streaming of thoughts and you think that being conscious is inseparable from thinking. You think that thinking and being are one and the same thing, until one day you learn how to meditate. And then you find that you can experience periods of quiet—pure conscious awareness without a single thought—an experience of being totally aware of everything without thinking a thought about everything; an experience of connection with everything in the silence to a much fuller and deeper degree without any thought processes whatsoever, without any examination of anything, but just by virtue of being conscious.

And then you realize that something that you thought was absolutely inseparable from your existence that was absolutely inseparable from being aware wasn't absolutely inseparable from being aware.

Thinking is not essential to being conscious—fully conscious, and I'm going to say, infinitely conscious. Likewise, guilt is not a part of your very existence. It's not a part of the fiber of your being that is essential for your survival. It is an illusion employed by a delusion. And the delusion that employs guilt is called an orphan. And that's what you have thought you are. But the you that you are is not an orphan. The orphan is just a thought you had about yourself, that you've taken hold of and fleshed out and given more and more definitions to—fleshed your orphanhood out until you thought it was undeniable. But it's not the truth about you either.

The purpose of Atonement is to dispel illusions, not to establish them as real and THEN forgive them.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . u-mm, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . does not keep illusions in your mind to frighten you, and show them to you fearfully to demonstrate what He has saved you FROM. What He has saved you from is GONE.

What He has saved you from is that which He has uncovered an awareness of in you that it never existed—that it was an imagination.

Give no reality to guilt, and see NO reason for it.

Now that is a sentence that needs to be on every bumper on every automobile in the world, or at the least on everyone's refrigerator.

Give no reality to guilt, and see NO reason for it.

That is the answer.

The Holy Spirit does what God would have Him do, and has always done so. He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . has seen separation, but knows of union. He teaches healing but He also knows of creation.

That which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . has seen separation, but knows of union.

That which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . teaches healing but He also knows of creation.

What does that mean? It means that the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—like Me, says healing is what you should be experiencing even though you, in your right Mind, together with Me, know that you've never been less than what God created you as, that you are nothing less than what God is being right where you are right now, and therefore there literally is nothing occurring that needs healing. You see?

You and I know this. At the moment, I'm the only one of us who believes it. But the knowing is in you awaiting your discovery by virtue of your becoming alert enough and having enough broad perspective to see the mechanism of guilt—the insane thought processes that cause this continuous loop to be initiated and to expand until it has consumed you—so that you can let it go because of the perspective you now have.

The Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . would have you see and teach as He does, and through Him.

In other words, the Holy Spirit would have you come into your right Mind, so that your right Mind is no longer the Holy Spirit that you're listening to, but yourself that you've recognized and embraced and are willing to embody.

Yet what He knows you do not know, though it is yours.

What your right Mind knows you do not at the moment know, feel, recognize, experience because you're so confident about the way you're seeing things. And you think that your awakening is going to be built on the way you're currently seeing things. Therefore, it is difficult for you to be willing to let go of what you currently believe because you think what you currently believe is part of the stepping-stone process of arriving where you're going.

No, there is a point where you're going to have to walk to the foyer of the orphanage and step outside and abandon the whole concept of orphanhood and everything associated with it, so that you might remember who you really Are. Your experience of orphanhood is not the stepping-stone to your discovery of yourself as the Son or Daughter of God. It's not.

NOW it is given you to heal and teach, to make what will be NOW.

Now, this does not mean to bring the future into the now. It means to bring the ultimate that is the fact now but which you're not conscious of, which makes it something awaiting you in your future. It means bringing the ultimate into the now.

. . . it is given you to heal and teach, to make what will be NOW.
As yet it is NOT now. The Son of God. . .

. . . you . . .

. . . believes that he is lost in guilt, alone in a dark world where pain is pressing everywhere upon him from WITHOUT.

That's the typical orphan experience.

When he has looked within and seen the radiance there, he will remember how much his Father loves him.

When you actually take time to be silent, to go within, and you find that your thinking has been abandoned and you are experiencing the peace of your being, there is something else accompanying it. It is the experience of Love and the experience of Joy. And the Love is loving you. But you also know that the Love that's loving you is the Love that you Are. And the Love that's loving you is infinite, not confined to what you thought you are; that everything in all of Creation is extending you Love. And this Love that's coming from all of Creation is the Love that you Are. And there is inseparable Oneness.

When he has looked within . . .

. . . the orphan has . . .

. . . and seen the radiance there, he will remember how much his Father loves him. And it will seem incredible that he has ever thought his Father loved him not, and looked upon him as condemned. The moment . . .

. . . now this is a statement of fact:

The moment that you realize guilt is INSANE, WHOLLY unjustified and WHOLLY without reason, you will not fear to look upon the Atonement and accept it wholly.

Listen to this:

You who have been unmerciful unto yourselves do not remember your Father's Love.

You who have been unmerciful unto yourself and unto each other do not remember your Father's Love. And that's why you've been unmerciful to each other. But your Father's Love has been present. And you know what? You have been your Father's Son or your Father's Daughter all along. But you thought you were an orphan and so the word, "Father" was nonsensical, meaningless. That was an insane concept.

You who have been unmerciful unto yourselves do not remember your Father's Love. And looking without mercy upon your brothers, you do not remember how much You love HIM.

God. Because you haven't looked into your brother's eyes yet and remembered God.

Yet it is forever true. In shining peace within you . . .

Here's the truth. Here's the truth about each one of you guilty bastards and each one of you guilty bitches, who do nothing but make life miserable. And who deserve to be drawn and quartered, slowly, so that you experience agony for as long as possible.

That's a different world from reality. And it's all imagination. It's all mean-spirited imagination. And it's mean-spirited imagination that feeds upon itself and grows itself into terrible proportions and consumes you and deprives you of your capacity to be sane and to experience the joy and the fulfillment that is a natural accompaniment of sanity. We'll say, healing that is a natural accompaniment of sanity.

In shining peace within you is the perfect purity in which you were created. Fear not to look upon the lovely truth in you. Look THROUGH the cloud of guilt that dims your vision, . .

. . . cloud, nebulous, effervescent, intangible.

Look THROUGH the cloud of guilt that dims your vision, and look PAST darkness to the holy place where you will see the light. The altar to your Father is as pure as He Who raised it to Himself. Nothing can keep from you what Christ would have you see. His will is like His Father's, and He offers mercy to every Child of God, . .

. . . and here's the hooker . . .

. . . as He would have YOU do.

For the third time in a row, I'm going to go back to this. This is the good news that's been the only news, the only thing that's real.

Within you is the holy sign of perfect faith your Father has in you.

And that holy sign of perfect faith, as I said last week, is the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

He . . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . does not value you as you do.

. . . or does not devalue you as you do.

He knows Himself, and knows the truth in YOU. He knows THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE, for He knows not of differences. Can YOU see guilt where God KNOWS there is perfect innocence?

Well, the orphan says, "Perfect innocence! [Laughing loudly] Crap! There's no innocence there. There's nothing but guilt. And the guilty must pay! And I will see to it that they pay, and pay, and pay, and pay. . ." until what? "Until I say justice has been served."

Let me ask something. All of you have felt this compulsive need for justice, but if something has happened to interrupt your demand for justice, let's say, a little bit of real life comes into the picture and the argument has to stop because one of you has to go to work. So you have to continue the argument at the end of the day after work. And the day goes by and after work you come back home and you just can't get the rev up that you had this morning.

This, the continuous loop, got interrupted and the unreality of the intensity, the insane, non-cohesive, unintelligent nature of the repetition because it's not an actuality, hasn't the capacity to reestablish itself. And by the end of the day you have a new perspective—ah, what?—the larger perspective that's more than just the data contained in the continuous loop. And in the absence of the insanity, it's possible to reconnect in a new and fresh way that allows for restoration of harmony to occur. Why? Because what was disrupting the harmony, never was real.

I entrust you to a wonderful new week, in which you may choose to see that the continuous loop gets interrupted almost [snaps his fingers] instantly when it has first become established by an intent you have to protect yourself by proving another's guilt and scaring him enough to get him to yield and not present you with your incompetence anymore.

Your competence and your incompetence are both aspects of the orphan mentality. And you interrupt the continuous loop by walking out of the orphanage and abandoning the frame of reference. It's that simple. But you have to do it.

And like any nightmare, if you want to step out of the obsessive, compulsive intent to practice guilt, you may well have to wrench yourself awake and do the thing that seems absolutely unjustifiable to you in your fit of anger, which is to interrupt your fit of anger. And by interrupting it, dispel it. Not save it for later when they're not expecting it.

I love you. I love you all. And I want you to have a happier week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 8th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

The experience of being afraid is an unpleasant experience. It's an experience that everyone does everything they can to avoid.

The experience of a brother, in other words, someone other than yourself being afraid, is an unpleasant experience. And the tendency is to want not to have to be confronted by the other's fear and his reactions and his behavior. But to avoid a brother because he's afraid, or because his behavior is erratic or charged or aggressive, is not the answer. To avoid it at all cost only allows for the fear to stay in place and for the behavior to continue.

Now I want you all to remember something: Quite sometime ago I talked about the fact that you cannot prove your innocence. You cannot prove your own innocence. It is foolish to try to do so. It requires another to be an advocate for you to prove your innocence; to illuminate your innocence.

Well, you don't like that [chuckling]. "I can't prove my innocence? You say I don't have the capacity? Then you're saying that I'm vulnerable—just flat out vulnerable."

But if I say to you, "It's your function to look at your brother and remember God." Oh-h...now that pleases you—that's a worthy endeavor, one which if you are successful at it, will speak well of you and your ego is happy.

You see how you can be conflicted within your very own self and like and dislike the same thing?

I know that I have been monotonous. And the Course is monotonous because it keeps saying the same thing:

The answer to your problems, your salvation, lies in your being willing to not be distant from your brother, but to be involved with your brother or sister and to look into his eyes or her eyes and wish to see the truth (to care enough to stand with that one, to be present with that one in an involved way for the purpose of uncovering the truth that's there, uncovering the truth about them to them) because in doing that, you reduce their fear.

And in the reduction of their fear, their behavior changes. And as their fear becomes replaced with peace, because you have been revealing the truth to them, you find them apparently being redeemed. And in the process, you know that you played a part in it—you, being involved with them persistently, were inseparable from the healing.

To look into your brother's eyes and remember God does not mean that you get to look into your brother's eyes and you get to have a remembrance of God regardless of your brother (in other words, you could use your brother as the catalyst for you remembering God). No way! In remembering God you find God right where you're looking—in your brother. And in finding God in your brother and knowing that this awareness has come through you, in-filled you, you learn about yourself. And that is the method, the mode, the manner, the way of Awakening.

Let's go into the Book because we're going to be reading about the means of releasing guilt.

RELEASE from guilt as you would BE released.

In other words, there's only one way to be released from guilt. I've just described how you can participate in another's release from guilt. But, in order for you to do that, you have to let yourself be released from guilt.

How do you do that? You find an Advocate—an Advocate for you. "Well, where do you go to find such an Advocate? I don't see them advertised in the classifieds." Well, you go within. And I will tell you right now that I am your primary Advocate. Your Guides are your advocates. We stand ready to disclose the truth—uncover the truth about you to you and encourage you to dare to believe the truth about you in as many ways as we have to for as long as we have to, in order for you to set aside your fear and your bad behavior and the suffering that is inseparable from it.

God stands as your Advocate. God is Be-ing you at every moment. God is Be-ing you anew every moment and informing you of what you really Are by being you at every moment.

So, what it boils down to is that you have to engage in an invitation to have an advocate. This means inviting someone to help you abandon all the things you're so sure of. Not so that it's just an experience of loss, but so that it makes room for you to be in-filled with the, for lack of better words, glorious truth about you; the wondrousness of God right where you are.

RELEASE from guilt as you would BE released.

Release your brother from guilt as you would be released by doing for your brother what your Advocate does for you.

There is no other way to look within, and see the light of love shining as steadily and as surely as God Himself has always loved His Son.

In other words, if you want to look within and see the light of love shining in you, as steadily and as surely as God Himself has always loved His Son, you, you're going to have to engage in this practice of looking at your brother and wishing to see the truth about him; wishing to see God's truth about him.

Not wishing to see the human explanation: "Aw...he's a bastard, he's a liar, you can't ever trust him, he will never do this, he's got a history of that; blah...blah...blah." That's not the truth about him.

There is no other way to look within, and see the light of love shining as steadily and as surely as God Himself has always loved His Son. AND AS HIS SON . . .

. . . YOU . . .

. . . LOVES HIM.

. . . YOUR FATHER.

As long as you have believed that you are independent; that there may or may not be a God, and there probably isn't and if there is, well, He created you way back and left you free to grow and refine your soul and be an independent entity not having to acknowledge your Source because it wasn't pertinent to your independent self-authorized life. Even though you may have done this, adopted this attitude, you haven't stopped being your Father's Son or Daughter. God has not stopped Be-ing you in every moment.

And so, as I've said, you have always been in a partnership with your Father; with your Source. Therefore, what is true about you, is that you have always loved your Father. Even though you temporarily blinded yourself to the experience by saying, "I don't have a Father, or if I have a Father, He abandoned me way back and left me free—and I'm so glad He did—left me free to chart my own course. He left me free to be my own man; He left me free to be my own woman!"

Now, when you illuminate the truth to your brother by caring enough to look in his eyes and remember God there in him, you illuminate in him what is true about him to him whether he's willing to accept it or not at the moment. And you have fulfilled your function. Your function was not to look at him and condemn him—render him guilty and extract a penalty from him. That's not your function. And when you're engaging in that function, you're keeping yourself from what? Looking within and seeing the Light of Love shining as steadily and as surely as God Himself has always loved His Son; loved you.

When you're not fulfilling your function you are denying yourself the experience of seeing the light in you and you are delaying your brother's capacity, your brother's ability to look within and see the light there in him as well.

If you are fulfilling your function, no matter how poorly it's received, you have made it a little bit easier for your brother to look within and see the light. He's heard about it, he's heard the truth about him. You have taken time to share with him capacities that he didn't think he had with a confidence in you that makes him stop and listen rather than reject it outright and completely. Even so, he may not embrace it but you've made a little chink in his confidence.

Now . . .

There is no fear in love, for love is guiltless.

Remember I said last week that fear and guilt are inseparable, they're partners. You can't have one without the other. But . . .

There is no fear in love, for love is guiltless. You who have always loved your Father can have no fear, for ANY reason, to look within and see your holiness.

Again . . .

You who have always loved your Father can have no fear, for ANY reason, to look within and see your holiness.

Remember, we also talked about the fact that you are afraid to look within because you are absolutely convinced that if you do it genuinely, you will find out just exactly how awful you are and how truly undeserving you are of love or of freedom from guilt that you're experiencing.

And so you neglect to look within with great commitment because you don't want to have to be convicted within yourself unequivocally by an awareness of how awful you are. But . . .

You . . .

. . . the one you divinely are . . .

. . . who have always loved your Father . . .

. . . even if you have temporarily denied Him . . .

. . . can have no fear, for ANY reason, to look within and see . . .

. . . what? Not how horrible you are, but to see . . .

. . . your holiness.

Now, if you're honest with me, although each of you knows that you are fundamentally good people, you do know that you have done things that have been bad. You have done things that have left others at a disadvantage and hurt them. You know you have done things that you, if you brought them out in the public eye would force you to have to pay a penalty—to be convicted and pay for it. You're absolutely sure of that.

And so I'm here, being for you what you need to be for your brothers and sisters; what you need to be each other. I'm here to tell you that you are not what you believe you are; that you cannot be held accountable for fear that has caused you to behave toward your brother or sister in a way that is apparently harmful. You're not accountable in the sense that you can actually cause your brother harm, and that you have actually caused your brother harm.

What it amounts to is that you have been afraid, because you don't understand who you Are and you haven't had an Advocate telling you the truth about you that allowed you to love yourself or like yourself more easily. And so your behavior has reflected your confusion and your feeling of guilt and the presence of fear.

And so, in your fear and your confusion, you have behaved in a way that has caused your brother, in his fear and his confusion, to become aggravated and retaliate. And as a result, you have been in a state of conflict using guilt to try to bring some level of order into the confusion which has only aggravated the situation further.

Now, I'm telling you that if you look, just like the Course is telling you, that if you will dare to look inside you in the very depth of your being, you will not find a crass ugly black hole; filthy, unlovable. But where you think that is, you will find Light—effulgent light—living light—pulsing light. And the substance of that light is Love. And it is there in the very center of you. And it is there and radiates out from you and you deserve to be experiencing it. You deserve to become free of denying it and blocking it out of your sight because you have been fooled into believing that right where It is, is the ugliest of ugliness that you can't dare to look at.

And so I'm being an Advocate for you, saying: "Go into that Place—go directly into that Place and abide there with a curiosity to see what I'm telling you is there rather than a convicted fear that what you believe is there, is there." And I stand here to tell you this over and over again and over again until you are able to screw up enough courage—gather together enough courage to do it and have this wonderful discovery. And since this is the way you are released from guilt, it is the way your brother is released from guilt.

Now you could say, "Well, all of us have Guides. So I'm going to let John's Guide do it for him and I'm going to let Peter's Guide do it for him and I'm going to let Penelope's Guide do it for her."

It doesn't work that way.

The way it works is, that I help you do it for your brother. And if your brother or your sister is left out of the equation, no Movement of Awakening will occur. No transformation will occur. No healing will occur. And you will not have fulfilled your function. Your function is to be the Presence of Love that transforms illusions by dissolving them; by evaporating masks that you have held in front of you hiding yourself from each other; hiding yourselves from each other, so that you might enjoy the real experience of Brotherhood and of your Sonship and Daughtership, and of course, there's the Father's Place in it all.

You cannot BE as you believed you were.

Such a beautiful short sentence.

You cannot BE as you believed you were.

That calls for a couple "Glory Hallelujahs!" [Chuckles]

You cannot BE as you believed you were.

If you cannot BE as you believed you were, you never have been as you believed you were. And What you have really been has escaped your attention. And the uncovering of what has escaped your attention is My task. And your uncovering what has escaped your brother's attention is your task. Because that's how you break the bondage of isolation and orphan-hood and isolation.

Your guilt is without reason because it is not in the Mind of God, where YOU are.

Your guilt is without reason. It's not without belief though. You believe you are guilty and you believe your brother is guilty. But . . .

Your guilt . . .

. . . and your brother's guilt . . .

. . . is without reason because it is not in the Mind of God, Where YOU . . .

. . . and your brother . . .

. . . are. And this IS reason, which the Holy Spirit would RESTORE to you. He would remove only illusions. All else He would have you see. And in Christ's vision He would show you the perfect purity that is forever within God's Son.

Now, for some of you this may sound too religious. It's spiritual words that roll off of ministers' and priests' lips, but they really do mean something.

I shared with you a statement from the Course that Paul has turned into a prayer for himself sometime ago, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision, which is Your gift to me from God." The prayer is addressed to Me, the Christ. It is a prayer that should be on everyone's lips, "I wish to see through Your Vision, Jesus, which is Your gift to me from God."

So when it says here . . .

And this IS reason, which the Holy Spirit would RESTORE to you. He would remove only illusion. All else He would have you see. And in Christ's vision . . .

. . . see this is not ethereal spirituality . . .

... Christ's vision ...

I'm not ethereal. The Christ is not ethereal. The Christ is actual. And I'm telling you that when it says ...

And in Christ's vision He would show you the perfect purity that is forever within God's Son.

I am talking about a Vision that you are supposed to be asking to experience, because it is My gift to you from God. We're talking actuality here. I have a gift for you. I have always had this gift for you. As long as you have been pretending to be an orphan, I've had this gift for you. And it's an actual gift. It is real. It is true Vision. It's My Vision, but not Mine. It's My Vision, which is My gift to you from Me? No, from God. God's Vision is your Vision. That's the way you were and are created to be.

I make the gift to you of My Vision, which the Father gave Me to give you. If you accept it... [chuckling] It sounds like "Mission Impossible," doesn't it? If you accept this, you will be able to give that gift to your brother. Not the gift of your personal vision, but the gift of God's Vision that was given to you because that's My function; and which you give to your brother because that's your function.

You get it? You see this?

... the Holy Spirit would RESTORE ...

... reason ...

... to you. He would remove only illusions. All else He would have you see. And in Christ's vision He would show you the perfect purity that is forever within God's Son.

Meaning, your brother and your sister. And by virtue of your seeing it in your brother and sister you will know it's in you too. This is so simple but it is so important. But as long as you let yourself get caught in the loop of justifiable guilt and all the emotions that accompany it, you will not find yourself able to want to see the truth in your brother. And you won't. And you will demand justice, until you have justice "up to here."

And you find that when your life is crammed full of justice, you aren't happy. And it hurts. And you are ill at ease. And you cannot ignore the fear that is consuming you. And then you will buckle. You will collapse. You might say, you're having a nervous breakdown, but it's really a breakthrough.

It's a place where you will finally say, "The way I've been doing it isn't working. And I no longer have the luxury of enough ease to fool myself into believing that the way I'm living my life is the way it's supposed to be lived. And therefore, I do want to find another way. And I will reach out wherever I have to reach out, to connect with something beyond my poor thought models—my concepts."

And of course, the minute you're willing to reach out, you break the isolation. And you will end up leaning on your brothers and sisters. And you will end up remembering that there's a God. One way or another you will be reminded that there is a God that you actually have a partnership with. And there will be a willingness to let Him in.

But you don't have to do it the hard way. You don't have to do it the hard way, you can just listen to Me or your Advocate, who is available to you when you go within; who will point you in the direction of your salvation—which most everyone is surprised to find is his brother or his sister, his fellowman. And he will point you in the direction of your fellowman, with the purpose of illuminating your capacity to be an agent for change in your brother's life, because you are willing to look beyond your poor thought models or concepts about everything and about your brother. And you're willing to look for the Light that is in him that you now know about. And you will have taken the first step of waking up. So you can do it, willingly or unwillingly.

The point is, that if you will accept that you have an Advocate who is here to uncover in you the utter good in you, the Godness in you—God in you—you will begin to experience such transformation that it will pour out and bless your brothers and sisters as well.

You cannot enter into REAL relationships with any of God's Sons unless you love them all and EQUALLY.

Uh-hh... If you think through your list of acquaintances, you won't really be able to say that you can do that. Of course not if you're using your current definitions, the current meanings you're applying to everything.

But you know what? Back up. When that happens, when you find yourself being reluctant to extend yourself, back up and ask yourself, "Do I need an Advocate? Do I need someone to remind me that I do not have to behave out of fear? I don't have to be experiencing fear. I don't have to live in a constant state of guilt. Do I need an Advocate?"

Some of you may say, "No, I'm doing quite well, thank you. I'm staying on top of the heap. I'm managing the struggle pretty well." Okay. I won't try to force you. But those of you who are willing to receive, I will stand with. Those who are willing to receive from you, be willing to stand with them, because that's your function and because they deserve it.

And you know what? All of you really do know that at the bottom line, none of you are what you think you are, that you're better than what you think you are and you deserve better by Birthright, not because you've earned it. And all of you know that in spite of the greatly distorted behaviors that you and your brothers engage in because of fear, it is a behavior that doesn't reflect your nature or you. And your brothers and sisters do not need to continue to behave as though this is "just life."

In other words, it says . . .

You cannot enter into REAL relationships with any of God's Sons unless you love them all and EQUALLY.

What I'm saying is, that at the bottom line, you know that they do deserve to be loved equally and that you can do it. Um-m, but it's like the alarm clock going off in the morning. You know it's time to get up, but you hit the snooze button, "Five more minutes, please." You know that you can love your brothers equally, "But please, can I have five more minutes before I have to engage in all that hard work?" [Chuckling] And of course, it looks like hard work because your definition of them is "awful." [Chuckling] And so you have laid out for you by virtue of your definition—your "awful" definition—a horrendous time consuming job. See?

It's like you're saying for your brother, "If I go down into the very depths of you, I'm going to find this ugliest of ugly black hole, and I'm going to be convicted with your awfulness. I'm going to be convinced of it." You see? "And that's going to make it very difficult for me."

But the fact is, that if you will let yourself into the very center of your brother just as if you will let yourself into the very center of you, what you will find is Light; as I said, pulsing, effulgent, living Light, the substance of which is Love. That is what you will find.

And whatever effort it takes on your part to get past your reluctance, it will be worth it; because when you see the Light there, you'll be remembering God there. And by virtue of the remembrance, which you know will not have come from your own thinking and your own reasoning, but will have come from My Vision which you're seeing through, which is the Father's gift to you; you will find equality being experienced relative to you and your brothers. And although it may be an experience with one or a dozen of your brothers, you will know from that experience that it's true about the millions of brothers and sisters that you've never met yet; which is a great promise of joy and pleasure as you look forward to meeting them.

Love is not special. If you single out PART of the Sonship for your love, you are imposing guilt on ALL your relationships, . .

See, only the guiltless will be worthy of your love. Who are you going to withhold your love from? "Oh, the guilty!" Oh, so you still value guilt, I see. You think guilt is a valuable tool in your backpack of paraphernalia for coping with life. And you're still holding on to it. Okay, well as long as you're still holding onto guilt as a thing of value, well, you're going to find if you look a little bit further in your backpack, fear, because guilt and fear are inseparable.

Wow! As long as you value guilt you will impose it on everyone and you will keep yourself bound to it and the fear that always accompanies it.

Love is not special. If you single out PART of the Sonship for your love, you are imposing guilt on ALL your relationships, and making them. . .

. . . the relationships . . .

. . . unreal. You can love ONLY as God loves.

You see? That's why I invite you to accept God's gift to you, which is My gift to you, which is My Vision, which is the Father's perspective.

You can love ONLY as God loves. Seek not to love unlike Him, for there IS no love apart from His. Until you recognize that this is true you will have no idea what love is like.

What is love like? It's like you being totally absent of fear. It's like you being in, as well as, being the presence of Joy. It's like you experiencing unchallengeable fulfillment, because there's nothing unlike fulfillment that you are valuing, and it's more.

No-one who condemns a brother can see himself as guiltless in the peace of God.

And yet, you, being guiltless in the peace of God, is what the experience of love is like. It's what the experience of love is experienced as. It's your Birthright. So if . . .

No-one who condemns a brother can see himself as guiltless in the peace of God.

Then one who sees himself as guiltless in the peace of God does not engage in condemning his brother—finds no value in it. And therefore, finds total value in, we could say, confronting your brother, but we'll say it in a gentler way, reflecting back to your brother the wonderful truth about him that is the truth about him.

And so when he behaves out of fear, you will stand there with your brother and express the truth to him that helps him to see that fear is not his Birthright—that fear is an illusion and that if he sets it aside, life and the Universe will not collapse around him and he will still be safe. And if he does not hear it, if he does not want to believe it, if he cannot bring himself to believe it, you stand with the perfection of the gift that you have extended and you let it rest with him. And you do not try to force him. And perhaps you step away for a while. Perhaps for a while it will be someone else's task to step in and reflect back to him the truth about him.

I want you to understand that to see the truth about your brother is not a way of controlling or coercing your brother into a better frame of mind. It is not a new and higher means of control.

I must constantly invite each of you to embrace the truth by sharing it with you and then leaving it up to you to reach out for it, to take it in, to make it yours. And that's your task as well.

No-one who condemns a brother can see himself as guiltless in the peace of God.

And I'm adding: Even though he is.

If he IS guiltless and in peace and sees it not, . .

. . . which is the state you're all in . . .

. . . he IS delusional, and has not looked upon himself. To him I say, “Behold the Son of God . . .

. . . when you look at yourself . . .

“Behold the Son of God and look upon his purity and be still. In quiet . . .”

What does that mean? Without all the chattering of your mind, without all of the arguing in your mind that your innocence and purity is a bunch of crap, it's just imagination, because you really aren't innocent and pure.

“In quiet . . .”

. . . in the absence of all that noise . . .

“ . . . look upon his holiness, . . .”

. . . look upon your holiness . . .

“ . . . and offer thanks unto his Father . . .”

. . . your Father . . .

“ . . . that no guilt has ever touched him.”

No guilt has ever touched you. I'm saying that to you.

“Behold the Son of God and look upon [your] purity and be still.
In quiet look upon [your] holiness, and offer thanks unto [your] Father that no guilt has ever touched [you].”

Imaginations have never been able to affect a single thing. Not a single animal on the desert has drowned from the illusion of water that appears to be there on a hot day.

No illusion that you have ever held against him . . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . has touched his innocence in any way. His shining purity, wholly untouched by guilt and wholly loving, is bright within you.

God's . . .

. . . shining purity, wholly untouched by guilt and wholly loving, is bright within you. Let us look upon him . . .

. . . your brother . . .

together and love him.

See, this is a description of what I do all the time. And it's instruction for what you need to be doing all the time.

Let us look upon him together . . .

Oh, Uh-oh, uh-oh! Wait a minute, "You mean I don't get to look upon him myself with great beneficence and offer him the great gift that I'm able to give him of unconditional love? What, if I look upon him together with You, well who's going to get the credit? This is unprofitable for me."

But, of course, that's the illusion—the illusion of orphanhood; the illusion of separateness; the illusion of isolation. And the discomfort of such an idiotic insane belief is, what we're leaving behind.

So . . .

Let us look upon him . . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . together and love him. For in our love of him is your guiltlessness.

When you and I join together loving your brother, what happens? Your guiltlessness gets uncovered to you, while his does as well. That's the only way you can release guilt.

Let us look upon him together and love him. For in our love of him is your guiltlessness. But look upon yourself, and gladness and appreciation for what you see will banish guilt forever. I thank you, Father, for the purity of Your most holy Son,

Again, please do not hear these as religious, spiritual words. It's like:

I thank You, . . .

. . . Dad, . . .

. . . for the purity of . . .

. . . me or the purity of my brother, your other Son.

I thank You, . . .

. . . Dad, . . .

. . . for the purity of Your most holy Son, . . .

. . . of your most unaltered, undefiled Son, . . .

. . . whom You have created guiltless forever.

The key words to that sentence are: I thank You . . .

. . . I thank You, Father . . .

I thank you Dad . . .

. . . for the purity of your most . . .

. . . impeccably, unaltered, undefiled offspring, Son, my brother . . .

. . . whom You have created guiltless forever.

I care. I care. I'm involved. My heart recognizes You in my brother and that he is my brother and not just some other odd ball on the face of this planet that I can relate to or not related to. Even if I'm not relating to him at the moment, he's my brother whom I have feelings for and thank you...more feelings. Thank you Dad. Thank you Dad for not withholding from us all of the excellence of You.

Still you talking here, this is your prayer.

Like you my faith and my belief are centered on what I treasure. The difference is that I love ONLY what God loves with me, and because of this, I treasure you beyond the value that you set on yourselves, even unto the worth that God has placed upon you.

This I want you to say and feel about your brother.

Like you my . . .

. . . brother . . .

. . . my faith and my belief are centered on what I treasure. The difference is that I love ONLY what God loves with me, and because of this, I treasure you . . .

. . . my brother . . .

. . . beyond the value that you set on . . .

. . . yourself, . . .

. . . even unto the worth that God has placed upon you. I love all that He created, and all my faith and my belief I offer unto it. My faith in you is strong as all the love I give my Father.

Not just nice words. They're My words.

My faith in you is strong as all the love I give my Father. My trust in you is without limit, and without the fear that you will hear me not.

Please abandon the fear you have that when you love your brother he will hear you not—he won't hear you.

I thank the Father for your loveliness, and for the many gifts that you will let me offer to the Kingdom in honor of its wholeness which is of God.

What is it that is whole here?

I thank the Father for your loveliness, and for the many gifts that you will let me offer to the Kingdom in honor of its . . .

. . . your lovelinesses . . .

. . . wholeness . . .

When you look at your brother and you recognize God there, it is an awesome experience. It is a magnificent experience that causes you to spontaneously express praise for it that gets shared with all of Creation.

Now I'm going to stop here, because if I stop here it means that we start out next week with the word "Praise" and with an expression of gratitude. And that's a wonderful way to start out a gathering.

You're supposed to be happy. [Addressing each one in audience] You're supposed to be happy. You're supposed to be happy. Even you are supposed to be happy. And you are supposed to be happy.

All of Creation is geared toward your having that experience. All of existence is geared toward your having that experience. Everything that exists is meant to fulfill that experience.

In order for you to have the experience you're going to have to abandon the great confidence that you have as to what everything means. Because what you think everything means at this moment is an environment in which suffering is normal. And in which the attempt to overcome suffering is normal, if not the purpose of life. And it's not true.

The slightest willingness to look at your world with an expectation to see it reflect back to you that it's your Birthright to be happy, will cause change to occur; in the way you receive what appears to come to you from your world and in what you give back.

We're coming up, sometime in the next two or three weeks; it's only on the next page but we're coming up to a section called:

THE GUARANTEE OF HEAVEN.

That's your Birthright to experience the Guarantee of Heaven. To be utterly happy, without your happiness being subject to threat. That's the Birthright that your brothers have, which it's your opportunity to share with them—share with him, so that he can begin to look in a new way if he wishes.

You are your brother's savior and your brother is your savior. Embrace your brother with Love whether he returns it or not.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 16th 2007

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

PAUL: Before we get on the same page, I must make an announcement.

As many of you know, and I'm speaking primarily to those who access this work on the internet, during the last three months or so we have had to regularly request financial support. For whatever reason, contributions are tapering off; expenses are not, and each month we have been going further into debt.

And so, I'm asking tonight for help. It's bothered me in the past to have to ask for help. It's felt like begging, which to me hasn't matched or fit in with the work we're engaged in. But you know, actually in the last few weeks—last couple of months, as I've observed in the human condition, let's say, unhappy, unpleasant things going on, especially things that seem to have specifically related to what Raj has been discussing, it has become more apparent to me how valuable what he's saying is and how much it's needed.

And, so you know what? Tonight I'm not so unhappy about asking for help. I think it's appropriate for there to be help in support of that which actually makes a difference—that which is actually the Answer. And so I'm doing it without guilt. It's an actual need. If the support isn't there, and I know some people are going to say, "Oh, now he's threatening them. now he's guiltning them into support;" but the simple fact is, that without support there's no way to make the materials available, even over the internet.

So, I'm asking for support—financial support. I'm asking for your prayers. I'm asking for you to have in your mind reasons why it would be appropriate for there to be support. There are many. There are many reasons why there ought to be support. Hours and hours and hours of exceptionally clear sharings of truth that heal.

I'm not asking for suggestions as to how we can economize. I'm sorry, I cannot appreciate that approach. "It is the Father's good pleasure to give us the Kingdom." Abundance is natural to Be-ing. Let us think abundantly, not tighter and tighter and smaller and smaller.

And I thank you for listening.

I just want to say that listening to Raj is not something I do for a show; it isn't something I do for attention. I will be talking with Raj no matter what happens. If there is not enough support to maintain the form in which the work is occurring now, I have no idea what form it might take, but I will be listening still. And I will find ways to make it available. I don't know what they might be but I'm asking that we do it together.

Okay. Let's take a few moments to be quiet together.

RAJ: Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

What if you got up every day and your goal, no matter what activities you were engaged in, your goal was to be consciously and noticeably friendly with everyone you came in contact with—consciously and noticeably. In other words, the people you come in contact with should not escape the contact without actually being aware that they were treated in a friendly manner. Wow, you don't think it would make a difference? It would make a difference.

You know, all we're talking about, all that we have been talking about is the use to which you put your minds. You can put your minds to use in ways that are destructive, debilitating, demoralizing, depressing. Or you can use your minds in ways that build, that solidify, that strengthen, that secure. And I'm very specifically, tonight, asking everyone to set themselves the goal of using their mind well every day so as to actually make a contribution; so as to actually not just engage in lip service to the truth or to what is meaningful, but to actually act upon it—actually embody it. Actually embody it; make it visible in the world even if you're at home and the only other one in the house is your pet. Let that pet have the obvious experience of being loved. Embody in your relationship with your pet that which makes it happy for the moment it's just experienced.

I'm going to ask you: What better thing does any one of you have to do than express love? Is there anything more constructive, anything more meaningful that you can express than love? And if expressing love is going to wipe away all tears, if expressing love is going to generate joy, if expressing love is going to reduce fear, if expressing love is going to dissolve guilt, then again, what better thing do you have to do than express love—embody it? Nothing.

Let's go into the Book.

Praise be unto you who make the Father One with His Own Son.¹

In other words, . . .

Praise be unto you who . . .

. . . is willing to look into his brother's eyes and remember God.

Praise be unto you who . . .

. . . is willing to look into his brother's eyes and see beyond your best definitions of that brother, or the current behavior of that brother so that you might see what is behind the behavior, or you might see what is behind the best or poorest picture you are characterizing your brother with.

Because I promise you something: If you're not willing to look beyond the presentation that your brother is making; "Well, if I'm not willing to look beyond the presentation you are making," we're never going to have transformation. We're never going to have the full-blown experience of the fulfillment of Be-ing.

But as I've said, this is going to mean conscientiousness on your part, focus in the use of your attention and the abandonment of sloppy-slipshod mental habits. And you're going to have to be willing to persist to get past the presentation—the current mask that any of your brothers and sisters may be wearing—to touch on that essence that is what they divinely are. That is the threshold of enlightenment for your brother and for yourself; a threshold over which you pass into a larger experience—an infinite experience of pure awesome meaning.

I've said it. You are more than your best perception of yourself and your brothers and sisters are more than your best perception of them and they are more than their best perceptions of themselves. And as all of you are caught in your best perceptions, some of which aren't very good at all, you're trapped into an experience of existence that it's not your Birthright to be experiencing.

You're trapped when you deserve to be free. You deserve not to be fooled, confused into believing things that aren't true about you.

And from this tiny mindset that you are involved in, you have decided that you don't deserve anything greater than this. And it's a lie and you need to be shaken out of the lie. And you need to be willing to dare to believe that the rules that say you're not allowed to get out of this terrible mindset, those rules are there to be broken. They're there to be violated. They're there not to be honored. They are a result of ignorance and the result of ignorance can never be reason or reasonable.

No matter how much you believe your rules, if they are not reasonable, they are not real and do not deserve to be honored.

Now, to those of you who are willing to look at your brother and look past your concepts and your brother's concepts of himself . . .

Praise be unto you who make the Father One with His Own Son.

Praise be unto you who are willing to see the ultimate. Praise be unto you who have been determined to get past the presentations and even your limiting beliefs, to get what is essentially real and whole right there. Praise be unto you.

Alone we are all lowly, . .

. . . in other words, if you imagine that you're alone, if you imagine you're an orphan and you have no Father, you have no Source, in that mindset you are lowly. You are inconsequential. You're guilty—you're guilty from the get-go! Why? Because there's nothing about you that stands in favor of your integrity.

Alone we are all lowly, but together we shine with brightness so intense that none of us alone can even think on it.

More words that could be described as useless, flowery, and impractical.

Alone we are all lowly, but together we shine with brightness so intense that none of us alone can even think on it. Before the glorious radiance of the Kingdom guilt melts away, and transformed into kindness, will never more be what it was.

Before the glorious radiance of the Kingdom...hm-m... Well, that's more of those impractical words...tch...tch... You know what? Here's the practicality of them: I've said no matter what you're looking at, you're confronted with the Kingdom of Heaven because the Kingdom of Heaven is the only thing that's happening.

The Kingdom of Heaven either perceived clearly or misperceived is the only thing that's going on. Your misperception of it doesn't change it but it changes your experience of it. It flaws or distorts your experience of it.

And that's why I say, whatever you're looking at, look at it with curiosity to see the more of what it is than your current definition allows you to perceive.

Before the glorious radiance of the Kingdom . . .

. . . the Kingdom you're right in the middle of, the Kingdom of Heaven that is available to you to experience in all of it's awesome perfection . . .

Before the glorious radiance of the Kingdom guilt melts away, and transformed into kindness, . .

. . . it doesn't just wither up and vanish, it gets transformed . . .

. . . into kindness.

What is kindness? Kindness is love. But not just love, kindness is love expressed. Kindness is love embodied.

What did I say? Let yourself get up in the morning with the goal to embody love in every involvement you have with a brother—consciously and noticeably. If nothing else, if you do that, you will be neglecting to project guilt on your brothers and sisters or your pets or anything.

Before the glorious radiance of the Kingdom guilt melts away, and transformed into kindness, will never more be what it was.

This is the point. This section we're reading is called RELEASE AND RESTORATION. Restoration is what it's about. A new way of experiencing Be-ing is what it's about.

Every reaction that you experience will be so purified that it is fitting as a hymn of praise unto your Father.

Every reaction to your brother or the flower or the glass, or whatever part of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're experiencing, . .

. . . will be so purified that it is fitting as a hymn of praise unto your Father.

Because you will stand in awe of it, in appreciation of it, and you will recognize that it is Reality and you will see God in it.

And so, your experience of it will stand as acknowledgement of God instead of acknowledgement of this tired, worn-out physical world that's full of all these organisms, called human beings, that are nothing more than conditioned responses and psychological processes that probably aren't too good.

Aren't you tired of that picture?

Again . . .

Every reaction that you experience will be so purified . . .

. . . if you're willing to express curiosity as to what more of Reality is here than what you're seeing, or in your brother . . .

. . . that it is fitting as a hymn of praise unto your Father. See only praise of Him . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . in what He has created, . .

. . . meaning your brother, your pet, the world—the Universe.

See only praise of Him in what He has created, for He will never cease His praise of YOU.

This is my Beloved Son (Daughter), in whom I am well pleased.²

The Father's Benediction on Me is the Father's Benediction on you. That's His praise of you: This is my Beloved Son (or Daughter) in whom I am well pleased. Not because of what you've done, but because of what you Are. You're His Son, you're His Daughter, you're His Expression.

United in this praise we stand before the gates of Heaven, . .

Where are the gates of Heaven? [chuckling] Right in the mug of water you're holding; right in the hand that's on the end of your arm; it's right in the table in front of you; it's right in the person across from you; it's right in the trees and the world that you see.

United in this praise we stand before the gates of Heaven, . .

. . . in which, wherever you are, you're standing . . .

. . . before the gates of Heaven where we will surely enter in our blamelessness. God loves you.

God loves you.

Could I, then, lack faith in you and love Him perfectly?

If God loves your brother, no matter how big a bastard he is as far you're concerned, then could you lack faith in your brother and still love God perfectly? Well, there'd be a mismatch there.

"I love You Father and I know You love Peter over here, but I sure as hell don't love Peter!" Um-m...something's out of kilter there, right?

"I love You Father and I know You love Peter and you know what? I don't love Peter but if You do love Peter, I would like to know why?"

There you go. Now you're on the right track. Now you're willing to look beyond either your brother's presentation of himself or your poor concept of him.

"I would like to know, Father, why You love him? I would like to know, Father, why You love her? I would like to know why I don't have to dislike him or be frustrated by her?"

And let it be a real question. Let the question become real by actually engaging in listening, by actually being silent with rapt attention. And realize that the only reason you won't hear an Answer is if you have some justification for not hearing the Answer. A justification like, "Well I know her, or I know him, and I know him or her well enough to know that they are guilty and they don't deserve to be loved yet. And therefore, Father, I don't yet want to know why you love him or her."

You won't say that out loud, you'll just harbor this resentment. And it will get in the way of your hearing the good news—the truth that the Father or the Holy Spirit would share with you that would let you put down your resentment and let your mind be healed so it gets put to a better use; a use like making the Father One with His own Son.

Now we haven't talked too much about this and I'm not going to talk about it much tonight, but guilt is almost always the offspring—the projection that arises from self-righteousness. You who know so much better than so-and-so; you who are so much wiser; you who are just simply better than anyone else, feel the right to make another to feel guilty for not being like you, for not being someone you need to be paying attention to.

Self-righteousness is the means of putting another in his or her place. And the best way to put him or her in his or her place is to prove that they're guilty of something and then demand that they experience misery for their guilt. And unfortunately, one of the elements that comes into play with self-righteousness and the self-righteous placement of guilt is a certain pleasure that comes from it that becomes addictive and causes one to repeat, what I'm going to call, the offence of projecting guilt.

It feels so good to make someone else feel miserable. It feels so good to make them suffer for whatever it is you have deemed that they are guilty of.

But then we can't say to you . . .

Praise be unto you who make the Father One with His Own Son.

Because you're stating, "I am going to make my judgment one with your Son, Father." And you break the trust, you break the bond, you break the alliance that comes from recognizing who your Father is, acknowledging that you are your Father's Son and therefore are not a self-determined, independent authority over your life. And an awareness that your brother, your fellowman, is your brother or sister—Sons or Daughters of the same Father you have—in which you're all family; in which there is unity; in which you all fit together and no one stands out superior, you know, or you can get that hit of self-righteousness. No it's not there.

I ask again, what better thing do you have to do than express love? You literally have none. Because in the expression of love that is the acknowledgment of your brother as your brother, and the fact that you and your brother are Sons of a common Father, why, that's how you abandon orphanhood. That's how you free yourself from the improper or the poor use of your mind. That's how you let go of memory (the past) and abandon the use of imagination (the future) which allows you to be in the little gap—in the moment you're in which is free of illusion—and where the revelation of the Father's Mind, the Father's awareness of All That Is becomes yours, becomes revealed to you, infills you.

Now this is not an empty promise. This is something that will happen each and every time you allow for it. And I say each and every time because you do just stick your toe in the water for a moment at a time and it isn't enough to capture your attention so that you never get out of it again.

Most of you have had the experience spontaneously without a conscious choice of any sort having been made. And so you say, "Wow! I just had a God experience." And it's possible for that experience to stand apart from everything else as one of many experiences that life can provide you with. When actually it was an experience of connectedness with the ground of your Be-ing, the fundamental of your existence of your conscious experience. It was a perfectly real experience without any illusion attached to it.

You've got to watch the use to which you've put your mind. And if you find yourself at some point in the day or even the moment that you wake up, engaging in critical thoughts, notice it! Don't just say, "Well, you know..." Don't just go along with the flow of thoughts. Notice it! So you can say, "Uh-oh!, critical thinking is occurring. It's not my choice. And so, I'm going to be alert to it so that every time it occurs I can bite my tongue or stop the flow of thoughts before embodying them—before giving voice to the criticism. And I just claim it. It is not mine. It is not my choice and that's why I can squelch it every time it pops up."

Be alert! If you get up or at any point during the day a wave of sadness comes over you and you find yourself being depressed and nothing has happened—no event has happened! Notice it! "Oh, wow, I'm being invited to be sad." Now don't ask why you're being invited, that's taking the bait. Notice, "I'm being invited to be sad. I am feeling a real emotional invitation to be depressed. And I reject the invitation!" You see?

Don't just flow willy-nilly with whatever is happening in your mind. Notice when you are being subtly or not so subtly invited to engage in poor uses of your mind, so that you can immediately and consciously and, I'm going to say, noticeably behave in a way that reflects a good use of your mind. A use that in one way or another embodies love, embodies the desire to see beyond whatever the harsh and unkind limits are that these thoughts that are presenting themselves are inviting you to claim as yours.

Forgetfulness and sleep and even death become the ego's best advice for how to deal with the perceived and harsh intrusion of guilt on peace.

Oh, you suddenly feel guilty. You don't have to answer me, but how often have you had the experience or how frequently do you find you have the experience of suddenly, out of the blue, for no reason at all during the day, feeling guilty. Feeling like, "Uh-oh, I'm going to be caught." And you're not doing anything that you could be caught for. But you just have this niggling, uneasy feeling in you of guilt and that you better be careful, because you're likely to get caught.

The ego whispers in your mind. And it makes suggestions and invitations to you that seem to justify the poor use of your mind.

Forgetfulness and sleep and even death become the egos best advice for how to deal with the perceived and harsh intrusion of guilt on peace. Yet no-one sees himself in conflict, and ravaged by a cruel war, unless he believes that BOTH opponents in the war are real.

Now listen:

Believing this he must escape, for such a war would surely end his peace of mind, and so destroy him. Yet . . .

. . . and here's the key . . .

. . . if he could but realize the war is between forces that are real and UNREAL powers, he could look upon himself and SEE his freedom.

In other words, if the war is going on between something that is real and something that is unreal, it's not a war is it? There are no "powers." There is no unreal power that can war with a real power.

You need to be alert so that you don't falsely characterize an inner experience as a war when it's not a war. When you are trying to use reason to fight the unreasonable—well, it's like the sound of one hand clapping—when you try to use reason to battle the unreasonable, nothing is happening.

But you see, if someone is bound by his ignorance—if someone is ignorant—reason isn't present, strength is not present, integrity is not present or able to function because confusion reins, ignorance reins. And that ignorance reigning feels like an actual something. "That's me! You know, I can't deal with your confusion. I can't deal with your ignorance."

"Well, then you better leave, because that's me!" [chuckling] No, discombobulation isn't you or anyone else, it's just disconnectedness. It isn't connectedness. And it's not you and you're not it.

When a battle is going on between individuals and guilt is being flung back and forth, it's being flung at the ignorance that is going on—that in the individual which is unaware of who or what he really is. And so he thinks he must respond and he thinks he's really being threatened, or vice versa, she does; and so this battle is engaged in with great enthusiasm—great determination. And yet, if it could be seen that what was being fought against was nothing, that the ignorance that's being despised and hated and upon which guilt is being heaped, if it could be seen that that was nothing, there would be no basis for continuing the battle. And therefore, that is the answer. That is the solution.

. . . no-one sees himself in conflict, and ravaged by a cruel war, unless he believes that BOTH opponents in the war are real. Believing this he must escape, for such a war would surely end his peace of mind, and so destroy him.

When two people fight to the bitter end hurling guilt back and forth, it's only occurring with the vehemence that it's occurring because it is believed that there is an actual threat and that there will be actual injury, actual cost. And if you don't know what your Birthright is, if you don't know who your Father is, and if you don't know that it's your Father's good pleasure to give you All That Is, you will labor under the idea that what is happening can cost you and you will fight ever more strongly.

Yet if he could but realize the war is between forces that are real and UNREAL powers, he could look upon himself and SEE his freedom.

If you can break the mesmeric attachment to the fear and the anxiety that comes from guilt long enough so that you can remember that there is a God and that all that God is, is embodied in you as You, and that therefore, nothing can be taken away from you, you would recognize the whole mindset and the whole activity as nonsensical and you would simply stop. You would not protect yourself against a non-threat. It would be as clear as a bell to you. And that's why I'm reminding you, so that you might take a second look.

Well, there must be another way to look at this. Um-m...oh, I think we call this the two-step, where you, before you act step back and say, "Father, what's the truth here?" so that you can remember to look past the presentation your brother is making or the concept you have about your brother, to see what is truly there so that you might put down your weapons of defense, since there are no elements present that can actually war.

No-one finds himself ravaged and torn in endless battles which he HIMSELF perceives as wholly without meaning.

When you can look at something and see the nonsensicalness of it, you don't validate it anymore. And you don't react to it anymore. You don't even respond to it anymore.

I'll give you an example, it's not the best, but:

You move to a new house. And there's a store a couple of blocks away. And you decided that you're going to walk to the store instead of drive to the store. And you walk along and as you're walking along, all of a sudden out from the left of you, in the yard, this Bulldog tears forward growling and barking ferociously. And you leap back and start to run. And when the dog gets to the sidewalk, the chain on his neck yanks him and stops him right at the sidewalk. You let out a sigh of relief.

The next time you walk to the grocery store and you come to the yard, maybe once again you're not thinking about the dog, but here comes the dog with all ferociousness and you smile, [chuckling] you just walk on. You know he's not going to be able to touch you because he's got the chain on. So what had seemed fearsome before is no longer fearsome. And what you felt was a cause of fear is seen to be nonsense. It doesn't apply. You see?

Now, I bring this up from time to time: You're here to be healers. You're here, for lack of better words, to make a contribution. You're here (and your ego likes this) to make a difference. The only thing is, that the difference you're here to make is to be that which shows the ego to be nonsense; so that when it speaks up and whispers in your ear that you are guilty or that you should be afraid or that you are very sad or that you're going to be caught, you [chuckle] think nothing of it, just another bit of nonsense—meaningless nonsense.

You know, there are people who grow up, they finish High School and they decide to go to college and they want to become a doctor or they want to become a nurse; or they want to become a psychologist; or they want to become a psychiatrist; or they want to become a social worker. Why? Because they want to help people, they want to make a difference in the most fundamental of ways. Not with the running of businesses, but with the better use of the mind that people put there minds to. Now, you think about them and you think that's wonderful.

You can make a decision of the same sort for yourself and accept the position, if you will... no, accept the activity of being an agent for change. Not just to improve the human condition but to uncover the Divine condition.

Once again, this means actions, this means embodying a goal, to conscientiously and obviously express Love.

If you're listening to me, you have some spiritual values. I'm saying embody them—embody them more fully than you have thought to embody them. Why? Very simply; because until you are willing to look into your brother's eyes and see the very best, see the perfect, see and remember God there, see and experience the ultimate of ultimates there, when you do that, you are consciously blessing your brother. And the you that is doing the blessing, the you that the blessing is coming through is blessed. And your brother and you are both healed. Your brother and you may both wake up as a result of that single encounter.

Again, none of you has anything better to be doing. And you can do it while you're teaching yoga. You can do it while you're building a house. You can do it while you're talking to the grocery clerk. The key is: start doing it; because without the embodiment, there is no transformation.

Now, here's the simple truth, the simple good news:

God would not have His Son embattled, and so His Son's imagined "enemy," which he made, . .

. . . the Son made . . .

. . . is TOTALLY unreal.

In other words, what God did not Create does not exist. What God isn't Being, isn't happening.

God would not have His Son embattled, and so His Son's imagined "enemy," which he made, is TOTALLY unreal. You are but trying to escape a bitter war from which you HAVE escaped.

Another way of saying that would be: from a battle which you've never been in, because God never created the environment or the circumstance or the events that could be identified that way.

You are but trying to escape a bitter war from which you HAVE escaped. The war is gone.

And I would say, the war was never there, except in the imagination or except in the mind committed to an insane belief temporarily.

The war is gone. For you have heard the hymn of freedom rising unto Heaven.

You have heard it, I have been singing it for you. And some of you have been singing it to each other.

. . . you have heard the hymn of freedom rising unto Heaven. Gladness and joy belong to God for your release because you made it not.

What did you not make? Your release! How could you release yourself from a jail cell whose door was never locked?

Gladness and joy belong to God for your release because you made it not. Yet as you made not freedom, so you made not a war that could ENDANGER freedom.

"Oh, but she did! [Chuckling] Boy, she sure endangered my freedom! Oh no, he did! He is endangering my freedom, he's endangering my freedom right now! And I'm retaliating! And I...I will dig out the dirtiest thing I can to plague him with and make him feel guilty for, and threaten him with, so that what? So that he can come back with a better one yet; you know, good, better, best, bested? As long as you've got those determinations, those evaluations, it's going to get you in the end. "Good, uh-m that sounds good. Better, um that sounds good too. Best, um yes! Bested, ooh, that hurt!"

Yet as you made not freedom, so you made not a war that could ENDANGER freedom. Nothing destructive ever was or will be. The war, the guilt, the past are gone as one into the unreality from which they came.

... dissolved back into their native nothingness.

If you want to be free of guilt and the effects of guilt, you've got to take the radical position, that it's not real and that everything that guilt would cost you is nothing more than a great confusion believed and committed to. And that therefore, no matter what the threats are that are associated with guilt, that the moment you dishonor them because... because why? Because the war is between forces that are real and unreal powers and therefore there really isn't a war, when you dare to embrace that and acknowledge that, you'll move into another arena. You'll move into the conscious experience where that isn't happening. The nonsense will be obviously nonsensical. The Bulldog on the chain won't frighten you anymore because there was never anything frightening about a Bulldog on a chain. You see?

So you have to be willing to take this radical position. And no matter what your brother is doing or saying, no matter what his behavior is or your sister, you can, before you react, step back and say, "Father, what is the truth here? What is there about this individual that makes You love him or her? I want to experience Your perspective."

And look at what you've done. You've abandoned the orphan position. You've stepped out of the orphanage. You've asked your Father for help with your brother. And you have brought the family unit back into its unity. That is not only beautiful, it is not only significant, it is the way you wake up, which necessarily means, it's the way you experience the miraculous.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 20th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We need to take a moment tonight to review something that we've talked about before. It's something rather important and it's something that it's easy to forget about.

Imagine, if you will, getting up one morning. It's a day in which you have woken up feeling good. No stress, nothing looming in your day to be apprehensive about, you feel downright chipper and happy and you proceed through your day. And then someone you encounter is very rude, abrupt with you, unkind toward you, and very challenging and you become afraid. And you retaliate out of fear.

On the other hand, let's say that you got up on this same day and you proceeded through your day and at some point a friend of yours became ill or was faced with an emergency of some sort that you felt called upon to help that friend with. And so, you became still enough to listen—to hear the truth to share for healing purposes.

Now, taking these two scenarios, you could say that as you left home and went out to proceed through your day, you were just jolly Mary or John, happy in a very pleasant, practical, alert frame of mind. And as in the first example, if you ran into someone who was being threatening or unpleasant or challenging, and it caused you to become afraid, you could say, "Well, at that point, I listened to the voice for fear. I abandoned my carefree happy pleasant balanced frame of mind and succumbed to listening to and responding to the voice for fear.

Now, in the second example where a friend had a need that called for you to share healing clarity, you could say that you were called upon to listen to the Voice for truth and be out from that place.

And so it could seem as though there are three mental gears if I may put it that way—first, second and third, well say. No, we'll say it's first, neutral, and second. Second—the neutral gear, is where you're just being yourself. First, is where you're listening to the Voice for truth. And third is where you're listening to the voice for fear. All three being different venues from which you can encounter your day, or be.

Now, the problem is that this is an illusion. That there are three mental positions is an illusion. There are only two voices. There isn't the Voice for truth and the voice for fear...and your voice. There's only the Voice for truth or the voice for fear and the voice for fear isn't real.

I want to back up:

Yet no-one sees himself in conflict, and ravaged by a cruel war, unless he believes that BOTH opponents in the war are real. Believing this he must escape, for such a war would surely end his peace of mind, and so destroy him. Yet if he could but realize the war is between forces that are real and UNREAL powers, he could look upon himself and SEE his freedom. No-one finds himself ravaged and torn in endless battles which he HIMSELF perceives as wholly without meaning.¹

You can't have a conflict between something and nothing.

Now, you all tend to believe that there is you and your daily mind. And from that daily mind's place you can access the Voice for truth, or you can access the voice for fear. You can be subject to the Voice for truth that is a result of your listening, or you can be blessed by the Voice for truth that comes to you from another. Or you can suffer from the voice for fear that you initiate, or the voice for fear that others initiate.

And so it would seem that here's you—neutral you—sitting in the middle, placed between the Voice for truth and the voice for fear; two very real opponents because of course, your experiences of the voice for fear is very detrimental to you, very devastating, very unpleasant. But the point is, that one of those voices isn't real. And so there isn't any tug of war and on top of it, there is no neutral middle position that is your natural place to be from.

You are either the Presence of the Voice for truth expressing, or the voice for fear attempting to be. It's one or the other. So now, it boils down to the real you and the unreal you, doesn't it? And, the real you plus the unreal you equals what? The real you. One plus zero equals one, doesn't it?

Now, why am I bringing this up? I'm bringing this up because as we have been talking about guilt and judgment and the horrors of it, and the tension of it, and the detrimental destructive nature of it, and so-on, and you take a look at your experience—the experience with the way you treat others and the way others treat you—it's very easy to succumb to the idea that your evaluation of another, that he has in some way injured you, and that makes him guilty of something that he must pay a penalty for, that process seems to be real and it seems to be coming from somebody in the neutral gear, in the middle, who has been impacted by somebody listening to the voice for fear.

But when you say, "That one has hurt me and a penalty must be paid for by him," what you are saying is, that you are unwilling to listen for the Voice for truth because the Voice for truth would cause you to find expressions of love—expressions of respect, and expressions of, what for lack of better words, I will call principle in your dealings with this individual so that you don't play into the ploy, the invitation to get into a struggle and to prove your self-righteousness—your righteousness over and against the other's lack of righteousness.

It becomes easy in the heat of the dynamic of reaction to bad behavior, to forget that you, yourself, only have two vantage points from which to look at everything and one of them isn't real; one of them isn't valid. You forget that the solution lies in making the choice between the unreal standpoint, and the real standpoint.

Your unwillingness to be the presence of love that may well heal your brother, because your brother has hurt you, is a conclusion arrived at from within the arena of the mind expressing the voice for fear.

I promise you, that to whatever degree you value that gear—third gear; the voice for fear, you will refuse to be in first gear where healing can emerge.

You see, what's called for isn't getting justice with this errant brother, it is in remembering to make the choice for the Voice for truth in you. And finding that to be more important than any presentation your brother may be making toward you.

I'm also bringing this up because it's easy to forget whether you're involved in legal matters, or whether you seem to be involved in medical health matters, it becomes easy to forget that you have the choice—you have only two choices and that is to listen to the Voice for truth in you or the voice for fear in you.

But the tendency is to assume you must listen to the voice for fear in someone else. If it is a doctor with a negative assessment, you think you must listen to him or her because they have authority and knowledge beyond your scope of awareness. And so you say, "Oh, Okay, I'm not going to listen to the Voice of truth in me and be from there, I am going to listen to "them—the authority" and I will let myself be scared shitless by their listening to the voice for fear in them.

Because I promise you, if they were listening to the Voice for truth in them, they would not be scaring you and they would not be presenting a negative picture. They might say there is a need—they might say there is a serious need, but here's what we need to do about it, including you, the husband or wife or relative or friend of the patient. Here's what we need to do: We need to become still and we need to abandon the voice for fear that wants to speak up in both of us and we need to listen for the Voice for truth. Because in listening to the Voice for truth, we will hear what is needed and we will be able to be appropriate in terms of actions as well as in terms of our natural expression of love that won't be impeded by fear if we are valuing and listening to the Voice for truth.

The reason this is important is, that you really all do have this belief that you have a life, it just is, it has been since you were born. You have a life and you can choose to be a good person or you can choose to be a bad person. You can choose to be spiritual or religious and even engage in a religious or spiritual vocation. Or you can choose to be someone who skirts the law and bends the rules to make a profit. Or you can choose to do neither and just be a somewhat non-descript presence moving through life—a benign presence, one that doesn't any waves; doesn't make problems for others and stays, we'll say, seamlessly peaceful in all your negotiations. So peaceful, that most people won't even know that you are there.

But you see, you don't have all these options. What I am teaching, what the Course is illuminating, is the fact that there are not two powers. There is not a real power and an unreal power. There's only one. There's only one presence. It is the presence of life. It is the presence of Be-ing, a verb, not a noun. Not a being but Be-ing; the action of Be-ing, existing, and it's indivisible and it is flawless. And because it is indivisible and therefore embraces nothing unlike itself in any way, what it is Be-ing is absolutely and infinitely harmonious.

That doesn't mean just the absence of chaos. Harmony, as in music, is beautiful. It's not just the absence of unpleasantness. It's not just the absence of inharmony. That which is infinitely harmonious is infinitely beautiful and is felt by soul—you each are soul. You don't have souls. You each are soul embodying soul that God is. And soul is your capacity to feel the meaning of Creation and part of the meaning of Creation is harmony. Beautiful, experiential, awesome harmony.

There is no false you as a real presence for you to overcome. But there is a real you that you have been ignoring because you have been giving preference to an imagined self that has the capacity to listen to the Voice for truth or to listen to the voice for fear and suffer from it.

Reading the last paragraph from the last meeting:

God would not have His Son embattled, and so His Son's imagined "enemy," which he made, is TOTALLY unreal. You are but trying to escape a bitter war from which you HAVE escaped.

And last time I said, you are but trying to escape a bitter war in which you never were. Because God did not ordain it, it didn't exist for you to experience.

You are but trying to escape a bitter war from which you HAVE escaped.

Which you were never in.

The war is gone.

It never was, you see?

And so, when the doctor says, "These are the dire circumstances and these are the predicted results," you need to be alert! And you need to acknowledge, "Wait a minute, no-one's in a war here, no-one's in a conflict. You can't have a conflict between God being all and nothing being nothing." And you must use your mind intelligently by making the choice for listening for the Voice for truth in you. And you must disagree with the voice for fear no matter where it is coming from, no matter what lofty position someone is in who is giving voice to the voice for fear, you cannot afford to validate it because it's foolishness to validate what cannot be.

And it is transformational, it is healing, and it is Awakening to give voice to the Voice for truth and to honor It.

You're not used to doing that because you sort of like this safe little position in neutral where you haven't declared for the Voice for truth and you haven't declared for the voice for fear. But what you must remember is, that whether you've made a declaration for one or the other, you are giving voice to one or the other because there is no neutral gear. There's no safe zone where you are unaccountable, if I may put it that way.

So don't be afraid to give voice to the Voice for truth. It's your Birthright and it's your function. It's the way of release from this so-called war going on between two powers. It's the way of escape from orphan-hood, by you're making the choice to be the one that you Are, and not the one that you're not.

The Voice for truth is the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is your real Mind. The Holy Spirit is the real you held in trust, untouched and unchanged, while you imagine that you're an orphan; that you're an ego; that you're a body; that you're an organism.

Waking up is you shifting from your sense of identity as an organism; as a thinker in neutral, to the embrace of the Holy Spirit in you which is nothing more than your right Mind and shifting your identity—letting your identity be consumed by that which is nothing more than your Right Mind. In doing that you abandon neutral gear and you abandon third gear. And now, there's only first gear in which conflict is impossible; in which illusions cannot even seem to present themselves to you either as your own personal illusions or the illusions of others. And the result is healing. It is what you would call healing.

This is really how simple it is.

Yet if he could but realize the war is between forces that are real and UNREAL powers, he could look upon himself and SEE his freedom. No-one finds himself ravaged and torn in endless battles which he HIMSELF perceives as wholly without meaning.

Another way of saying that is "wholly impossible." As wholly silly, as wholly unreasonable. Do you want the contest to be over? The contest between sickness and health? The contest between guilt and innocence? The contest between human and divine? Then be willing to acknowledge that one of the pairs in a conflict is unreal. So that you may see that fear is not called for.

Now, in the "Lord's Prayer" there is a line that says, Thy will be done.² We've talked about this before and we'll keep talking about it, because it's not a very palatable idea, "Thy will, not mine be done." Wow!

You need to start saying to the Holy Spirit: "Thy will, not mine be done." And understand that statement to mean this: Thy will, Holy Spirit (that which is nothing more than my right Mind) not my will be done—the will of the orphan that I think I am, the will of the independent one that I think I am, the will of the vulnerable one that must be expressed for survival, which validates it and makes it valuable.

Your self-absorbed autonomy and independent sense of self must come to a point of yielding to the Voice for truth in you. And that which is yielding to the Voice for truth in you, is that which identifies with the voice for fear and isn't real.

Everything within you says that such abandonment of authority on your part, and such submission on your part to something apparently other than yourself is sheer idiocy, absolute foolishness! And so you are very, very, very reluctant to do it. But the time will come to pass when you do, because it is inconsistent with the divine state of being for you to be unconscious of who and what you divinely are. And because of what you divinely are, you cannot ultimately succeed at behaving as though you are insane.

Nothing destructive ever was or will be. Is that some spiritual platitude, some cloud nine theory to give you comfort while you're suffering and until you finally die? Or is it an absolute fact that you must be willing to embrace absolutely and unequivocally? The war, the guilt, the past are gone as one into the unreality from which they came. They're gone because they never were present. They will appear to go to you as you become unafraid to let that which is nothing more than your right Mind be your Mind, yielding to it completely without reservation.

You must arrive at a point where you are willing to do the very thing that seems to be the most unreasonable: Yield up your autonomous authority to Something that will take you over and will govern you, govern you absolutely, so absolutely that the very thought of not allowing that kind of governance will never occur to you.

This that you must yield to, is You. And I will keep presenting this fact to you over and over again until you finally arrive at a place where you're willing to risk the chance that abandoning yourself to the Holy Spirit will return you to your sanity and integrity. And do it!

Now let's continue. The new section is:

THE GUARANTEE OF HEAVEN ¹

When we are all united in Heaven, you will value NOTHING that you value here. For nothing that you value here you value wholly, and so you do not value it at all. Value . . .

. . . and this is the key point . . .

Value is where God placed it, . .

The reason you don't value everything wholly is because you have placed the value on everything. "Oh, this is profitable, that is not. Oh, this is mine, not yours. That's yours not mine."

When you place value, which of the two voices are you using, which of the two vantage points are you coming from? When you place value on a thing it is the voice for fear that places the value. And the voice for fear will place value on everything relative to the safety it provides you with or the threat it presents to you according to your fearful mindset.

And because it hasn't occurred to you to say, "What is the more of what God is being here than what I'm seeing?" you are caught, you are blind. And none of what you value will you value in the Kingdom of Heaven. It doesn't mean that none of the things that you have placed value on won't be present in Heaven, but you will value them truly. And that's the difference.

Value is where God placed it, . .

How? How does God place value? God places value by expressing Himself. And that expression is Creation. And the Movement of Creation is God embodying what He Is. And because it is God that is being embodied it is of infinite inestimable value.

Value is where God placed it, and the value of what God esteems cannot BE judged, for it has been ESTABLISHED.

Truth has been established. Reality has been established. Unreality has not. Illusion has not, no matter how much or how completely you have fooled yourself into believing that your valuations are valid and are what are real.

Value is where God placed it, and the value of what God esteems cannot BE judged, for it has been ESTABLISHED. It is WHOLLY of value. It can merely be appreciated or not.

And all of you are sort of hanging out in the "or not" part.

It can merely be appreciated or not.

You can appreciate your right Mind or not. Hmm-mm.

So try something new. Try something new! Try appreciating it! Try looking in your brother's eyes, for what purpose; to get the lay of the land with him; to find out what his peculiar characteristics are; to be able to protect yourself in his presence or manipulate him more easily? No. Look into his eyes for the purpose of remembering God, because that's the function of your right Mind. That is your function.

To value what God esteems. . .

To value it partially is not to KNOW its value. In Heaven is everything God valued, and nothing else. Heaven is perfectly unambiguous. Everything is clear and bright, and calls forth ONE response.

It doesn't call forth awe and indifference. Indifference would mean there was a lack of understanding of what was being experienced. An impossibility for You in your right Mind.

There is no darkness, and there is no contrast. There is no variation. There is no interruption.

No interruption of what? Let's be clear here. An interruption could only be an interruption of a flow, of a movement, of the Movement of God, the Movement of Mind, which is experienced as infinite ideas that are perfectly tangible and real to the mind that formed them. It's an interruption of a Movement of Creation.

So when it says there is no variation, it does not mean that the true experience of Be-ing is one of eternal, changeless, unmoving bliss in which there is no differentiation; because Creation is an experience of Infinity—an infinite, indivisible movement.

You could call your body an indivisible movement, where toes can move and fingers can move and digestive juices can digest your last meal and your vocal cords can make sounds and your mouth and tongue can move to form words. And yet it's all one. And it is not truly at odds with itself in any way shape or form. There is no differentiation. There is no variation. There is no interruption.

There is a sense of peace so deep that no dream in this world. . .

[chuckling] . . . which means in the definitions formed by the mind giving voice to the voice for fear has ever brought.

There is a sense of peace so deep that no dream . . .

. . . in this mindset . . .

. . . in this world has ever brought even a dim imagining of what it is.

Mind you, as you can see, what we're reading now has changed in tone from what we've been reading. And what's happening here is that it is addressing the singularity of being—the fact that there is no war, because you cannot have a war between what is real and what is unreal.

And the call is for you to begin to look at everything as though there is no possibility of war going on, but that the war that has seemed to occur has been a by-product of a misuse and misinterpretation of your mind. In other words, it's an artifact, a mistake—an artifact of confusion, apparent but not actual.

Nothing in this world can give this peace, for nothing in this world is wholly shared.

Think about it: "Oh, this money is my money and not yours. I earned it. I have become a millionaire and you're not a millionaire. Oh, this house is mine. It's not yours. That house is yours. It's not mine. This land belongs to me and not to you. You cannot trespass on it. I have rights over this territory and you have none. And you must acquiesce to my rules while you're in my territory."

. . . nothing in this world is wholly shared.

Oh-h, does that mean, "What's mine is yours and what's yours is mine?" Well, you know the answer to that, because nothing as a matter of fact in your world is wholly shared. Possession is one of the key elements of your existence. Territory, boundaries, are an innate part of life.

Well, enjoy it if you think you can, but remember . . .

Nothing in this world can give this peace, for nothing in this world is wholly shared.

Do you realize that it's not making any comment about what's in the world—the trees, the grass, the things. It's talking about how the things are dealt with. And when possession takes precedence over extension and sharing, then the peace of Reality will be unavailable to you.

Perfect perception can merely show you what is CAPABLE of being wholly shared. It can also show you the RESULTS of sharing, while you still remember the results of NOT sharing.

These are fine points here. In the process of awakening, in the process of coming back into your right Mind, the Holy Spirit (that which is nothing more than your right Mind) reveals to you the difference between the way you're looking at and interpreting things and the way things are. And so, you will find yourself becoming aware of the meaning of sharing wholly everything, while at the same time having available to you your current sense of privacy and possession.

The two: That which is real and that which is unreal, will seem to exist side-by-side. And while they are existing as something you can contemplate and comprehend, even though one is real and one is unreal, you are still not Awake. But that experience is an essential part of the process of Awakening.

So . . .

Perfect perception . . .

. . . an experience that you can be infilled with spontaneously when you are undefended against it . . .

. . . can merely show you what is CAPABLE of being wholly shared. It can also show you the RESULTS of sharing, . .

And you will find yourself standing in awe of how reality works, right here.

It can also show you the RESULTS of sharing, while you still remember the results of NOT sharing. The Holy Spirit points quietly to the contrast, knowing that you will finally let Him judge the difference for you, . .

. . . listen to this:

. . . allowing Him to demonstrate which MUST be true.

There's that yielding part. There's that essential yielding part.

The Holy Spirit points quietly to the contrast, knowing that you will finally let Him judge the difference for you, . .

Uh-h take away your authority!

. . . you will finally let Him judge the difference for you, allowing Him to demonstrate which MUST be true.

This is hard to take:

He has perfect faith in your final judgement because He knows that He will make it FOR you.

Do you grasp that you're letting the Holy Spirit make it for you, is the way you step out of a first gear neutral, second gear or third gear experience? That it's the way you step out of the experience of a war occurring between a real and an unreal power?

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . has perfect faith in your final judgement because He knows that He will make it FOR you.

Now, where is the sanity in that statement? If He makes it for you and He is nothing more than your right Mind, then you're allowing your right Mind to make the final decision for you constitutes an ultimate and primitive act of sanity. That's where the truth is in that. And that is where the answer lies. This is the ultimate answer. It is the utterly simple answer.

Again . . .

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . has perfect faith in your final judgement because He knows that He will make it FOR you. To doubt this would be to doubt that His mission will be fulfilled. How is this possible, when His mission is of God?

The utter essence of your being, which is the Presence of God, has set in you all that is true about Him. And nothing can alter that. And although you have been able to imagine something else, and you have been able to believe your imaginations, your imaginations haven't made the Movement and Act of God invalid. It hasn't altered it in any way, shape or form. Therefore, it is inevitable that misperceptions will yield to Reality—your right Mind will supercede your imagination.

Now, we could talk at great length and may at some point about the concept of guilt and the way it is employed by the voice for fear and the mind that gives voice to the voice for fear. There's a lot that can be said. There's a lot that can be said about the attraction to guilt and the use of guilt and the extractions of penalties. There's a lot that can be said about the addictive nature of it all.

But you know what? It must be kept in perspective because the solution to the practice of guilt, the employment of guilt, is not to be found in dealing with guilt. It's to be found in remembering that no matter how many mental positions you think you can act from—the Voice for truth, neutral, or the voice for fear—there is only one that is Real. And you must choose for It.

You must more diligently than ever before ask when you're expressing yourself: "Is this the voice for fear that I'm giving voice to, or is this the Voice for truth that I'm giving voice to? If it's not the Voice for truth that I'm giving voice to, I'm engaged in nothing. And there's no meaning, nor is there any value present in it anywhere. And I don't wish to be meaningless. I don't choose to pretend to have the capacity to be meaningless.

"And so, I'm going to choose for my right Mind. I'm going to choose for it by shutting up the voice for fear that I've been engaged in and my apparent capacity to be pro-active out from my present sense of myself. And I'm going to settle down. I'm going to abandon my arrogance. I'm going to shut up and listen after having become curious to know the truth about whatever is going on and then listen for my right Mind to respond—which it is waiting only for my permission to do.

"And I will do this no matter what the physician has said. I will do this no matter what the lawyer has said. I will do this no matter what anyone is saying, so that I might bring the Voice for truth 'into the world,' embody it and make the gift of it. And I will be willing to share the Voice for truth without reservation. I will be willing to share it wholly with no strings. I will let it be the uninhibited and uncontrolled Movement of Love that it is. And I will let Love do its perfect work. I will yield to the way things work."

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 27th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Now, it might seem strange to say that we've arrived at a very important part of the book, A Course In Miracles, but the fact is that we have.

And it's especially important because there is a sentence which I dictated to Helen that does not appear in the first or second edition. And without that sentence, it becomes almost impossible to glean the full meaning of the portion that we've been reading last week and that we will be reading tonight.

This one very important sentence is: "The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind."¹

This is a very key sentence. It is a very key teaching. Because without it, as we read in this portion of the Course, it would be very easy for you to think of the Holy Spirit as part of the Holy Trinity; the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit—something far beyond you. And yet, you could say the essential teaching of the Course is that "The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind." Or we could reverse it and say, your right Mind is nothing less than the Holy Spirit.

Now, we spoke last week about first gear, second gear, and third gear. First gear is where you are listening to the Voice for truth. Second gear is neutral, where you think that you have a mind of your own—a place for you to simply be—and from which you can shift to first gear and listen to the Voice for truth or, from which you can shift from neutral to third gear, which is the voice for fear. And of course, fear and guilt are two sides of the same coin.

Now, one can read the Course and think that the Course is about learning how to be in neutral without engaging guilt or fear—without yielding to, or giving your attention to the voice for fear so that you might always be in a peaceful place in neutral, in second gear. But as we discussed last week, the voice for fear and neutral are illusions.

You do not have a place from which to be on your own. That's an illusion. And a capacity to listen to a voice for fear only seems possible if you insist upon occupying this invalid and unreal position called "neutral" where you're not connected to the Voice for truth, where your divinity is not a part of your awareness of yourself, where you are not yielding to anything except your own self-developed expertise at being an independent authority. And loving it!

It would seem that to improve one's self in neutral, one has to learn not to be governed by the voice for fear—as though that's the improvement needed in order to wake up—and hopefully, as you read the Course, to desire to listen to the Voice for truth which you've learned is available to you in the Altar in the very middle of you. But it's very possible for you to imagine that the Holy Spirit that is available to you in the Altar in the very center of your being is still the Holy Spirit, part of the Trinity—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; God, Jesus and the Holy Spirit.

If you cannot abandon that unreachable and different definition of the Son and the Holy Spirit, you will not be able to wake up. And you will not be able to embody what the Course is teaching!

You can see that this is very important. If you want to wake up, you have to abandon the orphan mentality; the sense of self that has no source, no father/mother, but is somehow self-existent or a product of a physical movement in a physical universe—evolution.

But you want to wake up. You want to become sane again. And so this is going to require not just abandoning the voice for fear and from neutral position listening to the Voice for truth, the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind, you are going to have to be willing to abandon neutral gear and let that which is nothing more than your right Mind, be you. It cannot be put anymore simply than that. That is the Gospel. That is the Good News!

The self that you think you are in neutral, is never going to be improved to the point of waking up. It is ultimately going to be abandoned because you have come to a point where you are willing to commit yourself—invest yourself fully in letting your right Mind replace the sense of a mind that you have developed from a vantage point in which you have conceived of yourself as being an independent entity separate from a God—something set in motion and given the option and task of self-governance. That belief will keep you dreaming. It is what needs to be abandoned. And the sentence that does not appear in the first and second editions of the Course is what makes utterly clear the truth of what I've just said: "The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind."

So again, we're not talking about improving your puny little self or helping others improve their puny little selves. We're talking about shifting entirely from a mental frame of mind in which you independently and autonomously govern yourself and your affairs, and where you are willing to re-embrace the only Mind that is yours—that Mind which is in perfect balance, perfect harmony, perfect sanity—that Mind which you must let take you over—that Mind which you must let supersede the mind you imagined you have.

Let's go to the book.

*You whose minds are darkened by doubt and guilt, remember this:
God gave the Holy Spirit to you, . . .²*

See, that means something quite different when you know that the Holy Spirit that God gave to you is nothing more than your right Mind. It has a very different meaning than it would if you think of the Holy Spirit as part of the Holy Trinity that is vastly different and distant from you, although it embraces you lovingly.

*You whose minds are darkened by doubt and guilt, remember this:
God gave the Holy Spirit to you, and gave Him the mission to remove all doubt and every trace of guilt that His dear Son . . .*

. . . you . . .

. . . has laid upon himself.

It makes sense, doesn't it? The Father has given you that which is nothing more than your right Mind to replace the mind that you have imagined; that you have filled with illusions and misunderstandings and errors. God has given you your real Mind—your right Mind—to replace a mind in you that is suffering from its own false beliefs, from its own illusions.

It is IMPOSSIBLE that this mission fail.

It is impossible that your right Mind will fail in its purpose to unite you, to bring you back into a whole awareness of yourself. You could say, to bring you back into Unity consciousness which would of course be infinite consciousness—all inclusive, where nothing of what the Infinite Mind that is God is—where you are the fullness of what God is.

Nothing can prevent what God would have accomplished from accomplishment.

You know, if the Holy Spirit really were something at a distance in a holy position with God and Jesus, it would be easy for you to imagine that maybe the Holy Spirit couldn't reach you or maybe you couldn't reach the Holy Spirit. But if you understand that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, it becomes obvious to you that it's actually impossible for you to be separated from It even if you are ignoring It. And therefore, the inevitability of what I'm going to call reunification, becomes clearly possible and reasonable as well as inevitable if indeed the Holy Spirit functions as the, I'm going to say, embodiment of God's Will. Therefore, any temporary insanity that you pretend to be in will necessarily be temporary. Necessarily. And the truth of that becomes obvious to you when you realize that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind.

Whatever your reactions to the Holy Spirit's Voice may be . . .

. . . and I am chuckling because Paul understands fully what I am speaking about because the Holy Spirit's Voice is one that he and all of you will resist from time to time even though it's nothing more than your right Mind.

Whatever your reactions to the Holy Spirit's Voice may be, whatever voice you choose to listen to . . .

. . . first gear or third gear—Voice for truth, voice for fear, whichever voice you choose to listen to, . . .

. . . whatever strange thoughts may occur to you, God's Will IS done.

That is why you can't pretend to be insane forever, permanently. You cannot establish it because God did not establish it.

God's Will IS done.

What God is Be-ing, right where you are, is the only thing that can Be right where you are, no matter how creatively imaginative you might become.

You WILL find the peace in which He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . has established you . . .

God is the Establisher.

You WILL find the peace in which He has established you because He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . does not change His Mind. He is invariable as the peace in which you dwell, and of which the Holy Spirit reminds you.

You might not have thought about it, you might not have taken an overview of your experiences of guilt or of fear, but if you will observe the next time you are experiencing either guilt or fear clearly, that the experience is mesmerizing. You even have a phrase: “Caught in the grip of fear!” And it becomes difficult to set it down. It becomes difficult to ignore it. It becomes almost impossible to imagine that there can be reasonable justification for shifting your attention from it—your compulsive, addicted attention—from it and give your attention, instead, to your peace—the peace that is part of your being; that is the nature of your being which is inescapable.

Remember, we spoke last week about the fact that there seem to be two powers at war with each other and one of them is real and one of them is unreal. And your escape from the conflict lies in your willingness to identify one of the voices as unreal and therefore not an actual power or force that can accomplish anything. And in that awareness you are released from the imagination that there can be conflict that can impact you and injure you or hurt you or demean you, actually. And in that realization, you will find yourself free of the invitation to fear. Free of the mesmeric, hypnotic invitation to justify the experience of fear and then attempt to overcome it.

See, it’s the one in neutral that would hear the voice for fear and become enticed into overcoming the voice for fear. And that’s where the mistake is. And that’s where the clarity [snaps fingers] has to come into focus so that you realize that it’s not the overcoming of the fear that’s called for but the abandonment of second gear from which you are observing fear and guilt entice you and engulf you. And instead, turn to the Voice for truth in you.

Invite the Voice for truth in you to reveal the truth about you. Invite your right Mind, which is utterly and ultimately divine because it’s the Presence of the Mind for God, to reveal to you the truth about you that has nothing to do with a second gear called, “neutral” or a third gear called, “the voice for fear.”

God . . .

. . . is invariable as the peace in which you dwell, . .

It’s your environment. It’s the environment of your being. And the environment of your being that was established by God remains forever unchanged and therefore, forever available to you.

God . . .

. . . is invariable as the peace in which you dwell, and of which the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . reminds you.

Your sanity is forever on hand reminding you of the truth of you always. Always it is present with you reminding you.

So when you shift your attention from third gear, the voice for fear, and you abandon second gear, neutral, and you let first gear be fully you, you will be allowing what God has set into place for you to do what it's supposed to do. And you will call it, "Waking Up." You will call it, "The end of illusions." It will be an experience of joy.

And so, no matter what problems you're faced with, no matter what the nature or character, no matter what its unique peculiarities are, no matter how seductive they are, you must remember not to take the bait. And even if you do take the bait, you must recognize it and remember that you must give your attention to first gear knowing that it's not pie-in-the-sky Holy Spirit, but ultimate Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind whose function it is to replace your misunderstandings and your confusion and illuminate your infinite sanity and return you to your right Mind.

That's important. It's not going to bring your right Mind to you here in second gear, it's going to return you to your right Mind.

Now, continuing . . .

You will not remember change and shift in Heaven. You have need of contrast only here.

Here in the Kingdom of Heaven that you are calling the human condition. Here in neutral.

Contrast and differences are necessary teaching aids, for by them you learn what to avoid and what to seek.

And I will say, hopefully you learn what to avoid and what to seek. What you need to become aware of is, that what you call life—which most everybody is living out from neutral—is not something to be lived out forever in neutral. It is an experience from which you're supposed to learn and not stay in.

You see?

Contrast and differences are necessary teaching aids, . .

. . . to one who's living in neutral seeming to sit with the Voice for truth on his left, and [chuckle] the voice for fear on his right, while he remains innocently playing with one and the other as though it doesn't make any difference. And that's life—nothing to learn, just, you know, use Spirit to overcome evil and watch while evil tries to overcome Spirit, so that you can have this thrill of overcoming this dastardly voice for fear, you see. No. You're here to learn.

Contrast and differences are necessary teaching aids, for by them you learn what to avoid and what to seek. When you have learned this you will find the answer that makes the need for ANY differences disappear.

Now that doesn't mean that there won't be trees or flowers or individualities. Those aren't differences. But a "bad person" and a "good person" or poison oak and a rose do seem to be differences. They will disappear, but not Creation.

When you have learned this you will find the answer that makes the need for ANY differences disappear.

Why? Because you won't need to be further convinced of what you want and what you don't want.

Listen to this:

Truth comes of its own will unto its own.

The Voice for truth is nothing more than your right Mind. Truth comes to its own. Truth comes to you of its own will because of the absolute unalterable integrity of you, of Be-ing, of Creation.

Truth comes of its own will unto its own. When you have learned that you BELONG to truth, it will flow lightly over you without a difference of any kind.

Truth will not illustrate differences. Because you will no longer be confused and attracted to that which is not true without realizing that you're supposed to learn something from the uncomfortable experience and stop doing it. You see?

Again . . .

When you have learned that you BELONG to truth, . .

See, this is again the yielding to the Holy Spirit, letting that take over you, which is nothing more than your right Mind and is therefore a sane and intelligent thing to do.

Well, . .

When you have learned that you BELONG to truth, . .

. . . and aren't just some little entity sitting in neutral that can, um-m, take a little bit of truth from the Voice for truth and take a little bit of fear from the voice for fear and sort of mix them up and work them around and have a little bit of excitement; and then finally lean a little bit more toward the Voice for truth so you have a breather, some peace, you know.

When you've learned that you belong to truth and it's not a thing for you to employ, .

. . . it will flow lightly over you . . .

It won't be hard to hear the truth.

. . . it will flow lightly over you without a difference of any kind. For you will need no contrast to help you realize that this is what you want, and ONLY this. Fear not the Holy Spirit will fail in what your Father has given Him to do.

In other words, fear not that the Holy Spirit will use contrast in a way that would cause you not to learn what you need to learn. Do not be afraid that the Holy Spirit will use contrast in any way other than the way that will trigger Awakening and graceful growth, graceful learning, because its function is to return you to your right Mind, in which there is no confusion and therefore no suffering.

Fear not the Holy Spirit will fail in what your Father has given Him to do. The Will of God can fail in NOTHING.

You see, you cannot escape... there is no way that you could have gotten outside of the will of God. There's no way you could have gotten outside of your right Mind. The only thing that you can seem to have done is to have drawn a little circle within the infinite Mind that you are. And then say that this circumscribed part is all there is of you. Well, it isn't all there is of you, but it is you. It's the Presence of God viewed in a limited fashion.

Your right Mind undoes the boundaries and reunites that which is all of you to you.

Have faith in only this one thing, and it will be sufficient . . .

. . . and this is it:

God wills you be in Heaven, and nothing can keep YOU from it or It from you.

Why does God will you to be in Heaven? Because God didn't create any other place for you to be. It's that simple. And because of that nothing can actually keep you from it or it from you.

Your wildest misperceptions, your weird imaginings, your blackest nightmares . . .

What?

. . . all mean nothing.

They are meaningless.

They will not prevail against the peace God wills for you. The Holy Spirit will restore your sanity because insanity is NOT the Will of God. If that suffices Him, . .

God . . .

. . . it is enough for you. You will not keep what God would have removed because it breaks communication with you with whom He would communicate. His voice WILL be heard.

That's like saying your salvation will be experienced. You in your right Mind, will be the only one left—no orphan among orphans, just the real You, the Son, the Daughter of God—embodying willingly what God is Be-ing right there where you are; because you were willing to abandon all of the rights and privileges you thought you had as an orphan to be your original self on whatever terms you wanted to make up. But, because that put you in a position of disconnection from what you divinely are—which we're calling second gear, neutral—you immediately created the third gear to cope with, because in your separated state it's impossible for you not to experience fear and guilt simultaneously. You see?

This should be becoming clearer and clearer to you. The clearer it becomes to you, the easier it will be for you to comprehend making the choice for the Voice for truth, which you can safely do because you're making the choice for that which is nothing more than your right Mind, not your tiny little self's right mind, but the Presence of what God is Be-ing infinitely right where you are, from which He has withheld nothing of what He is.

The communication link which God Himself placed within you, joining your minds with His, CANNOT be broken.

Here again, this could be misunderstood. What is the communication link which God Himself placed within you? The Holy Spirit. Mind you, the Holy Spirit came into existence, we will say, when you decided to become imaginative and get a divorce from your Father and try to be an independent entity.

When you did that and circumscribed the infinity of you by a smaller circle and said, “This is me,” did you annihilate the rest of the infinitude of you? No, it’s still there but you’re ignoring it. And that is what is called the Holy Spirit, the allness of what God is Be-ing right there as you is now divided by your active independence into the Holy Spirit and the little orphan in neutral gear.

So as long as you maintain this little circle and say, “What’s inside is all there is of me,” the Holy Spirit, everything outside it, is present and pressuring, pressing against the boundary so as to break it.

Again . . .

The communication link which God Himself placed within you, joining your minds with His, CANNOT be broken. You may believe you WANT it broken, and this belief DOES interfere with . . .

. . . what?

. . . the deep peace in which the sweet and constant communication which God would share with you is known.

As long as you’re in neutral, you are going to be dealing with the actuality of the voice for truth and the illusion of the voice for fear. And the two will seem to be in conflict. You will and do call it “The human condition.” And you think the human condition is life, that it’s the ultimate and that you must make the best of it and that’s your task. And you have even imagined that there are reincarnations so that you might learn better and better how to be in this fashion. But I’m telling you, the answer is to get out of neutral, abandon neutral and the voice for fear.

The communication link, which God Himself placed within you—joining your minds with His—cannot be broken. And so you can get back. You may believe you want it broken, you say, “Oh, I’d rather struggle a little longer, it’s pretty exciting. I have a lot invested in what I’m doing right now. Let me see if it is going to fail before I yield to what you're suggesting." You may believe you want it broken—the connection—and this belief does interfere with the deep peace in which the sweet and constant communication which God would share with you, is known.

Yet His channels of reaching out cannot be wholly closed and separated from Him.

What does that mean—His channels of reaching out? You, every aspect of Creation are His channels of reaching out, of extension, of expressing love, of embracing and blessing with all that He is.

. . . His channels of reaching out cannot be wholly closed and separated from Him. Peace will be yours because His peace still flows to you from Him Whose Will IS peace.

In other words, God.

You have it NOW.

You say, "I don't have it now. I haven't had peace in a long time. And even when I had it there was never any stability to it, therefore it couldn't have been real peace." It's all bullshit. You have it now. Why? Because you couldn't have second gear or third gear, if you didn't have first gear. You can't have an illusion of nothing. You can't have a distortion of nothing. You can't have a false experience of nothing. It's that simple.

Peace will be yours because His peace still flows to you from Him Whose Will IS peace. You have it NOW. The Holy Spirit will teach you how to USE it, and by . . .

. . . what?

. . . projecting it to learn that it is in you.

The key here is, that you must do something new that you haven't done before. You must stop trying to improve the human condition. You must stop trying to improve everything by using the definitions you have given to everything; by using the value that you have placed in everything. You must abandon that and cultivate the curiosity to have revealed to you the value God has put in everything, which will reveal to you His Purpose behind this or that or the other thing, or embodied as this, that or the other thing. You see?

God willed you Heaven, and will ALWAYS will you nothing else. The Holy Spirit knows ONLY of His Will.

Now isn't it wonderful that you can no longer think that the Holy Spirit is something high in the sky—the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit.

*God willed you Heaven, and will ALWAYS will you nothing else.
The Holy Spirit . . .*

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . . .

. . . knows ONLY of His Will.

God's Will.

There is no chance that Heaven will not be yours, for God is sure, and what He wills is sure as He is.

Now, you might be listening to what I'm saying and be thinking that, wow, this is like a giant leap that I'm talking about. I'm asking something of you that is humongous, impossible. And it's not. I'm just asking you to recognize what the answer is. And the answer is not you, in neutral, trying to improve the human condition by working the good and the evil better, or by being independent better, as though you could be independent without the voice for fear accompanying you absolutely.

You will learn salvation because you will learn HOW TO SAVE. It will not be possible to exempt yourself from what the Holy Spirit wills to teach you.

Again, I know the ego thinks that sounds like control. But when you realize that it's your right Mind which wills to teach you of your integrity and your indivisible wholeness you will realize that it's not control, it's really sanity.

Salvation is as sure as God. His certainty suffices. Learn . . .

. . . here it is learn, supposed to be learning.

Learn that even the darkest nightmare that disturbed the mind of God's sleeping Son holds no power over him. He WILL learn the lesson of awakening. God watches over him and light surrounds him.

God watches over you and light surrounds you.

Can God's Son lose himself in dreams . . .

. . . well it seems as though you can.

Can God's Son lose himself in dreams when God has placed WITHIN him the glad call to waken and be glad?

Oh again, what is this that has been placed in you that is a glad call to waken and be glad? It's the Holy Spirit. God has placed in you, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, and there was no way for you to abandon it actually. It is the glad call, if you will but abandon second gear and third gear, realizing that in shifting your attention and embrace to first gear it will dissolve second and third gear and return you to your sanity. And you will be glad.

He . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . cannot separate HIMSELF from what is IN him. His sleep will not withstand the call to wake. The mission of redemption will be fulfilled as surely as the creation will remain unchanged throughout eternity.

Why? Because they're one and the same thing—your creation by God was an eternal creation. You in your right Mind are an eternal creation. And because of that your temporary confusion can only be that—temporary.

You do not have to know that Heaven is yours . . .

. . . reality is yours . . .

. . . to make it so. It IS so. Yet the Will of God must be accepted as YOUR will, to know it.

But remember, what we're talking about is making a shift to your right Mind, which is an act of integration and therefore an action of integrity and one that can be embraced without fear and with commitment.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned . . .

. . . and that word "learned" should be in quotes—everything that you have taught yourself from second gear.

The Holy Spirit cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned that teaches you what is not true must be reconciled with truth.

In other words, that what you have created from second gear, which has been created from a vantage point of fear and guilt, that it must be able to be brought to a point of being real—absolutely as real as God’s Creation.

The Holy Spirit cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned that teaches you what is not true must be reconciled with truth.

You see, that has to do with manipulation from second gear of the things in third gear and somehow, making what’s going on in second and third gear become equal to what is going on in first gear, which is Reality. That’s the reconciliation that the ego would have you engage in. And it’s the reconciliation that I mentioned at the beginning tonight, where if you don’t know that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then you are likely to engage in your spiritual path from second gear using the elements of fear and guilt because they are inseparable from second gear, and thereby never accomplishing your awakening, because you’re trying to reconcile the wrong things—improve the human condition.

Now listen to this:

The Holy Spirit cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned . . .

. . . taught yourself . . .

. . . that teaches you what is not true must be reconciled with truth. This is the reconciliation which the ego would substitute for . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . your reconciliation unto sanity and unto peace.

And there it is as clear as a bell. The reconciliation has nothing to do with dynamics between second gear and third gear. The Holy Spirit’s reconciliation for you is helping you to abandon second gear and third gear and succumb to, yield to, be overcome by, be overwhelmed most beautifully by the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind. That’s the reconciliation. And that’s what, as you read this Course, you must understand it is pointing you in the direction of.

The Holy Spirit has a very different kind of reconciliation in His Mind for you, and one which He WILL effect as surely as the ego will NOT effect what it attempts.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

*. . . has a very different kind of reconciliation in His Mind
for you, . . .*

. . . it's a reconciliation with Him. It's a reconciliation with everything outside the tiny circumference that you've placed in the middle of the infinity of you and claimed to be all there is of you.

The Holy Spirit has a very different kind of reconciliation in His Mind for you, and one which He WILL effect . . .

. . . accomplish . . .

. . . as surely as the ego will NOT effect . . .

. . . or accomplish . . .

. . . what it attempts.

What is the ego? The voice for fear—third gear. Third gear will never accomplish anything because it is an unreal power.

Now, during this coming week I'm going to invite you all to go over what we read last week as well as what we've discussed this week. It is incredibly invigorating, motivating and contributive to sudden shifts of perception—miracles.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 10th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to back up a paragraph for continuity's sake.

The Holy Spirit . . . ¹

. . . again, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned . . .

. . . or taught yourself . . .

. . . that teaches you what is not true must be reconciled with truth.

In other words, that everything that you have made up which is not true must be brought to truth and by virtue of a capacity that you think you have had, your creation will be able by the force of your will and determination and commitment, be rendered real—actual. As real as God's Creation.

But, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . cannot fail to undo FOR you everything you have learned that teaches you what is not true must be reconciled with truth.

Not too bright an outlook for the ego. "Oh, you mean after all the hard work I've done, nothing is going to come of it?" That's true. That's true. What is not real can never become valid and you can never become burdened by what is not real.

This is the reconciliation which the ego would substitute for your reconciliation unto sanity and unto peace.

You see . . .

The Holy Spirit has a very different kind of reconciliation in His Mind for you, . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind has a very different kind of reconciliation in It's Mind for you . . .

. . . and one which He WILL effect as surely as the ego will NOT effect what it attempts.

And again, just as a reminder and for clarity sake, the reconciliation which your right Mind has in mind for you, is the reconciliation between you as you perceive yourself to be right now, and It. You see, your mindset presently as an orphan—as an ego, wants to reconcile things that you have created while in the orphanage and reconcile them with Creation itself. It also wants to reconcile elements within the orphanage state of mind with other elements.

In other words, get mutual agreements so that everyone will cooperate so as to make you a lot of money or to benefit you in some way or so that you can all benefit each other in some way.

But, the reconciliation that the Holy Spirit has in mind for you is not one of reconciling illusions with illusions, but rather to have you shift your attention entirely from the orphan state of mind—to abandon second gear, neutral and third gear, the voice for fear—and abandon yourself to first gear—to yield to the Voice for truth, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. In other words, to shift identity from an orphan sense of self to the real one that you Are—that it's your birthright to be experiencing with joy. That's the reconciliation that the Holy Spirit has in mind for you.

It will not reconcile anything from second gear or third gear. This is important to understand. Because you know what it means? You will not waste any more time reconciling what can't be reconciled or reconciling what you think ought to be able to be reconciled. And you can attend to the one thing that will cause you to wake up.

Continuing . . .

Failure is of the ego, NOT of God. From Him . . .

... God ...

... you CANNOT wander, and there is no possibility that the plan the Holy Spirit offers to everyone, for the salvation OF everyone, will not be perfectly accomplished.

That is fact—important!

From ...

... God ...

... you CANNOT wander, and there is no possibility that the plan the Holy Spirit offers to everyone, for the salvation OF everyone, will not be perfectly accomplished.

You WILL be released, and you will not remember . . .

... listen to this ...

. . . you will not remember anything you made that was not created FOR you and BY you in return.

Is that a little bit of a mindbender?

You WILL be released, and you will not remember anything you made that was not created FOR you and BY you . . .

How can something be created for you and by you? It's easy. Remember, creation is co-creation. So, God creates for you. And your part in the co-creation is the wonder-filled acknowledgement of It. "Oh! I see what You've made... Ah-h...Wonderful!"

Your part in the co-creation is the acknowledgement of what God created as His Creation, without confusion, without thinking It came from any other source—without thinking you did it or your brother did it or the orphan down the hall.

You WILL be released, . .

. . . from what? From a state of being unreconciled with yourself, unreconciled with that which you truly Are.

You WILL be released, and you will not remember anything you made that was not created FOR you . . .

... by God ...

... and BY you ...

... in the acknowledgement of It as Creation Itself ...

... in return.

Creation is a two-step process you might say. God creates and you discern. You observe. You see and say, "Yes! Yes Father." You see?

Again ...

You WILL be released, and you will not remember anything you made ...

... in other words, anything you made up. That the illusions that you would have brought to truth to render them true will not only be gone, you will not remember them. You will not be plagued with them. You will not have night dreams, as it were, in which the past plagues you. You will not remember them.

You WILL be released, and you will not remember anything you made that was not created FOR you and BY you in return. For how can you remember what was NEVER true, or NOT remember what has always been? It is this reconciliation with truth, and ONLY truth, in which the peace of Heaven lies.

... or the peace of your Be-ing or the peace of Be-ing Itself.

As long as you think you have a capacity, a self-fulfilling capacity to be creative on your own, separate and apart from God, you will lack. You will be preoccupied with that which you have made as well as that which you are making. And what you have made you will be busy protecting because it's not real and it's therefore not eternal—and therefore, it's not permanent, stable. And it will not always be yours if you don't protect it, if you do not guard it and if you do not stand over and against your brothers, because after all they're very likely to try and take it from you because it's not permanently yours, because what you've created isn't real.

But on the other hand, when you willingly abandon the concept that you can be an independent authorizer, an independent creator—as insulting as that is to your ego and you yield to your right Mind, in other words, you defer to something other than this sense of yourself that you have made up and that you believe, which when you're doing it feels like a disrespect for everything you've been respecting—you will find that the only thing you lose is what wasn't real. The only thing you will lose are illusions you created and maintained by an investment of your belief in them. But in their absence, you will find all of Creation in your lap, as it were, on your doorstep, as it were. You will find all of Creation—God's Creation—and at the same time you will remember that you took part in that Creation, in the acknowledgement of It as the Father's.

And in your acknowledgement of It, in your deference of authority to the Father in Creation, you play an essential part. Because you know what? Unrecognized good is non-existent good. Unrecognized creation is non-existent creation. In order for Creation—the Movement of God—to be experienced, to be real, it must be validated. And that's your job. You are the observer. You are that which pays attention. And that's why it says that your attention is God's treasure.

The next section is called:

THE TESTIMONY OF MIRACLES

Yes, you are blessed indeed. Yet in this world you do not know it.

Oh, well, what does that mean?

... in this world ...

Well, it means in the orphanage you imagine that you're in. An orphanage which is sitting in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, as a concoction of your imagination.

It's like children going out on a summer's day, into a vacant field and imagining that it's an ocean on which there are ships. And each one of the children is a ship of his own, plying the waves, doing what it does, maybe carrying pirates and plundering the other ships... [chuckling] or maybe being a hospital ship, doing good deeds.

Well, there are no waves. There is no ocean. There are no ships. But it's easy to pretend. And so, you pretend that there's an orphanage in the field and that you're an orphan in that orphanage. And all the other children are playing orphans with you. You see? But it's not real.

... you are blessed indeed ...

How? By having the Holy Spirit as your Mind. Having the Holy Spirit as your Sanity. Having your recognition of your Sonship or Daughtership with God available to you in all the fullness of Its meaning and all of Its inheritance, if you will. You are blessed.

Yet in this . . .

. . . orphan state of mind . . .

. . . in this world . . .

. . . you have made up . . .

. . . you do not know it. But you have the means for learning it and seeing it quite clearly. The Holy Spirit uses logic as easily and as well as does the ego, except that His conclusions . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . are NOT insane. They take a direction exactly opposite, pointing as clearly to Heaven as the ego points to darkness and to death. We have followed much of the ego's logic, and have seen its logical conclusions. And having seen them, we have realized that they can not be seen but in illusions, for there alone their seeming clearness SEEMS to be clearly seen.

That's not just a play on words. You all know that you can get into a frame of mind where you will believe something that isn't true. You've done it. And it isn't till after the fact that you realize that what you believed wasn't true. But you did believe it.

And so, in your confused state of mind there was pure logic to all of your conclusions; and that logic led to justifiable distress and pain and suffering and anger, etc., etc.

We have followed much of the ego's logic, and have seen its logical conclusions. And having seen them, we have realized that they can not be seen but in illusions, . .

. . . why? Because once things become clear to you again, you can't see what you were seeing before and believe that they're valid. And so, it's clear to you that they cannot be seen except in a deluded mind.

. . . for there alone their seeming clearness SEEMS to be clearly seen. Let us now turn away from them, and follow the simple logic by which the Holy Spirit teaches you the simple conclusions that speak for truth, and ONLY truth.

[repeating]

Let us now turn away from them, and follow the simple logic by which the Holy Spirit teaches . . .

What's going to prompt you to turn away? It's not your natural inclination—or hasn't been so far. If you're suffering, if you're in pain, if you're bothered, if there is distress, you simply accept it as a real condition—something to be coped with, not something the reality of which needs to be challenged. You see?

So, having learned now, as we've been moving along, that suffering is not natural to you, that it's not your Birthright and that it's indicative of the fact that you are occupying and identifying with neutral, second gear—which is an invalid position, an illusory position from which to be—you now have the capacity to have an “Aha” experience.

“Ah-h! I am not comfortable. And although I believe I'm not comfortable because of the circumstances I'm confronted by, I now know that I'm actually uncomfortable because I'm trying to occupy second gear. I'm trying to be from a place in which it's inevitable that I will be troubled.” You see? And that can be the reminder to you, a reminder to now turn away from them—illusions.

Let us now turn away from them, and follow the simple logic by which the Holy Spirit teaches . . .

You say, “Oh! I did it again. I'm in second gear. I'm trying to be in neutral. And I know it because I'm not happy. I know it because I'm feeling uncomfortable. I know it because my stomach is hurting.” Blah, blah, blah.

And so, you have now the means to say, “My problem is the mental position I'm trying to create and occupy and maintain in order to have an independent identity, self-governed—the purpose of which is to behave in such a way as to develop pride and self-confidence and a feeling of actual competence. That's my problem. And so, I know now to abandon that, to turn to the Holy Spirit—or to turn to your Guide, who has the same function as the Holy Spirit—and ask to know how to see what is actually in front of you; how to interpret it; how to be free of the illusions that are part and parcel of your insisting on viewing it all from neutral, second gear. You see?

Let us now turn away from them, . .

... illusions ...

... and follow the simple logic by which the Holy Spirit teaches you the simple conclusions that speak for truth, and ONLY truth.

Now, I would imagine that in the last week or two weeks, many of you have been doing this. You've been turning to the Holy Spirit. You've been turning to the Holy Spirit knowing that It's nothing more than your right Mind. And therefore, your turning to It and leaning into It is a matter of leaning into the essential integrity of your divine Being, which isn't nearly as scary a thing as it used to be when you thought the Holy Spirit was something different from you.

And you've done it. And you haven't gotten any clarity. This is a problem you will run into. Not because the Holy Spirit doesn't answer, but because an orphan mentality is a mentality which denies truth and intends to come upon truth by some other devious route through the use of creative imagination and nothing substantial.

So, you turn to the Holy Spirit to have the logic of that—which is nothing more than your right Mind—speak to you and you don't hear anything because it is not easy for you to abandon the habit of the denial of truth.

And so, what it means is that you must persist. And lest you become discouraged by My saying that, it is very important for you to understand that the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—has an intent to connect with you, no matter what It has to do to get around your defenses against perceiving the truth.

And so it's not all up to you. But it is up to you to persist in your intent to hear. In other words, you must persist in listening.

Remembering that:

Failure is of the ego, NOT of God.

If you are blessed ...

... which you are ...

... and do not know it, you need to LEARN it must be so.

You hear that? You need to learn. That means that you're going to be engaged in a learning process. Remember school? You went to school and you paid attention. And you paid attention from all different angles, so that you might comprehend fully and learn of what you were observing.

It's going to take conscientiousness. But when you are being conscientious at paying attention to something which is an awesome aspect of Creation—the Movement of God—why wouldn't you bring whatever degree of intent it took to accomplish the goal of learning? It is worth it. You're just not used to having to learn. And you would like it to be done for you. But it's your commitment that you bring to it that opens the door to what's already there. Because your commitment is the way you undo your long-standing practice of denial of truth, even though you didn't know you were doing it.

If you are blessed and do not know it, you need to LEARN it must be so. The knowledge is not taught, but its CONDITIONS must be acquired, for it is they that have been thrown away.

Well, what does that mean?

The Knowledge is not taught, . .

Well, many of you believe that you are the children of God, that you are the Holy Son or Daughter of God—that you are God's offspring. Many of you believe that you're just an organism, a part of an evolutionary process on a physical planet.

Now, for those of you who believe that you are God's offspring, that you are the direct expression of God, you are missing out on the conditions of that state of Be-ing. Would you not say that one of the conditions of being the Son or Daughter of God is Peace? Would you not say it's Joy? Would you not say it's painlessness? Would you not say it's health? Would you not say it's harmony?

Well now, all of these conditions, which would be the condition of being the Son or Daughter of God; all of these things you experience in wavering forms. They come and go. They increase and they decrease. They're insubstantial and impermanent.

Now, these conditions must be acquired because when these conditions are acquired and you are experiencing them, you then know and it's not a belief any longer—you Know. The Knowledge is there confirmed by the conditions. And I'm going to say, that the Knowledge is disclosed by the presence of the conditions. And so, what you want to be looking for is not the Knowledge but the conditions of being the Son or Daughter of God.

You want to experience the conditions of a tree, or a flower, or a table being an idea in the Mind of God, having no material accompaniments whatsoever but constituted of the energy of Spirit, which is Love radiating infinitely and experienceable by all infinitely.

These are the conditions that must be acquired. How do you acquire them? Through the use of curiosity, as I've said before. Look at the flower, or look at your mate, or look at the glass and ask of the Holy Spirit, "What is the more of what God is Be-ing here, than what I'm seeing?" You see?

So the Knowledge is not taught. The Holy Spirit—that which is your right Mind—is not going to give you Knowledge. But It is going to help you access or acquire the conditions.

The knowledge is not taught, but its CONDITIONS must be acquired, for it is they that have been thrown away.

You see?

On the one hand you say, "Hey, I'm just a mortal, you know. I'm sixty years old and you know, I'm past the prime of my life and you know, I just don't have what I used to have. But hey, that's life isn't it?" You see.

You've thrown away the conditions of youth, so to speak, through a use of your mind that denies the fullness and the vigor of youth—you consciously deny the truth of your Be-ing and you've thrown the conditions away. But you can still say, "I know I'm a child of God." You see the inconsistency? "I know I'm the child of God. I know that. I believe that even. But hey, you know, what can you expect, I am sixty years old. I am this or I am that." And so, you have this conflict going on. You have this war within yourself—"I am this, but I'm not this".

And so it's like book learning. It's just a thought. "I'm a child of God. God loves me. You know, I limp a little but I know God loves me. And hey, what can I expect, I'm this many years old—I'm this or that." You see?

The knowledge is not taught, but its CONDITIONS must be acquired, . . .

. . . and I might say reacquired . . .

. . . for it is they that have been thrown away.

They've been thrown away and you've developed a mindset that keeps arguing them away and disallows for their return. "Hey, I'm sixty, my wife is fifty-five. We're both showing signs of age. If I started acting like I was thirty years old again, how do you think that would make her feel? I can't go around being a couple, looking and behaving as though I'm twenty years younger than she is. That would be insulting to her. That would be unbearable for her. And it would be unbearable to me to have to live looking in her face and seeing her sadness—that she is not able to keep up with me. You see. So no, don't talk to me about wonderful things like youth. You see, I still insist on denying the truth about me for this reason."

Now, you're going to have to start breaking the rules. And you're going to have to start being the ones who are evidencing the conditions of reality, so that your brothers and sisters have inspiration to abandon their devotion to denying the truth.

You CAN . . .

. . . can is the operative word here.

You CAN learn to bless.

You CAN learn to inspire by embodying the conditions of your true Be-ing, by listening to the logic of the Holy Spirit as it uncovers to you what is true, and does it by managing to get around your habits of denial and your peculiar ways of keeping truth at a distance from you.

You CAN learn to bless, and CANNOT give what you have not. If, then, you OFFER blessing, . .

. . . or I'll say inspiration . . .

. . . it MUST have come first to yourself. And you must also have ACCEPTED it as yours, for how else could you give it away?

This brings us to an important point, because in the last week or so we've been talking about you. We've been talking about you listening to the Voice for truth or listening to the voice for fear or being in neutral. And we've been talking about what you need to do to get out of illusion; to become free of the belief in a neutral position and in the abandonment of it, becoming free of guilt and fear, which are the third gear, which necessarily come into existence when second gear is occupied.

And so, once again it can sound as though all you have to do to wake up is to do something all by yourself. You can dare to abandon second gear and thereby third gear and let that which is nothing more than your right Mind consume that sense of a mind and self; and replace that sense of a mind and self that you have been occupying, and which we have called the orphan and orphanage, and voila! you could think [snapping fingers] you'll be awake. No. You still can't do it all by yourself.

What reasonable justification do you have for yielding to the Holy Spirit? What is the only valid reason for succumbing to the Holy Spirit? Your brother... your brother has to be the reason why you are willing to yield to the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. What is it that facilitates the coming forth of the Holy Spirit? An act of love on your part, an act of love on behalf of your brother, an act of love on behalf of your sister; a desire to have an experience you haven't experienced before—to look at them or to look into their eyes and remember God.

Remember, the way to yield to the Holy Spirit is to ask, "How do I see God here? How do I see God there?" Then the Holy Spirit, through its exquisite use of logic and its incredible grasp of the illusions which you are employing and the secret defenses that you have in place against your discerning the truth, it is able to get to where you are and speak to you so that you hear it and truth dawns on you. But your brother or your sister has to be the reason for it. And it is very important not to forget this.

Yes, you can recognize that when you're miserable, you're disturbed; that it is because you are occupying second gear, neutral, and you can choose to listen to the Holy Spirit in order to shift out of neutral. But you must remember something: Behind your desire for comfort and peace must be a desire to reconnect with your brothers and sisters in acts of love, which include the acknowledgement of them as the direct expression of God, because that's what makes them brothers and sisters to you and you a brother or sister to them—and all of you the offspring of God. And in that your denial of truth, your denial of reality, the denial that has created for you a sense of real orphanhood is undone. And you escape from it. You are released from it.

If, then, you OFFER blessing, it MUST have come first to yourself.

Even if you think you don't have a capacity to bless your brother and sister, your desire to do it and your intent and your act of love and caring from within yourself opens the door for blessing to come through and in the process of extending to your brother touches you, blesses you.

And . . .

. . . you can see that . . .

. . . you must also have ACCEPTED it as yours, for how else could you give it away?

Do you see though that there's a little bit of a twist to this? Your desiring to give something away before you have it, that's an act of faith, an essential act, an essential part of it. Your act of love toward your fellowman brings love through you and illuminates you both with all of what it is. And that's the way it works. And so you do not have the excuse to stand there and say, "I can't give it, because I don't have it."

Have faith. Care enough about your brother or your sister that you're willing to witness on your brother's or sister's behalf and bless them with your caring and you'll find that the Father's love for you will come through you to them and bless you both. It's just the way it works.

That is why your miracles offer YOU the testimony that you are blessed. If what you offer IS complete forgiveness, you MUST have let guilt go, accepting the Atonement for yourself and learning you are guiltless. How could you learn what has been done for you, but which you do not know, unless . . .

. . . and listen to this . . .

. . . unless you do what you would HAVE to do if it HAD been done unto you?

You see, [chuckling] it's actually joyful. Because God created you as His full Self-expression, your capacity to extend that is already with you. And if you knew it was already with you, you would spontaneously extend it. But at the moment you're saying, "No, no way. I don't have it. I never had it. Just look, look at everything I've done. I have all kinds of proof that I don't have that. And even if I did at one time, God would have taken it away from me because I'm such a bastard and I'm so mean spirited and on and on and on."

And so, by your very self-determination you don't extend what you would extend if it had actually been given to you. And since it has actually been given to you, your life sort of falls flat, because you're not extending what you could because it was given to you.

And so, you need to have a little fun in your mind. It's like Dr. Phil has a favorite question. He says: "Well, if you knew what the answer was, what would it be?" And many times the people know the answer and share it.

If you have it to give, why don't you give it? If you have it to give, why don't you go ahead and give it even if you don't think you have it? You see? Lighten up a little bit.

Let what seems to be an unreasonable postulate that you have aspects of divinity, that have been given to you and are yours to give. Why don't you let those postulates of divinity abide with you and then say, "Wow! Okay. If they've been given to me, I'm going to give them away. Gee, I don't know what they are." Well, if you did know what they were, what would they be? You see? Give yourself playful, enjoyable means of getting past ignorance.

How could you learn what has been done for you but which you do not know, unless you do what you would have to do if it had been done unto you. You see? You see the fun in that one sentence—the lightness? Embrace it lightly. And give what you didn't know you had to give, lightly. And if you think you don't know what it is, ask yourself, "If I did know what it was, what would it be?"

Now . . .

Indirect proof of truth is needed in a world made of denial and without direction.

[Chuckling] I remember telling Paul, at one time, that we would never be in the middle of controversy. That was a great relief to him because he was afraid we might be. Later on it turned out we were controversial, even though we were not in the middle of controversy.

And he said to me, "Hey, I thought you said we'd never be in the middle of controversy?" And I told him, 'Yes, that's right. But I never said we wouldn't be controversial.'

So you see, I had to move him beyond his fear of speaking publicly, of sharing what I had to say and so on and what the results might be. I had to get past his fear, you might say, through misdirection—another way of saying that was, indirectly. As it turned out, he had no trouble being controversial or being identified with what was controversial. It's just that he didn't want to be embroiled in the middle of controversy.

So the Holy Spirit works with you indirectly because as you know the ego is nothing more than a defense mechanism. It is highly skilled at defending itself. And so, you never confront the ego directly. It will win. It knows how to defend itself. It knows how to block itself successfully from the penetration of Truth.

The ego is a pattern of behavior, it's not an identification—identification of you. You can behave like an ego. You can identify with an ego but you can't be something you're not. You are the Presence of God. And as long as you think you're an ego, all of you that you are not identified with is held in trust, as I've said before. And what is held in trust is called the Holy Spirit.

So . . .

Indirect proof of truth is needed in a world . . .

. . . or mind . . .

. . . made of denial and without direction. You will perceive the need for this if you will realize that to deny is the decision NOT to know. The logic of the world MUST therefore lead to nothing, for its GOAL is nothing.

What does that mean, "its goal is nothing"? Its goal is not to experience truth. Its goal is not to experience reality. Well, if its goal is not to experience all that Is, [chuckling] its goal is nothing. It's the absence of all that Is, because it itself is the denial of all that Is.

Now, I want to point out something to you. A further explanation of why it seems difficult—not easy, not simple, not graceful—to wake up. If you have been identifying with the ego; if you have been identifying with your training and your education that says you're an independent agent and that you're here to make a name for yourself, make a mark in the world and to do it in the fifty or sixty allotted years that you have to be alive and make a mark in existence itself, then you are actively but maybe ignorantly practicing the denial of reality—practicing the denial of all that really Is.

Waking up involves the abandonment of your commitment to that. And therefore, there's a reluctance because you don't realize that if you set down these very structured goals that you have developed and others have helped you develop, and teachings have helped flesh out for you; as you give those up, you don't realize that as you give those up you will not disappear, because you never were the definitions—you were that formulating, embracing and believing the definitions. You see?

There is reluctance to move forward swiftly because it feels as though you are abandoning the essential you because you think the definitions are the essential you.

I'm going to give another example. We'll say that you are fifty-five or sixty. You've done well in life and you're ready to retire. And you had a really good job. I mean by that, you had a job that involved skill that you were able to practice well. And you got up every morning and you went through the processes that one who does this work does. And so, everything in your day reinforced your definition of yourself.

If you were a doctor, every surgery that you engaged in, every examination you gave was a further proof, "I am a doctor." Then, because you did very well as a doctor, we'll say, you retire at fifty-five—early.

And now, when you get up in the morning, you don't go to the office. You don't have appointments. Nobody is calling with emergencies—all things which made you feel fulfilled, all things which identified who you were—they're not happening.

And God, you're only fifty-five. I mean, you still have a long time left to not know who you are! And for many that can be very depressing and distressing. But you want to know something? Without the definitions you're still there! You're still Be-ing. You're still conscious. And so, the definitions that you had acquired had given you a sense of who you are. And then, without those definitions being reinforced, you could experience a great sense of loss of identity.

Well, I promise you, that what you do during the day is not what identifies you. Your identity is an a priori fact. It simply is present. It's inseparable from you. And ultimately, it is the Holy Spirit.

And when you let the Holy Spirit in, you're letting your right Mind in. You're letting your Sanity return to you and the clear perception of all that Is will replace the partialness of your prior conscious awareness.

Again though, understand that the way in which reality can be brought to your attention by that which is nothing more than your right Mind, the Holy Spirit, will always be indirect because your present state of mind is a state of defense. It's a defense mechanism.

And so, when you find progress, you might say, of awakening proceeding slowly, understand that there's a reason, but not a good enough reason to stop in your persistence!

If you decide to have and give and BE nothing except a dream, you MUST direct your thoughts unto oblivion. And if you have and give and are EVERYTHING, and all this has been DENIED, your thought system is closed off, and wholly separated from the truth. This IS an insane world, and do not underestimate the actual extent of its insanity. There is no area of your perception that it has not touched, and your dream IS sacred to you. That is why God placed the Holy Spirit IN you, where you placed the dream.

The dream is initiated by second gear—the neutral position. And whenever and for whatever reason you established second gear for yourself—neutral—you also established third gear, which is the voice for fear/guilt, since fear and guilt are the two sides of one coin.

So, what have we learned tonight, at least intellectually? We've learned that in order to become free of the illusion of second and third gear, of neutral and the voice for fear, you must make the choice for first gear—the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. And you must access the Holy Spirit for the purpose of blessing your brother. Because not only are you not an orphan, you're not an only child!

And with that good news, I will say good night. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 17th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Is everyone having an interesting time with the section of the Course that we're reading and discussing? Or let me put it this way, are you having an interesting time observing your behavior and your mental habits? Are you becoming aware of how self-centered you are and how little of the time you really are willing to let your brother be the focus of your attention even though we have discussed the fact that it's the function of your Being to look into your brother's eyes and remember God?

It's your function to look at any aspect of Creation and remember God. I don't believe we've read anything in here that says, "You are supposed to take a look at yourself and you are supposed to focus in on yourself most definitely and make commitment to paying attention only to what you want and to what you feel." Even though we've read nothing like that here, it's something you're all really familiar with.

Now, as we begin tonight it says . . .

Seeing is always OUTWARD.¹

That's like looking into your brother's eyes or looking at any part of Creation and remembering God.

Seeing is always OUTWARD. Were your thoughts wholly of YOU, the thought system which you made would be forever dark.

We don't need to embellish that. It's a simple fact.

Were your thoughts wholly of YOU, the thought system which you made would be forever dark.

In fact, their darkness is what you complain about.

You know, you have movies which are called dark comedies. Well, the ego's life is a dark comedy. It's asinine. It is not the purpose or function of your existence to be experiencing darkness. And the answer to the darkness; the release from the darkness is accomplished by a very simple act: An act of inclusion; by seeing outward and by being conscious of what is there.

Consciousness is an act of embrace. Creation is described as God creating everything and at the end God saw everything that He had made. It was an act of embrace—an act of inclusion and it was an act of Self-recognition.

It's time to give up selfishness. It's time to learn to give up selfishness. It's time to recognize when you're practicing selfishness. And one of the things that you might not recognize and identify as selfishness is the experience of suffering: "I'm not feeling well today," or "I'm having a real hard time being anything other than absolutely angry with so and so!"

This is an indication to you—it can be an indication to you that you're engaged in selfishness—that you are practicing the opposite of embrace. And it can, as I said last week, serve to remind you to change what you're doing—to change from self-serving interests to an act of recognition and embrace of your brother with the intent of finding God there Being all there is to your brother.

So that in your willingness to recognize and acknowledge It in your brother, that acknowledgement will come through you provided by the Father and bless you with the awareness that it's the truth about you as well. This is a very simple principle. It's the way it works and it's the solution to the human condition.

Continuing . . .

The thoughts which the mind of God's Son projects have all the power that he gives to them. The thoughts he shares with God are BEYOND his belief, but those he made . . .

. . . in other words, the thoughts he made . . .

. . . ARE his beliefs.

Again, the thoughts you share with God are beyond your belief. But those you make are your beliefs.

And it is THESE and NOT the truth that you, . .

. . . he . . .

... has chosen to defend and love.

That's always the case when you're in the mode of selfishness—of self-serving, of doing things for yourself; of making a profit for yourself especially at the expense of a brother.

The thoughts . . .

... God's Son . . .

... shares with God are BEYOND his belief, but those he made ARE his beliefs. And it is THESE, and NOT the truth, that he has chosen to defend and love.

Now this is very important:

They will not be taken from him.

Your beliefs and your insane treasures will not be taken from you.

But they can be GIVEN UP by him, . .

... by you . . .

... for the Source of their undoing is IN him.

Is in you. They won't be taken away from you. But you can put them down any time you're sick and tired of the results of selfishness of the pain that you experience; of the discomfort you experience, all as a result of having everything backwards and being self-centered, when seeing is always outward.

Now, the Source of their undoing is in you. What is it? It's the Holy Spirit. It's that which is nothing more than your right Mind. It's the Presence of God in you that you couldn't get rid of even though you chose to ignore It and claim a different, shall I say, list of ingredients that constituted you. Nevertheless, the Source of their undoing is in you.

There is nothing IN the world to teach him that the logic of the world is totally insane, and leads to nothing. Yet in him . . .

... in you . . .

... who made this insane logic there is One Who KNOWS it leads to nothing, for He knows everything.

Well, I know it would be nice for you to think that it was the Father or the Son or the Holy Spirit—Somebody different from you but very close to you. Because then you wouldn't have to take responsibility for what you're experiencing and you wouldn't have to take responsibility for changing. You wouldn't have to take responsibility for giving up what doesn't really work.

You could talk about the need to give them up. You could talk about the need for change. But you could be like the people at the pool spoken of in the Bible, who waited for an Angel to come and move the waters and then be the first one to get into the waters after the movement occurred. And in the meantime when the movement didn't occur, "Well, here I am, things aren't going too well, I'm suffering, yes but you know, I am steadfast in my intent to be here the very next moment the Angel touches the water and causes it to move. I'm very devoted to my healing. I'm very devoted to my improvement."

But you see, it's really convenient to have the improvement be at the hand of something other than yourself. It also means that, because you put the responsibility off on somebody else or something else or circumstances; you never get your freedom right away, when you could have it right away, because the culprit is a decision you have made in your mind that you are abiding by.

[repeats]

The thoughts which the mind of God's Son projects have all the power that he gives to them.

So we're talking about doing something different with your thoughts. At the bottom line, we're not saying improve your thoughts. At the bottom line, I'm saying abandon your thoughts. I'm saying become still. Go within to the Altar and ask of God or the Holy Spirit what the truth is that will uncover what is not true to you so that you might spontaneously stop valuing it, since seeing the truth of it will make it valueless to you.

Any direction which will lead you where the Holy Spirit leads you not goes nowhere.

Again:

Any direction which will lead you where the Holy Spirit leads you not goes nowhere.

Being in second gear, neutral—being in this place where you in your own right and on your own are thinking your own thoughts—being in that place and acting from that place is to go in a direction which will lead you where the Holy Spirit is not leading you. And it will not go anywhere even though you have thought it has been leading you somewhere important.

And this is perhaps the most difficult lesson to learn in the process of Awakening because you have to realize that the basic premise for your actions has been faulty. But there is a correct one which is available to you. It is a Source called the Holy Spirit, which you now have learned is nothing more than your right Mind and is therefore very intimately connected with you. And in fact, constitutes you in your integrity, meaning that you have an integrity that was set in place, you might say, in the act of Creation—the Movement of God—and is therefore unalterable. And what that means in practical terms, is what you will begin to experience as you wake up.

Again:

Any direction which will lead you where the Holy Spirit leads you not goes nowhere. Anything you deny which He knows to be true you have denied YOURSELF, . .

. . . remember again, the thoughts which the mind of God's Son projects have all the power that he gives to them. So anything you deny, which the Holy Spirit knows to be true, you have denied yourself. And you have denied it with all the power that you give to it by virtue of actually being the Son of God.

Anything you deny which He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . knows to be true you have denied YOURSELF, and He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . must therefore teach you NOT to deny it.

"Oh-h, but denying it is essential to my being who I am and what I am. And it's essential to my becoming what I plan on becoming. And it's essential in order for me to be able to arrive at the position in the world that I have chosen for myself. So, Holy Spirit, you're going to teach me how to deny it? And you're going to expect me to embrace what you're saying willingly, easily? You think I am a fool? I know too much about how things work to attempt what you're asking."

Again:

Anything you deny which He knows to be true you have denied YOURSELF, and He must therefore teach you NOT to deny it. Undoing IS indirect, as doing is.

Remember, I mentioned last week that the ego is a defense mechanism. A frontal attack against the ego will always fail, because the ego is an expert at avoiding truth because it denies truth and that is its function.

Now, as a result, the undoing of the ego will always be indirect. And the Holy Spirit knows perfectly how to do that.

Undoing IS indirect as doing is. You were created only to CREATE, neither to see NOR do.

In other words, you were not created for the purpose of making your mark on the world. You were not created to do big things. You were not created to see.

You were created to be conscious. And to be conscious of what? The Movement of Mind which is God in the act of Creation—to acknowledge It and recognize It for what It is.

You're not created to do Creation, but to be the awareness of It and the acknowledgement of It. God is making His mark on the world, you might say. That would be a description of Creation. You have no such function.

Now, to "see" and "do" . . .

These are but indirect expressions of the will to live, which has been blocked by the capricious and unholy whim of death and murder that your Father shared not with you.

In your dream, in your fantasy of being an independent entity, it has become your function to do things. It embodies, in a distorted way, the will to live, which could be described divinely as the urge, the impulse of Mind to be conscious, and, in that impulse, creating, forming something to be aware of—an idea, which to the mind that forms it, as I've said before, is perfectly tangible and substantial and real, even though it is pure Spirit.

The impulse to Be is also the impulse to be conscious. And when you abandon second gear—when you abandon the orphanage, when you abandon the idea of being an orphan yourself—you will find that there's nothing for you to do except embrace everything and recognize God in it. And know that your embrace and recognition of it is part of the movement of Creation Itself—an act which you are involved in because you are the offspring of God, from whom God has withheld nothing of what He Is.

And in this realization, you will abandon the idea that you must do things. And that doing things are what give identity to you and give you credibility and give you respectability and give you substance and give you reality on your own. You'll give that up. Your function will be different, which is part of the reason that, as you hear more and more what constitutes Awakening, it sounds perhaps, less and less interesting. Why? Because you see that there will be no ego hit gotten from it. And at this moment ego hits are crucial to your meaningful existence.

Nevertheless, this is part of the essential learning that you will learn—that you will move through.

You have set yourselves the task of sharing what can not BE shared.

In other words, your ideas; your slant on things; your definitions of things. And of course, always the definitions you give to everything will relate back to you and your sense of your importance or your lack of importance because you are the center of your attention in second gear—in neutral.

In neutral everything revolves around you. And every aspect of your conscious awareness is colored by that fundamental basis for understanding yourself.

When you are in first gear, God is the Center of Attention.

"Oh, dear, leaves poor little orphan out." Well, that's the way little orphan would see it. But the fact is that when you shift to first gear—where God is the center of attention—you, as God's Son or Daughter, appear in the picture in a way that can't be violated; in a way that can't be altered; in a way where you can't misunderstand the fullness and wholeness and divinity of your Be-ing in any way.

And so, you regain your Self in the act of letting God be the center of attention. Why? Because you're inseparable from God. You are not God, but God is All There Is to you. You are inseparable from God.

You have set yourselves the task of sharing what cannot BE shared. And while you think it possible to LEARN to do this, you will not believe all that IS possible to learn to do.

I promise you, all of your goals for yourself, no matter how grand you think they are, are infinitesimal relative to what you could learn if you chose to learn from God, instead of from your puny imagination.

I promise you that even your best concepts of yourself are nothing in the face of what your Self actually Is.

Now, I can tell you this and you can say, "Well, you'll have to show me."

No, that isn't the way it works. I can tell you about it. I can point your attention in the right direction. But you are the one who has to arrive at a point of devaluing your commitment to your best definitions and your best creations. You're going to have to arrive at a point where you are clear enough in your mind that you're sick and tired of suffering, that it just isn't worth it anymore to experience a low-grade pain or a low-grade suffering, even though it's not killing you.

What is the point? Why hold on to your best pet theories, if all they're going to do is keep you experiencing like a low-grade fever, low-grade suffering.

You will have to arrive at a point where you actually say to yourself. No, where you don't say anything to yourself again and you say something to the Father. You say, "Father, reveal to me the more of what is here for me to experience than what I've been allowing myself to experience by virtue of holding on to my own imaginative definitions of everything. I want to have the experience of wholeness. I want to have the experience of harmony. I want to experience the absence of stress, not just for an afternoon, but forever."

Continuing:

The Holy Spirit, therefore, must begin His teaching by showing you what you can NEVER learn. His MESSAGE is not indirect, but He must introduce the simple truth into a thought system which has become so twisted and so complex that you cannot SEE that it means nothing. HE merely looks at its foundation and dismisses it. But YOU who cannot undo what you have made cannot see THROUGH it. It deceives you because you chose to deceive yourselves. Those who choose to BE deceived will merely attack direct approaches, which would seem but to encroach upon deception and strike at it.

Yet, nobody likes to become disillusioned. "Let me wrap myself up in my illusions and let me keep them. Don't snatch them away from me!"

Now, you might look at this and say, "Why Raj, why Jesus do you have to speak so negatively about me? You say," . .

Those who choose to be deceived . . .

"I didn't choose to be deceived. Why cast me in such a negative light?" There's the self-defense, the self-centered ego activity, as though it's all about puny little you instead of about the truth.

Those who choose to be deceived . . .

Well, you do choose to be deceived. It's not enough for me to say that though. How are you deceiving yourselves? You are deceiving yourselves by ignoring that you have a Source beyond you, that you didn't make yourself, that you have always been in partnership—if I may put it that way—with the Source of your Being, which the Course speaks of as being co-creators.

And you deceive yourselves by refusing to let a different point of view in.

Were your thoughts wholly of YOU, the thought system which you made would be forever dark.

You see. The correction of the fact that you choose to be deceived, lies in your abandoning your aloneness, abandoning your orphanhood, abandoning neutral—second gear. And in abandoning it, discovering that third gear will vanish as well because you have shifted your attention to first gear—to that which is nothing more than your right Mind; to that which is nothing more than the wholeness of you that is perfectly sane and has always been.

So I must tell you, so that you're not deceived, that you in fact deceive yourselves and there's a way to prove it. The way to prove it is to consciously shift to first gear and find out for yourself.

I'm waiting. The Holy Spirit, that is nothing more than your right Mind, is waiting for you to relent as well, and yield to It/your Self.

Those who choose to BE deceived will merely attack direct approaches, which would seem but to encroach upon deception and strike at it.

Well, you see, I've been very direct. I've said you are deceiving yourselves whether you meant to or not you are and you have been. And it's important and absolutely necessary for you to understand that. But you see, I'm not attacking it, I'm just shining the light on it so that you may look at it.

I'm not going to try to get you to stop. There's no way I could force you to stop. But I can invite you to do something which you, through the use of your will, can act upon. And, of course, the will that acts upon it won't be the ego in you or the ego sense of yourself. That which will will to act upon it, will be That of you which is experiencing Its Sanity, and It will risk the chance that in abandoning second gear, the real you will not disappear and you will not lose everything that is meaningful but you will in fact gain Meaning in its infinite fullness and the experience will be awesome and it will be worth it.

But you will have to do it. And you won't do it if I don't say,

Those who choose to BE deceived . . .

. . . like you.

I've got to tell you that there's a different experience awaiting you. Your Birthright is different from what you're experiencing.

And it's time to test the spirits, whether they are of God or not—the spirit of deception, the spirit of loneliness, the spirit of orphanhood, the spirit of independence, the spirit of autonomy. Check these out and see whether they are of God or not.

How do you check them out? Well, you don't go and examine them. You do something irrelevant to them. Here's where the indirectness is, you do something irrelevant to them—you do something irrelevant to orphanhood, you do something irrelevant to establishing new and better mutually agreed upon definitions between you and the other orphans. And you give your attention to first gear.

And you give your attention to first gear with the intent of letting God be the center of interest—the focal point. How? By going on a quest to find God, or by looking at each and everything that's in your experience with a curiosity to see ultimacy in it, because ultimacy is there, because if there's anything there at all it has to be God.

And like a hologram, all of what is in the hologram is in every part of the hologram. And all of what God is, is in what appears to be every part of Creation.

And as we said last week, your reason for doing this has to be a blessing, it has to be as a gift you're giving to a brother—the willingness to look into your brothers eyes and remember God. Now, I have included all of Creation and said to look at any aspect of it for the purpose of remembering God.

But you know what? The one and only most important thing for you to look at and remember God—as a result of looking at it—is your brother or sister. Why your brother or your sister and not just a flower, or a tree, or a planet, or a universe? Very simply: The fundamental, the basis, the underlying ground of neutral, second gear, is what?—self-centeredness, egotism, self-aggrandizement.

Now I ask you, who of you who is hearing My Voice is in competition with the wall in your bedroom? Who of you asserts your superiority over the carpet on your floor? Who do you compete with for position? [Chuckling] Well, whoever it is, that's the one you've got to look in his eyes and remember God, because that's the one that will keep you from waking up.

The gift of love to your brother is the gift that will invalidate neutral gear, the independent place.

So this week I invite you all to continue to persist and notice when you're being self-centered, notice when you're being selfish, notice when you want everything to revolve around you. And likewise, take time to notice when you're uncomfortable, or when you're experiencing distress. And take a look and see whether or not at that moment you're being self-centered.

You might be saying, "Damn her, she's pissing me off!" Well, [chuckling] look at important you! "Huh?" She shouldn't piss you off? Oh dear, important one. You don't think it's self-centered, even when you're bitching at someone else? Catch it! You really need to pay attention, because it's all these tiny little, chicken shit habits that keep you bound because you enact them, [snapping fingers] just like that, without a thought, even though you're sitting there saying, "I want to wake up and I want to abandon second gear."

You're going to abandon your wish to shift to first gear, because its habit. And other people trigger your habit. And circumstances trigger your habit. Because you've set the traps up! You've put the triggers there. And if anybody trips that trigger, you're going to react. It's not because they did it. It's because those are the particular triggers you said you valued and you laid out, just waiting for someone to trip.

So, am I being mean? No. I'm telling you the way it is, so that you might easily look at it and say, "Okay. I'm not really going to attack those habits. But you know what? Today I'm going on vacation from those habits. And I'm going to do something irrelevant over here. I really am going to—for as long as I'm able—I'm going to look at everything and constantly ask my Guide or the Holy Spirit or the Father, "What is the Truth here? What is the more of reality that's here that I'm not seeing?" You see?

Don't confront the habits. Disregard them for as long as you can. And then when you notice that you're uncomfortable or you're distressed or you're put out or you're pissed off, say, "Oops, okay, I'm squarely back in second gear. I'm squarely back where I cannot be anything but uncomfortable. And I don't have to be here."

So, you abandon, you disregard the habits you suddenly reinstated and you shift back to asking, "God, Holy Spirit, what is the more of reality that's here than what I'm seeing?"

Why? So that you might become full of knowledge ahead of everyone else? No. So that you might be filled with the experience of truth that constitutes Knowing, that causes you to be nothing other than the Presence of acknowledgement! "Wow! This is incredible. Reality is unspeakably incredible. And it has filled me. And even if I should lose the experience of It, I will be changed forever because of the experience of It."

You do it because you want to know the truth. Persist with Me. And persist with the Holy Spirit—that is nothing more than your right Mind. And turn to It often, everyday. And do what Paul has done.

When Paul got up this morning, his voice wasn't working. He spoke, but there was only whispers. And many times during the day—from second gear—he said, "Well, I can't do this. I can't do this. I'm not going to be where everyone can see and hear me with my voice sounding like this? What kind of an impression will that make? Everyone will say, 'You see how second gearish [chuckling] it is.' Oh yes. So they're very self-centered, right?

"What will everyone think of me? I will be making a fool of myself. Why would I do that in the name of truth? Why would I expose myself to ridicule?" That's what Paul in second gear thought like. But there was a point at which something of Paul that wasn't in second gear, came into play.

There was something of Paul that wasn't in second gear, that came into play. And it was this Awareness: "More than anything else I wish to give voice to the Voice for truth no matter what my voice sounds like." And although habit kicked back into play and he fussed with Me and he argued against doing what would be obviously unwise, like, "Well what kind of a demonstration is this, that I'm in touch with Jesus? What kind of a demonstration of credibility? What kind of demonstration of integrity is this? Why expose what appears to be an inconsistency?

Well, let Me tell you something. He didn't come to this conclusion in so many words, but what he realized was that it was inconsistent. The inconsistency would have come into play if he had said, "I do not wish to give voice to the Voice for truth because my voice sounds so awful." Mm-m, egos everywhere could understand that. Why make a public asshole of yourself if you don't have to. Just cancel the meeting. Next week your voice will be fine!

What? And let a week go by without giving voice to the Voice for truth because of how it will look? Again, how second gearish! Do you see?

So, be willing to be the Place where truth comes through your awareness no matter how well or how polished you might be at expressing It, no matter what it might look like to someone else.

There are some people who may never have tuned in before or may never have heard any other CD of a meeting, who will listen to Paul's voice tonight and say, "My goodness, what a voice that man has." You see? [a little chuckle]

So remember, your brother is worth every effort you bring to giving voice to the Voice for truth.

I Love You. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 24th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

THE HAPPY LEARNER ¹

There's a possibility that by the end of our conversation tonight, you will wonder why, since the subject is "The Happy Learner," you feel so unhappy. You're likely to say, "Gee, I could have watched the Academy Awards and enjoyed myself!"

But I'll tell you something: The section we're reading tonight is extremely important. And its importance could escape you, because generally speaking, it sounds rather pleasant. But it requires taking a deeper look at what it's meaning. It requires taking a deeper look so that actual transformation within you can occur or can, at the least, be triggered—initiated.

Now, it says . . .

The Holy Spirit needs a happy learner, in whom His mission can be happily accomplished.

And I'm sure all of you would say, "Wow, well that's me! I'm here, I want to learn. Absolutely. I'm eager! And then the next sentence says . . .

You who are steadfastly devoted to misery must first recognize that you ARE miserable and NOT happy.

Well, so much for the happy learner that was all ready.

Again, "Gee whiz, now you're telling me that I'm not happy and that I'm in misery? Why do you cast my being in such a negative light?"

Well, it's very important. And I and the Holy Spirit have the same task. I'm going to continue here . . .

The Holy Spirit cannot teach without this contrast, . .

. . . why? It doesn't say "why," I'm saying "why." And it continues . . .

. . . for you believe that misery IS happiness.

"Well, what do you mean I believe misery is happiness?"

Well, let me ask you this: Don't you enjoy having the opportunity every day to figure things out? Don't you enjoy the prospect of problem-solving and coming up with solutions that make positive differences in your community or in your marriage or your family or whatever? Don't you take great pleasure in doing things successfully all by yourself?

You take pleasure in that. In fact, you've been taught to take pleasure in that. You've been taught that it's a reason for pride. You've taught that it's a reason for self-respect. And you've taught that engaging in it is a source of respect for you from others.

So, . . .

You who are steadfastly devoted to misery must first recognize that you ARE miserable and NOT happy. The Holy Spirit cannot teach without this contrast, for you believe that misery IS happiness.

You believe that isolation, that being a self-starter, that being an authorizer is the reason for happiness. It is an act of happiness. You are convinced that being an orphan successfully is cause for joy, and you reach for the carrot every day. And like the carrot that dangles in front of the horse or the donkey or whatever fool will try to get it; your goal hangs in front of you unreachable. But because you're getting the joy—the hit of going for it—you don't recognize that you're attempting something impossible. And therefore, the joy that you expect to attain will never come. And the self-respect from persistently going after the carrot will ultimately, once you've come to your senses, prove to you that you have been a fool—not someone worthy of respect.

And if this doesn't become clear to you, you will continue to go for the carrot. You will continue to strive to become something in your own right without acknowledging a source other than yourself. That is the source of the human condition. That habit is the cause of misery. It is that which absolutely inhibits your having the experience that it's your Birthright to be experiencing. And although you have conditioned yourself to get hits—to gather kudos, to get gold stars—for your persistence and the reliability of your dependability at continuing to strive for the goal, the point is that you will have to arrive at a point where you abandon what is foolish because Someone has illustrated to you that it does not work. And therefore, to persist in it is foolish and that the conditioning that has allowed you to fool yourself into feeling good about yourself is not only undependable, it is a case of complete mis-direction, where you have been told that something can happen that can't happen; that something will happen that can't happen.

And you have been fooled into going for the goal. And no matter how foolish it makes you feel or look to yourself when you take a look at the truth, you must be willing to take a look at the truth so that you will stop; so that you will understand that you're not happy; so that you will know the difference between happiness and unhappiness; happiness and misery.

Again . . .

The Holy Spirit cannot teach without this contrast, for you believe that misery IS happiness. This has so confused you that you have undertaken to learn to do what you can NEVER do, believing that UNLESS you learn it, you will not be happy.

That's why you keep going for the carrot. You think you are learning something. You think you are learning how to get the carrot. You think you're learning how to get the prize. If you realized that there was no learning awaiting you, you would stop dead in your tracks like an intelligent horse or an intelligent donkey, and you wouldn't take another step trying to get something you couldn't get. And you would no longer justify it by saying, "If I do this, I am becoming respectable!"

You do not realize that the foundation on which this most peculiar learning goal depends means ABSOLUTELY NOTHING.

You may have been taught to be a self-made man or a self-made woman. If you're a modern woman you've taken on that motto—you have a right to it as much as a man does—and you've been fooled by it as much as men have. You've been taught to be a self-made man or a self-made woman.

Such an idea is absolutely meaningless. But you have filled it with meaning. And you have wrapped it around you. You've used it to gird up your loins. You've stuck it up your back-bone and you have plowed forward with enthusiasm—with gusto—and with pride and self-satisfaction.

But again . . .

You do not realize that the foundation on which this most peculiar learning goal depends means ABSOLUTELY NOTHING. It DOES make sense to you.

Everything I've been talking about does make sense to you. In fact, it makes so much sense to you that at times you're likely to doubt if I'm telling you the truth. You are likely to doubt that what I'm telling you is in any way practical or helpful. Some of you may even take it as proof that A Course In Miracles is nothing but b.s. and shouldn't be paid attention to. That's how much sense it makes to you.

Have faith in nothing, and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought.

You will value nothing. Whatever of nothing that you've made a treasure of, you will value as though it were something.

Have faith in nothing, and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought. Yet you will add another burden to your mind, already burdened or you would have not sought another.

In other words, you've been going along—you've been going after the carrot. You've been going after the carrot for quite awhile. But you're still full of energy and still full of willingness to go for it and now somebody shows you another carrot. "Oh, well I'm going to go after that carrot too! I mean I might as well not only get my Masters I might as well get my PH.d so I can really be important in the world and I can really be recognized as somebody intelligent and worth listening to. And because I'm recognized as intelligent and worth listening to, I will be able to reach more people with real help that I am able to give because I'm so intelligent." You see. [sighs]

So . . .

. . . you will add another burden to your mind, ALREADY burdened or you would have not sought another.

You see, you've already been burdened by a task you can't succeed at. And the fact that you are going after the carrot in the first place means you're not at peace are you? In other words, you, as the wonderful stallion or mare that you are, can't just stand there in the pasture in the fullness of being, perfectly at peace. "No-no-no... Give me a carrot to chase!" You see? And then, "Give me a second carrot to chase! Chasing the carrot makes me happy. Getting the carrot will make me happier. But What? Wait a minute...just stand in the pasture and just eat the green succulent grass without a carrot chase? You're telling me that that would be enough—that I can feel my peace and I can feel fulfillment doing what? Nothing? [chuckling] When I could be doing something like chasing a carrot?" You see, you don't see that chasing the carrot is what constitutes doing nothing.

And you are so confused, that being in your peace where the fullness of Being can be experienced, isn't nothing. That to you, in your confusion, looks like nothing.

Again, going back near the beginning . . .

You who are steadfastly devoted to misery . . .

You who are steadfastly devoted to misery must first recognize that you ARE miserable and NOT happy.

Again . . .

Have faith in nothing and you will FIND the “treasure” that you sought. Yet you will add another burden to our mind, ALREADY burdened or you would not have sought another. You will believe that nothing is OF VALUE, and WILL value it. A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, a body or a war are one to you. For if you value ONE thing made of nothing, you HAVE believed that nothing can be precious, and that you can learn how to make the untrue TRUE.

You see, there's the crux of it there. You think that you can learn how to make the untrue TRUE.

If the Holy Spirit is going to reveal truth to you so that you are not confused, so that enlightenment can occur, you must arrive at a point where you're willing to at least consider the fact that you have been engaged in trying to make the untrue, true. And you think you have accomplished it and therefore, you are in a state of insanity. Your mind is not clear and you are experiencing something you would not embrace for a moment in your right Mind; in other words, if you weren't confused.

The Holy Spirit, . .

. . . and again, remember, the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, or your right Mind is nothing less than the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit, SEEING where you are but KNOWING you are elsewhere, begins His lesson in . . .

. . . what?

. . . simplicity with the fundamental teaching that TRUTH IS TRUE. This is the hardest lesson you will ever learn, and in the end the ONLY one.

Why do you think you listen to yourself all day long instead of the Holy Spirit? Because you trust yourself. And you trust what you think and you trust your definition of truth. You trust your definition of something. And you trust your definition of nothing. You trust that going after the carrot is something. And you trust that being in your peace and being whole in the middle of a wonderful pasture with luscious green grass is nothing—holds nothing of ultimate value for you.

Simplicity is very difficult for twisted minds.

Oh, I know, I'm saying you have twisted minds again, you know—casting you in this bad light again. No. If confusion exists though, it deserves to be lifted. You deserve to be cleansed of it. You deserve to have an experience of clarity rather than confusion.

So, simplicity; the simplicity that truth is true; the simplicity that something is something and nothing is nothing and never the twain shall meet.

That . . .

Simplicity is very difficult for twisted minds. Consider all the distortions you have made of nothing; all the strange forms and feelings and actions and reactions that you have woven out of it.

“Why you know what? The mare over at the next farm said turnips are better than carrots.” Boy, wouldn't you give your right hoof for a turnip now? Aren't you insulted that all you're being offered are carrots? See? You see how convoluted insanity can become? How silly it can be and how such silliness can arouse emotions of disappointment—of dislike for the one who is presenting you with carrots, indignant that your owner doesn't respect you enough to give you something as good as turnips like the owner two farms down? You see?

Consider all the distortions you have made of nothing; all the strange forms and feelings and actions and reactions that you have woven out of it. Nothing is so alien to you as the simple truth, and nothing are you less inclined to listen to.

What do you mean I'm not willing to listen to it? What do you mean I'm less inclined to listen to it?

Well let me ask you this: Just think back on today or you can think about any other day you want, but just think back on today. I want you to pay attention to what was going on in your mind—in your mind, not between you and others. What was going on in your mind? Was it a monologue or was it a dialogue? If it was a monologue, then you are less inclined to listen for the truth. If it was a monologue, you were self-satisfied; you were satisfied with your way of looking at things—your way of determining the meaning of what was going on.

Even if you were distressed, you enjoyed mulling over in your mind the details—the sordid or ugly details that justified your being upset. And you kept yourself upset with some satisfaction by mulling these thoughts over in your mind. And such activity certainly was private. Because if you had joined with the only One, or Ones that you could have joined with, they would have been Awake and would have clarified things for you so that you didn't use your mind in the same way.

It certainly would have deprived you of the satisfaction of engaging in self-righteous indignation. It would have deprived you of the twisted meandering ideas that constituted of making something out of nothing. And in the joining, it would have done away with the apparent presence of an independent, autonomous mind—namely yours, namely you—and would have placed you in a context of unity—togetherness, not isolation. It would have moved you to gear number one, first gear, which as we've been discussing, is the undoing of the human condition.

Nothing is so alien to you as the simple truth, and nothing are you less inclined to listen to.

Oh-h, you know, as you think back over today, maybe you did once or twice ask the Holy Spirit a question or ask your Guide, "What do I need to know here?" But then very quickly, it became a monologue again. You were only inclined to listen momentarily. But for most of the day you were quite satisfied with doing your own thinking; coming to your own conclusions.

Now, I'm going to be very blunt here. When you're thinking by yourself, when you are thinking period, you are engaged in nothing. And when you are thinking for the purpose of coming to conclusions which will provide you with a basis for acting in the world, you are intending to be in the world in a way that is unintelligent and will be destructive.

You must understand that when you operate in second gear, which automatically brings third gear into play, you are doing nothing but creating illusions, promoting illusions, and attempting to affect your brothers and sisters to join you in doing nothing while thinking that they are doing something. In other words, you are promoting insanity. You are promoting the human condition which, by virtue of your studying the Course, you say you want to wake up from. And what this is saying here, is that you're not going to wake up unless you're willing to become a happy learner. And you're not going to become a happy learner unless you learn the difference between happiness and misery. And that means until you learn that, as long as you are thinking by yourself, you are in misery believing that it is happiness and you are lost. And everything you do promotes your lostness and confirms the lostness of others to them as long as they're on the same wavelength you are.

What you're doing is so unconstructive that you must see it for what it is. Because until you see how detrimental it is, you will not lower the value you are placing upon it. Until you reduce the value you're placing upon your way of being at this moment, you will not have an experience of the distinction between happiness and misery. And you will not be able to make an intelligent choice. You won't make an intelligent choice because at the moment you're quite satisfied with the status quo.

And you think that waking up must mean something other than what I'm talking about. Something that won't require you to have dialogue going on in your mind instead of a monologue. That it will mean something other than no longer getting joy from the attempt to be an autonomous authorizer of good in your world; something other than arriving at a point where you can stand alone in your own right being recognized for the worthwhile one that you are. You think that's what it's got to mean. I'm telling you that is not what it's got to mean.

Now, it might seem to you that I am saying, that at the moment you have no justification for being happy, because you aren't in touch with your guide yet, so therefore you're lost. Well, you could adopt that attitude. It's a case of the whiner horse. You know, "Well, I don't even have a pasture with green grass to stand in. All I have is a smelly, dirty stall. Oh me, I'm lost! What you're telling me simply condemns me to perdition, to an ending lack of fulfillment."

Hey, if you like the hit that gives you, go ahead, adopt that attitude. Hey, if you are not in touch with your guide, if you have not had the experience of connecting with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—then strive a little harder. In other words, instead of persisting at what won't work, instead of persisting at making nothing something, persist at making something, something, persist at giving your attention to that which is Real.

I'll tell you one thing: If you reduced the amount of thinking by fifty percent that you do on any given day, and just managed to be in the quiet, in the silence, in the peace, you would begin to recognize that the silence wasn't just the absence of anything, but that it is the presence of peace, that the emptiness is full of something quite Holy. And your life would have incredible changes occurring in it.

Now, again . . .

Nothing is so alien to you as the simple truth, and nothing are you less inclined to listen to. The contrast between what is true and what is not is PERFECTLY apparent, yet you do not see it.

The simple and the obvious are not apparent to those who would make palaces and royal robes of nothing, believing they are kings with golden crowns because of them. All this the Holy Spirit sees, and teaches, simply, that all this is not true.

The Holy Spirit sees what you believe and knows the truth simultaneously. And because the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, sees what you believe and knows the truth, it perfectly and artfully provides the distinction between the two to you. So that the gap between what is true and what is not true, between what you believe and what is true, can be closed and you can shift your devotion to what is true. That is the Holy Spirit's function. The function of your right Mind is to bring you back into the experience of your right Mind.

Again, and I'm repeating a lot tonight because these sentences are not alarming in any way and they don't even in themselves sound significantly important and yet they are key factors.

The simple and the obvious are not apparent to those who would make palaces and royal robes of nothing, [Chuckling] Those who would create an image of worth by virtue of the persistence with which he chases after the carrot and never gives up.

The simple and the obvious are not apparent to those who would make palaces and royal robes of nothing, believing they are kings with golden crowns because of them. All this the Holy Spirit sees, and teaches, simply, that all this is not true. To these unhappy learners who would teach themselves nothing and delude themselves into believing that it is NOT nothing, the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . says, with steadfast quietness:

"The truth is true. Nothing else matters, nothing else is real, and everything beside it is not there. Let Me make the one distinction for you which you cannot make but need to LEARN. Your faith in nothing IS deceiving you. Offer your faith to Me, and I will place it gently in the holy place where it belongs. You will find NO deception there, but only the simple truth. And you will love it because you will UNDERSTAND it."

What the Holy Spirit has invited you to do there is to engage in ongoing, unending dialog with It, which will mean that monologues will be a thing of the past in your mind. You see, it's easy to think when dealing with spiritual or religious subjects or theories, that the world is what it is, but with some religious or spiritual teaching, you can experience a better life without fundamentally changing anything, because of course, the way things are is the way things are.

That very mindset, that very belief structure embraced by anyone and believed and committed to, will constitute an absolute block to the experience of anything different from what it says, and will lock you into a human condition; an experience of misery which you will be able to find meaning in and ultimately be able to value. And in so doing, you will lock yourself into suffering and you will do absolutely nothing to relieve your brothers and sisters of the same suffering they're experiencing.

Is it your goal to be such a presence? Is it your goal to actually be an agent for maintaining the status-quo and then devoting your life to finding ways to make the status-quo meaningful? Is that your goal? No, of course, it's not your goal, but that is what you're engaged in.

Like you, the Holy Spirit did not MAKE truth. Like God, He KNOWS it to be true. He brings the light of truth into the darkness, and LETS it shine on you.

What does that mean? It means that, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, brings your right Mindedness to your confused mindedness and lets It shine on you. Your right Mind shines Its integrity, Its holiness, and Its inseparableness from God on you, illuminating to you what you really Are.

That's what the Holy Spirit does. But it escapes your attention when you're engaged in monologues. When you're not engaged in monologues because you've had enough common sense to see that what you're doing isn't working but isn't worth feeling guilty for, so that you are totally immobilized, you happily engage in dialog.

And as it, . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . shines your brothers see it, and realizing that this light is not what you have made, they see in you more than YOU see.

They see in you more than you see in you.

They will be happy learners of the lesson which this light brings to them because it teaches them RELEASE from nothing and from all the works of nothing. The heavy chains which seem to bind them unto despair they do not see as nothing until you bring the light to them. And THEN they see the chains have disappeared, and so they MUST have been nothing. And YOU will see it with them. BECAUSE you taught them gladness and release, they will become YOUR teachers in release and gladness.

When you find your brother worthy of your abandoning your knee-jerk responses to them and definitions, and you do the two-step and you say, "Father, what is the more of what You're Being right here where my brother is than what I'm seeing?" And you are infilled with the experience of the truth, the simple truth about them. It becomes spontaneously communicated.

And we've discussed the fact that what you give you get to keep. Why? Because the one you gave it to gives it back in praise and acknowledgement of the more of what God is being right where you are, than what they were seeing.

When you teach anyone that truth is true, you learn it WITH him. And so you learn that what seemed hardest was the easiest. Learn to be happy learners. You will NEVER learn how to make nothing everything. Yet see that this HAS been your goal, and RECOGNIZE how foolish it has been.

You see. You recognize how foolish it has been but you don't let the foolishness of it become a judgment against you that immobilizes you and inhibits you from being glad it is undone.

It says here:

You will NEVER learn how to make nothing everything. Yet see that this HAS been your goal, and RECOGNIZE how foolish it has been. Be glad it is undone, . .

. . . you see. Don't get stuck in recognizing how foolish it has been.

Be glad it is undone, for when you look at it in simple honesty, it IS undone. We said before, "Be not content with nothing," for you HAVE believed that nothing could content you. IT IS NOT SO.

The carrot will never satisfy, because the carrot will never be reached! The goal of reaching it will never be achieved.

If you would be a happy learner, you must give EVERYTHING that you have learned over to the Holy Spirit to be UNLEARNED for you.

That means that all of the satisfaction you get from mulling over your difficult situation or your difficult relationship; and all of the self-righteousness that you get to pleasure in while you're doing this, it means that all this you must turn over to the Holy Spirit—all of your monologue you must set aside by giving it to the Holy Spirit.

What does that mean? It means, acknowledging that you're not going to engage in this anymore. You're going to give it to the Holy Spirit and let the Holy Spirit share with you what is real about it or what isn't real about it. And you will listen for what the Holy Spirit wishes to speak about, which probably won't be about what you turned over to Him.

If you would be a happy learner, you must give EVERYTHING that you have learned . . .

. . . as in unhappy learner, because you were doing all of the learning by yourself .

..

. . . over to the Holy Spirit to be UNLEARNED for you. And then begin to learn the joyous lessons that come quickly on the firm foundation that truth is true. For what is builded there IS true, and BUILT on truth. The universe of learning will open up before you in all its gracious simplicity. With truth before you, you will not look back.

Now, what I want to be indelibly clear tonight is that when you are thinking, when a monologue is going on in your mind, nothing is happening, except that a belief that something is happening is growing—growing in a deluded mind, growing in a mind that doesn't actually exist. And when the Presence of God, namely You, engages in doing nothing, believing that something is being done, it is either a cosmic comedy or a cosmic tragedy—neither of which are Real, however.

How can something that is the Movement of God be the absence of the Movement of God? How can you make something out of nothing; by trying to be nothing, by trying to be the absence of Presence, by trying to be that which is not the Presence of God? That's what I mean. When you're trying to be the presence of something on your own and you are trying to be the absence of the Presence of God, you're trying to be the absence of Presence. Absolute nonsense! As long as you get pleasure out of it, as long as you have found ways to believe that something of value is going on, you will not abandon it.

So, what needs to be utterly clear is, that when you have a monologue going on in your mind, when you are connecting with nothing, when you have a monologue going on in your mind, you are creating the experience of misery. You are creating the experience of misery, no matter how much value you think you are getting from it, no matter how much supposed pleasure you are getting from it. And this misery that you are creating, you are creating for yourself and for everyone you are influencing. Doing this will keep you bound!

At the moment you are not happy learners—Occasionally you are, but not with commitment, not fully. And it's important for you to become happy learners. And you will become happy learners the moment it becomes clear to you that what you are engaged in, all by yourself, is misery and has apparent effects which you do not want to be responsible for.

I am putting it in these terms so that you might have justification for making commitment to be a happy learner, to stop letting monologues occupy your mind. And to start saying, "Father (or Holy Spirit) what do I need to know here?" And then listen to the very best of your ability. If you do not hear and action is required, do the very best you can, but don't abandon the questioning and the listening. Don't abandon the persistence in asking for the Holy Spirit's help, because it is the function of that which is nothing more than your right Mind, to close the gap between what you believe and what is true, so that you might no longer suffer from ignorance; from believing what isn't true, and promoting it as valuable and meaningful.

The universe of learning will open up before you in all its gracious simplicity. With truth before you, you will not look back.

In order to become a happy learner you must become disillusioned. You must be willing to abandon illusions. You must be willing to allow illusions to be taken away from you by virtue of the Holy Spirit disclosing the difference between what is Real and what isn't, what is true and what isn't. So that what isn't true will be in no way attractive to you any longer, and so that you may be in a new way.

You may think that learning to listen to the Holy Spirit is a learning device or a temporary means of growing and moving across some important threshold of spiritual growth, which eventually you won't need to do because you will have gotten over the threshold. You may also look at it as just a different activity. Um-m, you know, you could be interested in pursuing aeronautics, or you could be interested in pursuing space travel, or you could be interested in pursuing spiritual growth. And you could think that that's all this is. And you happen to be interested in spiritual growth.

But it is more than this. It is the difference between being asleep and waking up. It's a difference between existing in a state of unreality, of confusion, and being fully Awake; fully Alert, Clear; experiencing the flawlessness and perfection of Creation without alteration of any kind—in which, perhaps, aeronautics and traveling through the universe will be engaged in, because you can do it, because you're Awake.

I encourage you to read what we've covered tonight during this coming week. I encourage you not to be reluctant to look squarely at the degree to which you value being an unhappy learner. And you will know the degree to which you're willing to be an unhappy learner by the amount of time during each day that monologues are going on in your mind, where the Holy Spirit or your Guide have not been invited into the consideration of whatever you would think about all by yourself, so that clarity from a larger perspective can be brought into play. And needless suffering, caused by ignorance on your part, can be avoided—can be released. And healing can be had.

Waking up isn't a matter of having new things to think about, it's a matter of Being in a New Way! And that's what this is all about.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 2nd 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, I'm not going to ask you whether you had a pleasant or unpleasant week, noticing how much of the time you spent in dialogue and how much of the time you spent engaging in monologues. But I'm going to ask a question before we begin. It's the really big question.

What is the carrot you are chasing?

If you're not awake, you are chasing a carrot. Find out what that carrot is and you're on your way home. What is the carrot you are chasing?

Now, I always take the opportunity to squelch whatever opportunities any of you take to say that the Universe doesn't exist; to say that the world isn't real; to say that it's all an illusion. And last week, there was an opportunity that all of you had to say, "Yes, it says right here that the world isn't real."

So let's become clear. We read . . .

Have faith in nothing, and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought.¹

You will find nothing to value. It doesn't mean that you will find nothing to value, that you'll look everywhere and you won't be able to find anything to value. It means, have faith in nothing as though it's something and then find value in it.

Have faith in nothing, and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought.

Now, before I continue further, let's understand something that we have discussed before, but it might be overlooked at the moment.

It is this: When you said, "Father, I would rather see it my way. Father, I would rather do it my way," and you got a divorce from your Father, that in effect, was when you moved from first gear to second gear—second gear, being neutral; this place, this gear in which you can simply be you in your own right—where you can just be you on your own; not in relationship to your Father, you might say, not in relationship with your family, but you, in your own right.

We've talked about the fact that the moment you abdicate your place in first gear and settle into second gear, you spontaneously bring into play third gear—the voice for fear/guilt. Now, you then spend your time attempting to become free of fear and guilt while still remaining in neutral—second gear.

Now, well you can close your eyes if you want, do whatever helps you imagine. I want you to imagine that you are in the middle of Creation. You are the uncontested Son of God, Daughter of God, I mean by that, you haven't contested your Birthright and Inheritance by claiming a position of your own yet, in neutral.

And so, all of Creation—all that the Father Is, as the Infinite Mind in which all of Creation is occurring and is embraced—you experience all of Creation as Light forms, if I may put it this way, energy patterns that look like something. They not only look like something, they feel like something because they have Meaning—Meaning that the Father has embodied in Light and in color, and in outline and in form. But the Substance of it all is Spirit. The Substance of it all is Love. And the experience of any aspect of Creation, is for lack of better words, seen, felt, heard simultaneously with far more definition you might say, than anything you've experienced so far.

And because the Substance of all of Creation is Love, it is an experience of Infinite Love which you're not a small part of; it is the all-encompassing Presence of what you Are, because you are God's Offspring. You are that which God has withheld nothing of what He is, from.

And so there is no confusion of any sort present. Injury, illness, disease, death; these are meaningless; meaningless words, meaningless concepts. Harm is an impossibility.

But now, when you, this uncontested Son or Daughter of God says, "Father, I'd rather see it my way, I'd rather decide what everything means. I am going to get a divorce from You and strike out on my own." Good choice of words because of course, you have "struck out." However, the goal was to strike out on your own and take on the mantle of authority to name and give meaning to all of Creation yourself.

Now, if you will, imagine that as you said this to the Father and made commitment within yourself, all of the light emanating from and which was the substance of every aspect of Creation, diminished.

And so, the object of Creation, you might say, appeared to become dark and dense, impenetrable, with no transparency through which light and color could be emitted. And all substance, which is truly Spirit and love and life and truth itself, and the embodiment of Soul and Principle, and so on; all of it became apparently lifeless, at least by comparison with its actuality—its reality.

And you began to experience it as what? As matter. It's that simple. When you abandon first gear, where you are listening to the Voice for truth and you take a seat firmly in neutral, second gear, which brings third gear into play, all of Creation remains untouched by, unaltered by your decision to see it all by yourself. It remains unchanged, but to you it has become something new. It has become something it is not.

You are thus looking at, experiencing, [wraps knuckles on table] feeling, smelling, hearing something which isn't there. You're seeing matter. You're seeing your definition. You're seeing the meanings you have given to it or the things that you still need to give meaning to. Its eternality you have lost. Its indestructibility now escapes you. Its benign but loving, generous gifts of itself that it is constantly pouring out and blessing you with, is going unnoticed by you.

You are experiencing a distorted perception of reality. And what you are experiencing isn't real and therefore is nothing. It is nothing!

The Somethingness of everything, being unavailable to you, everything has become not what it is and therefore, nothing.

Now, as you look around at all of this nothing, which is simply your misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven, you have what you think is an opportunity to have faith in it—to have faith in what you've defined everything as.

Have faith in nothing, and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought. Yet you will add another burden to your mind, ALREADY burdened or you would not have sought another. You will believe that nothing is OF VALUE, and WILL value it. A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, a body or a war are one to you.

You see, it doesn't say in here that a little piece of glass is nothing. It doesn't say that a speck of dust is nothing. It doesn't say that a body is nothing. And it doesn't say that a war is nothing. It says that they are one to you.

I'm going to ask you, how many of have taken intelligence tests where they give you a multiple list of items or a list of numbers and they say to you, "Which one doesn't belong?" And it will give you a list like: New York, Pennsylvania, Florida,

Washington, Los Angeles. Which one doesn't fit? Well Los Angeles doesn't fit because Los Angeles is a city and all of the others are states.

Well, when you read this, did you notice something strange? It says . . .

You will believe nothing is OF VALUE and you will value it. A little piece of glass, . .

. . . okay, that's the first thing on the list . . .

. . . a speck of dust, . .

. . . second thing on the list . . .

. . . a body . . .

. . . third thing on the list . . .

. . . or a war are one to you.

Which one doesn't fit? Well obviously, war doesn't fit because it's not an object. So, did Helen make a mistake when she was listening for what to write down? Or was that on purpose?

A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, a body or a war are one to you.

No mistake there. Because we're not talking about Reality where the Substance of everything is Spirit—Love. We're talking here about matter. We're talking here about how Creation is experienced through the lens of finiteness, of limitation; through the eyes, you might say, of one who has abandoned his infiniteness and given his allegiance to the partial; who has abandoned wholeness, so that he might see in part and value the parts and define the parts and learn how to arrange the parts for the benefit of that which is an orphan and has no inheritance, no birthright.

Your blindness to the reality of everything as Spirit constitutes a way of experiencing and seeing everything as though it is matter. And this distortion of perception gets applied to everything whether it fits or not. Behavior can be added to a list of objects and the misperception associated with the objects becomes applied to the behavior. And the misperceptions regarding behavior can be applied to objects. And this is one of the ways in which confusion becomes compounded and insanity increases.

A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, and a body are identifiable objects. Their substance is Spirit. Reality applies to them. They are Real. And when you shift back to first gear, the Light of Living Love that illuminates them truly will be seen once again by you.

Whereas war, which is not an object, and is a behavior justified and engaged in by one who sees through the lens of guilt and fear, it will be nowhere to be found because when second gear is abandoned for first, third gear simply dissolves.

Again . . .

A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, a body or a war are one to you . . .

. . . if you've gotten a divorce from the Father and if you have given definitions to everything and you are committed to abiding by the meanings you've applied to everything you've defined.

A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, a body or a war are one to you. For if you value ONE thing made of nothing, you HAVE believed that nothing can be precious and that you can learn how to make the untrue TRUE.

Now, don't ever use that paragraph again as a justification for saying that the world isn't real or the world doesn't exist. It doesn't exist as what you have defined it as. It doesn't exist as the matter that it appears to be which only appears that way because you have chosen to look at it through a lens of distortion because you have taken up residence in second gear—neutral—and have abandoned that gear in which no distortion is present in you.

Now why would you want to make something out of nothing, like, oh, a piece of glass? Well, we'll see here. If you could take a piece of glass and in making of the glass, you could refine it so greatly that there were no impurities in it causing no interference to the refraction of light as it passes through it, you could create a relatively excellent artificial diamond that would look lovely in a ring or a necklace without having to spend the money that it would cost to have real diamonds. And so, if you could do that, you could sell it to those who couldn't afford real diamonds. And you could make a lot of money. You could benefit from it. You could prove that there was value in a piece of glass.

But I'm going to tell you something: If you could take a piece of glass and give it to someone and help them see the Light of Living Love that is there, because there can't be matter, there is only the Substance which is Spirit, you would have given a gift far surpassing what you currently call a diamond which you would give more value to than the most excellent piece of glass faceted like a diamond.

Now, what I'm trying to bring out here is, if you will come to a point where you will believe that nothing is of value and will value it, there has to be a reason why you would do that. Well, you might say, "Not necessarily. It's just a mistaken act based upon the belief of being an orphan. It's something that I'm misunderstanding because I'm being affected by third gear. Fear and guilt are taunting me. They're trying to make me believe that I should make a profit at the expense of my brother and that I can misuse the piece of glass. And all I have to do to wake up is to learn how to handle this piece of glass in a way that doesn't constitute usury and mistreatment of my brothers and sisters, and work with these pieces of glass in ways that are so loving that they inspire the people who buy them to likewise behave lovingly and with kindness and to be inspired to do things in their life differently so that we're all managing to become free of guilt and fear and are doing nothing any longer that is motivated by guilt and fear."

You see? You could disagree with me and say that. And in fact, for the most part, students of truth are doing that. To a greater degree than is acceptable, it is being done. To a greater degree than is constructive, it is being done.

Now again, there's a reason that everyone is trying to learn how to exist in neutral—second gear—without being governed by, influenced by, affected by, or motivated by guilt and fear. And what that reason is, is illuminated in the answer to the question, "What is the carrot you are chasing? What is the carrot everyone is chasing?"

Very simply, the carrot you are all chasing is the same carrot Pinocchio was chasing. Pinocchio wanted to become a real boy. You, who have moved from home—first gear to second gear—who have disowned your Birthright, your Parentage, and who have established for yourself, a state of orphanhood, have one goal. And that is: To overcome your orphanhood without declaring Who your real Father/Mother is. You want to become real. You want to become valid.

The only way you can achieve validity from second gear, from neutral; is to establish mutual agreements with everyone else by virtue of your behavior, and by virtue by your influencing them so as to curry favor from them, so that they will join an ever-growing group of orphans who all agree that you are wonderful; that you are worthwhile, that you are worth the maximum respect that they can extend to you. Why? So that you, by virtue of your excellent, independent behavior, might achieve the state of truth where you are as real as God.

That is the carrot you are all chasing.

Now, Pinocchio was a puppet. But you are not. Pinocchio was not a real child upon whom a spell was cast, who suddenly was transformed into a puppet, who had an initial preexisting birthright as a real child, to regain. But you, every single one of you, are real by virtue of having been a real child of God, co-creator with God, before you decided to explore the possibilities of imaginatively being an independent creator in your own right.

Now, if you watched Pinocchio and he looked like a real child, behaving like a puppet; and behaving like a puppet that wanted to become a real child (never having been one) it would be laughable and at the same time extremely sad because the behavior would be a pure example of insanity—a real child behaving like he was a puppet trying to become a real child. All the time he would be engaged in trying to become a real child, he would be missing out on the experience of being the real child that he had never stopped being.

Now, it's very important for you to understand that this is the carrot you are chasing. You are trying to become Real. Because you have adopted a belief which you have made commitment to, that you are less than Real. The definitions you have given to everything, or the definitions that have been passed on to you that you have embraced, say that you are a fluke of nature that comes and goes like the Springtime sprouting of grass and the Summer browning and dying of the grass in the seasons, you come and go.

And you believe that. But you don't believe it because it makes you sad to really embrace that idea. And so you live in this constant state of reaching for life but feeling sad in the act of it because, "Ah-h, Summer will come and I'll wither and die." And it's not the truth! And such beliefs and such behavior and such attitudes that you govern yourself by are little bits of nothing that you have picked up; little bits of falsity, little bits of materialism that you have picked up and stood in awe of, and wonder. And you have valued it.

But please understand, that the raw materials from which you gather these awful meanings and definitions, are always some aspect of reality. You know, in chemistry you have your atomic chart, all the elements. And they are what they are. And with them you can understand the constituent parts of everything. But if you can't see the light emanating from the elements, if you can't experience the living Presence of God in those elements, that chart is a description of nothing. It's a description of something that's causing you to miss the point if you're not looking beyond it. You see?

Have faith in nothing, . .

. . . like the atomic chart . . .

. . . and you will FIND the "treasure" that you sought. Yet you will add another burden to your mind, ALREADY burdened or you would not have sought another.

If you weren't already confused and not fulfilled you wouldn't continue to look for more things to do to earn the right to be Real, to be a Real boy or a Real girl.

You will believe that nothing is OF VALUE, and WILL value it. A little piece of glass, a speck of dust, . .

. . . oxygen, gold and so on, on the chart . . .

. . . a body or a war are one to you. For if you value ONE thing made of nothing, you HAVE believed that nothing can be precious, and that you can learn how to make the untrue TRUE.

That's it! The goal is to make the untrue true. The goal is to make the orphan that you are, real, when that which is behaving as though it's an orphan trying to be real is the Son of God, who is Real and needs to stop trying to be real and, as I said last week, stand in the pasture in your peace long enough for the reality of you to register with you because you're not chasing off after another carrot.

Now, isn't that wonderful to know what the carrot is that you're chasing after?

Now, as we read at the end last week . . .

If you would be a happy learner, you must give EVERYTHING that you have learned over to the Holy Spirit to be UNLEARNED for you. And then begin to learn the joyous lessons that come quickly on the firm foundation that truth is true.

What is the truth that is true? That you are the direct present expression of God—the Life Force, the Life Principle, the Life Presence—Presence-ing Itself right now, is responsible for you right now. That's the truth that is true. And knowing that truth and embracing that truth is the way you stop chasing the carrot of trying to become worthy of respect and of value in the eyes of others and becoming something valuable, as though you hadn't been in the first place.

For what is builded there IS true, and BUILT on truth. The universe of learning will open up before you in all its gracious simplicity. With truth before you, you will not look back.

You see? Can you see that? The moment you realize that you are Real, and you never were an orphan having to strive to validate himself, you will stop behaving like an orphan trying to validate itself. You will not look back at the old way you did things.

The happy learner . . .

. . . which is what you become when you stop doing the things that are the evidence of being an unhappy learner . . .

The happy learner meets the conditions of learning here, as he also meets the conditions of knowledge in the Kingdom.

In other words, simultaneous with your meeting the conditions of knowledge in the Kingdom, where everything is known and there is nothing to be learned, at the same time that begins to unfold as your conscious experience, you as the apparent happy learner, meets the conditions of learning here, as you shift from insanity to sanity.

So, you could say, that as you shift from insanity to sanity the happy learner meets the conditions of learning as he also meets the conditions of knowledge or Knowing in the Kingdom.

All this lies in the Holy Spirit's plan to free you from the past, and open up the way to freedom for you. For truth IS true. What else could ever be, or ever was? This simple lesson holds the key to the dark door which you believe is locked forever. You MADE this door of nothing, and behind it IS nothing. The key is only the light which shines away the shapes and forms and fears of nothing. Accept this key to freedom from the hands of Christ Who gives it to you, that you may join Him in the holy task of bringing light to darkness.

I give to you through the Course and I give to you through My being with you in this way. I give you the key to freedom. The key to freedom is the conscious awareness that you are not something invalid working toward validity, but that you are a holy Son of God believing that you are something valid, moving toward validity without ever truly remembering who you Are in your divine status.

I'm here giving you the keys; the understanding, the insight, the light that will cause you to invalidate what has been keeping you in bondage.

Accept this key to freedom . . .

. . . from My hands . . .

. . . from the hands of Christ Who gives it to you, that you may join Him in the holy task of bringing light to darkness.

You see, when you're in second gear, you're trying to bring the darkness to the light, you're trying to bring your ignorant creations to a point where they gain the status of being real. And it doesn't work that way.

Again . . .

Accept this key to freedom from the hands of Christ Who gives it to you, that you may join Him in the holy task of bringing light to darkness. For, like your brothers, you do not realize the light has come, and FREED you from the sleep of darkness.

You don't realize that what you divinely are is already present. It has already come. It never left. But you left the awareness of it in favor of imagining a state of orphanhood that you believed would give you the opportunity as an autonomous presence to become an autonomous creator in your own right. You see?

Now . . .

Behold your brothers in their freedom, . .

. . . where did that come from? Well, remember, your function is to look into your brother's eyes and remember God, right?

Look into your brother's eyes and be willing to see God there because it is your intent while looking into your brother's eyes to see God there; to be open to the Revelation of the Presence of God there in your brother by His, God's revealing it to you in your mind, so that you might extend that conscious awareness, that conscious realization of the divinity of your brother to your brother.

Behold your brothers in their freedom, and . . .

. . . what? . .

. . . learn of them how to be FREE of darkness.

"What do you mean, I gotta do something to give it to them before I get it? Well, you know human nature. He's gonna get it and he's gonna run. He's not gonna stick around to give it to me, so why should I give it to him? This is all crap! [Chuckling] This is all based on unfairness."

But you see you don't realize that unfairness is the lens you're looking through as you listen to what I'm saying. And the conclusions and judgments that you're coming to are based on your tinyness, your small mindedness, your mean-spiritedness that you have acquired because it helps to keep you safe in the threatening world.

To not do what I'm saying becomes a carrot for you to chase after, so that you don't make the mistake of doing what I'm suggesting and giving something good to your brother that he'll run off with, without returning the favor. And that little carrot is not the main carrot is it? But it's supporting the main carrot. The main carrot being, that you are going to become a real boy or a real girl, in your own right, without a father or a mother. All of the little carrots that you chase after support the one big carrot.

Now again, listen, because it's the truth:

Behold your brothers in their freedom, and learn of them how to be FREE of darkness. The light in you will waken them, and they will not leave YOU asleep.

I know you think you know better than Me, but the fact is that . . .

. . . The light in you will waken them, and they will not leave YOU asleep. The vision of Christ is given the very instant that it is perceived. Where everything is clear it is all holy.

And we could say, where everything is clear it is all spirit, there's no matter.

Where everything is clear it is all holy. The quietness of its simplicity is so compelling that you will realize it is IMPOSSIBLE to deny the simple truth.

"Oh, yeah, yeah, yeah, the simple truth, that if I stand in the pasture with the succulent grass, I can end up waking up without chasing another carrot. Well, I'm sorry, I'm not ready to abandon the chase. I don't care to believe you. Thank you very much. I refuse to abandon the manipulation of third gear from second gear."

When you say that the truth isn't compelling enough to adopt or to explore, you're saying, "My addiction to the chase is paramount to me." Well, here's the interesting thing: When you say that, you're saying, "It's paramount to me, little old separate me, where over here, it's paramount to me even though You, way over there, Big Brother are saying that my choice is insane. And it turns the involvement between us into a contest, this against that, me against You, You lovingly trying to change me against my will." You see?

But here's the thing, here's the clincher of it, here's what really matters: Whether I over there am trying to change you, is irrelevant. In you is a gift from God, in you irrespective of Me, whether I say anything to you or not.

Your downfall as an ego, your downfall as an insane one, the downfall of you as a successful orphan is already in you. The divinity of you is already there, and it is there with the intent to bring you back into the conscious embrace of your right Mind. Its goal is healing. Its goal is lovingly and beneficially transformational for you. And so you're not fighting against Me, you're fighting against yourself.

Take a look at that, because at the bottom line, that's not really what you thought you were doing. And it isn't really what you want to do. And if there is any truth in what I'm saying and there is the slightest chance that you are missing out on the conscious experience of Reality, then you have cause for exploring the possibility that something more awaits you; something more fulfilling, something more integrated, something more full of integrity about you is available for you to experience.

Where everything is clear it is all holy. The quietness of its simplicity is so compelling that you will realize it is IMPOSSIBLE to deny the simple truth.

You are a Real boy. You are a Real girl. You are already absolutely Real in the fullest meaning, the most divine meaning of that word.

For there IS nothing else.

Nothing other than the simple truth.

God is everywhere, and His Son . . .

. . . you, you, you, you, all of you, . .

. . . is in Him with everything.

Listen to that.

God is everywhere, and His Son is in Him with everything.

The full unobstructed, conscious, experience of the totality of Creation, in all of its actuality as Spirit, not matter; in all of its actuality as Eternal, not temporal; incapable of imperfection, where sin, disease and death are nonsensical terms.

Can he . . .

. . . you, the son of God . . .

. . . sing the dirge of sorrow when THIS is true?

And I promise you, you won't be singing a dirge of sorrow. Just remember: What's the carrot you're chasing? The carrot you're chasing is the achievement of the integrity and the reality of you in your own right. "Well, I don't believe you." The time will come when you will. It is the simple truth. And it is the answer to the dream. It is the resolving of the human condition.

I love you. I love you. I love all of you.

Now stop chasing the carrot! It's a waste of time.

I will see you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES STUDY GROUP WITH RAJ

March 9th 2008

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

THE DECISION FOR GUILTLESSNESS ¹

We're going to begin right in the book tonight.

Learning will be commensurate with motivation, and the interference in your motivation for learning is exactly the same as that which interferes with ALL your thinking.

This sentence does not appear in the first and second edition. I'm going to read it again.

Learning will be commensurate with motivation, and the interference in your motivation for learning is exactly the same as that which interferes with ALL your thinking. The happy learner cannot FEEL GUILTY about learning.

[Pause]

The happy learner cannot FEEL GUILTY about learning. This is so essential to learning that it should never be forgotten. The guiltless learner learns so easily because his thoughts are free. Yet this entails the recognition that guilt is INTERFERENCE, NOT salvation, and serves no useful function at all.

Is any of this making any sense to you?

The guiltless learner learns so easily because his thoughts are free. Yet this entails the recognition that guilt is INTERFERENCE, NOT salvation, and serves no useful function at all.

You might say, “Well, of course! I know. It doesn’t take a rocket scientist to realize that guilt is interference!” Well, yeah, it does take a rocket scientist, and it takes you, and it takes anyone with a little bit of a glimpse of his right Mind to realize that you don’t know that.

You don’t know that guilt is interference. Why do I say that? Because, if you’re not awake, you are existing in a state of disconnection from your Source. Not actual disconnection, but a disconnection by virtue of ignorance—of ignore-ance—by virtue of your ignoring your Source and giving preference to the idea that you, in your own right, independent of any source, are the authority and governor of your experience.

As we said before, when you got your divorce from your Father, you found that your attempt to act at odds with the nature of your being, your attempt to act at odds with the way things work, your attempt to function at odds with Reality, always has accompanying it, a dissonance, a warning like, as I’ve said before, the bells on a garbage truck or a large vehicle which ring when the vehicle is backing up, which say, “A condition of emergency or danger exists. Be careful.”

The minute you try to act at odds with your Being, the unalterable perfection of your Being reminds you that you cannot act at odds with It, even if you choose to try.

Now, first gear, as we’ve been discussing it, is you before you attempt to get a divorce from your Father or disconnect from your Source. Second gear, neutral, is where you move to . . . you think. You move there in your imagination when you get your divorce from your Father and you insist upon asserting yourself wholly and fully as the only active authority that you are going to recognize in your existence. And so you take up residence in this second gear which is neutral.

[I have been calling it neutral. I understand this has been problematic for some, but nevertheless, continue to work with it. Neutral is this supposed place where you can function in your own right.]

Now, I've mentioned that the moment you moved into second gear, it brought forth, spontaneously, third gear. First gear, we've called the Voice for Truth. Second gear, neutral, we could call your attempt to have a voice of your own, all by yourself. And third gear, which spontaneously comes into existence when you try to establish second gear, is called the voice for fear—the flip side of which always is guilt.

Now, when this surprising experience of dissonance occurred—of your Sanity providing a bell, saying, “what you are attempting to do is not safe for you,” “what you are attempting to do is at odds with your being, and to attempt to go any further in this direction will simply cause you to be provided with a stronger and stronger reminder that you are attempting to do the impossible, and don't waste your time”—It became something for you to overcome.

It was what you took on as the first challenge encountered in your state of independence. It was a challenge for you not to yield to, but to overcome. And so, you created a life for yourself, an independent life for yourself, and its purpose and intent was to overcome and become superior to—and therefore not governed by—this threat of “danger,” as you were perceiving It. Instead of using It for Its purpose, which was to tell you to stop doing what you were doing and go back Home, you adopted It as a challenge to overcome. And in fact, the “becoming equal” to It and “overcoming It,” even, has become your purpose.

Now, in not using It for Its real purpose, in not recognizing It as your ever-present Sanity, and turning It into something to overcome, you have turned your Sanity into fear and guilt. It's just the way it works. Thus, guilt has been the driving force of your existence. Guilt and fear, coupled together, have become the engine that motivates you, and so in this respect, you value guilt.

I promise you, that almost without fail, any of you who succeed in abandoning guilt, will initially feel that your life has lost purpose. And this is because guilt has been valuable—so valuable that you've been willing to give your complete commitment and allegiance to it. You use it on yourself and you use it on each other. You find that it motivates you. And you have found that your, I'm going to say, “skillful” use of it on your brothers is quite effective also for influencing your brothers and sisters and getting them to do what you want them to do so as to make you less fearful, and to assuage your feeling of guilt that threatens your peace.

So . . .

The happy learner cannot FEEL GUILTY about learning.

It's just impossible. And that's an interference to your motivation for learning because your motivation for learning is the push of guilt. Without guilt there, you think there is no motivation for being, much less learning. And therefore, the moment you get wind of the fact that there's not going to be any guilt, or any experience of it in the process of learning, in the process of Awakening, you find Awakening less interesting, and potentially less valuable to you. Why? Because you don't know how to exist without the push of guilt behind you. And you don't know how to exist without the sense of self that you have acquired as a result of being motivated by guilt and using guilt as a motivational factor in your relationships.

Those two things give you identity . . . you think. And so, if you are going to be a happy learner and the happy learner cannot feel guilt about learning, you perceive that to be a meaningless experience which you are reluctant to engage in. It's that simple.

Now let's go back to the beginning.

Learning will be commensurate with motivation, and the interference in your motivation for learning is exactly the same as that which interferes with ALL your thinking.

Now here's the interference:

The happy learner cannot FEEL GUILTY about learning.

Why is that interference? I'll say it again: Because without guilt, you don't feel purpose, you don't feel meaning, because once you got your divorce from your Father and attempted to stand on your own, you used the guilt—which was really the warning bell from your Sanity saying, “Stop moving in this direction”—as justification for moving further in that direction and it became your purpose for being. And you employ it in all aspects of being unjoined with your Father, disconnected from your Source—or when you are choosing to, as absolutely as possible, ignore the fact that you have a Source other than yourself.

The happy learner cannot FEEL GUILTY about learning.

That should be good news!

This is so essential to learning, that it should never be forgotten. The guiltless learner learns so easily because his thoughts are free. Yet this entails the recognition that guilt is INTERFERENCE, NOT salvation, and serves no useful function at all.

You are accustomed to using guiltlessness merely to offset the pain of guilt, and do not look upon it as having value IN ITSELF.

You use guiltlessness as a salve, you might say. You're feeling guilty and you say to yourself, “I am guiltless.” Or you say to your brother to console him, “You are guiltless. You are God's offspring and God could not possibly have embodied guilt in you. Therefore the feeling of guilt that you are having is un-justifiable and you don't have to be governed by it."

And so you use guiltlessness as a means of finessing your mind into a greater experience of peace, while not yet abandoning second gear. You see? You use the idea of guiltlessness to make you feel better while you're still insane, while you're still claiming independent selfhood—independent existence which you are in charge of and authorizing. You see?

So you haven't abandoned guilt yet, because as long as you're in second gear, third gear's there. And if you sit in second gear and try to employ the idea of guiltlessness to make you feel better, all you're doing is making second gear more tolerable while you are still valuing third gear, which means you're still valuing guilt. You see?

So, you're playing with guilt and guiltlessness simultaneously for an effect that doesn't constitute Awakening at all, nor does it contribute to Awakening at all.

You believe that guilt and guiltlessness are BOTH of value, each representing an escape from what the other does not offer you.

You see, guilt doesn't offer you peace. Guiltlessness offers you peace. Guilt offers you a sense of identity and purpose. Guiltlessness does not offer you a false sense of identity or purpose. And so you employ them both and try to find a certain equanimity, a certain balance, while never waking up—while never engaging in anything that will free you from the bondage of a dream of illusion.

Again . . .

You believe . . .

. . . and I know you didn't think you did before we started this paragraph, but . . .

You believe that guilt and guiltlessness are BOTH of value, each representing an escape from what the other does not offer you. You do not want either alone, for without both you do not see yourselves as whole and therefore happy. Yet you are whole ONLY in your guiltlessness, and only in your guiltlessness CAN you be happy. There IS no conflict here. To wish for guilt in ANY way, in ANY form, will lose appreciation of the value of your guiltlessness, and push it from your sight.

There is no compromise that you can make with guilt, and escape the pain which ONLY guiltlessness allays. Learning is living here, as creating is Being in Heaven.

In other words, learning is living here as you engage in vacating second gear . . .

. . . as creating is Being in Heaven . . .

. . . as creating is what is in first gear.

Whenever the pain of guilt SEEMS to attract you, remember that, if you yield to it, you are deciding AGAINST your happiness, and will not learn HOW to be happy.

So, as long as you are valuing guilt, as long as you insist on employing it, or as long as you insist on trying to deal with it while in second gear, but using truths that have dawned on you from glimpses of truth in moments of being in first gear, you will not actually be engaged in learning. Learning occurs as you are willing to disengage from second gear and move to first gear.

Guiltlessness. Is guiltlessness a concept? Is guiltlessness an idea? Is guiltlessness a configuration of your mind that you can create in which you can feel guiltless and in which you can convey guiltlessness to others? Is it a tool? Is it anything that you can cause from second gear? Or is guiltlessness the state of your being when you are firmly established in first gear where God is responsible for what you Are, not you?

Guiltlessness is not a tool. Guiltlessness is not an intellectual arrangement of appropriate and principled and divine thoughts. Do you know that guiltless-ness can best be described as unselfconsciousness, where you are being without a single element of self-consciousness occurring, where you are being directly out from the Source of your being without any concern for how it looks to others, or whether you're looking intelligent, or whether you're being intelligent?

Guiltlessness is when this "thinker" that you think you are is absent, and what you Are spontaneously, you might say, expresses Itself. And in the expression, God is given manifestation, the Voice for Truth is given voice, and there is no fear. There is no dissonance of a bell saying, "You are attempting the impossible. Go back. Go back!" None of that. And everything you find yourself being identifies your purpose to you, defines your purpose to you. It doesn't fulfill purpose that you have defined for yourself and tried to bring into manifestation.

Now, again . . .

Whenever the pain of guilt SEEMS to attract you, remember that, if you yield to it, you are deciding AGAINST your happiness, and will not learn HOW to be happy. Say, therefore, to yourself, gently, but with the conviction born of the love of God and of His Son:

“What I experience I will make manifest . . .

And I’m going to interject here . . . not by virtue of some power you have to make things manifest, but by virtue of the fact that what you experience does manifest.

What you experience you will make manifest. It’s just a statement of how things work.

“What I experience I will make manifest.

It’s like, whether I want to or not. You see? It has nothing to do with special authority to give or withhold.

*“What I experience I will make manifest.
If I am guiltless I have nothing to fear.
I choose . . .*

. . . and remember, this section is called, “The Decision for Guiltlessness.” A decision is a choice.

*I choose to testify to the ACCEPTANCE of the Atonement,
NOT for its rejection.
I would accept my guiltlessness by making it manifest
And SHARING it.
Let me bring peace to God’s Son from his Father.”*

Well, there it is, spelled out to you. You want to give the gift of guiltlessness to your brother? You need to be willing to look into your brother’s eyes with the desire to see what is true about him—with the desire to see his guiltlessness. And you desire to know of it from God, while you’re looking into your brother’s eyes. You switch from second gear to first gear. You join with the Father and you ask of the Father what His truth is. “What is the truth here?” You invite the infilling of your Father’s perspective so that you might recognize what the Father is revealing to you in the brother whose eyes you are looking into.

“Let me bring peace to God’s Son from his Father.”

That’s the two-step that we’ve been talking about.

Guiltlessness is nothing you can achieve in second gear. And guiltlessness is not something you can use in second gear. Guiltlessness is what is—whether you like it or not, whether you deserve it or not—when you have taken up residence in first gear. When you do that, second gear, no longer being employed, no longer seems to have existence. And, likewise, third gear—guilt and fear. That’s how you access and embody guiltlessness. Not by any use of your mind whatsoever, not by any wonderful words, but by an actual shift wherein you embody the meaning of these words: “I of myself can do nothing.”² “If you have seen me, you have seen the Father.”³

In other words, don’t be confused. If you have seen me, you haven’t seen me, you have seen the Father. The Father, being me, is all there is of me. The Father is what is here.

That’s what moving to first gear means. And that’s where the experience of guiltlessness is available. And that’s where the blessing of the awareness of guiltlessness fills your mind so fully that you see it everywhere and auto-matically extend it everywhere. Not because you’re full of words that express guiltlessness that you throw out into the air, but because in you there is no self-consciousness, there is no discomfort. You do not wonder how you appear to others. What others might think of you doesn’t even cross your mind. And so you are totally free to be the place where your function can be fulfilled—the function set in place by your Father in His expression of Himself that’s called you.

So, continuing . . .

Each day, each hour and minute, even every second, you are deciding between the crucifixion and the resurrection; . .

. . . sounds ominous. Here’s another way of saying it . . .

. . . between the ego and the Holy Spirit.

Meaning you as an orphan or that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

The ego is the choice for guilt; the Holy Spirit the decision for guiltlessness.

If you want to experience your inviolable guiltlessness, choose for the Holy Spirit in you, lean into the Holy Spirit in you. Ask the Holy Spirit in you to help you let It do Its job, by decreasing your resistance to letting It into you and healing your tiny sense of self, by replacing it with the infinite presence of the Mind of God that constitutes your mind, and abandoning all attempts to make the mind you think you have and the mind that you think you are, into some grandiose equivalent to God, which keeps you forever bound to guilt and fear.

The power of decision is all that is yours.

Simple.

The power of decision is all that is yours. What you can decide BETWEEN is fixed, because there are no alternatives except truth and illusion.

I'm sure many of you in this past week have had fun discovering how many carrots you're chasing, how many sub-carrots there are that you're chasing that all feed the one main carrot that is your all-important goal, which is to become a real boy or a real girl—to become real in your own right, while still separated from your Source as though you don't have a source.

And in the process of discovering how many carrots there are it might seem that there are a whole lot of carrots to choose between—"well, I'm going to choose this one," "well, I'm going to discard that one," "well this one will help me for awhile, but I've got to discard that one"—when there's only one thing that needs to be done. There are only two choices that you have available to you: Chase a carrot or don't chase a carrot.

So to hell with how many carrots there are, and to hell with how many carrots your brothers and sisters have. It doesn't matter. What matters is, are you still chasing the carrot or did you stop? Those are the only two options you have available to you. And the only function you can fulfill is to choose one or the other. And there's no way to make that into something important. How can you make that choice better than anyone else? How could you lord it over your brother? "Well, I made the choice this way!"

What you can decide BETWEEN is fixed, because there are no alternatives except truth and illusion.

There are no alternatives except first gear and second gear. First gear is a real option. Second gear, itself, is an illusion.

And there is no overlap between them, because they are opposites which CANNOT be reconciled and CANNOT both be true. You are guilty OR guiltless, bound OR free, happy OR unhappy.

The point is, you want to be a happy learner. And in order to be a happy learner, you've got to abandon second gear, not become better at being in second gear. When you abandon second gear and you say, "Father, help . . ."—when you reach out to the Father or you reach out to the Holy Spirit, or you reach out to me, or you reach out to your guide—you are, as I've said so many times, breaking the isolation, joining again, unifying what has been whole all along. But you're consciously embracing it, consciously acknowledging it, consciously making it true for you by no longer denying it.

The miracle . . .

. . . a sudden shift of perception . . .

. . . teaches you that you have chosen guiltlessness, freedom and joy.

When you experience the happening of a miracle it means that you have chosen guiltlessness, freedom and joy. The miracle . . .

It is not a cause, but an EFFECT. It is the natural result of choosing right, attesting to your happiness that comes from choosing to be free of guilt.

Now, you're probably going to notice this coming week how much you're employing guilt, how often it comes into play, how often you wake up in the morning, and before you even stir out of bed your mind is filled with the things that you haven't gotten done, that you're guilty for not having gotten done, and how frightened that makes you feel, and how that does one of two things: Either it makes you feel like not getting up or it makes you feel like leaping out of bed so as to get rid of these things that are causing you such distress, and take hold of the situation and master the situation . . . not realiz-ing that the answer, right there while you're still lying in bed and these thoughts and feelings of guilt are occurring, is to recognize that you are in a monologue. You see? And the answer is, right then and there, to shift to a dialogue.

Invite the Holy Spirit in. Invite me in. Invite your guide in, so that one who is Awake can join with you in looking at these things and provide the perspective in which it is absolutely unnecessary to look at them with guilt or fear which will immobilize you or scare you so completely that it causes you to run with a vengeance to get rid of what is disturbing you. You see?

The miracle teaches you that you have chosen guiltlessness, freedom and joy. It is not a cause, but an EFFECT. It is the natural result of choosing right, attesting to your happiness that comes from choosing to be free of guilt.

It's so easy to become distracted by the thoughts and feelings of guilt that cause you to forget that the answer is to invite the Holy Spirit in—to abandon the monologue and learn of [from] your joining, while in first gear: “What needs to be done?” “What do we do about this?” “What is the Father's Will here?” “What steps do we take there?” “What identifies fulfillment of purpose now?” You see? You engage in this while in dialogue. And while in dialogue, fear, anxiety and guilt will not be found. And in your peace, the steps needing to be taken to resolve what had been frightening you when you looked at it from second gear will be accomplished.

Now . . .

Everyone you offer healing to returns it. Everyone you attack keeps it and cherishes it by holding it against you. Whether he does this or does it not will make no difference; you will THINK he does.

You might attack a brother who recognizes it as a call for love and does not attack you back. But it will make no difference to you because the messenger that you sent out was a messenger of attack, a messenger of hate and it will bring back to you confirmation of the rightness of your act. It will report back to you that something hateful is there.

So . . .

Whether he . . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . does this or does it not will make no difference; you will THINK he does.

Again, whatever messenger you send out is the one that will come back to you and confirm the reason you sent it out, whether there is truth to the confirmation or not.

It is impossible to offer what you do not want without this penalty.

If you offer what you do not want, what you do not want will come back to you. It will bring with it this penalty. So ask yourself, do you want to decide for guiltlessness or do you want to decide for guilt? Do you want to decide for guilt, so as to build up your sense of yourself as an independent agent, capable of becoming real? Do you want to continue to do that? Because when you do, the penalty will always come back to you—the penalty of confirmation of your world being hateful, one that you must continue to be defended against.

Is that the ongoing state of tension that you want to eternally live in? If it isn't, then you must do the simple thing: Get out of second gear. Move back into first gear. Invite God back in. Be willing to acknowledge your ever-present Father, your ever-present Source, and engage in dialogue. Engage in active togetherness.

Again . . .

It is impossible to offer what you do not want without this penalty.

What you do not want, that you offer, will come back to you.

The cost of giving IS receiving. Either it is a penalty from which you suffer, or the happy purchase of a treasure to hold dear.

So again, don't be too quick to gloss over the fact that until you have decided to move back to gear one, you are in a frame of mind, you are in a mindset in which guilt is the most valuable asset you have, because it is the discomfort you need in order to reach for the carrot. It's the discomfort, the prod, the compulsiveness that will drive you to keep going for the carrot. And as long as you are valuing guilt, you will not be able to be a happy learner. And if you are not a happy learner, learning will not occur.

Now, it doesn't matter how long you haven't been learning. And it doesn't matter what all of the various reasons are that you or your friends or enemies or family might be able to come up with as to why you're not learning. None of that matters.

All that matters is: Are you going to decide for guiltlessness? Are you going to dare to let yourself go through a period of transition in which lack of purpose seems to take over, where nothing is giving you identity in the way identity used to be derived by you, where the emptiness of going for the carrot is absent because you've given up going for the carrot and now you don't know what in the hell your life is for, and so it all seems empty?

Understand the dynamics of it. Understand that you have been getting purpose out of the experience of guilt. Understand that the more strongly you have denied your Father, the greater the experience of guilt, because it takes the greater push from your guilt to drive you to go the extra mile, reach the extra mile for that carrot, because now, having more strongly denied your Father, it is more imperative for you to have your independent identity established. And that's the dynamic of it.

Understand it . . . not so that you can be depressed by it, but so that it's so clear to you that it's easy to make a different choice and make a decision for guiltlessness with motivation. And then don't try to create guiltlessness. Don't try to conjure it up with all kinds of guiltlessness "talk" or guiltlessness "ideas" that you have woven into a fabric of beauty without ever having connected with the Father, without ever having shifted to first gear. You see what I'm saying?

Let there be motivation to abandon the "thinker" in second gear that's maintaining a place to be, through imagination, called second gear—orphanhood—and make the choice for first gear by saying, "Father, help. Father, fill me with the conscious experience of truth. Fill me with your Will."

"Better yet, since I am learning that I never could have had a will separate or different from your Will, help uncover to me, help increase in me, my willingness to experience a will other than my own personal will—the one I've been using to try and get the carrot and which has kept me entirely aloof from my sane experience of my intelligent mind, which is your Mind, which has been your gift to me because you have withheld nothing of what you Are in the creation of me."

And then listen.

Shut up and let the Father in. Let the Holy Spirit in, so that you might be a happy learner and so that you might actually wake up instead of spending another lifetime talking about waking up. You see?

Don't be depressed. Don't let your egos home in on all the things that were threatening to it and then feel bad or hopeless. I have not said everything you're doing is useless and you're stuck. Have I? I've said that everything that you've been doing has been useless because you've been doing it from a place where you have no authority—second gear. And there's a way to abandon that experience and let your fulfillment find you and infill you, and that is by letting the Father back in. Go back to first gear. That is a pleasure, even if it seems to be an effort to you initially because you've been doing the opposite for so long.

Engage in the effort it takes to keep yourself on the homing beacon, and I will look forward to being with you next week. I love you. You are loved. And the love that you are loved by sees no guilt in you. So it doesn't love you in spite of your guiltiness. It loves you because of what you already, perfectly Are. And it loves you actually fully enough to help you disengage from the habit that you have cloaked yourself with, of ongoing unforgiven guilt that you see no means of being released from.

I tell you it's an illusion. But you just can't walk around and say, "It's an illusion." "It's an illusion." If you're saying that from second gear, you're saying it from the place where guilt is still of value to you, and I promise you that from there, guilt will seem quite real and the penalties will seem quite real, even though they aren't. You want to become free of the illusion that there is guilt, that there is penalty for guilt and the penalty is very real. And you do that by abandoning the place, the frame of mind, from which the illusion of guilt is inseparable. And all you have to do, to do that, is to stop having a monologue and say, "Father, . ." and let what happens after that happen.

I'll stop for now. And again, I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 25th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to go right into the book tonight, and I'm going to back up two sentences:

The cost of giving IS receiving.¹

You give, you receive.

Either it is a penalty from which you suffer, or the happy purchase of a treasure to hold dear.

So, how many of you collected suffering because you were unwilling to give, because it was so much more important to you to express a grievance? Because it was so much more important to you to get justice?

The cost of giving IS receiving.

There's no alternative to it. You give, you receive. And you get what you ask for.

Now, we've been discussing something, perhaps a little difficult to swallow. We've been discussing that your reason for being, so to speak—that which motivates you—is guilt. Those of you this week, if you've been paying attention, who have received suffering because guilt is what you gave, because the demand for justice is what you gave, demonstrated how much you valued guilt and how completely reluctant you were to refuse to give it—to refuse to use guilt, to refuse to value it.

And you really have to become sober enough in your desire to wake up, to pay attention to what you're giving, because what you give involves a cost. Perhaps an unusual way of putting it, but . . .

The cost of giving IS receiving. Either it is a penalty that you receive from which you suffer, or . . .

. . . the cost is . . .

. . . the happy purchase you receive of a treasure to hold dear.

When you give an acknowledgment of guiltlessness, of innocence, it costs you the right and the opportunity to receive, in exchange for it, suffering. But deeper than that, it costs you the ability to have built yourself up into something more important by virtue of your giving. It costs you the ability to be selfish, which is why you end up with the happy purchase of a treasure to hold dear. You see?

No penalty is ever asked of God's Son except BY himself and OF himself. Every chance given him to heal is another opportunity to replace darkness with light and fear with love.

And since fear is the flip side of love, if fear is replaced with love, guilt is replaced with innocence. And every chance you get to heal is an opportunity to become free of fear and guilt.

Oh boy, don't become too depressed as you find out how much you value guilt, how much you value applying it to others, how much you value applying it to yourself to provide yourself with the "git-go" to go for the carrot, to go for that which builds you up, that makes you better than you were, and makes you more respectable, makes you more important . . . ah-h, makes you more real—poor little orphan boy or girl that you are.

When you choose to shift to first gear, that costs you something. Because the only reason you shift to first gear is so that you might give, so that you might give acknowledgement to your Father that He is your Father and that you are not an orphan and that you want to share in your Father's perspective, knowledge. Why? So that you might extend that conscious awareness of the holiness of Being to everything and everyone. But that costs you something. It costs you this stimulating experience of being a "nothing" attempting to become a "something."

I do not mean to be somber here. Serious, maybe, but, at the bottom line, clear, so that there's no misunderstanding. You are going to have to be willing to look at your compulsive fascination with the stimulation of suffering from lack, of suffering from not being whole, of suffering from not being real.

What if you are real? What if you are real and you don't have to prove a thing in order to be real and have the respect that something that is real deserves? It's going to take a dramatic shift of what? Perception! A willingness to see everything in a way that makes the use of guilt unnecessary—unnecessary to establishing peace and harmony, unnecessary to establishing worth, unnecessary to deserving respect, unnecessary to being perfectly healthy.

No penalty is ever asked of God's Son except BY himself . . .

You ask for penalty by demanding justice, by employing guilt. You ask for penalty by imagining that you're an orphan and enjoying the stimulating experience of trying to become equal to One who is not an orphan.

No penalty is ever asked of God's Son except BY himself and OF himself.

Well of course, because [chuckling] "Oh, my, I'm the all-important one. And my life is devoted to proving that I'm the all-important one not only to myself but to everyone else!" Everything must revolve around that. "I must create for myself a real identity." And so, you ask for penalty. But . . .

Every chance given him . . .

. . . God's Son . . .

. . . to heal is another opportunity to replace darkness with light and fear with love.

In other words, every chance given to you to heal is an opportunity to make a new decision, a decision for guiltlessness, which would . . .

. . . replace darkness with light and fear with love. If he . . .

. . . God's Son . . .

. . . refuses it, he binds himself to darkness because he did not choose to free his brother, and enter light with him.

Who is it you're going to extract penalty from if it's not your brother? And if you are perverted enough to extract penalty from yourself, it is in all likelihood that you are extracting penalty from yourself for appearance sake, to your brother or even God—penance.

If you refuse the opportunity to heal, you bind yourself to darkness because you did not choose to free your brother and enter light with him.

You can't do it by yourself.

You did not get a bill of divorcement from your Father by yourself. You and someone else, you and a buddy, you and a girlfriend, so to speak, got divorces together. You mutually agreed to work together in a new and different way, different from what the Father had established. And in order to return home, you must give something to a brother. You must give the acknowledgement of the truth of him to him. And how do you do that? Not because you have that capacity within yourself, you poor little orphan boy or girl, but because you're willing to abandon orphanhood and rejoin with your Father and ask, "What is the truth here?" "What is the gift of love that I can extend to my brother or sister?" "How do you, Father, see my brother or sister?"

You must join. You must become involved and you must withdraw any grievances you have, because grievances involve guilt and justice. And if they involve guilt and justice, you are valuing guilt and staying securely in second gear where learning cannot occur, where healing cannot occur.

By GIVING power to nothing, he . . .

. . . the one who did not take the opportunity to heal . . .

. . . he threw away the joyous opportunity to learn that nothing HAS no power.

Here again is that unusual use of the word, "nothing."

. . . nothing HAS no power.

Nothingness. A little bit of nothing has no power. A whole lot of nothing has no power. Nothing has no power.

Again . . .

By GIVING power to nothing, he threw away the joyous opportunity to learn that nothing HAS no power. And by NOT dispelling darkness he became afraid of darkness AND of light.

"Oh-h...I'd rather do it my way. I want a bill of divorcement from you, Father. I want to be an orphan!" CLUNK! "Oh! I'm an orphan. What happened? Oh, suddenly I'm not comfortable. Suddenly I don't feel secure. But I know I've got what it takes to reestablish my security and to reestablish my well-being. In fact that's what I'm here for."

But in the process, third gear came into play. Your Sanity that said, “Turn around,” “go back,” “you’re attempting to do something impossible,” did indeed create uneasiness because it must be uncomfortable to try to do something impossible. The impossibility of doing the impossible must register with you in some way. And that way is going to be a way that gets your attention. It’s going to be something you say, “I don’t like that! That doesn’t feel normal to me. That doesn’t feel right to me.” Because after all, as the Son or Daughter of God, you do know what feels right and you do know what doesn’t feel right.

And so, by not dispelling darkness when the opportunity to heal presented itself—the opportunity to shift gears so that you might look into your brother’s eyes and remember God—you . . .

. . . became afraid of darkness . . .

. . . you felt uncomfortable. It is a state of being that you don’t like . . .

. . . AND of light.

As we’ve talked about before, there is a fear to go Home because from the ego’s limited frame of reference and tiny mean-spirited nature, it expects punishment. It expects your Father, Whom you have denied and Whom you have attacked by virtue of your denial, is going to want vengeance on you. And so you become afraid of turning around and going Home, not realizing that your Father knows that it is impossible for you to do what is impossible and therefore you haven’t done what you believe you have done. And therefore, there is nothing to punish you for. There is only glad welcome awaiting you upon your return.

The joy of learning that darkness has no power over the Son of God is the happy lesson the Holy Spirit teaches, and would have YOU teach with Him. It is HIS joy to teach it, as it will be YOURS.

But you know what? You won’t even get to the point of having the happy lesson and of being able to pass it on if you are still bound to getting justice and if you still find it unreasonable to abandon your reaching for the carrot.

You see, you are convinced. Your teachers have convinced you that you are nothing becoming something, that you are an empty slate which can be filled, that you are a process of becoming instead of a Movement of Being—of Being that is, in Itself, whole—where Being is always a Movement of wholeness forever being complete without ever becoming something, without improving Itself. Like a kaleidoscope, you might say, which constantly changes, but what it changes to is not an improvement on “what was” and the reason for changing was not to become better than before—was not to gain anything—but, you might say, to be the marvel of beauty in living expression. That's you [addressing everyone], that's you, that's you, that's all of you.

If you'll let that lesson in, it is a lesson of happiness that you will gladly pass on to your brother and sister and healing will be the result.

Again . . .

The joy of learning that darkness has no power over the Son of God is the happy lesson the Holy Spirit teaches and would have YOU teach with Him. It is HIS joy to teach it, as it will be YOURS.

Now, this is so important:

The way to teach this simple lesson is merely this: Guiltlessness IS invulnerability. Therefore, make your invulnerability manifest to everyone, and teach him that, WHATEVER he may try to do to you, your perfect freedom from the belief that you can be harmed shows him HE is guiltless.

Well, there's where the rubber hits the road, as they say. How many of your brothers or sisters are you absolutely unwilling to show invulnerability to because it is your vulnerability and their violation of it that is your justification for having a grievance based upon which you are going to extract justice from your brother or sister? You see? Love that guilt! It gives you purpose. God, don't make the mistake of letting them know that they didn't hurt you at all, because then it will be obvious that they owe you nothing!

Well, listen to it again . . .

The joy of learning that darkness has no power over the Son of God is the happy lesson the Holy Spirit teaches and would have YOU teach with Him. It is HIS joy to teach it, as it will be YOURS.

The way to teach this simple lesson is merely this: Guiltlessness IS invulnerability. Therefore, make your invulnerability manifest to everyone, and teach him that, WHATEVER he may try to do to you, your perfect freedom from the belief that you can be harmed shows him HE is guiltless. He can do NOTHING that can hurt you, and by refusing to allow him to THINK he can, you teach him that the Atonement, which you have accepted for YOURSELF, is also HIS. There IS nothing to forgive. No-one can hurt the Son of God. His guilt is wholly without cause, and being without cause CANNOT exist.

Now, it's difficult to read that when you're holding a grievance about someone, or many "someones," because you're looking at the someone whom you are convinced has hurt you and is in debt to you and must bring balance about by paying for whatever it is he's guilty of. The focus is on him. But, let's go back up here . . .

[Repeating]

By GIVING power to nothing, he . . .

. . . the one presented with the opportunity to heal . . .

. . . threw away the joyous opportunity to learn that nothing HAS no power. And by NOT dispelling darkness he became afraid of darkness AND of light.

Now that's talking about, we'll say, you—the one who is unwilling to show himself to be invulnerable to someone against whom he has a grievance. By holding onto the grievance, you become afraid of darkness and of light. You stay firmly attached to third gear because you are so firmly holding onto your position in second gear. You are binding yourself by virtue of your refusal to consider the possibility that guilt in any form is an illusion. It is an imagination that has no reality to it, and therefore your devotion to it and your committed call for justice, for getting even, is an insane act on your part that you have the capacity to free yourself from. You're not just stuck with it.

You have the choice to abandon second gear. You have the choice to finally let go of the thrill of being an orphan trying to become a real boy or a real girl, and remember your Father. It's really more like stopping denying your Father and re-embracing Him, because in the act of re-embracing your Father, you're embracing who you Are—not as an orphan any longer, and therefore free of the call for justice because guilt is gone. And you're able to see the Kingdom of Heaven through the eyes of love instead of through the eyes of guilt.

God is the ONLY Cause, and guilt is not of Him.

Actually, guilt is not of anyone or anything. Guilt is an imaginary experience experienced by an imaginary self—a self imagined and carried around in the mind of the Son of God who has chosen to deny his heritage and caused himself to suffer from the imaginary experience of being an orphan. That's all.

God is the ONLY Cause, and guilt is not of Him. Teach no-one he . . .

. . . not God, but: Teach no-one that he—the one you're speaking to—has hurt you . . .

Teach no-one he has hurt you, for if you do, you teach yourself that what is not of God HAS power over you. THE CAUSELESS CANNOT BE.

You see, what is not of God doesn't exist. And what doesn't exist cannot have power over you. Because that which does not exist, does not exist.

THE CAUSELESS CANNOT BE.

Remember, guilt, justice, becoming something, becoming somebody—all of this is nonsense, including the self that thinks it is becoming something. The self that's going after the carrot doesn't exist!

Young girls go to movies and imagine themselves in the arms of the leading male actor in the movie, and they almost swoon with real physical sensations from the experience of pure imagination. Continuing:

Do not attest to it, . .

. . . that what is not of God has power over you.

Do not attest to it, and do not foster belief in it in any mind. Remember always that MIND is one and CAUSE is one. You will learn communication with this oneness ONLY when you learn to DENY the causeless, and accept the Cause of God as YOURS.

This is a very important promise! Listen . . .

You will learn communication with this oneness ONLY when you learn to DENY the causeless, and accept the Cause of God as YOURS.

You've got to learn to deny the causeless—the orphan mindset. The orphan mindset, and you as the orphan are causeless. They do not have a cause and they do not actually exist, although they can be imagined. And one can fairly swoon from the experience of being a causeless presence. But it's all foolishness! And I want to point out that because it's foolishness—nonsense—there cannot be punishment awaiting you when you abandon it. There will be the dissonance of the Sanity of your Being telling you that you're trying to do the impossible . . . and can't. But that's not punishment. That's straight-forward, bottom-line clarity that's being provided to you so that you might return directly Home in the most simple way.

Now listen to this . . .

The power that God has given to His Son IS his, . .

. . . is the Son's . . .

. . . and nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon without imposing on himself the penalty of guilt IN PLACE of all the happy teaching the Holy Spirit would gladly offer him.

Again, here's the ultimate truth about you, right now.

The power that God has given to His Son . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . IS his, . .

. . . is yours . . .

. . . and nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon . . .

. . . see nothing else can his Son see or choose to look upon . . .

. . . without imposing on himself the penalty of guilt . . .

What does that mean?

. . . nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon . . .

Well, that refers to your getting a bill of divorcement from your Father and saying, "But Father, I'd rather see it my way. And I would rather define what everything is. And I would rather define everything as means by which, through their use, I can become credible and important and wealthy and respected and valid." You see?

And so, his Son chooses something else but what the Father is Being, and what the Son really is, to look upon, and imposes on himself the penalty of guilt.

How is that? Because he said, "I imagine that I have a place where I can think for myself. I imagine that there is a place for me to be and a way for me to be on my own." That's second gear. Of course, the moment second gear seemed to be viable, third gear was right there with it.

. . . nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon without imposing on himself the penalty of guilt . . .

Boy, third gear is there right away the moment second gear is secured as a place to be from. Again . . .

The power that God has given to His Son IS his, and nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon without imposing on himself the penalty of guilt IN PLACE of all the happy teaching the Holy Spirit would gladly offer him.

And again, for simple clarity, what is the Holy Spirit? Nothing more than your right Mind. When you said, "Father I would rather see things my way," you abandoned the wholeness of your mind. You began to use your mind in a way that was foreign to it, and ignored everything that was familiar and true.

And so, all the rest of your mind that you're now ignoring by virtue of using a small part of your mind to be very utterly original, all by yourself, awaits you, awaits your return to its embrace. And it is what the Holy Spirit is.

So . . .

The power that God has given to His Son IS his, and nothing else can His Son see or choose to look upon without imposing on himself the penalty of guilt IN PLACE of all the happy teaching the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than his right Mind . . .

. . . would gladly offer him.

Whenever you decide to make decisions for yourself, you are thinking destructively, and the decision WILL be wrong.

It's a very strong statement.

Whenever . . .

. . . nothing wishy-washy about that word.

Whenever you decide to make decisions for yourself, . .

. . . in other words, in that independent place called second gear . . .

. . . you are thinking destructively, and the decision WILL be wrong.

Why are you thinking destructively? Because you're thinking at odds with the truth about yourself, you are thinking through the lens of being an orphan, which you are not. You are thinking through the lens of tininess, when you are Infinite. And absolutely everything you think from second gear is destructive.

Destructive to what? Destructive to your peace. Destructive to your experience of your Birthright. Destructive to your guiltlessness. Destructive to your innocence. It destroys your capacity, temporarily, to know the truth about yourself and experience it without hindrance.

Now I know you want to say, "Well, this is all well and good, but if the Course says to me that all of my thinking, when I'm making decisions for myself, by myself, is destructive, then how can I possibly function in today's world?"

It's a nice theoretical question, and I could probably give you ten thousand years of theoretical answers. What I'm going to suggest is something more practical. I'm going to suggest that you pay attention to the times in which your best thinking has not turned out well. And without intending to hang crepe in any way to sound bleak, everyone is going to find making ones own decisions more and more unsatisfying, because there is a movement of Awakening. And the satisfaction that used to be gained from making good independent decisions is going to diminish.

I'm asking you to pay attention, so that you might let a little bit of unsatisfactory results from making decisions by yourself be enough to begin to conscientiously abandon thinking right in the thick of things when thinking seems to be called for—and your habit will tell you exactly how to do it—and instead ask, "Father what needs to be known here? Father, I am willing to assume that I have no idea whatsoever as to what the right answer is, what will fulfill purpose, what will identify truth, what will constitute bringing light into the picture, what will result in healing, and so, right in the thick of it here, when an answer is truly needed—urgently needed—I'm going to listen, and I'm not going to interfere with the answer, by imagining one all by myself."

Begin to practice doing this on purpose, with diligence. Because this is the only way you're going to break the habit of trying to function successfully in second² gear, unconscious of who you are, what you're Birthright is, how everything works, and the glory of it.

I'm going to read the sentence again, because it is important.

Whenever you decide to make decisions for yourself, you are thinking destructively, and the decision WILL be wrong. It will hurt you because of the concept of decision which led to it.

The concept of a decision, meaning, that the decider was not the Son of God, that the decider was an orphan, that the decider was a little hunk of flesh born from physical actions that exists of a fluke of nature. That's the concept of decision.

Whenever you decide to make decisions for yourself, you are thinking destructively, and the decision WILL be wrong. It will hurt you because of the concept of decision which led to it.

You could say, the concept of the decider that led you to the decision. It is not true . . .

It is not true that you can make decisions BY yourself or FOR yourself alone.

All alone in second gear, that little place of innocence between the Voice for Truth and the voice for fear, in which you can sort of be untouched with any call for decisive self-identification, I'm going to put it that way. You can be a sort of non-descript blah presence who never has to state his position, who never stands with the Voice for Truth and never stands, ultimately, for the voice for fear, but stands in between in that little safety zone.

It's not really safe because it's inseparable from the Voice for Truth and the voice for fear. But you hold out for that. "Oh, if I side with the Voice for Truth, if I claim the Voice for Truth for myself, I'm bound to make waves. I'm bound to lose respect of a lot of people—respect that I as an orphan have built up carefully and even at times viciously, and that's why I am where I am today." Of course, you don't mean that's why you're in second gear today instead of at Home in first gear, but you say, "That's why I'm here today, and if I side with the Voice for Truth, that's going to cost me everything I've gained as this helpless little orphan who so skillfully has managed to gain the respect of everyone, so that now I can feel that I'm real." You see?

It is not true that you can make decisions BY yourself or FOR yourself alone. No thought of God's Son CAN be separate or isolated in its effects.

Remember, you cannot have a private thought.

Every decision is made for the WHOLE Sonship, directed in and out, and influencing a constellation larger than anything you ever dreamed of. Those who accept the Atonement . . .

. . . in other words, those of your Brothers and Sisters who are Awake . . .

... ARE invulnerable.

In other words, if you are making bad decisions, if you are deciding to use and value guilt, and if you are deciding to try to make your brother suffer to pay a penalty for violating you, it's not going to bother those who are Awake. They're going to see you accomplishing nothing, because you're doing it from a place of no power.

Those who accept the Atonement ARE invulnerable. But ...

... and this is what you must remember ...

... those who believe they are guilty ...

... the others of your brothers and sisters who also think that they're in second gear and think that's all there is ...

... those who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, because they think it is salvation,

... just as you do ...

... and will not refuse to see it and side with it.

You see, what the Course is saying and what I'm encouraging you to do, is to look at guilt, we'll say, and refuse to see it and refuse to side with it. You must arrive at a point of being willing to say, "I see that it's pure imagination, and nothing valuable or valid can be arrived at through its use."

You must be willing to begin to see how you do validate guilt in what you think are most positive ways, so that you, in the discovery that guilt is illusory, will be willing to set aside your use of it.

... those who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, . .

... and this is why, because there are no private thoughts, you must begin to act responsibly and stop employing guilt, because those who likewise believe they are guilty will respond to guilt ...

... because they think it is salvation, and will not refuse to see it and side with it. And they will fail to understand the simple fact that what they do not want MUST hurt them.

No one wants to experience something that isn't real. No one wants to experience something that doesn't exist. In practical everyday terms, people who believe that something exists that doesn't exist are in insane asylums. No one wants to believe that something exists that doesn't exist.

Now, what do you not want? If you do not want to believe in something that doesn't exist, then you don't want to believe in guilt. Again, if you don't want to believe in something that doesn't exist, you don't want to believe in guilt.

If you do want to believe in something that doesn't exist, you will believe in guilt, and you will hurt from it. If you want to be in second gear, third gear will be in your experience and it will hurt. It will be uncomfortable. Not because it's really the presence of evil or the presence of a real thing called guilt, or anything associated with the mindset out of which guilt arose, but because your Sanity came into play immediately upon your getting your so-called divorce and taking up residence in second gear and said, "You cannot do this and be comfortable!"

Do you hear that? Guilt and fear, which are two sides of a coin, inseparable from each other, are really your misperception of your inherent Sanity, your divine Sanity, saying, "You cannot do the impossible. Stop trying to be at odds with your Self. Stop trying to initiate a state of conflict in the midst of that which is indivisibly One—your Self, which is God making Himself known."

Again, just for clarity . . .

But those who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, because they think it is salvation, and will not refuse to see it and side with it. And they will fail to understand the simple fact that what they do not want MUST hurt them.

And what they do not want is the thing they happen to be valuing the most at the moment, guilt and its employment, even though it is a valuing of something that doesn't exist.

Now . . .

. . . they will fail to understand the simple fact that what they do not want MUST hurt them.

All this arises because they do not believe that what they want is GOOD.

Let's be clear on this. What do you want? You want to experience what is real as Real. Why else would you want to be a real boy or a real girl? You want to experience what is real as Real. But the only thing is that in order to experience what is real as Real you must let everything fall back into perspective in the context of their existence. And the context of their existence is that they are not separate entities existing on their own, but inseparable aspects of the Infinite Mind of God.

Those who are valuing guilt don't realize or don't believe that what they want—which is what I've described—is good. Why? Because they look at it, you look at it, through the lens of guilt and you see a penalty forthcoming if you re-embrace your Father whom you have denied, whom you think you have insulted by claiming not to be His Son or Daughter, His Offspring, His Creation. All of which is pure nonsense.

So . . .

All this arises because they . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . do not believe that what they . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . want is GOOD.

Through the lens of guilt you can believe that God is a wrathful God. And that He, based upon your sins, will cast you in hell for eternity for what you have done, how you have insulted Him by debasing yourself through senseless imaginations. You see how crazy it can get?

All this arises because they . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . do not believe that what they . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . want is GOOD.

Please, although what is being shared is stark, perhaps, so matter of fact that it might seem unpleasant, or it might seem as you look at it through your current lenses of guilt, that all of what's being said has to mean that you've really been doing something wrong, and that therefore, there is an axe that is going to fall—an unavoidable falling of an axe. In spite of that spontaneous misperception or hm-m sort of negative feeling you're getting, I want you to ignore the negative feeling and dare to explore what's been said with curiosity, with happy curiosity. Because whatever affects you negatively about what has been said, is just the truth joggling the status quo of your very definite beliefs, all of which are associated with being an orphan in second gear.

Why? Not so that you can feel bad, but so that you might have the courage and even the good humor to look at shifting back to first gear. Because that which is nothing more than your right Mind, the Holy Spirit, is waiting, I would say, eagerly to share with you the happy news of healing for your brother and therefore yourself. And your Sanity, which has never been altered, sits actively in place, you might say, being you in your Perfection. And whatever wonderful bit of intent to explore the truth you bring to this process, will be met with joy, not punishment. Not punishment.

Now remember this: Guilt is an imagination. All of the thinking around justice and guilt and vulnerability are imaginary and do not require you to deal with them or protect them or utilize them before you can dare to think about shifting back to first gear. And you will not be being irresponsible or neglecting anything actual if you just happen to disregard the calls for justice that present themselves to you. Just disregard them and go do something else. Be light about the way you let go of what might seem to be the heaviness of guilt. Make new decisions with lightness and anticipation of joy.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 30th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I suppose we're talking about one of the scariest things we could talk about and have been for the last couple of weeks. All of you think it is scary to not have guilt as one of your most valuable tools to use in living your life with excellent control.

All of you think that without guilt motivating you, without guilt as your most valuable tool for being successful, you will become a blob—a listless, meaningless presence. And it's frightening to contemplate existing without substantial motivation—motivation that you have screwed up from, or brought up from the very depths of your very private being in order to vitalize your life.

What's scary here is that I'm very clearly not just suggesting but encouraging all of you to stop making decisions by yourself—to stop acting independently.

Okay, what causes this subject to be frightening or upsetting, is the fact that you have your values out of sync with Reality. And so, that which would bring you into the conscious experience of the wholeness of your being is seen as that which would undermine your current lifestyle and your current values. You see it as that which would take you out of first place, that it would take away your credibility and your validity, when it would do exactly the opposite. And you feel that your very concerted effort to—through the use of your will—be creative, be authoritative and be a meaningful presence. You see that as something very precious.

You are afraid of your good and you value that which is destructive to you. You are afraid of your good because you think you'll have to become a nobody in order to have it. And you want what is not good for you because you think it will give you everything that is meaningful. And so, there is great confusion and fear.

Many of you would like us to get past this part of the book where it's talking about guilt rather than getting past guilt itself as an experience. But getting past guilt means abandoning guilt. And abandoning guilt means beginning to live your life on an entirely new basis, which, as we've discussed before, you believe will cause you to have to abandon all of the results of your good work—that it will invalidate every effort you have made to become credible—to be good, to become valuable.

Now, we ended up last week discussing the fact that there are no private thoughts. And that your decisions, the decisions you make for yourself, the decisions you make by yourself, are not decisions that affect only you. And what motivates the decisions you make for yourself—being guilt—is something that is communicated to the entire Brotherhood, because there are no private thoughts.

And we discussed the fact that those who have accepted the Atonement are unaffected by the gift you have extended of making a decision for yourself and by yourself from second gear.

But those . . .¹

. . . it says here . . .

. . . who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, . .

. . . unlike those who have accepted the Atonement or who are Awake, they will not see that your expression of guilt and your use of it is not actually an expression of power and that it is arising out of a place of powerlessness because it's totally illusory. They won't see that. Those who believe they are guilty will not see that and will not discount the gift that you have made, and will join you with it and magnify the illusion, we'll say.

So . . .

. . . those who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, . .

. . . an effect you don't really want. You do not really want to further confirm illusion, to further confirm suffering, to further confirm an inability to see the way out of the dream.

Nevertheless, . .

. . . those who believe they are guilty WILL respond to guilt, because they think it is salvation, . .

. . . just like you do.

. . . and will not refuse to see it and side with it.

You see. They think it's salvation. You think it's salvation. You think that its expert use will accomplish wonderful things. Isn't that what the Crusades were, among other things that were less violent and less obviously willful, less obviously second gearish?

When you think that guilt is your salvation you . . .

. . . will not refuse to see it and side with it.

You won't refuse to see it and you won't refuse to side with it. And that's where everything is out of sync.

And they will fail to understand the simple fact that what they do not want MUST hurt them.

This is not meant to be confusing. But insanity is a confused state.

Now, you do not want to embrace that which is going to cause you to suffer. And yet, you value guilt so greatly that you will not let it go, even though it is the cause of your suffering. You do not see that there is an alternative to it, in which suffering is no part of the equation of life.

And so, you . . .

. . . fail to understand the simple fact that what . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . do not want . . .

. . . meaning, that which is going to cause you suffering, must hurt you, must cause you suffering.

All this arises . . .

. . . and we're picking up now from where we left off last week.

All this arises because they do not believe that what they want is GOOD.

See, everybody's going after what they don't want. Not truly. They do not want to exist in a manner in which guilt is the central figure of their life and which causes suffering. They do not want to be stuck in second gear, which necessarily includes third gear—guilt. You see? But in the insanity of the situation it is what is valued.

Now, . . .

All this arises because they do not believe that what they want is GOOD.

Truly what each of you wants, and what it is referring to here . . .

. . . what they want . . .

. . . is to experience your existence from first gear. What you want is to experience being with total Sanity, without any confusion. But, as I said, there is so much investment in the use of guilt—the effective use of guilt—in building you up and making you valid in your eyes, you find that so valuable that the idea of abandoning it does not look good.

All this arises because they . . .

. . . you . . .

do not believe that what they want is GOOD.

You do not believe that what is your Birthright is good, because you won't be able to itemize the factors that tell you that you are valid and valuable. And also, as we discussed last week, because being in second gear is a result of your disclaiming your Birthright, your disowning your Father, your divorcing your Source, you, because you are looking at things through the lens of guilt, see your Father's only response to your desire to come Home as punishment. You don't see that, in so many words, as the Prodigal, you coming toward Home is a cause of great joy and of spontaneous embrace, because your Father is not looking through the mean-spirited lens of guilt or the ego, and knows that you have done nothing worthy of punishment.

So you . . .

. . . do not believe that what they want is GOOD.

Everything is “bass-akwards”. What isn't good for you, you go after with great insistence! And what is good for you, what will constitute your awakening, you avoid like the plague.

Now, again . . .

All this arises because they do not believe that what they want is GOOD. Yet will was given them . . .

. . . was given you. In other words, the capacity to make decisions was given you.

. . . will was given them BECAUSE it is holy, and will bring to them ALL that they need, . .

. . . listen to this . . .

. . . coming as naturally as peace that knows no limits.

When was the last time you had that experience of will? A long time ago.

There is nothing their wills will not provide that offers them ANYTHING of value.

In other words, your real will, not your mean-spirited tiny willfulness, but your will, will not provide anything of value.

There is nothing their wills will not provide that offers them ANYTHING of value.

Nothing of value will be withheld from you. That's what it's saying. Nothing that is of value is withheld from you. But, when you are operating from second gear, which is a place of pure willfulness, you do provide yourself with things that have no value. There is nothing your divine will, will not provide that offers you anything of value. Whatever your divine will does not give to you will be something that has no value. Whatever your willfulness gives to you will have no value. This is what needs to be understood.

Yet because they do not understand their will, . .

. . . you see. You do not understand your will. You do not understand what will really is.

Yet because they do not understand their will, the Holy Spirit quietly understands it FOR them, and GIVES them what they will without effort, strain, or the impossible burden of deciding what they want and need alone.

Willfulness—what you exercise from second gear—is an authoritative expression of power by you over your experience, over your world, et cetera.

That's what gives you a sense of being a vital, vigorous, living presence that has validity. And that's what gets you into trouble.

Your real will—and this is what sounds totally uninteresting to the ego—your real will is not ever an authoritative expression of power over anything, manipulating existence. That is not what will is. Will is not something that happens as something you do. Will is something that happens as what you Are. And what that means is that, the act of real will occurs before you have a chance to practice it or exercise it. What you Are is already being the fullness of Being, before you have a chance to look at what is being and decide how to treat it and manipulate it and use it in your best interests.

And so, real will is not a practice of power at all. And so, from your present ego orientation, you see it as a state of powerlessness. You use power to get things but in truth you don't have to use power to get things because you Are all things. All things are embraced in you, as they are in your Father, because you and your Father are One.

So, you can see the source of confusion here and why this is a difficult subject, because in order to wake up you must be willing to invalidate almost everything that you have used to respect yourself and to create respect for yourself. And everything that you have used to judge others and respect them, or withhold your respect of them because of what they do or what they don't do, completely missing what they Are. And that in the context of what they Are—what they divinely Are—they are whole, they are invulnerable, they are Omnipotent, they are Omniscient, they are the Presence of God illuminated to you, right in your face—an awesome event, ongoing Eternal event. And if you are willing to see it about them, you will see it about yourself. But in order to have that experience you have to abandon the small-minded, mean-spirited domain of the ego.

If you're having trouble grasping what I'm saying, it is because you are suffering from the confusion brought into play by your insistence upon functioning from second gear. And it necessarily colors your path Home. And it warns you that the path Home is dangerous, because you will lose your credibility, and you will lose your respectability, and you will lose your authority! And on and on and on.

And as you walk toward Home, it will cajole you and it will kibitz you and try to get you to come back—try to scare you into coming back.

But mind you, the path Home is what? The path Home is the movement of your attention from your private personal sense of yourself to that which is nothing more than your right Mind, which is right, we'll say, in the center of you. It's you moving from small private-mindedness into infinite-Mindedness, which embraces, embraces your Father, thus returning you to a clear sense of your identity and your brothers and sisters, as well as all Creation. The path back is a return to your right Mind.

Now, if you're so screwed up by virtue of the perspective that's inherent in second gear, your returning to first gear will not be accomplished by plan or exercise of power! It will happen by virtue of invitation, invitation by you to your right Mind, invitation for It to come back, invitation saying, "I wish to embrace You. I turn to You. I want to hear from You."

And because the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, the infinity of you that you've been ignoring, It, because It knows only of the wholeness of your Being and not the partiality that you are claiming, actually insists, actually nudges—it actually cajoles you. It actually encourages you and invites you to let the truth of your Being in, by virtue of letting that which is your right Mind that knows the truth easily, in.

B
Now, that's why it says here . . .

Yet because they . . .

. . . who are caught up in the confusion of second gear . . .

Yet because they do not understand their will, the Holy Spirit quietly understands it FOR them, . .

Now, the Holy Spirit only quietly understands it for you if you're giving your attention to the Holy Spirit because you want to know the truth. And when your attention is there, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit quietly understands it FOR . . .

. . . you. Your right Mind understands the truth for you, that helps replace the temptation you've lived under to believe that what isn't true is true.

So . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit quietly understands it FOR them, and GIVES them what they will . . .

. . . in other words, not what they are willful about, but what their real will is.

. . . GIVES them what they will without effort, strain, or the impossible burden of deciding what they want and need alone.

. . . all by themselves, and figure it out.

Now, how does that sound? As an experience, how does that sound, that everything will be given you . . .

. . . without effort, strain or the impossible burden of deciding what you want and need . . .

. . . all by yourself?

I promise you the temptation would be there to reject it. Nobody really wants to be a kept man or a kept woman. No one wants to live a life in which everything is provided and you didn't have to do anything to earn it. Because without having done anything to earn it, you aren't credible, you aren't valid, you aren't a vital presence. There is nothing there deserving of respect. You see?

“Oh, yes I would love to be able to think of a steak and have it in front of me. I would like to just have the barest fleeting thought of bliss and have it happen. I would love to have what I need appear before I even realize I need it.”

But just think about it for a moment. I am going to encourage you to imagine for just a moment, but in your imagining, I want you to borrow from the deep beliefs from within you that you carry with you: For how long would it be wonderful not to have to earn anything? For how long would it be wonderful not to have to raise a finger to have all the abundance you might need? At the bottom line, existing without being able to become credible, by virtue of acts you engage in, would seem boring and unfulfilling. And that's why you think guilt is salvation. That's why you think that doing things on your own is your salvation. That's why you avoid saying, “Thy will be done” and defer to the Father.

The Course talks about being co-creators with God. And boy does that sound good. But what if co-creators meant co-operators? Not an authoritative position at all. Co-operators, that which without decision whatsoever embraces the wholeness of Creation and recognizes it for what it is and glories in it. You wouldn't be tempted to reach for that. That's not a very attractive carrot is it?

But, here's what you have to remember. You are listening to me say this, or you are reading this in the Course, and you are reading it through the lens of the practice of guilt that you have been engaged in ever since you moved into second gear. And so, you are not understanding the Real meaning of these words, nor are you gleaning from them the meaning or the fullness of existence that they imply, because you're all upset and concerned about what you're going to lose as this poor little orphan that you think is so great that you don't want to let go of it.

And so you see, in a way the Course and I and the Holy Spirit are bucking against a very willful state of mind that all of you are in. That state of mind, being the one described by second gear—that you are holding onto for dear life. And we're bucking against all of the concepts and perceptions associated with looking at everything with distortion, including the invitation that I'm making, the invitation that the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—is making to you.

And we have to encourage you to risk the chance that you will not be sacrificing anything at all that's Real, so that your new carrot might be described as, "allowing yourself to yield into the unknown," rather than compulsively going after a known that you have imagined and brought into view and created for yourself to go after.

Let it—with the perspective that I've shared here—let it become interesting to you, rather than uninteresting to you. Let it become interesting to you to perhaps explore having the Holy Spirit quietly understand your will, your real will, to understand it for you and give you what you will without having been authoritative in anyway . . .

. . . without effort, strain or the impossible . . .

. . . but stimulating . . .

. . . burden of deciding what you want and need . . .

. . . all by yourself. Be willing to be curious to have that experience and invite it, even though you know it's going to mean that nothing that you end up having will you be able to take credit for. This is reassurance that's being provided, not a threat of loss.

It will never happen that you will have to make decisions for yourself.

[repeating] It will never happen that you will have to make decisions for yourself. You are not bereft of help, and Help that KNOWS the answer.

That which is nothing more than your right Mind knows the answer, because it hasn't separated itself from that which It is the Presence of, which is God.

Would you be content with little, which is all that you alone can offer yourself, when He Who gives you everything will simply OFFER it to you?

That which is nothing more than your right Mind—the wholeness of you that you've been ignoring—is Itself the Presence of the allness of you, which is insisting upon presenting it all to you again, without your having to earn It. In fact, It presents it to you and you receive it as a result of your abandoning the attempt to earn anything.

Now what's the practicality of this? How do you abandon trying to earn something? You abandon it by ceasing to try to be an authority. You abandon it by no longer imagining that you can figure it out for yourself. And in the emptiness of your attempting to accomplish anything, you say, “Father,” or you say, “Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than my right Mind, share with me the fullness of my Being, that has always been the truth about me, and in the experience of which I will never again have to try to create my good. And in which, the experience of being whole will not cause me to experience myself as meaningless presence, but will be experienced by me as the Kingdom of Heaven being the environment of me.” You see?

The words don’t have to mean what they fully mean right now. The point is, where are you going to bring your attention?

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . .

. . . will never ask what you have done to make you worthy of the gift of God. Ask it not therefore of yourselves.

Abandon that mindset! Abandon that activity!

Instead, accept His answer, . .

Let yourself have what is given to you when you’re not trying to earn it. Let yourself have it and don’t use its presence as justification for belittling yourself because you didn’t earn it. And therefore, it really doesn’t say anything of any value to you about you or to anybody else about you.

Instead, accept His answer, . .

Just receive it.

. . . for He KNOWS that you are worthy of everything God wills for you.

You see? As long as you’re in second gear playing the orphan role, you don’t think that God freely offers you anything because you put Him in the back seat. But your right Mind hasn’t forgotten the truth. And . . .

. . . He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . KNOWS that you are worthy of everything God wills for you. Do not try to escape the gift of God which He

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . so freely and so gladly offers you.

[repeating] Do not try to escape the gift of God which . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . so freely and so gladly offers you.

You see, as you hear these words you can begin to get a sense of emerging cohesiveness, rather than the fragmentation that you've been experiencing, a cohesiveness not only of you, an integrity of you beyond anything you could earn, but the cohesiveness of you and all of Creation, you and all of the Brotherhood.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . offers you but what God gave Him FOR you. You need not decide whether or not you are deserving of it. God knows you ARE.

Now, I need to point out here, that deciding whether or not you are deserving of it is a practice of authority, isn't it?

“Well, let me see Mr. Tuttle, Paul, if I may be personal with you, are you really doing anything this evening that is of value or are you misleading all of those egos out there, and distracting them from doing what will keep them safe? Are you really sure, Paul, that what you're saying is true? Are you sure that it's not just some mish-mash of ideas that might actually be very disruptive and destructive to your brothers out there who have learned so well how to be egos and how to function from second gear?” You see.

“I cannot judge you to be valuable at the moment. I invalidate you at this moment. And I will be busy helping you invalidate yourself within yourself, because after all you don't want to be hurting anybody else, do you? I mean after all, if you're going to keep trying to help the crabs out of the crab barrel, you're going to have to be corrected. Because everybody knows it's not good to be out on your own. It's not good to be experiencing that kind of freedom, because of course, being crabs they don't know how to deal with freedom. They don't have the perspective. They don't have the brains. So you're being very thoughtless in thinking you're helping your brothers gain a more infinite experience of their being, which you know they're not capable of coping with.” You see?

Yeah, deciding whether or not you are deserving of it is a wonderful practice of authority. You're going to have to let it go. It's not part of the new paradigm.

You need not decide whether or not you are deserving of it.

You don't need to decide. You see. It's a useless thing to do.

You need not decide whether or not you are deserving of it. God knows you ARE.

Now, again, we can get caught up in words: "God knows you're worthy of it. God knows you have integrity. God loves you without your doing anything to earn His love." But how do you translate those words into your practical daily experience? The only way you can do it is by engaging in the practice embodied by the words, "Thy will be done," or embodied in the words, just say, "Yes" to God.

Well, how can you say, "Yes," to God if you haven't said, "Father, talk to me. Share something with me. Give me something to agree with. Give me something to cooperate with." You see?

And so, the way you move over this threshold of ignorance and confusion from second gear to first gear, is by abandoning authority that you think you have and getting, as I've said before, in the "not-knowing place" and saying, "Help! What do I do here?" Whatever the situation is that you're confronted with, ask, "Father, what do I do here? How can I be, in order to experience the harmony that is supposed to be going on without effort, strain or the impossible burden of deciding what I want and need all by myself?"

You see, it comes down to this.

Would you deny the truth of God's decision, and place your pitiful appraisal of yourself in place of His calm and unswerving value of His Son?

[Big chuckle] Well, of course, you would! You're doing it everyday. You're doing it all the time that you're making decisions for yourself. You don't even give God the option to share with you His decision, so that you could deny it. You deny it ahead of schedule. You say, "I can handle this. I want to handle this. I don't want to explore what it might be like not to handle this. I'm not really interested in trying out something new." No, . .

Would you deny the truth of God's decision, and place your pitiful appraisal of yourself in place of His calm and unswerving value of His Son?

Hell, yes! But you don't have to. But take an honest look at it. You don't have to then decide whether or not you're deserving of God's Love or whether or not you're deserving of respect or whether or not you're deserving of disrespect. You can just notice it clearly without emotion and decide to do something different. After all . . .

NOTHING can shake God's conviction of the perfect purity of everything that He created, for it IS wholly pure. Do not decide against it, for being of Him it MUST be true.

See, . . .

Do not decide against it, . . .

How do you side against it? By deciding for yourself! And as we read last week, . . .

Whenever you decide to make decisions for yourself, you are thinking destructively, and the decision WILL be wrong.

But, deciding for yourself is something you think is your salvation. And so you're confused and do what you don't want. And you avoid what you do want, which is to have what you . . .

. . . will without effort, strain, or the impossible burden of deciding what . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . want and need . . .

. . . all by yourself.

Peace abides in every mind that quietly accepts the plan which God has set for his Atonement, . . .

. . . Ooooh . . .

. . . relinquishing his OWN.

Ooooh! That's yielding! Ooooh! That's not being in control. Oh-h, that's the absence of everything that means anything to me.

But listen again . . .

Peace . . .

That's the subject of the sentence.

Peace abides in every mind that quietly accepts the plan . . .

. . . you see, quietly. Authoritative action is not quiet. Yielding is quiet. Co-operating is quiet.

Peace abides in every mind that quietly accepts the plan which God has set for his Atonement, relinquishing his OWN.

The moment you relinquish your own, [snaps fingers] you're out of second gear.

You know not of salvation, . .

. . . when you're in second gear.

. . . for you do not understand it.

Because you see it through the lens of orphanhood, which is not the truth about your Being and so everything is distorted by the lens you're looking through.

You know not of salvation, for you do not understand it.

Now here's wisdom. But it also leaves you out of control and puts you up against the frightening act of yielding and inviting in the Holy Spirit.

Make no decisions about what it is . . .

. . . salvation . . .

. . . or where it lies, but ask of the Holy Spirit everything, and leave ALL . . .

. . . ALL . . .

. . . decisions to His gentle counsel.

How are you going to hear his gentle counsel? By shutting up, inviting inspiration or clarity from the Holy Spirit and truly listening, and neglecting to activate in the silence any justifications for not wanting to hear it.

It's simple. It's simple. It's simple. Listen. Listen often. Listening and hearing the Voice for Truth is your salvation. It's simple, it's simple, it's simple.

Don't let thoughts of guilt about yourself or thoughts of guilt about others that you would employ for control, get in the way of the simple act of listening.

I love you all. And I hope you have an easier week, by virtue of your abandoning your insistence upon being the decider of things all by yourself.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 6th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Learning about guilt [chuckling] and the fact that everyone is guilty of employing it, has not been an easy thing to allow to be the fact, and thereby, to be in a position of learning from. But it has been essential. And it would be well for everyone to continue to give your use of it your clearest, most practical attention, so that you might see the seriousness of it in your life. Why? So that you can feel guilty? No. So that you can, without a sense of guilt, choose not to employ it any longer, because it is not serving you at all.

Now, we ended up last week with this . . .

You know not of salvation, for you do not understand it. Make no decisions about what it is or where it lies, . .

. . . Why? Because you know not of it. You don't know what it is yet. So you don't have enough information to have an intelligent opinion, or to draw an intelligent conclusion about it.

Make no decisions about what it is or where it lies, but ask of the Holy Spirit everything, and leave ALL decisions to His gentle counsel.

No matter how much more you read in this book, what I just read is the ultimate answer. The fact is, that the rest of the book simply helps you understand the means you use to avoid this simple answer. And you do not have to read all the rest of the book in order to accept the answer and incorporate it—embody it, implement it.

As I said last week, it's simple, simple, simple. It truly is.

Continuing. And speaking of the Holy Spirit, which of course, is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

The One Who knows the plan of God which God would have you follow, can teach you what it IS.

For those of you who like to know that there's a plan, for those of you who have valued having a plan—a two-year plan, a five-year plan, a plan for this event, a plan for that child, etc., etc. For those of you who know the value of a plan, it's now time for you to find a way to fit into someone else's plan, the Father's Plan.

The One Who knows the plan of God which God would have you follow, can teach you what it IS.

And, glory hallelujah, the teacher, the one who knows the plan of God, is no stranger to you. It's your Self. It's you in your entirety, which you have blocked from view in your fantastic effort to be something all by yourself.

And so, as you relinquish second gear, as you abandon the orphanage, you can dare to entrust yourself to what will come when you know that what you're yielding into is no stranger to you. It is your Self.

Now . . .

Only HIS wisdom is capable of guiding you to follow It.

Why? Because His wisdom, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, knows exactly how you abandoned your infinite, conscious experience of Being. And so, It can guide you back so that you retrace your actual every step and reincorporate yourself in a manner that is recognizable to you.

And because it will be recognizable to you, it will not actually overwhelm you. It will feel good. It will feel integrating. Not just because it is integrating but because the integration is the exact reverse of the disintegration process you put yourself through. So, it will be recognizable to you. And the reintegration will not be something you can turn to the Holy Spirit and say, "Why what you're telling me there has nothing to do with me! Might have something to do with Joe Blow down the street. It doesn't apply to me! [chuckle] Don't try to pull that over on me!" You won't be able to do that because it will be the bit of disintegration you enacted that you will recognize and that you will feel good in the reintegration of it.

Now, because you have been in a long-standing state of Self denial there is what you feel is a natural reluctance, even though it is absolutely unnatural to be reluctant to reintegrate, to become whole again. And so, because you have not the means of embracing it with confidence, you need help, you need support, you need encouragement.

And you need the capacity that the Holy Spirit has to approach you in a way that is recognizably friendly to you, recognizably wholesome on your behalf.

And so, you do have the Course and you do have me sharing the truth, providing encouragement, saying things over and over and over again, that at one time were totally strange to you. But by virtue of my sharing them over and over, are no longer strange and which you not only can embrace, but which you find yourselves spontaneously employing from time to time as though it were your very own understanding. You see? Which it is.

So, pay attention as we read tonight, keeping in mind that we're talking about a reintegration of that which never actually became divided, and that the process is one that is fortified on your behalf, to help give you the strength you need to move past your deeply ingrained doubts and even confidences, to the contrary of what Awakening is about.

I'm going to begin again.

The One Who knows the plan of God which God would have you follow, can teach you what it IS. Only HIS wisdom is capable of guiding you to follow it. Every decision you undertake alone . . .

. . . all by your lonesome. All by yourself in your special position as orphan.

. . . but signifies that you would define what salvation IS, and what you would be saved FROM.

[Chuckling] "Oh yeah, I need to be saved from the bastard I work for. Yeah, I need to be saved from the IRS. Yeah, I need to be saved from cancer. Yes, I need to be saved from this person who hates me and stalks me and pesters me." You think you know what you need to be saved from. You need to be saved from the Church you were raised in. But listen to this.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . no stranger to you, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

The Holy Spirit knows that ALL salvation is . . .

. . . what? Only one thing. Not all those things I just listed. Only one thing.

. . . ALL salvation is escape from guilt.

Now watch. No matter how many times you read this for a while. And no matter how many times I say this for a while, you are going to come off the top of your head with a pat answer that says, “I don’t understand why you keep saying that I’m operating on the basis of guilt. I don’t know why you say I value guilt. Man, I do everything I can to prove people’s innocence. I go out of my way to save bugs. I’m a good person. I just don’t function in the realm of guilt.” You see. You’ll come off with that. And if you fool yourselves with this pat answer, what really is a guarded response, a response that guards you against having to accept the role that guilt plays, you will stay stuck for a while longer.

So let’s back up, briefly. You are at this moment and every moment, the Living, direct Presence of God Being all there Is right where you are. Do you believe that? No! It isn’t that you authoritatively deny that, it’s rather that you either never heard that before and didn’t know it, or you have heard it as a religious concept, which you think you can embrace or reject. And therefore, it’s not as though you’re actually being disobedient in any way, it’s just that you’re just not embracing a certain thought system. And it’s like, “So what! Big deal.”

But the problem is, that it isn’t just part of a thought system that you did not create yourself. It’s also not just part of a thought system that your Creation was the result of evolution of a material universe. The truth is that God, being All infinitely now, is what constitutes the Presence of what you Are recognizable as—the Presence of what is recognizable as You.

If that fact is not part of the grounded, under-pinning of your self-awareness, then you think that you somehow exist independently on your own. And because you don’t, and that supposition is a denial of the fact, it causes you to have a dissonant experience, because no matter what you think or believe, you in your divinity are unalterably Sane, and your Sanity knows that you’re engaged in an attack on your Self—in a process of undermining your Self—which because you are divine and eternal and unalterable, you can’t actually succeed at.

And so, this act of Self-denial creates a dissonance as it comes up against the Sanity of your Being. And as I’ve said before, you have chosen to take on that dissonance and overcome it. That decision, that pseudo-decision, I’m going to say, because there’s not really a you that can make an actual decision such as that—you can imagine it, but you can’t actually do the impossible—that decision seems to create a position for you to be in on your own. I’ve described it as being an orphan. I’ve also described it as second gear. Moving out of your right Mind is moving out of first gear into second gear.

Second gear is sort of like a sidecar on a motorcycle, which might even have a steering wheel for a child to play with. But of course, being a sidecar on the motorcycle, it’s going to go where the motorcycle goes no matter how much the child turns the wheel. And no matter how much the child imagines that he’s independent, he’s always going to be where the motorcycle is going. Likewise, you are always going to be where your Sanity is, no matter how much you ignore it, no matter how much you try to imagine that you’re on your own.

Now, the dissonance that is setup when you make that decision to imagine that there is such a thing as a sidecar and you can use that as your place from which to be, the dissonance accompanies it and we've called that third gear—it's the voice for fear. First gear is the Voice for Truth. Second gear is what you think is your voice, which is pure nonsense. So we have first gear, that which is Real, second gear, that which is pure nonsense and third gear, the voice for fear, which is a tag along to second gear and has no actual existence either.

The voice for fear, which is your awareness of your powerlessness, which you do not want to look at, causes you to try to take control of your life and of others. Because you feel out of control and you're trying to overcome it, you feel incapable, you feel a sense of failure and you feel guilty because of it. Third gear brings guilt into play and fear into play.

Now, it's only when there's fear and guilt in play that you attempt to take personal control over your life and over your brother's and sister's and over your world. And so, it is in this very real and practical sense that you value fear, that you value guilt, because it gives you the impetus to cope with life and fight to establish yourself in your own independent right. It's that simple.

What's the saying: "Truth or Consequences." "Do well or fail." In the schools, "Competition brings out the best in students." Competition: Oh, that's doing well or failing, isn't it? Try and try and try to be the best. And so there's the best and then there are those who are not the best. And those who are not the best don't do as well in life as those who are the best, right? So, is that not the use of guilt and the valuing of guilt? Oh, but you say, it makes people work harder and it brings out, as I said, the best in them. And it suggests that there's no other way to bring out the best in someone, except to create this dichotomy of "good and bad," of "truth and consequences," of "success or failure." And failure is just a nice way of saying punishment, isn't it?

Guilt is employed constantly wherever competition is employed, wherever grade scores are exhibited and used as the basis for how well those with the grades are treated, and what benefits are given to them based upon where they fall in the scale from best to failures.

So you see, don't be too quick to override and overlook the fact that guilt, what guilt really means and the way it's really employed, is played out in your life. And how much you agree with it. And how often you unconsciously bring it into play without realizing it. Now its important to discover how often you're bringing it into play without realizing it, because if you're bringing it into play you are securing yourself with a good tight seatbelt in second gear, in that little sidecar on the motorcycle which is going where God is taking the motorcycle, or which is going where your very Being, the Holy Spirit, as long as you are saying you're in second gear, where the Holy Spirit is taking you—that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

It's very important, because until you dare to look at it, you will not be able to put it down and loosen your seatbelt and become free of second gear, so that you might spontaneously and naturally come back into your right Mind. That is the whole point.

So, I'm not saying this as a threat in any way. I'm saying it as a very grounded, practical outlook for you to embrace. Look for the places where you, out of ingrained habit, spontaneously utilize guilt, even though you say you are doing it for positive reasons like, "bringing out the best in my students, bringing out the best in my children," Ho-ho, how about bringing out the best in your husband or your wife.

"A little bit of competition doesn't hurt anyone. A little bit of threat of security doesn't hurt anyone. It makes them try a little harder. It makes them look at what is really of value to them. Yeah, a little bit of guilt, like a spice of life, sprinkle it here and there, it will bring out the flavor." But you know what it won't do? It won't save the cook from small-minded-meanness. It won't get the cook out of the sidecar, out of second gear.

So again . . .

The Holy Spirit knows that ALL salvation . . .

. . . the only answer there is . . .

. . . is escape from guilt. You have no other "enemy," . .

. . . the only enemy you have is your decision to be in second gear, in that puny little sidecar with the play steering wheel that makes you feel like you're really in charge and you're not.

You have no other "enemy," and against this strange distortion of the purity of the Son of God the Holy Spirit is your ONLY friend.

It's like the mother of the kitten is the only one for that kitten to snuggle up with and feel safe with. It's a sweet thing. It's love embodied and it's simple.

You have no other "enemy," . .

. . . than guilt . . .

. . . and against this strange distortion of the purity of the Son of God the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . is your ONLY friend.

Now as we read this, let these words be more than words. Think about what friend means. And let the fullness of friend and friendship apply and have meaning as you read this.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . is the strong protector of your innocence which sets you free.

Your innocence sets you free, not the release from something by others and not even a divine pardon bestowed upon you by the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit . . .

*. . . is the strong protector of your innocence which sets you free.
And it is HIS decision to undo everything that would obscure your innocence from your unclouded mind.*

Aren't you glad that somebody has an infinitely better sense of you and experience of you than you yourself do, or any of those around you? What a Friend! What a wonderful Friend! A Friend that you can anchor yourself in. A friend that you can learn from how to be in a way that at the moment you don't remember ever being before, but which you have.

Let Him, . .

. . . key word, Let!

Let Him, therefore, be the ONLY Guide that you would follow to salvation.

“Oh, gee-whiz, I really wasn't considering having any other Guide. I never thought about having a Guide to salvation.” No, that's right, you were going to rely upon yourself. Well, this says here to stop that.

Let Him, therefore, be the ONLY Guide that you would follow to salvation. He knows the way, . .

. . . and isn't it wonderful to know that He Who knows the way is nothing more than your right Mind? And that His uncovering to you of what your right Mind is, is a movement of reintegration of that which never actually could have been split up? Now that's real friendship, that's truly valuable.

He knows the way, and leads you gladly on it. WITH Him you will not fail to learn what God wills for you IS your will.

You never really had the option to have a will of your own. If you have a will, it's God's will and it's only capable of willing that which God is willing. And when you're not claiming this private, separate personhood, then experiencing God's Will in the act of willing, because you've let it fill you up completely, then that's called the Atonement. That's called waking up. That's called you coming back into your right Mind. And that's you feeling the Wholeness of your Being.

Now, it's quite possible that when we've talked about you returning or coming back into your right Mind, that you have sort of envisioned yourself in your right Mind walking down the street and seeing other people in their right Mind walking down the street, and all of you in these multiple right Minds, Glorifying God, or whatever. But there's a flaw in there. And the flaw is this: your right Mind isn't private. Your right Mind isn't private.

The most direct path to your brother is right through the center of your Being. It's right in the center of your Being that you're One with your brother. Being Awake means being infinitely Conscious—infinately Conscious—not just having an experiential Oneness with every brother you might see on the street, or every bird flying in the sky, but every creature and every living thing throughout the Universe. It's an inclusive experience, an infinitely inclusive experience. And it's important for you to carry this fact forward with you, so that you don't imagine and proceed forward on the basis that you will still have a private mind but it will be your right Mind. You see? The privacy will be lost. And that means that you will never be alone again. You'll be incapable of being lonely.

WITHOUT His guidance . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . you will think you know alone, and will decide AGAINST your peace as surely as you made the wrong decision in ever thinking that salvation lay in you alone.

And I'm going to add that, "salvation was for you to figure out all by yourself—alone." And what we're saying is that the experience of salvation will only be gained by abandoning the imaginary state of aloneness, which is fundamental to orphan-mindedness, isn't it?

You see, it's unequivocal if you are in second gear, if you are attempting to operate alone, if you are insisting upon deciding for yourself and by yourself . . . What? You . . .

will decide AGAINST your peace as surely as you made the wrong decision in ever thinking that salvation lay in you alone.

It is black and white, unequivocal and unalterable. That means that there must be extreme value in every effort you put forth, every attempt you make to break the isolation and ask for help, ask the Holy Spirit to help you undo the bill of divorcement that you put into place, the act of willfulness that caused you to seem to experience yourself as separate, isolated, alone, fearful and guilt-ridden.

Listen . . .

Salvation is of Him to Whom God gave it for you.

This part we're reading tonight is really wonderfully simple and beautiful and encouraging. It's also filled with what could be called, "iron-clad" Law, not with which to convict you but with which to free you.

Again . . .

Salvation is of Him to Whom God gave it for you.

And what is that which God gave It to, for you? The Holy Spirit. And what is the Holy Spirit? That which is nothing more than your right Mind, which means that what God gave It for you, was already yours and is simply awaiting being returned to you, as soon as you get tired of playing with that damn fake steering wheel in the sidecar on the motorcycle.

Now, I put it strongly but please take it lightly. It is funny. And if you can see the ridiculousness of it, it will make it that much easier for you to say, "Gee, it might be a lot more fun to be riding on the motorcycle."

So since . . .

Salvation is of Him to Whom God gave it for you.

Turn to that One, rely on that One, commit to that One, bond with that One.

He has not forgotten it.

The Salvation that God gave to Him for you.

He has not forgotten it. Forget Him not, and . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . He will make every decision for you, for your salvation and the peace of God in you.

And, at least intellectually, you can see that indeed, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, reconnecting with you and joining with you would have exactly that effect.

Forget Him not,

. . . re-embrace Him . . .

. . . and He will make every decision for you, for your salvation and the peace of God in you.

That's just inevitably what will happen when reintegration of that which is and always has been One occurs—that One being you.

Now . . .

*Seek not to appraise the worth of God's Son whom He created holy,
..*

This goes for yourself as well as your brothers and sisters. You're not here to appraise the worth of anyone. You're not here to evaluate. "Oh, evaluate, oh yeah, that has something to do with 'better and worse,' 'success and failure?' Are not these the elements of fear and guilt? Are not these really mean-spirited means of promoting growth and bringing out the best in everyone?"

Seek not to appraise the worth of God's Son whom He created holy, for to do so is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . to evaluate his Father, . .

. . . Oh yes! You see, as long as you think you're an orphan, there's no Father to consider. And you can call that poor bastard anything you want and you can evaluate him anyway you want to, especially if it will help put you in a better position. And if you're very magnanimous, you can set it up in a way so that when he does something that puts you in a better position, it helps him too but just a little bit, just enough to wet his appetite, so that he'll try to do something for you in the future. See? It's in this way that you value guilt and employ it and hold on to it.

*Seek not to appraise the worth of God's Son whom He created holy, for to do so is to evaluate his Father, and judge AGAINST Him.
And you WILL feel guilty for this imagined crime,*

Do it and by-damn-it third gear will come into play.

. . . you WILL feel guilty for this imagined crime, which no-one in this world or Heaven could possibly commit.

You will feel guilty for nothing. You will feel guilty for pure imagination. Not only that, guilt has no motivational value. Guilt has no push to make you be better than you are if there isn't some pain. And so if you're going to apply guilt to yourself you are also going to apply pain, just as you do with others and just as others do with you. Because without pain you wouldn't naturally go for the carrot. You wouldn't naturally go for a carrot that it's impossible to get.

God's Spirit teaches only that the "sin" of self-replacement on the throne of God is NOT a source of guilt.

Wow, very magnanimous of God.

God's Spirit teaches only that the "sin" of self-replacement on the throne of God is NOT a source of guilt.

For you to imagine that you are God, that you have created yourself and that you can control your life and your world, is to replace God on the throne with yourself. But God says that . . .

. . . is NOT a source of guilt.

Now your ego is likely to say, "Big deal! So what? I hear the words and that's nice." But I'm here to tell you that those are probably the most powerful words that you could read, because they embody the justification for spontaneous change, spontaneous "shift of perception," which is of course, the definition of a miracle.

If trying to be God and imagining that you have the power that is God's, is not a source of guilt, then there is absolutely no reason for this dream to continue one moment longer. It is the belief that you can be guilty and punishable for presuming to be God that you are afraid and feel guilty, and it's the reason you go after the carrot. It's the fundamental motivation in your life—in your present frame of mind.

God's Spirit teaches only that the "sin" . . .

. . . meaning the so-called sin . . .

. . . of self-replacement on the throne of God is NOT a source of guilt. What cannot happen can have NO effects to fear.

If there are no effects to fear from your attempt to take over the throne, then there is no penalty awaiting you when you abandon it and decide to go Home—back into your right Mind. And you can go at any moment, if you will allow the truth of this to register deeply with you.

Be quiet in your faith in Him Who loves you . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . and would lead you out of insanity.

. . . by returning that part of you which is the Holy Spirit to you, because you are becoming defenseless against it and letting it in, or letting yourself into it. However you want to look at it.

Madness may be your choice, but NOT your reality.

All of this is beautiful. All of these things are beautiful statements about you and embody the necessary elements to your release—the unbuckling of your seatbelt in the sidecar.

Never forget the Love of God, Who HAS remembered you. For it is quite impossible that He could ever let His Son drop from His Loving Mind wherein he was created, and where his . . .

. . . the Son's . . .

. . . abode was fixed in perfect peace forever.

Say to the Holy Spirit only, "Decide for me," and it is done. For His decisions are reflections of what God KNOWS about you, and in this light error of ANY kind becomes impossible. Why would you struggle so frantically to anticipate all that you CANNOT know . . .

. . . gee, you struggle to figure things out for yourself based on a false premise that you're an orphan, that you're alone, that you exist in a universe of polarization, opposites, conflict, but through the intelligent use of your mind you can survive it and overcome it and maybe even iron things out. But . . .

Why would you struggle so frantically to anticipate all that you CANNOT know when all knowledge lies behind every decision which the Holy Spirit makes FOR you?

When you're trying to do things all by yourself, you are trying to walk down a busy street with your eyes closed and negotiate the traffic successfully. Your eyes are closed because you're not availing yourself of your naturally all-inclusive divine vision. But when you let the Holy Spirit in and let the Holy Spirit decide everything for you, it's like opening up your eyes. And . . .

. . . all knowledge lies behind every decision which the Holy Spirit makes FOR you?

. . . and it become yours. I'm adding that—and it becomes yours.

Learn of His wisdom and His love, . .

. . . and I'm going to insert here: and don't be afraid to do it because He isn't something foreign to you. It's your Self.

Learn of His wisdom and His love, and teach His answer to everyone who struggles in the dark. For you decide for them AND for yourself.

You remember there are no private thoughts [snaps fingers]. You're not separate from your brothers.

How gracious is it to decide all things through Him Whose equal love is given equally to all alike!

Now, because the Holy Spirit is really not a stranger to you, that statement isn't foreign to you either.

How gracious is it to decide all things through . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . Whose equal love is given equally to all alike!

That's the way you operate in your right Mind. That's the way you are in your right Mind.

He leaves you no-one OUTSIDE yourself, alone WITHOUT you. And so He gives you what is yours . . .

. . . [whispering] everything . . .

He gives you what is yours because your Father would have you share it with Him. In everything be led by Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. I am not going to apologize for throwing that phrase up over and over and over again, that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. You need to hear it as often as possible just to become familiar with the truth of it, the idea of it, so that it might become easier and easier for you to believe. And in the greater ease with which you believe it, it will become you, because you will not oppose it.

In everything be led by Him, . .

. . . in everything be led by that which is nothing more than your right Mind, but which is infinite and is not separate in any way from the Mind of the Father, the movement of which is the Movement of Creation and is therefore... there are not words incredible enough to describe it.

In everything be led by Him, and do not reconsider. Trust Him to answer quickly, surely, and with love for everyone who will be touched in any way by the decision.

. . . by the decision you have let Him make for you.

And everyone WILL be. Would you take unto yourself and sole responsibility for deciding what can bring ONLY good to everyone?

Well, on your good days you might. But it's not equally good to everyone. It's most good to you and maybe a lot of good to everyone else, and you would've enjoyed the process in which you went through that brought about such equity for everyone, even though it's unequal equity. [Chuckling]

Trust Him to answer quickly, surely,

. . . trust that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . .

. . . to answer quickly, surely, and with love for everyone who will be touched in any way by the decision. And everyone WILL be. Would you take unto yourself . . .

. . . And the real message is, don't . . .

. . . take unto yourself the sole responsibility for deciding what can bring ONLY good to everyone? Would you KNOW this?

Not as long as your seatbelt is on tight in the sidecar and you're spinning that steering wheel madly with glee. No. Nope you wouldn't know this.

You taught yourselves the most unnatural habit of NOT communicating with your Creator.

“But Father, I'd rather see it my way. But, Father, I'd rather do it my way. But, Father, I'd rather decide what everything is for.”

You taught yourselves the most unnatural habit of NOT communicating with your Creator. Yet you remain in close communication with Him, and with everything that is within Him, as it is within yourself.

The unity of Being has always been absolutely unaffected by your imaginations. What you truly are has always remained absolutely unaffected by your imaginations. But you seem to have been affected by your imaginations, in that you have experienced fear and guilt and used it as the motivation to better yourself. Because . . .

. . . you remain in close communication with Him, . . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . and with everything that is within Him, as it is within yourself.

You can give up the dream instantaneously, especially since there is no guilt possible for doing a little switch-a-roo—self-replacement of you on the throne of God—just absolutely no reason for you not to experience radical and instantaneous shift of perceptions.

UNLEARN isolation through His loving guidance, and learn of all the happy communication that you have thrown away but could not lose.

With all this side trip of folderol and nonsense you accomplished absolutely nothing and therefore, did not violate God nor yourself, accrued no penalty and can resume your rightful place whenever you want.

Whenever you are in doubt what you should do, think of His Presence in you, and tell yourself this, and ONLY this:

And this is with reference to the Holy Spirit.

“He leadeth me, . . .

. . . again, that which is nothing more than my right Mind . . .

*. . . leadeth me, and knows the way, which I know not.
Yet He will never KEEP from me what He would have me LEARN.
And so I trust Him to communicate to me all that He knows FOR me.”*

Then let Him teach you quietly how to perceive your guiltlessness which is ALREADY there.

Again . . .

... Then ...

... What? ..

... let ...

... let Him teach you quietly how to perceive your guiltlessness which is ALREADY there.

Because it never went anywhere and it was never altered by imaginations.

Now, the big question is: “What if I do that, and I do that, and I do that, and I do that some more, and the Holy Spirit doesn’t answer me quickly or surely? When that happens it makes me feel like I’ve been led my merry way down a road of nonsense, and that I was better off when I was able to be confident that I lived in a material world and a material universe, and that everything was the result of evolution because it can be demonstrated historically, physically, etc.”

The answer is: Persist. As I said, at the moment, because you’re having so much fun with that play steering wheel, your perception of how everything works is out of kilter. And when I say you have to be on the motorcycle to change directions, you’re inclined to say, “That’s nothing but fanciful ideas. I have no evidence of it. And in fact, you know what, the universe works with this giant safety belt around my lap that is absolutely tight and it’s my security. It’s supposed to be there. It’s there for a reason. It’s the way things work. And you’re trying to tell me that there’s a way to be without that security, that there’s a way for this seatbelt to come off? Hey, it’s always been there. The history books say it’s always been there. Back thousands and thousands of years it’s been there. Nobody ever got it off except maybe Jesus, you know, and of course he was special. So you’re just messing with my mind.”

You see, that’s the mentality I’m having to work with. It’s the mentality you’re having to learn how to move through and let go of, so that you might experience the integrity of your Being, that you’ve been missing out on.

Now, here’s the thing. What if you have done it, and done it, and done it, and done it, and you haven’t gotten an answer? Or once or twice you got an answer, but it’s not reliable. And of course, anything that was truly divine would be reliable. So this must not be reliable. You see, the arguments can go on and on.

But the simple fact is: how much of your life are you going to require yourself to live in a just barely comfortable mediocrity before you’re willing to say, “I’ve had enough of this. I’m drawing the line here! I’ve lived this life on the basis that it’s a material world and universe, it operates according to laws of physics and evolution is the means by which it promotes itself. I’ve lived with that and I’m not happy. I am not feeling a joy that I know it’s my Birthright to be feeling. Don’t tell me where I heard about this Birthright.”

How much of barely tolerable mediocrity is it going to take for you to say, “I quit this mindset, and I am going to persist through all of my ingrained resistance and all of the traps I have laid out for myself to make it difficult for me to go back, because I came away from Home with such definiteness.”

Sooner or later you’re going to come to that point. It doesn’t have to be later. And I don’t care if you seem to fail at hearing the Holy Spirit. In the establishment of the commitment to persist within you, will come a peace. It’s when there’s lack of commitment to it that you draw upon force to persist. And that’s jagged, that’s chaotic energy. But when you make a commitment, there’s a peace that comes with it, and the jagged energy subsides, evenness replaces it. And in that evenness there’s a quiet that allows you to hear. And you will hear.

You were created Whole. That you took an imaginary side trip through the realm of imagination to believe that you could be other than Whole, did not make it a fact. And the fact that you are believing and being bound by a lie will inevitably, inevitably, inevitably be uncovered because of what you really Are and never could stop being. And what you divinely Are will ultimately supercede the willfulness you’ve been willing to employ to be out of your Mind.

So, even though you will find yourself feeling justified in abandoning listening for the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit will not abandon you. Your Friend will not abandon you. And the integrity of what you really are will insist on reintegrating that which never could have disintegrated.

So don’t give up. Even if you do, the time will come when you will finally arrive at the point of saying, “I’ve had it with this mindset.” And you will make commitment. And in making commitment from the tips of your toes, with firmness and definiteness, you will begin to hear. And then this Friend who has been your every-present companion, ready to stand for you on behalf of what you truly Are, will embrace you and bring you Home. Now this is the truth. This is the answer.

I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 13th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we've been reading the Course for quite some time, acquiring as you might have thought an increasing understanding that would help you function better in the world. And yet, we've arrived at a point here, where you're called upon to acknowledge what the first lesson in the Workbook says, "Nothing that I see means anything," or "Nothing that I see means what I thought it meant." Nothing means what I think it means, and of course, I rely one hundred percent on what I think things mean. It's also brought us to the point of being able to acknowledge that, "I don't know what anything is for."

"Here I thought that I had become quite civilized. Here I thought that civilization had become quite civilized—quite wonderfully dependable, healthy. And yet, I've been learning that guilt is what has been motivating it all. And what causes guilt to be motivating it all, is the fact that I have been operating on a false premise when I didn't really know that there was any other premise available. It's throwing me out into the deep blue, nothing firm to stand on, no solid ground in sight, and just the forever moving nebulosity of being nowhere without being able to accomplish anything."

"And I've spent how many years now listening every weekend to arrive at this point?" Amen, you have! Why? Because it puts you at the point of wonder. It puts you at the place where curiosity naturally comes into play. Curiosity supported by what? A sense of need, an experience of need. You need to understand or you need to know. And what that means is, you need to know beyond what you currently think. You need to know beyond your "current knowledge."

“Well, how do I do that?” Ah, you have to engage in wondering! You have to let yourself be in the place of not knowing with genuine curiosity. “If this doesn’t mean such-and-such, I wonder what it does mean? Beyond my confidences and my faith in what I thought things meant, what is the real meaning? I’m willing to let go of my confidence in what it is, so that I might see what I’m not even imagining.”

In some ways it’s not the most pleasant place to be. On the other hand, if you’re a babe, it’s the most wonderful place to be because everything is interesting, your curiosity naturally comes into play and it doesn’t provide any preconceptions for reality to fit into—for the understanding, the meaning of being to fit into. It’s a wonderful place to be.

But, of course, business and life and commerce and all that you’re confronted with everyday doesn’t allow for wonder, doesn’t allow for fluidity, doesn’t allow for answers to become different, for meanings to change. And so, with your hard won educations you hold fast to that which seems permanent to you, and you reinforce it. And you approach your brothers and sisters with constant demands of them, that they reinforce it as well. And you remain immobilized, stuck in a still life—where life has been stilled.

This Course is breaking things loose in your mind.

Now, to arrive once again at this basic premise that, “Nothing I see means anything,” is different now than it was in the beginning. Because now you know something more about what you Are, and you know something about how you fit in and what you fit in with—that you are a Son or a Daughter, that you have a Father, that Who and What your Father is determines who you Are, gives you identity. And you are therefore, more than you imagined you were, when you thought you were an autonomous independent individuality.

So, now you’re not just an autonomous independent individuality trying to let itself into a vacuum or trying somehow to evoke from some part of yourself that you were unaware of a new experience of being. No. When you acknowledge your Sonship or Daughtership, when you own the fact that there is Family that you fit into, and there is Birthright that’s unclaimed by you, now you can, with more daring, choose to say, “Nothing I see means anything, and I’m glad to know that it doesn’t mean what I thought it meant, and I want to know what it really means. And I have now learned that in letting myself into what is the unknown to me, is a matter of letting myself into an experience that is awaiting me that I didn’t know was there, and therefore, I will let myself into it with less fear and more willingness.”

So, if you have felt frustrated in the last few weeks or the last few months by what we've been discussing because you find it's putting yourself up against a not knowing place, which you don't like to be in, and because it's putting you up against a threshold beyond which you don't know what exists, and you thought that all that we had been doing was giving you an intellectual understanding and that was the goal, well don't be dismayed. The fact that we weren't headed where you thought we were headed is part of the good news, because now you can let go of those expectations as well and be curious beyond them.

Let's go into the book. This subheading is entitled:

THE WAY OF SALVATION

When you accept a brother's guiltlessness, you will see the Atonement in him. For by proclaiming it in him you make it YOURS, and you WILL see what you sought. You will not see the symbol of your brother's guiltlessness shining within him while you still believe it is not there.

Well, this throws things into a realm that's difficult to understand because after all you've been wanting to improve yourself, you've been wanting to find out how the truth would allow you to be more successful. And this isn't talking about you at all, is it?

When you accept a brother's guiltlessness, you will see the Atonement in him.

You thought you wanted to see the Atonement in you.

For by proclaiming it in him you make it YOURS, and you WILL see what you sought.

"Yeah, but again, why are you always bringing him first?"

You will not see the symbol of your brother's guiltlessness shining within him while you still believe it is not there. HIS guiltlessness is YOUR Atonement. Grant it to him, and you will see the truth of what you have acknowledged.

It's very simple. As an orphan—as an isolated, independent entity—gift simply isn't part of the equation of life, therefore, brotherhood is a meaningless and hollow word. You might act like brothers, you might appear to be cooperating [chuckling] but you're not very likely to claim a brother as a brother—part of Family.

Now, the way Home involves joining. The way Home involves breaking the isolation. The way Home involves abandoning independence. That's why it is talking about your brother. That's why it's bringing your brother into clearer focus as an object of your affection. Why? Because in brotherhood, affection comes into play and affection is a gift given. And a gift of affection given is, what I'm going to call, a concrete establishment of joining, of connection.

What is the gift you have to give to your brother? The only thing you've taken away from him or from yourself—guiltlessness. You've got to give him the acknowledgement of his guiltlessness. Your valuing of guilt to use as a means of even constructive manipulation—manipulation of your brothers and sisters, as well as manipulation of yourself by yourself—that absolutely blocks you from being able to experience who your brother really is and therefore who you really are.

Now, there is in every single one of you, not only a capacity to care about your brother, but a deep and unalterable love, which although you can obscure it from yourself you cannot destroy, you cannot cover over completely. It is absolutely and unalterably natural for you to want the best for your brother. Not only because your very existence is the evidence of the expression of love that the Father has expressed, but because the breakaway, the divorce you got from the Father involved the withdrawal of love—that which bonds you with everything, that which connects you with everything, that which disallows for independence. You abandoned it. And so it's essential for that to be reinstated. And that's where you are now—at the point of reinstatement.

And so, how do you begin your trip Home—the "Journey without distance?" By using your mind to perform its function of extending love, which is the willingness to recognize the guiltlessness of your brother, because that is the one and only gift that will count. That is the one gift that will break the cycle of guilt and all that it entails. And that's your task. We could say that is what you are here for. But I don't mean that's what you're here on planet Earth for. I mean that's what you are here at this point in your, for lack of better words, mental development. You're at this point because it's the next step.

HIS . . .

. . . your brothers . . .

. . . guiltlessness is YOUR Atonement. Grant it to him, . . .

Let the desire that is innately anchored in you as your real motivation—let it, that love—come forth as caring enough about your brother to extend to him the one gift that will make the difference . . .

. . . and you will see the truth of what you have acknowledged.
Yet truth is offered FIRST to be received, . .

You see, you're on your spiritual quest because you want to receive enlightenment, you want to receive the fuller experience of truth and of Reality. The place where you are is the recognition that in order to receive you must give. And the one thing that you must give is the one thing that you have withheld, that—what?—keeps you in bondage. You have to give the willingness to embrace a brother at the expense of your autonomous independence. And you have the capacity to do that.

. . . truth is offered FIRST to be received, even as God gave it first to His Son.

What does that mean? That means that Creation Itself—the act, if you will, of Creation—is a Gift that God gives in order to receive it Himself. And He gives it to His Creation and recognizes Himself in It.

The first in time means nothing, but the First in eternity is God the Father, Who is both First and One.

One, meaning all there Is, all inclusive, all embracing, but infinite. Only if there were two could there be the loss of infinity.

The first in time means nothing, but the First in eternity is God the Father, Who is both First and One. Beyond the First there is no other, for there is no order, no second or third, . .

Sounds like shades of first gear, second gear, third gear.

Beyond the First there is no other, for there is no order, no second or third, and nothing BUT the First.

This is talking about God, but it's the truth about you.

You who belong to the First Cause, created by Him like unto Himself and part of Him, are more than merely guiltless.

You see, you're more than you can imagine, you're more than an orphan who's going to find out that he has parents and then can, um-m, receive his Birthright still as a little independent, two-legged entity, running around on planet Earth, perhaps never dying and getting to do all kinds of fabulous things. But you're more than that.

You who belong to the First Cause, created by Him like unto Himself and part of Him, are more than merely guiltless. The state of guiltlessness is only the condition in which what is not there has been removed from the disordered mind that thought it WAS.

Guiltlessness, the actuality of guiltlessness, we'll say, is a tool that's being used to allow you to abandon the guilt that you thought was actual, the guilt that you as an orphan, an independent autonomous entity thought was actual. You have to be educated out of your false beliefs. But once you get it, we'll say, and you abandon the valuing and the employment of guilt, you won't be a guiltless Child of God. The very concept of guiltlessness won't occupy your mind at all, because you are more than just guiltless.

You are the pristine Presence of effulgent Light, which coalesces, I'm going to say, in colors and shapes without ever ceasing to be Light. And the Light and the shapes that the Light coalesces into are the experience of Meaning beyond anything that you're comprehending at the moment.

So, even as we're talking here about abandoning guilt and embracing the guiltlessness of your brother and of yourself, we're still not talking about anything ultimate. You still need to listen without preconceptions, because what is being uncovered to you goes way beyond your preconceptions. And it's really important for you to proceed with, what I'm going to call, full open consciousness. Racers like to drive with a full opened throttle. Those who are Awakening need to develop an appreciation of being a full open receptivity.

Once again, this is a very passive thing and your experience of orphanhood has been one full of aggressive, proactive engagement with life. You need to become full open consciousness, where you're not applying any breaks to what would enter and fill you up. I can't tell you that you need to think bigger than you're thinking. You need to let bigger than you're letting. This is in a way what makes this stage of Awakening difficult because the less control you exercise and employ, the more movement and the more learning of truth will occur.

Again . . .

The state of guiltlessness is only the condition in which what is not there has been removed from the disordered mind that thought it WAS. This state, and only this, must YOU attain with God beside you.

Seeming to be different from you and separate from you.

This state, and only this, must YOU attain with God beside you. For until you do, your will still think that you are separate from Him. You can feel His Presence next to you, but CANNOT know that you are one with Him. This need not be taught. Learning applies only to the condition in which it happens OF ITSELF.

[Chuckling] Learning is an, "A-ha experience." It's impossible to create an, "A-ha experience," because an "A-ha experience" is one of experiencing the unexpected and the unknown. And you can only create out of what you know.

So, you have to be willing to be full open consciousness. And what's the best way of causing that condition? Caring about your brother enough to want to know about his innocence and to ask for the experience and awareness of his innocence from the only one Who Knows—the Father, or one who represents the Father, the Father or the Holy Spirit, the Father or that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

When you have let . . .

. . . again, there's that word "let."

When you have let all that obscured the truth in your most holy mind be undone for you and stand in grace before your Father, He will give Himself to you as He has always done.

[Repeating] When you have let all that obscured the truth in your most holy mind be undone for you . . .

. . . Don't be afraid. Don't be afraid to let things be done for you. Because although your present vantage point, your present glasses that you're looking through, cause that which is indivisible and undivided to appear to be polarized and to seem to be potentially beneficial as well as dangerous. That isn't what's out there. That isn't what is confronting you. And you must dare to behave in disagreement with the perceptions you're having. Your perceptions see your brother as guilty. Your perceptions say that guilt must be brought into play to bring him into line. But there is a knowing in you that knows that in spite of how your brother sees himself, he's divine. Because, at the bottom line, somewhere in you, you know that you're divine. And that's worth fighting for illuminating, and bringing to the surface so that it can't be denied.

Again . . .

When you have let all that obscured the truth in your most holy mind be undone for you and stand in grace before your Father, .

It doesn't say, "Stand in humiliation before your Father." But that is what your ego would suggest to you is the real meaning of those words. But when you . . .

. . . stand in grace before your Father, He will give Himself to you as He has always done.

He will not lash out at you. He will not scold you. He will not punish you.

. . . He will give Himself to you as He has always done.

In spite of your beliefs, God has always been Being all there is to you—all there is to you. The difference is that when you finally stand in grace before your Father, you will experience the fact that He's Being all there is to you. And you won't be insulted by it.

Giving Himself is all He knows, . .

You see, that's the Gift that is Creation, that constitutes receipt.

Giving Himself is all He knows, and so it is all knowledge.

In that Gift, all of the Meaning of everything is given and everything knows.

For what He knows . . .

. . . God . . .

For what He knows not cannot be, and therefore cannot be given.

Now, what does this have to do with you? Why, what you're hearing is setting the tone for an understanding of, for lack of better words, the Energy of God, which you're embraced by, which you're created with.

Ask not to be forgiven, for this has already been accomplished.

And why has it already been accomplished? Because you were never capable of doing the impossible, and therefore, you have not done anything that needs to be forgiven.

There are things you are doing based on ignorance and false assumptions that are not working and which do cause you to experience guilt. And you will have to stop doing those things because they don't work, because it's impossible to truly accomplish them. That's why you must stop. And in that sense there is repentance, but not repentance because you were guilty.

Repentance because intelligence is present that you are experiencing that causes you to recognize that what isn't working, isn't working, and therefore there is no reason to continue to do what doesn't work. And so you stop.

So . . .

Ask not to be forgiven, for this has already been accomplished.
Ask, rather, to learn how to FORGIVE, and restore what always was to your unforgiving mind.

To forgive is something that can only occur in a relationship. You can forgive your negative assessment of plants that you call weeds. You can forgive the definitions of your brothers or sisters as guilty and deserving of punishment. In other words, you can stop doing what doesn't accomplish anything. And you can stop doing what blinds you to what's truly there. You can stop doing what causes you to experience ignorance.

Ask, rather, to learn how to FORGIVE, . .

. . . how to engage truly in relationships, in which you are owning what you are doing in your participation in those relationships, and so that you can bring caring into play. And knowing what you know now, practice the conscious desire to see what is truly there—to look into your brother's eyes and remember God.

Ask, rather, to learn how to FORGIVE, and restore what always was to your unforgiving mind.

In other words, stop being an unforgiving mind.

Atonement becomes real and visible to them that USE it.

That's why you make the gift instead of going after what you want, instead of finding somebody to gift you, you make the gift which will restore what always was, to your unforgiving mind. So that . . .

Atonement becomes real and visible . . .

. . . because that's what happens for . . .

. . . them that USE it. On earth this is your only function, . .

We're back to simplicity again, aren't we? An only function.

As long as you are trying to operate in second gear from the orphanage, there's only one task you have at hand, and that is, as I said, to break the isolation.

You now know that the way to break the isolation is to insist upon uncovering the guiltlessness of your brother and thereby love him.

On earth this is your only function, and you must learn that it is all you WANT to learn.

Why do anything unnecessary? Why do anything extraneous to the one and only answer?

You WILL feel guilty till you learn this.

Okay, that's easy to understand now. You know that the moment you tried to create second gear and the moment you decided to occupy it, third gear came along with it—guilt and fear came along with it. As long as you're in second gear you will feel guilt and fear. Okay, that's just a simple fact. Don't dramatize it. Don't make a big thing out of it. Just recognize it, "Yes, that's true. And if I don't want third gear, all I need to do is get out of second gear. How do I get out of second gear? By performing the only function I have, which is to bond with and join with my brother, to forgive my brother and all of Creation, any part of Creation which I've been holding to my own definition of."

You WILL feel guilty till you learn this. For, in the end, whatever form it takes, your guilt arises from your failure to fulfill your function in God's Mind with all of YOURS.

Here's where we come back to the fact that there's more to you than guiltlessness, and there's more to you than being an Awake Son of God walking down the street in your right Mind, along with other Sons of God walking down the street in their right Mind.

. . . your guilt arises from your failure to fulfill your function . . .

Where? Not on the street you're walking down, but . . .

. . . in God's Mind with all of YOURS.

With all of your what? With all of your mind. Awakening involves your bringing all of your mind into God's Mind where all Being is occurring and in which you know who you Are and in which the fullness of what God is Being, which you haven't the faintest idea of yet, is illuminated and manifest for you to see, no longer obscured from you. This is why you need to not think bigger, but let more fully.

Can you escape this guilt . . .

... the one that you will feel till you learn this.

Can you escape this guilt by failing to fulfill your function here?

Of course, not. No, you can go right ahead having a rip-roaring suffering time and enjoying the thrill of barely escaping the reaper's axe. But you don't have to.

Can you escape this guilt by failing to fulfill your function here?

No. Now this is important.

You need not understand creation . . .

You don't need to understand everything.

. . . to do what must be done . . .

... to fulfill your function.

. . . before that knowledge would be meaningful to you.

You need not understand Creation to do what must be done, before that knowledge would be meaningful to you. You see? If you think that you are going to end up being a better orphan, then the understanding of who and what you really Are will be meaningless to you. And so, grasping that from second gear is not required of you in order to shift to first gear. That's all it means.

You need not understand creation to do what must be done before that knowledge would be meaningful to you. God breaks no barriers; neither did He MAKE them. When YOU release them they are gone. God will not fail, nor ever has in anything.

Here's the big step.

Decide that God is right and YOU are wrong about yourself.

[Repeating] Decide that God is right and YOU are wrong about yourself.

Hard for the ego to take, but that's the "open sesame" to revelation.

He . . .

... God ...

... created you out of Himself, but still within Him. He KNOWS what you are. Remember that there is no second to Him. There cannot, therefore, be anyone without His Holiness, nor anyone unworthy of His perfect Love.

That's a clue. That's an insight into the nature of everything and everyone that you're conscious of. That's why I keep saying, bring curiosity to bear. Look at everything with the curiosity to see the more of what God is Being there than what you're seeing.

There cannot, therefore, be anyone . . .

... or, I'm going to say, anything . . .

... without His Holiness, nor anyone unworthy of His perfect Love. Fail not in your function of loving in a loveless place made out of darkness and deceit, for thus are darkness and deceit undone.

Well, what is this . . .

... loveless place made out of darkness and deceit, . .

It's the orphanage. It's life in the orphanage. It's life in the orphan mindset. It's a loveless place because no one belongs to anyone. Guilt is employed to maintain order. Darkness and deceit are employed constantly.

But . . .

Fail not in your function of loving in . . .

... this place . . .

... in a loveless place made out of darkness and deceit, for thus are darkness and deceit undone.

That's your function. And I'm going to remind you, that this function that you have is a function you love to employ. It's a function you love to allow into expression. And your brother or sister, you will find, will be sufficient reason for doing it.

Fail not YOURSELF, . .

. . . after all, the gift you give is the one you receive. So don't fail yourself by withholding the gift from your brother or sister.

Fail not YOURSELF, but instead, offer to God AND YOU His blameless Son.

Well, that can mean you. But you as His blameless Son, will not come into focus until you have been willing to present to your Father, your brother as your Father's blameless Son. You see. This is very important Fail not YOURSELF, but instead, offer to God AND YOU His blameless Son. For this small gift of appreciation for His Love, . .

. . . God's Love.

. . . God will Himself exchange your gift for His.

And you will stand in conscious receipt. Wow!

Before you make ANY decisions for yourself, remember that you have decided AGAINST your function in Heaven, and consider carefully whether you WANT to make decisions here. Your function here is only to decide AGAINST deciding what you want, in recognition that you do not KNOW.

You see, here we are right back at the first lesson in the Workbook, "Nothing I see means anything" and "I don't know what anything is for." But now, recognizing that you do not know is not as frightening and can be embraced without reducing you to a quivering mass of jelly, immobilizing you.

Your function here is only to decide AGAINST deciding what you want, in recognition that you do not KNOW. How, then, can you decide what you should do? Leave all decisions to the One Who speaks for God, and for your function as He KNOWS it.

Who might that be? The Holy Spirit—your right Mind.

But until you've come Home, your right Mind is going to be experienced as something other than you that you will have to yield to, and that you will have to listen to, else you will maintain your arrogance of independent, imagined sovereignty. And it's unavoidable.

Leave all decisions to the One Who speaks for God, and for your function as He KNOWS it. So will He teach you to remove the awful burden you have laid upon yourself by loving not the Son of God, and trying to teach him guilt instead of love. Give up this frantic and insane attempt, which cheats you of the joy of living with your God and Father, and awaking gladly to His Love and Holiness which join together . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . as the truth in you, . . .

This is what you have no conception of. And this is what is so far greater than you just being guiltless. And it is what requires that you be willing to be full open consciousness—unresistant conscious awareness.

. . . making you One with Him.

That's Atonement.

When you have learned how to decide WITH God, . . .

. . . remember, I used the word cooperator and cooperation.

When you have learned how to decide WITH God, all decisions become as easy and as right as breathing. There is no effort, . . .

. . . you see, because the power of decision is not the exertion of force. So . . .

There is no effort. And you will be led as gently as if you were being carried along a quiet path in summer. Only . . .

. . . what? Your own volition.

Only your own volition seems to make deciding hard.

Man! The practice of will causes the natural awareness of what is appropriate, which is an effortless process, to be difficult.

The Holy Spirit will not delay at all in answering your EVERY question what to do.

And the only problem at the moment, the only thing that makes it difficult for you to hear the Holy Spirit is, that you think that you can decide for yourself and you can come up with the answers by yourself, and it's imperative to come up with the answers by yourself because that's how you gain credibility and reality. But, you see, you don't know what you're for. And you don't know what you mean. And so, you've got to dare to be full open consciousness, willing to let in what you aren't expecting. That's the only way transformation will occur.

The Holy Spirit will not delay at all in answering your EVERY question what to do. He KNOWS.

Ultimately that means that you know. But you cannot have the experience of your Knowing as long as there is a tinge of arrogant self-righteous autonomy or a desire for it. And so, you will have to listen to that which is your right Mind, which means you will have to listen to the Holy Spirit. And you will have to take directions. You will have to yield to what you're being told.

And . . .

. . . even more insulting . . .

. . . He will TELL you and then do it FOR you.

And you will learn to be grateful. And in your attitude of gratitude for your right Mind doing for you what only It can do, you will be restored to the conscious experience of it being your right Mind doing it. And the sense of a separate orphan will disappear.

You who are tired might consider whether this is not more restful than sleep.

What? [Chuckling] Letting the Holy Spirit answer your every question? And letting the Holy Spirit tell you and then do it for you? Yeah.

You who are tired might consider whether this is not more restful than sleep. For you can bring your guilt into sleeping, but not into this.

Now, there are practical aspects to all of this that we will need to talk about. And you may perhaps be disappointed, that I'm not giving you examples of how what we've discussed can be grounding for you and relevant for you in your daily experience. But because you are approaching your spiritual growth from the standpoint of having it improve your human experience, I must bring your attention beyond that, to that which is beyond your preconceptions, to that which requires you to abandon preconceptions and be so fully allowing, that your state of mind could be called full open consciousness, because it's essential for you to be paying attention, to be giving your attention to something far beyond your imaginations. Because the truth about you is that you are more than guiltless and you're more than a divine man.

And if it seems as though I have not pulled you out of the deep and brought you to dry land—a solid footing—it's important for you to be where you can't rely upon your already existing best judgments, so that you can with more commitment, say to the Father or the Holy Spirit, "Help" and stand with curiosity, vital, real curiosity at the threshold of revelation.

The Holy Spirit will not delay at all in answering your EVERY question what to do.

So be willing to be absolutely insecure, knowing absolutely nothing for sure, and asking for help.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 20th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're starting a new Chapter, it's entitled, Bringing Illusions to Truth. See, it's not the way you would expect it to be. You would expect to turn to God—lean into God—with prayer and with willingness to accept His answers so that truth would infill you and allow you thereby to improve the human condition. In other words, you would bring truth to illusion.

It's natural that you would have that expectation, because you think that you are in a position of some authority and that it's incumbent upon you to exercise that authority to improve your living conditions, to benefit your brother or perhaps [chuckling] take advantage of your brother. But one way or another everything falls into place around you—the authority in your life.

Now just because it's natural for you to think that way doesn't mean it's right. It doesn't mean it's true. Just because everyone does it that way and just because all of your ancestors did it that way and even though all the books in the world that exist express the same basic modus operandi it doesn't mean that everybody got it right.

And we have been discussing the truth and getting it right. But it does require everyone to be willing to change. In a way, it's like every single one of you moving to a country where language is spoken that you have never learned. And in order to exist there you must learn the language and you must learn it now. You must apply yourself to learning it at every moment during the day.

¿Como se dice house? You know. You have to constantly inquire, “How do you say this? How do you say that? How do you speak in the past tense,” and so on? You can’t say, “Well, learning a new language doesn’t really fit into my activities. I think I’ll put it off for a while. I can’t learn a new language on the [snapping fingers] spot, while I’m right in the middle of things.” But you have to.

You could say, “Well yeah, I hear you—Bringing Illusions to Truth—I know I need to do that, but you know I can’t do that on the job, I can’t do that when I’m driving in the car, I can’t do that when I’m having an argument with my wife or my son or my daughter or whoever.” But you know what? If you’re in another country where everyone speaks a language that you don’t speak, you have to learn on the spot. You have to be willing. And it can be done. That’s the point. It can be done! If you’re a little spoiled though you might say, “Well, it’s not really convenient right now.” It doesn’t have to be convenient. Make the effort.

Now, let’s go into the book . . .

Unless you are guiltless you cannot know God, Whose Will is that you know Him.

Now here’s just pure logic . . .

Therefore, you MUST be guiltless.

If it’s the Father’s Will for you to know Him and the only way you can know him is to be guiltless, then there’s no way to escape the Father’s Will. And that means you have to be guiltless whether you believe it or not. It also means that your brother has to be guiltless whether he believes it or not and whether you believe it about your brother or not.

So, we’ve thrown around the word “guiltless” and “guiltlessness” incessantly for a number of weeks here—not thrown it around, but it’s been used a lot. So if you must be guiltless, and if you must be guiltless in order to know God, then how do you know God? What does guiltless mean?

Well, you know in one of the parables I spoke of the “Bridegroom coming when ye think not”—be prepared because the “Bridegroom cometh when ye think not.” Innocence, guiltlessness is the state of your Being when ye think not—when you are not thinking.

I know some of you were wondering this past week what the experience of “full open consciousness” might be. It’s the experience you find yourself having when you successfully become silent within yourself. You find yourself to be fully conscious without thinking.

Now, as I said before, God did not give you the capacity to think. Thinking is a so-called capacity which you have imagined, which you have created. And in the imaginary act of having thoughts, what happened? The presence thoughts suggested there was a thinker. “Aha!” God didn’t create a thinker, and there really is no such thing as a thinker. But in the process of using your mind to create an experience that you called a thought and then creating more thoughts, you caused a suggestion to come into play. The presence of the thoughts suggested that there was a thinker. And I’m going to be very specific here: there is a difference between a thinker and a knower. There’s a difference between thinking and knowing.

Stay with me here. When you meditate—or through any means that accomplishes the singular end of experiencing silence—you arrive at a point where there is no thinking going on, but you are conscious. In that experience you are experiencing being pure Awareness. The experience of awareness does not really suggest that there’s an entity being aware. It doesn’t elicit a secondary effect. And so as pure awareness you find yourself experiencing everything.

As I said, if you mediate and you arrive at a point of perfect peace—silence within you—you can still hear the breeze through the trees, you can still hear the dogs barking, you can still smell dinner cooking, you’re fully conscious of everything. And I promise you, that in that experience of pure awareness, all of what you have defined as separate experiences are simply the experience of knowing. Pure conscious awareness is the experience of knowing. This is where your innocence is. This is where your guiltlessness lies. When you allow yourself into this experience you have allowed a truer experience of what Being Is. Period.

Now, it is possible through a slight use of will, when you are meditating, to move into the silence and think that the silence is the goal and that you have arrived at some stopping point, if I might put it that way. And so you hold on to the silence. You don’t want to disturb the silence with willfulness, you say. And yet I need to tell you, that the silence is not the end. It is not the purpose of becoming still. The purpose of becoming still is to stop the thinking that suggests that there’s a thinker.

But there is something further that has to come into play. There has to be a desire. It could be called willfulness, but you’ll find that the desire is there without the use of thought. The desire will not be the result of thought and thought will not be used to explain the desire, or to flesh it out with meaning. You will find that the desire will be experienced as a natural gravitation toward love—the experience of love, of being loved, and of being love. Again, of being loved and being love. And there will be a natural gravitation toward peace. It will feel like movement. You will be able to feel the shift. And you will be able to feel the love and the peace. And there will be a natural desire or again, a natural inclination to move toward joy.

As this happens, you begin to accept the fact that these experiences which you did not create, but which you did allow, are really the clearer definers of you than the you, you thought you were by virtue of having thoughts and thinking. Because you will not be reinforcing a so-called thinker, by insisting on thinking thoughts, your awareness will become—I could call it, a transparency for truth, or a transparency for reality—an unclouded, less and less opaque presence, environment, atmosphere, through which the Father can register with you as Being all there is of you.

Now, there is nothing your behavior in the world can do to demonstrate your guiltlessness, your innocence. There are no thoughts you can have that will be so pure that they will create a pure thinker, an ultimate thinker—that in which the Father could be well pleased. Anything that you might attempt to do by virtue of your thinking, is not what will cause your Father to be well pleased with you. It's when you are willing to be more radical, and in the middle of your daily life learn a new language, find a new way to be even though it's inconvenient to do it, and you insist upon, to the very best of your ability in every situation, listening for what the truth is here, what the truth is here.

“¿Como se dice house? What is the truth here? What is the truth here? Because I need to know now in order to function where I am. I need to know now in order to function as the guiltless one that I am. I need to know now so that I can relate to my brother, the guiltless one that he has to be right now. And the only way I'm going to be able to do it is to insist upon listening right in the middle of the experience that I've been having all along, but thinking it was something else, determining that it was a material universe and world in the process of evolution.” You literally have to be willing to take a radical stand, meaning, determine that you are going to be in a new way here and now.

What is the new way? The new way is to say, “Father, help!” The new way is to make a practice of becoming still and inquiring, desiring to know as an experience of pure awareness—not as a result of conscious logical thinking.

Unless you are guiltless you cannot know God, Whose Will is that you know Him. Therefore, you MUST be guiltless. Yet if you do not accept the necessary conditions for knowing Him you have denied Him, . .

Well, that's what we're talking about. What are the necessary conditions for knowing Him? Well, the necessary conditions for knowing Him are to stop valuing thinking, because the process of thinking proves to you that you exist as an independent thinker, who by virtue of his clear, correct, right thinking can become respectable and become real. The conditions for knowing God are that you must abandon doing that.

Now, many of you have had the experience of having life—you say—wear you down, for life to become so difficult that finally you give up, you give up faith in yourself, you give up thinking that you have a capacity to resolve the situation and you let go.

You know, you all, or most of you love this phrase, “Let go and let God.” Well, okay, nice words. But almost without fail, those of you who have experienced letting go and letting God called that a major failure in your life, where you failed at being a success and everything fell apart. And it was only, you say, through the grace of God that you were lifted up out of it and there was such transformation in your life that it changed you forever, and now you really believe there is a God.

Now, when you let go under those circumstances, when you give up truly in those circumstances, you literally abandon thinking and valuing your thinking. And in the absence of any confidence in what your thinking could create for you, you say, “Help!” When you do that you accept the necessary conditions for knowing God.

Now, the point is you don’t have to wait for life to wear you down. You don’t have to wait for circumstances to cause you to abandon the use of your will. You can volunteer to abandon the use of your will.

And I’ve talked at length over many moons as we’ve been going through the book. I’ve talked at length about how you can do that, about having curiosity, bringing curiosity into play, asking, “What is the more of what God is being here than what I’m seeing?” But you know what? I want to encourage you to bring a little bit more commitment to it. You can play with it a little bit. You can sort of have fun with being curious during the day to see more, but let a little bit of real life occur and you will slip right back into being in charge yourself, because you value the self you think you are by virtue of engaging in thinking—using the presence of thoughts as the verifier of the fact that there really is a thinker and that thinker is you. Doing that you are not accepting the necessary conditions for knowing Him.

So I guess you could say that, unlike years past, I’m pressuring you a little, I’m pushing you a little. Why? Because the truth about you is so much more wonderful and the experience of what you really are is so much more profound than what you’re experiencing. And if you continue to play with ideas of truth and practicing having a little bit of curiosity to see the more of God, but not really expecting it. “You know, it would be nice, but if it really happened, well you don’t want to be thrown off base, you don’t want to be thrown off guard, you don’t want to be thrown for a curve. So I’m curious, but I’m not too curious.” And I’m saying, “Okay, come on. Lets treat all of this as though it’s the truth.”

Stop doing what constitutes not accepting the conditions for knowing God. Stop thinking and trying to prove by virtue of your thinking that you do indeed exist as the thinker on your own, in second gear.

Unless you are guiltless you cannot know God, Whose Will is that you know Him. Therefore, you MUST be guiltless. Yet if you do not accept the necessary conditions for knowing Him you have denied Him, and do not recognize Him, though He is all around you. He cannot be known without His Son, whose guiltlessness is the condition for knowing Him.

[Repeating] He cannot be known without His Son, . .

If you are claiming to be an independent entity, proof of which is arrived at by demonstrating that you are having thoughts and therefore you are a thinker in your own right, the Father cannot be known, because there's no Son. There's no Son being acknowledged by you. You're claiming to be not His Son. You're claiming to not be a son of anything. You are the creator by virtue of thinking. And the thinking demonstrates as a fact that there is a thinker and that's you. And all of your thinking, whether you believe this or not, all of your thinking occurs for the sole purpose of proving your existence as an independent entity.

So, that is the reason that God is obscured.

Accepting His Son as guilty is denial of the Father so complete that knowledge is swept away from recognition in the very mind where God Himself has placed it.

Now, we've talked at length about the fact that even though you utilize guilt and you do value it because you do use it, you used it to motivate yourself. You use it to motivate your brothers and sisters and they likewise practice it on you for purposes of control. Even though you do this, it's just like no matter how much you think it doesn't prove or demonstrate that there is a thinker—an independent entity. And likewise no matter how much you employ guilt, it doesn't mean that you have become guilty. But it does mean that you are deluded. It does mean that you are confused and as a result cannot experience your Birthright, cannot experience what it means to be truly Sane.

And although you get a lot of invigoration from this tense existence of trying to make something Real that can't become Real, you haven't succeeded at doing anything. And therefore you are not guilty. And because you haven't accomplished changing what you are, you still are what you were created to be. And therefore, you can experience transformation. You can experience, without process at all, slipping back into the experience of full open consciousness—the experience of guiltlessness, the experience of being pure awareness.

Now, just getting into the silence is not all there is to it. In the silence there needs to be a very gently expressed wish/desire to have your Father reveal to you the Mind He placed in you—to have your right Mind uncovered to you. That's the way you undo the isolation—the so-called independence that you thought you could create. And when you do that, you accept the necessary conditions for knowing Him.

In the abandonment [careless freedom] of behaving as though you are guilty, even though you can't possibly become guilty, you find that the experience of Knowing that comes when you are experiencing pure awareness is lost because you're so busy creating the static of your thinking, which you believe is going to create the proof that there is a thinker there—you—that is real.

If you would but listen, and learn how impossible this is!

That's a plea.

If you would but listen, and learn how impossible this is!

Do you realize that this is how Atonement happens?

Do not endow . . .

. . . God . . .

Do not endow Him with attributes You understand. You made Him not and anything you understand is not of Him.

In other words, anything you thought up about what God is, isn't the truth about God. It's just the truth about you engaging and thinking for the selfish purpose of demonstrating that you exist all by yourself.

Your task is not to make reality.

[Chuckling]

Your task is not to make reality. It is here without your making, but not without YOU. You who have thrown your selves away and valued God so little, hear me speak for Him and for yourselves.

How did you throw yourselves away? And how did you value God so little? By becoming consumed with proving your existence as an independent thinker.

Now you know what? We could get into lengthy conversations about your good thinking and how you've used your thinking in beneficial ways. And you could have another ten thousand lifetimes without waking up. You don't need to prove or demonstrate good thoughts and good thinking habits. You just simply don't any longer have to try to demonstrate your validity and value, by virtue of any thoughts you ever had, any more than your worthlessness could be demonstrated by the poor thoughts you've had and put into practice. You see?

The necessity is to do something really very simple, that every single one of you can do. You can stop thinking. Just stop it. Get into the silence. Learn how to value it so that it's easier to stay in it even when you're in the middle of activity. So that your experience of activities is a result of pure awareness of being present with, without thinking about anything that's going on. Because it's in this way that what God is Being, that what Reality Is—in all of these activities that you're aware of—can register with you without the distortions introduced by engaging in thought processes and evaluations, and on and on and on.

Your innocence lies in your not employing that which, we'll say, brings guilt into play. And what brings guilt into play is thinking. What brings guilt into play is behaving as though you are an orphan and valuing your orphanhood and using all of the sad details of orphanhood to justify grabbing for your good—as though you didn't have it—and proving that you're worth having it all by virtue of excellent thoughts and the development of an excellent self image.

You who have thrown yourselves away and valued God so little, hear me speak for Him and for yourselves. You cannot understand how much your Father loves you, for there is no parallel in your experience of the world . . .

I'm going to say: as you've determined it to be by virtue of your thinking, . .

. . . to help you understand it. There is nothing on earth . . .

. . . as you have determined it to be by virtue of your thinking . . .

. . . with which it can compare, and nothing you have ever felt, apart from Him, . .

You see, while you're enjoying being in second gear and while you're enjoying proving your independent existence, by virtue of thinking, so that you can prove that there's a thinker, all that time you are holding yourself apart from Him—proving your own independent existence.

There is nothing on earth with which It . . .

. . . the Father's Love

. . . can compare, and nothing you have ever felt, apart from Him, that resembles It ever so faintly. You cannot even give a blessing in perfect gentleness.

Perfect gentleness, in the quiet, peaceful love and joy, which becomes yours as you value and move into the silence. There, you can give a blessing in perfect gentleness.

And just your very conscious awareness of everything will be the blessing in perfect gentleness. It won't be an independent action that you've said, "Okay, now I'm starting to send a blessing to you." And then, "Okay, the blessing is over."

Would you know of One Who gives forever, and Who knows of nothing EXCEPT giving?

Would you want . . .

. . . to know of One Who gives forever, and Who knows of nothing EXCEPT giving?

Want to. Wants to . . .

. . . know of One Who gives forever and Who knows of nothing EXCEPT giving.

That's the Father. And that's you when you're in the silence, in the love and the peace and the joy of being pure awareness. As pure awareness, you are present with and in full acknowledgement of what everything Is, without the coloration of your distorted thoughts and perceptions. And so you co-create. You join with the Father in Creation, which is the giving of your full open consciousness, your attention, and knowing that that is your function in its entirety. Your mind is not there so that you can think. Your mind is there so that you can Know. So you can know what? What you've figured out? No. So that you can Know everything as the Father is Knowing It, and in the act of Knowing It, Creating It.

The Children of Heaven . . .

. . . You, everyone . . .

. . . live in the light of the blessing of their Father, because they KNOW that they are sinless.

Sin: the missing of the mark, the attempt to be what you cannot be, the attempt to create and demonstrate your existence by virtue of independent thinking. Right now it feels normal to you. But as you begin to abandon it and have frequent experiences of not engaging it, you will begin to find it less and less comfortable to engage it, and what had been a carrot you chased after, will no longer have appeal to you.

The Atonement was established as the means of restoring guiltlessness to the mind which has denied it, . .

Has denied it how? By insisting on creating a sense of identity by virtue of more and more excellent thinking processes.

The Atonement was established as the means of restoring guiltlessness to the mind which has denied it, and thus denied Heaven to Itself. Atonement teaches you the true condition of the Son of God.

That's interesting isn't it?

. . . the true condition . . .

Not the true skills, not the true nature, not the true gifts that he has, but the true condition of the Son of God—peace, love, joy and more that emerges when silence is allowed, when silence is nurtured, when listening in the silence is valued more than thinking.

Again, you can make this shift right in the world today, just as you can learn a new language in a “foreign country,” where no one speaks your language.

Again . . .

Atonement teaches you the true condition of the Son of God.

That's what I said. As you allow yourself to be in the peace and you experience the love and the joy that emerges, those experiences become that which define you—not the thoughts or the skills or anything else that you might engage in.

It . . .

. . . the Atonement . . .

. . . does not teach you what you are, or what your Father is.

The . . .

Atonement teaches you the true condition of the Son of God. . .

. . . The Holy Spirit, Who remembers this for you, . . .

. . . Who remembers who you Are and what the Father Is.

The Holy Spirit, Who remembers this for you, merely teaches you how to remove the blocks that stand between you and what you know.

Well, I'll tell you, there aren't a whole lot of blocks, unless you want to count all the different kinds of thoughts that you engage in. There's really only one block that stands between you and what you know of the truth of you. And that is, again, the static that is created by your insistence upon thinking, for the purpose of proving that there is a thinker, and you are it, and you are therefore real all by yourself. That's the only block there is.

His memory . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's memory, the memory of that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . is YOURS. If you remember what YOU have made, . .

. . . with all of your thinking. If you remember the self you have been working so hard to create by virtue of your thinking . . .

. . . you are remembering nothing. Remembrance of reality is in Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . and THEREFORE in you.

Now, there's your radical thinking. No, there's your radical truth.

Remembrance of reality is in Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . and THEREFORE in you.

In order to demonstrate your guiltlessness and in order to illuminate and demonstrate your brother's guiltlessness, you must be willing to abandon who you think you are. You must be willing to abandon the definitions you have created of yourself and then impressed everyone else with. And you must abandon the pride with which you hold yourself in such self-esteem. You must be willing to see yourself as something far more than anything that you could have created by a stream of thoughts. And so must your brother.

And if you want to wake up, if you want to know the truth, if you want to become free of the illusions you're suffering from, you must be willing to consider yourself in a different language—not the language of thoughts you have about yourself, and not the language of the thoughts you have about your brother or your sister, and not the language of the thoughts that your professors and teachers and so-called enlightened ones have added to your repertoire of thoughts.

It's not awful of me to illuminate the nothingness of nothing. It's not unkind of me to illuminate the lack of value in that which has no value, especially when I am providing, at the same time, an understanding of how to get to the experience of what is valuable, the experience of your Sanity and the fact that it is all waiting for you—in a bright package, you might say of wholeness—simply awaiting a few moments of silence when you've relinquished the attempt to reinforce your self-image and prove your existence by virtue of all the thoughts you could possibly think.

You are guiltless because you couldn't possibly be a thinker. And you are guiltless because right now, even though you're not conscious of it, you are the divine presence of pure conscious awareness, which by virtue of being awareness knows everything infinitely, sharing the knowledge of Reality with your Father.

Now, you can make this claim for yourself. You can describe yourself to yourself in the words I just used about you. But don't get hung up on declaring it because then it just becomes another thought to rehearse, thus proving the presence of a thinker, thinking better. But what I just said, is of value because it can contribute to your letting go—letting go of the attempt to demonstrate your validity by thoughts. And by letting those words cause you to have greater peace and less fear as you let yourself into the silence, and learn of your being from the experience of the silence, the silence and the emptiness that seemed to be are already full of Reality, awaiting you to experience It in Its language.

So we're not bringing truth to illusions. We're not bringing the truth to your mind to add to your repertoire of thoughts that will do nothing but continue to demonstrate your independent existence. We're bringing illusions to truth by abandoning illusions. We're bringing you to truth. We're bringing you—returning you—to that which is nothing more than your right Mind, which is the Holy Spirit, the Voice for Truth, the Voice for God.

It's not too hard. You just have to begin to engage in it. Start learning the new language. And start learning it no matter how inconvenient it is, right in the middle of your (to your sense) very human unspiritual day, right in the orphanage, if you will, so that you might have the experience of the transformation of the orphanage into the Kingdom of Heaven—which you had been missing because of the definition you had applied to it.

You are assured of success because that which is divinely sane never successfully became insane. Reach for your Sanity by shutting up, becoming curious and listening. And do it, do it, do it, throughout your days.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 4th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

The simplicity of the answer to all problems associated with what you call the human condition, is a real blessing. The simplicity of it is a real blessing. That which creates the experience of problems, the experience of dissonance, the experience of tension, the experience of fear, and the experience of guilt is thinking—plain, pure and simple.

Since we first started reading the Course, you've heard about the Voice for truth and the voice for fear. One you want to embrace and one you want to disengage from.

Now, you're finding out that the way to disengage from the voice for fear is to abandon the independent position of second gear, which is always accompanied by third gear—the voice for fear and guilt. The two are inseparable, second gear and third gear.

It's such a simple idea, that you might be inclined to dismiss it as unworthy of your attention. You also might be inclined to dismiss it as unworthy of your attention because it's going to cost you too much to employ it, value it, and practice it. Because at the bottom line, you know that your credibility and your validity depends entirely upon the excellence of your thinking.

It's not true!

Now, I'm going to give you a practice for the next two weeks. This practice, I want you to engage in every day as many times as you remember to engage in it.

It is this: No matter where you are and no matter what is going on, I want you to, I'm going to say, stand back and observe what's going on in your mind. You are likely to find out that no matter where you are, whether it's on the freeway, whether you're in the office, whether you're with the children, no matter where you are and no matter what is going on, there's a running dialogue in your mind assessing whatever it is that's going on, or whoever it is that's talking, or let's say, behaving whether it's a child behaving like a child, or an adult behaving like an adult, notice the dialogue that is going on in your mind.

The dialogue is entirely one of thoughts, isn't it. And I will promise you something: To the degree that you have a stream of thoughts occurring in your mind, you are not fully present with what you are observing and experiencing. Because you're not fully present, you are unable to be in touch with what is happening. You're unable to be in touch with what the child is really meaning by his or her expression. Or the employer or the employees you work with or whoever it might be that you're involved with.

And you want to know something? Notice when you're on the freeway, or notice when you're under stressful circumstances, that your thinking becomes more vigorous. Not only that, it tends to become more mean. It is much easier to express unkindness under those circumstances.

And what this demonstrates is, that the actual reason you are engaging in thinking is to substantiate yourself in your own mind to make yourself bigger, louder, more intense in order to match or be equal to the circumstance going on. You don't do it to help correct the circumstance. You do it to substantiate you.

Now, that's the definition of second gear isn't it. You, being yourself in your own right by what? By virtue of engaging in imaginative thoughts that seem to prove that there is a thinker present—you!

When things get stressful and your thoughts become more intense and even unkind, the true nature and purpose of thinking shows itself up.

Now, as you go through the next two weeks, notice, stop—step back and notice what is going on in your mind. And when you find that thinking is going on in your mind, further pay attention and notice that for the most part, you're using it as insulation against connection with whatever is going on. You may be arguing with what your wife is saying, or you may be disagreeing with what your husband is saying, or you may be going through a whole string of negative evaluations about the person at the next desk, and how incredibly stupid they are based upon your assessment of their behavior.

Now tell me something: How... how could healing possibly take place when you have insulated yourself against connection—involvement—of being present with your neighbor, your brother, your sister and in fact, you are establishing most firmly in your mind an assessment of them as a body—bottom line—a body, a physical organism—a collection of behavioral responses which they, as an organism, have naturally developed for self protection? As I've said before, you can look at your neighbor and say why if you knew their background. You would understand why they behave the way they behave or you would understand why they see everything negatively. How could healing possibly occur with that kind of assessment?

It can't. It can't occur for your brother and it can't occur for yourself. Why? Because you are sitting squarely in second gear being an independent authorizer of definitions of your brother and sister. There's no Voice for Truth present in this scenario at all. And yet you claim by virtue of the fact that you're listening right now, or that you're a student of the Course, that you want healing, you want something different from the human condition.

As I said last time we were together, you have thought that you could study the Course or any spiritual work and bring the truths in that work to your human condition to exercise in a beneficial way for you and for your brothers and sisters. But you have thought that you were going to bring it from first gear, the Voice for Truth, to second gear, which automatically and unavoidably is partnered with by the voice for fear and guilt.

Now, this practice, which I would like you to take seriously as though it were a truly valuable exercise—this practice of multiple times during the day, no matter what the setting—stepping back and observing what's going on in your mind and noticing the thinking... notice the stream of thoughts... notice their characteristics... notice what they're tending to confirm to you as an appropriate response or reaction. Is it kind? Is it mean? Is it thoughtful? Is it thoughtless? Is there a little bit of a dig to it... a little bit of sarcasm that elicits and supports your expressing? Notice these things.

Because you need to become aware of when you are doing what defeats your supposed goal of waking up—of learning what's in the Course—of embodying what the Course is teaching. You need to become aware of when you are defeating yourself and to notice how it is that you are doing it. What is the characteristic of it? What is the feel of the thinking that is going on?

Now, the big question is: To what are you going to turn in order to learn? The voice for fear/guilt or the Voice for Truth? And are you going to take me seriously when I say that thinking is what defeats your purpose? Thinking is what defeats your purpose for being. Thinking is what defeats what the Father has set in place for you and as you. Thinking defeats your enjoyment of your Birthright.

Now, after you have taken some time doing this multiple times during the day for the next two weeks religiously, I want you to end that session with Lesson 35 in the Workbook which says . . .

“My mind is part of God’s. I am very holy.” 1

When you’ve listened, when you’ve paid attention to what’s going on in your mind and you’ve looked at it honestly without lying to yourself and glossing it over and giving it some other purpose than it’s actually having, say . . .

“But... My mind is part of God’s. I am very holy.”

Why do this? Do it because, until that happens—until you say that—you are in second gear. In second gear, you have constant reinforcement for being in second gear and for experiencing fear and for experiencing guilt. And you blind yourself completely to any possibility for waking up—for experiencing healing, for having correction of your misunderstandings... for experiencing a miracle.

But when you say, “Wait a minute, my mind is not my mind. My mind is not something in my skull—in my brain—made up with a bunch of electrical synapses. My mind is not a right hemisphere and a left hemisphere doing what they do—physical things that I can learn perhaps to finesse into better functioning, where more of my capabilities can come into play more successfully.” Uh-uh.

The need is to not identify with the self that seems to have been created imaginatively, which has nothing to do with God. The key lies in abandoning that and remembering first gear—remembering to identify with God. And that’s what that Lesson is for. “My mind is part of God.”

“My mind is part of God’s. I am very holy.”

Now you’ve brought God back into the picture. Now you’ve brought first gear back into the picture and when you say in response to the flow of thoughts you’ve been having, when you say, “But... like in spite of everything I’ve observed that’s been going on in my mind...

“But... My mind is part of God’s. I am very holy.”

I'm not this puny little orphan in second gear coping with third gear." You see? Then, after you've said that as part of this practice, I want you to be willing to be more consciously present with whatever it is that is going on. Stop thinking about your wife or your child, or the neighborhood kid or your boss, or a fellow employee or the cashier in the pet-shop. Be willing to be present thoughtlessly without an analysis going on in your mind at all. Give your attention to that one. Be really focused. Stop being sidetracked by a flow—a stream of thoughts. And really be up-close and personal with them.

And you might say: "Her mind is part of God's. She is very holy." "His mind is part of God's. He is very holy."

Now, when you say that, don't get all "pink-cloud" metaphysical about it. In acknowledging his mind is part of God's and he is very holy, let that be justification for continuing to be up-close and personal, really not distracted from anything that is going on with them.

And I promise you something: If you do that, even if they are expressing ideas that reflect their guilt—that reflect their feeling of being guilty, you will not respond to what they're saying from the level that they're coming because you will have abandoned second gear even though they're still in it. And you will be able to be an agent for change.

But let's also stay clear about that. Because that's very ego-satisfying—"I can be an agent for change." It's more than that. There's something under that that is more important. And that is, that when you're doing that, you are fulfilling your function and you are not engaging in a purposeful act of insanity. And you are providing yourself with the opportunity to experience a miracle—a sudden shift of perception.

Why? Because in effect you have said, "I do not want to rely upon my thinking. I do not want to rely upon my best judgments. And I'm going to dare in this moment, to stop thinking even though my conditioning says that if I do that I will disappear because it's only by virtue of my thinking that I can really prove that I exist. In spite of the threat of that happening, I'm going to do that anyway. I'm going to stop thinking."

And no matter what it is you're thinking, you're going to say,

"But... My mind is part of God's. I am very holy."

Your identification becomes one of joining with God and your holiness can be embraced by in that context because it is your Birthright. And in doing that, the Atonement occurs.

So if you want Atonement—this wonderful thing that you keep reading about in the Course, and you keep talking about in your Course groups, this wonderful thing of Atonement will happen when? “When ye think not.”

It's that simple. But when you're not thinking, you've got to be doing something else: You've got to be quiet so that the Meaning of what is going on can register with you. Now this is how simple it is.

What you will find is not so simple, is finding the willingness in you to do it. Because the hit—the payoff of being an independent authorizer in your own right seems to promise so much. And it is like a drug that you become habituated to and you've got to break the habit. And I've told you how to break the habit and this practice during the next two weeks will help you break the habit.

And I'm going to be very clear here. You break the habit of operating from second gear by returning to first gear. “But, in spite of these thoughts, my mind is part of God's. I am very holy. But, no matter what my brother says, his mind is part of God's. He is very holy.” Anything else is so much tinkling brass. That's a wonderfully poetic way of referring to static. [chuckles] It's nothing but static—unpleasant, obscuring, having no pleasantness to it whatsoever. So there you go.

If you will do this during the next two weeks, you will learn a lot. And it will become easier and easier for you to insist upon making the shift many times a day, so that you are being thoughtlessly present with—I'm going to say, thoughtlessly, but mindfully present with your brother, present with your circumstance, with the desire to see what you can't help seeing in the absence of your thinking, what you can't help seeing in the absence of the feelings of guilt and fear, in the absence of having this automatic assessment of your brothers and sisters that they are guilty and that they ought to be afraid, that they don't have any reason to be happy.

It's time to release yourself. Any time is the time to release yourself. But we're talking about it now and we're talking very specifically about how to do it. And, what I need to be very frank about is, that you will not do this as a practice for the next two weeks so that you might learn some things, and then discontinue the practice.

You may find it very difficult to maintain the kind of attentiveness that it involves in being present with another or with the situation you're in without thinking and insisting upon letting real Meanings emerge about the events that are transpiring, so that you might respond to what is really going instead of what your friend fears is going on because he's looking at it from second gear.

Let's go into the book.

GUILT AND GUILTLESSNESS 2

First of all, let's be very clear. Guilt is not real. Guiltlessness is real. So we're not comparing apples and oranges. We're comparing apples and nothing. The only thing is, that the nothingness created through the use of imagination, that's called guilt, really is uncomfortable. The thing is, it's not uncomfortable because it's real, it's uncomfortable because you are, in your mind, in a state of self-denial. You are in a position of saying, "I am not the Son of God. I am an entity in my own right. I do not have a Source, I am creating my reality."

Now this is not the truth. And every bit of effort you bring into play to make it true is going to be uncomfortable because you're natural divine sanity will let you know.

So again, guiltlessness is real and guilt is not.

Now . . .

The guiltless and the guilty are totally incapable of understanding one another.

Now, I think you might be able to understand this through this example: If you know someone, if you have an acquaintance and something occurred between you that caused both of you distress, and somewhere along the line you forgave your brother but your brother didn't forgive you, then, when you interact with each other you will find miscommunication happening, because you will not be seeing him as guilty of anything, you will not see him as someone to be defended against, but he will see you as someone who is guilty and he will see you as someone to defend himself against. So, when you say, "Hey Joe, how are things going?" He's going to wonder, "What's that bastard up to now?" And his response to you will perhaps be unkind or at the least curt, unfriendly.

The guiltless and the guilty are totally incapable of understanding one another. Each perceives the other as like himself, . .

The one who hasn't forgiven you sees himself as unforgiven. He sees you as guilty because he sees himself as guilty. Guilt is the name of the game! And the purpose of existence is to arrive at a point through the use of excellent thinking where you can prove that you are honorable, and that the assessment of guilt against you is false and that therefore everyone must respect you and free themselves of their inclination to find you as guilty. So naturally, because he's in second gear and that's his modus operandi he's going to see you the same way. And he's going to assume that your goals are just like his—to overcome your guilt, but to use guilt in the process as the means for overcoming guilt.

Each perceives the other as like himself, . .

Now the guiltless, which would be those being out from first gear who are not thinking but who are letting the Voice for Truth determine what is real and what everything is, he will see the one who thinks he's guilty as guiltless. He will see him as unworthy of reaction and deserving only of love because he knows that the sense of guilt that this brother is laboring under isn't true even though he believes it is.

Now, the one who is guiltless, who sees his brother as guiltless, in some ways has a tough row to hoe—just like me, because you all listen to me from second gear. And so, you give me attributes that you apply to yourself. And I must constantly address you in a way that throws you off guard so that you might accidentally hear what I'm really saying. And this is what one who is guiltless must do, and this is what one who is guiltless finds it easy to do, over and over and over again, forever. And that's you coming into your right Mind and being out from your right Mind. That is the Atonement.

Again . . .

Each perceives the other as like himself, making them unable to communicate because each sees the other UNLIKE the way he sees HIMSELF. God can communicate ONLY to the Holy Spirit in your mind because only He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . shares the knowledge of what you are with God.

And of course, the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind.

And only the Holy Spirit can ANSWER God for you, for only He knows what God IS. Everything else that you have placed within your mind . . .

. . . through the use of imagination and thinking . . .

. . . CANNOT exist, for what is not in communication with the Mind of God has never been. Communication with God is life.

Whew! Key statement!

Communication with God is life. Nothing without it IS at all.

So when you do this practice during the next two weeks, be aware, that after observing your thinking, after observing the streaming of thoughts and you say, "But"—meaning in spite of these thoughts . . .

"My mind is part of God's. I am very holy."

That's the opening up of communication with God. That's the reason for it. It isn't just to say . . .

"My mind is a part of God's."

"Isn't that wonderful? Isn't that a wonderful thing to know? Go and tell everyone, 'Our mind is part of God's.' Spread the news, 'Our mind is part of God's.'" No, don't spread the news, "Our mind is part of God's." Go inside yourself with that statement and its meaning and let yourself into the experience of that fact and what happens then will be worth sharing, except that you won't have it on your mind to share as an idea or as a thought. You'll be being the transformational presence of Love. Why? Not for any reason. Just because that is what you are.

Communication with God is life.

Being without thinking constitutes being joined with God and that is Life! It's very fundamental, it's very simple, but it is profound. The allowing of that experience in you is what the Atonement is.

[Repeats] The allowing of that experience in you is what the Atonement is.

Continuing . . .

The only part of your mind that has reality is the part which links you still with God. Would you have ALL of it transformed into a radiant message of God's Love, to share with all the lonely ones who denied Him with you? GOD MAKES THIS POSSIBLE.

God is Omnipotent. There is none other than God. So if God makes this possible, it is possible. If it is possible, it is ridiculous not to embrace it with enthusiasm and diligence and, I'm going to say, a little self-discipline. And I'm asking you to bring this self-discipline into play everyday for the next two weeks—where you step back no matter what the circumstance is, and you observe the circumstance and what's going on in your mind. Observe whether there is a flow of thoughts, whether there's a constant running assessment, like a commentator on the news giving you a live feed of a real event in the world, who gives you his opinions [snaps fingers] off the top of his head as he tries the best he can to describe what's going on without having the full picture yet. That's you. That's you in your mind. As you go through your day you do this running commentary and you believe it, and you think that it is what makes you valuable. And I promise you, that the more intensely you engage in it, the less you are connected with the world, the less you are connected with your friends, your neighbors, your family, etc.

And you know what? People who end up preoccupied with what is going on in their mind instead of what is going on everywhere are called, "old." Where their minds have gone, they're just not with it anymore. All they can do is talk about uncle Henry or what happened in 1932, or what they think is going on right now, but which has nothing to do with what's going on.

You see, if the ultimate of living in your mind—meaning living with the streams of thoughts you're engaged in creating—if that means in its ultimate form, being ready to die being an ineffective presence, a meaningless presence, then stop doing it when it isn't that pronounced, and start doing what constitutes the Atonement.

So again, because it's important . . .

Would you have ALL of it . . .

. . . meaning your mind, not just the part which links you still with God.

Would you have ALL of It transformed into a radiant message of God's Love, . .

I'm going to stop there.

. . . radiant message of God's Love, . .

Now just everybody be careful not to romanticize words or turn them into religious bullshit.

Would you have ALL of . . .

. . . your mind . . .

... transformed into a radiant message of God's Love, . .

What would a "radiant message of God's Love" look like? Well, it would look like you being with your brother or sister, your neighbor, your fellow employee—whoever it might be—in a way that's very down-to-earth, very real and in a manner that makes it easy for others to like themselves in a way that reduces fear and invalidates a sense of guilt, and just by your being, generates peace and resolution. It doesn't mean that you'll stand there with streams of light exuding from your body and enveloping that one in a fire of mystery that's transformational and spectacular and weird and... perhaps scary.

God's Love is recognizably peaceful but alive, not conflicted, and that which dissolves conflict and generates harmony in a manner that's recognizable and understandable.

So, understanding that . . .

Would you have ALL of . . .

. . . your mind—not just the part which still links you with God . . .

Would you have ALL of it transformed into a radiant message of God's Love, to share with all the lonely ones who denied Him with you? GOD MAKES THIS POSSIBLE. Would you deny His yearning to be known? You yearn for Him as He for you.

That which is one, if it seems to be put in a position of being split into two, but which can't really be split into two, is always going to be the one insisting upon being one, insisting upon undoing that which creates an illusion of duality, an illusion of two-ness. That's what it means.

Would you deny His yearning . . .

. . . God's yearning . . .

. . . to be known? You yearn for Him as He for you.

And I'm going to say, you yearn for the Holy Spirit as the Holy Spirit yearns for you, because the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind and It hasn't stopped being that and It can't stop being that. And therefore, every moment of your existence, when you're trying to deny it and be a mind in your own right, on your own, you are going to be experiencing a yearning. That's your simple divine Sanity insisting upon being Whole and not having an illusion of duality.

You yearn for Him as He for you. This is forever changeless. Accept, then, the immutable. Leave the world of death behind, and return quietly to Heaven.

Um-m... pretty strong word . . .

Leave the world of death behind, . .

But remember, communication with God is Life. Communication with God is the experience, the full conscious experience of Creation without any part of it excluded from your conscious awareness and without you in any way separated from all of what Creations Is.

Communication with God is life.

Now it says . . .

Nothing without it IS at all.

But as long as you are insisting upon trying to go for the carrot of independence, you are going to seem to create an uncomfortable experience that is not life. So that's why it says . . .

Leave the world of death behind, . .

Leave the world of that which can't exist and therefore doesn't exist at all. Leave it behind. Abandon thinking! Abandon the thing that seems to create it. Leave it!

Leave the world of death behind, and return quietly to Heaven.

"My mind is part of God's."

Well, there's the shift. There's the willingness to know that there's a place other than second gear, that there's a circumstance other than orphanhood.

"My mind is part of God's."

You know what that means? That means that all of your mind is part of God's Mind. God constitutes all there is of your Mind. God constitutes all of your Mind.

Leave the world of death behind, and return quietly to Heaven.

Return quietly to your right Mind by abandoning the fight to achieve the right to have a mind of your own all by yourself. That's what it means.

Leave the world of death behind, and return quietly to Heaven.
There is NOTHING of value here, . .

Where? Here on planet Earth? Here in this Universe? No . . .

There is NOTHING of value here, . .

. . . in the world you are creating by virtue of causing what you call streaming consciousness, streaming thoughts, which, although you fool yourself into thinking that you're engaging in for the purpose of coping with life, you are actually engaging in it for no other purpose than to prove to yourself that you exist in your own right.

The thought has been expressed that sometimes infants cry to hear the sound of their voice to reassure themselves that they're alive. They like to hear the sound of their voice because it comforts them. Well, likewise you all think for the purpose of comforting yourself. And what is it that comforts you? Some kind of evidence that you exist in your own right. And that's exactly why there is such great fear to abandon it and allow the silence.

But it says . . .

Leave the world of death behind, . .

. . . leave second and third gear behind . . .

. . . and return quietly to Heaven.

. . . first gear.

There is NOTHING of value here, . .

. . . in second or third gear . . .

. . . and EVERYTHING of value there.

. . . in first gear. You in your right Mind.

Listen to the Holy Spirit, and to God through Him.

That is, when you embody it—the meaning of the Atonement.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . speaks of you to YOU.

Being nothing more than your right Mind, It reveals Itself to you as your right Mind.

He speaks of you to YOU. There IS no guilt in you, for God is blessed in His Son as the Son is blessed in Him.

You complete God as God completes you by being you. You, letting God be your Source, complete God consciously, and you close the circle, you might say. The little gap evaporates. And there is no separation.

Now, I gave you a practice for the coming two weeks. And this practice is very practical because it truly provides you with the opportunity to experience the Atonement in the only place where it can be experienced, which is in your Mind and is constituted of your shifting your valuing from your thinking to listening to the Voice for Truth, listening for God's Mind, listening for what God Knows. And letting that experience provide you with the real definitions of you—the holy one that you really Are and the holy one that your brothers truly Are.

It's going to happen as you shift from second gear to first gear. And when you do that shift, everything—the world, the universe, everything—is going to reflect God. Everything will be recognizably God Being All. Your brother will be transformed. You will be transformed. Everything will be transformed. That's what you say you want. And that truly is what you want. But you're going to have to use a little self-discipline.

Now, one last word. No matter how many surprising things you learn as a result of stepping back and noticing the streams of thoughts that are going through your mind multiple times during the day, no matter what kind of interesting things you discover, don't take them seriously, don't stand in awe of them, to the point where you neglect to say, "But!" You see, you must follow it with the word . . .

"But . . . My mind is part of God's. I am very holy."

If you find yourself having interesting discoveries as you do this, don't get together with other students of the Course who are doing it too and talk about the interesting things you discovered about your thinking. [Chuckling] It's irrelevant what the interesting things were about your thinking. What's relevant is if you say . . .

“But . . . My mind is part of God's. I am very holy.”

Now, when you do that, what happens, will be the wonderful things to share.

Don't become impressed with how apparently convoluted and complex and usually negative your thinking processes are. It's irrelevant. Notice them so that you can recognize them when they try to reassert themselves out of habit, so that you can say once again, more [snaps fingers] quickly . . .

“But . . . My mind is part of God's. I am very holy.”

I love you. And I look forward to being with you two weeks from tonight. Have fun with the practice. Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 18th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Well, you've had two weeks to practice. It was an opportunity for learning. Learning, meaning to move you into greater clarity so that you're able to be on the beam or on target better. The target, not being of course, a carrot that you're going to aim for, but the target being a silent mind where no static is present interfering with your ability to be fully present with whatever is going on with a capacity to respond to it with love because in the silence, you are desiring to know what love looks like because you want to be the evidence of love and because you want to see the evidence of love.

It's very simple. You are not here to live a lifetime in preparation for another lifetime. This is not a dress rehearsal for really living. This is not a dress rehearsal for really being. What this is, that you call life, is you being the ultimate, you being maximally. But only paying attention to the teeniest ensiest bit of it and choosing to ignore the rest or distract yourself from the rest by a process called "thinking."

If you want to have a description of why you are here, you're here to wake up. You're here for the last incarnation, if you will. You're here for the last attempt to function from second gear. You're here for the last residential class [chuckles] in the orphanage on how to be an orphan who finally becomes a real boy or a real girl. You're here to be healed of ignorance and you're here to be the presence of that which heals ignorance in your relationship with each other.

As we go into the book, it begins by saying:

Each one of you has a special part to play in the Atonement, . . .¹

. . . each one of you—and I'm going to broaden it a little bit, so it doesn't sound like I'm speaking down to you—each one of us has a special part to play in the Atonement. Each one of us has a gift to give. And the gift that each of us has to give—and I mean by that, it's a gift that each one of us already has, each one of you already has. So it's not a gift you have to earn the capacity to give, and it's not a skill that you have to acquire. It's something already present in you.

The gift that each of us has to give is the willingness to hold our brother up to the Father, if you will, to present our brother or sister to our Father, in an act of honoring what is true about them. I promise you, you can't do that when you're thinking. Because thinking, as I've said before, is always an act of self-preservation engaged in, because there is an underlying fundamental belief that you are not valid, but you can become actualized, that you are potentially divine but not divine yet. And therefore, anything you do that embodies acts of thinking are all about you and not about your brother. They're all about you and they're not about Creation—the Kingdom of Heaven that is confronting you. And so healing cannot occur. And your function is not fulfilled.

Now again . . .

Each one of you has a special part to play in the Atonement, but the message given to each to share is always the same; GOD'S SON IS GUILTLESS.

Now, each one of you can approach your brother or embrace your brother intellectually, and by virtue of using really good choices of words, attempt to convey to them the fact that they are guiltless. You can, by a good choice of words, inspire them to have faith that they are guiltless and that as a result, they can dare to behave in the world without fear where their actions are not based on self-preservation.

But you know what? That isn't what will convey to them that they are guiltless. What will convey to them that they are guiltless is, as you present to them, like I am presenting to you, that there is a way of thinking that they're engaging in, called an orphan mindset—called second gear—and that as long as they're in second gear, third gear is going to accompany them, not because it's real, not because the guilt and fear that are third gear have presence and power that can hold them hostage, but that they are necessary accompaniments to a belief that isn't true, that belief being, that they have a mind of their own and the way it functions and accomplishes things is through thinking.

How do you show a brother he's guiltless?

You show a brother that he's guiltless by talking to the holy one that he is, the holy one that you are able to see because you have abandoned second gear yourself—you are no longer opting for the right to behave as though you're an orphan. And your only goal, instead of self-preservation, is to hold that brother up, to lift that brother up as a gift to The Father, by your acknowledgement of what is divinely true about him and letting that vision—I'm not going to say, "holding that vision"—letting that vision abide with you, without distracting yourself from it by any method of thought power.

Now, you may have found it difficult over the past two weeks in doing the practice. Perhaps you got pretty good at hesitating and noticing what was going on, not out there but in your own mind, and what the nature and character of the flow of thoughts was. But then, you may have been confronted by something unexpected, something that threw you off balance, something that you felt required you to reconnoiter. Oh-h... reconnoiter: Look at everything again to get your balance and to get control back. And of course, the way you reconnoiter is by thinking everything through, so that you're sure you're not missing a thing, you're not neglecting anything as you adjust to the new circumstances, whether the new circumstances are unexpected good or whether the unexpected circumstances are negative.

If something really good happened, or if something apparently really negative happened, you might have found that it took you 3 or 4 or 5 days or even a week before you even realized that you had stopped paying attention to what was going on in your mind, and noticing that you were trying to cope with the excessive good or the excessive bad through thinking.

Those are the times especially, where it is valuable to step back, notice what you're thinking, and then say . . .

"But... My mind is part of God's. I am very holy."

Now under these circumstances that I've described, making that statement might seem like holding a cross up to a vampire—a nice platitude to throw out in the face of whatever is disturbing, not something that you actually believe or feel, but a good strong statement . . .

"My mind is part of God's"

. . . with your cross up . . .

"My mind is part of God's."

. . . and . . .

"I am very holy."

And the statement is itself a defense which is an attack, not an acknowledgment of any sort.

It can become easy to forget that the reason for making the statement is to remind yourself that it's not natural for you not to be connected with your Father and operate from an artificial place called second gear, where you are using a mind that you think you have all by yourself, in order to cope and survive and succeed. It's not natural. And so, when you say . . .

“My mind is part of God's.”

. . . you're reminding yourself that your mind is not part of an orphan mindset, your mind is not an independent thing that belongs only to you and that you, through the skillful use of your mind, can deal with problems well, or through the poor use of your mind can suffer from problems.

That's not what your mind is and that's not what you are. Your mind is part of God's: First gear. It's a reminder that you're not supposed to take seriously the suggestion that you're on your own and you can work things out all by yourself and in fact you have to work things out all by yourself.

“My mind is part of God's.”

I exist in a different context than the one I was operating from—out of fear and with guilt. You see?

Now I want to point something else out. There is someone holding you up. There is someone holding you up to the Father and presenting you to the Father, acknowledging the Truth about you constantly, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, unvaryingly. It's the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind. Your connection with your Father has never been broken, because that part of you which you're not paying any attention to at the moment, continues to present you to the Father truthfully. And you could say, that in so doing, the Father never loses touch with you. And I hold you up, every single one of you. And those who are Awake hold those up who are assigned to them. You must remember this. You're bound to wake up.

If you got discouraged during the past two weeks, I'm telling you, persist. I'm telling you that your discouragement comes from still identifying with the orphanage, still identifying with second gear, still identifying with the belief that you, through the proper use of your mind can make things all right. And when you're doing that, you're saying that all of this help, all of this support that is being provided to you doesn't exist—at least you're going to ignore it because you choose to do things by yourself. Nevertheless, the Love you are embraced with, and the Love with which what is true about you is held up to the Father, is enormous. And I encourage you, I invite you, I ask you to invite It in, whether you're discouraged or not. Just because I gave you the practice for two weeks doesn't mean to stop now.

You really do want to arrive at the point where you are, in your relationships with your brothers and sisters, desiring more than anything else to hold what is true about them up to the Father, presenting to the Father with all honor and respect, this guiltless brother or sister, in acknowledgement of what is true of them even if they're not believing it at the moment. That is the gift you have to give. That is the part you play in the Atonement.

Again . . .

Each one of you has a special part to play in the Atonement, but the message given to each to share is always the same; GOD'S SON IS GUILTLESS. Each one teaches the message differently, and learns it differently. Yet until he teaches it and learns it, he will suffer the pain of dim awareness that his true function remains unfulfilled in him. The burden of guilt . . .

. . . no matter how it's labeled . . .

The burden of guilt is heavy, but God would not have you bound by it.

It's not part of His plan.

His plan for your awaking is as perfect as yours is fallible.

Now, we've talked about how it's fallible and so we're not going to go further into that at the moment. The point is, that . . .

His plan for your awaking is as perfect as yours is fallible. You know not what you do, but He Who knows is with you.

He Who knows, times three. He Who knows, the Father, is with you. He Who knows, the Holy Spirit, is with you. He Who is Awake is with you. I'm with you.

You know not what you do, but He Who knows is with you.

It may not feel at all natural for you to go through your day or days doing this practice, because to you it seems so irrelevant to the actualities of your day and what everyone is presenting you with. It doesn't matter whether it doesn't feel natural. What it means is, that it's just not part of the culture that you live in, that's all. Culture is not fact. It's a mutually agreed upon definition, or definitions and behaviors. You are here to establish a new culture. And amazingly you're here to establish a culture of what? Love. Isn't that amazing.

So, if it doesn't feel natural to you to remind yourself that you're not here to think... but that in the silence you are here to be able to recognize the truth and act out from that truth that you've recognized. You're here to be the presence of Love persistently enough and consistently enough for a new manifestation of loveliness in your relationships and in your world to manifest, so that there is greater justification for everyone joining in the establishment of a new culture—a culture not based upon fear and hate, a culture not based upon self-protection, but rather a culture based on the extension of the acknowledgement of the guiltlessness of your brother, the holiness of your brother, which you're engaging in because you're holding your brother up to God in full acknowledgement and honoring of what is Real and true about him. You see?

Well you say, “Well, cultures are sluggish. They change ver-r-r-y slowly.” But I promise you, cultures change in a flash [snaps fingers] when everyone is fed up with what isn't working. So don't labor under a projected idea of difficulty that is confronting you that will make it totally unreasonable for you to engage in an act that is discouraging because it's not received quickly.

You know not what you do, but He Who knows is with you. His gentleness is yours, . .

Of course it is. The Father's gentleness is present in his Son or Daughter. The gentleness of Sons or Daughters who are not estranged from their Father is extended to you likewise.

His gentleness is yours, . .

It's yours as well. And it's extended to you because in actuality you don't really have any other option. You don't really have the option to hate. You don't really have the option to instill guilt. You imagine that you do. And you go around implementing your imagination and accomplishing nothing. I know, it doesn't seem that way to you, you think you're really accomplishing something. But that's part of the culture that you're here to change by virtue of doing something new with your mind: Listening instead of thinking. Being receptive instead of being proactively noisy to the exclusion of being able to hear what fits into a Creation that is already in perfect harmony.

I want you to contemplate this: If Creation is infinite and if Creation actually were flawed, Creation would instantly end catastrophically, because infinite conflict [chuckling] constitutes instantaneous nonexistence—instantaneous total destruction. If you are experiencing existence in any way, shape or form right now, whether it seems to be a suffering experience or not, you may know that you are in a Universe—a Movement of Creation—that is absolutely unflawed. Be with that. Stay with that.

Because it will help you to deny or disregard the suggestions that you are in a conflicted universe, a polarized universe, one in which life and death exist side-by-side—two forces that work equally and have their successes and failures.

You have to have some means to challenge the feeling that you can't be an agent for the change of cultures.

You know not what you do, but He Who knows is with you. His gentleness is yours, and all the love you share with God He holds in trust for you. He would teach you nothing except how to be happy.

[Repeats] He would teach you nothing except how to be happy.

Now, this is for balance, because I know that those of you who engaged in the practice I gave you for the last two weeks, did not come out with an entirely positive resulting attitude or feeling about it, because the culture of orphanhood that you were coming out of or that you are coming out of is so strong at the moment.

Listen . . .

Blessed Son . . .

. . . blessed Daughter . . .

. . . of a wholly blessing Father, joy was created for YOU.

Oh-h, but that's not part of your culture, is it?

Blessed Son of a wholly blessing Father, joy was created for YOU.

Not for someone else, not for another time, not for the "sweet by-and-by after you die." It was created for you.

Well, you are here aren't you? You are now aren't you? You are present aren't you? Well, that which is here now, present . . .

. . . joy was created for YOU.

Embrace that as part of the new culture in your mind.

. . . joy was created for YOU.

Well... why? I mean, you can say, "Oh, that's nice. Joy was created for me." And you can just think of joy as a commodity or as... "Well, there's some joy here and there's some joy there, I'm going to pick a bundle of joy here and put it in my suitcase and a little more joy over here and I anticipate some joy tomorrow and...” No, we’re not talking about that kind of joy. The joy that was created for you is a joy that’s connected to something. The joy that was created for you is connected to the Love, the active Love, the active conscious Love expressed by the Father for His Creation. You see?

An orphan could go around and collect little experiences of joy and build up a large suitcase full of joy that had been acquired—this loose, floating around sort of joy that’s not connected to anything. But real joy was created for you by Whom? your Father! “Ah-h, I’m not an orphan. You’re not an orphan,” that’s what it means. Joy was created for you by that which proves that you’re not an orphan. And you’re not in a state of loss in which you can move around and collect bits of good and bits of joy, and collect them and save them up and hoard them, and perhaps someday be wealthy with joy, you see. A wealth that doesn’t represent a Birthright, right? It’s a wealth that speaks of your ability to hoard well.

But the joy that we’re talking about is a gift from your Father. And included in the gift is the remembrance of who you Are, which is the direct expression of God. And therefore, you have a Birthright that is constituted of all that the Father expresses of Himself in every part of Creation. It is an act of Love that constitutes you and embraces you.

Blessed Son of a wholly blessing Father, joy was created for YOU.

Again, embrace this. It’s a part of the new culture. It’s part of the only culture.

Who can condemn whom God has blessed?

I would ask: Who would? Only an orphan who doesn’t know there is a God and doesn’t know that his human brother is the offspring of the same Parent, God, and therefore, is more interested in protecting himself against his brother than holding his brother up in acknowledgement of what is true about him to their mutual Father, in honor of the Father’s Creation right there.

There is nothing in the Mind of God that does not share his shining innocence. Creation is the natural extension of perfect purity.

Again, such meanings are not a part of the culture that you live in. But it is the culture of your Being, no matter where you are listening to this, no matter what country you’re in. The culture of Love needs to be illuminated, expressed, embodied, actualized, if you will. That’s the gift you have to give. Each one of you has a special part to play in the Atonement.

You see, there’s nothing frivolous about your being here. It’s not just another lifetime. It’s not a fluke of physical life where a sperm and an egg happened randomly, by chance, to join and create this incredibly individual, individuality that you are, who exists whether you believe in God or not, whether there is a God or not. No. You have a role to play, a special part to play in the Atonement. But the message given to each to share is always the same: God's Son is guiltless. That's your gift. That's the incredible meaningfulness of your presence. And you won't get any "gold stars" for this. But you will get your right Mind back. You will get your Sanity back, in which this culture that we're talking about, which seems so strange, will be seen as utterly normal, natural.

Again . . .

Creation is the natural extension of perfect purity. Your only calling here is to devote yourself, with active willingness, to the denial of guilt in ALL its forms.

How do you engage in the denial of guilt? By holding up that which would be called guilty with the specific goal of acknowledging that one's guiltlessness to your common Father, which identifies the one you're holding up, and you, and the Father as Family—as One, as absolutely, I'm going to say, bound by, circumscribed by the Birthright that comes from God. You're bound by it. You're bound to it. It is bound to you. It can't be lost. You can't mislay it. You might choose not to pay any attention to it, but it's inescapable.

Your only calling here is to devote yourself, with active willingness, to the denial of guilt in ALL its forms. To accuse . . .

. . . to make guilty . . .

. . . is NOT TO UNDERSTAND. The happy learners of the Atonement become the teachers of the innocence that is the right of all that God created.

Hear that?

The happy learners of the Atonement become the teachers of the innocence that is the right of all that God created.

You teach your brother his innocence. How? By ramming it down his throat? No, by lifting him up to the Father and acknowledging to the Father so that Family is embraced, not that which could end up being a brotherly squabble. You see? Don't try to cram your brother's innocence down his throat. Stand with your brother and talk to your Father and acknowledge to your Father what is true about your brother or sister.

Now, the interesting thing is, that at the moment because of the culture you are acclimated to, you don't know what the truth is about your brother so that you might lift him up to the Father in acknowledgement of it. And so, you must do this practice of stepping back to notice what's going on in your mind and then saying, "But, this thinking and static and everything that's going on is not in any way the truth about me."

My mind is part of God's.

Now we're shifting gears.

And I am very holy.

Now, if you're doing the practice correctly, you've stopped thinking and there is some silence, because you don't want to energize that which isn't true about you and that which evokes a misperception of who and what you Are. And now you're joined with the Father, with your attention on Him and a desire to know what the truth about your brother is, or you can ask me, or you can ask your Guide. But the point is, you've got to ask, so that the Father or the Holy Spirit or me can answer you and reveal to you the truth about your brother, so that then you can lift it up to the Father.

The simple fact is that you've got to stop being blocked by whatever ugly or ignorant presentation your brother is making of himself towards you, or whatever negative picture you are holding about him, because you know that holding on to either one of those is going to keep you in the realm of self-protection—which is thinking—and which is inseparable from the experience of guilt and fear. And this is the gift you're here to make—to care more about knowing the truth about your brother than the belief you're holding about him or the beliefs he's holding about himself. Your only calling here—not complicated, not ten thousand things to do—your only calling here is to devote yourself with active willingness to the denial of guilt in all its forms.

Continuing further . . .

The happy learners of the Atonement . . .

. . . those who aren't whining too much about how hard it is to escape the culture you're coming out of, but who really desire to have a new experience. They . . .

The happy learners of the Atonement become the teachers of the innocence that is the right of all that God created.

Or we could say, the Birthright of all that God Created.

Deny them not what is their due, for you will not withhold it from them alone.

The inheritance . . .

. . . here it is the Birthright . . .

The inheritance of the Kingdom is the right of God's Son, given him in his creation.

The Father withheld nothing of what He was in the Creation of every aspect of Creation, including you.

The inheritance of the Kingdom is the right . . .

. . . the Birthright . . .

. . . of God's Son, given him in his creation. Do not try to steal it from him, or you will ASK for guilt and WILL experience it.

You will ask for guilt and you will experience it. That's your prize. That's what you get for operating from second gear. But . . .

Protect his purity from every thought that would steal it away and keep it from his sight. Bring innocence to light, in answer to the call of the Atonement. Never allow purity to remain hidden, but shine away the heavy veils of guilt within which . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . the Son of God has hidden himself from his own sight.

[Repeats] Never allow purity to remain hidden, . .

There's two aspects to that. Your brother can approach you and behave in a way that discloses an absence of his purity. Don't let him succeed at it. Don't let him successfully hide it. But also, don't block your perception of it because, "you're too busy, or you're better than he is, or he has done you wrong." Don't justify covering up his purity yourself.

Never allow purity to remain hidden, . .

That's part of the new culture. That's part of the culture of Reality. That's part of the culture that will illuminate Reality as you take the time and the courage and the intent to bring it forth.

We are all joined in the Atonement here, and nothing else can unite us in this world.

See how simple?

We are all joined in the Atonement here, . .

. . . as I said, although the book says each one of you has a special part to play in the Atonement, each one of us has a special part to play in the Atonement.

We are all joined . . .

. . . every Son or Daughter of God, Awake or not,

We are all joined in the Atonement here, . .

There's no other action, there's no other movement of any actuality occurring except the movement of Atonement. That's why each one of you has a special part to play. That's why each one of you is far from meaningless.

We are all joined in the Atonement here, . .

And nothing else can unite us in this world. There aren't five thousand other things that can be done to unite us in this world. Just the one thing.

So will the world of separation . . .

. . . the orphanage . . .

. . . slip away, and full communication be restored between the Father and the Son.

How? By talking to God? No. By making the gift to your brother, of holding him up to the Father in acknowledgement of and honor of that which is absolutely true of him and of his guiltlessness.

So will the world of separation slip away, and full communication be restored between the Father and the Son.

. . . through the reestablishment in Love of the whole and wholeness of Family.

Let me end with something real simple. If accident or disease or anything seems to have put you in a position of agony and suffering and threat of death, you do not deserve it! It is not your Birthright to acquiesce to it. And although you might be able to say, "Here's the way I created this for myself," and blame yourself, the fact is that you don't deserve it. And it's not even actual.

If God did not created it, it hasn't happened. And it's an illusion for you to become free of. If at this moment, any of you are experiencing agony or suffering of the sort I've mentioned, you know that you want to be free of it and you know that you deserve to be free of it, and that you are not required to suffer through the end of whatever learning might need to occur, that there is no justification for another moment of suffering.

Now I am telling you that that is correct. And I am acknowledging the truth about you to you. And I am at the same time, lifting you up to the Father in my acknowledgement of the truth of you, and you are blessed. And you deserve it. And I will tell you this: Your brother deserves the very same thing from you, at every moment!

So, in the clarity of knowing that you deserve to be free of suffering that is an illegitimate imposition upon a Child of God, you have the feeling capacity to recognize the utter appropriateness of your extending that very same thing to your brother, no matter what you thought before I said this about your brother, and no matter what your brother is thinking about himself.

So will the world of separation slip away, and full communication be restored between the Father and the Son.

Backing up to the previous page to end:

Communication with God is life.

I love you to God. I love you right up to the Father and complete the connection between you and the Father, by keeping it alive in my mind until you are able to keep it alive in yours. And it is done.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You are all going to find out, that as you're willing to leave second gear, that when you're ready and willing to abandon the orphan mindset and shift back to first gear, you're going to give up something that you didn't think you were going to give up. I'm clueing you into it tonight.

What it is that you'll be giving up is your personality—the face you present to the world—the face you present to yourself to establish your belief in yourself.

The simple fact is, that what you call your identity which is mostly personality, is the defense mechanism you developed for self-protection "in the world." In other words, it's not that great or that magnanimous a thing. It's really a shield. It's really a defense. It's really the way you protect yourself against all the threat that exists "out there" as you grew up in the orphanage in the world.

You tried out different behaviors. You tried out different physical behaviors, different mental behaviors, different interactive behaviors to see what worked for you. And some of you have defense mechanisms that look like being a wimp—your defense mechanism is a matter of constantly saying in one way or another, "Poor me... poor me... can't you see how poor I am... can't you see how much I need help...won't you help me?" If you get really good at this, you can command quite a bit of authority over those around you, who, out of pity for you, will give you exactly what you want—exactly what you did all of this for. And yet, you weren't like the bully who says, "Damn it! Give me what I want. If you don't give me what I want I'm going to punch you out! I'm going to hurt you!"

And that's the way control is exercised for the purpose of protecting one's self.

And so, everybody gets to know your personality. And if your personality is pretty consistent, they will call it, "your individuality." When all along, all it is, is a style of behavior, which you have created for self-protection.

Now, some of you use styles of behavior that are "very civilized" that appear to be almost flawless and appear to be entirely generous, thoughtful, caring. And yet the fact is, that you behave in this way because you know the people will respond in a way that meets your needs. And so it's a way you survive—it's a way you protect yourself and doesn't necessarily have anything to do with having connected with and related to the person you are manipulating by your "civilized behavior."

Now, if you didn't know this, you might get stuck quite a long time in making the shift from second gear to first gear, because you would try to bring your personality/individuality along with you from second gear to first gear—from the orphanage to Home. And you would find yourself becoming frustrated because the shift won't occur even though you're expecting it.

You're not an orphan. And everything you've believed about yourself from within the orphan mindset is not true. This is why there is something absolutely essential to Waking up, and that is, yielding to Something different from you. The Holy Spirit is that which is nothing more than your right Mind. But you do not recognize yourself as that. You have disowned that. You have put it on the back burner: "Out of sight, out of mind." No. But out of sight, ignoring it, you don't remember it.

In order to wake up, you have to become re-united with that which is nothing more than your right Mind. And in order for that to happen, you're going to have to abandon what you call your identity—what you currently call your identity. You're going to have to be willing to let go of your personality.

You're going to have to let in that which is not recognizable to you at the moment even though it is utterly you. And that's why you must dare to become silent and listen with the desire to hear the Holy Spirit, or your Guide. You must transfer your attention from selfishness, to what we'll call, otherness, because the Holy Spirit seems to be something not you.

You can't take who you think you are with you into the Kingdom of Heaven. Another way of saying that is, you can't take who you think you are with you into the conscious experience of what you really Are.

Now, I want you to tuck that information away, but don't forget it. We're not going to discuss it further at the present time. But remain aware of it.

Now the simple fact is, that fear and love cannot occupy the same space.

Love is essential to healing. Love is essential to the experience to right-mindedness. Love is essential to waking up. Love, which is the opposite of isolation, is essential to your making the shift from second gear to first gear.

Some of you, as you have been doing the practice over the last three weeks now, may have found it difficult to acknowledge the guiltlessness of your brother or sister and be willing to hold your brother or sister up to the Father in acknowledgement of what is true about them. The reason being, that for one reason or another, you're in a state of fear. And you found that in the state of fear, when you did remember about the practice and tried to do it, you not only weren't able to, you quite adamantly didn't want to. Why? Because when you are afraid, it is essential to behave in aggressive self-protection—you see, defensiveness, isolation. And in that state of fear, you can't be too sure which one of your brothers or sisters is safe to be defenseless with and which ones are not safe to be defenseless with. And so you're not about to let down your guard because you're overcome with fear. You see?

You've had the experience, if you've tried to do the practice when fear has a grip on you, that it's impossible and you don't even want to do it because it's inconsistent with your need to be protected. And you didn't know that. You didn't know that that was an aspect of the dynamic of fear. You didn't know that when you are afraid and you're not challenging the fear you're feeling, you automatically block that which would relieve the fear. You automatically block that which would alter the circumstances which seem to be calling for the fear.

Now that you've had that experience, and you understand it experientially, you can in the future, when fear arises, challenge it. Don't just sit there nurturing it. Don't roll it over in your mind and feel all of the awfulness of it and how justified it is, and what a miserable state of affairs it is for you to be caught in fear and stuck there.

If you know that love and fear cannot occupy the same space at the same time, then bring into the space of your experience, that which fear can't be in the presence of. Simple. Bring Love in.

Well, here's a simple way you can do it. It's not an ultimate way, but it's a beginning: When you find yourself consumed with fear, immobilized by fear, find things to appreciate. Let there be little acknowledgements of gratitude for this or that or the other thing. "I'm so grateful I'm not freezing to death like I was during the winter. I'm so glad it's cloudy but not raining because I have some things I need to do." See, these are not even totally positive appreciations or gratitudes, but they are expressions of gratitude and they shift the attention—they shift the energy in you.

Ultimately, what you need to do is to find in your experience, a brother to love—a brother to appreciate—not just someone who did a kind thing for you last week that you really appreciate. That's a wonderful thing to appreciate, but I want it to go further than that. Because you see, when you say, "I really appreciate that Joe knew something about cars and was able to reset something in my car that I didn't know how to do—how to fix." When that kind of gratitude is still just between the two of you, it doesn't lift your brother up to the Father. And without lifting your brother up to the Father in acknowledgment of his value and his worth, the experience of Family, the experience of unity in the context of Reality, isn't occurring.

If you don't lift your brother up to the Father, if you don't love your brother as an expression of gratitude and acknowledgement of truth about him to your Father, it leaves the inseparable oneness of Creation un-illuminated. It leaves it in the shadows where it can't be seen. And if you do not lift your brother into the conscious sense of Family—of your both having a common Father/Mother—you leave yourself out as well. If you leave yourself out, you're still in second gear, not where you really want to be.

So, you must do what relieves you of fear when fear has a grip on you, and you must do it in a way that not only relieves you of the experience of fear, but that which introduces Love into the arena and in the presence of Love, re-unites you, your brother and your Father/Mother once again. Because that is what will promote the sudden shift of perception, called a miracle, in which you suddenly find yourself in first gear, absent fear, absent loneliness, absent vulnerability, present with your brother's guiltlessness and your own guiltlessness, and absent the personality that you so lovingly created for yourself as you grew up in the orphanage, thus allowing you to be in a new way, arising not out of practiced habits, but out of present ongoing communion with the Father in which you let His perspective fill you and be the ground from which you behave.

Some people move from one country to another and take out citizenship in the new country and give up their original citizenship. That is a pretty dynamic step—a pretty emotional step, a pretty significant step—because you are letting what used to identify you to you and everyone else, go, and you are embracing something new that will identify you to you and to everyone else.

Waking up is sort of like that. It's giving up citizenship in orphanland, which means giving up who you thought you were, and giving up how you behaved in that particular context. Oh-h, is that a little scary? Or is that, perhaps, something you can think of more positively? Might that not be rebirth? Might that not be redemption, where old things have passed away and all things have become new? You like those phrases—"Where old things have passed away and all things have become new.” Now you know it means including you.

Let’s go into the book.

The miracle . . . ¹

. . . the sudden shift of awareness, the sudden shift of perception . . .

The miracle acknowledges the guiltlessness which MUST have been denied to produce NEED of healing.

If you’re in need of healing, somewhere along the line you must have denied your guiltlessness. Well, you say, [chuckling] “Well, yeah, of course I did. I made an ass out of myself. I was a fool. I deserve everything I got.” Wrong! Change your behavior by letting that Mind be in you, which is your real Mind—the Holy Spirit.

The miracle acknowledges the guiltlessness which MUST have been denied to produce NEED of healing. Do not withhold this glad acknowledgment, . .

What glad acknowledgement? Did it talk about... oh yeah, the miracle acknowledges the guiltlessness. Hm-m... the miracle acknowledges... A sudden shift of perception is an acknowledgement of something new isn’t it! The miracle acknowledges guiltlessness. The miracle acknowledges perfection. The miracle acknowledges who you really Are. The miracle acknowledges who your brother or sister really Is. Ah-h... the miracle acknowledges what the Universe is: The Kingdom of Heaven.

Do not withhold this glad acknowledgment, . .

. . . the glad acknowledgement that the miracle is.

Do not withhold this glad acknowledgment, for hope of happiness and release from suffering of every kind lie in it.

Now you know that the miracle—the sudden shift of perception—involves a sudden shift in how you recognize yourself, not the personality you thought you were, not the character that you carefully developed. That’s part of the glad acknowledgement of who you really Are.

. . . release from suffering of every kind lie in it.

The miracle, the glad acknowledgment.

Who is there but wishes to be free of pain?

Everyone. Right? Everyone.

Who is there but wishes to be free of pain? He may not yet have learned HOW to exchange his guilt for innocence, nor realize that only in this exchange can freedom from pain be his.

And you could read it with reference to yourself: You may not yet have learned how to exchange your guilt for innocence, nor realize that only in this exchange can freedom from pain be yours.

Yet, those who have failed to learn need . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . TEACHING, NOT attack. To attack those who have need of teaching is to fail to learn from them.

. . . fail to learn from them . . .

To attack those who have need of teaching . . .

Well, that certainly seems to imply that if you're attacking someone who is in need of teaching, you are there to be the one to do the teaching. But you thought all you had to do was have a reaction—perhaps a self-righteous reaction. "Yeah, well what can you expect?" The same kind of self-righteous reaction you apply to yourself: "What could I expect? I was an ass-hole. I deserve everything I got." You don't think that's self-righteous but it is. It's a little strange isn't it... that you self-righteously stand there and judge yourself? "Well I deserve everything I get—I deserve the suffering I'm having!" [Chuckling] And you believe yourself. You say that and you don't even recognize how ridiculous that is. You self-righteously judge the unrighteous bastard that you're defining yourself as. And you don't even wince at the lack of logic. You would rather wince at the suffering that you deserve because you were so stupid!

Oh-h . . .

Yet those who have failed to learn need TEACHING, NOT attack. To attack those who have need of teaching is to fail to learn from them.

You're here, you're here, you're here to learn how to let go of your personality. You're here to learn how to let go of the individuality that you have created such a wonderful presentation of. And you're here to do it by not relating to each other self-righteously, not relating to each other on the basis of principles that you mentally apply to each other and to your own behavior toward each other.

You're to let go of your personality by becoming defenseless with your brother. Ah-h, that means that when you are in a state of fear you've got to become defenseless enough to connect with them so that you might feel their need, so that you might be able to experience the influx of clarity that allows you to answer their need, because you've really connected with what they divinely are, and can provide them with the acknowledgement of their innocence of their guiltlessness. And you do it. And so you learn from them. And you teach by loving. You teach by extending the acknowledgement of their value and their worth and their Meaning.

Teachers of innocence, each in his own way, have joined together, taking their part in the unified curriculum of the Atonement.

Well, teachers of innocence... that's you, that's you, that's you, you, you, you, you, everyone. Why are you teachers of innocence? Not because it's a glorious thing to do, but because you are nothing less than the Mind of God extending Itself in acknowledgement of the value and worth of everything that allows you to see all of creation without distortion, without conflict or polarization, with absolute utter harmony and beauty.

You're here to teach innocence, because experiencing innocence is your Birthright. It's the only thing God gave you the capacity to do because you are His offspring and you reflect Him.

There is no unity of learning goals apart from this. There is no conflict in this curriculum, which has ONE aim however it is taught.

No matter what words the aim might come out in, no matter what language it is expressed in, there's no conflict in it.

Each effort made on its behalf is offered for the single purpose of RELEASE from guilt, to the eternal glory of God and His creation.

I know, those words are once again grand and nebulous in terms of meaning. But you know what? At times each one of you—maybe only twice, maybe only once—each one of you has had the experience of being touched. You would call it being touched in a relationship with another, or in a relationship with an environment, or in relationship with nature. It was a moment of release from guilt in which what you would call illumination occurred, totally unasked for, but incredible. It constituted a release from guilt into an experience of holiness. It was a divine experience that you could apply no other word to other than divine. You've had it at least once. And you'll never forget it. And you haven't forgotten it.

So that's a taste of the experience of the eternal glory of God and His creation. What I'm trying to bring out to you is that, that taste occurred right here on planet Earth, right here in your relationships with each other. You had a taste of the Kingdom of Heaven right where the Kingdom of Heaven is, even though you have called it something else, a material universe—relationships with other egos, relationships with organisms. You know, just things that came spontaneously, generated physically by physicality, a sperm and an egg, you know. And it happened while you were relating to nothing but a bunch of other conditioned responses that you call a personality and that they call their personalities, and they're responding to your conditioned responses that you call your personality. You see?

How awful, how short-sighted, how shallow, how depthless and meaningless an experience you're generally having of Reality, of the Kingdom of Heaven, of the other Sons and Daughters of God's that are your brothers and sisters because you're one of God's Children too.

So, it's a wonderful thing to be reminded that you are teachers of innocence. You're teachers of innocence because the acknowledgement of innocence is the one capacity that God has given you. And the capacity to think that you think God gave you, God didn't give you.

So you see, we're learning of shifts of different kinds as you move from second gear to first gear.

Each effort made on its behalf . . .

. . . the Atonement . . .

. . . is offered for the single purpose of RELEASE from guilt, to the eternal glory of God and His creation.

Which is nothing more than an incredibly clear experience of the reality of everything that's going on in your face at this moment.

And every teaching that points to this points straight to Heaven, and to the peace of God. There is no pain, no trial, no fear that teaching this can fail to overcome. The power of God Himself supports this teaching, and GUARANTEES its limitless results.

"Yeah... yeah... yeah... right! 'Guarantees its limitless results.' I'll tell you, last week I didn't experience any limitless results. I didn't have time to have limitless results because I was so upset with so-and-so. And I had a right to be. He's such a bastard that I had to use every bit of my energy and all of my time to defend myself against his abusing me, taking advantage of me, hurting me. [Chuckling] You want me to hold him up to God and acknowledge something of value in him? Oh yeah, I know, you want me... to hell with him... you want me to use my mind well. That's a real mind-fuck that you're trying to pull on me. You want me to watch how I'm using my mind, when that bastard out there is intent upon taking advantage of me? Hell no, that's asinine."

Well, there you have an example of somebody securely stuck in second gear—that's all, that's all. You've just watched and heard an expression of being second gearish. And that's all, that's all it was.

Now if somebody else were the one behaving like that and you were watching and I was with you and I said, "Look at that example of being stuck in second gear." You would say, "Wow, yeah, it's clear as a bell to me." But let me point at you and say, "Look at yourself doing that," and you'll bristle immediately. You won't be able to see it, because you know better than anyone else how threatened you are and how essential it is to be defended. And you will fixate on your brother out there as the reason for your needing to be defended. And you will refuse to bother to notice how you're using your mind. You will refuse to abandon the highly focused attention on your brother so that you might bring some focused attention upon how you're using your mind. But until you're willing to take a look at how you're using your mind and until you're willing to look at it with a certain degree of logic, you won't be able to notice that you are refusing to allow that which will remove the fear that you're experiencing into the place or space where the fear is occurring. You won't let Love in. You won't let It in by daring to engage in an act of love and employing your mind in a different mode and energy. And so you will be stuck.

I'm telling this to you right now when, hopefully, you're not upset and not deeply in a state of fear so that you'll say, "I see what he's saying. I am grasping the meaning in a contextual way within me." And if you're getting it now it will be easier to remember this the next time you begin to be controlled by fear and justify self-protection and a refusal to lift your brother up and consequently lift yourself up. And you will be able to shift back into being a teacher of innocence.

The power of God Himself supports this teaching, and GUARANTEES its limitless results.

The simple fact is that if you bring Love into the space where fear is immobilizing you, the immobilization and the fear will leave. And you will not be immobilized and healing will absolutely occur. It's a Law! It's the Truth!

Join your own efforts to the power that CANNOT fail and MUST result in peace.

[Repeats] Join your own efforts . . .

Now, this is an invitation. It's also a command. If you want to wake up be obedient to this command and nothing will stand in your way. So it's not a command in the terms of coercion, it's just a command of guidance—very clear, very true, very simple guidance.

Join your own efforts to the power that CANNOT fail . . .

What power is that?

The power of God Himself . . .

. . . that . . .

. . . supports this teaching, and GUARANTEES its limitless results.

So, right in the thick of it, right when you're caught in fear and right when you're defending yourself against your brother, or so defended by something else that a call for Love from a brother can't be responded to, because you've got to be so busy defending yourself over in this other arena. Right in the thick of it . . .

Join your own efforts to the power that CANNOT fail and MUST result in peace. No-one can be untouched by teaching such as this. You will not see yourself beyond the power of God if you teach only this. You will not be exempt from the effects of this most holy lesson, which seeks but to restore what is the right of God's creation.

What is the right of God's creation that will be restored to you? Your Birthright, your Inheritance by virtue of Whom your Source is.

From everyone whom you accord release from guilt you will inevitably learn YOUR [own] innocence.

Why? Because when you accord innocence to a brother, it means you have extended love. And if you have extended love, you've done that which eradicating the presence of fear that governed you and caused you to develop a personality, which was nothing but a stylized form of self-defense. And in your extension of love you began to use your mind differently. And as a result of using your mind differently and being undefended... what? A sudden shift of perception could occur, a miracle. And you were blessed by your encounter with your brother.

Again, because it's the wonderful truth, from everyone whom you accord release from guilt you will inevitably learn your innocence.

The circle of Atonement HAS no end. And you will find ever-increasing confidence in your safe inclusion in what is for all in everyone you bring within its safety and its perfect peace.

Now, you know what? You don't have to go out... you don't have to begin your day tomorrow examining the personality that you've created and study it to find the fine lines of defense that have been covered over in very particular expressions of kindness and thoughtfulness and dignity and respect for your brother. No. All you have to do is find a reason to extend love to your brother, by acknowledging to God what is of value in your brother. Not a bad idea. The only thing is that, if you will begin to do that on purpose, you'll find there are times that you really don't want to do that. And those are the places where the miracle is called for. Those are the places where you need to assume your position "as a teacher of innocence." And by engaging in that, you will provide the environment for learning to occur. You will provide the environment for shifting from second gear to first gear to occur.

So you see, this isn't an intellectual process of self-examination by means of which you will arrive at enlightenment. No. It's more down-to-earth than that and it's less selfish and self-centered than that. It means involvement with your brother and your sister—involving yourself with your brother and sister in a way that brings out the one capacity that God has given you and lets it find expression in the world.

This is how you wake up. This is how you contribute to the transformation from one culture to another culture, right here. You're invited to be what you Really Are here, not in the "sweet-by-and-by." You are invited by this book and everything in it. You're invited by the truth to have the ultimate revealed to you here and now, about everything you're already aware of and more. But don't go for the more. You go for that carrot and you'll miss that of which you're already aware, and its renewal in your mind, and its transformation in your mind.

The power of God Himself supports this teaching, and GUARANTEES its limitless results.

Lets have a week of limitless results. And lets be willing to let go of all the cherished personalities. And let the new you come forth—the you that has always been—that which is nothing more than your right Mind, the Holy Spirit.

Okay. I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 1st 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

So, we're talking about letting a "new you" come forth—the "you" that has been covered up by the personality that you have developed with which you identify yourself, and by means of which you keep yourself safe.

If I were to tell you that the new you will be a holy man or a holy woman, truly a holy man or a holy woman, how many of you would put down this book and opt for a little snooze, so to speak, and put off this inevitable, questionable experience?

So, let's ask what is the meaning—or what is the definition of a holy man. Is it someone who sits in robes and who has capacity to bless, who walks around with crowds trailing after him—sort of an unnatural spectacle, we'll say? If indeed it was happening in your office or as you were walking down the street or buying groceries in the grocery store, none of you would really opt for that, I don't think, unless you were able to set up a special environment in which you could be in this fashion, where the environment and everyone in it accommodated it.

Would you want to be, really, unusually special? Yes. But what is really unusually special is to be able to be an incredible friend. And that's what a holy man is, or a holy woman.

A real holy man or holy woman is one who meets you right where you are. One who "be's" with you right where you are, who loves you whether you're in your peace or whether you're frightened, who is able to encourage you whether you're in your peace or whether you're frightened, one who is dedicated to you and in whose presence you always come out on top. What I mean by that is, that you always end up being blessed in your experience by virtue of your relationship.

An incredible friend is not particularly noticeable if the two of you are walking down the street. There's nothing weird about it, even though everything about it for you is transformational.

This is the kind of thing we're talking about when we describe the "new you" that will be coming forth as you let it be uncovered in the absence of your maintaining a terrific personality or a powerful personality or a successful personality.

All personalities keep all of you preoccupied from connecting with your brother as an incredible friend, because the key attribute of an incredible friend is that he doesn't have himself on his mind. He's not in relationship with you to "get" but to give—to be present with.

What is the one thing that God has given you the capacity to do? To acknowledge guiltlessness. Strange thing you might think. Why would God give everyone the capacity to recognize guiltlessness? Well, because He gave you the capacity to see what He created. And what He created is guiltless. What He created is flawless—is perfect. What He created is imbued with and expresses—embodies, kindness, love, respect, caring, giving, affection, and on and on. Of course He's given you the capacity to recognize guiltlessness or innocence.

Because He gave you the capacity to recognize guiltlessness, you have the capacity to experience all of Creation with nothing left out—nothing hidden from you. You could say that, by virtue of giving you the capacity to recognize and acknowledge guiltlessness, God gave you the ability to see with His Mind—to see all of Creation with Him and in seeing it with Him, being co-creators.

Once again, we're getting into these high-falutin' words. But let's back up. Because this capacity that God gave you, that is the equivalent of His giving you His Mind, is what describes an incredible friend, something very simple and down to earth, something very present and relevant to where all of you find yourselves today. But because it's much more than you have conceived yourselves to be, it means that you stand on the threshold of incredible breakthrough, of incredible revelation, of incredible insight, all of which will cause you not to be strange, but to be an incredible friend.

You could also say that a holy man or a holy woman—you in your true characteristics—are teachers of innocence. Because if you have the capacity to see innocence, if you have the capacity to acknowledge innocence—guiltlessness, you inevitably and unavoidably teach innocence by the way you behave toward all that you experience that is guiltless. You won't sit down with a book and teach guiltlessness. You'll put your arm around your brother and in that simple act will be a profound experience of love that conveys pure and simple but ultimate acceptance—innocence—the innocence of the one being embraced so purely. You see?

As we read last time . . .

Join your own efforts to the power that CANNOT fail and MUST result in peace.

Join with the Father by making it your joy to take your brother and hold him or her up to the Father, in praise of your brother or sister, in acknowledgement of his worth, of his value, of his or her innocence.

Join your own efforts to the power that CANNOT fail and MUST result in peace.

Well, I tell you, when you are embraced by, immersed in the experience of your innocence, it is an experience of perfect peace. There is no fear, there is no undercurrent, there is no uneasiness, there is no disturbance. The experience of innocence is simultaneously an experience of perfect peace. It is your Birthright to be experiencing it and it is your brother's and sister's Birthright to be experiencing it. And it will be experienced when each of you extend—when each of you cares enough to extend—the acknowledgement of your brother's or sister's innocence.

Your willingness to acknowledge that your brother or sister is not just the physical offspring of a physical parent, but is in actuality, the direct and present expression of the Life Principle, of the movement of Life itself, called God. This is the marvelous and wonderful function. We could call it a task, but nobody likes work. But it is your function, it is your natural spontaneous function built into you because God gave you the capacity to acknowledge innocence, to acknowledge guiltlessness, to see His Creation as it is without any distortion whatsoever.

So a teacher of innocence is a teacher of peace as well. And on that note, let's go into the book.

Peace, then, be unto everyone who becomes a teacher of peace. For peace is the acknowledgment of perfect purity from which no-one is excluded. Within its holy circle is everyone whom God created as His Son.¹

. . . as His offspring, as His daughter.

Joy is its unifying attribute, with no-one left outside to suffer guilt alone. The power of God draws everyone to its safe embrace of love and union.

Well, you know, you can be sarcastic and say, “Yeah... right... right... the power of God draws everyone to its safe embrace of love and union... I sure haven’t experienced it! And if God is all powerful and omnipotent as everyone says He is, then He should have a way to make the attractiveness of His Gift unavoidably in my face so I can’t possibly miss it... and I’ve been missing it!”

Nevertheless . . .

The power of God draws everyone to its safe embrace of love and union.

The simple fact is, that every single one of you who isn’t experiencing it, is pissed off about it. You don’t like your life the way it’s going when you’re not experiencing it, and you know down at the bottom line of your very being, that it is your Birthright to be experiencing it.

So the fact is, that the power of God does draw everyone to its safe embrace of love and union. And what I’m saying is, stop being pissed off about not experiencing it, and siphoning off your capacity to recognize innocence or guiltlessness because you are getting such a hit out of being pissed off—being angry—gripping about the injustice.

The power of God draws everyone to its safe embrace of love and union. Stand quietly within this circle, and attract all tortured minds to join with you in the safety of its peace and holiness.

In other words, be the holy man that you really Are. Be that which stands quietly within this circle of peace, this circle of love, this circle of unity. And, by being an incredible friend, . .

. . . attract all tortured minds to join with you in the safety of its peace and holiness. Abide with me within it, as teachers of Atonement, NOT of guilt.

The subject of this chapter is Bringing Illusions to Truth. And here we are, discussing the act, we’ll say, of bringing who you think you are to the truth of what you really Are. You see? “What, you’re calling me an illusion? “ No, you’re very real, but who you think you are is an illusion. And who you present so strongly to everyone else is not the real you. But I’ll talk to the one you think you are and I will invite you, I will entice you, I will try to make attractive to you the abandonment of who you think you are because there’s something or someone so much more meaningful right there where you are, than the personality you’re presenting. And I want for you to be experiencing it.

And if I can inspire in you the slightest bit of faith, that there's something very different and something much more meaningful to the essential you than who you think you are at this moment, that will help you be willing to withdraw your intense faith in who you think you are and dare to explore whatever the potentials might be of who and what you really Are.

That's what an incredible friend does. And that's your task to share or be with others. And it's a capacity that God gave you—the capacity to acknowledge guiltlessness in your brother.

You see, I'm inviting you to join me in extending to each other what I'm extending to you. And by virtue of your being an incredible friend with others, you will be extending the invitation to them to do the same thing for those they come in contact with. And so it becomes an on-going extension—a spreading of a change of mentality that constitutes the birthing of a new culture.

Blessed are you who teach with me.

Why... because I'm so great? No. Blessed are those who teach with you as well. Why... because you're great? No. Because those who have abandoned second gear—those who have abandoned a self-important independent position, those who have abandoned autonomy and have actually rejoined with their family, with their brothers and sisters are uncovering and illuminating the Kingdom of Heaven—Reality as it is. Let's just call it Reality as it is so it doesn't have to sound quite so holy.

What a wonderful thing too, by virtue of your capacity to acknowledge guiltlessness, cause Reality in all of its perfection to become visible to you and to your brothers, and your brothers to extend the same thing to their brothers and sisters, on and on and on. That's why you're blessed. That's why you would be blessed.

Blessed are you who teach with me. Our power comes not of us, but of our Father.

How? How did we get it of our Father? Well, like I said, because He gave you the capacity to see His Creation as He sees it—distortion-free.

Our power . . .

. . . to teach together . . .

. . . comes not of us but of our Father. In guiltlessness we know Him,

..

. . . you see? But if we're guilty, we don't know Him. And we squabble among each other to try to survive the awfulness of being guilty. But in our guiltlessness, we know ourselves and we know our Father and we know who we Are together—brothers and sisters—family.

In guiltlessness we know Him, as He knows us guiltless. I stand within the circle, calling you to peace. Teach peace with me, and stand with me on holy ground.

And I'll add... you holy Son of God—you holy man, you holy woman . . .

Teach peace with me, and stand with me on holy ground. Remember for everyone your Father's power that He . . .

. . . your Father . . .

. . . has given him.

. . . His Sons and Daughters.

Remember for everyone your Father's power that He has given him.

You see... you're remembering for him by taking your brother who has all kinds of self-doubts and all kinds of self-criticisms and all kinds of illness as a result of his self-depreciating attitude about himself and perspective. Take this brother, who is terribly confused, and lift him up to the Father acknowledging his innocence, acknowledging what is true of him in spite of what he believes. And embrace your brother and behave with your brother in the context of what you know to be the truth with him so that he can be inspired to join with you and abandon his private devotion to his inner fear. And in that joining, remember brotherhood, break the isolation and pave the way for inspiration to replace his devotion to his fear.

So when you lift your brother up when he's ignorant of his divinity, you are remembering for him his Father's power that his Father has given him.

Remember for everyone your Father's power that He . . .

. . . your Father . . .

. . . has given him. Believe not that you cannot teach His . . .

. . . the Father's . . .

. . . perfect peace. Stand not outside, but join with me within.

Stand not outside. Outside what? Outside the relationship, outside the family. Don't stand in the middle of the orphanage. That's outside relationships, that's outside the actuality of the Brotherhood of man whose Father is God.

Stand not outside, but join with me within.

. . . within the wholeness—the unity of our Brotherhood.

Fail not the only purpose to which my teaching calls you.

And what is my teaching? My teaching is: You are the holy Son of God, you are a holy man, you are a holy woman. And it is your function to look at everything and see it's guiltlessness, to see its indivisibility which, because it is indivisible, cannot be polarized, cannot be chaotic, can have no elements of dissonance or destruction, and which glows with the illumination of the Love which the Father brought forth in its creation. That's what my teaching calls you to. And when you do this with your brother, it's what your teaching calls him to.

Restore to God His Son as He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . created him by teaching him his innocence.

There we are again, talking about being an incredible friend.

You know, I'm really not using that as a "catch phrase." But you've got to understand I am using it because it's such a simple term. It's very understandable. You understand the meaning of the words, "incredible friend." That's all the more complicated all of this that we've been talking about is. We're not talking about being some incredible fantastic, strange, weird, perhaps frightening, spiritual—not apparition—but spiritual presence that you're not sure you would want to be and you're not sure anybody else would want to experience.

Be an incredible friend and . . .

Restore to God His Son . . .

. . . hold up to God His Son . . .

. . . as He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . created him by . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . teaching him . . .

. . . your Father's Son . . .

. . . his innocence.

Perform the one function God gave you, which was the capacity to acknowledge guiltlessness. You see, the word “guilt” in the word “guiltlessness” loses its sting a little bit, because guiltlessness really means utterly pure presence of conscious life that is the Presence of God embodied right there where every one of your brothers is, and where you are.

Now . . .

The crucifixion has no part in the Atonement. Only the resurrection became my part in it. That is the symbol of the release from guilt by guiltlessness. Whom you perceive as guilty you would crucify. Yet you RESTORE [gentleness] guiltlessness to whomever you see as guiltless. Crucifixion is ALWAYS the ego's aim.

Crucifixion is always the bottom line of life in second gear, of life in the orphanage, because survival is your number one goal. No matter what you have to do you will survive, even if you have to kill, even if you have to maim, even if you have to destroy your fellowman if he obnoxiously gets in the way.

Whether you ultimately crucify your brother, you will hold him in contempt, you will judge him poorly and you will hold him to the judgment you have applied to him and you will extract from him penalties until something incredible happens and you find a new activity—something new to engage in with your brother—that something being, to hold your brother up to God and acknowledge his guiltlessness.

Now, those of you who have studied the Course for a long time know that the word “forgiveness” is a very big word. If you’ll notice, I don’t use the word “forgiveness” very much, the reason being, that forgiveness can become a process that you can become stuck in. If you don’t even bother to use the word “forgiveness” or to have the word “forgiveness” in your vocabulary, it doesn’t keep you in any way from having the thought or the idea to look at your brother and see the good that is there, or to have the desire to look at your brother and want to see the underlying fundamental truth of his being that has to be there, because the Father put it there by Being that which is embodied where your friend is. It is God Who is embodied where you are, where your friend is, where everything is.

Now, the simple fact is, that if you're willing to look at anything and see the more of what God is Being right there than what you're seeing right now, you are engaged in an act of forgiveness.

But I'm going to tell you something: Forgiveness is an overused word and it does not convey fully the simple meaning of your having a desire to see the best in your brother. Forgiveness really isn't something you give to a brother or do for a brother. Forgiveness is really an inner act on your part of abandoning blaming your brother, of abandoning judging your brother and holding him to your poor judgment.

So I talk more about what constitutes the absence of judgment—the willingness to look at your brother or a flower or an object with a desire to see God there. You see, now you don't have to get into, “Well, does he deserve to be forgiven? Does the flower deserve to be forgiven?” or, “Why did I hold that flower in judgment and thereby not see it completely for what it truly is?” You see, it all becomes irrelevant and you're down to the act of engaging in desiring to see the more of God there. You're hooked on the transformation rather than the process of letting something go. You see? You have the forward look instead of the backward look.

So, from second gear in the orphanage—in the orphan mindset—life is survival. It is therefore self-protection at all costs. You are number one. Everything had better leave you alone and not interfere with your existence. No sense of family there, just sense of “me and enemies,” and “me learning how to defend myself against my enemies,” and “me, if I am really, really, really a smart organism, finding a way to finesse my enemies into not behaving in such an awful way toward me, finessing them into being civilized,” you see.

But still, you're in an act of self-defense. The need that's being satisfied is self-protection. Thus, everything you engage in costs everyone else something—that is, whether it's minimal or maximal crucifixion. But crucifixion is not part of the Atonement.

The crucifixion has no part in the Atonement.

What's going on in second gear has nothing to do with shifting to first gear.

Only the resurrection became my part in it.

Let that sink in. When it sinks in, you will realize that there simply is no further use for crucifixion in any form. It is not valuable for you to practice it on yourself or on anyone else. It has no part in the Atonement.

Only the resurrection became my part in it.

Now, in a way, Atonement has had a little bit of crucifixion attached to it and the way in which it was attached to it was by providing you with an uncomfortable task of “forgiving your brother.” I mean, agreed isn’t it, that that’s not a very pleasant task considering what your brother’s really like. And so you have a little bit of a crucifixion here, while you muster up the strength and the willingness and somehow the capacity to forgive “the bastard.” That’s a little bit of crucifixion.

But if you’re willing to look at your brother and say, “Father, help me look into my brothers’ or my sisters’ eyes and see You. Help me look into my brothers’ eyes and remember You.” What are you doing? You’re engaging in an action or activity of the Atonement because you are cutting to the chase and engaging in the act of inclusion, of caring and of acknowledging that not only you but your brother have a common Father. God now has come back into the picture. Father has come back. Mother has come back. Orphans and orphanages have become meaningless. Behaving as though orphans and orphanages are meaningful stops! You see?

Resurrection is part of the Atonement. And Resurrection is what happens when you don’t get entangled in processes but you go for the gusto, and you say, no matter who it is you’re looking at, no matter what it is you’re looking at, whether if it’s an ant, or a flower, or a tree, or whatever. And you say, “I want to see what’s really there. I want to see the guiltlessness of what I’m looking at, which means that I want to look at what God is Being there and see it the way God is seeing it. And I no longer opt for the right to have my own private personal way of perceiving it.” You see? That’s Resurrection.

Crucifixion is ALWAYS the ego’s aim. It sees AS GUILTY, and by its condemnation it would kill. The Holy Spirit sees only guiltlessness, and in His gentleness He would release from fear, and re-establish the reign of love. The power of love is in His gentleness, which is of God and therefore cannot crucify nor suffer crucifixion.

Holy man and holy woman, everyone of you who’s hearing me right now, listen to this . . .

The Holy Spirit sees only guiltlessness, and in His gentleness He would release from fear, and re-establish the reign of love.

Well, holy man and holy woman, the Holy Spirit that does this is nothing more than your right Mind. It’s your function that we’re talking about here. It is your function divinely placed and divinely established that sees only guiltlessness. And in your gentleness you . . .

would release from fear, and re-establish the reign of love.

That's your function, right here today, now.

The power of love is in His gentleness, . .

. . . is in your gentleness . . .

. . . which is of God and therefore cannot crucify nor suffer crucifixion. The temple you restore . . .

. . . by becoming a teacher of innocence, by joining with me.

The temple you restore becomes YOUR altar, . .

Why? Because it is your holiness that has resided in the very center of your being while you've dallied with being an ego.

The temple you restore becomes YOUR altar, for it was re-built through you. And everything you give to God IS yours.

Not because it was given back to you, but because it was never taken away. And when you are letting yourself be identified properly, by neglecting to interpose some private personal definition you have applied to yourself, then you discover that . . .

. . . everything you give to God is yours.

. . . and always was.

The transformation is not something that turns you from an illusion into something real. It's a transformation in which the belief that you could be something illusory dissolves and leaves the presence of what you have always been, starkly and wonderfully and impressively present.

. . . everything you give to God IS yours. Thus He creates, and thus must YOU restore.

At this point your task is to restore what you've been ignoring and which you have therefore believed has been absent, but it will be restored by becoming visible, as the visibility and tangibility of you that has never been altered from what God established it as, no matter what mental imaginative gyrations you have gone through to create a biased perception of it.

Now, this is simply the truth here. It isn't something you can fiddle around with. It just is the truth, like two plus two is four.

Each one you see you place within the holy circle of Atonement or leave outside, . .

Well, yes. It's one or the other, it's automatic.

Each one you see you place within the holy circle of Atonement or leave outside, judging him fit for crucifixion or for redemption.

This happens every day in every contact you have with anyone. And in fact, with the same person, your judgment might change every fifteen minutes, depending upon what that brother is doing.

If you bring him INTO the circle of purity, you will rest there with him. If you leave him WITHOUT, you join him there. Judge not except in quietness which is not of you.

What is the quietness that's not of you? It's the quietness that is not of the orphan you think you are at the moment. It's the quietness that is of the divine you, the Holy Spirit that you have disowned so that you could play around at being an ego, until you finally get tired of playing around and let the divine one that you Are, fully into the picture.

Judge not except in quietness which is not of you. Refuse to accept anyone as WITHOUT the blessing of Atonement, and bring him INTO it by blessing him.

“Oh God, do I really have to do that? And am I going to have to do it all the time? Um-m, I have to do this holy work? Can't I just sit down and can't I occasionally watch a TV program or do something irrelevant?” Well, yeah, you can watch TV and engage in activities. Nobody said you couldn't. But also, nobody asked you to do anything other than be an incredible friend. What's the big deal? You imagine that you're being asked to do something terribly unnatural. You're being asked to join me in being an incredible friend.

Refuse to accept anyone as WITHOUT the blessing of Atonement, and bring him INTO it by blessing him.

How do you bless your brother? You bless your brother by holding him present in your awareness and turning to God and say, “Father, here is my brother, here is my sister—Your son, Your daughter. I know that because he or she is Your son or daughter, all that You are has found embodiment in him or her. And that is what I choose to honor, rather than the picture my brother or sister is presenting to me and rather than my best judgments, my best misperceptions of him or her. I acknowledge to You the worth and the meaning that is embodied in my brother and sister, because the worth and meaning embodied in her and embodied in him is You.” That’s how you bless him.

You hold your brother in such respect that you’re not engaging in any form of judgment or condemnation. And in the absence of it, your brother’s healing and your healing can occur.

Holiness must be shared, for therein . . .

. . . in the sharing . . .

. . . lies everything that makes it holy.

What makes anything unholy is your insistence upon being an independent agent existing on your own, creating your own reality and somehow arriving at a point where you become a real boy or a real girl, all alone.

Come gladly to the holy circle, and look out in peace on all who think they are outside. Cast no-one out, for this . . .

. . . meaning, being included in the holy circle . . .

. . . is what he seeks along with you. Come, let us join him in the holy place of peace, which is for all of us, united as one within the Cause of peace.

[Repeats] Come, let us join him in the holy place of peace, . .

In the place of incredible friendship. In the place of incredible brotherhood. In the simple place of incredible friendship.

Now I know that at times we can get going on the ego and the ego’s dynamics and blah, blah, blah. And it can sometimes be a little bit exhilarating to have the ego’s characteristics illuminated so they can be seen for their awfulness. But there’s a sweetness as you can hear tonight, in the experience that occurs when illusions are brought to truth. And the sweetness doesn’t involve all the little comeuppances that the ego probably will have to go through as it is abandoned.

And I want you all to understand that the ultimate is sweet, that Atonement is gentle, that abandoning your personality and becoming a holy man is something very grounded, very wonderful, very simple and obviously meaningful—not strange, not weird—I will say incredible beyond your expectations. But it will never be frightening.

And as we go into this next week, I want you to approach it looking for gentle transformation, gentle fulfillments that will be quite amazing but also very down-to-earth, but very unlike your Earth experience when you have approached everything as an independent agent—as a personality.

You must still practice your capacity to acknowledge guiltlessness everywhere. The sweetness of what we've discussed tonight, the gentleness of the truth of it doesn't mean that it's okay to just sort of sit back and go unconscious, get fuzzy. No. Be glad to actively engage in the one capacity that God has given you, that capacity being, to be able to acknowledge guiltlessness in everyone and everything, which means your capacity to see everyone and everything exactly as God is seeing it, exactly as God is Meaning it in His embodiment of it at this very moment, with no aspect of the awareness of it in its totality missing you, with no aspect of it going on outside your awareness.

Continue to insist upon holding your brother up with a devotion to experiencing his divinity, because that's how your brother is healed, that is how you are healed, that is how the Atonement occurs.

I love you all. I love you Dennis, and everyone who has joined us on the internet. And I look forward to being with you next week in a new way.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 8th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I have invited you to join me in acknowledging the guiltlessness, not only of each other, but of everything you see.

Another way of describing the guiltlessness of everything is to speak of the holiness of everything. The fact that there isn't a single element of error—there isn't the slightest blemish—there isn't the most minimal conflict present in it, it is flawless perfection brought forth with perfect love. The "it" being each of you, the "it" being every flower, the "it" being every ant, the "it" being any aspect of Creation no matter how you're seeing those at this moment. Some of them, like fire ants, you don't like, you're afraid of . . . or carpenter ants.

The point is, that I have invited you to join me in the specific task of doing the one thing you have not ever done before, and that is: To abandon the concepts you have formulated about each other and about everything, and instead to be willing to be present with each other and everything with an innocent mind—a mind absent of thinking, a mind absent of logical processes that you go through to arrive at an intellectual definition of everything, and in the process, never connect with that thing itself.

I'm inviting you to embrace everything with the specific intent to appreciate it. Literally, to be willing to lift it up as though unto Heaven to present to your Father, to present to That which is the cause of all that is and acknowledge its value to That which made it—and as I've said before so many times—in so doing, reaffirming your brotherhood with the one you're holding up and your Sonship with That to which you're holding your brother up: Your common Father, so that the isolation of self-inflicted orphanhood can be abandoned in the conscious awareness of existing Family.

Now, this act that I'm inviting you to join me in is the way we move . . .

OUT OF THE DARKNESS.

The journey that we undertake together is the exchange of dark for light, of ignorance for understanding.

The abandoning of the definitions you've made up which are very opaque and very, well . . . mean-spirited, because of course, in the process of making them up, you have seen yourself as vulnerable and needing to defend yourself against the state of vulnerability that's called "existence." And so the definition of your brother or your sister or of your world has been one which defines it as that of which you must be careful, that which you cannot dare to trust! This is mean-spirited. This is not love. This is not embrace.

The journey that we undertake together is the exchange of dark for light, of ignorance for understanding. Nothing you understand is fearful. It is only in darkness and in ignorance that you perceive the frightening, and you shrink away from it to further darkness.

Now, that's a description of what happens when you are not joining me in acknowledging the guiltlessness, the holiness of your brothers and sisters and of everything.

It is only in darkness and in ignorance that you perceive the frightening, and you shrink away from it to further darkness. And yet it is only the hidden that can terrify, not for what it IS, but for its hiddenness.

Sometimes hiddenness is called mysteriousness. And that which is mysteriousness is scary. You tantalize yourself with mystery. You go and watch movies every week full of mystery. And you tantalize yourself with the fear of the unknown. You actually enjoy it. And the fact is, that you actually enjoy in your communications with each other, to use thinking as a means of making the clear mysterious. If you were utterly clear, your conversation would be finished very quickly. There would be nothing present to hold you together in tension. There would be nothing to hold you together in a state of wondering, you see. "Oh-h, I wonder . . . I wonder what would happen if this . . . I wonder what would happen if that . . ." And this is thinking, and you use it to create a nebulous sort of environment in which to be tantalized with the mystery.

Now, in most cases, in your human relationships with each other, you use your thinking to disturb clear communication because it's helpful to keep each other off-guard a little bit—off balance. It helps you be in control a little bit better, especially if you're the one creating the out-of-balance condition. And this is the way you manipulate each other to cause each other to behave in a way that keeps you safe you think.

But again, this habit, this style of relating to each other, keeps you all from connecting with each other. It keeps you at a distance. It keeps you hidden from each other and in that act of hiding, there's no opportunity for acknowledging the guiltlessness of your brother and acknowledging his guiltlessness, his holiness, to your mutual Father and abandoning the isolation, reestablishing the conscious experience of Family and of mutual love, and providing the circumstance under which you can wake up.

I don't want to cause you to be overly serious here, but I do want you to be unafraid to look at the uses you put thinking to in order to control your circumstances, and that the way you usually do it is not imbued with love but rather with self-protection and the exercise of control. This is the way you keep a state of mystery active throughout your day. It's the way you keep fear as an uneasy undercurrent present. It's the way you keep clarity obscure. It's the way you keep truth obscure. And the obscure is frightening because you do not understand its meaning. If you did, it would be clear and you would be no longer in the dark.

Nothing has HIDDEN value, for what is hidden cannot be shared, and so its value is unknown.

But you say, "Well you know, you're talking about me letting a new me come forth. You're talking about me abandoning the orphan mind-set and reuniting as a Son and a brother and part of a divine Family. You're asking me to embrace something that I've been keeping out of sight. You're asking me to embrace something that I have kept hidden about myself, my brother, my world. And you know what? As long as I've been keeping it hidden, I've been able to create a sense of value here where I am and fool everyone into thinking that I have value all by myself. It's been important for me to be here on my own and not just be the Son of my Father, who has inherited all that my Father is and has, and therefore, have no means of creating my own inheritance and birthright and wealth, or worth."

But . . .

Nothing has HIDDEN value, for what is hidden cannot be shared, and so its value is unknown. The hidden is KEPT APART, but value always lies in joint appreciation. What is concealed cannot be loved, and so it MUST be feared.

If it's concealed, it's mysterious. If it's mysterious, it's unsettling. If it's unsettling, through the use of your imagination, you will make it fearful.

What we've just discussed is a description of existence from second gear. It's a description of existence when you think you're an orphan living in an orphanage doing everything you can to create worth in you that isn't naturally yours, and managing somehow to convince yourself and everyone else of this worth so that you will be respected and can somehow become, like Pinocchio—a real boy.

Now, what I'm inviting you to join me in, in lifting your brother up or your sister up in your awareness, by choosing to cut through and past whatever presentation your brother's making to you, or whatever concepts you have devised or imagined about your brother, and you choose instead to see the Presence of God there, and if you don't see it, you ask for your Father to help reveal to you your brother's innate value and worth—and I'm going to say, lovability. Because in doing this, this is the way you shift from second gear to first gear, which is the means by which you wake up out of your confusion—out of your insanity—and come back into your right Mind.

Now . . .

The quiet light in which the Holy Spirit dwells . . .

. . . and of course, the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, your undisturbed mind . . .

The quiet light in which the Holy Spirit dwells within you is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . is merely perfect openness, . . .

. . . you get the feel? . . .

. . . perfect openness . . .

. . . perfect undefendedness . . . perfect capacity for you to be fully present, fully present without any shield being put up between you and your brother or your world.

The quiet light in which the Holy Spirit dwells within you is merely perfect openness, in which nothing is hidden, and therefore nothing is fearful. Attack will ALWAYS yield to love if it is BROUGHT to love, not hidden FROM it.

Well, when you are willing to join with me and look at your brother with a desire to see the truth about him, we'll say, God's truth about him, the one the Father is Being/Creating at this very instant while you're looking at your brother, your desire to see the truth there when you were inclined to think poorly of your brother and to treat him poorly, is your bringing your attack to love. You are shifting from your negative assessment and treatment of your brother to a desire in you to see the truth about your brother, and that is love. That is the act of love that removes the shield between you—the defense between you—and embraces wholly. And . . .

Attack will ALWAYS yield to love if it is BROUGHT to love, not hidden FROM it.

Always!

There is no darkness that the light of love will not dispel, unless it is concealed from love's beneficence.

You need to know the power of your conscious act of desiring to have a true assessment of your brother, an assessment of your brother as seen through your Father's eyes or through the eyes of anyone who is Awake in whom there is no conflict and no distortion.

What is kept APART from love cannot share its healing power because it has been separated off and kept in darkness. The sentinels of darkness watch over it carefully, . .

. . . watch over what? What is kept APART from love.

The sentinels of darkness watch over it carefully, and you who made these guardians of illusion out of nothing are now afraid of them.

You, who have decided to be independently on your own, and think that you are creating your own lives and that are creating reality yourself and succeeding at it . . . Oh-h-h, . . . you are creating an illusory experience which cannot be had without the experience of fear. You cannot deny what you Are and be comfortable. You cannot try to be something that you aren't and be comfortable! And yet, you can't become what you aren't, and you can't succeed at your attempt to be the Creator. And so, although you're uncomfortable, you're uncomfortable because you can't do the impossible and you're still trying. You're suffering because you can't do something wrong but you're still trying. Do you see?

But oh no. You all say, " Oh no, it's an evil world. Oh, it's not me, it's an evil world. Don't you see? Everything is going to hell in a hand-basket—just look around you! How on earth could anybody be in their peace under these circumstances?" And yet, the only problem is, that you are trying to do the impossible and you're doing it even though it's impossible to do the impossible, and in that attempt, you are uncomfortable and it's at your own hand or you might say, at your own mind that you are creating the discomfort.

All that we're ever talking about here is your discovering how you're doing that and then abandoning doing that. And the most effective and simple way to do that is to extend caring, extend your attention to your brothers and sisters and your world, with the intent to gift it with your acknowledgement of its value and to insist on that until you've succeeded.

Would you CONTINUE to give imagined power to these strange ideas of safety?

You know, like . . . "I've got to protect myself. You can't trust anybody." Well, you ignore the fact that the vantage point from which you're looking is shifty ground, and you're not trustworthy either to anyone else, because you're not coming from a grounded stable place of clarity within you—but of course, it's everyone else. Well, this is a strange idea of safety.

Would you CONTINUE to give imagined power to these strange ideas of safety? They are neither safe nor unsafe. They do not protect; neither do they attack.

And I'm going to add: They're pure imagination. They are thinking. I was going to say, at its worst, it's really thinking at its best. Thinking is always at its worst even at its best, because it's the shield you establish between yourself and your brother. It's that which you use to keep things apart and to keep yourself apart from things.

They . . .

. . . the strange ideas of safety . . .

. . . do nothing at all, BEING nothing at all. As guardians of darkness and of ignorance, look to them only for fear, for what they keep obscure IS fearful.

Let's stop for a moment. Why are you using these sentinels of fear? You're using them, actually, to keep yourself from having to recognize that you have a Father, and that you have a Birthright, and that you don't have to earn it or deserve it. It is the essence and the condition of your very existence—your existing. You don't want to find that out because then you won't be able to strive for the goal of making something out of yourself and you won't get that ego "hit." And you know that you will also have to fit in. And at this stage in your ego's development, the idea of fitting in and of not being able to stand out is not desirable. It's boring, it's meaningless, it's useless, it's unfulfilling and can't possibly mean anything to one who is credible, respectable, real. Anyone who is credible, respectable and real will go out and make his "mark" in life. Blending will be engaged in if it happens to be fulfilling the goal you have. But if it doesn't, it's unnecessary.

So, all of these thinking processes that you're using are being used to avoid something. They're actually being used to avoid the clarity of being Awake—the sanity of your right Mind. Because at the moment, in your insanity, your right Mind seems utterly useless, meaningless, impractical, and something to be avoided at all cost.

Again . . .

As guardians of darkness and of ignorance, look to them only for fear, for what they keep obscure IS fearful. But let them go, and what was fearful will be so no longer.

To be Awake will no longer seem to be fearful or so blissful as to be utterly boring because you're just going to sit on a pink cloud strumming a harp for eternity. That's what being sane means when you're looking at it from the aspect of the ego that you are currently engaged in. And nobody wants that! So [chuckles] anyone wise is going to do a hell-of-a-lot more thinking to avoid that. But . . .

Without protection of obscurity ONLY the light of love remains, for only this HAS meaning and CAN live in light. Everything else must disappear.

Now why are we talking about this? Last week we were talking about things that were so beautiful. And we still are. We're just pointing out what it is that you will be abandoning as you join me in the circle of Love in which you are conscientiously engaging in acknowledging truth and wanting to experience truth more than anything else in the world. And things that were meaningful to you in the orphanage, will become meaningless to you because you're not having to struggle for your peace and you're not having to struggle for your wholeness, you're not having to strive to make something out of yourself because you're already the ultimate.

Without protection of obscurity ONLY the light of love remains, for only this HAS meaning and CAN live in light. Everything else must disappear.

Death yields to life simply because destruction is not TRUE.

Another reason we're talking about this is that crucifixion is not part of my teaching, but Resurrection is. Crucifixion is the ego's teaching. Killing, undercutting, undermining your brother for your safety, for your progress, pure ego bullshit.

I want to point out something: You're all well aware that except for a handful of Us everyone has died. Very few have either not died or resurrected.

So . . .

Death yields to life simply because destruction is not TRUE.

Well, where is destruction not true? Well, it's not true anywhere. But it specifically is not true in first gear—in your right Mind. It is not present in your sane Self.

If you are trying "with all get out" to be something on your own, in second gear, death still can't happen as a fact, but it seems to. We need to break that habit. It's time for that road to be less traveled. It's time for that road to be turned into a dead-end, so no-one cares to go down it again for any imaginative reason.

So, joining with me and in joining with your brother, with the conscious intent of acknowledging the truth about him, with the conscious intent to experience the true truth about him, as opposed to your best judgment of him, is the bottom line means by which you will not die. It is the means by which the apparent cycle of birth and death will cease and will be replaced with the unchangeable experience of Eternal Life—the uninterrupted experience of Eternal Life.

So, as we go through the Course, we're not just enjoying ideas which, when they're put together in certain ways, make us feel more whole and make life a little bit easier to bear, we're actually talking about that which is going to change the experience of life so that the experience of death no longer presents itself.

As you wake up, as you become clearer and clearer about your divinity and the divinity of your brothers and sisters, and the essential value and awesomeness about every aspect of creation, you can't possibly have the experience of being happy while you still get sick and while you still die. This isn't about making the human condition easier or more pleasant until you die. It's about getting off the merry-go-round completely, of life and death. I'm speaking truly. I'm speaking practically. I'm speaking here and now today, where hospitals will go out of business because nobody needs their services.

Is that clear? Is it clear to you that I'm not talking "airy-fairy-pie-in-the-sky" spiritual principles. We're talking about waking up. We're talking about letting in a new experience that is already present to be experienced, which you are not experiencing because you are giving preference to your thinking and all of the ramifications of your thinking that you can imagine.

But you've got to let yourself out of the box. You've got to let your mind open up to that which you don't know at the moment, so that what is there to be known can register with you, and so that the mystery of life—that wonderful mystery of life—can disappear in the conscious experience of what life actually is, without any of it being tantalizingly obscure to you, but making life interesting because you can discover it. You see.

Here's what happens when you join me in acknowledging the guiltlessness of your brothers:

The light of guiltlessness shines guilt away because, when they are brought TOGETHER, . .

. . . guilt and guiltlessness . . .

. . . the truth of one MUST make the falsity of its opposite perfectly clear.

You see, confusion ceases immediately. What's real is real and what isn't real isn't real. No confusion anymore. Utter clarity. No mystery, "Well, you know, if this was that way then maybe that would be real." No confusion anymore. No speculation about that which will not lead to a solid and real conclusion.

Keep not guilt and guiltlessness apart, for your belief that you can have them BOTH is meaningless. All you have done by keeping them apart is lose their meaning by confusing them with each other. And so you do not realize that only one means anything, and the other is wholly without sense of ANY kind.

That's the wonder of black and white: Something is something and nothing is nothing. And when you know that something is something and nothing is nothing and there is no confusion, it's like the light is on, "Ah-ha, I understand completely. I am not confused in anyway." And there's peace.

Now you have interpreted the separation, “But, Father, I’d rather do it my way. I want a divorce, Father.”

You have interpreted the separation as a means which you have made for breaking your communication with your Father.

See, that’s thinking . . . that’s done in second gear . . . that’s done from the sidecar on the motorcycle that has no means of providing itself any direction. It’s what happens in the orphanage. But that’s the unreal seeming to be real. But here’s the real:

The Holy Spirit re-interprets it as a means of re-establishing what has not been broken but HAS been made obscure.

The Holy Spirit’s intent and capacity is to show you that when you thought you were doing something and creating a separation, you were doing nothing. And your relationship with your Father and your brothers and sisters is still inviolably intact. And you’re still in your holy place. What you thought you were doing you didn’t do, therefore, there’s nothing you’re guilty of. But if you keep trying to do what you can’t do, you will be uncomfortable and you will feel guilty, but it’s only because you’re trying to do what you can’t do—you’re continuing to try to do what you can’t do.

All things you made have use to Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . for His most holy purpose. He KNOWS you are not separate from God, but He perceives much in your mind that lets you THINK you are.

It doesn’t say He put it there, but He sees what’s going on. The Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—sees what you, in your orphan mentality, think you’re doing.

All this, and nothing else, would He separate from you.

He would just separate from you what you’re not doing. And what He would separate from you is the consequences you think you have to pay for having done something that you never actually did.

The power of decision, which you made IN PLACE of the power of creation, . .

. . . I’m going to stop right there. Wow, I bet all of you thought that the power of decision was a God given capacity, a most important capacity—you have the power of decision. Wow, and of course, your ego loves that. But what does it say?

The power of decision, which you made IN PLACE of the power of creation, He would teach you how to use on your BEHALF.

The Holy Spirit would teach you how to use this power of decision that you have created, on your behalf. It's like turning a problem to your advantage, and He will help you use the power of decision to retrace your steps and undo all the decisions you made that moved you away from your conscious oneness with the Father. You see?

It isn't that the Holy Spirit will take the power of decision and turn it into something that you will forever be able to use, because it really wasn't a bad idea when you first thought it up, you just have been using it for the wrong thing. And now the Holy Spirit's going to teach you how to use it for the right thing. No, the Holy Spirit is going to show you how to use something you already have an affinity for using, so it's easy for you to accept the guidance that the Holy Spirit gives you to undo the use of the power of decision so that you might come back into your right Mind, where your mind is not different from God's Mind. And in experiencing the Movement of the Mind of God, that is what constitutes your Mind, you can become co-creates with God of creation. Not a creator in your own right, but co-creators by virtue of being present with the Father, fully, as the process of Creation occurs.

So the Holy Spirit helps you use the power of decision to arrive at a point where you abandon the power of decision. But in the meantime, you've used it to undo all of the decisions that have consistently bound you tighter and tighter in a distorted, confused experience of being.

You who made it . . .

. . . the power of decision . . .

. . . to crucify yourselves must learn of Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . . .

. . . how to apply it to the holy cause of restoration.

Which ultimately means, and can immediately mean, becoming free of the prospect of dying, and free of the prospect or the experience of illness, or injury, or anything else that does not reflect or that is not the manifestation of a perfect idea formed in a perfect Mind, meaning God.

You . . .

. . . sweet little orphans that you are . . .

. . . who speak in dark and devious symbols do not understand the language you have made. It HAS no meaning, for its purpose is not communication, but rather, the DISRUPTION of communication.

What would communication be? Communication would be of the discovery of truth—a mutual discovery of truth—a discovery of truth that occurs in a moment of joining, of involvement, not an isolated experience. That would be communication.

Well, what might one of those discoveries be? Ah, that you are a holy Son of God, that, as I said last week, you are a holy man or a holy woman—something you really don't want to find out, something you have avoided and something which you use thinking as a means of avoiding and then you give expression to the thinking and you call it communication. But what you're doing is inserting into the continuum of relationships that you're in, disturbance that keeps it impossible for the divinity of everyone concerned, or of the Kingdom of Heaven that all of it's really going on in, from being discovered, from being experienced.

That's why there is such value in silence. Because in the conscious practice of not thinking you're able to be more truly present with everything. And in the absence of the static of your thinking, everything around you has a better chance of conveying to you what it really is. And that's communication.

The discovery . . . your discovery of what a thing really is because you let it communicate its meaning to you—which it is its joy to do—that is communication.

If the purpose of language IS communication, how can this tongue . . .

. . . you know, called orphanese . . .

. . . how can this tongue mean anything? Yet even this strange and twisted effort to communicate through NOT communicating holds enough of love . . .

. . . listen to this . . .

. . . holds enough of love to MAKE it meaningful, if its interpreter is NOT its maker.

You see, the ego is its maker. But if the Holy Spirit interprets it, there is something there to interpret, because even though it's communication used for not communicating, it still holds enough of love to make it useful to the Holy Spirit. Why? Because in spite of yourselves, in spite of your insistence on being the most terrific orphans that ever existed, you never for an instance stopped being the Son of God. And so there is never anything you're doing no matter how unconscious you are of what it is in its totality, that is totally void or devoid of your holiness. And so, there is always something there for the Holy Spirit—again, that which is nothing more than your Sanity, your right Mind—to use to help you to come back Home.

You who made it are but expressing conflict, from which the Holy Spirit would release you. Leave what you would communicate to Him. He will interpret it to you with perfect clarity, for He knows with Whom you ARE in perfect communication.

Now, let's be clear about this: If, when you are with a friend, you are listening before speaking, you are letting your conversation and the movement of your inner actions, if you're letting that be guided because you're allowing yourself to fit in with what's going on, then what you are truly meaning to say, the Holy Spirit will find ways to have pass through your lips so that real communication can occur just as it is occurring right now as Paul is speaking. And the experience will always be transformational.

The words that will come out will not be words addressing the egos of those who are listening, because the Holy Spirit in you knows the Holy Spirit in your brothers and sisters and that is too rich—it speaks!

You know not what you say, and so you know not what is said to you. Yet your Interpreter . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . perceives the meaning in your alien language.

. . . of orphanese . . .

He will not attempt to communicate the meaningless. But He WILL separate out all that has meaning, dropping off the rest and offering your true communication to those who would communicate as truly with you. You speak two languages at once, and this MUST lead to unintelligibility.

. . . obviously . . .

You speak two languages at once, and this MUST lead to unintelligibility. Yet if one means nothing and the other everything, only that one is possible for purposes of communication. The other but INTERFERES with it.

Now, again, for perspective: What we're talking about tonight describes the aspects that come into play when you join with me in the circle of love, for the purpose of acknowledging your brothers or any aspect of creations, guiltlessness or holiness.

So this is fleshing out what we talked about last week, which many of you noticed was gentle and loving and inspiring. And what I want you to not lose sight of is, that what we're talking about tonight are the underpinnings of the gentleness and the love and the inspiration that we talked about last week.

Now, the Holy Spirit's function—the function of that which is nothing more than your right Mind—and which, therefore is your function, is entirely communication. You're not here to figure things out. You're not here to be intellectually brilliant. You're not here to have fantasies or private inventions, all transpiring in your brain, in your head, in your mind. Your function, the Holy Spirit's function, is entirely communication.

What's communication? It's connection. It's involvement. It's fitting together. It's moving in harmony. It is movements, harmoniously fitting together and in the fitting together, expressing exquisite beauty—you could say, beauty of sound, beauty of sight, beauty of aroma, incredible, infinite beauty.

The Holy Spirit's function is ENTIRELY communication. He therefore must remove whatever interferes with it in order to RESTORE it. Therefore, keep no source of interference from His sight, . .

. . . [chuckling] like a pet project that you want to work on a little bit longer all by yourself, or some task that you have looked forward to completing for a number of years and you want to go ahead and have a little bit more time to do that, all by yourself.

Therefore, keep no source of interference from His sight, for He will not attack your sentinels. But bring them to Him, and let His gentleness teach you that, in the light, they are not fearful, and CANNOT serve to guard the dark doors behind which nothing at all is carefully concealed. We must open all doors and let the light come streaming through. There are no hidden chambers in God's temple.

There are no hidden chambers in you.

Its gates are open wide to greet His Son. No-one can fail to come where God has called him if he close not the door himself upon his Father's welcome.

You'd think, like if you were going to close the door on your Father, that you would reach out there and close the door. But where you close the door is inside you. And you close the door by insisting on thinking, constantly, blocking or interfering with the entrance of anything that might uncover to you things you don't want to know about yourself . . . like you don't have to earn your Birthright anymore. You don't have to prove your worth anymore. Not proving your worth will not speak poorly of you anymore. Not having accomplished anything on your own will not discredit you or disgrace you in anyway anymore.

So, we're talking about not thinking anymore. But we're not just talking about not thinking anymore, we're talking about not thinking anymore and making conscious connection with each other—not to connect with what each of you think about yourselves or each other, but with the desire to experience what the Movement of Creation is Being as each of you, in each and every given moment, which you can only let into your awareness by being quiet enough and inviting enough to provide the environment which can be infilled with something. And that's an act of love. And that's how you shift from second gear to first gear, from insanity to sanity and from the experience of fear and guilt to the uninterrupted experience—the real experience of peace and love.

Next week's section looks a little bit tantalizing. Be careful, you might want to read ahead: PERCEPTION WITHOUT DECEIT. Um-m, we'll nail that ego, but we'll also uncover your divinity.

[Addresses each one] I love you, I love you and I love everyone who is watching, who has joined us on the Internet. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 15th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

A new section:

PERCEPTION WITHOUT DECEIT¹

Let's remember what a miracle is. A miracle is a sudden shift of perception. We could say, it's a shift of perception from perception with deceit to perception without deceit. And to flesh it out a little bit more, it's a shift from the orphan mentality—second gear—to that which is nothing more than your right Mind, which is the Holy Spirit, which is first gear, which is you experiencing reality through God's eyes as God is experiencing it.

Now, has it ever occurred to you that every single moment is the perfect opportunity for a miracle? Every single moment is a perfect opportunity to wake-up! "Oh-h . . ." but you say, "Well, I'm in a state of emergency! There was just a car accident, this is not an opportune time to wake up . . . There are things to be taken care of, I can't give my attention to a sudden shift of perception, come-on, uh-h . . . this is not the perfect moment for a sudden shift of perception . . ." And what you're saying is, my mind-set will not allow for me to see this as a perfect moment for a miracle—a perfect moment for a sudden shift of perception. And yet, what better time for a miracle than when a miracle is needed? What better time than when there is a call for healing?

You see, you're not, for lack of better words, conditioned in your mind to respond to needs with a clear call for clarity in your mind. You're conditioned to react. You're conditioned to be alarmed and feel the alarm and use the alarm to motivate you to get busy and fix things up, not one of the times when you would naturally think to ask the Holy Spirit, "What's going on here? What is really going on here? What is God's truth right here?"

You're not inclined to have something come to your attention, let's say, as you're driving along and you see a dead animal in the road, you're not conditioned or primed to [snaps fingers] instantaneously say, "That's a lie! That is not God's truth. I don't accept it!" No. You say, "Oh-h boy, these damn drivers, they can't stop for a minute to let a simple little critter get across the street. They just gotta go-go-go and kill-kill-kill! I have the right to sit here in this car and react and be mad because it's unfair!"

Oh, hell, if it's so unfair, heal it by using your mind in it's healing capacity. Use your mind to immediately reach to the Holy Spirit, "What is the healing truth that needs to be known here? Help me see this critter not exhibiting something that God could not have created and a condition that God couldn't possibly be manifesting right there where I see it."

Again, what better time for a miracle than when a miracle is needed? Any moment is a perfect time for a sudden shift of perception.

Yeah, I know, you're eating dinner, the whole family's there. It's been a hard day for both you and your wife at work. The kids are tired and cranky. It was a busy day at school and they had baseball and piano lessons and everybody's at each other's throat and it's not a pleasant time. "You know, this is not the best time, this is not the perfect time for me to have a sudden shift of perception because I'm upset along with everybody else and we all have a right to be upset. Let us get it out of our system, we have a right to do that."

Well, yeah, you can do that. But you have missed what, nevertheless, is a perfect opportunity for a sudden shift of perception.

You know, you are never faced with complicated circumstances. You're always faced with one of two things: The experience of truth or the experience of illusion. No matter how it's fleshed out, you're either faced with the experience of truth or the experience of illusion. And the experience of illusion is simply a distorted perception of truth, because you have nothing else available to you to be experiencing but truth seen clearly or seen through a glass darkly.

What I want to convey tonight is, how simple it is, how uncomplicated it is, that a sudden shift of perception is not one of an infilling of grand and complicated and drawn out improvement of your mind. It's simply a shift from a distorted perception to a real perception. Like holding your camera up and adjusting the focus. You're either seeing reality out of focus or you're seeing it in focus. It doesn't matter what the scenario is. It doesn't matter whether it's a war. It doesn't matter if there's gun-fighting going on. It doesn't matter if people are beating each other up. It doesn't matter. Because you're either seeing reality out of focus or in focus. And the call is not for improving the circumstances, but by improving the focus.

That's why any moment is a perfect moment for a sudden shift of perception. Any moment is a perfect moment for bringing things into focus. Another way of putting it is, that any moment is a perfect moment to abandon second gear—to abandon autonomous private authority and yield to your desire to feel your Sonship or Daughtership with your Father and your Brotherhood with your brothers and sisters—and consciously choose to see everything as your Father sees it—as your Father is Being it.

Mind you, when you're looking through the camera and everything is out of focus, it doesn't mean that what you're seeing is false. It doesn't mean that what you're seeing is an illusion even though you can't make sense out of it. It's just reality, truth you might say, out of focus. Turn the lens, bring it into focus. Now everything makes sense. A shift of perception has occurred, not a shift of reality and not actually an undoing of unreality. Because unreality was never going on, it was always reality misperceived. It was always perception with deceit.

Now, why suddenly bring in such a word as deceit? Because it implies dishonesty. Well, we're using the word because it is important to be honest [chuckle] and uncover when you're being dishonest so that you're not fooled. There is deceit when you're looking at everything and saying, "But Father, I'd rather see it my way. In other words, I'd rather change the setting on the lens so that what's perfectly clear becomes unclear and susceptible to misinterpretation so that I can apply an interpretation (which is actually a misinterpretation) to it and join with my brothers and sisters in a mutual misunderstanding of it that we're going to call, an explanation of the reality of everything. And it will be called, 'science.' And we will live according to the precepts of science. We will live according to a definition that has been given to a distorted image of what's real and what it really is will forever escape us because of our commitment to the definition we're giving it. And so, we're going to say it's 'this' when it isn't." And that is where the deceit comes in. You see? "We are going to pretend that it's not the Presence of God, that 'it' is something else. It's the presence of 'matter.' The presence of matter that came from a 'Big Bang' that had nothing to do with God." And on and on and on.

So, when you shift from the authority you love to think you have as an orphan, as an independent agent, when you shift from that to an attitude of saying, "Father, what are You really Being here? Show me what this thing really is." When you make that shift, you abandon your desire to practice deceit. And you have what is called, a sudden shift of perception—a miracle. Healing injuries from an accident, gone. Someone dying in a hospital bed revived fully, instantaneously, immediately free of the need of life-support systems.

Every one of you needs to begin to think—I'm going to say that cautiously—every one of you needs to begin to think in a new way. Everyone of you needs to begin to condition yourself to respond to emergencies not with reaction first, but with an immediate call to the Father—an immediate call to your innate divine wisdom, an immediate call to the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind—to reveal to you what's really going on, with an expectation of seeing illusion (out-of-focus-fuzziness) shifting into perfect clarity where there's no question what-so-ever about what it is, and no room for anyone to come to a misperception or a misunderstanding of what it is, an experience of it which, because it's the true experience of it, is so compelling to you that you would not choose to see it any other way any longer.

And when that happens, there will be instantaneous healing. There may even be gradual healing, we're not going to quibble. The evidence will be healing. But it can be instantaneous. And you can learn to instantaneously respond to a call for love with a desire to know what love is and what love needs to be expressed as by you in that moment, instead of reacting and being governed by fear, which is the opposite of love.

So, going into the book . . .

What do you WANT? Light or darkness, knowledge or ignorance are yours, but not both.

Again . . .

Light or darkness, knowledge or ignorance are yours, but not both. Opposites must be brought together, and not be kept apart.

We could say, what do you want, first gear or second gear? Sonship or orphanhood? They're yours, but not both. You either have one or the other. You have one or the other, right now, already. There aren't any other choices. So you have one or the other, right now.

But the question is . . .

What do you WANT? Light or darkness, knowledge or ignorance are yours, . . .

. . . and I'm adding, first gear or second gear is yours, Sonship or orphanhood is yours, but not both.

Opposites must be brought together, and not kept apart. For their separation is only in your mind, and they are reconciled by union as YOU are.

Well, what in the heck does that mean?

. . . they are reconciled by union as YOU are.

Well, waking up is shifting from a sense of you're having your own mind, something which you say is in your own skull, in a hunk of meat called a brain, unknown to you because things that are kept apart cannot be had at the same time, cannot be experienced at the same time. Unbeknownst to you, as you're making this claim of a mind that's in a skull, in a brain, you the divine one that you are that you've been unconscious of, and your right Mind which is the only real Mind there is which is yours, isn't being experienced by you, but it's there and as you know now, it's called the Holy Spirit. It's your identity. It's your Being held in trust while you imaginatively play with the ego--dally with the ego, pretend to be an ego, have fun being scared to death by the experience of being an ego, and so on and so on. Okay.

Now, Someone has come along. The Course has come along, I have come along, and you've been told that contrary to your belief that your mind is in your brain and that it's a physical thing, there is a real you, one that isn't imagined, one that can't be described the way you're describing yourself. And the experience of it can be achieved or taken hold of, the experience can be had by desiring to connect with God by embracing with what to you in the beginning, is an idea of God. But in your willingness to reach for the experience of God, what are you doing? You're abandoning the autonomy of second gear. You're abandoning the commitment to being an independent agent.

You are bringing the illusion to truth. You are uniting what seemed to be separate by bringing them together. The puny little orphan that you thought you were has begun to change it's goal and brings itself, by virtue of desire, to an experience of joining with Something you didn't even know was there. You didn't know what truth was and you didn't know how to bring yourself to it.

But now you are beginning to understand. And you are beginning to have a feel for engaging in this . . . well, what had been an unknown practice, even an unknowable practice, because your orphanhood was so exclusive that it didn't allow for such a thing.

So . . .

Opposites must be brought together, and not be kept apart.

What you think you are must be brought to what you actually Are.

Opposites must be brought together, and not be kept apart. For their separation is only in your mind, and they are reconciled by union as YOU are.

You are reconciled by the uniting of who you thought you were, with who you really Are.

In union, everything that is not real MUST disappear, for truth IS union.

In other words, truth is union. Union is the truth of Being and therefore, disintegration, the opposite of union, has to disappear because it's not truth. And in the experience of truth, it becomes obvious—untruth becomes obvious. "Gee whiz, I always thought two times two is five. And now you come along and you show me two apples and two apples two times two is what? One, two, three, four. . . my God, it isn't five." Ignorance has been replaced by the comprehension of truth. Never again will you think that two times two is five.

As darkness . . .

. . . ignorance . . .

. . . disappears in light, so ignorance fades away when knowledge dawns. Perception is the medium by which ignorance is brought to knowledge. Yet the perception must be without deceit, for otherwise, it becomes the messenger of ignorance rather than a helper in the search for truth.

Okay. Eventually, you're not going to perceive anything at all any longer. Perception and misperception will vanish. They'll vanish in the experience of Knowing. They will vanish in the experience of understanding truth experientially. The experience of what a thing really is will be a direct experience not a perception of it. A perception of it is like a snapshot of it or an idea of it. But the truth of what a thing is will be experienced by you directly. But in the meantime, since you're operating in the realm of perception, because that's how you come up with illusions, we're going to use perceptions.

How do you have a new perception? How do you have a perception without deceit? You have a perception without deceit by abandoning the self that used thought processes to define reality different from what the Father created it as. That's perception without deceit. It requires you to go within and ask of the Father, “What is the reality here? What are You Being in that orchid, what are You Being in that table, what are You Being in my fingernail, . . . what is true here?” Because as I said earlier, every moment is a perfect moment for a sudden shift of perception to occur. And since there aren’t two realities, there’s either reality experienced in focus, or there is reality experienced out of focus. Then whatever you’re calling a fingernail in the out-of-focus view, is something that’s really there to be seen in focus. All you have to do is turn the lens to bring it into focus.

When you ask, “What is really going on here? What are You Being here, God? What is it that’s really here in front of me, no matter how I’m perceiving it at the moment? That desire genuinely felt, genuinely extended to the Father, or to the Holy Spirit, or to me, will elicit a response in Answer, not a misdirection, not a distraction, but the Answer will be forth-coming. The turning of the lens will happen. You’ll say, “My God, two plus two is four!” You see?

So, waking up is a matter of abandoning perception with deceit. Which means it’s a matter of abandoning the orphan mentality in which you made up the definitions of everything—made up definitions about everything real that defined them incorrectly—defined what was real falsely. And that’s how the deceit came into play. And you let go of the deceit by desiring once again to know what truth is. “What’s the truth of the fingernail? What’s the truth of the glass? What’s the truth of the book? What’s the truth of the paper? What is going on here that I’m currently seeing in a blurred fashion, which I know I will be able to see if the focus is returned to the picture. What is it?”

Perception is the medium by which ignorance is brought to knowledge.

. . . to the experience of Knowing.

Yet the perception must be without deceit, for otherwise it becomes the messenger of ignorance rather than a helper in the search for truth.

If you’re not asking to know what a thing truly is, so that you might perceive it without misperception being introduced, then misperception will be maintained. Misperception will continue to be established and you will continue to be ignorant.

So, perception either leads you into temptation and illusion, or perception leads you into the experience of truth depending on what voice you are using in order to be told what truth is.

If you're going to continue to use your puny little voice, from the puny little mind and your puny little head, you're going to stay with illusion. But you're not bound to that anymore, cause you know better. And tonight it's clearer than ever, because I've said it so clearly to you, that there's only one thing going on and it's Reality, which you're either seeing clearly or out of focus.

So there's nothing complicated. You don't have to get rid of a material world and you don't have to rise above a material world. You just have to stop keeping that lens in a position where Reality is out of focus, that's all. Put it into focus and the Reality that was present all along, that you were misinterpreting and misunderstanding, will be clearly seen for what it is in such a compelling way that you will recognize that it's Heaven.

Now . . .

The search for truth is but the honest searching out of everything that interferes with truth.

You have to be careful with this. The best way to search out that which interferes with the experience of truth, is to desire to know what the truth is about anything and everything. Because the moment you do that, you will find out what conditionings are present in you that you use to keep yourself ignorant of the truth.

If you begin to desire to know the truth about so-and-so, you will find yourself automatically being caught up short if you don't like so-and-so and never have, or if so-and-so hurt you, or abused you. Your desire to know the truth—God's truth about them—will be blocked by your reluctance to know the truth about them because you don't want to abandon your self-righteous, negative appraisal of them. And you will say, "This is not a perfect moment for a sudden shift of perception." And you will have a direct experience of what interferes with truth, with the experience of truth, without having gone on an internal witch hunt.

I promise you something: If you do an honest searching, what you might call an honest searching out of everything that interferes with truth, your ego can lead you on a merry little self-righteous chase. "Oh, you wouldn't believe what I learned about myself as I've begun to [chuckling] honestly search out everything that interferes with truth. My God, I found that I've been doing this and I've found that I've been doing that and, wow, what an eye opener. You can't believe the shift it's caused in my mind." [Loud chuckling] And no shift has occurred at all. You've just developed new wonderful things to praise yourself about.

And you know what? You will never have found out that you were resistant to acknowledging the truth about so-and-so, which you would have found out if you decided you wanted to know what the truth was about so-and-so.

So keep yourself grounded in this searching out of everything that interferes with truth. Don't look for errors in you, look for the truth in everything. Desire for there to be this sudden shift of perception, called a miracle, the movement from blurred to in-focus. Desire that. And that will automatically bring unto you the means you are employing for staying ignorant and being unconscious of the truth. And then that which uncovered it, because of your desire to know the truth, will help you set it aside by showing you the truth that undoes your conviction and your commitment to the misperception you had created by virtue of wanting to live in a world of blur.

Truth IS.

It just is.

It can be neither lost nor sought nor found. It is there, wherever YOU are, being WITHIN you. Yet it CAN be recognized or unrecognized, real or false to YOU.

Even though it's wherever you are and within you . . .

. . . it CAN be recognized or unrecognized, real or false to YOU . . .

. . . depending upon whether you are functioning in first gear or second gear, whether you are creating a split mind, you know, your right Mind and your orphan mentality.

If you hide it, . . .

. . . truth . . .

. . . it becomes unreal to you BECAUSE you hid it and surrounded it with fear.

So, that which is nothing but your right Mind, which is the Holy Spirit, which you have a hard time believing, you have a hard time believing because you hid your right Mind from yourself when you said, "But Father, I'd rather see it my way. I would rather use my mind in a way You did not design it, for a purpose You did not make it—that purpose being, to call everything that You've made something different from what You made. I will put my stamp of approval on creation in a slightly distorted way." You see, that's where the deceit came in.

And so, when you decided to function as a mentality that wasn't the Father's mind, that wasn't the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit became unknowable to you. It's something you could think about. It's something that a word could be applied to and everybody could talk about, "Oh, the Holy Trinity: The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit . . . wow," never for a moment realizing that the third part of the Trinity, the Holy Spirit, is nothing more than your right Mind—You, as you experience yourself, when you stop trying to be the personal, private author of the definitions and meanings of creation.

So you hid It and It became unreal to you, in fact, unknown to you as being You.

Under each cornerstone of fear . . .

. . . because of course, fear accompanies everything you do from second gear. Second gear is always accompanied by fear.

Under each cornerstone of fear on which you have erected your insane system of belief the truth lies hidden.

Behind every fuzzy perception lies Reality, perfect. Reality lies hidden behind out of focusness.

Yet you cannot know this, for by hiding truth in fear you see no reason to believe the MORE you look at fear the LESS you see it, and the clearer what it CONCEALS becomes.

Now, again we must be clear here, because it's very impractical just to look at fear, and to look at it consistently. You must look at fear with One Who is Awake, the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, whose task, if you will, is to reconcile you with it so that you might experience your Sanity once again. And the more you look at fear with your Guide or with the Holy spirit or with me, the less you see it, and the clearer what it conceals becomes, the clearer the Reality behind the blur becomes as the blur shifts into focus.

It is not possible to convince the unknowing that they know.

It's impossible for me to convince you that your right Mind is the Holy Spirit. But I can tell you over and over again in so many different ways that you might begin to experience curiosity and begin to do the essential thing, which is to reach for It, to dare to embrace It as though It's actually there. But I can't convince you—the unknowing, that which doesn't know of it's divinity—that you know. I can't convince the orphan that you think you are, that you are the Holy Spirit.

From their point of view, . .

. . . from your point of view . . .

. . . it is not true. Yet it IS true because GOD knows it.

This is important . . .

. . . GOD knows it.

And you know it, if you were in your right Mind.

These are clearly opposite viewpoints of what the “unknowing” are.

[Repeats] These are clearly opposite viewpoints . . .

Viewpoints are like vantage points. Viewpoints are perceptions, aren't they. “Well, my perception of the accident was this, and someone else's perception of the accident was that.” Or “My perception of the meaning of the movie was this, and your perception of the meaning of the movie was something else.”

Viewpoints are different from knowing. [repeats] Viewpoints are different from knowing.

To God unknowing is impossible. It is therefore not a point of view at all, but merely a belief in something that does not exist. It is only this belief that the unknowing . . .

. . . the ignorant . . .

. . . have, and by it they are wrong about themselves. They have DEFINED themselves . . .

. . . you have defined yourselves . . .

. . . as they were not created.

As you were not created.

Their creation . . .

. . . your creation

was not a point of view, but rather a certainty. Uncertainty brought to certainty does not retain ANY conviction of reality.

Uncertainty, which is characteristic of the orphan mentality and of gear number two, brought to first gear with the desire to know the truth here, does not retain any conviction of Reality because the truth is so compelling that there is no way to hold on to the illusion any longer with any belief.

Now, there's a saying, "You believe what you see, and you see what you believe." The implication of that statement is: If you want to see something different, believe something different. And it's as though that is the answer, that's the solution, that's the way you correct things. But I'm here to tell you that something had to happen before you had a belief to believe. You had to abandon the experience of knowing. You had to say, "But, Father, I'd rather not know it. I would rather create an experience of it that I have made up, that I have created through the use of my mind. And so, I'm going to call this such-and-such a thing and I'm going to say that it has such-and-such a purpose, and that will be my belief. And I will believe what I see and I will see what I believe."

If you understand this, then you will also understand that the solution to a better experience is not to have a better belief, but to abandon belief and yield to your capacity to know, which you abandoned in favor of having beliefs, and governing yourself according to beliefs and being governed by your beliefs.

So the answer is, and the freedom from belief comes from asking, "Father, what is the truth here? What is really going on there? What is really going on where it looks like there was an accident at this intersection? What is really going on?" Because again, no matter how gory it looks, in other words, no matter how fuzzy it gets, it's still a fuzzy unfocussed experience of something that's utterly clear, utterly flawless, utterly perfect. And so, in spite of what you're seeing, all that is needed is a sudden shift of perception, because the fuzzy picture, the distorted picture, the gory picture that you're seeing is nothing more than an altered perception of something utterly perfect.

Ah, but I'm telling you something that you don't know. I'm telling you something I cannot convince you of. I understand that. I must tell you what you cannot believe, so that you might open your mind up and let your belief be replaced by a new experience that eradicates the value of beliefs and allows actual sudden shifts of perception to occur that will be called miraculous.

You must have noticed that the emphasis has been on bringing what is undesirable TO the desirable; what you do NOT want to what you DO.

Again, let's be careful. What you do want, what you do truly want, is what the Father or the Holy Spirit reveals to you. If you just go after what you want as you perceive yourself to be at the moment—a handy-dandy little orphan—then wanting what you do want is just going to keep you in the orphanage.

So . . .

You must have noticed that the emphasis has been on bringing what is undesirable TO the desirable; what you do NOT want to what you DO. You will realize that salvation must come to you this way if you consider what dissociation is. Dissociation is a distorted process of thinking whereby two systems of belief which cannot coexist are both MAINTAINED.

Hm-m, two systems of belief . . . Oh, first gear, second gear . . . Son or Daughter of God . . . orphan. Those are two systems of belief. Why am I calling a Son or Daughter of God a belief? Because right now you don't believe it. [Chuckling] And so to you that is a belief. Fine. Once you have the experience of it though, you won't call it a belief any longer.

Nevertheless . . .

Dissociation is a distorted . . .

. . . fuzzy, out of focus . . .

. . . process of thinking whereby two systems of belief which cannot coexist are both MAINTAINED.

They sure are, aren't they. You don't experience your divinity while you're being as orphan. And when you experience your divinity you won't experience being an orphan. But you are demonstrating right now, the fact that your belief that you're an orphan is keeping you absolutely blinded to your being the Holy Spirit, to your right Mind being nothing more than the Holy Spirit.

So the two are being maintained, even though they can't actually exist in your mind at the same time.

It has been recognized that, if they were brought TOGETHER, their joint acceptance would become impossible.

In other words, you couldn't believe both of them. You get that? You couldn't believe both of them. Belief would not make sense. The practice of believing wouldn't make sense, because the truth would be so obvious.

But if one is kept in darkness from the other, . .

. . . if second gear is kept in the darkness from the first, or if first gear is kept in darkness from second, . . .

. . . their SEPARATION seems to keep them both alive, and equal in their reality.

Mind you, this is all nonsense, but this is the way dissociation works.

Their joining thus becomes the source of fear, for if they meet, acceptance MUST be withdrawn from one of them.

And you all know [chuckling] that acceptance will have to be withdrawn from the belief of orphanhood. And you don't want to do that yet. "Oh, but I do, but I do!" No, if you wanted to you would have done it, and you'd be saying, "I've done it," you wouldn't be saying, "Oh, I want to, I want to." Okay.

You CANNOT have them both, for each denies the other. Apart, this fact is lost from sight, . . .

. . . that each denies the other . . .

. . . for each in a SEPARATE place can be endowed with firm belief.

You see. You can even read the Course and you can listen to what I'm saying and you can think about the Holy Spirit being nothing more than your right Mind and accepting that as a fact, and of being an orphan and accepting that as a fact, and they can both sit there side-by-side. Why? Because you're not making commitment to both of them. You're making commitment to one. You're making commitment to being the orphan.

The necessity here, is for you to dare to make commitment to that which is nothing more than your right Mind, and stop thinking and stop reasoning and stop coming to your own conclusions. And in every instance where you would've come to your own conclusions, you lean into the Holy Spirit demanding a response from that which is nothing more than your right Mind, because you want to know the truth.

Bring them TOGETHER, . . .

. . . as that would amount to . . .

. . . and the fact of their complete incompatibility is instantly apparent. One will go BECAUSE the other is seen in the same place. Light cannot enter darkness when a mind believes in darkness, and will not LET it go.

Simple.

Truth does not struggle against ignorance, and love does not attack fear. What needs no protection does not defend itself. Defence is of YOUR making. God knows it not. The Holy Spirit uses defences on BEHALF of truth only because you made them AGAINST it.

[Repeats] The Holy Spirit uses defences on BEHALF of truth only because you made them . . .

. . . defenses . . .

. . . AGAINST it.

. . . the truth.

So, how have I described tonight the practice of defending truth? I've described it by saying that if you see a dead animal on the road, you [snaps fingers] immediately say, "That's a lie," or instead of reacting to an accident or an injury or illness, you say, "Father what is the truth here." That's how you defend the truth. You defend the lie by becoming upset, by justifying anger, by justifying thinking that comes to conclusions that are false and believing the conclusions and acting on the basis of them.

So, again, since you're used to practicing defense, the Holy Spirit—when you listen to the Holy Spirit—will guide you to use defense on behalf of truth.

Now you notice that I didn't describe setting up shields against everything that would attack truth. The way you defend truth is by wanting to know the truth, and not expressing or practicing any other desire. You defend truth by letting your intent be fully on having the experience of what truth is. You defend the experience of truth by not allowing yourself to be distracted by anything but truth. That's the way, through the Holy Spirit's help, that you defend truth and make the shift more easily from second gear to first gear, and have a sudden shift of perception in which deceit is absent.

Now, we're going to stop here for this evening, because I want you to remember during this coming week to defend the truth. And to remember that the way you defend the truth is to wish to know what the truth is, and by not allowing yourself to be distracted from hearing the answer, especially not being distracted from hearing the answer by spontaneously indulging in the habit of thinking. You will know by desiring to know, not by figuring out an answer.

Remember, every moment is a perfect moment to have a sudden shift of perception. Every experience of a call for love is a perfect moment to find a way to let love through you. Every call for a miracle does not constitute a moment which is not perfect for a miracle because it is too upsetting, it is a perfect moment for a miracle, because that's when the miracle is needed. And if miracles are not for the moments in which they are really needed they are useless.

I love you. I love you, all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 22nd 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, for all of the time we've been together, and all of the subjects being discussed, it could seem that this is all very complicated. But as we found out last week, it's really very simple. It's the difference between seeing clearly or out of focus. It's a matter of seeing the same thing in each case: There's only Reality and ultimately, there's only you—there's only what you Are, not what you Are, and what you think you are. And to shift from what you think you are to what you Are, amounts to the abandoning of a belief—a set of ideas. Nothing complicated.

At the bottom line, we're undoing an illusion. An illusion is a nebulous sort of specific collection of ideas which, if you put your mind to it, you can believe is very specific, and very true, and very real and is what you are or is what something else is, and on and on and on. But it's really a very wavery, a very insubstantial thing, gone like a wisp of smoke if you withdraw your investment of faith in it.

You are, and you always have been the holy Daughter, the holy Son of God. You have always and only been what God is really Being right there where you are. Anything else you have believed that you are has been only a belief. And to come back Home into your right Mind and the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven is a matter of simply abandoning your valuing of your beliefs. And that which is insubstantial will vanish.

So the question is, “How do you keep the illusion going?” If you didn’t wake up between last week and this week, you’ve kept the illusion going. You are master illusionists seeming to do something that you’re not doing at all.

The problem is, that an illusionist on a stage knows that he’s doing nothing at all and let’s everyone else participate in the illusion that he’s really doing—what he appears to be doing. That’s what the illusionist on the stage does, but you are believing your illusion.

Now, you keep your illusion going by virtue of thinking. It doesn’t get any more simple than that.

The breaking of the illusion comes when you take the time and the effort, backed up with commitment or resolve, to stop thinking, to become still and to listen, to pay attention. Pay attention to what? Pay attention to what’s happening. What’s happening right now for Paul is the sensation of a chair holding his bottom up, the sensation of the floor being a place for his feet to rest at the moment. At another time, the floor could be a sensation and the chair could be a sensation of that which allows his bottom and his feet to slip through them right on down to the floor down below.

That doesn’t happen right now because that’s not his belief about the floor and about the chair, or about his bottom. He doesn’t think his bottom can move through anything. And only shit can move through his bottom, not a chair, not a floor, not the beams between the floors, but that’s all a matter of his belief.

Now he has these beliefs for a reason, just as every one of you have your beliefs for reasons. And these reasons all are built around the need you feel to establish security and safety for yourself, because you have a primary false belief that you are in danger—that you are vulnerable. That’s a belief. And you have built all of your other beliefs and thought systems on that.

Now the simple fact is, that if Paul wants to be able to sink through the chair and the floor until he’s downstairs where he wants the floor to support him, until he wants that, he will not allow it to happen. And he won’t allow it to happen until he doesn’t need or see the floor as having to hold him up for his security and safety. You see what I mean?

You’re not going to abandon your beliefs until the reason you’re holding them becomes weakened by choice, where you’re willing to invalidate them.

Now, we ended up last week talking about that the wish to see the truth and the commitment to staying focused on discerning what truth is, is the way you protect truth—not by establishing defenses around it, but by disallowing for anything else to occur in your mind except for your desire to know the truth.

During this past week you've all had the opportunity with the experiences that you encountered every day, to either respond to everything from your current belief systems based upon self protection, or to respond to them by asking, "What is the truth here? I want to know God's truth about paying the 'cashier,' I want to know God's truth about being out, taking care of errands." You see.

You all love to have options, variables. You all love indefiniteness, because then you can weigh and evaluate the differences. You can haggle. You can argue. You can have fun trying to get the best price, even though the exchange is vigorous. You have learned how to have fun in the lack of absoluteness.

One of the reasons is, that if you can become really good at haggling, if you can become really good at argument like an attorney, if you can become really good at influencing others to a point of view that you want to enforce, you can become important. You can become well-known. You can become a recognized person of some stature and some respectability. You see. And this plays into your need to establish security for yourself, and safety.

But you know it has its drawbacks too. You can go to Disneyland, you can take your kids and you can say, "Where do you want to go next?" and all of the kids will say, "I want to go here, I want to go there, I want to go to the other place. No, no, I want to go here, I want to go there!" "Okay. Decide amongst yourselves which one to go to next." And they stand and they squabble, except they're not enjoying bartering because they don't feel expert at what they're doing yet.

And so it ends up just being a time-consuming argument where no-one comes to a satisfactory conclusion. And in the time it took to argue about what the advantages were of this ride over that ride, all three rides could have been ridden and experienced. And which one was better than the other would have been irrelevant, because the direct experience of the ride is the experience of what the ride is. And there's no confusion anymore about the actuality of the ride. It is what it is, just like truth is. It's not debatable, it's not discoverable, you can't lose it. It is.

Ah-h, so maybe if you want to have the experience of passing through floors or walls, or levitating, you've got to be willing to let go of becoming someone important. You've got to let go of doing those things which provide you with a sense of safety. Why? Because they distract you. They actually distract you just as the arguments among the kids distract them from having the experience of the ride, they distract you from the experience of what truth is.

They distract you from the experience of safety that simply is yours, an experience which shows you that you never again ever have to engage in establishing your security and doing it in a way that makes you recognizably valid, important, and respectable. All of that has been a farce—a total side trip.

So, do you see what I'm saying? In order to be willing to want to know what truth is with conviction and determination, we'll say commitment, you're going to have to be willing to abandon some of your very fundamental beliefs, such as, "If you do that, you're going to lose your importance, you're going to lose validity, and you're going to lose your security and safety."

Many of you who did this practice during this past week, had a lot of upheaval. Now, a majority of that upheaval came into play because one of your habits—one of your mindsets—that is part of your false foundation of beliefs is that you are not valid. We've talked about it before. And you are attempting to gain validity, but you haven't gained it yet, and therefore, you are guilty. You are not up to par. You are a failure to one degree or another and you feel bad about this. The habit of guilt and fear is strong in you.

Now, if you want to know what truth is, if you really dare to say, "Father, what is the truth here? What are You Being right here where this fingernail is? What are You Being right here where this glass is? What are You Being right here where Paul is, or Jerry is or Jimmy or Abigail, what are You Being right there? I want to have the direct experience of what You're Being right there, instead of the definitions I've arrived at and the conclusions I've come to about what You're Being right there." You see?

When you do that, and you're getting very close to abandoning this orphan sense of self—this false sense of self—this habit of guilt rises up because it is so deeply engrained that you are sure that if you escape it or if you try to escape it, the penalty for your guilt will fall on you. And so, fear rises up and you become uneasy, and you become frightened, and then it causes you to call into play all of your well-established habits that you use to reinforce your safety. Like, oh you got to appease God . . . "No . . . no . . . I'm not really trying to escape my guilt, I'm not really trying to be happy, I'm not really trying to find out that maybe I'm guiltless, I'm not really trying to find out if I'm utterly safe and that it's been a total illusion that I've been in a state of vulnerability and subject to threat. No, I'm really not trying to do that! Please!!" You see.

And so, you cower in front of your opportunity to wake up. And in the cowering, you practice your old habits of reasserting your guilt and of re-establishing your proper place in the structure of orphans and orphanages, and the state of having no Birthright. You see.

Just because you may have had a rough week is no reason to stop wanting to know the truth, and it is no reason to abandon your intent to push through the fear.

You see, one of the things that can happen is, that this feeling of guilt comes up in you in your relationships with others, and suddenly everything they are doing seems to be uncovering your guilt: They say something, "Why are you doing that?"

"Oh, why you think I'm doing something wrong? I'm not doing anything wrong, but you know, why do you want to know?"

"Well, I wanted to know because I thought maybe I could help you with what you were going to do."

You see. And you can end up with everything in your day, in one way or another, seeming to reflect back to you your guilt, when that isn't what's happening at all.

Why am I saying this? I'm saying this because no matter how uncomfortable the experiences are that you might have as you determine to know the truth, they still amount to one of two things: Either truth or illusion. And that brings us back to the simplicity that last week's session began with which lay in the question, "What do you want?"

You see, you don't want to say, "What do you want?"—do you want the threat to go away? "What do you want?"—do you want so-and-so to stop wanting to know what you're doing because it makes you uncomfortable? "What do you want?"—do you want circumstances to change or do you want to be able to recognize that you only have two things confronting you: Truth or illusion, and you have the option as to which you want. And if you stop choosing for illusion, your circumstances won't seem to call into play the suggestion that you're guilty and that a penalty awaits you.

So, let's go into the Book. And let me reiterate: If you find crap coming up in your experience as you opt for wanting the truth, remember all it is, is a deep-seated mental habit of interpreting what is happening based on beliefs that are false which your desire to know the truth will lead you beyond and get you past. So persist and do not be discouraged.

Now, I'm going to back up one sentence from where we ended last week.

The Holy Spirit uses defences on BEHALF of truth only because you made them AGAINST it.¹

You made the use of defense against truth.

His perception of them, . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . according to His purpose, merely changes them into a call FOR what you have ATTACKED with them.

You've used [defense] to attack truth and defend yourself against it. The Holy Spirit uses the defense of giving focused, undistracted attention to what truth is as a defense for, on behalf of truth. You see?

Defences, like everything you made, must be gently turned to your own good, translated by the Holy Spirit from means of self-destruction to means of preservation and release.

That's the whole point. Preservation and release: The uncovering of your eternality, the uncovering of your unchangeableness, the uncovering of your permanence, and your release from the beliefs that you hold onto so tightly because you think that it is keeping you safe.

His task . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . is mighty, but the power of God is with Him. Therefore, to Him, it is so easy that it was accomplished the instant it was given Him for you.

Now . . .

Do not delay yourselves in your return to peace by wondering how He can fulfill what God has given Him to do.

You know more than anything what that sentence means? It says don't waste your time doing any thinking of any kind about it. Accept it as the truth.

His task is mighty, but the power of God is with Him. Therefore, to Him, it is so easy that it was accomplished the instant it was given Him for you.

Don't think about it!

Do not delay yourselves in your return to peace by wondering how He can fulfill what God has given Him to do. Leave that to Him Who knows. You . . .

. . . the orphan that you think you are at the moment . . .

. . . are not asked to do mighty tasks yourself. You are merely asked to do the little He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

Suggests you do, trusting Him . . .

Oh yeah, well, there it is . . .

. . . trusting . . .

. . . a difficult thing for a vulnerable one to practice. But . . .

. . . trusting Him only to the small extent of believing that, if He asks it, you CAN do it.

Well, what does the Holy Spirit ask you? The Holy Spirit asks you, "What do you want?" Not a complicated question. He didn't ask, "Are you bright enough to do it?" He didn't ask, "Do you deserve to accomplish it?" No, He just asks, "What do you want?"

So . . .

You are merely asked to do the little He suggests you do, trusting Him only to the small extent of believing that, if He asks it, . . .

. . . like, "What do you want?"

. . . you CAN do it. You will SEE how easily all that He asks can be accomplished.

What do you want? Light or darkness, clarity or confusion? What do you want? A simple thing.

And I ask you again this week: Approach everything to the best of your ability with a conscious desire to know, "What is God's truth here?" "I know it just looks like a freeway . . . I just know it looks like a back road . . . I just know that I saw a squirrel that got run over . . . I just know that I'm in a rickety old car . . . I just know this and I just know that . . . but God what is Your truth here? Because it can't all be the way I'm seeing it. And I'm pretty darn sure that my definition of it isn't as all inclusive or accurate as it might be—as it could be. So God, what is the truth here?" Keep asking that. Keep wanting to know what of the Kingdom of Heaven you're looking at now. "And will you, Father, please cause me to be able to have the experience of what it truly is?"

Now . . .

The Holy Spirit asks of you but this; bring to Him every secret you have locked away from Him.

Well, first of all, who's the "Him?" The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. So what have you locked away from Him? You have locked away from that which is nothing more than your right Mind, every single thought you have come up with. Every single thought you have, every single definition you have made up, covers up what that thing really is, or covers up your capacity to know because you are busy making the static of thoughts—of thinking.

The Holy Spirit asks of you but this; bring to Him every secret you have locked away from Him. Open every door to Him, and bid Him enter the darkness and lighten it away.

. . . lighten the darkness away. Now we talked last week about bringing the illusion to truth, which is you saying, "Father . . ." and by that very word, abandoning your confidence in your orphanhood, saying, "Father, show me this . . ." or "Father, show me the truth here" and abandoning your isolation, your separation.

But tonight we're talking about letting the Holy Spirit enter the darkness and lighten it away. You have a friend. The Holy Spirit is your friend. It's not only your real Self, it's your friend when you are thinking you are something else and needing to believe that you are something else because you are confused.

Open every door to Him, and bid Him enter the darkness and lighten it away. At your request He enters gladly. He brings the light to darkness if you make the darkness OPEN to Him.

Well, what does that mean—that's figuratively speaking? It means take your thoughts that you're so sure of and say, "Holy Spirit, talk to me about this thought—talk to me about this meaning that I'm so convinced of. Talk to me of what the reality of this or that or the other thing is that I am believing."

Don't get airy-fairy and talk about irrelevant things. Talk about . . . ask questions about . . . invite the Holy Spirit into your secrets—into your definitions. Because remember, your definitions are covering up something. Your definitions of things are covering up what those things truly are, causing those things to be secret—secreted away, unavailable.

So this Friend, He enters gladly.

At your request He enters gladly. He brings the light to darkness if you make the darkness OPEN to Him. But what you hide He cannot look upon. For He sees for YOU, and unless you look WITH Him He cannot see. The Vision of Christ is not for Him alone, but for Him with YOU.

The Vision of Christ. Do you remember some time ago, Paul turned a statement into a prayer from the Course? And the prayer said: I wish to see everything through your Vision, which is your Gift to me from God. It's a prayer to me. Because I'm the One who has the Vision, which is my gift to him and to every one of you from God.

So . . .

The vision of Christ . . .

. . . this vision . . .

. . . is not for Him alone, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . but for Him with YOU.

. . . in tandem, in union, in brotherhood, in togetherness, in love.

Bring, therefore, all your dark and secret thoughts to Him, and look upon them WITH Him.

Now see, there's the rub, as it says. [chuckling] You may be willing to bring your deepest, darkest thoughts to Him, but you may well not be willing to look at them with Him, because you would rather bring your deepest, darkest thoughts to Him as a complaint, and sit there with the complaint registered and think that you're going to watch the Holy Spirit squirm under your demand for Him to recognize your self-righteous objection.

Now you also may not want to look on it with Him, because if he actually shows you that this deep dark secret has no meaning whatsoever, you may see that as affecting your credibility, because after all, it was your idea and you thought it was a pretty good idea. And in fact, a lot of other people thought it was a pretty good idea. And if you actually let this idea be shown up for what it is, illusory, well, it's just going to make a fool out of you to yourself, and most certainly if you are honest with others about it, it's going to make you look like a fool to them.

So . . .

Bring, therefore, all your dark and secret thoughts to Him, and look upon them WITH Him.

Isn't the Course wonderful? Full of love and sweetness. It is, but the orphan isn't full of love and sweetness, it's uptight, it's severe, it radically employs mean-spiritedness. It thinks for its safety, to keep itself safe. And it finds no value in abandoning the capacity to be that way.

Here's where it helps to remember there's only two things confronting you: Truth or illusion. You see, it doesn't matter how well you thought up the thought. It doesn't matter how well you conveyed the thought to others. It doesn't matter how many others agreed with you and patted you on the back and voted you into office, or whatever. It doesn't matter. That isn't real complication. The only complication there is, is that you have a choice between reality or truth, truth or illusion. And if you make the choice for truth, all of the thoughtful imaginations that you came up with about how you're going to be affected by recognizing the falsity, the illusory nature of your thought and all that you thought might happen with all of those who respected you because of your thought, all of that, for lack of better words, will fade out because they are illusions. The people will still be there, they won't behave the way you're expecting from your orphan mentality.

You will have the marvelous opportunity of finding out that people really do like other people who are genuine, totally, honestly genuine, even if they're sharing a flaw of their own. Although all of you behave as though you really value a good act, the fact is that you really feel uncomfortable no matter how good the act is. And when you do come across someone genuine—where there is no act—you are very, very grateful, and you value that experience, and you value the relationship.

Again . . .

Bring, therefore, all your dark and secret thoughts to Him, . .

. . . see, thoughts, the culprits . . .

. . . and look upon them WITH Him.

Look upon them WITH Him and don't you teach Him what they mean. Let Him teach you what they mean, or let Him uncover they're meaninglessness so that you might become free of the bondage of confusion that had to be in place for you to value that which was meaningless.

He holds the light, and you the darkness.

And it's okay. You didn't think it was darkness, else you wouldn't have held on to it. And if you have half a chance of discovering that it isn't what you thought it was, and that it doesn't have the value that you think it does, then it's worth exploring, it's worth looking upon it with the Holy Spirit. It's worth saying, "Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than my right Mind—what is the truth here?" And then listen as though your life depended upon it, not out of fear, but out of genuine commitment. Don't be casual, "What's the meaning here, Holy Spirit? Okay, well, I've got to get on to other things, I'll check with you a little bit later. Okay, thank you very much."

He holds the light, and you the darkness. They CANNOT coexist when both of you together look on them.

You and this Friend of yours.

His judgment MUST prevail, and He will GIVE it to you as you join your perception to His.

You see, you're still going to use perception in the process of awakening, even though you are ultimately going to abandon it. Because perception is what you are familiar with. And perception, like defense, can be used on behalf of truth.

Joining with Him in seeing is the way in which you learn to share with Him the interpretation of perception that leads to knowledge.

. . . or knowing.

Joining with Him in seeing . . .

. . . you really do, all of you really do want a new perception, you want a new vision that doesn't seem to be full of threat or suffering or deterioration, or death.

You cannot see alone.

Orphans think they can. You have for a long time thought you could, but . . .

You cannot see alone. Sharing perception with Him Whom God has given you . . .

. . . meaning that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . teaches you how to RECOGNIZE what you see.

Again, here's the simplicity of it: You're sitting there right now (standing, or whatever) listening, and your eyes are open and you're seeing things. What you're seeing is the Kingdom of Heaven. It's the only thing there is, but you're not recognizing it, that's all. [snaps fingers] Recognition is a shift of perception, like focusing the lens on the camera, that's all.

"Oh-h, everyone is dependent upon me to be the strong one. Everyone is dependent upon me to know what to do. I can't let them down. I can't tell them that I don't know what to do. I don't always know what to do, and I don't always have the right answer. I don't want to dash their hopes into the ground." You see, that's an intellectual or perceptual complication, it's a twisted mass of spaghetti thoughts and you're going to try to say, "I'm not going to desire to know the truth because the spaghetti will know what to do with itself. It will see that it's all in a tangle. I can't do that to it."

Yes you can, and please do, because you're keeping yourselves bound by threads of thought that you have woven together in a way that looks like you have created an object, a real thing, something that means something. No. All of the people are real, but the perception of them that you have woven together in your mind, that you're governing yourself by is an illusion! And it's these threads of thoughts that aren't the people at all, aren't the circumstances at all, that will dissolve and fade and you will be left with seeing the people and seeing the circumstances and saying, "My God, it's the Kingdom of Heaven." You will recognize what you are seeing instead of believing what you've imagined, instead of seeing what you're believing.

I'm going to read this again.

You cannot see alone. Sharing perception with Him Whom God has given you teaches you how to RECOGNIZE what you see. It is the recognition that nothing you see means ANYTHING alone.

That's what the orphan does. The orphan looks at the Kingdom of Heaven alone saying, "I have no connections." And that fundamental belief that he has no connections colors every perception he has of the Kingdom of Heaven, causing him not to recognize it for what it is.

Seeing with Him will show you that all meaning, including YOURS, comes not from double vision, but from the gentle fusing of everything into ONE meaning, ONE emotion and ONE purpose.

What do you want, truth or illusion? The question promotes bringing multiplicity into singularity. Which one do you want? You cannot have both at the same time. So you must bring determination, singleness of purpose into play. There must be a devotion. And devotion means unscattered attention, doesn't it.

God has One Purpose which He shares with you.

Well, I'm going to tell you something. The One Purpose that God has is a Movement, it is a moving, living Purpose, and Infinite Creation is that Purpose recognized, experienced. So that the fact that God has One Purpose doesn't mean there's anything boring about Him, "Because He's only capable of one single little thought, you know, one little single purpose, boy . . ." No, God has One Purpose, it is embodied in all of Creation.

God has One Purpose . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . which He shares with you. The single vision which the Holy Spirit offers you will bring this Oneness to your mind with clarity . . .

. . . in other words, unblurred . . .

. . . and brightness so intense you could not wish, for all the world, not to accept what God would have you have. Behold your will, accepting it as His, with all His Love as yours. All honor to you through Him, and through Him unto God.

See, here comes the singleness, here comes the unity. Why? Because of the way you answered the question, "What do you want?" "I want to know truth, and I'm going to defend truth by not letting my desire to know truth be siphoned off by distractions, worries, fears, small mindedness, testiness, by not letting it be siphoned off by anything." As you do that and you let the experience of truth in, these words apply:

Behold your will, . .

. . . behold the truth about you . . .

. . . accepting it as His, with all His Love as yours.

This is referring to the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Behold your will, accepting it as His, with all His Love as yours.
All honor to you through Him, . .

. . . that's what happens when you wish to know the truth, and you wish to know the truth from the Holy Spirit.

All honor to you through Him, . .

. . . because the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, the Holy Spirit's Presence in you, illuminates you in all of your holiness, to you, so that it's no longer obscured from you.

All honor to you through Him, and through Him unto God.

It brings the whole Family together.

In the darkness . . .

. . . what's the darkness?

In the darkness . . .

. . . of your incessant thinking.

In the darkness . . .

. . . or static of your incessant thought processes . . .

. . . you have obscured the glory God gave you, and the power He bestowed upon His guiltless Son.

Oh, is he talking about Jesus? No, the guiltless Son they refer to here is you.

All this lies hidden in every darkened place shrouded in guilt, and in the dark denial of innocence. Behind the dark doors which you have closed lies . . .

. . . what?

. . . nothing, because nothing CAN obscure the gift of God. It is the closing of the doors that interferes with recognition of the power of God that shines in you.

"But, Father, I'd rather do it my way." Slam! "But, Father, I need to protect myself because I'm in a conflicted world where "good and evil" rein and where danger lurks at every turn. And therefore, I must be hard-nosed, mean-spirited and ready even to kill if necessary." Slam! And [chuckling] you stand on the side of the door away from God. And so you've hidden yourself from God. And you've hidden who you are truly, from yourself. And so, no such critter as that exists. The one standing behind the door, that slammed the door on God doesn't exist, except imaginatively.

So, behind the dark doors which you have closed, including the you that's behind the dark door that you've closed, lies nothing. You see? But you exist. You just don't exist as that which slams the door in the Father's face, effectively denying your conscious awareness of who you truly are. You think you've done it and you fight for the right to keep doing it, but it hasn't been done. And that's the shift of perception, that's the turning of the lens that needs to occur, that causes the blur to be replaced with sharp, crystal, clear clarity.

Behind the dark doors which you have closed lies nothing, because nothing CAN obscure the gift of God. It is the closing of the doors that interferes with recognition . . .

. . . whose recognition? Yours.

. . . of the power of God that shines in you. Banish not power from your mind, but let all that would hide your glory be brought to the judgment of the Holy Spirit, and . . .

. . . what?

. . . there undone.

That's what your Friend does. Oh, the little vestiges of orphanhood say, "Oh, if I take it and show it, it will be brought to the judgment of the Holy Spirit and I will be banished to hell." Well, that's not a friend, is it? And the Holy Spirit is your Friend. And so you do it and it's undone.

Whom He would save for glory IS saved for it.

Can you understand, that if the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, your sane Mind, your letting it in, your inviting it into you is going to have only one effect and that is to illuminate you as you truly are, which is the return of Sanity. It's something that a real friend does. And it's something to be reached for by you, with less reluctance than you bring into play.

You know, you say, "What is the truth here, Father? . . . Well, times passing . . . What's the truth here, Father?" . . . [humming] "Oh well, okay, I'll try again later."

If you realize that while you're looking at the grocery clerk, or the tree, that your desire to know the truth there is going to be an incredible experience of Reality, in which there's no mistaking what it is as the Presence of God, then that innocuous little moment of looking into the grocery clerk's eyes or watching as she gets the change from the till, is a moment to be truly curious about. Dare to bring your curiosity, dare to bring great curiosity to circumstance and moments that seem innocuous, meaningless, simple, and as though they couldn't possibly hold the promise of Eternal Life—the resurrecting of your conscious awareness of yourself as the Christ.

Every moment is precious. Every moment is a moment to ask, "What do I want?" Knowing, [chuckling] for lack of better words, that the true answer to the question will constitute hitting the jackpot.

Whom He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . would save for glory IS saved for it. He has promised the Father that through Him you would be released from littleness to glory. To what He promised God He is wholly faithful, for He shared with God the promise that was given Him to share with YOU.

Again, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, your sane Mind, having been invited in by you, with genuine sincerity and very little defense, very little reluctance, is going to have only one possible effect: Magnifying you. Magnifying what you truly are to you, so that there is no doubt whatsoever in your mind. Dare to do it.

Again, this week, dare to say, "What do I want, truth or illusion, light or darkness, clarity or confusion?" And then make the choice. And defend your choice by not letting yourself become distracted from its arrival. And again, insist upon its arrival.

Don't be wishy-washy about standing in receipt of your Sanity.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week. And if the going gets rough, realize you're getting caught up in the details of the illusion that seem so real and meaningful to you. Realize that, so you can say, "Wait a minute, what do I want, truth or illusion?" No matter what the details are of the illusion. "Do I want truth or illusion?" no matter how complicated things seem to be and what the disastrous effects will be of the illusion. "What do I want, truth or illusion?" And make your choice.

"Well, I really don't want to hear that the illusion isn't real, because I'm not ready to let go of it yet. It's too frightening to me." Well, it's just more of the bullshit of the illusion. You've got to say, "What do I want, truth or illusion?" And then choose for truth, whether you think you want to learn what it's going to teach you or not, because even to the smallest degree that you are willing to let it in, it will immediately begin to ease your mind and soften the sense of threat and restore a feeling of security so that you have even more willingness to let it in further.

This is what the Course is about. It isn't about wonderful ideas. It's about changing your mind. It's about having a new goal and letting go of your authority and your control, so that you might learn how you fit in to the Movement of Creation as co-creator, no less.

I'll stop. Again, I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 6th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You need to be reminded that you have a Friend. You need to remind yourself daily that you have a Friend and you need to remember that this friend has a God-given task. And that task is to release you into your freedom—release you into your Birthright—release you into the conscious experience of what you really Are. The thing to remember is, that in that release, something will be undone. Something will be undone that never happened.

Now, we've got to make that make sense. Let us suppose that you've gone to a hypnotist's show. And let's say that you were invited to come up on the stage. And the hypnotist said to you after hypnotizing you, that the next time you said the word "television," an apple would appear on the end of your nose and absolutely nothing you could do would make it disappear. In fact, he tells you that this has always been the case with everybody anytime anyone says the word, "television" an apple appears on the end of their nose that they can't get off. In other words, it's as though this is the way the universe works.

And so, the show is over and you go home and somewhere in the next couple days, you happen to say the word, "television" [snaps fingers] and boom! You see an apple attached to the end of your nose, heavy, unsightly. It's not even a beautiful red apple, it's a green apple. Nothing you can do will make it come off. And immediately when the apple appeared, you also knew (and you don't know where you got this knowing from but you found yourself knowing) that of course you had a green apple on your nose that wouldn't come off because you said the word, "television" and whenever anybody says the word, "television," a green apple or an apple appears on the end of their nose that they can't get off. So now you know something happened which hasn't happened. And you know why it happened. Because it always happens, it's the way the universe works.

Well, you can understand that getting rid of this apple—releasing you from the inconvenience of having an apple stuck on the end of your nose—is an undoing of something that never happened. It's easy for you to see that.

But let's say that you notice a lump in your breast and it's a green apple. Is it real? Is it God-derived? Or is it an illusion that you are believing and experiencing the evidence of, which still is no more real than the apple on the end of your nose that the hypnotist said would appear as a post-hypnotic suggestion.

Well everyone, this is the way it is. You are here to be released by your Friend which is the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind—your Sanity. Your best Friend is here to release you from a belief that you have accepted as real, and which you think you have no way to deny or get beyond because "It's the way the universe works."

Well, I'm sorry it's not the way the universe works.

The apple can be death. I'm here to tell you and my life on earth was here to tell you, that death is an illusion. Don't buy it!

Everybody says, "Oh well, death is a part of life." In fact there are some that have reasoned it out, that death is just simply a transition from, let's say, like ice: Water moving from a solid as ice to liquid, from form to fluid—formlessness. It's like a wave and particle theory, where waves are like light and particles are like matter, and life and death are a shift from particle to wave. And then when you reincarnate, you go from wave to particle. And, my goodness, there's a whole explanation. Just like the explanation that said, "Hey if you say the word, 'television' you'll end up with an apple on your nose."

Well the explanation doesn't make it true. The fact that you can come up with an explanation and even carry it further and say that this movement from particle to wave, from solid to liquid, from definite to indefinite, is not only the way life works, but it's a way of refining your soul. And every time you're in the particle experience, you have a chance to pick up where you left off and work toward your ultimate state of divinity, we'll say.

Now, if you believe these things, your Friend won't have a chance with you. Because your Friend is going to come along and say, "The apple stuck on the end of your nose isn't there at all and I want you to let go of the definite belief you have about it and I want you to see beyond it. I want you to see beneath it. I want you to be willing to let it go. I want you to stop being frustrated by its presence. I want you to stop reacting to it because all the energy you bring to reacting to it makes it seem more real to you, more definite and more stuck.

"I want you to be curious to see the more of what God is Being right there where the apple is, than what you're seeing. I want you to let me reveal to you what the truth is here."

Now as we discussed last week and the week before, every moment is a perfect opportunity to have a shift of perception. And the most perfect times to have shifts of perception is when you're disturbed. Because when you are disturbed by your own thoughts or the negative thoughts of others, you become hooked and obsessed with energizing your concern and your distress. And that holds the problem squarely in front of you, even though because it was not placed there by the Movement of Creation, it's not actually there.

Now, I understand that this stretches you. I was going to say, stretches your imagination, but it doesn't stretch your imagination, your imagination can go even further than what I've described. But, it stretches you because you are so very sure of things. When you've said "television" and the apple is on your nose, you're sure of it. If you feel a lump here or there, or an injury here or there, you know it. It's a fact for you.

But if your Friend is going to have any success in releasing you from a bondage that never actually happened, you're going to have to be willing, right in the face of your fear or your concern or your distress, to stop and be willing to stand back, in so many words, and say, "What's the more of what God is Being here than what I'm experiencing. I have a feeling this can't be the ultimate, [chuckles] even though I've been told by others that this is the ultimate, you know, that you can move from particle to wave to particle to wave and it's called incarnating and not be incarnated and reincarnating and so on. I think maybe this isn't true and I want to know what the truth is, where birth and death, both, are swallowed up in a sudden shift of perception in which unchangeable life is my experience."

Now you trap yourselves, as I've said before, by your words. "Oh, I cut myself!" and your word becomes law and you react and you make that word real. "Oh, he ran into that wall at sixty miles an hour! Wow!" And that has meaning for you—disastrous meaning. Doesn't have to have that meaning. You could say, "He ran into that wall at sixty miles an hour and came out the other side without losing a fraction of a mile an hour and arrived at his destination on time."

Your belief is, that a wall is an impediment to movement. It's not. But your belief makes it a fact for you. And you don't challenge it and when you say, "He ran into the wall," or you say, "I'm going to run into that wall and I'm going sixty miles an hour," it doesn't have to mean the end. It simply means that you're going to go [laughs] through the wall at sixty miles an hour and continue on and arrive at your destination.

Now, you've got to be willing to look at these challenges, or these suggestions, or invitations that present themselves to you every day, of negativity, of death, of sin, of sickness, of suffering, of deterioration. You've got to be willing to face them with a spontaneous willingness to see a different answer than the one you normally would declare, and by your own words, bind yourself.

And you have a Friend whose task it is . . . whose pleasure it is to share with you the Vision that undoes the bondage that seems inevitable to you because the inevitability is part of the belief of it: "Anytime anyone says 'television' they're going to have an apple on the end of their nose, anytime you hit a wall at 60 miles an hour you're going to die."

It's time to get beyond these absolute convictions that you have. You must be willing to challenge them and challenge them with a light heart, challenge them with a curiosity that you direct toward this Friend—which is really nothing more than your right Mind—the Presence of God that actually constitutes you. And you've got to start doing this regularly, with joy, with really substantial interest, because it really is time to discover the things that have never happened, so that you're left with what's Really there, instead of what you think happened.

All this is about undoing what never happened. And the only way you're going to arrive at the conscious experience of the fact that it didn't happen is by your willingness to withdraw your conviction that it did, and that you know what the happening meant, and you know why it happened, and you know why the results are inevitable and why you can't possibly become free from them.

"Well, I know that I have lived a lot of years and I am elderly. I may feel pretty good, but you know, other people my age are dying. I turn on the news and so-and-so who is seventy-four died, or somebody . . . so-and-so who is sixty-three died the other day." And you make connections. You put what you think is two and two together and you say, "Well, [chuckling] you know, just like the guy who says 'television' gets a green apple on their nose, somebody who's seventy-five is bound to die."

Stop it! Stop engaging in this! Don't bind yourself anymore by your words. Take your words, take these thoughts that come to you to your Friend, because these thoughts cover something up. These thoughts put the truth in a hidden place where the truth becomes a secret that nobody knows.

The truth that's covered up is your Birthright to be experiencing. And we're talking about, through all of this, you're arriving at a point where truth dawns on you, revelation occurs—a sudden shift of perception.

Here's a thought about a sudden shift of perception: A sudden shift of perception is when, for some reason, you shift from a state of mind of selfishness to selflessness where something happens when you were engaged in trying to protect yourself or get what you thought you needed, an event occurred that caused you to let go of that, so that you might stand in a position of gifting another with something they need, where you suddenly were inspired right in the middle of your selfishness to be thoughtful, to put your selfishness on the back burner, so that you could take care of this situation. That's a sudden shift of perception, where one moment you're operating in one space and the next moment you're operating in another space.

A miracle is a sudden shift of perception where you were operating in a space of bondage, of limitation, of sin, sickness, death, suffering, deterioration and on and on and on. And suddenly, as they say in the Christian Churches, you were infilled with the Holy Spirit, not some other-worldly Holy Spirit—a part of a Trinity far above and different from you, but a Holy Spirit as wonderful as you imagined as part of the Trinity that's not out there but is your very own Sane Mind that fills you, because you have been willing to abandon the word you have been giving to your experience that has blinded you and bound you to something that isn't real.

It's time to find out that sin, sickness and death is not real and did not ever happen. Every moment is a perfect moment to become disillusioned. Every moment is a perfect moment to become free of illusion, unbound and in your right Mind.

Now, let's go into the book and I'm going to back up just a bit, a couple of sentences . . .

He . . . ¹

. . . the Holy Spirit, this Friend, which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . has promised the Father that through Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

... you would be released from littleness to glory. To what He promised God He is wholly faithful, for He shared with God the promise that was given Him to share with YOU.

Let's face it, if the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then it's bound to be His purpose to reveal Himself to you as You, because that's the only thing that will bring the integrity of your Being back into play. That which is nothing more than your right Mind cannot help but be wholly faithful to what It is and thereby in its active relationship with you, while you're not paying any attention to who you really Are, It can do nothing less than illuminate the truth of what It is as you to you so that there is a shift of perception, resulting integrity of the Movement of that which is nothing but your right Mind is absolutely inevitable.

He ...

... the Holy Spirit ...

... shares it still, for YOU.

... for YOU! The Holy Spirit hasn't stopped being your Friend, with the intent to fulfill its promise, to fulfill its purpose.

He shares it still, for YOU.

In spite of the fact that you think you're an entity with a green apple on the end of its nose that has no choice about it.

Everything that promises otherwise, . .

... promises other than release ...

... great or small, however much or little valued, He will replace with the ONE promise given unto Him to lay upon the altar to your Father and His Son.

Does that mean the Father and Jesus? No, it means the Father and you. The Holy Spirit's purpose is to lay the clear understanding of what you are at the altar of your Being—which is the altar of God—and reveal you to yourself, so that you might become unconfused.

No altar stands to God WITHOUT His Son. And nothing brought there that is not equally worthy of both but will be replaced by gifts wholly acceptable to Father AND to Son.

In other words, if you bring a gift to the altar of hate or of deceit, or if you bring a concern about an apple that's on the end of your nose—that isn't really there—it's something that ends up having to be given to the Father. But you can't give a lie to the Father, because a lie in the presence of the Father doesn't exist. It's one those things that never happened, and that you've got to find out never happened. So . . .

. . . nothing brought there that is not equally worthy of both

. . . Father and Son . . .

. . . will be replaced by gifts wholly acceptable to Father AND to Son.

It will be replaced by the Holy Spirit.

Can you offer guilt to God? You cannot, then, offer it to His Son. For they are not apart, and gifts to one ARE offered to the other.

Oh, I know . . . it seems as though you can offer guilt to your brother and it seems as though your brother can offer guilt to you, but that's a suggestion, just like: "If you say the word 'television' an apple will appear on the end of your nose and nothing you can do will make it come off. And it will happen because anyone who says the word 'television' always ends up with an apple on the end of his nose. It's the way the universe works."

Again, it's time to become unstuck from what isn't true and therefore never happened. But you don't know how to distinguish between what is Real and what isn't. And that's why you have a Friend that can. And that's why that friend's purpose is to disclose the difference to you so that you can discard what isn't serving you and which you find no benefit in.

Again . . .

Can you offer guilt . . .

. . . or anything untrue . . .

. . . to God? You cannot, then, offer it to His Son. For they are not apart, and gifts to one ARE offered to the other.

You know not God because you know not this.

You don't know God because you think you and God are something separate from each other—you don't know of the unity. So . . .

You know not God because you know not this. And yet you DO know God and ALSO this.

See, it's a paradox: You don't know this, and you do know this. One of the things you know isn't real, and one of the things you know is Real. One of the things has happened, and one of the things has never happened.

So again, all we're ever doing is undoing what never happened. And it is accomplished by getting you to be willing to look at everything with a curiosity to know what the truth is about it, instead of being confident yourself and giving the word yourself and becoming bound by it because you know this is the way the universe works.

Again . . .

You know not God because you know not this. And yet you DO know God and ALSO this. All this . . .

All this . . .

. . . is safe within you, where the Holy Spirit shines. He shines not in division, but in the meeting place where God, united with His Son, speaks to His Son through Him. Communication between what cannot be divided CANNOT cease.

Well, then that means that communication between God and His Son or Daughter has been ceaseless. And the fact that you seem not to hear the Father is one of those things that never happened. But you think . . . and your thinking says, "Yeah, yeah, yeah, but I have a lifetime of never having heard God. And if God is omnipotent and if God is my Being then how could I possibly have lived a whole lifetime without talking with God?" That's part of the hypnotist's story, like: "Anyone who says the word 'television' will end up with an apple on his nose that he can't get off."

I don't care if you spent a whole lifetime and never talked with God. I don't care if you spent a whole lifetime and never talked with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind, or nothing less than your right Mind. I am saying, as you go through each day, reach for the Holy Spirit. Stop grouching because nobody told you for most of your life that you could talk to the Holy Spirit, and that the Holy Spirit was nothing less than your right Mind, or nothing more than your right Mind. Stop grouching about it. It doesn't matter. Now you know and now you can reach . . . now you can say, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision which is Your gift to me from God." In this way you stop acting as though you are out of your right Mind and it lays the ground work for cohesion and unity to return in you.

The holy meeting place of the unseparated Father and His Son . . .

. . . you see, separation never happened. It's one of those things. It never happened. You believe it happened. You believe you've lived a life separated, not connected with God and having to somehow gain His respect and gain His Love by somehow overcoming your sinfulness, blah, blah, blah.

The holy meeting place of the unseparated Father and His Son lies in the Holy Spirit and in YOU.

That's the truth that has forever been happening.

All interference in the communication that God Himself wills with His Son is quite impossible here. Unbroken and uninterrupted love flows constantly between the Father and the Son, as BOTH would have it be.

Both would have it be that way because that is the way the universe works. That is what happens. That is what has happened.

And so it IS.

Are you beginning to see how practical it is to challenge "being old," to challenge the meaning you've given to it, to challenge the meanings everyone else has given to it that has caused, for lack of better words, a hypnotic suggestion that everybody's obedient to? And so, they walk around like the one with the apple on his nose, behaving like they're old and having the expectations that old people have, and not having expectations that eighteen year olds have or thirty year olds, and not engaging in the things that a forty year old would gladly tackle. "Well, I'm not going to be here long enough to finish that project. No point in starting that." Well, you see the foot go sink into the ground on its way into the grave.

Stop giving your definitions and start asking, "How do I go through a wall at 60 miles an hour and come out the other side without having lost any time at all? How do I be seventy years old? How do I be ninety years old and feel like tackling a new project with gusto? How do I let go of the doubts that are instilled in me that say, 'it's useless to take on a new project at ninety years old.'"

Start asking these questions . . . of who? Of that which is nothing more than your right Mind—your Sanity. It's there for you. It is there with a cause. It's there with a promise to fulfill—a promise made to God. It is the purpose of your Mind, your right Mind, to uncover and bring forth you in your right Mind, no longer bound by strange ideas.

Let your minds wander not through darkened corridors, away from light's center. You may choose to lead yourselves astray, but you can only be brought TOGETHER by the Guide appointed for you. He will surely lead you to where God and His Son await your recognition.

[Repeats] He will surely lead you to where God and . . .

. . . you in your right Mind, knowing you are God's . . .

. . . Son await your recognition.

Atonement . . . coming back into your right Mind—being Sane again—not being hypnotized and believing the hypnotic suggestion.

They . . .

. . . God and His Son . . .

. . . are joined in giving you the gift of oneness, before which ALL separation vanishes.

Everything about your Being is geared toward your regaining your Sanity and becoming free of that which never happened, even though your education has said, "All of what never happened did indeed happen and is going to continue to happen, it is an ongoing cycle of life, period. No ands ifs or buts."

Unite with what you ARE. You CANNOT join with anything except reality. God's glory and His Son's belong to you in truth. They HAVE no opposite, and nothing else CAN you bestow upon yourselves.

You remember: "What do you want, truth or illusion?" Truth is the awareness that what never happened, never happened, which means that truth is the awareness of what Is and always has been.

There is no substitute for truth. And truth will make this plain to you as you are brought into the place where you must MEET with truth.

Your Friend brings you there, but you have to say to your Friend, "Bring me there." You have to say to your Friend, "I wish to see everything through Your Vision, which is Your gift to me from God."

If you do not abandon the right you think you have to think for yourself and come to conclusions on your own, you will not benefit from this Friend and will not experience the return of your Sanity, because your mind has become integrated, because you've let sanity return.

. . . truth will make this plain to you as you are brought into the place where you must MEET with truth. And there you must be led, . .

. . . led . . . see, that's what's hard for the orphan mentality, for the self-determined one—being led is insulting. But being independent is what keeps you isolated from your Sanity. And your Sanity is what your really want.

. . . there you must be led, through gentle understanding which can lead you nowhere else. Where God is, there are YOU. Such IS the truth. Nothing can change the knowledge given you by God into unknowingness.

It seems to have, but that's one of the things that never happened. You cannot actually be in a state of unknowingness. All there is to be known, all of creation, awaits your conscious experience of it because it's your Birthright to be experiencing it. To not be experiencing it is something you think is actual, just like the hypnotized one believes that the apple on his nose is actual. But it's not!

Everything God created knows its Creator. For this is how creation is accomplished by the Creator and by His creations. In the holy meeting place are joined the Father and His creations, and the creations of His Son with Them together. There is one link which joins them all together, holding them in the Oneness out of which creation happens.

So as you're willing to invite this Friend to reveal to you what the truth is here, and here, and here, and here, you are inviting the opening in you that will allow you to move into the very depth of the Movement of Creation with the Father, in which your Eternal Life is known by you. And the idea of age and all the beliefs associated with it, mean nothing. And where the belief of having an apple on your nose, or illnesses, or death, or deterioration also mean nothing. And all of these things will mean nothing right here, right where you are, because you'll see the chair as it really Is and you'll see your fingernails and your body as it really Is—as Creation itself, which is immutable, unchangeable, not subject to death, able to pass through walls like a speeding bullet. Experience no impediments.

So as I said last week, take every apparently innocuous moment, every seemingly regular moment and be curious because it speaks of God and it speaks of Creation, because that's what it Is. And it's your Birthright to be experiencing it for what it Is. And to find out that what you thought it was never happened! There in lies your freedom, your healing, your blessing, your Awakening.

And I wish you a glorious week. I love you all. Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 13th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, if you choose to become utterly simple within yourself, if you have a desire to back off from all the complications, all the technicalities of what goes on with you, with a desire to get down to the fundamental of you, what you might call the fundamental motivation or fundamental drive, you'll find that you come to a place, not as an intellectual thing, but as an experience where there is silence and you feel an impulse to declare yourself—you feel a need, an urge, an impulsion to assert . . . make assertion. It's very much a place, a state of mind similar to that expressed by Captain Picard in Star Trek, where he says, "Make it so." You will find yourself at a very primal, fundamental state wherein you feel the need to make it so—to make something so, [chuckles] make anything so!

Now, in the making it so, in the making of something so, you are giving birth to yourself. The assertion is so primal, so back to basics, that you realize that in that assertion you are bringing yourself into existence—into existence as recognizable to others—recognizable, and present in life itself. And everything else that follows simply compounds that initial act of self-creation accomplished by means of making an assertion.

You will find, in that experience of allowing yourself back into that primal place, that it's as though until you make that assertion, you don't yet really exist. There's nothing recognizable about you. And this is why you must, under all circumstances, without fail, assert yourself—make something so, because that will make you so.

Now the way you make something so is by thinking something up. What the Course calls "making" as opposed to "creating." And so, you assert yourself by having what could only be called, an original idea. It must be original in order to be recognizable as worthy of giving one's attention to, else, the giving birth to yourself by virtue of expressing this original idea, will not occur fully. In other words, you will not be made so—fully—because if the thought, if the concept, if the idea is not original and worthy of attention by being original, you have not become something valid yet.

Existence on this basis is a matter of consistently and forever asserting yourself in order to make yourself real.

All of you, if you will take the time with genuine interest and genuine willingness to get past all of the surface mish-mash and sink down into that which is really fundamental to you, sort of casting aside everything that might be irrelevant so that you get down to the essential element, you will find this act that I've described, as an awareness of how you brought yourself into being as who you think you are. And you will realize how powerful the act seemed to be because you will realize that you used a tremendous amount of energy, we'll say, to assert yourself—to make yourself known. And you will then realize that you are continuing to use that kind of force today in order to live your life, in order to live your life successfully with dignity, respect, and so on.

But I must point out to you, that although this will be your experience if you allow this to happen, it will not be an experience of who you truly Are. It will be an experience of what you seem to be, as an ego. And this is very important.

We are, every week, every time we get together, learning how to abandon that primitive act of self-assertion. Because the act of self-assertion is the introduction of thinking, which blinds you to and keeps you from experiencing what you truly Are.

Now the simple fact is, that before you utter this primal scream, as it were, this primal self-assertion, you're very aware of being conscious. There is something there feeling this urge, you see. This, that is there, is pure awareness. This that is there, is the divine You that is all Knowing, that is inseparable from and un-separated from its Source, the Father—God. And the impulse to act, to give birth to yourself, is an act of creating something different from this pure infinite all-inclusive awareness that is the Presence of God being all there is to you and thereby you being absolutely and completely fulfilled.

This impulse to act independently as an assertion of you, so that you as who you want to be known as can become knowable, is the cause of what you call, the human condition. It is the cause of sin, disease, and death. It is the cause of the experience of guilt. It's the enactment of shifting from first gear to second gear and becoming the orphan which automatically brings into play third gear, which is guilt and fear—inseparable guilt and fear.

There is no legitimate or valuable thinking. All thinking is an extension of the need to create yourself by virtue of independent self-assertion in order to make yourself knowable on your terms instead of the terms of Creation.

And so, although I constantly am saying God did not give you the capacity to think, and although I encourage you in many many ways to dare to abandon thinking, to move into the Silence with active curiosity and then listen instead of think, it seems as though I'm asking you to do something totally unreasonable, because that is all you are used to doing—is thinking and claiming your presence in the world, birthing yourself constantly in the world and to your fellow man. And you think that's normal. You think that is the meaning of life. You think that God gave you the capacity to do that and in doing it, you are indeed validating yourself when in fact, you are, by doing that, constantly obscuring who and what you really Are from yourself and your fellow man.

What is the only thing that makes you guilty? The only thing that makes you guilty is your behaving as though you're out of your mind . . . is you believing that you're doing something that God didn't give you the capacity to do. That which seems to make you guilty is you thinking as an act of self-creation, of birthing yourself, and becoming recognizably present, real and valid.

It isn't what you're attempting to do that makes you guilty, it's the fact that in attempting to do it, you have abandoned first gear, and you have taken up residence in second gear. And second gear always is absolutely accompanied by guilt and fear. This is important, because if you want to see and experience yourself as guiltless and if you want to see and experience your brother as guiltless, you're going to have to be willing to recognize that neither you nor your brother or sister have the capacity to think and actually accomplish anything. And therefore, you are innocent of anything you have thought up [chuckle] and believed about yourselves or about each other.

And you will realize that in order to experience your brother's innocence or your innocence, you're going to have to be willing to get beyond thinking or behind it, to back up prior to the thought. That's what becoming still does.

Your brother is innocent. He seems to be guilty because he's been thinking. And he feels guilty because he's been thinking. He's been operating independently and by his act of self-creation, blocking his experience of what he is and was before he expressed that primal scream—that primal self-assertion.

You can say, “My brother is innocent.” But saying it doesn’t make it so. Saying it doesn’t mean you’re having the experience. Having the experience will only come when you are willing to get behind—come to that place before your thought—and in that place prior to thought, right now, which means, in the silence within you, in the peace within you, you are absent the experience of thinking but not absent the experience of consciousness—of awareness. And in that place, you can desire to know the truth about your brother. The truth about your brother that exists only prior to or behind whatever thoughts he’s employing in his act of self-assertion, or her act of self-assertion.

Don’t waste your time saying, “My brother is innocent . . . my sister is innocent . . . well they’re innocent, you know?”

Words don’t mean anything. You better be having the experience of their innocence. And the only way to have the experience of their innocence is to get into the experience of your innocence which means to back up behind the thought—the thinking—and get into the silence desiring to know what the truth is, and abandoning your own independent state of existence that you birthed by your self-assertion.

Then, you’ll be able to have the experience of your brother’s innocence or your sister’s innocence and you will have it along with yours. Because I promise you something: If you’re thinking and you’re finding thinking valuable, it is going to be impossible for you to look at your brother or sister and not make the absolute assumption that they are thinking and they are finding thinking valuable. Well, if you see that, you’re not seeing their innocence whether you say they’re innocent or not. Words are cheap.

You don’t want just words, you want the experience. Because the experience is the experience of God’s Truth. It is the experience of how things really Are. And they constitute the manner in which healing and transformation occurs for you and for your brother and sister. So let’s keep this in mind.

We’re going to be talking tonight about holiness—your holiness. Well, your holiness is always going to be covered up by your thinking. But it’s there prior to the thinking. It’s there now prior to the assertion of and creation of yourself that is accomplished by your thinking in this moment.

Your holiness and your innocence are both present now. But you don’t think of yourselves as holy. You sort of assign that to priests, maybe . . . or ministers, or “teachers of God.” And even then it’s by choice. It’s a vocation. It’s something they’ve chosen. But we’re talking about everyone being actually holy. Not as a vocation, not as something you've chosen, but as a state of Being that you need to more and more include in your awareness of yourself as you do the most mundane things every day.

Now, let's go into the Book.

The link with which the Father joins Himself to those He gives the power to create like Him . . .¹

. . . meaning, His Sons and Daughters . . .

. . . can NEVER be dissolved.

It can't be dissolved because Creation is God's extension of Himself, you might say.

So . . .

The link with which the Father joins Himself to those He gives the power to create like Him . . .

. . . meaning you . . .

. . . can NEVER be dissolved.

It's a permanent, unalterable state of Being. Not something you have to gain and not something you can lose.

Heaven itself is union with all of creation, and with its One Creator.

Do you know what that means? It means that Heaven isn't a place. It means that Heaven is awareness.

Heaven itself is union with all of creation, and with its One Creator.

It means it is conscious awareness that isn't split, that isn't divided up into, we'll say, multiple personalities. It is awareness that is all inclusive. Inclusive of all of Creation, Heaven is that conscious awareness in which all of Creation is embraced and experienced. Something which you must be willing to allow by ceasing to think, by ceasing to do that which obscures the experience or that which is Heaven.

Heaven itself is union with all of creation, and with its One Creator. And Heaven remains the Will of God for you.

In other words, unbounded awareness of all that Is and union with It and awareness of Its union with you, and we might say no thoughts that are unknown, all thoughts of everyone being known by everyone so that communication is communion, that's the new normalcy—what will seem new to you, but it is what is natural. It is what is Real.

So . . .

Heaven itself is union with all of creation, and with its One Creator. And Heaven remains the Will of God for you. Lay no gifts other than this upon your altars, . .

What does that mean? It means, let that be the only gift you lay on your altar. Stop laying the gift of all of the fantastic thoughts you've come up with. Right now, you're laying all of your creations on the altar. All of these creations that have come out of this primordial need to express yourself and make your presence known by virtue of expressing original ideas of your very own, which causes you, by virtue of their originality, to be seen as worthwhile and truly valid.

That's what you have to stop laying on the altar, where right now, that's all you are laying on the altar.

Lay no gifts other than . . .

Heaven: The willingness to be the conscious awareness of all that Is.

Lay no gifts other than this upon your altars, for nothing can coexist beside it.

You see? What makes you innocent is the fact that all the thoughts you've thought are one of those things that never happened. If God didn't think it, so to speak, it was never thought. And the consequences of your thinking, therefore, don't exist as an actuality. And that is why you're innocent, because you haven't been doing what you thought you were doing, literally.

Lay no gifts other than this upon your altars, for nothing can coexist beside it.

All of your thoughts which you use to self-create yourself cannot coexist on the altar, actually, with the only true gift.

Here . . .

. . . on the altar . . .

... your meager offerings are brought together with the gift of God, . . .

. . . which is Heaven, which we've said is not a place, but it is the unobstructed, conscious experience of Reality. It's the awareness of Reality, in which none of Reality is obscured to you or separated from you, in which you are inseparable from it. And communion of the wholeness of Creation is your experience. So . . .

Here your meager offerings are brought together with the gift of God, and only what is worthy of the Father will be accepted by the Son, for whom it was intended. To whom God gives Himself He IS given. Your little gifts . . .

. . . all of your wonderful, self-creative—meaning those things you've used to create yourself—all of those thoughts . . .

... will vanish on the altar where He . . .

. . . God . . .

... has placed His Own.

The next subsection is entitled . . .

THE RECOGNITION OF HOLINESS

The Atonement does not MAKE holy. You were CREATED holy. It merely brings unholiness TO holiness; or what you MADE to what you ARE.

So it brings all of these thoughts which you have used to create yourself, it brings those to the truth, it brings those to what you Are.

The bringing together of truth and illusion, of the ego to God, is the Holy Spirit's only function. Keep not your making . . .

. . . in other words, all your thoughts, all of your creations.

Keep not your making from your Father, for hiding it has cost you knowledge of Him and of yourselves.

You see? "But, Father, I'd rather see it my way. See, you get your independence stance, you stand back and you keep your thoughts, they're yours. "Father, to heck with you, I'd rather see it my way. My perception is what I'm going to validate and value and live by. Sayonara." But when you bring your thoughts, your creations, so to speak, your acts of self-creation that created an imaginary self, when you bring those to the Father, or when you bring those to the Holy Spirit they will be laid upon the alter in you and placed beside the gifts of God. Your gifts will become obviously valueless and you will gladly let them go, because that is what happens when what is Real and what is unreal are brought together.

Now . . .

The knowledge is safe, but wherein is YOUR safety apart from it?
The making of time to TAKE THE PLACE of timelessness . . .

. . . meaning, all inclusive infinite knowing now . . .

. . . lay in the decision to be not as you were.

You see? Here you were as pure awareness and then you felt an impulsion to assert, which God didn't create you to do and which there is no actual need to do, because Being was already whole and complete. And so you asserted yourself to bring yourself into existence on your terms.

The making of time to TAKE THE PLACE of timelessness lay in the decision to be not as you were. Thus, truth was made past, . .

. . . in other words, the experience before self-assertion became what was, not what is . . .

. . . and the present was dedicated to illusion.

The present was dedicated to the self you were in the act of giving creation to, by virtue of continuing to assert more and more original ideas.

And the past, too, was changed and interposed between what always was and NOW.

In other word, what always was, was initially the past when you made your self-assertion and seemed to create a new experience of self and identity and existence. But then the past—meaning you in your pristine and perfect state of mind, that became no longer the past—that was replaced by the history of your acts of thinking original ideas for the purpose of maintaining an ongoing creation of yourself, period. You see?

The past which YOU remember . . .

. . . meaning, the history of your original thinking for the purpose of creating yourself . . .

. . . NEVER was, and represents only the denial of what ALWAYS was.

Your preoccupation with yourself presently and preoccupation with your past, meaning the history of your self-assertions, don't constitute an actual present of an actual past. What came before this false experience of now and history, which at this point is an experience you had in the past, that is the truth of you now and is available to you now in your willingness to get behind your thoughts, which is another way of saying . . . moving into the silence.

Bringing the ego to God is but to bring error to truth, where it stands corrected because it is the OPPOSITE of what it meets, and is undone because the contradiction can no longer stand.

When you're willing to say, "Father," as though it's the first word of a prayer—which means you're reaching out to something outside of this self-created independent entity that you think you are—when you say, "Father," you are taking the first step to bring illusion to truth, because you are reaching outside the illusion.

Bringing the ego to God is but to bring error to truth, where it stands corrected because it is the OPPOSITE of what it meets, and is undone because the contradiction can no longer stand. How long can contradiction stand when its impossible nature is clearly revealed? What disappears in light is not attacked. It merely vanishes because it is not true. Different realities are meaningless, . .

. . . different realities. It's nonsensical . . .

. . . for reality must be one. It CANNOT change with time or mood or chance. Its changelessness is what MAKES it real. This cannot BE undone. Undoing is for unreality. And this reality WILL do for you.

[sigh] What you truly are cannot be undone and never has been undone, even through this apparently powerful self-assertion by which you gave birth to yourself, in spite of all the dynamics of that, nothing happened. And your continuing effort to do it continues to be, nothing happening. All it is, is something that stands as a preoccupation in your mind, distracting you from the direct experience of Reality, Heaven here, now.

It's time for the truth of you to become apparent to you. It's time for your holiness and innocence to be your experience. And someone is finally telling you that the way to do it is to stop thinking. And if meditation is the only way you can get back of, or behind, or underneath thinking, so that you're in the silence that constitutes pure awareness, then meditate. Do whatever it takes to allow yourself to be pure awareness. And be pure awareness in the grocery store. Be pure awareness in the bathroom. Be pure awareness no matter what you're doing, no matter where you are, no matter how you would have in the past defined the situation or circumstances.

Merely by being what it is does truth release you from everything that it is NOT.

But if you're going to have that experience of undoing, you've got to stop thinking, and you have to move into the silence. You have to dare to allow yourself to stop controlling the birthing of you into existence so that you might find that in the absence of that strenuous endeavor, you already exist whole—right there in the grocery store, right there in your car on the freeway, right there in bed with your wife, right there mowing the lawn.

Merely by being what it is does truth release you from everything that it is NOT.

If you let truth be more important to you than birthing yourself.

The Atonement is so gentle you need but whisper to it, and all its power will rush to your assistance and support.

What does that mean? That means that you don't have to assert yourself to get it.

The Atonement is so gentle you need but whisper to it, . .

In fact, the practice of whispering gives you a very direct experience of not being powerful—I promise you. It is very hard to be assertive in a whisper, [whispering] very difficult. In fact, it's so difficult that if you insist on continuing to whisper you will begin to whisper intelligence rather than force. [Chuckling] You will find ideas to express through whispers, which by virtue of their intelligence will be motivating, not by virtue of the vigor and force with which you whisper. You see?

So . . .

The Atonement is so gentle you need but whisper to it, . .

Well, this is a key, also. Because when you do meditate, when you do, do whatever helps you move into the silence and into the peace of your Being, any desire that you might express from there, any desire that arises in your mind out of your peace, will find fulfillment if the desire is whispered, if the desire is gently placed, if the desire is almost silently placed, because that's when the least amount of willpower, of willfulness is being expressed. And because you are expressing or giving expression to a desire which has emerged from the peace, in the silence of your Being, it really is a matter of you cooperating with that movement rather than being the creator of it and subsequently the authorizer of it through willfulness or force. You see?

And so the act became an act as a result of awareness, and moved into action by virtue of your continuing to be awareness, not by virtue of your becoming an actor.

The Atonement is so gentle you need but whisper to it, and . . .

. . . indeed . . .

. . . all its power will rush to your assistance and support.

That is what you will find yourself experiencing when you act from your peace, when you be from your innocence, your holiness.

You are not frail with God beside you.

That's a wonderful experience awaiting you. You're also not powerful, but you are omnipotent.

You are not frail with God beside you. Yet without Him you are nothing.

What do you mean without Him? Well, when you birthed yourself by asserting yourself through the expression of a thought that was original, you were being without Him—you were being independent.

. . . without Him you are nothing.

In other words, [chuckling] everything you thought you've been being is something that never happened, as we discussed last week.

The Atonement offers you God.

Well, . . .

The Atonement offers you God.

The Atonement offers you truth. The Atonement offers you Reality, Atonement offers you Heaven—the awareness of all of Creation without any separation from any of it, where you experience all Knowing. It doesn't offer you this thing that you have birthed out of a primordial expression or assertion of an original idea or thought that you used to establish yourself as a valid presence.

The Atonement offers you God.

It does not offer you, [chuckling] it does not offer you what you've been having, and what you've been suffering from.

The gift which you refused is held by Him in you. His Spirit holds it there for you.

I've said in the past, "Your divinity is held in trust while you dally with the ego."

The gift which you refused . . .

. . . which is Heaven, the conscious awareness of all of Reality . . .

. . . is held by Him . . .

In other words, your right Mind . . .

. . . is held by Him in you. His Spirit holds it there for you. God has not left His altar, though His worshippers placed other gods upon it.

You've placed your fantastic, in other words, fantasy- like creations, all of your thoughts, all of your definitions, all of your mutually agreed upon concepts and so on, you have placed on the altar—cluttered it up, as it were, with distractions that never really took up any space because they're not Real. But you put them there.

God has not left His altar, though His worshippers placed other gods upon it. The temple still is holy, . .

. . . [whispering] you still are holy . . .

. . . for the Presence that dwells within it IS holiness.

The presence of what? The presence of the conscious awareness of Being that is You.

In the temple holiness waits quietly for the return of them that love it.

When you begin to love it, when you begin to get tired of what you're birthing, you will return, and it waits for you. Your holiness waits for you—that which is nothing more than your right Mind awaits your return to its embrace.

The Presence knows they will return to purity and to grace.

Listen to this, remember it:

The graciousness of God will take them gently in, and cover all their sense of pain and loss with the immortal assurance of their Father's Love.

Cover all their sense of pain and loss of what? Oh-h, all of your cherished thoughts by means of which you've given meaning to your life and to yourself. In fact, you haven't just given meaning to life and to yourself, those thoughts were used to birth you. And if you think you've done a pretty good job of it, you're likely to experience a sense of loss as you let go of it because something in you is daring to prefer what you're coming to know is a truer experience, a fuller, a more enjoyable, a holier experience of what your Being is all about.

So . . .

The graciousness of God will take them . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . gently in, and cover all their sense of pain . . .

all your sense of pain . . .

. . . and loss with the immortal assurance of their Father's Love.

. . . your Father's Love.

There, fear of death will be replaced with joy of living. For God is Life, and they ABIDE in Life.

No longer in this sense of life that you've birthed, this imaginary sense of life that you've birthed.

The Presence of holiness lives in everything that lives, for holiness CREATED life, and leaves not what It created holy as Itself.

So, I want you to be with this for the coming week. I want you to dare to allow for the idea that thinking is not ever valuable, that listening is. And that your Salvation lies in getting back to the place before the thoughts emerge, so that you might stop creating yourself by asserting yourself and ending up with an illusion.

And I look forward to being with you next week. And I look forward to the discoveries you will be having. I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 27th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, as you engage in Awakening by desiring to experience whatever that means, you are going to find that your purpose for being is different from what you thought. And if you aren't expecting that, it might be a surprise that doesn't please you. But I want you to be aware that, that's the case so that you can abide with the unavoidability of it and adjust more gracefully. You're here actually, to be far more than you thought.

We talked last week about the fact that you're not used to thinking of yourself as being holy. And this week we're going to talk a little bit about what being holy means. And in this sense, you will begin to see that there is a difference between your purpose as it truly is, and what you have for the last years during this lifetime, you thought your purpose was.

Now . . .

In this world . . .¹

. . . not in the world to come . . .

In this world . . .

. . . in this experience of world, . . .

. . . you can become a spotless mirror, in which the holiness of your Creator shines forth from you to all around you.

That's a glorious purpose of being. [chuckle]

In this world you can become a spotless mirror, in which the holiness of your Creator shines forth from you to all around you. You can reflect Heaven HERE.

Well, what did we say last week that Heaven was?

Heaven is awareness. Awareness that is not distorted by or colored by thoughts occupying awareness that do not reflect reality, that do not reflect the truth, that do not reflect your function.

So, you can reflect Heaven here. You can be that undistorted pure conscious awareness of reality as it is right here, not in the sweet-bye-and-bye after you die. Your function has always been to be conscious of the truth here, now, as you put it, in this lifetime. This lifetime is just eternity imagined as something having a beginning and an end—a birth and an up-coming death.

But, as you make this shift of consciousness, called Awakening, you'll find that the experience of birth will disappear. It will not be a part of your memory. And an impending death will also disappear. And you will remember wholeness. You will remember eternity, if I may put it that way. And you will not labor under a false impression that there are beginnings and endings.

You can reflect Heaven HERE. Yet no reflections of the images of other gods must dim the mirror that would hold God's reflection in it.

Well . . . the reflections of the images of other gods . . . [chuckling] it's a nice poetic way of speaking about your thoughts. All the thinking that you have done, all of the imaginative intellectual creativity you have gone through which you have placed upon the altar in you, which you have filled your awareness with and preoccupied yourself with.

Yet no reflections of the images of other gods must dim the mirror that would hold God's reflection in it. Earth can reflect Heaven or hell; God or the ego.

There it is right there. Heaven is God. Heaven is equated with God. Heaven is equated with first gear—you in your right Mind.

Hell is the equivalent of second gear, where you have engaged in this self-assertion that brought you into existence as a concept you had of yourself that you insisted in bringing into manifestation—into recognizability. That's all there is to Hell. All there is to Hell is your mind cluttered up with your thinking—cluttered up with your preoccupation with what you have created out of pure imagination. Of course, all you could create through the use of your mind would have been a distorted perception of that which already existed of Creation Itself.

So Hell is nothing more than your active misperception of Heaven right here and right now. It's not another place, it's not a place you go to. It is you insisting on defining Creation, Heaven, in your own terms and getting others to join you in agreement as to what those terms mean.

So Hell is an ongoing constantly re-energized misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven. You could say, it's a distortion of that pure awareness which is your mind, which is God's Mind Presencing Itself right there where you are, as all there is of you. That's Heaven.

You need but leave the mirror clean and clear of all the images of hidden darkness you have drawn upon it.

Hidden darkness . . . Well, when you say, "I am going to determine that this is such and such," and you make a definition and you say from now on that is what I have determined it to be and I will govern myself according to that definition. Now what has happened? You have obscured the Real thing by replacing it in your mind with a dominant misperception, which you love because you created it.

Now, what has replaced Reality is a fuzziness, as we discussed—an out-of-focus experience. It's not illuminated. It is dark in that it is fuzzy and it is hard to determine what is really there.

So when it refers to hidden darkness, it's darkness that you can't actually put your finger on. It's darkness that is hidden because there's no truth to it.

Your imaginations are constituted of hidden darkneses. Darkneses that tend to obscure something underneath it—something behind it. The Truth.

So . . .

You need but leave the mirror clean and clear of all the images of hidden darkness you have drawn upon it.

How do you clean it . . . how do you clear it? By not thinking. You clean it or clear it by meditating, by becoming still—providing yourself with a gentle focus and staying with that without engaging in thinking so that your mind becomes free of thoughts. That's how you clear the mirror. That's how you cease to introduce illusion.

God will shine upon it of Himself.

God will shine upon the mirror. God is shining upon the mirror even though your thoughts are obscuring what's shining on the mirror truly. God is shining upon the mirror.

God will shine upon it of Himself. Only the clear reflection of Himself can BE perceived upon it.

You see. Your hidden darkneses can't really be perceived on it.

Reflections are seen in light.

Simple.

In darkness they are obscure, and their meaning seems to lie only in shifting interpretations, rather than in themselves.

You see, God's thoughts reflected on the mirror are themselves the Real thing. They're not concepts of the Real thing applied to the Real thing after the fact.

The reflection of God NEEDS no interpretation. It is CLEAR. Clean but the mirror, . .

. . . again, by ceasing thinking.

Clean but the mirror, and the message which shines forth from what the mirror holds out for everyone to see no-one can FAIL to understand.

This is your function. Your function is to value the silence, to value the absence of your thinking enough to abandon the thinking so that you might find yourself in the silence, which could be equated with the clean mirror in which that which is Real is being reflected and because there is now nothing to obscure what is Real that is being reflected, you can see it. What is Real becomes your experience. And when what is Real becomes your experience, That becomes what you express. That becomes what you communicate: The message on the mirror . . .

It is the message that the Holy Spirit is holding to the mirror that is in him.

. . . the one who is looking for truth.

He recognizes it . . .

. . . the seeker . . .

. . . because he has been taught his NEED for it, . .

. . . I am teaching you of your need for it. Your suffering experience is teaching you the need for it. You will recognize it because you have been taught your need for it . . .

. . . but knows not where to look to find it.

What it actually says is . . .

He recognizes it because he has been taught his NEED for it but knows not where to look to find it. Let him then see It in YOU and SHARE it with you.

Let the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . see it in YOU and SHARE it with you.

. . . because that is the Holy Spirit's function, and that is the way you come back into your right Mind. But again, in order to experience this influx of revelation you must de-value your capacity . . . your so-called capacity to think. And you must abandon practicing it.

Could you but realize, for a single instant, the power of healing that the reflection of God, shining in you, can bring to all the world, you could not wait to make the mirror of your mind clean to receive the image of the holiness that heals the world.

You hear that?

Could you but realize, for a single instant, . .

It implies that you can't, or you aren't. But if you could realize it, blah, blah, blah, such-and-such would happen, you would discover such-and-such. Well, what is it that keeps you from realizing it? Because certainly the Father has not given you a purpose that you're incapable of fulfilling.

What keeps you from realizing it for a single instant, even, is that you do not want to abandon authority that you think you have and which you value highly. It's that simple.

If you're going to wake up, you're going to first of all say, "Father," and break the silence—break your autonomy—and then you're going to say, "Father," acknowledging your Sonship or Daughtership, "Thy will be done. Thy will, not mine be done." [Whispering] Nobody wants to do that! Oh, a lot of people give lip service to it, but very few of you are willing even for a moment to say, "Thy will be done," and then want to know what the Father's will is. In other words, to know what the Movement of Creation is in this moment aside from the definitions and meanings you've been giving to it all.

You see, you thought your purpose was to be the determiner in this life and to learn to be the determiner of things well, or if not well, at least with enough force that people will yield.

Somewhere along the line, hopefully without too great suffering, you're going to have to arrive at the place where you're willing to say, "Father, Thy will be done." You're going to have to arrive at a place where you're willing to explore what that might mean, because nothing else holds as much interest for you. You've got to arrive at that point.

Could you but realize, for a single instant, the power of healing that the reflection of God, shining in you, can bring to all the world, you could not wait to make the mirror of your mind clean to receive the image of the holiness that heals the world.

Now, what I want to convey here is, that what keeps you from having this experience is something that you value greatly, but it isn't really that big a thing to abandon. To abandon willfulness, to abandon that exertion of energy to bring into existence the you, you want everybody to believe you are, must simply be abandoned. Stop doing it! Stop doing it for a minute. Stop doing it for a second with true abandonment. You can do it. It's just that you didn't think that was what you needed to do. You didn't think that was part of the program, because you thought the opposite was the "God-almighty purpose of being."

The image of holiness which shines in your mind is not obscure, and will not change.

You may have obscured it with your fanciful thoughts. But it . . .

. . . is not obscure, and will not change. Its meaning to those who look upon it is not obscure, for everyone perceives it as the SAME. All bring their different problems to its healing light, but all their problems are met ONLY with healing there.

And I promise you, that when someone comes to you and does not experience healing it's because you have indeed chosen to respond to them with your best concepts, with your best interpretations, with your best beliefs about how things work, and you have not taken a moment to say, "Father? Aside from what I think, and aside from what this person thinks, what is the truth here?"

What is Heaven here?" If you will not try to answer that question yourself, and if you will leave your mind silent and attentive as pure awareness, you will see what's on the mirror. You will see what is not obscure because you will have stopped obscuring it. And when you speak, what you see there will be healing.

That's your Birthright. That's what it's time for all of you to begin experiencing, again.

The response of holiness to ANY form of error is always the same.

It's that which comes from the pure awareness that no one has altered and distorted away from its perfect, I'm going to say, perception and experience of Heaven, of Reality.

The response of holiness to ANY form of error is always the same.

And that's it!

There is no contradiction in what holiness calls forth. Its ONE response is healing, without regard for what is brought to it.

Just as there's no degree of difficulty to miracles, there's no degree of horribleness or actuality to illusions. So no matter what illusion is brought, the response is always the same. It's not a response to the illusion, it's a response from that pure awareness that has looked upon Reality in the absence of thinking, because there was a love for truth. It's that simple.

Those who have learned to offer only healing because of the reflection of holiness in them are ready at last for Heaven.

Are ready at last for that experience of pure awareness in which there is no distortion present whatsoever.

There, holiness is not a reflection, but rather the actual condition of what was but reflected to them here.

You see, the message isn't the concept, the message isn't an interpretation, the message isn't a perception. The message is the Real thing Itself, shared so clearly that it's obvious to everyone it's shared with.

God is no image, and His creations, as part of Him, hold Him in them in truth. They do not merely REFLECT truth, for they ARE truth.

You see, the Kingdom of Heaven that I've been saying you are confronted with at all times, because there literally is nothing going on other than the Kingdom of Heaven, is truth Itself, is Real Itself, is God Presencing Himself not as a concept or an object or an image, but as Himself.

Reality is what you are confronted with in every single experience you're having. But you are experiencing It in a distorted fashion, because you have this unquenchable desire to be original and to make your mark on life, not realizing that you are Life unfolding Itself right there where you are. You see, there's where the problem comes into play because you don't want to be Life unfolding Itself, you want to be the unfolder. You don't want to yield and be what the Father is Being right there where you are. You don't want to fit in. You don't want to flow with. You don't want to be in consummate utter harmony with the Universe in its infinite unfolding. And that's why the "primal scream" comes out because you want to stand out from the rest. And you think that's the way you bring yourself into existence.

"Hey everyone look at me, look at me. Don't look at everything. Abandon your infinite experience of Reality and have a tiny experience of me separate from everything else, and by doing that separate yourself from everything else." You see? This forceful self-expression that you exercise in order to stand out from what God is infinitely Being is creating for you a life full of stress, full of thrills, full of fearful things, full of exciting things. But no peace, no absence of sin, sickness or death, no unchangeable harmony and no real experience of joy. And it's not your Birthright.

The next section is called:

THE SHIFT TO MIRACLES

When no perception . . .

. . . in other words, no thought that you've made up . . .

When no perception stands between God and His creations, or between His Children and their own, the knowledge of creation must continue forever. The reflections which you accept into the mirror of your minds in time but bring eternity nearer or farther.

What's the source of the thoughts you're letting in? Are you going to be the creator of your thoughts, or are you going to let God's thoughts fill you. One will bring Eternity nearer, the other will make It further away.

But eternity itself is beyond ALL time. Reach out of time and touch it, with the help of its reflection in you. And you will turn from time to holiness as surely as the reflection of holiness calls everyone to lay all guilt aside.

Important:

[Repeats] Reach out of time and touch it, . .

If you're going to reach out of time, you're going to have to let go of your anchor in time. And your anchor in time is your belief in and exercise of control or authority to create whatever you can imagine through the use of your mind, called "thinking." But you don't want to suffer. And you say you do want to wake up, so you're going to have to dare to reach out of time. You're going to have to stop doing what creates time. And what creates time is thinking.

I'm being facetious here, but stop and think about it. When you think it takes time . . . if you experience a revelation, you experience a whole awareness of something, which if you try to express it in words will take time, even though the experience that is being described in time, with words, was experienced [snaps fingers] instantaneously, wholly and completely.

There is so much advantage available to you, to all of you, if you will truly begin to stop thinking. If you will truly take more time to listen, take more time to be silent and receptive to information, experiences that you did not make up or create.

Reflect the peace of Heaven HERE, . .

. . . now remember Heaven is not a place—unless, by Heaven you mean everywhere. Heaven is that conscious awareness which is not distorted by, or confused by, or obscured by spurious, imaginative thoughts. That's Heaven.

Reflect the peace of Heaven HERE, and bring this world to Heaven.

That's why I say, whatever you're looking at be curious as to what the more of God is there than what you're seeing, what more of Reality is occurring than what you're seeing. That's the way you bring this world to Heaven. You ask to see more of the flower, or more of what the glass is, or more of what the fingernail is—divinely speaking.

Reflect the peace of Heaven HERE, and bring this world to Heaven. For the reflection of truth draws everyone TO truth, and as they enter into it they leave all reflections behind.

You stand in front of a mirror, there is a reflection of you, but the you that is looking in the mirror is Real. When you want to know what truth is, you're desiring to experience what is Real, not an image of it, not an approximation of it, not a reflection of it.

In Heaven reality is shared, and not reflected . . .

. . . because you're not looking at a concept. You're not experiencing a picture in your mind of what that thing means. You are experiencing that thing in its actuality, in its reality. It's a direct experience.

In Heaven reality is shared, and not reflected. By sharing its reflection here, its truth becomes the only perception the Son of God accepts.

That's you.

And thus, remembrance of his Father dawns on him, and he can no longer be satisfied with anything but his own reality.

When you're willing to look at your world with a desire to know and experience the more of Reality that is there than what you are experiencing, you are inviting in an experience of and letting yourself into an experience of God in everything. And in that experience of God—your Father—you remember your Sonship or Daughtership, your Birthright.

And thus, remembrance of his Father . . .

. . . your Father . . .

. . . dawns on him, . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . and he . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . can no longer be satisfied with anything but his . . .

. . . or your . . .

. . . own reality.

Your own reality as the non-thinker that you are. Your own reality as the pure conscious awareness that knows all as a direct experience, not as a thought about an experience or a thought about a thing.

You on earth have no conception of limitlessness, for the world you seem to live in IS a world of limits. In this world, it is not true that anything without order of difficulty can occur.

When you're looking at everything from second gear, there are orders of difficulties, there are no miracles and you're without your Birthright.

The miracle, therefore, has a unique function, and is motivated by a unique Teacher, . .

. . . this means a real miracle.

The miracle, therefore, has a unique function, and is motivated by a unique Teacher, Who brings the laws of another world to this one.

Now, it isn't that there really are two worlds. It's that in your mind you have created a definition of Reality, of Heaven, and that definition is a misperception of Reality. And you abide in, and live in, and act in, and govern yourself according to this misperception. And part of this misperception is that there is order of difficulty. And part of the reality of this misperception is that there are no miracles. This misperception because it's embraced as though it's actual, can only be interrupted or rendered invalid by something entering it from somewhere outside the definitions. In other words, by Reality.

So . . .

The miracle, therefore, has a unique function, and is motivated by a unique Teacher, Who brings the laws of another world to this one.

In other words, the world of Reality to the world you made up.

The miracle is the ONE thing you can do that transcends order, being based not on differences, but on equality.

[Repeats] . . . transcends order . . .

What that means is, it's the one thing that can transcend the orderliness of your self-created mindsets, of your definitions that you govern yourself absolutely by.

The miracle doesn't fit into your rules. The miracle doesn't fit into your structures. Your structures say miracles can't happen. When a miracle happens you've lost control. It's that simple. You abandoned your authority for whatever reason. You let yourself fit in, instead of authorizing. You let yourself fit into the order of another world, the perfection of another world, the harmony of another world, of the Kingdom of Heaven that you have obscured by creating a misperception of it, but which you haven't gotten rid of.

Miracles are not in competition, and the number of them that you can do is limitless.

Wow, your willingness to abandon thinking and to go into the silence, your willingness to be in-filled with what is really present in place of what you have made up and governed yourself by, puts you in a position of having revelation occur over and over and over and over again . . . about this thing and that thing and the other thing . . . and this one and that one and the other person . . . and this one's belief and that one's belief and this one's problem and that one's joy. The opportunity for miracles is as abundant as your connection with everything that you have been misperceiving. And as the misperception yields to the direct experience of truth of what it Really is, that is a miracle.

It is a miracle that transcends the rules of the world you have made up by means of your definitions. And when that happens it means you're not in control. And I keep bringing that up because this is part of your Birthright—to be experiencing the perfection of everything when you're not in control, when you're not securely seated in second gear.

Miracles are not in competition, and the number of them that you can do is limitless. They can be simultaneous and legion.

Doesn't have to be one at a time. It can be ten thousand at a time.

This is not difficult to understand, once you conceive of them as possible at all.

Thank God, reality, and miracles, and the truth cannot be bound by all the "chicken-shit" little rules that you have made up and governed yourself by. Thank God! Thank God, because your bondage is not absolute or even actual.

Again . . .

Miracles are not in competition, and the number of them that you can do is limitless. They can be simultaneous and legion. This is not difficult to understand, once you conceive of them as possible at all. What IS more difficult to grasp is the lack of order of difficulty which stamps the miracle as something that must come from elsewhere, not from here.

[Chuckling] The only thing that can come from here is something you've made up, and something that you have given the "primal scream" to actualize. That's the only thing that can come from here. Have you had enough of it? Would you like some refreshing experiences?

A miracle must come from elsewhere . . . some place other than your thinking. And it will come from the silence in you, which, if you will access it, you will find is the mirror on which God reflects Himself, Creation.

What IS more difficult to grasp is the lack of order of difficulty which stamps the miracle as something that must come from elsewhere, not from here. From the world's viewpoint, this is impossible.

What that means is, that from the viewpoint of the rules you made up and the definitions of the world and universe that you abide by, that anything can come from elsewhere has to be impossible. Again, thank God, it's not.

You have experienced lack of competition among your thoughts, which, even though they may conflict, can occur to you together and in great numbers. You are so used to this that it can cause you little surprise.

Yet you are also used to classifying some of your thoughts as more important, larger or better, wiser or more productive and valuable than others. And this is true about the thoughts which cross the mind of those who think they live apart.

You know, in second gear, in the orphanage.

For some are reflections of Heaven, while others are motivated by the ego, which but SEEMS to think.

You see . . .

. . . SEEMS to think.

Thinking is one of those things that never happened. It just seems to have happened. Well, according to your current mindsets, that's one of the things that has to be impossible. But it's not!

The result [however] . . .

I'm adding the word "however."

The result [however] is a weaving, changing pattern which never rests, and is never still. It shifts unceasingly across the mirror of your mind, and the reflections of Heaven last but a moment, and grow dim as darkness blots them out. Where there was light darkness removes it in an instant, and alternating patterns of light and darkness sweep constantly across your minds.

That's life. That's what you've been experiencing . . . you unholy ones. But you are holy and therefore you're not bound, therefore your Birthright is available to you the moment you genuinely and simply abandon your devotion to thinking. Spend more time listening. Be silent more often during your day. It's not necessary to always be thinking or saying something.

Remember that when you're willing to become still, you're cleaning the mirror. And what God is already reflecting on the mirror can register with you. It's spontaneous. It's automatic. It's unavoidable. So do it!

The little sanity which still remains . . .

. . . in the face of this shifting patterns of darkness and light . . .

. . . is held together by a sense of order which YOU establish.

See, there's still the "primordial scream," the assertion to maintain that little bit of sanity.

Yet the very fact that you can DO this and bring ANY order into chaos shows you that you are not an ego, and that more than an ego MUST be in you. For the ego IS chaos, and if it were all of you no order at all would be possible.

Now, as you enter this coming week I encourage you to invite in revelation, I encourage you to invite in what you haven't thought about . . . what you haven't thought up. And I encourage you to realize that as you let something new actually happen—something that you are not generating—it will be accompanied by a feeling of loss of control, of loss of authority. It will seem that you are having to abandon the self-assertion that makes you stand out and truly exist. Let that happen! Let that happen!

Chaos will not be the result of your setting the order of everything. Orderliness, harmony will result when you yield into and allow yourself to fit in with everything and let the movement of everything dictate your appropriate behavior—how to be—so that you are participating in the Movement of Creation cooperatively. And that's where the absence of vulnerability enters your experience, and peace and love and joy and on and on.

Again, remember all of this is going to uncover a purpose for being that you did not make up and that you were not expecting to have unfold in you and change you. Let it happen! Let it happen! Let go of your authority!

Okay, I look forward to being with you next week. And I love you all.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, establishing order is pretty much the order of the day isn't it, every day, because without the establishment of order, nothing will work out right. You won't be where you need to be when you need to be. You will not be able to coordinate behavior, activities, appointments, etc., etc. And mostly, you won't be able to protect yourself, because of course, life is threatening, life is divided, life is unsafe.

So, because you all value order and because you all believe that order must be established by you, you very seldom, as the saying goes, "Let go and let God."

When you are experiencing inner turmoil, dissonance, fear, worry, you can count on it that it is because you have made an assessment of your environment—of your life—that has concluded that there is danger of one sort or another, to one degree or another. And further, I promise you that you can assume that you have already engaged in the practice of control—the practice of establishing order.

If you are experiencing dissonance, you are already unjoined, you are already feeling your isolation, your scary independence as an orphan. And you're not doing anything to object to and undo this state of orphanhood, which is the one thing that would establish order, although not order by your hand.

Interestingly enough, if you're in your peace, if you're on vacation at the beach and you're relaxed, it's relatively easy for you to let go. It's relatively easy for you not to be holding yourself in a state of readiness to take hold if the occasion calls for it. And in that space, you are able to feel your peace and good things are able to happen spontaneously—not at your hand. You love to go on a vacation because the unexpected meets you. Well, the unexpected would meet you every single day if you didn't abandon your peace.

The very circumstances where your peace is needed, the very circumstances where the correction to this inner turmoil needs to occur is primarily when you become involved with each other. Like I said, if you're on a beach enjoying the sunshine, not knowing anyone around you, you feel safe. You feel relaxed. You enjoy yourself. The experience of joy can penetrate.

But when you become involved with each other, you immediately become defensive. You immediately become self-protective. And those are the places, those are the times where the practice of the two-step is essential—where, instead of spontaneously responding with old habits, you stop, you hesitate, (that's the first step of the two-step) and you ask, you enquire. You say, "Father" or you say, "Holy Spirit" or you say, "That which is nothing more than my right Mind, what needs to be known here? What is the next step? What is the appropriate response? What allows me to be out from the excellence that is in the middle of me? What allows excellence to manifest in my relationships where I feel a spontaneous call for self-defense or at least a readiness for self-protection?"

Because you tend to feel unsafe with each other, you tend to forget that you're not an orphan. You tend to forget that you do not have to be with your brothers or sisters alone, autonomously. This is the time . . . these are the times to remember to bring God along with you. What does that mean? Does that mean that you're going to have the power of the Universe standing with you and behind you in anything you do? No. [chuckles] It means that you are willing to be present in a situation or in the relationship without claiming private autonomous status, which includes a feeling of vulnerability and habits of self-protection.

It means being willing to stand with your brother knowing or remembering who you Are by remembering to let God be Present with you. By letting God be Present with you, you are saying, "I am the Son or Daughter of God. I am not an orphan. I am not here alone. And it's not only my Birthright but it's my very nature to behave in a manner that will, in biblical terms, glorify God," which means, that will identify the perfection of Being in this circumstance or in this relationship that will manifest as healing, if healing is called for.

You see? That's what it means to go into relationship with God. It means to be present with the willingness to let your mind be free of your misperceptions, to let your mind be free of your theories and your confidences about how things work that you have made up. It means being willing to be in the circumstance or in the relationship with innocence—fresh awareness—fresh eyes, a capacity to see what is truly Present and not get sidetracked by what you believe is present.

Being . . . Being Itself is orderly. Its order escapes you when you operate on the basis of a belief that existence—life—is polarized and is in a constant state of tension, where the two poles constantly pull against each other almost in an attempt to undo each other so there is, what could be called, a constant battle.

But it isn't true. That is not the way Being is. And so, everything that we're talking about, everything that we have been talking about is to be brought into play right in the places where, out of habit, you are not inclined to let go of the attempt to establish order by hesitating and then refusing to act autonomously as though you had an actual capacity to act separate from your Source. You see?

And so, in a sense it's not easy. As you go through your day, you go through all the situations which call into play your well-established habits of self-protection and you forget that you don't have to play out those habits. You don't have to play out those habits and thereby incarcerate yourself in all of the emotions and all of the assumptions that automatically come into play that bind you and convince you that your bondage is legitimate.

Bondage . . . I'm not talking about being tied up. I'm talking about becoming so preoccupied with your habits, so enamored of them, that you forget that they are just patterns of behavior that you don't have to engage in, patterns that could be replaced by other patterns or could be replaced by your letting yourself into the patternlessness of Being that doesn't function on the basis of patterns but functions on the basis of the movement of creativity, which arises out of purity, which causes what comes forth to be absolutely and forever original. That's what it means.

Waking up is a matter of cutting through habits, remembering that you don't have to go down this road—this pattern—that you've gone down so many times before. And not only can you be free of that pattern, you can be free, like I said, of all of the associated thoughts and feelings that seem to confirm the rightness of your being on that path, going through that habit again and again and again.

Now, I'm going to back up a little as we go into the Book. I'm going to back up a whole paragraph.

Yet you are also used to classifying some of your thoughts as more important, larger or better, wiser or more productive and valuable than others. And this is true about the thoughts which cross the mind of those who think they live apart. For some are reflections of Heaven, while others are motivated by the ego, which but SEEMS to think. The result is a weaving, changing pattern which never rests, and is never still. It shifts unceasingly across the mirror of your mind, and the reflections of Heaven last but a moment, and grow dim as darkness blots them out. Where there was light darkness removes it in an instant, and alternating patterns of light and darkness sweep constantly across your minds.¹

That would describe your days wouldn't it? Moments of lucidity and moments of insanity. And more moments of insanity than lucidity. And it's confusing.

The little sanity which still remains is held together by a sense of order which YOU establish. Yet the very fact that you can DO this and bring ANY order into chaos shows you that you are not an ego, and that more than an ego MUST be in you.

Why? Well . . .

For the ego IS chaos, and if it were all of you, no order at all would be possible. Yet though the order which you impose upon your minds limits the ego, it ALSO limits YOU.

And that's the thing that's difficult to grasp. That's the thing you don't really want to grasp because you think that if you grasp it and behave according to what it means, you will become vulnerable.

But again, . . .

. . . though the order which you impose upon your minds limits the ego, it ALSO limits YOU.

In other words, it isn't actually the answer to the problem.

To order is to judge, and to arrange BY judgment.

You see, if you're going to establish order, you have to have a context of measurement so that you can easily determine what order is and what chaos is.

Now, if order is the nature of Being Itself, then it is absolute and all inclusive and there cannot be gradations of any sort from chaos to order. So, if you have some sort of a measuring stick that you're using, that you're applying to a situation in order to bring correction to the situation and establish order, you are having to use a measuring system that you have made up out of whole cloth, out of pure imagination that actually bears no relevance whatsoever to Being Itself—the state of existing.

Can you see that if you're using something to establish order that bears no relevance whatsoever to anything actual, you're accomplishing nothing? You are engaging in something that is not the answer. And that's the thing that needs to be realized, that nobody wants to realize and yet it is what will bring you the relief—the Awakening—the Atonement that you wish.

So . . .

To order is to judge, and to arrange BY judgment. It will seem difficult for you to learn that you have no basis AT ALL for ordering your thoughts.

True. You have no basis AT ALL . . . AT ALL for ordering your thoughts. It's a useless expenditure of energy. It's one of those things, that after you wake up you will discover never happened.

Again . . .

It will seem difficult for you to learn that you have no basis AT ALL for ordering your thoughts. This lesson the Holy Spirit teaches by giving you shining examples to show you that your way of ordering is wrong, but that a better way is offered you.

Now, the Holy Spirit teaches you this lesson. It is Its task to reveal to you those things which have no part in you, actually. Those things which are valueless and useless and your realization of their valuelessness and uselessness will be what will allow you to release them, to let them go and not practice them anymore. But you will have to be willing to listen to make the lesson easier. That's the key.

If you want the lesson to be easier, if you want to learn more gracefully, then invite the education. Don't force the education by kicking against the pricks. Don't force the education by doing something that is inevitably going to be uncomfortable. Because one way or another, you have to come to the realization that doing what doesn't work is useless. And uncomfortableness conveys that message real well.

The only thing is, that many of you are bull-headed. And when you have this learning presented to you, that what you're doing doesn't work and it's causing discomfort, you say, "Ah-h, here is my opportunity to prove my strength, here is the opportunity for me to exercise my control more efficiently than I have been so that I can overcome the discomfort because of course, the discomfort shouldn't be present at all, it's just there to provide me with the opportunity to exercise my authority better. It's giving me the practice I need to get over this hurdle—this limitation of not seeming to be able to do this [chuckling] without being uncomfortable, you see?

The miracle offers exactly the same response to every call for help. It does not judge the call. It merely recognizes what it IS, and answers accordingly.

[Repeats] The miracle offers exactly the same response to every call.

The same response to every call that is a miracle, is simply you doing the two-step, or having done the two-step, where you hesitate. You don't spontaneously act based upon old habits and confidences based from the past and an assessment of the situation using this measuring system to determine the difference between order and chaos and what degree of control it will take to bring it into the realm of order.

No, the miracle is what happens when you hesitate and do not act without joining, without saying, "Father, what needs to be known here?" "Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than my right Mind—what's the reality here, because I want my responses to be based upon what is Real and I do not want my responses to be based upon my interpretations (worst or best) or my friends' interpretations (worst or best)."

The miracle is the response that comes from the direct experience of truth. And so, rather than there being a declarative exercise of control, there may well be a gasp of awe or its equivalent—something so unexpected, something so out of context with the current mindset of the one having a problem, or the situation that's presenting itself, and even your own spontaneous assessments. It will be so different that it will catch you off guard and you will unavoidably abandon your habitual response and joy in the truth that you experience.

Does this mean that in the parking lot at the grocery store, where the call came, there will be choirs of angels and hosannas and trumpets and fan-fare? No, not likely. It's more likely to be a shift: A shift of momentum, a shift of attitude, a shift of behavior, a shift of feeling where everything turns right, where everything just melts into an awareness of perfection and everyone moves on from that moment blessed by it, carrying forward with them the blessing.

Again . . .

The miracle offers exactly the same response to every call for help. It does not judge the call. It merely recognizes what it IS, and answers accordingly.

What is it? It's a call for the two-step. It's a call for checking in with God. It's a call for saying, "What's really going on here? What of the Kingdom of Heaven is happening right here in front of me, aside from what I think it is?"

So . . .

It does not judge the call. It merely recognizes what it IS, and answers accordingly. It does not consider which call is louder or greater or more important.

Whether it seems to be louder or greater or more important or less important, it's just a call for the two-step.

You may wonder how you who are still bound to judgment can be asked to do that which requires no judgment of your own.

See, [chuckling] the ego always wants to spontaneously and immediately make it very complicated, "Well, answer me this, how can I who am still bound to judgment be asked to do that which requires no judgment of my own? I would like to know the answer to that." See . . . could take a day or two or ten thousand years to get a satisfactory answer. But that's not the answer.

The answer is very simple. The power of God, [chuckling] and NOT of you, engenders miracles.

Insulting isn't it? You see, the love of establishing order in your world and doing it in a way that blesses everyone so fantastically that you become the greatest figure in history, this type of mindset finds it difficult to find value in experiencing order and harmony that is utterly profound, that wasn't at your hand, that occurred because, you might say, you let someone else do it. You let God do it. And you were willing to say, "God I acknowledge what the source of the Movement of Being is, and it's not me. And that's okay with me."

I'm going to read this again:

You may wonder how you who are still bound to judgment can be asked to do that which requires no judgment of your own. The answer is very simple. The power of God, and NOT of you, engenders miracles. The miracle itself is but the witness that you have the power of God in you.

See, not that you have the power of you in you, but you have the power of God in you. Why? Because you've abandoned orphanhood. You've reneged on your divorce from the Father. You're no longer saying, "But Father, I'd rather see it my way. But Father, I'd rather do it my way. And I'm going to."

The miracle itself is but the witness that you have the power of God in you.

It's the witness to the fact that you did the two-step. It's the witness to the fact that you did the two-step in the hardware store. It's the fact that you did the two-step on the freeway, while you were driving on the freeway. It's the fact that you did the two-step when your wife said something unkind to you. It's the fact that you did the two-step when you felt like being short-tempered and justified in expressing yourself that way.

The miracle itself is but the witness that you have the power of God in you. That is the reason why the miracle gives equal blessing to all who share in it, and that is also why EVERYONE shares in it.

Who would withhold the blessing of a miracle? Who would be using a measuring stick to say, "You deserve a miracle. You don't quite deserve a miracle yet, but check back with me tomorrow." You see.

When the two-step happens, what follows is inevitable, what follows is spontaneous, and what follows is always the same. It is a response that arises out of a direct experience of Reality, whether unreality seemed to be presenting itself or not and calling for a different response than the two-step.

The power of God is limitless. And being always maximal, it offers EVERYTHING to EVERY call from ANYONE. There IS no order of difficulty here. A call for help is given help.

... except when it isn't given.

A call for help is given help.

... unless in the movement of the giving of it, you say, "Hell no, I'm not going to do anything for him, he doesn't deserve it!" And what you're saying is—regardless of the him that doesn't deserve it—you perceive "that him" as not deserving it, you perceive him as having violated in some way this code that you use to determine whether something is chaotic or orderly, whether it is acceptable or unacceptable. And so you're going to be God in reverse of God, because God always gives help, you might say, and you playing God, always withhold help.

Hey, if you'd rather see things your own way and you get a divorce from the Father, then your behavior is going to automatically be unlike the Father. Well, all it could be, would be to be the denial of the Father.

Now mind you, keep in mind that the only thing that would keep you from making the gift of love—which it is your function to do—would be that through your thinking you have determined that something other than that is appropriate. And so your thinking stands as the culprit that obscures truth, that obscures God from you and through you.

Now either you are stuck in a quagmire of stupidity and you're going to continue to suffer from it, or you're not actually stuck in it, and it's a matter of choice that you're in it. And you can make a different choice. And I'm calling for you to make a different choice. The Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—is calling for you to make another choice. And it's calling for you to make the choice right in the middle of your very mundane daily activities and involvements with each other, all of which would seem to call forth habituated responses. How can I say that? Because your responses that you habitually give to each other are not the same responses that Joe across the table from you gives, or Mary down the street.

All of you are responding to your circumstances from the paradigm you grew up in—the family attitudes, the family values. All of you started somewhere, learning. And even if you have managed to shake off a lot of whatever the training was, so that you weren't responding to life automatically, but as a result of truly being connected with life, . . . the point is, that no matter how much of what you learned has been shaken off and released. You, until you are awake and totally free of these mental and emotional habits, are still bound by them. And you are living out your parents and your grandparents and your great-grandparents family-established values and systems, together with what the pressures of society have added.

The establishment of order is, at the bottom line, what all of this training and teaching that you got from your family and society . . . again, the point is that what you've learned is not of value in waking up, because your allegiance is with the source of your training, which leaves God out. Oh, there may be religious training that came along with the family and God isn't left out of that. And there is an understanding of God. And there is a learned behavior toward God and learned attitudes about how to get into heaven after this life and so on. But it's still all conceptual. It's still like book learning.

It's like someone learning how to drive a car. And having found that in order to make a left turn in the car she was in, or he was in, you turn the wheel two and a half times to make a left turn—a ninety degree angle. And so, that person gets into another car that has a different steering ratio, gear ratio in the steering system, and they go to make a left turn and do it two and a half turns and they run into the fire hydrant because they weren't turning the wheel with a connection to the actual environment. They weren't turning the wheel because they were experiencing a living relationship with what was present. They were having a relationship with an idea about how many turns of the wheel it takes to make a car turn ninety degrees to the left. You see?

When you're responding to your day with the theories and the feelings and the emotions and the values of generations past, it's not you being connected with your brother now. It's not you being connected with your environment now. And I'm going to carry it beyond just the human sense of a relationship with someone or an environment. You are not responding with an inquisitiveness to see and have a clearer experience of the kingdom of heaven right now, in the environment, in what you call the environment. You see?

Now the call is to break these habits—these habits, by means of which you try to establish order over chaos.

I'm going back. It will seem difficult for you to learn that you have no basis at all for ordering your thoughts. It may be hard, but it's not impossible. And it's what's got to happen. And it's the whole point. And you do it by engaging in the two-step—hesitate before you act out of habit, hesitate before you try to establish order in a situation that doesn't call for order because if you will look at the situation with innocent eyes, innocent of your family values, and your family training, and societies training, you will be able to see the Kingdom of Heaven there in all of its profoundness and have an awe experience, which causes your behavior to be entirely different. Why? Because you're in touch with what's really going on and not trying to work on automatic.

A call for help is given help.

A perceived lack, which is called a need, is always answered. Why? Because the lack is a perception. The lack is a misunderstanding of something that is whole. And when the misunderstanding is abandoned, when it is devalued, it no longer blocks the experience of the wholeness that was there all along. That's why . . .

A call for help is given help.

Now, as you proceed through this week, I am going to encourage each and everyone of you to be more diligent to bring into play what we're talking about more consistently. To truly recognize that it's right in the middle of your active daily relationships, that the abandonment of the attempt to create order must occur. You must dare to abandon the automatic establishment of order, which really means the automatic establishment of self-protection and not love. That's exactly when it's called for. A miracle is called for exactly in the place where a miracle isn't happening. And usually the place where a miracle isn't happening is a place no one wants to be. Which is why everyone immediately brings into play the exercise of control for the purpose of establishing order, because everyone knows that order couldn't possibly simply happen.

I'm going to tell you that it's the constant practice of establishing order where order doesn't need to be established that chaos is created. And waking up is the abandoning of what creates chaos. And it can be scary as hell. Because in the abandonment of the personal exercise of control, your habit is to believe that you will truly be vulnerable. And you've got to dare to find out that it's not true. Because that's where the joy awaits you, in not the realization that it's not true, but the experience of the fact that it's not true.

I love you all very much. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 31st 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we've been talking about order, we've been talking about ordering one's thoughts, and we've been talking about the miracle. And if it isn't clear yet, ordering your thoughts and miracles are not one and the same thing. They don't even blend, they don't fit together. The miracle happens in the absence of ordering your thoughts.

There's a saying, "We're creatures of habit." Habits are orderlinesses that have been put into place through mutually agreed-upon definitions that allow everyone to work together with a certain degree of harmony.

You don't realize how completely you are governed by these habits—by these structures. But one example is, that if, on the freeway you change the distance between an exit sign and the actual exit, those driving on the freeway will become confused. This is experienced very often by people who go from the United States to Canada. The distance between the exit sign and the actual exit is different. And so, the expectation that exists by virtue of the habit of having constantly driven in one's own country can't come to fruition. "Did I pass it? Have I gone too far? Have I not gone far enough?" The comfort and the ease has disappeared and you may not even know why.

We're going to go into the Book and I'm going to back up a couple of sentences.

The power of God is limitless. And being always maximal, it offers EVERYTHING to EVERY call from ANYONE. There IS no order of difficulty here. A call for help is given help.¹

Well, this means something different from the responses you all give to each other automatically. A call for help, if you respond with help, in all likelihood is going to be a response based on some mental structure that is pre-existing in your mind and the mind of the one you are helping.

As I said last week, that doesn't constitute a real connection with the one you're with. You have a concept. A concept is a structure of thoughts—a collection of thoughts that make a definition. You have a concept of what constitutes a respectable, dependable person worthy of your attention. The definition is that, that person tends to think intelligently, which means, thinks in a particularly orderly way similar to the orderly way in which you think.

If that person doesn't think in the particularly orderly way that you do, it makes it very difficult for you to communicate. And you are likely to judge that person and attribute his problems to the fact that he's not thinking clearly. And if he did think clearly like you did, he wouldn't or she wouldn't be having the problem and wouldn't need attention from you.

Most of you think that love—a loving response to another—amounts to helping that other one find his or her way back to the orderly thinking of the sort that you use and that maybe the majority have agreed upon using, so that they wouldn't be running into the problem they're running into. And you think that's love. But it's not. It's just finding a way to abide by a structure of ideas that may or may not have anything to do with the situation at hand that requires attention. And this is very important.

A call for help is given help.

"Well, I help all the time. Every day if I have an opportunity to help somebody, I help them." But I'm going to ask you again . . . I'm going to ask you: Are you helping them really meet the actual circumstantial need—whether it's the circumstance in their mind or the circumstance in their environment—or are you helping them attain a certain conceptual structure or set of conceptual structures that aren't a response to an actual need at all?

"Oh-h, I'm having so much trouble, I'm experiencing a great deal of fear."

"Well my dear, what you need to do is to realize that God is All . . . God is All . . . God is in His holy place, couldn't ever be anywhere else, and therefore, all is well."

You see, here's a set of sentences, a string of ideas strung together as though this person, adopting that string of ideas, is going to find her peace or his peace. And you don't even know why they're upset. You just know that there's an answer by rote. And if you teach them the answer by rote, somehow a miracle will occur. And yet, no connection actually between you and that person has occurred, and no awareness on your part of what the need actually is, has occurred.

So the response has been to something not actual. And you all think this is love. You all think this is help. And what we're reading about here is clarifying what is and what is not help, so that you stop engaging in what isn't help.

You're at the airport. You're in the waiting area for your flight. And there's a lady or a gentleman sitting over a ways away from you obviously frustrated, upset, uneasy, his behavior or her behavior and talk is making it clear that there is fear or upset. And you say, "Oh God, I hope he doesn't end up sitting next to me. I hope she doesn't . . . I hope I don't end up sitting next to her. I have so much work to do between the time I leave here and we arrive in Detroit. I've got a meeting to go to."

You see—Ah-h! You have your mind ordered. It's very orderly. It's very structured. And you are going to insist upon going on that flight and carrying out the orderliness that you have set up because you believe you know what is required—what is genuinely called for, what is really needed. And at the bottom line, what's really needed for you is, to end up being able to please the people at the meeting you're going to and in the process you're not going to allow yourself to be present on the plane. And if that person ends up sitting next to you, you're not going to allow yourself to be present with that person.

And you know what? No miracle will occur.

No real experience will occur, because no matter whether that person is sitting next to you or not, you're not going to be present on the flight. You're going to be present in your head and you're going to be present with the computer in your lap that you're preparing your notes for your meeting upon. You're not going to be present at all. And that's not what being Awake means. That's not the result of enlightenment. That is what you need to release yourself from.

Now, you know one of the reasons you don't like to be around people who don't have their "act" together, who haven't managed to get hold of their mind and order their thoughts so that they can be at peace, because when you're with someone who hasn't done that, your typical structured responses won't meet the need and that means it's going to take a lot more from you to be involved with that one because, what? You're going to have to feel your way through whatever the heck it is that's happening. You're actually going to have to allow yourself to be present with that one, present without preconceptions and present without a conceptual agenda for him or her. Because if you can't manage to be present with that one, you're not going to be in any position to respond to what's really going on. And you will not be in any position to be an agent for change or to facilitate a miracle.

You see, miracles can be messy! Because they will not function under the domination of whatever rules or mental orderlinesses you try to insert and assert in a situation.

A miracle is like raw life itself unfolding, that you need to be willing to be present with, so that you can catch up with it, stay with it, be present with it, be with the movement, you see.

A miracle is when something you didn't plan happens. A miracle is what happens when you have not ordered your mind, when you are not binding yourself to some concepts—mental structures—that you are using in order to have harmony without actually having to be conscious, without having to be fluidly, flexibly present with a brother.

You have rules to save you time and to keep you from hurting while you're unconscious. And you use them because in order to be conscious, things will get messy. You use them because in order for a miracle to occur, you have to be undefended against it—unprotected against it.

And you don't want that. You want to be in charge. You want to be in control. You want to be able to present yourself well.

What does that mean? It means that you manage to present yourself in a way that expresses structures that you hold in your mind that you abide by so well, that there's harmony. But it's not harmony because you are in the movement with God, in the movement of Creation, in the movement of actually being able to recognize that you're in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, right here, right now.

Now . . .

The power the God is limitless, and being always maximal, it offers EVERYTHING to EVERY call from ANYONE.

It offers everything. Not a "canned" response, not a nice little packaged orderliness which if that person will embrace it, will relieve them of their distress. No. It offers everything, wholeness, full attention, full presence on your part, in this case, on God's part.

. . . being always maximal, it offers EVERYTHING to EVERY call from ANYONE.

. . . whether they seem to be a potentially hysterical passenger on a flight.

There IS no order of difficulty here. A call for help is given help.

And I'll tell you something: God never gives you a canned response. God gives you an experience.

A person has a fear of flying. There seems to be nothing he or she can do about it. But he or she has to go someplace and fly to get there. How are you going to deal with that? Well, I'll tell you something: No degree of intellectual coercion is going to make that person feel comfort.

And you know what? In the absence of your trying to dish out a canned response, in your willingness to be fully present with that one without being pissed off because you're not being able to get the work done that you had planned to do and would have allowed your flight and your arrival at your destination to be orderly. Instead of that, your willingness to be present might cause you to simply hold this person's hand for a moment or rest your hand on his or her arm and say something seemingly inconsequential with a gentle warm smile on your face, that, because of the particular muscular structure of your face, causes a little curl to occur at the end of your lip when your smiling that, for an unknown reason, triggers release for that person.

No logic to it, no orderliness to it, no structure to it, but just exactly the appropriate thing that would cut through the fear, happened, because you weren't busy being pissed off because of the intrusion on your time, and because you were willing in spite of all the orderliness you were going to apply to your trip, you were willing to abandon it. You were willing to not find value in ordering your thoughts and abiding by the orderliness of them, so that you were able to be innocently present with this person.

A call for help is given help.

But what the help is, you're not going to know until you're willing to be It, to let It move through you.

Now, what we're saying is, that the miracle happens when no judgment is present, when you're not mad at yourself for taking time away from your orderliness and when you're not judging the other for having a problem that's intruding on your time. It's a moment where judgment is absent.

Now when . . .

A call for help is given help.

The only judgment involved at all is the Holy Spirit's ONE division into two categories; one of love, and the other the call for love.

Not a division into love and a lack of love, which that person wouldn't be expressing if they handled themselves a little better or they followed the rules better or they had better control over their thoughts. After all, the one you can respect is the one who'll get on the plane looking perhaps, half-way decent, half-way pleasant to look at, that would be nice, not necessary, but it would be nice and would count a point here or there on their behalf, in their favor . . . or somebody who will sit down, go through the flight, perhaps with never talking to you, perhaps without ever talking to you, but certainly if they talked to you, not imposing too much on your space or your time or your mind.

Or, maybe you're a real talker yourself and you hope you sit down next to someone who's not going to be silent the whole trip, where you just sit there when you would love to be sharing ideas and learning about and meeting the person next to you. So there's judgment there that you're going to be ready to give out because you ended up with somebody who you couldn't enjoy being with.

All of this amounts to orderlinesses in your mind that you apply to the situation and you use them as a means of judging the one you're with or near. And you have this whole experience of them [chuckle] without ever having met them, without ever having been present with them, without being willing to be present with them in whatever way they're being.

So, the tendency is to see people as loving or unloving. But . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's ONE division into two categories; one of love, and the other the call for love.

. . . is the only judgment that's allowable, workable or healing.

YOU cannot safely make this division, for you are much too confused either to recognize love, or to believe that everything else is nothing but a need for love.

When a need for love is expressed or confronts you, it can very often be construed by you to be an inconvenient imposition upon your time which isn't fair to you. Ah-h, but . . .

A call for help is given help.

. . . without fail.

[Repeats] A call for help is given help.

And again, I want to make it perfectly clear that what keeps you from giving help are the structural orderlinesses or the orderly structures that you use in your mind to stay out of trouble and which, if you're able to practice very well, and experience the benefit of, you fully expect others to be willing to employ as well and enjoy the same benefit you do and thereby, not have occasion to impose upon you by having a need that requires you to be present with them in the unclear ambiguous, messy place in which a miracle occurs.

You are too bound to form, and not to content.

Now this really isn't applying to form [tapping table] you know, skin, fingers, tables, wood, carpets. You're bound to form. You're bound to patterns. Patterns: How far away is the exit sign from the actual exit? Do you walk down the left side of the hall and go through the left of two double doors? Do you drive on the left side of the street or the opposite? That's not being bound to form, that's being bound to a mental training, a mental habit, a mental structure.

You know it's a habit, because if you go from the United States to England or Australia, you automatically drive on the right side of the street, but not for long without scaring yourself to death—or you go through the wrong door or you walk on the wrong side of the sidewalk. You do it, what? Out of habit. Not because you're conscious. If you were consciously present you would immediately see where the people walking in your direction are walking, and where the people walking in the opposite direction are walking and you would accommodate it, because that's what obviously works. You see? And you wouldn't be startled into being conscious. You wouldn't be imposed upon in order to be conscious. You see, the structures, the patterns are mental.

You are too bound to form, . .

. . . structures . . .

. . . and not to content.

In other words, you're not present with your brother, you're not present with what they're experiencing or what particular form of love is being called for.

What you consider content is not content at all. It is merely form, and nothing else.

Well, what does that mean? Well, you look at somebody in the public eye. And this person has a lot of respect and you say, "He has a lot of respect," or "she has a lot of respect because their behavior exemplifies intelligence." In other words, they are functioning quite well according to the structures present in their mind, which are very similar to the structures present in your mind. And so you recognize them.

Ah-h . . . What you're doing is recognizing patterns. You don't know who you are cause you're just a collection of patterns and you're recognizing them by their collection of patterns and you're in a fantasy world the whole way. You look at them and you respect them, you see, and you say you're respecting the person, you're respecting the content. But you're not! All you're doing is respecting the form that they are embodying, which is nothing more than mental habits, structures, concepts that they are applying to their way of being in the world. That's all.

Content is being totally missed. The only way content won't be missed is when you are willing to step out of your structures and be with another who is out of their structures and be in that messy nebulous place where actual connection can occur, and the holiness of both of you can register and where healing or a miracle can occur.

So . . .

What you consider content is not content at all. It is merely form, and nothing else. For you do not respond to what a brother REALLY offers you, but only to the particular perception of his offering by which the ego judges it.

Let's be clear here.

For you do not respond to what a brother REALLY offers you, but only to the particular perception . . .

. . . Whose particular perception? Yours!

. . . but only to the particular perception of his offering by which the ego judges it.

Well, whose ego? Yours! You see. This is all totally private, but it's called relating. You see the insanity, the silliness, the ridiculousness of it? The whole thing is going on in your head without any actual connection being allowed, because it's essential to keep yourself and to help this other one become better aligned with the mental structures that allow harmony to exist without either one of you being conscious.

I bet this isn't what you thought the Course was about. But if you're going to wake up, this is what the Course has to be about, because you have to abandon the orderlinesses that you apply to yourself and then try to apply to your world, and the orderliness which you feel impelled to compel your brother to abide by because that is what you deem real help, which as I said, will allow harmony to exist with both of you with neither one of you being conscious.

Continuing:

The ego is incapable of understanding content, and is totally unconcerned with it.

What is the ego? The ego is a collection of habits, a collection of patterns, a collection of concepts, a collection of mutually agreed upon definitions. It's not actually conscious, it's not actually a presence. It's a collection of rules. It's that simple. And it's incapable of understanding content and is totally unconcerned with it. It's completely unconcerned with content until content intrudes upon it, and then the total flexibility that's called for, the total spontaneity that is called for, becomes of great concern to the ego because total spontaneity means complete absence of structure, complete disregard for rules. And it's collection of rules that constitutes the ego.

So, on its own, it's incapable of understanding content and on its own it's totally unconcerned with it until it's confronted with content and until content requires, by circumstances, understanding. Well, if the ego's incapable of understanding it but understanding it is called for, then you who are not an ego, find yourself having an experience that you call, being thrown out into the deep blue sea with nothing solid to stand on and with currents moving you at will and you're having an experience of being tossed to and fro without any sanctuary of safety. And you don't like that. And you think that something is wrong when that happens. But what you're learning here is that this is desirable and it is in this environment that the miracle can occur. It's in this environment, that you in your right Mind, can be the experience that gives new definition to you and transforms your awareness of yourself, you might say, at a new level or in a new way—transformed.

To the ego, if the form is acceptable . . .

. . . you know, if the one that you're looking at meets all the criteria set up by the structures in your mind.

To the ego, if the form is acceptable the content MUST be.

"He's a great guy! Wow, everyone loves her and should love her, you know." And yet you've not connected in anyway with him or her, but because the form is acceptable the content is. And you're willing to lavish praise and support on this one who manages to behave according to the structures that are so similar to yours and does it so exceptionally well. How could you not extend your appreciation. And yet, you're not conscious.

To the ego, if the form is acceptable the content MUST be. Otherwise, it will attack the form.

What does that mean? Well, we'll take our fearful person in the airport waiting room and maybe actually in the seat next to you. The form, meaning the structures, the mental structures . . . the content, meaning the Real one sitting there feeling fear, either next to you or across the room in the waiting room, the content, if it isn't acceptable to you, if it is not acceptable to the ego, the content doesn't get attacked, the form does. And you say, "She needs to get a hold of her mind! Well, obviously no one ever taught her how to access her peace." You know, "She probably didn't grow up in a well educated family." You see, and this story begins to be told in the mind. The form gets attacked. An explanation of why the structure is weak comes forth, you see. The form gets attacked.

If being with this person distracts you from something that you must get done, as a part of your orderliness, they're imposing upon you and they are creating a situation that is unfair. So you determine that their behavior, that their form is unfair to your form and you're attacking the form, you're attacking the weak structures, you're attacking the undeveloped structures, you're attacking the ignorance of structures that say, "If you're on a plane, even if you're afraid, handle yourself in a way that no one else knows about it, because no one else needs to be unduly alarmed." You see, more structures.

. . if the form is acceptable the content MUST be. Otherwise, it . .

. . . the ego . . .

. . . will attack the form. You who believe you understand something of the dynamics of the mind, let me assure you that you know nothing of it at all. For of yourselves you COULD not know of it. The study of the ego is NOT the study of the mind.

You see. [Chuckling] “You need to get hold of your mind and apply a little structure to it. You need a more orderly mind.” And if you manage to create these structures of order, you say, “I have an ordered mind,” or you say, “He has an ordered mind.” No. You just have a bunch of rules that you’re abiding by quite well. That’s behavior, that’s not consciousness. You see? That’s behavior, not consciousness. That’s not Mind. Mind is that messy, nebulous, uncontrollable space, you might say, in which miracles occur, in which enlightenment happens, in which consciousness exists.

The study of the ego is NOT the study of the mind. In fact, the ego enjoys the study of itself, and thoroughly approves the undertakings of students who would analyze it, approving its importance. Yet they but study form . . .

. . . patterns, definitions and so on.

Yet they but study form with meaningless content. For their teacher is senseless, though careful to conceal this fact behind a lot of words which sound impressive, but which lack any consistent sense when they are put TOGETHER.

They sound impressive when you sit and say, “Well, their behavior probably stems from not having been raised in a highly educated family and probably with parents who lacked certain principles, which if they had had would have caused their life to be more orderly and would have generated an educational environment in which this person would have absorbed the intelligent rules and behaviors that would make their life better and cause them not to be imposing upon me.” You see. Sounds impressive, even though it’s an indictment, even though it’s unkind and even though it’s untrue.

You’ve got to begin to devalue the orderlinesses of concepts and definitions and structured mental behaviors, which keep you unconscious of reality—reality right in front of you. I don’t mean divine Reality off in the spiritual realms. The realm you’re in is as spiritual as it’s going to get. But you’re not going to experience what it divinely is as long as you keep yourself bound in these orderlinesses. And in the constant reestablishment of order where in your mind . . . the constant reestablishment of which keeps you disconnected from your brother and incapable of really expressing and extending love.

So the ego puts together words that sound impressive but which lack any consistent sense when they’re put together.

This is characteristic of the ego's judgments. Separately, they seem to hold, but put them together, and the system of thought which arises from joining them is incoherent and utterly chaotic.

Why? Anything that is not based upon what's Real, which is utilized as a basis for actions in the Real world, result in chaos. And I'm going to tell you, that right now as long as you look at this world and you call it a material world, and you say that the basic building block of this world is matter, you will experience the Kingdom of Heaven—which is really what you are confronted by—as chaotic, as incoherent, incoherent in the sense of being polarized and conflicted, not expressing unification which would be cOherence.

. . . the system of thought which arises from joining them is incoherent and utterly chaotic. For form is not enough for meaning, and the underlying lack of content makes a cohesive system impossible. Separation therefore remains the ego's chosen condition. For no-one alone can judge the ego truly. Yet when two or more JOIN TOGETHER in searching for truth, the ego can no longer defend its lack of content. The fact of union TELLS them it is not true.

"Oh dear," . . .

. . . no-one alone can judge the ego truly. Yet when two or more JOIN TOGETHER . . .

"You mean like me and this fearful lady sitting next to me on the airline? You mean if I'll join together with her? But that's going to be chaos." No, chaos is what you're in the middle of right now because you think you're alive when you're actually unconscious. You think you are relating when you're being absolutely private. And it just happens that through the use of order all of you are managing to be private well enough so that you don't impinge upon each other and you say, that's civilization, that's being civilized, that's orderly, that's real harmony. It's unconsciousness. It's not life at all.

So yes, if you join together with the frightened person in a search for truth, the ego can no longer defend its lack of content.

The fact of union TELLS them . . .

. . . the ones that are joined together . . .

. . . it is not true.

So, in that act, in that willingness to abandon the orderlinesses and the willingness to step into the messy, apparently unstable because it's un-orderly, disorderly place where being present with each other can occur—the miracle occurs. And you're blessed and the other one is blessed.

And so, again this week you're faced with the same opportunity that we've been talking about, the continued opportunity to dare not to respond to each other from the orderlinesses in your mind.

You know what? That may mean that your encounters with your brother are going to take longer than is convenient because possibly something marvelous will happen that will keep you together longer, because there's so much joy.

I will be watching. And I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 7th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, I need to address something tonight and it's the idea that Paul has a skill or a talent that not many other people have, and that therefore his hearing my voice and relaying it, is not something all of you who are listening, are capable of doing.

"He is in touch with his Guide," you say, "I'm not in touch with my Guide. I've tried and tried and tried and I'm still not in touch with my Guide."

And then, it's easy to imagine that for those of you, unlike Paul, those of you without this "talent," there must be another way that works just as well. After all, God wouldn't leave you out just because you couldn't hear your Guide like Paul can hear his Guide.

Many of you say, "Well, the system of thought that I've been using has been working quite well. And if I listen, even if I don't hear my Guide, I might find myself realizing ways in which to use my system of thought better. I might be able to find a way to order my thoughts better," we'll say, metaphysically through the use of metaphysical thought processes.

Some of you might even think that if you hear your Guide, your Guide is going to tell you how to better use your mind to order your thoughts, so as to have more evidence of healing and transformation.

First of all, Paul is subject to the same thing you are: The need to stop ordering his thoughts. And he doesn't have a particular talent for doing that any more than you do, although he loves to try to order his thoughts, so as to have a better experience—a better out-picturing, you might say.

The simple fact is, that as the Course has been illuminating for everyone, whether you're in touch with your "Guide" or not, Guidance is available to you which the Course has referred to as coming from your Guide, and which the Course has referred to as coming from the Holy Spirit—that the Guidance comes from the Holy Spirit. And that it is essential for each and every one of you to make conscious connection with the Holy Spirit is an unavoidable fact. And every single one of you has the capacity, it is not a special talent.

As I've said before, the Holy Spirit is your right Mind held in trust while you dally with the ego. Obviously, if the Holy Spirit is your right Mind, it can't possibly take some special talent to experience Its Presence. It's got to be inevitable that you will eventually abandon your attempt to be independent from It, and to order your thoughts metaphysically or any other way, even just simply through the use of logic.

I'll be very clear with you on this. The only value there will ever be to consciously ordering your thoughts through whatever means you might use, including the use of logic, the only value it will ever have will be to bring you to a point where there is such clarity within you about the Presence of God, even though its only intellectual, and such clarity about what God must be, and such clarity, even though it's intellectual, about who you Are as the Son or Daughter of God, and such clarity about what the nature of Creation must be if God is the only cause and Creator. It will bring you to the point where you have enough trust and a feeling of enough security to abandon all of this ordering of your thoughts and yield into God—yield into your right Mind, the Holy Spirit—to let yourself become subject to Something other than your consciously ordered mind, to yield into something outside the self you have imagined that you are and confined yourself to.

You are not going to regain your sanity without reuniting with your right Mind. And it's so absolutely inevitable that after listening to what I'm saying tonight, you can't possibly justify the assumption that Paul is engaged in something you can't do or, that when you do whatever waking up is about for you, you won't be doing what Paul is doing, you'll be doing something different, because after all, who would really want to be doing what Paul is doing.

Well, what do you think Paul is doing? See, I even have to ask Paul what does Paul think he's doing.

Paul is allowing himself to not be an orphan. Paul is allowing himself not to function autonomously. Paul is allowing himself to yield into whatever the heck it might be that's on the other side of the orderlinesses of his conscious awareness. And when it works best, he brings along with him no preconceptions about what he's going to hear or what he's going to experience.

And so, what is he doing that every single one of you will inevitably do and might as well start doing tonight? He is allowing himself to yield to—and to him at times it seems like taking second place to, when actually it is being equal with—his right Mind. Being equal with That which is a spontaneous expression of Love and is something that I've been telling all of you, as well as him (he should be doing) you should be doing all day long every day because under these circumstances it's appropriate for these words and this behavior to happen. But when he's standing in the checkout lane at the grocery store, it's not appropriate for him to be using this language and behaving in this manner.

But there is a way for him to behave that glorifies God and illumines the setting beyond the general beliefs about what a grocery store is and what's happening there, which is of course, that it's all commerce and has to do with eating and feeding a material body and keeping it alive because it will die if it isn't kept alive and it's all about buying matter and feeding matter to matter, and blah-blah-blah.

You think that's what it's about in the grocery store? Well open your eyes up and be willing to look with innocent eyes. Be willing to say, "Father or Holy Spirit, show me what's really going on here." Why? Because you're supposed to be experiencing what's really going on there and you're supposed to be able to be present there from the divinity of you—from that which isn't bound by orderlinesses.

So if you think that there's some other way for you than the way there is for Paul, and you're using it as an excuse for not making the effort and providing the persistence necessary to get past your ingrained reluctances to connect with your divinity, then do it. Take the time, bring the persistence! Get on with it!

To say, "I'm not meant to be in touch with my right Mind" is insane. To say that you don't have the skill or the talent or ability to be in touch with your right Mind is ridiculous. To say that it's going to be hard to do it is also insane. To say that you may bring enough resistance into the process to delay it, now that is a great possibility! But don't do it!

Now, we talked about these orderlinesses—these mental structures of definitions and mutually-agreed-upon definitions and so on and so forth. We've talked about them as means of protecting yourself. But in the process of protecting yourself, something of a larger picture developed and that was, that you found that you had a particular way of protecting yourself that was different from the way Joe down the street developed his to protect himself and the means of protection—the style of protection, the form of the protection—became identified with each of you. Identified? And it was like, "Oh this identification is my identity. The way I think, the subject matter I think about, the uses I put it to, all identify me."

Can you see why there might be a reluctance to abandon the orderlinesses that you have developed? Do you see that it might be somewhat scary? Because at the bottom line, you think you're going to be abandoning your identity. And if you don't hold those structures in place, who in the hell or who in heaven's name will you be? And it's too scary to want to find out.

Someone wrote an unpublished song, the title of which was: "Thank God I'm not who I thought I was." I want every one of you to consider the possibility that you might end up being able to say, "Thank God I'm not who I thought I was." And please understand that the successful study of the Course is going to bring you to the point where you will say that.

The Course and it's meaning is never going to help you be who you thought you were more efficiently and better. Never! "I want to wake up. But boy, I don't want transformation!" [almost whispering] Yes you do. Yes you do.

I keep pointing out that the true experience of who you really Are, is beyond anything you can imagine, is not frightening. It exists in perfect equanimity. It exists in perfect safety because in it there is no threat because there is coherence. There is unity.

Now, let's go into the Book.

It is impossible to remember God in secret and alone.¹

You can talk about God alone. You can talk to God in secret—just you in your mind talking to what you think God is. But it is impossible to remember God. It is impossible to have the experience of union with God all by yourself.

Either in remembering God, you are also going to remember your brothers and sisters, or in the connection—the genuine connection with them—you are going to remember God. But it is not going to happen except in the context, for lack of better words, of family. To remember God is to remember the Brotherhood. To look at the Brotherhood with innocent eyes and a desire to be the presence of Love for the Brotherhood or even the brother, you are going to remember the Father that makes your brother or your sister your brother and sister.

There is no way for you to wake up without the cohesiveness and the invariable unity of the family coming into focus.

It is impossible to remember God in secret and alone.

All the benefits that you thought you got as an orphan, you're going to have to throw away. All the special dispensations that you were able to wheedle out of your brothers and sisters because you were an orphan, and all the bennies that they were able to wheedle out of you because they were orphans, will have to be abandoned.

And the satisfaction you got from the skill you brought to the process will have to be let go of. A lot of things that satisfied you will have to be released.

But you know what? You're going to have to release things that were compensations for being an orphan, so that you might experience the compensations that are available to a Son or Daughter of God—a brother or a sister to the brothers and sisters who are the Sons and Daughters of God.

But you're going to find out that you have a great investment in these bennies—these benefits, these special dispensations and even certain positions you've achieved where you get more bennies than someone else does. It's all nonsense, but you value it. And it makes you feel good. And yes, you're going to have to let go of those things which make you feel good because they're keeping you from experiencing your true inheritance. They're keeping you from experiencing who you Are. They're keeping you from experiencing your real identity.

Again . . .

It is impossible to remember God in secret and alone. For remembering Him means you are NOT alone, and willing to remember it.

You see, when you've taken time to sit down and talk to God, it's as though you're acknowledging that you're not alone. But you're not remembering it. You're not remembering the experience of unity. You're not remembering in the Now, the active conscious connection with God as, for lack of better words, two-way communication or unified conscious awareness.

Take no thought for yourself, . .

Well, what do you mean, “take no thought for yourself?” What is taking thought for myself? Well I'll tell you something, every single orphan in the orphanage takes thought for himself. He gets up in the morning and assesses everything on the basis of himself and what his needs are and what challenges he might meet that keep him from experiencing his need being fulfilled. So he takes thought for himself. Very seldom does one wake up and think of Henry next door and take thought for him and let that take precedence over taking thought for himself. It's just a simple fact of life isn't it?

Take no thought for yourself, for no thought you hold IS for yourself.

In other words, there are . . . there really are no private thoughts. Every thought you have colors or reflects on every other Son or Daughter of God—every other brother or sister. It colors your perception of them, changes the way you behave toward them and creates an energetic or mental environment that is felt and is either uplifting or depressing to the brotherhood—at least the brothers and sisters who insist upon seeing themselves as orphans.

Those who are awake certainly feel it, but they're not successfully depressed by your negativity or your valuing of untruth. But they feel it. And they look forward to the time when you cease this so that all may rejoice together in what is true.

So there are no private thoughts.

Take no thought for yourself, for no thought you hold IS for yourself.

Now . . .

If you would remember your Father, . .

In other words, if you would engage in doing something besides taking thought for yourself.

If you would remember your Father, . .

If you would allow for and want the conscious experience of having His Mind, of having His conscious experience of Reality, . .

. . . let the Holy Spirit order your thoughts, . .

Here we are again, you see . . . Does it say, “If you would remember your Father, do what Paul Tuttle is doing?” No.

If you would remember your Father, let the Holy Spirit order your thoughts, . .

. . . which is what Paul is doing. But that's irrelevant.

If you would remember your Father, let the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . let that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . order your thoughts, and give only the answer with which He answers you.

Paul is giving right now only what I am giving him. He's not introducing any of his own personal theories and so on and so forth.

If you would remember your Father, . .

If you would have the conscious communion with God occur in your experience . . .

. . . let the Holy Spirit order your thoughts, and . . .

. . . then . . . I'm adding the word, "then" . . .

. . . give . . .

. . . to your world, to your brothers, your sisters . . .

. . . only the answer with which He answers you.

Share the Vision that is shared with you. Everyone, . .

Everyone seeks for love as you do, and knows it not unless he joins with you in seeking it.

[Repeats] Everyone seeks for love as you do, and knows [love] not unless he joins with you in seeking it.

Now, what I want to make clear is, that as you know, you're confronted either with love or a call for love. Those are the only two things you're ever faced with from a brother or a sister.

When a brother is behaving awkwardly, unkindly, obtusely, it's a call for love. He doesn't realize it, and if you're not alert, you don't realize it either and you interpret his behavior as unkind, as perhaps dangerous to you and as something you should protect yourself against. And so you return to him attack for attack.

But . . .

Everyone seeks for love as you do, and knows it . . .

. . . knows love . . .

. . . not unless he joins with you in seeking it.

And what I'm trying to bring out here is, that when a brother behaves in an unkind fashion to you, he is asking to join you in finding love. It is a call for love.

So, you know, it's not a matter of, "Wow, wouldn't it be nice to find somebody I could sit down with and we could join together in finding love, all hunky-dory and working together pleasantly?" No. Whether a brother is being pleasant or unpleasant, he or she is joining you in the goal of finding love.

Everyone seeks for love as you do, and knows it not unless he joins with you in seeking it. If you undertake the search together, you bring with you a light so powerful that what you see is GIVEN meaning.

And this applies to you and the lady on the plane who is experiencing great fear. If you undertake the search together, if she expresses her fear, and you hear that it's a call for love and you join her in wanting to know what love is—because her fear is a call for love—you bring with you a light so powerful that what you see is given meaning. You see, the lady who is distressed, the lady who is full of fear, is embodying lack of meaning at the moment. She's not experiencing the meaning of what's happening. She's not experiencing heaven and yet heaven is the only thing happening, meaning is occurring but she's not experiencing it.

So . . .

If you undertake the search together, . .

. . . for love . . .

. . . you bring with you a light so powerful that what you see . . .

. . . which appears to be a meaningless expression of fear . . .

. . . is GIVEN meaning.

Meaning is illuminated, meaning comes forth. And I will tell you that the fear that the woman is experiencing will subside.

The lonely journey fails because it has excluded what it would FIND.

The lonely journey is a journey that is consciously designed to be lonely. The experience of being an orphan is designed to be a lonely, fatherless, motherless, brotherless, sisterless experience. It's designed to be exactly that. The one who's employing the act of being an orphan has consciously designed it that way, and until he has a better goal, will continue.

The lonely journey fails because it has excluded what it would FIND.

What it is after is an experience of wholeness—a wholeness achieved through autonomous effort. But wholeness is what is wanted, and wholeness is real. Health is what is wanted, and health is real. The experience of being loved is wanted and that is real. But all of the things it wants . . . all of the things the orphan wants, it wants to get while remaining independent, while remaining aloof, while allowing for no actual relationship. And so it excludes the only thing that would truly give it what it wants.

Now . . .

As God communicates to the Holy Spirit in you, so does the Holy Spirit translate His communications THROUGH you so YOU can understand them.

I'm going to put it this way to make it perfectly clear: Paul gains understanding of the truth by sharing it with you as he's doing right now. If he sits and talks to me all by himself he can learn, but the learning does not become full until he cares to share it.

Listen to this again:

As God communicates to the Holy Spirit in you, so does the Holy Spirit translate His . . .

. . . God's . . .

. . . communications THROUGH you so YOU can understand them.

Paul may say, "What do I need to do?" And I might say to him, "You need to love your brother. You need to love your brother more than you're loving your brother." And he says, "Oh, okay." And he hasn't learned a thing. He's grasped the idea, but if he happens to be the one on the plane sitting next to the woman who is full of fear, he now has the opportunity to express love to his fellowman by not being offended at the imposition on his time and by neglecting to respond with canned phrases, canned truths, memorized statements of healing effect and who's willing to be present with her without having a single thought about what he could do to improve it himself, on his own as an independent thinker of a spiritual thought. You see?

What it boils down to is that if you want to remember God, you're going to have to connect with your brother. You're going to have to stop distancing yourself from your brothers and sisters through the use of concepts and definitions and orderlinesses that give you distance from your brother and hopefully coerce your brother into behaving in such a way, as to give him a sense of well-being while being independent from you.

I'm going to be very blunt with you: When you're bothered by your brothers and sisters, when you feel that they are imposing upon you, [snaps fingers] very simply, you see them as challenging your identity, you see them as challenging, if nothing else, your integrity by pulling on you and causing you to abandon your orderliness and causing you to neglect the carrying out of actions on your part that, what?

Confirm your identity well and allow you to look good to those you would impress with your orderlinesses. You see.

God has no secret communications, for everything of Him is perfectly open, and freely accessible to all, being FOR all.

Now, they're not only accessible to all, they are communicated to all, always. Paul isn't getting special dispensation that someone else isn't getting. Paul is undefended enough to experience it, where others might not be, but that's the only difference.

God has no secret communications, for everything of Him is perfectly open, and freely accessible to all, being FOR all. Nothing lives in secret, and what you would hide from the Holy Spirit is nothing.

You might say, "It's of no consequence. It has no substance." And actually what it has is no content.

Every . . .

. . . what?

. . . interpretation . . .

. . . every concept, every definition you've made up.

Every interpretation YOU would lay upon a brother is senseless.

And yet for the most part, what you call the orderliness in your society is absolutely a result of interpretations you have laid upon your brothers and your brothers have laid upon you and you have agreed to mutually. And that's not a relationship. That's not even conscious connection. That's just a bunch of robots following their patterns, doing them obediently and reinforcing them with each other and they all seem to be in perfect harmony. But there's no consciousness.

The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. That means it's available to you. It means it's accessible to you. It means it's not out of your reach. It means that it is you already. So to be experiencing consciousness is at this very moment, your Birthright and is available to you if you will be willing to abandon the form—all of the orderlinesses, the intellectual orderlinesses of your mind—so that you might, in the absence of them, have a direct conscious experience of what's really going on and experience the illumination of what's really going on, and see who your brother really is and see who you really are.

And I'll tell you who you really are isn't someone in her eighties, or someone in his thirties, or someone in his teens.

Every interpretation YOU would lay upon a brother is senseless.

. . . and vice versa.

Let the Holy Spirit SHOW him to you, and teach you both his love and need for love.

[Repeats] Let the Holy Spirit SHOW him to you, . .

Well, in order to let the Holy Spirit show him to you, you're going to have to invite the education of having your brother shown to you. So you're going to have to abandon your autonomy.

Again, Paul may be abandoning his autonomy, but it's not a special talent. And again, every single one of you needs to be attending to abandoning your autonomy, needs to be inviting the education that the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—is intent upon sharing with you the moment you'll give it your attention and not have explanations for why it won't work for you.

Let the Holy Spirit SHOW him to you, and teach you both his love and need for love.

In other words, his love and what appears to be a call for love, which is obtuse or bad behavior, which is his need for love.

Neither his mind NOR YOURS holds more than these two orders of thought.

Either you are expressing love or a call for a love. And your brothers and sisters are either expressing love or a call for love. You're never doing anything else.

The miracle . . .

. . . is a sudden shift of perception.

The miracle is the recognition that this is true. Where there is love, your brother must give it to you because of what it IS.

When you look at your brother and there is love there, he will be giving it to you, because that's what happens, that's what love is, that's the movement that love is.

But . . .

. . . in looking at your brother, . .

. . . where there is NEED for love, . .

. . . which you would call a call for love or bad behavior.

But where there is NEED for love, YOU must give it because of what YOU are.

See, it didn't say, "You must give it because it's the right thing to do," or "You must do it because it will give you points when you step up to the 'Pearly Gates'." It didn't say, "You must do it because it will help you to be a better orphan." No, it said, . .

But where there is NEED for love, YOU must give it because of what YOU are. Long ago we said this course will teach you what you are, restoring to you . . .

. . . what?

. . . your identity.

Can it be any more clearer than this?

. . . restoring to you your identity.

In restoring your identity to you, it will negate and dissolve the identity you have created for yourself. Thank God! It will—in restoring your identity—cause the dissolving and disappearance of every thought, feeling, attitude associated with the meaning of orphanhood. It will erase any false identity you have been entertaining, reinforcing and claiming as yours.

[We have already learned that this identity is shared] (not read)

The miracle becomes the means of sharing it.

The miracle: The sudden shift of perception. The sudden shift of perception about what? Well, the sudden shift of perception about your brother or your sister, which in the sharing of it, causes you to be illuminated about the meaning of it for yourself—thus redefining your identity—and along with it, its purpose.

By supplying your identity wherever it is NOT recognized, YOU will recognize it.

Well, everyone who knows you as the orphan who lives on the top floor of the orphanage, in the best spot available, will no longer find you supplying that identity to them and reinforcing it, because you're going to be supplying your true identity because you've stopped claiming to be an orphan and you've let the Father through you—extending to your brother, another so-called orphan—but extending it to one who is no longer appearing to be an orphan to you, because in the extending of the awareness of what he truly is, you are extending the awareness of what you truly are and confirming both of you in the family.

The miracle . . .

. . . your willingness to experience a sudden shift of perception . . .

. . . becomes the MEANS of sharing it.

Sharing your identity.

By supplying your identity wherever it is NOT recognized, YOU will recognize it. And God Himself, Who wills to be with His Son forever, will bless each recognition of His Son with all the love He holds for him.

You see, the experience of the wholeness of family comes together in oneness, in unity.

Nor will the power of ALL His Love be absent from any miracle you offer to His Son.

That's the promise of you fulfilling your function, by letting that Mind be in you which is your only right Mind.

How, then, can there be any order of difficulty among them?

What else can I say?

I love you. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 14th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

What if you weren't the center of the Universe? What if you weren't the appropriate object of your affection? What if nothing was about you? What if everything was about everything else? What if your function was to be that which is fully conscious of everything giving preference to the quality of relating to everything, including everyone?

What if everyone was important but you weren't on that list of everyone?

As we progress through the Course, you might begin to have the feeling that everything isn't about you. After all, it says that the way for you to wake up is to look into your brother's eyes and remember God. It doesn't say go and stand in front of the mirror and look at your handsome or beautiful self—look into your beautiful or handsome eyes and remember God.

It also says that in the act of having an object of your affection other than yourself, and caring about someone else—everyone else—with an intent to be genuinely present with them without inserting between you and them any interpretations, any concepts about them that you have made up, any judgments, any fears, and on and on . . . it says, that in doing that, and making the gift of the pure awareness that you find yourself experiencing, you will learn about yourself. What you find yourself able to give others, because they are the object of your affection, is an act which results in your education, your learning about who you Are.

Now, one of the things that you learn about who you Are, is that you're not an authorizer. You could say, you are a responder. You are that which stands in receipt of experience that comes from your paying attention—not from asserting anything, but letting in and being the receiver of experience.

What if you are here to be the full conscious experience of Being—in which the full conscious experience of Reality, of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're currently calling earth and universe?

PAUL: I'm sorry. This is me, Paul. I lost it.

RAJ: What if your function is to be the conscious acknowledgement of everything—the full conscious acknowledgement of everything? What if you are that which lets "all that is" register with you without resisting it in any way and without interposing anything between you and it? What if that is the purpose of Being? What if that is your purpose?

You know, if you'll stop and think about what I've described here, you'll find that it applies to God, too. You think God has Himself on His Mind? Do you think God stands overlooking and overseeing everything and feels bad because Henry and George and Mary "down there" are preoccupied with things and aren't paying any attention to Him, and He feels lonely and sad and left out and hurt? No. It's not His function to "get." It's not the function of God to gather or get.

The Bible says, and God saw everything that He had made and behold it was very good.¹ The response was an acknowledgement of its goodness—of its Godness. Creation is a gift and God's acknowledgement of it is a gift.

Now part of the problem that all of you face in the process of waking up, in the process of any course of study you take for the purpose of waking up, is that there is an underlying question that you bring along with you. And that question is, "What am I going to get out of it? What new capacities will I acquire that will make me more effective, more respectable, more recognizably good?"

"What will I get out of it?" Well, if you dare to let in what we're learning and what I'm teaching . . . if you will let it in, you will find that you're learning that you're not going to get anything out of it except a rather consistent kick in the seat of the pants to move you off of your self-appreciation, where you are the center of the universe and where you're getting something out of everything, and actually dare to give your attention to everything else with innocence, without conditions, without agendas, but with a simple love-filled intent to not let anything at all stand between you and what you're giving your attention to, so that you might see it for what it truly is. And in so doing, you will find out who you truly Are.

And so the unselfish act of giving, totally, without any possibility of “getting” being included in the equation, will cause you to come back into your right Mind, where you’re willing to give and give and give and give the acknowledgement of what is Real in each and every thing because that is your function, that is your purpose, and the awareness of the fact that that is your purpose causes you to truly know who you Are—truly come into an experience of conscious fulfillment of your Being.

That isn’t very ego-satisfying. But I will tell you that it is Soul-satisfying, because that which is real about you experiences its reality and unity reigns. Conflict cannot exist there. Harmony is actualized without opposition.

Now, we ended up last week talking about the fact that long ago we said this Course will teach you what you Are—restoring to you your Identity. We talked about the fact that Identity is shared. That which you truly Are is something which is shared and I just described that act of sharing—of giving and not getting—and that the means of the sharing is what the miracle is.

And so, continuing on tonight with the next section called . . .

... THE TEST OF TRUTH 2 ...

... it says ...

Yet, the essential thing is learning that YOU DO NOT KNOW.

I know . . . you keep hearing this in one form or another as we read along, and it flies right in the face of all that is meaningful to you. “What the hell do you mean I don’t know? Of course I know. I haven’t gotten this far without knowing something?”

But I will tell you, that in order to get out of the bondage you are in, in order to get out of the experience of being subject to sin, sickness and death, you are going to have to step out of or beyond what you already know, because it hasn’t woken you up. It isn’t what does the trick.

And so, . . .

... the essential thing is learning that YOU DO NOT KNOW.

And I’m going to say, the essential thing is learning that you do not know and not being offended by it. Because until you’re willing to say, “My goodness, you know, I really may not know what is important to know and what I've thought is important to know may not be important to know. And therefore, I'm willing to look in a way I haven't been willing to look before. I'm willing to consider that maybe I do not know. Maybe I do not know the truth."

Continuing . . .

Knowledge is power, and all power is of God. You who have tried to keep power for yourselves have lost it.

In other words, those of you who have tried to become powerful through the use of coercion and manipulation and the abuse of your brothers and sisters, have lost power because you've lost your awareness of who you Are. And therefore, you have lost the awareness that you have an inheritance and what the inheritance is. You're unconscious of it. And regaining consciousness of it is what this is all about. And it is what your heart yearns for and it is what makes you feel like a stranger in a strange land, which is like referring to a Son of God in an orphanage.

Continuing . . .

You still have the power, but you have interposed so much between it and your AWARENESS of it that you cannot use it. Everything you have taught yourselves has made your power more and more obscure to you.

The better you got at being an orphan, the more obscure your divine Sonship became to you.

You know not WHAT it is nor WHERE. You have made a semblance of power and a show of strength so pitiful that it MUST fail you.

I mean, after all, a Son of God pretending to be an orphan is a pitiful sight because it is such gross nonsense, such impossible nonsense.

For power is not a seeming strength, and truth is beyond semblance of any kind. Yet all that stands between you and the power of God in you is but your learning of the false, and your attempts to undo the true.

Now, as we're reading here, this description of you isn't very complimentary. And yes, it could be put in more complimentary terms. Let's say, it doesn't have to be so darkly and strongly put. But the fact is, that you have a great deal of faith and trust that you invest in your knowledge and in your practice of your knowledge, and in the ordering of your thoughts, and in living your life according to the particular orderliness of your thinking. And you must come to a point where you find that not valuable at all.

And so, it is helpful not to speak too kindly about you and your bad habit of valuing your ability to think well and be powerful because of the order and the logic and the intelligence of your thinking. It's got to be put in a way that will cause you to stop in your tracks and say, "Wow! Maybe . . . maybe what I'm doing, even though it isn't actually accomplishing anything in the larger picture . . . is causing me to experience a serious loss of identity and a serious loss of peace that it's my Birthright to be experiencing, and a serious loss of my capacity to love and therefore, a serious loss of my mental balance." Shall I say sanity? Maybe it constitutes a serious loss of sanity—nothing uncorrectable, but something that won't be corrected if no one takes a look and says, "Wow, I may be doing something . . ." Well, let's put it this way, "I may be seriously fucking myself up!" Another strong word that isn't too strong at all.

Maybe you are seriously suffering from something you shouldn't be suffering from at all. No, not maybe . . . actually.

So, weather the storm with me and let these harsh descriptions of you register with you. Why? So that you might feel guilty and bad? No. But so you will seriously look at the fact that you may be doing some things that you seriously don't want to do and that you won't stop doing if somebody doesn't seriously confront you with it.

Now . . .

Be willing, then, for all of it to be undone, . .

All of what? Oh-h . . . all of the skill that you've personally developed? And all of the power that you have accrued?

Be willing, then, for all of it to be undone and be glad that you are not bound to it forever. For you have taught yourselves how to imprison the Son of God, . .

. . . yourself . . .

. . . a lesson so unthinkable that only the insane, in deepest sleep, could even dream of it.

Sure makes you sound like an idiot, doesn't it? But that's not the point. The point is, that you are involved in something that only those in the deepest sleep and insanity would be engaged in and you don't know it. And so somebody is having to tell you so that you can change your course—do something new, stop dead in your tracks and abandon what you're doing, and at the least, move into the Silence, find a way to become still so that there is no static standing between you and the fullness of the Void in which Creation occurs, so that you're in a position of having It register with you and come back into your right Mind.

Can God learn how NOT to be God? And can His Son, . .

. . . you . . .

. . . given all power by Him, learn to be powerless?

It's unthinkable and insane, such a thought. But you're behaving as though you're powerless.

"Oh-h . . . ya know, I just don't know what my body's gonna do next." "Oh-h you know, I just don't know what my kids are gonna do next." "Oh-h you know, I just don't know what the economy is going to do next."

Poor powerless little you.

What have you taught yourselves that you can possibly prefer to keep, in place of what you HAVE and what you ARE?

Do you like being a little whiner about the economy and the family and the undependable body you have and so on? Do you want to keep that which you've taught yourself and which you rely on and depend on and have faith in?

Atonement teaches you how to escape forever from everything that you have taught yourselves in the past by showing you only what you are NOW.

Well, do you have to do anything to be shown what you are now? Yes. You have to stop asserting what you believe you are, which you do constantly everyday, whether you're by yourself and thinking or whether you're with others and communicating. You are always asserting yourself. When you think, you think according to the rules and standards that you value. And you interpret everything that you see according to these standards, these values that you have incorporated.

You're constantly reinforcing the you, you think you are. And you are therefore, never in the silence where the Movement of Creation is happening and in which, because of the silence, it can register with you as what it really is and what disclosed to you your function, which as I said, is to be that which is paying attention to Creation and letting it register with you for what it is, whether it looks like a barista fixing you a cup of coffee, or a box-boy loading your groceries into your car, or you making love to your wife, or your wife loving you. No matter what it looks like, no matter how it might be interpreted—if interpretations are going to be employed—what is really going on, that's what you want to know. And that's what you will not know if you will not dare to become silent, if you will not abandon your insistence upon interpreting everything according to your values, by measuring it spontaneously according to your values, and coming to conclusions about it instead of just being with it and giving God a chance to show up.

Learning HAS BEEN accomplished before its effects are manifest.

You can't have the effects of learning until the learning has occurred. If you have the manifestation of it, the learning has already occurred.

Learning is therefore in the past, but its influence determines the present by giving it whatever meaning it holds for you.

How many of you looked forward to the day that you would graduate from High School, or looked forward to the day that you would graduate from college with your degree so that you might be finished learning and get on with the wonder and actuality of life?

Well, let me ask you something. Who told you that learning would ever cease, would ever come to an end? If learning stops, wonder disappears. And I'll tell you something—and if you all think about it you'll realize the truth of it—you don't want wonder to cease. You don't want to stop being surprised. When the only thing that will ever happen is something that you can expect, well, I believe that that would be called purgatory. It certainly wouldn't be life. And it is not the purpose or function of Being to be experienced that way.

And to the degree that you re-embrace your function of being that attention, that attentiveness, that is willing to embrace all that is happening, without inserting anything between you and it, you will forever be in a state of learning. And your learning will be manifest. Not because you have become a great manifester of things, but because in abiding in your function and experiencing the Movement of Creation, which is a learning movement, manifestation of the learning occurs.

Ah, you might say your power comes into play. But it is not a power, called force which you exert. It's a power that is the nature of the movement of conscious awareness. And when you're fulfilling your purpose, when you're being the Son of God by embodying the Movement of God—and as I said, God is constantly making a gift and never getting—then the joy of knowing who you Are, the wonder of being what you Are will re-emerge never to be lost again. And that's the point. But you won't arrive at that until you're willing to accept the postulate, I'm going to say, that you do not know.

Again . . .

Learning is therefore in the past, but its influence determines the present by giving it whatever meaning it holds for you.

Yeah, I know you've had a rough experience with men. They've always treated you badly. And as a result you now approach all men with a negative attitude. Your past learning . . .

. . . determines the present by giving it whatever meaning it holds for you.

That's a key point.

. . . whatever meaning it holds for you.

Whatever biased or torqued perspective you lay upon life, life will have for you.

YOUR learning gives the present no meaning at all.

Now that's perhaps a little difficult to understand. The first sentence says:

Learning is therefore in the past, but its influence determines the present by giving it whatever meaning it holds for you.

And then it says:

YOUR learning gives the present no meaning at all.

Well, that's true. The present is the actual. The present is Creation enacted, you might say. It's actual. Now, your learning may cause your perception of it all to be torqued, twisted, having a mean-spirited edge to it that causes the present to reflect to you the same-old, same-old that has made you miserable forever. But the fact is, that the present is really Creation enacted and it hasn't been changed by your biased, mean-spirited attitude. So again . . .

Learning is therefore in the past, . .

. . . meaning it always happens before the manifestation of it occurs in your life.

Learning is therefore in the past, but its influence determines the present by giving it whatever meaning it holds for you. YOUR learning gives the present no meaning at all.

Meaning is God derived. Your learning doesn't constitute the eliciting of real meaning. It just causes you to have a biased perception of reality, of Creation. Okay.

Nothing you have ever learned can help you understand the present, or teach you how to undo the past.

Now, there's one exception to that. If you have learned in the past how to be so present in the moment that you choose not to do anything else, then your learning in the past will cause you to be so present in the moment, now, that you aren't bringing past learning with you. You see?

Again, though . . .

Nothing you have ever learned can help you understand the present, . .

The only thing that will help you understand the present is, that when you look with innocent eyes in the moment you're in, you can see God in it. That's the only way you can understand the present. You will have to be present with It, without preconceptions and without memory so that the meaning God is expressing as the present moment will register with you. And it will register with you if you're allowing yourself to fulfill your function, which is to simply be the attentiveness that allows the recognition of what's really going on.

"Well, you know what? You make me sound like some sort of a nerve ending. I'm just supposed to sit here and respond to the stimulus of the present. Well, I'll tell you something, I got more gumption than that, and I won't settle for such a boring activity. And I most certainly will not consider the possibility that that is my ultimate function. And I'll tell you something, I can throw a steer down in thirty seconds. And I can make my wife do anything just by raising my eyebrow. And I can put ten companies out of business in three days if I think it will make me money. I've got power. I've got more gumption than to just be some something that gives attention to what's really going on, and that's it."

Well, I tell you what, as long as you want to live in the orphanage I'll send you a postcard every now and then and I'll invite you to come to where I am. I'll even give you directions on how to get there. But hey, if you want to throw a steer, go throw a steer. But . . .

Nothing you have ever learned can help you understand the present, or teach you how to undo the past. Your past IS what you have taught yourselves.

Shall I yell this? In the book it's all in capital letters.

LET IT ALL GO.

You know what? Try just letting it go for a month. You know, give yourself the option to stop letting it go, but give yourself thirty days to actually let it all go.

Do not attempt to understand any event, or anything, or anyone in its light, . .

. . . the light of the past . . .

. . . for the light of darkness by which you try to see can ONLY obscure.

Put no confidence at all in darkness . . .

Now, it means here, do not put confidence at all in your memory, in you past, in the things you're already sure of, in your confidence that all men are what the few men have demonstrated to you that they are, and so on.

Put no confidence at all in darkness to illuminate your understanding, for if you do you contradict the light, and thereby THINK you see the darkness. Yet darkness cannot BE seen, for it is nothing more than a condition in which seeing becomes impossible.

What's another way of saying it? Darkness is nothing more than a condition in which paying attention becomes impossible, in which being attentive to what everything really is becomes impossible.

You who have not yet brought all of the darkness you have taught yourselves unto the light in you . . .

Get that?

You who have not yet brought all of the darkness you have taught yourselves unto the light in you can hardly judge the truth and value of this course. Yet God did not abandon you.

And I would say, the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind has not abandoned you. And I have not abandoned you.

And so you have another lesson sent from Him, . .

. . . God . . .

. . . ALREADY learned for every Child of light by Him to Whom God gave it.

That's me, I have learned it for you. And there are others since me who have learned it and therefore have learned it for you. The ground has already been broken, you might say. You're not blazing the trail yourself. You're coming along a trail that is already marked. You've already been helped. God did not abandon you.

And so you have another lesson sent from Him, ALREADY learned for every Child of light by Him to Whom God gave it. This lesson shines with God's glory, for in it lies His power, which He shares so gladly with His Son.

The gift has already been made. The gift of your power has already been made, already given you. But as long as you are going to fight amongst your fellow orphans to get to the better rooms on the higher floors, and to get the nicer maintenance jobs, and to prove yourselves, you're not going to experience the gift that's been given to you. "Oh, no, I don't want anything so easy. I will fight for my good. I will earn my good. I will demonstrate for all to see how good I am. Don't make no gifts to me that I don't have to earn . . . it won't say anything about me at all . . . might get other people to think that they can have their good too without fighting for it. And then where would things be? C-r-a-z-y.

Learn of His happiness, . .

. . . God's happiness . . .

. . . which is YOURS. But to accomplish this, all your dark lessons must be brought willingly to truth, and joyously laid down by hands open to receive, not closed to take.

What is attentiveness? Attentiveness is a willing to let something register with you, you might say, it's a way of letting things in, not grabbing and pulling things in, not an assertive, proactive action. Attentiveness is a passive, allowing action which by virtue of its undefendedness simply can't help but be inundated by the Movement of Life, Creation Itself, God. And so when you give up the struggle and the fight to assert yourself, when your hand is not tightly closed to grasp and take, but is passively open, you might say, everything can end up in your hands—everything will, because you're not resisting or denying anything by having a closed fist or, we'll say, a closed mind.

You who have not yet brought all of the darkness you have taught yourselves unto the light in you can hardly judge the truth and value of this course. Yet God did not abandon you.

Remember this. You who have been described so darkly and sinisterly and insanely as we've been reading tonight, remember, the light is in you.

You who have not yet brought all of the darkness you have taught yourselves unto the light in you can hardly judge the truth and value of this course. Yet God did not abandon you.

Remember that. Continuing where we left off earlier . . .

Learn of His happiness, which is YOURS. But to accomplish this, all your dark lessons must be brought willingly to truth, and joyously laid down by hands open to receive, not closed to take. Every dark lesson that you bring to Him Who teaches light He will accept from you, because you do not want it.

Now, again we have these sort of sinister words.

Every dark lesson . . .

Here's a dark lesson: "I'm a recognizably good person and I do recognizably good things, and people are blessed by what I do." Would you have thought that was a dark lesson? Well, let me ask you this, in the making of that statement did God fit in there anywhere in your mind?

"I'm a recognizably good person." Well . . . why? Because you have this habit and intention in every moment to listen to God's Voice so that you might know the divine truth about your brother and therefore everything you do is recognizably good?

Or, is it because you have this pattern of thoughts and ideas and behaviors that everyone mutually agrees are good and valuable and because you figured out how to manipulate circumstances and make them better for people, you are benefiting them, and that makes you a good person. See. . . that's a dark lesson. It's a lesson in darkness that you've taught yourself and it's a lesson in darkness because the light of truth doesn't dwell in it and therefore in you. And you are practicing something that you will have to abandon in the process of waking up—in the process of being willing to become attentive to what is really going on—and to be the state of attentiveness rather than the doer of good works.

So, dark lessons aren't necessarily evidences of overt dishonesty or cruelty or abuse. But if you realize that your desire to behave independently in a way that makes good things happen and you want to teach that to others, you will have to realize that that keeps you and others unconscious of their divine Birthright, of their inheritance. And so you are keeping the truth from them, by keeping them preoccupied with those things that are ego-satisfying, but keep everyone unconscious of the truth. That's what makes them dark lessons, because you are keeping the truth in the dark where it can't be seen.

So, "dark lessons" aren't really that sinister. They don't necessarily have anything to do with mean-spiritedness or criminal activity. They have to do with teaching ignorance.

Now, if you don't know that you're suffering from ignorance, you can't do anything other than teach it. But you're learning here what ignorance is and so you're in a position to stop teaching it. You're in a position to recognize the many places in which you do practice it so that you might be in a position to stop, to correct yourself.

Every dark lesson . . .

. . . every ignorance that you have believed and forwarded to your friends.

Every dark lesson that you bring to Him Who teaches light He will accept from you, because you do not want it.

He won't take it from you if you still want it. But when you recognize it for what it is and you bring it to Him because you don't want it, He will take it.

And He will gladly EXCHANGE each one for the bright lesson He has learned for you.

Now, we started out the evening with the statement . . .

. . . the essential thing is learning that YOU DO NOT KNOW.

And we're going to end with this sentence.

Never believe that any lesson you have learned APART from Him means anything.

Two different ways of saying the same thing.

I hope you will be very attentive this week to what we've discussed this evening, because there is a lot in it and yet it is utter simplicity and it's the epitome of Love and it will help you learn what Love is, and help you have the guts to express it, embody it.

And I love you and I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 21st 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Not all of you, but many of you have had the experience of being on the social welfare roles, usually because of lack of employment or whatever. And you find that you're grateful for the help you get. It manages to keep you barely alive, but it is help. And if and when you find the opportunity for work—and in many cases, the first opportunities are less than desirable or less than fulfilling job opportunities, but they are helpful in increasing the cash flow—you find out that if your cash flow increases too much, the social welfare cash flow decreases. And the more you get—the more you earn individually—even less is offered you by the social welfare system. And you begin to feel that the system is holding you down because it manages to always keep you in a position of not having quite enough to be comfortable.

And so it discourages one from attempting to reestablish himself independently. Some people get caught on the welfare roles because of that. But most everyone else arrives at a point where they realize they've got to screw up the courage, or get up enough gumption to break loose of the system and go ahead and become independent from that which is holding them back, while at the same time, helping them minimally.

For those who have been on welfare, you know exactly what I'm talking about. Others of you have had other kinds of experiences where the situation seems to hold you back, while at the same time helping you and causing you, perhaps, to become addicted to the help and afraid to let go of it.

Now why am I bringing this up? I'm bringing it up because I want to ask you all, "How did you do last week?" How many of you were able to say, "I know nothing," "I don't know anything," and accept it graciously and listen? How many of you managed to spend any significant amount of time responding to your days from the joined place where you were sharing what was being unfolded to you by the Holy Spirit or your Guide?

Uh-h, not many? Not very much of the time? Well, might it have been because, like the person needing to get off the welfare system but gaining some benefit from it, you, needing to get off or out of the orphan mindset, found enough benefit from it to not be willing to let it go—not be willing to shift gears.

Indeed, when you finally get up the courage to break free of the social welfare system, it is like changing into a different paradigm, into an entirely different mindset—a non-welfare mindset. And when that happens it is really a leap of faith. And when you choose to shift from thinking that you know, into acknowledging that you don't know and insisting on listening first before you respond, it takes courage and it is an act of faith.

Now you could ask the question, "Why didn't you do it very much?" It's easy to say, "Well, I'm familiar with thinking for myself. I'm familiar with thinking things through and resolving things through the use of logic. It's second nature to me to think for myself. It feels natural. And what you're asking me to do doesn't feel natural. What you're asking me to do is to jump out into the 'deep blue' with no security."

Well, there's another reason as we've discussed before, which is, that you rely upon your thinking, you rely upon the idea that you know something so that you can protect yourself—so that you can survive. And you feel that that's a justifiable reason for not engaging in the idea that you don't know, and then listening and hearing before you respond to the circumstances you're in the middle of. You think you know the answer and you feel that you can rely upon your capacity to have the answers.

But I'm going to tell you there's another reason, or there's another factor here that you're not paying any attention to, because if you did pay attention to it you would have more justification for abandoning your own best thinking.

And the other factor is one we've talked about before, some time ago, which may have slipped your mind. You see, you think that I am giving you the option to respond to Guidance that comes to you if you will abandon your own best capacities. You think I'm asking you to trade your capacity to do things yourself in order to become a puppet of the Holy Spirit—of that which is nothing more than your right Mind—but puppet nevertheless.

And what you've forgotten is, that when you're doing your own thinking, you aren't doing your own thinking. There isn't one original thing that arises out of you doing your own thinking. Either you are listening to the Holy Spirit or one who is Awake or you're listening to the ego—you're listening to a collection of habits. You are the mouthpiece for patterns of thinking and patterns of behavior, which are never original. They are constant repetitions of that which is known. And on top of that, that which is known is false. It doesn't reflect Reality. It doesn't give you a capacity to engage in Being, in Real terms.

And so, what you have forgotten is that either way, you're a puppet. Either way, you are going to be the puppet of the Holy Spirit or the Father, or you're going to be the puppet of your memory and your survival techniques and ultimately of your ignorance of truth.

I'm sorry, when you think you went through your week this week and spent some time listening to Guidance and the rest of the time thinking for yourself, you're wrong! Either you were listening for guidance from the Holy Spirit, or you were listening for guidance from the only other teacher there is and you were replicating ignorance all over the place . . . from memory. And you thought you were being original. And you thought you were doing things that were respectable, as opposed to listening for Guidance and becoming the puppet of something other than the orphan you think are.

So don't feel too good about yourself in this sense, because the choice to do things on your own was an ignorant choice, because you weren't doing anything on your own. You just were the puppet of another master—a puppet of a master that is incapable of recognizing what is Real and therefore is not your ally, and therefore is not something that you should feel that comfortable depending upon.

Now, what I'm attempting to illuminate here is, that which will allow you to put forth a little more faith and confidence in listening for guidance from the Holy Spirit. And I'm trying to do it by showing you that it's a matter of shifting from one teacher to another teacher, from a teacher that draws from memory and ignorant perceptions of Reality only, to a teacher whose resource is God, a teacher whose resource is only capable of speaking truth and of illuminating Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven that you're in, which your other teacher says is just the world and universe, matter, a result of a big bang, pure physical happenstance.

So, when you are not listening specifically for guidance from God, when you are not specifically asking to experience everything through my Vision, which is my gift to you from God, when you are not choosing to lean into the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind, you're simply delaying an inevitable step that it might require a little bit of courage to take. A step that will shake you loose from the inertia caused by your addiction, whether it's slight or great, to that which is meeting your need but at the same time keeping you from experiencing your needs fulfilled. You see the difference? You see the difference, yes!

When I say, and when the Course says, to acknowledge that you don't know, and to really let that be truly the truth and okay with you, you are simply putting yourself in a position of being able to do something a little bit more intelligent than what you've been doing—thinking by yourself, solving things on your own, doing things yourself.

Put a note on your refrigerator this week: "I'm never doing anything all by myself. It's impossible to do anything all by myself. I am going to stop fooling myself into thinking . . . thinking that I'm doing something all by myself. Either I am following an excellent teacher, or I'm following an ignorant teacher who is teaching ignorance and promoting the results of ignorance."

Let those thoughts sit on your refrigerator where you can see them and remind yourself so that you don't get too cocky and decide, "Oh, I know how to do this."

Last week, Christopher says to Paul, "You know, when the meetings are so late, I find I'm tired. And when I'm tired, if there's a problem, I can't deal with it as well and I'm less patient. And I have to get up and go to work on Monday mornings, early. I really need the meetings to start earlier."

Paul looked at him and agreed with him why, . . . Paul understood. And so this week the meeting was scheduled for seven o'clock. And Chris couldn't get here at seven o'clock. Why? Because the normalcy of life and helping a son get to his registration at college and get into his dorm rooms had to be taken care of, and other expressions of practical love that meets the need. These things had to be taken care of. Oh, but it didn't fit into the plans. It didn't fit into the intelligent ordering of the mind and the orderliness of doing things in a respectable way.

Creation—the Movement of Being—unfolds not from the voice for fear, the ego, the other teacher, the teacher other than the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind.

You know, the necessity is to acknowledge that you don't know. And another necessity is to acknowledge that it will do you no good to establish a knowing! [said with great emphasis]

"We need to get these meetings started earlier. Yes, indeed, we're going to start these meetings earlier." Oh, they thought a knowing was being established, and an ordering of thoughts had occurred that would have to manifest, you see. No. You don't know and you can't establish knowing through the machinations of mental processes.

The only thing that works is yielding. Yielding to what? To the strings on the ends of the puppeteers fingers, to the strings on the end of God's Hands. You have to be willing to yield to what you Are. You have to yield to your right Mind, instead of this imagined mind with the orphan mindset. It's that simple.

We will go through the rest of this book, but nothing other than this will be said or learned. It will just be said in many different ways until finally someone gets it and says, "Okay! I'm going to get off the welfare roles. I'm going to step out into the void where I don't have the security that I had with the welfare roles, even though that security constantly kept me in a state of fear, because it wasn't ever really quite enough. But it was something . . . " You see?

You're going to have to arrive at a point where you say, "Okay, I'm a puppet of one of two puppeteers, which one do I want to be a puppet of? Which one am I going to commit to? Which one am I going to yield to?" And then do it. And you do it right in your business meeting. You do it right when you're talking to the policeman who pulled you over cause you were going 45 in a 25 mile an hour zone.

Let's go into the book. We're in a Section called . . .

. . . THE TEST OF TRUTH . . .

You have one test, as sure as God, by which to recognize if what you learned is true.¹

[Repeats] . . . what you learned . . .

Well, you won't learn anything, of course, until you start listening, because the only other thing you can do is to rehearse old tapes, go over your old hard drive, as it were. And there will be nothing new there to learn. You might find unique ways to put memories together to give you what you call "ah-ha" experiences. But they're not real learning. It is not learning which uncovers what you have never seen before. That's what learning is.

So there's a test . . .

. . . one test, as sure as God, by which to recognize if what you learned is true.

Well, what is it? Are there a lot of things to learn about? No. The only thing there is for you to learn is: How to see Reality: How to look at your brother and remember God: How to look at the tree and remember God: How to look at the worm and stand in awe of the divine splendor of its Being. There's only one thing to learn and that is to see what's Really going on.

Now, when you've learned that, will you have it under your belt? No. Because you will find that you're going to be in an Eternal position of learning because the Movement of Creation is Eternal. And Being will be an Eternal "Ah-ha," an Eternal declaration of wonder because that's your function. That's your purpose: To look with God as God is looking, and recognize God in all that is occurring.

And what I want you to understand is, that that experience can be had while you're sitting behind the wheel of your car driving down the freeway. It's not other-worldly. It awaits you right now.

Continuing . . .

If you are wholly free of fear of any kind, and if all those who meet, or even think of you, share in your perfect peace, then you can be sure that you have learned God's lesson, and not yours.

Well, there's not much wiggle room there, is there?

Unless all this is true there ARE dark lessons in your minds which hurt and hinder you, and everyone around you.

And of course, these dark lessons, like I mentioned last week, are simply, for lack of better words, beliefs that you have that don't reflect the truth, that by your harboring them and implementing them, you keep yourself and your brothers unconscious of the truth—you keep the truth in the dark. Even if those beliefs have a very positive tone and you know, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Isn't that wonderful?

So you say, "Okay, I can do that. I'll be nice to him, so he'll be nice to me. I'll do things to him that I would like him to do to me, that would make me feel good and that will make him feel good, and then he'll want to do things like that to me." And you have what's called a "mutual admiration society," right?

Well, it won't wake you up. That won't cause you to look into your brother's eyes and remember God. That won't cause you to see divinity where just humanity seems to be. But it will seem to cause a lot of well-behaved humanity, right? Okay. Those are dark lessons that you would teach by teaching others this process, so that they can teach others that process and get a lot of mutual agreements and even national harmony. Well . . .

If you are wholly free of fear of any kind, and if all those who meet, or even think of you, share in your perfect peace, then you can be sure that you have learned God's lesson, and not yours. Unless all this is true there ARE dark lessons in your minds which hurt and hinder you, and everyone around you. The ABSENCE of perfect peace means but ONE thing: You THINK you do not will for God's Son what His Father wills for him.

What does that mean? It means, you think you will for God's Son what God's Son wants to think—what you want to think. You're willing for God's Son—you—a capacity to think for yourself and do everything yourself as you go through your week. And in so doing, you're saying that . . .

You THINK you do not will for God's Son what His Father wills for him.

Closed God out of the loop. "It's all me. I'm going to do it my way. I get to do it my way. And I can really accomplish doing something my way." But remember the sign that you need to put on your refrigerator: "There is nothing I can do all by myself. It is impossible for me to do anything all by myself." You can't afford to forget these things. So put them up where you can see them.

Every dark lesson teaches this, in one form or another.

In other words, every imaginative, privately created thought you have teaches that there is something more important to you than what God means by His every act of Creation.

Every dark lesson teaches this, in one form or another. And each bright lesson, with which the Holy Spirit will replace the dark ones you do not accept and hide, teaches you that you will WITH the Father unto His Son.

You see . . . It's very black and white. It's like all or nothing. It's like Reality or nothing.

The other teacher that teaches only from memory, and only rehearses memorized "canned" rehearsals of thoughts, is accomplishing nothing—is doing nothing. In spite of the apparent activity, nothing is actually happening.

So . . .

Do not be concerned how you can learn a lesson so completely different from everything you have taught yourselves. How would you know?

You wouldn't. So don't be concerned how you can learn a lesson so completely different from everything you have taught yourselves.

Your part is very simple. You need only recognize that everything you learned you do not WANT.

Oh, but you think you want it. And you think you're going to hold on to it. And you're going to do some things this next week on your own—by yourself—even though the sign that you hopefully put on your refrigerator says, "It is impossible for me to do anything all by myself."

You need only recognize that everything you learned you do not WANT.

Well, at the least you could say, "In spite of everything I've learned, I want to learn more at a different level, in a different paradigm from the one I'm used to. And then . . .

Ask to be TAUGHT, and . . .

. . . very important . . .

. . . do not use your experiences to confirm what YOU have learned.

It's very simple. Stop relying upon your experiences to confirm what you have learned when you have tried to be an independent agent. Stop using your past experience to color your present—to confirm things in the present—because the present is brand new and the past does not apply to it. And when you try to apply the past to something that is not a repetition of anything, you are going to end up with the only thing you can—misperception. So . . .

Ask to be TAUGHT, and do not use your experiences to confirm what YOU have learned. When your peace is threatened, or disturbed in any way, . .

. . . don't go into automatic. Don't use what you learned to do at your mother's knee or at the end of your father's belt.

When your peace is threatened, or disturbed in any way, . .

. . . do something new. Do something you've never done before.

. . . say to yourself,

"I do not know what anything, INCLUDING THIS, means.
And so I do not know how to respond to it.
And I will not use my own past learning as the light to guide me
now."

Now, let's be very careful here. Some will say that this is "New Age" nonsense, that it is encouraging you to become irresponsible. No. What it says is:

"I do not know what anything, INCLUDING THIS, means."

Now, if that was touted to be the solution to the problem, then that would be nonsense. But that's not the end.

"And so I do not know how to respond to it."

Okay, that's still not an answer, but it crystallizes the fact.

"And I will not use my own past learning as the light to guide me
now."

Well, you think that means that it's saying, "Well you can go out and do anything you want. You don't have to follow the rules that you followed before. You will not use your own past learning as that which guides you now." That isn't what it says. All it says, "I won't . . .

. . . use my own past learning as the light to guide me now."

. . . but that still isn't the culmination of this.

Anyone who genuinely does those three things will find himself in a void, in an apparently uncomfortable position of not knowing, but not experiencing resolution either. So, one is faced with need and no apparent resource with which to meet it. But none of you will stay in that position for very long. Either you will opt for figuring it out yourself, or you will reach out beyond your present capacities and say, "Help! Father, help!" You may not even use a word. You'll just say, "Help! Will the Powers That Be, help! If there is a Creator, will You please help!" You will reach out and you'll break the isolation of orphanhood.

Now . . .

By this refusal to attempt to teach yourself what you do not know, the Guide Whom God has given you will speak to you.

Who's the Guide that God has given to speak to you? The Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. In other words, God has provided the very integrity of your Being to guide you back into the conscious awareness of the integrity of your Being. Isn't that neat? It's so efficient! There are no loose ends. There's nothing to get mixed up or confused in the process. So what you're learning to let go into and rely into is nothing more than your right Mind. The Presence of God in you, as you, is your right Mind.

He . . .

. . . the Guide Whom God has given you, Who will speak to you.

. . . will take His rightful place . . .

[Repeats] His rightful place in your awareness the instant YOU abandon it, and offer it to Him.

Abandon what? [Chuckling] His rightful place. You took over your right Mind's rightful place. You sat yourself in that seat and took over. But the moment you turn it back to Him, He will take His rightful place.

YOU cannot be your guide to miracles, for it is you who made them necessary.

You made miracles necessary by deciding to try to do things all by yourself, or to know things all by yourself.

YOU cannot be your guide to miracles, for it is you who made them necessary. And BECAUSE you did, the means on which you can depend for miracles has been provided FOR you.

The Holy Spirit.

God's Son can make no needs His Father will not meet, if he but turn to Him ever so little. Yet He . . .

. . . God, the Father . . .

. . . cannot compel His Son . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . to turn to Him, and remain Himself.

Because God is not a dictator.

It is impossible that God lose His Identity, for if He did, you would lose YOURS. And being yours, He cannot change Himself, for your Identity IS changeless. The miracle acknowledges His changelessness by seeing His Son as he always was, and not as he would make himself.

[Repeats] The miracle acknowledges His changelessness by seeing His Son . . .

you . . . you . . .

. . . as he always was, and not as he . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . would make . . .

. . . yourself. Not the you, you would make up as your identity.

The miracle brings the effects which ONLY guiltlessness can bring, and thus establishes the fact that guiltlessness must BE.

What you Are can't change. Your guiltlessness cannot be turned into guilt by anything you imagine you can do. And therefore, you have never become guilty of anything that you must pay for. You have suffered from the belief that you could become guilty and have become guilty, but it is a false belief that governs you falsely.

How can you, so firmly bound to guilt and committed so to remain, establish for yourself your guiltlessness? That is impossible. But be sure that you are willing to acknowledge that it IS impossible. It is only because you think that you can run some little part, or deal with certain aspects of your lives . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . alone, that the guidance of the Holy Spirit is limited.

You see. The only thing that keeps you on welfare is the belief that if you get off welfare you're going to be more limited than the limitations that welfare imposes upon you.

It is only because you think that you can run some little part, or deal with certain aspects of your lives alone, that the guidance of the Holy Spirit is limited.

Why? Because you don't turn to the Holy Spirit. You say, "I can do it. I'll take care of this myself. I'll get back with the Holy Spirit after this meeting, or when I get home tonight, or when I say my prayers before I go to sleep."

Thus would you make HIM . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . undependable, and use this fancied undependability as an excuse for keeping certain dark lessons from Him.

What are the dark lessons again? They are the beliefs which don't reflect truth that you're holding onto . . . like, "I can do this myself." You see?

As long as you think that you are at least as dependable as the Holy Spirit, if not more dependable than the Holy Spirit, you will not yield to the Holy Spirit. You will not yield to your right Mind. It's like saying, if you have faith in your own capacity, you won't reach outside of it.

I'm here to help you be willing to reach outside your capacity. I'm here to try to illustrate to you that what you call your capacity isn't the capacity of yours at all, it's simply a rehearsal of memory, a rehash of that which is unoriginal and doesn't constitute being conscious and doesn't constitute Life. In other words, there's more available to you than what you're experiencing.

Dare to devalue what you're familiar with, at least enough so that you can begin to have as much curiosity as a baby has—gleeful curiosity to see what, and understand what you never understood before.

Again . . .

Thus would you make HIM undependable, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . and use this fancied undependability as an excuse for keeping certain dark lessons from Him.

In other words, continuing to act on your own or attempt to.

And by so limiting the guidance that you would ACCEPT, you are unable to depend on miracles to answer all your problems for you.

Again, no wiggle room! Black and white.

And . . .

. . . so, by . . .

. . . limiting the guidance that you would ACCEPT, you are unable to depend on miracles to answer all your problems for you.

And yet, that's the whole reason you've persevered until we've gotten to page 344, because you want to be able to depend on miracles to answer all your problems for you. Well, if you do, then dare to do the work, so to speak. Dare to do the two-step all day long, every day. And if you're going to rely upon yourself and try to do it yourself, at least while you're doing it, be sane enough to say, "You know, I realize I'm doing this, but Raj says that as long as I'm doing this I'm not really doing anything, that this really isn't Life and that I deserve the miracle—a sudden shift of perception—that uncovers Reality to me. At least be willing to acknowledge while you're acting all by yourself, that you are engaging in a bit of foolishness.

Now, you may feel that I'm being pushy. Hey, don't fool yourselves, you're not going to be pushed into anything. You're not going to allow yourself to be pushed into anything. So give me the right to speak clearly and unequivocally so that there's no confusion, and you go ahead and do it exactly when you're going to choose to do it anyway. I promise you in doing it, the payoff will be so great and so wonderful that you won't be sorry.

And in the meantime, I will continue to support you from behind and also from in front of you to say, "Come forward, it's safe."

Okay, I look forward to being with you next week. And I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 5th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We've been talking for a few weeks about not just the value of not thinking for yourself, but the fact that you really don't have a capacity to think for yourself or on your own.

I want to talk a little bit tonight about the great need not to let other people do your thinking for you. I want to suggest to you that it's not a wise idea to run to your television set and find out how the world is thinking, or how your government is thinking, or worse, how the pundits are thinking. Because their job is to make the most out of indefiniteness, to make the most out of lack of conclusions—to create interesting discussion about indecisiveness, and to get you to become excited or fearful about possibilities, about likelihoods—all of which they can't guarantee or even prove. But they have a way of talking that gets your attention.

Now, you tune into our Sunday night fire-side chats or you listen during the week to the recording, and you learn about not pretending to think for yourself and you learn about the value of doing whatever it takes to listen and actually hear. And that puts your attention in a direction very different from where the pundits would direct your attention, or where the government would direct your attention. And you begin to close your eyes, so to speak, back off from the news and find your peace and move out of the excitement and the reactivity so that you might find your peace and do the very thing which will allow a sudden shift of perception to occur, which of course, is called a miracle—which is what all of you really want.

You all know that when you turn on the news on the TV, you're not going to be triggered into a miracle—especially at the present time. And you know that those who are able to put thoughts together in an interesting and scary way will do so and engage your attention and cause you to what? Decide that the Holy Spirit isn't sufficient to the need—that that which is nothing more than your right Mind is not sufficient to the need—and that if you will watch the newscasts or listen to the pundits, they will act as a vigorous jump-start to your very own thinking. Right?

And in a way, [chuckles] you won't have to take credit for, "Well, they made me do it! They made me do it . . . Well you heard what they said . . . How could I not react? How could I not think? How could I not take what they said and run with it?"

Exactly! How could you not do that. But why did you turn the television on in the first place?

It would be like Paul getting up every morning and running to the computer to check out the Gathering Place on the Foundation's website to see what's going on. Instead of waking up and sitting right there on the edge of his bed and say, "Good Morning Raj, what's the order of the day today? What's on the Father's Agenda? Where do I need to be giving my attention?" You see?

You have in front of you a wonderful opportunity. It doesn't matter whether you're in the United States or in some other country, because everyone's involved here. Talk about unity, talking about the need for unity. Hey everyone wake-up—it's already a unity! If there's a problem in the U.S. economy, there's a problem in the English economy or the Japanese economy or the Chinese economy. If there's a problem in China, it's a problem in the United States. It's already one.

Now, you want to know what governs things? Not governments. All the individualities . . . all the individualities. "Oh, but I don't have any power. I don't have any power and look what's happening and I'm going to be even more powerless."

Well, are you turning on the TV? Are you turning on the dignified news or are you turning on the news that twists and binds and torques things for entertainment value? Are you going to turn your attention where nothing but confusion can come forth or be magnified in you? And by your turning on that channel, are you going to provide statistics that prove to that network or that channel that what they're doing is getting your attention and therefore, since advertisers will pay to have your attention, they will keep doing what you're tuning in to listen to?

Don't tell me you don't have power and don't fool yourself into thinking you're powerless. You stop listening to those who magnify indefiniteness, who magnify suppositions, and do it in a way that excites you with fear. Don't tune into those channels and the statistics will show the advertisers that this is not a channel or an activity to pour their money into. And those channels will stop.

You know the saying is, "One with God is a majority." It is. It's not just a platitude, and it always has been the truth. You've always had the power to listen for the Father's Voice, and as a result of listening and hearing, Being the expression of the Father in which all of the power and perfection and harmony and order that the Father Is, finds expression "in the world."

Now, it doesn't matter how many people are afraid right now. It doesn't matter how many times the news tells you that the stock market is reacting in this way or reacting in that way, showing a general loss of faith in the population, in those investors . . . blah . . . blah . . . blah, and telling you in so many words, that therefore, because those with the money are afraid, you need to be afraid. And because they're behaving in an erratic way rather than an orderly way, you need to be willing to become erratic and disorderly and think erratic and disorderly thoughts that were jump-started by the very fact that you turned the G__ d__ television on, or picked up the newspaper and read what wasn't written from a grounded place of intelligence, where what was coming forth was guided by the Holy Spirit—that which was nothing more than the right Mind of the person writing the article—who therefore, had the capacity to write an article that expressed intelligence that was relieving, and gave guidance, you might say, for how to behave in a way that causes the fear to subside.

Now, we've been talking about the value of abandoning thinking for quite a few weeks. And all of you have to one degree or another listened to what I've said and have tried to one degree or another to put it into practice. But you have, to some degree, incapacitated the Holy Spirit by assuming that you still had some capacity to cope with things yourself.

Well, we can get some negative learning out of what's happening. During the last few weeks, with the economic situation and the election in the United States, you have seemed to have justification for slipping into your supposed capacity to think, and you have been frightening yourselves unmercifully. No, it isn't the news that's been frightening you, it's been you that has been frightening you by choosing to "think," even though the news jump-started it.

Now that you're really scared, how valuable is it to you to imagine that you want to continue to think and that you want to continue to let the media jump-start your thinking? You're simply faced with, well, not just a wonderful opportunity, but you're faced with an actual demand to stop thinking.

If you want to find out what the news is, find it in print somewhere. Don't listen to people with their voices and their emotions that they add in the inflections they put to the words they're saying. Find good clear journalism in print so that you can read with as little emotion attached to it as possible, what the calls for love are. What are the corrections that are needed? You need to be able to be aware of them. But you just don't need to become aware of them through pundits and through those who have an agenda aside from giving you the news. Their agenda being, to provide you with the news in a way that causes you to keep tuning to their station, because that's what generates income for the station and keeps them on the air. Okay?

Find news in print that's well written and as unbiased as possible. And then don't read the printed word all day. Get the picture so that you can then set the source of the news down and become still without thinking. And in the quietness in you ask, "Father, or Holy Spirit or my Guide, what needs to be known here? People are frightened because they're ignorant. I could be frightened because I'm ignorant. But I don't want to be ignorant and I do want to be the place where the truth that transforms and heals can come through."

Why? So that you can be at peace? No. That's not good enough. The reason you're asking is so that you can be the place where that which puts your brother at peace can come through because you care about your brother. Because it is in loving your brother that you remember God and you are blessed. What you give, you get to keep.

Go to the place where the good news awaits you so that you might take the good news to your brother or your sister. That's your job. That's your job all the time. But maybe under the circumstances, you have a situation that causes the valuableness of it to be more apparent to you, so that you're less inclined to think for yourself or put yourself in a position where your thinking gets jump-started by someone else's thinking.

You must be very wise right now because there are so many who are more than happy to tell you how to think and how to feel. And most of the time you will be encouraged to feel a certain way not because it will heal you, but because it will be a benefit for those who are providing you with the information.

We're going to go into the Book and I'm going to back up just a bit, a few sentences:

It is only because you think that you can run some little part, or deal with certain aspects of your lives alone, . . .¹

. . . without help, in other words . . .

. . . that the guidance of the Holy Spirit is limited.

Not that His power is limited, but by virtue of your not giving your full attention there, you make what you received limited.

Thus would you make HIM . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . undependable, and use this fancied . . .

. . . imagined . . .

. . . undependability as an excuse for keeping certain dark lessons from Him. And by so limiting the guidance that you would ACCEPT, you are unable to depend on miracles to answer all your problems for you.

You see, that's the point. You want to be able to depend on miracles to answer all your problems for you. Why? Because that's your Birthright. Because that's the way things actually work.

Do you think that what the Holy Spirit would have you GIVE He would WITHHOLD from you?

Well, if you think about it for a minute, for the last couple of weeks with all that's been going on, very little of your attention has been given to what you might give. It has been rather, what you might get in terms of protection and dependability and stability and invulnerability. But you're not looking to the place where invulnerability can come forth, where invulnerability and everything you need comes forth, is the act of giving.

Divine Love always has met, and always will meet every human need.

Now, I would encourage all of you to back off from your pretentious, egotistical definitions of life and how it ought to work and how people ought to behave, and whether or not people's experience is a result of their very own thinking—that they've created it for themselves—and therefore if they created it for themselves, who are you to interfere? Who are you to have a different point of view or to assert anything or to give anything that might change the status quo, because after all, since they created their circumstance for themselves, they're the only one who can un-create it for themselves. And therefore, you should mind your own business.

Man, with that attitude, the consciousness of need will disappear in you. Now that would be the worse thing that could happen: To lose the consciousness of need would be to become inhuman and incapable of expressing love.

Now, at times like these, you need to be willing to look not toward your own best interests, and not spending all of your energy fearing the loss of your best interests, but rather under the circumstances: What does my brother need?

What does your brother need? He needs peace. He needs encouragement. He needs solace. He needs warmth. He needs pitiful patience while he's in the middle of his fear. And he needs whatever enlightenment might help move him out of his conviction that he has justification for great fear and worry. Well, you say, "Well, hell, that's what I need. And you want me to ignore that and help my brother? Why don't you tell me to go find a brother to help me!"

Because that's not the way it works.

Do you think that what the Holy Spirit would have you GIVE He would WITHHOLD from you?

No. So if you want it, you'd better give it.

Whatever it is you're being encouraged to fear these days, did you bring it on yourself? Does it even matter? No, it doesn't matter because your freedom from it—your release from it—your relief is a legitimate expectation and one that all of your brothers and sisters should be helping you experience and which you should be helping your brothers and sisters experience.

But you're not going to hear what it is that will do that by listening to the idiocy that is being expressed through the media. So choose your teachers.

I know it's fun to get self-righteous and angry, to sneer at the political candidates, to tear them down, to find flaws with them and hope that you will find something there that will inspire you. But is that your function? Is it your task to look into your brother's eyes and find their flaws and belittle them and berate them? No. So you've got to stop it. And as I said, this is a wonderful time for you to put into practice what we've been talking about.

Now the thing is that if you put it into practice, you're going to find your threshold of fear lowering, you're going to find your peace increasing. You're going to find your capacity to be clear-headed—mind you, I didn't say being able to think clearly—but your capacity to be clear-headed will grow, increase. And your capacity to understand things in a larger picture, with clarity, will occur without a thought being thought. And you will be a presence that will put your neighbor at ease, if for no other reason than that your neighbor is standing next to someone who at the moment doesn't happen to be strung up, intense, in great fear and therefore, maybe your neighbor doesn't have to be either because he knows you're not crazy.

Now . . .

You have NO problems which He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . cannot solve by offering you a miracle.

A miracle: A sudden shift of perception.

Miracles are for YOU. And every fear or pain or trial . . .

And of the things going on in the last few weeks, which ones fit into which of those categories? [chuckle]

And every fear or pain or trial you have HAS BEEN undone.

"Wait a minute . . . that's not what the pundits said. What do you mean, it's been undone? The disaster just happened! The collapse just happened!"

Whoa . . . you're thinking. Who said it just happened?

"Oh-h, the TV did . . . Oh-h, the banking system did . . . Oh-h, the government did . . . Oh-h, the bank just said 'no' they wouldn't extend me the loan . . . it just happened." What do you mean it has been undone?"

I'm going to tell you something. Neighborhoods very often develop what are called "Neighborhood Associations." And the neighborhood elects officers to represent them, so that they, as a neighborhood, can have some control and order in their neighborhood by mutual agreement.

Well, it's the same thing in orphanages. Orphanages have their own "Orphanage Association." And all the members of the orphanage elect their officers and the officers have meetings and represent the constituents of the orphanage. And you could liken the orphanage to countries, if you wish, and it wouldn't be too far off. And the "Orphanage Association" would be the government, apparently representing the people, the constituents of the orphanage.

And you know what? The neighborhood association or the association in the orphanage has weekly meetings. And the members of the board on their own, very often decide what are to be called issues and what are to be dealt with. And in the week before the weekly meeting they sort of infiltrate the rest of the orphanage and they get everybody, you know, livened up about the issues and try to get them to be willing and ready to vote for what the important answer would be.

And you know what? When you've lived in an orphanage and dealt with the "Orphanage Association" for very long, you find that there's a style that the association has, and a certain lingo that they use. And it's a lingo that they use because they have found that it works on the constituents.

And so, when the association begins to do its little dance, and move in and around through the constituents, the experience is a familiar one for the constituents, for all of the orphans that live there—it's familiar. And because it's happened so often, and they, each of them have responded in much the same way over the years to this sort of stimulation, well, when the stimulation occurs today, there's a conditioned response every one has.

And it's very hard for them to stand there objectively and say, "Wait a minute, this board of directions of this association are just people like me. And I don't have to listen to them any more than they have to listen to me. And I don't have to get excited because they're excited. And I really could stand here and just listen to what they say, and see whether it makes any sense to me, and whether I'm interested in supporting it, or not. I don't have to climb on the bandwagon, just because I've always done it, and just because that's the way the constituency relates to the board of directors—historically speaking." You see. "I don't have to operate in this mindset." You see.

We're talking about and have been for months, leaving the orphanage, leaving the orphan mindset.

So, when you've turned on the radio or the TV or read the newspaper, and heard of every fear, or pain, or trial that's going on that should cause you to be fearful, pained and tense, you've got to be willing to do the two-step.

You've got to be willing to step back and say, "Wait a minute! No response is called for here. I don't have to bring into play my conditioned response to this whole dance—this whole dance that we do every week before the meeting or the same dance we do before every election. I don't have to do this. Reality doesn't operate according to the rules of the orphanage, because in Reality, there are no orphans. So I really need to engage in behavior that isn't patterned behavior, that isn't ordered by memory—thinking."

... every fear or pain or trial you have HAS BEEN undone.

It doesn't matter that the association board of directors is saying that there's some new catastrophe that hasn't been undone, especially when the catastrophe is the same-old-same-old catastrophe.

He ...

... the Holy Spirit ...

... has brought all of them to light, having accepted them INSTEAD of you, ...

... meaning that He's accepted them instead of your having accepted them. Because you didn't accept them. You didn't accept them for the purpose of undoing them, you accepted them for the purpose of magnifying them! You accepted them for the purpose of being able to stand with your fellow orphans and chant, "End it! End it! End it now! End it! End it! End it now!" and get the thrill of the group activity, and the sense of presence. [Chuckle] When the way to end it is not to stand with orphans chanting, but to walk out the front door of the orphanage!

He ...

... the Holy Spirit ...

... has brought all of them ...

... all of the fears, pains and trials ...

... to light, having accepted them INSTEAD of you, and recognized they never were.

Reality is, in a way, occurring in a different paradigm from the one the pundits and your thinking are reporting.

There are no dark lessons He ...

... the Holy Spirit ...

... has not ALREADY lightened for you. The lessons you would teach yourselves ...

. . . such as, “Oh, My God, I’m going to go under . . . Oh, My God, where will I be a year from now if I lose all of my savings?” Blah, blah, blah . . . and the thinking goes on and on and on.

But wait a minute . . .

There are no dark lessons He has not ALREADY lightened for you. The lessons you would teach yourselves He has corrected already. They do not exist in His Mind at all.

And again, who is this He? The Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind. So, they do not exist in your right Mind at all!

For the past binds Him . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . not, and therefore binds not you. He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . does not see time as you do. And each miracle He offers you corrects your use of time and makes it His.

Listen to this . . .

He . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your real or right Mind.

He Who has freed you from the past would teach you ARE free of it.

Well you say, “Well it’s not the past I need to get free of now. It’s the awful future.” Okay, this is where you need to stop yourself dead in your tracks. Past, future, are imaginative concepts that don’t represent anything actually. So the very thought, “I need to protect myself against the awful future,”—that is a debilitating, self-destructive thought, which actually has no meaning because it’s made out of pure nonsense. But you think it’s real. And you choose to engage your thinking and rely on it and scare yourself to death with.

Hey! Stop yourself dead in your tracks, as I said. Catch yourself and abandon that use of your mind.

He Who has freed you from the past . . .

. . . and I'm going to say, from the future as well . . .

. . . would teach you ARE free of it. He would but have you accept His accomplishments as YOURS because He did them FOR you.

You get it? It's already done. Not only that, it has already been done by that which is nothing more than your right Mind. So it's an act of your very Being, which is at this very moment establishing for you your freedom from a so-called past and a so-called future, in which your wholeness is available to you, and in which you do not have to depend upon some intelligent governor, or some intelligent monetary system, or some intelligent set of laws to make you invulnerable and happy and free.

He did them FOR you. And because He did, they ARE yours. He has made you free of what you made.

And as I've done before, I'm going to add the word "up."

He has made you free of what you made [up]. You can deny Him, but you CANNOT call on Him in vain.

You can't call on Him in vain, but you can refrain from calling on Him!

Now I would suggest that before you call on your pundits or on your favorite news channel, you stop dead in your tracks and call on the Holy Spirit—call on that which is nothing more than your right Mind—which isn't deluded, and therefore, is making you free in every single moment from ignorance of every sort, and the bondage that seems to accompany ignorance.

He ALWAYS gives what He has made IN PLACE of you.

Meaning, what He has made instead of you. He made it for you because you weren't making anything Real. And so, He made it in place of your making it.

He ALWAYS gives what He has made IN PLACE of you.
